I wish to state here that my hon. friend and the neighbourhood of his constituency are not so badly treated. We find a post office at every mile between Vancouver and New Westminster.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. We need them.

Mr. LEMIEUX—(reading).

As it is now, the proposed office at Collingwood East is rather too close to Central Park, but by changing the site to Keefer's, the two offices would then be a mile and three-quarters apart. The change would also be more convenient for the people living on the Jubilee road, who have on two occasions applied for a post office (see reports No. 886 of the 29th June, 1908, and No. 104 of the 6th May last). The proposition is to change the site of the Central Park post office, without change in name, from the present site, to the residence of Mr. Alex. Kerr Farquharson, lot 14, subdivision of block 15, McKay road, which by the road is about three-quarters of a mile southeast of where the office is now located, as shown on the accompanying map. It is reasonable to suppose that the few people now residing immediately contiguous to the present site will oppose the change——

Here comes the village quarrel; yet this is a change that is recommended by Mr. Greenfield without any prompting from Mr. Jardine.

—but considering the question as a whole, and from a strictly post office point of view, I consider that the change is advisable, as it will provide more convenient accommodation for the greater number of the settlers in that locality, and I, therefore, respectfully beg to recommend the change in site of the post office as herein set forth.

I have every reason to believe that the present postmaster will oppose the change, and place as many obstacles in the way as possible, and as he is contractor for the conveyance of mails at Central Park, he will require the usual three months' notice at the termination of his contract, should the proposed change in site meet with your approval, and I therefore beg to ask that I be advised of the intention of the department in the premises at as early a date as possible, so that the postmaster may be notified accordingly. Mr. Farquharson will be willing to carry on the service between the proposed site and Keefer's Station on the same terms and conditions as it is now being performed for at Central Park, so that the change will not involve any additional expense to this department.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) JOHN R. GREENFIELD,
Post Office Inspector.

Suppose that the hon. gentleman is in my place in the Langevin block. I am not a resident of British Columbia—I know a little of Vancouver and New Westminster—but I receive a report, framed as this report is, signed by Mr. Greenfield, one of the most conscientious officers of the whole service.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He must be a Conservative.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He is a good Conservative. There are lots of good Conservatives —who denies that? I am put in possession of this report and I am asked to act. I have to act. What shall I do? Will my hon. friend say that with such a strong report as that which I have read just now I should fold my arms, and say: I will not act. I take the whole responsibility of the change.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Why?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I take the whole responsibility of the change on the strength of the report furnished to me by my officer, Mr. Greenfield. I must rely upon some one. I must take the responsibility. I trust my officials. If Mr. Greenfield has done contrary to what he should have done, if he is at fault it would be a different thing, but I do not believe he is at fault from the report which he has written.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. What about the petition?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Well, in every case where there are changes I receive petitions and counter-petitions and finally I accept the verdict of the post office inspector who is, as my hon. friend admits, a man above suspicion. I must accept guidance from the officers who are on the spot and who are the best judges. That is what I have done in this instance. I bear no ill whatever. I do not know Mr. Jardine and I do not know the people of Central Park.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. But you give him the patronage.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not give Mr. Jardine any patronage. There is no harm in consulting a man of Mr. Jardine's reputation as regards an affair of this kind.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. The people of Central Park think there is.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Does my hon. friend think that Mr. Jardine is not to offer any friendly advice in a case like this?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Friendly to whom?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Friendly to the community.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Friendly to Jardine.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What benefit does Mr. Jardine derive from a change of this kind? Has he any pecuniary interest?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. As I told the minister the administration of the patronage in the New Westminister riding is worth more than the salary of a cabinet minister.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend makes a very serious charge there——

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Absolutely correct.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Against Mr. Jardine.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Against the government.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, but against Mr. Jardine because Mr. Jardine would be the man who would illegally and unlawfully profit by any such rake-off. I understand that this is the meaning of my hon. friend's language. I do not believe that on second, sober thoughts my hon. friend would insist upon stating that Mr. Jardine makes any such rake-off as that out of this patronage if you can call patronage the advice given as to a change in the site of a post office.

I believe my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Taylor) is exaggerating a little, but I think after hearing the report of my officer he will come to the conclusion that I personally could not take any other course than I did. I do not wish any injustice to be done to the people of Central Park and so I shall take the file again and look over it closely and see that justice is done.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I am much obliged to the minister for his promise that he will look into the circumstances of this case, and if he does there can be only one result. I have known Inspector Greenfield for many years; I knew him before he and I ever were in British Columbia, and knowing him as I do I am all the more surprised to hear that report. I would remind the minister that he has numerous reports from Mr. Greenfield about the Central Park post office, among others the one I read to-night dated so late as last May, and in none of these reports has he given any intimation that that office should be closed. On the contrary, in the very last report before the one read by the minister, he points out the growing importance of Central Park. The Postmaster General should not confuse Central Park and Keefer's, because Keefer's is not Central Park any more than Aylmer is Hull or Ottawa. It is a station on a by-road while Central Park is on the main road between the two cities. No resident of Central Park would be called on to go to Keefers for any business purpose, whereas on the other hand the people of Keefer's would go to Central Park. However, the settlement is large enough to have a post office at both places, and as I have said it would cost the Postmaster General only $200 a year to leave Central Park open and establish a new office at Keefer's. As to patronage I wish to reiterate in all sincerity that while it is impossible to say what the rake-off is on any single transaction, and while there must be transactions with no rake-off because the administrator of the patronage like any other administrator must do many 'thank you' jobs, yet I state in all sincerity that in my riding the administration of the patronage is worth more than the salary of a cabinet minister. Who pays? Who but the public? If the patronage were abolished the public would save in that riding alone that amount of money every year. The minister will notice that the inspector never reported any suggestion of a change until he was approached by Mr. Robert Jardine. We know the position that such an official is in. If he dares to go contrary to the advice of the local administrators of the patronage, promotion of all kinds is closed to him, he becomes immediately persona non grata, his official career is ended; he is dragooned by the system now in vogue into following just so far as he can the direction of the local nabobs to whom this government trusts the administration of affairs. I am perfectly certain that if Mr. Greenfield had been left to himself and if it had not been put up to him that this was a matter of necessity he would not have made that report which the minister has read. Mr. Greenfield like every other man is only human; he is an official of this government, he must carry out the wishes of this government if he is to have any standing in the service at all.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Does the hon. member suggest that in this matter there is any rake off?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I do not. When the Central Park post office was removed to Keefer's would the postmaster be paid on the basis of the business done at Central Park the year before? At Central Park the salary would be larger than at Keefer's.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The postmasters in such offices would be paid commission on the basis of the actual revenue.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. He would not get a salary this year at Keefer's on the basis of the business last year at Central Park.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He gets no salary at all.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Yes, I find by the Postmaster General's Report that at Central Park the postmaster gets commission on money order business and on postal note business, and a salary of $195

Mr. LEMIEUX. Oh that $195 is the percentage he receives. It is put under the head of 'salary,' but it really is a percentage. There is no fixed salary.

Mr. FRASER. Before this item is carried, I wish to say a few words as to the post office service in the province of Prince Edward Island, and especially in my own riding. Let me say that I have no specific fault to find with the administration of postal matters, but I wish respectfully to call the attention of the Postmaster General to the necessity for increased mail services. As we all know the statistics show that the province of Prince Edward Island is settled ten times more densely than any other province in Canada; in fact, the whole province is entirely settled, and as times goes by, the people feel the necessity for this increased accommodation. I am glad to say the Postmaster General is granting this accommodation, but perhaps not so rapidly as to satisfy the people. We have now a great number of free rural mail delivery routes and we ought to have in a very short time a complete system of rural mail delivery. But the principal thing I wish to urge is that in some places, perhaps not more than five or six miles removed from a railroad or a central point, which have only tri-weekly or semi-weekly mail delivery, a daily service should be given. I have received many petitions on this subject, and I am sure that the department has received many asking for a daily delivery. I was glad to hear the Postmaster General say that his wish and his instructions to the different postmasters was to keep this matter entirely free from all politics. I feel that his predecessor in office did a great deal for the Post Office Department and put it on a fairly high plane, and I only hope the Postmaster General will be able to carry out his wishes as he expressed them to-night and continue to keep the post office on a high plane, because it is a service fraught with great consequence for good or evil, according as it is properly administered. Would the minister tell me either now or at another time the revenue of the Post Office Department from the province of Prince Edward Island, and the expenditure in that province?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will give him the information in a day or so. Whenever any reasonable request is made for the Island it will always be my pleasure to meet the wishes of the representatives of that province.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up on Monday?

Mr. FIELDING. Private Bills will be the first order and after that the Naval Bill will be taken up.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.08 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 11, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. MILLER.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. H. H. MILLER (South Grey). I wish to refer to page 6692 of 'Hansard,' April 7, and to call the attention of the House to the following words that occurred in the speech of the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth):

> There is just one other thing I ought to say in that regard. My hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) read yesterday a letter I had written to him some two months ago on this subject. I certainly have no objection to his putting the letter on the pages of 'Hansard' although I ought to say I never expected to see it there, and thought I was merely writing to him as one member of the House might write to another what my ideas were with reference to this question.

I shall only occupy probably four minutes of the time of the House discussing this, and in speaking I am not actuated by any feeling of resentment whatever. I realize that in this matter every man has the right to his own views and I realize quite that those who opposed the Bill had just as good a right to oppose it as I had to vote and work for it. The hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl), the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), and the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) all spoke strongly against the Bill. As far as I am concerned, no feeling of personal friendship will be affected or altered by the action which any man took upon the Bill, nor will I for one moment think of seeking to injure any man politically because he has differed from me in his opinion as to the Bill. While I say that I will not be actuated by any resentment because of any action taken by any other hon. gentleman in what I say; neither will I be restricted in what I say by any party feeling or party affiliation. I do not object to any hon. gentleman differing from me in opinion, but I do like, when I fight a battle, to fight it fairly. The Minister of Justice complained that I did a dishonourable thing in making public a letter which it was not intended should be made public. What are the facts? I am sorry that I did not preserve a copy of the letter which I wrote to the Minister of Justice. I presume that he files his correspondence and I think he will have the letter. If he has I would ask him in justice to myself to produce the letter and read it to the House. I think I stated in the letter that I wrote that a member of the special committee to which the Bill had been referred had requested me to obtain from him his opinion as Minister of Justice as to the jurisdiction of this House in restricting the length of race meetings. At any rate, I remember well that I stated that in conversation to the Minister of Justice. Suppose I did not so speak, I wrote to the Minister of Justice and addressed him as Minister of Justice, and I should also say that the Minister of Justice knew well that I was chairman of the special committee having this matter in hand. Those are the facts and suppose those are the only facts; when I asked the Minister of Justice for his legal opinion, surely the letter I received in reply, not being marked 'personal,' or 'confidential,' was a letter that one might expect to use when he was doing what I was, and I would ask, if the opinions of the Minister of Justice, asked for by a member of the House and given to a member of the House are to be treated as private correspondence, of what value are such opinions? I think I have reason to complain of the reference that the Minister of Justice made in the House. I wish that every statement the Minister of Justice had made to me when I consulted him about this Bill and discussed the Bill with him was, as is this letter, in writing and over his signature. I have a great deal to complain of, I think, as to the treatment of the Minister of Justice in connection with this whole matter. Having discussed the question with him, as I have discussed it with him and he having made the statements that he did make, and which it would perhaps take too much of the time of the House to discuss, I do say that if I had used the Minister of Justice as he has used me in this matter, I would have thought that I had struck below the belt and that I had not acted either honestly or honourably. That is a plain statement to make, but if the Minister of Justice demands of me to make the fullest possible detailed explanation of my words I am ready to do so at any time either in this House or outside of it.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I have only to say that I regret more than I am able to express, the fact that I have not been able to hear what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Miller) has said, and I am sorry indeed that he feels that he has any grievance or cause of complaint against me, either in regard to the letter he has referred to or in regard to anything I have said out of which this has arisen. I certainly had no idea of imputing to my hon. friend any dishonourable conduct in connection with the reading of the letter he has mentioned. I think the language which I used in speaking about it abundantly shows that no such idea was in my mind. I said at the time in the House that I certainly had no objection to his putting the letter on the pages of 'Hansard,' though I added that I never expected to see it there, nor did I. The hon. gentleman, being a personal friend, saw me repeatedly in friendly conversation in reference to the measure of which he had taken charge. I spoke to him freely with regard to the objects which he desired and I certainly never expected that anything which passed between us in those conversations would be matter of discussion afterwards in public form. I regarded the letters which passed between us in precisely the same way. I did not consider—I do not consider now—that because I happen to be Minister of Justice I am in any way the legal adviser for the House as a whole or of any member of the House.

I am perfectly willing at any time to talk with or write to any member of the House who thinks he can have any help from me in connection with any measure in which he is interested, or anything in respect of which he may apply to me. It was precisely in that way that I understood my hon. friend was either speaking to me or writing to me in connection with this Bill, and all that I have said in reference to this letter is what I am repeating now, that while it was in no sense a private communication, while it was in no sense a breach of confidence that it should be made public, I did not expect that it would be. I was not upbraiding my hon. friend for the course he took, I was not complaining of it in any way.

I understand that my hon. friend has also spoken of the general course which has been taken with regard to the measure in which he is interested, as one in which he thinks I have done something unfair, or as he, as I understand, described it, 'struck below the belt.' I can only express my very great regret that any such feeling should be in the mind of my hon. friend, and I must also add some little astonishment, because during the few days which have passed since the occurrences of last week in the House, I have met my hon. friend with quite the usual cordiality which has always existed between us, it was the last idea in my mind that he had any feeling of being hurt with reference to the course of these proceedings. I should like simply to add that from the outset of this matter, from the opening of the session, in any conversations which had taken place between my hon. friend and myself, all of which have been of the most friendly character, I have never concealed from him in any way that I was entirely opposed to the theory upon which the Bill he had introduced was framed. I have told him quite frankly from the outset that I very greatly preferred the English Bill. I thought that I was not doing any more than was fair to him in saying so, and I have in every way given him, I think perfectly clearly, to understand that I would not introduce such a Bill as the one which he introduced, that I did not approve of the scheme of the Bill, or the attempt which I thought it manifested to call the walking about taking bets the keeping of a betting house or place. That was a feature of the Bill which was essential to it, which was in a word the whole theory upon which it was framed. I regarded that as mere verbal trickery, and I certainly gave my hon. friend to understand that, as plainly I thought as any words I could use would enable me to do so. I think these circumstances that my hon. friend is scarcely justified in alluding to the opposition which I openly offered in the House to the measure which he had introduced, as in any way striking below the belt.

Mr. MILLER. Just one word. When I obtained the views of the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) at any times I distinctly stated to him, at least on one occasion, that whatever opinions I received from him I asked and hoped to receive for the purpose and with the object of making use of those opinions of the hon. the Minister of Justice, and he did not say that he did not desire or wish me to do that, he simply said in reply that when the matter came up to be discussed in the House he would probably have something to say himself.

A word as to what the Minister of Justice has just said. His objection to the Bill was largely because it would interfere with private betting. The Minister of Justice said to me, when I was consulting him about the Bill, as I said before in the House, that it had been very carefully drawn by three clever lawyers, Mr. Raney, Mr. Cartwright of Toronto, and Sir Thomas Taylor, late Chief Justice of Manitoba. The minister said: These are three clever lawyers, they have given a great deal of attention to the drafting of the Bill, and I do not think it can be improved on, and the Minister of Justice said he added the words 'for the purpose for which it was intended,' and if he says he added those words I take it for granted that he did. But I took the care at times to tell the Minister of Justice that it was not the desire of the promoters of the Bill to in any way interfere with private betting. Knowing that that was not the intention, he suggested that the Bill could not be improved upon for the purpose for which it was intended. I said to the Minister of Justice: If this Bill, in your opinion, would affect the man who makes a private bet, I would like you to suggest any language that you can suggest that would leave out the private bettor and exempt him. He said: I cannot suggest any language that would be an improvement on the Bill as it is drawn in that respect. Afterwards I myself, fearing the Minister of Justice might make some further objections to the Bill in that regard, that is was interfering with private betting, drafted a clause and submitted it to him, and as he in his own writing amended it in order, as he thought, to fit the case. I said: Will the amendment, as you have changed it, fill the bill, and exempt the private bettor? He said: I think it will. The Minister of Justice then must have known that that was my intention. The Minister of Justice looked carefully over the Bill. He said that clause 235 did not in any way interfere with the private bettor, but that it would with the recording or registering of a private bet.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member understands that we cannot go over all this ground again. The hon. gentleman's present statement may bring about another statement from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. HUGHES. Do you not think the hon. gentleman should be allowed to explain himself after the mess he made of it the other night.

Mr. MILLER. All I say is the Minister of Justice has advised me in one way when I consulted him, and has advised the House in an entirely different way.

THE INSURANCE BILL.

Mr. MACDONELL. Is it the intention to proceed with the Insurance Bill this session?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is the intention to proceed with the Bill.

LAC DU BONNET FISHERIES.

Mr. BRADBURY. I wish to ask the minister in charge of the Fisheries Department a question regarding Lac du Bonnet. I can perhaps best do so by reading the following letter which I have received:

Lac du Bonnet, April 3.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly give me some information regarding the Lac du Bonnet fisheries. It is rumoured that the Lac du Bonnet waters are thrown open for commercial fishing for the settlers and residents around Lac du Bonnet, which would be satisfactory to the people as long as the district is not invaded by Indians and foreign fishermen. There is a company preparing to buy the fish and they are telling us that they have bought the licenses and paid for them, and the settlers can get no license except through the company who wants an agreement signed which we do not think is right. If you could give us some information in this matter you would do us a great favour.

Respectfully yours,
MARTIN WOLD,
Lac du Bonnet, Manitoba.

I have had several letters to this effect. There is a company that has been trying very hard to secure the control of Lac du Bonnet which the right hon. gentleman will remember was discussed before. The company, I understand, have purchased a large number of these licenses from the fishery inspector at Selkirk, in the names, I presume, of settlers, and they come to the settler and say: We have a license here for you, and if you will sign an agreement to sell us the fish you catch under this license, we will give it to you. And they are going to the other settlers, and telling them that they cannot get a license except from them. Will the right hon. gentleman ascertain if such licenses have been issued, to whom they have been issued, and to whom they have been handed? I would also ask him to see that the settlers are protected in their rights.

PRIVATE BILLS.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER TRANSMISSION COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 115), to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company—Mr. Pardee.

On section 1, incorporation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have the promoters of the Bill looked over the amendments which have been suggested, and come to a conclusion?

Mr. PARDEE. Yes, as stated on Friday night, we are quite content to accept the amendment suggested by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), and the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. S. Sharpe). There is no objection to those amendments.

Mr. LENNOX. What about an amendment of which I gave notice, to enact as subclause 3 of this Bill clause 9 of the St. Lawrence Power Company Bill? That is, re-enacting it so that the two companies would stand exactly on the same basis. It is somewhat more restrictive as regards the power of entering on property, it gives less extensive appropriation powers. Is the promoter of the Bill prepared to accept that?

Mr. PARDEE. I think that in so far as the acquiring of property by the transmission company for the transmission lines is concerned, it is amply guarded in the Bill now before the House, in this way that in the event of anything occurring they shall all come under the provisions of the Railway Act. There is a further provision that in acquiring either lands or easements it is absolutely necessary that they should acquire the fee simple. I think it is hardly fair to ask more onerous conditions, in fact I do not see how they could be imposed. Every interest is safeguarded thoroughly and absolutely. I would be quite content to accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Middlebro), it is practically the same amendment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have not given a great deal of attention to this Bill personally, but some hon. gentlemen on this side have come to me and made certain suggestions with regard to it. Another suggestion contained in an amendment was practically to this effect: This company is designed as I understand it according to the actual facts for the purpose of transmitting power which is produced by the St. Lawrence Power Company. The rates to be charged by this company are in effect made subject to the control of the Railway Commission of Canada. The St. Lawrence Power Company, however, was incorporated before we had any Railway Commission and its rates are not subject in any way to the Railway Commission of Canada. The difficulty which was suggested to me and which seems to me to have some importance was this: Suppose that the St. Lawrence Power Transmission company goes before the Railway Commission of Canada to have its rates fixed, it gets its power from the St. Lawrence Power Company; The St. Lawrence Power Company in dealing with the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company says: We are absolutely untrammelled by any control of the Railway Commission, we were incorporated before there was any Railway Commission. Then the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company come before the Railway Commission of Canada and will say: We have been obliged to pay $25 or $35 or $40 per horse-power to the St. Lawrence Power Company. They are not subject to your control and we cannot do anything with them. Then the Railway Commission will have to say: You are subject to this condition of affairs: We cannot cut you below what you are paying, we must allow you what you are paying and something more and the net result would be that there would be no effective control by the Railway Commission of Canada over the rates.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As I understand there is no objection on the part of the promoters of the Bill to put in this Bill anything and everything that may be necessary in order to put as effectively as it can be put in the hands of the Railway Commission, the power to have control over its rates. I do not apprehend that the objection is a very strong one. If I understand the objection of my hon. friend it is not his own objection but an objection which was stated to him, and it is that there was some doubt as to whether the St. Lawrence Power Company, having been incorporated before the Railway Commission, would be made amenable to that commission. I do not think that the point is a strong one. We have created the commission and have provided that railway companies in existence 50 years before the creation of that board should have their tolls submitted to it. At all events, to make it doubly sure, I understand the promoter is quite willing to agree to the amendment suggested so as to clear that point and make it beyond doubt.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. An amendment designed to cover that has been placed on the Votes and Proceedings of the 6th of April, page 796.

Mr. S. SHARPE. The promoter has agreed to accept that amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would like the committee to consider whether in this private Bill affecting a power transmission line, you can introduce an amendment affecting another company not under the view of this Bill, that is the St. Lawrence Power Company. I would like to have the opinion of the committee on that point. Whether this Bill affecting one company can properly be amended to affect the rights of an entirely different company by throwing on it duties not provided for in the notice given for the Bill before the committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it can be done in this case, for this reason. In the first place, parliament can refuse to accept the Bill unless this amendment be made. In the second place, there is the question of notice, which is the more important question. It is admitted, I understand, that the corporations, although distinct in form, are practically one. Therefore, the promoters of this Bill have the right, on behalf of the St. Lawrence Power Company, which they also represent, to come before parliament and say that they will accept the Bill with these amendments.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The point mentioned by the chairman is not so much a point of procedure as a point affecting our powers. As a point of procedure, if all parties have agreed to it, we can agree to it also.

On section 1, incorporation,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There are some other changes which I consider of a minor character to which I can refer as we go along. There is the one already referred to with regard to the curious change made with respect to the powers of expropriation. I refer to the use of the word 'easement'; and, of course, there may be other points of which I am not aware, because I have not given as much attention to the details of the Bill as have some other hon. gentlemen on this side of the House.

On section 6, powers,

Mr. S. SHARPE. It was suggested that after the words, 'with similar lines in the United States for the purpose of importation,' the words, 'into Canada,' should be inserted. They were introduced in the Private Bills Committee, but have been omitted from the Bill as reprinted.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not think that in a Canadian Bill the word 'importation' would mean anything but importation into Canada.

Mr. S. SHARPE. As the words 'United States' are used there, might it not be construed as importation into the United States?

Mr. GRAHAM. This parliament could not legislate in regard to importation into the United States. We can only deal with importation into Canada or exportation out of Canada. The object of this is to enable the company to bring in power from Waddington.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am inclined to think that if there is no objection, the words 'into Canada' had better be inserted, though the word 'importation' probably means that.

Mr. S. HUGHES. The minister's statement that the object was to bring in power from Waddington hardly tallies with the statement of the Minister of Public Works, that in dealing with these gentlemen he would receive a guarantee that although 75 per cent of the power might be generated in the United States, one-half of it would be brought into Canada.

Mr. S. SHARPE moved that the following words be added to subsection 2 of section 6:

The said Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, on the application of any person or municipality, or on the application of the Government of Canada, or of the Government of the province of Ontario, or of the government of the province of Quebec, shall fix the price from time to time for periods not to extend over five years, at which the company may puchase electricity and electric, pneumatic or other current, power or force, and shall fix the prices from time to time for periods not to extend over five years at which the St. Lawrence Power Company incorporated by chapter III., 1 Edward VII. (1901) shall sell or lease such electricity and electric, pneumatic or other current, power or force to the company.

Mr. HUGHES. Would it not be stronger if the words 'to the company' were omitted? That would cover the sale to any one.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not think you could very well do that in this Bill. There may be some excuse for putting it in this particular Bill, because it is said the two companies are composed of the same people, but I do not think that you could reasonably go further in this Bill than is already provided by this amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. If they should sell to another company, and that company should sell back, would they not evade the law?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, they are tied up by this charter.

Mr. HUGHES. The St. Lawrence Power Company is not brought under the Railway Act by this amendment, except for the sale of power to the St. Lawrence Power and Transmission Company. Why not bring it under the Railway Act for all purposes?

Mr. GRAHAM. We should have to introduce a special Act.

On subsection 3; section 247 of the Railway Act shall apply to the works and undertaking of the company,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is section 247?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will read the opening lines of it, which will show the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) the general effect, and I will send him across the floor a copy of the Act that is before me:

When any company is empowered by special Act of the parliament of Canada to construct, operate and maintain lines of telegraph, or telephone, or for the conveyance of light, heat, power or electricity, the company may, with the consent of the municipal council or other authority having jurisdiction over any highway, square or other public place, enter thereon for the purpose of exercising the said powers, and as often as the company thinks proper, may break up and open any highway, square or other public place, subject, however, to the following provisions :

And so it goes on with the different subsections, covering, in all, two pages. But it begins with the provision that all should be subject to the consent of the municipality.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not understand that it says the consent of the municipality 'as expressed by by-law.' It is customary in the case of railway Bills, when we authorize the building of telephone and telegraph lines, to require that in building through municipalities all the work shall be done subject to the consent of the municipality as expressed by by-law. The municipality may then make conditions. I do not see why it would not be equally possible to do it in this case.

Mr. PARDEE. Subsection 5 of section 247 of the Railway Act covers that.

Mr. LENNOX. This subsection 3 of the Bill is the one I propose to strike out, substituting for it the section of which I have given notice. It is very long, and I shall not read it. But I may say that it is much on the lines of section 247 of the Railway Act, but it does not give the company as broad powers as are given under that section. But the amendment I propose is an exact copy of the provisions of the St. Lawrence Power Company Act, section 9. One matter in which it materially differs from section 247 of the Railway Act is in subsection (i):

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the company to enter upon any private property for the purpose of erecting, maintaining or repairing any of its works, without the previous assent of the owner or occupant of the property for the time being.

I do not propose to take up much time over this matter. But it seems to me that these two companies are so much one company that if they wanted an enlargement of their powers of expropriation they ought to come to us fairly and openly and propose an amendment of their Bill. This is a test of good faith, and a very important one. If the company are acting in good faith, they ought to be prepared, I think to accept the provisions of the original Bill. They are substantially one company, carrying out the same object, the present Bill being designed to make provision regarding the transmission end of the scheme. I do not think we ought to expand their powers in any way, and thus give them a more valuable franchise than they have at the present time. I do not want to repeat what I said on Friday night. I was sorry I had not time to complete what I then wished to say. I was endeavouring to point out that we ought not to put the company in a position in which, in case of need of expropriating their franchise rights, we should find those franchise rights enhanced in value.

Mr. PARDEE. I do not feel inclined to consent to the amendment the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) has moved. He says that this is a test of good faith. So far as this Bill is concerned, I think it will be conceded by the committee that we have, in every way, acceded to every demand that has been made for proper amendments. It is scarcely worth while to pass a Bill which will have practically no effect whatever, a Bill that will give the incorporators absolutely nothing. So far as striking out this section is concerned, I can only say that it seems to me that if any one will read section 247 of the Railway Act, with its various subsections, he will see how absolutely, how completely, every interest is safeguarded with which the work of this company can come in contact. We have no reason to doubt the bona fides of the Board of Railway Commissioners; we know that they have acted, and are still acting, in a manner to claim the satisfaction and approval of the people. Should there be any dispute, should anything arise detrimental to the people with whom the Transmission Power Company have to deal, they will be absolutely forced to come under section 247 of the Railway Act. So far as my hon. friend's amendment goes, I cannot see where would be the wisdom of putting it in this Bill at all. Subsection 5 of section 247 of the Railway Act absolutely protects the public. So far as the Bill is concerned, we have acceded practically to every amendment suggested, and we have it in such a condition that even those who were most strongly opposed to it in the Private Bills Committee and in the House are absolutely satisfied. Therefore, it is hardly consistent at this late stage to move that this paragraph be struck out.

Mr. GOODEVE. Along the line of the argument raised by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), I may say that it was the intention of the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) to call attention to an Act similar in purpose adopted by the federal house at Washington. In addition to the fact brought out by the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) that the state legislature of New York charged certain fees, it also provided that the federal Act should govern the Long Sault Bill, somewhat similarly as our Railway Act governs the railways, and I want to call attention to a most remarkable and very sweeping clause which these men are willing to accept on the other side. After setting forth that all the works will be constructed in accord with plans submitted to the Militia Office and Secretary of Trade and Commerce at Washington, and it is provided that these shall have absolute control, and the right shall be vested in the state and not in the company to regulate the flow of water, whether or not injurious to the company, and that at any future time the United States government may have this dam removed at once, either by blasting it or in any other way, if they consider that necessary in the interest of the government or navigation, and no claim can be made for damages or compensation of vested rights. That is a very broad clause which the company had to accept, and the reason I call attention to it is because it bears out the contention of my hon. friend from South Simcoe. It shows how valuable these franchises are considered by the nation to the south. As I read this Act, I feel more strongly than ever the necessity of our being very careful before granting franchises of this kind.

Mr. GRAHAM. If my hon. friend were dealing with damming the St. Lawrence, the position he takes would be a wise one, but there is no question of that here. We have given other companies power to erect transmission lines throughout Canada, and in none have we insisted on any such provision. None of these is so restricted as the present company. If I were not very anxious to get transmission lines in order to obtain power in the vicinity where I live, I would advise the promoters to drop their Bill. If they were proposing to dam the St. Lawrence, that would be a reason for taking the precaution which the United States has taken, in case that should be found an interference to navigation, and not give the company any claim for damages, but that is not the case here.

Mr. LENNOX. I have the statute referred to by the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) in which he pointed out the very considerable fees charged by the United States for such rights as are here given. I need not refer to that further. I also have before me the Act passed by the House of Representatives, which provides that all the rights and privileges given under that Act are to be subject to an Act of Congress containing the provision referred to by my hon. friend from Kootenay. That will be found in the general statutes of the United States, vol. 34, page 386. It is entitled An Act to Regulate the Construction of Dams across Navigable waters. The Act of the State of New York is made subject to the provision of the Act I have referred to, among which are these clauses.

Whenever Congress shall authorize the construction of a lock or other structures for navigation purposes, in connection with such dams, the person owning such dam shall convey to the United States, free of cost, title to such land as may be required for such constructions and approaches, and shall grant to the United States a free use of water-power for building and operating such constructions.

Section 2. That the right is hereby reserved to the United States to construct, maintain, and operate, in connection with any dam built under the provision of this Act, a suitable lock or locks, or any other structures for navigation purposes, and at all times to control the said dam and the level of the pool caused by said dam to such an extent as may be necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation.

Section 3. That the person, company or corporation building, maintaining or operating any dam and the pertiment works, under the provisions of this act, shall be liable to any damage that may be inflicted thereby upon private property, either by overflow or otherwise. The person owning or operating any such dam shall maintain, at their own expense, such lights and other signals thereon and such fishways as the Secretary of Commerce and Labour shall prescribe.

It also provides that:

Upon refusal of the persons owning or controlling any such dam and accessory works, to comply with any lawful order issued by the Secretary of War or the chief engineer in regard thereto, the Secretary of War or chief engineer may cause the removal of such dam and accessory works as an obstruction to navigation at the expense of the person owning or controlling such dam, and suit for such expense may be brought in the name of the United States against such person, and recovery had for such expense in any court of competent jurisdiction.

It also provides in section 7:

That the right to alter, amend or repeal this Act is hereby expressly reserved as to any and all dams which may be constructed in accordance with this provision, and the United States shall incur no liability for the alteration, amendment or repeal thereof to the owner or owners or any other persons interested in any dam which shall have been constructed in accordance with this provision.

A general provision is thus running through the statute, enabling the United States government to have complete control over the works and remove them if necessary in the interests of navigation and without being under any obligation to pay any damages. Unfortunately we have nothing of the kind in our statutes. I refer to this so that at some future time we may be given the benefit of some such legislation.

Mr. HUGHES. In addition there is a special Act before the American Congress dealing with this very thing. Inasmuch as the government has taken power to prevent the damming of the St. Lawrence, I shall not take up further time in discussing the measure.

Amendment (Mr. Lennox) negatived: Yeas 29; nays 39.

On section 11, expropriation powers, &c.

Mr. HUGHES. In the absence of the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) I would call the attention of the committee to the fact that at page 704 of the Votes and Proceedings there is an amendment proposed by that hon. gentleman as follows:

> Nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to authorize the company to enter on, take or use any land or water, the property of any province, without having first obtained by order in council of the Lieutenant Governor, the consent of the province to such entry, taking or using.

As this Act has to do with the St. Lawrence Power Company, and the St. Lawrence Power Company have jurisdiction at the Long Sault rapids, Coteau, Cascades, and the Cedars, I think it would be well that the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, they having rights as to the bed of the river, should be consulted before any dam is constructed. I would, in the absence of the hon. member for Grenville, beg to move the amendment that I have read.

Mr. PARDEE. I do not think this amendment should go into the Bill. If the amendments keep on, the company will not be able to do anything at all under the charter. I cannot see why this should go in. If we grant a charter we ought to grant a charter giving certain rights. We are not granting them a charter when we absolutely tie them up at the very first step they propose to take. If these people are entitled to come, and get a charter they are entitled to receive certain rights, and not a charter which would practically be a nullity.

Mr. S. SHARPE. This phase of the question was discussed very fully in the committee, and a representative of the Ontario government who was present, Mr. Lynch Staunton, proposed this amendment to the Bill. However, it was voted down, and it is now before the House. The effect of this amendment is to prevent the company from expropriating the bed of the river provided they want to construct works in the bed of the river which is owned by the province. Possibly the difficulty might be compromised by allowing them to expropriate an easement to construct poles in the bed of the river without expropriating the land.

Mr. PARDEE. That was when you thought they were going to build a dam.

Mr. GRAHAM. The object of the amendment was to protect what the province claimed as its right to the bed of the river. That would only apply in case the Bill should give them authority to construct their dam. However, that question will not come up under this Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not see that this parliament has any more power or right to incorporate a company with authority to expropriate the property of a province than a provincial legislature would have to incorporate a company with authority to expropriate the property of the Dominion. The Dominion is supreme within a certain limit. The province is supreme within a certain limit. I cannot see that any argument applies to one case that does not apply to the other case except it might be in matters of great national concern, such as defence. The question of defence is expressly provided for in the British North America Act. The government of the Dominion has the right to take the property of a province for purposes of defence. But the British North America Act, in so far as express provisions are concerned, permits the taking of the property of the provinces for no other purpose. Apart from that the right would appear to be co-relative. If the right exists in the case of the Dominion to expropriate it must exist in the right of the province. I would think that the proper course would be to make it subject to the consent of the proper authorities in either case. You may say that that might render some plan unworkable. I do not see that it would be likely to render any particular undertaking unworkable. At all events, the whole theory of government both in Great Britain, and this country is based upon the supposition that men in authority will act bona fide, and reasonably, and our system of government, as well as their system of government, would be absolutely unworkable, and inoperative unless that theory were carried out in practice. The remedy, it seems to me, is that if persons in positions of authority acted unreasonably and improperly in connection with such matters it would be at their own risk, and they could be removed at the proper time.

Mr. SPROULE. This is declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, it is brought under the expropriation clause of the Railway Act, and it gives the company power to expropriate provincial lands as well as the lands of private individuals. Because it is a work for the general advantage of Canada they might take what belongs to the province, whereas if the province were dealing with the same subject, it would only deal with it within its own provincial lines

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand the Bill, as now before the House, does not contemplate the expropriation of any provincial property. If the Bill provided that, there would be cause for some discussion, but as I understand the Bill now there is no provision which can empower the company to expropriate the bed of a river which would be the property of a province.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Only by the Railway Act, the powers of expropriation of the Railway Act being made applicable to this company. The contention may be raised that such power of expropriation exists.

Mr. PARDEE. We do not propose to take the bed of any river.

Mr. LENNOX. The First Minister has made it clear that the government does not intend to interfere with the lands of the province. That being so, there should be no objection to the clause proposed by the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid). This is taking away nothing if the Prime Minister is right, as the company is not to have this right, it is not intended they should. The promoter of the Bill seems to think it does give them such a right. He does not wish to have the right cut away. We had better put this clause in and have it quite clear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not agree with my hon. friend in this. I say there was no necessity of raising the question, because as I understand the Bill does not contemplate giving the company the power of interfering with the land of a province, and there is, therefore, of course no difficulty. Suppose the question raised by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition should arise. Under our system of divided legislative authority, I think the best interpretation is certainly to hold that both the Dominion and the provinces are supreme within the spheres which are allotted to them by the constitution. But there will always be a difficulty and a question on the borderland as to where the right of the province terminates and the right of the Dominion commences. We have the right here to incorporate companies, and if, in the exercise of that right we deem that it is not possible for the entity which we create to exercise the powers with which it is vested without interfering with property, or rights of the province, the question arises have we that power or not? It would not do to have the question determined as suggested now by the hon. member for Simcoe. This is a matter which had better be left to the courts to determine, the only determination to be given ought to be by a judicial authority. The judicial authority would then determine whether or not in giving such power we have invaded the rights of the province, and for my part I think that is the best interpretation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There are two different considerations, one as to the power and the other as to the conditions on which the power should be granted. I shall not discuss the question of power at the present time, the legal power of this parliament to do it, except to say that if this parliament has the power to permit land of the Crown held in the right of the province to be taken by a private company it seems to me a province might exercise the same jurisdiction in respect to lands of the Dominion, for example, the western provinces. However, I do not think that question has been judicially determined as yet, and it is useless to debate it at this moment. Let us assume that both the Dominion parliament and the provincial legislature have such a power. The next question is as to the conditions under which it should be exercised. What I was suggesting was, that it would be proper both for the provincial legislature and for this federal parliament to grant that power subject to the consent of the executive authority of the other body. If the province has the power, it ought to exercise it subject to the executive authority of the Dominion. The Dominion parliament, if it has such power, ought to exercise it subject to the executive authority of the province, otherwise it seems to me that a great deal of difficulty and friction might be created. I adverted to the argument which might be raised and no doubt would be raised, that to make the power subject to such consent would render the whole undertaking inoperative, because the necessary consent might not be obtained and I endeavoured to meet that objection by suggesting that to proceed on the theory that persons in authority, persons placed by the people of Canada in authority here, or persons placed in authority by the voters in any province over that province would exercise their authority in respect of such a matter in bad faith, was not reasonable, and that if they did so the proper remedy would be by an appeal to the people.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Taking the view of my hon. friend, if the two powers, the provincial legislature and the Dominion parliament were to agree to allow something of this kind, I would see some force in it, but I would suggest that before we come to any such conclusion it would be far better to have a judicial determination as to what are the rights of the provinces and of the Dominion and how far they can be carried. My hon. friend is right. He says that if it be in the power of this parliament to invade, in the exercise of this power, property held by the Crown in the right of the province, why will not the converse proposition hold good that the province will have the right to expropriate land properly belonging to the Dominion, held by the Crown in the right of the Dominion? The argument is a strong one, and I could not see any reason why it should not apply in one case or the other. But it is a case which if it ever arose had better be settled by judicial authority, and if the action would decide one way or the other, it might be advisable for the two powers, Dominion and provincial, to come to some understanding as to its existence.

Mr. HUGHES. As the amendment of the leader of the opposition, which practically nullifies any power the company might have had to construct a dam on the St. Lawrence, has been accepted, I presume that this is not so important as it would be without that amendment. But the situation is a very peculiar one. I spent some time in examining the ground. It is peculiar that 95 per cent of the power belongs to the United States, and that a dam of the length of 100 feet or so is all that would be necessary on the Canadian side to give away our entire property on the River St. Lawrence. The main dam would be from Long Sault Island to the American shore in American territory. The other dam would be between the eastern lower corner of Long Sault Island and Barnhart's island, both in the United States. That is a wing dam. The dam between the eastern end of Barnhart's island and Canada is the only one where any Canadian property would be concerned. At present one can walk practically across the river except for about 30 feet at that point. At that point the whole stream of the water passes down on the American side. The stones are all there, and it would be very easy to dam that part of the river. Therefore, in case this parliament should ever allow this company to construct a dam over the St. Lawrence, I think it would be well to have the double precaution that it could not expropriate land without the consent of the provincial legislature.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I think it would be very disadvantageous to the public if the company were allowed to acquire an easement. This is a private company, and is not in the same category as the Hydro-Electric Commission; and under this section as it stands the company could string its wires along the houses or barns of the farmers by acquiring an easement, which might subject them to a great deal of inconvenience.

Mr. PARDEE. The company would have to acquire a fee simple.

Mr. S. SHARPE. As the word 'land' in subsection 4 includes any privilege or easement required by the company, it could acquire a right of way by merely acquiring an easement.

Mr. PARDEE. They would have to pay for it.

Mr. S. SHARPE. They might make misrepresentations to the farmers, and get them to sign for an easement, and in that way the company might avoid paying the compensation they should pay.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think subsection 4 ought to be struck out, for a good many reasons. In the first place, it seems to me inconsistent with subsection 6. In the next place it would enable the company to go into any city, town or village and expropriate the right or privilege or easement, to put up poles and string wires without the consent of the municipal authorities, and thus nullify section 247 of the Railway Act. Subsection 4 seems to me to cut out section 247 altogether, as this special provision would prevail over the general provision of the Railway Act in that regard.

Mr. PARDEE. The Railway Act is made expressly to apply to this Act wherever necessary.

Mr. LANCASTER. So far as it is not inconsistent with this Act.

Mr. PARDEE. The Railway Act, in section 247, says that this company cannot go into any municipality without its consent, and that in the event of that consent not being obtained, they shall go before the Board of Railway Commissioners. Surely, then, subsection 4 of section 11 does not override that section of the Railway Act. Subsection 4 simply interprets the word 'land'. Then, subsection 6 simply provides that in the event of the company exercising its right of expropriation for the purpose of acquiring land for its right of way, such land must be acquired in fee simple. So that it appears to me that it is not so opposed to the Railway Act as the hon. gentleman thinks.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the leader of the opposition is quite right in insisting that subsection 4 should be struck out, even on the argument of the hon. gentleman who is promoting the Bill. I understand that we are not to give this company any greater rights than the Railway Act gives them. The Railway Act defines the word 'land', but the hon. gentleman wants in this Bill a special definition which gives that word a wider meaning. That is, as I understand it, the import of the objection of the leader of the opposition. If the company gets all the rights as regards land that the Railway Act gives it, that is all that it ought to have. The Railway Act has hedged around the taking of land with certain precautions. The words of the Railway Act are not that you can take an easement. The owner of property does not want to give an easement over it, he wants the railway either to expropriate it, to take it and pay him the damages, or to leave it alone, not to have an easement. The effect of putting the word 'easement' is to beat a man down on his right of compensation, because it is impossible to give intelligent evidence as to how much he is going to be interfered with.

Mr. PARDEE. We will strike out subsection 4.

Subsection struck out.

On subsection 6, of section 11.

Mr. HUGHES. I would move as a new subsection the amendment moved by Mr. Reid, as follows:

Nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to authorize the company to enter on, take or use any land or water, the property of any province, without having first obtained by order in council of the lieutenant governor, the consent of the province to such entry, taking or using.

Amendment negatived, yeas 30, nays 44.

On section 12,

Mr. BOYCE. I presume the object of this clause is to specifically prevent the exportation of power developed or coming on the lines of this company to the United States of America. It has been pointed out that what the company might be prevented from doing directly it might, under the peculiar wording of some of the sections, be able to do indirectly, and I would, therefore, move to add:

And it shall not be lawful to export to the United States any electricity, electric power, hydraulic or other power or force which may come on the lines of the company, or in any way use the undertaking of the company for and in aid of such exportation.

Mr. GRAHAM. The clause in the Bill covers it.

Mr. PARDEE.

Mr. S. SHARPE. In the Private Bills Committee a motion was made to add to this section:

Or sell to any person or company for the purpose of export.

That I think covers the same ground.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would move as subsection 12a, the amendment standing in the name of Mr. Middlebro:

The Governor General in Council shall not give his approval to the construction of any further canals, water-courses, raceways, dams, wing dams, sluices or other works on the River St. Lawrence by the St. Lawrence Power Company, Limited, under the provisions of chapter one hundred and eleven of 1 Edward VII., Canada, or otherwise, nor agree to or approve of any terms or conditions respecting the diversion of water or power from Canada, the consideration and rate to be paid therefor, the location of all dams and generating plant, the reservation of power for use in Canada, the safeguarding of our canals, adjacent lands and navigation, the procuring of consent thereto from the British government under the Ashburton treaty or other treaty, unless and until the plans, specifications, and all terms and conditions shall have been first submitted to and approved by parliament.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. May I ask the promoter whether he can give an estimate of the quantity of power now developed?

Mr. PARDEE. No, it does not make any difference for the purposes of this Bill.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think we should have a little different answer from that.

Mr. PARDEE. All I can say is that we have heard that discussed. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) has told us several times what he thought on the subject. Personally, I have no idea of the quantity of power likely to be generated. But, as I have said, I cannot see what difference it makes for the purposes of this Bill.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think we ought to have some definite knowledge as to the quantity of power possible to be developed. The Minister of Railways and Canals should be in a position to inform the House.

Mr. GRAHAM. The question of the amount of power to be developed is one, apparently, involving a difference of opinion. I have made a statement on the subject several times when, perhaps, my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) was not in his place. My opinion is that they have surplus power there at the present time. But, I know that there are those who do not accept that view. If power is going to waste there, I want to have the legislative conditions so arranged that there will be no excuse for not developing that power, and selling it to those in that section who want power for various industries.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The Minister of Railways and Canals ought to come down to facts and figures. He ought to know the capacity of the electrical machines installed there. He could send one of his engineers, and in five minutes that engineer could see what is the capacity of those machines.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We know nothing about machines.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) must know that the capacity is stamped on every machine.

An hon. MEMBER. He says we know nothing about machines.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I see. The machines to which hon. gentlemen opposite are more accustomed do not read in amperes and volts, but in votes. They are not so much electric machines as election machines. But, in the case of electrical machines, any second-class engineer could go down to those works and, in five minutes, inform the minister whether the plant had more capacity than it was using. For each machine will certainly have the brass plate showing its capacity. Then the engineer could read the meter, and a reference to the books will show the quantity they are selling. A very brief sum in subtraction would show whether the machine is working to its capacity or not. It is very surprising that the Minister of Railways and Canals, who has a staff of engineers and technical officers, should not be able to answer the question that has been put. In fact, the report made by his engineers should contain that information. The question is an important one. What is the use of giving a charter to a transmission company if there is no power to be transmitted? If the power company are now using up all the power their plant will develop, what is the use of this line, and of all this fight in parliament? But, if they are using only, say, one-third of the power they might generate, I can see the necessity for further legislation.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the minister (Mr. Graham) say that he will send an engineer and investigate for himself the amount of power that is developed?

Mr. GRAHAM. They can not develop any more power than the water will give them. If this Bill goes through and we get power to transmit electricity, we will soon find out whether they have a surplus or not.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I would ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if the parent company are in default under the provisions of the Act of 1901? If they are, the House should be very careful about passing legislation that will have the effect of reviving their rights.

Mr. GRAHAM. My own opinion is that they are not in default. If I remember well, one of the amendments proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. S. Sharpe) deals with that—

Mr. S. SHARPE. Yes, I have given notice of an amendment to safeguard that point.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no question in my mind that they have not forfeited their right.

On section 12 (a).

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for West Lambton proposed an amendment to be found at page 760 of the Votes and Proceedings. I should think it would be well to bring it in here as section 12 (b).

Mr. PARDEE. I move that the following be added to section 12, as subsection (b):

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to constitute an approval by parliament of any future development of water-power by erecting a dam in or across the St. Lawrence river under the Act 1 Edward VII., chapter 3, intituled: 'An Act to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Company,' or otherwise. Nor shall the company hereby incorporated be authorized to transmit power generated by the St. Lawrence Power Company other than the power generated by and in connection with the works already constructed by the said St. Lawrence Power Company.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the hon. member (Mr. Pardee) has no objection, I would prefer to have that go in as section 12 (b).

Mr. PARDEE. No objection.

On section 14.

Sections 136, 137 and 141 of part II. of the Companies Act shall not apply to the company.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would the hon. gentleman please tell us what is the language of these sections.

Mr. PARDEE. Section 136, as I read it, relates to the law regarding changing the head office of the company. Section 137 says that certain by-laws should be sanctioned by the shareholders, and that in special cases, the Governor in Council should give his consent. In Section 141 deals with the amount that should be paid upon the stock subscribed for.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is dealing with matters of internal organization.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I would like to submit an amendment as follows:

Nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to revive any powers of the company which may have become null and void by reason of the said company not having complied with the provisions of its Act of incorporation.

Mr. PARDEE. I think we have had quite sufficient legislation regarding this company, and that we ought not to make a special enactment of that kind apply to it.

Mr. S. SHARPE. This is a very important provision. We are making some amendments to the Act of 1901, by reason of which we may revive rights that the company have lost. If the company have lost rights which they had under the Act of 1901, it is important that they should not be revived. The Act of 1901 gives the company power to dam the St. Lawrence some 57 miles and includes four water-powers. If the company have lost any rights under the Act of 1901, we should not revive them, and the country should get the benefit.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Has the hon. gentleman given notice of his amendment?

Mr. S. SHARPE. It is so manifestly in the public interest that I thought the promoter would accept it without notice.

Mr. SPROULE. By unanimous consent we can proceed without notice. This amendment appears to be framed for the same purpose as the other.

Section 14 agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. Before this Bill comes up for third reading, the whole Bill should be reprinted, as there are many amendments. Has the right hon. gentleman any objection?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. So far as I am concerned, I have none, and I can rely on my hon. friend having no objection and no bad intentions.

Bill reported.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

HAMILTON, WATERLOO AND GUELPH RAILWAY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 79) respecting the Hamilton, Waterloo and Guelph Railway Company.—Mr. Harris.

On section 7,

Mr. MACDONELL. Mr. Chairman, when the earlier clauses of this Bill were being considered, I had not the advantage of being in the House. The Bill has gone partly through, but I would like to take the position now that I would have taken if I had been in the House when the first clause was reached. Perhaps it will be just as expeditiously proceeded with if I take the ground now that I intended to take, because the objections that are taken to this Bill were the same objections that were taken when the Bill was in the Railway Committee. When the Bill was before the committee for a number of days, it was very fully discussed and was objected to as strenuously as the circumstances would permit. The Bill was amended very largely and some of the municipal objections—the objections by the city of Toronto—were removed. The principal objection that was taken was that the promoters who were asking for this Bill should have applied for whatever legislation they want to the Ontario assembly. The Bill is one that asks for a charter which is purely local in its character. The promoters are asking parliament to extend the powers contained in the original Act, being chapter 106 of the Act of 1906 of this House. This company was incorporated in 1906 under the chapter I have cited. The Act there gave the company power to construct a railway, properly speaking, from Hamilton to Waterloo, and another branch from Hamilton to Guelph, to be called the Hamilton, Waterloo and Guelph railway. By the Act, the undertaking of this company was declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. It was a purely inter-urban electric railway, which was given incorporation by this parliament. I desire to point out that four years have elapsed since the original Act was passed, and during those four years the powers conferred by parliament on this company have lapsed. The company have not carried out the requirements of the statute, and they are in the position of practically applying here for a new charter. I contend that they are in no better position than they would be were they applying here in the first instance, because they have lost whatever powers were given to them by their Act of incorporation. They have lost these powers because of non-user of the powers, because they did not proceed, under the requirements of the Act, with the construction of the road. Not a rod of this railway has been constructed. It is contended by the promoters that a large amount of money has been spent in surveys and preliminaries of that nature. I am not aware whether that is so—I presume it is so—but even if it is so, the company has not complied with the requirements of spending 15 per cent of the total cost in the construction and the commencement of the construction within two years, as mentioned in the original Act of incorporation. So that, they are here to-day asking for incorporation, and they are in the same position as if they were here for the first time. The objection I raised in the Railway Committee, and which I desire to raise now is that the matter is one of purely provincial concern, and that this is a railway that has its form, as it were, pointed out by the British North America Act. The sections of the Act are well known to hon. gentlemen present, and I shall just simply refer to them very shortly. Section 92 of the British North America Act, which contains exclusive powers of the provincial legislature, declares in subsection 10 that provincial jurisdiction shall be exercised with respect to:

> Local works and undertakings other than such as are of the following classes:
> (c) Such works as, although wholly situate within the province, are before or after their execution declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces.

This work, because it is declared to be for the general advantage of Canada is, by virtue of our constitution, a Dominion undertaking. The effect of having it declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada is, of course, to remove it from the provincial control and give it the status of a Dominion railway. What reason is there for it? It was argued on behalf of the promoters of the Bill in the committee that these powers were essential. Some hon. gentlemen argued that because it crossed Dominion railways it should be declared to be a Dominion undertaking. That objection has long since been removed, if it ever existed in a case of this kind. Other hon. gentlemen urged, with regard to the handling of through traffic, that it was essential that it should be a Dominion railway and that it should be as such subject to the control of the Dominion Railway Commission. Section 8 of our own Railway Act removes both those objections. As hon. gentlemen will recollect, section 8 reads as follows:

> Every railway, steam or electric street railway or tramway, the construction or operation of which is authorized by special Act of the legislature of any province, and which connects with or crosses or may hereafter connect with or cross any railway within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, shall, although not declared by parliament to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, be subject to the provisions of this Act relating to—
> (a) the connection or crossing of one railway or tramway with or by another, so far as concerns the aforesaid connection or crossing;
> (b) the through traffic upon a railway or tramway and all matters appertaining thereto;

Both these reasons that were argued why it was necessary for this undertaking to receive Dominion incorporation are met, and provided for by section 8 of the Railway Act which puts this railway, for these two purposes, under the control of the Railway Commission for Canada. This section 8 of the Act seems to have been enacted for the very purpose of meeting such cases as this. Otherwise there was no use in passing this. If short railways, railways that do not extend beyond the province or connect with a railway in a foreign country, are to be given incorporation here simply because they ask for it, what is the use of section 8? This section was surely passed for the purpose of allowing provincial railways to take provincial incorporation, and at the same time have the advantages of the Dominion Railway Board if they so desired. It has also been urged that for the purpose of financing a railway a Dominion charter was necessary, and while that may be so I desire to point out that if this were a provincial railway it would be governed by the Ontario Railway Act, as administered by the Ontario Railway Commission, and subject to all the advantages and restrictions of that Act. This is in no sense a main highway of commerce. It is an electric railway, and as originally chartered it had power simply to construct from Hamilton to Waterloo, and from Hamilton to Guelph. Not a single foot of that railway has been constructed under that charter, and yet it now applies to this parliament for power to build a branch line from the city of Hamilton to the city of Toronto. So far as that new branch is concerned it is in the same position as if it were now applying for the first time for Dominion incorporation. That branch line is an entirely provincial concern, and in the respect that the most important feature of the Bill is with regard to its entrance into the city of Toronto, it is a municipal undertaking. It may be said that the interests of the city of Toronto are safeguarded, and, while they may have been to a certain extent, yet to a large extent they are not. This railway has not filed plans, it has not told the public how it is to enter the city, it has no route mapped out, and yet it gets a roving charter to come from the western limits of the city into the terminal station, and with certain rights of stopping at intervals, subject to the regulations of the Railway Commission. The provision for an entrance into Toronto is the feature of the Bill on which a fight was made in the Railway Commission, and as without that the Bill does not amount to anything, it is the feature which the promoters are anxious to retain. It was said in the committee that there was objection offered to railways entering Toronto, but that is not the case. The Toronto council make no objection to railways entering that city under proper conditions, but the people of Toronto certainly do believe that a railway should enter their city in a proper way, and that plans and maps of the route should be filed, showing where highways are to be crossed, and how it is proposed to cross them. That certainly is a matter for the consent of the municipalities. This railway company has power to enter the city, and expropriate a right of way which is not delimited or set down on plans, so that any one interested may know where it is going. The company has also the right to cross over, and under highways, and the Bill gives them power practically to force an entrance through the city in any way they may please. I would point out to the committee that this is at best a suburban railway, and that like other suburban electric railways it should be under the provincial railway board.

Mr. EMMERSON. Is Hamilton a suburb of Toronto?

Mr. MACDONELL. We hope some day that it may be.

Mr. LANCASTER. Some day Toronto will be a suburb of the whole Niagara district.

Mr. MACDONELL. The Toronto railway, the Mimico railway, the Metropolitan railway, the York Radial railway, and the railway running out the Davenport road are at the present time all under provincial control, and they experience no hardship from that. There are many reasons why this road should be retained under provincial control. It is a street railway. True, it is not going on the highway, so we are told, but there is nothing in the Bill which gives us any guarantee as to that. Let us assume that they will expropriate their right of way through the country and still they are a suburban road, radiating some forty miles from Toronto through two counties. Why should not such a road be governed by the provincial law as are other railways of a like character? We are asking that this railway should be under provincial control, and that it should have the consent of the municipality before entering the city. What is the fight of this municipality to-day will be the fight of another municipality to-morrow. Our cities are growing, and the railways are radiating from the large centres of population, and if this parliament is going to declare that all these suburban roads are for the general advantage of Canada then the various provinces might just as well here, and now drop the idea of incorporating any railways, and providing regulations for them.

Let me point out that the local conditions of each province are made by local feelings, and local requirements. These are not Dominion matters. The environments of Toronto are not similar to those of Montreal or those of Winnipeg or those of Vancouver. The different provinces have the right, under the British North America Act, to create their own local authority in accordance with their own local requirements and local sentiments; and I ask if that is not reasonable. Otherwise, what would be the use of giving them these powers? The people of one province know that what is good for them may not be good for the people of another province. Take, for instance, Sunday regulations. The province of Ontario has adopted the Sunday law. Other provinces may not choose to adopt it. They may desire to have their railways run on Sunday. The province of Ontario has adopted a law providing that any city having a population of over 50,000 can hold a plebiscite as to whether the cars may run on Sunday or not. That is a matter which concerns local conditions entirely. I submit that all these local matters should be left to be worked out by local authority. Let me mention a few conditions of the Ontario Railway Act which are not provided for in the Dominion Act—conditions that have arisen because of local requirements and local sentiments in the province. These conditions may not suit other provinces, but they suit the province of Ontario. It is set down in section 81 of the Ontario Railway Law that a railway operated by electricity shall stop at such places in addition to those fixed by the company as the board may from time to time by resolution direct. They have power to fix additional stopping places if they desire. Section 171 is a very important section, providing that fares to be taken by a company on a railway operated by electricity shall not exceed for each passenger five cents for any distance not exceeding three miles and for any excess two cents per mile; and for each passenger under ten years, three cents for three miles, and for additional distance one-half fare. Subsection 2 of the same section provides that pupils under 17 years of age actually attending school shall be entitled to eight tickets for 25 cents. These rates have been enacted as fair charges for the carrying of passengers. If this road were under Dominion regulation it would not be subject to this tariff; there would be no means of enforcing it; while other companies operating side by side with it, and under provincial control, would be required to observe these rates of fares. Why give one railway company advantage over another operating in the same district? By section 202 any privilege granted by a corporation to a railway company cannot be granted for a longer period than twenty-five years. Section 208 provides that no municipality shall grant to any railway operating by electricity any privilege to operate along a highway for a longer period than twenty-five years. By section 221 all motormen are required to pass inspection by an examiner as to habits, physical ability, and intelligence. This applies to a street railway or a railway operated by electricity. By section 227 no company operating a line, of railway of twenty miles in length or over shall permit or require conductors, engineers, etc., who have worked in any capacity for sixteen consecutive hours, to go again on duty unless they have had six hours rest. Section 193a provides that no employee shall be required or permitted to work for more than six days of ten hours each in any one week nor upon any Sunday when he has worked the previous Sunday. Section 256 provides that the board may at all times enter on a right of way, use the same, erect poles or place and put down wires and poles for transmission of electrical or other power from any plant in the province of Ontario to the works and plant of any municipal corporation. The board has a right, where power is being distributed, to enter on the right of way, and use the right of way and the poles, wires, etc.,—with proper compensation, of course—to supply the municipalities with electrical power. There are many more provisions of the provincial Act which work out along local lines, and which give to the people of the districts through which these roads run the protection and the service which they require. Having regard to these facts, it seems to me that it is highly improper for the parliament of Canada to continue to assume jurisdiction over these railways. I think I am safe in saying that from one to two months of the time of the members of this House during the present session has been taken up with railway legislation, either in this House or in the railway committee. That time was taken up unnecessarily. The provinces are often heard. In this particular matter, a number of municipalities protested in the Railway Committee against this Bill, but it was of no avail. The government could have prevented this legislation if they had said that this is not the kind of legislation properly enacted at Ottawa. But no effort of that kind has been made. These little railways are not in any sense Dominion roads, and are not expected to merge into Dominion roads. If this were a short steam railroad, one might suppose that at some time it would be absorbed by one of the great railroads of the country. But it is only a suburban electric railway, which will never become a part of the great railway system of the country. If we are going to continue to pass Acts of this kind, as the country grows as the various capitals and other centres of population become as large as Toronto, history will repeat itself, and legislation of this kind will be continually asked for. Therefore, the time has surely come when this House should say whether or not we are going to deal out small railway charters which are not properly within the province of this House. It is not as if this matter had not been already brought to the attention of this House. As long as I can recollect, this House has been passing provincial legislation of this character. Under the name of Acts for the general advantage of Canada, it has been giving to purely local undertakings broad Dominion legislation, which has enabled them to override the interests and rights of localities and provinces until conditions have arisen that are almost unbearable.

The original rights that were granted when this company was declared a work for the general advantage of Canada have expired. That time has gone by and they are coming now as if they were asking in the first instance for this right and in addition to that, as far as the Hamilton and Toronto branch is concerned, they are here, now for the first time seeking an extension of their rights and seeking to get over that extended route the benefit of the declaration that they got when they were first incorporated. If they had gone on and completed their work one would suppose that they had some status here at least, but having done nothing but make their surveys and preliminaries of that kind and not having attempted to construct the road or do any actual work in the field or on the ground, they have no right to come here and ask to have this branch declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. For these reasons I say they should go to the provincial authorities and should be put under the proper regulation of the railway board and the Ontario Railway Act the same as other railways operated in a similar way within a local radius, and they should take the consequences whatever they may be. The company is supposed to be operating in connection with the Hamilton Radial railway which was incorporated here some two years ago. They have done nothing since, they have not built any works, they have made no headway with their undertaking and before the Railway Committee it became apparent, in fact it was admitted, that the interests were identical. You find much the same gentlemen applying in this case for incorporation, and the objection which was taken then was that they should be confined to the rights and powers given them by the Hamilton Radial railway and should work under that charter. Hon. gentlemen will perhaps recollect the contest that arose over the Hamilton Radial railway. That Bill was forced through this House and through the Railway Committee after a very long and stubborn fight and these are the same gentlemen. What was said upstairs in the Railway Committee was that they should operate over the right of way and under the charter of the Hamilton road. But that apparently did not suit the hon. gentleman who was promoting the Bill with the result that the rights given to the Hamilton Radial railway have been duplicated in this particular instance. What the effect is going to be one does not know, you cannot tell whether these people will build the road or not. They have made no manifestation of the character of the road or where it is going, one cannot say just what they are going to do about that. They are asking for this additional charter. The original Hamilton Radial railway have a charter under which they can now operate and the granting of this charter is an unnecessary duplication of the rights then granted. If nothing further is done with this Bill these people will not be suffering any injustice because they will still have the original Hamilton Radial Bill under which they can operate which gives them all the rights they should have and all that the municipality of Toronto thinks they should have. At that time it was Hobson's choice whether Toronto would take the terms submitted or go on in what was apparently a hopeless fight in further opposing this Hamilton Bill. So it is with this Bill. Certain amendments have been arrived at, they are before the House, but in this case again it is Hobson's choice. They are the best terms that can be made, and amendments are inserted which are now before the House and which I have said protect and safeguard the locality in so far as its local business and traffic is concerned. The main objection still exists that this is invading a municipality and municipal and provincial rights under the guise of being a work for the general advantage of Canada when in substance and in fact it is not. It is getting that name in a manner which is not justified. They have shown no reason except that they want it and the further fact that in order to finance the road they require these broader conditions. If that be so, if it is necessary in order to finance the road that this company should evade provincial conditions and, in fact, a provincial Act, does it not show on the face of it an admission that the safeguards thrown about provincial railways are such that they are in the public interest because the railways are constantly seeking to avoid and evade them? For these reasons it is right and proper that they should be compelled to take their local incorporation, to take the thick with the thin, to take the onerous parts together with the rights conferred and work out their rights and existence under local conditions in the same way as other railways operating in a similar manner. I therefore think it only right to move that this committee rise.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am sorry to have to disagree with my hon. friend as to the advisability of this legislation. In 1906, when this railway was first incorporated by this parliament, I took the same position as he does now. I thought it was a work that ought to be, as it was then, limited in distance as described by the hon. gentleman, to the provincial legislature. That is why I then saw no reason why it should be declared a work for the general advantage of Canada. But my vote did not prevail; I was in a minority, and it became an incorporated company with Dominion jurisdiction. That was confirmed in 1908 by an amendment to the Act so that twice this parliament has dealt with this railway as a Dominion work. If you refuse now to pass this Act because we think it should be a work for the provinces to deal with, we will make it impossible for the railway to be built under any circumstances. The fact that it did not build its road makes no difference; the company exists and exists as a work for the general advantage of Canada, and that no province can interfere and make it anything else. So, the hon. gentleman will prevent this railway from being built to Toronto or anywhere else if his motion prevails. We are bound by the statutes of this country. We may vote in the minority when they are passed, but when the statute is passed, the majority and the minority alike are bound by it. This railway could not build at all if we did not continue it as a work for the general advantage of Canada. To say that because this railway is going to extend, because it is going to the city of Toronto, or anywhere else, that because it is getting bigger, therefore it should be made provincial, does not seem very reasonable to me. The larger it is the more reasonable to call it a work for the general advantage of Canada. It would seem that the city of Toronto wants some special control over railways which other municipalities do not have. So far as the hon. member's fight for the city of Toronto being a fight for all the municipalities of Canada, if that principle had been acknowledged in the first place, we should have never had any railways. If every municipality were to take the position with regard to every railway charter that the city of Toronto takes with regard to this charter, no railways could ever have been built. We must remember—and this is the main reason why I rose to speak—that we have established this line as a Dominion work. My hon. friend was there—at least, I suppose he was—in 1906, when I took the position that a provincial charter should satisfy this road. But, as I have said, I was in a minority; parliament passed the Act constituting this a Dominion railway. So, if you deny this road the power to build further you prevent it being built at all. But, I think we want all the railways that we can get in this country, and I feel obliged to vote here, as I voted in the Railway Committee, for the extension of this road to the city of Toronto. We must be reasonable in these matters. If we say that because the road goes to the city of Toronto it must be treated in a way different from that in which it would be treated if it did not go to Toronto, I think that we should be acting most unreasonably. The city of Toronto is powerful. It has perhaps more able, intelligent and clever people than any other city in Ontario—it ought to have, for it is bigger than any other. It is well able to take care of itself where its rights are in question. But the Railway Act of Canada protects the rights of the people everywhere, provided that the Board of Railway Commissioners do their duty. I am not throwing bouquets at the Board of Railway Commissioners, but I have had experience of them, and, unless some one will take the responsibility of saying that they do not protect municipalities, including the city of Toronto, then there is no reason for passing special legislation for the city of Toronto; it should be dealt with the same as any other municipality. The rights of Toronto are larger in quantity, but in quality they are the same as those of any other municipality. It seems to me that Toronto, under the plea of municipal rights, really asks for municipal privileges different from those given to other municipalities. No matter how large the city of Toronto grows, its rights are no different in quality from those possessed by any other municipality.

What are the objections raised by the hon. gentleman to this road remaining under Dominion charter? He says that the principal reason for putting it under provincial jurisdiction is that it may be under proper control. Is there want of proper control by the Dominion Railway Board? I think not. The Railway Act hedges the municipalities about. The very point to which my hon. friend refers, the danger of interference with the streets of of Toronto, is protected by the Railway Act. The Board of Railway Commissioners cannot allow the railway to run on the streets of the municipality. The law does not specify Toronto in this connection, but refers to cities and towns, and, Toronto being a city, it must have the same protection as any other city in that regard. There is no need now, and there never has been, for saying that there is no proper control of this matter. The other point that the hon. gentleman mentions is the Sunday law of Ontario, under which municipalities of over 50,000 can decide whether cars shall run upon their streets on Sunday or not. The general law of Ontario does not allow any railway to run on Sunday. So long as that law remains, then, in the interest of the poor man of this country, I would take that as a reason why this road should continue to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. I say, it is for the general advantage of Canada that the poor man should be allowed to ride on electric cars on Sunday. I say that after due consideration of its effect upon the morals of the people. In the county of Lincoln we have two roads, one of which for from sixteen to eighteen years and another for from twenty to twenty-five years have had the privilege of running electrical cars on Sunday. One is run under a provincial charter given before the comparatively new provincial law was passed, and the other runs under Dominion charter. I do not think that any sensible man would stand up in the county of Lincoln and say that these Sunday cars are anything but a blessing to the whole community. If they were not allowed to run on Sunday, of course, there would be a loss of revenue to these institutions. But in the Sunday cars there is a benefit to the poor man who cannot afford to keep or hire horses, before he can get away from his own door on Sunday. That, in my opinion, and I believe in the almost unanimous opinion of the county of Lincoln, is an advantage to the country in every sense. Therefore, in so far as running cars on Sunday is concerned, so long as the provincial law remains what it is, it seems to me that this is a reason why the people will come and ask for Dominion incorporation. Those promoting these enterprises must be practical and they cannot expect to get the capital with one-seventh of the income cut away. They cannot convince anybody the road will pay, they cannot succeed in building the railway under provincial charter, other than a mere street railway in some city. But this, as I understand it, is not a street railway, but an electric railway to connect a number of towns with the city of Toronto. The change that is proposed in this case will only have the effect of preventing this road being built at all. Under the decision of the courts it remains a work for the general advantage of Canada. As to rates of fare, and as to the twenty-five years limitation upon the charter, the very existence of that limitation means that the attempt to capitalize a railway under the provincial law of Ontario will amount to nothing. When the charter runs out at twenty-five years, the company is at the mercy of popular clamour or popular opinion. Who will invest money under these circumstances?

That is why no railway companies are applying for provincial charters to-day. I do not think that, except in the case of an electric road, there has been any application in Ontario for a provincial charter by a railway company within the last ten years. I know of no railway built under a provincial charter except a purely street railway —no railway connecting one town with another. These very restrictions which my hon. friend points out as applying to provincial roads are the very reasons why these companies are forced to go to the Dominion parliament for incorporation. If we did not have a Board of Railway Commissioners protecting municipalities of all kinds, Toronto as well as the others, in all their rights, I could sympathize with the object of putting some special enactment into this charter to prevent the municipal rights of Toronto from being encroached upon. But the different sections of the Railway Act have hitherto protected Toronto and every other municipality, and the Board of Railway Commissioners is perfectly able and willing to protect all municipalities to the fullest extent. Another reason why I trouble the House on this matter is that some of the newspapers have taken me to task. As a rule I do not care very much what the newspapers say about me. In the ten years I have been in this House, I do not think I have ever risen to a question of privilege on that ground, but some of the Toronto newspapers have undertaken to assail me as a member of the Railway Committee in this connection, and I wish to inform them of the actual facts so that they may have no excuse for making such foolish attacks in the future. In the Toronto 'Globe' of March 25, I find the following article:

It is announced that the sub-committee of the Railway Commission of the House of Commons, appointed to frame a fair compromise between the corporation of Toronto and the Hamilton and Guelph Railway Company, has succeeded in its assigned task. The solution arrived at debars the company from crossing over or under the city streets except on plans agreed upon by its own engineers and those of the city, the Board of Railway Commissioners to arbitrate in the case of an otherwise irreconcilable difference of opinion. The company is debarred entirely from running along any streets. This outcome of the dispute is much more favourable to the city than the original proposals were, and the keenness with which the representatives of the company contend for what they wanted gives some idea of the loss the city would have sustained if they had got it.

As an ordinary and very humble member of the Railway Committee for the last ten years, I resent the imputation contained in that statement. The Railway Committee has always been willing to protect the city of Toronto to the fullest extent. After this Bill had been before the committee for about three weeks, the mayor and other representatives of Toronto agreed to accept an amendment providing that the railway should not be built through the city of Toronto except on such plans as might be approved by the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. MACDONELL. Hobson's choice.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then it is the choice that Hobson ought to have. It is all that any other municipality has ever asked for or obtained. What I object to is that the city of Toronto should be perpetually coming here asking for special privileges and legislation. What I would point out for the benefit of the newspapers is that all Toronto has obtained, it would have got at the first hearing of the Bill. If it had never sent a representative to the Railway Committee, the result would have been exactly the same. Under section 235 of the Railway Act, a railway cannot be carried upon, along or across any existing highway without leave being obtained from the Board of Railway Commissioners, and that is subject to this special provision:

The board shall not grant leave to any company to carry any street railway or tramway, or any railway operated or to be operated as a street railway or tramway along any highway which is within the limit of any city or incorporated town, until the company has first obtained consent therefor by a by-law of the municipal authority of such city or incorporated town.

By section 237, providing for crossings under, over or across a railway, the plans must be submitted to the Railway Commission, which must hear all concerned, and then make an order declaring where, in the best interests of the public, the railway should go. That would have applied to Toronto, had that city never been heard on this measure. The Railway Committee of this House does not require to be clubbed or worried into proper decisions by the mayor or the aldermen of Toronto or any other city. At the first meeting of the committee I pointed out that the Railway Act was sufficient, and that is all the city of Toronto is getting by the special section added to this Bill.

The representatives of the city of Toronto argued strenuously that they should dictate to the railway company where to put the stations, but in the end that decision was left to the Board of Railway Commissioners. That is the law to-day, confirmed by a decision of the Supreme Court at its last session. The Supreme Court decided that the power to locate and determine how many stations shall be built is absolutely in the Railway Commission. So that we heard a great deal with regard to this matter which should never have been mentioned. The rights of Toronto will be treated the same as those of any other city. The rights of Toronto may be greater in quantity but not in quality than those of St. Catharines, Wodstock, Hamilton and other municipalities; and notwithstanding the clause added to this Bill, I am bound to say that the position of Toronto was exactly the same, and its rights just as much protected as if its representatives had not come here at all. It was said in the 'Globe' that we had to be clubbed and importuned by the representatives of the city of Toronto before we were disposed to pass a piece of legislation that fully protected the city of Toronto. Such a pretension is absurd. The Railway Act protects Toronto just as it does every other municipality. This railway was declared in 1906 a work for the general advantage of Canada—and no Toronto gentleman opposed that in this House, no Toronto alderman came here to argue against it. It goes to the city of Toronto, and we must know that no railway is going to build if it cannot reach the large centres of population, and when we find that it is going to Toronto, we have the city of Toronto, under the name of municipal rights, coming down here and engaging in what I am bound to say is nothing more nor less than municipal obstruction. They have had, and always will have, as far as the Railway Committee is concerned, exactly the same rights to protect their streets as any other place, and if the railway does not run upon the streets, they will have the right to ask the Board of Railway Commissioners to decide on the proper place for them to enter the city. The hon. gentleman first argued that they should have a provincial charter, but I can see no good reason for such contention. They could not now get a provincial charter, the road having been declared a work for the general advantage of Canada and consequently, having regard to the trouble that there is with regard to Sunday cars and of getting capitalization for provincial railways in the province of Ontario, I would be obliged to say that the Bill is a good one in the interest of the whole country, and I shall have to vote against the rising of the committee.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It is extremely unfortunate that my hon. friend and colleague on this side of the House (Mr. Lancaster), should take the stand that he has taken on this particular Bill. He is usually well informed, he is generally enthusiastic in the advocacy of public rights, and I have therefore followed him on many other occasions. But, on this question, there is an issue that is altogether different from any that could be raised, as far as the city of Hamilton, the city of St. Catharines, or the other cities in Ontario are concerned. Were the situation the same I doubt not but what I would follow him. He argues from the general principle that we should give to the city of Toronto no more rights than we give to any other city in the province. That is a fair position to take, but what are the facts? The rights of the city of Toronto in this case are certainly far and beyond the rights of any other city, as far as local traction is concerned. Many years ago Toronto purchased and paid hard cash for the franchise that then existed. It paid $600,000 to extinguish the franchise rights of the railway company and it bought under a contract, which was cemented and bound by legislation of the province, the right to the franchise in its own city. That put the city of Toronto in a different position from any other city or town in Ontario. That gave Toronto a proprietary right in the franchise, and in all the street railway traffic within the city, and I wish this House, in approaching this question, to look upon this Bill, not so much as an invasion of provincial rights, as an endeavour to have Dominion legislation imposed upon the proprietary rights of the city of Toronto in its franchise. The city is in exactly the same position with regard to its rights in its franchise as the Grand Trunk railway is with regard to its rights in the Union station, or the Canadian Pacific railway is in with regard to its rights in its own tracks. If any man came to this House and proposed to secure a charter to carry on the business of a steam or any other railway in the city of Toronto, and this House gave the promoters the right to force an entrance into the Union station, which is owned by the Grand Trunk railway company, what would this honourable body do? They would say: Before you come here you must make a contract with the Grand Trunk railway; we will, if necessary force the Grand Trunk railway to make a contract with you; but you must make a contract and you must pay for that contract. What does the city get out of its proprietary right in its own charter?—the right to collect fare from every passenger who travels over the traction railways within its own bounds. These traction roads come to the limit of the city of Toronto, the passengers alight and go on by the cars of the Toronto street railway company, and a proportion of the fares that they pay on these cars goes to the city, and amounts to a large sum every year. The position of the city of Toronto is that of a proprietor. It is not some visionary jurisdiction that is possessed by the city, it is not a matter of a franchise which seems to have dropped down from heaven, but the city has rights which it has paid for. This House which has always endeavoured to prevent any invasion of private rights should maintain the traditions of this House and of the greater House in England where private rights are also always respected. The ingenuous arguments of the hon. member for Lincoln drop to the ground the moment you approach the question from the standpoint that the city of Toronto was the owner of its own franchise. It is true that it has leased that railway to the Toronto Street Railway Company, the same as it might lease a portion of its rights to any other railway company. Another matter that has been brought up is the question of provincial jurisdiction. The hon. member for Lincoln knows very well that he had no ground for arguing that there was any right in this House under any of the old conditions that used to obtain, to grant this railway charter with a clause giving it supreme jurisdiction as far as being a railway for the general advantage of Canada is concerned. The Railway Committee, with very few exceptions, has laid down certain rules, as far as this is concerned, and these rules provide that where a railway crosses the frontier between Canada and a foreign country, this parliament should have jurisdiction to charter the road, that where a railway crosses from one province to another the jurisdiction should rest in this parliament, and that when a railway with a provincial charter crosses a Dominion railway this government should have jurisdiction, not over the provincial railway, but over the crossing. That, as far as I understand it, is the course that has been laid down, and that is as far as they permit jurisdiction of this kind to extend. No one would for a moment attempt to argue that this road is covered by any one of these rules. It is not a provincial road, it is not an international road, it is purely a local road, and there is no argument in favour of granting a charter by this House except the absurd argument about a Sunday law, advanced by the hon. member for Lincoln. What jurisdiction has the province in this case? What does the provincial jurisdiction do? It charters railways of this kind and would grant this railway company a charter had it asked for it. The argument of the hon. gentleman that if that railway company does not get its charter here it cannot get one anywhere else is absurd. Ontario will grant this railway a charter.

Mr. LANCASTER. It cannot by law.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not know where the law is that will prevent it.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then the hon. gentleman has no respect for the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which is, that a line having been declared by the parliament of Canada to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, it must always remain so, and the provincial jurisdiction is lost for ever.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. member is pettyfogging and quibbling; he knows very well that this charter has expired by eflux of time.

Mr. LANCASTER. It has not.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. He knows that when a charter expires by eflux of time the men who own that charter can go to any province in the Dominion, and get a similar charter.

Mr. LANCASTER. I want the hon. gentleman to distinctly understand that his proposition is again absolutely wrong in law. When the time for building a road has expired the company does not die. The company has been declared for the general advantage of Canada, and it continues in existence.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Does the hon. gentleman claim that a company incorporated by this House to build a railway, and which has never turned a sod continues in existence when its charter expires. Why, all the affairs of that company are virtually in liquidation.

Mr. LANCASTER. You are all wrong.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I don't think so.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Privy Council has decided against you

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Well, there must be a tremenduous sized morgue to hold all these charters that have died. Outside the Canadian Pacific railway, the Grand Trunk the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern none of the hundreds of private companies that have been chartered for the past ten years ever built more than ten miles of road, and the man that built that ten miles is in an asylum. Now, these men can obtain similar charters from the provinces, but the difference is that when a company of this kind gets a provincial charter the province takes care to protect the interests of the municipality. The provinces look upon the dealings of such a company as this with the municipalities, in the light of contracts. The argument used by the member for Lincoln, and which is unfortunately not made clear by the member for South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) has been used in the corridors to canvass for this charter, and it is that the province of Ontario will not grant a railway of this kind a charter for a longer term than twenty-five years, and that it would be impossible for the company to finance on such a short period. Well, that is a quibble again. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) knows the law.

Mr. LANCASTER. Are you sure I know the law?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Perhaps you don't, but I always thought you did. I have a good deal of confidence in the hon. member's knowledge of the law, but he sometimes has a convenient faculty of forgetting the clauses of an Act when it suits his purpose.

Mr. LANCASTER. Come again.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. member forgot to tell the House that where a provincial steam or electric railway wishes to carry on its business on its own right of way it can do so to the extent that in that respect its franchise is perpetual. And, it is only when such a railway wishes to use the streets of a town or municipality that the provincial Act obliges them to make a contract with that municipality. Time and again this parliament has put a similar clause in railway charters, and so far as that is concerned there is no difference between the provincial and Dominion law.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will the hon. gentleman tell me of some charter which we granted, saying that the company must come back here again at the end of twenty-five years?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Yes, sir. The municipal Act of the province of Ontario says that a municipality cannot grant a franchise for a longer term than twenty-five years.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am talking about this parliament.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Wait till I get through; I have got you pinched right there. The municipalities in Ontario only have the power to make contracts of this kind for a term of twenty-five years, and if, as we have done in this parliament, we provide that the railway cannot pass through the municipality unless it makes a contract with the municipality, and that municipality can only grant a charter for twenty-five years, the argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) falls again. Now, let us consider for a moment the rights of the Crown, and as we know this question of jurisdiction has been disturbing us a great deal in this House. We have been granting charters which have purported to over ride the right of the province to the land, and the control over the streets of municipalities. I doubt very much if this parliament has the right to give any jurisdiction over the streets of any municipality in Ontario, because as I understand it the province was in the first place the sovereign power owning its own Crown lands, and I cannot find anything in the British North America Act to show that at confederation the province gave up that right. So far as I can see this company is in no sense a bona fide company, it has had a charter for a great many years; it has not expended a dollar on the road, and it comes back here time and again for certain rights. We have no guarantee from this company that if we pass this Bill they will not be down here next year asking for a little more, and this fight will be renewed, and this House will be bothered by this company asking for further privileges. The city of Toronto is in a peculiar position so far as these traction roads are concerned. The gauge of the street railways in Toronto differs from the standard gauge of the railway companies which cannot enter the city on the existing tracks, and consequently they must have a special track built for them along the streets on which they run. Until this session of the provincial parliament the city of Toronto had not the right to admit any of these traction roads on its streets, because it had given a franchise over its streets, which extends for a term of eleven years more making thirty years in all, to the Toronto street railway. This year the provincial legislature passed an Act enabling the city of Toronto to grant the right to traction companies of this kind to enter the city, and if the street railway does not accommodate them the city of Toronto can build these tracks themselves, and let the companies in. I am very sorry that this Bill has been a bone of contention, but the fact is that the city of Toronto feel that the company which is behind this road has come to this House for the purpose of obtaining by an underhand method a franchise to run right into the city of Toronto, and interfere with the proprietary rights of the city.

I agree with that. I think that if this charter passed this House, in spite of all the limitations placed in it, the first provision that should have been insisted on is that this company should make a contract with the city of Toronto under which, if it entered the city, it would be required to pay the city a certain percentage of its earnings as is done by the company at present in control of the streets of that city. I do not see a clause of that kind in this Bill. There are a great many other provisions which I would like to see inserted in it. The argument with regard to the Sunday law does not hold good, for the simple reason that if this road enters the city of Toronto, it comes within provincial jurisdiction. I do not agree with the position taken by hon. members that these roads should be permitted willy-nilly to run on Sunday. I think that the people who live along these roads should have the right to say whether they will run on Sunday or not. They are the people interested, not we in this House. Anything touching the rights of conscience should, I think, be left to the people concerned. In that respect we should follow the rule established by the province. If any municipality makes an agreement with a railway company to allow it to run cars on Sunday, I am quite satisfied that the provincial legislature will confirm such an agreement; it has not failed to do so in any case. Consequently when this company applied to this parliament for a charter to allow it to run a railway to Toronto or under the streets of Toronto, I think this House should tell it at once to go to the provincial legislature and apply for that charter there. This is not a question that affects the province of Ontario or the city of Toronto alone. It is a greater question, affecting the rights of every city in the Dominion, and we should not require those cities to be constantly sending deputations to Ottawa to oppose Bills of this kind put forward by promotors who are seeking from this House rights and privileges for their own personal advantage and franchise in a disguised form. Let them go to those cities and apply for their franchises in the open. After they have made their agreements and contracts, then, if they want Dominion legislation, let them come here and apply for it, and show why they should get it, and as far as I am concerned I will be ready to grant it. But as far as this company is concerned, though it has been in existence for many years, it has not yet turned a sod or built a yard of railway and has no traffic rights, and for that reason I do not think we should give it any franchise rights. It would be different if this road were built to the limits of the city of Toronto and that city had refused to give it permission to enter; but as that is not the case, I do not think we should grant its request. The hon. member for Lincoln has said, and no doubt the same argument will be advanced by others, that having granted this company a charter, we should continue to extend its rights over and over again. I think the sooner we disabuse our minds of that idea the better. We know that a railway charter granted twenty-five years ago gave a great many more privileges than are given by a charter granted to-day. We must keep our legislation up to date; we must follow public opinion in this respect. We must not become fossilized. It is true, the party on this side of the House is a Conservative party; but it is for the purpose of conserving the public interests. In granting public legislation with reference to utilities we should apply the latest standards. There is no doubt that public opinion is against granting perpetual franchises to railway companies which carry on interurban business. The United States has had experience of this kind of thing. They have ascertained that these railway companies are constantly mixed up with local politics, and cause a great deal of trouble. Recent legislation in the United States has been such as to compel these railways to keep within the law, and the sooner they learn that it is not possible for them to get from the legislatures rights which they cannot get from the people, the better it will be for themselves; because they find that they can pay dividends out of the moneys that they formerly spent in the lobbies. They find that they are financially better off than they were when they carried on lobbies at Albany or other state capitals. I do not wish to encourage any traction company to come to this House to seek a franchise unless it crosses an international or an interprovincial boundary line. When it is a purely local undertaking, the people of the locality and those who are going to build the road should get together and decide on what they want, and then get their agreement confirmed by legislation, if necessary. I think these companies should be given distinctly to understand that nothing is to be gained by their coming here and appealing to the prejudice of members of this House, as has been done to-day, in an endeavour to prejudice the members of this House against the city of Toronto. This is absurd. I look upon Toronto as I do upon Montreal or any other section of the community. We are not children to be stirred up by prejudices of this kind. The city of Toronto, so far as I know, has not asked for anything but justice and right, and I think this House should do it justice and right by casting out this Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. I regret that I cannot agree with the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) in his conclusions regarding this Bill. He contends that Toronto wants something that no other city of Ontario wants. Well, that may be so; but Toronto is confronted with conditions that do not exist in any other city of Ontario, and therefore very properly asks parliament to grant those which her conditions require. She has a congestion of traffic; her streets are closely built upon; and it is difficult for more railways to pass through the city without interfering with the rights of the people. The city contemplates an arrangement whereby all railways may enter by one tube or subway, and she is entitled to have some consideration shown her in the legislation we pass.

Mr. LANCASTER. Can the hon. gentleman give any reason why the railway board could not give all these rights to Toronto without Toronto insisting on being herself the judge?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether the railway board can or can not do so; but once a company is before us for legislation, I do not think we are doing anything amiss if we impose restrictions upon it and make it subject to the rights of the city which is charged with the responsibility of dealing with these local conditions with which we have nothing to do either there or in any other city in the province of Ontario, because there is no other city of the size and with the same congestion of traffic and density of population as the city of Toronto. Therefore, I claim that if Toronto does look for and expect special provisions it is our duty to consider her situation and her requirements, and if we think she is entitled to what she asks we should give it to her. Toronto objects to the Bill because it is declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada and is so brought under the Railway Act. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) says that is right as that clause is in the general Act passed in 1906. I always thought that we had a right to amend or repeal an Act and I still contend that we have.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman seriously say that once you have assumed this jurisdiction this parliament could delegate it to the province?

Mr. SPROULE. I think we could repeal the whole Act. There is no doubt about our right to do so, whether it is wise or expedient is another question. The original Act shows the line of railway to consist of two short lines. It could not conflict with any Dominion railway, nor is there any railway that intends to amalgamate with it. A strong argument for its being a provincial railway is that it is an electric railway. Clause 8 of the original Act says that steam may be used for the purposes of constructing the railway but shall not be the motive power for its operation. I think we have now a better understanding of the rights of the provinces and of the Dominion in matters of that kind, and that if the original Bill were being passed to-day the work would not be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. I have not looked at the amendment to the charter to see if the company then acquired the right to use steam, but there is nothing in this Bill giving them that power, and so it is not a work for the general advantage of Canada, and it is not claimed that it is a portion of any through line of railway intended to handle the traffic of the country, either freight or passengers.

I notice that in the original charter it is said that they can only enter a municipality when the municipality, by by-law, gave them permission and upon terms set out in the by-law. The present Bill is very different and says that it cannot enter the city of Toronto unless with the consent of the council of the city of Toronto expressed by by-law——— not upon the terms set out. It is generally held when we incorporate a company to do a certain thing, as for instance the construction of a railway, that, prima facie, gives them the right to do that thing and municipalities cannot refuse the right to run through their territory, they are obliged to consent and if that be held to be good law, Toronto cannot refuse the right to enter that city.

Another reason why Toronto should have special consideration is that the city owns the charter of the street railway, in about 30 years that charter must revert to the city of Toronto. I hold that when a municipality owns a franchise it should have a perfect right to handle the traffic, and we should not give any other corporation the right to go into the city of Toronto, and handle that traffic to the detriment of the city. The city should be entitled to all it can make out of its own franchise in reason, so long as it serves the public properly and cheaply. It is natural to assume that they will do that, therefore if this railway is given charter rights to invade the city of Toronto, and handle the traffic of Toronto, a great injustice will be done to that city. The company are hedged about in many ways under this Bill, yet I think that they might seriously interfere with the earning powers of the municipal franchise which Toronto will own in thirteen years. I am opposed to this Bill, first because it is an interference with provincial rights; I hold that this is a corporation that should have received its corporate powers from the provincial legislature. I am opposed to it because of the city's right to provide for the handling of its own traffic, and because of the congested condition of traffic, and the value of land, and of street rights, including those rights under the street which, in my views, should not be interfered with. If they take authority to build underground, they may interfere with the sewers, or other conveniences of the city; they might make it expensive and difficult to carry on the corporate work of the city. I am opposed to this Bill because I believe that we have improperly declared this to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. I believe that Toronto is not asking anything that this parliament ought not, in fairness, to grant.

Mr. HENDERSON. We have had a great deal of discussion on this Bill in the Railway Committee, and I presume that everything has been said that can be said to any purpose. Objection has been made to this Bill being dealt with in this parliament on the ground that the company should have a provincial charter. To my mind, it is too late in the day to discuss that, for, years ago, the company obtained a Dominion charter in which this work was declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. The present Bill does not seek to make that declaration; it will be unnecessary, for it was made by a previous parliament. I am not a lawyer, nor, I believe, is the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie) who discussed this question freely, and took strong exception to the statements of the hon. member for Lincoln. As the hon. member for North Simcoe is not a lawyer, our opinions will be somewhat on a par. I have listened to the best lawyers in this House for many years, and have heard this question discussed over and over again. The conclusion to which I have come is that once a work is declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, that cannot be altered; according to the decision of the Privy Council it remains a work for the general advantage of Canada, for all time. Perhaps we might pass a Bill repealing the whole charter, and the effect of that might be to discontinue this as a work for the general advantage of Canada, or for the advantage of any other country. But I cannot agree with the hon. member for North Simcoe when he says that, because the work of construction on this road has not gone on, therefore the charter has lapsed. To my mind, the charter continues until it is repealed by parliament. The power of construction may be lapsed, but the charter exists as before, and will continue to exist. I may say that that is one reason why I have raised objections to many of the charters we have dealt with respecting water rights and railway rights combined; while I felt that the railway rights would lapse by reason of non-performance of the work, the charter, so far as it affects water rights, would continue for ever, and might hamper people fifty or a hundred years hence, who would wish to use these water-powers. However, that is aside from the question. I wish to be particular on this point of jurisdiction, because on the next Bill on the order paper, I shall take the opposite view, perhaps, from that which I now express. I refer to the Bill relating to the Toronto Eastern Railway Company. I shall oppose that Bill.

Mr. LENNOX. It does not go through Halton.

Mr. HENDERSON. I know the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) is joking. He will give me credit for better sense than that. The Bill with which we are now dealing has to do with a company whose work has been declared a work for the general advantage of Canada. But the Toronto Eastern railway, to my mind, is a road that, under the British North America Act, comes exclusively under provincial jurisdiction. I know that the Minister of Railways has expressed in the Railway Committee a different opinion, or, at least, the chairman announced a different opinion as being that of the minister. However, I am perfectly willing to disagree with him. This road coming into Toronto from the east does not cross any provincial boundary, nor does it connect with any other road that will take the jurisdiction away from the province. It has not yet been declared a work for the general advantage of Canada. It has been argued here today that it was a mistake to make this Hamilton-Waterloo road a work for the general advantage of Canada. Let us not make the same mistake with regard to the Toronto Eastern. I shall oppose that charter distinctly on the ground that the jurisdiction does not lie in this House, but in the legislature at Toronto. But the position in the case of the Hamilton and Waterloo road is that years ago it was declared a work for the general advantage of Canada, and, therefore, comes here properly for amendments to its charter, we being the only legislature having jurisdiction in the matter. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman should have moved that the committee rise. That would kill the Bill, on which a great deal of time has been spent and which would give us a very useful road. It may be said that I am somewhat prejudiced because the road is intended to pass through the county I have the honour to represent.

Mr. LANCASTER. Are you any more prejudiced than Toronto?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not prejudiced at all. I am willing to give Toronto all the rights to which it is entitled. I want to help that city. I want to send its people the best vegetables and fruit produced in the county of Halton. We are willing to give them the best we have, but do not want to be compelled to send it to them in the most expensive way. What do you think the fruit growers of the township of Nelson, county of Halton, are doing? Hon. members may not be aware of the fact that this road has been constructed from Hamilton to Oakville, some 20 miles, and we want it continued into Toronto. Well, fruit growers in the southern part of the township of Nelson have actually loaded their fruit on the Hamilton radial railway, shipped it into Hamilton, and then transferred it to the Grand Trunk railway, in order to have it conveyed into Toronto. That is a round about and very expensive way. Whereas, if we had this road continued to Toronto these goods would go straight from the place of production into that city.

Mr. GRAHAM. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not so much concerned about passengers as about freight traffic, but strange to say, all the discussion has taken place with reference to passenger traffic. Passengers can get into Toronto by means of the Grand Trunk railway or Canadian Pacific railway; but what we are more concerned with is getting our fruit and vegetables and other perishable freight into Toronto without the necessity of transhipment. By means of the radial railway, we could get them into the city at every hour of the day. The people of Toronto want our fruit and vegetables, and it is just such impediments as we are striving to remove which bring about the increased cost of living. These people are hurting themselves by making it more expensive than necessary to have produce brought into their city. We can supply them with all these goods they want, so that the benefit would be mutual. Do not, therefore, compel this company to build its line in the most expensive way simply because the Toronto Street railway might possibly lose a few fares. They talk about protecting their city, but I think this Bill amply protects it. Why, when this company gets to the boundary line, it cannot take on another passenger, and it cannot take on a passenger in Toronto at the terminus and let him off at any place in the city. It can only take him from the central part of the city and dump him out after it gets him outside. To my mind the street railway is amply protected. True, the city of Toronto 20 years ago made a bargain, and undoubtedly a good bargain, and leased to the Toronto Street railway the right to use its streets for 30 years. Some ten years have yet to expire, and the city is bound to protect its covenants or be liable to damages. I am not sure but that the city may yet see the propriety of making an arrangement with the street railway, paying it a bonus to extinguish that franchise and give over the whole thing, and then deal more generously with other railways coming into the city. I question whether the city of Toronto would not be the gainer if it had more freedom to deal with new railways coming in, even at the loss of the $600,000 per year it now gets from the street railway company. I repeat that I regret very much the hon. gentleman should have moved that the committee rise. I am not going to vote to kill a Bill that I know would be of advantage to the people of my county, and which I believe will also be of advantage to the people of Toronto.

Mr. J. HAGGART. A few words on the interesting points raised in the discussion on this Bill. On the question of jurisdiction, from the facts stated here, primarily the local legislature ought to enjoy it, but we are unfortunately in the position that the Dominion government years ago granted a charter for this particular line. If the principle of law be as I understand it, once the Dominion government assumes jurisdiction, it cannot divest itself of that jurisdiction or vest it in the local government. My hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) will remember the argument used with reference to the School Bill, when the Dominion government was trying to vest in the local governments the jurisdiction vested in this parliament. Our argument was always that whatever power be vested in the Dominion parliament, that parliament cannot divest itself of. I think that the legal proposition is as clear as possible that if we pass an Act divesting ourselves of our power over this road, it will not reinvest it in the local government, and the local government cannot deal with it. Another nice question arises with reference to the duration of the life of a corporation. Several hon. gentlemen have argued that a corporation ceases if the conditions imposed by the charter are not complied with. We give a franchise to a company for the building of a road and it must be commenced within one year and finished within five. The argument is that if they did not commence operations within one year, the charter lapsed. The old opinion was that once you give an entity to a corporation it exists for ever. For a great many reasons it ought to be so. A corporation might incur liabilities, and if the corporation terminated with its failure to carry out its undertaking, you could not sue it or collect debt from it. The old principle is that once you give a corporation its entity, it exists for ever. I do not know anything about the merits of this road, but the question as raised by my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) is as to the proprietary right of the city of Toronto in all their local undertakings. I think they ought to have such a right for the benefit of the country, but it is a monstrous thing to say that we are precluded from giving a charter to a particular company because its railway ends in Toronto unless the company get the consent of the city to enter within its limits. If it invades any municipal rights let us make other provision for it. I think the Railway Act does make provision for such a case. The Railway Commission have power to impose such conditions as will fully guard every interest in the city of Toronto.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say one word in reference to what has been said by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) with regard to the question of rights that we take in this parliament. My understanding of the British North America Act is that we cannot divest ourselves of any rights which are given to us and we cannot give to the province any rights other than what they enjoy under the provisions of that Act. But, I think we might claim rights that we would not be upheld in if we went to the courts. We might assume rights and the courts might decide that we did not have those rights. I do not think we can claim a right because we assume it. I remember one time hearing the late Sir Oliver Mowat say: If I am in doubt as to whether we have the right to do a thing I go on, take authority under the law to do it, and let the courts decide whether we have the right or not. It is a kind of confiscation, but I do not think that taking a right would give us the right if the British North America Act did not in reality give it to us, and that we would be sustained by the courts.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Privy Council have already decided the very opposite of the hon. gentleman's contention.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. member who has the Bill in charge if the corporation, if this Act went through, could operate its road by any other power than electricity.

Mr. HARRIS. As I understand, it could not.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, I think the hon. member is right in that, because I do not see anything in the first Act which says it shall and in the second Act there is nothing at all said about it. In the Act of 1908 there is the following clause:

Section 10 of chapter 106 of the statutes of 1906, intituled, an Act to incorporate the Hamilton, Waterloo and Guelph Railway Company, is hereby amended by substituting for the word 'thousand' in the second line thereof, the words 'seven thousand five hundred.'

That is only enlarging its borrowing powers, and it is the only thing that is in the Act; therefore there is nothing in the amending Act that would give it power nor is there anything in the Act which was originally passed. These would seem strong additional reasons why this company should be under the control of the local legislature. The original Act says:

The company and its undertaking, shall be subject to such provisions of any general Act now or hereafter passed by the legislature of the province of Ontario as provide, in the interests of public health or safety, for the control and regulation of the transmission, distribution or supply of electricity in any form.

I do not know how it could carry out that portion of its charter with the declaration that this is a work for the general advantage of Canada. I do not see how it can be placed under the provisions of that Act and yet refrain from being under the control of the legislative assembly.

Mr. MACDONELL. I wish to say a word with reference to the view put forward by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart). Of course, he is familiar with the Railway Act, and I do not suppose that he has overlooked the section to which I wish to call his attention. This charter which was granted four years ago has not been renewal since, although an Act was obtained to amend the original Act for the purpose of giving the company additional bonding powers. Section 150 of the Railway Act says:

If the construction of the railway is not commenced and fifteen per centum of the amount of the capital stock is not expended thereon within two years after the passing of the Act authorizing the construction of the railway, or if the railway is not finished and put in operation within five years from the passing of such Act, then the powers granted by such Act, or by this Act, shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the railway as then remains uncompleted.

The conditions of that section have not been fulfilled. Four years have gone and the railway has not expended 15 per cent of its capital upon the work. I do not say that the company has expired, but I say that the construction cannot be proceeded with under the charter. That is proved by the power that is sought by section 6 of the Bill now before the committee, in which the company asks that the time be extended during which it can do this work.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I stated that while the power of doing what the Act authorized the corporation to do ceases, it does not affect the corporation.

Mr. MACDONELL. It affects the question of their power to proceed.

Amendment (Mr. Macdonell) negatived, and Bill reported.

TORONTO EASTERN RAILWAY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 116), to incorporate the Toronto Eastern Railway Company.—Mr. Fowke.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. As the promoter of this Bill is not here, and as there will be a fight on it, I would suggest that the Bill be laid over. I therefore move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. HUGHES. I think the House is ready to go on with the Bill.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not think so. The custom of the House is that if the member in charge of a Bill is not here to look after it, and if it is a contentious Bill, it invariably goes over.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think there is no particular reason why we should not go on with the Bill, unless the powers of discussion have not been exhausted by the Hamilton and Guelph bill. I understood that the discussion was to take place on one or other of these Bills.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. member does not want an all-night fight, does he?

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman should not make that remark. A threat of that kind does not influence me one iota —I am a sort of night hawk myself. That is really not the intelligent way to approach a question of this kind. We want to go on with the business, but if there is a strong objection on the part of hon. members to going on in the absence of the promotor, we might let the Bill stand over.

Mr. HUGHES. The Bill is just the same as the other Bill. Why not put it through? These gentlemen are only bluffing.

Mr. GRAHAM. We are getting near the end of the session, but if every time a contentious Bill comes up hon. gentlemen ask that this be put off, we shall make very little progress. Let us go at it and dispose of it, unless a number of hon. gentlemen wish it to be put off. I am not pressing for one thing or the other, but I appeal to hon. gentlemen whether anything is gained by side-stepping the question.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have taken objection to going on with a private Bill when the promoter is not present. As the minister says, however, we are getting near the end of the session, and we should not stop legislation for a reason of that kind, although it is a very good one. I intend to oppose this Bill, but I would rather oppose it when the promoter is present, and therefore, it would suit me just as well if the Bill were laid over until he can be here.

Mr. GRAHAM. Would it be a fair arrangement to leave the Bill on the order paper where it is, and let it stand until the hon. member in charge of it is here ? I want to do everything to expedite the business of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. No doubt the hon. gentleman will be here to-morrow, when after eight o'clock there will be an hour for private Bills.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There is no reason why we should not clear the order paper to-day of all the Bills except contentious Bills, and let them stand over. The business of the House has been much delayed by these contentious Bills, and if under the Rules of the House these were put automatically at the bottom of the list, or the rule of the British parliament were followed, and members balloted for the place a Bill occupied on the order paper at the beginning of the session, the business of the House would be expedited.

Mr. HUGHES. I would certainly object to this Bill being held over in order to let any other Bill take precedence of it. If there were any valid objection to this Bill, I would be found fighting against it; but I cannot understand why one gentleman supports one Bill and opposes another of the same character.

Mr. HENDERSON. Had the hon. gentleman been in his place while we were putting through the other Bill he would have understood my reasons for supporting one and opposing the other. I am satisfied the premier quite understands it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think my hon. friend should withdraw the charge that I am inconsistent in supporting one and opposing the other. My grounds were well taken and are based on the British North America Act, and I am prepared to stand by the British North America Act, let the hon. gentleman diverge from it just as much as he likes to suit his convenience. I am going to stand by the constitution.

Mr. HUGHES. I did not hear the latest excuse that the hon. gentleman gives for supporting one and opposing the other, I am simply taking the case he gave in the Railway Committee that it runs through his county.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman has no right to make that statement. Would parliamentary language permit it, I would say it was not true. The hon. gentleman did not hear that. Mr. Fowke, the hon. gentleman who is promoting the Bill now under discussion, threw out an insinuation that that was why I was opposnig it, and I immediately rose and repudiated the insinuation. I do remember some years ago stating that I was in favour of that Bill because it was for the general advantage of Halton. That is what I am here for. I am here to support legislation that is for the general advantage of Halton, and legislation in accordance with the constitution of the country, and I am opposed to legislation not in accordance with the constitution. The Hamilton Radial Bill is under Dominion jurisdiction and this Bill, to my mind, comes exclusively and entirely within provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. MACDONELL. This Bill is going to be contested, and I think the rest of the time available for private Bills will be consumed in its discusson. I do not think it wise or fair that the minister should proceed with the Bill in the absence of the promoter.

Mr. HUGHES. Then the whole question of private Bills should be set aside for to-day, and some other business should be taken up because it would be a simple matter for gentlemen opposing the Bill to say that this should stand over and make it contentious to the end of the session. There should be no giving way unless the whole private Bill order is set aside for the day.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think it is unfair that the House should be clubbed because this Bill happens to have a certain position on the order paper. There is other important legislation on the order paper and when a Bill is contentious the word of the Prime Minister is sufficient to make it stand over. To-day in his absence the Minister of Railways should have said it should stand. I cannot see why the hon. member should blame the hon. member for Halton for supporting one Bill and opposing another, because one railway goes through his riding. I cannot see why the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) interferes with railways in other people's constituencies. Neither of these railways touches his riding. The Prime Minister will recognize that necessity knows no law in this matter; this Bill is going to be fought and it is as well that the member who has it in charge should be here.

Mr. GRAHAM. After hearing the discussion my opinion is that this Bill is going to be fought for quitte a long while. If we are to close the session as proposed we have very little more time to discuss these Bills. If it is to be discussed why not go on and have the discussion. I think on the whole, in the interest of every one we might as well hear the arguments because we will hear no arguments on Thursday or Friday, so we had better go on with the Bill.

Mr. S. SHARPE. In the absence of the promoter, who would accede to any amendments?

Mr. HUGHES. The member came to me and some others, and he asked me to look after the Bill in his absence, and I am prepared to do so.

On section 1, incorporation.

Mr. MACDONELL. I have to object to this Bill. Some of my objections are covered by those urged to the last Bill, and there are further arguments against it. The Bill in the first place does not pretend to qualify itself, so to speak, for appearance in this House under the constitution of the country. The railway is admittedly an electric railway, running between three or four counties, and not going anywhere within 100 miles of the limits of the province. The Bill in that aspect of the case is entirely a provincial Bill, entirely an inter-county or interurban Bill.

Mr. HUGHES.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman said this railway did not run within 100 miles of the border of the province?

Mr. MACDONELL. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. It runs to the lake shore.

Mr. MACDONELL. Yes, and the American shore is 60 miles across, and the Minister of Railways might have some good ground for correcting me if the railway were to be constructed across the lake, which, of course, is impossible. There is no justification whatever for the presence of this Bill in this parliament. As originally drafted the Bill simply provided for the building of this railway to the limits of Toronto, but during its progress through the committee it thought it would like to get the same powers as had been given to the Hamilton, Waterloo and Berlin railway, and so the Bill was amended in that respect. In the case of the latter Bill, certain hon. gentlemen took the view that its prior incorporation by this parliament gave it a federal status which ought to be maintained, but the present railway has not even that excuse for seeking a federal charter. It was entirely an afterthought that this company asked for power to operate in the city of Toronto, and the provision to that effect was inserted in the Railway Committee. When the Bill met with opposition in the Railway Committee the promoters sought to give the railway an international character by stating that it was the intention of the company to run a ferry service across the lake, so as to connect with the New York roads, but in the Bill itself there is no right given to run any such ferry. That also was an afterthought.

Mr. HUGHES. How can you tell that?

Mr. MACDONELL. There is no difficulty in telling that, because if it were the original intention of the company to operate a ferry it is reasonable to suppose that the promoters would have asked for that power. They might as well have left out reference to the Victoria-Haliburton branch, and then said afterwards that they desired to have it inserted. Why should the parliament of Canada give a franchise to anybody that asks for one. Why should this railway company be given running rights through the city of Toronto in face of the opposition of that city? Why should this parliament give to railway companies rights derogatory to the municipalities in the opinion of those who govern these municipalities. When the former Bill came before the Railway Committee the province of Ontario was represented by counsel, and in the name of the premier and on behalf of the government he contended that this was purely a local undertaking, and he asked that this parliament should send the company back to the legislature of Ontario. The voice of the government of Ontario was heard, and it should have been listened to, and this company should not have been, in open defiance of the British North America Act, declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. Years ago it was an easy thing to have a work declared for the general advantage of Canada. It was given almost for the asking. But the right was not then regarded as of very great importance—certainly, not of the importance attached to it now. The people now are declaring against the improper use of this phrase, and are demanding that 'a work for the general advantage of Canada' must be a work for the general advantage of Canada, or otherwise it is not to be so declared. I say, without fear of contradiction, that there is nothing in the British North America Act that justifies this railway in coming here; on the contrary there is everything in that Act to make it clear that it should go to the provincial authority of Ontario. If certain little railways are to be granted this right of being made Dominion roads by the mere exercise of our power, let us take down the bars altogether, and accord this privilege to anybody that comes here to ask for a railway charter, whether for an electric railway or any other. In that case, of course, provincial railway legislation, and the provincial railway commissions are useless. We ought to be consistent; there ought to be a line drawn somewhere; and if the line is to be drawn at all it will exclude such companies as this from coming to this parliament. For there can be no argument that I can see in support of these people coming here. I do not want to repeat what I tried to say on the Bill which preceded this, but I say that under section 8 of the Railway Act this railway has ample rights and powers to get the full benefit of the Railway Act of Canada. There is a reason for the company coming to this parliament—there is no disguising that fact. That reason has been stated on the floor of this House on previous Bills, and the reason is that a railway whose charter is got from the Dominion of Canada is more easily financed. I believe that to be the fact, and I believe that to be the reason why the railways come here. But what does that mean? It means that the obligations imposed upon railway corporations under the Railway Act of the province of Ontario are more onerous than those imposed by the Dominion Railway Act. For instance, there is the regulation as to fares, which, as I pointed out, in regard to the other Bill, oblige all railways incorporated by the Ontario authority to give cheap fares, special fares to children, and to pupils attending school, and so on. Also, they are obliged to give protection to their motormen, and other workmen, give them certain periods of rest, choose them by examination which will assure their qualification for the work they are to do. Surely, these are public safeguards that the government of Canada should give heed to. But, in the case of a Dominion railway, the public have not the same safeguards. I submit, then, that the time has arrrived when the parliament of Canada shall decide whether the railways shall be favoured, or whether the people shall receive justice. Is this parliament to be guided by considerations of the benefit of corporations, or is the public to be considered, and due restrictions to be imposed? We seem to be clearly at the parting of the ways, and it is for this committee, and this House to decide upon its course. This railway company comes to this parliament because under our law the public will be left without certain protection that they would have if the charter were given by the province of Ontario. It seems to me that this is a fair way to put it, and that the position is unanswerable.

Much was made of the plea that the Railway Commission was the proper tribunal for the hearing of railway questions generally. But they have a railway commission in Ontario. We must assume that that commission will do its duty; we must assume that the province has appointed properly qualified commissioners who have due authority, and will exercise that authority for the public good. We find that very little attention is now paid to the cry of provincial rights. There was a time when conditions were different. I can well recollect the time, before the change of government in the province of Ontario, when my hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) was in the Ontario legislature. I believe the hon. minister was a member of that body in 1903.

Mr. GRAHAM. He was.

Mr. MACDONELL. The Liberal government of the province of that day objected, as its successor has objected since, to the parliament of Canada dealing with these railway matters, and many other matters that come properly within the area of provincial jurisdiction. Perhaps the hon. minister (Mr. Graham) recollects a certain resolution passed in that House during the session of 1903. The provincial government became so impressed with the necessity of protecting provincial rights that they formulated a resolution, and sent it to Ottawa, protesting against further encroachment by this parliament upon the provincial domain. That resolution will be found in the journals of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario for 1903, page 329. It was moved by Mr. Pattullo, seconded by Mr. Bowman—both ardent supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite—and resolved:

That this House protests against the tendency of late years on the part of the Dominion parliament in the matter of legislation whereby companies are being incorporated by special Acts, though such companies have purely provincial objects and come within the purview of subsections 11 and 16 of the British North America Act.

That the expedient which it has become customary to adopt of inserting in Bills the mere assertion 'that the works of the company being incorporated are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada,' afford no reasonable protection against encroachments upon provincial jurisdiction, the Bills being entertained and classed apparently in ordinary routine and without reference to any serious consideration of the question of jurisdiction.

That there is involved in this growing tendency toward encroachment on the provincial field of legislation and invasion of the rights of municipalities, which this House regards as of serious importance.

That the provincial laws relating to electric railways have been designed to safeguard in many respects the rights and interests of the municipalities through which these railways run or are chartered to be constructed, and the protection to municipalities thus afforded will be prejudicially affected, if not entirely removed, by the assumption and exercise of the right to legislate regarding these local railways on the part of the Dominion parliament.

This House, therefore, respectfully urges the Dominion parliament not to pass legislation of this nature pertaining to matters heretofore generally understood to be within provincial jurisdiction, and which, in their nature, are matters of purely local concern.

If that resolution had been drawn yesterday as a protest against this particular Act, it could not have been couched in more appropriate and pertinent language. That request was made by friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, and there it stands as true as when committed to print. If anything further were needed to emphasize the propriety and urgency of the resolution, I have quoted, it is what has taken place since. Time and again since then, this principle has been violated with the result that the province of Ontario has again and again sent down its duly accredited representatives to this House to protest against the improper use of this term in cases of this kind. In this very case the Ontario government felt it incumbent to make this protest and sent its representatives here for that purpose.

At six o'clock, Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MACDONELL. When this Bill was before the committee much stress was laid upon the fact that the incorporators of the company were men of means, substance and position in the locality. With that statement I entirely agree; I have nothing whatever but good words to say of the applicants for incorporation in regard to their status in the community. But, I submit with all diffidence that because that fact exists it is no reason why this House should grant these gentlemen incorporation in a case where it would not be proper to grant it to other people. The promoter of the Bill made the statement, I think, that any one of these gentlemen could build this road as easily as he could take his breakfast.

Mr. HUGHES. 'Some' of them.

Mr. MACDONELL. There is very little difference between 'any' and 'some,' I think I am right in the statement I make all the same; however, I will accept 'some' of them.

Mr. HENDERSON. Put it 'most' of them, and you will be about right.

Mr. MACDONELL. 'Most' of them. If that be so, if these people are of that calibre, if they are bona fide in their intention to prosecute this work, why should they object to curtailing the provision in this Bill permitting them to amalgamate with the Canadian Pacific railway, or Grand Trunk railway, the Oshawa Railway Company, the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company, or any of them? I protested in the committee against these powers of amalgamation with these powerful railway organizations, and I did so because this company, which is now seeking incorporation, is supposed to operate a purely electric railway of practically a local nature running between these counties—an inter-county railway operated by electricity. If these parties are of the calibre that they are said to be, and I quite agree that those whom I know are men of means, and if they are going to build this road, then why need they be given such broad powers of amalgamation? These various railway companies that this company is given power to amalgamate with are to-day in the city of Toronto. They all have their rights of way to that city, they all have whatever terminal facilities they require, and why should they be given this duplicate entrance into the city with certain powers, that, I submit, should not be given to them at all? That position was not met. There was no statement made as to why this railway sought power to form this amalgamation. I object to this amalgamation upon the ground that a small railway company of this nature is given certain powers, and privileges that I submit would not be given to a large railway corporation. Just because it looks to me like a small undertaking, and because it is apparently going to carry passenger traffic it is given certain powers. If this company amalgamates with and merges into one of the big railway companies, then one of these big railway corporations will have all the powers that this company has got under this Bill if it passes. I submit that this is not along the lines of prior legislation in this House. It would be an objectionable measure upon that ground. That contention was not in any way met. This company has, at the eleventh hour, sought and received from the Railway Committee power to enter, and operate in the city of Toronto. If a railway is building throughout the west, through the most unsettled part of that country, or in any agricultural or rural district, before the company comes down to Ottawa and appears before the Railway Committee it must be properly equipped with plans, and surveys showing its route. If that be so in the case of a rural district, I ask how much more should it be a requisite when a railway company proposes to enter a thickly populated, and large metropolitan city of the size of Toronto. Is there going to be one rule for certain applicants for railway charters, and a different rule for certain other applicants? It looks very much as if that is to be the case. The hon. gentleman who promotes this Bill came here without any idea of having a local service in Toronto, and because he saw that a local service was being given to the Hamilton, Waterloo and Berlin railway he, forsooth, thinks it very desirable to have, asks for it, and without either plan or route, or without showing how he is going, whether with a service underground or overhead, he is given this roving power to go at will through the city of Toronto from the eastern limit to a central station and even the central station is not mentioned. No location is fixed, no location is suggested. I do not think it is a proper way to treat this committee, or the House, or the locality in which it is proposed to operate in this blanket way. This railway is simply given blanket powers to enter the city of Toronto at will where it likes, and in the manner it likes without any limitation.

Mr. GRAHAM. Is it not a fact that they cannot enter the city of Toronto unless they first get the approval of the engineer of the city, and if they cannot make an agreement, until they get the permission of a board of engineers? They cannot go in as they like, and they cannot locate a foot of this railway until the Minister of Railways approves of it, and they cannot go into the city until the Board of Railway Commissioners approve of it.

Mr. HUGHES. He knows all that.

Mr. MACDONELL. I resent with emphasis the unfair statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes). He has made an unfair statement. He insinuates that I am making an argument that I do not believe in, and that is not sincere, and I ask him to withdraw the insinuation.

Mr. HUGHES. I reiterate with tenfold force what I said that if the hon. gentleman knows anything, he knows that everything he has stated here is not in accordance with the facts as stated in the Bill.

Mr. MACDONELL. I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw the statement.

Mr. HUGHES. I will make it again.

Mr. MACDONELL. You will?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is a well known rule that every hon. gentleman in this House shall be credited with sincerity in anything that he says.

Mr. HUGHES. I did not doubt his sincerity.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman does not cast any doubt on the sincerity of the hon. member for South Toronto, then there is no question of order.

Mr. HUGHES. What I say is this, and I repeat it, that the statement which the hon. gentleman made, that this road enters Toronto at its own sweet will, without any control, is absolutely contrary to the fact, and he knows it, because he fought it out in the committee.

Mr. MACDONELL. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to compel the hon. gentleman to withdraw that statement, that I made a statement that was untrue to my knowledge.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is quite true, the rule prevents an hon. member from indicating that another hon. member has stated anything which he knows to be untrue. I have not gathered that meaning from the remarks of the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton. It seems to me to be really more a dispute as to certain facts than any denial of an intention on the part of the hon. member for South Toronto to give the facts as he sees them.

Mr. MACDONELL. I am simply taking the point of order on the words of the hon. member, who said that I had made a statement which was not true to my knowledge. That is unparliamentary and inaccurate, and I ask that it be withdrawn.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The statement put in the form in which the hon. member for Toronto puts it would be out of order, but I did not gather it in that form.

Mr. MACDONELL. Then, I will continue where I was interrupted. It is quite true, as the Minister of Railways pointed out, that ultimately these matters come before the Railway Commission; but I repeat, that as the Bill stands, there is no route map, or plans of survey, or anything else to show how this railway is going into the city of Toronto. There is nothing to show whether it will be a surface railway, expropriating its right of way, or a tube system, or an elevated railway. Later on, when the company commences its operations, it will, of course, have to file its maps and plans with the Railway Commission, or the Minister of Railways, or both. But that is not the point I am making. The point is that this application came before the Railway Committee without a plan or map or anything to indicate where the railway was going or the manner in which it was to be operated, or how it was going to enter the city of Toronto. In this connection, I desire to say that the city of Toronto is about to undertake the construction of a tube system. It has had from the Ontario legislature this year the necessary legislation for that purpose, and on the first of last January a vote of the citizens was taken as to whether or not the city should engage in this tube system, and the citizens, by a very large majority, approved of the idea, and authorized the city council to obtain the necessary legislation. This railway may come into direct competition with that system should the city build it, as we do not yet know what method of construction the company will adopt. The conditions which exist in Toronto will probably arise in Montreal and other cities in the near future, and their rights will be invaded in the same manner. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) said this afternoon that Toronto has no more rights than St. Catharines or Woodstock. In the abstract that is true. But St. Catharines has a population of 10,000 or 12,000, while Toronto has 400,000. Who will say that the conditions of the two places are not different? If this railway is allowed to have this charter and enter the city from the east, before it reaches the point where the central station will be located, it will have to cross between 40 and 50 highways. This Bill authorizes the company to build over or under the highways without the consent of the city. It was said in the committee that Toronto was given the privilege of prohibiting its entrance on the level. It would be an act of vandalism to allow this railway to cross 40 or 50 streets of the city on the level. The hon. member for Lincoln, who has almost gone mad on level crossings, was ready in years gone by to prevent a railway crossing on the level in cities or towns without the consent of the city or town. I am not talking of Toronto being better than any other place of the same size; but every large city has similar conditions in this respect. Under these 40 or 50 streets we have sewers, water and gas pipes, electric conduits and various means of transporting the things which a large city requires for its municipal life, and this railway company might sever all these arteries. I think that ought to be taken into consideration. These are very different conditions from those that prevail in a small place.

In the central districts of Toronto the streets are honey-combed underground with water and gas mains and telephone and telegraph wires, and the policy is to extend these systems underground so that the conditions in a large city like Toronto are entirely different from the conditions underneath the streets in a small town or municipality. I do not desire to delay the committee. I simply desire to point out that this company has come to the wrong forum to obtain its powers. I defy any hon. member in this House to show that this application is properly here as a matter of constitutional right. They are here on grounds of expediency. Perhaps the company would have greater facilities because of its being floated with the imprimatur of a work being for the general advantage of Canada stamped upon its face, but the chief object is to free them from provincial control. Chartered by this parliament they are free from the obligations to the public imposed by the provincial Act. They are free from the low fares to those attending schools and colleges; they are free from the obligations regarding motormen and conductors, in their qualifications for the proper discharge of their duties; they are free from the protection afforded these men by the provincial Act as to their hours of labour and so forth. In 50 different ways the obligations imposed upon railways by the Ontario Act of 1906, on railways of this kind and breed, in favour of the municipalities, are to be brushed aside because this parliament chooses to say without any show of reason whatever that this is a work for the general advantage of Canada. The million people in the districts through which this railway will operate are relegated to the background, and the question is to be looked upon by this parliament in the light of what is best for the company and not what is best for the people. If ever the House is going to repudiate the chartering of these suburban railways this is the time. Let this company be subject to all the obligations and penalties that like railways operating in the same district are subject to under the provincial Act. This company has no status before this parliament, and no reason can be given for this application in the public interest.

Mr. HUGHES. If the iteration of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonell) that he thinks so and so where the British North America Act does not say so, I have no hesitation in saying that he has made out a very good case, but, unfortunately for him we have had just such railway charters passed by this House for a great many years. I received my political training under Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir John Abbott——

Mr. MACDONELL. You did not profit much by it.

Mr. HUGHES. It will compare favourably with that of the member for Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) I say that without hesitation.

Mr. MACDONELL. You say lots of things without hesitation.

Mr. HUGHES. I had my training I say under Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir John Abbott, Sir John Thompson, Sir Mackenzie Bowell and Sir Charles Tupper, and I shall read to the House a few of the names of the railway charters which were passed by this House when they were leaders, and which, by so doing, according to the logic of my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonell) parliament tore the British North America Act into shreds. Here are the names of a few purely provincial corporations that were incorporated in one year under the Conservative government: The Calgary Street railway, the Chilliwack Railway Company, British Columbia; the Columbia and Kootenay Railway Company, British Columbia; the Drummond County railway, province of Quebec; the London and Port Stanley railway, the Nakusp and Slocan railway; the Nelson and Fort Sheppard railway, British Columbia; the Western Counties Railway Company, Nova Scotia (a little one horse inter-county railway). These were passed in the old Conservative days and according to my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonell) the constitution was smashed. Then there was also the Yarmouth and Annapolis railway. Now, in another year there were incorporated by the Dominion parliament the following provincial railways: The Windsor and Annapolis railway, the Trail Creek and Columbia railway, the South Shore Railway Company; the Shore Line Railway Company, New Brunswick; the Temiscouata railway, the St. Catharines and Niagara Railway Company (later on it became an international road); the Red Mountain Railway Company——

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. That is international.

Mr. HUGHES. As a matter of fact the road was never built. The Quebec, Montmorency and Charlevois Railway Company, the Oshawa Railway Company (a little street railway running from the wharf up to the town). The Manitoba and South Eastern Railway Company, the Lindsay, Haliburton and Mattawa Railway Company (a purely inter-county railway), the James Bay Railway Company, the Brant and Southwestern Railway Company, the Cariboo Railway Company, the Cobourg, Northumberland and Pacific Railway Company, the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company, the Edmonton Street Railway Company, the Erie and Huron Railway Company, the Gleichen, Beaver Lake and Alberta Railway Company, the Guelph Junction Railway Company and many others obtained their charters here, and so it is in any year you choose, you will find any number of similar companies provincial in their character, obtaining their charters from this parliament. The examples I have cited were all under Conservative administration. Section 92 subsection 10—constitution of the British North America Act assigns to the Dominion of Canada——

> Such works as, although wholly situate within the province, are before or after their execution declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces.

There are many arguments in favour of all railways that purchase their own rights of way that run on a standard gauge no matter what the motive power may be, coming under Dominion jurisdiction. There should be for all such railways the same signals, the same rules, the same system of lighting and regulations, the same means of guarding the public. These should be uniform throughout Canada, and they can only be made uniform by having these roads declared for the general advantage of Canada.

I have taken pains to ascertain the feeling of the business men of Toronto since this obstruction has been going on in connection with the council or a few members of the council. I do not know whether they are all aspiring for public positions or further promotion, but I find that the leading business men outside of what you may call the little municipal gentlemen are anxious to have all the roads enter that city they can get. They know what built up that city in the early days, they know it was the railways and they are anxious to have them there and they deplore the conduct of the council and representatives of that city in coming here to obstruct the Bill. They thought at first there was a desire on the part of the railway to run on the streets of the city, but when they found that was forbidden and that the road could not enter the city without first obtaining an agreement with the city engineer and then have it come before the Dominion Board of Railway Commissioners, and that whether the Railway Commissioners approved or otherwise the company could not run along any street in Toronto without the permission of the board and the city, that they merely had the right of crossing the streets by overhead or underground crossings, and they must purchase the right of way. The council of the city of Toronto accepted the clause in this Bill and the other Bill as satisfactory to them.

Mr. MACDONELL. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is stating something that is not correct, is not true; the city of Toronto did not accept them.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That would not constitute a point of order.

Mr. MACDONELL. I contradict the hon. gentleman; I will not allow him to make a statement that is not correct.

Mr. HUGHES. I was present in the committee when the mayor and council agreed with the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Harris) on the clause that is in this Bill today. I appeal to the hon. member for Brant if the municipal representatives of Toronto did not accept the agreement about the entrance of the other railway into the city of Toronto on the same conditions as are here——

Mr. MACDONELL. I rise to state the facts.

Mr. HUGHES. I object to the hon. member taking the floor.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman can only interfere with the consent of the hon. gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. HUGHES. I will read the clause:

> Unless with the consent of the city of Toronto, expressed by by-law, the railway of the company shall not be constructed upon or along any highway, as defined in the Railway Act, or easement acquired for public works in the said city east of Roncesvalles avenue, nor shall the railway of the company be constructed under, over or across any such highway or easement unless the plans and specifications thereof are approved by the engineer for the time being of the said city, or such engineer as may be appointed for that purpose, and the engineer for the time being of the company, and in the event of the said engineers failing to agree, by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.

Clauses 9 and 10 about carrying passengers in the city, I understand, are also similar in the other Bill. Did not the mayor of Toronto or some representative of the city of Toronto agree to those clauses in the other Bill?

Mr. HARRIS. I think that the member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) drafted that clause himself, and it was accepted by the sub-committee.

Mr. HUGHES.

Mr. MACDONELL. The hon. gentleman thinks.

Mr. HUGHES. Then I am stronger in my position that these clauses were accepted by the representative of Toronto, and the understanding I had was that these Bills would go through unopposed. The city of Toronto is properly guarded, no one of these railways can run along the streets without the absolute authority of the city. The Board of Railway Commissioners has not the option of saying whether it shall or not. It is the city of Toronto alone that can say whether the railway shall run along its streets or not. No greater protection can be afforded the city than is afforded by these measures. Several of the prominent business men of Toronto with whom I have conversed are very much opposed to any further or any factious opposition to these Bills, they want all the business they can get there. These are the men on whom the interests of the city depend and not alone the men in the council. Why do the city aldermen appeal for these restrictions? Look at Pittsburg today—a hundred aldermen indicted for boodling. Why should we place a railway entering the city of Toronto at the beck and nod of the aldermen there? Ought we not to protect the interests of the city? I contend that the Railway Commissioners of Canada should be the arbitrators in case the engineer of the city and the engineer of the railway fail to agree. The enterprise will be destroyed if left to the beck and nod of aldermen elected by fire-hall influence or anything else.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The inference drawn from the remarks of the hon. member will be that he intends a comparison between the hundred boodling aldermen of Pittsburg and the aldermen of Toronto, and it seems to me, that requires a little modification. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) should be a little guarded in his remarks. There are many honourable men in the aldermanic body of the city of Toronto, and I do not think that the hon. member's way of speaking of them is fair.

Mr. HUGHES. I am obliged to the hon. member (Mr. J. A. Currie). But Toronto has fallen before and may fall again. Now, the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) objected to the powers of amalgamation given this road. Why, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific railway each have had power to amalgamate with other roads. The Grand Trunk has amalgamated with the Northern, with the Nipissing and with the Midland, and the Canadian Pacific railway has amalgamated with half a dozen roads around Toronto, and why should they be forbidden to amalgamate with this road or it with them? Why should this road be singled out for different treatment from that accorded to others? I have already given instances to show that, for generations back, this parliament, under Conservative or under Liberal rule, has passed, not one, but scores of charters for small railway companies. And the constitution of Canada is still intact. I must say that I could not understand the language of the hon. member when he told us that no plan of this road had been submitted. Why, there was a plan on the wall of the committee room which was referred to by the promoter of this Bill. That plan showed this road, its branches and terminals, all in detail. I wish to say, Sir, that the name of William Cowan standing at the head of this Bill—a man who practically owns two of the best banks of the Dominion of Canada—is of itself a guarantee that this Bill is worthy the best attention and consideration of the people of Canada and of this House of Commons.

Another very serious objection urged by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) was that there was no control over the rates for school children. Let me tell him that every morning children by the dozen travel on the Grand Trunk from points near Toronto, practically for nothing. Children travel to the Markham high school from both sides of that town. They get tickets at a rate so marvellously low—I think it is half a cent a mile, but I am not sure—that it is cheaper than walking would be. And, wherever they are wanted and wherever the trains run, suitable rates are made for school children. After the amendment of the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) which, certainly was made with the consent of the mayor and the council added to the other Bill and to be added to this one. I must express myself as astonished at the opposition engendered to these measures.

Mr. HENDERSON. My opposition to this Bill is simply on the point of jurisdiction. I contend that this company should have gone to the province of Ontario to seek a charter, as provided under the British North America Act. The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) disagrees with that contention. I am not going to try to convince him any more than he need try to convince me that I am wrong. I will draw attention, however, to the statements which the hon. gentleman made with regard to the charters that were granted during the regime of the Conservative party to companies whose works were declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. It was quite impossible for one to follow the list as the hon. member read it. But I remember that he commenced by mentioning the Calgary street railway, and then referred to the Edmonton street railway, and to the Red Deer Valley road. Of course, he could name all the railways in the Northwest that had received charters up to the year 1905, and say they were all obtained from this parliament, and that would be quite true.

Mr. HUGHES. How about the Guelph Junction, in your own county?

Mr. HENDERSON. I remember very well that I had charge of an amendment to that Bill. It was a Bill to authorize the construction of a railway from the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway to the city of Guelph. But I was speaking on these roads in the Northwest. Where else could they have got their charter before legislatures were established in the western provinces?

Mr. HUGHES. I only named four.

Mr. HENDERSON. I could not pretend to say how many the hon. member mentioned. But the names of those I do recall lead me to believe that, if the list were gone through, a good many cases would be found in which his argument was not well based after all. But, suppose that, in those days when less attention was paid to the rights of the provinces, such a thing was done, does that justify us in doing it to-day? I take a firm stand on that question. I do not want to see this trouble and difficulty that is looming up between the provinces and the Dominion perpetuated. I would rather see peace and harmony. And to-day I think we ought to stand by the constitution as it is declared by the British North America Act, attending to those railway matters that properly pertain to us, but leaving to the provinces those railway matters which are in the field of provincial jurisdiction. I do not propose to say anything with reference to the advantage or disadvantage to Toronto of this road being constructed or not. I am not interested in that point at all directly, but I have no doubt that there are people in Toronto who would be delighted to see that road get there, just as it appears there are others who do not wish to see it reach that city, because it will interfere with the arrangements made with the Toronto Street Railway. On that point I do not now express any opinion, but give my views purely on the constitutional ground.

Mr. GRAHAM. There never was a time in our history when the question of transportation was so important as it is at present. Whatever is in the interest of the general transportation of the goods of the people or the people themselves, is to my mind to the general advantage of Canada. The time has gone by when we can make a distinction between electricity and steam as a propelling power. It may only be a short time when railways will be run, across the peninsula of Ontario at any rate, by electricity, and that will not make them provincial railways. There are large railways running to the city of New York by electricity and that does not make them local railways. It is not a question how railways are propelled, and I was surprised to hear the fact that railways are propelled by electricity used as an argument. The time may come when in this country the ruling propelling power will be electricity.

Mr. MACDONELL. We are not there yet.

Mr. GRAHAM. We are getting there very fast and we are providing for the future. The question is such a large one, that we ought to view the case fairly, apart from provincial proclivities. I admit that, from every point of view, I am disposed to give the benefit of the doubt, whenever there be any, in favour of Dominion jurisdiction. Why? Because it is in the public interest that we should have uniformity of rates as far as possible, in every part of the country where our products are carried. This railway, it is said, ought to have a provincial charter because the British North America Act says so. I do not think it says anything of the kind. That Act points out certain railways which must be under Dominion jurisdiction, but it does not follow that these are all the railways which should be under that jurisdiction. The British North America Act points out others that might be under local jurisdiction, and evidently the men who framed it had in mind just such cases as we are dealing with now—because the Act provides that railways of an international character should have Dominion jurisdiction, and only those of a purely provincial character should have a provincial charter. But in addition, the framers of the British North America Act provided that if, in the opinion of the parliament of Canada, other works should be declared for the general advantage of Canada, they will fall, not under the jurisdiction of any one province, but of the Dominion, so that evidently the fathers of confederation had in mind just such works as the present. It does not seem to me the proper interpretation of the Act to insist that the Dominion jurisdiction must be confined to a few individual cases since they left it open for this parliament to say what works outside these should be declared for the general advantage of Canada. Evidently it was their intention that we should give this parliament and members of its committees credit for dealing with these matters as men of intelligence, justice and fairness; and in that view they gave this parliament power to declare that any works, such as the one in question, are for the general advantage of Canada. This railway is evidently a work for carrying on the general transportation of the country.

Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is that the meaning which the hon. minister puts on the words 'for the general advantage of Canada?'

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not suppose that the hon. minister desires to widen that term, because in that case an ordinary wagon road might be interpreted as being for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. GRAHAM. It might and it would be, if it ran the length of one province and into another, or even if it ran only the length of one province. But we must remember that wagon roads are usually the property of the municipal owners.

Mr. HUGHES. There are a couple of wagon roads for the general advantage of Canada to-day. One is the Monk road running from Ottawa westward.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend asked me to state why I think this road is for the general advantage of Canada. Let me say that anything which will tend to develop or solve the transportation problem, which make the carriage of goods easier and cheaper, is for the general advantage of all the people. Suppose this road, as I think it will, should carry many thousands of tons of coal from Oshawa, that will be used in manufacturing goods that go to all parts of the Dominion, then the cheapening of the carriage of that coal is in the interests of trade and commerce and consequently for the general good of the people. Anything which will help to solve the transportation problem, and the general advantage of the people, and the framers of the British North America Act had evidently such works as this in mind when they made this proviso. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) says that this railway ought to be under provincial jurisdiction because all electric railways in that district are under such jurisdiction. He is wrong. The former government gave the Oshawa electric road a Dominion charter.

Mr. MACDONELL. I said that the Toronto railway and all the railways running from Toronto within the limits of the province are under provincial jurisdiction, but the Oshawa railway is a road running two or three miles from the lake and connects with the Grand Trunk railway.

Mr. GRAHAM. I understood my hon. friend to say that all the railways in the radius of this Bill were under a provincial charter; but if that point were well taken, then at least the portion of the line near Oshawa should come under Dominion jurisdiction. The question to me is whether this railway we are now discussing, is for the general good of the people. The Oshawa railway got such a charter because of its connection with the Grand Trunk railway.

Mr. SPROULE. Was not that the very reason a Dominion charter was asked for?

Mr. GRAHAM. The same reason would apply in this case because this railway asks the right to join with the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk, and become a portion of these roads, so far as the delivery of freight is concerned. My hon. friend will not find a business man say anything else than that this railway is for the general advantage of trade and commerce, and that consequently it ought to come under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners. It is all very well to argue theoretically, but you cannot get a wholesale man who will not say that any road going to the city of Toronto will be the better for coming under the Railway Board so far as its rates and operations are concerned. Toronto is a great distributing centre, and it is important that to and from the centre, goods should be carried cheaply for the benefit of the people. Just let me refer to the Oshawa railway. At the present time the Oshawa street railway carries the freight from the Grand Trunk by perhaps the most convenient way that any small electric railway in this country could do it. It has a Dominion charter, it has a connection with the Grand Trunk railway, and it delivers freight at the door of manufacturers in Oshawa and takes their freight from there to the Grand Trunk. I do not believe that there is a merchant, or any person who sells goods in Oshawa, who would ask that that road be disconnected and made what you might call a little jerk-water line by itself. I take a strong view on the question of provincial rights, and I say again that when it comes to the great question of transportation, cheap rates between one part of the country and another means cheap prices to the community and, therefore, it is for the general advantage of Canada, and I believe that the framers of the British North America Act anticipated just such an undertaking as this when they put that clause into the Act. As to the protection of municipalities, I say that ample protection is afforded to the city of Toronto by this Bill, and that when the Hamilton Radial Bill was passed to which the city of Toronto agreed, through their board of control, they gave greater privileges to that company than those which are given under this charter, and Toronto agreed to that only two years ago.

Mr. MACDONELL. They had to.

Mr. GRAHAM. Nothing of the kind. Does my hon. friend mean to say that the great, intelligent, broad-minded city of Toronto was compelled to agree to anything they found objectionable?

Mr. MACDONELL. Yes, what could they do? The Bill would have passed without those amendments if they had not agreed to them.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does my hon. friend mean to say that even that would compel the big city of Toronto to agree to that which was wrong? This Bill will probably pass. Will my hon. friend say: I will not object because this Bill will pass? That would not be a satisfactory excuse to present to his constituents; neither is it a sufficient excuse for the city of Toronto agreeing to this other proposition. As a matter of fact, that company came to myself and asked for a charter. I told them that they could not get that charter through in that shape, and that they could not get it through unless they agreed with the city of Toronto. They went to Toronto and came back with a signed agreement from the representatives of the city, and the city gave more to the Hamilton Radial Railway Company than we are going to allow this company as far as concessions are concerned. The city of Toronto is fully protected. In the first place, the railway cannot be located for 100 yards without the consent of the Minister of Railways. The plans and profiles of the whole line of the railway must be approved. Then, further than that, when it comes to be finally located the company cannot proceed with the construction of one mile of their line without the consent of the Board of Railway Commissioners. That is all protected. Are we prepared to do away altogether with responsible government? Is my hon. friend prepared to say that no government can do this business properly? He cannot say that, because the people and this parliament say otherwise. In addition to that they had the protection of the Board of Railway Commissioners. The commissioners settle where and how they enter the city of Toronto. They cannot go in where they like or how they like. There are special conditions that exist in Toronto that do not exist in smaller municipalities. I am prepared to frankly admit that every protection should be afforded, and I believe that such protection should be provided. The company cannot cross a street, above, below or on the level, and that means that they cannot get in at all, because they will encounter a street as soon as they get to the limit of the city, without first obtaining the consent of the city engineer.

Mr. SPROULE. Not a crossing of the street.

Mr. GRAHAM. The engineer of the city of Toronto and the company must agree.

Mr. SPROULE. Not as to the crossing of a street. That may be if they want to go underneath or above, but not in crossing.

Mr. GRAHAM. They cannot get in anyway. They cannot get in unless they agree, and if they do not agree, then the Railway Commissioners must approve.

Mr. MACDONELL. Suppose they will not agree, what happens?

Mr. GRAHAM. Supposing they do not, they are in the position that every other city in Canada is in. I say that the amendment was agreed to by the representatives of the city of Toronto in the committee. Let me say frankly that I would rather, were I fighting for the city of Toronto, have the protection of the Railway Commission under the Act than any section as to an agreement between the engineer of the city of Toronto, and the company. Only a short time ago the city of Ottawa agreed with the Canadian Northern Railway company to certain level crossings, but the Board of Railway Commissioners refused to ratify the agreement between them and the city. While consenting that this clause should go in for the better protection of the city of Toronto I submit that Toronto is not as well protected as it would be if it relied upon the Board of Railway Commissioners. Every safeguard that any municipality could desire, every safeguard that the city of Toronto could think of, practically, has been put into this Bill, and there is no reason, to my mind, unless we simply take the ground that we are not going to allow any railways to be constructed where anybody objects to them, why this Bill should not become law because no provincial rights are infringed, and every right of every municipality is fully protected by the amendment.

Mr. MACDONELL. I just want to correct a few impressions that the minister has created. The minister has stated that the representatives of Toronto agreed to this Bill.

Mr. GRAHAM. I say so now.

Mr. MACDONELL. That is not correct. What was done is this, the same as was done in connection with the Hamilton Radial Bill. For days and days, this Bill was debated in the Railway Committee, and several votes had been taken on minor portions of the Bill. The Bill was not passed, but it became self-evident that it would pass in a most obnoxious form unless the city made some concession. They did not agree to what was put in the Bill, but they accepted it as Hobson's choice. It was the best they could get, they had to take it or nothing, and so it is that this Bill comes to this House in this shape. The section that was spoken of by the minister, and other hon. gentlemen to-night as having been drawn by Mr. Bristol was referred to a Select Committee of which Mr. Bristol was a member, and that committee reported this amendment back to the House. I was not present at the meeting, and I do not know who was at the committee, but it was the best that could be got at the time by the representatives of the city.

Mr. GRAHAM. Did they not agree to it?

Mr. MACDONELL. No

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, excuse me they did agree to it.

Mr. MACDONELL. What do you mean by agreeing to it?

Mr. GRAHAM. The representatives of the city of Toronto agreed to that clause.

Mr. MACDONELL. Agreed to take the best they could get.

Mr. GRAHAM. Nonsense.

Mr. MACDONELL. I want to place before the committee the following telegram from Mayor Geary in reference to this Bill. It is dated April 5, and was sent when the Bill appeared on the order paper last week:

Toronto, Ontario, April 5, 1910.

Claude Macdonell, M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

You may state in the House that Hon. Sir James Whitney and his government are strongly opposed to the granting of the proposed Toronto Eastern Railway charter.

(Sgd.) G. R. GEARY, Mayor.

So that Toronto does object to it. It is the best they could get.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is well that there should not be any mistake about this. We spent weeks upon this Bill. When this amendment came back from the special committee I asked the gentlemen representing both sides: Is this amendment agreed to? This is not second hand. They both said to me: Yes, if this goes through there will be no objection, they handed in the amendment, and it went through. If you can call anything an agreement I would say that that was one.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems that that agreement is very much like it might be supposing the minister was condemned to be hanged. If he were asked if there was not some more humane death and some one suggested bleeding him to death, he would accept what he regarded as the easiest mode of dying because he was going to be killed anyway. It is very much on the same principle that the mayor of Toronto and the hon. members representing that city accepted these provisions, because they could not get any better. I am opposed to this Bill in the first place because the province has strenuously objected to interference with provincial rights. We are provoking the antagonism of the provinces by our invasion of provincial rights with regard to water-powers and chartering provincial railways and in many other directions, and that feeling of ill will is bound to grow until ultimately it may cause us a great deal of trouble. We should do everything possible to avert such a condition of things. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) cited a number of charters of a similar character to this which were granted by this parliament when the Conservatives were in power, but the fact is that in the early history of confederation very few people objected to the federal parliament granting these charters. The only province for many years after 1878, that protested against our granting charters to institutions of this kind was the province of Quebec. I then thought that these objections were fairly good, and it was a surprise to me that so little heed was paid them by the federal parliament. We did not then appreciate the full intent of the clause of the British North America Act which referred to a work being for the general advantage of Canada. For a long time we regarded that as a mere formal thing, but our ablest lawyers have come to conclude that these words must have had some substantial reason at the back of them. The Minister of Railways has to-night given a very strong argument for declaring a work to be for the general advantage of Canada when he said that such a work should be in the interest of trade and commerce, or in the interest of the transportation of the produce of the country generally. Another strong argument is that they might be applied in regard to the legal status of those who tried to secure their rights against common carriers who handle the produce of the country generally. But, let me give an example of what I think would be a very strong reason for incorporating a provincial undertaking under the declaration that it was for the general advantage of Canada. Suppose the Canadian Pacific railway reaches Toronto from the east and the Canadian Northern reaches Toronto from the west, and authority is sought to build a line to connect these two railways so as to make them one continuous transportation route, we might fairly say that the connecting line was for the general advantage of Canada; but, in the case of a short railway entirely within a province which does not connect with other transportation lines there is no justification for saying that it is a work for the general advantage of Canada. Whether right or wrong that is the view I entertain. Now, the hon. member (Mr. Hughes) told us that the fact that Mr. William Cowan, a man who owns two banks was at the head of this railway ought to be a guarantee that it is all right. Well, he might have told us that Rockfeller of the oil trust is at the head of a railway but that would be no argument to me. The very fact that a man is wealthy may enable him to build the railway, but at the same time it may make him a power for evil instead of a power for good. We all know that many of these rich corporations and rich men exercise the power of their wealth not for the good of the people but to their detriment. I repeat that the exceptional condition in the city of Toronto justifies the city having exceptional control over railways proposing to build their lines through the city. Then, as to the railways mentioned by the hon. member (Mr. Hughes) as having obtained their incorporation from the federal parliament under the Conservative regime, such railways as the Calgary railway and the Edmonton railway had to come here because then there were no provincial legislatures in these provinces, and many of the others mentioned were extensions of the Canadian Pacific railway which being chartered by this parliament, the branches had to come here for incorporation also. But, the line which we are now asked to incorporate is not connected with any of the great transportation, transcontinental or interprovincial lines. It is merely a local railway which may take freight from the Canadian Northern railway or the Canadian Pacific railway and charge an extra freight rate for hauling it a short distance. They may do as some of the railways are doing to-day, pick up a car at West Toronto and take it to Leaside, and charge for handling it as much as a railway will for taking a car a hundred miles, because it is on another line. The Railway Commission should have some control over this company, but that does not afford a strong argument why it should get its corporate powers from this parliament unless it is connected with other railways.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not wish to delay the House in the consideration of this Bill, but I would like to offer a few remarks on some of the issues which have been raised to-night in connection with it. The first issue has been raised by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes), who says that a great many charters for small railways throughout the country have been granted by Conservative governments, and possibly by Liberal governments in the past. Any one who knows the history of railway legislation in this country knows that the words 'for the general advantage of Canada' have been inserted in railway charters granted by this parliament, so that the railways might be able to secure the government subsidy of $3,200 a mile which was granted by the Dominion government. The most recent case in point is that of the Ontario government railway, which was built from the town of North Bay as far north as Cochrane, a colonization road in every sense of the word. Application was made to this government by the legislature of Ontario for the customary subsidy, but it was refused. Now, I understand that the policy of parliament is not to grant subsidies to railways in the thickly settled parts of the country; and in those sections electric railways are taking the place of steam railways. For a long time the charters for these electric or traction railways were granted by the provincial legislature. I can remember a great outcry which was raised in the province of Ontario, when the Minister of Railways was a minister in the provincial government, and when charter mongering became a scandal; and it was chiefly for that reason that the people of Ontario put out the Reform government there. It was whispered that it would not be many years before the applications for these charters were made to this House, and we now find that to be the case more and more every day. For my part, as a Conservative who wishes to see a change of government in this country, the more charters of that kind that are granted the more it will be for the advantage of the Conservative party. The mere fact that one or two members on this side of the House are in favour of a particular charter does not indicate that the Conservative party are in favour of the granting of these charters. The Minister of Railways states that the city of Toronto is satisfied with the amendment proposed. I asked the mayor and the city solicitor of Toronto, on their way home from attending the Railway Committee, if it suited them, and their reply was that it was the best they could get, but that they were not satisfied with it, and that statement is borne out by the telegram which the hon. member for South Toronto has read. The Minister of Railways is very strong in regard to the control of rates. Let me tell him that a great many industrial institutions have been established in towns and villages of the province on the distinct understanding that certain specified rates should be given to them by the railways in order that they might compete with similar institutions in the city of Toronto. But what do we find? We find that they enjoyed those rates for many years; but as soon as the Railway Commission was established the railways took advantage of it to compel the people of those towns and villages to pay the same rates as they did before those agreements were made.

Mr. GRAHAM. Would not that come under the statute which provides against discrimination?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. minister must bear in mind that there are certain points such as Newmarket, which have to compete with the city of Toronto, though they have not the same advantage of competitive rates, and they are at a disadvantage under the regulations of the Railway Commission. In this respect the regulations of the commission have not inured to the advantages of towns and villages scattered throughout the provinces, which are on only one line of railway. Another point I wish to bring to the attention of the House is that this matter is left entirely to the engineer of the city of Toronto, and if he, and the company disagree, it goes to the Railway Commission. The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) says he does not believe in placing any company at the mercy of a band of aldermen such as those in Toronto. I would rather trust the rights of the people to a dozen or half-a-dozen men, than to one man; but from the point of view of the company I admit that it would be more advantageous to deal with one man than with a dozen. If there is to be any dealings with the city of Toronto, it should be with the city council, and not with the engineer. The hon. member (Mr. Hughes) should consider seriously this question from the standpoint of public and provincial rights. I think this House would be justified in rejecting this Bill because it is a vicious measure in principle, the public are not in favour of it, and if the Minister of Railways thinks the city of Toronto would justify him in it, I am sure the member for South Toronto (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) would be prepared to meet him there at any time, and discuss the question before the electors. I am sure if he were to discuss it he would have a warm welcome.

Mr. CROTHERS. It is to be regretted that the Minister of Railways on behalf of the government has not made a frank declaration of the policy of the government, namely, that it is to abolish the distinction entirely between provincial and Dominion rights in reference to the granting of railway charters. If they will say that they will give charters to any company asking for them it will save a great deal of time. We have devoted much time to discussing the question of provincial rights in this connection within the last two sessions, and I do not remember one case in which the government has refused to grant a charter on the ground that the province had a right to deal with the matter. Every argument advanced by the minister in favour of this charter would be just as applicable to an application to this parliament for a charter to run a street railway in the city of Toronto because large merchants in Toronto live three or four miles out of the city, and it is important that they should get to their offices early in the morning. I suppose in one sense an industrious old lady who keeps a cabbage garden is carrying on an industry for the general advantage of Canada. Where the British North America Act gives jurisdiction to grant charters under certain circumstances, it must be implied that there are some cases where provincial governments have the right to grant charters. I would like the minister to give a case where this government could not grant a charter on the ground of provincial rights. It would be a great saving of time if the government would announce its policy in this matter.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. member for Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) asked me a question which I neglected to answer. I enumerated a certain number of railways, such as the Calgary street railway and the Edmonton street railway, that were chartered by this parliament and said also that throughout the western provinces there was no other parliament to charter railways. The hon. member put the question: What about the Guelph Junction railway? I do not know if he had in mind that I had charge of a Bill in the late eighties amending that charter, and had discovered that I had permitted the passing of the Bill declaring that to be for the general advantage of Canada when it did not come within the jurisdiction. The original Guelph Junction Act was passed in 1884 and the Bill to which I referred was an amendment. The Railway Act at the time provided as follows :

> The Intercolonial railway, the Grand Trunk railway, the North Shore railway, the Northern railway, the Hamilton and Northwestern railway, the Canada Southern railway, the Great Western railway, the Credit Valley railway, the Ontario and Quebec railway and the Canadian Pacific railway are hereby declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada, and each and every branch line or railway now or hereafter connecting with or crossing the said lines of railways or any of them, is a work for the general advantage of Canada.

The Guelph Junction railway connects with the old Credit Valley railway and consequently I was right in promoting that Bill and having incorporated in it a clause that it is for the general advantage of Canada. I admit that the law has been changed since, and that the connection would now only make it a work for the general advantage of Canada so far as the point of contact was concerned, but at that time the law was different.

Mr. HUGHES. I accept your apology.

MR. JUSTICE BRITTON.

Mr. CROSBY:

1. Is the government aware that, notwithstanding the provisions of section 33 of chapter 138 R. S. C., 1906, Hon. Mr. Justice Britton is said to have been acting as a director of the National Trust Company, Limited, with head office at Toronto?

2. If so, what action does the government propose taking with regard to the same?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH:

1. The government has not been so informed.

2. The attention of the learned judge will be called to the fact that this question has been asked in the House of Commons.

18TH REGIMENT.

Mr. GIRARD:

1. Has Lieutenant-Colonel Savard of the 18th regiment, sold some old uniforms? If so, in what year and for what amount?

2. Have the proceeds of the sale been returned to the treasury?

3. For what purpose was this money used and by whom?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1, 2 and 3. Officers commanding units of the non-permanent force are permitted, under the provisions of paragraph 68, clothing regulations, part 2, to sell all clothing that has been condemned by the inspecting officer, as time expired and unserviceable, the proceeds of the sale being credited to the regimental funds of the unit.

Mr. GIRARD:

1. Does the government know that Captain Réné Talbot of the 18th regiment, has, it is alleged, never received the allowances which were due him in 1907 and 1908, of fifty dollars each year for his company?

2. Has the government paid the money and to whom?

3. Will the government see without delay that Mr. Talbot is paid?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. The government is not aware of the fact.

2. Yes; the 'care of arms' allowance due to Captain Talbot for the years 1907 and 1908 were paid to Lieutenant Colonel J. E Savard, the officer commanding the 18th Regiment, together with the allowances for 'care of arms' due to the other company commanders of the regiment. Allowances for command pay and drill instruction and postage were paid to Captain Talbot direct.

3. Inquiry will be made into the alleged non-payment of 'care of arms' allowances to Captain Talbot for the two years in question.

Mr. GIRARD:

1. Does the government know that since the retirement of Colonel Wurtele of the 18th regiment the pay-lists of the different camps which have been held are, it is alleged, covered with false names of persons who were never present at those camps?

2. If so, does the government intend to take proceedings without delay to have refunded the money thus said to have been taken from the country?

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. The department has no knowledge of any such irregularities, this corps, like others, having been mustered in camp by the camp paymaster, and the men in each case answering to their names when called.

2. An inquiry will be made, and if there is found to be any truth in these allegations, proceedings will be taken.

OTTAWA IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

2. That the Minister of Finance be authorized to pay out of the consolidated revenue fund to the corporation of the city of Ottawa, as a contribution to the maintenance of the fire protection service of the corporation, the sum of fifteen thousand dollars annually for a period of ten years from the first day of July, 1909, the first of such payments to be made as soon as may be after the passing of any Act founded on these resolutions, and the remaining nine annual payments to be payable in advance during the month of July in each year, the last payment to be made in the month of July, 1918.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General having been acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution recommends it to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. The Combines Bill, and supply in the Public Works estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. Not the Naval Bill?

Mr. FIELDING. At the suggestion of hon. gentlemen opposite that Bill has been deferred over to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 201) for the relief of John Green.—Mr. Edwards.

Bill (No. 202) for the relief of James Thornton Brownridge.—Mr. Blain.

Bill (No. 203) respecting the Essex Terminal Railway Company.—Mr. A. H. Clarke.

INTRODUCTION OF MEMBER.

Mr. Albert Allard, member for the electorial district of the City of Ottawa, introduced by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. McGiverin.

DUAL REPRESENTATION.

On the order of the day being called,

Mr. CAMPBELL. Since December 7, I have had on the order paper a Bill which I was prepared to discuss, but which as a matter of courtesy to the Prime Minister who was leaving the House I allowed to stand over until opportunity offered. When may I have that opportunity?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I believe the Bill related to the question of a member being elected for two different constituencies, its object being to compel him to make an election as to which seat he would sit for. I am glad to say that the committee who are revising the rules have a rule on this subject which I think will meet all the objects my friend seeks to obtain by this Bill.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING (Minister of Labour) moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient, in connection with Bill (No. 101) now before this House respecting the investigation of Combines, Monopolies, Trusts and Mergers, which may enhance prices or restrict competition to the detriment of consumers, to provide for the appointment of Boards of Investigation for the purpose of inquiring into alleged combines causing enhanced prices or restricted competition, for the appointment of counsel to conduct investigations before such boards, and for the payment of the members of such boards and of counsel, and of witnesses appearing before the boards, and of all expenses of boards, including transportation expenses incurred by the members thereof, or by persons under orders of such boards, in making investigations under the Act, and salaries of employees and agents and the payment of clerical and other assistance.

He said: This resolution is necessary in connection with Bill (No. 101) which I had the privilege of introducing in this House nearly three months ago. It might be well, perhaps to precede any remarks it may be necessary to make on the second reading of the Bill by some reference to the purpose of the introduction of the measure at this particular time, the object which it is hoped the Bill will serve and the spirit in which the measure has been introduced. There is no question to-day which has attracted so much attention in this country, and particularly in the United States, as the question of the cost of living for the mass of the people of the country. We have during the last few years experienced a serious and a considerable rise in prices. This increase in the cost of living has not been confined to any one class, rich and poor alike have had some experience of it, but it has had a very serious effect upon men of limited incomes, upon the wage-earning classes, upon those whose salaries are fixed and those who do not receive much in the way of remuneration. To one family after another it has meant curtailment of enjoyment, the foregoing of opportunities of education or recreation, a neglect of future needs, and the claims of others for future support, the giving up of insurance policies; to many it has meant a mode of living less congenial or beneficial to that previously enjoyed, to some, downright privation and hardship; to all sacrifices of one kind or another. That it could not be otherwise, where incomes or wages have not proportionately increased, actual statistics must make apparant enough. It is this question of the cost of living which has helped to make the question of combines, monopolies, trusts and mergers and the possible effect they may have on prices, so important. In the popular mind there has come to be a gradual association between these two phenomena. In the first place, people have experienced the rise in prices, and in the second place, they have observed the formation in increasing numbers of these large aggregations of capital, and they have got it into their minds that these two phenomena are associated one with the other. I think there may be some reason for that in particular cases, but I believe there are other explanations which will account for the rise in prices than the formation of combines and trusts. Similarly while combines and trusts may have had the effect in some cases of increasing prices, they have not always had that effect, but sometimes an effect entirely different, and I would like the House to understand that in introducing this legislation no attempt is being made to legislate against combines, mergers, and trusts as such; the whole intention is to place some restraint on these large aggregations of capital so that the advantages which may come from large combinations of wealth may in some measure be secured to the public, who have helped to make possible these large combinations.

It may be interesting to the House to have an idea of how the cost of living has increased in the last few years. I have here a series of charts being prepared at the present time by the Department of Labour. These show in statistical and graphic form the increase that has taken place in the last twenty years for the different classes of commodities in this country. Just taking a casual glance at them one observes that in the past 20 years prices have, broadly speaking, increased something like from 30 per cent to 40 per cent in most of the commodities which are in the nature of the produce of the farm and the field. Manufactured articles have not increased to the same extent, but there has been a very perceptible upward lift during the last ten years over what was the average rate between 1890 and 1900. As a matter of fact prices were at their lowest ebb in 1896 and 1897. Since that time allowing for the temporary depression of 1907, they have gone up steadily, and if we look at the movement from 1896 to the present time, we will see that in some commodities prices have increased as much as nearly 70 per cent or 80 per cent over what was the average in the years 1890-1900. It would take too long to explain at any length the details, but I would like to indicate what has been the nature of increase that has taken place. These tables have been prepared by Mr. Coats, the associate editor of the 'Labour Gazette.' Mr. Coats has done very excellent and indefatigable work in the preparation of these tables. The statistics have been gathered for a period of over 20 years past and have been gathered from leading trade journals, market quotations and reliable sources in different parts of the Dominion, and I believe that when the report is prepared we will have one of the best reports on prices ever produced on this continent.

Two or three years ago an investigation was made in connection with the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into conditions in the Civil Service and in connection with that investigation a memorial was presented to the commissioners. Referring to this memorial one finds that as the result of an investigation at that time the statement is made that it would be safe to say that for families living in Ottawa on incomes varying from $600 to $900 the rate of advance in the decade from 1897 to 1907 was between 30 per cent and 35 per cent. Of course, the rate of increase in the cost of living will be more considerable to people on smaller incomes. The rates were:

Amount of Income.	Rate of Increase.
1,200	30%
2,000	25%

These figures might be supplemented from a large variety of sources.

Taking the result of the investigation in the Department of Labour to which I have made reference, one finds the following increases in wholesale prices by groups of commodities compared with the average rate for the decade 1890 to 1899 and compared with 1896:

TABLE showing increases in wholesale prices by groups of commodities.

Group of Commodities.	PERCENTAGE OF INCREASE IN PRICES, 1909.
	Compared with decade, 1890-1899.	Compared with 1896.
	per cent.	per cent.
Grains and fodder (13 commodities)	50·0	76·0
Animals and meats (14 commodities)	48·6	80·0
Dairy produce (5 commodities)	33·6	48·0
Fish (9 commodities)	34·0	31·0
Other foods (37 commodities)	7·6	23·0
Hides, tallow, leather, boots and shoes (11 commodities)	35·4	45·0
Implements (10 commodities)	2·4	4·0
Fuel and lighting (9 commodities	4·0	5·0
Building material—
a. Lumber (12 commodities)	54·6	60·0
b. Paints, oil, and glass (14 commodities)	35·2	40·0
House furnishings (15 commodities)	10·4	14·0
Drugs and chemicals (16 commodities)	4·0	5·0
Miscellaneous—
a. Furs (4 commodities)	127·2	180·0
b. Liquors and tobaccos (4 commodities)	17·5	20·0
All 173 commodities	26·0	40·0

It will be seen that on certain classes of commodities, the classes on which the masses of the people mainly depend, grain, fodders, animals, and meats, dairy produce, and foods, hides, leathers, boots and shoes, and the like, the increase has been very much higher than the average, it has ranged anywhere from 30 per cent to 50 per cent.

These figures are borne out by investigations made in other countries. Recently the Department of Labour of the United States made an investigation into wholesale prices for the years from 1890 to 1907. The Department of Labour there found that for the year 1907 the highest recorded level of prices was reached since 1890. The rise from 1897, the low point as worked out by the department is 44.4 per cent.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. minister has mentioned that although combines generally had a tendency to enhance prices, there were instances in which they had not that effect. Would he mention an instance?

Mr. KING. I am not aware of having said that combines generally increased prices. I said that in some cases I thought that they had, and in others, I did not think they had.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the hon. minister mention an instance in which they had not that effect?

Mr. KING. I am comng to that point a little later on. Recently the House at Washington ordered a special investigation into the causes of the increased cost of food, and other products. I have here a report from the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labour, transmitting tables giving percentages of the increase in prices of food and other products. This investigation corroborates in many details that made by the Canadian Department of Labour, showing that prices have increased during the last decade from 25 up to 50 and 70 per cent in the different classes of commodities in the United States. A comparison between the movement of prices in this country and the United States and Great Britain would go to show that, in all three countries, they have risen materially, but that the rise has been more considerable in the United States than in Canada, and in Canada than in Great Britain.

Mr. EDWARDS. How does the rise in prices of agricultural products in Canada compare with their rise in the United States?

Mr. KING. It would take considerable time to go through the figures in individual cases, but I shall be very glad at any time to give information on those points later. In the discussion in committee we can take up the individual subjects. I would ask hon. gentlemen to allow me to make a general statement in the first place.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The best course would be to take a note of any information desired and endeavour to give that in committee.

Mr. KING. Referring to another source, a record of prices on 96 commodities compiled by Bradstreets on January 1, 1910, shows that prices in the United States, on that date had reached an absolutely high record mark. The increase is 61 per cent over the figures of July, 1896, which was the lowest price touched by Bradstreets calculations. Mr. Blue, the Census Commissioner for the Dominion, prepared a statement two or three years ago regarding the increase in the cost of living in this country, and he found that there had been, during the fifteen years from 1892 to 1896, an increase in the prices of food products, ranging from 15 to 20 per cent. In 1906, there had been a rise which would bring the increase up to a larger percentage. Then there have been three or four other important investigations conducted by different bodies.

Throughout the Dominion the steady increase in the cost of living, especially since the beginning of the present century, has been the subject of repeated comment, and, in almost every city or centre of employment, of more or less careful examination. In 1906 the Ontario Educational Association went carefully into the whole matter, in connection with the arrangement of teachers' salaries, with the result that an increase amounting to thirty per cent in 10 years was shown. In 1907 an estimate made by the Synod of the Church of England in the city of Quebec placed the increase within the decade at a much higher rate. In the city of Toronto, an investigation conducted with care and minuteness during 1907, by the Department of Political Economy of the University of Toronto, also showed a higher rate of increase. These examples could be multiplied.

All show upward movement since 1896--30 to 35 per cent higher than the average for 1890-99; 40 to 45 per cent higher average, 1896-97.

The cost of living has increased from 30 to 40 per cent in the case of incomes ranging from $2,000 down to $500. That is a fact which has impressed itself upon all classes of the community. Now what has the community been witnessing in another direction? We find the increase in the cost of living going on simultaneously with the organization of capital on a large scale, the formation of trusts, mergers and combines of one kind or another. I have the figures here with regard to combines in the United States, and these combines have had their effect on the people of this country, as well as those of the United States. Quoting from Nelson's Encyclopedia of 1909, which has the latest information gathered on the subject, I find that :

> Down to 1898 the number of trusts formed (in the United States) was small. From 1898 to 1900 not less than 149 such combinations with a capitalization of over three billion dollars was formed. A large number of combinations have been effected since 1900, the most important of which was the United States Steel Corporation with a capitalization of $1,400,000,000. The aggregate capitalization of such corporations in 1906 is variously estimated at from six to eight billion dollars. . . . The Sugar Trust, it has been estimated, controls ninety per cent of the output of refined sugar in the United States; the Standard Oil Company sixty-five per cent; the Rubber and Paper Trusts about seventy per cent of their respective products; the Steel Trust less than sixty per cent. The six great packing companies —the 'Beef Trust'—slaughtered only about forty-five per cent of the cattle killed in the United States in 1903. The Salt Trust controls over eighty per cent of the salt produced in the country, and the Starch Trust about ninety per cent of the starch. Where the proportion of the industry not controlled by the trust appears to be considerable, as in the case of the Standard Oil Company, allowance must be made for the output of companies ostensibly independent, but in reality controlled by the trust. Furthermore, while in some industries a large proportion of the business may be in fact as well as in name independent of the trust, as in the case of the slaughtering industry, the great combination, nevertheless, controls certain markets without much interference from competitors. The six great packing companies furnish 75 per cent of the beef consumed in New York; in Boston they furnish over 85 per cent; in Philadelphia and Pittsburg 60 per cent; in Providence more than 95 per cent. In the greater part of the smaller cities and towns of New England the trust furnishes more than three-fourths of the consumption.

I shall not weary the House with statistics of the growth of trusts in the United States, but will refer hon. gentlemen to a book written by Mr. John Moody, entitled, 'The Truth About Trusts,' in which they will find tabular statements regarding the large amalgamations in the United States during the last ten years, the number of plants acquired or controlled and the total capitalization, stocks and bonds outstanding. An analysis of these figures slightly in detail would show that of the industrial trusts 15 have $100,000,000 capitalization or over, 33 have $50,000,000 or over, 165 have $10,000,000 or over, and 451 have $5,000,000 or over. Of the franchise trusts 16 exceed $100,000,000, 41 exceed $50,000,000, and 156 exceed $5,000,000. Of the six greatest railroad groups, all exceed $1,000,000,000 capital.

These figures should make every one realize the tremendous power thus vested in the hands of a few men and point to the necessity for some agency in the direction of state control to see that this power is not exercised to the detriment of individuals or the public. No exception can be taken to a trust doing all that is justifiable to further the interests of those whose capital is invested in it, but the business should be carried on with due regard to the interests of the large body of consumers who make up society.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. KING. While we have had this growth of mergers and trusts in the United States, we have had a somewhat similar growth, though not on so large a scale, in this country. Before 1909, there was not a large number of these corporations in Canada, although the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company, the Dominion Textile Company, the Canadian Breweries Company, and the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Company, are large aggregations of capital that will be present in the minds of all here. I have here a statement showing the different mergers that have been effected since 1901, but will pass over that for a moment. Last year, 1909, was a year in which so many mergers and consolidations took place that no less a financial authority than the 'Monetary Times' refers to the circumstance as constituting the year 1909 'merger year.' There can be little doubt these consolidations were an outstanding feature of the industrial and financial situation of Canada during the last year. There were formed in that year the Amalgamated Asbestos Corporation, Limited, the Black Lake Consolidated Asbestos Company, Limited, the National Breweries Company, Limited, the Canada Cement Company, Limited, the Carriage Factories Company, Limited, the Canadian Car and Foundry Company, Limited, the Quebec Railway Light, Heat and Power Company, Limited, the Siemon Company, Limited, the Canadian Consolidated Felts Company, Limited, and we are told of a contemplated merger in the maritime provinces of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company and the Dominion Coal Company. These figures would, I think, bear some careful study, not necessarily as reflecting in any way upon the organizations concerned in these particular mergers, but rather as helping to illustrate an industrial development in our country, a development which is likely to increase during the years to come; and unless the mergers and trusts are to be wrongly judged by the public, they must in some way be made subject to a larger measure of state control than they are at present. If one will look over the press since the beginning of the present year, he will find that there is hardly a day when mention is not made of some new consolidation or merger. And these announcements come out simultaneously with the experience every one is having of the increased cost of living. The fact that these two things have come together has brought about an association between them in the minds of the public in the nature of cause and effect. My reason for dwelling at some length on both these points is that a truer discernment may be arrived at of the nature of the phenomena into which we are examining and the results to the community.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Do you know whether these combines, or trusts have acted injuriously to the public?

Mr. KING. I have nothing to say in that regard. I have not any evidence at the moment to offer to the House, but I would refer hon. members to the report of the select committee appointed in 1888, when the late Mr. Clark Wallace brought up the subject of combines and consolidations I could quote a considerable amount of evidence given before that committee to show that some of these trusts have acted in a manner injurious to the public, and there is strong reason to believe that, without going into details of individual cases, an examination into some, not all of them, would show they had acted in a manner hardly considerate enough of the interests of the vast body of consumers.

Mr. BLAIN. Could my hon. friend give us any figures which would show that since eight or ten years, during which he said some combines have existed, the articles in which they deal have been made dearer to the consumer.

Mr. KING. One might name a great many, but I perhaps would do injustice to individual concerns were I to single any out. I might do injustice for this reason that while there has been a rise in prices, that has been due in many cases to a large number of causes. The legislation we are proposing is legislation which will afford an examination into the business of every large concern, where there is reason to believe that a combine is operating to an undue disadvantage of the public; and until an examination of its business had taken place, I would hesitate to say that it has been acting unfairly. The fact that the increase in prices, and the formation of these large mergers, and combines have taken place simultaneously, has created in the minds of the people a strong impression that the two are intimately connected, and the public are demanding some kind of legislation which will enable them to see whether they are right or wrong in that particular.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. KING. It has become impossible to disassociate in the popular mind the two outstanding phenomena, the one a matter of daily observation, the other of daily experience, and the public has come to believe that in some way, or to some degree, the increased cost of living which it has had to bear is in some hidden or unfathomable manner linked up with these uncontrollable aggregations of wealth representing gigantic interests and possessing gigantic powers. I was just about to mention that there are innumerable instances of mergers alleged to have been formed during the present year. In the Halifax 'Chronicle' of February 21 it is stated that:

The Engineering and Mining Journal of New York, one of the chief authorities of the iron and steel trade says in its current issue that reports come from Montreal and Toronto that negotiations are in progress for consolidation of Canadian iron and steel interests, somewhat on the line of the United States Steel Corporation.

The 'Canadian Miller and Grain Elevator' of March, 1910, refers to alleged mill mergers. That paper says:

It is believed that about ten mills are being considered in connection with the merger.

The Hamilton 'Times' of February 21 talks about a proposed consolidation of all the gas companies in the Haldimand field. Various references have been made in the press to a formation of a giant merger of all the canned fruit and vegetable interests of eastern Canada. The Hamilton 'Times' of March 2 deals at some length with this merger. The Montreal 'Star' of February 16 refers to an alleged combine of four of Cobalt's richest silver mines. The Toronto 'World' of December 30 refers to an amalgamation of the leading electrical machinery construction companies in Canada for the purpose of avoiding future cutting of prices. The Montreal 'Star' of December 19 refers to the big works of the Toronto Bolt and Forging Company, Limited, at Sunnyside and Swansea, employing some hundreds of men, and said to be the centre of a big consolidation that will represent at least $1,000,000 of invested capital. The Toronto 'Star' of February 11 talks about several navigation companies alleged to be forming a consolidation. The Toronto 'Globe' of January 21 refers to a combine in the asbestos trade. The same paper of February 24 refers to a combine among some of the Montreal railway and power companies. The Montreal 'Gazette' of January 26 refers to mergers of the various properties of the Canadian Electric Company, the Quebec Railway, Light and Power Company, the Jacques Cartier Light and Power Company, the Frontenac Gas Company, and the Quebec Gas Company. The 'Mail and Empire' of February 1 has a reference to a merger in the fish business on the Atlantic coast. And another reference to that merger is made in the Toronto 'Star' of February 16. The Manitoba 'Free Press' of December 1 speaks of a grain combine among the grain dealers. Mention is also made in the Toronto 'Star' of February 11 of an alleged combine among Canadian insurance companies, and the Manitoba 'Free Press' of December 11 also takes up that question.

The Montreal 'Star' of March 7 had reference to several companies in the oatmeal and cereal business, forming a large combine. The Montreal 'Gazette,' March 31, speaks of a merger of ice dealers; the Montreal 'Times' of April 2nd, talked about an amalgamation of three soap manufacturing concerns in St. John; the Montreal 'Star' of the 10th of last month has a rumour of large mergers of lake concerns. Then we had the following interesting reference in the Montreal 'Star' of March 14th of the present year, to a combine among the ocean steamship companies in the matter of ocean rates, I will read that extract to the House. It is headed 'Ocean rates may advance this spring. Canadian importers fear increase on west bound freights next month. Trade commissioners suggest that charges are regulated by combination of North Atlantic lines.'

That the next publication of tariffs will find an increase in freight rates between Europe and Canada is an opinion widely expressed by importers in the business district. In this connection the statement has been made that the Canadian North Atlantic Westbound Freight Conference is a combine in the fullest sense of the word.

There have been gradual increases in freight rates and after an investigation of the conditions, Mr. Richard Grigg, His Majesty's Trade Commissioner to Canada, wrote: 'It is alleged and very generally believed that an understanding exists between the Canadian North Atlantic Westbound Freight Conference and lines of steamers from Great Britain and the Continent to New York, Boston, and Portland, and that freights are therefore regulated by combination.'

Lessen British Preference.

The natural result of such a condition would be to lessen the value of the British preference, while United States products carried by rail, and therefore not subject to the same increased charges, would profit by the handicap to British trade. This, it is asserted, is actually happening.

Boards of Trade in Canada interested themselves in the matter, that of Toronto making a particularly strong protest against any advance in rates. The Montreal body also joined in protesting against any increase.

A Monopoly Control.

It would appear that a further increase based, not on competitive conditions, but on a monopoly control, may be expected to reduce the tonnage carried and prove a source of injury to British trade * * * *

Attention of Government.

That these matters will receive the attention of the government is hoped by persons who are affected and in this connection the Bill introduced last month by Mr. Mackenzie King, entitled 'An Act to Provide for the Investigation of Combines, Monopolies, Trusts or Mergers which may enhance prices or restrict competition to the detriment of consumers,' promises to be of interest.

The intention to introduce such a Bill was announced by Sir Wilfrid Laurier when ministers received a deputation from the Boards of Trade of Montreal, Toronto, Quebec and Hamilton, demanding investigation of the porterage charge made by shipping companies and applying only to Montreal and Quebec, which is in reality an increase in the rate of freight; and protesting against an important increase in the rate of ocean freights by the Canadian North Atlantic Westbound Freight Conference.

Scope of New Bill.

The scope and bearing of Mr. Mackenzie King's Bill does not appear as yet to have been fully realized, and it has so far received little public notice but its object is so important that it is not likely to suffer from continued lack of attention. It indicates no less a fact than the beginning of the inevitable conflict between the government of Canada and the abuse of power conferred by combination.

And there is the essence of the whole of this measure. It is not aimed against combinations as such, but against the abuse of their power by combinatione:

A subject which has long absorbed attention in the United States and provoked bitter controversy. In Canada, the active principle of the Trust has not as yet assumed dimensions so portentous as those exhibited in the case of her neighbours, but there is evidence that beginnings have been made and the government may properly feel that it is better to meet the issue early than wait the development of opposing forces.

Now it is interesting to notice, in connection with the discussion which has been going on in the press in regard to these large combinations, that the largest industrial combinations of all in this country have escaped criticism altogether, namely, the great railway concerns of Canada. I think that fact is of particular significance in connection with the legislation we are contemplating at the present time. It shows clearly that the public are not opposed to large combinations as such; it shows clearly also that the public are not opposed to these large combinations extending their influence, widening their sphere of action, and obtaining new facilities in different directions. But what the public are looking to this government to do in connection with large industrial concerns is something along the line of what we have already done in regard to these great railway interests. The difference between the two is this. The railway companies at the present time are subject to investigation by a body known as the Railway Commission. That body has power to inquire into the business of these companies, to see how they manage their business, to find out whether their rates are excessive, and the fact that such a body does exist has given confidence throughout the country in the minds of the public that their interests are in some way being protected. And I feel that once the legislation the government is offering at the present time in regard to other industrial concerns, is put upon the statute-book, a great deal of the agitation which we have been having in this country against combinations as such will cease altogether, because the public will then realize that we have in this machinery an effective means, of preserving the public against any combination which is using its powers in a manner detrimental to their interests.

Now Sir, several questions have been asked me as to whether I thought that combinations were wholly responsible for the increase of prices that has taken place. In accounting for the rise in prices and consequent increased cost of living, many causes have been assigned, and if the truth is to be stated, it is to a variety of causes rather than to any single cause that this is due. Nor is it to be supposed that in some respects this rise in prices is not a good thing. In so far as the rise is due to the discovery of new sources of wealth, to the increased investment of foreign capital in the Dominion, to the opening of new areas of cultivation, to larger and wider markets, to increased settlement of hitherto unsettled parts, to the increased number of people who have to be fed, to increased transportation, storing and refrigerating facilities, to the prevention of waste, to improved methods of production and distribution, the rise is to be welcomed as an actual increase in the wealth of the world, and as reflecting the increased prosperity of our time, a prosperity in which the farmer, the mechanic, the business and professional man have all shared to a greater or less degree. I think in regard to any study of the history of the movement of prices in this country, it will be seen that the causes I have just mentioned have operated in a very large measure to bring about that increase. In connection with that subject, I have received any letters since this measure was introduced, and in particular I have a very interesting communication from one of the largest manufacturing houses of this country, a company of pork packers and provision merchants at Toronto. I would like to read an extract from this letter, as showing what, in the opinion of the gentlemen engaged in this business, has been the cause of the increase of prices in some of the raw materials and raw products. The letter is dated February 1st, and I will read this extract therefrom:

In earlier years when there was less efficient transportation, less excellent refrigerated car service, less controlled temperature on board steamships, and less refrigerated establishments at central and inland points, for many lines of food products produced on the farm at the period of the year when the quantities marketed were largely in excess of immediate requirements, the price sank to a very low point. With the advent of the modern refrigerator, experience has demonstrated that during this surplus period perishable product can be purchased and stored for later marketing. It has been found that well selected and well stored product, with improved transportation, permits of the shipment of such products to remote markets hitherto little considered. The inevitable effect has been to establish higher buying prices for butter, eggs and poultry during periods when under earlier conditions they broke badly in price. Through these conditions producers have secured much higher prices. Such results are inevitable, indeed, the whole cold storage and refrigerated transportation policy of the present Minister of Agriculture has been conceived to this end.

The opening of the Northwest and the inrush of new settlers, and the development of the mining camps in New Ontario, have increased in a very remarkable way the demand for farm products in this province. Years ago when fowl were abundant in the fall of the year, they were disposed of in large quantities upon this market and Montreal, through commission houses, and sometimes at very cruel prices. They were badly handled and badly sold. The result was that notwithstanding handsome profits to the retailer, consumers secured poultry for two or three months in the year at very low prices. Now large dealers have their agents through the country instructing farmers how to dress their poultry or are themselves dressing it for them. The market which they first secured for such product was in Great Britain. This year not one bird has been shipped there, but all the surplus has gone to the Canadian Northwest. I know of one firm alone who made a contract to deliver 42 carloads of poultry for shipment west, for distribution from Winnipeg to the British Columbia coast.

It is noticeable that in this presumably producing country, we have practically no surplus butter for export. By reason of the marked improvement in the quality of butter through manufacture in creameries, the consumption at home has greatly increased. In addition there has been the added demand from New Ontario and the West. The consumption of milk, too, in big towns and cities, owing to the great increase in the use of cereals, has taken cream which otherwise would have gone into butter. A few years ago tens of thousands of cases of eggs were exported to Great Britain. During the past years not one case was sent out of the country. All were required for home consumption, the added demand coming from the West and the mining camps in New Ontario.

The real situation in Ontario is that new markets of large dimensions have recently been opened for her products in the West, with its new settlers and railway construction, and the mining camps in New Ontario. At the same time a greatly increased outlet has developed in the towns and cities of the province, by reason of the steady increase of the non-productive population.

I think this letter states very clearly what has been one of the causes of the improvement of the condition of the farmers of this country which has helped to make more profitable some of the business in which the farmers have been engaged. But, there have been other factors that have helped to take away in part some of the advantages which the farmers would otherwise have had. The greater difficulty of securing farm labour and the higher cost of labour have taken away much of the advantage which perhaps the farmer would have gained from the better arrangements described in this letter. However, the important point to consider is that much of the increase in prices that has taken place is simply an index of the greater prosperity that has resulted from a better policy in the interest of the farming community of this country.

There are other causes that have also contributed to the rise in price. First of all, we have the great extravagances of the wealthy class. Under the conditions of development and expansion described, opportunities have been afforded to investors, to the possessors of great natural resources, and to those who have had to do with their development and the distribution of products and produce, a means of acquiring wealth such as comes but seldom to a people in the life of a nation. Unfortunately, the riches thus reaped do not always become generally distributed; while the prosperity is real enough, it somehow seems to converge into the hands of a few. This wealth so suddenly, and in many cases so easily acquired, has given rise, not infrequently, to standards of living to which its possessors were strangers a few years before. Money easily obtained has been lavishly displayed and spent, sometimes on more and better food, sometimes on more and better clothes, often on more and dearer luxuries.

This extravagance of the rich considered in all its bearings, and in particular of what it has demanded of its host of imitators, has done much to enhance the cost of living. Wealth centred in the hands of the few has helped to determine the price at which the many have been obliged to pay. The result has been that through the extravagances to which I have referred, we have come to have large demands for certain classes of commodities that are not commodities that are produced for the mass of the people, and capital which would otherwise have been invested in those things in which the mass of the people are more interested has been withdrawn from those occupations and been put into such businesses as making automobiles and the like in order to supply the demand of those who have become very wealthy. It is in this sense that it has been well and truly said that the high cost of living is the cost of high living or the cost of living high. So much by the way of general statement.

To examine in a more critical and scientific manner the causes of the increase in the rise of prices, it is necessary to consider first, what prices in reality are. Rightly understood they are the value of commodities in terms of gold. It follows, therefore, that whatever effects the relation of commodities to gold in the matter of supply or demand of either of these factors will have its effect upon prices. Prices are the result of an equation of which commodities and gold are the two factors; an increase in the former relative to the latter means a lowering of prices, an increase in the latter relative to the former an increase in prices. That the supply of gold has vastly increased is a matter of statistical record. That this increase relatively has been so considerable as to affect prices is the belief of many leading economists, among the number such eminent financiers as Sir Edgar Speyer, who recently paid us a visit, and such eminent authorities as Professor Taussig, of Harvard; Professor Fisher, of Yale, and Professor J. B. Clarke, of Columbia. In fact, there is practical unanimity as to this being one of the main causes.

When we look at the gold side of the question, we find that the total gold production in the world has been doubled in the last decade, and that ten years ago it was practically double what it had been ten years before that again. Against the increasing production there is, of course, to be placed the increased amount of gold necessary to meet the needs of a population vastly larger, and further, the large amount of gold consumed in the arts, though the increase in the amount of gold used in the arts is, I understand, estimated by the best authorities to be considerably less relatively to the amount in use as a medium of exchange.

This is a circumstance of course which sooner or later comes to affect all countries alike, for the flow of the precious metals is such that though invisibly and imperceptibly, they gradually tend to find their level in all parts of the world. This cause may account for relative increases over periods of time, but the causes which account for actual prices in different countries are necessarily of a different nature.

There is, however, a further influence closely associated with the production of gold, which, however, is more impalpable and incalculable, and which comes into play in the shape of credit, by virtue of which one comparatively small quantity of gold does duty for vast movements of currency. The service which credit can render in this connection is enhanced in this country by the splendid system of branch banks which extends throughout the country. Credit, of course, rests primarily on confidence, which in turn, is based upon the actual or prospective wealth. The extent to which credit is likely to play a part in affecting prices will depend upon the degree of confidence in the business community. The whole level of prices will be found at intervals to be swayed according to the confidence or timidity of purchasers and investors. The rapid recovery from the panic of 1907 is attributed by many to the increased confidence which this increased organization has been able to produce.

Leaving now the gold and credit side of the equation, and coming to the commodity side, there are a variety of causes connected with the demand and supply of commodities all of which have their effect upon prices. Everything that enhances the demand, the supply remaining the same, is likely to increase prices; everything diminishing the supply and the demand remaining the same will have the same effect.

I have already made mention of the extravagance of the rich, and the increased ostentation in display, in some respects the criminal extravagance of our wealthy classes, and the great luxury, and higher level of living of all classes. Within a lifetime the scale of living in North America particularly in towns and cities has been revolutionized. The luxury of yesterday has become the necessity of to-day. For the very wealthy take automobiles alone. What is believed to be a fair estimate of the output in the United States for one year is 160,000, while the output for the past seven years is placed at over 400,000.

But to come to the standard of living of the average man. Our homes are more commodious, and better furnished than they were, equipped with all manner of conveniences unknown to our fathers. Electric light has taken the place of the kerosene lamp, furnaces have replaced box stoves; we travel, not on foot, but by electric car; children enjoy educational advantages which were not within the reach of their parents. Much shopping is done by telephone. Proprietary goods have taken the place of staple food products. Amusements and diversions have gained a hold on the people which they did not possess before. As a slight but forcible illustration of the difference in standards, let me mention one fact brought to light by the prices investigation conducted in the Department of Labour, to which I have already referred. The inquiry shows that there has been a marked 'lifting' of the popular taste in the matter of cotton goods. Some coarser lines of goods which were in demand twenty years ago are not now manufactured at all, there is no demand for them; the class buying such goods twenty years ago, now buy goods of better quality. The present goods cost more than those of the past, but they are as a matter of fact in most cases of considerably better quality. Unquestion-ably a change in the standard of living has been brought about with the large increase in our scale of expenditure, an increase which the credit system has helped to enhance.

Intimately associated with the higher or more luxurious standards of living are the changed habits of the people resulting from and in marketing and distribution. To refer to only one we should denote the falling into disuse in all our larger cities and towns, of the old, central markets, and the necessarily increased cost of retail food distribution. Where purchases are made direct from the purchaser the additional middleman profit does not play so important a part, but where goods are delivered not only at one's door, but in preserved or canned form, some increase in price to meet the extra cost of service alone is inevitable. The fact that all retail trade is based on direct purchase from the producer must, unless the purchaser in the first instance is demanding too excessive a profit, entail some enhancement of prices. There are but few commodities to-day as compared with fifteen or twenty years ago, which householders purchase in any way other than through the retail dealer.

Particularly important in this country, however, is the other cause which has already been mentioned, namely, increased population, including immigration, and in this connection the increased demand for goods in remote, and inaccessible parts. Increased population means an increased number of mouths to fill; settlement in remote districts means increased difficulties in satisfying existing needs. Products have to be brought long distances, involving additional elements in handling, transporting, packing and commissions to middlemen.

Those causes are self-evident, but arising out of them are causes of even greater potency, though not as apparent at first blush. The estimated population of Canada according to the census of 1901 was 5,371,315. The estimated population at the beginning of the present year was over 7,000,000, an increase of approximately 53·75 per cent in less than ten years.

But what is even more important as accounting for the increased demand which has effected prices, is the enormous expenditure in connection with industrial expansion which has been going on, expenditures made very largely out of borrowed capital on railways, towns, public works, and other large undertakings. Corporations and governments, national, provincial and municipal have been particularly borrowing for investment or at least for expenditure in the country. According to Mr. B. E. Walker of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, the amount of foreign capital invested in this country in the year 1909, amounted to $200,000,000. Many of these enterprises have not yet become productive, hence they affect almost exclusively for the present, the demand side of the equation. The demand has been in the first instance for the materials consumed in the actual undertaking, then for the labour, and the commodities necessary to supply the labourers engaged upon the work, but the circle of industrial and trade activity once set in motion has gone on widening until it has reached all but the outermost edge of the community.

Reference has been made to farm labour. In that connection, one might quote many statistics to show just how considerable has been the increase in the cost of farm labour. But the increase in the cost of farm labour is only part of the general increase in wages throughout the Dominion. I have here a statement prepared in the Department of Labour, showing the rates of wages prevailing in the building trades in different cities of Canada from 1900 to 1910. In the city of Halifax, taking only the building trades, it would appear that the wages have risen for the different classes of labour in the building trades for those 10 years from 7 per cent to 42½ per cent, depending on the particular class affected. In St. John, the increase has been from 10 per cent to 42·6 per cent. In Montreal, it has been from 24 per cent to 83⅓ per cent for one class, the average being about 66 per cent for some of the higher classes. In Toronto, the increase has been from 16 per cent to 45 per cent, in Winnipeg, from 11 per cent to 64 per cent, in Regina from 25 per cent to 50 per cent, in Calgary, from 25 per cent to 68 per cent, in Vancouver, from 25 per cent to 66 per cent. These figures, taking all the classes in the building trades for these different cities, considering percentage of increase in wages, go to show an average increase of from 26·6 per cent to 55·9 per cent in the several localities or an average of 39·4 per cent, taking the whole, And with this increase in wages has gone a shortening in the hours of labour. Of course, the wage question and the price question are very closely associated. The increase in prices has made the working classes feel the necessity of getting an increase in their wages. They have the smallest income, and with the increase in prices brought about in this way they have had to supplement their earning capacity in some way, and so there has been this increase in wages throughout the building and all trades in Canada. On the other hand, the increase of wages has operated to increase prices. The employers, having to pay more for labour, have found it necessary to tack on something to the prices at which they were selling the goods, and so the two things, wages and prices, have followed each other in what has been described as an upward spiral relationship in 10 years. This increase in wages in towns and industries has operated again on the wages on the farms. Wages being on such a high level in the cities men have left the farms to go into the cities, and in doing so they have not only diminished the supply of labour on the farms, but have created an extra demand in the cities for the produce which the farmer turns out, and in that way the farmer has been handicapped in part from two sides. It is really startling when we consider all these things to see how, while we have had all this great increase, this rise of prices in the city, this increased prosperity for different classes, the movement in some parts of the Dominion has been away from the farms into the cities. We have been getting more men on the land in the west. But let us take Ontario. Mr. James, the deputy Minister of Agriculture in Ontario, recently prepared an estimate of the population of the cities and towns of the province, and he estimated that while the population of the cities and towns had increased during the past decade by 295,400, there had been an actual decrease of 61,858 in the rural population. The rural population of Ontario decreased from 1,108,874 in 1899 to 1,047,016 in 1909, while during the same period the population of the cities increased from 901,874 to 1,197,274. Those figures of themselves would help to explain part of the difference of one of the causes of the rise in prices, and help to answer the question as to whether the farmer has or has not really gained all the advantage which has come from increased prices.

Mr. BLAIN. That is not a new condition of things as I understand it. The former census showed exactly the same thing for Ontario for the last 35 years.

Mr. KING. That would only go to emphasize the significance of that fact. If the farm labour had become relatively less in the previous years, it would, of course, intensify any effect which a reduction in farm labour at the present time would have.

There are other causes which might be mentioned also. There are causes which in the long run are going to be of great service to the mass of the people. For example, the widening of markets in different parts of the world. European countries were formerly receiving much of their grain from other countries than Canada; to-day they find the supply in these countries diminishing, while the demand is increasing at home, and they are looking to this country to supply them with the necessities of life in a larger measure than ever before, and with improved transportation and cold storage facilities, with commercial agencies scattered about in the world, the general policy of trade development which the government has taken up, there is bound to be a greater demand for the goods of this country, and as the demand becomes greater, naturally the prices, for the time being at least, will soar a little higher. But I think so far as the increases may be due to causes of that kind, it is an increase which is shared in by the comunity generally, and it is a price which I believe every citizen of the Dominion is prepared to pay as long as he can be assured it has been brought about through such legitimate causes.

There are other causes which might be mentioned, exceptional in their nature, such as the large expenditures in the last few years in connection with war and the preparation for war in different countries. We have had in the last decade three important wars, the Russo-Japanese war, the Spanish-American war, and the South African war. All of these wars have caused a large amount of capital, which might otherwise have gone into productive industry, to be diverted from it. And the expenditures and preparations which different nations have been making in the last few years in the way of preparations for war have also helped to remove from productive uses a certain amount of capital which might otherwise have been productively employed. Of course, one nation doing one thing necessitates a like action on the part of another, and in that way one nation cannot hope to escape part of the general toll which all nations are helping to exact.

That brings me to one other class of causes. The causes which I have mentioned are largely natural causes operating in accordance with the general run of things throughout the world. There are two classes of causes, closely associated, though somewhat different in kind, which I shall describe as artificial, because they are not absolutely necessary from one point of view although they may be of very great service from another. These causes are the tariff and the combines. The tariff undoubtedly contains the possibility of increasing prices, in this way, that it limits the field of competition over which the sale of goods may take place. If by a tariff wall you exclude commodities up to a certain point, naturally the possibility will arise of an increase in the price of some commodities produced in the country within the tariff wall. It does not follow that this will necessarily in the long run be injurious or harmful to any one; the effect of a moderate tariff may be to so stimulate industry generally that in the long run the people will be better off, having regard to their condition, than they weould be without it. I do not want to argue at the moment the advantages of tariff pro and con, but only to point out that we have on this side of the Atlantic, so far as the United States and Canada are concerned, prices ranging at a much higher rate than they do in a free trade country like Great Britain, and the difference while not wholly attributable to these causes may be due in part to them, and this is one factor that should be considered. One feature that should also be considered is that where you limit competition from without and manufacture is carried on within by only a limited number of producers, a very strong inducement is put in the way of the men controlling these industries to unite their forces and to see that they get to themselves as far as they can, the full benefit of any increased price which the tariff may permit. A large number of persons have the impression that the tariff in this way has become responsible in part for the formation of these trusts and combines, and a large number of persons feel that what the trusts and combines have done has been to seek to gather within their own group the industries that are protected, and then to take care to see that the full advantage which the tariff gives them goes to themselves as a consequence. What we are seeking to do in this measure is to see that where an advantage comes to an industry through the tariff, the whole of that advantage shall not necessarily accrue only to the persons who are engaged in the manufacture, but that some of it should be reserved for the general public in whose interests, as a whole, the tariff has been framed.

That brings me then to the other phase of this question. I hope I have shown that this legislation, in so far as it relates to prices, is not based on a belief that trusts and combines are the sole causes of the increases in price that have taken place. The most that is urged in that connection is that trusts and combines may have caused and possibly are one of the causes in some cases for the increase in price, and if that can be shown in any direction, then the government, in view of the general feeling throughout the country, owes it to the community to give some means of finding out whether such a cause actually exists or not and if so of providing the necessary protection to the consumer.

Another point I would like to make clear is that trusts and combines may not be injurious, that in some respects they may be profitable. That is a point that has been raised. This legislation is in no way aimed against trusts, combines and mergers as such, but rather only at the possible wrongful use or abuse of their power, of which certain of these combinations may be guilty. To illustrate the possible advantage of these large combinations of capital, I shall quote an advertisement which I find in one of the local papers, relating to what is sometimes spoken of as a combine, the Canada Cement Company, Limited. I find in the 'Citizen' of December 11, 1909, the following advertisement:

WHAT IS THE CANADA CEMENT COMPANY, LIMITED?

Then it describes it as:

an amalgamation of eleven of the twenty-three cement plants as follows:—(enumerating them.)

It continues in large letters:

Note the territorial distribution of these plants—from the St. Lawrence to the Rocky Mountains. Obviously in a business where the demand extends from ocean to ocean, there are economies in filling orders from the nearest available plant instead of shipping half across the continent. This explains one purpose of the organization of this company.

Clearly what is stated in the advertisement is absolutely correct. There are obvious economies in filling orders from the nearest plant instead of shipping half across the continent. But the question the country is asking is: Where have we seen of the result of that obvious advantage? That is one of the questions which we hope this legislation will help to answer. In the Ottawa 'Citizen' of December 14, 1909, other advantages are set out in an advertisement headed:

Useful vs. useless competition.

It says:

But there is a form of competition that is wasteful, useless and harmful. To illustrate from our own business. If each of eleven cement mills maintains selling agencies in every part of Canada and ships its products to the most remote points, the aggregate cost on this score is obviously greater than if there were only one selling organization, and all orders were filled from the nearest mill.

Who pays the cost of excessive competition? Ultimately the consumer must pay it. Eliminating the excessive cost of this wasteful competition will enable business to be done at a reasonable profit with ultimate savings to the consumer through reductions in price.

These are obvious examples of the good which large consolidations of that kind could bring with them, and I think that if the public find they are getting some of the benefits of these obvious and inevitable consequences of large organizations, they will take no exception to them; but they want to feel sure that the machinery exists somewhere whereby they can be assured that they are getting, within reasonable bounds, some of the advantages which are so inevitable.

The Hamilton 'Times,' referring to the alleged projected merger to be known as the 'Dominion Canners' Association, Limited,' has the following:

In regard to the object of the merger, it is said by the manager of the Canadian Canners' Association, that the purpose is to keep the cost of productoin down, by which the consumer would also benefit. One of the reasons of the merger, is, he said, that competition had greatly affected the trade, the race having been for the cheapest product, but not the best. That would be overcome as more advanced methods would be applied and only the best produced, so that the public would be assured of the quality of what they received.

Similarly, an article in the Toronto 'Globe' of January 31, referring to the new combine to be known as the Amalgamated Asbestos Corporation, Limited, has the following:

One of the chief aims of the association will be the exploitation of the use of asbestos in fireproof construction.

There is no doubt that these large organizations have opportunities of furthering the business in which they are engaged that would not be open to a smaller concern. They have facilities to get into other markets, and if they use those facilities in such a way that the general public get some benefit out of it, as well as the organization itself, the public antipathy to them should be greatly lessened.

An article of the Toronto 'Star' of February 16, referring to the alleged combine of large firms engaged in the fish business on the Atlantic coast, has the following:

The authorized capital of the new company will be $1,000,000, and it will aim to make the fresh fish business of Nova Scotia of national importance. The Bank of Montreal is behind the scheme, and controls the Atlantic Fish Company.

Clearly it is the interests of the fish trade on the Atlantic coast to in every way get for its product as large a market as possible. The more the fish business is developed in the maritime provinces, the better it should be, other things being equal, for the people of these provinces, and the more you look into the question of these organizations the greater the reason for belief in the possibility of good to the consumer provided there be some means of effective control.

Mr. HODGINS. The hon. gentleman mentioned the Canada Cement Company. I might say that in November last the International Cement Company of Hull were charging $1.50 per barrel of cement delivered at the railway station in my place, but as soon as the merger was formed the price was raised to $2.09 per barrel. I simply mention this in order to draw the attention of the House to the effect which such mergers are likely to have.

Mr. KING. That information has come to me from other sources. In speaking with some gentlemen associated with this merger, they contended that the cement people were being much misrepresented in popular opinion, and that if the public could see what had taken place, they would be perfectly satisfied that no unfair profits were being charged. I propose to let any company which has reasonable ground for believing that the public is under a misconception have the facts brought out so that the public may be in a position to form an accurate opinion. If the consumers feel that they are not getting justice, we ought to give them an opportunity of finding out whether or not the facts justify their beliefs. These are some of the advantages claimed for the trusts, and it will be to the public interest that, in cases where the public consider they are not being fairly treated, the evidence as to the facts should be made known.

Perhaps no one has given a more thorough study to the whole question of trusts and combines than Mr. Jeremiah W. Jenks of the United States, professor of Cornell University, and who for some years was an expert agent of the United States Industrial Commission. Mr. Jenks has also been engaged in several important investigations for the American government. On this question he is recognized as the leading authority on this continent at present. In his book entitled 'The Trust Problem' he states what are the main advantages of trusts, and in considering this legislation it would be well to place his views on record in order that the public may not be mistaken as to the attitude in which this matter is being approached by the government. On pages 212 and 213, Professor Jenks says:

Combination saves a waste of capital by the prompt abandonment of poor or badly situated plants and the concentration of energy in the best ones which can be run to their full capacity and all of the time; by making the best possible use of waste material through the production of by-products; by pushing, often at much expense, markets into new fields, both at home and abroad, through the employment of the ablest men and the best advertising devices, which could not so well be afforded by smaller institutions. There is great saving of energy in the elimination of cross freights; in the best possible division of labour, and in the organization of correlated branches to the best advantage; in the securing of the best ability to manage industries; in making the best distribution of managing ability, giving each person the work for which he is best adapted; in furnishing opportunities fit for the employment of the greatest capacity in all fields of business management, opportunities which could not be furnished without the enormous power that comes from the concentration of capital.

Similarly another authority on Trusts, Mr. Wm. E. Collier, sets forth the results of his experiences. Mr. Collier is New York state civil service commissioner, and has made a complete investigation into this phase of industrial development. At page 3 of the preface, Mr. Collier says :

The great advantages of mammoth business organizations should not be overlooked. Such organizations are necessities in the present condition of American industries. They seem to be the only effective agencies whereby we can develop our much needed foreign markets, whereby we can dispose of our surplus products, and thus give constant employment to our workers and toilers. Much of our anti-trust legislation has overlooked this fact. There is, indeed, a danger that in our attempts to stop monopolies we may cripple our productive energies and stifle enterprise and bring our country into a condition of industrial degradation and into bankruptcy.

The same writer, at page 300 of the same volume, cites other advantages:

We are living in a day of great things. Business opportunities are gigantic, industrial undertakings are enormous, commercial projects are vast, and great business organizations have become a necessity since the dawn of industry, there has been a constant tendency for them to increase in size. Next, the present system of business is characterized by excessive competition, there seems to be a tendency to carry the struggle of competition to such an extent that it becomes injurious to the consumers as well as ruinous to the competitors themselves. Modern competition is destructive and self-destructive; it has a tendency to end in monopoly itself. Modern competition if often unreasonable, and if it were not for the possibility of unreasonable restraints, agreements for its discontinuance would command themselves to the public as being highly proper. Consolidation and combination render possible cheaper production and infinitely cheaper distribution; the competitive system is so expensive in its operation that the price we pay for many articles is far in excess of the cost of actual production plus what would be a fair profit, if the best and most perfect methods of organization were adopted. There are gigantic evils resulting from the lack of regulation of industry; consolidation makes possible a better control and will enable those adopting this form of organization to sell goods at lower prices.

If matters were to end there, we would probably have no need for the kind of legislation we are now introducing. The advantages of large combinations of capital are so obvious, that, I say again, if these large combines had regard to the public interest as well as to the private interests of their shareholders, there would be no need of any legislation to watch or control their operations. Unfortunately, human nature being what it is, we cannot believe that these organizations consider primarily the good of the nation as a whole as opposed to the interests of those whose capital is in their hands; and it is the business of the government, therefore, to see that no private interests shall be allowed to operate against the public good. Where, through the development of an industry, or other cause, we have the growth of a great power in the hands of individuals, with the possibility of that power being used to further private ends at the expense of the public good, there is the strongest demand on the government to see that the interests of the community are protected.

I was asked further if we had any reason for believing that any of these combines were operating in a manner detrimental to public interest. I replied that I did not wish to make any individual charges one way or the other. But the government is forced to recognize such representations as come to it from reliable sources.

On February 26, 1909, a deputation waited upon the hon. the Minister of Finance, and the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce, with a view to invoking the aid of the government of Canada in the control of combines. The deputation, accompanied by a number of members of parliament, included Mr. F. C. Drury, master of the Dominion Grange; Mr. James McEwing, M.P.P.; Mr. H. J. Pettipeice, ex-M.P.P.; Mr. J. W. Currie, K.C.; Mr. W. L. Smith, editor of the 'Weekly Sun', and Mr. J. Woods, of Gordon McKay & Co. I shall not read the memorandum at length, but simply say that these gentlemen represented that there was an inevitable tendency, as a consequence of the tariff of this country, towards consolidation in the shape of trusts and combines, and that they had reason to believe that, in a very large number of industries in this country, such combines were operating to the detriment of consumers. They cited a number of commodities produced, and went on to state that there were at least one hundred trade combines in Ontario which were collecting in the aggregate millions of dollars per year in the form of exorbitant profits. They also urged that the government should take further action towards the control of these combines, and pointed out that their representations had been also voiced by the newspapers of all shades of political belief, the Orillia 'Packet'; Windsor 'Record', Woodstock 'Sentinel-Review', Hamilton 'Herald', Calgary 'News', London 'Advertiser', St. Thomas 'Journal', Moncton 'Transcript', and that other papers had been particularly outspoken. Organized bodies such as the Dominion Grange, they further pointed out, had also pronounced upon the matter, and, by formal resolution, had called for the relief which the situation demanded.

Then hon. gentlemen will remember that some few years ago there were certain disclosures in Toronto, arising out of prosecutions which were begun under the Criminal Code regarding a number of combines, which, it was alleged, were then carrying on their business in a manner detrimental to the interests of the people.

I might remind the House of the select committee of inquiry into the question of trade combines appointed as far back as 1888. That committee, during a sitting of two and a half months, discovered the existence of thirteen combines which, it represented, were not operated wholly to the advantage of the people, but were taking a rather unfair advantage of the organizations they had formed. Then we have had in the last few years several cases in the courts in different parts of the Dominion brought against parties alleged to be interested in these industrial combines.

I might refer to one or two extracts which set out the other side of the case. I have referred to the advantages which these trusts may exercise. Let me now point out briefly the disadvantages. When the subject was discussed some years ago, my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) read from a pamphlet written by Mr. Wm. W. Cook of New York, and I would like to put the extract which he read before the House again as presenting another point of view:

> The modern trust is a monopoly in its purpose, its plans and its culmination. It is a combination that strikes down all competitors. The parties combine to control the market and to control it without competition.
> To all these the public at each end of the industry, the producer and consumer is, and is intended to be, in a certain sense at the mercy of the syndicate or combination. The main purpose, management and effect of all upon the public is the same, to wit: the aggregation of capital, the power of controlling the manufacture and output of various necessary commodities. The acquisition or destruction of competitive properties all leading to the final and conclusive purpose of annihilating competition and enabling the industries represented in the combination to fix the prices at which they would purchase the raw material from the producer, and at which they would sell the product, refined or useful, to the consumer.

Mr. Jenks, in the book from which I have quoted, giving the advantages of these large combines, has given, at page 213 a summary of the disadvantages. In this connection he points out as follows:

> Enormous as these benefits to society may be from this better organization of capital under the new regime, no less pronounced are the evils. (1) Investors of capital are often grievously wronged through concealment of facts and deception practised by promoters and directors at the time an industry is organized, and, later, through misrepresentation of the condition of business and methods in which a business is carried on.
> (2) A second class of persons injured is that of the stockholders. Directors not infrequently manage the business in their own interests, regardless of those of the stockholders. At times it is really made less profitable, or is so managed as apparently to be less profitable, in order to depress the stock on the market and to enable the directors through gambling speculations to reap large profits.
>
> (3) Persons, not members of a corporation, may be injured as consumers by high prices, which can be kept high, provided the combination can secure monopolistic power. The temptation to keep prices above former competitive rates, is, of course, greatly increased when the corporation has issued large amounts of watered stock.
>
> (4) The producer of raw material may be injured by low prices, which the combination, by virtue of its being the largest, if not almost the sole buyer, can compel the producer to accept.
>
> (5) The combination may so increase its power as to injure the wage earners by compelling them to accept lower wages or to work under less favourable conditions than would be granted by competing concerns. So, too, the power exercised, apparently arbitrarily at times, of closing part of the plants to avert a strike, or even to affect the stock market, is dangerous.
> (6) It may happen at times that the larger organizations will exert so powerful an influence on our political organizations that the purpose of the state will be directed away from the common weal.
>
> (7) The mental tone of the business community may be lowered by depriving individuals of the privilege and of the power to enter independently into business as readily as could be done were capital less concentrated.
> (8) And, again, the moral tone of business may be lowered. If the larger organizations employ unscrupulous methods in dealing with competitors, or customers, or labourers, their greater power, especially if it is great enough to give them a partial or complete monopoly for a time, will have a much more detrimental influence than the same acts of an individual, both on account of the range of its application and of the more powerful influence of its example. . . The power of the manager of the large corporation is greater, and the injuries. both economic and moral, to the public from his selfish acts may be much more severe.

So you see, from the extracts I have read, that this writer, who speaks from a very wide range of experience, sees possibility of evil from these large organizations to all classes—investors, stock holders, consumers, producers, wage earners, political organizations and the mental and moral tone of the business community.

It is apparent that no single act can hope to cope with all these possible evils, and the most that can be reasonably expected is that individual forms shall be dealt with as the special need asserts itself. In this legislation it is the interests of the consumer and producer, rather than the interests of the investor or stockholder that it is hoped to protect.

Sufficient has been shown to make quite clear that through large combinations of capital, in the form of corporations of one kind or another, enormous power has become concentrated in the hands of a few men; that the faculty for forming combinations increases as the scope is narrowed, and that that power becomes more easily wielded as the numbers controlling it become fewer. At the same time this consolidation of power in the hands of a few, has lessened their personal responsibility for the proper use of that power; sense of personal obligation to the community becomes submerged in vast corporate entities. The possible resulting abuses call for some restraint that shall take the place of the old personal obligation. Government supervision and publicity must be that substitute. The man who conducts a small business thinks of the obligation he owes to his customers and to the community in which his small business is carried on. Too often, it happens that engaged in one of these large organizations, the persons so employed think only of their obligations to the corporation which employs them, it is so vast, its demands absorb all their attention. A sense of obligation to consumers or society generally is lost. This makes it imperative upon the government to safeguard the community against undue encroachments on the part of these powerful concerns.

But there is an additional reason for government supervision and publicity at the instance of the state. The form of organization which enables wealth to become concentrated in the hands of a few, and secures great commercial powers to these few, is itself rendered possible only through conditions created by society, of whose interests the state is the guardian, and by the direct agencies of government itself.

All organization on a large scale is alone rendered possible by the peace and security which the state assures, and in the maintenance of which the heaviest expenditures of government are incurred. Without the concessions made by the public, and guaranteed by the state, the agencies of transportation and communication, the railway, the telegraph, and telephone, the postal service, could not exist for a day, and the fact that personal responsibility, in the case of these large organizations, tends to become less, is a very strong reason why the government should step in and see that something is established in the nature of a control which will bring back that sense of responsibility to the public which every one engaged in any industry should experience and exercise.

I would like to point out the relation which the legislation we are introducing bears to that adopted in other countries. In the first place the government has sought, in the Bill brought down, to avoid some of the limitations which experience has shown to have been prejudical in the case of some legislation adopted in other lands. For example, take the experience of our neighbours to the south. The Sherman Anti-Trust Act was introduced about twenty years ago. The United States has had the experience of that legislation for that period of time, and their experience ought to be helpful to us; it ought to be helpful at least in preventing us from making the mistake which they have admittedly made. The great mistake which was made by the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, and a mistake which has been made I think in discussions on the subject even in this House, has been that the measure was aimed against trade combinations as such. In looking over the debates that have taken place in this parliament I find that speaker after speaker has said that these combinations must be stopped, we must put them down, we must have legislation that will suppress them. Now, that is ignoring altogether the inevitable tendency of the present day, which is consolidation and co-operation of forces, for one cause or another. Section 1 of the Sherman Act reads:

> Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

The effect of that legislation was that for the first few years, under the Harrison administration, the courts interpreted the law as meaning, and no doubt that is what the framers had in mind, that a combination had to be formed with the deliberate intent of limiting competition against the public interest, and unless intent could be proved, the Act became of no service. Then a decision was given in an important case, the Trans-Missouri Freight Association case, in which the Supreme Court held that the matter of intent was secondary, that all it was necessary to prove was that the combination existed, and that would bring the parties under the law: That interpretation actually made nine-tenths of the business of the United States illegal, and the courts found that unless they were going to make the law ridiculous altogether, it was better to leave it alone. The effect was this, that when it was realized that a trust in the nature of two or three concerns operating together under a joint agreement was an illegal thing, the lawyers at once got to work and said: Let us form 'holding corporations', instead or having these agreements, let us bring our forces together and have one concern. The result was the formation in larger numbers than had ever been known before in the United States of these great aggregations of wealth into one concern. Then came the Roosevelt administration, in which the one concern itself was held to come under the Sherman Anti-Trust law, and we all remember the experience the United States had in trying to work out the law under that interpretation placed upon it by the courts in the case of the Northern Securities Company. In effect this decision outlawed every industrial concern of first importance. They tried then to make a distinction between the good trust and the bad trust. The administration claimed for itself the right to say that a certain trust was good and really did not come under the Act, and another trust was bad and should come under the Act. This has been the history of that legislation up to the present time. Since President Taft has come into power he has had to be his own interpreter in a measure, and has had to say frankly that the Act as interpreted by the courts would put out of business nine-tenths of the concerns in the United States, and that so far as his administration was concerned they were not going to administer the law according to the interpretation the courts have given it, but according to their own interpretation. Now that is a kind of error which this parliament should seek to avoid; let us not place on the statutes any act which will necessitate a contradiction between the wording of an act itself and the interpretation of those who administer it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not quite understand how they administer it on a different principle to that which the courts have adopted.

Mr. KING. They do it in this way. The federal government enters the prosecutions, and the federal government has refused to take up any prosecutions unless its own interpretation is satisfied in the first instance. I will read on this point an extract from President Roosevelt's message to Congress in 1906:

> The actual working of our laws has shown that the effort to prohibit all combination, good or bad, is noxious where it is not ineffective. Combination of capital, like combination of labour, is a necessary element in our present industrial system. It is not possible completely to prevent it; and if it were possible, such complete prevention would do damage to the body politic. What we need is not vainly to try to prevent all combination, but to secure such rigorous and adequate control and supervision of the combinations as to prevent their injuring the public, or existing in such forms as inevitably to threaten injury. . . . It is fortunate that our present laws should forbid all combinations, instead of sharply discriminating between those combinations which do good and those combinations which do evil. . . .

There is a curious admission for the chief executive of a great nation, that their present laws forbid all combinations instead of sharply discriminating between those who do good and those who do evil. President Taft found, I think, that he would be undertaking more than he cared to handle in this endeavour to distinguish between good and bad trusts; because in his special message to Congress on January 7, of the present year, he gives his interpretations of the law, and has something to say about distinguishing between good and bad trusts:

> The increase in the capital of a business for the purpose of reducing the cost of production and effecting economy in the management has become as essential in modern progress as the change from the hand tool to the machine. When, therefore, we come to continue the object of congress in adopting the so-called 'Sherman Anti-Trust Act' in 1890, whereby in the first section every contract, combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of inter-state or foreign trade or commerce is condemned as unlawful and made subject to indictment and restraint by injunction; and whereby in the second section every monoply or attempt to monopolize, and every combination or conspiracy with other persons to monopolize any part of inter-state trade or commerce, is denounced as illegal and made subject to similar punishment or restraint, we must infer that the evil aimed at was not the mere bigness of the enterprise, but it was the aggregation of capital and plants with the express or implied intent of restrain inter-state or foreign commerce, or to monopolize it in whole or in part.

Mr. J. HAGGART. How are you to find out the abuse of the combination?

Mr. KING. By investigation, I think investigation is the only way—where there is a prima facie reason for believing that the combination is doing injury, and I can think of no other method of discovering whether that assumption is correct. But I will go into that point later. The President continues:

> The object of the anti-trust law was to suppress the abuses of business of the kind described. It was not to interfere with a great volume of capital, which, concentrated under one organization, reduced the cost of production and made its profit thereby, and took no advantage of its size by methods akin to duress to stifle competition with it.
> I wish to make this distinction as emphatic as possible, because I conceive that nothing could happen more destructive to the prosperity of this country that the loss of that great economy in production which has been and will be effected in all manufacturing lines by the employment of large capital under one management.

Elsewhere:

It is the duty and purpose of the executive to direct an investigation by the Department of Justice, through the grand jury or otherwise, into the history, organization, and purposes of all the industrial companies with respect to which there is any reasonable ground for suspicion that they have been organized for a purpose, and are conducting business on a plan which is in violation of the anti-trust law. The work is a heavy one, but it is not beyond the power of the Department of Justice, if sufficient funds are furnished, to carry on the investigations and to pay the counsel engaged in the work.

So that the United States, after an experience of twenty years, has come now to the conclusion that the only manner in which to deal with large combinations, as President Taft says, where there is any reasonable ground for suspicion that they have been organized in a manner which violates the anti-trust law, is to investigate and find out whether or not, as a result of that investigation, the suspicion is well founded:

Many people conducting great businesses have cherished a hope and a belief that in some way or other a line may be drawn between 'good trusts' and 'bad trusts,' and that it is possible by amendment to the anti-trust law to make a distinction under which good combinations may be permitted to organize, suppress competition, control prices, and do it all legally if only they do not abuse the power by taking too great profit out of the business. They point with force to certain notorious trusts as having grown into power through criminal methods by the use of illegal rebates and plain cheating, and by various acts utterly violative of business honesty or morality, and urge the establishment of some legal line of separation by which 'criminal trusts' of this kind can be punished, and they, on the other hand, be permitted under the law to carry on their business. Now the public, and especially the business public, ought to rid themselves of the idea that such a distinction is practicable or can be introduced into the statute.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. KING. When the House adjourned, I was referring to the legislation affecting trusts and combines in other countries and speaking more particularly with reference to legislation in the United States. I shall spare the House a detailed description of legislation in other countries. I would briefly mention that in England trusts are held to be illegal only where competition is shown to have been wholly removed or prices raised excessively. In such a case the combination is antagonistic to the English conception of freedom of trade, and is consequently judged as void. From this it follows that the decision, whether the combination has the force of legal contract or not, depends according to the English court upon the merits of each case. But while the law in England and on the continent has left the development of trusts to be shaped by economic conditions, it is guarding more and more closely the incorporation and supervision of corporations.

Mr. J. HAGGART. In England can you not punish a corporation for enhancing prices?

Mr. KING. By common law.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Forestalling the market.

Mr. KING. Precisely. Under the French law, combinations of the principal producers in any line with a view of controlling prices are illegal. The law has not been rigorously enforced in recent years, and such combinations are numerous; but in their control of prices they are far less successful than the American trusts.

The law of Austria declares agreements designed to create a monopoly void.

The German law recognizes the validity of cartel agreements, even if such agreements result in power to control prices. If, however, the prices fixed are unreasonable, the combination is subject to an action for extortion.

Every incorporated company (in Germany) which operates independently, or as a member of a syndicate, is, from the moment of its organization, under the control of the law of corporations, a statute that reaches to every detail of corporate organization and management; compels the periodical publication of statements showing the exact condition of the company's affairs; makes its books and assets subject to official inspection at all times, and holds directors and officers rigidly responsible for every breach of trust.

A statute entitled 'The Australian Industries Preservation Act, 1906,' has been enacted by the Commonwealth of Australia to secure at once the repression of monopolies and the prevention of dumping. The statute, as its title suggests, does not attempt the suppression of all trusts and combinations, but is aimed only at those which are to the 'detriment of the public.' By this statute it is forbidden to enter into any contract or engage in any combination in relation to trade or commerce with other countries or among the states of Australia (a) with intent to restrain trade or commerce to the detriment of the public; (b) with intent to destroy or injure by means of unfair competition any Australian industry, the preservation of which is advantageous to the Commonwealth, having due regard to the interests of producers, workers and consumers. Under the statute competition is declared to be unfair, unless the contrary is proved, if the defendant is a commercial trust. In this way the onus is thrown upon the trust to prove that it is not unfair.

If I have made myself clear, I shall have shown in regard to the attitude of the government in this matter that it is not assumed that combines are wholly responsible for the increase of prices, that combines, in other words, may be one cause; in some cases they may not be a cause, but there is a strong reason for believing that in certain cases, combines have contributed to the enhancing of prices unduly. In the second place, there is the attitude towards combinations themselves. I have tried to show that this legislation is not brought in with a view to aiming at the formation of combinations as such, but rather a controlling of their actions, so that they may not unduly embarrass or interfere with the rights of the general public. We have sought to avoid the errors which have exhibited themselves in the legislation of other countries. We have tried to avoid the error which the United States have experienced in going too far in one direction, and on the other hand, to avoid being drawn into another extreme position such as has been found in the operation of legislation in Australia. Finally, in regard to the public, I hope I have shown that the main purpose of the legislation is to help to conserve to the general public some of the advantages which these large aggregations of capital are capable of rendering, not only to those whose capital is invested, but also to the whole community, that this constitutes strong reason for the state exercisng some control. Sometimes we hear it said that the government of a country by interfering in the matter of these large industries is practically standing in the way of the growth of large combinations, that it is too much of an interference, and that, as a matter of fact, it is more the genius of individuals which is responsible for the great success of these large corporations than any other cause. In that connection, it might be well to point out in the public interest that there are material contributing causes on the part of the community itself. Were it not for the services which the country as a whole renders, and of which these large corporations take advantage, the services of any genius, however great, would not suffice to ensure the success of any corporation. What progress, for example, would a combination make but for the peace and security which is secured at the expense of the state, or but for the facilities of transportation, the banking facilities, the security in the matter of credit, transportation across the Atlantic, the markets which have been secured through commercial agencies and all these different factors for which the state is primarily responsible or for which the credit is due to the state. So, when we take account of the large services which the state as a whole is rendering, and when we consider further, that but for the army of producers making up a nation and the army of consumers, after all, the people of the nation, no combination on earth could exist for a week, we begin to see another set of circumstances why the government of a country, representing the people of a country, should seek to see that any advantages which may accrue from these large aggregations of capital should in part be conserved for the good of the people as a whole.

It remains for me to speak of the place which the proposed legislation holds in the scheme of legislation already enacted by this parliament, and that brings me first of all to the central features of this Bill. The Toronto 'Star' has given a good deal of attention to this subject, more than any other journal in Canada. A year or two ago every second issue contained some article dealing with this subject of trusts and combines. In one of these articles we find an outline of what, according to that paper at least, is the kind of machinery which is necessary to effectually control these large organizations. I find in an article in the 'Star' of October 30, 1908, the following paragraph:

> When there is reason to suspect the existence of a combine it should be the duty of the government to provide for an immediate inquiry into the facts, at the expense of the government. With a prima facie case established, the next step should be for the government to order an open and official inquiry, and where a combination is shown to exist, immediate relief should be given through the form provided by law by a reduction in, or entire withdrawal of, the protection accorded.
> If a consumer is to be denied the benefit of foreign competition he must at least be assured against the creation of combines which prevent competition among home manufacturers and dealers.

In that paragraph will be found the essential features of the present legislation. What the government is aiming at in this measure is, first of all, to provide a means whereby when there is reasonable ground for believing that a combination exists which is unduly enhancing prices or unfairly restricting trade, the consumers, represented by a group of their number, may make out a prima facie case before a judge of the High Court, and if a prima facie case is made out in this way, an investigation may be ordered by the judge, and if so ordered, must be carried out at the expense of the government. In order that an investigation of the kind may be as impartial and as fair as possible, the measure provides that each of the parties interested in getting at the truth or having the truth known may be represented on the board of investigators. In the first place, the parties who have preferred the complaint will be asked to name their representative, the parties complained against will be asked to name their representative, and these two representatives, chosen in this fashion, will be called upon to choose as the chairman of the Board of Investigation, a judge of some court. In the event of either of the parties failing to name an individual member of the board, or in event of the two members failing to agree upon a judge as chairman, then the government will make the appointment of the person needed to complete the board. In this way it is hoped to fashion a board of investigation composed of experts from both sides, who will have the power to examine into all facts having a bearing on the case, and to make their report. The essential feature of this measure is that it provides this means of getting at the truth before giving publicity to the facts. It has an important industrial and social bearing, its machinery is simple, and it has been constructed with a view to being absolutely fair and impartial to both sides. If, as a result of an investigation by one of these boards, it is shown that a combination exists and has operated in a manner adverse to the public interest, the measure provides certain remedies which may be applied; and I think it can be shown that by the machinery provided by this legislation any limitations or defects which are to be found in the law as it stands today will be supplemented or rectified.

It is now desirable to briefly outline the place which this legislation holds in the scheme of legislation already devised by this parliament to deal with the evil or possible evil which this measure seeks to remedy. This will occasion a brief historical retrospect. In the speech from the Throne it was stated that the legislation to be introduced was to render more effective existing legislation. If we omit such legislation as has to do with the control of railway rates or the like, and confine ourselves to that which has been aimed more particularly at combines, trusts, etc., this legislation will be found to be embraced in sections 496, 497 and 498 of the Criminal Code. These sections embody the legislation enacted originally in this parliament in 1889 for the prevention and suppression of combinations formed in restraint of trade. The next legislation is the combines clause in the Customs Tariff Act, assented to on June 29, 1887, as amended by an act respecting the duties of customs of 1907, 6-7 Edward VII., Chap. 11, assented to on April 12, 1907; and lastly, there is an Act to amend the Inland Revenue Act, 4 Edward VII., Chapter 17, assented to August 10, 1904.

Many members of this House will remember the interest taken by the late Mr. Clarke Wallace in the subject of trusts and combines. When he was a member of this House he brought the question up, and at his instance a select committee of the House of Commons was appointed to take evidence on the question and to examine into the need of legislation on the subject. That committee did its work in a very effective and thorough manner. I think Mr. Wallace was the chairman of the committee, and great credit is due to him for the exceptionally able and thorough way in which the inquiry was conducted. A large number of witnesses were called and examined, and a report, a copy of which I hold in my hand, of between 700 and 800 pages, was presented to the House. The interesting feature of that report is that although the committee sat for only two and a half months, they were able during that short time, to disclose to the country the existence of some thirteen different combines. I will not read what the report has to say, but hon. members will find it worth their while to peruse this report and to see just what the results of investigation in this way are likely to be. No stronger evidence in support of the measure which the government is bringing down at the present time could be had than is to be found in this very report. After all, the essential work of that select committee was investigation. In their report the committee were able to put out something pretty substantial. Not only that, but an examination of the report will show that while the committee were at work, some combinations which were believed to be operating to the detriment of consumers in this country ceased their operations to avoid the publicity which an examination before that committee would entail. It was also shown by Mr. Wallace, when he spoke on the subject in the House the following year, that a combine which had existed during the time the inquiry was taking place, as a consequence of the publicity given through that inquiry, ceased to keep up its prices unduly. If we refer to page 5 of the report of this committee, we shall find that they found that a large combine existed among coal dealers in both Ottawa and Toronto. Speaking of the results of this investigation on the second reading of the Bill, Mr. Wallace said:

> We find that these coal organizations are still in existence, we find the organization in Toronto and we find it in Ottawa, but in Ottawa public opinion has been brought so strongly to bear that coal which was sold at $8.50 a ton during the whole winter of 1887 and 1888 was sold at about $6 or in some cases $5.75 a ton during the present winter (1889). We know that the price of coal in the United States was almost the same this year as last year, and that the cost of freight was almost precisely the same, and the fact of coal being sold in Ottawa for at least $2.50 per ton less shows either that the dealers were very magnanimous or generous this year, or that they were robbing the public last year.

It is to be noted that there were no prosecutions in this connection. The result was brought about simply through the force of the report of the committee of the House of Commons influencing public opinion; and it is to be noted further that Mr. Wallace credits public opinion with the whole result.

A word as to the significance of the sections in the Criminal Code which come down to us from the legislation introduced in the House by Mr. Clarke Wallace in 1889. Gentlemen opposite may be inclined to assert that much credit is due to the party to which they belong from having been the first to enact legislation to deal with trusts and combines. I am prepared to concede high praise to the late Mr. Clarke Wallace for the earnest, and diligent manner in which he helped to bring this subject to the attention of parliament, and the country, and in particular for the able manner in which he presided over a special committee appointed by the House on his recommendation, to inquire into the nature, extent and effect of certain alleged trade combinations. This committee appears to have done its work expeditiously and thoroughly, and no stronger case could be made out for the desirability and advantage of investigation as a means of dealing with combinations and trusts, or of the effects of publicity in desiring to remove the evils incident to these large organizations than the work and report of this committee. It might have been expected that as a result of this inquiry and all that it revealed of the merits of investigation, and publicity alike, the government of the day would have seized the one obvious conclusion of the whole inquiry, and have brought in a measure making provision for the exercise, as future conditions might require, of these powers of inquiry and publicity which had proved so effective in the inquiry and publicity which had proved so effective in the inquiry just concluded. Instead of this, however, the government contented itself with the measure which has come down to us as part of the Criminal Code.

In regard to this measure, it is to be noted that in reality it enacted nothing new, but was merely declaratory of the law as it stood, and had stood for years before the question had ever been one of concern to the administration. This was very clearly brought out by the late Hon. David Mills, at that time member for Bothwell, and who subsequently became Minister of Justice, and I must add was as clearly, and candidly admitted by the late Honourable Sir John Thompson, the then Minister of Justice, who had charge of Mr. Wallace's Bill.

Referring to 'Hansard,' page 1437 of the debate which took place on April 22, 1889, it will be seen that Sir John Thompson spoke as follows in reference to the Bill:

> I think it is, as the honourable gentleman (Mr. Mills) has said, mostly declaratory of the common law. . . . It frequently is the case to declare the common law with respect to matters which are offences. . . . . I have said candidly to the honourable gentleman who has had charge of this Bill from the first that I think his Bill, as now framed, would add no new penalty, no penalty which could not already be inforced, and will not create any new offence.

So far, therefore, as the contribution by gentlemen opposite to legislation affecting trusts, combines, monopolies, and mergers is concerned, it might be well to keep in mind the words of the late distinguished Minister of Justice and Prime Minister that it added 'no new penalty, no penalty which could not already be enforced, and will not create any new offence.'

But if I were to go further and examine more closely the effect of this legislation, I would be forced to argue that it is at least questionable whether its existence on the statutes has not operated rather as a protection, or shield to individuals in their endeavours to make unfair exactions from the public and consumers through the medium of large organizations of capital in the nature of trusts and combines; that, instead of being a deterrent factor, it has actually served as an aid to the possible machinations of these powerful concerns. It has done this by succeeding in large measure in stifling investigation and publicity, the first of all essentials in arriving at the existence of improper practices and methods, and of effectively restraining them.

That Sir John Thompson was right in his opinion at that time was apparent when the subject came up for discussion some years later. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), in moving the first reading of his Bill of 1899 to amend the combines clause of the Criminal Code, said that he was seeking these changes:

> For the simple reason, we are told, that it would be impossible under the existing law as it stands to secure a conviction of any persons guilty of combining in restraint of trade. It would put upon a prosecutor the onus of proving a great many things which it would be very difficult to prove. How can one prove what unduly enhanced the price or restrained trade. . . . This law has been on the statute-book many years, and efforts have been made from time to time to get the attorneys general of the provinces to prosecute under the Act, and several times applications have been made to private individuals to do so, and they all raise the same objection that it would be impossible to secure a conviction under the law as it reads.

The hon. member might have quoted at that time as a true phophecy the words of the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who, in speaking on July 17, 1889, on the proposed amendments to the Criminal Code, said:

You are enacting a law which, like some others, will be very harsh in its character if literally interpreted, and will, therefore, become a dead letter.

I think I have shown the House that the legislation of 1889 has not been effective in dealing with the evil of trusts and combines, but that, on the contrary, its real effect in some cases has been to prevent investigation which would otherwise have taken place. The necessity of branding as criminals any body of men joined together for commercial purposes before you find out whether or not they have been guilty of a criminal offence, is a step which many a man will hesitate to take, no matter what grounds he will have for believing such men to be guilty of a public wrong. There is no doubt that this necessity has prevented many an investigation which would have been in the interest of the public. Therefore, this measure does not propose to place these parties in the position of defendants in a criminal court, but treats them as persons whose business for the time being is being examined into just as is the business of a railway company or a bank to-day to see whether or not it is being carried on in a fair and proper manner.

I will not say any more with regard to the sections of the Criminal Code, but will pass on to the next step in legislation by this parliament. In 1897, just a year after the present government came into office, new legislation was enacted in the tariff resolutions. That legislation is to the effect that whenever the Governor in Council has reason to believe that a trust, combine or association exists among manufacturers, which is unduly enhancing prices, he may appoint a judge to conduct investigations into the business of the alleged combines; and if it be found that a combine does exist and is benefiting by the existence of the customs tariff, at the expense of the public, that the tariff may, either in part or in whole, be modified so as to offer to the consumers that redress to which they are entitled. This legislation marked a very material step forward. There are certain evils which, it is easy to believe, can be better removed by publicity than by penalty. There can be no doubt also that, in many questions of this sort, the bringing to bear of a certain amount of publicity cannot fail to have a beneficial effect. Therefore, the legislation of 1897 looked rather to the interests of the consumer than the punishment of the wrong-doer for a particular class of wrong-doing, and from that legislation we have had some beneficial results. The House will remember that a few years ago the Canadian Press Association claimed that there was existing among the paper manufacturers and dealers in this country a combine which unduly enhanced the price of paper. That complaint was brought to the attention of the government by a resolution from the Canadian Press Association of May 18, 1900. The complaint was considered by the Minister of Finance, and an order in council was passed on April 22, appointing the Hon. Mr. Justice Taschereau as a commissioner to ascertain whether such a dangerous association or combine did exist. The commissioner presented his report on November 27, 1901, and found that a combine existed which was illegal 'both by the express enactment of the customs tariff which forbids the act complained of and authorizes direct government action if it is committed, and by section 220 of the Criminal Code, to say nothing of common law on the matter.'

The report of the commissioner, having been placed before His Excellency in Council, an order in council was passed in February of the following year reducing the duty on news printing paper from 25 per cent to 15 per cent, which reduction has remained up to the present time.

As a result of this investigation, rendered possible through the legislation of 1897, the consumers of Canada have profited to the extent of a ten per cent reduction in the duty on paper ever since, and it is difficult to say how many cases this successful operation of the Act against such a powerful combination as the Canada Paper Manufacturers may not have prevented in like combinations among other manufacturers or attempts to reap an unfair advantage at the expense of the public in the case of those already in existence.

One would have thought that legislation of that kind would have received the heartiest endorsation of both sides of the House, and one is surprised to find, therefore, looking over the debate on that measure, the extent of the opposition to it, and the grounds on which the opposition was based. Moreover, since that legislation has been on our statutes, there have been complaints from different sources that it is not sufficient and that something else is necessary, and it is the purpose of this measure, which the government has introduced, to supply any deficiency. I propose to point out in a few words the grounds of opposition to the measure of 1897, and to show wherein the present Bill removes these objections and makes good any deficiencies in the law at present.

In the first place, the main attack against the Act of 1897 was that it put the government in possession of a weapon to be used for the purpose of intimidation and to serve political ends against friends and foes alike by leaving to the discretion of the government the initiation of proceedings and the giving of power to remove customs duties. It was claimed that the Governor in Council, having power to remove customs duties, might threaten a particular firm with the exercise of this power if they happened to be political opponents. On the other hand, if they were friendly to the administration, they would receive exemption from attack.

Mr. SPROULE. Was not that practically the case?

Mr. KING. I do not think that can be shown in any instance.

Mr. SPROULE. There was one case brought twice to the attention of the House and which was first started by the Hon. Judge Garrow. It was the case of a leather combine, which was clearly established, and in which an appeal was made to the government to take action, and the government never did anything.

Mr. KING. If my hon. friend considers such a case to have been proven, he will probably be the first to recognize wherein the legislation now being introduced will effectively overcome any objection of that kind in the future. My hon. friend put the case as strongly as he could in the debate which took place in 1897 on the legislation then introduced. He then said:

> It puts in the hands of a few men the power to harass or annoy or interfere with the operations of business men in the country . . . to put the traders and manufacturers of the country under the control of the government to such an extent as to keep them in perpetual dread of being attacked under this law. It might be used as a means of levying on men political contributions or blackmail to any possible extent.

I think my hon. friend will be the first to admit that the charge there made has not been born out by the facts. I feel certain that no one in this House will say that the government has ever attempted to exercise in such a way the power given it.

Mr. BLAIN. Has there been any other investigation except the paper investigation?

Mr. KING. I am not aware of the extent to which representations were made to the government as to the necessity for other investigations.

Mr. BLAIN. Have there been any other investigations?

Mr. KING. I purpose to refer in a moment to an investigation regarding an alleged tobacco combine in this country. That, however, did not take place under the section of the law to which I have just referred. I am not aware that there have been other investigations under this particular measure.

Mr. U. WILSON. We know that the rubber combine is one of the strongest in the country. At one time I took occasion to bring it up in the House and called the attention of the hon. the Finance Minister to the fact that dealers were forced by that combine to buy from it at certain times of the year under penalty of paying 15 per cent more for their goods. The answer I got was that he would furnish the court if I would furnish the evidence.

Mr. KING. I think the hon. gentleman must admit the Act would hardly have contemplated action on the part of the Governor in Council in regard to evey matter that might be brought up in the House. Some more effective means of showing the necessity for action on the part of the government should be necessary.

Mr. U. WILSON. I do not see how anything could be stronger than the combine on rubbers, and all the government had to do was to investigate it in the slightest degree to find it existed, because those who were dealing with it were fully aware of its existence.

Mr. KING. Unquestionably individuals may have strong opinions and may be quite right in them, but a government, responsible to the whole people for its action, would have to be very careful in moving against any particular concern, considering the responsibiltiy on it for that action, and for that reason it seems to me that the manner in which a complaint is preferred is an all-important consideration in deciding whether it should be acted upon.

I was mentioning the opposition to the existing legislation on the ground that the government might use this power politically, that the power to remove duties and institute an investigation, being in the hands of the government might be used for political purposes. The present legislation proposes to do away with that discretionary power on the part of the government, and in the event of parties believing a combine to exist unfairly, enhancing the prices or restraining trade, these parties, represented by any six of their number, may go before a judge, and having submitted their reasons by declaration to the judge, are entitled to make out a case in that way, so that it cannot be said that the government is standing in the way of investigation.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. In clause 5 it says: Where six or more persons are of opinion that a combine exists. Who are the six persons, those engaged in similar business at different points, or a merchant with six clerks, who may have a quarrel with the manufacturer and may put him to any amount of trouble? These six persons should be persons engaged in the same line of business and living in different points.

Mr. KING. There may be something in what the hon. gentleman has stated, but that is one of the points that could be better taken up in committee. What I want the House to see at the moment is that one of the aims of the legislation is to remove entirely the objection that has come from certain quarters that the law as it now stands may be burked by the Governor in Council. That objection is removed by enabling the parties themselves to start the machinery before a High Court judge.

Another objection somewhat similar, was that the Governor in Council having the appointment of a particular judge to conduct the investigation might use their discretionary power to appoint some political friend, and I believe some hon. gentlemen went so far as to reflect on members of the bench in connection with the manner in which they would likely be expected to discharge their duty, it being hinted that the government having appointed a particular judge, that judge would carry out his duties, not as a judge would be expected to do, with an eye single to the justice of the case, but rather with a view of pleasing the government by which he was appointed. I think there has been nothing in that objection, but this measure removes the possibility of such an objection being raised in that it leaves the parties themselves to agree on a judge to be the chairman and also to go before any High Court judge they may desire in presenting their application in the first instance, so that if a judge does not act fairly in the matter the parties themselves must be responsible for selecting him at the outset as the one before whom they wished to prefer their complaint.

Another objection which has been urged to the legislation of 1897 is that it is discriminating in character, that it affects only such articles as are affected by the tariff, and has nothing to do with combines in relation to commodities not protected by the tariff. Of course the obvious answer to that is that it is only those industries that receive any advantage through the tariff that are likely to be affected, or that could be affected by the legislation as it stood, they being affected only to the extent of the advantage they had over other industries in virtue of the tariff itself, so I think there is no ground for stating that there is undue discrimination. On the other hand, there seems to be a limitation in the legislation in that it does not take account of the possibility of combines in commodities other than those protected, and the present measure seeks to do away with that objection by placing no restriction on the class of business, but providing that if a prima facie case is made out in regard to any particular class of industry, then the inquiry may proceed under the law as it is proposed. Strong objection was raised by Mr. Dupont, of Bagot, a former member of this House, at the time the measure was introduced, who contended that the consumers were in a better position to know whether injustice was being done by a particular combine than the government, and he thought that, therefore, the government should not have to decide whether or not an investigation should take place, that the consumers should have the strongest say. The present legislation meets that objection, which I think is a very real and substantial one, by providing that the consumers themselves may make out their case in the first instance before a High Court judge, and if they make out a prima facie case there the state itself takes up the inquiry and carries it on. So much for the objections to the measure of 1907 at the time of its introduction.

There remain the objections as to its non-effectiveness in all particulars since its enactment. In this connection, it has been pointed out that the Governor in Council is slow to act and exception is taken on that ground. There may be very strong reasons why the Governor in Council should be slow to act. In the first place, the Governor in Council has a great many things to consider. The question of the existence of a combine is only one among a multitude of questions, and it is inevitable that, the business of the government being what it is, any question that comes up for consideration should be dealt with cautiously, and not with the degree of alacrity that would be expected in other cases. On the other hand is this further point, that for the Governor in Council to take action against a particular concern gives to the whole proceeding a kind of false glamour. It practically puts the case before the country as that of the government against an individual corporation, and that of itself affords ground for the Governor in Council hesitating before taking the initial step. So in the present measure it is provided that the institution of proceedings shall not rest with the Governor in Council, but with the judge of a high court and with the persons who prefer their complaint before him.

Then in the next place, it has been pointed out that the expenses in connection with the conducting of an inquiry under the present law are very considerable, that the expenses of prosecution under the Criminal Code and of conducting inquiries before a judge in the investigation of a combine, are very considerable. The Press Association, I believe, was put to about $2,000 expenses in conducting its inquiry; and it is claimed that where it is in the public interest that an investigation should take place, it is not right that practically all the expense should be left to fall upon the few individuals who may be patriotic enough to take up the work on behalf of the country as a whole. That objection seems to be a fair one; and so the present measure provides that where a prima facie case is made out, where it has become apparent to the judge of a high court that there is reasonable ground for believing that a combine has been unduly enhancing prices, and where the judge is of opinion that it is in the public interest that an investigation should take place, it is the state itself, and not the individual, who bears the cost of the inquiry.

Mr. BARKER. What does the hon. gentleman mean by individual? Does he mean the individual who is prosecuting and who is complaining shall not be bound to pay the expense? Supposing the defendant is acquitted, does he propose to pay the cost of the defence? The hon. gentleman knows, I fancy, that in the celebrated Beckett case the defendants were put to about $12,000 expense.

Mr. KING. I think the hon. gentleman is quite right in the point he raises, and that point has also received consideration. The expenses of both parties are met by the government in a measure, that is to say, that when the investigation is held in the public interest, the parties complained against and the parties complaining each name their representatives on the board, and the expenses of their representatives are met and paid in full by the government. If it is thought desirable to appoint counsel to act in the interest of the public in bringing out the whole facts in the investigation, the law provides that the expenses of counsel in such cases should also be met by the government, and in that way all that is necessary in the way of expense to get at the facts is paid for by the state.

Mr. BRISTOL. In case the interests attacked desire counsel, will their counsel be paid by the government as well as the counsel appointed to represent the public?

Mr. KING. There must be a point at which the government of the country in the administration of public funds must safeguard the expenditure; to allow no individual concern to engage whatever counsel they please, and any number they please, would be going certainly much further than any government would be justified in going. If hon. members would get out of their minds what has come to be the customary method of looking at these inquiries as they have grown up under the Criminal Code, they will see wherein this measure puts a different complexion on the whole subject. Hitherto people have come to look upon investigations as criminal prosecutions. A prosecutor has been appointed, and it has become necessary for the parties to retain counsel, and defend themselves. Now that method is done away with altogether. Instead of there being a plaintiff and defendant, instead of there being prosecutions, there is an investigation by an expert representing each side on the board of investigation. The interests complained against appoints the man in whom it has most confidence, the man whom it thinks can best represent the interests of the concern, and his expenses are borne by the state. Similarly in the case of the parties who have made the complaint, they put on the board the person in whom they have the greatest confidence, and his expenses are met by the state. If these two agree on a judge, then his expenses are met by the state. Then if the board find they need counsel to assist them in getting further at the facts, and they recommend the minister to appoint counsel, and he does so, his expenses also are met by the state. But if the parties are not satisfied with that, and they want to go the length of bringing in an array of solicitors, they of course must pay them themselves. But so far as the investigation is in the public interest, the public exchequer will stand the whole cost that may be necessary in order to conduct it fairly, impartially, and with a due regard to the interest of both sides.

That brings me to another point. An objection is raised against the existing measure that it is unfair to put the onus on anybody other than the state to see whether the facts are as they are alleged to be. Similarly in regard to the point raised by the hon. member for Hamilton. I must say that personally I think a great injustice was done to the Grocers' Guild through the expense and annoyance to which they are subjected. For three or four years a group of prominent persons in this country were standing before the public in the light of so many criminals, defendants in a prosecution, and kept in that position for nearly four years, and finally a verdict was given which showed clearly that they should never have been put in that position at all. Now, had this Bill been upon the books, instead of a criminal prosecution conducted in that manner, the facts concerning the Grocers' Guild and their relations with the public, would have come up for investigation, the Guid would have been represented on that board of investigation by an appointee of their own, and the parties complaining would have been equally represented, and these two would have had a judge sitting with them, and these three as a board would have come together, and have given out a statement to the public in the course of a few weeks which would at once have put the public mind at rest as respects any unfair criticism which might be directed against a combination of that kind. So I hope that the present measure, viewed in its proper light, will be seen to be as considerate of the interests that are being appealed against, or being inquired into, as it is of the interest of the consumers on whose behalf it is primarily instituted.

Then again there has been raised a point that a judge is not the best person to conduct an investigation, it has been said that a judge having a particular training is not the best fitted to go into an inquiry which has to do primarily with economic, industrial and commercial conditions. There is a good deal to be said for, and against the employment of judges in work of this kind. In the first place, looking at the position from the point of view of a commercial interest, it seems to me there is a strong reason why a judge should be one of the most desirable of men for a board. It is the duty of all constituted authority to protect private property, also to see that there is no undue interference with individual liberty, and that is best done by those who are specially trained with a view to safeguarding these public and private rights. Where you have such large interests as those which are to be seen in these great commercial corporations it seems to me eminently desirable that a judge should be one of the parties to protect those interests. On the other hand, looking at it from the point of view of those who are interested in preventing a combine from carrying on its work in an unfair manner, it would appear to be to their interest that a judge should be appointed. Most of these combines operate, in so far as they operate successfully, through agreements drawn in a very skillful manner by the best legal intelligence which these large corporations are able to command, and a man with the training that a judge or a skilled lawyer is likely to have would be in a position to satisfactorily examine into the intricacies of the contract and agreement which might be an essential part of any big combination. So that, from the point of view of those who are complaining against a particular combine, and also of those who are members of a combine it seems to me that there is a strong reason for having a judge upon any board of investigation. But, there are equally strong reasons for having on these boards men who are specially skilled in the particular interest that they are examining into. Nobody could better inquire into the intricacies of a combine than the man who feels its effects, and if you leave to the individual who is suffering from a particular evil the choice of the man who is going to find out whether that evil is existing or not you give him the most effective means of getting at the truth of matters. Similarly, if you take a combination that thinks it has been unfairly treated at the hands of the public, and if you allow that combination the right to place on the board a man who knows the intricacies of the whole business, who is able to put the case before the public in such a light that the business of the combination will be clearly thrown into relief, something in the nature of justice will be done by such an examination. So, I say that this measure aims at doing justice, and meeting the points of view urged by both sides in this connection at securing a combination of legal, commercial and industrial intelligence for the purpose of the examination. A board better constituted for the purpose of conducting such an examination. I think it would be impossible to devise. These are, I think, the main objections which have been taken to the legislation which is at present existing, and I think I have shown that this Bill as it has been drafted overcomes these particular objections. I have only one or two more points to bring out, and then I shall resume my seat.

In so far as any other limitation may be urged it may be said that the remedies which the law affords at the present time are not adequate or sufficient, that there may be a great variety of abuses, and that the law as it stands is not sufficient to meet those abuses. I think the House will agree with me that it is pretty difficult to devise any measure that will meet every kind of abuse that may arise, but certainly the first step towards getting at any remedy is to get at the facts. If you disclose an evil the remedy for that evil will reveal itself in the course of a very short time, but it is to get at the facts in the first instance that is a necessary and essential step in order to bring about a result, which, it is admitted, will do more to achieve the end desired than anything else.

To illustrate what I mean, wherein special remedies can be provided to meet special cases if the need be disclosed—in 1902 representations were made to the government that by the adoption of an exclusive contract system between the American Tobacco Company, Limited, of Canada, and the Empire Tobacco Company, Limited, these companies were able to prevent those who dealt in the class of goods made and supplied by them from selling the goods of other manufacturers, and thus creating a monopoly which seriously affected the interests, not only of other manufacturers in Canada, but also of the growers of tobacco. This was clearly a case of alleged combine in restraint of trade, but, as it was not alleged that the combine was one in relation to an article protected by the tariff, and which the existence of the tariff was helping to facilitate, an inquiry could not be ordered by the Governor in Council under that measure. Had this proposed measure been in existence the matter would have become one for consideration before a board of investigation such as is provided for under the Act. There being no such measure, however, it was necessary to fall back for the purpose of inquiry upon the General Inquiries Act, and to issue a Royal Commission for the purpose of investigating this alleged combine.

His Honour Judge MacTavish, of Ottawa, was appointed commissioner. In his report presented to the Governor in Council in April, 1903, the commissioner found that the contract system complained of by the parties did, in fact, exist and was in general use in the cigarette and tobacco trade in Canada, that the provisions of the contracts in question were not illegal either under the Dominion law or under any statutory law heretofore enacted by the parliament of Canada, but that the manufacturers of cigarettes and the growers of tobacco in Canada, other than the American and the Empire Tobacco Companies, were at a disadvantage in the distribution of their goods and in the prosecution of their business generally by reason of such contract system.

The commissioner having made this finding, the then Minister of Inland Revenue, now my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) at the next session of parliament introduced, on October 4, 1904, a resolution which after being adopted was followed by an Act, Edward VII., c. 17, for the purpose of providing for the cancellation of inland revenue licenses where manufacturers holding the same sold goods under a monopolistic form of contract designed to prevent the purchaser buying goods from any other manufacturer or dealer.

Here was an effective remedy for consumers and an effective means of destroying combines which had been formed in virtue of special privileges gained through a license granted by the government for a particular kind of business.

Under the legislation that the government is introducing at the present time, that legislation of 1904 will be made more effective. A Royal Commission was necessary to disclose the combination which was shown in this particular case. Under the proposed law, an investigation by one of the boards established under the Act showing that a combination in restraint of trade existed, within the meaning of the law of 1904, would have the effect of making penalties under that Act applicable to a combination of that kind.

It is impossible to foresee al the circumstances under which combines injurious to trade or the people may spring up, but in so far as any may be known at the moment it is believed the present measure contains the means of affording effective relief to the consumers, and punishment to those who persist in deliberate wrong-doing, or a harmful course of procedure.

For example, somewhat analogous in its way to the monopolistic possibilities of licenses, are the monopolistic possibilities which patents confer.

There is reason to believe that a form of combination in the past which has worked considerable hardship in many directions is one which has grown out of an unfair use made, by the parties possessing the same, of rights which they hold in virtue of certain patents. It has been alleged, for example, that in some cases the holders of a patent which is more or less essential to an industrial process, have declined to sell this article to parties requiring it in connection with the work of manufacture, unless such parties would agree to purchase all other articles required in this connection, either directly from or through the holder of the patented article desired.

Of this nature was the case of Brunet and others versus the United States Shoe Machinery Company of Canada, which was the subject of considerable litigation in the courts of this country and was carried on appeal to the judicial committee of the Privy Council. The judgment of the Canadian courts were reversed on the appeal on certain points of law respecting contract, but Lord Atkinson in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council made the following significant statement in part:

> If the monopoly established by the appellants and their mode of carrying on their business be as oppressive as is alleged (on which the lordships expressed no opinion) then the evil, if it exists, may be capable of cure by legislation or by competition, but in their view, not by litigation. It is not for them to suggest what form the legislation should take, or by what methods the necessary competition should be established. These matters may, they think, be safely left to the ingenuity and enterprise of the Canadian people.

It is claimed, too, that the holders of patented articles not infrequently make arrangements with dealers, binding them to sell only the articles made by the holders of some patented article, and not the article of a like kind of any competitor on penalty of refusal to supply the patented article.

Through exactions of this kind, and I am inclined to believe that they are much more numerous than the public imagine, trade has been very seriously restricted. In some cases worthy producers and manufacturers have been ruined either in part or in whole, and in all cases there has been exacted from the consuming public a toll such as appears to have no justification whatever, especially when one considers that a patent is a special privilege granted by the public itself through a government which is responsible to it.

The present measure proposes to deal in a special way with combinations of this kind; in the only way that is calculated to afford effective redress, and to afford the kind of relief which Lord Atkinson in the case before the Privy Council which I have mentioned, indicated it should be attempted to cure by legislation rather than by litigation.

It is provided that in case the holder or owner of any patent issued under the Patent Act makes use of the exclusive rights and privileges which, as such owner or holder, he controls so as to restrict competition or enhance prices, the patent shall be liable to be revoked.

There is one broad section of the Act, No. 23, which provides a penalty of general application in cases where the board finding that a combination is existing, recommends that the combination shall change its methods, and the combination later fails to do so within a specified time. In such a case provision is made for a penalty with the view of preventing a continuance of these evils.

It remains only to consider the probable criticism of the measure now being brought forward, and the possible alternative plans which may be suggested. As the measure has been before the country for over two months there has been ample opportunity for a full consideration of its several features, and for ascertaining through representations which have been made one way or another by correspondence, by personal interviews, by comments in the press and by resolutions, what are the alternative courses of procedure or lines of criticism which may have suggested themselves to those who have been giving serious consideration to this measure.

Omitting reference to such criticism, and comments as are merely of a combative, discursive or trivial nature, the objections to the measure appear to be based largely on the self interest of the parties making them, rather than on general public grounds. One group says that the proposed Act goes too far, the other that it does not go far enough; one that investigation is too easily obtained, the other that there is still too much difficulty in obtaining investigation. Such expressions would appear to indicate that on the whole a fair compromise had been reached, and that from the point of view of the public the balances been evenly held. There are of course in this country as in every other those who fear investigation, who argue that it is harmful to business, prevents initiative, and destroys organizing capacity. To such it is perhaps a sufficient answer to say that the largest industrial organizations in the country at the present time are obliged to submit their affairs to inspection and investigation. The work of the Railway Commission is all in the nature of investigation, and the splendid service which has been rendered the country as well as the railways themselves by this body is one of the strongest arguments which can be advanced in favour of control through state agencies.

Similarly the banking business of the country is subject to important restrictions and regulations imposed by the state which involve much in the way of publicity of their affairs. Some of the largest corporations have found it to their interests to invite publicity. The United States Steel Corporation is a case in point. Mr. Carnegie has openly proclaimed his belief in the right of the state to inquire into large businesses. Both Mr. Carnegie and President Gary have spoken in favour of governmental fixing of prices in monopolistic industries. The contrast between the manner in which the affairs of the United States Steel Corporation have been viewed by the public in the states as compared with those of Standard Oil is a sufficient commentary on the merits of publicity as opposed to secrecy in the management of large corporations. As a matter of fact, any business which is carried on in a manner that does not admit of its workings being made public is one which should not be allowed to exist, and at any rate should not receive corporate rights and privileges at the hands of the state.

All the arguments that can be urged against any powers of investigation conferred in the present Act could be urged with equal strength against the powers which are given to boards under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, which the present Bill follows closely in many particulars. It was claimed when that measure was under discussion that the powers given to boards to summon witnesses, compel the production of documents, and in other ways give publicity to their affairs would be harmful to the interests involved. During the past three years there have been some 80 boards established under the Act. These boards have had to do with the investigation of the affairs of many of the largest industrial concerns in the country, including transportation companies, mining companies, and other industrial establishments, most of them having a more extensive business than any industrial combine as yet known in this country, yet in no case has it appeared that the board thus conferred has worked an injury to the business of the concern which has been made the subject of investigation. On the contrary, the access to truth which was been assured in this way has been the one factor which has led to a settlement of industrial differences, and the avoidance of industrial war in over ninety per cent of the cases in which it has been employed. The truth is that a business, legitimately conducted, has everything to gain by an investigation of its affairs. The very best concerns may be wrongly judged by the public and an investigation may restore that measure of confidence so desirable in the management of any business. Mr. H. W. Clews, one of the ablest of New York financiers, at the time that business looked at its worst in the United States, come out with this interesting pronouncement with reference to the investigations which were being forced by the administration:

> The check upon this tendency towards monopoly and excessive centralizations of industry may, of course, be temporarily unsettling in Wall street, but the ultimate effect even upon investments will be highly beneficial, for it will disarm much of the public criticism naturally aimed at the great corporations and monopolies which would surely continue to abuse the great power obtained without due restraint. It will be remembered that none of the calamities which were predicted in event of a decision against the Northern Securities Company ever happened. On the contrary, the decision was distinctly beneficial; it averted worse political agitation.

Businesses honourably conducted have nothing to fear from the present measure; even supposing as is highly improbable that they are very likely to become the subject of investigations under its provisions. On the other hand, the possibility of investigation will be of the greatest service in causing those entrusted with large investments to be conservative and careful in their management. Should business not be properly conducted and should the public be suffering a wrong in virtue thereof, it will hardly be denied that investigation in every sense of the word is in the interests of the public.

A business which is being carried on in a legitimate, fair and honourable way has nothing whatever to fear from the investigation which this law would provide. Many a concern that to-day is being unfairly criticised by the public will be protected by this very legislation because it provides the means of bringing before the public the true facts of the case. On the other hand, this legislation does aim a preventing the mean man from profiting in virtue of his measures. The one end and purpose of this legislation is to prevent the mean man from profiting in virtue of his meanness, and I know of no way by which that can be more effectively done than by providing some kind of machinery which will enable an intelligent public opinion to be formed and focussed upon the particular evil which you are endeavouring to stamp out. Penalties are frequently of no service towards that end, but publicity is all important and essential, and it is for that reason that in dealing with this particular class of cases we had to endeavour to devise an instrument which would bring into play that most potent force in society, namely, an itnelligently formed public opinion which is so effective a factor in the regulation of commercial and industrial affairs.

Of the alternative plans which have thus far been suggested there are but two which seem to be deserving of careful consideration. Each has merits of its own, but each is also subject to distinct limitations under existing conditions. The fact that the present measure stands as it were midway between the two, combining the conditions of both without being handicapped by the limitations of either should help to afford a common ground for union to the advocates of these alternative views.

In the first place, it is suggested that the government should appoint a special agent or agents, whose business it would be to make the preliminary investigation wherever there was ground for believing that a combine injurious to trade might happen to exist. This view has been put forward by different persons. It has been expressed in its simplest frm by Mr. F. W. Thompson, the Canadian correspondent of the Boston 'Transcript':

> The present critic inclines to think that the Bill might be bettered by establishing an official whose duty should be to take and to examine every complaint of 'combine' alleged by anybody.

The same view has been more forcibly expressed in an interview alleged to have been given by a leading Toronto lawyer, and which I find quoted in the Hamilton 'Spectator' of January 24.

> What would have been a move far better than the calling for an investigation by six people or more who have reasons to think that there is a combine, would be for the government to appoint an official investigator. His duties would be to listen to all complaints, and as soon as one is made, he should be given the power to go to the offices of those supposed to be in combine and take full charge of the books. It would be a simple thing for him to decide whether there is a combine or not, in his opinion, and if he decides there is, then let the commission hold the investigation.

It must be perfectly apparent that if the government were to adopt that plan, not one but a host of investigators would be necessary. Moreover, the objection that has been urged against giving the Governor in Council power to remove officials in certain cases, could be urged with even stronger effect in this case. If the government came down with a measure of that kind, it would probably be asserted that the officers whom they would be likely to appoint would become mere tools of the government, and very little confidence would be placed in their investigation. No such argument can be urged against a High Court judge.

The other alternative plan is to appoint a permanent commission, like the Railway Commission. There is much to commend that proposal; but the time has hardly come yet for taking such a step. One thing these individual boards may do: they will assist in revealing the necessity or non-necessity for the establishment of a permanent board to deal with the regulation of trusts and combines. More than that, they will reveal the best class of men to appoint on such a body should it be found desirable to appoint a permanent board. The United States, from which we have copied many good things, whose Interstate Commerce Commission I think suggested the idea of our Railway Commission, up to the present time has not found it desirable to appoint a permanent board to deal with trusts and combines; and we, with our more limited experience, would be hardly justified in taking that step. Rather they have taken the step of establishing first a Bureau of Corporations in connection with the Department of Commerce and Labour, for the purpose of exercising greater supervision over industrial corporations. The result of the examination of these bodies will be to show whether or not we in this country would be wise to proceed towards the establishment of a similar bureau of corporations, or whether it will be better to go in the direction of establishing a permanent commission.

I would have liked before closing, to have referred to some of the opinions expressed by the press of the country with regard to this measure. I think I am correct in saying that the general consensus of opinion of the press, representing all classes and all shades of political thought, is to the effect that legislation of this kind is what the country has been expecting for some time past, and should be enacted as speedily as possible. I have also received communications from a vartiety of sources. I might mention, for example, a communication from the Master of the Dominion Grange, in which it is stated:

> As you are perhaps aware, the farmers' organizations of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario have united their forces. One of the first acts of their united executive, of whom I am secretary, will be to take advantage of your Act, which meets with the most enthusiastic approval of our organization.
> Our organizations number more than 25,000 members, and we are very much in earnest in this matter.

That is the view the farmers take of this measure. I have also a communication signed by the executive of the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress, representing a very large proportion of the labour organizations of this country. This body has asked for the insertion in the Bill of a clause, which I propose to move in committee. This communication states:

> Should parliament see well to insert the safeguard herein suggested, we do not hesitate to say that the Bill would receive the hearty endorsation of the organizations which we represent, and which are some 628 in number and have a total membership of 40,728.

If, therefore, we have regard to the general expression of opinion which is taking place throughout this country, we shall see that this measure is demanded and endorsed by the most representative bodies of the Dominion as well as by the public generally.

In conclusion, let me say that it is not claimed for this measure that it will by any means abolish all the evils which are claimed to be the result of combines and trusts in this country. The most that can be hoped for any such legislation is that it may be a step in the right direction. Broadly viewed, it is in the machinery for investigation and for the framing and shaping of an intelligent public opinion which the measures provides, that its main features consist. It aims to get at the truth and to have the truth when ascertained, so presented that the remedy for a wrong disclosed will be self-evident. It is framed in the belief that once in possession of the facts which are of first importance to itself, the public will find a way of seeing that any evil under which it may be wrongfully suffering will be removed and that no situation, however complicated, will prove too intricate for a satisfactary solution, but to ascertain the facts, to get at the truth, is the first of all essentials. It relies on the moral sense of the community as a 'compelling force,' when concentrated intelligently on a business wrong. Inteligent public opinion will protect honest business and condemn unfair practices.

In the publicity, therefore, which this measure secures, not to private affairs of honest business men, as may be urged by those who are interested in thwarting legislation of this kind, but to the wrongful acts of mean men, lies its strength in securing the well-being of the people, which it is its purpose to maintain. It is an honest endeavour to grapple in a fearless, practical and thorough manner with what is, undoubtedly, the most complicated, intricate and far-reaching of those problems to which our present social, industrial and commercial life have given rise, and which presents, I believe, more difficulties than any single problem in the world to-day. If it does nothing more than restrain to some extent the aggressive tendencies of large aggregations of wealth, and to secure as respects those powerful interests, some measure of that social control which is essential to the protection of the well-being of the many, it will prove not only a benefit to this nation, but I believe, an onward step in the march of social progress.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS (West Huron). Mr. Speaker, allow me to congratulate the hon Minister of Labour upon his first lengthy deliverance in this House. I am sorry, Sir, as I am sure the hon. gentleman himself is, that he has been handicapped by the rules of this House in not having been able to lay on the 'Hansard' table the numerous quotations which he has made, and thus have shortened his time. We have been listening from 11 o'clock till half-past 4 to his very able deliverance. I have taken a great deal of interest in this matter of combines, and in 'Hansard' of the present session, from pages 92 to 96, on November 15 last, I gave the results of my study of the question. There is no doubt that the people of this country are very much worked up in regard to the abuses of combines. The hon. minister did not see fit to mention any specific cases, but there are no goods in use by the plain people of this country, from tin tacks to rubber goods, from leather goods to wash goods, the cost of which is not enhanced by the combines, and these combines are only effective under the tariff regulations of the country. I have quoted the Minister of Finance on page 93 of 'Hansard' of the present session in reference to that. While I join with the hon. Minister of Labour in regard to the general principle, I take issue with him on the law he is trying to promulgate, that is, in regard to the multiplicity of boards to deal with this matter. The main trouble is this. If a merchant in this country finds that the goods he is selling are being imported at an under valuation, all he has to do is to mention the matter to a customs officer, and the whole machinery of the Dominion of Canada is put into force to see that he is protected; but if a retailer desires to put into force the present law as to combines, or the law which the Minister of Labour has laid down, he has to go into court, and appear in the limelight, and if he does that he will be cut off from securing from the wholesalers any goods he desires to sell. I submit that there is only one remedy—one board of experts similar to the Railway Board.

Some time ago I brought before this House the suggestion that we should have two railway commissions, one in Winnipeg, for the purpose of facilitating the business of the country and relieving the people of the west from the necessity of coming to Ottawa to have their grievances remedied. The answer given me by the government was that if we had two boards, we would have two systems of jurisdiction and two different interpretations of the law. But how many would we have should this Bill come into operation? There is much more reason for having two or three railway boards than two or three investigation commissions, or even fifty, as we may have under this Bill. The questions are not at all alike. All the disputes that come before the Railway Board have reference to grievances on railways and canals and the like, which can be easily adjusted in whatever part of the country these difficulties arise, and where, for their proper understanding, the local situation and circumstances could be personally examined by the board. But the questions dealt with by this Bill are much broader, affecting trade and commerce, the adjustment of which in any particular locality affects the whole country, and, therefore, these can very properly be adjusted by a commission sitting in Ottawa. I submit, therefore, that the whole matter of the tariff, on which the existence of these combines hinges, should not be left for decision to the Minister of Finance, with his multitudinous duties, but to a commission of experts, men of experience above bias, which would investigate into these subjects and advise the Minister of Finance. The United States, which is now in the grasp of the combines and trusts, is the only protectionist country in the world without a tariff commission.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer). I rise, Mr. Speaker, with very considerable fear and trembling, to put before the House my views on this subject, because I recall that, in the last general election in England, the only true representative remaining of the old Manchester school, lost his seat. Nevertheless there are one or two things I would like to say in reply to the speech of very great ability, and not inconsiderable duration, to which we have just listened from my hon. friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. King). That speech seemed to me to bear the marks, from every standpoint, of two outstanding characteristics which my hon. friend has developed in a singular degree—great zeal in the public service and capacity for hard work.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARK. I am not sure, however, that the zeal was on this occasion mixed with quite the proper amount of discretion. I may say that I regret very much that the whole House was not present to hear that speech, because it was so very valuable a preliminary step in the investigation which was recommended that I am sure it will tax the digestive capacity of hon. members to fully absorb what has been given them.

I do not wish to put myself in opposition to what will probably be the prevailing sentiment of the House, but, in common with a good many members, who are suspicious that all roads lead to Rome, I have a little weakness on the question which, as I have already indicated, is not too widely shared on this continent; and before saying very briefly what I believe is necessary for me to say on this occasion regarding the real origin of combines, I would point out that, as a Liberal of the old school, I approach the question of state control with very considerable suspicion. I commend the candour of the hon. minister. He used the phrase with considerable frequency and did not endeavour to conceal his conviction that such control was necessary in this particular case. I regret very much, on my hon. friend's account, to hear a young Liberal approach the subject of state control in so light hearted a manner because I recollect the fact that the progress of true Liberalism has been associated in the history of England with a gradual diminution of state control. The establishment of liberty is the work on which Liberalism has been engaged, and I regret that any one bearing the name of Liberal should approach the subject in a light hearted way. As a free trader I hailed that portion of my hon. friend's speech which could be fairly represented as a plea for cheapness. I have considerable hopes of my hon. friend the Minister of Labour, on the trade question. He has so broad and on the whole so open a mind, so attractive an intellect, that I am very sure that, when he gets time to bring the same energy to bear on the trade question which he has bestowed on the question of combines, he will very nearly reach my position on that question. Of course I do not quite understand the plea for cheapness as being a very strong argument in a protectionist country, because I understand that one of the cries of protectionists is that dearness is a good thing. I understand that they believe in dearness. If that be so, I do not see how a plea for cheapness can very strongly recommend the investigation we are promised. My hon. friend said very truly that there is no harm in a combine in itself. The men from whom I learned Liberalism fought, in the middle of the last century, and fought hard, for the right of workingmen to combine in trade unions, and in the statement that there is no harm in combining in itself, I am in accord with the hon. minister. But the real evil which the government is trying to get at is the cause of the increased cost of living. That is the real trouble. I should hesitate very much to put any obstacles in the way of this committee or this proposed legislation at all. I would hesitate very much to do so because I am quite sure, as my hon. friend indicated in his closing words, that there is a large section of the public so appreciative of this evil that they will hail any attempt which is likely to give them relief from what is becoming unendurable. My hon. friend said that the increased cost of living was not necessarily an evil. I think that Bestiat, who was a little more exact in his thinking than my hon. friend, said that there are two kinds of dearness. That was pointed out long ago by the French economist. He specifically told what those two kinds of dearness are. One was due to the limitation of supply. That of course every one knows will cause dearness. The other one, the good kind, is due to the increased demand.

The minister made what was to me an extremely interesting remark when he pointed out that in England, Canada and the United States, taken in that order, you have an increasing scale of the degree to which this evil is felt, that is to say it is not much felt in England. I read my British papers from day to day, and I cannot say that I understood it has been much felt there. A personal friend of mine, one of the most thoughtful men I have met in Alberta, who had been 25 years in the United States and Canada, went a short time ago to the old sod, and he wrote back that he had been able to strike for the first time in a quarter of a century a place where he got value for his money. In Canada it is felt a little more than in England and not nearly so much as in the United States. The feature in that increasing scale it strikes me is that in the same countries you have exactly the same relationship of the countries to commercial freedom. You have practically free trade in England, you have a moderate tariff here, and you have a high degree of protection in the United States. I do not know whether that will suggest to members any connection between protection and the high cost of living. The minister said that the first thing to cure the disease was to investigate it. I quite agree that diagnosis would precede cure, but I should like to go a little further in the medical studies of my hon. friend and to say that the first thing to cure the disease is to eliminate the cause. If I have any objection on this ground to the policy that has been elaborated so ably by my hon. friend it is that the treatment it recommends is of a somewhat symptomatic nature. I do not think it goes down to the root cause, it partakes rather of the nature of the pill-to-cure-an-earthquake remedy. If a man has a rotten bone in his shin it might not do much harm to give him a hot bath, but the only thing that would give him a sound limb would be to get rid of the rotten bone with the surgeon's knife as soon as possible. The hon. gentleman, I think, admitted that protection was one of the very numerous causes he mentioned for the increased cost of living, and he went on to make a remark that it does not follow that protection in the long run is not a good thing. I was filled with regret at that remark, by reflecting that if the run is too long I will not be there to see it; if protection is only to be a good thing in the long run and is a bad thing at the present time, we ought to get after it in our own lifetime; I should let the people living in the long run think for themselves and get at this particular cause of trusts.

I resemble President Roosevelt, if I caught the minister's extract correctly, in doubting both the utility and the feasibility of this class of legislation. Mr. Roosevelt's language, as I caught it, was that legislation of this kind is likely to be noxious where it is not ineffective, and there are root principles for this. After all in a protectionist country—and I put this because a speech such as the minister has made is bound to call forth considerable comment, and comment coming from a member of the Manchester school on this continent cannot be taken too seriously—I would like to make one or two converts to my view on free trade before my removal from this sub-lunary sphere. The government in a protectionist country, by its fiscal policy, makes the whole country a huge trust, that is to say it puts blue-coated, brass-buttoned gentlemen on the shore to shut out foreign competition. To that extent the country becomes a huge trust, and it resembles a trust in this that it takes from its consumers very much more money than what it gives in return is worth. I am not depreciating this government or the government that preceded it, but my point is that we buy—and I never heard a commercial man dispute this position—probably twice as much dutiable goods in Canada made in Canada as we import from abroad. We only get revenue on what we import from abroad, so that the government sets an example of high prices in the shape of its taxation by taking $150 for every $50 that is spent on the public service. If that is not the high cost of living as a taxpayer I do not know what it is. There is the initial wrongdoing of protection, the government is a huge trust, the whole country is made a field for a combine, and my contention is that for a government to turn around and object to its individual citizens following its own example is very much like a father smoking a 50 cent cigar and lecturing his grown sons on the evils of an occasional cigarette. Grave questions arise in my mind, which I shall only indicate, as to how far it is right to restrict any price. You establish a set of conditions by your fiscal system; sharp men—and we have lots of them in Canada—take advantage of these conditions, and they push their enterprises to a point to where it is impossible to push them in a free trade country like England. In saying that, I should like to guard myself against being misunderstood as to the interest I take, more as a free trader than any protectionist can possibly do, in the interests of the consumers. I want to say that as a Liberal I believe in the greatest good of the greatest number, I believe in the greatest good of the whole number, and on this fiscal question the only way we can get at the whole number is by thinking of the consumer, because we all consume, every minute in our lives, every time we stand in our clothes, every time we take a meal or enter a house, we consume all manner of things, and the true Liberal who thinks of the whole people must think of the consumer all the time. The protectionist, on the other hand, thinks of the producers, and from this point of view he can never think of the whole people, because the producers are only interested in the particular class of goods which they themselves produce. That is the meaning of a vested interest. Of course, I have no great fault to find with my Conservative friends who inherit the traditions of the Conservative party, of standing for vested interests of minorities which I have been fighting all my life. A very quixotic career, but not one which readily leads to official position, because in democratic countries you can only get into office by making yourself solid with a majority.

Now what is the correct price of an article? There is one case in which I believe it has been found necessary, owing to the peculiar rapacity of one particular type of human nature, of legal human nature, both in this country and in the old country, to have a strict observance as to charges. I understand that lawyers' charges are always looked into very carefully. On the other hand, it has never been found necessary to look after the charges of medical men at all, they are kept very busy looking after their own; and it is a notorious fact that the medical man is left subsequent even to the undertaker in such cases as require a second party after the doctor has finished his work. I do not know, but that we should have a branch of this department to make investigations into that matter, and throw some light on the subject. It may be that we may require some department of this new method of investigation which would look after the compensation of medical men for the huge bad debts which they contract.

Now, I have asked the question: What is the proper price of an article? Well, the answer to that is that the proper price of an article is the highest price that it will bring, and that is the principle upon which all bargaining between man and man stands. Now I have pointed out that a government in a protectionist country creates a national monopoly, and inside of the large monopoly smaller monopolies grow up in spite of anything you can do. A great Irish theologian said that every effect has a cause, and effects will never cease so long as causes are allowed to operate. You create a monopoly within a monopoly. Our old friend Adam Smith, comes to our enlightenment at this point on the subject of prices, by saying that the price of a monopoly is always the highest that can be wrung out of the consumer. The price of freedom on the other hand is always the lowest that can be taken consistently with carrying on public business. Now I have said that there is not much heard of the high cost of living in Britain or of combines either. It may interest hon. members of this House to learn that our enterprising friends of an inquisitive turn of mind have not failed to make efforts to establish combines in Britain. A few years ago a certain type of American cigarette was advertised largely all over the board fences and street corners of the old country, and retailers were promised specially large dividends on their first sales. This was part of the machinery by which an American combine tried to introduce a tobacco trust into the old land. But under the freedom of commerce, Wills, of Bristol, brought out a cheaper, and better cigarette, and every man in Britain who smokes cigarettes began to smoke the Wills cigarette, and the American trust was reduced to the humiliating position of being sued by the retail dealers to whom they failed to pay the extra dividends they had promised them. At a later period Lever, of Sunlight Soap fame, united with eight or ten other soap concerns, and formed a soap combine. There were certain soaps advertised throughout the land as the non-trust soap, and every washerwoman in England bought the non-trust soaps, and Lever and company sent an advertisement to the leading newspapers saying that it had been found advisable to break up their combine as there were business reasons why it should not be continued. There was a cure without investigation, there was a cure without legislation, there was a cure based on the simple expedient of freedom of commerce. Recently I believe a similar attempt has been made with regard to beef, but it has failed also. These three efforts have been made to establish trusts in Britain, to my knowledge. The Minister of Labour has an expert knowledge of this question, and he may know more than I know on the subject. But those were three great attempts to establish a trust which failed.

Now we come to the practical point as to whether anything can be done. Well, I think the way that small trusts grow up under big ones cannot be better illustrated than by the point which was raised by the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Hodgins). He pointed out that under this industry building the price of cement jumped from $1.50 to $2.09 at one leap. That is building the infant industry with a vengeance, but it is also building the high cost of living to the consumer to such an extent that I was told to-day of a small village in the west where a limited quantity of cement was being used for a public work, and under the recent jumped price, if that same amount of cement had been bought at the larger price, it would have meant $1,200 or $1,300 extra for that particular village. Now in that case there was, I think, apparently a very harmless rise in the tariff which accounted for it, I think it is a fact that there was a rise in the tariff, at any rate on cement bags, which made the tariff upon the whole quantity of cement larger than it had been formerly, and following that increase of the tariff you have of course the combination which is bringing up the expense to the consumers. I should like to offer a suggestion in this connection to the Minister of Finance. Without any investigation or any legislation, he may make a little experiment for the benefit of Canada, and for the benefit of the world upon this question. Let him put cement upon the free list absolutely, and see what the effect will be upon prices. That would be a nice preliminary step towards a real effective investigation into the cost, and a cure of this evil of the high cost of living. As I have said, we read of the high cost of living in Germany, we read of it in France, in Canada and in the United States, but we do not read of it to any great extent in Britain, or Holland, or Belgium, which are also largely free trade countries. Some amusing illustrations have come to my notice of how this freedom of commerce slightly increase the cost of living. Britain has got the right kind of increased cost due to an increasing supply, and an increasing demand, which ought to enable us to see how this thing operates.

When I was at home for the Christmas holidays, I talked to a firm in the town of Olds, near which I live, and I saw a barrel of apples in the store of that firm. The people who kept the store said to me: That is one of fifteen barrels which were sent out here as No. 1 and have been returned by the different individual purchasers. I looked at them and they did not, to my mind, represent exactly No. 1 stuff. As a matter of fact, I was fortunate enough, for many years before I came to Canada, to have a few barrels of northern spies and county kings sent to me from Ontario every year, and I can assure this House that I ate better northern spies and county kings in Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, than I have ever tasted in Alberta. It is notorious in the towns of the west that the best beef is the exception rather than the rule, and the reason for that is that the prime, choice steers go to poor benighted England, which has no weapon of retaliation and which was so commiseratingly spoken of by the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) the other day. It is extremely kind of the other nations of the world to pave with their best the rough road that the backward British nation is taking in retaining the principle of free trade.

I have no obstructive comments to make upon what I may say was an extremely interesting speech, but I would sum up what I have said by saying that in my judgment there is no evidence in the history or experience of nations that tyranny ever cures tyranny, and state control, whether you call it protection or socialism, is only another form of tyranny. I have never been able to gather any evidence from any source that tyranny really cures tyranny. What really cures it is freedom, and the nation which is the greatest trust buster is that which believes in and applies the principle of commercial freedom. I have indicated what I believe to be the cause of the condition with which this Act is designed to deal, and I am not prepared to place any obstacle in the way of any relief from the cost of living, which is making flaring headlines in almost every newspaper in this country, but I beseech my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to come to the assistance of the Minister of Labour on this question and show him, by a little experiment upon cement in the next budget, that after all young men are not always the wisest as to the early production of the millenium.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Mr. Speaker, it is refreshing to hear remarks like those which the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. M. Clark) has made. They are like echoes of the past. At one time the principles he has enunciated had the advocacy of all the hon. members I see on the front benches at the present time. They are a pleasing reminiscence, a recollection, of a former time. They have been forgotten, vanished, and it is with pleasure that I hear statements made and principles advocated which thirty or forty years ago were the principles of the gentlemen on the opposite side of the House.

Mr. LENNOX. Not so long ago as that.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Now, let us deal with what is at the present time before the House. The hon. gentleman is not wanting in courage who can produce a Bill such as that which has been introduced, and if he can do anything in the direction in which he proposes to do it, not only those on this side of the House but those on both sides of the House would be glad to give him their most earnest support. But, I am afraid that he does not understand the difficulties that he is up against. This Bill is for the purpose of punishing parties who enhance the prices of commodities which are useful to the community, such as food. Such legislation has been tried in the United States, and, as the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. King) states, that legislation took the form of legislation against combines. I want to point out the difficulty there is in connection with this kind of legislation. You must state specifically what you intend to legislate against. That is one of the principles of law. It is not what the intent is, it is not what you suspect may be underlying, but you must be specific in your description of the crime in order to punish it. That is the trouble with the Bill which the hon. gentleman has introduced here. What does he mean by enhancing prices? As I have stated, they tried this in the United States, where they passed an Act in reference to combines. You can reach a combine. The very fact of the existence of a combination for any purpose of that kind is sufficient to enable you to punish them. The English have adopted a principle which is logical. They keep the control of corporations under the common law and punish any one who transgresses it. They have never attempted any legislation such as this. In order to punish a party who enhances the price of an article, you appoint a board for the purpose of inquiring into the facts. There is a board of investigation which makes an inquiry to see whether the article is being sold at too high a price or not. Do you not see that in order to make the law effective, there must be a standard of value or price fixed for the purpose of reaching the individual? You leave it to the individual to state whether an article should be worth a dollar or a dollar and a half. That is not the principle upon which legal practice or laws are founded in this country. They fix the principle upon which parties can be punished so that they know when they are offending. Such a law, in the first place, presumes a standard or value. You cannot have a standard of value. What have you to do then? If parties are buying up articles of a certain class for the purpose of forestalling the market you can reach and punish them. If companies exercise their corporate powers in a way which you think is wrong, or enter into a combination, the very fact of their entering into a combination constitutes an offence and you can punish them. The Americans saw the difficulty there. They are trying to get at it by the legislation which the hon. gentleman is introducing at the present moment, but I do not see how it is possible to arrive at a solution in that way. It is an offence against the community to unduly enhance the price and to make the consumer pay for an article that he uses for his daily sustenance an amount greater than he ought to pay for it. But how are you to reach this offence? Logically you have to have a standard of price in order to punish the offence. I do not understand how it is possible to make the law effective in order to punish an offence of this kind if you must have a standard price. The legislation which the hon. gentleman has introduced, calls for an investigation —into what? He does not call it a crime. If I understood him, the chief punishment against the individual is to be publicity. Publicity is sometimes resorted to; it is the modern legislation in the United States. It is used by the Board of Railway Commissioners of Massachusetts. That board has now power of enforcing its decision. It has no power to punish any infringement of what it decides is right. All the power which it has from the state is the power to inquire. It simply draws the attention of the community to the wrong perpetrated on the community, and leaves the correction of that wrong to the influence exercised by public opinion. I suppose that is the object here, but we are getting a very expensive machinery for the purpose of accomplishing it. If the party condemned does not mend his ways within ten days, his conduct constitutes a crime, and renders him liable to $1,000 penalty every day he continues that conduct, and to certain imprisonment. If it be a corporation that enhances prices, that corporation can be regulated by changing the customs duty. The government can take off the duty on the imported articles which enter into competition with the manufactured product.

As I have already said, if it be at all possible, some law ought to be made which will remedy the evil; but I do not see how under this proposed legislation, the hon. minister is going to accomplish what he proposes. He proposes to find out by investigation by a committee whether, in any given instance, prices have been unduly enhanced. That commission will have to determine what should be a fair selling price, based on the cost. That is a difficult thing to accomplish. I do not see how a commission investigating it, especially a judge, could determine with any degree of precision.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is it impossible?

Mr. J. HAGGART. I know of no way at present to accomplish it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Here is one suggested.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I do not think it will accomplish it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Perhaps so.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Publicity will not accomplish it. Under the English law, the buying of articles on the market for the purpose of increasing prices is a crime. If a corporation should indulge in anything of that kind, its corporate powers will be clipped. The difficulty is the defining, or the fixing of what constitutes the crime and punishing for it. If the hon. gentleman's Bill should accomplish the object aimed at, and I hope it may, it will be a step in the direction every one wishes, and that is that every one who enhances the value of a public necessity for the sustenance of life, or the comforts of the people should be punished in some manner or another.

Mr. M. Y. McLEAN (South Huron). Although this is certainly a very interesting subject, I do not intend to occupy the time of the House except for a very few minutes. Indeed, I do not think that any exhaustive discussion of the subject is at all necessary after the exceedingly able, comprehensive, and interesting address we have just listened to from my hon. friend the Minister of Labour.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. M. Y. McLEAN. I would not refer to the subject at all had I not on a former occasion drawn the attention of the House and the government to the dangers existing from the multiplication of these mergers or combines and a necessity for some legislation, which would enable us to regulate them. And I wish to congratulate the hon. minister, and the government on the promptness and courage they have displayed in bringing in this measure. I have considered this Bill very carefully, indeed; and in so far as I am able to judge, it meets the circumstances of the case almost at every point. It furnishes the necessary machinery now lacking, and provides a simple, easy, satisfactory, practical and inexpensive method of putting that machinery in operation. Futhermore it is designed to afford protection to the consumer without unnecessarily harassing, or worrying the producer, and I have no doubt it will have that effect. In fact I do not know of any country which has on its statutes a law so simple and effective as this one is likely to be. The difficulty in our present law, as has been explained very fully by the Minister of Labour (Mr. King) is this, that the burden of putting it into operation rests entirely upon the individual. While the exactions of these combines may amount to a very large sum in the aggregate, to the individual they may amount to only a very comparatively small sum, and consequently it is not worth while for an individual to incur the expense, odium, and trouble of conducting a prosecution, and therefore no action is taken, and the combines are permitted to go on and prosper. In my opinion this legislation is calculated to provide this missing link. From the study I have given the subject, I certainly think it will accomplish that object to a very large extent.

My hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has expressed his general approval of the Bill, but doubts whether there is any possibility of finding out whether or not a combine exists. I do not think there should be any great difficulty on that score, because it should be tolerably easy to ascertain what is the proper price of an article, and the proper cost of producing that article, and what would be a reasonable profit. It seems to me there should be no serious difficulty in this matter, and I think that the proposed commission would be an excellent medium for that purpose. It may be asked, is there really a necessity for legislation of this kind? Have we any combines or trusts in this country that are actually injurious to the interests of consumers or any other class? Now, it is very difficult for any individual to say whether or not such combines or trusts exist; but, as has been pointed out by the Minister of Labour today, a very large number of—I will not call them combines, they have now the more polite name of mergers—a very large number of mergers have been established during the past year in addition to those which formerly existed. The avowed object of these mergers of capital is to reduce the cost of production, and I have no doubt that they will secure that object to a great extent; but if the cost of production is reduced, surely the price of the article produced should be reduced proportionately. Do we find that to be the result? It may be in some instances. I do not know one single instance in which that has been the result; but I do know of some instances in which we have been informed at least that the contrary has been the result. There are one or two instances which occur to my mind at the moment. One has been mentioned during this discussion, that is, the cement merger. This merger was organized during the past year. The price of cement, as I am informed, and believe, previous to the merger being formed, was a dollar a barrel. Immediately after the merger was formed and got into operation, the price was increased to $1.50 a barrel. There was also a merger formed of the carriage makers of the country, and I am informed that immediately afterwards the price of certain carriages was increased by at least 25 per cent. I am not prepared to say that that is wrong. I do not know that the price of these articles is greater than their actual value; but I do know that these increases have taken place since these mergers were formed, and I know that there is a very strong feeling in the public mind that these articles are being sold at too high a cost through the influence of these secret combines. I, therefore, think, that legislation of this kind is necessary, not only in the interest of the consumer, but in the interest of the producer—to give the consumer an opportunity of satisfying himself whether or not these combines exist, and if they do not exist, to enable the producer to free himself from the suspicion cast upon him. Without going any further, I have no hesitation in saying that this legislation shall receive my most hearty support, and I believe that it will receive the approval of a very large majority of the people of this country.

Mr. SPROULE. Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question before he sits down? I understood him to say that after the cement merger was formed, the price of cement went up from $1 to $1.50 a barrel. That is an increase of 50 per cent. The duty on cement is 12½ per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. 12½ cents per hundred pounds?

Mr. SPROULE. That would be 37½ cents a barrel. Does the hon. minister think that taking the duty off would bring the price of cement down to what it was before the merger was formed?

Mr. M. Y. McLEAN. There would still be a substantial reduction.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN (Peel). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great attention to the speech of my hon. friend the Minister of Labour in moving the second reading of this measure. I am sure both the House and the country will be surprised to know that the government, which came into power with the promise that they would abolish all those things that enhance the cost of living, has been 14 years in power, and this is the first real effort they have made to introduce legislation to cure these evils.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIN. I am very glad to hear my hon. friend the Prime Minister say 'hear, hear' to that remark, because he was one of the chief movers in an agitation to educate the people of this country to the idea that protection was all wrong, and that when his party came into power it would abolish protection, and when that was done there would be no combines or mergers to affect the prices of goods to the people of Canada. Of course, this is ancient history, and I am inclined to apologize for introducing it on a question of so much importance as the present question. But I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that it was not the present government that made the first effort in Canada to cure these evils, but the late government, who in 1889, put upon the statute-book a law which I propose to take a few minutes of the time of the House to place before the House and the country. That legislation was introduced under the direction and guidance of the late Hon. N. C. Wallace. It is chapter 4 of the statutes of 1889, and is as follows:

An Act for the Prevention and Suppression of Combinations formed in restraint of Trade.

(Assented to May 2, 1889.)

Whereas, it is expedient to declare the law relating to conspiracies and combinations formed in restraint of trade and to provide penalties for the violation of the same: Therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, declares and enacts as follows:—

1. Every person who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with any other person, or with any railway, steamship or steamboat or transportation company, unlawfully—

(a) To unduly limit the facilities for transporting, producing, manufacturing, supplying, storing or dealing in any article or commodity which may be a subject of trade or commerce; or

(b) To restrain or injure trade or commerce in relation to any such article or commodity, or to unreasonably enhance the price thereof; or

(c) To unduly prevent, limit, or lessen the manufacture or production of any such article or commodity, or to unreasonably enhance the price thereof; or

(d) To unduly prevent or lessen competition in the production, manufacture, purchase, barter, sale, transportation or supply of any such article or commodity, or in the price of insurance upon person or property—

Is guilty of a misdemeanour and liable, on conviction, to a penalty not exceeding four thousand dollars and not less than two hundred dollars, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years; and, if a corporation, is liable, on conviction, to a penalty not exceeding ten thousand dollars and not less than one thousand dollars.

This is the first and only law to be found on the statute-book of Canada which aims to deal with combines and mergers. It is fair to say that subsequently a clause was inserted in the tariff legislation of 1897 by this government, that aimed to cure these evils, and after that a Bill was introduced by the Minister of Inland Revenue, now the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, dealing with a similar matter. But, I am quite correct in saying that the legislation placed upon the statute-book by the administration of 1889 is the only special legislation aimed at dealing with this important question.

Mr. KING. It was in 1897, the year after this government came to power, that the government passed the first legislation dealing with this matter. When the hon. gentleman said it was in 1907, no doubt he doubt he made a slip.

Mr. BLAIN. Yes. 1897.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether the legislation he has just read added anything to the existing legislation on this matter at that time? Was it not merely declaratory of the common law as it then was?

Mr. BLAIN. I listened to the opinion of the Minister of Justice of that day as read by the hon. gentleman (Mr. King), but nevertheless I say this was the only Act, and while there may be some difference of opinion as to how to correct evils of this kind, I do not think the people of this country are anxious for more legislation. I do not wish to place myself in opposition to this legislation if it will assist in remedying the evils that are abroad in the land, but when we have a department of the government specially constituted for such a purpose as this—and we have more departments of government now than ever before in the history of Canada—why does not that department deal with it and not essay to introduce new legislation in an attempt to lead the people of Canada to think the government are providing for something that has not been provided for in the past. I do not offer any special criticism to the department of the hon. minister, but I do not think it requires a special commission to discover evils which are plain to the eye of every man. It is quite within the competency of the Department of Labour to find out, with its present organization, whether prices are higher than they should be, and having found that out to correct the evils with the power already at hand. No doubt the Bill makes it easier for the public to institute proceedings to discover whether or not these evils exist, and it proposes that the government shall pay the costs of any trial of the kind whether the charges are true or untrue. That is helpful, and I have no opposition to offer to it. We on this side of the House will assist in every possible way in that respect. But what the people of Canada are looking for is not new legislation, but enforcement of the existing legislation, and what is the complaint against this government and against the Prime Minister?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is none.

Mr. BLAIN. Oh, yes, there are many complaints, but my right hon. friend turns a deaf ear to them. The charge against this government and against the Department of Labour is, that the government does not put in force the laws already upon the statute-books in respect to combines and in respect to many other matters. Instead of the government striking at these evils with the ample machinery at present under their control, they are simply introducing a new remedy so as to lead the people of Canada to think that they are doing something for them. If the Minister of Labour had been able to come to this House and to state that he had investigated these evils and found they did exist in Canada, and that the government had put into force the legislation now at their command with a view to crushing these evils, he would have received the commendation of the people of the country, but, he has chosen to place another law on the statute-book which he asks the people to enforce, and not the government whose duty it is to enforce these laws.

Mr. F. F. PARDEE (West Lambton). The hon. gentleman from Peel (Mr. Blain) has not grasped the intent of this legislation. I take issue with him when he says that the legislation now on the statute-books might well be used to carry out the purpose of this Bill as framed. Looking at the legislation now in existence, it appears to me most distinctly that the machinery provided is absolutely not ample to give effect to the provisions of this Bill. If it were, I would agree with the hon. gentleman that we should not enact any more legislation than is necessary.

Mr. BRISTOL. Is it intended that chap. 41 of 52 Victoria shall be repealed by this Act ?

Mr. PARDEE. I should suppose not.

Mr. BRISTOL. If it is not, you will readily see that the right of every Crown prosecutor throughout the provinces would still exist on an information sworn.

Mr. PARDEE. That might be, but if the machinery provided in this Act is better than that provided in any other Act, surely it would be taken advantage of. Now, Mr. Speaker, after the extremely able and comprehensive speech by the Minister of Labour any further argument in favour of the Bill would be mere surplusage. I rose to say that I am heartily in favour of the Bill submitted by the hon. gentleman. There can be no doubt that there are combines and combines. In the old days we had the Farmers' Alliance, which started stores and gave to those in the membership of the Alliance cheaper goods than they had been hitherto getting, and we had also the organization of the Grain Growers of the West, the efforts of which were directed towards a similar end. These combines were certainly beneficial in their effects. But there are other combines which have an evil effect on the community, and it is at such that this Bill is aimed. There is a decided conviction in the public mind that whether or not it is merely a coincidence, the price of food and the price of the necessities of life are going up by leaps and bounds contemporaneously with the organization of these combines. The people of Canada are asking that the facts should be investigated and that machinery for that purpose should be provided by the government. The very title of the Bill gives its intent; it is an Act ' to provide for the investigation of combines, monopolies, trusts, and mergers which may enhance prices or restrict competition to the detriment of consumers.' The hon. member for Lanark told us that he did not think it possible that any commission could find out what did or did not enhance prices, but I hardly think the hon. gentleman was correct in that. Do we not know as a matter of fact that it is a systematized plan of the manufacturers that in many cases they do sell goods cheaper to the foreigner than they do to the home market? As I understand it, protection was put on for the sake of fostering industries in the Dominion of Canada and encouraging competition, but it certainly never was the intention that protection should enable these manufacturers to combine together and enhance the price of commodities to the consumers.

If, therefore, as I think there can be any doubt it will be shown and can be shown that foreigners receive goods cheaper than the home market, surely there is an enhancement of price to the home consumer. If that is so, it will be only dealing justly with the people of Canada that that should be taken cognizance of and that machinery should be provided to overcome that condition. There is no doubt that sugar, groceries, glassware, harness and similar staple goods are subject, if not to a combine, at least to sale at set prices laid down by a combination of manufacturers. The everyday consumer, farmer or other has to pay that. There is ample evidence of this, as can be shown by circulars of manufacturers, merchants and others. If that is so, the very first object of this Bill has been accomplished when it can be shown by evidence taken before one of these commissions that such prices are being charged by reason of the combine and the power of the commission to see that the goods are sold to the consumer at a fair price and at a reasonable profit. It is the duty of this parliament and of all legislatures to legislate in that way. We are here to legislate for the common good. We know that these abuses are committed every day. We know as a matter of fact, that in Toronto alone, there is one concern that makes thousands of dollars a year simply by collecting rebates and discounts from the jobbers by reason of the combines agreeing to sell only to them. Surely this should be remedied by this parliament at the first opportunity. I say that simply because the farmer, by reason of the enhanced prices, and not because of any combination on his part, but simply by reason of the ordinary law of supply and demand, is now receiving good rates for his produce, and goodness knows the farmer deserves to do well, because for many years he barely made a living and had hard work at that, it is not right to say that he can go on paying for the commodities that he uses at these enhanced prices. I say that he and every other consumer has a right to be protected by this parliament and, therefore, I think this legislation is absolutely necessary.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. My hon. friend and others have been talking in reference to the Bill. As I understand, we have no Bill before us, but simply a resolution, and it might be better to pass the resolution and have the discussion on the Bill itself. I understood it was the wish of the Prime Minister that we should have this session close by the first of May. I do not see how he can intend that when his minister in introducing this Bill has spent three and a half hours.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well spent, even if we prorogue on the second of May.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Is it the intention of the Prime Minister as soon as the resolution passes, to take up the Bill and then have the discussion in committee?

Mr. PARDEE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (North Simcoe). This Bill, to my mind, savours a good deal of class legislation, and we should be very careful how we deal with this matter. It has been brought into the House by the Minister of Labour, I believe largely for the purpose of meeting the reflex echo of a tremendous muck-raking campaign that has been carried on in the United States against the so-called trusts and combines. I have heard many members of the House to-day state that there are combines and trusts in this country. I challenge any one of those members who have made that statement to name a combine in this country, not a merger, a combine. You see there is absolute silence, there is not a member here who can of his own knowledge say there is an actual combine. That shows this legislation is largely the outcome of newspaper bunkum, and my hon. friend the Minister of Labour is the most assiduous reader of newspaper and publicity in the House. There are combines and mergers, and the distinction must not be overlooked. I have a great deal of respect for the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark), because he goes to the bottom of all questions, argues them from the beginning and takes a reasonable view. When the government place a protective tariff around the country and place the men with blue coats and brass buttons around the barriers, there is no question that that forms a trust. After a while when we have practically established industries in the country and they find that they are cutting into each other's prices, there has been in the past a tendency to form what are called combines. A combine is formed when half a dozen manufacturers of an article, or all the manufacturers of an article in the country, meet together and fix the price. They can do that to-day and can evade the Criminal Code and this Act and everything else. As a matter of fact, there have been prosecutions—I was going to say persecutions, because these criminal prosecutions have really resulted in destroying the health and the mentality of good men in this country, these prosecutions of men simply because three or four of them get together and say: We cannot afford to sell except at a certain price, and agree to that and fix the price. For this they were placed in the criminal dock. In the United States they have had similar prosecutions. But to-day there is a changed condition of affairs brought about by these prosecutions. What is that changed condition of affairs? They have accentuated this thing and made it worse still, they have brought about the merger. Men take advantage of the joint stock companies law, they issue stock in a company embracing all their factories, and in that way there is only one company in the country carrying on business, just as the hon. member has mentioned in the case of the cement merger. Let us get down to business and see whether we are doing justice to all parties concerned.

Mr. KING. Do these prosecutions take place under the Criminal Code?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I have had no experience, but I know they have been conducted. A number of our leading men have been brought into the criminal court, and their cases have been held for months and almost years, they have been penalized by expensive lawyers, and one or two of those attacks on so-called combinations have not been finished yet.

Mr. KING. Is the hon. gentleman aware that it is under the law to which the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) has made reference that all these prosecutions have taken place?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I grant that that law should be changed in some respects because I do not think it is fair that these people should be prosecuted when another branch of labour is allowed to go free. Now let me see. You would take in the manufacturing business, and the manufacturing business seems to be the one that is going to be subject to the imposition. Every one seems to have his harpoon in the manufacturer. When the interests of the manufacturer suffer the interests of the labourer suffer; because if you close up the factories of this country and throw down the tariff walls, as is proposed to be done in some of your legislation, what happens? You are escaping from one small trust to get under the heel of a greater trust, because that is what will occur. If you throw down the tariff wall between this country and the United States, are you going into a country where everything is free, where labour is free, and there are no trusts? No, Sir, you are immediately placing the industry of this country under the heel of a greater trust. The hon. member for Lambton sits for a riding where the greatest trust of this country has its headquarters, and that is the Standard Oil Trust. If you conduct business in that way you are going to throw this country absolutely under the control, not of a national trust, but of an international trust.

Now let us follow this thing logically. There are three interests concerned in this attack. One is capital. We have no sympathy with capital, of course, because the newspapers, and all the novelists and everybody who writes about everything are down on capital. But capital is very necessary sometimes when there are hard times, or when you want to buy a meal. The interest of capital is altogether forgotten in this Bill. Another interest is that of labour. Now what happens to labour? I believe that labour ought to be protected to a certain extent, and that capital should be protected to the same extent. As it is to-day, the manufacturer finds himself up against these conditions. He finds that his men all combine, and form a labour union, and they say: We won't sell our labour to you except at such a figure. I have scanned this Bill, and I must tell the Minister of Labour that after reading the provisions of this Bill it seems to me that the machinery of this Bill can be brought against a labour union, it will be brought under the action of this Bill just the same as any other institution, there is no protection for them. But the tendency of the law in his department has been to say to the labourer, who forms only one element in the community: We will protect you in seeing that you may not sell your labour except at a certain figure. But after the manufacturer has put his capital into this business, after he has bought his raw material, and put his machines to work, after he has finished that stuff, if he tries to protect himself in any way, or joins another manufacturer, and they say: We cannot sell this stuff except at a certain figure, having regard to what it has cost us, then those manufacturers are proceeded against. I believe the only correct way to deal with this question is to deal with it from the broad standpoint of the common law. As the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) says, let there be absolute freedom in these matters. The more you institute class legislation, the more you are setting class against class, because when you start to protect the interest of one class you are injuring the interest of another class.

This Bill proposes to deal with combines. What are combines for? Combines are for the purpose, not of enhancing prices—the Minister of Labour is so far off the mark that he does not know what he is talking about when he makes a Bill of that kind. The first object of a combination is to eliminate competition. If there is freedom of competition, the hon. member for Red Deer will tell you, prices will be at the normal and proper value. In order to enhance prices you must eliminate competition, is that not so? Does this Bill deal with the elimination of competition? No, it proposes ostensibly to deal with enhanced prices. Now, let us get down to the prices. The hon. minister stated that the board would go to work and ascertain the cost, and the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McLean) said that the cost of these things will be got at. If either one of these gentlemen are capable of getting at the cost of anything, there are lots of big institutions in this country that will give them $10,000 a year if they will tell what actual costs are going to be. There is a branch in every successful enterprise that does nothing else but keep track of the costs. The cost to-day will be a certain figure on a certain article; to-morrow, even so small a thing as the humidity of the atmosphere changes the cost in a great many cases. You will be surprised to know that there are so many conditions constantly changing that you cannot get at the real cost of an article; so he is travelling very far afield.

Again I say that this legislation is of a vicious character. Why, it would have been well for us to have halted and not have gone on with any of this muck-raking legislation this session, because the United States papers that I have read, the financial papers, have been pointing to Canada as a country of level-headed business men, as a country where capital is to receive a certain measure of protection. Now, they claim there is no protection to capital in England, which country is sending it over here by the wheelbarrow load, and in the United States they are prosecuting capitalists, and the capitalists of the United States are beginning to say: Well, Canada is going to be a great country in the future, the legislatures of Canada have great respect for capital. For that reason, I say that it is extremely unfortunate that we should introduce into this House, at this period, legislation of that kind, legislation that can be by any means construed as an attack on capital. I regret very much to hear the remarks made by some hon. members here to-day who take class views of this matter. I am just as much opposed to combinations as any man. I could name you one or two combines which are to-day forming mergers or trusts, and there is no law that can be passed in this House that will reach them. Once a great big merger is formed in the manufacture of any article, that moment competition ceases, because no one will venture his capital into that line in opposition to trust.

There is another feature of this legislation that I think this House should consider very seriously. There is no question that at the bottom of all those social questions—for this is after all a social question—there is springing up various ideas of a socialistic character, opposition to one class or opposition to another. The greatest interest possibly in this country to-day is the commercial interest; because when a man speaks of his riding, when he speaks of the growth of the country, when he speaks of the growth of his city, he means its commercial greatness, does he not?

Now, the one interest that is not represented by a committee of this House whereby it may be protected, the one interest that is not represented here by a minister with a committee behind his back, is the commercial interest and manufacturing interest of this country. I hope that this House will take that question seriously into consideration. Why should these great interests be subject to penalization constantly? Why should not the manufacturing and trading interests of the country be represented in this House just as well as the labour interest? I do not deny my good friends on the side of labour for one moment their right to be heard here, or elsewhere. I have always listened with a great deal of admiration and respect to those men who represent labour. They are not hypocrites. They know what they want, and they rise and speak their own minds here. But, when it comes to a question of the manufacturers it is different. The manufacturers are essential, because if you close up the large manufactories the labourers of this country would suffer, they would have to close their homes and go to foreign countries, where the articles are manufactured that should be manufactured in Canada.

An hon. MEMBER. Who will buy from the manufacturers?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Nobody, for the simple reason that the moment that you make it impossible for the manufacturer to manufacture he must close his door. I know something about cement which is spoken of here. What was the matter with cement? Competition had reached such a keen state that the manufacturers of cement were actually selling it at from fifteen to twenty-eight cents a barrel less than it cost them. What brought this about? There is, in the United States, a great big cement trust whose headquarters are in the Alleghany and Lehigh valleys. That company came to this country, established a branch and said to the manufacturers: We are going to drive you out of business or you will have to come into the trust with us. At the time cement was selling $1.50 a barrel but in the face of that they sold their cement for 95 cents and forced the Canadian companies to form a merger of which they are the largest part and which they now control. That is how you have got your price up to $1.50 a barrel to-day. If the manufacturers in Canada are not to have freedom of contract there is not a line of manufacturing but what, in three or four years, will be forced to go into these mergers or forced out of business by the American trusts, and there will be nothing that will not be controlled by foreign trusts with enormous capital. I trust that this House will send this Bill to a committee. I realize that there are interests at stake, such as those of the consumer, which should be recognized. I realize that it is a great wrong that manufacturers, or any other class of the community, should be allowed to combine to the detriment of the public or to enhance prices, but at the same time, in looking at this question, we should look at it judicially and not take a one sided view of it because the question is too great a one for such treatment, and if we appoint a committee to take this Bill into consideration we should also consider the advisability of the establishment of a committee of this House on trade and commerce as we have a committee on public accounts and marine and fisheries. If this were done the labouring interests, the consumers and the manufacturers could come and tell their story to the members of this House and we would get at the actual facts and not be rushed into hasty legislation through a lot of mere newspaper talk. My hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) is a great free trader but, if before that committtee he found that anything was going to injure this country I am satisfied that he would stand shoulder to shoulder with any man here in advocating that which was in the best interests of the country. I am one of the protectionists, so-called, of this House, but while that is so, if it were shown to me that our country was going to be benefited by free trade I would be willing to foreswear my allegiance with the protective party and join his ranks. We have no means of hearing the arguments of those interested at the bar of this House, or before any committee, and I hope this Bill will be threshed out well in committee and a hearing given to all interests concerned. If that is done I do not think this Bill will emerge in the form in which the Minister of Labour has put it. I know he is a young man and enthusiastic upon these things, but I think he is too much inclined to look upon them through spectacles that only give him one vision of the conditions with which he is attempting to deal. We remember the old story about the two parties in Rome that quarrelled, and when one took the opposite side to the other and threatened to start another city they were told that one part of the body could not get along without the other. It is the same here; the interests of the manufacturer, the labourer and the consumer are so closely interlaced and identified that we cannot do justice to the country unless we consider them all.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER TRANSMISSION COMPANY.

On the order being called:

Third reading of Bill (No. 115) to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company.—Mr. Pardee.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. S. Sharpe) has moved an amendment which I understand is not ripe for consideration, and at all events the hon. gentleman is not present. It will not prevent the passage of the Bill, or occasion any inconvenience if it is allowed to stand until Friday.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. member for North Ontario is in the city just as my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) is. We are near the end of the session, and surely it is time that hon. gentlemen got down to work if they want the arrangement of the leaders to be carried out. This Bill has been talked over day after day and night after night and week after week, and this motion means, I suppose, that it be referred back to committee. Surely it is not advisable to take a vote with such a thin House. Every amendment that could possibly be conceived was moved to the Bill, and this amendment now proposed is merely an afterthought. I want to be reasonable, but I think hon. gentlemen opposite should be reasonable also.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman says we are near the end of the session, but he must forget that we have the Insurance Act, the Naval Bill, and other important government measures which will take up the time of this House for many weeks yet, so that we cannot be near the end of the session. The delay asked for will not prevent the Bill going through.

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, let it stand.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 79) respecting the Hamilton, Waterloo and Guelph Railway Company.—Mr. Harris.

Bill (No. 116) to incorporate the Toronto Eastern Railway Company.—Mr. Fowke.

COMBINES INVESTIAGTION ACTS.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mackenzie King for the House to go into committee to consider the resolutions in connection with Bill (No. 101) respecting the investigation of combines, monopolies, trusts and mergers.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, when the minister first introduced the Bill respecting combines he asked for the support of the House, and I frankly told him that if it commended itself to my judgment it would certainly have my support. I agreed with him that some authority was needed to control combines, trusts and mergers. Since then I have examined the Bill somewhat cursorily, and I must confess that I was surprised and disappointed that it simply is a measure providing for inquiry and report. The minister told us that he depended more upon publicity to cure the evil than upon penal legislation, and in pursuance of that idea he has provided no penalties in this Bill for infringement of the Act. The hon. gentleman told us also that the Combines Bill of 1889 failed of its purpose though the penalties under it were severe, but let us inquire why that Act was a failure. We were given the opinion of the late Sir Oliver Mowat, who, when asked to punish those who were acting in violation of that law, stated that although the attorney general of each province was charged with the responsibility, no attorney general could hope to successfully enforce it. He said it was impossible to go into court and prove what was unduly or unreasonably enhancing the value. It was the very wording of the law which made it useless, and worse than a waste of time to attempt to enforce it. Now, how came that law to be enacted in that way? It was not the late Hon. N. Clarke Wallace who introduced it in that form at all. It was amended in that way in the Senate. I was there and assisted Mr. Wallace as best I could to get the Bill through the Senate as it left this House, but we were unable to prevail on the members of that honourable body to put it through as it left this House. They amended it by introducing the words 'unduly' and 'unreasonably' in it, making it so that it was of little value thereafter. That was the cause of the failure of the law, and not because it imposed a penalty for the violation of the law. We appealed to the federal parliament to enforce the law, but they said it was not the duty of the federal parliament to enforce any law, but the duty of the province. When we appealed to Sir Oliver Mowat, he gave the reason I have stated why the law could not be enforced. Therefore it was not enforced, and was not effective. But the hon. member said what was true, that the evidence taken before the commission of inquiry, and the facts disclosed to the world had such an effect that a number of combines ceased to operate, because of the publicity. Some of them did not, and to that extent it did good, but it did not go as far as it ought to have gone. Who is responsible, I ask, for that law having been a failure? I say the present government are responsible. In 1899 I introduced a Bill for the purpose of amending section 520 of the Criminal Code by striking out the words 'unduly' and 'unreasonably.' I got that Bill through this House one session, but it was thrown out by the Senate. I got it through both House the next session. But who amended that law? It was the present government, by the then Minister of Justice, now Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. He slipped through an amendment to section 520, of the Criminal Code, restoring those objectionable words, and it passed this House without my knowing it. When the Bill to amend the Criminal Code was before the House, I asked for an explanation, and the hon. member was cute enough to explain several clauses of the Bill, but refrained from saying one word as to this; and, not being a lawyer, I did not pay as much attention to the Bill as I ought to have done. From that day to this no attempt has been made to enforce the law, and if it is a failure the present government are absolutely and unequivocably responsible.

Mr. KING. In addition to the words 'unduly' and 'unreasonably,' was not the word 'unlawfully' also in the Bill as it first passed this House, and I think the word 'unlawfully' was stricken out in the Senate, and the words 'unduly' and 'unreasonably' left in.

Mr. SPROULE. The word unlawfully was never called in question, so far as I know. That was not what affected the law. It was the words 'unduly' and 'unreasonably.' If the law was a failure, the present government were certainly responsible for it. The present government deluded the country for a length of time by saying that they had made a better provision in the law. They inserted a provision in the Tariff Act saying that where it was established to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that there was a combination in restraint of trade upon any article imported into this country upon which there was a duty, the Governor in Council might admit the article free of duty or so reduce the duty thereon as to give the public the benefit of reasonable competition in the article if it appeared to the Governor in Council that such disadvantage to the consumer was facilitated by the duties imposed on the article. Now, I brought to the attention of this House the grievance of those parties who were affected by the leather combine, and read their affidavits made under oath. It was proven up to the hilt, in a very elaborate case, prepared by Mr. Garrow, before he was appointed to the bench, that the combine gave a rebate of 5 per cent to certain firms who handled certain kinds of leather, and thereby made it impossible for those who would not agree to buy from them to carry on business as they had done previously.

Right in my own village there was a tannery that was making certain kinds of leather. The tannery was unable to sell in Toronto to the firm it used to deal with on account of this combine. I have letter after letter from men in the tanning business in exactly the same position. They could not sell the leather because they refused to enter into this combine. I had the arrangements that were made and declarations by a large number of eminent men in that line, creditable witnesses, who were prepared to prove the combine was a nefarious one, but although I called upon the government to act, they refused.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend will look into the case, he will find that action under the tariff law would not have granted the relief he desired. If the duty had been taken off leather altogether, the very small tanner, in whose interests my hon. friend was pleading, would have been affected. That was a case which did not come within the tariff law.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister is mistaken. What these men requested was that the duty should be taken off the kinds of leather in which this combine was principally dealing, such as Spanish soles, and which were not tanned in the small tanneries. But why could not this agreement have been attacked under the Criminal Code, had the government desired to break up this combine, or under the customs law which they professed to have made for that purpose. But they did absolutely nothing. Mr. Smith, of Chatham, told me that Beardmore and Company of Halton, Mr. Charlie Hyman, of London, Mr. Davis, of Newmarket, were in the combine and, as these were friends and supporters of the government, the government refused to act. I was, therefore, justified in making the statement I did this afternoon, and which I did in 1907, namely that the government would not be likely to act against any combines in which their friends were interested. Experience has justified the forecast I then made. If the present Bill were to be effective, I would gladly welcome it, but I am inclined to think it will not. Why? Because there is no penalty. What is publicity? The weakest feature of the Railway Commission in the United States today is that they depended on publicity; but they found that, when they came to put the Act in force, it was comparatively a failure. Some say that its failure was due to state rights, but I met one of their own men who reviewed the subject very carefully and intelligently, and he said that the weakest feature of their Act was the lack of power to enforce it, and inflict a penalty for violation of it.

Mr. KING. Possibly my hon. friend has not read the penalty clauses of this measure. The difficulty in connection with the alleged leather combine which he mentions, he says, was that he could not get the government to move and ascertain whether such a combine existed or not. But under this Bill any individual can start the machinery for investigation; and if the investigation shows that a combine exists, the Governor in Council has power to remove or lower the tariff on the finding of one of these boards.

Mr. SPROULE. What clause gives that power? You have repealed section 12 of the Customs Act of 1907, which deals with it.

Mr. KING. Section 21 provides for the removal or reduction of customs duties in order to secure reasonable competition. The clause repealed of the Tariff Act of 1907, is carried over into this Bill with the additional provision that the finding of a board constituted under this measure, may be a sufficient warrant to the Governor in Council to take action, and similarly as respects the Inland Revenue Act, if it is shown by one of the boards that a combine exists among dealers with regard to goods, for the sale of which they must obtain a license from the Department of Inland Revenue, a clause in that Act would permit the Governor in Council to cancel the license. A similar cause exists in this Bill with regard to cases in which it is shown that the holders of patents are taking advantage of them to the prejudice of the public. In addition to these penalties, if it is found that the parties are guilty of a course of action detrimental to consumers, and against the interests of the public the parties so reported against do not comply within ten days in making the change desired, they are liable to a specific penalty provided in this Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. Where is that penalty?

Mr. KING. That is section 23 which imposes a penalty of a general nature on combines, restricting manufacture or competition, my hon. friend could hardly have noticed this section.

Mr. SPROULE. I went through the Bill hurriedly and did not notice it, and of course that section is an improvement. There are many articles which are the subject of combine and in regards to which the changing of the customs duty would not be an effective remedy. Unless we are able to attack these combines under the Criminal Code or unless some other penalty be imposed, the Act would only be partially successful.

Mr. KING. Quite so.

Mr. SPROULE. That would make it a great deal better in my judgment and give it some value, but I do hold the opinion very strongly that while publicity may sometimes prevent the doing of improper things, it does not go far enough. With reference to the Labour Act, which we passed, to my mind, that was its defect. No doubt the hon. minister will contend that that Act has been very valuable.

Mr. KING. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. It has been of some value, but if there had been put into that Act a compulsory arbitration clause, it would be much more valuable. That is what the Australians think.

Mr. KING. I do not think their Act has proved as effective as ours.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it has proved comparatively successful. I have followed up its workings and the Australians give it credit for doing a great deal of good. Take our Railway Commission. The first proposal was to establish it on the same lines as the United States Railway Commission, but that was proved a failure because it has no power to order and compel the doing of certain things under a severe penalty, so we clothed our Railway Commissioners with authority to compel that to be done which they ordered. Therefore, ours has proved much more effective and valuable. The defect in this Bill would be in my judgment where we did not take power and authority, over and above publicity to enforce our ruling and the right given to individuals to put the law in action whether the government be willing or not is a move in the right direction. But over and above all that what is required is an effective penalty that will compel combines to observe the law and punish those who violate it.

Mr. WRIGHT: I am very pleased to think that the government have at last taken up this matter. I think this is the first practical step they have taken in the thirteen years they have held office as an attempt to deal with what is considered a very serious problem. The idea prevails pretty generally that the consuming public of this country are being taxed unduly by what are generally termed combines. Whether that prevails to the extent the general public believe or not, I am not prepared to say, but I do believe there are instances where combinations to unduly enhance prices do prevail. The impression prevails in some quarters that this can be cured by a change in the tariff. I do not myself believe that very much can be done in that direction. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark) attempted to deal with that aspect of the case and left the impression on those who had not considered the matter very carefully that the whole trouble arose from our having what is termed a protective or revenue tariff, and I think he left the impression on the House that it was only in countries like Canada and the United States, which have protective tariffs, that combines can grow and flourish, and he gave us an instance of an attempt to form a combine in Great Britain by the Lever Soap Company, stating that the people had boycotted that firm and had succeeded in breaking up the combine. He did not tell us the reason why the people objected to the combine . The reason was that they had been bitten by other combines in Great Britain. The combine is a modern development of trade which will flourish in any country without regard to the kind of tariff policy that country may have, and in order to show this House that that is true, I purpose reading a list, if it is not too long, of combines as they flourish in Great Britain, and I would especially comend it to the member for Red Deer. These are a few of the larger ones, and you will have perceived, Mr. Speaker, that I have dealt with no combine with a capital of less than a million dollars. There are innumerable smaller combines dealing in almost every known article used in Great Britain. Now I do not think that by changing our tariff it will meet the difficulty that presents itself. The question that presents itself to my mind is just how far the minister would go in the application of his measure. In dealing with matters of trade there are so many things that at once arise, many small considerations that might not seem large in themselves, but where a principle is at stake. We will suppose that in a village or town the barbers get together and say: We cannot cut hair at the same price as we did before, and they form a combination to keep the prices up to a certain figure, and they give notice that after such a period they will charge a certain price to customers. This runs through the shoemakers, the blacksmiths, the carpenters, and through all the trades with which the people are dealing. Would the minister, in the application of this measure, attempt to deal with all these small matters? If he attempts to do that, it seems to me he will be trying to deal with a very large problem indeed.

Mr. KING. I understand the hon. gentleman is asking me a question. Several points have been raised in the nature of questions such as the hon. gentleman has just put, and I think it would be more convenient to answer them in committee. If hon. members will adopt the resolution and pass the second reading of the Bill and get at once into committee, then I could answer all these questions and save a good deal of time.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am willing to leave these matters for the minister to answer them in committee. I may say that so far as I am concerned I believe that the minister is moving along the right line. He seems determined to grapple with this question in a vigorous way, and for that I commend him. I think he is moving in the right direction. I believe that all combines have the effect of enhancing prices to the consumer. I do not care whether the combines are entered into in Great Britain, or in Canada, or in the United States. I do not care what kind of trade policy a country may have, when these combines are brought into play they have the effect of lessening competition, and when you lessen competition I think the natural outcome is an increase in price. Suppose three or four storekeepers get together and make a combine and agree to operate under one management, that eliminates competition, and the result is a general increase of price. I do not suppose that all the combines that are entered into have the object of raising prices. There are many other factors that move men to form combines. I think one chief reason is to do away with a great deal of expense, and there are many other reasons why it is more profitable for several firms to come under one management. But the result generally is that the people will pay a little more for the article than they would pay otherwise. People are complaining a great deal now of the cost of living, particularly of the cost of food stuffs.

Now a great cause of the increase of prices is the failure of supply to meet the demand. Some people argue that by free trade you would diminish the cost of living. Supposing you took down the bars altogether, it would not make much difference. The people have to live on the produce of the farms, and I do not believe that the farmers are getting higher prices than they are entitled to. But I do think something might be done in the way of lessening the cost between the original producer and the consumer, and that is one of the reasons why I advocate a home market, and the bringing of the consumer and the producer together. That will provide a home market for the farmers of this country. But that is not what is aimed at under this Bill, this is not the occasion, I suppose, to discuss that question. I simply rose to say that this is something that will have to be grappled with. The combines and the effect of combines are something the government will have to take hold of and deal with in a drastic manner. It will not do to put some little Bill upon the statute-book and leave it there, and let things drift along. We will have to take hold of the problem in a way that will touch any firms that get together and form a conspiracy—to increase prices where there is actually a conspiracy it comes under the Criminal Code. A weak point in the Bill, to my mind, is that there is no proper method of getting hold of that evil. Another very serious difficulty is that of arriving at the value of articles. I do not think that, unless some tribunal is arranged for, that the minister can make his Bill effective, and that it will satisfy the general public, people that are charged with making a combine and people that are affected by a combine, some tribunal to which both sides can appeal with confidence. Without such a tribunal I do not see how you are going to get at the facts as to whether a price has been unduly increased or not. I do not see how the board that the minister purposes introducing will deal with that effectively. He is going to appoint two men to that board, and they will be required to investigate the facts. In the processes of manufacture there are a great many things that enter into the cost of the product. It requires long experience and an intimate knowledge to enable a person to determine the question of actual cost, and to say whether the price is too great or otherwise. I would rather leave it to a general commission, something after the manner of the Railway Commission, which would be the proper method of dealing with the question, rather than that it should be left to people selected on any particular occasion when a charge happens to be made. I think a general commission would be much more effective, because, from the commencement, it would be gathering an amount of information which a commission appointed on the spur of the moment to deal with one particular case could not possibly obtain. The Railway Commission, from the commencement, have been gathering information in regard to all matters connected with railways. This information will be very valuable to have in our possession later on. The minister proposes, when the charge is made, to appoint somebody who has had no previous knowledge of the matter—one to be appointed by the parties interested and one on the other side—and they would go into the question, but it does not seem to me that they would be able to deal with it effectively.

Mr. KING. As to not having persons of previous knowledge on the board that it is intended to appoint, the representatives of the parties laying the complaint in all probability would chose an expert, or a man who had a special knowledge of the conditions that they wished to inquire into, and in the same way the combine is likely to choose the man most familiar with its business. In that way you are sure of getting two men with a special knowledge of the things which are to be inquired into.

Mr. WRIGHT. I presume that there would not be much difficulty from the standpoint of the combination, which, no doubt, would be in a position to pick out a man from their own establishment who was familiar with the conditions of that establishment. But when the minister goes outside and looks for a man who has never been in the establishment, has no connection with it and could not possibly have an intimate knowledge of its affairs, I do not see how he would be in a position to get a suitable man for the other side. However, it is not my intention at the present stage to say anything further in regard to the matter.

Mr. M. CURRIE (Prince Edward County). It must be generally admitted that the Bill introduced by the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. King) will have a marked effect in correcting influences which we all feel are at work to-day. However, I believe that most of us recognize the fact that while the evils are a constant condition, the means that we are adopting will only be employed occasionally, and that if we can devise a measure which would be in continual operation on the evils of trust formation and at the same time not interfere with capital we would be taking a step in the right direction.

It has been said this afternoon that we should delay this matter for another year. I believe that the present is the most opportune time to act. We have at the present time, to be sure, a large number of pools and combines, but in so far as the more advanced forms of trusts are concerned they are not particularly numerous as yet. However, in the last few months we have had several in course of construction, and when we look back to the years 1898, 1899 and 1900 we will see an interesting condition of affairs. These were the years in which prosperity was returning to the United States, and these were the years in which trusts were most actively promoted. In this country at the present time we are at the threshold of an era of prosperity, and we may probably expect a number of trusts to be formed in practically all departments of manufacture in the next three or four years. For that reason, before we have vested interests and strong influences to contend with, I think it would be opportune for us to adopt some legislation which would control the matter of trust formation.

I may say that an examination of the conditions under which trusts are formed leads me to think that they have many economic advantages and that they may be of great benefit to the community at large. I wish, first, to run over shortly some of the minor benefits of trust formation. For instance, we have the concentration of office forces, the distribution of special processes and patents, the employment and specializing of the best talents, the very large element of saving in the matter of cross freights under agreements which may be made with the railways, alliances for banking with financial houses permitting them to secure better rates in respect of their short loan, the reduction in the number of selling agents, reduction in the cost of advertising, self insurance, and advantages in securing raw materials, which we see exemplified especially with respect to the United States steel corporation. Those that I have mentioned are simply the minor advantages of trust finance. Simply looking over these minor advantages, I think we see that the trust is of economic importance to the public. However, we have major advantages, and it is in connection with these that we find most of the difficulties which are to be met by legislation. We have, for instance, the control which the trusts have over labour and labour organizations. An independent concern having its contracts to fill can be held up at almost any time by a labour organization, and will in the vast majority of cases be compelled to accede to its demands. In the case of a trust we have something entirely different, and as we know by the many instances which have occurred in the last ten years, labour unions and labour organizations can be fought by a trust when they could not be met by an independent operator in the same way. Another thing that we have is the control by the trusts of the jobbers, wholesalers and middlemen in general, and here, as has been said by several speakers this afternoon, is where we find the process of compelling wholesalers to buy only from them and not deal with an independent manufacturer. The last and greatest benefit of the trust formation is the elimination of competition. That factor is one which will not be acknowledged, perhaps, by many of those representing the trusts, as the most important factor. In looking over the investigation of trusts by the United States government, and especially the investigation conducted by the Lexow Commission, you find that the officers of the trusts always quibbled upon this matter. But there happens to be abundant evidence of it in connection with the prospectuses and formation of these trusts. I believe that trusts are of economic value, that they will be in ever increasing numbers amongst us, and that it is only going to be a comparatively short time when we will have a number of trusts formed in connection with practically all the staples in daily use.

That being the case it becomes a matter of importance for us to deal with measures such as that submitted by the Minister of Labour. I wish in the first place to speak for a moment, because it has a bearing on the rest of my argument, in regard to what I might call the assembling of trusts. We have first the promoter, who has perhaps the most important place in connection with trust finance. The promoter must send his experts to the different concerns that are intended to be taken into the trust; he must examine their finances, find out what their earning power is, estimate exactly what can be secured by an amalgamation of such interests. He must then present his case to the second factor who is what you might call the syndicate manager. It is from him that he must secure the necessary funds to get an option on the different properties. Consequently, we have here two factors, the syndicate managers and the promoters, who must be paid in the process of the trust formation. Now, the promoter having gone carefully over his ground and having secured his option, comes face to face with the question of capitalization, and I want to refer to that for a moment because it is of interest in connection with some of the more recent trusts that have been formed in Canada. The general procedure in the case of the trusts formed in the United States was this: The earning power of the independent concerns going into the trust was taken as a basis. This was capitalized and in most cases the capitalization of the actual earning power of the independent concerns was taken as the preferred stock of the trust. This was increased to a certain extent to allow for profits to the promoters and to the syndicate managers and underwriters. In the next place the assemblage of the independent concern was considered from this standpoint; that of the possibility of its earning power as a combine. All the factors of the elimination of competition and savings in other directions were taken into consideration, and these were capitalized. Usually it represented the common stock which in most instances was, roughly, equal to the preferred stock. In the case of a great many of the United States concerns the capitalization in the shape of preferred and common stock, was roughly perhaps a little more than double the value of the independent concerns on the basis of their replacement value. Now, that perhaps looks conservative, but the course of subsequent events showed in almost every case that the trusts of the United States were overcapitalized. But, while that was the case in the United States, I want to say that in Canada the formation of the trusts we have had recently has shown something in the shape of over capitalization very very much in excess of this. I will not venture to name all the combines, but some information has come into my hands in the last few months in regard to the capitalization represented by some of the Canadian trusts. There was one case of which I had some knowledge in which the whole concern could probably be replaced at a cost of $75,000. When this went into the trust the return was $200,000 in actual cash, and $250,000 in preferred and common stock. In another instance the replacement value of the concern entering the trust would probably be about $30,000. In that case the owner of that manufacturing concern received in cash $75,000, in common stock $65,000 and in preferred stock $150,000. One other instance I will mention, and this is in a different trust from the last I referred to, and it is this: The replacement value would perhaps be $750,000 and part of that was represented by a plant which was out of date and useless. However, the owners in that case received $598,000 in cash, $598,000 in bonds, $370,000 in preferred stock and $190,000 in common stock. I am just giving these illustrations to show that in the trust formation going on in Canada at present there is an immense overcapitalization. Perhaps some one will say: That is of no interest to this House; if people wish to overcapitalize their businesses they simply are not going to pay such large dividends. But I want to point out that there are some evils arising from this matter of overcapitalization. In the first place the overcapitalization of these stocks removes them from the realm of investment securities. Even in the more conservative capitalization of the United States trusts the preferred and common stock were never represented as investment securities; they were the speculative stocks, and this overcapitalization here as in the United States would throw upon the market a vast mass of speculative stock as distinguished from investment securities. This system had the element of danger that it floods the market with speculative stock of the industrials as they are called, and it has given rise to nine-tenths of the stock speculation. I venture to say that there is more gambling in this form of stocks in one day on the stock exchanges than there is on all the race courses of Canada and the United States for a whole year. For that reason I say that this overcapitalization, simply from the fact that it gives birth to these speculative stocks, is a matter of importance to us. In the next place the overcapitalizations is the means by which the savings of the man of small wealth are amalgamated into the pool of the trust. I took twenty-one of the representative trusts formed in the United States between 1898 and 1899, and I found that the prices at which these stocks were first sold upon the market and the prices in 1903—and here I might draw to your attention that the years from 1898 to 1903 were years of increasing prosperity—I found that the difference in the prices of these stocks between 1898 and 1903 represented a shrinkage of $400,000,000 in the case of the twenty-one trusts to which I refer. That simply meant one of the factors, and an important factor, by which 98 per cent of the wealth of the United States has filtered into the pockets of 55 per cent of the population. And I say, Sir, that for that reason overcapitalization in any of the corporations thus formed is an evil. In the next place, these companies attempt not to go back upon the glowing prospectuses which they issued to the public; they try to pay dividends upon their preferred and common stock where possible, and the result is that the money going to their reserve fund and their renewal fund kept on diminishing so that their overcapitalization really reacted upon the trusts with serious results. In the next place, the presence of this water in the stock blinds the public to the actual profits made by these corporations. If the people see that only 7 per cent is paid upon the stocks, they look upon it as a legitimate business operation, regardless of the fact that three-quarters of the entire stock probably represents water. For that reason, as soon as the trust finds that it is paying large dividends they cut a melon or in other words distribute among themselves a new issue of stock, and the public will continue to see only seven or eight per cent paid and are blinded to the actual condition of affairs. Another thing is that if these trusts and other companies were capitalized upon a more conservative basis, we would have a still greater increase in investment securities instead of the flooding of the market with speculative securities. There is one more lesson that was learned by this overcapitalization and it was this: That many of the panics and crises that have occurred in finance in the last few years have simply resulted from collapses of some of these speculative stocks due to overcapitalization. There is one other thing that is more important than any thing else in connection with the formation of trusts, and that is that the stocks get into the hands of the public with the result that many men who would perhaps give their support to legislation opposed to the trusts, simply because they have this stock which they are afraid may drop in value, are converted into adherents of the trusts, Professor Mead, of the University of Pennsylvania, whose work on trusts and finance is perhaps better known than any other, and who cannot be said to be an opponent of trusts, uses these words:

> Legislation or competition is always threatening the profits of the trusts. By enlisting a large number of investors in its support, the directors of the company may make valuable friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, who, when it fails, may fight manfully in its defence.

I merely mention the matter of capitalization because I feel that we should deal with that when we are dealing with the trust problem in a general way.

We have then the evils of the trust which we should consider most prominently. First, there is the control of labour, in regard to which the Lemieux Act is as useful as anything could be. In the next place, in regard to the control of middlemen and wholesalers, so far as it may injure independent men, I believe the present Bill of the Minister of Labour will be useful. We have, however, left, in a way that I do not think this Bill sufficiently meets, the question of over capitalization and the question of the enhancing of prices through the elimination of competition. I do not know that I should use the term enhancing prices, because I will admit that prices are not always increased by the combine. However, there is an enhancing of the margin between the cost of production and the selling price to the consumer, which amounts to the same thing. In regard to overcapitalization, I think we should have a provision in our law limiting the capitalization to the actual investment or to replacement values, plus, in the case of trusts, say 10 per cent for the services of the promotors underwriter syndicate manager.

Mr. BRISTOL. May I ask the hon. gentleman how he would deal with the good-will of a business?

Mr. M. CURRIE. The hon. member is a lawyer and is well versed in trust finance. He is probably well aware that that question of good-will has often been raised before. It was raised in Germany several years ago.

Mr. BRISTOL. It is not a question of my raising. You speak of a replacement value, and I merely ask if you consider a good-will an asset. You apparently say you do not.

Mr. M. CURRIE. I am trying to answer the hon. gentleman. The German government limited the capital to the actual investment or the replacement value, disregarding the good-will, and found that law to operate successfully and well. They went further and refused to allow industrial stocks to be placed on the market until one year after the industry was in actual operation. I have not looked into that question perhaps as carefully as some lawyers in the House have.

Mr. BRISTOL. I should think business men would look into the question of good-will, seeing that thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars have sometimes been spent in creating the good-will of a business.

Mr. M. CURRIE. That becomes a question of the assets of the trust when it is formed.

Mr. BRISTOL. It is not a question of replacement, though.

Mr. M. CURRIE. As I was saying, not only has that operated successfully in Germany, but some trusts in the United States have been floated on that basis; and while some hon. gentlemen may think that is not a good basis, I may say that the Union Steel Company, the Cramp Shipbuilding Company, and the International Harvester Company were floated on that basis, and floated most successfully. With regard to enhancing the margin between the cost of production and the selling price, there is a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to the effect that while the interest of the investing public should be considered, the interest of the public is of permanent importance. It has been suggested that we should have a commission similar to the Railway Commission. I think myself that something of that kind would be the most successful method of controlling this matter. I believe that everything in the nature of a pool or combine or trust should be compelled to secure incorporation so that it would come under the jurisdiction of such a commission. The next proposal I would make is this, that this commission should have power to limit the dividend upon stock of the company, fixed as I have previously indicated. They should have power to limit that dividend to a certain amount, and to allow a further amount for the surplus fund and the renewal fund, and profits in excess of that should be used for increased payment of wages and in reducing the price to the consumer. Some one will say that is a most radical proposal; but we have at the present time such a law in actual operation in this country, that is, in the city of Toronto. We have there a monopoly, just as one of these trusts is a monopoly, in the shape of the Consumers' Gas Company. That, I think, is on all-fours with the matter we have under discussion to-night. The dividends of the Consumers' Gas Company are limited to 10 per cent upon the capital; the amount to be placed in the reserve fund is fixed; in addition, there is 5 per cent allowed for renewals. When the reserve fund reaches 50 per cent of the capitalization, all further profits are employed in reducing the price of gas to the consumers in Toronto. That has worked effectively in the city of Toronto, and while it may be a radical proposal, I feel like saying that what we need is a consumers' gas law enlarged and made applicable to the trusts in the Dominion of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee on the resolution.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Was there not a mention of this Bill in the speech from the Throne.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. When a measure is mentioned in the speech from the Throne, a resolution of this kind is not necessary if there is a fixed charge on the revenue.

Mr. KING. This Bill deals with money matters and this resolution is necessary.

Mr. SPROULE. It is making a charge on the revenue, and such a Bill can only be introduced by resolution.

Resolutions reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. SPEAKER. We had better refer these resolutions to the committee on the Bill.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the said resolution be now referred to the Committee of the Whole House on Bill (No. 101).

Motion agreed to.

Mr. KING moved second reading of Bill (No. 101) to provide for the Investigation of Combines, Monopolies, Trusts and Mergers which may enhance prices or restrict competition to the detriment of Consumers.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I am in receipt of many letters from parties who say that before this Bill is passed they ought to be given an opportunity to be heard, and I think that the best course would be to have it referred to a special committee which will hear the parties interested. Many of my correspondents complain that, under this Bill, any six persons, who may say that they are of opinion that a combine exists, may, because they have had a dispute with some firm, compel that firm to subject its business to an investigation. For instance a jobber may get five of his clerks with himself to make a complaint, and put a merchant, against whom the jobber has a grudge, to a lot of expense, and compel him to make public to the committee all the details of his business. If this Bill be proceeded with, such a contingency ought to be avoided by providing that the complaint should come from six different houses in the same line of business. That is one of the complaints against this measure. These parties say that if it be referred to a committee they would gladly come before it and make such recommendations as they may deem necessary in order that we may have a perfect measure on our statutes.

Mr. SPROULE. That would shut out the right of consumers to make complaint.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. They would have the right to come before the committee and give evidence.

Mr. BRISTOL. We have a Bill for the prevention of combines and suppression of combines formed in restraint of trade, which has been in force for some fourteen years, and under which the rights of the people have been reasonably protected. No complaint has come from the public so far as I can learn, but from some of the combines which consider they have been unjustly prosecuted. That law stands to-day, and under it any man who feels he is aggrieved, and believes there is a combine in restraint of trade, can swear out information before a magistrate; and if a prima facie case be made out, it will go before a judge and jury in the ordinary course. This Bill is a very important measure. No doubt the public are entitled to be protected against monopolies and combines which are in restraint of trade and unduly enhance prices, but there are to-day very important considerations in this connection which we must not lose sight of. We in Canada are endeavouring to build up our trade in the best possible fashion, and our neighbours to the south are endeavouring to get control as much as possible of the markets of this country. Combines of necessity must arise in this country, but not necessarily combines in restraint of trade, or in any way detrimental to consumers. It has been pointed out to-day that, in a majority of instances, the united capital and ability of combined companies are such that these combines can usually manufacture cheaper than could the isolated factories previously. I suppose there is no one in this country who would have any objection to a combine which reduced prices, or did not unduly enhance them. This Bill starts out by declaring that it is an Act to provide for an investigation of combines, monopolies, trusts and mergers, not which do enhance, but which may enhance prices, or may restrict competition to the detriment of the consumers. I do not think there is an hon. gentleman in this House who has any desire to prevent any business men of Canada combining in any lawful fashion for the purpose of putting large masses of capital and skilled labour in the way of getting the very best results, provided the public are fairly treated. Yet this Bill starts out with the declaration that a combine of any kind, the result of which may be, if it choses to act unlawfully, to enhance prices, may be brought under its operation. I do not think that the hon. minister has any such intention. I think the Act should provide that only such combines as do enhance prices and restrict competition should be dealt with.

Mr. KING. How does my hon. friend purpose to discover a combination of that kind until there has been some investigation, how will he be able to show that the combination comes under the class he is speaking of?

Mr. BRISTOL. As I understand, six persons have to come forward to make a charge of that kind, because section 5 says: Where six or more persons are of opinion that a combine exists, and that prices have been enhanced. That is why I thought the body of the Act implied what I am arguing for, that you might have a perfectly fair, and reasonable combination that might reduce prices, and I did not think the minister had any objection to that. Section 5 indicates that that is the intention, but the minister starts with a heading which I do not think is justified. I merely raise the matter for consideration at this stage, because I feel that we have to give Canadian manufacturers as well as Canadian workingmen every reasonable chance for competition on fair grounds. We have a right to protect the public, and those engaged in manufacturing, and the idea is to put down monopolies that increase prices or unduly restrict competition.

Mr. BARKER. In the province of Ontario there have been rather extreme cases of wrong and injustice, arising out of an attempt to prosecute men under the Combines Act; and as those men have been exposed to cost, and serious interference with their business, I think the House ought to be very careful before they go any further in this direction, without taking the utmost care not to repeat the absurdity that now exists. The whole question turns upon the one word 'unduly.' The hon. gentleman has dwelt at length on that. There is no wrong in people combining to restrict production or to enhance prices, the hon. gentleman admits that, but it is wrong to unduly restrict or unduly enhance. No merchant knows, no manufacturer knows, as a fact, whether what he is doing is undue or not. One man may be of opinion that he is acting unduly, another man will say the very opposite, and the law now requires a manufacturer or a merchant to take his risk of being a criminal. That is the position, that has been the position, and what the merchants, and others complain of is that if they come here to the Department of Trade and Commerce to ascertain whether what they propose to do is legal they cannot obtain any information. They may say that they find it absolutelv essential in the interest of trade to restrice productiou beyond a certain amount because if they flood the markets with ready-made clothing, for instance, they will cause injury to business and injury to the public interest. Perhaps half a dozen manufacturers of ready-made clothing meet, and come to the honest conclusion that there is danger of an excess of production in that line, doing no good to anybody, and that the output should be restricted to a certain amount. These gentlemen are confronted by this statute, and somebody says that they must not do that unduly. I know that people in that position have come to Ottawa, and have naturally gone to the Department of Trade and Commerce to get some hint or indication of how far they might go, what would be considered reasonable, or when their conduct would be an undue restriction of trade or an undue enhancement of price. The Department of Trade and Commerce say that they cannot advise them, that they must take thee risk of doing this thing unduly or that they should go to the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice says that it is a question of fact, and they must go to a jury to have a decision whether their action is reasonable or otherwise. Then these people, as respectable as any in the Dominion, wishing to keep within the law, knowing from their business knowledge and believing that what they do is right, and reasonable, proceed with what they have proposed. What is the result? Somebody takes it into his head that he can worry these men and knowing that it will not cost him one cent, that if he lays an information the government will have to bear the expense, and will conduct the prosecution in the name of the Crown, a prosecution is begun.

Mr. KING. Is the hon. gentleman speaking of this measure or of the law as it stands?

Mr. BARKER. The law as it stands.

Mr. KING. The legislation enacted in 1899.

Mr BARKER. I do not want to have the minister perpetuate that injustice. A notorious case has occurred, the prosecution of the Grocers' Guild. These people were charged with being a combine, and for three or four years they were held up to the people of this country as criminals. The outcome of that three years' prosecution was that the Chief Justice of Ontario held that they were within the law, that they had never exceeded the law in any sense, that their action did not come within the meaning of the word 'undue'; but these gentlemen only found that out after three or four years' litigation, costing them in round figures $12,000. The people who were prosecuting them were safe, the whole thing was done in the name of the King, and those who caused all that expense, trouble, annoyance and injury to the men concerned, got off scot free. The minister, before proceeding any further in experiments on this law, should take the utmost care that he is right. I do not think the members of this House are the best people to judge exactly what the change should be. The minister may have considered it with great care, I presume he has, but I do not think that even the minister has the knowledge or the experience to judge how far he should go or how far this House should go in altering this law. I have no doubt that some years ago when the House put in the word 'unduly' they thought they were settling the whole thing. I hope we are not going to do any more blundering of that kind. I think that the proper course for the minister would be to refer this Bill to a special committee, who will give to all concerned an opportunity of coming before them and discussing these matters. We may then learn from experienced men who know all the difficulties and who can speak with knowledge. We should not make another blundering attempt to deal with a subject of the utmost difficulty. We are now going to submit to arbitration the very question that, in the past, has been found so difficult to deal with under the present law. Some gentlemen who have considered the matter with a great deal of care, think there ought to be an opportunity given to them, through some department of the government, to know in advance whether what they are proposing to do is likely to make criminals of them or not. We have a Department of Trade and Commerce here, I do not know exactly how broad the functions of that department may be, but surely that department and not the Deparment of Labour should be the forum where questions relating to trade and commerce may be discussed. Now if we are going to spend large sums of money in this sort of arbitration—and as I understand the minister, the country is going to stand the shot on both sides, as a rule—we might better spend that money in enlarging, if need be, the scope of the Trade and Commerce Department, and keep these people out of crime rather than letting them into it, and then punishing them for it.

Mr. BRISTOL. I want to add that in addition to the state of affairs which the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) pointed out continuing to exist, as it will, whether this law is passed or not, and, therefore, people will still be subject to prosecution as they have been in the last fourteen years, I want to point out that this Act goes beyond the criminal law in one most material respect. The criminal law under which prosecutions have heretofore been conducted, subclause (c), reads as follows:

Every person who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with any other person, or with any railway, steamship, steamboat or transportation company . . . to unduly prevent, limit or lessen the manufacture or production of any such article or commodity, or to unreasonably enhance the price thereof.

Is guilty of a misdemeanour. Now, the Minister of Labour leaves out the word 'unreasonably' before the word 'enhance,' and that makes this new Act go beyond the criminal law, which has already given the business men of Canada enormous difficulty, and put them to enormous expense, men who are honestly desiring to live within the law. I know that business men have come to consult me, asking an explanation of the words 'unduly' and 'unreasonably', and I have told them that they would have to go before a judge and a jury to get an explanation. The law as it is now suggested reads: 'An Act to provide for the investigation of combines, monopolies, trusts and mergers which may enhance prices, not which unreasonably does enhance prices,' which would be in accord with the criminal law to-day. There is not a business man in this country who does not know that there may be a dozen causes which make it perfectly proper for prices to advance in the future as there may be a dozen causes which may make it proper for prices to be reduced. But there was under the present Act the possibility that prices might be enhanced reasonably and yet that would be an offence. This Bill says that when six men are of opinion that something of this kind is occurring, they may actually put the business men of the country to the expense of having this investigation. But that it is not the worst part of it. Anybody who has had anything to do with these prosecutions knows that everybody attacked has got to produce all his books, ledgers, letter books, invoices and other documents by the hundreds or thousands, that the whole of his business is turned upside down, that the books wanted in daily use are one time in the court and at another time somewhere else, instead of being in his office. He is put to all kinds of inconvenience and expense other than mere legal expense, when he is trying to act in good faith, and this Bill actually goes beyond even the criminal law of to-day and makes it worse for the business men of Canada than it was before.

Mr. GERMAN. It appears to me the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Bristol) somewhat misconstrues the true meaning of this Act. As I understand it, the Act substitutes a board of arbitration for criminal proceedings before a judge and jury.

Mr. BRISTOL. It does not do it, for obvious reasons. First of all, the criminal law is not repealed, it is simply enforced, and anybody can start a prosecution. Secondly, I quoted the criminal law, and I have shown that the word 'unreasonably' is left out before the word 'enhanced' in the new Bill.

Mr. GERMAN. I agree that that portion of the Criminal Code is not repealed, but instead of substituting I might say it amplifies the proceedings under the Criminal Code by giving the right of arbitration, which seems to me a milder procedure than taking proceedings under the Criminal Code.

Mr. BRISTOL. Anybody can still lay an information.

Mr. GERMAN. They can if they choose. But to take proceedings under the Criminal Code you are immediately up against all the legal technicalities that can be raised; whereas a board of arbitrators is more inquisitorial than judicial. The board of arbitrators can go into the matter on equitable grounds, they can make a broader inquiry than could be done in proceedings under the Criminal Code. Any six men can lay information and make a complaint, then the arbitrators are chosen, one for each side, and a third is selected by the two. The men complained against are not supposed to be criminal. Then if the board of arbitrators find that they are unduly and improperly, by their combination, enhancing prices or restricting trade to the detriment of the public, they then make their report. If, after the report is published in the 'Canada Gazette', these people continue to violate the spirit of the law, then they are subject to a penalty of $1,000. It seems to me this Act is quite an improvement on the Criminal Code. The Criminal Code will not be invoked if this Act comes into force, and you will have more ample justice done in all such cases than you will have under proceedings under the Criminal Code, which are expensive and liable to all sorts of legal technicalities. These proceedings will be inexpensive, they will reach the end of justice more speedily and more equitably than any law at present on the statute-book.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Evidently the House is of opinion that this Bill removes those clauses which provide for prosecution under the Criminal Code.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Then, we will assume the position to be as it actually is. This law provides a convenient form of investigation into the affairs of a business concern, in other words, it is an inquest. It is suspected that there may be a combination, not that there is a combination, but that there may be. Immediately an investigation is set on foot, and provision is made under this Act whereby there are arbitrators appointed, who are to hear all this evidence without being under the rules of evidence, they are not governed by the rules of evidence.

Mr. GERMAN. Certainly they are governed by the rules of evidence.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. You will find they are not. They are in a similar position to the Railway Commission, and they will not be governed by the rules of evidence. They will conduct their investigation in their own way, and they will have the power to go into the business of everybody and into everybody's books. When their finding is published in the 'Canada Gazette' anybody can carry on a criminal prosecution, and he will have all the evidence that has been taken by this investigating committee—this detective committee—to make a criminal out of the man who has been investigated. I think in justice to the business interests of the country, the minister should send this Bill to a committee, and those people who are crying out so loudly and writing those articles in the paper should be asked to come and substantiate their charges. I do not think there are very many combines in this country. There is every reason why we should not go beyond the straight, fair way of dealing as between man and man and as between man and the law. A man should not be found guilty before he is tried. In an ordinary criminal case, if a detective acts in this manner and gives a man, charged with a criminal offence, what is known as the third degree, the jury dismisses the case and there is a mistrial. I do not think the minister realizes how far reaching this Bill is, and I think that in justice to the business interests and to all interests involved, it should be referred to a committee so that we might have an opportunity of hearing about these combines. There is no evidence of a satisfactory character to show that there are any combines or that combines are unduly enhancing prices. I understood that an arrangement had been made between the whips whereby this Bill should be referred to a special committee.

Mr. KING. There was no such arrangement made.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The chief whip told me there was such an arrangement.

Mr. KING. There was not.

Mr. PARDEE. There never was such an arrangement made.

Mr. KING. The hon. gentleman might possibly have misunderstood.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The minister is putting himself up as the chief trust buster of this country. They have had trust busters in the United States, but men who go about trust busting do not happen to travel very long in public life. I think that in justice to both sides concerned, the consumers who are ground down, according to their lights, and also the manufacturers and business interests, which are liable to be prosecuted under this Bill, should be heard before any action is taken. I think we may be able then to get a Bill that will reach this difficulty. Supposing that this Bill gives the right, which has not been given in any British country, to lay a charge and investigate any man's business, persons may take advantage of it for political or religious reasons, or they may do it out of mere spite, because there are men who are so mean that they do not wish to see their fellow men succeed in making a little money. They may do a man an enormous amount of injury, they may ruin him, because if they start an investigation the banks will refuse him credit. There are legal gentlemen on the other side of the House who will appreciate the situation. Is a man going to be considered a criminal, is he going to be investigated in reference to his conduct, character and business relations under this Bill? This commission may free him but that does not mean that some enemy of his cannot level a prosecution against him under the Criminal Code. You must amend the Code if you are going to put this Bill into force. Two clubs are two too many. For that reason I make the suggestion that all parties be heard before a commitee of the House.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not think the Bill will have the effect that the hon. gentleman has stated. It seems to be a more moderate means of investigating such questions.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. But there is the Criminal Code, and it does not take the place at all of the previous Act.

Mr. CONMEE. Admitting that criminal proceedings may still be taken, it is not reasonable to assume that both lines of action would be taken. A person would be far more likely to take action under this Bill, because he would not be required to accuse the other party of any criminal conduct. It is a mere investigation, and there is the safeguard. It takes six persons to secure this investigation. One may make a complaint under the Criminal Code. Then, there is the further safeguard that a complaint is made to a judge of the High Court and he may refuse the investigation. He may not find sufficient grounds. That means that a man's business is not wantonly dragged into the daylight. But, if he does find sufficient ground the investigation has to go on, then who is appointed to hold the investigation. One is appointed as the representative of the parties making the complaint and the other is nominated by the party accused. If they cannot agree, a third is appointed by the minister. What happens if there is an investigation? As far as I have gone into the Bill, I must say that I approve of it. I think it is a timely measure, and I am not going to worry myself very much as to whether they have such a measure somewhere else or not. It looks to me to be a good measure for Canada, and if so, it is sufficient for my purpose. Subsection 2 of section 18 reads as follows:

> In deciding any question that may affect the scope or extent of the investigation, the board shall consider what is required to make the investigation as thorough and complete as the public interest demands.

I submit that is one great step in advance. Then, the following section provides for publicity and if there is anything that will tend to give the consumers fair play it is the fact that the light of day may be let in on the whole transaction by a board whose only object is to see justice done in the public interest. It is generally assumed and I believe it to be true that there are in existence combines which injuriously affect the public, and enhance the price of commodities that are used generally by the people.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What about dredging?

Mr. CONMEE. My honoured friend has something on his brain, and he very often tries to enlighten the House, but he seems to have so much mud about it that no one understands it except himself. I am not discussing this frivolously. So far as I have looked into the Bill it contains a great deal of good, and I would judge that my hon. friend the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Bristol) does not understand the Bill as I understand it. It seems to me that having regard to the legal capabilities of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Bristol) he ought to be able to see good and not evil in this Bill. I confess that before I read the Bill, taking only the comments in the press, I had not a very high opinion of it, but since I have gone over its provisions, I am quite in sympathy with it, and for my part I should like to see it become law.

Mr. GLEN CAMPBELL. I have studied the Bill, and I have listened carefully to the lengthy speech of the junior minister. His verbosity was such that I really could not understand what he meant, and I doubt very much if he understood himself. He referred to the fact that the father of my seat mate had gone into the matter so thoroughly in 1888 that this Minister of Labour thinks to-day that the evidence then collated was sufficient to induce any government to take steps to protect the public. The minister used that as an argument against the Conservative administration, but I would point out that for the fourteen years this government has been in power, day after day, and month after month, and year after year they saw that combines were being formed against the public interest: lumber combines, cement combines, machinery combines, meat combines, all calculated to plunder the public, and the government during these long years never raised a hand to protect the people. Well, the only excuse for the minister's argument is his youth. During fourteen years this government has never done a single act to protect the farmers of the west from being eaten up body and soul by these combines, their farms mortgaged, their children half naked in some instances. At last, this gracious government, and its Minister of Labour has awakened from their Rip Van Winkle sleep, and so they now propose to do something. In 1888, Mr. Clarke Wallace brought out the fact that there were thirteen combines in Canada that needed to be combatted, but the Minister of Labour is a member of a government that has created a fish combine, one of the worst combines that has cursed the west. It was his government that gave the people up in the northwestern part of my riding, a monopoly of the fisheries for a mere trifle, and which for a mere song, threw away to a few grafters and party heelers the heritage of the people of that western country. I say grafters, and I mean every word of it. Suppose the Minister of Labour does not know about that just as he knows very little about any subject that I have heard him discuss in this House. This government, of which he is a member, gave to Coffey and Merritt, the fishing in Cedar lake, 285 square miles of the finest fisheries in the west; they gave away in Moose lake 522 square miles of sturgeon fishing; in Cormorant lake 140 square miles; in Cumberland lake 166 square miles, in Amiak lake 90 square miles, in Namea lake 66 square miles, a total of 1,300 square miles for the paltry sum of $300 per annum. To these people this government gave a fishing monopoly, which is absolutely another word for a combine. And the result is that the gentlemen who got that monopoly from this government sold that monopoly to an American fish firm. The winter season is the only season of the year that fishermen have a chance to be independent, and to sell their product in the highest market, but these poor fishermen, under an agreement made with this government, were compelled to sell their products to this Northwest Fish Company of Americans for from one cent to one-and-three-quarter cents per pound less than they could get in the open market. It was the officials of this government who compelled the poor fishermen to do that. In the winter of 1907-8, the fishermen were compelled to sell their product at less than market prices all through the winter, and in the spring of 1908 the company went into liquidation and became bankrupt. I read affidavits last year, and I am going to read them now, from men who produced the fish sold to the company, compelled to be sold to this American company by the officials of this government, who have awakened to the fact that they had to protect the people at this late day. These fishermen had to sell at less than market prices, and when this American company went into liquidation, they could not get even the poor recompense that they were compelled to accept for their output. I will now quote an affidavit which I read last year:

This is to certify that I, Isaac Bradbury, fished during the winter of 1907-08 in the waters covered by Capt. E. D. Coffey and F. L. Merritt's leases in the Northwest Territories, and was forced to sell my catch by the government officials to the Northwest Fish Company, which is represented by Capt. E. D. Coffey and F. L. Merritt, and that the Northwest Fish Company went into bankruptcy and owe me $810 for my winter's labour.

This affidavit is declared before George O. Bellamy, and is signed by Isaac Bradbury, fisherman. I brought this matter up last year before the Minister of Fisheries, who promised me explicitly in this House that he would have his commissioners inquire into this matter and protect the producers; but no effort has been made to protect my friend Mr. Bradbury, and other men who are in the same position. I had another letter from Mr. Bradbury the other day. He states that he had a letter from me saying that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was going to investigate the matter, and he goes on to say:

I think he should, for the government gave that Northwest Fish Company the privilege of getting the fish out of those lakes for practically nothing, and now the property that we, the creditors, have to fall back upon to get paid for our fish is worth nothing, for the lakes are pretty nearly cleaned out, and it is no good for any company to buy. I think the government should consider me and the other creditors the way that we have been used. It would have been bad enough if the Northwest Fish Company had paid the $80 per ton. That was the price they were to pay, but at the same time the Armstrong Fish Company were prepared to pay $110 per ton for the same fish, but we could not sell to them, for the government officials would not allow us. We were forced to give them to the Northwest Fish Company, which was pretty hard on me, for I had to hire my men, and what little money I did not earn I had to pay out. The hardship of fishing is very great, and I think this is a case where the government has a right to protect the poor producers as against the company that holds the fishing under a special license.

I am quoting that for the reason that this was a monopoly created by this government for the benefit of an American organization as against Canadians, and through it the resources of Canada were dissipated in a wrongful manner. It seems to me absolutely hypocritical for any member of a government to get up and make a speech such as was made here to-day by the Minister of Labour. The government cry anti-monopoly while they grant such monopolies as this. I was very much pleased to hear my hon. friend from Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) tell the House, and I am sure the House appreciated his remarks at their full value, that since he had been in public life he had been out for fair play to the public. I have put a very different interpretation upon his actions since I have known him. I may be wrong in some cases, but in this case I think I am not wrong in my interpretation, but he is wrong in his. That is all I want to say at present except that I agree with the proposition of my hon. friend from Simcoe that this matter ought to be put into the hands of a committee to investigate it most thoroughly. We know all the facts. All we want is the evidence, and when we get that, we want to send the perpetrators of harm to the place where they belong, and that is the penitentiary.

Mr. NESBITT. I have learned within the last few minutes that it is wrong to be young. I think the hon. minister's most bitter enemy must acknowledge that he has introduced and placed before the House this measure in a most capable manner. We are now, I understand, considering clause 1, and I think we should consider the various clauses of the Bill as we come to them. There are some amendments which I would like to see made to the Bill as proposed. I agree with the principle of the Bill, and I would like to see it advanced by considering the different clauses, and amending them if necessary as we come to them. I am quite sure that the hon. minister wants only what is right, and is perfectly willing to insert in the Bill any amendment which will make a better Bill. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Toronto that the word may in the preamble is too wide, but I do not think we are now considering the preamble. If we are considering the preamble, this is the proper time to consider its wording, but if we are considering clause 1, I do not see any reason why we should not go on with its consideration, and not with that of the preamble.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Clause 1 is the clause before the committee.

Mr. MACDONALD. Any one who looks at this Bill closely from a legal standpoint and endeavours to ascertain the ultimate effect it is likely to have, can imagine many difficulties which should demand from this committee the closest deliberation. There is a popular idea that anything devised under the name of a combine should be condemned and blotted out of existence by legislation. I was unable to have the opportunity of hearing all the discussion, and, therefore, speak with the disadvantage which always comes from that circumstance; but on examining this Bill with some little care, I realize that, so far as the definition of a combine contained in it is concerned, a combine in an illegal sense—because that I assume is what is intended by the definition—would, under its wording, cover every kind of organization, whether legal or illegal, in the sense in which we understood a combine in the past as a matter of law. The common law of England always applied only to such combines the effect of which would be the unreasonable enhancing of prices and bringing about a condition which ought not to exist.

Mr. BRISTOL. Does my hon. friend observe also that, in considering clause (c), what I was pointing out is true, namely, that clause (c) gives an interpretation to a combine beyond what the criminal law does, and I do not suppose the hon. minister wants to go beyond the present law.

Mr. MACDONALD. I was endeavouring to point out that a combine, as defined in this Bill, includes not merely those combines which are in the restraint of trade and which, in the past, were regarded by statute as well as by common law as illegal, but also those which in the past were always regarded as proper.

Mr. BRISTOL. Quite so.

Mr. MACDONALD. In that sense the definition is a very wide one, and I apprehend that the difficulties which may arise from the passage of this Bill may be very great indeed, and ought to demand the closest deliberation and care from both sides of the House, irrespective of party. In order to show that we ought not to legislate so as to declare that understandings or associations of business men, which may be called combines, are necessarily of such a character that they should come under the ban of the law or legislation regarding combines, I would draw the attention of the committee to the condition of affairs which exists in England with regard to the various trade associations there, and which have existed right along. Some hon. gentlemen say that these combines only arise in countries where you have a protective tariff, but that these combines are to be found in England and are recognized and approved there is evidence that they are not exclusively due to that cause. Thus in March, 1908, no less a number than sixteen firms of spinners and fifteen firms of doublers in the spinning trade of Lancashire combined together. Their avowed object was not to create a monopoly, but by the centralization of office work and buying, selling and distributing arrangements, to lead to considerable economy. In addition to this, important benefits were expected to arise from an organization which would gradually provide that each mill should spin and double only those numbers and qualities to which its machinery is best adapted. Another advantage was expected to accrue from the application to each individual concern of the combined practical experience of the whole of the board of directors, exclusively composed of experts in that branch of business.

It is stated in this book from which I quote, which is entitled 'Trusts and the State,' and which is one of the Fabian essays, considered authorities upon this subject, that these arrangements of trade are considered eminently proper. Some of the advantages are set forth in this work which flow from the association in business of people who are experts in the various branches. Take another industry, one which exists in a large degree in my own province. I refer to the coal mining industry. This book says:

> The great foundational industry of coal mining might be expected to offer special facilities for combination of interests, as it is strictly limited in extent.

It refers to the combine arranged by Sir Geo. Elliot, a leading spirit in coal mining in England, and proceeds to say:

> After setting forth the disadvantages under which individual lessees at present labour—the necessity of leaving boundary walls of coal unworked, the unnecessary increase in the expense of pumping, ventilation, and underground haulage, which have to be treated, not in the most convenient manner, but according to the arbitrary divisions of ownership—Sir Geo. Elliot said: 'Briefly, the effect of amalgamation, it is contended, would be to remove all the artificial factors which now stand for so much in the sum of the coal mining industry and to leave science and nature face to face. The different coal districts would then be treated each as a whole, according to its geographical peculiarities. Under a more fully organized method of working, the whole of the coal, good and bad, could be systematically extracted, instead of being as now largely wasted for the sake of bringing up only those kinds which produce the highest market prices.

I could read various other extracts which go to show that these arrangements have worked beneficially and that the combines were eminently proper and ought not to be condemned by legislation. I have in mind a condition which exists in my own county, where we have two coal mines in the one community working side by side. One of them works actually under such conditions that it is impossible for it to exploit a large quantity of its area. The adjoining company, which is separated from the first one by a barrier which has to be left, under the laws of the province, could advantageously work out this coal which is lost to the first. Would it be said that it would be improper for those two companies to combine and mine that large quantity of coal which, on account of the division of ownership, it is impossible for either to obtain.

When we are approaching the question as to what should be done regarding combines recognized as improper we should not throw into the pot these organizations which are proper and put them to the peril and risk of an extensive investigation that may be imposed on them under this Bill, or any peril to which only improper combines should be subjected. The effects of this Bill would be, to my mind, to create conditions under which a proper combine would be attacked just the same as the others. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Bristol) has pointed out that the effect of legislation in the past has been to make a combine a crime where it caused an unreasonable enhancement of prices or an undue limitation of competition. If you look at section 496 of the Criminal Code you will find that a conspiracy in restraint of trade is an agreement between two or more persons to do or procure to be done any unlawful act in restraint of trade.

So far we have only put under the ban those combinations and arrangements where the agreements between the two parties is to do the unlawful act. Then we make unlawful the combination of people whose object it is to unduly or to unreasonably enhance the price of goods. You must have the undue result, the unlawful result, or you must have the unlawful act. That is the position of the law to-day.

Mr. MACDONALD.

That is all right, those are combinations that ought to be attacked and prevented. If you have a combination of men in any business who combine together with the avowed object of increasing the price of any of the articles of necessity in life, that is an agreement against the state and the state should deal with it accordingly; but where, on the other hand, you have combinations such as I have indicated, existing in the various trades in England and in Canada, for their common interests, or for the purpose of saving fixed charges which are always an important consideration in manufacturing, for the purpose of obtaining the advantage of the knowledge and experience of men interested in trade together, there is a very marked line of divergence and that line should be maintained; we should hesitate before combining these two things together and dealing with them on the same basis. Of course one approaches the consideration of a measure prepared with great care by the minister, as I am sure this has been, and sympathetically view it as intended for the purpose of remedying some alleged evils, but when I find the section defining a combine as an agreement which has or is designed to have the effect of increasing or fixing the price—not unduly increasing it but merely fixing the price—I say we are passing from the realm of legislation where we have dealt with this thing in the past or where it has been dealt with under our jurisdiction here and elsewhere, and coming into a new realm. I say it is not, as I have been able to read the cases or study the conditions, an improper thing for men interested in the same business to agree together about increasing prices, if they do not do it unduly. Suppose there are competitive trade conditions in this and several other countries and you have an industry which has been for a long time lagging indifferently as the result of competition with the United States and the price of the commodity goes up all over the world, the labouring men working in that industry have perhaps been struggling along at low wages because they have been unable to get as full return for their work in that industry as their brethren in some industry alongside; do you mean to say it is improper for the people interested in that trade to increase the price because the price of that commodity has gone up all over the world and let the men work in the industry have the result of that increase? I say I do not so regard it. It may be that there are some other sides to this matter, and I am approaching the consideration of it with the greatest care with the desire to arrive at a solution, but it does not seem to me we should create the position of penalizing a condition of that kind. When you call a combine an agreement among business men to fix the price, when it is not done unduly or unreasonably, you are rendering the problem as to whether you should deal with this matter somewhat more difficult. This section of the Bill speaks of an arrangement for an agreement which is to have the effect of increasing or fixing the price. Within what area in this Dominion are you going to fix the limits within which the understanding between the parties as to price is to be determined? For instance, if certain gentlemen in the province of Ontario engaged in the manufacture of some particular article peculiar to this province, agree to fix the selling price, how are you going to arrive at a decision whether or not that is a price which is improper or which ought to be increased? It may be a price which even at the increased figure is less than that which is sought by some gentlemen engaged in the same business in another province in the Dominion under more advantageous circumstances.

Mr. BARKER. They could not even lower the price.

Mr. MACDONALD. Yes, my hon. friend is right, under this language you could not lower the price.

Mr. GERMAN. Does not the hon. gentleman see that the whole gist of the Act is that this must be to the detriment of the consumers? Clause 5 clearly says it is to the detriment of the public.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend has read something with which I propose to deal in a moment. I am now pointing out that the definition of the word 'combine' means the legislative ban being put upon certain understandings and arrangements which are included in the definition of that word and I object to that.

Mr. BRISTOL. The words 'to the detriment of the public' are nowhere contained in the definition with which my hon. friend is dealing.

Mr. MACDONALD. I know that. At the conclusion of that section we also find that another legislative ban is being placed on a proposition that in the past has always been regarded as an eminently fair and reasonable one. After dealing with various things, it says that this includes:

> The acquisition, leasing or otherwise taking over, or obtaining by any person to the end aforesaid, of any control over or interest in the business, or any portion of the business, of any other person.

The result is that if a man has been eminently successful in the prosecution of an industry and he and his business associates have made money, and there is perhaps in the next county or province, another concern engaged in the same trade which is not so prosperous, then under this Bill it is impossible for the prosperous and successful man to obtain any interest in the other business, and there is no opportunity for the successful man to expand. Supposing the other situation affords very great facilities for manufacturing, but that there have been some conditions which always may arise in business, through incompetency or otherwise, which prevent the second man from succeeding, then you do not permit the first successful man to obtain an interest in the other business with a view to resuscitating it, extending it or making it a success. It is true the words are limited by the words 'to the end aforesaid.' But if the result of the combination is that you are going to have joint control, of course there can only be one end of it, and that would be that the price between those two friendly concerns would be fixed. I think this is a proposition that ought to be carefully considered, because unless you do that you will impair the capacity to obtain capital in this country. If we do not preserve the safeguards for proper business arrangements, the opportunity to obtain capital will be impaired and after all, while we have had filtered into Canada, as you have seen it in the United States in the yellow press, a lot of talk about trusts, monopolies, and all that sort of thing, we sometimes forget, because we are alongside this great country with 80,000,000 people that we are only at the threshold of our career, that we have only 8,000,000 people here, that we have not begun to develop our resources, and that what we want, above everything else, is to encourage the infusion of capital into Canada. What we want in this country is to encourage capital to come in, and ensure that it shall have safe returns, and that capitalists shall not be attacked improperly or illegitimately by legislation. Unless we do that I do not know where we are going to land in Canada. What we want to do is to legislate against those combines which unreasonably affect or unduly dislocate the business conditions of the country. My hon. friend from Welland (Mr. German) says that no proceedings will take place unless prices have been enhanced, or unless you have some bad result from the combination. Now my hon. friend is a lawyer of great ability, he knows that a judge under this Act is not even called upon to ask that a prima facie case shall be made out. A prima facie case, I understand, is one upon which a judicial tribunal would be bound to decide in favour of the party making it unless it is answered in some way. The way in which these proceedings are taken is that a party files a statement alleging certain things. He does not need to give any grounds for his belief, but he merely files the usual declaration that to the best of his knowledge and belief certain conditions exist. Then he goes before the judge, and if the judge is satisfied not that a prima facie case is made out, but that there is reasonable ground for believing a combination exists—

Mr. GERMAN. Is that not a prima facie case?

Mr. MACDONALD. No, reasonable grounds simply means that there is a plausible case made out which might be inquired into.

Mr. KING. And that it is in the public interest that an investigation shall be held.

Mr. MACDONALD. That is where I find a difficulty with the minister's definition of a combine. The judge will look to see what is the public interest, and he will find that the public interest means anything contrary to what is mentioned as coming under the definition of the word 'combine'. Let it be understood that I am speaking here purely and solely from the standpoint of a friendly critic, who apprehends that out of this Bill you will have a lot of difficulties which require the closest possible examination. Perhaps some of my objections are not tenable, but it seems to me some of them are worthy of consideration. Now, I happen to have had an experience not long ago carrying through a case which affords an example of the difficulties you would have under this Bill. A certain number of gentlemen, not with any desire to advance the public interest, inaugurated a proceeding under section 498 of the Code against certain coal proprietors in the province of Nova Scotia. The inquiry, to which great latitude was given by the magistrate, was very much along the lines required to take place under this Bill. It was protracted for two or three months, at tremendous expense to the defendants. It involved all the managing people connected with this industry being in attendance before the tribunal, and ultimately, under the instructions of the judge who charged the grand jury, the case was thrown out. There was an illustration of an investigation such as might take place under this proceeding here. I think there should be certain limitations. The judge ought to have power to say to the parties who come and invoke his authority that they should be compelled to give security for costs under certain conditions. I think also that the party against whom the allegation is made should have the right to appear by counsel at what by the Bill is an ex-parte application, and that under that section 7 all precautions should be taken to protect the honest man, to protect the gentlemen who are interested in arrangements which are bona fide. Although the hon. member for Welland drew the distinction that there must be injury to the public alleged, anybody who comes within the definition of a combine under section 2 of the Act, is open to be attacked, and the only thing that these six men need do in order to attack him is to allege that they have information that he and his associates have done something they ought not to do, and which might be detrimental to the public. Now, we must not lose sight of the fact that business interests may be seriously affected if you open up an avenue whereby business men can be kept away from their business for a long period of time; that they can be harassed and annoyed by the compulsory production of their books and papers, covering a long period of years, ultimately to find that after all there was nothing improper in connection with the matter at all. You can fancy what the feelings of legitimate business men would be who are put to all the trouble and expense of an investigation, at the instance, perhaps, of a coterie of men who want to do them an injury. They could not get back at their assailants by an action at law, the same as they could if they were charged with crime under the Code. It seems to me there should be some clause giving a right of action, and in addition, compulsory security for costs in proper cases, to be paid if it is found that there was no reason for proceedings being taken against them.

Now, there have been very satisfactory results on the whole in the operation of the law as it stands. We have had decisions by which a coal combine at Brantford was attacked; we have had several convictions in Toronto; in the northwest a lumber combine was convicted under the present law; and numerous arrangements have been held to be illegal; and contracts based upon them have been nullified by the courts during the ten years this Act has been in operation. I would say to the minister that I hope, if he does not accede to the request that the Bill be sent to a special committee, that he will give consideration to the suggestions which will be made by which men honestly making a business arrangement with their fellow men shall be protected and secured in this measure. Now, I have to revert for one minute to this first clause. It does seem to me it is a hard proposition to say that because one man has been successful in business that he cannot go and buy up a concern which has been engaged in the same business, and which has gone into bankruptcy, that he cannot carry on and increase his business, that he cannot have two or three concerns going on anywhere in the Dominion at the same time.

Mr. LANCASTER. Simply because some judges think he ought not.

Mr. MACDONALD. Judges have their whims and humours in regard to these matters, and in these matters they are acting in an extra-judicial capacity. With all deference to the learned gentlemen in my own province who have occupied seats on conciliation boards, I think it would have been very much better if these judges had not been on these conciliation boards. While it would be desirable, if you are going to have a board, to have somebody who is acquainted wtih the law, I do not like these extra-judicial duties being performed by the judges of the country.

Mr. LANCASTER. You are practically making the judges a parliament. The judges provide what the law shall be.

Mr. CONMEE. They have the power to order an investigation.

Mr. LANCASTER. No, the judges decide what is an improper combine instead of saying what it should be.

Mr. CONMEE. No, the judge only goes as far as to order an investigation.

Mr. MACDONALD. This Bill is inaugurating a new and novel principle, inasmuch as it deals with the rights of innocent business men carrying on their business in the same way as it has been carried on in this country and in England, and in a way which is expressly recognized in England. As this Bill is going to seriously interfere with all these conditions, I have endeavoured to point out some phases of it which require consideration, and I would ask the minister, if he is unable to agree to refer the Bill to a special committee, to give us the widest possible attention with regard to any amendments which may be proposed for the purpose of protecting honest business men who make arrangements. I have made these few remarks with the idea of having all join together in this House so that if any measure is to be adopted, it may be made as satisfactory as possible.

Mr. KING. I have listened rather carefully to the discussion which has taken place, and it seems to me that the general opinion, as it has been expressed, is favourable to some measure passing this parliament which will more effectively deal than any legislation on the statute-books at the present time with trusts and combines that work an injury to the public. The only difference that I see in the main in the discussion is that while there are some gentlemen on this side of the House who would like to see certain amendments inserted and have the present law made a little clearer in certain particulars, there seems to be, on the opposite side of the House, a very decided desire to, if possible, burk legislation altogether at the present session.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. KING. I beg the hon. gentlemen's pardon if I have misunderstood their motive. We are now within a short time of what is desired to be the prorogation of this parliament and any suggestion that the Bill should be referred to a select committee at this stage of the proceedings of the House can only be taken to mean that it shall not pass this session.

Mr. BRISTOL. Was it not possible for the minister to have brought this Bill down before?

Mr. KING. The Bill was brought down on the 18th of January, and from that time until to-day no suggestion has been made to me or to any member of the government that the Bill should be referred to a select committee. If hon. gentlemen had any desire or intention of that kind, they were at liberty to express it to any member of the government at any time. They need not have reserved that suggestion until this present stage of the session.

Mr. BLAIN. There was a general rumour abroad that the government would not proceed with this measure at all.

Mr. KING. The government cannot be responsible for the rumours that are abroad. I have no doubt that hon. gentlemen opposite do not desire every one to accept certain of the rumours that are abroad at the present time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The objection I have at this stage is that the government is some years too late in bringing forward this legislation.

Mr. KING. I do not know that that very wise observation is an argument in favour of prolonging or extending the time for inquiry in regard to this Bill. I think that the whole argument of the hon. gentleman, if you could call his remarks an argument, was one strong plea in favour of legislation being enacted as soon as possi- legislation being enacted as soon as possible rather than at a later stage of this

Mr. BRISTOL. Has the minister not given this Bill his best and most careful consideration, and does he think it unreasonable that we should give it a few minutes' consideration?

Mr. KING. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to finish I think I will be able to make my position clear. The Bill has been before the House for nearly three months, hon. members have had ample opportunity of studying it, and if they have not taken advantage of that opportunity they can hardly blame the government. However, I think it is perfectly reasonable to take the attitude which has been taken by some members that certain clauses of this Bill should be discussed very carefully, and if thought desirable should be amended in certain particulars so as to make the meaning perfectly clear. It is not the desire of the government to put through a measure which is going to work an injury to any corporation whatever in this country that is carrying on a legitimate business, and if the Bill, as framed does that I, for one, am perfectly agreeable to add to the Bill such features as may be necessary to safeguard the interests of corporations carrying on legitimate business in a legitimate way. But, I do not want to have the features omitted from this measure which will make it effective in dealing with corporations that are not conducting their business in the interests of the public. It seems to me that this purpose can be served by the committee passing such of the clauses as appear to be non-contentious. There are many of the clauses in regard to which, once the committee has considered them carefully, the committee will have an entirely different view. The fact that exception is taken to the definition of the word 'combine' illustrates what I have in mind. The definition, I admit, is a very broad one, and if everything that comes within that definition were to be considered as illegal, I would be the first one to move to strike it out altogether. But that is not the intention of the measure. It is not the combination as such that is aimed at, but the fruits of the combine where those fruits are contrary to public interest. One might see a notice to the effect that persons belonging to a certain category were not to be admitted to a certain show ground or a horse-race, and he might think on reading the definition of 'persons' that he was excluded until he found by reading the description further that it only applied to persons under sixteen years of age. It is the same with this measure. There may be a combine which is perfectly legitimate, and unless it can be shown before a judge of the high court that this combine is such as is enhancing prices unreasonably, but one stage of the proceeding would take place. The penalties do not become applicable at that stage. Further investigation takes place in which all the parties interested take part, and my hon friend from North Simoce (Mr. Currie) surely will not say that after a judge of the high court has passed upon a combine, and its business had been investigated by a board, and it has been found that a certain class of business has been carried on which is detrimental to the public, that such a combination should not come under the Criminal Code or should not be put in such a position as to render the persons responsible for it liable if they persist in their manifest wrong doing. It seems to me that once you establish that, after careful and thorough examination, such as provisions is made for by this measure, it is all important there should be other legislation such as at present exists for seeing that the conduct complained of is effectively stopped. I would suggest that we should proceed in committee, and if there are any contentious clauses the proposed amendments to them can be considered, and no doubt we will be able to so arrange them as to make them generally acceptable to the House. There is no need for the House to take evidence at this stage. We have plenty of evidence in the report of the select committee of 1888, and what is now needed is a more effective means of ascertaining the exact situation in regard to the working of these combinations.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would suggest to the Minister of Labour, that it is unbecoming on his part to lecture the opposition as to the wisdom or unwisdom of any course which in the public interest they deem it necessary to pursue. The hon. gentleman complained because we were not prepared to swallow his Bill holus-bolus on a minute's notice, and he told us we had plenty of time to consider it early in the session. The fact of the matter is that the very resolution on which his Bill is founded was only moved to-day and the hon. gentleman took three and a half hours in the busiest time of the session to explain this wonderful measure. And yet, he thinks it preposterous that we should want consideration in a committee to find out what all his talk was about. I trust that in future the Minister of Labour will not have the temerity to lecture this side of the House on the propriety of their conduct.

On section 4,

Mr. BLAIN. I understood the minister to express himself that this measure must be forced through this House and become law this session. It is important now that the minister should state frankly whether he does propose to press this legislation to a finality this session, which it is expected will last only a few weeks longer.

Mr. KING. I am not aware that I used the expression that I desired to force any legislation through, and indeed I should very much regret if legislation of this importance were forced through the House. On the other hand, I believe that the people of Canada are anxious to have legislation of this kind passed, and I can see no reason why it should not be enacted at the present session. As we go through the different sections I think it will become apparent that our differences exist with respect to only two or three clauses of the Bill, and these slight differences can be reconciled in committee by conference. Possibly we have not very much time before prorogation, but I do not think this Bill will delay the business of the House, and if it can be put through this session I think it ought to be put through.

Mr. RHODES. Why does the Minister of Labour object to this Bill being sent to a special committee?

Mr. KING. For the simple reason that I do not think any useful purpose would be served. On the other hand there is very serious objection in that such a reference would probably mean that the Bill would not become law this session.

Mr. RHODES. Why does the Minister of Labour think that no useful purpose would be served by sending the Bill to a committee?

Mr. KING. Because this Committee of the Whole have already in their possession the information necessary to enable us to proceed. A select committee of this House has already investigated combinations and trusts and its report is before us.

Mr. BLAIN. How long ago?

Mr. KING. Twenty years ago. The fact that certain members of the House were not in parliament then does not preclude them from reading the evidence taken.

Mr. BRISTOL. Does the minister think there have been no changes in business conditions during the last twenty years? On that point, there are many people who would want evidence taken.

Mr. KING. Whatever change has taken place has been a change in the direction of emphasizing the necessity for such legislation as this. The boards of trade of Toronto and Montreal, the wholesale grocers, the retail grocers, the Manufacturers' Association, the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress, the Union of Canadian Municipalities, the Dominion Grange, the Victoria Board of Trade, leading manufacturers and business houses have all communicated with me in reference to certain sections of this Bill, and I shall be glad to bring their suggestions before the committee. In that way, the committee will be in possession of any facts that are necessary to a consideration of the Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. And a number of the members have received suggestions from different interests, that this Bill should be sent to a committee where they may be heard.

Mr. RHODES. At a former session of the House, the Minister of Finance enunciated the doctrine that the opposition in parliament had only such rights as the government of the day would agree to give them, and since then the eminent legal authority from Thunder Bay and Rainy River, who now sits in the seat of the Minister of Justice, stated the opposition had no rights whatever.

Mr. CONMEE. Oh, no.

Mr. RHODES. And to-night we have the Minister of Labour enunciating the new doctrine that the opposition should be estopped from making any suggestions because notice has been on the order paper for a couple of months that certain legislation would be introduced. The hon. minister may be quite right in taking the position that because notice had been given of a Bill for a couple of months it would not be proper for the opposition or for any hon. member to ask for a select committee to consider it; but I would like to contrast the action of the hon. minister with respect to this Bill with his action respecting a measure brought to the attention of the House earlier in the session, namely, the Bill respecting the hours of labour on public works. In that case, we had a Bill which had been introduced into parliament year after year, and notwithstanding the fact that a Bill in identically the same terms was introduced into the House this year, and was pressed for consideration, the minister was pleased to say that it should be referred to a special committee, although there were volumes of information respecting the hours of labour on public works, not necessarily taken in this House, but taken before the Congress of the United States, and all sorts of information in the hands of the department which the hon. minister is supposed to conduct. But to-night, the opposition is to be stopped from suggesting that this measure should be referred to a select committee, because forsooth notice of it has appeared on the order paper for two months, and because 22 years ago there was an investigation into trade matters by a special committee of this House. I would like the hon. minister, if possible, to reconcile his position on these two Bills.

Mr. KING. First of all, I cannot at all agree to the interpretation put upon my words. There is nothing in what I have said to indicate for a moment that I wish to deprive any member of the opposition of the opportunity of making any suggestions or criticisms that he may wish or proposing any amendment in Committee of the Whole. With respect to the special committee on the Eight-hours Bill, I would point out that that is a subject which has never been considered by a select committee of this House, while the subject of this Bill was made a special reference to a select committee, and we have the evidence in bound form taken before it. Then, this legislation is simply to amplify legislation already on the statute-book, which has been discussed in this House year after year—in 1888, 1897, 1904 and 1907. At these different times, enactments were passed in this House on the subject of trusts and combines. So that it is not a new question, and this measure does not seek to introduce any new principle of law or any departure of a startling nature, but is simply to amplify the machinery already on the statute-book. That is a vastly different thing from proposing an entirely new enactment. Moreover, this is a government measure.

Mr. RHODES. If this subject can go without legislation for a period of 22 years, I cannot see the crying necessity for driving through a drastic measure near the dying hours of the session; because if this measure is to be effective it must be drastic in its provisions, and if it is not drastic, it is not worth being considered at all.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I cannot understand for a moment the hon. minister not being willing to grant a special committee of inquiry. We had a special committee on the so-called Miller Bill, and the First Minister has practically admitted that it is to be dropped. We had another special committee on the Insurance Bill, and up to a few hours ago we understood that that was to be dropped this session. We also have the Banking Act, and that is to be dropped for this session. On this Bill, on which we have practically no information except the effusion of the minister himself and what was obtained 22 years ago, I think it is only right that we should have a special committee.

Mr. DOHERTY. I understood the minister to state that he had received petitions for this Bill from a number of the boards of trade, among others the Montreal Board of Trade. I would ask him if in some of those communications it was not specially requested that this legislation should not be proceeded with until the members of the boards of trade had an opportunity to study its terms and express their views upon it.

Mr. KING. These bodies have expressed their views, and it was my intention to bring them up in the discussion in committee.

Mr. DOHERTY. What I would like to know is whether they did not request an opportunity of studying the measure and placing their views before the legislative body that was going to pass upon it. If they have expressed their views to the minister, this House ought I think to have the advantage of the expression of those views. I would not like to speak with any positiveness, but I have a recollection of having received a communication from the Montreal Board of Trade to the effect that this legislation was such that they thought that it should not be proceeded with until the boards of trade throughout the country had an opportunity to study it, and express their opinions upon it. A request coming from these bodies which have a special fitness for expressing an opinion on legislation of this kind, deserves the fullest consideration on the minister's part and on the part of this House. Before this House can give any consideration to the views of bodies so peculiarly fitted to speak upon the matter, it would seem that this House should have an opportunity through a committee or otherwise, of hearing the views of those boards. The hon. minister says this measure is not introducing any new principle. I do not want to go into any discussion on that point, but I think it may be certainly said that this government is providing a means of conducting proceedings of an absolutely inquisitorial character into the business of any man whatsoever with regard to which five or six people can be found to come forward and say that they believe that it is being carried on in a way to enhance prices, or to cause some detriment to the public. In providing for making possible such an inquisition into the business of people engaged in what, up to the present, has been considered perfectly legitimate commerce, it seems to me we are, if not introducing a new principle, at all events proposing to enact legislation which may entail very serious consequences on the business public of this country. Under those circumstances, some opportunity should be given to those who may be affected to be heard in such a manner that this House may be in a position to appreciate what they have to say.

Mr. KING. I rise primarily to mention that there is an understanding between my hon. colleague who is leading the House (Mr. Fielding) and the other side, that we adjourn shortly after eleven o'clock, and as that time is now approaching, I propose, after a few words of explanation, to move that the committee rise and report progress. After the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Doherty) that the Board of Trade of Montreal had requested to be heard——

Mr. DOHERTY. I did not say that they had actually made the request.

Mr. KING. I evidently misunderstood my hon. friend, but at any rate he presumed that they desire to be heard. I have here a letter from the Montreal Board of Trade of the 24th February, 1910, which concludes by saying that the council press for consideration of its recommendations.

That letter is signed by the secretary, and contains certain suggestions which have been carefully considered. There is no request in it for any reference to a special committee. I should mention that the Hamilton Board of Trade, which seems to have the habit of suggesting with regard to such legislation, that before further progress is made they should be afforded an opportunity of being heard may possibly have made a similar request with regard to this Bill. But with that exception, in no communication I have received has there been any suggestion to refer this Bill to a select committee before which the parties interested could be heard.

I move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. GERVAIS. Before the motion is put, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Labour if the legislation he proposes has not been inspired by German legislation relating to the 'Vereinen, Konventionen' or Syndicate.' I think we are trying to enact in Canada only a piece, but not the most important, of German legislation relating to the 'cartels' or the German commercial ententes or agreements; and in my opinion, if we pass too hastily the legislation now proposed it will interfere very seriously both with the customs and financial departments of our country. This is a very important piece of legislation concerning which quite a number of facts must be shown, but which we have not yet heard mentioned in this debate, should be brought before the House. By this Bill my hon. friend is seeking to have applied to this country but one part of German legislation as I have said, relating to the German 'ententes' or commercial agreements, or the German combines which in a general way come under the name of 'cartels.' This Bill is aiming, as in Germany,' at the suppression of oppressive commercial combines, through the reduction of customs tariffs. There are a lot of things to be stated and arguments to be used for or against those 'Vereinen, Konventionen or Syndicate,' concerning which we should have some more information, at any rate, before this Bill is put through. According to my opinion, this Bill should not be railroaded through this House.

Mr. SPROULE. As the hon. minister has referred to certain memorials and correspondence which are in his hands, I would ask him to lay them on the table so that other members of the House may have the benefit of reading them. That he is obliged to do under the rule.

Mr. KING. I shall do so with pleasure

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY April 13, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

SAINT JOHN HARBOUR.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 204 to authorize the erection of certain wharfs and buildings in the harbour of St. John. He said: the city of St. John has quite recently made an agreement with Mr. Frederick C. Durant for the erection of a very large sugar refinery in the city, and with a view to giving him encouragement in the erection of what is regarded as likely to prove a very important undertaking, the city has agreed to convey to him some of the property which it owns facing on the harbour, and a part of which is covered with water. As a part of the arrangement the Department of Railways has agreed also to convey to Mr. Durant a portion of its property near the ballast wharf. Then, I believe it has been agreed that either the whole or a part of the property received from the government shall be substituted for that which has been conveyed by the city. The agreement that has been come to has been confirmed by the legislature of the province of New Brunswick. The Recorder of the city is of the opinion that as this land, although within the harbour lines as defined in the statute, forms, so far as a portion of it, at least, is concerned, a part of the harbour, it is necessary to come to this parliament in order to have the authority given by the legislature of New Brunswick to make the conveyance, confirmed and ratified, and also to authorize Mr. Durant to erect wharfs and buildings upon that part of the property which is covered with water, but which is to the eastward of the harbour line. The sole object of this Bill is to carry out the agreement which has been made between the city of St. John and Mr. Durant.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

NORTHWEST LANDS.

Mr. HERRON:

1. Was scrip issued by the Department of the Interior for the land which Mrs. Cuthbert Gervais, formerly the widow of Urbain Delorme, Jr., was entitled to as a half-breed on her own behalf ?

2. If so, to whom was such scrip issued and when ?

3. Has the land been located at any Dominion Lands Office ? If so, at what office and at what date ?

4. Is the said Mrs. Gervais also entitled to scrip for lands as widow of the said Delorme ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER:

1. No land scrip issued; her claim was satisfied by an issue of scrip for $160.

2. Such scrip was delivered to her attorney, Cuthbert Gervais, on the 23rd June, 1877.

3. Answered by No. 1.

4. No. This claim was satisfied by an issue of money scrip for $160, which was divided between his four children—Elise, Marie Rose, Madeline and Urbain Delorme. The shares of Elise and Marie Rose—$40 each, were delivered to them personally and the shares of Madeline and Urbain, $40 each, were delivered to their mother, Marie Gervais as guarantee. All were delivered in 1878.

Mr. HERRON:

1. Was scrip issued by the Department of the Interior to James Whitford, half-breed, for lands?

2. If so, when was such scrip issued, who obtained the same, and by whose order or authority?

3. Has the land been located under such scrip? If so, at what office and at what date?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. As there are several persons by the name of James Whitford in the records of Half-breed claims, the names of the parents of the claimant referred to will have to be furnished in order to establish his identity.

Mr. MAGRATH:

1. Was the N.E. ¼ Sec. 31, Tp. 30, Range 24, W. 4th M. applied for in September, 1908, as a pre-emption by the homesteaders of the adjoining land?

2. Was it reserved and not available for settlement during that month? If so, for what purpose and when did it become available for settlement thereafter?

3. What opportunity, if any, was given to the homesteaders of adjoining land to obtain it as his rightful pre-emption?

4. When and by whom was it obtained and under what conditions?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. Yes, by Lester B. Haley, the homesteader of the N.W. ¼ of section 32, adjoining. Other applications may have been made to the Agent of Dominion Lands of which there is no record in the Department.

2. This quarter section appeared in error as 'Disposed of' in the list of odd-sections sent to the Agent of Dominion Lands prior to the 1st September, 1908.

On the 22nd May, 1909, the Agent of Dominion Lands at Calgary was instructed to post a notice in his office setting forth that the whole of section 31, township 30, Range 24, west 4th meridian, would be available for homestead entry by the first eligible applicant over the counter, at the expiration of 10 days from the date of such notice. The sub-agent was also instructed to post a notice in his office.

3. Answered by No. 2.

4. On 21st June, 1909, by Alton David Irvine as a homestead.

He was permitted on the 30th August, 1909, to abandon his entry for the purpose of having Half-breed scrip located on the land.

Under date of 19th October, 1909, Harold F. McDonald located Half-breed scrip on this quarter section, which he subsequently assigned to Alton David Irvine, to whom patent therefor was issued on the 16th November, 1909.

Mr. MEIGHEN:

1. To whom has patent issued for S.W. ¼ 18—19—20—W 4th meridian, and when?

2. Did the patentee receive same as a homestead? If so, when did he enter, and what homstead duties had he performed when patent issued?

3. What proof had the department that such duties were so performed?

4. If same was not granted as a homestead under the Dominion Lands Act, why was it granted; under what statutory authority, for what reasons and on what terms?

5. Was the department in receipt of applications from others for this land as a homestead? If so, from whom, under what dates and why was each refused?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. Patent has not been issued.

2. S.W. ¼ 18-19-20-W. 4th is held as a homestead by M. B. O'Connor. The entry was made on the 9th of October, 1906. Land still unpatented.

3. See answer to question 1.

4. Land held as a homestead under the Dominion Lands Act. (See answer to question 2.)

5. So far as the file shows, the department is not aware of any application from other parties for this land as a homestead.

Mr. STAPLES:

Does the S.W. ¼ 32—7—5, W. 1st belong to the government? If so, is it open for homesteading or for sale? If not, to whom has title been issued and when?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. No. Patented 5th June, 1884 to William Lilly, who had made pre-emption entry therefor.

Mr. HERRON:

1. Is it the intention of the government to throw open in the near future any portion of the Peigan Reserve for homesteading, purchased homesteads, or pre-emptions?

2. If so, will the lands be disposed of by public auction or private sale? If by the latter method, at what price?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. No.

2. The remaining unsold surrendered lands on the Peigan Indian reserve will be offered for sale by public auction in June next.

Mr. BRADBURY:

1. Is the government aware that some time since January, 1910, a number of half-breed scrip is said to have been located without the half-breed to whom the scrip was issued being present and presented to the Dominion Lands agent as required ?

2. Is the government aware that the scrip issued to Jean Riel, son of the famous Louis Riel, is said to have been located since January, 1910, and that the said Jean Riel died at St. Boniface some time in July, 1908 ?

3. By whom was said scrip located and under what authority?

1. No.

2. Scrip notes for 160 acres and 80 acres were issued to Jean Riel, son of Louis Riel. The 160 acre scrip note was located on the 17th March, 1902, by the grantee, on the northwest quarter of section 12, township 10, range 12, west 2nd meridian, which he subsequently assigned to William S. Stewart, of Charlottetown, P.E.I., to whom patent therefor was issued on the 27th June, 1903.

No report of the location of the 80-acre scrip note issued to Jean Riel has as yet been received in the department.

3. Answered by No. 2.

INCORPORATED COMPANIES.

J. P. TURCOTTE:

1. About the 29th day of March, 1910, was there had, between the authorized representatives of the federal government and the authorized representatives of several of the provincial governments of Canada, an exchange of views on the question of the respective jurisdiction of the legislature of each of the provinces and of the parliament of Canada in the matter of the civil constitution of companies and as to the rights of companies so constituted ?

2. If so, where was this conference held and at whose request ?

3. Who were the respective representatives of the federal and the provincial governments at this conference ?

4. Was there an agreement at this conference on the question of its object ?

5. Has the federal government official communication from the provincial representatives at this conference of the following resolutions adopted by them: 'Whereas, the government of Canada has proposed to submit to the Supreme Court of Canada, the question of the respective jurisdiction of the provinces and of the federal parliament in the matter of the civil constitution of companies and as to the rights of companies so constituted. And whereas the Supreme Court of Canada, in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Ottawa Fire Insurance Company, has already maintained the claims of the provinces in that regard, it is therefore resolved, that in accordance with this judgment, the provinces deem it neither opportune nor desirable to consent to any other reference implying substantially the same questions. That they are of the opinion that it is not in the public interest to put in question the powers exercised by the provinces for more than forty years. That they believe that foreign corporations should not be empowered to enjoy within the limits of any province greater privileges than the companies incorporated by the sister provinces. That they say they are well disposed to take part in a conference to consider the drawing up of an amendment to the British North America Act in order to define more clearly and in a definite manner the respective rights of the Dominion and the provinces in that regard ? '

6. Is it the intention of the federal government to amend the British North America Act as it concerns the civil constitution of companies and the extent of the rights conferred on them, as they are constituted by the government of Canada or by each of the provinces ?

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY:

1. Yes.

2. The Railway Committee room of the Senate, Ottawa. At the request of six of the provincial governments.

3. Dominion.—The Right Honourable Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Honourable Mr. Aylesworth, the Honourable Mr. Lemieux, and the Honourable Mr. Murphy.

Ontario.—The Honourable Mr. Hanna, C. H. Ritchie, K.C., and Edward Bayly, solicitor to the Attorney General's Department.

Quebec.—The Honourable Mr. Taschereau, the Honourable Mr. Mackenzie and C. Lanctot, K.C., Deputy Attorney General.

Manitoba.—The Honourable Mr. Campbell and the Honourable Mr. Howden.

New Brunswick.—The Honourable Mr. Hazen and the Honourable Mr. McLeod.

British Columbia.—Mr. H. A. Maclean, K.C., Deputy Attorney General.

Saskatchewan.—The Honourable Mr. Turgeon.

4. No.

5. A resolution was presented at the conference by the chairman of the representatives of the provinces, but not in the words set out in the question. The language of the resolution was as follows:

The delegates of the provinces assembled at Ottawa, on the 29th day of March, 1910, have adopted unanimously the following resolutions : Whereas it has been proposed by the government of Canada to submit to the Supreme Court of Canada the question of the jurisdiction of the provinces and the federal parliament respectively in reference to the incorporation of companies and of the rights of companies so incorporated; and whereas the Supreme Court of Canada, in the case of The Canadian Pacific Railway Company vs. The Ottawa Fire Insurance Company, has already upheld the contention of the provinces in this behalf; it is therefore resolved: (1) That the provinces in view of this judgment do not think it expedient or advisable to consent to another or further submission, involving substantially the same issue. (2) That they are of opinion that it is not in the public interest that the powers exercised by the provinces for over forty years should again be brought in question. (3) That they believe that foreign corporations should not be accorded or enjoy, within any province, greater powers than companies incorporated by sister provinces. (4) That they express their willingness to join in a Conference to draft an amendment to the British North America Act, to more clearly define and set at rest the respective rights of the Dominion and the provinces in this respect.

The Honourable Mr. Aylesworth, immediately after the presentation of the resolution, stated that before the conference dissolved he desired to call attention to a statement therein that the powers under discussion had been exercised by the provinces for over forty years without question. On the contrary, successive Ministers of Justice from the time of confederation to the present day had repeatedly called the attention of the provinces to Acts incorporating companies wherein the provinces had gone beyond their jurisdiction in assuming to confer on provincially incorporated companies powers not within their jurisdiction, which is 'the incorporation of companies with provincial objects,' under the British North America Act. In many cases such Acts were amended after comment of the Minister of Justice, and several of such Acts have been disallowed. He also stated that in the early days of confederation the provinces had not gone beyond the powers which various Ministers of Justice considered they possessed as they have been doing during more recent years. It is only when companies are incorporated by provincial legislation that their constitution comes before the Minister of Justice for consideration. There is no opportunity to question the validity of the incorporation of provincial companies which takes place under the general Companies Acts of the provinces. The statement that the judgment of the Supreme Court in Canadian Pacific railway v. Ottawa Fire Insurance Company had upheld the contention of the provinces, which is repeated in the resolution, had been commented upon at an earlier stage of the proceedings, prior to the presentation of the resolution, and the remarks then made indicated that this statement was not correct. Two judges of the Supreme Court upheld the contention of the provinces, two upheld the directly opposite view, one did not express an opinion on the general question, but restricted his judgment to the case between the private litigants before the court, and the sixth judge did not take part in the judgment, stating that it was not a proper case in which to dispose of a serious constitutional question.

6. The federal government has no such power.

Mr. MURPHY.

QUEBEC FISHERIES.

Mr. BOYER:

1. After the adoption of Special Fishery Regulations on or about the 12th day of September, 1907, on the recommendation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and in virtue of the provisions of chapter 45 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, by His Excellency in Council, respecting fishing in the province of Quebec, was it lawful for the government of that province to issue licenses for fishing in the localities where fishing is prohibited by these Special Fishery Regulations?

2. Does the government know that the provincial government of Quebec, by its inspectors, has, it is alleged, granted such licenses?

3. If that was brought to its knowledge, would it have been able to prevent it, on being informed that the government of Quebec pretends to be itself the proprietor of the fish in inland waters?

4. Has the government one or more paid inspectors, charged with having inspected those Special Fishery Regulations in the province of Quebec?

5. Who are they and what is the salary attached to the position?

6. Does the engagement of such officer charge him also with other duties inherent to his office?

7. Could such officer, for example, occupy a position of fishing inspector for the government of Ottawa and that of Quebec at the same time and receive a separate salary from each government?

8. Does the government believe that in this alternative, such inspecting officer is in a position to equitably perform his duty, if it be true that a conflict exists between the two governments, one the federal government, which regulates the fishing in fresh waters, and the other the provincial government, which pretends to be the sole proprietor of the fish which live in the same waters?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

1. No.

2. Yes; but on the attention of the local government being called to the incident, the licenses were immediately cancelled.

3. Answered by No. 2.

4. Yes.

5. Joseph Riendeau, of Montreal, $1,100; from the eastern boundary of Portneuf west, including all the counties north of the River St. Lawrence and embracing the river itself. C. A. Bernard, St. Cesaire, $1,000; all the counties on the south shore of the River St. Lawrence, west of the western boundary of the county of Bellechasse. William Wakeham, Gaspé, $2,000; the remainder of the province of Quebec, including the Gulf division to Blanc Sablon.

6. The duties of these inspectors embrace the general supervision of the fisheries within the district for which they are appointed.

7. The federal government has not taken exception to such an arrangement.

8. There is no conflict concerning interior waters.

QUESNEL-FORT GEORGE MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. BURRELL:

1. To whom has been awarded the contract for carrying the mails between Quesnel and Fort George ?
2. How many tenders were received?
3. What were the amounts of the tenders ?
4. Does the contract call for a bi-weekly or a monthly service ?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX:

1. The contract has not been awarded.
2. Seven tenders were received.
3. Until the contract has been awarded the tenders must be treated as confidential.
4. The contract will provide for a frequency of not less than weekly in summer and fortnightly in winter.

QUESTIONS AND MOTIONS.

On question 17 Mr. Boyer—

Mr. FISHER. Some of the answers to this question might be given in a few words, but some of them would be very long, so that we will have to let it stand as a notice of motion for a return. I will, however, as soon as the information is obtained present it to the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to interject a query here, because many questions are in the same position. When they stand as notices of motion for returns, there is no opportunity of moving them, and, therefore, they are nullified for the rest of the session. It seems to me that some provision ought to be made by which these motions should be allowed to pass during the present session.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may say to my hon. friend that the committee on the revision of the rules has a rule in contemplation which will meet his suggestion.

Mr. SPROULE. Can anything be done to dispose of the notices now on the paper?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Of course, we are now within the present rules, and we must remain so, but in the rule which we propose to bring in it will be provided that in a case of this kind the motion will go at once. The new rules will come into force next session.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. Perhaps the hon. the premier would allow the unopposed notices of motion to be taken up some day and disposed of.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Perhaps we can do that.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I would like to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister if an opportunity will be afforded for considering Bill (No. 23) introduced by myself to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act? The Bill has had its second reading and has advanced to the committee stage, but a further opportunity to consider it has not been afforded. The Minister of Labour has a Bill to amend the same Act, and I would like to have an opportunity when that Bill comes before the House for consideration to bring up my Bill, so that both amendments, which are largely identical, may be considered together.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will look into the matter.

INTERFERENCE OF UNITED STATES OFFCIALS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Before the orders of the day are proceeded with, I wish to call the attention of the government to some matters that pertain to my district. For the past two years the two main lines of the Grand Trunk Railway running into Sarnia have been boarded 20 or 30 miles inland in Canada by government officials from the United States, who have been accustomed to ask our people most impertinent and insulting questions. There is throughout the district a general protest against this being allowed. If the Prime Minister will look at this morning's 'Citizen' he will see a report of one American citizen being turned back, and in yesterday's 'Citizen' he will find the following:

Stopped at Border—Strathroy Family Refused Admittance to U. S.

Strathroy, Ont., April 11.—About a year and a half ago Arthur Wilton of Caradoc went to Pontiac, Mich., where he obtained employment in a factory and saved enough money to purchase a house and lot. Mr. Wilton came back to Canada recently to take his wife and family to Pontiac. He took his household effects and part of the family with him and crossed the border without any objections. Last Saturday his wife accompanied by three children and a lady friend left to join her husband. They left here on the 2.18 p.m. train and when they reached Port Huron were stopped by officials and were subjected to no little inconvenience, the women stated. They were according to her story, locked in a room and asked all kinds of impertinent questions and finally sent back to Canada at midnight. The little band came back to Strathroy, where they had their first meal since leaving here. Mrs. Wilton has suffered greatly from nervous shock; her youngest child was a year and a half old.

Of course, these people will become American citizens, but I know of instances in my own town of people, especially ladies travelling alone across the border, having been subjected to much inconvenience by being asked insulting questions by these officials. I know that the attention of the government has been called to this matter in regard to other border towns, and I hope that the government will pay more attention to it than they have hitherto done.

Mr. D. C. ROSS. Following up the state ment made by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), I may say that I have already brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of the Interior, and I believe the facts stated in the article referred to to be substantially correct as I nave received a letter from home confirming them. Such representations should be made to the government of the United States that conduct of this kind on the part of their officials will not be repeated. It seems to me that both Canadian and American officials engaged in the enforcement of immigration Acts should be taught that one of their first duties is to dispense courtesy and kindness rather than heckling, browbeating and humiliation to the parties with whom they have to deal, and in this particular case they should be severely censured for the conduct of which they have been guilty. I know the family that has been mentioned very well and they are one of the most respectable families in my county.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER. In order that there may be no misapprehension as to the responsibility attached to the conduct of this government, I would like to emphasize the fact to the House that the action is taken by the United States officers and is taken in respect of people who, if not already citizens of the United States, propose to become citizens of that country. Their conduct is not such as this government is responsble for except indirectly. Perhaps it may be well for me to explain to the House just how far that responsibility extends in the case which has arisen. Under the immigration exclusion laws of the United States, as under the immigrant exclusion laws of Canada, provision is made for the exclusion at the border of people who are deemed undesirable by the immigration officials of either country. In order that there may be an efficient examination of people who are crossing at the border, and in order that railway traffic may not be delayed, it has been the custom of the United States officers to board trains destined for the United States, in Canada, for the purpose of making their examination of passengers on the train before they reach the border, so that there will be no delay at the border. The alternative of that arrangement would be that trains arriving at the border would be held there the same as they are for customs purposes, until the examination was made. Of course that would involve a very serious delay to railway traffic. So the immigration officers of the United States do the same as the customs officers of the United States, that is, for the convenience of travellers, they board trains in Canada and make the examination on the train, so that the examination may be as far as possible completed by the time the train arrives at the frontier.

Mr. EMMERSON. Do Canadian officers board American trains in the same way?

Mr. OLIVER. In some cases where it is considered necessary. But I may remark that the exclusion arrangements of the United States are much more elaborate and extensive, and involve the employment of a much larger staff, than do the exclusion arrangements of Canada. Therefore the United States employ a much larger number of men than Canada is able to employ, or needs to employ. We run our exclusion business on a much cheaper scale than the United States, although we think it is equally efficient. Now in the handling of the exclusion act along 3,000 miles of the frontier, and where so large a number of men are employed, doubtless it frequently happens that some of these men are not all they ought to be for the purpose for which they are employed, and sometimes they make mistakes, sometimes they inflict hardships needlessly. I would like to say, however, that so far as our experience has gone in dealing with the United States officers engaged on the immigration service, when we have brought to their attention any case of hardship or impropriety on the part of United States officials, we have received very fair consideration at the hands of the head of the immigration service of that country. We have never failed to bring such instances to their attention, and so far they have never failed in giving us reasonable satisfaction

RONDEAU HARBOUR.

Mr. A. B. McCOIG (West Kent). Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a couple of articles which have appeared in the Chatham local papers protesting against the provincial authorities removing a large portion of the forest on Rondeau park. One of those articles states that the provincial government is going right ahead and is destroying the natural forest which protects the Rondeau harbour. That is the statement of a Mr. Watson, who is a prominent lumberman of that particular district, and is well acquainted with the locality, and knows how important this forest is to the Rondeau harbour on which the Dominion government are spending three hundred thousand dollars to make it the best harbour on Lake Erie. The action of this government in this respect has met with the general approval of people in the western part of Ontario. They regret to see this forest, which consists of hundreds of acres, damaged to such an extent that by the removal of large trees the smaller ones are likely to be overthrown by the heavy storms that occur in the fall of the year. I think that if the Minister of Public Works will take up this matter with the Minister of Lands and Mines of the provincial government, the latter gentleman may be induced to cease operations, and I know that such action on the part of this government would meet with general approval, because there is a very widespread protest about the removal of these trees. I think that last fall when some of the leading Toronto papers took the matter up, it was generally understood that the work would be stopped, at least for a while. I hope that the minister will take the matter up with the provincial authorities, and see if measures cannot be taken to protect that harbour, and prevent the destruction of the timber which beautifies that part of the country.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY. The matter to which my hon. friend has called attention is one of a good deal of importance. But he will realize that the only ground upon which this government could intervene would be that the cutting away of the forest is likely to be injurious to the harbour and injurious to navigation. I can understand that under certain circumstances that might be the case; whether it is the case at Rondeau I am not at present prepared to say. However, the matter is of a good deal of importance, and I should be glad to communicate with the proper minister of the provincial government in regard to it. I shall be very glad indeed if the views my hon. friend has presented can be met.

TREATMENT OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to what appears to be a very serious grievance in connection with the exclusion of immigrants. There is a requirement that immigrants entering Canada shall each be possessed of a certain sum of money, and I have information to-day as to a case in Toronto in this connection which is one of great hardship. These immigrants are most of them illiterate and unable to speak the English language, so that they are not aware of what qualifications will be required of them when they arrive at a Canadian port. If they have not the required amount of money per capita they are then deported. A change has recently been made in the regulations in this respect, as heretofore each immigrant was not required to be in possession of a sum of money. I submit that the government should take precaution to inform those immigrants on the other side what qualifications will be required of them, and not have them come to a Canadian port under a misapprehension and be subject to the harsh treatment of deportation.

Mr. OLIVER. This question lies at the very root of the subject of immigration. It is a question as to whether we are to exercise a selective and restrictive policy or not. I take it that the will of parliament is, as expressed in the Immigration Act, that we should exercise a selective and restrictive policy in regard to immigration, and the government must carry out the will of parliament which cannot be done without occasional cases of hardship. Let the members of this House thoroughly understand that in giving sanction to restrictive and selective laws they assume responsibility on behalf of themselves and their constituents for the hardships that necessarily arise in the adminstration of these laws. It is not possible that every person in every part of the world who makes up his mind to come to Canada shall be previously informed by the government of Canada as to the regulations. All that can be done is that the government shall do what is reasonably possible to give due notice to the world as to what the requirements are. In 1908 an order in council was passed requiring that each immigrant should have a stated sum of money in order that he might be admitted into Canada. The first order in council passed required the money qualification to cover a certain term, and when that term expired another order in council was passed continuing the money qualification until the order should be repealed. These orders were, of course, passed under the authority of the Immigration Act. It is, therefore, more than two years since notice was given as to a money qualification being required. In view of the difficulty that people generally might not be conversant with the letter of the law, at the close of the last immigration season, on the 4th of June, 1909, a departmental circular was issued which gave notice to every one it could reach as to the policy of and the administration of the Department of the Interior in regard to the selection of immigrants. On June the 4th, 1909, this circular was sent to the steamship companies, to booking agents, to anybody we knew of who was interested in immigration, and the steamship companies reprinted the circular and published it in Europe as a part of their information to immigrants. This circular set out that each immigrant was required to have $25 in cash on his arrival in Canada except he was going to farm work or going to certain specified relatives who were able and willing to support him. The shipping companies reprinted that circular and it was circulated through Europe by them. I submit to the House and to the country that the Immigration Department has done all that reasonably can be expected of it to give notice to the world as to what our regulations and requirements would be. The assertion that there has been any change in these regulations in regard to the amount of money required is not correct. It was found after administering the immigration law for nearly a year under the circular issued, that the circular was not in all particulars supported by the law. That is to say, there was a difference of opinion between the officers of the government who drafted the circular and the courts as to the support that there was in the law for the terms of the circular. The government forthwith passed another order in council on the 15th of March, 1910, which unquestionably brought the law actually in accord with the terms of the circular of June 4, 1909. In order that there might be no question as to the ampleness of the notice, care was taken that the substantial terms of the circular of June 4, 1909, should not be varied by order in council of the 15th of March, 1910. I submit, therefore, that so long as parliament places on the statute-book a law providing for the selection and restriction of immigration, the government is bound to carry that policy out, and I submit further, that the government has given all reasonable notice as to the terms of the law that is being enforced and the necessity for a money qualification.

Mr. MACDONELL. I have no fault to find with a restrictive or selective law; my point is that in all fairness to these people a test should be made on the other side and not when they land here.

OUTSIDE CIVIL SERVANTS.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation this year in respect to the reorganization or increases in salaries to the outside civil servants?

Mr. FISHER. The Act of which notice is on the order paper provides for considerable increases to the Inland Revenue, Customs and Post Office outside service.

THE BANKING ACT.

Mr. EMMERSON. Will the Bank Act be taken into consideration this session, and, if not, has the government under consideration the appointment of a commission to inquire, between now and next session, into the workings of the Bank Act of Canada?

Mr. FIELDING. To both questions I shall have to answer 'No.' I had anticipated that there was a prospect of the Bill being got through before this session ended, but the indications are now that there would not be sufficient time to carry it through its various stages. Our intention is to deal with it early next session. With regard to the appointment of a commission, I do not think a commission could obtain any information that is not accessible to officers of the department who may be instructed to study the question.

NAVAL SERVICE OF CANADA.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into committee on Bill (No. 95) respecting the naval service of Canada.

Mr. DOHERTY. I would ask the right hon. the leader of the House, if it is possible, that he should allow this Bill to stand over in view of the illness of the leader of the opposition. The measure is of considerable importance, and the leader of this side of the House, who is unfortunately absent to-day, would naturally feel desirous to be present at the discussion of it. I quite understand it is not a matter of right, but if the leader of the government could see his way to let the order stand, it would be very convenient.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and I think to some extent my duty to try and meet the wishes of my hon. friend (Mr. Doherty), I will not press the Bill to-day. I will try and arrange with my hon. friend on the other side as to when it can be taken up.

Motion withdrawn.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution.

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Civil Service Act by providing for the appointment of temporary clerks for the compilation of any decennial census, who may be employed for a period not exceeding three years, and who shall be eligible for the annual statutory increases provided by the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1908; by providing that the salary of a temporary clerk employed under section 23 of the said Act shall not be greater than the minimum salary authorized for subdivision B of the second division, subject to be increased as authorized by section 33 of the said Act; and for the payment to collectors of customs of a salary not greater than $4,500 per annum; and for the payment of officers of inland revenue salaries not greater than the following maximum, viz.: inspectors, $3,200; collectors, $2,800; deputy collectors, $2,200; accountants, $1,800; special class excisemen, $2,500; first, second and third class excisemen, $1,500; probationary excisemen, $600; stenographers and typewriters, $700; messengers, $800; and for the payment of officers of the Post Office Department, as follows, viz.: post office inspectors on appointment, $2,500, with an annual increase to a maximum of $3,500; assistant post office inspectors and superintendents of the railway mail service on appointment, $1,600, with an annual increase to a maximum of $2,500, and to authorize the increase to the minimum of the salary of any such officers whose salary is at present less than the minimum; and assistant postmasters, on appointment, a salary of not less than $1,100 and not more than $2,800, and that the said salaries and increases shall be payable as from the first day of April, 1910.

Mr. GERVAIS. Is it the intention of the minister to appoint more than one Census Commissioner?

Mr. FISHER. This resolution refers only to the appointment of extra clerks required for compiling the census returns in Ottawa. Under the present Act temporary clerks can only be employed for six months, and the census clerks will be required certainly for from two to three years. By this legislation we will be empowered to employ temporary clerks for a longer period than the Act provides.

Mr. GERVAIS. There is a provision in the Census Act for the permanent taking of information in connection with the census; who is to be in charge of the whole of that new extra work in connection with the new general census?

Mr. FISHER. The census commissioner.

Mr. GERVAIS. Mr. Blue?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. GERVAIS. Is it the intention of the minister to appoint some one to act jointly with Mr. Blue in supervising generally the census in all provinces?

Mr. FISHER. No, we have the secretary of the Census Bureau and other chief officers. It is not my intention to appoint any chief officers for the general work. There will be census commissioners appointed in each province, but they will be outside and not in the inside service under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. GERVAIS. There will be no joint commissioner with Mr. Blue?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. GERVAIS. Is it not a fact that for the taking of the census of 1900 there was a joint commissioner with Mr. Blue? I refer to Mr. Côté.

Mr. FISHER. No, Mr. Côté was the assistant and occupied the same position with relation to Mr. Blue that Mr. St. Denis does.

Mr. GERVAIS. There will be no assistant to Mr. Blue for the next census?

Mr. FISHER. None outside the present secretary of the office in the department—Mr. St. Denis.

Mr. GERVAIS. Will Mr. St. Denis have the same powers as Mr. Blue?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. GERVAIS. There will be no supervision or control at all beyond that of Mr. Blue?

Mr. FISHER. Certainly not.

Mr. GERVAIS. I understood Mr. Côté had equal power with Mr. Blue.

Mr. FISHER. No, my hon. friend is entirely misinformed. Mr. Blue had absolute power and control of the whole census, and Mr. Côté was one of his assistant officers.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that provision is made that these clerks are to be allowed a salary not greater than the minimum salary authorized for subdivision B of the second division. That is in reference to clerks employed to compile the census?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. They are to be appointed as ordinary temporary clerks commencing at $500 just like temporary clerks do now.

Mr. FISHER. The only difference is that we will be entitled to employ them for a longer period than we are now authorized to appoint temporary clerks for, and being employed for perhaps two or three years, they will be entitled to statutory increases, the same as permanent clerks will be during the period of their employment.

Mr. SPROULE. That is an increase of $50?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Then they come in at $500?

Mr. FISHER. Under this Act we are arranging that some temporary clerks may be employed in subdivision B of the second division the same as in the third division, and it may be that a few of the temporary clerks for the census who will have charge of a block of other clerks will come in at a higher degree—that is at $800 instead of $500—at the minimum of the second division instead of the minimum of the third division.

Mr. SPROULE. Then you have not provided for that in your resolution, because you say:

That it is expedient to amend the Civil Service Act by providing for the appointment of temporary clerks for the compilation of any decennial census, who may be employed for a period not exceeding three years, and who shall be eligible for the annual statutory increases provided by the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1908; by providing that the salary of a temporary clerk——

Mr. FISHER. That applies to the whole Act, and not to census employees only. One clause of the Act of 1908 defines our powers with regard to the census. Then the resolution says:

—by providing that the salary of a temporary clerk employed under section 23 of the said Act shall not be greater than the minimum salary authorized by subdivision 'B' of the second division, subject to be increased as authorized by section 33 of the said Act.

Under the present Act all temporary clerks have to go into the third division, subdivision 'B'. This is a provision that certain temporary clerks employed for a short time may be brought into subdivision 'B' of the second division, instead of subdivision 'B' of the third division. This has no reference particularly to the census.

Mr. J. HAGGART. What is the salary that they are entitled to in subdivision 'B' of the second class?

Mr. FISHER. It begins at $800.

Mr. J. HAGGART. You could employ the whole of these clerks that you take in at $800.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, if I thought of doing such a thing, but I would not think of it. The Civil Service Commissioners have found that we have frequently had applications from ministers through their deputies for the temporary employment of men of a higher character for special work, and it has been found impossible to get these men at $500 a year. We have, therefore, made this provision in order that they may be brought in at the minimum of the second division instead of the minimum of the third division. The Act of 1908 provides that temporary clerks shall come in at the minimum salary, and that has been held to be the minimum salary of subdivision 'B' at $500. As I explained to my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart), it has been found difficult to get men of the desired class for temporary work, and we therefore propose to pay them the minimum salary of subdivision 'B' of the second division instead of that of subdivision 'B' of the third division. That will be done only where the work is entitled to be so paid.

Mr. SPROULE. They start at $800, and go up to $1,600.

Mr. FISHER. I am talking of temporary clerks only, and temporary clerks could only be employed, except in census work, for six months in the year with no statutory increase. If a man is employed temporarily he can only be employed for six months. He can be paid at the rate of either $500, or at the rate of $800.

Mr. SPROULE. But your resolution provides that the term is to be three years.

Mr. FISHER. That is for the census people?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, but they are employed as temporary clerks?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. And they commence at $800, and run up to $1,600?

Mr. FISHER. A few of them who may be employed as superior clerks, and put into that division, instead of into the third division, would commence at $800, but they would only be employed for three years, and during those three years they could only increase at the rate of $50 per year, or up to $950. There is another provision later on in the resolution, which says that temporary clerks may also have the addition which is permitted under section 33 of the Act, in case the employment is of a character which is not sufficiently paid for by the minimum salary of the class. For instance, if the Public Works Department required to employ an engineer for three months, under the present Act it could only pay him at the rate of $500 a year, and it would be impossible to get an engineer at that rate. We make provision that exceptional temporary clerks may be put into the second division, where the minimum is $800 a year. I do not propose to apply that generally to the census employees, whose work is in a class by itself, and is of a nature that would hardly justify such a provision, although I think that a few of them ought to be paid more than $500 a year. I may say that out of 200 or 300 census employees there would probably be not more than half-a-dozen who would be put in the second division.

Mr. DOHERTY. I notice that the resolution provides for the payment to collectors of customs of a salary not exceeding $4,500. I have no doubt that in fixing this amount the hon. minister has given full consideration to all the circumstances that ought to determine the amount of the salary. I would like, however, to suggest that there are certain ports where collectors of customs handle a very large volume of business and a very large amount of revenue, and that there has been a very great increase in that business and that revenue since the salaries were fixed at the present amounts. Furthermore, in view of the great increase in the expense of living that has taken place since that time, the government might well take into consideration whether in such cases it should not pay even a larger salary than $4,500 a year. I have at present in my mind the Collectorship of Customs of the port of Montreal. The immense increase in the business of that port and in the revenues collected there are matters of such public notoriety that it is not necessary for me to go into details in that regard. That immense increase involves a large increase in the work imposed on the collector and a large increase in the responsibilities laid on his shoulders. Under these circumstances, I think I may be pardoned if I take it upon myself to urge upon the minister a further consideration of the question whether in a port of such importance the services of the collector should not be remunerated at a larger salary than $4,500 a year. When one considers the salaries paid to men in ordinary business life, whose responsibilities do not compare with those of the Collector of Customs of Montreal, it seems to me that the government might see its way to pay a larger salary. I make no reference to the qualifications of the gentleman who now occupies that position; I refer to the matter generally. If I did make reference to his qualifications, I am sure that the minister would agree with me that they would very materially strengthen the case which I am endeavouring to make, that as regards a port of such importance, at all events, the salary suggested can hardly be considered adequate or fair.

Mr. FISHER. The matter which my hon. friend has brought up is one which is more for the Minister of Customs than for myself. The Civil Service Act, of which this Bill is an amendment, fixes the salaries of various officers outside of Ottawa. The Act as it stands limits the salary of collectors of customs to $4,000, and it is proposed to raise that to $4,500. The question as to whether a larger salary should be provided for collectors at such important ports as Montreal and Toronto is a question which I must refer to the Minister of Customs.

Mr. DOHERTY. I am glad to find that provision is being made for an increase to the extent of $500; but I have felt it my duty to point out the considerations which to my mind conclusively establish that the increase being made, while it is to be commended, does not adequately meet what justice requires in the case of the particular position to which I refer. The minister might at least have seen his way to adding the round $1,000 to the existing salary, and even then he would be very well within the mark.

Mr. PATERSON. I may say that the reason I asked the Minister of Agriculture to change the schedule of the Civil Service Act which fixes the maximum salary of collectors of customs at $4,000 was that I might be able, with the consent of Council, to given an increase of salary to the collector in Montreal and perhaps also to the collector at Toronto. The hon. minister thinks we should make the amount $5,000 instead of $4,500. Increasing the maximum will not enable us to deal with any great number of collectors of customs, because we would not feel warranted in asking that the salaries of many of them should exceed $4,000, except at Montreal and Toronto, and possibly Winnipeg. The business done at Winnipeg does not seem to warrant it, but the cost of living there seems to do so. There is difficulty, however, in this matter. The Collector of Customs at Montreal is certainly a good officer, and we value him; but in the days gone by we could not give him more than $4,000, because it seemed to be rather an anomaly that the deputy Minister of Customs at Ottawa, who is charged with the administration of the law all over the Dominion, only got $4,000, and it seemed to me that an officer subordinate to him should not be given any more, perhaps not as much. But a year ago the House was considerate enough to advance the salaries of the deputies, so that the Commissioner of Customs now gets $5,000. That opened the way to removing the difficulty which I had experienced before. If we were to advance the maximum salary of any collector of customs to $5,000, that would bring up the question of advancing the salary of the deputy, which I suppose would bring up the question of advancing the salaries of all the deputies, and we would be in the same position that we were in before. Of course, we have to proceed gradually in these matters and try to do justice. In another year there may have to be a further revision of salaries. Circumstances seem to point in that direction, as valuable officers require more than was paid in years gone by. Of course, we could not now change the amount in this resolution even if we desired to do so. Another resolution would have to be brought down. So, perhaps, we had better let this go, for the time being at any rate, and at another time something may be done in the direction of what my hon. friend desires.

Mr. CROSBY. I understand that the salary of the collector of customs in the city of Halifax has been at the same figure for upwards of 30 years. We have a man in that position who was taken from his business and appointed 4 or 5 years ago. He is a very competent officer, he enjoys the confidence of all classes of people in Halifax, and I am sure also he enjoys the confidence of the Customs Department, and we in Halifax think his salary should be increased. I need not press the matter further, because I have no doubt that the hon. minister knows the gentleman very well, and I hope he will see his way clear to increase his salary to at least $4,500.

Mr. SPROULE. The objection to this resolution is that it only deals with a fraction of the service. The minister has admitted over and over again that the salaries of various classes are low and ought to be raised. Therefore, in submitting a resolution to the House, I would have expected that he would have included the whole service. In many cases we are increasing the salaries of the heads, but not those of the lower grades. If the increased cost of living entitles the higher officers to an increase, surely it ought to apply to those of the lower grades as well; yet they are not included in this list. When the government brings down a measure to deal with this question at all, it seems to me they should bring down one that would include the whole service entitled to an increase of salary.

Mr. FISHER. I may say that in the old Civil Service Act there is a schedule which fixed certain salaries of the outside service in the Departments of Inland Revenue, Customs and Post Office. In other departments of the outside service the ministers are free to increase the salaries of the officers as they see fit out of a lump vote. In this resolution the Minister of Inland Revenue proposes a change, raising the whole schedule from the higher officers down to the very lowest.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have already explained to the House the features of the amendment to the Post Office Act. I intend by this Act to give increases to four categories of the outside service in the Post Office Department: First, to the post office inspectors; second, to the assistant post office inspectors; third, to the superintendents of the railway mail service; and fourth, to the assistant postmasters. Under the present scale, the salary of a post office inspector on appointment is $2,000, with an annual increase of $50 for the first six years, and of $100 per annum thereafter, up to the maximum of $2,600. For instance, the post office inspector at Halifax on appointment receives $2,000, and $50 a year of an increase during six years; after that when he has a salary of $2,300, he receives an annual increase of $100 until he reaches his maximum of $2,600. Under the new scale which we are proposing by these resolutions, an inspector will be appointed at $2,500 a year, and he will receive a yearly increase of $100 until he reaches the new maximum of $3,500. Now, there are inspectors in the service who have not yet reached the maximum of their salary. By this legislation we are authorized to pay them hereafter the $2,500 even if they have not reached that figure, and every year they will receive an increase until they reach the new maximum of $3,500.

Now, with regard to assistant post office inspectors. Under the present scale, the salary of an assistant inspector on appointment is $1,200, with an increase of $50 a year for the first six years, and $100 a year thereafter up to the maximum of $1,800. Under the new scale, their salary on appointment will be $1,600, with an increase of $100 yearly up to the new maximum of $2,500.

Now, with regard to the superintendents of railway mail service in the different districts, under the present scale, the salary on appointment is $1,500, with an annual increase of $100 up to the maximum of $1,800. Under the new scale, the salary on appointment will be $1,600, with an annual increase of $100 up to the new maximum of $2,500.

Now, with regard to the assistant postmasters. I stated to the House the other day that the assistant postmasters in the larger offices were very hard working men, and that in effect the whole work of the office was under their control, and much depended on their ability and efficiency. Under the present scale, the minimum salary of an assistant postmaster is $1,100, and the maximum salary is $2,000, the maximum depending on the revenue of the office. Under the present scale, when the postage collections exceed $80,000, he receives a salary to the maximum of $2,000; when the postage collections run from $60,000 to $80,000, he receives $1,800; when the postage collections run from $40,000 to $60,000, his salary is $1,600; when the postage collections run from $20,000 to $40,000, his salary is $1,400; when the postage collections are less than $20,000, his salary is $1,100 on appointment to $1,400, as the Postmaster General may determine. Under the new law that scale is changed, and the minimum will be $1,100 automatically. The maximum will be according to a scale which I will read to the House:

Class 1.—When postage collections are from $800,000 to $1,000,000 and over.	$2,800
Class 2.—When postage collections are from $500,000 to $800,000..	2,600
Class 3.—When postage collections are from $250,000 to $500,000..	2,400
Class 4.—When postage collections are from $150,000 to $250,000..	2,200
Class 5.—When postage collections are from $80,000 to $150,000..	2,000
Class 6.—When postage collections are from $60,000 to $80,000..	1,800
Class 7.—When postage collections are from $40,000 to $60,000..	1,600
Class 8.—When postage collections are from $20,000 to $40,000..	1,400
Class 9.—When postage collections are less than $20,000.. .. .. to $1,400 as the Postmaster General determines.	1,100

This is the new scale of salaries provided for the city post offices according to the postage collections in these offices.

Mr. BLAIN. What about the larger towns?

Mr. LEMIEUX. In the towns the postmasters are paid out of the revenue, while in the city offices they are paid out of appropriations. In the town post offices the postmaster appoints his own staff, and we bring them under this scale when the postage collections and revnues are between $20,000 and $25,000, and the population is in the neighborhood of 12,000, when we also give a free city delivery. These increases will affect 16 inspectors, 18 assistant inspectors, 8 railway mail superintendents, 7 assistant postmasters, and the amount involved will be $10,800 a year. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) referred to railway mail clerks. I stated the other day in the House that in my judgment the outside service, including not only the officials in the larger post offices, but the railway mail clerks as well, should come under the Civil Service Act. It is my intention during the recess to adjust their salaries, prepare a proper classification, and try to bring them under the Act which applies now to the inside service. In 1903 the railway mail clerks received an increase when Sir Wm. Mulock was Postmaster General, and I cannot, in justice to the other classes of employees in the outside service, discriminate in their favour. True, last year I increased the salaries of the lower classes, the stampers, the sorters and the labourers but there was no dissent to that proposition, and the general opinion was that their salaries should have been increased long before. In the higher classes it is a little more difficult and delicate, but I shall have to look into the matter, with a view of doing substantial justice to all. We are dealing with some of the higher officials this year, but it is much easier to discuss the salaries of a few whose efficiency is universally recognized, than to enter into all the intricacies of the other grades of the post office service. I believe that the increases proposed this year meet with the approval of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister gives a very peculiar reason for not increasing the salaries of the middle classes this year. He told us he increased the salaries of the highest classes because they were the highest, and of the lowest because they were the lowest, but the middle classes he has not dealt with at all.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am not prejudiced at all against the railway mail clerks; on the contrary I wish to do justice towards them. But they cannot sustain their claim against the ordinary clerks in the post office who have not had an increase and who do exactly the same work, and often under considerably more difficult circumstances.

Mr. SPROULE. Does not the minister think that their position and work are as different from those of the man established in a permanent office as day is from night? They are subject to dangers, privations, hardships and extra expense that the man sitting in his office knows nothing about.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is true in a way, but still there are good answers to all that. The railway mail clerk is meeting with dangers in the exercise of his functions, but on the other hand, he works only during some days of the week and he has days off. The clerks are closeted in the post offices, and they have to work day in and day out. Of course, they do not encounter the same dangers, but they have not the same facilities for breathing pure air as the railway mail clerks have. The railway mail clerks, it is true, are exposed to some dangers, but are not commercial travellers also exposed to dangers?

Mr. SPROULE. Not to the same extent at all.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They are on the same train.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister must admit that there is a wonderful difference with respect to the danger between the man who is in the hind car and the man who is in the car next the engine.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, I admit that the railway mail clerk is not far from the engine, but, if the train runs well, if there is no accident, there is no more danger for him than for the commercial traveller in the first or second-class car or in the parlour car. I am not at all against the claims of the railway mail clerks. I simply say that I would not be inclined to discriminate between their case and that of the clerks in the offices. It requires a little investigation on my part, and I wish to be fair and just towards the different classes in the service. If I were to give an increase this year to the railway mail clerks I am sure that I would have a very strong protest from the clerks in the post offices. I must take the opportunity during recess of going into this matter. Time flies, and it should not take too much time. The railway mail clerks have already received a substantial increase, and they can afford to wait a few months more.

Mr. RUSSELL. Would the Postmaster General tell us what was the increase that the railway mail clerks received in 1903?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The mail clerks in 1903 were granted a substantial increase in their salaries, and they were the only branch of the service dealt with at that time. Up to 1903 the railway mail clerks were appointed in three divisions, known as the first, second and third classes. Men in the third class were appointed at $480, after two years going up to $520, after five years $560, and after ten years $640. In the second class they started at $600 and increased, after two years to $640, after five years to $720, and after ten years to $800. The first class started at $720, and increased, after two years, to $800, after five years to $880, and after ten years years to $960, and $960 was the highest salary to which any railway mail clerk could attain in addition to his mileage. It will then be seen that the increases in the railway mail clerks' salaries were at the rate of $40 for two years which is equivalent to $20 per year. It did not necessarily follow that when a man had reached the maximum of a class to which he belonged he would be promoted to the next class; in fact, in a great many instances he had to wait until there were vacancies in the other class before he could be advanced to a higher class. As a matter of fact he had sometimes to wait for two or three years before passing from one class to another. Owing to representations made with regard to their work, the dangers they ran, the hardships they suffered, and at the request of the railway mail clerks themselves, the different classes were abolished in 1903. Under the change made by Sir William Mulock a railway mail clerk is now appointed at a salary of $500 per annum, after six months probation, with mileage—my hon. friend knows what mileage is—and he goes on uninterruptedly, unless there is some report against him, by increases of $50 per year, until the maximum of $1,200 is reached. Under the old arrangement his maximum was $960. Since 1903 he has reached a very fair and substantial increase. His maximum is now $1,200 besides his mileage. Some railway mail clerks can make salaries reaching the very respectable figure of $1,900—not many, but some. This was a very considerable increase as the following figures will show. Under the old law a man starting at the minimum and going to the maximum salary of the first-class, $960, would attain that maximum in a period of seventeen years, but as above stated, where delays took place in promotion from one class to another until vacancies occurred these delays would probably double that time before he would receive the maximum salary.

Now, a man going on at $500 and receiving his increase year by year, which will be granted to him if he is worthy, attains the maximum, not of $960 but of $1,200, in fourteen years as against seventeen years in the old days. The maximum has been increased by $240 and the time in which the maximum can be attained decreased by three years. Under the old Act if he had been granted his increase and promotion without delay, which was never known to occur, he would have earned in seventeen years $11,560, while under the new Act he earns $16,350. Under the old Act the first class railway mail clerk who had reached the maximum salary would have received $5,760 during his last six years, and during that same period under the new Act he would have received $6,740, or an increase of 17 per cent, which salary would continue year after year as long as he remains in the service. In 1903, when Sir William Mulock increased their salaries, the railway mail clerks were in a very inferior position and he placed them on a very much better footing. It is my desire and intention to still further improve their position, but it would not be just to the other classes of employees in the service who have no mileage allowance and who have not received any substantial increase in the past. During the recess I intend to bring about this reform, which I have contemplated for many years, and they will receive justice at my hands.

Mr. G. V. WHITE. In an answer given by the Postmaster General to the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) the minister placed the stampers and sorters of the city post offices in the same class as the railway mail clerks. Are they required to pass the same examination as the railway mail clerks do?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Many of the railway mail clerks are appointed without the examination required by the Civil Service Act, but with the expansion of the postal service, especially in the west, it was found impossible to get railway mail clerks fully equipped, and so we take the best young men we can secure for the service, and after a period of probation they pass their examination and then come within the law. They have got to pass a more difficult examination than the ordinary stamper and sorter, but the clerks in the city post offices have to pass just as stiff an examination as the railway mail clerks.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. CROSBY. I am glad to find that the Postmaster General is providing by this Bill for increases in the salaries of some of the outside service, and also that it is his intention to take up during this year the other branches of the outside service. Last year I urged upon him that in the cities, particularly in cities like Halifax, where the mails come in at all hours, and men sometimes have to be on duty for eight or ten hours waiting for them to arrive, special consideration should be given. I tried also to impress upon the Postmaster General that now that the Post Office Department is showing a large surplus, the minimum salary of a post office clerk in a city should be not less than $1,000 a year. Money is a great temptation to a man when he needs it, and occasionally we find some of the men in the post offices going astray. The increase of salaries has not gone far enough, and I hope the day is not far distant when no clerk will be employed in a city post office and expected to keep a family on less than $1,000 a year. Perhaps the maximum need not be much higher than that. I hope and trust that the Postmaster General will take this matter up during the year, and see his way to come to that conclusion. With regard to the letter-carriers——

Mr. LEMIEUX. They have had a substantial increase.

Mr. CROSBY. I am very much pleased with what the Postmaster General has done for them, but I hope the day is not far distant when a letter-carrier will not be asked to work for less than $800 a year. There are very few of the post office clerks who are not married. There is a rule in our banks that a clerk is not allowed to marry until his salary is $1,200 a year, and I think there should be a somewhat similar rule in our city post offices.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to be permitted to ask a question of the Postmaster General. Section 115 of the Postal Guide of 1909 reads:

All letters and other mailable matter despatched from Ottawa by the Speaker, or chief clerk of the Senate or of the House of Commons or the librarian of parliament, as well as all mail matter directed to the Senate, to the House of Commons or to the library of parliament, at Ottawa.

In the Postal Guide for 1910, the words, 'as well as all mail matter directed to the Senate, to the House of Commons, or to the Library of Parliament, at Ottawa', are omitted. May I ask under whose authority this was done?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have not fresh in my mind the order in council which dealt with that matter immediately after last session. As my hon. friend's question is not germane to the Bill, I would ask him to bring it up at another sitting of the House, and I will give him the information. At all events, I may say that nothing of the privileges of members has been barred by any order in council that has been passed.

Mr. BLAIN. It does not apply to members. I will bring it up at another time.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would like to ask the Postmaster General if stampers and sorters have to pass the same examination as railway mail clerks?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Not the same examination; but outside of the stampers and sorters there are in the post offices several classes of clerks who have as difficult and intricate work to perform mentally as the railway mail clerks, and who have as severe an examination to pass. I refer, for instance, to those in the Registry Branch, and those in the Inspector's Branch.

Mr. RUSSELL. But these other clerks receive salaries going as high as $1,500 a year

Mr. LEMIEUX. The clerks of the different classes can pass from one class to another provided there is a vacancy. The railway mail clerks, when appointed after their probationary period, get $500, and they go up by regular annual increases to $1,200, and they get the mileage allowance besides. It is true that the mileage allowance is only intended as compensation for their living expenses on the road; but suppose you should offer a railway mail clerk employment in a post office at the same salary, without any mileage allowance, he would refuse. He regards his mileage allowance as an addition to his salary, and not merely as compensation to pay for his board. Let me give an instance. The other day a young man who is employed as railway mail clerk belonging to the district of Montreal, asked to be transferred to the Inspector's Branch where there was a vacancy. He was quite competent. As railway mail clerk he had reached a salary of $600, if I mistake not, plus his mileage allowance. He was transferred to the Inspector's Branch where there is no mileage allowance, and since then he has been writing the department to get his mileage allowance, and says he never expected to lose it. I replied that in the Inspector's Branch there is no mileage, but that if he would return to his former position as mail clerk, he would get that allowance. I do not know what I may do as he is an efficient clerk. I may decide to increase his pay after a while, but he is not entitled to any increase just now.

Mr. RUSSELL. In the case of a town where the postmaster receives from $1,300 to $1,500 per year, does he pay his own clerks out of that?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Resolutions reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. FISHER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 205) to amend the Civil Service Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 103) to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act.—Mr. Pugsley.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Since this Bill was last before the committee, I have been endeavouring to see if I could not meet the suggestions thrown out by my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker), and also my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson), and two or three other hon. gentlemen opposite. I am going to propose that there should be added to the first section this clause:

The foregoing provisions of this section shall not apply to small wharfs, not costing more than $1,000, groynes, or other bank or beach protection works, which do not interfere with navigation.

I think that will meet all the objections raised by hon. gentlemen opposite. If in practice it be found that there are still any objections to the Act, those can be met by amendment in the future. I am sure that the committee will realize that my only object is to keep control of the navigable waters in the public interest, and I would not authorize the chief engineer of my department to interfere with small wharfs or structures, such as my hon. friend from Halton referred to, unless they really and substantially interfered with navigation. The great object is to have a law under which people will recognize that if they are building substantial structures within navigable waters, they must first submit their plans to the department for approval.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. The hon. minister might add boat-houses.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no objection.

Mr. BARKER. I think that covers what my hon. friend from Halton spoke of, but I mentioned that in harbours there were occasionally rights of property where the title ran out into somewhat deep water and where a man might want to construct a wharf or elevator or something of that kind, and his building or structure would be actually in the water. I do not want to interfere at all with the passage of this Bill, the general object of which, I admit, is good. But what I ask is whether the hon. minister would see any objection to add the following as the last clause:

Nothing in this Act contained shall affect the right of any person to construct or maintain any structure upon his own property.

That is only to preserve the right of property, often very considerable property. Where a man owns a right in a harbour, he owns the soil out under the water some distance. It is his property the same as the dry land. That man ought to be at liberty to build so far as his title goes, and yet I am not sure but that under the first clause of the Bill he might not be prevented by the government from building even on his own property. I would suggest the consideration of those words; if the hon. gentleman objects to them, I won't press them.

Mr. CONMEE. I would like to call attention to the condition of affairs at Port Arthur and Fort William that might be affected by the motion which the hon. member for Hamilton proposes. The water lots there run out two or three thousand feet. The indentations of the bay are deeper in some portions of the harbour than in others, and therefore the lots are not all of equal distance from the shore line. Now, if the owner of those lots has the right to obstruct navigation on any of those lots the harbour would close up. I had occasion to look into the matter a little while ago, and I understand that the patents issued by the provincial authorities in later years all contain a reservation, they deed the property subject to the right of navigation, they are not to do anything on the property that would interfere with navigation. Formerly that precaution was not the practice. I understand that is the practice of the federal government, the department issues patents embodying the same reservation. Now, in case of most of the structures such as elevators and the larger wharfs, people are compelled to advertise in the papers their application to build, and frequently I have been called in by the board of trade or the city council, in both cities I may say, for the purpose of getting changes made in the proposed plan or location of these structures, in order that navigation may not be improperly interrupted. The amendment might work well in some places, but I would be a little afraid of it in these two cities.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I see an objection for the reasons which have been presented by my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) and also for other reasons which may be applicable to other localities. I have in mind my own province of New Brunswick. I think upon all the rivers of the province the old grants above the flow of the tide carry the ownership to the middle of the river, even on large rivers like the St. John. Therefore, if the clause were put in which my hon. friend suggests, the effect would be to remove from the department control over the erection of structures upon the navigable waters of those rivers. Then in the case of the foreshores in harbours which are owned by the federal government under the British North America Act, if the suggestion were carried out and a party should obtain from the Department of Marine and Fisheries a lease or grant of the foreshore, he might then go on in defiance of the Public Works Department and erect any kind of structure upon that property, because under the law, even if he had a lease from the Marine Department, that would be his property. Of course, if he had a quit claim, which is sometimes given, it would be absolutely his property. While I would be glad to meet, if possible, the view of my hon. friend, I am afraid it would make the Bill inoperative in many respects.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. At Gananoque, the Gananoque river empties into the St. Lawrence about a quarter of a mile below the lower dam in the Gananoque river, and the owners of lots on either side of the river own to the centre of the channel, by virtue of a grant from the government to the founder of the village. If the amendment of my hon. friend from Hamilton was adopted, it might have the effect of destroying the navigation on that river. All our warehouses and factories are situated on either side of it, and vessels land their coal on docks built upon it. Under that amendment some person might be able to build structures out into the water which would destroy every factory in the town.

Mr. BARKER. As I said, I will not press the objection if the minister doesn't wish to accept it. I know there are a great many cases where the property right is very valuable, but I would trust to the justice of the government to see that no mischief was done in such a case. With regard to other cases, such as Port Arthur, the patents provide that nothing should be done to restrict navigation. That is a common reservation in many of the patents, and this amount would not interfere with that at all.

Mr. JAMESON. I have no desire to obstruct the passage of this Bill; no doubt there are many cases in which it may be desirable to have the authority which, under this Act, it is proposed to give the Department of Public Works and the Governor in Council. At the same time, I wish to draw attention to one fact with respect to the conditions of harbours on the Bay of Fundy. The hon. minister knows very well that there is a tremendous rise and fall of the tide on that bay. I may tell him that so far as the province of Nova Scotia is concerned, there are a large number of settlements along the coast where grants of the foreshore or water lots have been made to the owners of the upland. Those grants extend out some hundreds of feet, but in many cases they do not extend out so far as the tide recedes. Consequently, at certain times these water lots, or the foreshore, are exposed. Now, in order to build a wharf on these foreshores, and some people do require facilities of that kind, they are compelled to expend more than a sum of $1,000. The sum of $1,000, as the minister knows, expended on a structure of that character on the shores of the Bay of Fundy, would be wasted, for the structure would not exist for a single year. Consequently, when he has placed the amount as low as $1,000, up to which it will be competent for persons to build a structure of that character without obtaining permission from the department, or without having the site of the structure approved by the Governor in Council, I must say that I think that will work a serious hardship to the owners of those foreshores. In the harbour at Digby, for instance, where the tide recedes many hundreds of feet, and beyond the point to which the foreshores are granted to the owners of the upland, wharfs are from time to time being built, costing from $3,000 to $6,000. Some improvements of that nature are contemplated there now, and this Act would interfere with them very seriously. I dare say that on rivers it is necessary that the Governor in Council should have that authority to determine on a site, but it would be a serious thing to have this clause 5 put into force, permitting the destruction of an unapproved wharf under the authority of the Governor in Council. If instead of $1,000 the limit could be made struction of an unapproved wharf in the open sea coast under the authority of the Governor in Council. If instead of $1,000 the limit could be made a higher amount it would be some advantage.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This being a general law applicable to all navigable waters, it would not do to make an amendment which might be supposed to meet the case of one river, but which might cause very serious public inconvenience in respect to other rivers. The $1,000 was fixed to meet the case of hundreds of small structures erected largely upon the inland waters in regard to which it would be a hardship to require the submission of plans. But in the case to which my hon. friend refers, there would be no serious inconvenience or hardship, because if a wharf of a substantial, permanent character is being built to cost upwards of $1,000 there certainly would not be much inconvenience or hardship in submitting plans for the approval of the Department of Public Works. It is impossible to conceive of a case where, if the proposed work would not seriously interfere with navigation, there would be any refusal to approve of it. My hon. friend will see that if we put the limit at $5,000 some one will say it should be six, or if we put it at six that we should put it at ten thousand. The main point to consider is whether the work is of a substantial and really valuable character.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would think the amendment proposed would largely meet the case to which I drew attention a short time ago. Where possibly two or three or four groynes would have to be constructed, say by a county council, in a distance of 300 or 400 yards, would the value of $1,000 apply to each or would it refer to them altogether.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The $1,000 would not apply to a groyne of any kind.

Mr. BRISTOL. I see that this only refers to bridges, dams, booms, etc., that interference with navigation, navigable waters are not mentioned. If I understand the new provision, it refers to piers, docks or other structures not included in the old Act, and if any of these cost more than $1,000 the plans have to be approved. I was wondering why the minister put it in that way, because if the work did not interfere with navigation what would be the object of any man with a $2,000 wharf, say on his water lot in Muskoka, coming to the department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Under the present law there is no authority which is to decide whether a work interferes with navigation or not, and the only way that could be decided would be to go to law. For instance, when a wharf is built without the plans being brought to the department, if the department wished to take action the course would be for the Minister of Justice to be instructed to file an information for a mandatory injunction to compel the removal of the wharf. Then the question would have to be tried, and it would have to be determined whether or not, as a matter of fact, the wharf really interfered with navigation. My hon. friend can see how, as time went on, navigation would be interfered with very seriously, and how much better it is to have some disinterested, competent authority in the first place to determine as to these plans. When the matter first came before the House I mentioned the case of a bridge which was erected in New Brunswick. As the hon. gentleman from the city of St. John knows the Fredericton bridge was erected when Mr. Blair was the premier of the province, and although the river is navigable for steamers running between St. John and Fredericton and Fredericton and Woodstock, he did not think it was any part of his duty to come to the federal authorities. He said: We are going to put a draw in, we are not going to interfere with navigation, and because we are not going to interfere with navigation we will not submit our plans to the federal authorities. I mention that case, because it almost caused a crisis in provincial affairs at the time, almost caused the resignation, or the dismissal, of the government, owing to certain action which was taken by the legislative council, and certain further action which was contemplated, I believe, by the governor of the day. It was a case in which the plans ought to have been submitted to the Department of Public Works, and the chief engineer ought to be the one to decide as to whether or not a structure of this kind in reality interferes with navigation. That is the whole object of the Act. It is to get a larger control over navigable waters.

Mr. DANIEL. I presume from the way this Act reads that it will necessitate an application to the Minister of Public Works whenever a wharf is built in any of the harbours as well as on any navigable stream?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Take the St. John river, for instance, which the minister has referred to as a navigable river; no wharf of any size or kind can be built in that river after this Act passes until a plan thereof has been sent to the Minister of Public Works and has been approved by him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, but let me say to my hon. friend that to-day any structure of the kind is absolutely illegal, and any man coming along with a motor boat, or steamboat who finds a wharf in his way in a navigable water can apply for an injunction, and compel it to be removed or destroy it as being an obstruction or a public nuisance. As the hon. leader of the opposition said the other day this is really an enabling, and not a restrictive Act, and it gives authority to make that legal which to-day is absolutely illegal, because the law gives any person the right to travel on the public highway, which a navigable water is, without being obstructed by a wharf or any other structure placed there without lawful authority.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would the hon. Minister of Public Works let me read the amendment again?

> The aforegoing provision of this section shall not apply to small wharfs not costing more than $1,000 groynes or other bank or beach-protection works or boat houses which do not interfere with navigation.

I am satisfied with the clause as it reads. It refers to groynes, and other protection works just the same as it does to small wharfs. It might be made a little plainer by putting in the word 'or' after the word 'dollars,' but I do not think it is necessary in order to give it the meaning I should desire it to have. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) suggests that word.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no objection to it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the minister permit me once more to draw his attention to the request that I made before, and which I trust he has not forgotten? I think it is a hardship to the county council of Halton, and the municipality of Burlington to be compelled to pay for those groynes or wharfs——

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is another question.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is another question.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Better discuss it on the estimates.

Mr. HENDERSON. I may not have an opportunity of repeating my request, and I do not want the minister to forget it. I am quite sure that if he asks his local engineer at Toronto to visit this erosion two and a half miles from Burlington he will get information which will warrant him in spending half of what is requisite to protect this shore and let the county council spend the other half. He has given me the assurance that the engineer will go to Burlington and examine the erosion there, and I trust he has not forgotten.

Mr. JAMESON. My hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) having got his 'or' in, I trust I may be permitted to say a word to the minister as to the figure he has fixed in regard to the value of a wharf that may be built without authority from the Governor in Council. I would like to ask the minister if he cannot see his way, in view of the fact that it would cost more than $1,000 to erect any structure at all on the Bay of Fundy shore, to raise the amount to $3,000. I do not think it is an excessive sum, and if this Act passes as it is, it will be a very serious encroachment on private rights. There is no question as to the interference of navigation in the instance to which I refer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What does my hon. friend mean by interference with private rights? Does he not know that under the British North America Act the control of navigation is absolutely and exclusively vested in this parliament? Does not my hon. friend know as a lawyer that if I own the land simply between high and low water where the tide ebbs and flows, I have no power without express legislative authority to build a wharf there? The public may not try to destroy it, but does not my hon. friend know that any man would be entitled to go and destroy that wharf because it is an interference with navigation?

Mr. JAMESON. I am very much obliged to the minister for explaining what is no doubt the law, and which I think everybody understands. If we did not understand it before, I presume we do now. But, there has been an Act on the statute-book relating to this subject, and the minister apparently does not think it goes far enough. He proposes to go beyond what that Act prescribed and he is going to compel persons desiring to construct any wharf or structure of that character on their own lands, to apply to his department and obtain permission before proceeding with the work. But, he has gone a little farther than that. He says that in the case of a structure which is not going to cost more than $1,000, he is willing not to enforce the provisions of this new statute. Such works are excepted. I would ask him if he could not extend that and make the amount $3,000 instead of $1,000? He may not think that it is an encroachment on private rights, but if a man owns the foreshore and he cannot construct a wharf on it without obtaining permission from the department, I venture to say that if there is a petition sent in by some good friend of the minister's, that permission would not be immediately forthcoming. If a man cannot obtain permission I think it is an interference with private rights. It does not necessarily follow that he is going to interfere with navigation. I cannot imagine that any wharf that is going to be built for $3,000 on the coast will be an interference with navigation. On lakes and navigable streams a short or inexpensive wharf may prove an obstruction, but when it comes down to the salt water I do not think the same objection exists.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. This does not give any person a right to erect a small wharf; it simply says that you need not go to the minister for permission, but your wharf if it is an obstruction is likely to be removed by anybody who likes. This clause does not give any permission; it simply says that one need not go to the minister to approve of the plans for such a wharf.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is it; if you choose to do it, you do it at your own risk.

Mr. J. HAGGART. The minister would oblige us very much now if he would give us a definition of what 'navigable waters' are?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If I could do that I would be qualified for the highest judicial position in the country.

Mr. MEIGHEN. In my constituency there is a dam now in course of construction which has had the approval of the Governor in Council, but I do not know how far the approval went or whether the structure complies with all the conditions. Would this Act have any relation to that structure?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This Act would not apply in that case because the work has already been approved under the existing law.

Mr. ARTHURS. The amendment proposed by the minister meets a great many of the objections I urged against the Bill on a former occasion. But, in a great many cases sawmill men maintain booms round their mills which are to a certain extent in navigable water, the purpose of these being to retain the logs while they are being cut up. It appears to me that the Act would prohibit this practice in future.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, They can apply to the department submitting a plan of their proposed dam, and they can get approval. We have continual complaints from persons living along navigable waters as to the erection of booms, such as that mentioned by my hon. friend from Pembroke (Mr. G. White) the other day in reference to a dam constructed right in front of the village of Petawawa. Surely the department should have reasonable control over works of that kind just as well as over other structures placed in navigable waters. When they submit their plans, if it is found the work will not seriously interfere with navigation no chief engineer would refuse to recommend approval. We are doing that constantly in the case of boom companies.

Mr. ARTHURS. There are no doubt cases where a boom erected across a stream would be an obstruction, but this can be easily guarded against under the terms of the present law. What I am referring to is the case of booms which are constantly being changed, which do not necessarily interfere with the navigation of a stream or lake and of which no plans could be submitted to the department. It would be a great hardship if a man who wanted to erect a small boom around a mill had to send plans to Ottawa.

Mr. EMMERSON. The man who puts the boom there now is the judge as against the rights of all other people and often he constructs his boom in his own selfish interest as against the interests of the public. This Bill merely enables the department to protect the public interest and it does not infringe in any way upon private interests because if the public interests are not affected permission will be given. At present these things are done without authority and in violation of the law.

Mr. DANIEL. I understood the minister to say that this was an enabling Act, but section 4 prohibits bridges, booms, or dams being constructed in navigable waters so as to interfere with navigation. The Bill does not include these words at all, but merely refers to navigable water so that it enlarges the scope of the existing law.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Under the present law if a person should construct a work of that character without the permission of the department and if it interferes with navigation, any person who is obstructed on that part of the river can remove the obstruction or get an injunction in the court, and the man who erected it is liable to be indicted as creating a common nuisance. What I meant to say was that this Bill enables any one who desires to construct a work of this kind to get the approval of the department and then it is made legal.

Mr. BOYCE. Would this Bill compel those who are erecting dams on navigable water for the development of power, to come to the Department of Public Works every time they desire to put in a dam?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If it is in navigable waters, yes.

Mr. BOYCE. For instance, on the Winnipeg river, a lease may be granted by the Department of the Interior for the purpose of generating water-power, and that lease may grant explicit powers to the company in the furtherance of that development; would it be necessary under this Bill for the lessees to come to the Minister of Public Works and submit their plans for the development of that power?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Undoubtedly that would be so if the dam was to be constructed in navigable waters. But without this statute and without its terms being complied with, or without a compliance with the terms of the existing statute, no lessee could, under a license from the Minister of the Interior, construct a dam in a navigable water.

Mr. BOYCE. If it was an interference with navigation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I judge that any dam in a navigable water would be an interference with navigation.

Mr. EMMERSON. In every Bill that comes before any committee, in which we grant powers of that kind, we provide that such works shall be subject to the approval of the department.

Mr. LOGGIE. Under the amendment, if a dock or wharf is to cost less than $1,000, will the person who constructs it still have to apply to the department? If he has not to apply to the department, is he protected, so that no person can interfere with that piece of property, as could be done under the present law?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If it is a wharf costing less than $1,000, the Public Works Department cannot interfere with it, and the owner need not come to the department for permission to build it; but if he does not, he builds the wharf at his own risk, just as he does under the present law.

Mr. JAMESON. Would the minister consider favourably an amendment which would make this $1,000 apply to navigable streams, and say $3,000 apply to coast waters?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could not do that.

Mr. J. HAGGART. In floating logs down the river it is customary to put around them a boom in order to tow them through a lake or a long stretch of the river, or to guide them to the entrance of a channel where there is a rapid. If a person who owned a small boat insisted on the right to pass through that boom or to remove it on the plea that the river was navigable, it seems to me that under this law he would have power to do so. Lumbermen have as much right to navigate these streams by towing logs down as any one else, and it is absolutely necessary that the boom should move along with the logs.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a movable boom, used to float logs and to keep them together, and I do not think that any minister would hold that the section applied to that.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I do not know what any minister would hold, but I want to know if that is the law as laid down by the minister?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The owner of the raft of logs is exercising his right to navigate the river.

Mr. J. HAGGART. At the entrance to rapids he may stretch the boom and use it for two or three days, and may obstruct a navigable river in doing so.

Mr. CONMEE. There is another side to that question. In some cases rivers are unnecessarily blocked, but any lumberman who is at all reasonable would so arrange his boom as to stretch a long chain towards the shore so that any small boat or steam launch could get through. People work out such problems without much difficulty under the existing law.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On section 5,

Mr. JAMESON. I wish to ask the minister if this Act relates to an extension of with the repair of an existing structure?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would, of course, extend to a new part, but not to any existing work.

Mr. JAMESON. It would not interfere with the repair of an existing structure?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Would it not interfere with repairs if the party did not get the consent of the minister? Would it not give the minister the power, if he thought proper, to remove it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would think not, unless it were extended out farther into the channel.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I thought the Bill was intended to give the minister jurisdiction over some works which are at present in existence and which are nuisances?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it is only for the future.

Bill reported with amendments, and amendments agreed to.

ESCHEATS TO THE CROWN.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide, in the case of escheats to the Crown, that out of any property so devolving the Governor in Council shall have power to make such grants as seem right;

(a) To any person having a legal or moral claim upon the previous owner or a just or natural right or claim to succeed to his property.

(b) To carry into effect any disposition of such property which the previous owners may appear to have intended.

(c) To reward any person making discovery of such property to the Crown.

Mr. J. HAGGART. What is the object of the resolution?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. We have no general Dominion statute at the present time authorizing the disposition of money which may be received in the form of an escheat. The word 'escheat', I might remind hon. gentlemen, primarily, perhaps literally, applies only to real estate. But using the word as including, not only real estate, but also personal property, which may devolve upon the Crown for want of any legal heir to a deceased person, we have at present in the consolidated funds of the country a sum of about $50,000 which has been realized and paid into the Receiver General as the proceeds of the sale of the estate of a man who died without having disposed of all his property by will. We have no authority to do anything with that money by any statute law. This possibly is the first occasion in which the necessity for some statutory provision on this subject has arisen since confederation because escheats, as every one knows, go to the provinces. This particular property, however, came from the territories before the new provinces were established there, and it may be that, in view of the provisions of the constitutional Acts of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, by which the Crown lands remain the property of the Dominion, all escheats from those provinces possibly might follow a like destination. But, however that may be, and without adverting to that question of the future, so far as the territories are concerned, they were not a province, and it is quite plain that any property there which was escheated to the Crown for lack of heirs would fall to the Dominion as being the only government to which it could go. Such a thing may happen at any time in the Yukon or Northwest Territories. With regard to the future, therefore, as well as to the money in hand, what I am proposing is that by legislation the Governor in Council should be empowered to pay out of such moneys such sums as may seem right, first to any one who had a legal or moral claim on the previous owner or a just or natural claim to succeed to his property. There might, for instanace, be an illegitimate child or other relations of a character which would seem to make it right to dispose of some part of the property, at any rate, in that way. To do so at present there is no authority whatever. The second proposition is that the Crown might be empowered to carry into effect any disposition of such property which the previous owner might appear to have intended. He may have made a will, but have defectively executed it, or there might be other circumstances indicating a certain intention. Finally it is proposed to reward any person making a discovery of such property to the Crown. These provisions are analogous to provisions in like circumstances of provincial legislation. The necessity for them is now shown, and it is desired there should be a general statute applicable to all people and cases of a like character. When mention was made of the intention to put this notice on the order paper, the hon. member for St. James, Montreal (Mr. Gervais), took exception, fearing that the proposition might be regarded as an attempt to encroach upon the undoubted rights of the provinces in this regard. I have since had the benefit of a conversation with my hon. friend, and I think he is quite satisfied that at any rate I do not entertain any such intention; but any possibility of danger in that respect can be readily safeguarded by the wording of the Bill when introduced, so as to limit it distinctly to what I intend, namely, the devolution of property by escheat upon the Crown in right of the Dominion and the Dominion only.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I think that is a power which the Crown in the Dominion ought to have. If there are any escheats to it, it has as much right to make a disposition of such escheats at any province. But, what I rose particularly to ask is whether the hon. minister has in view any particular estate, because in my section of the country there is the estate of a party who died out in Alberta, and in which it was impossible for the Minister of Justice to act upon the principles that are carried out in the different provinces. I refer to the estate of Mr. Montgomery who died up there.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is the very estate I have in mind.

Mr. SPROULE. I have always thought the law should go further and provide for taking over all sums lying in banks, for which there is no claimant. Money is frequently deposited in banks and the owner dies, there are no heirs, and the money is not disposed of but remains in the bank. We passed a law years ago which provided that year by year the unclaimed balances in banks should be published, but did not make any provision for disposition of the money for which there were no claimants. I have always thought that such money should revert to the Crown. I have never seen good reason why any individual should retain it. This Bill should go further and give the Crown possession of property of that character just the same as a portion or the whole of an unclaimed estate.

Mr. MURPHY. The suggestion made by the hon. gentleman is one which would more properly apply to the Bank Act than to the resolutions now introduced.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see any reason why, when we are dealing with the subject of escheats, we should not cover the whole ground. Of course, we could make such a provision in the Banking Act, but we could do so just as well in the Bill about to be introduced.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the resolution, which was reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. AYLESWORTH moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 206) respecting Escheats.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPERIOR COURT JUDGES IN THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient to provide for the payment to four additional judges of the Superior Court in the province of Quebec, each $7,000 per annum, and to one additional judge of the Court of King's Bench in the province of Manitoba $6,000 per annum.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This resolution is introduced to satisfy the demands which, so far as the province of Quebec is concerned, have been very strongly pressed for now as long as three years. In the session of the provincial legislature of Quebec for 1907, a provision was made for creating three additional judgeships at Montreal and one at the city of Quebec, in the Superior Court of the province. That legislation duly passed by the provincial legislature three years ago, has never yet been supplemented by the necessary legislation of this parliament to provide the salaries. I am free to admit that the delay in that regard has been felt as more or less of a grievance by the province of Quebec. It will be in mind that early in this session the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) placed a notice of motion on the subject before the House, which was debated to some extent, and which appears now upon the order paper among the Public Bills and Orders, the debate not having been concluded. I said in the discussion of that resolution that the explanation of our delay in taking action which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier thought was rather reprehensible, was the hope which we had entertained that it might be possible by some reorganization of the judicial system of the province of Quebec, or by some better utilization of the present judges in that province, to avoid the necessity for increasing the number of judges. That hope on my part has, I am sorry to say, turned out one impossible of realization. I cannot pretend to sit in judgment upon the action of the Attorney General, and of the provincial legislature of Quebec in calling for these additonal judges as a necessity, yet I cannot lose sight of the fact that to provide an annual salary for all time of $7,000 is tantamount to increasing the fixed charges upon the Canadian revenue to the extent of about $200,000. Every additional Superior Court judge just means that increased expenditure to the Dominion. Yet where the needs of the public require this additional expenditure, the Attorney General of the province is the appropriate and best judge of the necessity which the provincial legislation demonstrates by its enactment. In the case of the four judges which are asked for from the province of Quebec I cannot doubt that the necessity really exists.

Then with regard to Manitoba, the amount of the salary, to begin with, is not quite so large, it is only $6,000. But the legislature of that province, during the session before the recent one, I think not more than fourteen months ago, determined that their needs required the addition of one judge to the number of judges of their Court of King's Bench. Recognizing, as I have said, the fact that the administration of justice in the province is in charge of the Attorney General and authorities of the province, and that they are the people best in position to know of this necessity, we have proposed by the resolution under consideration to meet the demands of the province of Manitoba in this respect as well.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I am sorry to say that I cannot concur in the views just expressed by the Minister of Justice, for the reason that as we pay the money we have a right to see that we receive service for it. It is true that the administration of justice comes within the jurisdiction of the provincial authorities, but the payment of the judges lies in our authority. The payment of judges constitutes a great responsibility, and we have a right to be assured that there is an absolute necessity for it. The minister says that he was trying to make arrangements by a readjustment of the duties of the existing judges which would obviate the necessity of appointing four new ones, Now, we have a right to hear what difficulties he met with in trying to make an arrangement of that kind. I may be wrong, but from what I hear it is not so much new judges that is required in the province of Quebec, as a readjustment of the duties of the judges they have there now. I wish to protest against the assumption of the Minister of Justice that because he has received a requisition from the provincial authorities asking for the salaries of four new judges, that he is therefore bound to accede to that request, until he has assured himself that it is not possible by a rearrangement of the judicial system in that province to meet all the requirements. I am aware that the position taken by the Minister of Justice is that which has been taken by all preceding governments. They do not like to take the responsibility, which they ought to assume, of seeing that there is an absolute necessity for the appointment of more judges, and that no readjustment can be made which would obviate that necessity. The minister tells us that the salary of a new Superior Court judge is tantamount to an increase of $200,000 upon the fixed charges upon Canadian revenue.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I can assure my hon. friend that in this matter, as I think the dates demonstrate, I have held out to the second bell. I have done my best, and I have been, I must admit, convinced by the investigations I have made that it is not practicable to do what I had hoped. My idea, I may state frankly, was that by some doubling up, so to speak, of judicial work in the province of Quebec, Superior Court judges of the rural parts of the province might be made available to assist in the city work. Of course that is a matter entirely under the control of the provincial legislature, which has charge of the constitution and maintenance of the courts. One can readily understand that the practitioners and also the litigants in any particular district would not be willing to see their judge removed altogether from their own locality. I am assured that the plan which I had thought of is already practically in force, and that the judges for the whole of the territory surrounding Montreal as well as for the counties in the vicinity of Quebec, are to-day devoting all the time they can spare from their local duties to the work of assisting in the litigation of the cities. In that situation, there being unduly great congestion of work in Montreal particularly, I have felt that I could not properly oppose myself any longer to the views of the Provincial Attorney General and of the provinical government. I have no doubt that hon. gentlemen of the legal profession in this House, coming from the province of Quebec, would bear out what I have said in that regard, and I am quite sure the hon. member for St, Anne's division (Mr. Doherty) would have personal knowledge of the situation in that city.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX. As regards a new arrangement which could be made in the province of Quebec resembling somewhat the one existing in Ontario, which province I believe has an advantage in this respect, my hon. friend is probably aware that some years ago the Hon. Mr. Thomas Chase Casgrain, formerly a member of this House and one of the leaders of the Bar, while Attorney General in the Taillon administration, proposed as a radical reform that the province of Quebec should adopt the same system as exists in Ontario, that is to say, you would have district magistrates having jurisdiction in criminal and civil matters up to a certain amount, and the judges of the Superior Court, properly speaking, having residence in Montreal or Quebec, as in Ontario they have their residence in Toronto, and proceeding to the administration of justice by a rotative system, by circuits. Mr. Casgrain was ahead of his time apparently, because although he then commanded quite a large majority in the legislature, although this was not a party question, he had to withdraw his measure after having explained it to the House and submitted it to the Bar. It is a most difficult question and I understand the difficulty experienced by the Minister of Justice when he compares the situation in Quebec with that in other provinces and comes to make new appointments. But we have in Quebec a system which existed long previous to confederation whereby certain districts have been assigned to judges and these judges have been retained in those districts and the districts will not stand the removal of these judges outside of the shire town. As a matter of fact, the new judges who are being provided for in this resolution for the city of Montreal and the city of Quebec are needed. I have not practised in Montreal for the last eight years, but I am quite sure the hon. member for St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) who has presided as a judge in the Montreal district for several years, much to the credit of the profession and of the judiciary, will agree with me that the three new judges in Montreal are badly needed. The population of Montreal has increased remarkably during the last ten years. It has now reached the high water mark of nearly half a million and the seventeen judges who are there have to look after the administration of justice not only in Montreal but in Hochelaga, Maisonneuve, Verchères, Chambly, Jacques Cartier and Laval. The litigants are obliged to wait, not for days, weeks or months, but for years before their cases are heard before the Superior Court. The witnesses come to the court house, and if the judges are engaged on a case that takes some time, they become uneasy and return home, and when at last the case is called on the roll the litigants cannot proceed in view of the absence of the witnesses. The Bar of Montreal, through the Chief Justice of Montreal, Sir Melbourne Tait, have made several representations to the government. Last year the Chief Justice and two of the judges who for years have been sitting in the court, Mr. Justice Mathieu and the hon. member for St. Anne's (Mr. Doherty) joined in the request for an increase in the number of judges. It is not a party affair, it is a question of business. The merchants of Montreal are simply discouraged when they have to bring a case before the court. The Attorney General of the province of Quebec, Sir Lomer Gouin, brought this question before the House several years ago, and the legislature of Quebec decided by a statute passed at that time to create three new judges for Montreal and one new judge for Quebec. There is as much need for an additional judge in Quebec as there is for three additional judges in Montreal. The appointment of new judges in both districts should meet with the favour of this parliament. The city of Montreal is becoming a national port. That brings business to the court house and makes necessaray this legislation.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I did not clearly understand from the minister why the provincial authorities could not rearrange the divisions, and duties of the judges so that the present judges might do.

Mr. LEMIEUX. These representations have been made to the Attorney General of Quebec. The Attorney General is quite open to conviction. He admits with the Minister of Justice that judicial centralization must soon take place, but we must educate public opinion first, and that takes a little time. He has agreed with the Minister of Justice that in future no new districts shall be created, and no additional appointments shall be asked from the Dominion government unless a friendly conference takes place with the Dominion authorities. It is so arranged under our constitution that the creation of judges is part of the duties of the provincial legislatures whilst the payment of these judges is our lot. We cannot evade that obligation.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I think the payment is the greatest power, refuse to pay unless you do so and so.

Mr. LEMIEUX. To sing the song of Kipling we must—pay, pay, pay. That is what is being done in the present instance.

Mr. DOHERTY. I think that at all events I can speak with respect to the district of Montreal, and in my view there is an absolute necessity for an increase in the number of judges in that district. If there were room for criticism—and I do not propose to say that there is—I would be inclined to think that it is rather in connection with the delay in making this provision than in the actual making of it, because the facts set forth by the hon. Postmaster General are certainly not at all exaggerated. There is an absolute need in the district of Montreal for an increase in the number of judges, and that need has existed now for some time, in fact, there is a condition there that amounts very nearly to what might be properly described as almost a denial of justice. While all this is quite true as the result of a condition which should be a subject of amelioration, not perhaps by the direct action of this government or this House, I cannot sympathize with the suggestion that the position should be taken in this particular instance, at all events, that this government or this House should refuse to pay because it is in accordance with the system as we have it. But I do think that there is a serious responsibility upon the provincial government for maintaining, or refraining from endeavouring to remedy the condition which does make so large a number of judges necessary for the province. I am not unaware that there will be difficulties to be encountered by that government in remedying that state of affairs, but I think it is possible that there may be a great deal to be said in favour of the contention that a more strenuous effort might have been made in the past, and I think it is to be hoped that a more strenuous effort will be made in the future to readjust the system, and to make it possible for the work to be done in that province without a further increase in the number of judges. I think too that something might be done in regard to the manner in which the business is handled apart from the readjustment of the districts themselves. I am glad to see that at the present session of the legislature of Quebec there has been introduced legislation, which, if the reports I have seen are correct, would seem to tend in the direction of amelioration the situation in that regard. But whatever may be said about the condition that exists in that province, it is a condition which does exist and unless further provision is made to meet the absolute wants of the administration of justice in the district of Montreal, at all events, you will have a state of affairs where people are practically, so great are the delays, refused justice. I am quite prepared to approve of the proposition which is now made. I approve of the motive which has led the Minister of Justice to act with some hesitation in the matter, and I am not disposed to criticise the proposition, but if there were room for criticism it seems that it must be rather of the delay in taking action than of the action itself. I think that the provision which is being made is an indispensable one and an absolute necessity.

Mr. BOYCE. What has been said with regard to the necessity for additional judges in the province of Quebec is equally true with regard to the necessity for additional judges in Ontario. I understand that there has been a very great congestion of business existing through the lack of judges. So great has it been that it has been brought to the attention of the Ontario legislature, and some legislation was passed at the last session providing for the appointment by this government of additional judges for the high court bench of Ontario. It is known, I think, to the Minister of Justice, that there is a very great congestion of judicial business in Ontario necessitating the appointment of additional judges, and I should like the Minister of Justice to state whether or not he has received notice of such legislation as was passed respecting the appointment of such judges, and whether he would not accede to the prayer for the appointment of such judges so that there will not be a delay of a year before these judges can be appointed, and so that the congestion which exists in consequence of their non-appointment may be relieved.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, with regard to the province of Ontario, I cannot pretend to speak to-day with the authority which I think I might properly have asked any one to repose in what I said on such a subject as this a few years ago. I certainly, when I ceased active practice in the courts of Ontario, did not think there was any necessity for increasing the number of our Superior Court judges in the province. Only a few years ago the number of high court judges in Ontario was increased by three on the establishment of the exchequer division of the high court. I do not recall in what year the judges of that division were appointed, but it is within the knowledge of every one that there was no chief justice of that division until 1905. That is not yet five years gone by, so that in the province of Ontario we had, only a few years ago, the whole of the work of the high court done by the twelve judges of the three divisions of that court. Subsequently their number was increased from 12 to 15, and in these circumstances one would have thought it was doubtful if so soon there was urgent need of adding to the number. It has additionally to be borne in mind that at a comparative recent session of the legislature the jurisdiction of the county courts in Ontario was very greatly increased. I am not sure of the extent to which the utmost jurisdiction of the county court in civil cases goes at the present time, but I think it is not less than $1,000. The effect of that legislation necessarily must be greatly to reduce the work of the superior courts. Every practising lawyer knows how large a proportion of the actual litigation of the Superior Courts always was in respect to sums of less than $1,000. I am persuaded that there cannot, therefore, be as great an amount of work to be done by the Superior Court judges in Ontario as there was prior to that considerable increase in the jurisdiction in the county courts of the province. But, while these things are so, I saw in the newspapers a few months ago that the judges of the Superior Court had made representations to the Attorney General of the province that additional judges were needed, and if the newspaper statement be correct, three at least were asked for. I had the advantage, two or three months ago, of a personal discussion of the subject with the Attorney General of the province, and he told me that he intended introducing legislation during the session of the legislature which has recently ended to deal with this subject. Since then he has written to me on two or three occasions, and he sent me a copy of the Bill which he intended to introduce, providing, as he stated in his letter, for two additional judges. Except in that informal way, and by a letter from the Prime Minister of the province on the subject, I have no knowledge of what has been done by the provincial legislature in this regard. I might say that I have not had any copy of the Bill as it finally passed, but I understand that it was for the creation of two additional judgeships. That is what the Attorney General said to me was his intention. I have not had, nor has there come to the government in any way, any formal application in the matter or any formal notice of the passage of this Act. In the circumstances, and I must admit that relying very considerably upon my own personal judgment in the matter, I have thought that legislation by this parliament, so far as as the province of Ontario is concerned, might well wait for another 12 months without any interest really being hurt. Unfortunately, judicial work in the province at the present time is labouring under the disadvantage of the absence on account of illness of the senior puisne judge of the high court, Mr. Justice MacMahon. I have no doubt that his inability to do his share of the work has increased the amount of work which necessarily would fall upon the shoulders of his brother judges. But I am sanguine to think that there are no arrears of work before the Superior Courts of the province at the present time that the existing force of judges is not able to cope with for at least another 12 months, and that the public interest in the province will not suffer at all if action on our part is left until another year.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would urge strongly that the minister consider, although it is late in the session, the question of increasing the number of judges in Ontario. I happen to know that the judges are overcrowded with work and that judgments are delayed a long time because the judges cannot catch up with the arrears. I might also suggest to the minister that in the large centres of population in the provinces of Ontario, especially in Toronto, the cost of living has increased—some say 60 per cent at least—and the salary of a high court judge does not go nearly as far as it formerly did. Another consideration is that remuneration from court practice to the better class of lawyers has increased to such an extent that a practitioner of the first class will hardly consider a judgeship, because while he might consider it a great honour it would be a great sacrifice for him to go on the bench. These are questions that parliament will have to grapple with in course of time. Litigation is increasing all the time, and many of the judges have reached that age when they are not so young and vigorous as they used to be. It is a great imposition on them to have to grind in the courts day after day and work harder for less money than would be their reward in private practice. It is only fair that if the judges do good work they should be paid good wages. A good lawyer in the city of Toronto can make $25,000 a year, and any one of these judges if he were in practice would be earning that money.

An hon. MEMBER. Not only in Toronto.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Not only in Toronto, but I understand that in the Supreme Court it is a hardship on these men. I know that the Minister of Justice has cognizance of this matter and that he will deal with it. I fully concur in the proposal to increase the number of judges.

Mr. SPROULE. A few years ago we increased the salaries of the judges to what

I thought was a very considerable extent. I have always regarded it as unfair to make a comparison between what is paid to a judge and what eminent lawyers get because of their legal ability. There is no class in the community which gets as many of the plums of life as the legal profession. As solicitors for railway corporations, banking corporations, loan companies and industrial concerns, they are paid great salaries on account of their knowledge of law, enabling them to give their principals information as to how they can evade the law and extract very large and onerous returns from the people. It is said that we ought to pay higher salaries to make these men judges because they can earn more in the profession. I think that is radically wrong. There is no profession in the country that earns half the salaries which they do, and yet I am bound to believe that many men in professional life are as intelligent, as brainy, as industrious and as faithful as lawyers are. But they do not get the returns—why? Because they are not able to tell their principals how they may evade the law. That to my mind is no proper argument why you should increase the salaries of the judges. I believe that 90 per cent of the people of the country agree with what I say, that in proportion to their ability the legal profession of this country get more positions to which large emoluments are attached than any other class of men in the community; and it is almost adding insult to injury to put that forward as a reason why the salaries of the judges of this country should be increased.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. AYLESWORTH moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 207) to amend the Judges Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CRUDE PETROLEUM BOUNTY.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the bounty of one and one-half cent per imperial gallon payable on crude petroleum from Canadian wells, or from shales or other substances mined in Canada, authorized by chapter 52 of the statutes of 1908, may be paid to the owner or occupier of the soil through which it is mined or won, or to such other person interested or injuriously affected by the mining operations or works, as the Governor in Council may approve.—Mr. Graham.

Mr. GRAHAM. The meaning of this is simply this. The Dominion government gives a bounty of 1½ cents per imperial gallon on all crude petroleum to the producer thereof. A corporation known as the Canada Company obtained patents to a very large portion of the territory in western Ontario now operated as oil fields. Up to 1872 there was nothing in the leases which the Canadian Company gave to the farmers reserving to the company the mineral rights. After 1872 the company, in its deeds to the farmers, reserved those rights. The result of that is that a man owning a farm in Essex or Kent, where the oil wells have been sunk or where it is proposed to sink oil wells, is very much handicapped. Cases have been brought to my notice where a man's entire crop would be practically spoiled by people to whom the Canada Company had leased the right to sink wells. They go over a man's property, tramp down his crop, knock down his fences, offer a mall pittance for the damage, and tell him to go to court. No matter what reservations are made as to the mineral rights, this is manifestly unfair to the man who is tilling the soil. This matter came up in the Ontario legislature a few years ago, when I was a member of that House, and was discussed thoroughly. The hon. gentleman who is now Provincial Secretary, has stated that on a farm valued at $5,000, the actions of the lessees of the mineral rights would do damage to the extent of possibly fifty per cent of that value. A case was brought to my attention the other day in which it was said that the lessees went on a man's property and asked him if he proposed to farm that this year. He said certainly he did. 'Then,' they said, 'you had better move to another farm, because we are going to fill this one with holes.' Any action we take will not interfere in any way with the contracts between the Canadian Land Company and the farmers; but parliament has seen fit, in its wisdom, to present a bounty to the producers of crude petroleum, and what we propose to do in this Act is to give the Minister of Trade and Commerce the right to apportion that bounty between the producer of the crude petroleum and the farmer whose land is damaged by the work of developing these oil wells. The injury done to the farm lands is part of the expense incurred in the development of the crude petroleum industry, and we think that on that ground we have every right to protect the farmers whose lands are thus injured. If it has the effect of making the lessees more careful so that he will avoid any unnecessary damage, the farmer would be thoroughly satisfied, but if the lessee should inflict a certain amount of damages, the Minister of Trade and Commerce will have the power to apportion the amount of the bounty given in such a way that the farmer will be protected to a certain extent. With that explanation I wish to point out that the amendment provides for the insertion in the Bill of certain words, which will make the Act read as follows:

The Governor in Council may authorize the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of a bounty of one and one-half cent per imperial gallon on all crude petroleum, having a specific gravity, not less than ·8235 at 60 degrees by Fahrenheit thermometer produced from wells in Canada or from shales or other substances mined in Canada on and after the day on which this Act comes into force—the said bounty to be paid to the producer of the petroleum or to the owner or occupier of the soil through which it is mined or won, or to such other person interested as the Governor in Council by regulation approves.

Mr. J. HAGGART. That is to be done by regulation.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. J. HAGGART. What form will your regulations take, because the principal objection to this resolution is that it will be entirely optional on the government to act on it or not. There would be no objection to some mechanical way by which the party injured would be entitled legally to compensation, but this is left to regulation at the option of the government.

Mr. GRAHAM. We are not making any change in the old Act in that respect. As the Act stands, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, recommends certain regulations which have to be approved by the Governor in Council. By these regulations, he may apportion a part of the bounty to the farmers:

The Minister of Trade and Commerce shall be charged with the administration of this Act, and may, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, make such regulations as he deems necessary respecting the payment of the said bounties.

Mr. J. HAGGART. The hon. minister does not appreciate the point I make. Your regulations are for the purpose of applying to the lessee alone the one and a half cent per gallon, and you intend to take that from him and give it to the owner of the land which you say is damaged. In what form are the regulations by which that apportionment is to be made?

Mr. GRAHAM. I see the point my hon. friend makes. I tried to work out a mechanical way by which the thing could be done. The Minister of Trade and Commerce tried to work that out, but we found it impossible to make it mechanical in the statute because the conditions are so varied. The object of the Bill is to protect the farmers against damages as well as give them compensation, and we found it impossible to devise a clause that would operate mechanically, and apply to all the conditions that might arise.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. J. HAGGART. But if you do not have your clause mechanical, do you not see the danger that might arise?

Mr. GRAHAM. I appreciate the situation, and we discussed that point thoroughly, but came back to the conclusion that this is the only practical way in which we could work the thing out. Otherwise there might be some deserving cases which would not come within a mechanical clause. Take where the mineral rights have not been retained by a company, the farmer gets by arrangement one-eighth of the oil, and the bounty. That would amount practically to $2 per barrel. I started on that basis, but found it would hardly do because these men, to whom we are paying the bounty, do not own the minerals as do the other men. I tried another basis, and came back to the conclusion that the only practical way was the one we have adopted.

Mr. J. HAGGART. There is another question. The lessee has acquired by lease the right to this one and a half cent per gallon, he has the right to the distribution, the same as any other lessee, or owner of land throughout the country. You deprive him of his inherent right by giving the money to another person. What right have you to do that?

Mr. GRAHAM. The lessee has no inherent right. We are making him a present of one and a half cent per gallon; it is our bounty, and we can cease that whenever we like.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose he has a lease and has that provision.

Mr. GRAHAM. He has a provision entitling him to whatever bounty the government gives.

Mr. SPROULE. The government have passed a law agreeing to give a bounty. In that lease it is provided that the bounty payable by the government will go to the lessee.

Mr. GRAHAM. We can do as we like with the distribution of our own money.

Mr. BLAIN. Not by order in council.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am getting an Act. He can provide in his lease that the bounty which the government says shall go to the producer, shall go to this man; but if parliament says that the government has the right to reduce the amount payable to the producer and give a portion of it to some one else, the government can act on that authority.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Why deal differently in the case of a lessee who gets his land from a farmer, and the one who gets it from the Canada Company?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Act will give the Trade and Commerce Department the power as set forth in these words:

The said bounty to be paid to the producer of the petroleum or the owner or occupier of the soil through which it is mined or won, or to such other person interested as the Governor in Council by regulation approves.

If he is injuriously affected under this Act, he will get a portion of the bounty.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Those leases are generally taken by oil well drillers. They lease a certain territory. In the lease it is provided that a certain proportion of the oil shall go to the owner of the land. Unfortunately in those leases in question, the mineral rights were retained by the Canada Company. The parties who purchased from the Canada Company are supposed to have known, under the ordinary rules of civil contract, that these minerals were reserved. How will it be possible to work out a proposition of the kind submitted to us? Here is John Smith who has 100 acres which he bought from the Canada Company, and which did not give him any mineral rights; and here is Thomas Jones, his neighbour, who purchased his land with the mineral rights. Why should Smith be in receipt of any bounty from the government more than Jones? Because the second owner was the owner of the land, he was also the owner of the mineral rights. In the case of the Canada Company's lands the owner of the surface was not the owner of the mineral rights. Now in what position is the man who holds the mineral rights? How does he differ in respect of his lease from the Canada Company? Why should not the money, instead of going to the lessee of this land, go to the owner of the mineral rights in all cases, irrespective of any leases, or surface rights? But you are making exception. You make an exception in this case that the owner of the surface rights shall get the bounty. Is not that the case? The owner of the surface rights, according to the minister, is to receive this bounty if that land was purchased from the Canada Company originally; but if the land was not purchased from the Canada Company, if it was purchased from somebody else, the owner of the surface does not get that bounty at all, it goes to the oil lease. The Bill is also wide, because it says that if any damage can be shown, the man who suffers the damage can get the bounty instead of the man who has the lease. Another question was raised with regard to present leases. This law will be to a large extent retroactive. A man has leased land from the Canada Company, and he has contracted with the Canada Company to give them, we will say, one barrel out of every eight on the understanding that any government bounty shall go to him. Now he goes to work and finds himself cut out from that bounty if he does not get the bounty he would only give one barrel in ten, possibly, for the lease. Now this Bill is legislating these men out of their civil rights, and I do not think it comes within the purview of this House to do so. It is quite true that you will give to one man a bounty, and not to another man, and I do not think that is fair legislation. I know there is a grievance, but if a man's land is damaged I think he has relief in the courts, and can get damages. In the province of Ontario, if you are the owner of the surface rights, and a mine is discovered, the person who has discovered that mine has a perfect right to mine it. If he goes on that land and destroys your property he has to pay for it. The province of Ontario will see that justice is done in that respect.

But I can see a little further in this legislation I can see possibly a little nigger moving in the wood pile. Possibly in cases where some damage is done the minister will see that some good Liberal friend will get this bounty instead of a Conservative. I have an idea that something like that is drifting in the background. I know that the chairman of the patronage committee in that riding, if he has any land that he bought from the Canada Company, he would be getting the bounty instead of the man who is the actual producer, the man who has gone to the expense of exploiting and developing this land. Everybody knows that this business is really a wildcat business. It is worse than horse-racing. A man puts his money into a piece of land. Another man may come along and find a good well across the fence that shoots a thousand barrels a day, and fifty yards away from that he may sink 4 or 5 wells, and not get a gallon out of any one of them. I think this Bill is quite too far reaching, and this House should have nothing to do with it. I cannot see how it can be worked out. The minister says he has had difficulty himself, I can quite apprehend it. Another thing, will this Bill affect cases that are now before the courts? The Ontario government has stepped in to see that justice is done. Then again, what about the purchasers? Hundreds of purchasers have leased this land, and this government takes away from them the right to that bounty and hands it over to the men who own the surface rights, and who have not spent a dollar on it. I think this is a very serious question.

Mr. McCOIG. I am somewhat surprised that the hon. member for North Simcoe

(Mr. Currie) takes such a pronounced stand against the agriculturists of this province.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I beg your pardon, I do not.

Mr. McCOIG. I am very much surprised that he takes the stand he does, because there is no question that the Bill which the minister has introduced will be of great benefit to the people of the western part of Ontario, who are unfortunate enough to own Canada Company land. The hon. gentleman says that the provincial government are looking after their cases. I may remind him that the attention of the provincial government was drawn to the predicament the farmers have been in for some two or three years.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is not that doing them justice?

Mr. McCOIG. I should say not. The attorney general of the province of Ontario pledged the honour of the House that he would make a test case and enter it in the courts; that was over two or three years ago, and he has only just now started to do so. Do you think that is doing justice by the farmers of the province? I do not think my hon. friend is acquainted with the facts, or he would not make such a statement as that. If the provincial governments are doing the farmers any good, if they grant them relief as I hope they will, we will give them credit for it; but they are certainly very slow in taking action. The people who are suffering at the present time on account of owning Canada Company lots, feel the same way that I do myself about it. As for the Bill now before the House, I think that members opposite should join us in assisting to get it through instead of trying to obstruct it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McCOIG. Well, I hope the hon. gentlemen will assist us.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman has no right to use the word 'obstruct.'

Mr. McCOIG. Well, I will say 'oppose,' if that pleases the hon gentleman better. In the section which I have the honour to represent, there are a large number of farmers who are sufferers from being in the unfortunate position of owning Canada Company lands, and they are to-day being held off their farms in some cases by American operators coming on their lands and drilling for oil, and they have little to say as to where these operators shall drill, and practically they have to do about as the operators say. There have been cases where the farmers have had to leave their farms.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this land where they have the right to go on and explore for oil leased from the Canada Company or from the land owner?

Mr. McCOIG. It is leased from the Canada Company. The Canada Company gives the leases to these operators, the operators go on to the farmer's land and go ahead and operate for oil. In case after case the farmer has asked the operator to show him the lease, and they inform me that they have never yet been able to see the lease given by the Canada Company to the operator. The Canada Company does not operate itself, it always gives the right to a second or third party, and these leases are handed along from one concern to another.

Mr. SPROULE. It is the custom in our country that when a man buys a Canada Company lot, it is practically under lease, but he has the sole right to occupy, to own, and to use that lot. I would not think that the Canada Company, in addition to that, would give the lease to another person to go on and buy a portion of that lot during the time the first lease or provisional lease was in operation.

Mr. McCOIG. I agree with what the hon. gentleman says, that they should not be able to do it, but they do it nevertheless. The Canada Company on no occasion has operated for oil in any section of the counties of Kent or Essex, but they give the right to second or third parties to whom these leases are resold. I shall give one instance. A gentleman named Stevenson, in Tilbury, owned a Canada Company lot. An oil operator came to that man's farm and asked if he was going to farm the land that year. Mr. Stevenson said he was and the man said: If you intend to farm you will have to get some other land, because we are going to punch this land full of holes. He had cleared the farm, paid the taxes, done all the improvements and built up a good home for himself, when the time came when the Canada Company thought they could get something for the lease they turned it over to an operator and he proceeded to drill it. Farmers have had to sit up at night to protect their crops from the operators and having wells put down so as to ruin the crops about the time of harvest.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Can the lessee of mineral rights do this without indemnity to the other owner of the soil?

Mr. McCOIG. They do it.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Does your lease permit them to do it? I understand a reservation of mineral rights, but where the power is exercised there is an indemnity.

Mr. McCOIG. The only indemnity paid by any operator to any lessee of the Canada's Company's lots would be $25. One hon. gentleman says: Why can they not go to the courts? That is what the operators always offer to do. They say: If you are not satisfied with what we give go to the court. The hon. gentleman knows how little chance the average farmer has in going to court against an oil company.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I am with you, we will stick to the honest farmer.

Mr. McCOIG. I appreciate my hon. friend's assurance that he will stick to the farmer. There is no doubt a great hardship to many agriculturists in this country.

Mr. HUGHES. The farmer buys land from the Canada Company. Who controls the right to enter his farm and get the oil, the Canada Company?

Mr. McCOIG. That is the great question; whether they do that or not, the operator takes that right of going on the land and operating for oil, damaging crops and fences and ruining farms.

Mr. HUGHES. Have they no shot guns up there?

Mr. McCOIG. The hon. gentleman has expressed exactly the position the farmers have taken. In some cases they have threatened the operators, but I am glad to say have not done any bodily harm so far. One gentleman asked whether this bounty was to be paid under this Act, as it would be to a farmer who owned both the land and the mineral rights. I do not think that is the intention of the Bill; as I understand the Bill it is to give to the owner of the surface rights a portion of the bounty for the oil that is developed or found under his land. A portion of that is to recoup him for the damage he sustains to his farm through their operating for oil. It seems quite reasonable and fair and I feel satisfied the members will assist in this matter, because there are many, both Conservatives and Liberals, who will be benefited by it. It is not a case, as the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) said, of some particular person having the patronage or having some one with a pull getting all the money, it is a case of giving people their just rights in this particular section, and I feel satisfied the farmers will be delighted if the government will give them some assistance or relief in the unfortunate predicament.

Under the existing conditions the district is practically at a standstill. Owing to the danger of injury by oil operators the farmers will not take any steps to improve their farms or their buildings. If this Bill becomes law it will place these men on the same footing as their more fortunate neighbours who own both surface and mineral rights, and the interests of the community will be greatly advanced.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not propose to be misrepresented by the hon. member. I am not opposed to seeing justice done the farmers, the only thing I am opposed to is injustice being done to any portion of the community.

Does the minister not think if he wishes to give relief to these people he should give relief directly, and insist in paying the damages in a case of this kind where lands are entered upon? The very first man to protest against the bounty going to the surface-owners in that case would be the gentleman who owned the lease. The Canadian Company without a question retain all the mineral rights in their leases just as deeds in Ontario for many years contained a clause retaining the mineral rights, and in the north nearly all the free grant lands, especially in the eastern portion of the province, contain a clause retaining the mineral rights to the Crown as the deeds in the northern parts of the country retain the pine timber to the Crown. As a matter of fact, the man who owns the surface right never owned the mineral right at all. The complaint he can make is that it puts him to inconvenience and damage to have people drilling for oil on his place. In order to recompense him why should the government penalize the man who takes over the oil lease of that land? Bear in mind that it is not only the oil drillers from the United States who are concerned, there are others; farmers buy oil leases from their neighbours. Companies have been formed all over that country, and have secured leases for which they have paid, and they are entitled to a portion of this bounty. I think that we should meet the situation fairly. We should not say that the man who has the oil lease shall be penalized and the bounty refused to him. I think that is only a fair proposition. I do not wish to injure the man owning the surface rights, or to penalize the man who owns the lease, and has possibly paid a large sum for it. There are many other cases in that section where owners of oil leases go on land where they have no right to the surface, destroy crops and punch holes, and the man who owns the surface right has just as much complaint as those who happen to have received lands from the Canada Company.

Mr. GRAHAM. The argument put up by my hon. friend is exactly the argument put up by the Canada Company. Previous to 1872 their leases carried all the rights. After 1872 they inserted a clause in the leases retaining to themselves the mineral rights. What farmer knew that that clause was slipped into that lease? It might mean anything or it might mean nothing. Half of them would not know what it meant anyway. They thought they were getting their land. Every man who has an old patent from the government thinks that he owns the land.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. And he does.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is true, but those people who got land from the Canada Company would not know that they were not getting the title to the whole property but to only part of it. That being the case, the Minister of Trade and Commerce suggests a practical thing. We cannot interfere with a contract, that is a matter for the province, but we are giving, for the production of crude petroleum, a certain amount of bounty which is a gift and we have a perfect right by legislation to say how this gift shall be distributed. If the lessees of the oil rights have abused the privileges which they have got under their leases, we have a perfect right to step in and make them, in the ordinary vernacular, sit up, in so far as we can. This is a Bill for that purpose. If they do not damage the farmer's property they will get all their bounty, but if they have been regardless of and do damage to the surface rights of the farmers they should not get all their bounty, and if they know that they are not going to get it they will be careful with respect to the amount of damage that they inflict. My hon. friend says: Let them go to the court. That sounds well, but it is not business as far as the farmer is concerned. He may go to the court this year and get judgment for his damages, but he will have to go to the court next year and the next year after that. It is a great crop for the lawyer, but a mighty poor thing for the farmer. We have it in our hands, in connection with the bounty on oil, to deal with the matter and to say to whom and in what proportion it shall go. It is a fair proposition for this parliament to say by statute to the men who operate these oil wells and are injuring the farmers by inflicting damages upon the owners of the surface rights that we shall take the right to give them a certain part of the bounty, or to withhold a part in order to help pay for the damages that they may inflict upon the farmers. That is all that we propose to do here, and I think it is an act of fairness. It may not make much difference in the distribution of the bounty, but it will make a big difference in the damage inflicted upon the farmers by the lessees.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am very glad indeed that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) has taken this matter up. I noticed in the newspapers a few days ago—it is only lately that the matter has been brought to my attention—that such a difficulty existed in western Ontario. When the Canada Company obtained those lands I have no idea that they ever thought of crude petroleum. Coal oil at that time was practically a thing unknown. They did not know that it existed there and consequently if they are prevented to-day from getting any advantage out of it they lose nothing. I would have no sympathy with the Canada Company if they should be deprived of every cent that should accrue to the owner of the land from the operation not only of the bounty, but from the oil. The bounty is only a small matter and if the farmer were to lose nothing more than the simple bounty that this government pay that would be a small matter, but to my mind the oil is worth a great deal more. I can only hope that legislation may be enacted in some way that will prevent the Canada Company, or the lessees of the oil rights, from taking any interest whatever in the property. I do not believe that they ever contracted with the Crown for it when they got the land. It was something that came in after years and was then utterly unknown. There is a big question here, and the question will have to be decided, I understand, in the court, whether petroleum is a mineral or not. If it is not a mineral, possibly no danger will come to the farmer in those counties. I only hope that some sensible judge will decide the case and say that coal oil is not a mineral. I do not believe it is. I want to disabuse the mind of my hon. friend who spoke a few minutes ago, and I think a little sharply when he accuses hon. members on this side of the House of obstructing this measure. The minister has my entire sympathy in the move that he is making. I trust that he will guard the interests of those who have purchased the fee from the Canada Company, or from the assignees of the Canada Company, as far as he can, and I beg to assure him that he will have all the assistance and sympathy, if that is worth anything—I do not suppose it is needed—that I can give him on behalf of the farmers of the county of Kent. I understand that the Attorney General of the province of Ontario has promised to assist the farmers in defending their rights, and that he will guarantee the payment of all costs in connection with the defence of such rights. Whether this is the first opportunity that the Ontario government had of coming to the assistance of these farmers in these counties in connection with this matter I do not know, but it was the first intimation that I had that there was trouble, and I think the action of the Ontario government was very proper. I trust that with their assistance in the courts, carrying it, if the Canada Company wish, to the highest court in the realm, it will turn out that the Canada Company will not own what they think they own, and that the farmers will get the right to the oil independently of the Canada Company altogether.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the minister if any provision will be made with respect to damage done to property where no oil is discovered? They may go in and destroy a man's property and discover no oil. What remedy will there be for the farmer under these circumstances?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is hardly a thing that this House can deal with.

Mr. BLAIN. What would be the result in a case of that kind?

Mr. GRAHAM. There would be no result under the Act.

Mr. BLAIN. The farmer would get nothing?

Mr. GRAHAM. That would be more for the local legislature to deal with than this parliament. Our powers are largely confined to dealing with our own bounty with respect to the production of oil. It is the only way we have to reach this question, it may not be very far reaching, but we will go as far as we think we can in this regard.

Mr. J. HAGGART. It appears to me that the minister does not fully appreciate the position. Let me instance a couple of cases. I go into that county and buy from a farmer mineral rights. I go to the Canadian Company and buy from that company the mineral rights on a particular section of land. In case I buy from a farmer, I am sure of getting the full bounty. I have an equally honest and valid claim on the property that I bought from the Canadian Company, but I am liable to a reduction for the simple reason that I have bought it from the Canadian Company. The minister says that the government have the right to dispose of this bounty in any manner they like. The government has no right to dispose of the money of the people to meet any such exceptional case as this. The government has no right to institute discrimination and to say they will give to one what they will not give to another. They may have the power, I doubt even if they have, but if so, it is a power that has never been exercised by any other government. If I buy mineral land from this company, and another man buys mineral land from a farmer, why should the man who buys from the farmer be penalized and not the other? I may do three times the damage to the land I purchase from the farmer, but I get no compensation, whereas if I do any damage to the land I got from the Canada Company I get compensation. Of course, you cannot make a law to apply to all sales of that kind, because it would be a dangerous principle to introduce, and it would be very expensive, but if you do it in one case, you certainly ought to do it in the other. As to oil being a mineral, I may tell my hon. friend from Halton that the courts have decided it is, and further than that, they have decided that gas is a mineral.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is some stupid judge.

Mr. J. HAGGART. You cannot speak of the judges in that way, and the general opinion is that the judge was right in that case. At all events, exceptional legislation of this kind is always dangerous, and the form in which it is presented in this Bill is most objectionable.

Mr. GRAHAM. I want to put this case to the hon. gentleman. A man buys the mineral rights from a farmer who owns them, and the farmer gets full pay for everything; it is a deal direct by the farmer himself. Is there not a big difference between that case and a third party coming in and leasing the rights from another farmer, who does not get a cent? My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) says that the legislation is peculiar, and I admit it is, but the condition is peculiar. You cannot make any comparison, except theoretically, between the farmer who owns the mineral rights on his land and who makes a sale of them for which he gets a quid pro quo, and the man who until lately thought he owned his own land who has his property taken and who receives no damages. It may be peculiar legislation, but I believe it is practical legislation, and if it has the effect of making the third party, who is the lessee under the Canada Company, more careful as to the damages he inflicts, it will do a great deal of good, and notwithstanding that it may be peculiar legislation, if it effects a good purpose, I think it ought to be approved of.

At six o'clock, Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. GOODEVE. It has occurred to me that possibly the minister might alter the wording of the resolution to meet at least to some extent, the objection raised, by providing that a portion of the bounty paid by the government be withheld from any flowing well owned by an operator who had committed damage in connection with another well. For instance, suppose a man operated on five farms, on none of which he obtained oil, but on all of which he did more or less damage, and eventually secured a flowing well on a sixth farm; he could apply a portion of the bounty that he would receive on the flowing well to the five farms on which damage had occurred, until that was paid up, and then the damage would be continuing on the flowing well. In that way it seems to me we might cover the objection raised, because nearly all these companies eventually have some well on which they are receiving the bounty from the government. In regard to the merits of the Bill, as the minister has pointed out, it is very peculiar legislation, and he is taking an extraordinary step; but where that is done in the interest of justice, as apparently it is done in this case, probably the government are amply justified in passing it.

Mr. WILCOX. Having a farm leased to an oil company in the western portion of the province of Ontario, I desire to add a few remarks to what has already been said upon this question. I understand that this legislation does not in any way affect land which was not originally secured by the settler from the Canada Company. I am inclined to the view that my hon. friend from West Kent (Mr. McCoig) placed a very broad application upon this legislation when he said that it would benefit all the farmers in the western part of Ontario. To the extent to which it will benefit the farmers it has my hearty support, but it seems to me that it does not go far enough. I may say that the leases which have been given by the farmers to the company are perpetual leases, and they are only surrendered by the company after they test the field, and find that there is no oil. In the district where I live most of the lands were leased, and it proved to be a dry field. Various holes were put down for the purpose of testing the field, but no oil was secured; and under this resolution, as I understand it, the farmer will not receive any benefit unless oil has been discovered. Therefore it would be only in a very rare case that a farmer would be in a position to receive a portion of the bounty.

Mr. McCOIG. The hon. gentleman is well aware that possibly over half the lands in the counties of Essex and Kent are Canada Company lands, and if there are oil operations on any of these lands, the farmer owning the land would certainly be benefited.

Mr. WILCOX. In the field to which I refer I know of only one lot that was purchased from the Canada Company, and there did not prove to be oil on that lot; consequently no benefit would be derived by the farmer who owned it. It would be possible for a company to go and bore upon that lot, and do all kinds of damage to the farmer's crop, and other damage by carrying on such operations, yet the farmer would not be in a position to receive any benefit from this legislation. Now, I do not like the wording of this resolution. It will only be a benefit to the particular farmer, wherever he may be situated, who owns a Canada Company lot upon which there is oil, and upon which the company has retained the mineral rights. Among one hundred such lots ninety-nine would be barren of oil, and the one containing oil would be the only one benefited by this legislation. The resolutions provide that where a farmer has purchased from the Canada Company, one of these lots on which there happens to be oil, the minister may—it seems to me that that is only directory, and it ought to be imperative. It looks to me like placing temptation in the way of the minister. For instance, I might be a man independent in politics, and this might be handed out to me in order to bring me over to the right side. I would much prefer if the word 'shall' were used instead of 'may,' so that any farmer, irrespective of political colour or affiliations, if he had oil on his place, would be entitled to the bounty provided in this resolution. Reference has been made to the position already taken by the Ontario government. I may say that some little time ago I had an interview with the Minister of Public Works for the province, the hon. Dr. Rheaume, who is the representative in the Ontario legislature from my constituency, and I was informed by him that the reason this test case had not been made is because it is only lately such a case has been presented to the government. I was informed that an offer was made by the Ontario government to have a test case, but that the case had not been presented to the government. So far as I know the Ontario government is perfectly willing to have a test case in the courts which will determine the rights of the company and the farmers in this particular.

Mr. McCOIG. The solicitor acting for the provincial government is the same legal gentleman who was employed over two years ago and the evidence was placed in his hands at that time. It is the same case and the same evidence and everything is exactly the same now as it was two years ago.

Mr. WILCOX. I am informed that the Ontario government is anxious and willing to go on with a test case. I desire to say that in so far as the result will benefit those farmers who may own Canada Company lots on which there is oil, I give the minister my support. I believe in the principle of this proposed legislation, but it is rather unfortunate that it cannot go far enough to benefit those particular farmers who may have purchased Canada Company lots, whose farms have been drilled and damaged, and upon which no oil has been found.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I think the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Wilcox) has placed his hand on the weakness of this resolution. It is dangerous legislation which makes any class of electors depend upon the good will or bounty of any government. If this legislation were of a compulsory nature, if it were so framed that all parties would share in its benefits, irrespective of any consideration but the merits of the case, I would be in favour of it. But the pertinent question is upon whose recommendations will the bounty be granted. Are the conditions and the regulations to be standardized? Are we to have standard regulations and conditions which will enable any one complying with them to obtain the bounty. If not, the whole Act will be administered according to the whim and will of a political party or minister, and you make it a political weapon whereby any constituency can be whipped into line to support the party in power as the dispensers of bounty. That is most dangerous legislation, instead of being permissive and depending upon the good will of the administration, it should be made compulsory. You should lay down the conditions on which the bounty will be granted, so that every one complying with these would be entitled to the bounty irrespective of politics. But if you place an engine of that kind in the hands of any political party, you put a constituency at the power of the government which dispenses the bounty. The Bill which is to follow this resolution should lay down the regulations and conditions to govern each case and, as my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Wilcox) has stated, should make the payment compulsory. If it be made compulsory, the farmer who has oil on his land will get the bounty irrespective of politics, and there can be no exceptions made. But if the payment of the bounty is to depend on the good will or the whim of any government, that is dangerous legislation which ought to be strenuously opposed.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. This is class legislation of a very dangerous kind. In the first place it is legislation in favour of a certain class of persons who have lands with oil on them. In the second place it is legislation in favour of particular members of that class. I can see no reason, if we are to give class legislation at all, why one man in a class who has suffered damage is to be treated differently from another member of the same class who has also suffered damage. But this is legislation for class within class. Suppose I lived in the vicinity of the steel works of Sydney, N.S., which company receives and has been receiving steel bounties from this government to the extent of some millions of dollars, and suppose, by reason of the vicinity of those steel works, my lot suffers damage, have I not just as much right to say to the government, give me a part of those steel bounties? Another case would be this. I understand that the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company have established great works in British Columbia, and have sold lots in the vicinity of these works, the deeds for which contain a clause barring the purchaser from any claim for damages by reason of the smoke or other offensive matter coming from the company's factory. But if a man ten years from now were to buy a piece of that land and were to overlook—as many of these farmers, the hon. minister tells us, have overlooked—the restrictive clause in his deed, he would have just as much right to say that since he had bought a piece of land from the company which was in receipt of government bounty, and since his property had suffered damage by reason of the works of the company, he was entitled to a part of the bounty. Both these cases are on all fours with the present; and if you establish a precedent, these people would have just as much right to claim a share of the bounty as those to whom you are providing to give it to-day. In the Railway Committee the other day, the Minister of Railways himself advised against giving any relief in respect of a measure which the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) had before that committee regarding commutation tickets. He advised against giving relief upon the ground that the matter was now before the courts. But the same condition exists in this case. A case is now before the courts covering exactly the same points as are proposed to be covered by the resolution before the House. I think the minister could well let the matter stand until we see the result of this case now before the courts.

Mr. GRAHAM. What the minister said in the Railway Committee the other day was this: The Board of Railway Commissioners claimed they had certain jurisdiction, the case was taken to the Supreme Court, and the majority of that court agreed with the Railway Commissioners. It was in their hands then to complete. It was not a question of the merit of the case, but whether the board had jurisdiction, and all the people were asking for was legislation to make it clear that the Board of Railway Commissioners had authority, and the Supreme Court decided that they had that authority.

Mr. S. SHARPE. If the test case that is now before the courts is decided in favour of the farmers, will there be any necessity for this legislation?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think it would have no connection with this legislation whatever. I think it would be a relief to the farmers, possibly, if that mineral was not retained, because I think the point would be whether petroleum is a mineral. If the courts were to decide in their favour, I would not dare to give an opinion on the law, but it will be several years at least before it will be concluded. Now as to the question of the word 'may' or 'shall.' My hon. friend is a lawyer, and he knows that the word 'may' is the word that is used. It has been in that statute for years, I did not change that word. 'The Governor in Council may authorize the payment,' that is the old Act, I think, without any change. Of course my hon. friend will say that it only applies to the oil operators. But it is the same principle. No more authority has been given except to extend the number of people to whom this may be paid. There may be many instances where it wont be paid at all. But the circumstances are such that the owner of the surface rights ought to be paid whatever the Minister of Trade and Commerce may ascertain under certain regulations to be fair. The regulations I suppose will be new in that regard. In trying to work out a mechanical method by which this would operate, stronger minds than mine have informed me that it was not practical to devise a mechanical method of working it out, that the right principle was to leave it just as it is left under the Act, but to enlarge the sphere. Now there is no idea of any political influence or leverage in this measure at all. I am sorry that my hon. friend (Mr. Sharpe), who is young in politics and young in the House, should suspect such a thing, and I may tell him now that he will get on further and faster if he does not always suspect some one of political motives when they are trying to pass legislation that will be for the benefit of every class of people. No such thing entered my mind, and I would be very indisposed to make political capital out of this. When I was in the Ontario legislature this matter was brought up, and I did my best to see if there was not some way out of it. I was then leader of the opposition, and I admit it was difficult even from the provincial point of view to know just how to deal with it. The matter was brought up in the shape of a Bill, and the Bill was found not to be practicable. Then it was decided that the provincial government would bring a test case before the courts and prosecute it to a finality to see if there was any relief along that line, and they are doing that now. It is not so easy a matter to settle as it looks to be on the surface. Now I am informed that we cannot go outside the power we have of granting a bounty, and it is only because we are making a present to some people for the development of the petroleum industry that we are able to deal with this matter at all. We are not dealing with it very rigidly or to a great extent, but so far as we are giving a bounty to any person under the Act, we may deal with it. I ask this House to agree to the legislation, because it will enable us to protect the farmers to that extent. There is no ulterior motive in it at all, it is only a sincere and honest attempt to do justice.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Notwithstanding the professions of the minister, I do not think it requires a man to be old in years, or in politics, or old in political sin, to know that a minister or any one else who is in politics is not immune from political influence. Does any one suppose that the man who receives this bounty from the government will not feel under an obligation to the government? If the minister is bona fides in his assertion that there is no political influence in this matter, why does he not place the administration of the law in the hands of an independent commission, some local judge, who can ascertain the facts from witnesses on the ground? Let him put the administration of the law in the hands, say, of one of the judicial officers in that constituency. I would like to ask the minister on whose advice he proposes to administer the Act? Is it going to be the local representative? Is it going to be the patronage committee, or is it going to be the member from the constituency? How does he propose to proceed to ascertain the facts? If the minister does not propose this thing to be a political engine in the hands of the party leaders, it should not certainly be in the power of the government either to grant or withhold this bounty. If the minister does not propose to use this Act for the benefit of the government, why not place it in the hands of some independent commission, the warden of the county, for instance, allow it to be administered by the county council?

Mr. GRAHAM. Does my hon. friend honestly think that the warden of a county would be the proper person? He has no responsibility. This government is responsible to parliament, and parliament is responsible to the country. Talk about the warden! My hon. friend would be the first one to object to the warden because he might be a politician. To my mind the government is the only party to whom this duty should be entrusted, because the department as a part of the government is directly responsible to parliament, and parliament is directly responsible to the people. If my hon. friend's advice were taken and carried out, we would not need any government at all, because we would not let any department administer anything. I do not think this is a matter of sufficient importance to require us to hand it over to a commission, it is so easy, so plain, and so simple. The Minister of Trade and Commerce will have no trouble in finding out the proper thing to do, and in doing it. That is the only practical way I have been able to find of dealing with this question. I am in earnest in trying to relieve the situation, I have been at this task for several years, even when I was in the local legislature, and this is the only way I have been able to discover that seems likely to solve the problem.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. I wish to express my approval of the resolution now before the House. It is not a trifling matter nor a matter which affects only a few people in the county from which I come. There are a great many acres of land, a great many farms where the titles are held in such a way that the Canada Company has reserved mineral rights. I would prefer, if it were possible, that this resolution should provide that a fixed proportion should be paid to the owner of the surface, but I can see that it is impossible to do justice in that way, because in certain cases the owner should receive a certain percentage, and in certain other cases the owner of the surface should not be paid anything. Something has been said about ownership. I think any person who is entrusted with this legislation ought to be careful to see that they are not going to interfere with the vested rights of the Canada Company or of any other person; and if it is an interference with the vested rights to say that those rights which are reserved in the conveyance shall be set aside, I would be disposed to go very slowly in that direction. But I do not think it will have that effect at all. It is a matter of the bounty of parliament. This is not dealing with the rights of the Canada Company, or with the rights of any other owners who may have reserved mineral rights, but it is purely a matter of bounty given by parliament for the purpose of encouraging the production of oil. It cannot be gainsayed that the owners of the surface are very much damaged, and inconvenienced by the way the oil operations are carried on.

It is not as one member has said, a matter of one or two. I have had many complaints in my professional practice from the owners of soil in regard to this very thing. There are two matters that ought to be considered. Companies purchase the mineral rights from the Canada Company, the Canada Company do not operate themselves, they sell for large sums to other companies which go and operate. These people have not the slightest regard for the interests, and the business of the farmers. In many cases there is a good deal of salt water, and I have had many complaints that this salt water is allowed to escape, the oil may also be allowed to escape, and not only does it destroy the crop for the time being, but it so saturates the soil that it does not recover for several years. It may be that these operators will be gone for ever, they may have ceased their operations, they may be Americans who have gone to the United States so it seems to me this is one way in which the farmers can be protected. Anyway many of these are wildcat companies. They go there, they are not required to contract with the owner of the surface, they get their rights from the owner of the mineral. It is true they are compelled by the terms of the original grant to make compensation to the farmers, but this is of little use with many of these companies. They come and get a few wells, destroy a man's soil, and the next season they are gone, and you cannot get anything out of them. For these two reasons it is incumbent on the House to make some provision whereby the owners of the surface who are injured by these operations should be helped to get some of this bounty. As far as the administration of the bounty is concerned, I do not know any administration better than the one which represents parliament in the distribution of its own bounty to see that justice is done in regard to the distribution of that bounty.

Mr. BLAIN. What suggestion would my hon. friend offer for the large number of farmers where oil wells are put down on the farms and great damage done, and no oil procured?

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. That is a matter with which this parliament cannot deal, that is a matter of civil rights which would come within provincial jurisdiction. As far as I can see they are helpless.

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Railways made an effort to grapple with it in the legislature, and he said it was beyond his powers.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The minister was then in opposition.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE: All this House can deal with is the bounty. That is a matter within the jurisdiction of this parliament, and in administering this bounty this parliament ought to see that justice is done to all parties.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Representing a district in which oil is produced, but which is not affected by this legislation, I have investigated the rights of the people in the counties referred to here, and I can assure the members that the farmers in those districts have been most unfairly dealt with. Oil companies will come on their land, and damage it to a considerable extent, and the Canada Company, which happened to reserve to themselves the rights to the minerals which are produced take to themselves a portion of the oil, and destroy to a large extent many farms in the district mentioned. As far as I can understand the legislation is in the right direction. In regard to the cases mentioned by the hon. member for South Essex the farms that are leased by the oil operators, and on which oil is not found, I can only suggest that the farmers will take good care that when they are entering into a lease with an oil operator to see that he pays the damage, and if you investigate practically all the leases now in force you will find that the lease compels the oil operator to pay any damage done to the farmer by operating on his land. I cannot help thinking the legislation is in the right direction, and although it does not affect my district I feel that for many years the farmers in the districts here referred to have been badly in need of some legislation that will do justice to them.

Mr. GOODEVE. I still think that if the minister wants to secure to the farmers the full advantage some method should be arrived at whereby every farmer whose property is damaged would receive compensation along the lines I have suggested. The minister must realize that in drilling for oil, as in mining for precious metals, there is only one success out of many failures. It is said the proportion is about one in fifty. If we pass this Bill, taking that as a proportion, then only one man out of fifty who would be seriously injured and whom the minister desires to aid would receive any assistance under this Bill. If that is the case I feel that if we have authority to say that a certain proportion of the bonus which is to be received by the parties operating the well shall be paid to the owner of the land, I cannot possibly see why you cannot go a step further, and say that any operator, when he gets a flowing well, must pay for all the damage he has caused in the drilling of previous wells out of the bonus he receives. That would be fair, and should aid in making the Bill effective.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. Is not the resolution wide enough to cover that? It says: Such other persons as may be injuriously affected.

Mr. GOODEVE. That is all I want. The farmers suffer most from the operations of men who are not successful in finding oil wells.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am inclined to think this resolution would hardly cover the point suggested. I think the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Goodeve) is well worth considering. As I understand him, one operator may be operating on half a dozen different farms; on one farm he may get oil while on another he may not get any, and the question is whether a Bill could be framed on the resolution sufficiently wide to enable the department to distribute the bounty earned on one farm over all the others.

Mr. ARMSTRONG.

Mr. GOODEVE. That is the idea.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think it is worth thinking of in order to see whether that can be done. In the meantime, I will see if it can be worked out.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If an operator gets a lease from a farmer and in that lease the operator states definitely that he will pay all damages to fences and crops, what need is there for further legislation?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is the case where the farmer himself gives a lease, but I am trying to differentiate between that and the case that we are dealing with in connection with this Bill. The farmer himself enters into that transaction, and if he does not get paid for the damage that is done, it is the farmer's fault. But in this case the Canada Company has sold a farm to a farmer, reserving the mineral rights. The Canada Company, without consulting the farmer, sells the mineral rights to some other people, and they come along, without the consent of the farmer, and begin operations upon his farm. It is to meet this case that I am introducing this legislation.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. If this Bill becomes law, what ground will the minister have for objecting to compensate a man who is living alongside of a smelter and who suffers the same disabilities as the farmer does in connection with the oil industry?

Mr. GRAHAM. That would be a question to decide by itself. I am afraid I would not introduce a Bill to that effect. I think I can see some differences between the two in quantity at least, as my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) would say, if not in quality.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I think they are on all fours. The case we are trying to meet here is a case of continuing damage. It is a case that arises out of a contract. But here is a man who is living alongside of a smelter by which he is injuriously affected. Many men have settled without any knowledge of the location of the smelter. When the farmer bought the land, he did not know that there was going to be a smelter. His case is analagous to that of the man who bought land not knowing that there was a reservation as to mineral rights, and not knowing that oil was going to be discovered. If a smelter is located alongside of the property of a farmer and he is injured thereby, he will require to maintain a continuous action in order to secure that which he is entitled to recover, as the damage would be continuous, and he is entitled to be relieved of going into a lawsuit the same as you are going to relieve these owners under this Bill. I do not know of any reason why, if this Bill becomes law, any man residing alongside of a smelter should not have the same right to come here and ask this government to compensate him. Otherwise, he may be robbed of his legal common rights just as these parties would be if the minister had not introduced this legislation. It is class legislation.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 208) to provide for the payment of bounties on crude petroleum.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—ST. PETER'S INDIAN RESERVE.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. G. H. BRADBURY (Selkirk). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter of very serious importance, a matter that affects the honour of this country, regarding a transaction that ranks, in my mind, high amongst the meanest ever committed by this government. It was an outrage against everything that was fair, against everything that was decent as between the government of the day and its ward, the poor unfortunate Indian who, this country believes, is watched over, guided and protected by the government. The manner in which this government has discharged its sacred trust towards the wards of the people is well exemplified by the way in which it manipulated and secured the surrender of the St. Peter's Indian reserve at Selkirk, which happens to be in my county. Just about a year ago I called the attention of the minister responsible for the conduct of the affairs of the Indian Department (Mr. Oliver) to the scandalous proceedings of the land speculators in relation to this surrender. I urged the minister at that time to make a searching investigation with the view of protecting the wards of the people and punishing those whom the Indians were alleging to have done them such a grievous wrong. But at that time the minister did not seem to realize that there was anything to investigate, and he practically told me that the Indian had made his own bargain and must abide by it. Now, that the House and the country may know something of this transaction, I purpose placing on record the terms of the surrender, or that part of the surrender that relates to the land which this govenment secured and divided up with their friends. I hold in my hand a memorandum submitted to the hon. the minister responsible for the Indian Department, by his deputy, Mr. Frank Pedley. This memorandum is dated just about one month after the surrender took place. It is dated at Ottawa, October 26, 1907, and reads as follows:

Mr. OLIVER. Pursuant to your instructions, I left Ottawa on the 17th ult. and reached Winnipeg on the 19th ult. to take up with the St. Peter's band of Indians, near Selkirk, the question of the surrender of their reserve at that place. When this reserve, consisting of about 55,000 acres, was set aside in 1871, provision was made that the rights of the parties holding lands within the boundaries of the reserve should be protected, and as a result of this some 5,000 acres have been patented to parties other than Indians. In order to settle the remaining outstanding claims Chief Justice Howell of Manitoba was appointed a commissioner in November, 1906, for this purpose, and from several interviews with him I judge that there would be from 1,500 to 2,000 acres still to be patented, thus leaving as belonging to the reserve proper about 48,000 acres.

This was the area that I dealt with in my negotiations with the Indians for a surrender.

Upon such terms as the government of Canada may deem most conducive to our welfare and that of our people, and upon the further condition that all moneys received from the sale thereof shall, after deducting the usual proportion, for expenses of management, be paid as follows, namely: one-half of said sum remaining to be paid to us the year following the receipt of same by the government after sale of said lands, the balance of said proceeds of sale to be funded for our benefit and the interest to be paid to us annually. At each payment as aforesaid the sum so paid shall be divided so that the chief shall receive each year the sum of $6 more than that to which the other individual members of the band shall be entitled. And upon the further conditions that out of the said St. Peter's reserve now surrendered there shall be granted an area not exceeding 21,000 acres to the members of the band as follows: to the chief 180 acres, to the ex-chief and each councillor 120 acres, and to the other members of the band in the proportion of about 80 acres to each head of a family of five; grants to be made also in similar proportions to widows and to unmarried men and women over 21 years of age. In addition to the said 21,000 acres above mentioned there shall be set aside 3,000 acres of hay land for the members of the band having land in the present reserve. The department shall advance at the time of the surrender the sum of $5,000 to be repaid out of the first moneys received from the sale of the lands.

It will be seen that by this surrender the government secured 48,000 acres of land. This land was all situated within a radius of 25 or 26 miles of the city of Winnipeg. The Red river passes right through the centre of the reserve; the banks on each side of the river were high, making this an ideal area of farming land. I have no hesitation in saying that 85 per cent of this land is first-class, and was the best land to be found in the province of Manitoba. This government that boasts in this House, and out of it, that its policy is: the land for the settler, and not for the speculator; with this boast still warm on its lips, and still ringing in the ears of the people of this country lends itself to this scandalous transaction by which nearly 35,000 acres out of the 48,000 acres passed into the hands of a few of its political friends for less than one-third of its actual value. And now, the poor settler that this government has been so much exercised about, that this government has proclaimed to the country that it is protecting and keeping the lands for; these poor settlers are forced to go to these landed gentry, the friends of the government, who obtained the land for a mere pittance, and pay, not twice as much, not three times as much, not five times as much as these gentlemen paid for the lands to the Indians, and to the government, but the settlers are actually paying to-day eight and ten times as much for an acre of these lands as the government allowed these speculators and party heelers to secure it for. This is the way this western policy of the government works out. That the House may understand the conditions I intend to lay before it facts which will show how this trick was worked. As the surrender I have read to the House indicates, the head of each Indian family of five was to have the right of disposing of 80 acres of these lands; the head of a family of six would have 96 acres; the head of a family of seven would have 112 acres. It will be seen that the heads of these Indian families, poor, ignorant Indians that never owned an acre of land in their lives before, were made competent by this government to hold and transfer, and sell lands worth in the vicinity of half a million dollars. A fair average of the holdings of these Indians was not less than from $1,200 to $1,500, and I am satisfied in view of the evidence that I will endeavour to lay before this House, that when the government were giving these lands to the Indians, they knew that these lands would simply pass from the Indians to the white men, and that the deal was arranged for. In addition to the 21,000 acres that were allotted to the Indians, and the 2,000 or 3,000 acres that were set aside for the hay lands, the government were supposed to auction the balance of the land, and some 15,000 acres were sold at public auction. Now, Mr. Speaker, some time ago I drew the attention of the minister to the fact that great dissatisfaction prevailed among the Indians over the manner in which these lands had been handled, and the manner in which the surrender had been secured. The Indians claimed that they had been practically robbed of their lands by a few Grit party agents, and land speculators under the very nose of the Indian agent, who seemed to be looking after the interests of the speculator more than he was looking after the interests of the Indian whom he neglected entirely. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Indian agent was in the market himself, and was purchasing these lands with the other speculators. Now, I do not want to weary the House, but this matter is of such importance to myself, and to the district I represent that I feel I must place before the House some letters and declarations from some of the Indians showing of what they complain. At the time I was urging the minister to investigate, I am satisfied the minister should have known if he did not know that there was a serious wrong done to that band of Indians.

The first letter I will read is as follows:

St. Peter's, May 2, 1909.

Geo. H. Bradbury, M. P., Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—The principal orginators of the ruination of the St. Peter's reserve are the chief and councillors. They publicly declared repeatedly before the band, that they would never surrender the land under any consideration. But of a sudden they kept mute, and when the matter was brought before the band, at the meeting September 23, they stood to a man for a surrender. The chief received 199 acres of land and ten dollars cash; each councillor received 140 acres of land and six dollars cash; ordinary Indians received 16 acres of land, and four dollars and thirty cents cash ($4.30). You will see the vast difference. Why should this be? No sooner was the surrender made than the chief and councillors were the first parties that sold their land. After selling their land they began to influence their people to sell their land, telling them that until their patents were issued no proper bargain could be made. But they were only getting advances on land until patent came, but it is far from being the case; the majority of those poor Indians didn't even see the sight of their patents.

True, we have an Indian agent. As far as my judgment goes, and what I honestly think, he is more an agent for the white man than he is for the Indian; what protection can we expect from such a man as Indian agent, as one who took a mean advantage of a poor treaty woman, a widow at that, who had land near the town of Selkirk. This same Indian agent bought this land from this poor woman for a very small sum of money to the acre. This sale of land was made prior to the time of the issuing of patents. I was wondering would that sale be considered legal? An Indian agent, while in office, to buy land from a treaty person, is in my mind illegal.

There is another matter I desire to point out clearly, the chief and councillors offices were terminated on the 4th day of July, 1908. Prior to the time of that date, we requested the government to grant us an election, at that date our request was unsuccessful; from that time the matter was postponed indefinitely. At last we were told that there is no law for our elections. Strange to say it was always interpreted as law by government officials, whenever holding an election it was always declared as law, and the term three years, up to the date of the surrender.

Mr. Pedley, during the meeting, when asked whether the surrender would interfere with our elections, he told us very frankly, just the words he used: No! he said that the matter rests with the band and the law. It is most astonishing to us all, when we are now informed that there is no law for our election; apart from law, if it was only a privilege, as they claim, we have had that privilege for many years in the past, and it should be upheld and maintained. I am fully aware, unquestionably, that it was the only protection we have had in the past, the term of those elected being three years. The band are entirely ignored and know nothing at all the actions of the chief and councillors, in fact they are more for white men than what they are for their fellow Indians who elected them, in fact they are entirely unfit for the position, and do not in any way represent the opinions of the band.

This letter is signed by Wm. Asham, ex-chief of the St. Peter's band, one of the most intelligent Indians I ever met, a man who would average well with the average white man in this House to-day. You will understand, Mr. Speaker, before I conclude my remarks, what this man meant by speaking of the chief and council as he has done. The chief and council, as I stated on the floor of this House before, were bribed to betray their band. I beg to read part of another letter.

St. Peter's, Gilolo P.O.,
May 12, 1909.

Hon. Geo. Bradbury, M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Sir,—When Mr. Tracy knew that the Indians of St. Peter's band were going to be permitted to sell so much land from the Indian Department, he made some dealings with them, with hay; he would ask them to put up hay for him, so many tons for him to put up in stacks, and pay them in advance of $2 per ton, and make them sign some paper; the Indian did not know what he had signed. This was power of attorney, and when the winter came the Indian would come and tell him the hay was ready and he would tell them that he would not need the hay, but have enough; you had better buy it back, and the Indian would take it back without proper understanding, and afterwards he charges them $8 per ton and charge everything up. He registered these papers—soon comes up a very large amount, sometimes $100 and more—this is the list I sent to you to see, and when the land was sold he sent these amounts to the land buyers and stopped their money and then the Indian could not draw his money although we, the chief and council know that this is not right, and though we laid this matter before Indian agent Mr. Lewis, he would not help us, but he would say let the Indian Department know, and we know that the Indian agent helps the land buyers rather than help us.

Most of the Indians are dissatisfied with the selling of their land. I was trying to stop the sale of land when it was commenced, but the land buyers said they wanted to buy the land in a risk.

This letter is signed by W. H. Prince, one of the councillors. I now wish to read a petition which was sent to me, addressed to myself:

St. Peter's November 1, 1908.

Geo. H. Bradbury, M.P.,

Sir,—The undersigned beg to lay before you their following grievances. The surrender of the St. Peter's reserve was made on the 24th of September, 1907. A few days after the surrender was made, land buyers came and bought land, first of all buying from the chief and council. After this was done, then they were hired to influence their people to sell land, telling them until such time the issuing of patents, a proper bargain could not be made, hence the land was sold, and the majority of Indians never made an application for their patents, however, the patents were issued, the Indians only heard of the same, never even having the privilege of seeing their patents.

The Indians were entirely ignorant as to the nature of the documents they sign when selling land, for the reason no proper interpretation given at the time of sale or any other time, and that is the reason why there is so much complaint.

There is another matter which we think would be necessary to be understood properly. There were application forms at the Indian office and each head of a family had to make an application in person for his or her patent, this was never done with but a few exceptions, when issuing of patents, there were another kind of forms at the Indian office which had to be signed by the Indians before receiving their patents. This was never done, with but a few exceptions.

I want to say that I asked for a return of those forms of prepared receipts for patents signed by the Indians. I have no hesitation in saying that I believe 90 per cent of those receipts were forgeries, that they were never signed by the Indians knowingly, and that the Indians did not know they had ben signed. The petition goes on:

With regard to allotment of land, the chief received 196 acres individually. Each individual received 136 acres. An ordinary Indian received 16 acres, besides the chief and councillors received more money than the ordinary Indian.

The land buyers were the parties that selected the choice land, the Indians were simply onlookers. That is the treatment the Indians received from their so-called chief and council.

Some instances the Indians were receiving less than $2 per acre, some received $2.50, some $3 and some $4 and $5 to the acre, and some are entirely ignorant as to what sum they received.

We are all fully aware that our land was fully worth at least from $15 to $20 per acre.

Trusting that you will be able to understand the nature of our grievances, humbly requesting that you will use your influence to bring the matter before the House, if possible.

Your petitioners will ever pray.

Signed.

I have a declaration here which I wish to read to this House made by a man over 90 years old. He came to me himself in Selkirk, and I had an opportunity of talking to him after he had sworn to this declaration:

TESTIMONY.

Dominion of Canada,
Province of Manitoba.
To wit:

Charles Trindle.

In the matter of St. Peter's Indian reserve and of the sale and disposal of the Indian lands in said reserve.

I, Charles Trindle, of the parish of St. Peters, in the province of Manitoba, do solemly declare that:

Sometime during the month of January, 1908, hearing that parties were buying the Indian lands at Selkirk, I visited Selkirk and approached one of the men who were buying these lands. He refused to buy my land stating that I was too old to deal with. I then went to the Indian office at Selkirk and there saw the Indian agent, J. O. Lewis. There were present at the time in the room the chief, William Prince, and W. D. Harper, councillor, W. H. Prince and James Williams, also councillors. I told these men that the party who was buying land, I believe him to be William Frank, had refused to buy my land. The chief then asked me why and I told him that Frank said I was too old. The Indian agent, J. O. Lewis, then said, I will buy your land, at the same time saying, what do you want for your land? I said $10 per acre. The Indian agent said I will take the land and pay you at the rate of $6 per month. In this way you will have a monthly allowance coming for a long time which will help to keep you. It was now dinner time. The Indian agent gave me 25 cents to get my dinner, telling me to come back after dinner when he would give me my first instalment of $6. I came back after dinner, and the same parties were in the office as were there when Mr. Lewis said he would take my land. Councillor James Williams acted as interpreter and explained all this matter to me. After the above explanation, Mr. Lewis, the agent, gave me an order on William Robinson's store for $6 This was, as I understood, the first monthly payment on my land. I took this order to the store and received $6 in cash. As far as I know I was not asked by the agent to sign any paper or any receipt for the order he gave me. I never signed by my mark or any other way to my knowledge any agreement to sell my land to the agent, neither did I ever sign any application for my patent, nor did I ever sign any receipt for my patent.

Mr. BRADBURY.

Nor did I at any time ever see my patent. I now feel that I have been fooled by the agent in the presence of the chief and councillors. A month later I came back to my agent for my second payment of $6. He again gave me an order on the same store as the first, namely, William Robinson. I got the cash for this order at the store. A month after this I again called at the Indian office, and received an order or a paper, this time to George Tracy, of Selkirk. On presenting this to Tracy he gave me a cheque for $6 where I cashed it. On receipt of this cheque from Tracy I touched a pen. There was a paper lying on the desk. It was not read to me, nor do I know the contents. I do not understand English. I am an old man, nearly ninety years of age. There was nobody present to interpret, consequently I did not know the contents of any paper which Tracy may have signed when I touched the pen. This was the only time I was ever asked to touch the pen or sign any paper in connection with the sale of my land. If my name has been signed, or my mark placed on any other documents, it has not been done by me. At that time Tracy told me that from then on he would make the monthly payments, and for me to come to him every month. This I did, and received from George Tracy cheques for $6 each month for 18 months in all, not including the two $6 orders I had received from the agent to the store. Including these orders I received a total of twenty orders or cheques for $6 each a total of $120 for my property, which should have been 32 acres that I should have received from the government, 16 acres for myself, and 16 acres for my wife, and at $10 an acre the price agreed upon by the agent would be $320. This at $6 per month would have entitled me to receive monthly payments for 53 months instead of 20 months which is all I received from the agent and Tracy, a total of $120. When Tracy gave me my last cheque in August, or maybe a month before, he did not tell me that this was my last payment, but the next month when I went for my cheque, he told me then that I had received all the money that was coming to me. This was a great surprise to me, as I had expected my payments to continue for a long time. I now find that I only received less than $4 per acre instead of $10 per acre that J. C. Lewis, Indian agent had agreed to give me.

I now feel that the Indian agent has not only not protected me but he has deceived me so that I have lost my home.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canadian Evidence Act.

His
CHARLES X TRINDLE.
Mark

Declared before me at the Town of Selkirk, in the Province of Manitoba, this 21st day of December, 1909.

C. Finkelman,
Commissioner.

In support of that affidavit I hold in my hand an account rendered by Mr. George Tracy, which appears in a return ordered by this House. In the account there is the question of this very land which this man speaks of. Mr. Tracy has an account against Trindle, and in that account he credits Mr. Lewis, the Indian agent, with having made the first three payments on this land. I do not think the hon. minister can ask any further evidence to prove that his Indian agent was a party to this transaction. We have the declaration of the old man himself, and Lewis's colleague, George Tracy, in the account he rendered, admits right on the face of the account that Lewis made the first three payments himself to this Indian. Just before leaving this matter, I want to say that is one account out of eighty-six which this man Tracy had against the Indian. He managed to have dealings with these men after he realized that they were going to be possessed of valuable land, and that these lands would be at their disposal. His accounts aggregated something like $13,000, and I have no hesitation in saying that for 25 to 50 per cent of this amount the Indians received no actual value.

Before I take my seat I think I will be able to satisfy the minister that this statement is absolutely corect. This man only charges Trindle with having received $160, but he received it in six payments according to Tracy. An old man of 90 years of age admits that he got twenty payments of $6 a month, and this man charges him at the very beginning of the account with a $35 cheque issued to Captain William Robinson's store. I am satisfied this man never received that cheque, and all through this man's accounts the same story is told. The Indians have been wronged right under the eyes of the Indian agent, and I am afraid with the assistance and connivance of the Indian agent. Now, I have here an affidavit from a poor Indian woman from whom this agent bought land in the first place, and I will read it:

TESTIMONY.

Dominion of Canada,
Province of Manitoba,
To wit:

Flora Bella Wesley.

In the matter of the St. Peter's Indian Reserve and of the sale of the Indian lands in the said reserve.

I, Flora Bella Wesley, widow, of the parish of St. Peter's, in the province of Manitoba, do solemnly declare:

That I am a member of the St. Peter's band of Indians, and in the matter of my allotment of land under the terms of the surrender effected September 24, 1907, I was entitled to 16 acres of land, 16 acres each to my two boys, and 16 acres to my daughter, 64 acres in all.

A few months after the surrender, and before the proper allotments were made, I sold to J. O. Lewis, Indian agent at Selkirk, 32 acres of my land situated inside the limits of the town of Selkirk for the sum of $5 per acre, part of which I had to receive in cash and part in goods, but I am quite unable to say what amount I received on this sale.

I also made a sale to William Frank of 16 acres, and for which I was to receive $125, but only received from him the sum of $35 in all, $23 in cash, and goods from the store to the value of $12. The balance of $90 Mr. Frank informed me he could not pay me as George Tracy had claimed it for debt.

William Frank informed me that he had purchased all my land, 32 acres in all, which I disputed, and told him I only sold him 16 acres, that the other 16 acres I did not intend to sell, as I required it for myself. I further declare that I never made application for my patent, never saw my patent, and never signed a receipt for my patent.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

FLORA BELLA WESLEY.

Declared before me at the town of Selkirk, in the province of Manitoba, this 20th day of January, 1910.

C. R. SMALLMAN.

Sir, I have thirty or forty similar declarations sent to me from these people, and they all verify the statement that has been made by the Indians in their letters. These declarations ought to open the eyes of the minister, because I am sure that some of them must have come to his attention long before they came into my hands. I want to emphasize this fact, that in face of the declaration made by Flora Wesley, and the declaration made by Charles Trindle, the minister can have no further doubt as to the charge that was made that the Indian agent, J. O. Lewis, was buying this land in collusion with other land buyers. In discussing this matter some time ago in this House, I endeavoured to show that the surrender had entailed great hardships upon the poor ignorant Indians, who now allege that the transaction was a trick and a disgrace to the government responsible for it. I urged the minister then to institute an investigation with a view of protecting the Indians against the unscrupulous methods employed by these speculators who, through the assistance of the government, had been able to secure these lands for less than one-third of their actual value. But the minister practically said that there was nothing to investigate. But he did admit that the surrender contained some peculiar conditions, and his words are to be found in volume 1 of last year's 'Hansard,' page 1019:

The surrender contained many peculiar terms. I do not suppose there ever was a surrender like it before, and I fervently hope there will never be one like it again.

Sir, well might the minister hope that no such disgraceful transaction might ever again take place under his department. He proceeds to say:

One of the terms of the surrender was that the Indians should be given title to some part of the reserve. It was a remarkable condition, but I place it before the House as an evidence of how far the department is willing to go in order to meet the Indians, and in order that the land may be turned to beneficial use.

In justification of giving the land to the Indians, the minister says:

The Indian would only sign the surrender of the reserve as a whole when he got this particular piece of land as his very own to do with as he pleased, and when he got it as his very own we had no control over him as an Indian Department or as a government. He could dispose of it as he pleased.

Sir, I submit that that is an astounding proposition for the guardians of the wards of the people of this country to make, that because the poor, ignorant, irresponsible Indian made a bargain, or made a condition, by which he expected to get land worth half a million of money, before he would agree to sign the surrender, and that the government was justified in giving these men this great reservation to dissipate, to throw away, and to hand over to their political friends. The minister admits the peculiar terms contained in the surrender, referring no doubt to the unprecedented act of giving to these Indians this large area of land, land worth, as I said a moment ago, at least half a million dollars, and then leaving them entirely unprotected. This is, to my mind, the most serious charge that can be brought against the government, the fact that in giving the Indians this land, the government removed all protection from them, handed them over into the hands of speculators, who were watching their opportunity to pounce upon them, and take these valuable lands from them. This was practically handing the land over into the hands of a few men that this whole transaction was apparently arranged for. I have no hesitation in saying, with the evidence I have before me, whether the minister is conscious of the fact or not, that this whole transaction was engineered and arranged so that this magnificent area of land should drop into the hands of three or four men who have actually got these lands. To prove the correctness of the contention that the government anticipated that these lands would eventually pass into the hands of the whites who were hovering around watching their opportunity, I shall quote part of a letter from the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs to the Hon. Frank Oliver. The letter is dated October 26, 1907, a short time after the surrender was completed. He says:

The placing in the market of the land to be sold, namely, 24,000 acres will afford an opportunity long looked for of having the land available for farming and other purposes, and the issuing of patents to individual Indians will ultimately, I believe, result in a considerable portion, if not all, of the land granted to them passing into the hands of the whites.

The statement that there are 24,000 acres is about as correct as every other statement that gentleman has made in regard to this transaction, because 15,000 acres only and not 24,000 were sold. This is from the man who negotiated the treaty under the instruction of his minister responsible for the affairs of the Indian Department. I claim that nothing more is needed to show that the government was responsible for this outrageous surrender, knew that the Indians would sell their lands to the few speculators then on the ground ready to bargain for them, and that under the protection of the government which had warned the general public off by a letter written by Mr. Pedley to the Indian Agent, which I shall read in order that the House may have some conception of the ingenuity of the men who were carrying out this surrender. After the surrender was secured a large number of people in Selkirk who realized the great value of these lands were anxious to secure portions of that reserve, and as soon as they began to negotiate with the Indians a letter arrived from Ottawa to the following effect:

Department of Indian Affairs, Ottawa,
January 21, 1908.

In connection with Indians disposing of or pledging their holdings, I beg to say that no transfer or pledge by any Indian will be in any way recognized by the department, and when it has been determined what land each Indian is entitled to receive, a patent for the same will be issued to such Indian, without regard to any claims by white men or others.

It is necessary to make this position of the department clear, and as widely known as possible, as any recognition of rights by transfer would cause endless complications, and in order to prevent same it is incumbent on the department to issue grants only to the Indians found entitled to receive same.

Almost immediately on receipt of this letter the Indian Agent heard of his instructions and made known the contents of this letter wide and far. He went into the Indian reserve and warned every Indian that he had nothing to sell until his patent came. In the town of Selkirk almost every man who approached him—I sent men to approach him myself to find out—they were told by the Indian Agent that the Indians had nothing to sell until the land was surveyed and the patents issued. That was the proper course, and if the government had adherd to the spirit of that letter I would not be standing in my place exposing what I believe to be one of the meanest transactions that has taken place under this government during the fourteen years it has been in office. What occurred? As soon as it became known that the Indian had nothing to sell until his patent issued, the average citizen, Liberal and Conservative alike, hung back, refused to give the Indian a dollar on his land, refused to negotiate with him; knowing the Indian nature as well as they did they did not want to deal with them all except four men. One of these was William Frank, whom I have named in this House before, a large real estate dealer in Winnipeg, a supporter of the present government, who came to Ottawa himself and interviewed somebody here, I do not know whom. I met that gentleman myself on his return at Beausejour, fifteen miles east of Selkirk, and we rode in the train together. He then said to me: I am going to buy the Indian lands, I am going to take the chance, if you like to come in with me, it is all right, it is quite safe. He gave me the tip; I did not take it. He said he had been to Ottawa. I asked him whom he had seen; he did not tell me, but the result was, as is very evident from what has since transpired, that that man had the tip from the proper source. He immediately started to work to negotiate with the poor Indian to buy these lands, he and three others. One of these was Fred Heap, a lawyer in Selkirk, a man who drew $1,800 in fees in connection with this very surrender. Another was George Tracy, a drayman in Selkirk, who conducted one of the most scandalous transactions ever perpetrated in the west in connection with these Indians. Another was a man named Funk, an American. These four men negotiated and dealt with these Indians and bought out of 21,000 acres that the Indians had, about 18,000.

How did they conduct these negotiations? The very first move these men made was to secure the co-operation of the chief and councillors. They bought the chief and the councillors' land, and in addition they bought the chief and the councillors to assist them in carrying out the negotiations with the rest of the Indians, in bringing the Indians to them, and in bargaining with them for the balance of the land. They caused these councillors and the chief to circulate a rumour all through the reserve in conformity with the letter I have read to the House that the Indians had nothing to sell until his patent came, but that these patriotic gentlemen were just going to advance them a little money until their patents came. They said to them: Your land is worth about $15 or $20 an acre, but you will get an advance of $4 or $5 an acre now, and when your patents come we will give you the balance of the money. That is the way these poor people were misled. Then they brought the Indians up to Selkirk and they purchased their lands and made their own bargains. That the whole transaction was arranged for a few party favourites who got these lands, I think, is evidenced, first, by the fact that the surrender was secured at the request of Mr. S. J. Jackson, then member for the county of Selkirk, a supporter of the present government. There was no other demand, there was no petition from any source asking that the surrender be secured. The only man who is on record, according to the minister himself, as having requested the surrender is Mr. S. J. Jackson. This surrender, Mr. Speaker, was secured right on the eve of a general election. The money that was paid out for these lands was circulating through that constituency just in the middle of my campaign. The Indian agent, who, I have proven to this House, was recreant to his trust as a government official, was an active organizer for my opponent, Mr. S. J. Jackson. He organized the whole eastern part of the constituency against me, and, more than that, he seemed to have abundance of money, so much so, that I regret to say, that one of my committees saw fit to have him arrested two days before the election for paying out money in the town of Beausejour. The speculators taking advantage of the ignorance of the Indians, 23,000 acres of land were disposed of without let or hindrance, without the guidance or advice of the Indian Department. I want it to be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that every one of these Indians had been raised and brought up to lean and to look upon the Indian Department as their guide and adviser. But this government gives them this valuable land, and then withdraws all its protection, support and guidance. And, in additon to this, we have the letter that was written by the deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, Mr. Pedley, the man who negotiated this surrender, warning the public that no transactions of any kind would be recognized, practically telling the public to stand off, and then we have these four men stepping in and buying these lands at whatever they could get them for, on whatever terms and on whatever conditions. These facts justify me in saying that this whole transaction was engineered from the very beginning for the benefit of the few men who secured these valuable lands from the government. Admitting for the sake of argument that the minister's contention was right—which I do not admit—that the Indian refused to sign the surrender unless he got this land to do as he pleased with it, it would be no justification for the government withdrawing its protection from its wards and allowing them to be imposed upon and practically despoiled of the valuable lands that the government had given them. The government, responsible for this surrender, knew the Indian nature, knew that he could not long resist the allurement of a little money, and that this land would soon fall into the hands of a few land sharks who were ready to pounce upon the unsuspecting Indian. Just as soon as the government removed all these restrictions and said that the Indian could dispose of his land to whom he pleased and for what he pleased, these favoured people, this quartette of patriots, got to work and began making bargains to secure the lands under the best conditions they could. But, unfortunately for the minister, the facts do not bear out what he stated about the Indians refusing to sign the surrender. I have it from reliable Indians that ther was no demand from the band, as a band, that the protection of the department should not be provided for in the surrender. I am told that when Mr. Pedley read the clause already placed in the surrender which provided that an official of the department should supervise all sales made by the Indians, it was objected to by a few Indians, but not by the band. It was not put to the vote, and neither the chief nor one of his councillors objected to the clause being in the surrender. But worst of all, I am informed, that the deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, the man representing this government, who is the guardian of the wards of this country, did not endeavour in any way to explain to these poor Indians, these two or three men who were objecting, that the clause was for their special protection, but rather seemed to take the very first opportunity offered of running his pen through the clause and striking it out. In the face of what has happened it would almost seem that these poor Indians were the paid agents of the men who were watching their opportunity to get hold of these lands, and it seems strange that the man whom the country expected to protect these Indians would yield to that objection and strike out that protecting clause without one word, and leave the Indians at the mercy of the men who wanted to get these lands. Yet, that is what was done.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in proof of this contention I have here among the letters which were brought down by the minister himself, a letter signed by one of the Indian councillors which reads:

St. Peters, September 21, 1909.

Hon Mr. Oliver,—All our Indians are dissatisfied, and are still looking for help from the Indian department, and we the chief and councillors are dissatisfied. For when the surrender was made, before Mr. Frank Pedley, the Indians were asked if they would allow the government to appoint one of their officials to make bargains for them, some Indians said 'No, we can make our own bargains.' But not one of the councillors or the chief, because we want the government to help us, because we, the Indians are like children.

W. H. PRINCE.

Is there any other evidence I could give to the House which would be half as conclusive as this, showing that there was no demand made by the Indians as a band, that the protection should be removed, and that the statement made by the minister in this House was entirely misleading when he said that was the only condition on which he could obtain the surrender of St. Peter's Indian reserve. These Indians declared, as dozens have told me privately, that there was no demand made by the band that the Indian Department should not stand between them and the white man. The Indian knew that he was not capable of handling such valuable possessions, and the duty of the department was after it had given these people these lands, (which I contend was a crime in the first place) the manifest duty of the Indian Department was to see that the Indians were not robbed by a few hungry land sharks. I submit that that is strong evidence to show that the removal of the protective clause in the surrender was not made a condition of the surrender by the band, but that this clause was struck out simply at the bidding of a few irresponsible Indians who were no doubt in the pay of those who did not want any power to interfere between them and their intended victims, the Indians. As I pointed out, there was no effort made by the deputy Superintendent General—who was responsible for this surrender, and who I believe is responsible for this whole transaction—to retain the protective provision in the surrender. It would almost seem there was an understanding of some kind between these men and the men who acquired these lands. The more I see and hear of this transaction the more I am satisfied that the whole thing was arranged so that these lands should pass into the hands of the few men who got them, and a scheme was devised, first, to give them to the Indian, and then to make it impossible for the public to interfere, and these four men were allowed and assisted by the Indian agent to acquire these lands on their own terms and conditions from the poor unfortunate Indians. Well, Mr. Speaker, when the minister was before the committee some time ago I again called his attention to the scandalous conduct of the land speculators, and also to the protests that were entered by the Indians against the whole transaction. I then, two months ago, pressed for an investigation, but the minister flatly refused. However, I learned a few days after that he had despatched his law clerk from the Indian Department with instructions to make a secret or private investigation. On learning this I quite naturally visited the department to ascertain if this were true. I could not believe it possible, in face of what the minister said to me across the floor of the House, that he would have taken action without at least having given me some little notice, knowing the interest I was taking in the matter. Well, Sir, after visiting the department, and asking a question from one or two of the officials, these men simply shook their heads; they did not know anything about it. When I put the question straight to them: where is Mr. Williams, the answer was; he is away on duty, and when I asked: has he gone to Selkirk, the answer was: I do not know, you will have to see the deputy. I did not see the deputy, I felt it was no use under the circumstances, but the deputy was seen, and the deputy refused to give any information. But I knew that this man had gone to Selkirk and I went to Selkirk myself and I found that the minister had sent Mr. Williams there and that he was making a private investigation. There was no attempt to make a public investigation, no attempt to arrive at the truth regarding these scandalous transactions. What this man was evidently doing—as is borne out by the report which he makes—was simply seeking to get evidence to combat the statements made by me on the floor of the House, and the statements made by the Indians in the letters and petitions sent to the minister. In every page of that report which this law clerk brings down he shows his utter inability to cope with the conditions existing around Selkirk. You might as well send that gentleman to Hong Kong to inquire into Chinese conditions, and expect a proper report, as to send an innocent young man like him in among the land sharks that secured this land. When I went into Selkirk where did I find him? I found him with the Indian agent, the man who had been a party to this transaction; I found him with these land dealers, the men who had been parties to the scandals complained of. Is it any wonder that his report bears the complexion it does. What do you find in this report? You find the Mr. John Smith sold so many acres of land to George Tracy, and according to George Tracy's books he received payment in full. That is the way he wipes out every one of these charges; he goes according to their books. I have no hesitation in saying, Sir, from my place in the House, that as to a large number of these amounts that are charged up to these poor unfortunate Indians they never saw one dollar of the money. Of course, the books were all right as a matter of book-keeping —these men are good book-keepers as results show.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the course of the criticisms that were made in the House on a previous occasion, the minister stated that he had secured a number of surrenders from different reserves throughout the country, and that in every case the land had been duly advertised and put up to auction. At that time I took exception to that statement of the minister, and in the face of this transaction I was astonished that the hon. gentleman would make such a statement. Surely this transaction must have escaped his memory at that moment, or he could not have made the statement he did. Here was St. Peter's Indian reserve, where they had secured by surrender 48,000 acres of these lands, 21,000 acres of which they immediately gave to the Indians, and through the Indians to their white friends, and out of the balance some 15,000 acres, was sold at public auction. As I have stated, while the surrender called for 21,000 acres, the hon. minister, I presume, knows that it took 23,000 acres to satisfy the Indian claim; and this land was practically handed over by the government, through the instrumentality of the poor ignorant Indians, to a few white men, including one or two party heelers, for less than one-third of its actual value. Now, Mr. Speaker, when speaking before in this House, I made the statement that the chief and council were bribed to betray their band. That is a serious charge to make. The hon. minister took strong exception to it at that time; but he ingeniously endeavoured to place Chief Justice Howell as a kind of buffer between the department and this charge, and to make it appear that if I made a charge of bribery I was making it against him. Now, while I frankly admit that the word bribery is not a pleasant word, and ought not to be used by any hon. member except where it is entirely justified, I believe that before I take my seat I shall have satisfied the hon. minister that I was entirely justified in using that expression regarding this scandalous transaction. In order that we may know exactly how this transaction was conducted, it will be necessary for me to review for a short time the negotiations which took place for the surrender. When Chief Justice Howell went to Selkirk to open the negotiations with the Indians with the view of securing the surrender of the reserve, the chief and councillors would not listen to any proposition of that kind. In fact, they refused to discuss the matter with him. The chief called meetings of the band, and, after explaining to the Indians wht Chief Justice Howell was suggesting, he pledged himself and the councillors to the band on three different occasions, that under no consideration, would they agree to surrender the reserve. So it was impossible for the Chief Justice to make and headway in securing the surrender. But just at this stage the services of one of the well known party heelers of the town of Selkirk were called into his assistance, and this man succeeded in including the chief and his councillors to violate the pledge they had given to the band, and to meet Chief Justice Howell and arrange terms of surrender. It is now alleged that the consent of the chief and the councillors was secured only after it was agreed to pay these men a considerable amount of money and a large amount of land, in addition to what the average Indian was to get. These were the influences that were brought to bear upon these poor ignorant Indians, who with the cunning of the Indian and the deviltry and cupidity of the white man in their nature, because two of these men are half white. These men were secured by this man and the government officials to assist in securing the surrender. They were purchased to violate the pledges which they had given and to betray the band which had elected them to office. As evidence that these men were paid to betray their band, I submit this letter, which was brought down in one of the returns by the minister. To me it is very strong circumstantial evidence that the statement I have made is absolutely correct. This letter was written by a man named Ernest Rayner, who is credited with having done the trick:

Selkirk, October 17, 1907.

F. Pedley, Esq.,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Please find statement of cash and goods expended by me in connection with the St. Peter's surrender. As the estimated cost was $500, you will see the work was done reasonably. Trusting this will be satisfactory, I remain,

Yours respectfully,
EARNEST RAYNER.

This man, it must be remembered, was not a government official. He was simply a clerk in one of the stores in the town of Selkirk, and one of the leading Liberal workers in the town, a man who was always on hand to do the work of his party. This was the man secured to carry on these negotiations. There is no account on record to show what that money was for. I have asked for the account, and it is not to be found. In fact, the Indian Department very wisely refused to pay it, as I presume the hon. minister knows. But this letter proves that there was some distinct understanding between Mr. Rayner and somebody that the Indian Department was going to make good this $500, which was the estimated cost of the peculiar work he was supposed to do. Rumor had it in the streets of Selkirk, from the time the deal was negotiated, that the chief was to receive $200 in cash, and the councillors $100 apiece. That would exactly account for this $500 which this man claimed from the Indian Department, and which the department refused to pay. Judge Howell refused to O. K. the bill. But the debt was incurred, and the understanding was arrived at by somebody, and this man had to get the money.

How was it done? Well, I have not direct evidence, but I have circumstantial evidence, which is sometimes the strongest evidence a man can adduce. You find that, according to the terms of surrender, the chief was entitled to receive 180 acres of land, and he actually did receive 199 acres. By the same surrender the councillors were entitled to receive 120 acres each, and they did receive an average of 140 acres each. As there were five of them, they just received sufficient to make up about 100 acres which, at the current price, settled among the dealers, gave the $500 necessary to recoup this man for the money he had used to pay the chief and councillors for betraying the band that had elected them to office. I do not see how there can be the slightest doubt in the mind of any one who knows anything about the circumstances that this money was made up in this way to recoup this man for the sum he had spent. What other possible reason can there be? Why should these men have got this extra land? The treaty provided that the chief should get 180 acres, and the councillors 120 acres each. And instead they got this additional land. It is therefore a fair deduction from the facts that it was from this additional land the $500 was provided to pay these men for the betrayal of their trust.

As I have pointed out, the hon. minister (Mr. Oliver) was very much shocked when I used the word 'bribery' in this connection. Let me say now that I can find no other word which can so adequately describe the conduct of the government in this matter, in which it secured the surrender, first, by giving the chief thirteen times and each councillor nine times more land than was given to an ordinary Indian, and then by giving the chief and council money and goods to secure their consent. If this be not bribery, and the most contemptible kind of bribery, of the representatives of the Indians to induce them to betray those who had elected them, then I do not know what the word means. What a spectacle of wisdom of the utter lack of honesty of purpose this whole transaction reveals! None but the new school of Liberals could have conceived and worked out such a contemptible scheme. It is a disgrace to the government, and will cause honest men to blush to think that the government would allow its wards, these poor unfortunate Indians, to be treated in the manner I have described.

After the consent of the chief and council had been secured, let me point out what took place. After several private meetings had been held in the town of Selkirk between the chief and council and Chief Justice Howell and an officer of the Indian Department—I think it was Mr. Laird—and lawyers appointed by this government—for what purpose I do not know, except to get a fee, for they certainly did nothing for the Indians—this surrender was obtained. All the negotiations took place at these private meetings, and a surrender was agreed upon by the chief and council, who were purchased to betray the band. The Indians, as a band, were not consulted, they knew absolutely nothing about these meetings except from hearing that private meetings were going on, they had a pledge from their chief and councillors that no surrender would take place, and they had confidence in their chief and council, and thought everything was all right. But they were rudely awakened from that feeling of security by the publication of the following notice, which was posted up at four different places on the reserve, calling a meeting of the band to discuss this all important question of the surrender of their homes and the heritage they had enjoyed from childhood and which had been handed down to them by their fathers and grandfathers. Let me read this notice, and I am sure even the hon. minister will be astonished when he hears what I am going to tell him, for I give him the credit of believing that he does not know one-half of the scandalous conduct which has taken place in connection with this transaction. This notice called a meeting of the band at one day's notice, and remember that was a meeting of a band of Indians living on a reserve 80 miles square, and they were summoned to this meeting to decide whether they should surrender their homes. One can well imagine how inadequate a day's notice would be to hold a meeting of that kind to a band covering so large a territory. The notice reads as follows:

To the St. Peter's Band of Indians:

Take notice, that a meeting of the male members of this band of the full age of twenty-one (21) years, will be held at the Treaty grounds of this reserve, on Monday the 23rd day of September, A.D. 1907, at 11 o'clock a.m., for the purpose of considering, deciding and assenting to the release and surrender of the St. Peter's Indian reserve on the terms to be set forth at the meeting.

CHIEF WILLIAM PRINCE.

J. D. LEWIS,
Indian Agent

Dated at Selkirk, this 20th day of September, 1907.

As I have said, only one day's notice was given for these Indians to gather together. I am going to read to the House, in proof of the statement I have made, for I want to show that this whole transaction was not only disgraceful but illegal, and I do not believe that any properly constituted court in this country would uphold that surrender on the conditions under which it was secured—I am going now to read a letter from William Asham, ex-chief of the St. Peter's Indian band, one of the most intelligent Indians I have ever met. Mr. Asham is not an ordinary Indian. This man, if he had enjoyed the advantages of education, would have been another Norquay. He is a man of transcendent ability, every letter from whom is in his own handwriting.

Dear Sir,—The inclosed is the original copy of the notice that was posted one day previous to the time of meeting for the surrender of St. Peter's reservation, effected September 24, 1907. The following is the size of the building where the meeting was held: Length, 29 feet; width, 18 feet. I may point out the building is a government storage, for that reason only about three parts of the building was used for the meeting.

Just imagine how ridiculous, for 200 men to gather in a little space not much bigger than that space opposite the Speaker's chair, to conduct these important negotiations. I have a telegram here from the same source:

Selkirk, Manitoba, January 26, 1910.

G. H. Bradbury,

House of Commons, Ottawa.

Band received one day's notice of meeting September 23. Notices, three or four posted on Sunday, September 22.

Now, Sir, I am told by the Indians, and told by this man, that this notice was not seen until some time after midday on Sunday, and the meeting was called for 11 o'clock the next day to discuss the all-important question of the surrender of this reserve. I have a copy of the original notice here that was stuck up. I have also a declaration here which I wish to place on record to confirm the letter:

Statutory Declaration.

Dominion of Canada, Province of Manitoba.

In the matter of the vote for surrender of the Indian lands in St. Peter's reserve, taken on September 24, 1907.

To Wit:

I, John Flett, of the parish of St. Peter's, in the province of Manitoba, Indian, do solemnly declare that I am a member of the St. Peter's Band of Indians; that the notices calling the meeting at which the vote surrendering the reserve was taken, were not posted up, nor did the Indians know anything about such a meeting until Sunday, the twenty-second day of September, A.D., 1907, just one day prior to the date of such meeting. The meeting was held on Monday, September 23, and duly adjourned until the next day, Tuesday, September 24, but at the time of such adjournment, no notice was given that the vote would finally be taken on Tuesday. Many of the Indians did not see or hear about the notice, and in consequence were not present at the meeting, and did not have a chance of expressing their views or voting. I believe that had ample time been given and the matter properly explained to the band, that many who were at their homes would have turned out and voted against the surrender of their reserve; many of the young men of the band were away from home working at various occupations and did not know or hear anything about a vote going to be taken owing to the shortness of the time given. That I have been told and believe that some non-treaty men and some minors were counted amongst those voting for the surrender. That in my opinion the vote was most irregular and improper and was not taken according to the regular custom of our band.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously, believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

Declared before me at the parish of St. Peter's, in the province of Manitoba, this 24th day of March, A.D., 1910.

(Sgd.) ROBERT G. McDONALD,
Commissioner in B. R., etc.

(Sgd.) JOHN FLETT.

I have four declarations of the same nature, but I will not trouble the House with reading them. This is not a party question; this is not a political question; so far as I am concerned it is a question of right and justice, and I say there is no man listening to me to-night but must realize how unreasonable, how unfair it was to call a meeting of that kind, giving the poor Indians only one day's notice to decide whether they would give up their homes where they were born and had raised their families. It is a scandalous thing, and the officials guilty of it and the government responsible for it ought to be condemned, and must be condemned by every honest man in this country.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the hon. gentleman give the names of the other men?

Mr. BRADBURY. I have other declarations here to the same effect. One is signed by Wiliam Sinclair, who, I may say, is one of the most intelligent men of the band. the man that Mr. Williams, the law clerk, sent out by the department to investigate, employed as his interpreter while going round among the band. This man testifies also that only one day's notice was given to call this band of Indians together. Another declaration is signed by William Asham, an ex-chief. Now, regarding the meeting itself, it was a perfect farce; it was conducted as a farce. It was held in a little bit of a room not capable of holding one quarter of the Indians present. There were 289 qualified voters in that band, and there were something like 200 present in the little room, which was not big enough to hold 50 men comfortably. The government party, the men who attended with Mr. Pedley, numbered eight or ten, so there could not have been room for more than 40 or 50 Indians at any one time. The negotiations, I am told, were conducted almost entirely in English, and there was no proper interpretation of the proceedings to the Indians that were inside while the men that were outside knew practically nothing of what was going on except what they learned from their friends through the windows. Now, I want to call the attention of the minister to clause 49 of the Indian Act, which states:

Except as in this part otherwise provided, no release or surrender of a reserve or a portion of a reserve, held for the use of the Indians of any band, or of any individual Indian, shall be valid or binding unless the release or surrender shall be assented to by a majority of the male members of the band of the full age of 21 years, at a meeting of council thereof summoned for that purpose.

Sir, there was less than 38 per cent of that band who voted for that surrender. The law distinctly says that a majority of the band is necessary to secure that surrender. After all that was done the government party were only able to secure a majority of seven of the men who were present. Another matter I wish to emphasize is this, that the young men, the backbone of the band, the men who were earning money, 75 of those young men were absent. Many of them were working on the lake, some were working for lumberers, some were in the harvest fields; while the old men who could not understand the English language were present, and a few of the others.

But the backbone and sinew of the band were not there and without giving these men a chance, without notifying them that this meeting was going to be called or that any negotiations were under way seeking a surrender of their homes, this government allows a transaction like that to be legalized, their homes taken from them, and their lands sold. I say that the matter is not only scandalous, but illegal and it ought to receive the condemnation of every honourable, and thoughtful man in and out of this House. I am informed by reliable men that although this notice calling the meeting was dated on September 20, it was not seen until Sunday, the 22nd, so there was just one day's notice. This fact alone adds to the suspicious nature of the whole nasty transaction, and indicates that the government has been guilty of an act utterly unworthy of any government of this country responsible for the care and protection of the poor unfortunate Indians who are the wards of the people of this country. There is the further fact that although the Act provides that the majority of the Indian vote is necessary to legalize a surrender of Indian lands, less than 30 per cent voted for this surrender. The matter is irregular and illegal, and I am surprised that the minister who presides over this department, if he is aware of all these facts, would for one moment stand for them. It is hard for any hon. member who listens to my voice to-night to believe that such a thing can take place in a country like Canada. We have boasted, and we get the credit of being just to our Indians, and yet this band of Indians have been practically robbed of their homes, and their heritage by and through the assistance of the government and its agents. There is no doubt that no honest effort was made by the gentleman entrusted with the negotiations for this surrender to secure the presence of the male members of the band who were eligible to vote. The younger men, as I have pointed out, the men of intelligence, of some little education, the men who had some conception of the value of the heritage they enjoyed, were not present, in calling the meeting a time was chosen when these men were out working, and a snap verdict was secured in the absence of the men who would have known better, and would have resisted the allurements, and temptations that no doubt secured even the semblance of a majority that was obtained for that surrender. Everything points to a determined effort on the part of the government to secure the surrender of this magnificent reserve, by fair means or by foul means, and I am bound to say that the evidence I have had before me, and that I am trying to lay before this House leads me to believe that the means used were anything but fair, and were verging very closely on what might be called dishonest. When you take into account the fact that this surrender was not secured at the request of the town of Selkirk, that there was no petition from the town of Selkirk, no demand from the board of trade, that the only demand came from Mr. Jackson, then a member of this House, and a supporter of this government, and that Mr. Pedley makes the statement that he does in his letter that the throwing of these lands into the market was giving to the people what was long looked for, the lands that might be made available for farm, and other purposes, the only parties I know of who were looking for these lands were the men who got them. There was no demand from the town of Selkirk or anywhere else that this reserve should be taken from the Indians. Every hon. gentleman realizes what a small meeting means. The meeting in which this arrangement was completed consisted of not more than fifty men who were able to hear what took place as the building was too small to hold more. The proceedings were in the English language with no proper interpretation, and not one-quarter of that meeting understood half what took place, and I am safe in saying that not one-eighth of the band understood that these men were seeking to secure the surrender of their homes, and to acquire possession of their lands. During the Christmas holiday I visited the reserve, and I found there old people living in houses of which the land buyers had secured deeds. These Indians did not realize that they are not the owners of these houses, they believed that they were still their homes. I say that the whole transaction is a disgrace to the government that has permitted it. The whole surrender was prepared not in a meeting before the band, but in a private meeting in Selkirk with three councillors, and the chief men who had been bought and bribed to attend the meeting. The surrender was drawn up, and put in typewritting, and taken down there to the meeting on September 23, by Mr. Pedley. They did not go down there, and arrange with the Indians. They went there to see if they could get the Indians to do what their chief and councillors had already agreed to, and the manner in which they did it is a disgrace to the men who perpetrated the acts that were perpetrated at that meeting. These Indians were not told the truth, they had nothing to do with it, and when they remonstrated with the conditions of the treaty or surrender they were told that it was all fixed, that it was in writing, that it was all completed, and there was no chance of changing it.

Now, we are told that when this meeting took place it lasted two days. The discussion was conducted for the Indians by ex-chief William Asham, a very intelligent man, who defended the rights of the Indians for two days before the commission before they dared take a vote. The first day's sitting started at eleven o'clock with Mr. Pedley in the chair. Mr. Chief Justice Howell and seven or eight other interested parties were present, and they discussed the pros and cons until four o'clock in the afternoon. Asham then demanded a vote, but, Mr. Speaker, these men who had come to Selkirk for the purpose of securing this surrender by fair means or foul, realized that the opinion of the band, in so far as they could judge, was strongly against the surrender. The consequence was that Pedley adjourned the meeting until the next day. That accounts for the two days meeting that was necessary for these negotiations. There was a good deal of manipulation and canvassing in the endeavour to secure the surrender, the effort going so far as offering to bribe Asham. I am told on the best authority, and I have a declaration which I will read to the House, that when they found that they could not overcome Wm. Asham's opposition, when they realized that they were up against a strong man who had the confidence of his band and who had the intelligence to combat what was taking place, they started to work and tried to bribe this man. When they adjourned for lunch this man was invited by W. D. Harper, one of the councillors, more white than Indian, with all the cunning of the Indian and all the deviltry of the white man in his composition, to go to his house. There were several in the room. After lunch he passed a piece of paper to Asham with these words written on it: What would you think if we made you equal to a councillor? Would you agree? Wm. Asham tells me that he understood the language and what it meant. It meant this: What would you think if we gave you as much land as we are getting? Would you then agree? Wm. Asham said: No, I could not agree under any consideration without betraying my band. He further says that he then went out of the door and he was told that S. J. Jackson wanted to see him. He says that he told them that he did not want to see S. J. Jackson. Then he walked over into the crowd and he found some one pulling at his coat, and, turning around, found our friend Mr. Jackson. He brought him outside of the crowd, and Mr. Jackson said: Mr. Asham, you are very much opposed to this surrender, are you not? Mr. Asham said: Yes, I am. Mr. Jackson said: Well now, look here, if we make you equal to these councillors and give you as much land as they are getting, I will guarantee to get you the patent within six weeks. Asham turned on him and said: No, Mr. Jackson, I would consider that I was accepting a bribe to betray my band. This man was loyal and refused to be bribed. But the bribery and the effort at bribery did not end there.

An hon. MEMBER. Who was S. J. Jackson?

Mr. BRADBURY. S. J. Jackson was at that time the member for Selkirk. After two days of negotiation and discussion trying to win over the poor, unfortunate Indians by fair means or foul, Mr. Pedley decided that the time had come to take a vote. It was about 4.30 or 5 o'clock in the evening. It is alleged, now, that Mr. Pedley said: We must take a vote, and he stood up in the middle of the room and said: Gentlemen, or rather men—I have an affidavit which I will read to the House later describes it better than I can describe it—But Pedley said I have $5,000 here in my satchel; if you vote for this surrender tonight I will distribute this $5,000 amongst you; if you do not vote for this surrender I will take my bag and go home, and you won't get a cent. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he considers that bribery?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Who said that?

Mr. BRADBURY. Frank Pedley, Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, the man instructed by the minister to go to Selkirk, and secure the surrender of this reserve, I would like to ask the minister, I would like to ask any hon. gentleman within hearing of my voice, whether or not he considers that bribery. How would a man appear if he stood on a political platform, and made a declaration of that kind to an audience? What chance would there be of that man holding his seat before an honest judge? He would be unseated immediately; he would not dare go into court. But this was not all. These men were desperate, they were bound to get that surrender, and after Mr. Pedley had made that statement he said: Now the time has come to take a vote; this room is too small; get outside in the field among the rest. Two-thirds of them were outside. These men went out and before they divided the Rev. John Semmons, Indian inspector, stood forward, held up his hand, and, speaking loudly in the language that the band understood, the Cree language, he said: All you that want $90 go to that side, indicating the side on which the councillors, the chief, Chief Justice Howell and Mr. Pedley were standing, and that side was counted in favour of the surrender. Yet, in spite of these two facts, first, the statement by the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs that he had $5,000 to distribute amongst those people, if they voted for surrender and the direction of Mr. Semmons that if they wanted $90 they should go to one side, they Pedley and his party only succeeded in securing seven of a majority. I have evidence here in my hand to show that non-treaty men who had no right to vote were counted amongst those favouring the surrender, and that minors, young men, also put in their votes. In the face of this evidence it must be clear to every man in this House that the manner in which the surrender of St. Peter's Indian reserve was secured shows that this was one of the most scandalous transactions that has ever taken place in this country. In view of the facts that I have tried to lay before this House fairly, I would ask the minister whether he thinks I was justified in using the word 'bribery' in this connection? In view of the transfer to the chief of thirteen times, and the councillors of nine times as much land as the ordinary Indian got, besides payments of cash and goods to these traitors to betray their band, the chief and council, to agree to the surrender in the first place, the statement made by Mr. Pedley, the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs that he would distribute $5,000 among them if they would agree to the surrender, and the further statement of Mr. Semmons, which was altogether misleading to the effect that all you who want $90 step to that side am I not justified in saying that there is absolute proof of the bribery and trickery that were committed during this transaction? I am bound to say, Sir, that I think the whole transaction was one of the most contemptible pieces of trickery ever perpetrated on the poor Indian and the government responsible for it is utterly unworthy of the confidence reposed in it by the people of this country. The minister responsible for this department has been appealed to time and again by myself to investigate, and he has been appealed to time after time by the Indians, and he has promised to visit that reserve, but he has always failed to do so. The minister now must take the full responsibility, and the government through one of its departments has been guilty of a cowardly, and contemptible act in connection with securing the surrender of the St. Peter's Indian reserve. That there may be no misunderstanding about this $5,000, I hold in my hand Mr. Pedley's letter to the minister in which he says :

> Five thousand dollars was left at the time of the surrender with the Indian Agent Lewis and Inspector Semmons to distribute to the Indians of the band. Part of this was done on the spot at the time of surrender and the balance will be distributed from time to time as the parties entitled to it appear before the agent for that purpose.

An hon. MEMBER. Whose money was that?

Mr. BRADBURY. It was the people's money. That money was taken from the public treasury, and taken to Selkirk for the purpose of securing that surrender. There is no doubt that since that land has been sold it has been charged up against these unfortunate Indians and taken out of their money. Now, to give you some little idea of how these land transactions were negotiated and all the contemptible trickery that was resorted to to beat these poor Indians even out of the land that the government had so prodigally and wickedly given to them—because I hold the government had no right to make the Indian competent just for a few weeks or a few months to deal in land; I hold that the Indian was not competent; I hold that the Indian was just as much a ward of the government during the time that surrender was going on as he ever was and as he is to-day. I have, Sir, a letter in my hand from the Indian agent, Mr. Lewis, the man who was part and parcel of this whole transaction, the man who stood in and assisted in these land transactions, because I want to say that these land dealers who bought these lands for less than one-third of their value, did their dealing right under the Indian agent's nose. There was a building with the Indian office in one part of it, Mr. Heap, the lawyer, in another part of it, and the land office in another part of it. If the patents could not be found in the Indian agent's office, they would go to the lawyer's office, and if they could not find them there, they would go to the land agent's office, and invariably they would find the patents in the possession of the land agent and not the Indian agent. I have no doubt that the minister will refer to a report by one of his Indian agents, who made an investigation, whitewashed this wolf Tracy, who practically robbed these poor Indians. I will tell you what took place in connection with that man. As soon as he found out these poor Indians were going to be allowed to sell these valuable lands, he immediately endeavoured to get them in debt. That is not a hard thing to do, for the Indian will take anything you give him. He would go to the Indian and say: John put me up 10 tons of hay, after he knew the man was going to give him 32 acres of land. If he knew he was going to get 80 acres of land, he might ask him to put up 20 tons or 40 tons. He would then advance the Indian a little money $10 or $20 and would ask the Indian to touch the pen, when he Tracy would sign some paper. No explanation given, it turned oue to be a power of attorney. The Indian would get the hay, and this man had signed for the Indian a power of attorney, the strongest power of attorney that any legal man in the city of Winnipeg could draw, which gave him absolute control of the Indians land. The Indian would come in the fall and say: Tracy, I have the hay, and Tracy would say: I don't want the hay, you had better keep it yourself. There would be no understanding; Tracy would charge that man $8 a ton for the hay that the Indian had made on his own land. Now I am looking into the faces of some honest men on the opposite side of the House, and I know they will be astonished—I am looking now right into the face of the Minister of Railways—I know that some of these honest men opposite will be astonished when I tell them that in some of these accounts there is $400 charged for hay that George Tracy was supposed to sell the poor Indians. The Indians did sot want to buy hay, the Indian made the hay on Indian lands, and Tracy first gave him an advance of about $2 a ton to put it up. Then, after the Indian got it up, Tracy did not want it, and the Indian kept it and George Tracy charged him $8 for keeping it. And, Mr. Speaker, these accounts were presented to the men who were getting the land and every dollar was paid to Tracy, showing there was collusion between the four men. There were only four men who had any transactions to any great extent. Out of the 23,000 acres that the Indians got, four men got nearly 18,000 acres of it. Some of the storekeepers in the town got a few acres, but these four men got 95 per cent of these lands. There is no Indian I have met, or very few of them, who admit that they ever received anything like $5 an acre for their land. Every one of these men who got the lands were good strong supporters of the present government. For the information of my friends here, I want to say that I do not know one Conservative who ever secured an acre of these lands except two storekeepers in the town of Selkirk, and these two storekeepers secured a few acres in connection with some of the supplies that were given to these land dealers. The land dealers were very shrewd men; they wanted to get on the good side of the people of the town of Selkirk, especially the merchants, and they fixed the Indian in this way. When the Indian got anything, they would give him an order on the store for, say $10, on the understanding that he would get $5 cash and the other $5 he had to take out in trade. In this way the storekeepers got to understand something about the transaction and they made small deals themselves, and got a few acres of this land. The four dealers who got this land were Wm. Frank, of the city of Winnipeg, real estate dealer; a man named Funk, an American, who was brought in by the Indian agent; a man named Fred. Heap, a Liberal lawyer, who got $1,800 in connection with this treaty out of the Indian funds, and this man George Tracy. These were the four men. Now, what does the agent, Lewis, say about these Indians? The hon. minister, speaking across the floor of this House a few months ago, sought to lead the House to believe that these men were thoroughly competent to transact their own business. He said they were just as shrewd as the average man in this House. What does the Indian agent say? He says in a letter addressed to the Indian Department:

> While a large percentage of the St. Peter's Indians resent interference in their business, there is, I believe, a majority of them too illiterate and helpless to manage a real estate sale, especially where the payment of the land extended, as in most cases it did, over a period of one year, and was made by orders on stores and with truck and small cash payments. The Indians sold only in small parcels and at different prices, and not always to the same buyer. The Indian gave a statutory deed as soon as he sold setting forth the price. He received a small payment down with the promise of the balance as soon as he was able to deliver the patent. The selling began as soon as the locating started. Thus a year elapsed between some of the sales and the receiving of the patent. There was nothing expressed in the deeds as to future payments. In fact as far as anything was set forth in the deed the Indian was paid in full. He was dependent entirely upon the honour of the buyer for the fulfilment of the verbal contract. You can readily understand that the accounts extending over so long a period have become long and complicated. This shows however scandalous it was to give these poor Indians lands to do as they pleased with.

In face of the letter that was written by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, and surely he would not dare to write such a letter without instructions from his chief—warning the public that no transfers would be recognized, these men, when they got the poor Indians to come into their office and sell their lands, and to receive as they thought an advance of a few dollars on the sale, actually got them to touch a pen and they then signed for the poor ignorant Indian a statutory deed, and that deed was registered just imagine that: right under the nose of the Indian Agent, the man paid by this country to look after and protect the wards of the people, these men were allowed to take statutory deeds from the Indians for land worth from $500 to $1,000, on advances of $10, and any money they got after that was in small payments of $5 or $10. Nobody knows what the Indians got except the man who paid it out, and they have the audacity now to come forward and say that the books show that the Indians were paid. Why, any man who has anything to do with transactions of this kind knows how easy it is to arrange books to show that an Indian got full pay when he did not get perhaps 25 per cent of what was coming to him.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am going to refer to another Indian Agent, Mr. Swinford, who corroborates what I stated in the beginning, that the Indian chief and councillors were the paid agents of the land buyers. I stated that just as soon as Mr. Frank, the real estate agent, came back from Ottawa, he started to purchase lands, the first thing they did was to secure the assistance of the chief and councillors. In that way they were able to get at the poor Indian. I have a letter from Mr. Swinford in which he said:

> It must be remembered that all the land buyers used the chief and councillors of the band as interpreters and as agents to bring Indians to them and induce them, if possible, to sell their land, and in return these interpreters and agents were rewarded with $5 or more for each transaction in which a transfer of land took place.

In the face of this whole transaction, every hon. gentleman must see that these Indians have been unfortunate enough to have been tricked through the assistance of their own chief and councillors; but the government and their agents are the men who must take the full responsibility.

I am going to read a sample case from an authority which the hon. minister will hardly feel like disputing. I hold in my hands a letter taken from the returns brought down by this House, which will give some idea of the incompetence of the Indian. It is from A. B. Hudson, of Hudson & Howell, a partner of Chief Justice Howell's son, and is as follows:

Winnipeg, Sept. 7, 1909.

The Honourable Frank Oliver,
Indian Department,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Messrs. William and J. W. Asham, two of the Indians entitled to allotments in the above reserve, called on me and asked me to write to your department with reference to their claims. It appears that J. W. Asham was entitled to a grant of ninety-six acres under the settlement of allotments in the above reserve. On these ninety-six acres were farm improvements made. In the month of April or May, 1908, one G. H. Funk, of Selkirk, induced Asham, while in a state of intoxication, to make a sale of sixteen acres of the above parcel at $5 per acre. Asham, however, was aware of what he was doing and it is doubtful if a court could set aside the transaction. Shortly afterward a second sale of forty acres at the rate of $5 per acre was made to Funk. Asham was then also in a state of intoxication but apparently understood very shortly after the nature of what he had done and did not at once repudiate the sale.

Subsequently, on the 4th September of last year, Asham was taken up in Selkirk for being drunk and locked up. Funk went to him in the jail and tried to prevail on him to sell the remaining forty acres for which he agreed to pay $12.50 an acre because the buildings happened to be on this particular parcel. During the day Asham was released, but while still drunk was induced to sign certain documents. A few hours afterwards William Asham, above named, came and discovered what had happened. He then took charge of his son, J. W., and on the latter becoming sober went with him to Funk and returned the $15 which Funk had paid on account.

It appears from the statement of William Asham, who is a very intelligent man, that similar transactions have been entered into with a large number of the Indians on the above reserve. The land which has been bought at $5 an acre is worth in the neighbourhood of $20 or $25. The Indians are quite incompetent to look after their own interests and none of them can afford the money necessary to carry on lawsuits to retrieve their possessions. Some three or four have been instituted, and I have got from Mr. H. W. H. Knott a letter showing the position of the suits carried on in his office.

From the above statement it would seem that some support should be given to the Indians to carry on these suits. I should be glad to know if your department can do anything to assist in the matter.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) A. B. HUDSON.

This man states that these bargains were made with these men when they were drunk, and that one of them was made in the lock-up. One was made right in the lock-up where he got his man to agree to sell these lands. The Indian Asham came to me himself and, he said to me: My son has been robbed of his home; he had beautiful land, land worth $30 or $40 an acre, when he was drunk he went to Selkirk, and the land dealers got around him, and got him to give them his land. I was willing to let them take the first forty acres they got from the boy, because I thought it served him right for getting drunk; but when they went to the jail and bought the last piece of land from him, his house, farm and everything he owned, and got him to sign it all off, I thought that was something which could not be borne. His wife came to me crying, and I went to the jail, and took out the boy, and we went to Funk's office, and I offered to Funk the $15 which he had advanced my boy, and I said to him: This is my son's wife, you have taken his farm, and all that he has, here is your money back, give him back the land. Funk said no, I have got the land and intend to keep it, and he did keep it.

That is one of the things I asked the hon. minister to investigate. This is one of the many scandalous transactions connected with this whole matter. But the minister told me there was nothing to investigate, that the Indian had made his own bargain and must abide by it. In other words, that he had made his bed and must lie on it. This is the way these poor unfortunate Indians are treated, whom the people imagine this department, which is costing the country millions of dollars annually, is protecting and looking after.

An hon. MEMBER. What was the answer to the letter?

Mr. BRADBURY. It was simply a letter written to the department asking if the department would assist them in going to court, and the answer was that the department could not interfere. These transactions became so notorious that the Lands Titles office at Winnipeg, on the advice of two justices of the King's Bench—two Liberals—the registrar general of Manitoba refused to issue a title on any one of those patents. The advice was that, so far as these two justices could gather, the land had been taken fraudulently from the Indians. The consequence is that these patents are lying to-day in the registry office at Winnipeg which refuses to issue a Torrens title in exchange for it. But these parties had their titles registered at Selkirk, and secured themselves in that way. The Lands Titles office at Winnipeg, however, under the advice of two justices of the King's Bench, has refused to recognize these patents, and issue licenses.

Just to prove that statement, I am going to read another piece of Lewis's letter to the department:

July 5, 1909.

On account of the irregular size of the allotments and the inequality of the divisions of the land those who purchased have applied to the Provincial Land Titles Office for a title under the Torrens system getting certificates for quarter sections of the land removing what at present might be described as a patchwork of titles to a section.

By request on the 29th inst., I went up to Winnipeg and had a conversation with Mr. Macara, the registrar of the Provincial Lands Titles office. He told me that he objected to granting certificates of title to these lands unless he was thoroughly satisfied that the Indians were fully and satisfactorily settled with, that he had been warned by two justices of the King's Bench that satisfactory settlement had not been made in all cases and from that and other reports he could not issue any more titles unless some steps were taken to assure him that every applicant to him could show him positively that there would be no after claims upon the land.

This is from the Indian agent, J. O. Lewis who corroborates what I have said, namely, that this transaction became so notorious and scandalous that the Land Title office at Winnipeg refused to issue a title. That was the advice that these two judges gave to Mr. Macara. Here is what he said:

However, aside from the attitude that I assumed with Mr. Macara, I am of the opinion that it would be advisable to take advantage of the position he assumes and the desire of all the purchasers to get Torrens certificates to arrange for a supervision of these accounts. These people are wards of the government and I assume that it is no desire of the department to leave them entirely to themselves to suffer any injustice even if they have so wilfully insisted upon it.

I do not think I need say a word further to demonstrate that the whole transaction bears on its face evidence of the fraud I have described. There has been no attempt at meting out justice to these poor Indians. From the very beginning of the negotiations the effort has been to get these lands by fair means or foul. Now, this letter has a list of the purchasers, and I will put it on record. The biggest purchaser was the Selkirk and Northern Realty Company, the manager was Mr. Wm. Frank. That company was formed after Wm. Frank had secured nearly all the lands the company has at the present time. That company was composed of Capt. Wm. Robinson, a Liberal, of the city of Winnipeg; Wm. Frank, another Liberal; F. Heap, also a Liberal, of the town of Selkirk; Clark, M.D., Winnipeg; McPherson, lawyer, Winnipeg, and others, all Liberals.

Of the 18,000 acres sold by the Indians it is safe to say that the first two firms on the list bought 14,000. F. Heap bought 1,200 and Tracy about the same amount.

Making about 16,400 acres at the time that these four men had purchased. The other men that Lewis states had made some purchases of small amounts were the following: C. Finkleman, storekeeper, of the town of Selkirk; C. Howitz, Jno. Morrison, Millidge Bros., E. F. Comber, E. Raynor, James Monkman, Colin McIvor, Wm. Fidler, Geo. H. Fox.

For the information of this House, I may say that out of all these men there are just two among them that might be classed as Conservatives, and they secured a small acreage; but ninety-five per cent of this land passed into the hands of men for whom apparently this whole transaction had been arranged. Now, it was distinctly stated by Mr. Pedley's letter referred to that no transaction would be recognized until such time as the patents were issued. I hold in my hand a statement of a few of the transactions as they stand in the lands titles office in Winnipeg to-day, which will prove that in nearly every one of these cases the land was bought and bargained for, and the deed was secured from six to nine months before a patent was issued by the Crown. I hold that in the face of the letter that the department wrote, the department must have known of the facts before these patents were issued, and the department had ample opportunity to protect these Indians and see that these patents went into the hands of the rightful owners. Now, I state formally to the hon. minister that ninety-five per cent of the patents issued by the Crown went directly into the hands of the land dealers and not into the hands of the Indians. I say that not ten per cent of the Indians ever touched their patent or ever saw it. I will put a few of these on record, a few of the transactions made by Mr. Tracy:

1. Application 21522, lot 27, St. Peter's, B. & S., dated 25th June, 1908, Alex. Fielding to George Tracy. Patent dated 9th December, 1908. Crown to Alex. Fielding, lot 28, St. Peter's, B. & S. dated 16th August, 1908, Wm. Sinclair to George Tracy. Patent dated 27th February, 1909, Crown to Wm. Sinclair.

I will not take up the time of the House by reading all of these, but out of these 410 patents issued to the Indians, I think it safe to say that 400 were issued all the way from three months to a year after the Indians had disposed of their land. I am satisfied that a large percentage of these deals were secured before there was any proper survey or allotment made. What does that mean? Simply this, that there was a blank deed taken, and it was filled in and dated afterwards. There is not a question in my mind that a large percentage of those transactions were worked out in that way; and this was done right under the nose of the Indian agent, next door to his office, and done with his connivance and knowledge. And still the department says that there is nothing to investigate. Now, I wish to draw the attention of the minister responsible for this transaction to a discussion we had in this House in which he gave me a friendly lecture for using language that he said was not justified in regard to this transaction. He told me that when I talked of bribery I was not well advised. I have his own language where he said:

Mr. OLIVER. Again my hon. friend has used the word bribe and used it in connection with the distribution of land among Indians. Bribe is an ugly word. Whoever gives a bribe must be responsible, and whoever makes a charge must be equally responsible for his accusation. If the giving of the land was a bribe, that was given by Chief Justice Howell.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. OLIVER. Undoubtedly. There was no other authority to give it or to make the arrangement, and the arrangement was made open and above board. It was considered fair and right that the chief and councillors should get a larger share of the land than the other Indians, and my hon. friend is not well advised in using the word bribe in connection with that part of the transaction, and he must take the responsibility of having accused the chief justice of bribery.

That is the minister's own language in this House. He stated that if there was any land given it was given by Chief Justice Howell, and that he was the man who must have committed the bribery. Now, I want to tell the minister what he must know already that it was not Chief Justice Howell who gave this land, he did not give one acre of this land. He made a recommendation, and I have his report here in which he says:

From time to time I approached the men for the purpose of inducing them to surrender the reserve and take new ones. The negotiations continued for many months.

This shows it was impossible for Chief Justice Howell to give land to these men. These men did not want to surrender the reserve. The negotiations continued for several months. After many proposals and counter-proposals had been discussed the matter finally culminated in a deed of surrender, the terms of which are in writing. He says:

Without giving further reasons for my urging the surrender, and without further description of the negotiations——

I do not think he would care to describe fully or fairly the negotiations in writing—

I can only say that they were the best I could get, best for the government and for the Indian, and without any hesitation I recommend that carrying out of the same.

He did not carry them out, he recommended the government to carry them out. In another place he says:

I assume that the surrender will be carried out, and I am therefore relieved from the burden of finding the amount of damages due the band for the grievances above detailed.

This shows that Chief Justice Howell had nothing to do with giving the Indian's lands except that he made the recommendation, and I have here a letter from another gentleman; the deputy superintendent general, whom the minister dispatched to Selkirk to do this very work, to secure a surrender. Here is what he says under date October 26, 1907:

Pursuant to your instructions I left Ottawa on the 17th ultimo, and reached Winnipeg on the 19th ultimo, to take up with the St. Peter's Band of Indians, near Selkirk, the question of the surrender of their reserve at that place.

When this reserve, consisting of about 55,000 acres, was set aside in 1871, provision was made that the rights of the parties holding lands within the boundaries of the reserve should be protected, and as a result of this some 5,000 acres have been patented to parties other than Indians. In order to settle the remaining outstanding claims, Chief Justice Howell, of Manitoba, was appointed a commissioner, in November, 1906, for this purpose, and from several interviews with him I judged that there would be from 1,500 to 2,000 acres still to be patented, thus leaving as belonging to the reserve proper, about 48,000 acres. This was the area that I dealt with in my negotiations with the Indians for a surrender.

After several days' negotiations, the Indians surrendered upon the following terms.

Who made the surrender? The minister himself is directly responsible for this surrender. He instructed his Deputy Superintendent General to proceed to Selkirk and conduct the negotiations for surrender according to this memorandum, and when the minister warned me across the floor that I was not well advised in using the word bribery and said that if bribery had been committed it was Chief Justice Howell who committed it, he will realize now that he made a statement that was hardly justified. The hon. gentleman stated with some force, force enough to make some of my own friends feel that the statements I made were hardly tenable, that the patents had been made out in the Indians' names and had been handed to the Indians. He said:

As to the assignments from the Indians to the purchasers of their lands, the House and the public were informed that no assignments would be recognized by the department, and in every case my information is that the patent was made out to the Indian and not to anybody else, and it was handed to the Indian. Now I ask the House in all fairness how is the Indian Department to be made responsible for the disposition that the Indian subsequently made of that patent, a patent which he received under the agreement of surrender negotiated as I have stated? It was his to do with as he pleased. It may be that it was not proper to give him a patent with which he could do as he pleased. But that was a part of the terms of surrender, negotiated as I have said, on the responsibility I have explained to the House.

I have read here declaration after declaration stating that these men have never seen their patents, never made an application for their patents, and never signed a receipt for their patents. I have talked to dozens, and with few exceptions they say: Mr. Bradbury, we have never seen our patents, we have never made an application, we have never signed a receipt for them. In the face of these facts the minister was not well informed when he stated that the patents were made out to the Indians and delivered to the Indians. I believe the patent was made out to the Indians as it could not be made out in any other way, but that it was delivered to the Indian I deny; the Indians, with few exceptions, never saw it, and further, the patents sent to this Indian agent, the man who was supposed to stand between the Indian and the land buyer, were handed not to the Indian, but to the land buyer. I have 30 or 40 declarations which the minister can have, many of them stating that the patents were seen in Frank's office or in Funk's office or in Heap's office, but seldom in Lewis' office. Some thought they had a balance coming to them and went to the offices for it. They were asked to sign a receipt for the patents and on refusing to do so they were shoved out of the office. The land buyers kept the patent, the receipt was signed all right, but it was not signed by the Indians. The minister tried to make it appear to the House that the lands sold by auction were sold in larger parcels than the land sold to the Indians, that is one of the explanations, that the land was sold in 16-acre lots. The consequence was that land sold in quarter-sections would bring better prices than Indian lands. He said:

As to the difference in price between the land that was sold by the Indians to private parties and the land that was sold by auction, it must surely appear to any one that little patches of land in areas of 16 acres do not have the same value in a farming country such as Manitoba as an area of 160 acres.

Mr. FOSTER. No, if they all remain 16 acre areas. They were not allowed to remain in 16 acre acreas.

Mr. OLIVER. They were allowed to remain in 16 acre areas. If I bought 16 acres off you and 16 acres off another man and 16 acres off another man and so on. I have to take my chances of being able to get those different parcels brought together so as to make a single block. Does my hon. friend suggest that that land would be as valuable to me as if I could have bought the whole 160 acres in one lot?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, if you knew you could get it all put together.

Mr. OLIVER. How could you know? There was no way you could know. If Brown, Jones and Robinson each held single patents for 16 acre lots of land, how are you going to ensure that Brown, Jones and Robinson are going to lump their sections together at your convenience, unless you pay them for it? So I say if that land was sold in blocks of 160 acres it is surely more valuable than the land that was sold in 16 acre pieces.

Mr. BRADBURY.

What is the inference to be drawn from that? The inference drawn by the minister was that all these Indian allotments were sold in 16-acre lots. The minister knows better to-day. He may not have known then, I do not think he did, but I want to state to the House that the Indian lots averaged within a few acres of the same size as land sold by public auction. The allotments to heads of families were 80 acres and suppose there were 400 other allotments and that there were 23,000 acres that would divide up into something over 58 acres to every patent; so when the minister made that argument in the House it was entirely misleading and calculated to entirely mislead the House and the country into the idea that the Indian lands were sold in smaller parcels, while the land sold by auction was sold in large parcels.

Speaking of the receipts for patents, I am forced to read another letter:

St. Peter's, December 14, 1909.

Without any doubt the majority of St. Peter's band of Indians never made applications for their patents and how could they sign receipt for such patent which they never saw.

With regard to the sale of land made by Indians of St. Peter's, Frank, Heap & Funk, and others bought land before even the land was subdivided; they were the party that selected the choice land. Of course, they had the chief and councillors under their thumb to help them out in the selection of land. When buying they were careful to have a certain Indian that would sell to have his name to a particular piece of land. At this time it was impossible to describe the land properly. It is most likely they waited until such time the subdivision was made or after the issuing of patents and then made out a proper deed.

That is exactly what is done. I think this Indian has summed it up pretty well, because it is an Indian that has written this letter.

The Indians that did not want to sell were debarred from securing the choice land, for the reason as above stated.

Every acre of these Indian allotments was picked. The Indians who had been given allotments had the first choice out of this 48,000 acres, so that it was picked land.

I wish to point out several instances: James William Asham was working at Fisher river under the employ of the Indian Department; during his absence his patent came at the Indian office. I went up to the Indian office several times and made inquiry whether the patent was there. I said then that they were aware that the boy was away from home and that no one was to be allowed to take the patent away from the office until such time the boy would come. When he came we went to the Indian office after the patent but to our annoyance no patent was to be found; couldn't even get any information who took it away.

Frederick Asham was out at Lake Winnipeg, while being away his patent came out at the Indian office; on his arrival went to the Indian office for said patent and found that some person had taken away the patent; then demanded who this person was and who would dare to do the likes without first obtaining his permission. Finally he received a copy of a receipt of his patent, signed by William Henry Prince, councillor. I saw the copy of the receipt myself.

I have no hestiation in saying that these receipts for these patents that are in the department to-day purporting to be signed by the Indians are, in a majority of cases, forgeries. There is no question about that. They were never signed by the Indians themselves, knowingly. Here is one case, and this man goes on to say:

I mention these two persons in order that you may know that it was a matter of impossibility to sign receipt of receiving their patents from the hands of the Indian agent. Many more instances similar to this could be brought to light if the matter was to be investigated.

I have already a copy of a letter ready for signatures, whenever is completed will forward same to your address.

(Sgd.) WILLIAM ASHAM.

This proves the statement I have made that neither an application for these patents was taken or a receipt given, and yet the Indian agent, upon whom the minister, I presume, depends to see that these things are done, is still retained in office at Selkirk. During my campaign, that man told me on the train that he had resigned his position; yet, he is drawing his salary whether he is doing the work or not.

Just for a few minutes I want to refer to the auction of this land. Fifteen thousand acres of this land were sold by public auction. I have a letter from the department which tells me that the average price secured for this land was $5.68 per acre. Further on the writer of this letter says:

I may say that the average price of the lands sold by public auction at Swan lake on the 9th ult. amounted to $17.62 per acre.

This land at Selkirk, less than 26 miles from Winnipeg, was the best available land in Manitoba. Swan lake is nearly 100 miles away from Winnipeg, and yet land there brings $17.62 per acre as against $5.68 per acre at Selkirk. The minister stated that these auctioned lands were sold in quarter-sections. He must know better now. To quote his own language:

Mr. ARMSTRONG. May I ask the minister if the 22,000 acres that were sold by auction were all sold in bulk and at one time?

Mr. OLIVER. They were all sold by quarter sections but at the one auction sale, and in sixty or seventy parcels.

What are the facts? The land was sold, not in fifty or sixty parcels, but in 185 different parcels. The average size of the parcels was not any greater, or very slightly greater, than the average size of the Indian allotments, and to prove that I will just read for the minister's information, and for the information of the House, from a return that was brought down and laid on the table by the minister showing the size of a few of the parcels:

Statement showing lands at St. Peter's reserve sold by auction on the 16th December, 1908, giving name of purchaser, area and price.

No.	Acres.
107	20.31
112	51
116	21
119	38
124	34
127	30
146	17
233a	10
228	10

I could go through the whole list and show the same thing. But, I want to say to this House that every statement that was made when this matter was discussed by the minister was altogether contrary to the facts, and were entirely misleading. I think that the minister was misled himself; I do not believe that he did it intentionally, but, I repeat that every statement that he made was misleading. Regarding the time at which this land was sold, and to show how this whole scheme was worked so that this auctioned land would not bring any more than the Indian land, let me tell the House how it was safeguarded:

Mr. SCHAFFNER. At what time was your auction held?

Mr. OLIVER. In the latter part of October or early in November.

Mr. BRADBURY. That is just as misleading as the other statement. The fact is that the sale was held in the middle of winter, the 16th December. Imagine holding an auction sale of 15,000 acres of land in Manitoba in the middle of the Manitoba winter, with the ground covered with snow, and nobody able to see the land. It is a most ridiculous proposition.

Mr. HENDERSON. Coon coats were in order.

Mr. BRADBURY. Yes, every man of them there was in a Coon coat. I quote the following from the proceedings of this House:

Mr. STAPLES. Will the minister advise us how long these lands were advertised and in what papers?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed the sale was advertised in the Toronto 'Globe,' the Winnipeg 'Free Press' and the Selkirk paper, and the advertisement was continued for a period of from four to six weeks.

Another misleading statement. That land was advertised for just six days, and not six weeks in the Toronto 'Globe,' and in the Winnipeg 'Free Press.' The Toronto 'Globe,' advertisement ran from the 23rd of November to the 28th of November, and between the 28th of November, and the 16th of December not a word was said about the sale. The advertisement was published in the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' on the same dates. In the face of this can any honest man argue that there was any attempt to secure a reasonable or fair price for these lands. Does not the whole transaction on the face of it demonstrate that it was arranged that these lands should fall into the hands of a few men who were on the ground ready to buy. The fact is that of the 15,000 acres of this land sold, every acre with the exception of 1,015 acres went to the six men who were buying the Indian lands. There has been a question between the minister and myself as to the value of these lands, and an effort has been made to show that this was poor land. I have taken some trouble to ascertain the facts, and I shall lay them before the House. I quote from 'Hansard':

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Does the minister undertake to say that he considers $6 a fair price for the land?

The minister was arguing that these lands had been auctioned, and realized $6 an acre—he was near it, they realized $5.58.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, I think that any land advertised in the public press for a reasonable time and offered for sale within a distance of 25 miles of the city of Winnipeg is absolutely certain to bring its full value at that particular time.

See how careful the minister is. I agree that if the land was sold at a reasonable time and advertised fairly it would bring its price, but when it was sold in the middle of winter it was not sold at a reasonable time. As I have said these lands are situated on the Red river which passes through the heart of the reserve, and the banks of which are ten or fifteen feet high, and eighty-five per cent of the land is what is called first-class. It is a perfect garden. We boast of that land in the Red River valley as the best land in Manitoba, and still there are men who are trying to decry it for their own purposes. To show what these lands were worth I quote from the report of the Indian agent John Semmons:

St. Peter's reserve has some of the best land in the province of Manitoba. It has the advantage of being very near to an excellent market; it also has the best shelter from the north and west winds offered to any locality. It is safe to say that properly cultivated it might produce hundreds of thousands of bushels of wheat per year.

John Semmons again says:

Mr. BRADBURY.

One seldom sees even in this wondrous west better wheat-growing land than can be found in this agency.

Chief Justice Howell in his report says:

This reserve is in the main excellent farm land and the adjoining lands are fairly well settled and cultivated and the town of Selkirk adjoins it on the south side. Nearly all the Indian land is good.

When this discussion came up first I wrote to the municipal clerk at St. Andrews in the municipality this land is situated in, and I asked him to give me a statement as to the assessment of this land, and as to the value of the land, and he writes me and gives me two pieces of information. The first was this: That the Indian Department that has given this land away for less than one-third of its value, when they were approached in 1906 by the municipality of St. Andrews for the purpose of purchasing a right of way through the reserve that was going to be as much accommodation to the Indian reserve as it was to the Clandeboy district, the department sold 40 acres of this land to the municipality at $20 an acre and a cheque was made out payable to Mr. Laird, and endorsed by Mr. J. O. Lewis for $813.60. I have another piece of information signed by John McDougall who is clerk of the municipality of St. Andrews in which the greater portion of the reserve is situated:

I have your letter of the 23rd inst., respecting valuation of land in that part of the Indian reserve within this municipality and beg to say that the assessment roll for 1909 in which these lands first appeared as taxable shows a flat rate of $7 per acre and is based on a 33⅓ per cent valuation. As to particulars I would refer to A. C. Clare, P.O., who is the regular assessor.

Showing that according to this man's valuation the land is worth $21 an acre. Here is a letter from the assessor:

St. Andrews, Manitoba, January 6, 1910.

Geo. H. Bradbury, M.P.,
Government Buildings, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—With respect to your inquiry about the value of St. Peter's lands, I might say that in 1909 I assessed these lands at $7 per acre, which is on a basis of one-third of their real value and which is a flat rate all through the municipality. The reason that they are not assessed at their value is on account of the Drainage Act which will not allow the assessor to raise the value on land inside the drainage district, and as a large percentage of the municipality is composed of reclaimed lands which are now settled on we consider it an injustice to assess the other portions at their real value when we are not allowed to raise the assessment in the drainage district, which was formed fifteen or sixteen years ago, and were then assessed at $2.50 per acre.

Hence the reason for assessing the lands at one-third of its real value.

I might say with respect to the value of the land on St. Peter's reserve, that at $20 per acre it was the cheapest good land between Lake Winnipeg and the Rocky Mountains in 1909.

Yours truly,
A. C. CLARE,
Assessor for 1909, municipality of St. Andrews.

Some of this land was in the precincts of the town of Selkirk. A piece of the land which the Indian agent, J. O. Lewis, bought from that unfortunate woman at $5 an acre was assessed for $50 an acre in the town of Selkirk. Here are some other assessments: Lot 1, 61 acres at $25 per acre; lot 2, 18 acres at $25 per acre; lot 5, 15 acres at $40 per acre; lot 5, 33 acres at $20 per acre; lot 6, 11½ acres at $25 per acre; lot 8, 18 acres at $20 per acre.

Lot 14—a piece of this land was put up for sale only a few months ago and $22 an acre was refused for it. There surely is no other evidence required to show that these lands, which the government have given away to their friends for about $5 per acre, for less than one-third, I think less than one-fourth of their actual value, are worth at least from $20 to $25 an acre. If the government had been anxious to carry out the policy of which it boasts in this House and of which every member boasts throughout the great west, the land for the settler and not for the speculator, they had a grand opportunity here. We had 48,000 acres of the best land in the province of Manitoba, with 2,000 or 3,000 settlers land-hungry in my own constituency; we had 2,000 Ruthenians, Polanders and Germans living on land west of Lake Winnipeg, where they had to wade in water to their waists to get to their homes at certain times of the year. The government have placed these people on land where it is utterly impossible for them to make a living, while we had these magnificent areas. These people would have been delighted to have had an opportunity to buy these lands and would have been willing to pay from $15 to $20 an acre for them on a ten year purchase. Then we would have had a settlement adjacent to the town of Selkirk which would have been a source of wealth to the town and would have converted that district into a perfect garden, and the land would have been put into the hands of settlers, and not as now into the hands of speculators. I stated at the opening of my remarks that the settlers were paying for these lands eight or ten times what the speculators were paying. I want to make good that statement before I take my seat. I have in my hand a petition to myself from some of these Ruthenians and Polanders, which reads as follows:

Winnipeg, Manitoba, January 14, 1909.

Dear Sir,—We, farmers of your constituency, find that Mr. W. Frank bought off the Dominion government a piece of land north of East Selkirk in the province of Manitoba, for which he paid the sum of $3 to $5 per acre. This same Mr. Frank has sold this same land to us for from $40 to $75 per acre.

We are also informed that he bought from the same government, an Indian reservation or a part thereof, for which he has been asking the sum of $40 per acre. Now, Mr. Bradbury, as our representative for the constituency of Selkirk, in which the above named lands are situated, we are asking if it is in your power to protect us in this matter.

We are willing and anxious to purchase this land at a fair valuation but consider Mr. Frank's prices exorbitant.

We understand that the transaction between the government and Mr. Frank was a secret one and the settlers in the locality had not an opportunity of making a bid for them.

We inclose a sample of agreements in regard to this matter, and also pen other details in regard to same.

They give me the names of the different men, the lands they bought, and the prices they paid, and I am going to place some of them on record. Theodore Ticko bought 10 acres at $50 per acre; Kaprijan Wawrrynice, 10 acres; Wisiniowrki, 10 acres; Hornceki, 10 acres; Stephen Kolba, 10 acres; Myuak, 10 acres; Zirriezni, 10 acres; Stephen Bubyk, 10 acres.

Here are thirteen cases in which the poor settlers on account of the government's neglect, and perhaps worse, had to pay from $40 to $60 an acre for a part of the same land, or ten times what this wise government made it possible for the land speculator to get nearly 30,000 acres of these lands at. Is there any hon. gentleman on that side of the House who would try to justify a transaction of that kind. What a grand opportunity this government had there of carrying out its avowed policy of land for the settler and not for the speculators—48,000 acres of the best land in Manitoba lying within 25 miles of Winnipeg, and 2,000 or 3,000 good settlers land hungry, most of these living on lands west of Gimili, and on land utterly unfit for agricultural purposes. These are among the best settlers in that province to-day. They have demonstrated the fact that they are thrifty, hard working, honest people, and it is an outrage that they should have been allowed to remain on that land when the government had the opportunity of giving them these 48,000 acres at a fair honest price. These men would have bought these lands and paid the government three times what the government got from the speculators, and we would have had adjacent to the town of Selkirk one of the best settlements in Manitoba occupied by people who would have made a garden of that section, and made it a source of wealth to that town. Instead of this, the government, which boasted that its policy was to protect the poor man, looking after the interests of the settler, we find it taking great care to look after the interests of the big men, and speculators, and allowing the poor settlers to look after themselves.

I have taken up a good deal of the time of this House, and if I had nothing more than what I have stated I would feel that I had made a case strong enough to convince any man in this House and country. But I hold in my hand written declarations which will confirm everything I have said, and which are the bases of the case I have placed on record. Here is the testimony of Wm. Asham:

Dominion of Canada,
Province of Manitoba.
To wit:

In the matter of St. Peter's Indian reserve and of the sale and disposal of the Indian lands in said reserve.

I, William Asham, of the Parish of St. Peters, in the province of Manitoba, do solemnly declare that:

I am a member of St. Peter's band and an ex-chief, that I am thoroughly familiar with the manner in which the Indians in general have been treated regarding the sale of lands allotted to them under the surrender of the reserve effected the 24th day of September, 1907.

In the first place I declare, that the chief on different occasions previous to the surrender stated publicly, that he would not agree to the surrender of the reserve under any consideration. This subject was discussed on several occasions by the chief before the band. He also stated that he was offered in consideration of him agreeing to the surrender, enough to make him well-off as long as he lived, and that he could be a gentleman for the rest of his natural life, but he would not agree to do that because it was not only he that was going to live. I have to consider my future grandchildren and the band that I represent.

I further declare that I was so anxious about this matter that the next morning after the meeting at which the chief had made this declaration I went to his house and said to him, calling him grandfather as I always do, you stated in the meeting last night that you would never agree to the surrender of the reserve. I have come to you now to have you repeat that to me, and he said, 'Grandson' as he usually called me, 'I did state that at the meeting, and I state it now, that I will never agree to the surrender of the reserve.' I told him then that the reason I was so anxious that I was doubtful of the council but not of him.

After this occurrence myself and the band who were anxious to retain the reserve felt easy that there was no danger of the chief yielding to the influences that were working to secure the surrender, but after some little time I learned that there were private meetings being held in Selkirk unknown to the band, with parties interested in securing the surrender of the reserve. Almost immediately after these private meetings a notice was posted informing the band that a further meeting would be held for the purpose of considering the surrender. This notice was signed by the chief. I declare that this came with great surprise to me and to the band after the public declarations and private promises made by the chief.

The meeting was held in an old schoolhouse on the reserve, too small to hold more than half of those present. Those present representing the government were Chief Justice Howell, Frank Pedley, Deputy Superintendant General of Indian Affairs, S. J. Jackson, M.P., E. Rayner, of Selkirk, John Semmons, Inspector of Indian agencies, J. O. Lewis, Indian agent, and Dr. Grain.

When the meeting was called to order, Frank Pedley was selected to take the chair, and I was called in from the outside and requested by one of the gentlemen to act as interpreter. This I declined to do stating that I wanted a free hand, but William H. Prince, one of the councillors, acted as interpreter, and interpreted parts of the proceedings.

As soon as Mr. Pedley took the chair, I immediately stepped forward and asked if this was a public meeting. The chairman said certainly. Then, I said, it was free for every one to express his opinion on the subject before the meeting, and Mr. Pedley replied, certainly. Mr. Pedley started to explain the condition of the surrender, informing the meeting that he was sent there by the government to arrange for the surrender of the reserve. Mr. Pedley explained to the meeting what the government was willing to do if we would agree to surrender the reserve. One proposition he made was that the chief would receive 180 acres of land, and each councillor 120, and each Indian would receive only 16 acres of land. I immediately demanded the reason why the chief and council should receive more land than the ordinary Indian. Mr. Pedley replied that they were getting the extra land for their recognition. I then stated the only recognition they had was the coat they wore and the extra money they receive annually. I also stated that they were not entitled to one acre more land than the ordinary Indian would receive, but as the agreement of surrender was already prepared there was no change made at the time.

I further declare that at least two-thirds of the Indians present did not understand the conditions as stated by Mr. Pedley. I, understanding the English language, did most of the talking against the surrender of the reserve and after talking several hours back and forward I demanded that a vote be taken. At this time there was no question that a large majority of the band that were present were against the surrender, and expressed themselves loudly at times to this effect. Mr. Pedley and the council and others interested refused to allow the vote to be taken that night and the meeting was adjourned until ten o'clock the next day at the same place.

At ten o'clock next morning the meeting was again opened by the same parties representing the government present. I was surprised to find that some of those who had supported me strongly against the surrender the day before had been changed during the night. What caused the change, God only knows, I don't. But after a great deal of talk we adjourned to have lunch. I was invited by

W. D. Harper, councillor to have lunch with him at his house. After lunch, sitting in the room with others, Harper slipped a piece of paper into my hand with the following words written in lead pencil by himself to this effect: 'What would you think if you were to be made equal to a councillor,' meaning of course that I would get as much land as a councillor if I would agree to the surrender. I stated that I could not possibly agree. Before going into lunch, James Williams, councillor, came up and giving me a nudge whispered 'Go and see Chief Justice Howell.' I replied 'No, I would not go near him.' After coming out of Harper's house somebody approached me and told me that Mr. Jackson the member wanted to see me, and I said I did not want to see him, but after awhile Mr. Jackson edged his way into the crowd where I was standing and pulling my coat indicating that he wanted me to step out of the crowd. I did so with him, then he said to me: Mr. Asham, you are strongly opposed to the surrender. I said, yes. Then he said, what would you think if we were to make you equal with the council and stated I will promise you to obtain a patent for the land in about six weeks. To this I replied that I could not possibly agree. I declare that if I had have agreed I would have felt that I would be accepting a bribe to desert my friends who were protesting against the surrender.

Now, soon after this, we were in the heat of a hot discussion in the matter regarding the surrender. Mr. Pedley during his speech at this time said I have $5,000 here, pointing to a satchel at his side. If you agree to this surrender this money will be distributed among you, but if you don't agree to the surrender, I will take my satchel and go home and you won't get a cent. Then we were told the time had come to take a vote. Up to this time fully half of the band present had not been able to get into the building, and did not hear what had taken place. The building being too small to take the vote in, we were asked to go outside. Then Mr. John Semmons, the inspector of Indian agencies, spoke loudly in Cree, saying, 'All you that want $90 go to this side,' indicating where the chief and council were standing, 'the others go to the opposite side.' The crowd separated under great excitement, a great many not knowing what they were doing. After they were separated, some of them moving from one side to the other, not knowing what they were doing. Mr. Semmons and myself started to count the votes that were against, but when we got through counting we turned round to count the other side. I was told then that the other side was counted. I did not know who counted the other side, and they claimed they had a majority of seven. I was astonished to hear this, and sized up the two sides and satisfied myself that there were a larger number standing on my side than there was with the chief and council, but I had no opportunity whatever of counting the number that stood with the chief and council. I protested to Mr. Semmons, saying to him that he should not have said that you who want $90 go on one side, but you should have said you that want to surrender the reserve go to one side, and you that dont want to surrender the reserve go to the other side, then the people would have understood what they were voting for.

I declare that I consider the vote irregular and improper as it was not stated fairly to the people, nor was it fairly counted as it was counted by different parties. When Mr. Pedley read the surrender that he had with him prepared he read it in English, and fast, that even I, who understood English, found it difficult to understand the terms of the surrender. This was not interpreted to the band in their own language, consequently very few, if any, understood the conditions of the surrender. I am satisfied that Mr. Pedley and the others came determined to secure the surrender. The surrender was all prepared without any consultation with the band, and they brought the $5,000 with them. Without this money on the ground I am satisfied they never could have secured the support they did in favour of the surrender.

Immediately after the vote was taken, the treaty was signed, and they commenced paying the money out. The chief and councillors were paid first. Then, as I was made equal with the council, this being done after they had declared the surrender carried, they paid me the same as an ordinary Indian, although they had stated that I had to be made equal to the council. I asked Mr. Pedley why they did not pay me the same money as the council, as you have made me equal to the council. He stated that he was willing, but that I had better see the chief. I saw the chief and he was willing, but it now being late he asked me to come the next day. I came the next day, and after waiting for a while I asked the chief for the balance of my money, and he said he was very sorry that the council would not agree. But I did get the same amount of land. No doubt this land was given me to satisfy me with what had been done, but I have never ceased to protest against what I consider to be an outrage and the disinheriting the Indians and sacrificing my birthright.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing it to be of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

Declared before me at the town of Selkirk, in the province of Manitoba, this 20th day of December, A.D. 1909.

C. R. SMALLMAN,
Commissioner.

Well, some one will say this is only an Indian. True, but he is one of the brightest and most intelligent Indians I have met. And, as showing his credibility, I have a letter here from the Bishop of Moosomin, which I will read:

Selkirk, Man., December 22, 1909.

Geo. H. Bradbury, Esq., M.P.

Dear Sir,—This is to certify that I have known Mr. William Asham for over 19 years as Incumbent of St. Peter's parish. I was associated with him in the work of the church for nearly 19 years, and I can bear testimony to the fidelity and probity of his life. He was always a staunch supporter of the truth and was never afraid to express his opinions and convictions on the side of honesty and righteousness.

I therefore have the greatest pleasure in introducing him to you as one whose word is always reliable, and whose influence is used for worthy and upright ends.

With best wishes,

Yours sincerely,
JOHN G. ANDERSON,
Bishop of Moosomin.

There can be no question as to the credibility of this man. I have other declarations here corroborating Asham's statement, and I will place this one also on record:

Dominion of Canada, Province of Manitoba.
In the matter of St. Peter's Indian reserve and the sale and disposal of Indian lands in said reserve.

To Wit:

I, John Flett, of the parish of St. Peter's, in the province of Manitoba, Indian, do solemnly declare that I am a member of St. Peter's Band of Indians. I never made an application for my patent, although the same has been issued and duly received by me. I was present on the days' when the terms of surrender were being discussed in the school house in St. Peter's reserve. I heard Mr. Frank Pedley say that if we agreed to the surrender it would not interfere with our usual election for a chief and councillors, which should have taken place on July 4, 1908, but which up to the present time has been refused by the Indian Department. The band has no confidence in the present chief and his councillors, who, I believe betrayed us to the officials and to the men who have secured our lands by a misrepresentation in leading the Indians to believe that any money's paid to them in the first instance was simply as a loan and that a proper bargain would be made with them when their patents were issued. I declare that councillor Williams told William Asham and others in my presence, that the chief had received a present of a team of horses worth $250 from William Frank, and that the councillors were promised $100 each for helping Mr. Frank to secure the land from the Indians. In addition to this they were to receive $2 per day for helping to get the land by bringing the Indians to the office and getting them to agree to dispose of their lands to Mr. Frank.

I heard Mr. Frank Pedley say to the Indians a short time before the vote was taken at St. Peter's, that he had $5,000 in his bag, pointing to it at his side, and he also said if you vote for the surrender I will divide it among you at once. If you do not, I will take my bag and go home, and you will not get a cent. In my opinion this statement influenced many of the Indians to vote with the chief and councillors that day. Just as the vote was going to be taken, I heard Mr. John Semmons, Inspector of Indian agencies, state loudly in the Cree language to the Indians present: All of you who want $90 go to that side, indicating with his arm where the chief and councillors were standing. I am satisfied that these two statements, the one by Mr. Frank Pedley, and the other by Mr. John Semmons, influenced many to go on the side with the chief. The majority of the Indians did not know that they were voting to surrender their homes, as I am sure they did not wish to do. They were not asked the question: You that are in favour of surrendering the reserve, go to that side. Many did not realize that the vote was whether or not they should surrender the reserve. I am satisfied that if the question had been stated fairly, even in the face of the bribe offered, that is the dividing of the $5,000 mentioned by Mr. Frank Pedley among the band, if they voted to surrender, and the further statement of Mr. John Semmons: All of you who want $90, go to that side, the Indians would never have voted with the chief and councillors if they had understood that it meant the giving up of their lands and homes where they had been born and where this band had lived for generations.

I declare most solemnly that I understand the English language fairly well, and understood most of what I heard during the negotiations for the surrender. The band at no time was in favour of it. It was in my opinion secured by trickery, and the change in the chief's views, he having pledged himself again and again publicly against and surrender of our lands. The terms of surrender were not even interpreted to the band. Fully one half could not hear what was taking place in the schoolhouse, as they could not get in, and of those who were in many did not understand, as the proceedings were not interpreted to them. I now feel that there was collusion between the officials and the land buyers to take our homes from us, and that the Indians have been badly cheated, first in the manner in which the surrender was secured, and again by the land buyers who have taken our lands at less than one-third of the amount we expected to receive for the same.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously, believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

JOHN FLETT.

Declared before me at the parish of St. Peter's, in the province of Manitoba, this 30th day of December, A.D., 1909.

ROBERT G. McDONALD,
Commissioner.

I have a declaration here which I think I should place on record, the testimony of Fred. Cameron. It reads:

Dominion of Canada, Province of Manitoba.
In the matter of St. Peter's Indian Reserve and the sale and disposal of the Indian lands in said reserve.

To Wit:

I, Fred Cameron, of the parish of St. Peter's in the province of Manitoba, Indian, do solemnly declare, that:

I am a member of St. Peter's band of Indians, and as such was entitled to 128 acres of land, 16 acres for myself, 16 acres for my wife and 16 acres each for my six children under the terms of surrender effected on September 24, 1907.

I never made a selection of my allotment of land, I never signed an application for my patent, but on or about the 20th day of December, 1908, while in Selkirk, Pete Sutherland met me and said, Fred, your patent is at the Indian office, and I went there, got it and signed a receipt for same. Prior to the time of the surrender there were public meetings held by the band, and at each meeting our chief and councillors with the exception of councillor W. H. Prince told the band over and over again that they would not surrender their reserve under any consideration. The chief went on to say that he was offered enough if he would surrender that he would be well off all the days of his life, and in fact I would be a gentleman if I were to accept it.

The band were left with the impression after these statements at the public meetings that their chief and councillors would never surrender our reserve. On the 23rd September, 1907, negotiations were begun with the band for the surrender, and the band then knew that their chief and councillors had changed their views and were in favour of surrendering our reserve.

On the 24th September, 1907, I heard Mr. Frank Pedley, Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, Ottawa, tell the band that he had $5,000 in his satchel, and if you surrender, the money will be distributed among the band, if not, I will take my bag and go home.

A few minutes before the vote for surrender, Mr. John Semmons, Inspector of Indian Agencies, Frank Pedley and Samuel J. Jackson, were standing together. Mr. Semmons beckoned to me and said, Come here, Fred. I went over to them, and Mr. Semmons then said, are you on our side? I said, no. He said, you had better surrender, Fred, and you will be well off. He then asked me what family I had. I told him I had eight of a family. He pulled out a small pass book from his pocket and commenced figuring, and after a little said, you will get $34.40, and besides you will get your 16 acres per head. He kept on figuring and said. You will get 128 acres, and also you will get $90 per head next year. This will come to over $700. After telling me all this, he said will you surrender? and I said no. A short time after this conversation the vote took place. We were separated, those for and those against the surrender. And I believe quite a number did not understand or quite realize what they were doing, as many of the Indians were going backwards and forwards from one side to the other. The vote for surrender was not taken according to our usual custom, and I believe the same to have been both irregular and improper. During the negotiations, Mr. Henry Hope asked Mr. Frank Pedley if the surrender was carried, will it interfere with our usual election for a chief and councillors. Mr. Pedley said, no.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

FRED CAMERON.

Declared before me at the parish of St. Peter's, in the province of Manitoba, this 4th day of January, 1910.

R. G. McDONALD,
Commissioner.

I have here a short declaration from a man whom the department employed as interpreter during the time, Mr. Williams, law clerk of the department was making a private investigation in St. Peter's at the instance of the minister. That declaration reads:

Canada, Province of Manitoba.

In the matter of St. Peter's Indian Reserve and of the sale and disposal of the Indian lands in said reserve.

To Wit:

I, William Sinclair of the parish of St. Peter's, in the province of Manitoba, do solemnly declare that:

I am a member of the St. Peter's band of Indians, and that I was present at the time of the surrender of the St. Peter's reserve, and declare that when the vote was just about to be taken to decide whether the reserve should be surrendered or not, I heard John Semmons, Inspector of Indian Agencies, make a short speech in the Cree language, and said to all those present, that those wanting the $90 to go go over there, indicating the place where they should stand who favoured the surrender.

I further declare that I heard Mr. Pedley say that he had $5,000 in his satchel which he would divide among the Indians providing they would make a surrender of the reserve. If not, he would take the money back.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

WILLIAM SINCLAIR.

Declared before me at the town of Selkirk, in the province of Manitoba, this 22nd day of January, 1910.

C. R. SMALLMAN,
Commissioner.

These are all bright, intelligent men, who talk the English language as well as I do. The last man, Sinclair, is a very clever fellow, from whose conversation you would never know that he is an Indian.

In view of all these facts which I have laid before the House, the fact that the chief and the councillors were bribed to agree to the surrender, the fact that they then became active agents of the officials who engineered the surrender, the fact that after the surrender the same men became the paid agents of the men who were securing the Indian allotments, and that the poor Indian was deceived by these men into disposing of his lands for less than one-third of their actual value, the fact that the Indian agent at Selkirk was himself a party to the deception, the fact that the terms of the surrender were all arranged at private meetings in Selkirk between the government agent and the chief and councillors who had first been bribed to attend such a meeting and to agree to the surrender unknown to their band, the further fact that the surrender was conducted irregularly and entirely by government officials and other interested parties, the fact that the meeting of the band to discuss the surrender was sprung on the band at one day's notice, the fact that less than three-fourths of those entitled to vote were present at the meeting, the fact that the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs offered the band $5,000 if they voted for the surrender, the fact that John Semmons, Indian Inspector, offered $90 each if they voted for the surrender, the fact that at least 20 per cent of those qualified to vote, all young men the backbone of the band, were absent working and had nc notification of the said meeting, and consequently were not present, the fact that the Indian Act and common sense require a majority of the male members, 21 years and over, to agree to a surrender, and that in this case less than 38 per cent of the qualified voters voted in favour of the surrender, and the fact that in face of all of these scandalous facts, the government were only able to secure, out of some 200 voters present, seven of a majority shows, Mr. Speaker, how thoroughly unpopular the surrender was.

These and other facts compel me to say that this whole transaction is a disgrace to the government responsible, and that to my mind illegal and would not stand the test of a properly constituted court in Canada.

In view of these facts which I have tried to lay before this House fairly and impartially, I beg to move:

That all the words after the word 'that' in the proposed motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor:—

The government of Canada is the guardian and trustee of the Indians and is bound to conserve their estate and property, not only against the rapacious designs of other persons, but also against the known improvidence and business incapacity of the Indians themselves.

That the government ought not to permit any part of such estate and property to become the prey of speculators at a price far below its value, but should observe and enforce all precautions and safeguards which are necessary to preserve to the Indians the full value and benefit of their property and to prevent it from being wasted and dissipated.

That in respect of such matters the government should administer the affairs of the Indians as a trust and should not permit any person to make an unjust profit at the expense of those whom it is the duty of the government to protect.

That this House desire to place on record its strong condemnation of the methods by which the government secured the surrender of the St. Peter's Indian reserve near Selkirk, in the province of Manitoba, and its equally strong condemnation of the failure of the government to safeguard the interests of the Indians in the disposal of the land so surrendered.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). At this late hour it would hardly be fair to the House to continue the discussion, and I would therefore move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What will be the business to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. We shall continue this debate.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.50 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

An Act to amend the CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. A. M. BEAUPARLANT (St. Hyacinthe). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are proceeded with, I wish to give some explanations in order to dispel a misinterpretation prevailing in the public at large about the Bill I have laid before the House. Some newspapers have made remarks on that Bill concerning the seizure of the salary of the officers of parliament which I have introduced a short while ago. I would not have pointed out those remarks if some people had not persisted to make them repeatedly, falling into the same mistake and if that question did not concern to an enormous extent all the persons employed in the civil service I am bound therefore to set right that misrepresentation and to explain as matters stand.

I am not to take the time of the House to explain what are those mistakes. I will go straight to the point and say that this Bill is intended to make liable to seizure the salary of the officers of the federal government without distinction nor exception, from the ministers—if some of them have any debts—judges and members, to the last of the messengers. There is no distinction made. The intention is to reach the employees which have debts unpaid. The obligation of paying one's debts is a strict duty laid before everybody. I do not see why a federal servant should be more than any other citizen dispensed with that obligation.

The fairness require that everybody should be on an equal footing and it is an act of liberalism to replace a privilege by the parity of condition.

However, many of the public officers do not need the interference of the legislator to do honour to their engagements, but the number of those who neglect this duty is enough notable to justify the Bill.

Some newspapers assert that not only a part, but the whole salary shall be liable to seizure. That is another mistake. A part only shall be liable to seizure. Indeed to seize the whole salary of a heavily entangled servant should not be human. For such a man, having no more means of living, it should be better to resign. The intention of the Bill is to make only one part of the salary liable to seizure which is determined by the law of each province.

It is only the carrying out of the principle of seizability of salaries as regards civil servants as well as other debtors.

As I am pointing out the mistakes made by certain newspapers, allow me to recall the fact that the day after that on which I made my remarks on the Naval Bill, some newspapers credited me with having made statements which I never made. No remarks of mine, either in the French or English version of the 'Hansard,' whether in the revised or unrevised edition, justify them in stating that I ever made such assertions. In fact, these errors have not been made in bad faith and may be explained by the fact that the press reporters are not always near enough to hear distinctly the utterances of the member who is speaking.

One third and last point in regard to which a plea of good faith can not be maintained is the following: A certain Quebec newspaper has a good deal to say about me. It is true that two or three years ago, I had the misfortune, which it considers as a very evil deed on my part, to have it condemned for libel.

An hon. MEMBER. Name it.

Mr. BEAUPARLANT. I shall name it at once. That newspaper was repeatedly condemned in the same year for slander; twenty-one times, I believe—it will be seen that, as far as insulting is concerned, it has reached its majority—however, its name is 'L'Evenement,' which shows that its name itself is a falsehood. I shall not take up the time of the House in dealing with that newspaper, nor with any other papers whose idea of politics seems to be that it merely consists in the cutlivation of public mud throwing. Fortunately such papers are not numerous. This journal, 'L'Evenement' not only does not give fair play to the members sitting on the government side of the House, but it does not even act fairly towards its own political friends. What is to be regretted is that this newspaper is not well known by all its readers. If it was, it would do no harm. It would be as harmless as the one who controls it.

FENIAN RAID VETERANS.

Mr. THOBURN. I wish to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the following article which appears in the Almonte 'Times':

FENIAN RAID VETERANS.

Montreal 'Witness'—Mr. F. Hamilton, who has just returned from Ottawa, stated last night to a largely attended meeting of the Fenian Raid Veterans, held in the Armoury, Craig street, that the Minister of Militia has expressed himself as willing to recognize the services of those who did active duty in the Fenian raids. Captain Joseph H. Patterson, accompanied by Mr. Hamilton, had interviewed Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Hon. Frank Oliver, Minister of the Interior, both of whom expressed their willingness to discuss the question on its merits, and said it would be brought before the House during the present session.

I am continually being asked by veterans if action is to be taken this year or not and I would like to be in a position to say yes or no.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Capt. Patterson was evidently under a misapprehension when he stated as much as he did. He was right in stating that the government have the matter under advisement but the government did not say they would bring the question up during the present session.

RELEASE OF TWO PRISONERS.

Mr. BOYCE. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to an article in the issue of the Canadian Municipal Journal and Telephone Building News for April, as follows :

WHERE WAS THE PULL?

Two months ago Judge Winchester, Toronto, sentenced L. J. Skellie and J. G. King to one year's imprisonment in the Central Prison for distributing obscene literature and post cards. The judge spoke very severely in giving the sentence, saying that if the youth of this country was to grow up in the right way, scoundrels who acted as the prisoners had done must be severely punished. Both prisoners pleaded guilty, and two stenographers gave evidence that they have refused to work for the prisoners, so filthy was the business.

Needless to say, the sentence of Judge Winchester gave great satisfaction.

On the 4th of March, these two prisoners, after serving only two months—or one-sixth—of their sentence, were released with an absolutely free pardon by the order of the Minister of Justice .

The question that is now being asked is, 'where is the pull?'

Mr. Robinette, K.C., defended the prisoners —though it seems strange that an eminent lawyer should stoop to such a dirty case— and he, it is understood, is a personal friend of the minister.

Some of the few fearless members of the House of Commons should ask the minister on what grounds he set aside the decision of such a careful judge as Judge Winchester; and how he considers it consistent with the justice, for the department to let loose two such offenders.

Such an action is not only a blot on the administration of justice—for if the minister is right, Judge Winchester is wrong—but it is a tremendous discouragement to those who are charged with catching criminals, the police. What on earth is the good of a fine police force, such as that of Toronto, when their successful efforts to trace, arrest and secure the conviction of a public nuisance is set aside by the head of the Department of Justice?

The whole thing is a pure farce. If the Minister of Justice condoned dealing in obscene literature, let him secure an amendment to the Criminal Code, so that the public and the police may know that it is legal in Canada.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH. I have a fairly accurate memory of the circumstances of the case to which the hon. gentleman has referred but the matter is one of considerable importance and I would therefore prefer, before making any statement in regard to it, to refer again to the file in order that I may not, by possibility, make any slip in stating the facts of the case. But I want to take this earliest possible opportunity to deny and to repudiate with whatever indignation and resentment I am capable of, the absurd and utterly untrue insinuation of the article in question that the gentleman named in the article, Mr. Robinette of Toronto, or any other man has the slightest influence or pull, as it is called, with the Department of Justice in connection with applications of this character. My memory is, and I think I am not mistaken, that in this particular case Mr. Robinette did not figure in any way whatever. I am certain that the solicitor who represented the principal defendant, a man named Skill, not Skelly, was of the opposite political party to Mr. Robinette and so far as I can now recall Mr. Robinette had no connection whatever with either of the prisoners nor did his name appear in any way in connection with the application. Certainly he never saw me in connection with the matter and if he had anything to do with it it was limited to the writing of a letter or something of that character. I stated when I rose I should prefer not going into the circumstances in the case upon this occasion, but with the permission of the House I would like to take an early opportunity to do so, because although I deprecate, as on previous occasions I have repeatedly deprecated, a public discussion in this House or elsewhere of the action which, in the exercise of his prerogative and under the advice of his minister, His Excellency takes in matters of this character, this particular case is one, especially in view of the canards which the hon. gentleman has brought to the attention of the House, in which I think it would be well that the facts should be known to the public.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be well that the minister should bring down any letters or papers in connection with it. I know he has sometimes refused to bring them down.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—MR. BLAIN

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to call attention to an article from the Ottawa 'Free Press' referring to myself personally. It is as follows :

TORY WHIP ON PATRONAGE LIST.

Richard Blain, the Conservative member for Peel, and one of the whips for Ontario, was exposed in the House of Commons westerday as being on a patronage list of the government. It was all his own doing, at that. If he had kept quiet nobody would have known anything about his private dealings with the government, but the fatal blow came at about 5 o'clock.

The House was in Committee of Supply on a Post Office Department vote of more than $500,000.

Mr. Blain, as usual, began harping on the question of patronage, and incidently asked the Postmaster General if he had a patronage list in his department.

'So far as I am aware,' replied Mr. Lemieux, 'there is no patronage list in my department. But I remember the member for Peel coming to me once and asking for a post office in some part of his county. And I think I granted him his request and built the post office for him.'

'Then,' cried Hon. Wm. Pugsley, Minister of Public Works, in evident glee, 'the member for Peel is on the patronage list.'

'Oh, yes,' answered Mr. Lemieux, 'he's on the patronage list.'

Mr. Blain could not withdraw, and had to admit that he was guilty of accepting patronage from the other side of the House.

I think I may say this is the first time I ever directed the attention of the House to any newspaper criticism of myself, but I thought this was so villainous that I would not allow it to pass.

Mr. EMMERSON. Don't you mean humorous instead of villainous?

Mr. BLAIN. I see the humorous side of it, too. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I never at any time, either publicly or privately, made a request to the government for a post office to be erected in the county of Peel, I make that statement without fear of contradiction. I did ask on two occasions that a post office be opened at a very small village, not a village, but at the junction of two cross roads in my county, and I am frank when I say that my hon. friend the Postmaster General acceded to my request, and two post offices were opened up, But never a dollar was expended in the county of Peel by any department of this government since I have had the honour of representing it in the way of public works. I say this because it is unfair that I should be charged with asking the government for a post office that I know they would not build.

CLASSIFICATION OF OFFICERS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask a question. Several days ago the Prime Minister laid on the table of this House a report on a new classification of the officers of this House, signed by the learned gentleman who sits at the head of the table. I have looked carefully over the Votes and Proceedings, and I find that the report has not been adopted or discussed by this House. I would like to ask the Prime Minister when the motion to adopt will be moved, or if the report will be discussed, so that we may have an opportunity of offering some observations.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know much about the report myself; I will have to inquire and let my hon. friend know.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 103) to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act.—Mr. Pugsley.

SUPPLY—ST. PETER'S INDIAN RESERVE.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Fielding: 'That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply,' and the proposed amendment of Mr. Bradbury thereto.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I am sure the House will not expect me—at this stage of the session, would not wish me,—to make a detailed criticism of the four hours' speech made by my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) at the close of the last sitting of the House. My hon. friend is entitled to the credit, if credit it be, of having made the longest speech of the session. May I add my humble appreciation by saying that I believe never, since this chamber was erected, has there been delivered in its walls such a persistent and sustained tirade of unfounded assertion, of unwarranted insinuation; a tirade that, in its gratuitous inexactitude, is an offience against the privilege of parliament and an insult to its intelligence.

Mr. BLAIN.

Mr. BRADBURY. I rise to a question of order. I hold that no hon. gentleman, especially a man occupying the position the hon. gentleman does on the treasury benches, has any right to make such a charge against me. He accuses me of using language that is insulting to the intelligence of this House, which I deny, and the hon. gentleman ought to withdraw it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think there is a point of order there.

Mr. OLIVER. I said that in my estimation the gratuitous inexactitudes of my hon. friend's address constituted an offence against the privilege of parliament and an insult to the intelligence of the House, in which my hon. friend excelled even himself. I have no means of expressing a greater appreciation of the speech and the peculiar talents to which my hon. friend owes the larger measure of his fame. The question that he has dealt with is not in itself of such importance at to warrant me in claiming the attention of the House at any great length. But there is involved in this question certain matters of public policy that are worthy of the fullest and most careful consideration of the House. The first question of policy relates to the surrender of Indian reservations. I may remind the House that my hon. friend, in the whole of his four hours' speech, in dealing with that very point, never found that the government was right once. It would strike almost any one that in such a lengthy and complicated transaction as the surrender of the St. Peter's reserve, it is peculiar that even this government should not be right once, at any rate. But my hon. friend proved to his own satisfaction that it was not right at any stage of the proceedings. To begin at the beginning, he was strong on the impropriety of attempting to secure a surrender of Indian lands unless the Indians themselves asked for that surrender.

Mr. BRADBURY. Would my hon. friend allow me to correct him? He has misunderstood me, either deliberately or unwittingly. I did not say that the land should only be surrendered on the request of the Indians themselves, but I charged the minister with making that surrender without receiving any request from any person in or around Selkirk, excepting Mr. S. J. Jackson, a former member of this House. I did not say that the Indians had asked for it.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, in view of the line of argument pursued by my hon. friend in his address, I do not think it is possible that he and I, in view of his present statement, are going to take the same meaning out of the words he has used. If I may be permitted to place my case before the House as the hon. member was permitted yesterday, may I be permitted to do it with the explanation that I do so as I understood the purport of the remarks of the hon. gentleman? What I want to say is that the government of this country is charged with the responsibility of adminstering its affairs in the best interests of the people, and the responsibility for that administration does not rest upon the individual here or there who may be most intimately concerned. In administering Indian affairs, whenever and wherever the Indians are holding land which they are not using for their own benefit, or which they are occupying to their own detriment, because of its geographical or other situation, and wherever such land may be turned into money which would be of more benefit to the Indians than the land, then it is the policy of the government to secure the surrender of the land by the Indians and the exchange of that land into money that would be for the benefit of the Indians, and to change the condition of that land from lying dormant and useless under the ownership of the Indians to that of productive and tax-paying land under the ownership of white people who are willing to pay a fair market price for it. I hope I have succeeded in making the policy of the government on that question clear. I want to impress upon the House that in so far as I understood the hon. gentleman, and in so far as I understood him to be supported by his friends on the other side of the House, they were against that policy.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. OLIVER. So that we have a clear cut issue on that point. I wish to make a clear and concise statement. I do not wish to take up any more of the time of the House than is absolutely necessary; therefore, I may be pardoned for not always responding to suggestions from the other side of the House, but in this case I make an exception? My hon. friend and his friends protest against the interpretation that I place upon his remarks.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. Now, Mr. Speaker, may I call your attention to this, that if the honest and successful attempt by the government to carry out that policy in a most noted instance receives only such consideration at the hands of parliament as my hon. friend has offered the government in regard to the surrender of this St. Peter's reserve, I would ask you, can it be expected that such a policy will be carried forward and made effective. Surely, such a tirade as my hon. friend saw fit to spread upon the pages of Hansard yesterday would cause a self-respecting government to hesitate in taking action in such matters, even if in their estimation it would be for the benefit of the Indians and the people interested. I have no hesitation in saying in connection with St. Peter's reserve that was exactly and absolutely what was done.

Now, with regard to the merits of the surrender itself; if I forget any of the large number of insinuations that my hon. friend made, the very large number of assertions that he made in condemnation of this transaction, I will be delighted if he should be good enough to remind me of them while I am speaking, because, as I followed his remarks, I could not see that one of them was founded on fact. Let me take first what I think he will admit he said and repeated, that the project of the surrender was planned deliberately, premeditatedly by the government for the purpose of unduly advantaging party friends of the government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. I think my hon. friend said that.

Mr. BRADBURY. I do not think there is any doubt about that.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no doubt he said it. Perhaps the facts, although I know my hon. friend has very little regard for facts——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. OLIVER——perhaps the facts——

Mr. BRADBURY. Mr. Speaker, I appeal to you against language such as this.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is going a little too far.

Mr. OLIVER. Instead of saying that my hon. friend had no regard for facts, I corrected myself by saying he had very little regard for facts.

Mr. BRADBURY. I have treated the hon. gentleman fairly, and I expect similar treatment from him.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that the expression, 'no regard for facts' is not parliamentary.

Mr. OLIVER. We need not interrupt upon these little points of difference; what we want to do is to get at the facts. Now the facts are—

Mr. BRADBURY. Be fair and it will be all right.

Mr. OLIVER. The facts in regard to this case are all on the table of the House. My hon. friend has asked for returns from time to time and every return that he has asked for has been laid on the table. If there is anything more that he wants he should ask for it. If his case, as substantiated by the documents before the House, is not complete it is his fault and not ours. But the case is complete, he has asked for everything and he has received it. Now, the documents on the table of the House show that the surrender of the lands of the Indians was the result and grew out of the attempt that was being made to secure the rights of whites and half-breeds who held lands individually within the area occupied by the reserve. There was no premeditation in regard to the surrender of the reserve.

May I give an explanation to the House as to the condition of this reserve so as to make it absolutely clear that what I state is the fact and so that the House may draw its own conclusions as to what my hon. friend stated. This reserve is situated on the Red river. The Red river, as the House knows, empties into Lake Winnipeg and the valley of the Red river, being very low, at the entrance of the river into Lake Winnipeg, there is a considerable area of what may be called debatable ground, land which, under certain circumstances, is dry and under other circumstances, wet. Sometimes it is an impassable marsh, and sometimes it is good hay land.

The northern limit of settlement along the valley of the Red river occurs within the limits of this reserve. Let me emphasize the point. The northern limit of settlement in the valley of the Red river occurs within the limits of the St. Peter's Indian reserve. From the international boundary to this northern boundary of settlement, along both sides of the river, when the transfer from the Hudson Bay Company to Canada occurred, the territory was occupied by settlers to the end of the arable country at the edge of the marsh which forms the southern end of Lake Winnipeg, and one of the first acts of the Canadian government on taking possession of the country was to cause a survey to these lands in what was called the river settlement extending from the 49th parallel to Lake Winnipeg, and what afterwards became the St. Peter's Indian reserve was surveyed into river lots just the same as all the rest of the valley. This was done because it was in the occupation of a settled population whose rights were exactly the same as of all the rest of the people who were settled along the Red river. After this river lot survey had been made, a certain portion of the people who occupied these river lots in what is now the reserve, decided that they would, as it is called there, enter the treaty. There was a very large admixture of Indian blood and as also of white blood in the people settled in that area, but the Indian blood I presume predominated, and as a result those occupants of these river lots, for one reason or another, whether owing to the predominance of Indian blood or for what other reason I am not here to say, decided that they would enter the treaty and that this portion of the Red river valley surveyed into river settlements should be declared an Indian reserve. But although some of the people who were settled in that area wished to be classed as Indians there were certain others who did not, who refused to surrender their citizenship and insisted on retaining their individual property as individuals and this they were allowed to do, while the so-called Indians, although they got the benefit of treaty payments, although they had the benefit of the presence of an agent, although in law they were only Indians, still continued to occupy the same river lots, they and their families, until the recent arrangement was made with them. So that so far from these people being Indians in the ordinary sense of the word, or this being an Indian reserve in the ordinary sense of the word, the statement that this was the fact, if my hon. friend made it, was, as I said, an inexactitude. After these people had decided to be classed as Indians, being entitled under the Indian treaty to a larger area of land than was included in the river lots which they occupied, there was set apart as an Indian reserve for their benefit a certain surrounding area of land, making in all some 50,000 acres roughly speaking, which was placed under the jurisdiction of the Indian Department with an agent at Selkirk. This Indian reserve adjoined, either actually or approximately, the town of Selkirk which had been founded there, I think I am correct in saying, before this land was set apart as an Indian reserve.

Mr. BRADBURY. Is the hon. gentleman aware that the town of Selkirk takes in the first 15 lots of St. Peter's reserve?

Mr. OLIVER. Then my hon. friend and I are in agreement as to the proximity of the town and the reserve. I am glad to find a point of agreement in the remarks I made, although I was not able to find any such point in the remarks of my hon. friend. This area was set apart as an Indian reserve, with all the advantages and all the disabilities of such a reserve, and I need not point out to those members who are familiar with the conditions existing where there is an Indian reserve, near a town that that condition is not good either for the town of Selkirk, or for the Indians occupying the reserve. I need not go into details, every member who knows anything about the circumstances connected with an Indian reserve in proximity to a town knows the facts to be as I have stated. What made the matter worse, however, was that these river lots which had not become part of the Indian reserve, but which were occupied by people, either whites or half-breeds, who claimed the rights of citizenship, were included in that area, alternating with the lots that belonged to ordinary Indians, and the result was that there was no possibility of enforcing the liquor law in regard to Indians in that area, because intervening lots that belonged to white people or half-breeds, were not under the Indian Act, and the fact that they were there, intermingled with the lots which belonged to the Indians, made it a simple, actual, physical impossibility to preserve law and order in all particulars upon that reserve, as it can be preserved on a reserve where there is no such intermingling of private property and band property. Whatever may be the claims of the Indians upon the consideration of the government, I suppose everybody will admit that the people who are not Indians are entitled to consideration, to claim the attention of the government, and so from time to time, from the setting apart of the reserve, complaint was made by citizens who held property within the reserve, who asked title to their property. I shall not take time to explain the conditions that surround the granting of title in such cases, I will only say that there were such difficulties, and that they occurred not in all cases, but in a very considerable number of the cases. From time to time the effort was made by the government of Canada, by commissioners sent there, to secure a settlement as between the Indian band and the individual holders of land within the limits of what is called the St. Peter's reserve. Up to a certain date some 5,000 acres of these private properties had been patented; but there still remained a number of claims that had not been settled, where private owners occupy river lots in the reserve claimed that they were entitled to patents, and the Indian band objected to the patents being granted. It was to secure a settlement of that condition of affairs, to secure the citizens of Canada who own the land within the limits of that reserve their legal title to their own land, that the commission in the person of Chief Justice Howell was appointed. Chief Justice Howell was asked to act as commissioner for the purpose of adjusting the claims of the white and half-breed occupants of river lots in the St. Peter's reserve.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. May I ask if that was the only object for which he was appointed ?

Mr. OLIVER. The only object of his appointment is set out in the papers before the House. It is not necessary to question me on these points—the papers are here for hon. members to see for themselves. Do not ask me; do not depend on what I say; go to the record. I am not asking that my word be taken on any of these matters. I am simply placing before the House in brief form the information contained in the papers before the House, brought here at the request of the hon. member for Selkirk, and in regard to which he should have fully informed himself if he did not.

Mr. BRADBURY. I think I did.

Mr. OLIVER. Then my hon. friend should have informed the House.

Mr. BRADBURY. I think I informed the House.

Mr. OLIVER. He took plenty of time. There was no lack of time, whatever other lack there might have been. Chief Justice Howell was given a commission to adjust these claims of the white or half-breed settlers, and when he went there and undertook to get that adjustment, he found the condition to be such as to make it almost impossible for him to secure a settlement that would be mutually satisfactory to the settlers and the Indians, and he then suggested, or the reasons that I have given, that there should be a surrender of the Indian reserve secured.

Mr. BRADBURY. Did the suggestion come from Chief Justice Howell to secure that surrender, or from the Minister or the Department ?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend can answer the question for himself. Chief Justice Howell's instructions from the department are on the table. I ask the hon. gentleman, did the suggestion come from the department or from the Chief Justice ?

Mr. BRADBURY. I ask you; you are the head of the department.

Mr. OLIVER. I have stated what I have stated.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the hon. gentleman deny that in the body of these instructions there is the suggestion that Chief Justice Howell obtain a surrender from the Indians ?

Mr. OLIVER. Does my hon. friend say there is ?

Mr. MEIGHEN. I so read the papers, that the suggestion was embodied in the instructions from the Deptartment of the Interior.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend states that there was a suggestion contained in the body of the instructions. There was not an instruction to secure the surrender.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. May I point out to the minister this clause from the instructions :

It may also become necessary to consider the advisability and necessity of obtaining from the members of the band a surrender of all ungranted lands in the reserve.

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friends can translate those words into an instruction, they are welcome to their interpretation. I said that Chief Justice Howell was instructed to secure the rights of the citizens who held lands in the reserve. I gave it to be understood by the House that he had not been instructed to secure the surrender. The House has heard the instructions, and is the judge as to whether I stated what was correct or not. There is no hope, Mr. Speaker, of my hon. friend and myself understanding these things alike. I said at the beginning, in order to reach a conclusion let us have the records on the table of the House, and then we will know whether facts are as stated or not. In this case the fact was stated. It was challenged and the fact was proven from the records. I say that when Chief Justice Howell, acting on his instructions, visited the reserve and attempted to make an arrangement that would protect the rights of the individual owners of property there, he found that it would be necessary, in order to reach a conclusion satisfactory to all parties, to secure the surrender from the Indians. Now, the charge of my hon. friend from Selkirk was that the department had deliberately planned to secure that surrender for the purpose of improperly benefiting their party friends. I have stated the facts as to how the negotiations came to be entered into, and I ask the House, is there a shadow of foundation for the suggestion my hon. friend has made? Does he suggest to this House that the hon. the Chief Justice of Manitoba, who was authorized to settle certain conflicting claims on the reserve, went on and negotiated the terms of a surrender upon the instructions of this government and with the view of advantaging the party friends of this government there? That is what my hon. friend insinuated in his address of last night. The facts that I have stated justify every word that I have used in regard to my hon. friend and his remarks. Here was a condition of affairs that required adjustment, required to be dealt with, in the interest of the town of Selkirk, in the interest of the Indians and in the interest of the private holders of land in the reserve; and Chief Justice Howell, having been appointed commissioner to settle one side of the question, went on and made negotiations that resulted in the settlement of the whole question. So far, therefore, as that insinuation of my hon. friend is concerned, I leave it to the House to judge what foundation he has for it.

In regard to granting land to the individual Indians in their own right, let me give the reason why that was done. These Indians were occupants of these lands in severalty at the time of the transfer. They did not become Indians in law until some years after the transfer. It is held, and the documents on the table will show how and to what extent it is held, that as residents of Manitoba in occupation of lands at that time, they might reasonably claim consideration under the settlement that was made with the settlers of Manitoba of that date, in addition to their claims as Indians. That is to say, the claims which they held as Indians would not necessarily debar them from asserting claims for lands as original settlers in the province of Manitoba; and in order that that question might be settled, they were dealt with on the basis of giving out of this reserve 16 acres to each person in each family on condition that they signed away any rights they might have as original settlers in the province of Manitoba. It was for the purpose of quieting their title to land as original settlers that this arrangement was made with them, and it is so set out in the papers on the table and in the receipts for patents signed by all of those who received patents.

As to the providence or improvidence of this particular feature of the transaction, I submit that in dealing with men who were individual owners of lands in 1871 and who were in individual occupation of that land down to the time of the negotiations for the surrender, it was not on the face of it an improvident transaction to place these men in individual ownership of that amount of land as a settlement of their title, not as Indians, but as white men or half-breeds. They had their rights as Indians, they were entitled to other rights as half-breeds, and it does not seem unreasonable that they should say: So far as our rights as Indians are concerned, the department shall administer them, but so far as our rights as half-breeds are concerned, we will administer them ourselves. That was the position of affairs. It was a condition of the surrender without which the surrender could not have been secured. It was considered by the commissioner who negotiated the surrender to be sound law and sound policy, and it was embodied in the terms of the surrender. Now, it is a fact that when the terms of the surrender were first drawn, a provision was made that the handling by the Indians of this land individually granted would be by the Department of Indian Affairs; but the people who were to sign the surrender, the people who owned the land, either as Indians or half-breeds, were the people to say what terms were to be contained in the deed of surrender before they would sign it, and they said they would not sign it with that condition in it, and it had to be struck out.

As to the disposition that these people made of their lands after they had been granted to them, in a large number of cases they sold the land to whomsoever would buy at the price they were willing to take. I do not know what my hon. friend or the other critics of the government in the House would have in regard to such a matter; but any assertion or insinuation that there was any pressure or any possibility of pressure on the part of the government or any body connected with the government to compel one of these men to sell any portion of this land to any certain person or to take any certain price, is absolutely without foundation, as the records show.

Mr. BRADBURY. Putting up a straw man to knock him down. Nobody said that.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend says he did not say that. There was a great deal that my hon. friend did not say that he insinuated. I am not insinuating; I am saying, and I hope my hon. friend understands what I have said. The land that was apportioned to these people they were permitted to select themselves; they selected it where it suited them best, some in the river lots and some in the surrounding section survey; they sold to whomsoever they pleased and took whatever prices they saw fit to take. My hon. friend read to the House certain prices at which certain of these lands were sold to individual buyers, and he claimed that there had been impropriety in dealing with the transaction. Without unduly delaying the House, I will read a very short list that will, I think demonstrate that these men sold at whatever they saw fit to whomsoever they saw fit. Last night my hon. friend laid a great deal of stress on certain affidavits of one William Asham, and the House was informed that this William Asham was a man of exceptional abilities and attainments—a John Norquay, in fact. Anybody who knows anything of the history of Manitoba knows that John Norquay was the premier of that province for many years, and filled the office with a great deal of credit to himself, his province, and the race of people to which he belonged; so that when my hon. friend states to the House that William Asham is a man of the calibre of John Norquay, he assured the House that he is a man who knows how to handle his own business; and the records show that William Asham, who was a participant in these grants, sold 40 acres of land to G. H. Funk at $4 an acre. Now, if William Asham is the man my hon. friend said he was, and I take for granted that he is—I know nothing about him personally—and he sold his land to G. H. Funk for $4 an acre, I presume he took that price because that was its value. From what my hon. friend said here last night, I presume Mr. Asham had all the assistance he could give him, all the advice he could give him that would prevent him selling his land at anything less than its value, and the record shows that William Asham sold a certain amount of the land he owned at $4 an acre. I submit this to the House as evidence that the land was sold at the absolute discretion of the Indian and at a price that was satisfactory to him, and when my hon. friend suggests to the House that because in a large number of cases this land was sold at $4 an acre, it was sold below its value, I say he has no evidence whatever in support of such a contention. But it was not all sold at $4 an acre. I find that Henry Cook sold 25 acres to George H. Funk for $430, or at the rate of $17.50 an acre.

Mr. BRADBURY. Who is Funk?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know anything about him except his name. He seems to have bought a good deal of this land and to have paid for it, and so far as I know, to be on good terms with the owners who sold him the land. I take it for granted, however, that he is not a friend of my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury).

I find that John James Flett sold 48 acres to the Northwest Land Company for $728, or $16.20 an acre. I find that Baptiste Leclair sold 32 acres to Leonard for $540 at the rate of $16.50 an acre.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. From what is my hon. friend reading?

Mr. OLIVER. From Mr. Williams' report. Chief William Prince, the chief of the band who was said to have been bribed and bought and to have generally disgraced himself, and who at the same time might be supposed to be fairly sharp at making a bargain, sold 147·25 acres for $7.25 an acre. Alfred Spence sold two lots of land, one of 20 acres to the Northwest Land Company for $240, at the rate of $12 an acre, and one of 12 acres to F. Heap for $32, at the rate of $2.70 an acre.

It would seem to me that the figures I have read are evidence that the Indians to whom this land was given exercised their free right to dispose of it if they pleased, as they pleased, to whom they pleased, and at whatever price they pleased to take.

In view of the assertions that had been made, in view of the rumours that had come to me in regard to improprieties in the transactions between the people who had bought the lands and the Indians, contrary again to what my hon. friend suggested last night, as I told the House I contemplated doing, I sent the law clerk of the department to Selkirk with instructions to see the Indians who had sold land, and to find out whether they had been paid or not, the rumour being that they had not been paid, and that they were being cheated out of the money they were entitled to receive at the price at which they had sold. I told the House at the time the matter was in question that the government did not pretend to control the Indian in the price at which he sold the land or the person to whom he sold, that was a part of his right under the surrender; but as to whether he was getting the payment for it or not, that was a matter that we might very well consider, and I proposed to consider it, although I did not hold the department responsible for the price at which the Indian sold or the person to whom he sold. The law clerk was sent there, and I have placed on the table his report from which I read. In that report will be found the name of every Indian to whom land was given and the disposition that was made of the land. My hon. friend had that report in his hand, he knew that the lands which I have mentioned had been sold at the prices I have given, but he saw fit last night in discussing this matter before the House to create the impression that the land had been sold at a price of some $4 an acre, without exceptions such as this, exceptions which absolutely prove that the Indian had the free right of sale and that he got value for what he had to sell.

In regard to the taking of the surrender, my hon. friend was strong on the point that there had not been a sufficient advertisement or notice that the surrender was about to be asked. It is a fact which the records will bear out that the negotiations in regard to the surrender were in progress for the greater part of a year at intervals. Every Indian on the reserve knew that these negotiations were in progress. There are no people in the world who gather news quite as quickly as the Indians, especially news of direct interest to themselves, and there is no manner of doubt that they all knew and discussed the terms that were proposed, and that when Mr. Pedley went there on the completion of the negotiations, or the presumed completion of the negotiations by Chief Justice Howell, to take the formal surrender, the Indians thoroughly knew what proposition was being put before them and had their minds made up as to whether they would agree to it or not. My hon. friend said last night that only one day's notice was given for the gathering of the band. My information in that regard, as I am sorry to say in so many other matters, is quite different, it is that some three or four day's notice was given, and that there was an attendance of the band at the surrender of 205, out of a possible 289. It seems to me that the proportion of voting members of the band in attendance is ample evidence that ample notice was given, and that those who were not there were absent not because they did not know but because they did not care to be there. It is true that the surrender was carried by only a small majority: the vote, I am informed, was 107 to 98. But it was a majority of the voting members of the band who were present there, and the Indian Act recognizes that a surrender agreed to by a majority of the voting members of the band is a legal surrender.

Mr. BRADBURY. The hon. gentleman says that the Indian Act provides that a majority present at the meeting may dispose of the Indian reserve. Now, if that is a proper interpretation of the Act, and if there were only 20 Indians present out of 289, would the hon. gentleman say that the majority of these 20 had a right to vote away the inherited rights of all the other Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. As I understand the law, they would have the legal right, but I would not consider they had the equitable right. But I do think that under the law, when there are 205 out of 289 present, they have not only the legal but the equitable right to decide, especially when it is a matter which had been under discussion for so long a time. As to the actual moment of taking the vote, as to what was done then, or how it was done, my hon. friend admits there was a fair division between the people who were voting for and against, those who stood on one side and those who stood on the other side. His suggestion that they did not know what they were voting on, is not worthy even of himself or of the Indians. They knew perfectly well. After a matter has been under discussion by them for a whole year, and they are asked to come and vote on a question, I say it is an insult even to an Indian to suggest that he does not know what he is doing or why he is doing it. From my acquaintance of the Indians, I think there are no people in the world who are quicker to appreciate their own side of the question than the Indians. So I say that the surrender was secured in a legal form, after due notice, in presence of a sufficient number of members of the band to constitute an equitable as well as a legal right. I say it would not be proper, it would not be sound policy in any sense, if, when it was absolutely in the interest of the public, absolutely in the interest of the Indians, and absolutely in the interest of the surrounding settlements and of the settler within the limits of the reserve, that this settlement should not take place, that it should not be accepted and acceded to when a clear majority of those present voted for it.

Mr. HUGHES. If I heard the hon. member for Selkirk aright, he pointed out that the call was not to those who were for selling the lands and those who were against it, but the call was for those who wanted the $90 to take one side, and those who didn't want it to take the other side. I know the minister has overlooked that.

Mr. OLIVER. No, I have not overlooked it. I can only say that I did not wish to be discourteous to the hon. gentleman, and question the validity of the statement he put forward. I am merely generalizing in order to save his feelings, and I may be pardoned, I presume, for again generalizing, and again saying that after a question such as that had been under discussion for so long a time, when it was a question of such importance, it did not matter what was said in regard to the vote. Those Indians knew what the vote was for, and they voted for or against with full knowledge of what they were doing, and why they were doing it. I do not wish to bring in personal matters, but my hon. friend, followed by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) has seen fit to mention the name of Mr. Semmons.

Mr. HUGHES. I never heard of him.

Mr. OLIVER. If he had listened to the speech of the hon. member for Selkirk last night he would have heard of him, because it was Mr. Semmons who was said to have made this announcement. Now, the suggestion is that Mr. Semmons was a party to an impropriety in which the interest of the Indians was not preserved. Now, I may go, perhaps, so far as to say who Mr. Semmons is. I happen to know Mr. Semmons ever since 1873, when he was a Methodist minister in the city of Winnipeg, and at that time he was considered to be a young man of very considerable promise in the ministry, and ever since then he has devoted his life to the advancement and the betterment of the Indians.

An hon. MEMBER. He is in the employ of your department?

Mr. OLIVER. He is at the present time, but only since a comparatively recent period. During the greater part of Mr. Semmons' life since I knew him in Winnipeg in 1873, his life and everything he has have been at the service of the Indians, for their benefit and improvement ever since. No man who knows Mr. Semmons will deny that, and no one who knows him will deny that Mr. Semmons can be now any less a Christian gentleman and an honest man than he was when he was a Methodist minister.

Now, in regard to the auction sale. My hon. friend suggests that there had not been sufficient advertising done to give due notice, and that consequently there was a small sale, and low prices were secured. The records show that the sale was advertised in the Manitoba 'Free Press' at Winnipeg, in the 'Daily Graphic' of Portage la Prairie, in the 'Expositor' of Selkirk, in the Brandon 'Sun,' in the Winnipeg 'Logburg,' and in the Toronto 'Globe.' The advertisement appeared for six insertions in the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' for three in the 'Daily Graphic' of Portage la Prairie, for three weeks in the 'Expositor' of Selkirk, for six insertions in the Brandon 'Sun,' three weekly insertions in the 'Logburg' of Winnipeg, and six insertions in the Toronto 'Globe.' I may point out that the 'Logburg' of Winnipeg is printed chiefly for the information of the Icelanders who are settled on the shores of Lake Winnipeg further north than the mouth of the Red river. So there was unquestionably ample notice by advertisement of the sale and its terms.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Would the minister say of what complexion of politics those papers are?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know, but I am under the impression that the 'Expositor' of Selkirk is a Conservative paper. My hon. friend from Selkirk will know that better than I do.

Mr. BRADBURY. The hon. gentleman knows that the 'Expositor' is a Liberal paper, for he has had business with it.

Mr. OLIVER. The point there was that it was a local paper, and the advertisement appeared in the local paper for three weeks. It appeared six times in the Winnipeg 'Free Press', a paper which is read more than any other paper west of Lake Superior. It appeared in these papers and besides there were 100 handbills distributed at the time of the sale. The sale was held in the town of Selkirk, absolutely adjacent to the reserve and within twenty-five miles of the city of Winnipeg, the greatest centre of real estate speculation in the known world to-day. Yet, my hon. friend says that it was not sufficiently advertised.

Mr. BRADBURY. Would the hon. gentleman tell us at what time of the year the sale took place?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) told the House last night. The record is before the House. It took place on the 16th December.

Mr. BRADBURY. In the middle of a Manitoba winter?

Mr. OLIVER. Sure. It took place in the month of December for one reason, and that was that in the month of December, when the early crop returns for the season are in, the people have more money than they have at other times in the year.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. I would like to ask the minister why he sells school lands in June and July, then?

Mr. OLIVER. I would be glad if I might be permitted to continue my remarks without interruption, but seeing that my hon. friend (Mr. Sharpe) has asked the question, I feel bound to answer it. I would ask hon. members, unless they wish to elucidate some point which is actually under discussion, not to interrupt, because I would like to get through without undue delay. The reason that we advertise school lands in June and July, or in the summer time, is because the school lands are scattered far and wide in the purely agricultural country, and it is necessary for people to travel to see what the land is like, whereas, in this case, the land was situated within twenty miles of Winnipeg, it was land that anybody, who was at all likely to purchase, that is the people of Winnipeg and Selkirk, had no doubt made themselves familiar with in due course, knowing that it was going to be sold. Unquestionably they had made themselves familiar with it during the summer. It was desirable that the sale should take place and nobody was prevented from buying by holding it on the 16th December. The date of the sale of school lands has no bearing on the question whatever. This sale took place at a time when money would be plentiful if ever it was plentiful at any time in Manitoba. However, as my hon. friend has mentioned the subject of school lands, I might perhaps give him some information with regard to the sale of school lands which may have some bearing on this question. My hon. friend has suggested that the course taken with regard to school lands would be a proper course regarding these Indian lands, the supposition being that, thereby and therefore, the price would be better either because of better advertising or of holding the sale at a better season, or because there is no suggestion of attempting to benefit friends of the government in connection with the sale of school lands.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. I think the minister is trying to twist this thing. What I want to know is why the minister sold this land in the winter time when he sells school lands in the summer time?

Mr. OLIVER. I told the hon. gentleman. Now, I am going to tell him something else if he will permit me. I might remind the House that the terms of the sale of school lands are considerably more favourable to the buyer, as they do not call for such a large amount of money, than were the terms of sale of these Indian lands.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Why?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that I need answer that question—need I? I will not use a word because it would be unparliamentary, but any person can ask a question that even Solomon could not answer.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I asked the question in no spirit at all of antagonism to the minister, but it just occurred to me that the minister might explain to the House why there should be a difference in giving easier terms in the disposal of school lands than in the disposal of this land, if the result would be to get higher prices.

Mr. OLIVER. The reason was, if the hon. gentleman does really insist upon it, is because in the case of the Indians we desired to realize at an earlier date for the sake of the Indians than in the case of the school lands which are sold chiefly and largely as agricultural lands in the hope of inducing settlement upon them. We had to close out this transaction, and therefore by giving a reasonable time we thought we were doing what was best in the interests of the country. In regard to the school lands it may not be out of place to inform my hon. friend that we held several school land sales on June 10, 1909, the lands being situated largely in townships 12, 13, 14 and 15, ranges 6 and 7, east of the 1st meridian; that is to say in the Selkirk area of Manitoba, east of the Red river, and in a northerly and easterly part of the province. We find that ten quarter-sections sold at $5 an acre. With the favourable terms that are accorded school lands, under the satisfactory advertising that is given school lands, under all the favourable circumstances that go with the sale of school lands, these school lands in that part of the country only brought $5 an acre. In a number of cases lands that were put up as school lands at an upset price of $5 an acre were not sold at all. This sale was in June, 1909, a year and a half after the sale of the reserve lands, after there had been a season of great prosperity, and at the beginning of a season which turned out to be even more prosperous, and still we were only able to secure the same average price for these lands that we secured for the lands in the Selkirk reserve.

Mr. A. HAGGART. Where were these lands?

Mr. OLIVER. I have been trying to tell my hon. friend.

Mr. A. HAGGART. I never heard you.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, my hon. friend has not been listening; that is all. I might give the numbers for the benefit of my hon. friend. First there was the S.W. ¼ 11-14-6-E.

Mr. A. HAGGART. Where is that?

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friend will take a note of the figures I will give him he can look at the map and find out. As I have no map here I cannot show him.

Mr. A. HAGGART. The minister should know something of the geography of the country.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is a resident of Winnipeg; he has lived there a lifetime, he has been concerned in public and business affairs in that vicinity for many years. If the hon. member does not know where township 14, range 6, east of the first meridian, is, I cannot pretend to tell him. Other cases were: Southwest quarter of 11, 14, 6, $5; northeast quarter 11, 14, 6, $5; northwest quarter 11, 14, 6, $5.50; southeast quarter 29, 14, 6, $5; east half of southwest quarter 29, 14, 6, $5; northeast quarter 29, 14, 6, $5; east half of northwest quarter 29, 14, 6, $5; southeast quarter 29, 15, 6, $5; southwest quarter 29, 15, 6, $5. They all sold at $5 an acre.

Mr. A. HAGGART. Does the minister compare those lands with the lands of the St. Peter's reserve? Why they are not worth one-tenth of the value.

Mr. OLIVER. Then my hon. friend has found out suddenly where these lands are? I am glad he has secured the information, but again I am afraid he is not correct. His inexactitude resembles very much that of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury). I am afraid it is a case of the result of proximity, because on the St. Peter's reserve there are some 7,000 acres of land that could not be sold at all at any price, that was not offered for sale because it was not suitable for sale.

Mr. A. HAGGART. Because it is marsh.

Mr. BRADBURY. It is the best hay land in the country, and the minister ought to know it.

Mr. OLIVER. Very well. If it is the best hay land in the country, we have reserved that for the benefit of the hon. member's friends, and we may hope to get still higher prices for it, but I still maintain that my information and my knowledge is that a part of the St. Peter's reserve is of so little value it would not bring a price at all.

I have dealt with the auction sale and the prices received at it. Does my hon. friend suggest that at this auction sale there was not a fair opportunity for every man to buy if he wanted to buy? Does he suggest that friends of the government in any way had any advantage at that sale?

Mr. A. HAGGART. He charges it straight.

Mr. OLIVER. He charges it straight. Then I can only repeat what I said in the beginning, that in that case and on the evidence that I have placed before the House—

An hon. MEMBER. We have not got any, we are waiting for it——

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member has given us one of those inexactitudes which are an insult to the intelligence of the House. The idea that at an auction sale of lands said to be valuable, within 25 miles of Winnipeg, whose sale had been under consideration, within the knowledge of the public for over a year, at a sale which had been advertised in the public press for three weeks, there was anything but a fair, square opportunity for any man with money to invest, is an insult to the intelligence of the House.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does the minister say that the lands sold by auction were similar to those owned by the Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. I exhibit a map of the reserve and the surrounding country. That which is in white is the land selected by the Indians, either held or sold by each individual. What is in red is the land sold by auction. My hon. friend can see for himself.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That may be one way of putting it. but in the report of the department for 1909, at page 83, the Deputy Superintendent of Indian Affairs, says:

> The lands apportioned to the Indians comprise the best lands in the reserve, and the remainder sold by auction only low and swampy lands.

When the minister holds up a map, he cannot claim in the face of his deputy's words that the lands sold by auction were anything like the lands disposed of by the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid it is another case in which my hon. friend and I cannot agree.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Here are the words.

Mr. OLIVER. And here are the facts; my hon. friend can take his choice. In regard to the number of people who bought land, my hon. friend was very emphatic that only so many men bought so much land. As a matter of fact, 24 men bought land at the sale, and I submit that there is no evidence whatever that any of the 24 could not have bought as much more as he wanted if he had the money to pay for it and was willing to bid on it. The idea that there was any restriction or that any man was at a disadvantage in regard to this auction sale is absolutely without foundation. My hon. friend was very insistent that this land should be preserved for a class of settlers in whom he seems to have been very much interested, the Galicians, that the government should in some way have taken the land from the Indians and given it to the Galicians. That is not the policy of the government. We deal with the Indians as trustees, and we deal with the Galicians as we do with other citizens of the country, we make no difference. But I notice upon the list of sales that were made that, if I am any judge of the names, two of my hon. friend's friends who were present at the sale, and bought land there. If two of them were there and could buy land, why could not all the rest have been there and have bought land at the same price? If his suggestion was that in any way the Galicians of that part of the country were excluded from the sale, were not able to get the benefit of it, all I can say is that two of them were there and bought at the same prices as other people, and all the rest of them might have been there and taken the same chance and bought at the same price. My hon. firend was very insistent that none of these Indians to whom land had been deeded by patent had seen the patents.

Mr. BRADBURY. I said that of the patents that were issued, at least 90 per cent of the Indians had never seen their patents.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, my hon. friend asked for the return, and it was brought down, showing the receipts that were given by these people for their patents.

Mr. BRADBURY. I stated very clearly, and I wish to state now, that those receipts purporting to be signed by the Indians were not signed by the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the point I wanted to get at. I have brought here, not to be made a part of the records of the House, but to be placed upon the table in the custody of the clerk, for the information of any person who chooses to examine them, the original receipts for some 338 patents. The remainder of the patents for which receipts are not here may be accounted for in several ways. Some of them are still in the department, some are still in the hands of the agent and have not been called for by the Indians, some were issued by the agent before he understood his instructions that he must take a receipt. These receipts all purport to be signed by the Indians, and where a mark is made, it is witnessed by another person. My hon. friend has said here within the last five minutes that these Indians never signed these documents. That is to say, my hon. friend has said that there have been 338 forgeries committed. This is a serious charge, and it is not for the Department of the Interior to decide whether it is true or not. The administration of criminal law is in the hands of the governments of the provinces, and when my hon. friend——

Mr. SMYTH. Is this government not the trustee of those Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. SMYTH. Was it not your duty to see that they were properly signed.

Mr. OLIVER. We say that they were properly signed. My hon. friend controverts that. He has, on his responsibility as a member of this House, declared that 90 per cent of these signatures are forgeries. The administration of the criminal law is in the hands of the provincial government of Manitoba, who, I understood from what he said, have interested themselves very largely in regard to these lands.

Mr. BRADBURY. I made no such statement in this House, that the Manitoba government had interfered directly or indirectly. What I said was that the Registrar General, Mr. Macara, at the request of two of the hon. gentleman's friends, justices of the King's Bench, had refused to issue the titles or to allow them to pass through the office—not the government.

Mr. OLIVER. I will say an officer of the Manitoba government, I presume with the sanction of the Manitoba government. At any rate, this is a question outside of the question of what has been done with these lands. This is a question as regards the administration of criminal law. This is a question as to whether we are to have charges of wholesale forgery bandied across the floor of this House or not, and I ask the hon. member to use his influence with his friends the Manitoba government to make the charge good.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. OLIVER. When the House rose at one o'clock, I had just made the statement that I had here 338 original receipts given in return for the patents for land in this Indian reserve delivered to Indians, and I commented on the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) that 90 per cent of the signatures were not genuine, but were in fact forgeries. As we were leaving the Chamber at recess, I saw my hon. friend rise to make some remark, and I am repeating what I said in order to give him the opportunity of making any comment he may see fit.

Mr. BRADBURY. What I said was that 90 per cent of those receipts were not signed by the Indians knowingly, that the Indians alleged that they never signed receipts for their patents and had never seen their patents, and that consequently, if there are receipts on file in the department, they must be forgeries.

Mr. OLIVER. I can only repeat what I said before recess, that we believe these signatures to be genuine just as we believe that the patents were delivered in accordance with the terms of these receipts. My hon. friend contradicts that contention. He says that these patents were not delivered, and has repeated that the signatures were forgeries. The only way then to bring this matter to an issue is for my hon. friend, since he has taken the responsibility of making the statement that 90 per cent of the signatures were forgeries, to take such steps, as the representative of the people whose names he alleges were forged, as will have the effect of causing those responsible for the administration of criminal law to bring the law into action.

Mr. BRADBURY. If that be my duty as a representative, how much more must it be the duty of the minister responsible for the care and protection of those Indians who are the wards of the government?

Mr. OLIVER. If the minister responsible believes what my hon. friend does, that would certainly be his duty, but he does not. That duty does not devolve on the minister who believes that the signatures were genuine, and that the patents were delivered as those receipts purport. That duty instead rests on my hon. friend who says that he believes the signatures were forged and the patents were not delivered. I do not think it is necessary that I should continue the discussion on this point any further. It is up to my hon. friend to make good what he has said.

Mr. SPROULE. If an hon. member for this House, upon his responsibility as such, makes such a charge before the minister responsible and the House, is it not the duty of the minister to institute, either by commission or otherwise, an inquiry so as to determine whether these allegations are correct or not?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no desire to be too blunt, but I must say that if I were able to accept the statement of my hon. friend, I would consider that to be my duty. I regret very much, however, to say that I am not able to accept it. According to my humble judgment, it is not warranted, and the only thing that remains to be done is for my hon. friend to take the matter before a tribunal whose business is to try out such allegations.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Selkirk has deliberately made the charge on his responsibility as a member of this House.

Mr. OLIVER. If it were the business of the Minister of the Interior to try charges of criminal or dishonest conduct, it would be my business to take action. But that is not the business of the Minister of the Interior. If there were criminality in any branch of the department by any of its officers, I would certainly have it punished, but I am not going to assert that there has been any when there is absolutely no evidence before the House to warrant any such supposition to be found in any of the documents lying on the table.

My hon. friend was not only very emphatic on the question of forgery, but also on the question of bribery, and it would not be fair to the House to drop the discussion without doing him the courtesy of dealing with his assertion on that point. His assertion, if I remember it rightly, was that the chief of the band, William Prince, and his four councillors, were bribed to sign the document of surrender.

Mr. BRADBURY. No.

Mr. OLIVER. Then that they were bribed to induce other members of the band to sign the document of surrender.

Mr. BRADBURY. The hon. gentleman, all through this debate, has shown his utter ignorance of the facts in connection with this transaction. He must know that the Indians never signed that surrender, and that the only names attached to it are those of the chief and the three councillors. The band never signed it and never were asked to sign it.

Mr. OLIVER. Then the allegation was that they were bribed to induce the band to vote for the surrender. If not, to what purpose were they bribed. My hon. friend, I understand, stands by the statement that they were bribed by the officers of the Interior Department to do something that was not in the best interests of the band. Is that the case?

Mr. BRADBURY. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. The terms of the surrender contained a provision as to how much land should go to each individual Indian of the band, and how much to the chief, and how much to the councillors. Now, the Indians knew, before they voted, what they were voting for. The terms of the surrender had been discussed by them time and again. They were discussed on that day and the majority of the members of the band then present themselves voted to give the chief, William Prince and the several councillors a major share of that land, and how that can be construed into a bribe by the officers of the Department of the Interior or the Indian Department, I am at loss to understand. The members of the band voted the money, or the land, away from themselves to the chief and councillors, knowing what they were doing. The officials of the Department of Indian Affairs who had charge of the surrender could not, under any circumstances, have given the chief, or councillors a foot of land except the Indians voted as they did that that land should be given in that way. My hon. friend last night said something about a man named Rayner who had a bill against the government for $500 which bill was not paid by the government, and Mr. Rayner has not pressed for payment. I do not know anything about Mr. Rayner, who he is, or what he is, or on what ground he presented such a demand. All I know is that his bill was not paid, and therefore if Mr. Rayner bribed any of the Indians he bribed them at his own expense and at his own cost. My hon. friend explained that Mr. Rayner had got back the extra money that he had paid to the Indians, because the chiefs had got a certain proportion more land than they were entitled to under the terms of the surrender. That is to say that Chief William Prince got 20 acres more, and the several councillors a certain number of acres more, in the neighbourhood of 20 apiece over and above what the terms of surrender called for. Chief William Prince was entitled to 212 acres by reason of his extra allowance as chief, and by reason of the number of members in his family, and he received actually 215·53, that is 3½ acres more than his allowance. Councillor Harper was entitled to 232 acres, and he got 233·16. Councillor James was entitled to 200 acres, and he got 206·88. Councillor Henry Prince was entitled to 168 acres, and he got 172·50. John Prince was entitled to 136 acres, and he got 136 acres. The explanation is that in the laying out of the lands when the survey was made, the lots ran into one or two acres more than the allowance called for, and the block was allowed to go as it was surveyed. My hon. friend stated last night that these people received in the neighbourhood of 20 acres at least more than they were entitled to, and that this extra allowance of land was in some way, which he did not explain, used to repay Rayner the money that he said it was rumoured had been paid to the Indians.

Mr. BRADBURY. The minister has given the amount of acreage. I would like him to tell the House how many of a family each man had.

Mr. OLIVER. Chief William Prince had two of a family, Councillor Harper seven, James William five, Henry Prince three, and John Prince one. My hon. friend said last night that these men got about an average of 20 acres apiece more than they were entitled to. The figures I have given the House are the figures given to me by the officers of the department, and I am sure my hon. friend will pardon me if I say I am rather willing to accept their figures than the figures he has given, and that I ask the House to do the same.

Mr. BRADBURY. I want to tell the House that I derive my information from the very same source, and the information that I got is correct, because I got it off the books. I saw the book myself, with the entries in it, and when the minister states that the chief had two of a family it shows how the whole statement is misleading him. Chief Williams had no family, but his wife. That accounts for the 16 acres, and I am satisfied that the statement he has read includes in each case one more of a family than those Indians really had. I got the statement from one of his own officers, off the book, and what I stated is absolutely correct.

Mr. OLIVER. This emphasizes what I said that it is impossible for my friend, and me to agree. I allowed him to make any statement he pleased last night, although I am sure he gathered from my remarks that I did not agree with him. He will have to allow me to make the statement I have to-day, and the less he criticises the sooner we will be through. I have made a statement as to the amount of land to which these people were entitled. I gave the authority on which I make that statement. My hon. friend says they were not entitled to that much land. It is a matter then between himself, and the officers of the department, and for my part I am asking the House to take the word of the officers of the department. If the word of the officers of the department is to be taken, then the statement which my hon. friend made last night was one of the many inexactitudes with which he favoured the House in his remarks. The assertion that there was bribery even in the roundabout and circuitous way he suggested falls absolutely to the ground, because how in common sense was Mr. Rayner to get any benefit from the land Chief William Prince got? If Chief William Prince could be shown to have given up anything he had that he did not have to give up, I could understand, but I think it will be difficult to prove that Chief William Prince or any other of the chiefs, councillors, or members of the band ever gave back anything to anybody that they did not have to, and certainly they would not have to give it to Mr. Rayner unless they wanted to.

It may be worth while taking the time required to place before the House the actual terms of this surrender so that there shall be no question about what its terms were. The document is as follows:

Know all men by these presents:

That we, the undersigned chief and principal men of the band of Chippewa and Saulteaux and Cree Indians, owning and resident on our reserve at St. Peter's, in the province of Manitoba, and Dominion of Canada, for and acting on behalf of the whole people of our said band in council assembled, do hereby release, remise, surrender, quit claim and yield up unto our Sovereign Lord the King, his heirs and successors forever, all and singular, that certain parcel or tract of land and premises, situate, lying and being in the county of Selkirk and province of Manitoba, containing by admeasurement 48,000 acres, be the same more or less, and being composed of the whole of the St. Peter's Indian reserve.

To have and to hold the same unto His said Majesty the King, his heirs and successors forever, in trust to dispose of the same to such person or persons, upon such terms as the government of Canada may deem most conducive to our welfare and that of our people, and upon the further condition that all moneys received from the sale thereof shall, after deducting the usual proportion for expenses of management, be paid as follows: one-half of said sum so remaining to be paid to us the year following the receipt of same by the government after sale of such lands, the balance of said proceeds of sale to be funded for our benefit and the interest paid to us annually. At each payment as aforesaid the sum so paid shall be divided so that the chief shall receive each year the sum of $10 and each councillor the sum of $6 more than that to which the individual members of the band shall be entitled.

And upon the further conditions that out of the said St. Peter's reserve now surrendered there shall be granted an area not exceeding 21,000 acres to the members of the band as follows: to the chief 180 acres, to the ex-chief and each councillor 120 acres, and to the other members of the band in the proportion of about 80 acres to each head of a family of five; grants to be made also in similar proportion to widows and to unmarried men and women over twenty-one years of age. A list of those entitled to grants and the patents thereof, and the area covered by each, as indicated in the above proportions, shall be made by the chief and councillors and a representative of the Department of Indian Affairs. The list shall be signed by the chief and councillors and by the Indian Department representative, and shall be the final settlement of the land to be patented, and of the parties to receive the same. In addition to the said 21,000 acres above mentioned there shall be set aside 3,000 acres of hay land for the members of the band having land in the present reserve or entitled to receive land under this agreement, it being understood that the Department of Indian Affairs may from time to time reduce the quantity of hay land as the patentees sell the land so granted, and any land so taken off the land set aside for haying purposes shall be disposed of by the department for the benefit of the band.

A new reserve for this band shall be selected on Lake Winnipeg to the extent of 75,000 acres of available land, but shall not include more than ten miles water frontage.

The department is to make necessary survey of the lands to be patented and the lands sold as soon as expedient after surrender, and the patents to issue upon application of the individual Indian after the land is selected and properly designated.

My hon. friend from North Grey asked why we did not give the same length of time in selling these lands as in selling school lands. I have read him the answer.

The department shall advance at the time of surrender the sum of $5,000 to be repaid out of the first moneys received from the sale of the lands.

The treaty payments now made shall be continued, and also the yearly rations at treaty time.

A reasonable supply of agricultural implements and tools for use on the new reserve shall be supplied and distributed at the discretion of the department.

The department is to render reasonable assistance in removing to the new reserve in summer time in any year within five years of the date of this surrender.

Reasonable assistance in building on the new reserve shall be rendered by and at the discretion of the department; but any assistance so given is to be once and for all.

This surrender shall release lands in the present reserve from all claims of the band and of each individual member thereof from all or any claims under the Manitoba Act or the Indian Act, and each member of the band shall sign a release to this effect when he receives his patent. Provided that such release shall not operate to exclude the band or any member thereof from participation in the proceeds or benefits of any lands held or disposed of by the government under the provisions of this surrender or according to law.

In the event of the representative of the Indian Department and the representatives of the band failing to agree upon the list of the lands to be patented, the matter will be referred to one of the judges of the eastern judicial district of Manitoba, whose decision shall be final and binding on all parties.

And we, the said chief and principal men of the said bands of Chippewa and Salteaux Indians do on behalf of our people and for ourselves, thereby ratify and confirm, and promise to ratify and confirm, whatever the said government may do, or cause to be lawfully done, in connection with the said lands and this surrender.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and affixed our seals this 24th day of September, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and seven.

The House will remember that last night my hon. friend read a number of affidavits from one William Asham, of whom I spoke before the House rose at one o'clock, and in regard to whom I have nothing to say, except to call to the mind of the House the tenor of the affidavit which was read by the member for Selkirk, in which Mr. Asham declared himself to be absolutely, unalterably, always and forever against this surrender of the St. Peter's Indian reserve. I am afraid that Mr. Asham has suffered by reason of his association with the member for Selkirk, because I find that in addition to the signatures of the chief and councillors to this surrender, there is the signature of William Asham sr., ex-chief——

Mr. BRADBURY. I stated that Mr. Speaker.

Mr. OLIVER—placed there because he was an ex-chief. Now I want to call the attention of the House to this fact for the purpose of enabling the House to weigh at its true value the character of the affidavits with which my hon. friend favoured the House yesterday. I also wish to call attention to the assertion he made that this surrender was secured for the especial benefit, and for the purpose of advantaging certain Liberal friends of the Liberal government. I would take it for granted, then, that no opponent of a Liberal government would identify himself in any way with this surrender. But I find amongst the signatures of the witnesses to that surrender the following names: Frank Pedley, John Semmons, Ernest Rayner, O. J. Grain. Dr. Grain happens to be the Conservative member in the provincial legislature for the locality in which this surrender took place. I do not know Dr. Grain, I assume however that he is as reputable as my hon. friend the member for Selkirk, and that he has just as much at stake in putting his signature to this document as Mr. Ernest Rayner, or Frank Pedley, or Mr. Semmons, or anybody else. Now I do not wish in any way to shelter the department or any officer of the department behind any political consideration, but I do want to point out that the assertion which the hon. member has made as to the partisan character of this transaction is exactly in line with the rest of his very lengthy discourse, and the signatures, and documents are evidence on the subject. The question was raised as to what instructions had been given Judge Howell regarding the surrender of the Indian reserve. I said no instructions had been given Judge Howell, but in the instructions which were issued to him in regard to the settlement of the rights of individual citizens, mention was made of the desirability of securing a surrender. The foundation of the suggestion will be found in a report that Mr. Rothwell, law clerk of the Department of Interior, made on the 3rd of August, 1900, surely long enough ago to relieve us from the imputation that the reason of the surrender was the result of a plot. Mr. Rothwell had been sent to report on this same matter that Judge Howell was afterwards asked to deal with. Mr. Rothwell said:

From what I have been informed as to the reserve and its present members I consider, however, that it would be in their interest and in the public interest if an arrangement could be made with them in accordance with which they would surrender all lands in the reserve to Her Majesty, those of them who would accept separate grants of land, and scrip for say $160 to heads and $240 to children to be given such grants.

The report of 1900 contemplated this very matter at issue, of land being held in severalty, and the disposition which actually took place under the negotiaions conducted by Chief Justice Howell:

And the few who I understand will prefer to remain Indians, to be given reserves elsewhere and to be given such wagons, animals and other presents as may be a fair consideration for their joining in the surrender. All claims to land outside of a few I will report upon separately which I think can be dealt with at once, from the evidence on file here, can then be easily settled, and what lands remain could then be disposed of, the proceeds derived from their sale to form a fund for those members of the band who prefer to remain in treaty. In this way the few old people amongst them would receive very generous treatment, to which they are of course entitled.

So that in the year 1900, arising out of exactly the same circumstances, we have a report from an officer of the department at that time almost identically in line with the action that was afterwards taken.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I do not understand that report clearly. Is that a recommendation from one of the officers of the department that tribal ownership should cease and that the land should pass into the individual hands of the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. He says 'partially'.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Do you approve of that?

Mr. OLIVER. That is what was done. All I am trying to make clear is that what was done was not the result of a conspiracy, as my hon. friend has suggested, but the result of consideration by officers of the government who could not possibly, under any circumstances, have had any interest or object in making such a report unless it was in the best interests of the country and of the Indians according to their belief and judgment.

Might I trouble the House for a few minutes to give a few words contained in the report of Chief Justice Howell on this transaction, first, to show the necessity for the surrender which was secured, and for the removal of the Indians in their own interests. He says:

The evidence of Mr. Vaughan—

That is the surveyor who made the first survey of the settlement in 1874.

—shows that at the time of his survey the people of this Indian settlement were then quite thrifty, the most of them could speak English, they were largely crossed with white; they had horses, cattle and poultry; their houses were well built, better even than now, and their homes were those of whitemen rather than Indians. His map shows the houses by black dots, and the pink colouring shows the extent of ground then cultivated.

The evidence was that these people were retrograding instead of advancing, and the belief was that it was because of their situation, and that their own interest required that they should surrender their lands and be transferred to another location. Further on Judge Howell says:

Early in the investigation these claims—

That is of the Indians:

—and matters were brought before me. Out of about 50,000 acres, which remains of the reserve after deducting the area already patented, not more than 250 acres are cultivated.

Out of 48,000 or 50,000 acres only 250 acres were cultivated after an occupation in severalty by these people from 1874 to 1906. Surely that was a condition that called for some effort on the part of a government that had some regard for the interests of the Indians, and the progress of the country. It goes on to say:

Without giving further reasons for my urging the surrender and without further description of the negotiations I can only say that they were the best I could get. Best for the government and best for the Indians, and without any hesitation I recommend the carrying out of the same.

That is to say the Chief Justice of Manitoba, who took a deep personal interest in this matter, and who had been familiar with it by reason of long residence in Manitoba, places himself on record as recommending this transfer as being the best that could be secured. It is true that Chief Justice Howell did not carry it out. My hon. friend laid great stress last night upon that fact. Truly, the surrender had actually, in form, to be conducted by the proper officer of the department, but Chief Justice Howell takes the full responsibility for the terms of the surrender in the words I have read, and I do not know where I could go, as minister of the department, to get better information or advice or more impartial or intelligent treatment of this question than to the gentlemen who penned that report. He says:

The new reserve is accepted by the band in full satisfaction of all damages claimed and of all rights, individual or tribal, asserted as above set forth:

It might not be improper for me to add that in my view of the matter the government by granting a new reserve of 75,000 acres have readily and cheaply got out of a nasty tangle and have greatly benefited the band, and have taken a step which in the near future will relieve the locality of an undesirable element, to say the least.

I might mention that in the area of the reserve the number of claims occupied by people who were not Indians was 30 on the river lots, and one in the township survey with an approximate population of 157. It was the rights of these people that were the first consideration of the government in sending the commission. The transaction with the Indians by which the surrender was secured was an after, subsequent and subsidiary consideration, but as it turned out, was necessary in carrying out the first idea that we had and was generally to the benefit of all concerned. My hon. friend drew attention last night to the fact that some of this land which had been sold at $5 an acre has since been sold at $50 an acre, and he asks the House and the country to believe that the government has in some way damaged either the Indians or the country by its course, of which this is the result. I can only say that the avowed purpose of the government in securing the surrender of the land in this reserve was that it might be enhanced in value, and that it could and would become enhanced in value by reason of the surrender they secured. And if my hon. friend thinks that the fact that this land has since appreciated in value is a condemnation of the government. I am here to claim that it is a justification of the government, and an endorsement of their policy in securing the surrender.

Mr. BRADBURY. The band has not changed in value. The land was sold since its surrender at its actual value; it was sold before by the government at a value that was ridiculously too low.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that we need waste the time of the House discussing that feature at any great length. The value of the land does not depend solely upon the quality of the land itself, it depends upon the conditions of social life surrounding the land, and anybody—unless it might be my hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) —can understand that land within an Indian reserve occupied by people who are not subject to the same rules of life and law in many ways as other people; anybody can understand that such land, no matter what its quality, could not have a merchantable value equal to what it would if the conditions of settlement and social life were absolutely the reverse. Everybody knows that the value of the land depends as much upon the character of the settlement upon the land and its surroundings as it does upon the quality of the soil. It does not do any good to say that this land is in the fertile Red River valley, for, let it be as fertile as the land of Egypt and let it be peopled by those who are not subject to the laws of civilization, it will not and cannot have its real value because people of progressive mind and tendency—the only people who have money to buy land at a high price—are the people who will not live in such conditions and do not want such land at any price. That was the condition on that reserve, and it was to change that condition that we secured the surrender, and the town of Selkirk and that section of the province of Manitoba are the gainers by the action the government took, in proportion as the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) is correct.

Mr. BARKER. Was there any difficulty at all in the government obtaining the surrender and then selling directly to the people who wanted the land at its value instead of using middlemen?

Mr. OLIVER. According to the terms of the surrender I read, part of the land on the reserve had to be handed over to the Indians in severalty in submission of the claim they had under the Manitoba Act. The balance of the land was dealt with by the government and sold by public auction, and there was no middleman in the transaction. The sale was advertised, it was within 25 miles of the greatest centre of real estate speculation in the known world, and the man who suggests that that land was sold below its actual value at that time is simply trifling with the people who hear him.

Mr. HUGHES. When was the sale?

Mr. OLIVER. December 16, 1907.

Mr. HUGHES. What price?

Mr. OLIVER. The average price of the land sold at auction was between $5 and $6 an acre. Now, it does not make any difference whether the land was sold at $1, or $10, or $50 an acre; it was sold at public auction after due advertising, and it brought every dollar there was in it at that time.

Mr. BRADBURY. Does the hon. gentlemen mean to tell this House that he considers 6 days advertising 18 days before the sale took place in the middle of winter due advertising? Why, it is ridiculous.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, Mr. Speaker, if I was as tender as my hon. friend is I would ask your ruling on the use of that word, but when it comes to a question of that kind I am quite ready to leave myself in the judgment of the House. The sale was advertised for three weeks in a paper that was published in the town in which the sale was made; it was advertised for three weeks in a paper published in Winnipeg which circulates chiefly among the people who live near the town of Selkirk. I will not allude to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bradbury), but any man who says that the public of Manitoba did not have full and ample notice of that sale is—you must understand, Mr. Speaker, that I am not referring in any way to the hon. member or to any member in this House—but I say that such a person is absolutely disregardful of the truth. The allegation may be that the land which was handed over to the Indians in severalty in extinguishment of their right under the Manitoba Act was sold to middlemen, and that the public did not have a fair opportunity to bid for it or that the Indians did not get a fair price, but as a matter of fact that land sold at practically the same price as the land that was sold by auction. That is to say, that the average price was about the same, but the actual price varied from $2 per acre to $20 per acre. So, I say the transaction was in the open light of day, that every opportunity was given for everybody who wished to benefit by the rise that must necessarily take place in the value by reason of the surrender being taken, and those who did not see fit to take advantage of the opportunity that existed at that time have no right to come to this House for sympathy or to make complaints, because they did not take advantage of an opportunity that they now see was a good one.

Mr. GERMAN. What sized blocks were they sold in?

Mr. OLIVER. I have here a list of the land sold by auction and the areas in which it was sold, and the areas vary on one page of the statement from 20 acres to 195 acres, and on another page from 6¾ acres to 76 acres, on another page from 6·31 to 137 acres, and so on. These were all sold in separate parcels, so that there was every opportunity for any man who wanted to buy a large quantity or a small quantity. Everything was done that could be done to give every opportunity to those who wished to invest in these lands, so that the Indians would receive the greatest possible amount of benefit from the sale of these lands.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Had the government any control or supervision over the lands which were given to the indvidual Indians and which they disposed of?

Mr. OLIVER. No, the government had no supervision of the private sales. The surrender as drafted provided for control by the Indian Department of the sales, but the Indians refused to sign with that provision in, and it had to be struck out. Therefore the sales of individual property which took place were without control of the government; but on complaint being made that the Indians were not being properly dealt with by the buyers, we sent the law clerk of the Indian Department to Selkirk to see that the Indians got what was coming to them. My hon. friend suggested that this was a secret mission and that this was an innocent young man. Well, I am satisfied that the man is innocent, and he is certainly comparatively young; but he has been a practising barrister of the province of Ontario for a number of years.

Mr. HUGHES. What is his name?

Mr. OLIVER. Williams; and in sending a man of that ability and position, whose connection with the department was quite recent, and who could not be considered to be associated in any shape or manner with this transaction, we surely were doing everything that could be done to get any difficulties that might have arisen between the Indians and the buyers settled on a fair basis; and, as a matter of fact, we have placed on the table of the House a report which states in detail what has become of every parcel of land that has been handed over—to whom it has been sold—the price paid for it, whether there have been any complaints or not with regard to the sale and everything about it; and any care that may be taken in looking over this list will demonstrate that the matter has been closed up satisfactorily to all concerned. However, it is not a matter that is free from difficulty. As an illustration, I will just mention a case of one of my hon. friend's particular friends, one of the Asham family—not the budding John Norquay, but possibly his brother or his son James Asham, No. 8 in the band. He had a general complaint about the surrender and the low price the Indians got for their land. Our report says that he sold 88 acres, that is, the whole of his right in severalty, to the Northwest Land Company for $449; but, believing that the price was too low, he sold 40 acres again to George Tracy for $160. He sold another 40 acres, or the same, I am not sure which, for a yoke of oxen. When I give the House this information, they will understand the difficulty that necessarily surrounds these transactions with the Indians, and the difficulty of getting them straightened up to the satisfaction of the Indians, and will know at what value to place the numerous affidavits, principally from the Asham family, which my hon. friend brought to the attention of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I have replied to every insinuation that my hon. friend made during his four or five hours speech; but I shall be glad to deal with any others that he or any other member may bring to my attention; because, as I said before, as I followed his address, he did not, in the whole four hours of its duration, make a single statement or insinuation with which I could agree or which to my mind was borne out by the documents on the table of the House.

If I may, I will try to give a short statement of the case from our point of view. In pursuance of our policy of administering Indian lands for the benefit of the Indians and for the development of the country, we entered upon the effort to secure the surrender of this reserve. It was in peculiar circumstances in the many ways which I have detailed to the House. It was not an ordinary reserve; the circumstances were extraordinary in many particulars, and, therefore, extraordinary measures had to be taken in connection with the surrender. But so that these measures should be beyond question, the highest authority that could be got in the province of Manitoba was engaged to do the work. The attempt was successful. The Indians have received their land in severalty; they have received a large sum of money as the result of the sale of land that was surrendered; they will have the marsh land to be sold as it comes into value; they have received a new reserve, very much better suited to the particular life of the Indians, of 75,000 acres in area; they have received assistance at the hands of the department to remove to that reserve and to establish themselves upon it. As a result, the Indians have benefited. Instead of their having lost anything by the transaction, they have gained very greatly; and the only criticism of the arrangement that can be made, from my point of view, is that they were too liberally dealt with, that they got more than the country could afford to give to another band. But, as I say, the circumstances were exceptional, and the public interest and the interest of the Indians were so benefited in securing the surrender that the circumstances and the conditions are, in my humble judgment, justified and more than justified.

Mr. HUGHES. Where are they located now?

Mr. OLIVER. The new reserve is on Fisher river, on the west side of Lake Winnipeg, about 100 miles north of Selkirk.

Mr. HUGHES. It is away north of the Icelandic settlement?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, and is, I understand, a very suitable location. The Indians are not expected to go there at once; we have to remove them gradually; but a number are already settled there, and we hope soon to get the most of them removed. As a result of the action taken in this case, the value of the land on the reserve, on the evidence of my hon. friend, has appreciated tremendously, and the Red River valley and the locality of Selkirk has been put in line for improvement and development, and in a better social condition than it could possibly be in with this great reserve situated as it was, and under the conditions that surrounded it. Every step of the negotiations, and every step of the transaction, has been taken in such a way as to safeguard, as far as possible, the reputation of the department and the interests of the Indians. The details of the transaction have been laid on the table and have been before the House for months. Everything done, has been done absolutely in the light of day, with the full knowledge of everybody interested, or who chose to inquire. The department has absolutely nothing to conceal or apologize for. We ask hon. members to declare, not only that our policy in dealing with the Indian reserves generally but with this St. Peter's reserve in particular, has been, both in its inception and its conduct and its results in the best interests of the Indians and of the country.

Mr. W. S. MIDDLEBRO (North Grey). I do not intend to follow ad seriatim the statements made by the hon. the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), but I propose to deal with them as I proceed with my argument. Before going farther, however, I cannot let the occasion pass without saying that I find it impossible to understand the proposition that when an hon. member on this side makes charges of malfeasance in any department of the government, there is no duty whatever devolving upon the government to investigate that charge unless, in the opinion of the minister directly responsible, he believes there is some foundation for it. If that proposition be true, no government would grant a commission to investigate into any charge unless the minister were willing to admit that he believed the charge made was well founded. But my hon. friend himself (Mr. Oliver) contravened that principle for he has informed us that, in consequence of the statements made by the hon. member for Selkirk, he himself appointed a commission to investigate into some of the charges made. The very appointment of that commission, the sending of Mr. Swinborn and Mr. Williams there to make an investigation, is an admission that, in the minister's opinion, there is some truth in the allegations of my hon. friend. The doctrine I would lay down is that when a charge is made by an hon. member of this House, especially when that charge is backed up by some 25 or 26 statutory declarations, it is the duty of the minister, whose department is implicated, to make some kind of an investigation, because, if a prima facie case has been made out, the country is entitled to know whether or not there is anything in the charges made. As a general proposition—and if the hon. minister does not think it right, I would ask him to express his dissent—I say that the government are acting in all these matters affecting the Indians as their trustees and protectors. The poor Indian has been unwittingly and unwillingly placed in that position by reason of the march of white civilization. He is in that position against his will; and because we have placed him in that unfortunate position, and because we cannot expect of him those business characteristics which are foreign to his nature and training, we are obliged to protect him. And having assumed that guardianship, the government cannot contract itself out of the natural relations existing between the guardian and his ward. If the hon. minister dissents from that proposition, I would ask him to say so, because my argument is going to be based on it. If by any means you like, if by bringing a satchel before the Indians with $5,000 of money into it, and the temptation thereby created, or by any other means, you get them to consent to a transaction which is not in their interests, you are committing a breach of your duty as guardian towards your ward.

Approaching the subject from that standpoint, I start out with ascertaining what the land in question is worth. If it be worth only $5 per acre, the case against the government falls to the ground, so far as the financial interests of the Indians are concerned, but how do you judge the value of land? Will any one say that lands on this Indian reserve, situated within 25 miles of Winnipeg, on a branch line of the Canadian Pacific railway, because Selkirk is on a branch of that railway, with an electric railway from Winnipeg to Selkrk, do not occupy the first position in the province of Manitoba, so far as situation is concerned? Situation is the first consideration in determining the value of land; the second is the character of the soil itself. If you get good situation and good soil, as you do in this instance, you must admit that this St. Peter's reserve is the best land in the province of Manitoba. What evidence have I of that? I shall not ask the hon. minister to accept my statement, but I will take the records of the department itself. Those records were under the hands of the minister, and if he had given this case proper consideration, he could have, just as well as hon. members on this side, put himself in possession of that information; and if he had, he would not be here to-day ratifying and supporting a transaction which is a disgrace to the administration of his department.

Take the reports from his own agents on the very land in question. Here is the report of Inspector E. McColl, made in July, 1902:

> Rich in black alluvial soil of the Red River valley, and extending through a fringe of poplar, ash leaf maple and elm, back to the prairies and hay lands. St. Peter's reserve is an ideal place for mixed farming.

Let me take the next year, The report for 1903 of the Indian agent for the same reserve, who happens to be Mr. John Semmons, the same man who was given such an excellent character by the hon. minister a few minutes ago. He says:

> St. Peter's has an area of eighty square miles. All of these reserves are situated in areas of excellent land, suitable for farming and stock raising purposes, while at the same time they are adjacent to the water, and the natives may enjoy all the advantage of sailing and fishing. All conditions appear to contribute to the welfare and happiness of the people. . . . Some of the best soil in Manitoba is to be found in St. Peter's. All this is protected by a fringe of wood to the west and northward. There is no reason why ten thousand bushels of wheat should not be raised here.

I come to the next year, the report of Mr. Semmons again for 1904. He says:

St. Peter's reserve has some of the best land in the province of Manitoba. It has the advantage of being very near to an excellent market. It also has the best shelter from north and west winds offered to any locality. It is safe to say that properly cultivated it might produce one hundred thousand bushels of best wheat per year.

For 1905 there is no report, but for 1906, and this is the year the government issued a commission for the purpose of securing the surrender of the reserve, Mr. J. O. Lewis, Indian land agent, reports as follows:

St. Peter's reserve lies along the Red river, extending back 4 miles on each side, has a frontage of about 12 miles on the river. The inner two miles is divided into lots varying in width, &c. The land is a loam with a clay subsoil.

These evidences as to the value of the land were extracted from the records of the department and were just as available to the minister as to any member in this House. I now come to Chief Justice Howell, who was sent out there at the request of the department. What does he say as to the value of the land? He says:

The reserve is, in the main, excellent farm lands, and the adjoining lands are fairly well settled and cultivated, and the town of Selkirk joins it at the south side.

Then I take information furnished by the assessor of the municipality of St. Andrews, and this information is in the department also.

This department itself, in the very year it issued a commission to Chief Justice Howell, fixed the value of lands in this reservation by the sale of some lands by the department to the municipality of St. Andrews adjoining this reserve and I ask the government if there could be any more conclusive proof as to the value which they then set upon these lands than the fact that they charged and received $20 an acre in 1906 for these very lands. They sold $813 worth of land which figures out at $20 an acre. Then take land immediately adjoining the reservation owned by Mr. Funk. The evidence as given by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) is that that land is now selling for from $40 to $60 an acre. Then we have the evidence of the assessor of the municipality of St. Andrews, who says that at the very time these lands were being sold, part of these very lands were within the municipality of Selkirk, and as such were assessed, on the basis of one third of their value, at $7 an acre. He explains how they were assessed at $7 and how all lands of that class are assessed at one-third of their value, in accordance with a graded scheme adopted in that municipality making the value of the land $21. Then I take the letter from Mr. Hudson, a partner of the son of the Chief Justice of Manitoba, a man thoroughly familiar with values in that locality. His letter to the department shows that he values these lands at from $20 to $25. He says:

The land which has been bought at $5 an acre, is worth in the neighbourhood of from $20 to $25 an acre. The Indians are quite incompetent to look after their own interests, and none of them can afford the money necessary to carry on lawsuits to retrieve their possessions.

The next evidence is the case of Swan Lake Indian lands. I discussed this with some reserve, because I conceive that the arguments of the Minister of the Interior when quoting the value of other lands without knowing where they were situated were wholly irrelevant.

Mr. OLIVER. I gave the place, and the actual numbers of the land. I gave all particulars as to its situation.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. He gave the positions by meridians, ranges and townships, but he had no conception of where the lands were.

Mr. OLIVER. I was merely sparring with my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. A. Haggart). Both my hon. friend from Winnipeg and myself knew very well where the lands are by townships, ranges and sections, as my hon. friend afterwards admitted.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Perhaps the minister will say where the lands that sold at $5 an acre are situated?

Mr. OLIVER. East of the Red river, and approximately north of a line that would run eastward from the town of Selkirk. That is they are further north than Selkirk, and east of the Red river.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Has the minister ever seen the lands?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Does he know the character of the soil?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Then it is not competent for him to say whether the lands were worth more or less than $5?

Mr. OLIVER. Then as the hon. member has not seen the lands sold in the St. Peter's reserve he is in no better position

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. My point is that having taken from the records of the hon. gentleman's department that the lands are the best to be found in Manitoba, and knowing that the reserve is within 22 miles of Winnipeg, situated on an electric railroad and a branch of the Canadian Pacific railway, I think I am justified in saying that they are the best in Manitoba.

Then the Swan Lake Indian reserve was sold in the summer of 1909 at from $15 to $20 an acre, and according to a statement of the hon. member for Macdonald, these lands which sold at from $15 to $20 an acre were not as valuable as those that sold for $5.50 by auction at Selkirk.

Then the next case is the Shoal Lake Indian reserve. The lands there were sold in the spring of 1909, and averaged $17.60 an acre. They are situated, I understand in the constituency of Marquette, and according to the evidence I have, they are not as valuable as the lands in question. These are the records from the hon. gentleman's own department, which it was his duty to observe before he allowed this great reserve to be sacrificed as we believe it was. Then these Beausejour school lands sold in 1909 to speculators, and they cannot be any better than the St. Peter's lands, because the latter they are the best in Manitoba. They sold at $22 an acre to some of the very gentlemen who bought the St. Peter's lands. They are 35 miles from Winnipeg without electric communication.

Again I find on looking up the assessment of that portion of the St. Peter's reserve situated in Selkirk, that they were assessed at the time this sale was made at $24 an acre. This year, at a mortgage sale, for a portion of these lands, $22 an acre was refused. Having all this evidence before him, taken almost entirely from his own records—and the evidence of the assessor and the clerk was as available to him as to us—if those lands sold for anything less than $20 an acre, that very fact is conclusive proof that there was something wrong, and if the minister did not see any of these records in his department it was his duty to do as an ordinary trustee would do and should do, to seek out some person or persons to make competent examinations and not depend on one man or officer. He should have obtained independent, competent men from that country who knew the value of lands. That much is due to the country and not having done that the minister is open to the charge that the lands were sold for one-third to one-fourth of their value.

What was the necessity for the sale of this reserve? As my hon. friend from Selkirk says, there was no petition from the town of Selkirk, from the board of trade of Selkirk, from any public body, from any provincial authority or any private individual as far as the evidence before us shows, except the late Liberal member for that riding, and it would be very interesting to know, if there was a written communication from that gentleman requesting the sale of that reserve, what reasons he urged in it for the sale. It would be interesting to know what it was.

Mr. OLIVER. It was understood that the advantage was mutual.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Well, we will see. The hon. minister now admits that it was upon the recommendation of his commissioner whom he sent there, not, he says, for the purpose of obtaining a surrender, but for another purpose, of giving titles to land to certain white persons who were claiming titles to certain lands within the reserve. But the minister now admits that it was in consequence of a recommendation made by his commissioner that a surrender was secured. That being the case it was due to the Indians, it was due to the public, it was due to this House that the commissioner should have taken evidence showing conclusively that it was in the interest of the Indians, and that it was in the interest of the white population that the surrender should be made. But there is not one tittle of evidence in all the documents produced which goes to show that it would be advisable, either in the interest of the Indians or the interest of the public, that the reserve should be surrendered. The minister will say that it all depends upon the recommendation, he is taking entirely the word of the commissioner without having heard the facts, and I say that is not a fair position to take.

Now let us inquire into the moral and social condition of the Indians upon the reserve, and I suppose it is somewhat upon that basis that the minister proceeded to secure the release of this reserve. I will come back to the reports again. In the report of 1902 I find that Inspector McColl says this:

> Throughout this agency the Indians are steadily progressing, their mode of living is improving and they are becoming less dependent on others for their livilihood—* * * *
> The better class of Indians in this reserve will have nothing to do with intoxicants but there are always a few who are willing to get liquor whenever it is available, and it is these together with the unscrupulous dealers who sell it to them that cause all the trouble.

In the report of 1903, Mr. John Semmons, Indian inspector, the same gentleman upon whom the minister placed so much confidence said:

> All conditions appear to contribute to the welfare and happiness of the Indians.

Then I take the report of Mr. J. O. Lewis, Indian agent at Selkirk, the agent who was there in 1906, the very year the commission was appointed to make this recommendation, and this recommendation is made only three months prior to the issuing of the commission. Mr. Lewis says:

There are many old people on this reserve, two women who have overtaken the century mark, a large number of both men and women have passed the allotted span of life of three score and ten. They require attention from the medical officer and agent. Of a population of 1,300 there are not many drunkards and the band may be said to be temperate—

Now if it is upon the ground of intemperance that the minister says this band should be removed, here is a report of his own agent who says that the band is not intemperate. I venture to say that he cannot find 1,300 white people among whom he would not find one or two who were intemperate. So I say, accepting the report of the department's own agent three months before he made the recommendation for the appointment of a commission to consider surrender, the minister must have learned that the band were temperate and were very steadily progressing. Therefore it cannot be upon these reports that the recommendation was made. He says further:

At a confirmation service in the Anglican church a year ago over 60 young men and women were confirmed, and over 300 people present.

Now what did the Indians themselves think? There is not a bit of evidence, I do not think it will be contended, that the Indians themselves desired the surrender. The commissioner himself says:

From time to time I approached the Indians for the purpose of inducing them to surrender the reserve and take a new one, and our negotiations continued for many months.

I gather from that the Indians were not willing to surrender, and only after negotiations continued for several months were they finally induced to surrender, by means which my hon. friend from Selkirk has disclosed to this House.

Mr. HUGHES. What reason does the commissioner give?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. No reason whatever for wishing the surrender, except that he says in his report that by reason of these white settlers having land within the reserve 'there can be liquor sold.' Those are his words, he does not say liquor was sold. That is the only indication he gives for selling the reserve, that there might be trouble, because of these white settlers having land within the reserve. Now at first the Indians were opposed to the surrender, and apparently the chief and council as well. Then there comes a time when, for some unknown reason, the chief and councillors appear to have been won over, and a notice is posted up to ascertain whether these poor Indians, some of whom have lived on that reserve for over a hundred years, shall divest themselves of their inheritance, their houses and their homes, and it is contended by the department that one day's notice is sufficient for that purpose. I do not care whether that is a legal notice or not. I come back to this fact, the government is trustee for the Indians, and it is for the government to say whether one day's notice is sufficient to notify a whole band to decide whether they wish to dispose of their inheritance. I say it was not a sufficient notice, and it is not enough for the minister to say that there were a certain number of Indians present at that meeting, and therefore they had not sufficient notice. The notice is given, not only for the purpose of calling the Indians together, but to give them time to consider what they shall do, and they had only one day from Sunday to the following day to consider what to do. Now I understand that the minister claims that there was a sufficient number of Indians present at that meeting to constitute a valid surrender of the reserve. I would ask him to look at section 49 of the Indian Act, and let him see whether there has been a compliance with that Act. If the contention of the minister is correct, if there were three members of the whole band of 1,300 present, and if two out of three voted for a surrender, then, according to the contention of the minister, that would constitute an absolutely binding surrender of the Indian reserve, containing some 48,000 acres, and valued at three-quarters of a million dollars. Now I say it was never intended by parliament that the majority of those present at a meeting should have the right to decide as to the disposal of the inheritance of the whole band. Let us read the words of section 49 of the Act:

Except in this part otherwise provided no release or surrender of a reserve or a portion of a reserve held for the use of the Indians of any band or of any individual Indian, shall be binding unless the release or surrender shall be assented to by a majority of the male members of the band of the full age of 21 years—

Now there would be no doubt about the question if the section stopped there, but it goes on to say:

—at a meeting or council thereof summoned for that purpose.

Now that seems to me as clear as day, that you must have not only a majority of the male members of the band entitled to vote, but you must get that majority—where?—at a meeting; not by private subscription, not by petition, and you have to get a majority of the other members of the band at the meeting, so that the Indian will get the opinions of the other members of the band who are present which will better enable him to decide whether he shall consent to the surrender. If this provision were not in the Act I would point out to the minister that consent would be obtained by somebody going around with a petition, and getting the poor Indian to sign, and anybody knows that not only the Indian, but the white man will sign a petition for almost anything. As a precaution, not as a limitation of the number required you must get the consent of the majority entitled to vote, at a meeting called for that purpose. I think there is no doubt about that, and if that is good law the surrender of this reserve is illegal. In support of the truth and equity of that proposition we all know that if any municipality in the country is going to do something that affects the ordinary current revenue, or the ordinary current business, of the municipality, the majority of those present, or voting is generally all that it is necessary, but when you come to interfere with the capital of the municipality, when you come to grant a bonus which is not taken out of the revenue, you must have a certain, specified proportion of those entitled to vote in order to authorize the municipality to grant that bonus. It is not sufficient for a majority of the ratepayers to say that they shall grant that bonus, but the legislature says that if you want to do anything which will interfere with the capital, or principal of the municipality you must not only have a majority of those voting, but a majority of those entitled to vote. That is the principle, and I am surprised that the Minister of the Interior acted upon any other assumption. What were the proceedings of this meeting? As we have had no contradictory affidavits upon the other side disputing the 23 affidavits which were produced by my hon. friend from Selkirk we have the right to assume that these affidavits were true and correct. They create a strong prima facie case against the administration. If we may believe these affidavits, and if we accept what my hon. friend from Selkirk knows personally upon this matter, we find that the meeting was called on Monday by a notice posted on the previous Sunday, namely one day's notice. We find the members of the band were asked to come and decide an important question of this kind, and no sufficient accommodation provided for this meeting. We find that only one-third of the band could get into the building, and that the other two-thirds had to remain outside, and that seems to be proved conclusively by the fact that when the vote came to be taken they had to go outside in order to count them. They put one lot on one side, and the other on the other side, because there was not room enough for them in the school house. The affidavits show that many Indians did not understand what was going on. How could you expect them to understand when two-thirds of the Indians were standing outside, some looking through the windows, and others behind them endeavouring to get an account of what was going on from those in front? These Indians could not understand what was going on, and it was proved by my hon. friend from Selkirk that it was a physical impossibility for these men to get in at all, or to understand what was going on. Why was the chief offered more than the other members of the band? They are not hereditary chiefs; they are not entitled to be there because of a hereditary title. They are simply elected by the members of their own band for a period of three years. They are in the same position as the reeve and councillors of a municipality, and I propose to give an illustration to the Minister of the Interior, and to ask him if he would say that it is right in this case in which we are not dealing with Indians or children. Suppose a township, or a municipality owned a park, or something of that kind, and some person came along and said: We want you to sell this park; we will give you $10,000 for it. There are a thousand ratepayers in the municipality, and the reeve, and councillors are elected by the ratepayers. The promoters, who are endeavouring to secure this park say: Now, we will give to the reeve sixteen times as much as to any other ratepayer, and we will give to a councillor ten times as much if you will consent to use your influence with the ratepayers of the municipality to carry a by-law for the purpose of giving effect to this transaction. Would the Minister of the Interior say that that would be a justifiable proposition? Would he say that the reeve and councillors had any more right to receive any greater remuneration than an individual ratepayer of the municipality? I think he would not. Then by what right does he say that the chief and councillors, of these poor ignorant Indians should receive from ten to sixteen times as much as any of the other members of the band? There could have been no other purpose than that of inducing them to do that which the government wanted them to do. You may call it bribery, or whatever else you like. It was an inducement. Then, what took place? Not satisfied with giving these councillors that bribe the Department of the Interior advisedly, takes $5,000 out of some fund here—I do not know whether it came from the Indian fund or not—puts it into a satchel, and sends it to Selkirk. What for? For the purpose of getting the Indian to do something, which, unless they had the $5,000 and shook it in his face, they knew they could not get him to do. Are the government justified in that? Oh, the spectacle of a trustee holding up $5,000 in the face of his ward, who has become his ward because of his business incapacity, who is afflicted with business incapacity because of his environment—the spectacle of a trustee coming along and saying to his ward, who is supposed not to be able to contract in any way: I have here $5,000 in this bag, and if you consent to this surrender I am going to start right now to dig out this $5,000 and divide it among you. The poor Indian never dreamed it was simply a part of his own money which was to be ultimately deducted from the sale of his own lands. Why did they do it? Because they knew that unless they presented the greenbacks to the poor Indian he would never consent to the surrender. There is no getting away from that. Is the government justified in a proceeding of that kind for the purpose of getting the surrender of a reserve which could not otherwise have been obtained. I think not. If these affidavits are correct, even with the $5,000 in sight, they had to resort to some other juggling, namely, one of their officers said to the Indians at the meeting: Now, if you want $90 go over there; if you do not want $90 go over there; and the reserve will not be surrendered, and you will not get one cent. These are the words which were used at that time, and they have never been contradicted. Why have we not heard from Mr. Semmons? The minister knew that this matter was coming up. He has been notified for five weeks. The matter was brought up last November, he is thoroughly acquainted with all the facts; why has he not an affidavit from some official denying that Mr. Semmons said this, or that the Deputy Superintendent did offer this $5,000 as a bribe to the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. Is the hon. gentleman asking a question?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I am.

Mr. OLIVER. The reason I did not make preparation was that I did not know when it was coming up; and the reason I did not have any affidavits from Mr. Semmons on this subject was because the allegation in regard to Mr. Semmons was not made until last night.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. This matter has been on the tapis for three or four months, and the minister was informed three or four weeks ago that at the first opportunity on going into supply the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bradbury) would move a resolution.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bradbury) did not move on the first opportunity on going into supply.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The government claim they got a surrender of this reserve for the purpose of getting rid of the Indians in that locality. If, as the minister said, he expected these lands would be more valuable after he got rid of the Indians and by reason of that expectation the lands advanced in value subsequently, how does he make that square with the fact that he gave 400 patents of land in fee simple to these Indians to stay right there on the reserve. Did he not expect that they were going to stay there? If he did not why did he give them the patents. If he was honest and bona fide in his belief that it was for the benefit of the Indians to surrender in order that they might become owners in fee simple of the land and having given 400 patents for that purpose, does it not show that he intended the Indians to stay there. If he did not so intend, then he deceived the Indians, and this would be another allurement held out to the poor Indian for the purpose of getting him to consent to surrender. I say that the government had no more right to give these Indians a title to the land in fee simple, without adopting protective measures to safeguard them against speculators, than they had to put the cash into the hands of the Indians without control. I say the government cannot rid itself by any contractual obligation at any stage of their duties as trustee, to continue to look after the welfare of the Indians, and if the government expected the Indians were going to sell these lands they had no more right to issue them the patents than they had to give them the actual money. The government either gave these lands knowing they were going to be disposed of by the Indians—in which case they left the Indian at the mercy of the speculators—or they gave the 400 patents intending that the Indians should stay on the land, and in that case the argument of the minister that the land had increased in value because he got rid of the Indians, falls to the ground.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman appears to be addressing his remarks to me and as it were he challenges my assent to them. I do not wish to interrupt him, but I do not wish to have it understood that because I do not interrupt, I assent. I may say that I do not at all assent to the proposition he has laid down.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The hon. gentleman being head of the Indian Department, I must naturally address myself to him. Whatever was the intention of the government there is no doubt that the result is that these lands have passed into the hands of speculators at prices varying from $3 to $5 an acre. The minister said that some of these lands sold for more than $5 an acre and that may be because one Indian would naturally be more experienced and better able to take care of himself than another, but if the minister averages the sales he will find they were about $5 an acre. Is that not correct?

Mr. OLIVER. That is correct.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Therefore, I am right in saying that these lands patented to the Indians were also sold by them at about $5 an acre. Then, if I have proved that these lands were worth $20 an acre, it follows conclusively that $15 an acre has been lost by the sale of this Indian reserve containing 48,000 acres. Was that in the public interest? Was it in the interest of the public or in the interest of the Indians that land worth $20 an acre should be frittered away for $5 an acre; not for the purpose of augmenting the Indian fund, but for the purpose of placing money in the hands of speculators who happened to be friends of the administration—perhaps I should not say friends of the administration—but who happened to be of the same political persuasion as the ministry.

Mr. TURRIFF. The hon. gentleman seems to be very much astray as to the value of land in that part of the country. I do not say that there may not be a certain small piece of land that may be worth $20 an acre, but I want to say that within the last two months I have been told by two parties from Manitoba that they had bought in that vicinity of the country, that is northeast of Winnipeg, at $6.25 an acre, and these were selected lands.

Mr. HUGHES. What part of the country?

Mr. TURRIFF. Northeast of Winnipeg.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes, 150 miles from civilization.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Let me put this question to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff). These lands were sold at $5 an acre, and would he consider the fact that in 1906 the assessor of the municipality valued the lands at $20 an acre; would he consider the fact that part of these very lands in the municipality of Selkirk itself at the very time this sale was made was assessed at $22 an acre; would he consider the fact that lands put up for sale at public auction, part of these very lands we are discussing, were withdrawn on a bid of $22 an acre; would he consider all these facts any evidence at all that the land was worth more than $5 an acre? In fairness would not the hon. gentleman take that as pretty conclusive proof that the land was worth more than $5 an acre?

Mr. TURRIFF. My experience has always been that land sold by auction brings all it is worth.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. That is not an answer to my question. Now, as to the duty of the government to protect the Indian with respect to the patented lands. We all know that the Indian Act provides that even in the case of chattels the government shall protect the Indians. Section 57 of the Indian Act says:

No agent for the sale of Indian lands shall, within his division, directly or indirectly, except under an order of the Governor in Council, purchase any land which he is appointed to sell, or become proprietor of, or interested in any such land, during the time of his agency; and every such purchase, or interest shall be void.

I do not say that that section technically applies to the case in question because these Indian lands were patented to the individual. Still, the principle is the same and there is the fiduciary character of the department and of the Indian agent as representing the department, and if I can prove that the Indian agent himself who had the confidence of these Indians because of the fiduciary relation in which he stood to them; if I can prove that he availed himself of his fiduciary character for the purpose of obtaining lands from these very Indians, I think the minister will agree with me that I have given sufficient proof to justify him in making an inquiry into the acts of that man. Section 42, for the purpose of carrying out this idea, provided:

No official, or employee connected with the inside, or outside service of the Department of Indian Affairs, and no missionary in the employ of any religious denomination, or otherwise employed in mission work among the Indians, and no school teacher, on an Indian reserve, shall, without the special license in writing of the Superintendent General, trade with any Indian, or sell to him directly or indirectly, any goods or supplies, cattle or other animals.

That is an entire prohibition of anybody dealing with the Indian except through the intervention of the Indian agent. That places the Indian agent in a very confidential fiduciary relation to the Indian, which is a further reason why there should not be any dealing between the agent and the Indian. Carrying out that very idea, the department has issued regulations which say:

No band, or irregular band of Indians, and no Indians of any band or irregular band of Indians in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, or Alberta, or in the Northwest Territories, may, without the consent of the Indian agent for the locality, sell, barter, exchange or give to any person, or persons whatsoever, any grain, or root crops, or any produce grown on any Indian reserve in the said provinces, or territories, or on any part of such reserve, and that any such sale, barter, exchange or gift shall be absolutely null and void unless the same be made with such consent.

If the department saw fit to make such a regulation for the protection of the Indian in the sale of root crops and other personal property, how much more was it their duty, when they placed in the hands of the Indian the absolute sale of these lands, to guard him with restrictions so that he would not be taken advantage of by speculators? Let us see what Mr. Lewis, the Indian agent, himself says as to the capacity of these Indians. In his letter of the 5th of July, 1909, to the department he says:

As agent I have refrained from any interference in the bargaining, but as some of the Indians are old and illiterate, and called upon me to assist in the accounts afterwards, I have rendered what assistance I was able. While a large percentage of the St. Peter's Indians resent interference in their business, there is, I believe, a majority of them too illiterate and helpless to manage a real estate sale, especially where the payment of the land extended, as in most cases it did, over a period of one year, and was made by orders on stores, and with truck and small cash payments. The Indians sold only in small parcels, and at different prices, and not always to the same buyer. The Indian gave a statutory deed as soon as he sold, setting forth the price, and description of the land. He received a small payment down with the promise of the balance as soon as he was able to deliver the patent. The selling began as soon as the locating started. Thus a year elapsed between some of the sales, and the receiving of the patent. There was nothing expressed in the deeds as to future payments. In fact, as far as anything was set forth in the deed, the Indian was paid in full. He was dependent entirely upon the honour of the buyer for the fulfilment of the verbal contract. You can readily understand that the accounts extending over so long a period have become long and complicated.

Now, I propose to prove a sale to the Indian agent himself by a widow who was illiterate, and another from a man who was 90 years of age. The Minister of Interior said in his speech of the 29th of November, that if we could prove that the Indian agent had been trafficking in these lands, he would soon see whether or not the agent would be dismissed from the service. I have before me a certified copy of a deed, dated the 8th day of April, 1908, eight months before the patent was issued. It is from Flora Bella Wesley, widow, and is to the agent himself, James Oscar Lewis. The consideration purports to be $235, and the land 23·57 acres, so that the price was $10 an acre. The woman swears that she did not get $10 an acre, and that she thinks she did not get more than $5 an acre, and she got that part in cash and part in goods. I find that Inspector Swinford made an inspection of this matter, and wrote to the department on the 22nd of November last, as follows:

It must be remembered that all the land buyers used the chief and councillors of the band as interpreters and as agents to bring Indians to them to induce them, if possible, to sell their lands, and in return these interpreters or agents were rewarded with $5 or more for each transaction in which a transfer of land took place.

The price usually paid them for allotments was about $5 an acre.

The white man predominates in the interpretor and witness, W. D. Harper, and it is quite possible that he may be induced to remember evidence in favour of the buyer.

The inspector himself intimates that the witnesses and the interpreters take advantage of the Indians because they are employed by speculators, and get $5 for every piece of land they sell. In this case I find that the grantor is illiterate, as she makes her mark. The witness to the deed is W. D. Harper, one of the councillors who got 120 acres of land, ten times as much as any of the other Indians, for consenting to the surrender, and one of the men, the inspector says, who got $5 for every sale they made. The agent took advantage of his position as agent to obtain from this widow a deed of land for a consideration which he knew was away under its value. The other case is that of a man 90 years of age, also illiterate, who made his mark instead of signing his name. His land was also sold to the agent. For 32 acres he was to get $10 an acre, or $320 in all. This was to be paid at the rate of $6 a month. He said that when he was paid for 20 months, or in all $120, the payments stopped. His statement is corroborated by Mr. Swinford. In both of these cases the Indian agent was trafficking in land with persons who were illiterate, both of whom say they did not get the consideration that they expected and that was agreed to; and this is proved by the certified copy of the deed obtained from the Land Titles Office. I leave these cases with the minister, to decide whether some inquiry should not be made into them.

With regard to another point, section 89 of the Indian Act says:

With the exception of such sum not exceeding fifty per centum of the proceeds of any lands, and not exceeding ten per centum of the proceeds of any timber or other property, as is agreed at the time of the surrender to be paid to the members of the band interested therein, the Governor in Council may, subject to the provisions of this parliament, direct how and in what manner, and by whom, the moneys arising from the disposal of Indian lands, or of property held or to be held in trust for Indians, or timber on Indian lands or reserves, or from any other source for the benefit of the Indians, shall be invested from time to time, and how the payments or assistance to which the Indians are entitled shall be made or given.

In other words, the section says that in any disposition of an Indian reserve you cannot give the Indian more than one half of the proceeds. I grant you that the minister can point to the use of the word 'land'.

With the exception of such sum not exceeding 50 per cent of the proceeds of that land.

I take the proceeds of the 'land' to mean the proceeds of the 'reserve.' In other words the government is not entitled to hand over to the Indians, for his own absolute use and disposal, even if the government thought it advisable, more than one half of the proceeds of the reserve. But what did the government do here? It handed over 23,000 acres of land, and there you have remaining 25,000 acres to be disposed of. Some of that had been sold by public auction and some of that will no doubt be sold in the same way later on. But they agreed in the surrender that of the balance over and above what they are entitled to by patent the Indians are to get one half of the proceeds. Therefore, the Indian has got 23,000 acres in fee simple and is entitled to get half the proceeds of the remaining 25,000 acres. Therefore, according to the hon. minister, he gets 23,000 patented plus proceeds of 12,500 acres or 37,500 acres in all, out of a total of 48,000, in contravention of the section which says that the Indian is not entitled, even if the government think it advisable, to more than one half the proceeds of the sale of the reserve. I think that is a good argument against the legality of the sale.

Now we come to the sale by public auction of a further portion of this reserve amounting to 15,000 acres. In view of the indisputable evidence as to the value of the land which I have just given, the mere fact that these lands were sold at anything less than $20 an acre should be conclusive evidence that they were sold under value. Would it not have been better to have offered these lands for sale when they were not covered by snow? Why was it not advisable to extend the period of payment to ten years annual instalments just as the hon. minister has done with respect to school lands? The hon. minister has replied that one reason why he would not give ten years for payment of these lands was that he wanted to close the transaction and get rid of the Indians from that locality.

Mr. OLIVER. That was one feature of the case.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I understood him to say that was the reason he did not give ten years instead of four. If he had only given one year for the payment of those lands, he would still have about 400 patents to the same Indians right in that locality itself. If he intended the Indians to stay there, as we must assume he did, that argument falls to the ground because we still have the Indians on the reserve.

Another reason, he tells us, why he put it up for sale in the winter was because there was more money in circulation in December than at any other time. But he only required one fourth of the cash down, so that a man might buy considerable land without putting up much money. But against that you have the facts that these lands being put up in the dead of winter, no man who did not know their value would bid on them. It was the men who knew their value, who had been for months hawking with the Indians and had been over the land time and time again—these were the men who bought the land. One thing more. When the precedent was set by these speculators, when the Indians were selling their land at $4 or $5 an acre, an outside man would say probably these lands are not worth more than the Indian got when he could not see the soil, but the speculators who bought them knew that they were.

Let me point out this fact, that the land given by the Indians and secured by the speculators were the choicest lands of the reserve—lands upon which the Indians had been living and had erected their houses and barns. They were the choicest lands, and it was not to be expected that the remaining lands would sell for as much.

I want to show one fact more, and that is that, in addition to giving the Indians patents for their lands, they gave them 3,000 acres more intended for pasturage. So that the argument used by the minister that the disposition of the reserve for the purpose of getting rid of the Indians, and the contamination arising from the influence of the Indians on the white man or the reverse is entirely wrong, or if you did give the Indians land for the purpose of getting them out of that locality you gave them no protection whatever against the avarice of the waiting speculator.

In the disposition of these lands, the government looked around for an auctioneer. Whom did they get? They went right to the legislature of Manitoba and got a man named Norris, a Liberal member of the Manitoba legislature, and to-day the opposition leader in the legislature. Is it any wonder that the friends of the government clustered around this auctioneer, and that the lands sold at $5.58 per acre. Why also did the minister advertise but six times in the newspapers and stop his advertisements on the 20th of November, when the sale did not take place until the 16th of December? I have always understood that in advertising a sale by public auction, you should keep the advertisement going right up to the day of sale. There must have been some reason why the department ceased that custom, and I would like some hon. gentleman opposite to explain why there was an interval of about twenty days between the time the last advertisement appeared and the date of sale.

These are all suspicious circumstances which justify hon. gentlemen on this side in coming to the conclusion they do. In the face of the evidence as to the value of the land, we must conclude that the auction sale was not for the purpose of getting a fair and proper price, but for the purpose of giving the advantage to speculators—not farmers, not men who developed the land, but simple middlemen intending to sell out at a profit later on.

What has been the result? If I assume that the land, as a whole, was worth $20 an acre—which I think I am perfectly justified in doing—there are 48,000 acres which should have been worth over $900,000. There have been patented to the Indians, I am told 23,000 acres. I thought it was 21,000, and I made my calculations on those figures, because all the lands may not have been disposed of by the Indians though I understand nine-tenths of them have. Take the patents to the Indians, 21,000 acres, which we assume they have disposed of, at $5 an acre, making $105,000. The government sold 15,000 acres for $86,000 making a total of $191,000 for 36,000 acres. But 36,000 acres at $20 an acre should have realized $720,000. It has realized only $191,000. There has therefore been a loss to the Indian Department, and to the government of $529,000. Not only has there been that loss of $529,000, but I venture the assertion that practically all the money the Indian got has also been wasted. What is the result? The Minister of the Interior said that it was the policy of his department, whenever it was thought advisable in the interest of the Indian, to convert Indian reserves into money and to place the money to the credit of the Indian fund, and that he has taken that course in the present case. Let us see what justification he has? The Indian has practically dissipated his whole $105,000. My hon. friend from Selkirk says he did not get half of it. Giving it the most favourable construction, and assuming he got all of it, it is quite likely that the Indian has dissipated his $105,000. What has the government got? The proceeds of the auction sale were $85,000. The government had spent up to a short time ago $32,000 in law costs, expenses of the commission, and moving one-quarter of the Indians to the new reserve. Take this off the net proceeds and it leaves $58,000. If it cost $28,000 to remove one-quarter of the Indians it will cost at least $28,000 to remove the remaining three-quarters. I take that off and it leaves $25,000. The surrender provides that of that $25,000 the Indian is to get another 50 per cent cash, and that leaves $12,336 as a balance to the credit of the Indian fund. The Minister of the Interior says he is justified, and has been justified and that he confirms everything done by this department, and his agents, and every one connected with his department in disposing of a reserve of 38,000 acres of the best land in Manitoba, worth $760,000, in order to place to the credit of the Indian fund $12,500.

In conclusion, there was a time when the poor Indian was the undoubted and undisputed owner of the soil in this country. Owing to the march of white progress and civilization, he is being gradually pushed back, step by step, year by year, and deprived of his former undoubted inheritance. There is no doubt that in every move he has made, the Indian has been shoved westward and northward, and most of us know that it will be only a matter of time until the Indian race shall have become practically extinct, and we will find Indians travelling around in circuses being exhibited like buffalo. It has not been the Indian's fault. We are the stronger race, we place him in those circumstances, and by the environment in which he has been placed, we have deprived him of his capacity to look after his own interests, and it is the undoubted duty of the government, by reason of these circumstances, to place around him all possible safeguards and protection with respect to his lands, chattels and effects; that is due to the Indian himself, not only safeguards for his own protection but safeguards against the cupidity of speculators and others. That being the case, I say the government has not fulfilled its bounden duty to these people. In face of the evidence and declarations which have been given here to-day, the minister would have been far better advised had he taken the course, not of ratifying and confirming all that has been done by himself and his agents, but of at once granting an investigation. If he had done that, he would have stood better before the people of this country; but since he has refused an investigation, we can do nothing else than say that we do hereby condemn the action of the government in respect to the manner in which they secured the surrender of and disposition and sale of the St. Peter's Indian reserve.

Mr. J. P. MOLLOY (Provencher). Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to take up the time of the House at any length as the ground has been well covered. I understand the hon. member has made the statement that Mr. C. T. Norris conducted the auction sale. As a matter of fact, it was conducted by Mr. C. R. Mollard, of Stonewall.

I happen to know something about the St. Peter's reserve, as I have been in that locality, and also because it is in close proximity to the town of Selkirk. I believe that every man in this House will admit that it was good policy on the part of the government to endeavour by fair means, which I believe were employed, to bring about the surrender for the simple reason that it was an injury to the Indians to live in that neighbourhood, and the same thing applies to all Indians in the northwest who live close to towns.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I find I have inadvertently made a misstatement. It was a man named Walters who conducted the sale. He was Liberal organizer at that time, and is now a member of the legislature of Manitoba.

Mr. MOLLOY. My information is it was Mr. C. R. Mollard, of Stonewall. I am going to ask that the Indians in Provencher on the Rosser reserve near Dominion City, nine miles from the international boundary, be transferred to another reserve, that their land be thrown open for settlement, and that the settlers in that locality, who are progressive and are prepared to buy the land, should have an opportunity of doing so. The people are asking to have this done on the ground that intoxicating liquors are used on the reserve, which one can easily understand, as it is situated between Latelier and Dominion City. The same thing applies to the Indians who remain on the reserve at St. Peter's. Every dollar they earned was spent in liquor in one way or another in the town of Selkirk. Objection was also taken by settlers in that district. I have heard complaints from Selkirk and the request that the surrender should be made. People in Selkirk asked that the Indians be removed and a surrender be made, and I understand the Indians asked that some arrangement should be made whereby they could leave the district and make a settlement which would be entirely satisfactory. I believe that has been done to the satisfaction, not only of the settlers among them, but of the people of Selkirk and of the Indians themselves. The hon. member has asked who in the town of Selkirk was anxious that a surrender should be made. The mayor of the town, Mr. Simpson, the ex-mayor, Mr. Mackenzie, who I believe is now dead; members of the council, members of the board of trade, and among them no less a citizen than Dr. O. F. Grain, M.P.P.

Mr. BRADBURY. The hon. gentleman seems to be in possession of more facts than the minister. The minister could give us no such information as the hon. gentleman is giving here to-day. The hon. Mr. Mackenzie, of whom the hon. gentleman speaks, died two years ago.

Mr. MOLLOY. I mentioned that fact and that he was anxious for this surrender came to my personal knowledge. I say that Dr. Grain, the member for the local constituency of Selkirk, favoured the surrender. I say also that Dr. Grain, who was one of the first citizens in the province of Manitoba, and one of the first gentlemen in the province of Manitoba, sanctioned this surrender in every way, so far as I know. He had the confidence of the people, and he should have the confidence of the hon. member for Selkirk; for I will make this blunt statement, that had it not been for the influence of Dr. Grain, he would not occupy a seat in this House to-day, that is to say, that his influence more than that of any other man in the county of Selkirk helped to elect him.

Mr. BRADBURY. I want to correct the hon. gentleman, he is labouring under a very serious delusion in making that statement.

Mr. MOLLOY. Well, I make that statement believing it to be true. Will the hon. gentleman deny that Dr. Grain is one of the most influential men in the county of Selkirk? Will he deny that he is not as good a Conservative as himself? Will he deny that he has not the respect of every man, woman and child in the county of Selkirk? Is there a more popular man in the county of Selkirk? There is not a more popular man than Dr. Grain, or a more honourable man, in the whole county of Selkirk. Now, Dr. Grain was anxious that this should be done. Dr. Grain was one of a syndicate that purchased land from John Bruce, the land known as the Point and sugar island, near the town of Selkirk, a lot of 136 acres. He has just as much right to invest his money in Indian lands as any other man, and I understand that the hon. member for Selkirk himself endeavoured to buy land in that reserve.

Mr. BRADBURY. I do not like to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I want to give the most emphatic denial to that statement. I have never, directly or indirectly, offered to buy one acre of that land. I have had the opportunity offered to me to secure this land, but I never invested one cent in it, nor in any way made it known that I was interested in any way in these lands.

Mr. MOLLOY. Well, my information is that the hon. gentleman tried to buy some of that land, and I hold he had a perfect right to do so. I understand that he tried to buy a lot from J. R. Sanderson, a treaty Indian through a hardware merchant in the town of Selkirk.

Mr. BRADBURY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member will have to accept the statement of the hon. member for Selkirk.

Mr. MOLLOY. I simply mentioned the fact. I have such information. I am willing to withdraw the statement if the hon. gentleman says he did not. My information was that before this surrender was actually made he tried to purchase a piece of land. Now, with regard to the price of land, I am in a position to say something about that too. He has given us to understand that the maximum price was about $5. My information is that the land was sold for from $8, $15 to $21, and I think as high as $25. That lot 107 brought $20 an acre. I am interested in 26½ acres of land in the town of Selkirk, which was purchased about ten years ago for $150, which is a trifle over $5 an acre, and it remains on our hands at the present time. For the information of the hon. gentleman for Selkirk, I can tell him that the land was purchased from Mr. Jas. Colcleugh, who was a druggist in that town, an old resident of the province of Manitoba, and that land is there yet. There were twenty-six and a half acres practically in the centre of the town of Selkirk that was purchased for $150.

Mr. BRADBURY. You would not like to take that for it now.

Mr. MOLLOY. I would expect to make a little out of it after ten years. Now, as regards the quality of this land, I went to the trouble to get a report on the land as to its exact character, and I have this information which I believe to be correct. I will read to the House the statement I have received:

Going down the Red river from Winnipeg one cannot but be struck with the appearance of the country. The banks are high and literally lined with small houses, surrounded by gardens, and the trees in the distance give the country a beautiful appearance. It looks to be most desirable land. The same character of country continues from Winnipeg to about 8 miles between Selkirk and the reserve. But disenchantment begins as soon as one goes one-quarter to one-half a mile back from the river. The land along the river banks is high but recedes from the river. One mile from the river the land is low, swampy, covered with black poplar and willow, or is open marsh. These lands have never been in use only as hay lands. In the parish of St. Peter's these features are more pronounced. The reserve runs practically through two townships, viz., 14 and 15 in ranges 4, 5 and 6 east. The river lots take up about all of range 5 in township 14. The land in township 14, on the west side of the river, at the rear of the river lots, or as it is known in the 'outer two miles' is, as I have said, swampy, no timber, the only wood growth is willow and poplar brush, and this is diversified by open swamps and hay land. The soil is a heavy clay, known in the west as 'gumbo.' There was scarcely any competition at the sale for the land. No one who knew it wanted it. On the east side of the river, in township 14, range 6, east, the country is open with some scrub, but it is stony and gravelly, so stony that one cannot drive through on the trail without a great deal of care. The river lots on the east side are all covered with black and white poplar and willow. Everything that would make firewood or could be used has been taken off, as it has furnished the wood for the town of Selkirk and the immediate neighbourhood for 50 years. In township 15, ranges 4, 5 and 6, range 5 is all a floating marsh, ranges 4 and 6 are covered with white poplar, interspersed with willow and marshes. The soil is good, but generally low, so low that the provincial government about 14 years ago built, by permission of the Indian Department, two miles of corduroy road, for the use of the people who live adjoining the reserve in the Poplar Park district, two miles of corduroy in this beautiful reserve.

Now, so far as advertising is concerned, the land was advertised as every other Indian land has been advertised, and it was well advertised. The usual rule was followed, the rule which has been followed since 1894. The advertisement was inserted in the press according to the order in council of May 8, 1894, and December 12, 1896, the latter of which says:

Advertisements should not be inserted in any books, pamphlets or periodicals other than newspapers published weekly or more frequently, and all advertisements should be limited to the maximum of six insertions in daily or weekly papers.

The Minister of the Interior gave the House the names of the papers in which this advertisement was inserted. Besides those papers, there were a number of hand bills sent out. There were 200 slips mailed to the parties who applied for this land. There were one or two hundred hand bills put around the town of Selkirk. Now, the town of Selkirk is the fifth largest town in the province of Manitoba. It is from 22 to 24 miles from the city of Winnipeg. It is served by the Canadian Pacific railway on the west side, by the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway on the east side, which is about three miles from the centre of the town of West Selkirk. It is also served by an electric railway giving a splendid service between there and the city of Winnipeg. It is centrally located, it is easy of access, and anybody who wished to purchase would have been very little inconvenienced by going from his home in any part of Manitoba to the town of Selkirk. The sale was well attended. There were from 100 to 200 present, if my information is correct. I attended a sale of school lands at Arnaud, in the county of Provencher, that year, and some of that land was sold at $27 an acre. There were about 150 people present, which was considered a good turn out, and it was considered to be one of the best school land sales held in western Canada. But the remarkable feature of that sale, as compared with this sale, was that for the cheap lands the upset price was fixed at $5, and there was only one-quarter section sold at $5 an acre. People preferred land for which they paid $15, $20, $22, $26 and $27 per acre to cheap land. There was only one-quarter section of cheap land sold. Then, as to the point raised by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) regarding the price of the land; it was pointed out by the minister that it was the poorest land on this reserve that was sold by auction, and that it was the best land that was allotted to the Indians. As to the numbers that purchased, I understood the hon. member for Selkirk last night to say that there were about six, that it was a party deal from start to finish, and that a man who was a good Grit could get all the land he wanted, while the man who was a good Conservative was barred. That is not possible at a public auction. As my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior stated to-day, the number of those who purchased was 24. Who were some of those men and what are their politics, if politics must enter into this as politics have entered into it contrary to the statement of the hon. member for Selkirk that this was a non-political question? One of the purchasers of this land was Mr. G. H. Funk. I know Mr. Funk, he was at the sale at Arnaud to which I have referred; he is a wealthy man, and he is straightforward, honest and fair in his dealings. He is doing what I would do myself if I had some of his resources. He is buying western land because he is going to make money out of it. He purchased land at the St. Peter's Indian reserve. When Mr. Funk purchased this land he did not know when the surrender was made. He read the advertisement, went to Selkirk and entered into competition with those and got the portion of the land for which he had bid. Another was the Hon. Abraham Funk, an ex-senator of the United States. He is also an investor in northwest land. These gentlemen are both Americans, one of whom lives on the other side, and one lives in Winnipeg. Another man who bought land to the extent, I understand of $35,000, was Mr. J. L. Hyland, a contractor, who takes contracts for the Canadian Northern Railway Company. As far as anybody knows he has no politics, and perhaps if he could be persuaded by the corporation for which he works its inclination would lean him to the Conservative side. Another was Capt. Pollock, who has been a resident of Selkirk for many years. I know that gentleman, and he is a Tory of the Tories. He had just as much right to buy land there as anybody else. Believing that he had such a right, and having the money, he purchased the land and nobody could prevent him from doing that. But he is not a Liberal. Mr. Finkleman, a merchant of Selkirk and a member of the executive of the Conservative Association of Selkirk, or he was up to a short time ago, was another. He entered, as he had a right to do, into open competition and bought the amount of land that he thought he had a right to buy. Mr. J. C. Simpson, Conservative and ex-member of the Manitoba legislature, was another who purchased land there. His brother is now a member of the local legislature of Manitoba. He is what might be termed a blue-blooded Tory, just as good a Tory as sits on the other side of the House, just as good a Tory as there is in Canada. He bought land, as he had a right to, and he paid for it, or he will pay for it. As far as the political end of it is concerned it was just the same as it is at any other public auction—the man who bid the highest price got the land regardless of his political affiliations.

As far as the ignorance of the Indian is concerned, we were led to believe last night that you could almost do what you liked with the poor Indian. That has not been the experience of the majority of people, as the Minister of the Interior stated. The Indian is just about as clever and cute, when it comes to a question of dollars and cents, as the ordinary white man. I believe that the hon. member for Selkirk said that he did not believe that there were twenty Indians on the reserve who could read and write. I make the statement that there are not twenty between the age of from ten to forty that cannot read and write. I am not going to be positive as to that, but I know that the missionaries, such as Mr. Semmons, have done all they could to promote the education of the Indian. They have had every opportunity to do that. There are seven day schools on that reserve—South St. Peter's, North St. Peter's, East St. Peter's, Muckle's Creek school, Peguis' school, Roman Catholic school, all under the Indian Department, and one public school, and the children are taken every year from there to the Industrial schools at Elkhorn, Kenora, Brandon, &c. There are six churches and chapels; one of the churches will seat over 400 people. At the last confirmation service of the English church two years ago, held there by Bishop Matheson, over sixty were confirmed. As far as the Indians are concerned they are just as well educated as any in the northwest provinces or the Dominion.

Now, I propose to say a word as to the charge made by the hon. gentleman that 90 per cent of the receipts for the 338 patents which were issued were forgeries. This is a very series charge and, for my part, I do not care to accept it until it is proved. I do not care to accept it because it is such an easy thing to prove. I think the point was well taken by the Minister of the Interior that it was a criminal offence, and as such it should be dealt with by the Justice Department in Manitoba. That being so, and it also being true that any political caper on the part of the Liberal party would lead them into trouble—the Attorney General of Manitoba could be counted on to look after these gentlemen, particularly if they were Liberals. That has been my experience, that has been the experience of every Liberal in Manitoba that he could bother in the least degree no matter whether there was a case or not. The hon. member for Selkirk has made a serious charge, he knows the remedy, he knows where his friends are, the machinery is there, the money is there, public opinion is there, and public opinion will be behind him and will be behind the Attorney General, no matter whether we agree with him politically or not, if he takes the proper course, which I think it is his duty to take and put where they belong the man or men who were parties to such a thing as that the rights of the Indians should be taken from them through forged deals. If this statement that 90 per cent of 338 patents were forged be true, it is sufficiently serious to call for action on the part of the law department of the government of Manitoba.

As far as the affidavits are concerned, I notice that they are all those of Indians and not of white men. I mention this only for the reason that the hon. member would have us understand that this was away from politics, that it was a matter only of the poor, down-trodden, suffering Indian and particularly of the Indian in his county. If it were as independent of politics as he would have us believe, my information is that he spent all of the Christmas holidays getting these affidavits, which he had a right to do and I do not object to it, with the commissioner, who was just as good a Tory as he was, and who acted as the hon. gentleman's agent in the last general election. I think that it is apparent that it is a party move on the part of the hon. gentleman. If he can make any move whereby he can strengthen himself in the eyes of his constituents that would only be fair and, as far as that is concerned, I would do anything that would strengthen myself in the eyes of my constituents; but I believe he is on the wrong track, and I believe that the Indians of St. Peter's reserve were fairly and honestly dealt with at that time in the interest of the settlers, in the interests of the townspeople, and in the interests of the Indians themselves, in taking them away from influences which were detrimental to their welfare and prosperity and placing them in a better position to make a living than where they were adjacent to the town of Selkirk. And above all, that the price of the land was just as good and, as has been proven, better than was paid the following June for school land just alongside of it and in some cases with only the road allowance between.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. T. W. CROTHERS (West Elgin). Mr. Speaker, last night from my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) we listened, at some length, to what in my judgment was one of the most forcible, most convincing and most damaging arraignment of the government which it has yet been my privilege to hear in this House; and to-day the government has substantially pleaded guilty to the indictment. As spokesman for the government, the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) addressed this House at some length to-day, but his remarks were so feeble that the broadest charity would fail to dignify them into an argument. His efforts were so feeble indeed as to be positively pitiable to all his friends in this House. The case goes substantially undefended. All the principal facts brought out by my hon. friend from Selkirk have gone unanswered. It is true, the Minister of the Interior took up some time in dealing with matters which were comparatively immaterial. It is true, my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. Molloy) made some remarks just before dinner which, owing to the defective accoustics of this House and the distance between him and me, I was unable to catch distinctly. He may have brought forward some arguments which I was unable to hear. But I was close enough to the Minister of the Interior to hear all that he said, and I repeat that the material facts charged against the government last night by my hon. friend from Selkirk have remained unanswered; and, with your permission and kindness, Mr. Speaker, I will endeavour to substantiate that before I sit down. What were the conditions which confronted the government of this country in the fall of 1907, respecting the St. Peter's band of Indians? In the year 1871, under treaty, a number of Crees, Chippewas and Saultaux were gathered together on this reserve, situated on the Red river about 25 miles below the city of Winnipeg, a strip of land 4 miles wide on either side of the river, and extending 10 or 12 miles in length. In the fall of 1907, about 1,300 Indians were living on that reserve. They, or their ancestors, had lived on it as a separate location since the year 1871. The whole reserve contains about 55,000 acres, of which about 5,000 acres were patented to whites either prior or subsequent to 1871. A trolley line runs between Winnipeg and Selkirk, and a steam railway runs on either side of the river. Selkirk is a thriving town of about 3,000 inhabitants. This reserve extends right up to the boundary of the town of Selkirk. Selkirk was at the head of navigation on the Red river, but now, owing to artificial structures, navigation has been extended to the city of Winnipeg. So that we have here about 50,000 acres of land situated within 25 miles of a city which in a very few years will contain half a million of inhabitants, and is destined to be the metropolis of Canada. All the 50,000 acres is as good land as the sun shines on. I venture to think that if the hon. Minister of the Interior owned that strip in his individual right, looking forward to the possibilities of its value in the near future, he would not sell an acre of it for less than $50. Let me read a few words of some of the Indian agents of this government and of former governments. I want to read first a few lines from the late Ebenezer McColl. He was a Liberal of the old school, a resident of the constituency which I have the honour to represent. He was appointed by the Liberal administration in power here prior to 1878. During the 18 years of the late Conservative regime he enioyed the fullest confidence of Sir John A. Macdonald and those who succeeded him in the premiership of Canada—a man whose honour and integrity could not be questioned by any one who knew him. I want to read a few words from his report, written at Winnipeg, on July 31, 1900. He was at that time, and had been for many years, inspector of Indian agencies. I want to read this especially in answer to a remark of the hon. Minister of the Interior to the effect that these Indians were degenerating. Mr. McColl said among other things:

There seems to be a growing tendency amongst the Indians to attend divine service. Their interest in such matters was quite evident to me at St. Peter's during the time we were there paying the annuities, when religious services were held every evening in the adjoining chapel. These services, I noticed, were all well attended and were attentively and respectfully listened to. It is almost a quarter of a century since I first visited these reserves, and in that time I have seen some marked changes. Twenty-five years ago St. Peter's was nothing but a string of huts and tepees scattered along the banks of the Red river. The people were living upon fish, and spent their time hunting and trapping small game. There most pretentious vehicle was the Red River cart, whose creaking could be heard for miles crossing the silent prairie. To-day there are very few, if any, thatched-roofed houses. The buildings are shingled, well fenced, surrounded by gardens, with stables and storehouses adjoining.

Twenty-five years ago the small houses had but one room in which all lived and slept regardless of relationship. Now the houses are divided into compartments. There has been an almost incredible advance made along the line of moral reform.

I would like my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior to take the trouble to read some of the reports sent him from the agents and inspectors of these Indian agencies.

There has been an almost incredible advance made along the line of moral reform. Nearly all are united by our ceremony of marriage. I had not a single case of drunkenness while on my round. The fact that there is so little drunkenness among them generally speaks well for the Indians.

Then we have some remarks from Mr. John Semmons, Indian agent. He says:

All three of these places—St. Peter's reserve is one—are situated in areas of excellent land, suitable for farming and stock-raising purposes, while at the same time they are adjacent to water, so that the natives may enjoy all the advantages of sailing and fishing. All the conditions are there to contribute to the welfare and happiness of the people.

That was in the year 1903.

We have tried to teach them to observe the regulations of the department which have reference to the preservation of health, and for the most part have had their co-operation.

Some of the best soil in Manitoba is to be found in St. Peter's. All this is protected by a fringe of wood to the west and northwest. The three larger bodies have beautiful churches, resident clergymen, and organized work. The Indian, as I find him, is a religious person and well disposed towards that which is good.

I have another report from the inspector of the Indian agencies, dated 28th December, 1903, in which, speaking of St. Peter's reserve, he says:

It is all first-class land. The area is about 48,000 acres or nearly two townships, and is all first-class land, rich black soil of great depth. It is a mixed open and bush country with some very fine hay land on the north part of the reserve.

So that I hope we shall not hear any more about large portions of this reserve being worthless, when we have this inspector saying it is all first-class land, rich, black soil of great depth. The last report we have was in 1907 from a gentleman called Lewis. In that report, which is very lengthy, he says:

The land is a loam with a clay subsoil. During the winter of 1906 the market of Selkirk was almost entirely supplied with hay brought in by the St. Peter's Indians, from which they derive a large revenue. During the winter of 1906, permission was given by the department to cut and sell dry wood. 3,500 cords were cut and marketed. There are five day schools in this reserve. Out of a population of about 1,300, there are not many drunkards, and the band may be said to be temperate.

I listened to the remarks of the hon. the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) this afternoon with a great deal of interest, and I am sure that every one who heard him must have reached the conclusion that he has not the faintest conception of the duties of a guardian towards his ward. It has been defined on good authority what those duties are, and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I shall quote from that authority:

> The duties of a guardian towards his ward are generally to exercise the same prudence and foresight which a good business man would use in the management of his own fortune, though under more guarded restraint.

Let us look a little further to ascertain what parliament and the people of this country have defined the duties of the guardians of these wards to be. Parliament has declared that the government of Canada shall be the guardians of the Indians of this country, and I want to say here that I have been unable to find any authority whatever for this or any other government in Canada making a present of public lands to the unenfranchised Indians. I do not believe that authority exists, in any law or statute in this country, for the government making a grant in fee simple to the non-enfranchised Indian. Let us look at a few sections of the Indian Act and see what we can gather from them. Every line of this statute, composed of 195 sections, declares that the government of Canada shall be the guardians of these Indians and that these Indians shall be the wards of the government. Every line of this statute declares that it is the duty of the government to look after these wards as a guardian would look after the interests of the infant left to his care These Indians are but infants. The hon. gentleman a few weeks ago spoke of them as understanding business transactions just as well as the average member of this House, and he spoke as if he expected some one to believe him. But the facts set forth last night by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) and not denied, have satisfied every one in this House that the Indians on that reserve had not reached that state of intelligence to enable them to look after themselves. We have in the fourth section of the Indian Act these words:

> The Minister of the Interior or the head of any other department appointed for that purpose by the Governor in Council shall be the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, and shall as such have control and management of all the lands and property of the Indians in Canada.

So that the people of Canada have placed in the hands of the government the management and control of all the lands and property of the Indians in Canada, and the Minister of the Interior, as Superintendent General of the Indian Affairs, is the man under whose control the lands and properties of all the Indians in Canada are. And the Minister of the Interior, as Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, is the man who is primarily liable to the people of Canada to-day, and the government, through him, is responsible for what I regard as one of the most contemptible schemes and swindles that the people of this country ever witnessed.

The Indian Act does give the power to make patents to Indians in certain instances, but let me show what is required of an Indian before he can become entitled to a patent in fee simple of any land in this country, and you will see from this statute how carefully the interests of the Indian have been protected by the parliament of Canada.

> Sec. 108. Whenever any male Indian or unmarried Indian woman, of the full age of 21 years, makes application to the Superintendent General to be enfranchised, the Superintendent General should instruct the agent of the band of which the applicant is a member, to call upon the latter to furnish a certificate, under oath, before a judge of any court of justice, by the priest, clergyman or minister of the religious denomination to which the applicant belongs, or by a stipendiary magistrate, or two justices of the peace, to the effect that to the best of the knowledge and belief of the deponent or deponents, the applicant for enfranchisement is, and has been for at least five years previously, a person of good moral character, temperate in his or her habits, and of sufficient intelligence to be qualified to hold land in fee simple, and otherwise to exercise all the rights and privileges of an enfranchised person.

That first section requires an affidavit sworn before a judge by a priest, clergyman or minister that the applicant for enfranchisement has for five years been a person of good moral character, that he has for five years been temperate in his habits, and that he has sufficient intelligence to be qualified to hold land in fee simple and otherwise to exercise all the rights and privileges of an enfranchised person. Without any of these safeguards, the government, on the representation of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, deeded 21,000 acres of land to these Indians without any inquiry from priest or minister or any one else as to whether they were men of good moral character, who had been temperate for five years and had sufficient intelligence to entitle them to obtain their deed in fee simple. Other sections are:

> 109. Upon receipt of such certificate, the agent shall, with the least possible delay, submit the same to a council of the band of which the applicant is a member, and he should then inform the Indians assembled at such council, that thirty days will be given within which affidavits made before a judge or a stipendiary magistrate will be received, containing reasons if there are any of a personal character affecting the applicant, why such enfranchisement should not be granted to the applicant.
> 110. At the expiration of the thirty days aforesaid, the agent shall forward to the Superintendent General all affidavits which have been filed with him in the case, as well as one made by himself before a judge or a stipendiary magistrate, containing his reasons for or against the enfranchisement of the applicant.

2. If the Superintendent General, after examining the evidence, decides in favour of the applicant, he may grant to the applicant a location ticket for the land occupied by him or her as a probationary Indian, or for such proportion thereof as appears to the Superintendent General clear and proper.

112. After the expiration of three years, or if the conduct of such Indian has not been satisfactory, after such longer period as the Superintendent General deems necessary, the Governor in Council may, on the report of the Superintendent General, order the issue of letters patent granting to such Indian the land in fee simple, which has been allotted to him by location ticket.

2. Such letters patent shall contain a provision that such Indian shall not have power to sell, lease or otherwise alienate the land except with the sanction of the Governor in Council.

3. In such cases, compliance with provisions of this part respecting leases or surrender of lands in a reserve shall not be necessary.

113. Every such Indian shall, before the issue of such letters patent, declare to the Superintendent General the name and surname by which he wishes to be enfranchised and thereafter known, and on his receiving such letters patent in such name and surname, he shall be held to be enfranchised, and he shall thereafter be known as such name or surname; and, if such Indian is a married man, his wife and minor unmarried children shall also be held to be enfranchised.

2. From the date of such letters patent the provisions of this part and of any Act or law making any distinction between the legal rights, privileges, disabilities and liabilities of Indians and those of His Majesty's other subjects, shall cease to apply to such Indian, or his wife, or his minor unmarried children, and he and they shall no longer be deemed Indians within the meaning of the laws relating to Indians, except in so far as regards their right to participate in the annuities and interest moneys, and rents and councils of the band to which they belong.

117. Whenever any member of a band, for three years immediately succeeding the date on which he was granted letters patent from his enfranchisement as aforesaid, or for any longer period that the Superintendent General deems necessary, by his exemplary good conduct and management of property proves that he is qualified to receive his share of the moneys of such band, the Governor in Council may on the report of the Superintendent General to that effect, order that the said Indian be paid his share of the capital funds at the credit of the band, or his share of the principal of the annuities of the band, estimated as yielding five per cent of such moneys as are provided for the purpose by parliament.

2. If such Indian is a married man, he shall be paid his wife's and minor unmarried children's shares of such funds and principal moneys, and if such Indian is a widow, she shall also be paid her minor unmarried children's shares.

Mr. CROTHERS.

So that the people have declared that before an Indian shall be entitled to receive a title in fee simple to a piece of land, the priest or clergyman and the agent shall make affidavits that they have known the man for five years to be a man of good moral character, of temperate habits and of sufficient intelligence to be entrusted with the management of real estate. Then the band has to be called together and notified that application has been made and the band are given thirty days to show why the applicant should not get a patent, to show that he is not an Indian of good moral character, that he is of intemperate habits, that he is not an Indian of sufficient intelligence to be entrusted with the handling of realty. Then the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs may locate him on a lot as a probationer for three years longer before he is entitled to his patent. Thus he must have been a man of good moral character for eight years, a man of temperate habits for eight years, a man who has displayed intelligence in his private affairs for eight years, before he will become entitled to a patent, and in addition to that he must add on three years more before he is entitled to receive as an individual freeman his share of the money in the Indian fund. The people of this country, guardians of the Indians, who are mere children, have surrounded these children, children of nature, by these safeguards. How in the world did the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, the government of this country, surround these men with safeguards when they gave patents to lands amounting to 21,000 acres, knowing full well, as Mr. Frank Pedley, the Deputy Minister, wrote to his chief, that they would, in a very short time, alienate all these lands?

Are we fair in drawing the inference that when this government undertook to secure a surrender of that reserve which had belonged to these Indians, and to deed to them 21,000 acres of land, no evidence of their moral character, no evidence of their temperate habits, no evidence of their intelligence to handle their own affairs, no probation for three years as required by the parliament of Canada—are we right, I say, in inferring that when these 21,000 acres of land were, by the government of this country deeded over to these children of nature, the government knew and understood that in a very short time they would become an easy prey to the unscrupulous whites, more advanced in intelligence, while less amenable to conscience? Is it a fair inference, yea, is it not rather expressly proved by the deputy minister when he writes to the Minister of the Interior saying, I anticipate that in a very short time these Indians will alienate their land to the whites? So I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that this government, when they determined to convey 21,000 acres of land to men of whom they knew nothing as to their moral character, as to their temperate habits, as to their thrift, as to their intelligence, the government became a party to the dissipation of 21,000 acres of the public domain of this country? The Minister of the Interior tries to shelter himself behind Chief Justice Howell, of Manitoba. Well, I am not very much concerned about Chief Justice Howell, I have not had the advantage, or disadvantage of an acquaintance with him. But I have lived long enough to know that a chief justiceship bestowed by this administration carries no guarantee against partisanship, or for wisdom, humanity, or common, every day honesty. So we do not propose to deal with the Chief Justice of Manitoba, we propose to deal with the government of this country who is responsible for what has been done in this regard. Let me read to you a few more sections to show in some more detail the way in which the government looks after these Indians, or are supposed to look after them, because in this case they did not look after them at all. Those Indians were by this government treated with a callous indifference and cruelty that excites the sympathy and indignation of every man capable of distinguishing right from wrong. I will read section 38:

38. The Governor in Council may make regulations for prohibiting the sale, barter, exchange or gift by any band or irregular band of Indians, or by any Indian of any band or irregular band, in the province of Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, or the Territories, of any grain or root crops, or other produce grown upon any reserve, and may further provide that such sale, barter, exchange or gift shall be null and void, unless the same are made in accordance with such regulations.

39. No person shall buy or otherwise acquire from any band or irregular band of Indians, or from any Indian, any grain, root crops, or other produce from upon any reserve in the province of Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, or the Territories.

40. If any such grain or root crops, or other produce as aforesaid, are unlawfully in the possession of any person within the intent and meaning of this part, or of any regulations made by the Governor in Council under this part, any person acting under the authority, either general or special, of the Superintendent General, may, with such assistance in that behalf as he thinks necessary, seize and take possession of the same; and he shall deal therewith as the Superintendent General, or any officer or person thereunto by him authorized, directs.

41. The Governor in Council may make regulations for prohibiting the cutting, carrying away or removing from any reserve or special reserve, of any hard or sugar maple tree or sapling.

43. No person shall barter directly or indirectly with any Indian on a reserve in the province of Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, or in the Territories, or sell to any such Indian any goods or supplies, cattle or other animals without the special license in writing of the Superintendent General.

2. The Superintendent General may, at any time, revoke the license by him given.

3. Upon prosecution of any offender against the provisions of this and last preceding section, the evidence of the Indian to whom the sale was made, and the production to, or view by, the magistrate or Indian agent of the article or animal sold, shall be sufficient evidence on which to convict.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think I have read enough from this Act to show that the parliament of this country has declared in every section of it, indeed in every line of it, that in the opinion of this country the unenfrachised Indians are not capable of protecting themselves against the schemes and tricks of the unscrupulous whites; and I charge here that the government of this country have grossly neglected their duty with reference to the St. Peter's band of Indians. Now, in 1907 it seems that some one desired that this reserve should be surrendered. The evidence, so far as we have heard it, goes to show that only one man requested that the Indians should be asked to surrender their reserve, and that was the man who represented that constituency in this House as a supporter of the present government. He had been an Indian agent for some years, he resigned, became a candidate, was elected, and sat in this House and supported our friends on the other side; and when he was subsequently defeated they returned him to his office as Indian agent. He is the man who made some of these reports I have read to you. I have not been able to find any authority in this statute, or anywhere else—there may be some, but I have not been able to find any authority for this or any government of Canada to deed in fee simple to an unenfranchised Indian any part of this country. Here the government deeded 21,000 acres of land to these men, knowing, expressly anticipating that they would become the easy prey of land speculators, and that they would speedily dissipate the small pittance that they would get from this land. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to every man in this House, whether he sits on this side, or on the other side of it, can he, in his judgment, and in his conscience say that the government was right in deeding 21,000 acres of land to these children of nature who knew not how to take care of it, and who, they anticipated, would immediately sell and dissipate it?

The motion before the House to-day is that the members of this House should express condemnation of the conduct of the government in that regard. Two questions arise, as I understand it. The first one is the policy of the government in desiring to get a surrender from these Indians and to send them back 150 or 200 miles into the wilderness again. That is one question. There may be some argument in favour of it. There have been five schools and many churches maintained on that reserve for years. Many of us are asked to contribute. To do what? To guide, if possible, these children of nature to a higher intelligence, to self-control, to good citizenship and the evidence of Ebenezer McColl is that these Indians had made satisfactory progress, slow, of course, as the progress in such matters always must be, but that they were making progress in intelligence, in the line of moral reform and temperance. Then, the first question is as to what we think of the policy of gathering up these men and women who have been living there for generations and driving them and their children from the rude but happy homes of their childhood away back into the wilderness—no friends, no home, no house, no wigwam! Does that strike us as treating these people as we profess to treat them as Christian people, striving to lead them higher in intelligence, higher in morality, striving to lead them to a higher life of self-control and good citizenship. Is that the way to do it? After you have kept on for fifty or sixty years, teaching them in schools and churches, educating them, bringing them along gradually you send them away 200 miles into the wilderness. Begin all over again, build more schools and churches and send more missionaries there! That is one view of it. But, that is not the more serious question. The more serious question is the manner in which this surrender was secured. The Minister of Interior to-day dwelt largely on the word 'bribery'—not so strong on that point as he was five months ago, but still he showed considerable strength in his objection to the idea of these men being bribed. What was it if it was not bribery? You sometimes give a child five cents if it will take some disagreeable medicine. Bribery! You give it a candy and cause it to do something. Bribery! What is bribery? Something given to pervert the judgment and get an individual to do that which he otherwise would not do. That is what bribery is and I say that every one who had anything to do with this transaction that is presented here to-night and not denied by any one from the Minister of the Interior and Chief Justice Howell, all the way down, was guilty of bribery in inducing these Indians to give up their homes. We had it stated here last night in several affidavits how they were induced to surrender their reserve. It was stated in affidavits here last night that they were given but one day's notice. That has not been denied. The Minister of the Interior said something this afternoon—

Mr. CROTHERS.

Mr. OLIVER. If that is one of the statements that has not been denied, I wish to deny it now.

Mr. CROTHERS. It would be interesting to know on what ground the Minister of the Interior makes the denial. I would very much prefer to have the denial of some one who was there and knows the facts. It was stated here upon an affidavit that there was but one day's notice given, which was Sunday, and that the meeting was held on Monday in a room so small that only a small portion of the Indians who gathered together could get in. It was stated on affidavit that the Deputy Minister told the Indians that he had $5,000 in his satchel, and that if they would consent to the surrender they would get that $5,000, and that if they would not consent to it he would gather up his grip and go back to Ottawa. Where did the money come from? It was your money and mine they took away to buy up these poor children of the forest, to surrender their homes, the homes of their wives and their little ones, the rude huts in which their children were born and in which their children had grown up. Still, he says that we must not call that bribery. If I could find a word of ten times the strength of bribery, I would use it on this occasion and use it with the greatest justification. It was stated here last night in a sworn statement that a gentleman went out of the little school house and, in the Cree language, said to the Indians: Those who want $90, go over with the chief and councillors, and those who do not want $90 go over on the other side. Now, Mr. Speaker, that was stated here last night under oath, but that was not the first time it was stated. It was stated in this House, in the presence of the Minister of the Interior, nearly five months ago. If that statement were not true, the Minister of the Interior would have some affidavits here to deny it. Chief Justice Howell was there on that occasion more than two years ago. The minister knew this charge of bribery was made, this charge about the $90, this charge that only a few Indians knew what was going on in this little building, because being outside they did not hear anything, because five months ago it had been brought to his attention in this House by Mr. Bradbury. If it were not true, how is it that we have not an affidavit from Chief Justice Howell denying it? The minister stated this afternoon that he had not heard anything about some of these things until he heard it last night. Well, suppose he had not, the Deputy Minister, Frank Pedley, is in the city to-day. How is it that he has not an affidavit from him to the effect that what was stated here last night is not correct, because Mr. Pedley is the man who was stated to have told the Indians that: I have a grip here with $5,000 in it; if you vote for the surrender you will get $5,000; if you do not I will go back to Ottawa, take it with me, and you will not get a cent. Bribery! He is indignant because we say they bribed these poor Indians who sacrificed their homes, friends, teachers, priests, everything that they had been taught to prize most highly in life. Bribery! Then they gave them the deed of 80 acres of land that they knew they were going to sell. The Minister of the Interior has the courage to sit in his seat now and laugh at the idea that these poor Indians were bribed. Could he go further than that? My friend from North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) dissected the 49th section, which he thought required a majority of all the male Indians of a band at a meeting assembled, of the full age of 21 years, to surrender.

Now, Sir, I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Middlebro) that that is the meaning of that section, although I do not say that it is so beyond all question. But there have been decisions in our courts on statutes worded in substance as this statute is worded, holding that the majority of the whole people are required to express their opinion under such conditions. and not merely a majority of those present at a meeting. I believe that to be the meaning of this section. I believe it is to be fair according to the spirit of the law even if it be not according to the letter of the law. Who, for one moment, with a particle of humanity in his soul would get a few Indians together and by offering them $90 a piece, and 16 acres of land a piece, would induce them to sign away the rights of their neighbours, their wives, and their children? It makes the blood in one's veins boil with indignaton when we think of the manner in which these simple people were cheated, and yet the government professes to be indignant because we say they bribed them. This land was deeded to the Indians, and you have heard the evidence. It was sold here and there and elsewhere, a few acres at a time, just as we would expect a child or an Indian to do it. If the Indian wanted $5 or $10 he would sign anything to gratify his present requirements. If he had a good big dinner he would lie down and sleep for a few days never thinking of how he would get a dinner for the morrow. We all know that is the nature of the Indian. No one knew that better than the Minister of the Interior, no one knew that better than Chief Justice Howell; no one knew better than these two gentlemen when they gave these children of nature a deed of land that they would dissipate it within a few days. The Indians parted with the lands at $5 an acre taken out in truck—land situated as it is, all the very best of land, land which I venture to say neither the Minister of the Interior nor the hon. member from Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) would have sold for less than $50 an acre if they had a patent for it. That is the land that was dissipated at $5 an acre by the Indian. The Indian has squandered the money and the Indian is on our hands now. Well, Sir, it simply meant taking 21,000 acres of the peoples' land and giving it to a few land sharks. That is the substance of the whole matter. What more did we have? We had this sale. The Minister of the Interior was asked two or three times why the advertisement was not continued in the newspapers up to the date of the sale, and we heard no answer. I have said that it is the duty of a guardian in the management of an estate to exercise the same prudence and foresight that he would use in managing his own fortune. I want to ask you, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. gentlemen of this House, if, the Minister of the Interior had been the owner in his own individual right of these 48,000 acres, he would have advertised them for sale and sold them for whatever was offered? No, he is one of the last men in this House to do a thing of that kind. What do we do when we have a piece of land to sell under mortgage, or for an infant. We offer it for sale at public auction in the older parts of the country, we get at least three men who have no personal interest to serve to value that land and make an affidavit as to its value, and when we tell the auctioneer that unless the bid reaches a certain price he is not to declare the land sold. Is not that what the Minister of the Interior would have done if this land had been his own? Is there a man in this House who believes he would not have done that very thing were it his own case? And Sir, if he would do it in his own case, he has been guilty of a breach of trust for not doing it in this case. We have an official in the province of Ontario who is called the official guardian, and whose duty it is to look after the interests of infants. That official never allows the land of an infant to be sold unless he has affidavits as to its value from three independent men whom he knows to be reliable and who have no personal interest in the matter. Then there is a reserve bid fixed. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. members of this House if the government of this country in this transaction have discharged their plain duty as guardians of the Indian wards of the country? Is there a man in this House who can say they have? Is there a man in this House who would not vote condemnation of this transaction if he were to follow the dictates of his judgment, and his conscience? I don't think there is a single one.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker. I rise to a point of order. I believe the hon member (Mr. Crothers) should resume his seat while I am stating my point of order.

Mr. CROTHERS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. The point of order I wish to raise is: How far is the hon. member for Elgin in order in charging the majority of this House with voting against their conscience?

Mr. CROTHERS. I have not made any such charge. I am saying, Mr. Speaker, that I believe that every member of this House, were he to follow the dictates of his judgment and his conscience, would vote condemnaton of the government for their conduct in this transaction, and if my hon. friend from Red Deer has any regard for my good opinion I hope he will vote that way when the vote is taken. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Interior in a very ostentatious manner declared that these Indians were not compelled to sell their land. He actually said it was no concern of his if they sold that land for $1 an acre or for $100 an acre. Would you believe it, Mr. Speaker; would my hon. friends sitting around me here believe that the man whom the people of this country have appointed guardian of these children of nature, would get up in this House and say that he was utterly indifferent whether the Indian sold his land or did not sell his land, or, whether he got $1 an acre for it or $100 an acre for it?

Why, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me to be monstrous. It seems to me that the Minister of the Interior has never read the Indian Act, or, if he has read it, he has never appreciated the meaning of it. It seems to me that if he had read the Act, he would have known what was necessary to entitle an Indian to a deed of land in fee simple. This land was sold on the 16th of December, if I remember rightly, when it was covered with snow—no advertisement of the sale for twenty days before —and sold for $5.60 an acre. $86,000 was got for the land, and of that amount $28,000 was spent in expenses up to a year ago; Chief Justice Howell getting $25 a day for the time he was settling up this matter at Selkirk, and the two lawyers employed by the government getting $50 a day each. A year ago $28,000 of the $86,000 had been squandered, and I do not know how much has been squandered since; but I venture to think that by the time they get all the Indians moved back 150 or 200 miles to where they have sent them, there will not be a single dollar left to put into the Indian fund. The Minister of the Interior told us in November last that 24,000 acres had been sold and 21,000 acres had been given to the Indians, and of this I believe all but a few acres has been sold. The sum total of the whole transaction is that somewhere between 45,000 and 50,000 acres of land as good as the sun shines on, situated within 25 miles of a city which in a few years will have a population of half a million and is destined to become the metropolis of Canada—land worth $50 an acre, which would give you over $2,000,000—has been sold, and yet there will be absolutely nothing left for the Indians or for anybody else. I am surprised to find so few here to-night to listen to a matter of this kind. I am sorry the Prime Minister is not here. He was here last night, and during this, in my judgment, most damaging arraignment of this government that has been brought before this House since I have been a member of it, he found it consistent with his duties to be sitting on the back benches chatting and joking with his followers, while the Minister of Finance found it convenient to sit reading the newspapers during that most convincing and most damaging arraignment of the government. Nero fiddles while Rome burns. I notice that the Minister of the Interior is uneasy. It is no wonder he sits restless in his seat; yes he sits there having written across his features in indelible characters, characters too deep and dark for blushes to conceal, the word guilty—guilty of the most contemptible and nefarious transaction that has taken place——

Mr. FIELDING. I rise to a point of order. I object to the hon. member characterizing a member of this House as being guilty of contemptible conduct.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is beyond the limits of debate.

Mr. CROTHERS. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to conform to the rules of this House in every respect as interpreted by you.

Mr. CONMEE. Withdraw the statement.

An hon. MEMBER. Withdraw the Bill.

Mr. CROTHERS. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that you rule that that expression should not be used, and of course, I withdraw it at once, and I will say that it is the most outrageous conduct, the greatest breach of public trust, that has yet been disclosed against a government already on the eve of moral bankruptcy and tottering to its fall. I appeal to the members of the House on both sides to express their condemnation of this transaction, and I repeat that I believe that if they were to follow the dictates of their judgment and conscience they would condemn it. But, Mr. Speaker, while experience gives no hope that, with the majority, conscience will prevail, still I feel certain that this burning outrage will arouse indignation and receive the well-merited condemnation of all moderate men throughout this country.

Mr. GEORGE E. McCRANEY (Saskatoon). Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has told the House that this is the most serious matter that has come to the attention of parliament since he has been a member.

Mr. CROTHERS. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I did not say that.

Mr. McCRANEY. I want to treat the hon. member fairly; I hope I have not misinterpreted him. At any rate, I think I may say for myself, if the hon. gentleman repudiates it, that it is the most serious charge which has been brought against this government since this parliament was elected. It is the first opportunity that the opposition has had of attacking the Minister of the Interior in regard to the administration of his department. The very bitterness which they have shown in their speeches and their vehemence of utterance show that they do not expect to have another chance for a very long time. Let me direct the attention of the House, as my hon. friend has done, to the original conditions under which this reserve of St. Peter's was laid out. In the year 1871 a treaty was made with the Chippewa and Cree tribes of Indians for setting aside the reserve which is now known as the St. Peter's reserve. In that treaty there was this term:

If at the date of the execution of this treaty there are any settlers within the bounds of any of the lands reserved, Her Majesty reserves the right to deal with such settlers as she deems just so as not to diminish the extent of land allotted to the Indians.

I think that clause in the original treaty explains to a great degree the reasons for the surrender which we are discussing to-night. It is a matter of record that from time to time claims were made by those who had already settled in this tract set aside for the reserve prior to the making of the treaty. Some of them were half-breeds, some of them were Indians, and I suppose some of them were whites. At any rate when this whole tract of land was set aside, there were claims admitted by the government between 1871 and 1906, when the Hon. Chief Justice Howell was appointed commissioner, which amounted to some 5,400 acres. As I understand it, these small parcels of land scattered throughout the reserve and occupied by enfranchised Indians and whites, were a menace to the administration of the reserve by the Indian Department. In this clause I have just read you will see that the Crown was to deal with such settlers as had obtained rights within this area in such manner as the Crown might think just, so as not to diminish the extent of land allowed to the Indians. There were many claims placed before the government by those who had their rights before they became members of the band which subsequently settled upon these lands, and Mr. Chief Justice Howell was appointed commissioner. The very fact that claims to the extent of 5,400 acres had already been dealt with shows that they were considerable and that Chief Justice Howell had evidently a very considerable work cut out for him. His investigation resulted in the agreement to surrender, which has been read by the Minister of the Interior. The reasons for obtaining such surrender are easily seen. It was to extinguish these claims which were before the government and which were held by members of the band who were on this land. There was also the general reason, which no doubt has always prevailed, for the removal of any Indian band when civilization encroaches upon them, and when it is better for themselves that they should be removed, and a great deal better for the settlers who live near the reserves that these reserves should be thrown open for settlement and the land cultivated, as white people know how to cultivate.

I want to point out that this 48,000 acres includes not only lands which were set apart as a reserve for the Indian band, but also whatever lands were in dispute between the Indians or half breeds and the government, and which claims arose prior to the setting aside of this tract in 1871, under the treaty I have just referred to. I would also point out that the agreement specially provides that there shall be no diminishing of land allowed to the Indians by virtue of any land being granted out of the reserve to those who have proper claims. In the subsequent settlement, in which the Indians obtained a reserve of 75,000 acres towards Lake Winnipeg, they got this additional land so that if their reserve should be diminished by reason of the admission of any further claims, this new reserve would compensate them for this diminution.

There are three points upon which the opposition criticise the agreement of surrender obtained from the Indians during the negotiations of Chief Justice Howell. They criticise the grant in severalty. I would point out that if any of these people who live upon this reserve were entitled to any rights whatever in severalty, they were entitled to them before they became members of the band under the treaty of 1871, and consequently they were entitled to them in severalty; and if they were entitled to them in severalty, then, I think, it is a fair conclusion that, being the same people, they were entitled to them in severalty at the time this new arrangement was made.

There is also this objection taken to the terms of the surrender, and that is that the sale of the land granted in severalty should have been conducted under government supervision. So far as I am aware this was not one of the terms in the agreement made at the instance of Chief Justice Howell. I understand it was in the original agreement; and having been in the original agreement was submitted to the Indians, who refused to accede to it and insisted that they should be seized of the lands in severalty without any interference whatever on the part of the government. For the reasons I have pointed out, it does seem to me that the government was justified in adjusting claims which should have been made prior to 1871 in severalty and in settling these claims in severalty in 1907.

The third objection made to this agreement is the provision for an advance of $5,000 on account of half of the proceeds. Let me read this extract from the agreement:

The department shall advance, at the time of the surrender, the sum of $5,000 to be repaid out of the first money received from the sale of the land.

This evidently is the $5,000 which Mr. Pedley had in his grip and which was referred to by my hon. friend in very vehement terms as bribery. That is a very strong term to use. It is one which should not be used except under the greatest provocation, and I wish to point out that, under the Indian Act, the government is authorized to pay over to the Indians a sum not exceeding 50 per cent of the proceeds of any lands sold. So my hon. friends opposite use the term bribery with reference to a matter which is authorized by Act of parliament.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. gentleman contend that the statute authorizes the government to pay $5,000 before the sale in connection with the consent to the bargain that was being made?

Mr. McCRANEY. I think that the statute authorizes the payment of the 50 per cent, it does not say anything as to the time of payment.

Mr. BARKER. But 50 per cent of the proceeds of the sale which has not yet taken place.

Mr. McCRANEY. The statute does not permit or prohibit the payment of the money at the time when the surrender is given. Those of us who have had experience with Indians in the northwest, who have lived close to reserves, will very well understand that there is no possibility of getting an Indian to make any business transaction unless he sees the money. About three years ago I was with the minister at Battleford, when the chief and councillors of an Indian band, living on a reserve near there, were endeavouring to negotiate with the minister for the disposal of their reserves and asking that new lands might be given to them in the northern part of Saskatchewan. I must say that as a result of that experience I have had a very different opinion of the Indian. I felt that the chief and his council were as astute real estate dealers as one could find in any part of the country. They thoroughly understood their rights, and I am sure they got them fully before any surrender was made. But I want to point out that you can never get a surrender from the Indians unless they see their money, and the fact that this money was advanced for some time in anticipation of the sale cuts no figure at all in this transaction.

I wish to point out some of the sales that have taken place in townships adjoining this reserve. On June 10, 1909, lands were sold as follows at a sale of school lands by public auction:

Southwest quarter-section 11, 14, 6, east of the 1st.

Northeast quarter-section 11, 14, 6, east of the 1st.

Northwest quarter-section 11, 14, 6, east of the 1st.

This was 480 acres in all, three miles from the reserve, and sold at $5 an acre.

Southeast quarter-section 29, 14, 6, east of 1st.

Northeast quarter-section 29, 14, 6, east of 1st.

The southwest quarter and the northwest quarter of 29, 14, 6, east of the 1st, all at $5 an acre.

The southwest corner of 29, 15, 6, east of the 1st.

The northeast quarter of 29, 15, 6, east of 1st.

All at $5 an acre.

On the 28th June, 1907, 80 acres immediately adjoining the reserve, the west half of the southeast quarter of section 11, 14, 4, east of the 1st, sold at $10 an acre.

The southeast quarter of 29, 14, 4, east of the 1st sold at $7 an acre.

The northwest section of 29 14, 4, east of the 1st, sold at $7.

The southwest corner of 29, 14, 4, east of the 1st, at $9 an acre.

The northeast section 29, 14, 4, east of 1st, $8,25.

All of section 29 15, 4, east of the 1st at $7.

This last piece of land is about four miles from the northeast corner of the reserve. So that when my hon. friends talk as though this land was worth $25 to $50 an acre, they will see that sales have been made on terms more favourable to the purchaser, in adjoining townships, at prices very close to those obtained at this sale. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) attacked the receipts which are held by the Minister of the Interior, and charged that they were not signed by those by whom they purported to have been signed. If there has been forgery, it is not a matter to be defended on this side of the House, it is a matter for prosecution by those who believe in the charges. I think, if my hon. friend is in earnest, he will wire the facts to the Attorney General of Manitoba, and as no doubt the Attorney General of Manitoba will be very prompt in a matter of this kind, perhaps when the House opens in the morning, he can report that proceedings have been taken for the arrest of the parties accused. I would suggest that he do it immediately, because eleven o'clock in Ottawa will make it a nice time for the Attorney General of Manitoba to get down to his office and have the matter before him.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would make a suggestion to the hon. member. It would be that he should try to induce the man responsible for the protection of these Indians to take proceedings.

Mr. McCRANEY. If I believed the statement the hon. member has put before the House, I certainly would, and I am certain the Minister of the Interior would do so without any suggestion from my hon. friend.

Mr. OLIVER. Hear, hear.

Mr. A. MEIGHEN. (Portage la Prairie). I regret exceedingly that I was not able to closely follow the argument, if you may call it such, of the hon. member for Saskatoon. However, there was a significance to his last remark which at least deserves reply. Apparently by that remark he wished to enunicate a new doctrine that a government are in no case bound to investigate any charge unless first of all they believe that charge is true, because he says that unless he believed the charge made and substantiated by evidence by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury), he would not recommend it to be investigated; and in that of course he only follows the cue of the Minister of the Interior himself, who enunciated that doctrine. If we are to follow any such theory as that we might just as well start out by enunciating that there are to be no more investigations under this government, because no government I ever heard of would first of all announce that they believed the charges against themselves. But that statement of the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. McCraney) was not one whit more absurb than has been the whole theory of the government in their defence against these charges. As my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) said, the only skill that has characterized the members who have spoke on behalf of the Minister of the Interior, and the minister himself, has been in evading the charges levelled against his department. His department is charged with resorting to improper means in procuring this surrender. They stand charged with having procured that surrender by dangling dollars before the Indian chiefs and before the Indians themselves, and by improperly putting a vote to the Indian band. If it is proper to dangle $5,000 before the eyes of the Indians in order to induce them to vote away their heritage, then there can be no charge on that score against this government. If it is proper to put a vote as to the surrender of a band by offering $90 to all who voted for it, then on that score also there is no charge against the government, and there is nothing to investigate. It is proven and admitted that the man who put the vote indicated to the band that those who voted for it would get the $90.

Now there are two things that emerge clear from this discussion. The first is that a band of Indians were in possession of 48,000 acres of land in St. Peter's reserve, and that the government desired to move them further north, and did so at a cost to this country of 95,000 acres of land, and many, many thousands of dollars. The second is that a band of speculators is now safely sheltered on the other side of the ledger and rich for life. Now those are two premises that must go undisputed; if any one wishes to dispute them, let him stand up. Now the government say. That may be the case, the speculators may be rich and the country may be out, but we are not responsible. And why? First of all, they put the august personage of the Chief Justice of Manitoba between them and harm. The Minister of the Interior, when this charge was first levelled at him last fall, struggled for a considerable time to assert that the man responsible was the Chief Justice of Manitoba, and that if we dared say a word about this transaction, we were impugning the honesty of the chief justice. I have sometimes had something to do with the Chief Justice of Manitoba, but I have nothing to do with him now. We are not concerned with the Chief Justice of Manitoba, we are concerned with the parties who carried out the transaction and who are responsible to us and to the people of this country. If the chief justice, or some other person by his instruction, recommend that deal as a matter of business that does not absolve the minister for putting through the deal as a matter of policy. Now to procure the surrender of that reserve it was necessary, first of all, to use the means I have outlined, it was necessary to send a responsible officer of this government, the man who sits next to the minister himself, out there with a bag of $5,000 to bribe them by the looks of the green.

The minister smiles when that is mentioned. Why does he smile?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know whether my hon. friend is indulging in rhetoric for rhetoric's sake, but I beg to say that I did not smile on that particular occasion.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I always had some respect for the Minister of the Interior, and I have a little more now. But I certainly did understand him to assume that attitude during the speech on that point of my hon. friend from West Elgin, and I imagined I heard him say: Surely this innocent hon. member for West Elgin is not shocked at that, surely it is time he knew that this is not the first election we have carried by means very similar, by means exactly the same. The member for West Elgin should have known that this government would not be in power to-day if they had not adopted those very means at elections that they adopted to secure a majority of the Indians of St. Peter's band to consent to this alienation.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to have it understood that when the hon. gentleman attributes certain attitudes to me, or certain ideas to me, he does it entirely on his own responsibility, and without any justification.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I am not at all shirking responsibility. The attitude of the minister shows that he is uneasy under this charge, and I think that does credit to his honour. Now, I said the result was that the country was out the land, the country was out the money, and that the speculators were rich for life. But where is the Indian? The Indian was left to be the prey of the speculators. By what authority have the government abandoned him? By what authority did the government flee from its position as their guardian for a matter of commercial advantage? Does the Minister of the Interior claim that he is justified in abdicating his position as guardian of the Indians of this country? Is he their guardian when he places in the hands of an Indian 16, or 100, or 180 acres of land, as he has done. Is he their guardian when he allows them to dispose of that land, contrary to law, to a band of greedy speculators? Where does the minister get his authority for abandoning the trust, for fleeing away from his duty as he did in this case? The Minister of the Interior has not answered that, nor has the member for Saskatoon, who is a lawyer; neither of them have answered the charge made to-night that they illegally granted those lands to the Indians. Is there any authority in the Indian Act for granting land to an unenfranchised Indian? The Indian Act is the statute of this country, framed in order to fortify these helpless people against speculators and greedy whites. By what authority does the Minister of the Interior throw down these fortifications and leave him a victim to the invader? Why does not the member for Saskatoon, instead of quoting what some adjoining lands formerly sold for, answer the real charge against the government? If there is one duty, if there is one office more sacred to the government of any country than another, it is the office and the duty of guarding the law as it is written. The government's first duty is to administer the law and to see that it is obeyed. How do they expect the people to hold sacred the law or to obey it if they themselves are the first to violate it? Of what value is it that this parliament, as the representative of the people, should construct a fortification guarding these helpless people from speculators, if the minister can throw it down at his will, or at the behest of his friends the speculators? Why are we sitting here to-night to legislate if he, at his will, can violate our legislation? I cannot see any authority, I cannot conceive that there could be any legal authority, for the grant that was made.

The law of the country in the Indian Act is the only reference to Indians as far as I know, and that law distinctly says that the Indian cannot be granted land. The Indian is described as a person who is not only incompetent to hold land, but he is incompetent to buy chattels. Section after section of the Act forbids individuals to buy chattels from Indians, and to sell them chattels except under the supervision of the minister. A man is not allowed to go to an Indian, and sell him two chickens unless he has authority by license from the Governor in Council. By what authority then does the minister not only permit men to sell them oxen, and hay and everything that they imagine an Indian wants, but also to go to them and dicker with them, drunk or sober, for their land? Surely no justification has been made out. No justification can be made out. There can be no exigencies, there can be no difficulty, there can be no commercial advantage sufficiently pressing to warrant the minister in violating this law. I would like, before this debate ends, that that point should be answered. I would like to see the authority under any statute of this country for granting lands to unenfranchised Indians. If there is such authority the Indian Act is a nullity. What was the result of all this? What was the result of leaving these Indians the prey of speculators? There was a man by the name of Tracy, who got hundreds and thousands of acres of these lands and he paid on the average of $5.55 an acre. I have figured up most of the return brought down by the minister, and indeed it is not complete, as to these sales, and the figures show that the average was $5.55 an acre. And how did Tracy pay them? He paid them by selling them their own hay, he paid them by selling them cattle at fabulous prices, and everything else on an equal scale, contrary to the provisions of the Indian Act, and the minister has absolutely refused to interfere, and protect them or prosecute Tracy for his violation of the Act. The minister, first of all, asked the Indian agent or inspector, Mr. Swinford, to look into this matter, and what did Swinford do? I do not know what his instructions, at least his verbal instructions, were, but I want to point out one thing. Mr. Swinford reported that all this charge about Tracy palming off goods on the Indians instead of paying them their money, was false. He says in his report, and let the Minister of the Interior note this, that over 80 per cent of the moneys that Tracy agreed to pay were paid in cash, or orders on stores. I thought that was rather strange looking at Tracy's accounts which are fearfully and wonderfully made. I figured them up, and they certainly show no such result as that which Mr. Swinford states. They show that instead of Tracy paying them 80 per cent in money and orders on stores he paid them less than 30 per cent. He paid them 72 per cent of their money in hay, and such like. Only 28 per cent of that $5 per acre ever reached the Indian at all in the form of cash or orders. That is the accuracy with which Mr. Swinford reported. That is a remarkable thing, but what more do we find? What was the condition of the Indian under this treaty? I find one case of Mr. Tracy's dealings which I can give the minister. There was a poor fellow who had sold Tracy land for which he was to receive $420. Tracy sold him his own hay, etc., until he made up $260 of the $420. Then he gave him $46 in cash, and orders on stores. The Indian proceeded to get drunk on the $46, and then Tracy paid $58.40, and $96, and all for plate glass windows and police court fines on account of the drunk that the Indian got out of the $46. That is only a sample. Moneys that these Indians have been paid have been paid by Tracy, and other speculators in the police court fines for plate glass windows, and other damage that these men have caused while under the influence of liquor. Could anything within the conception of the minister justify the leaving of these Indians to treatment of that sort? Let the minister look through Tracy's accounts and see what the fruits of his policy are, and by its fruits ye shall know it. The minister will know whether they are bitter or sweet. Let him see what Tracy's accounts will bring forth. Why, it is impossible to imagine that that man meant to deal honestly with these people. What did Tracy want with thousands of tons of hay? This was hay that he got these Indians to put up, and in the fall he told them that he did not need it, and he paid them with their own hay. Then the minister says: I will send up my law clerk to see if everything is all right. Mr. Williams goes up, and he conceives that he has done his whole duty if he sees that Tracy has kept his books rightly. He conceives, that so long as he finds that Tracy's and Funk's books show that the Indian was paid, it is all well and good. It does not matter how he was paid, it does not matter whether the mark on the back of the cheque is the Indian's or not; so long as the books are all right everything is O.K., and the government is satisfied.

Mr. OLIVER. Might I ask the hon. gentleman if he is quoting from Mr. Williams' report in his last remark?

Mr. MEIGHEN. No, I was just about to quote. If the minister is in a hurry I will start now. I am giving the only conclusion I can gather from Mr. Williams' report.

Mr. OLIVER. It was a conclusion which my hon. friend drew; he was not quoting?

Mr. MEIGHEN. I did not purport to be quoting, but I am going to quote. Here is the way the Minister of the Interior conceives it to be proper to investigate a matter of this sort:

> Janet Child sold 16 acres to G. Tracy for $80. Claims $10 balance on this. Says she was informed that she had conveyed 33 acres. Found that she had been paid $80 and had conveyed 33 acres. We secured for her a further sum of $105 for the land unintentionally conveyed, and with which she was perfectly satisfied.

Here is a poor squaw who thought she sold 16 acres to Tracy for $80, and after investigation it was found that she sold 33 acres, and the Indian Department thinks it has done full justice when it has got $105 more for her than had been paid by Tracy, and thinks that Tracy had been dealing in perfect honesty. Surely the minister can see more in it than that.

Mr. OLIVER. May I ask my hon. friend what he sees in it more than that?

Mr. MEIGHEN. I can tell the minister what I see in it. I see in it evidence, I think, plain enough for me, that Tracy took the deed in blank from this poor woman and filled it in to suit himself. I cannot tell what was in Tracy's mind any more than I can tell what is in the minister's mind. But, I am not, unlike him, absolutely blind to the evidence:

> Kappow Esqua, absent from the reserve, ascertained that he sold 32 acres for $80 to G. H. Funk.

That was $2.50 an acre. And there ends the report. And as soon as Mr. Williams found that out he did not think he should go and see this Indian at all wherever he was, but he reported, and that ended the whole transaction. Two and a half dollars an acre for prime land in Manitoba. Then, there is Mrs. James Fiddler, and this squaw sold 16·22 acres to the Northwest Land Company—that is Mr. Frank, and did not know what price, and did not know whether paid in full. But, Mr. Williams says, and here his heart must have leaped with joy: The purchaser's books show 16 acres bought for $80 and that she had been paid over $45 in addition. What a state of affairs. He is a very good book-keeper this man, and the minister conceives that his investigation is complete, and that all has been honest when his official investigates this far enough to know that the woman sold and did not know what on earth she sold for and did not know whether she had been paid or not, but the purchaser's book shows she had been overpaid $45. That, the minister thinks, shows that everything was honest and upright with these Indians. Then we have the record:

William Henderson, unable to see him, books of the purchaser, the Northwest Land Company show 68 acres bought for $220.

And there the investigation ended so far as poor William is concerned. This poor Indian got $3 an acre for prime land in Manitoba. And the minister and his followers think they answer that by telling us that some swamp or low alkali land, not so very far away from this, was sold for $9 an acre. William Henderson apparently has a brother, and the report shows that this brother claims he sold 41 acres at $5 per acre now and more when the patent came, and there was no satisfactory corroboration the report says. Poor Indian; he had no satisfactory corroboration, although he claimed that he was to get $5 an acre when he signed something he knew not what, and the balance, he did not know what, when the patent came. That was the extent of the investigation into this poor Indian's treatment. Oh, no, Mr. Williams went a step further; he looked up the books and he found that the purchaser had a receipt from Andersons showing that the purchase price was $4 an acre all told, so that as soon as Investigator Williams found out that the poor Indian thought he was getting $5 down and the balance, he knew not what, when the patent issued, and that the purchaser's books showed that he sold for $4 all told, there the investigation closed. The report simply teems with cases of that sort. Here is the case of Mrs. David Prince, and it looks as though the squaws were not so business-like as the Indians and did not fare so well. This investigator was unable to see Mrs. David Prince, but he says that the books of the purchaser, George Funk, show 32 acres bought for $100. That ended it, neither in this case, nor in any other. did these investigators think it was any business of theirs to take a look at the land and see whether it was worth $1.00 or $200 an acre. They did not care whether the land was sold for one-twentieth of its value or not, but they were deeply concerned to look at the books of the purchaser and take their statement for the facts. There was a man by the name of William Pahkoo, and he sold 74 acres to the Northwest Land Company for $460. He must have felt good. He claims he was to get at the time of sale $5 per acre and the balance when the department valued the land, but Mr. Williams had no corroboration, and he says he found acknowledgment for the above amount in full for the land. And the commissioner, because there was no corroboration, drops the whole thing, and he deems the books of the purchaser sufficient evidence. Is that an investigation? Let me suggest to the minister that whether it is right or whether it is not for the Department of Justice in Manitoba to investigate this case or any other case that has been suggested, the very same condition of affairs would confront them as confronted Mr. Williams—the poor Indian would be staked on the one hand and the speculator on the other, and where would be the Indian and where would be the prosecution? Let us take the case of William Starr. He sold 10 acres to William Rayner for $45, and 69 acres to George Tracy for $490. And the commissioner finds that there is a counter claim of $482, and that Starr disputed $64 of this, and he found that Starr's contention was justified, but even so, that he was overpaid. Now, Mr. Speaker, here is a transaction that the minister deems perfectly satisfactory, and still Mr. Williams found that this honest man, Mr. Tracy, had a false counter claim against him of $64, so false that even the Indian himself was believed, but because the purchaser's books showed him overpaid the whole thing is dropped. Such an investigation. Then, Mrs. Julia Stevenson sold 16 acres to W. D. Harper for $40, claimed that no price at all was mentioned and that she was entitled to $10 more, and that the purchaser had deeds signed and witnessed by her son. That is how they contrived to get that deed. They got the squaw to sign the deed and the Indian to witness it, and everything was all right. Then we have this report:

Consideration, $40. Has now paid $10 more to satisfy this old woman, and assumes a charge of $12 for improvement against the lot.

Fancy these poor people not knowing what they sold, but in case of dispute, taking a mere pittance from the purchaser; and these are the people whom the minister says are as competent to deal with land as are the members of this House. And these are the poor people that the minister left complacently to their fate and literally threw into the jaws of the speculator. George Sanderson sold 98 acres, a nice sized farm, to George H. Funk for $500, and the report says he had no complaint at all, he also says that he sold 16 acres to a brother-in-law. Then there was the case of Jessie Sanderson, and the commissioner says he was unable to see her, but the books of the purchaser, the Northwest Land Company, showed that 16 acres were bought for $50, or about $3 an acre. And there was no investigation as to whether that land was worth $1 an acre or $50 an acre, but they could not see this poor squaw, and that was all they did about it. In the case of James Settee, he was absent from the reserve, but the report says that the books of the purchaser, the Northwest Land Company, showed 131·60 acres bought for $400, or about $3 an acre. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, $3 an acre for prime farm land 25 miles from Winnipeg. It is all very well for the hon. member for Provencher, or for the Minister of the Interior, to talk to parties in this House who do not know anything about values of western lands; but those of us who have lived there are not children. Does the Minitser of the Interior imagine for a moment that land within 25 miles of the city of Winnipeg, on the line of an electric railway, and admittedly good land —not sand, not swamp, not alkali, not even scrub—is worth only $3 an acre, or even five times $3—nay, seven times $3 an acre? There is no land in Manitoba that can be placed in that position, and the Minister of the Interior knows it as well as I do. Tell the people of Selkirk or the people of Winnipeg that good land, well situated on the river bank, is worth only $20 an acre even. It would be ridiculously cheap at $20 an acre; it would be cheap at $30 an acre. I challenge any member from western Canada to say that that statement is not true.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member is asking for opinions, and I would say that it is absolutely untrue.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Unfortunately the minister is in such a position that he must make statements that I do not think he would make elsewhere, and on other occasions.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask what is the price of good land, the same distance from Edmonton that this is from Winnipeg? I do not think it would be less than $40 an acre.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think that has anything to do with the question. The price of land depends on the quality and situation, but it does not depend on quality or situation alone.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister will not say that where the quality is first-class, and the situation unsurpassed, land is sold at $3 an acre, without fraud. It is perfectly absurd. I take these instances from the reports of his own officials. Here is another: 'Alexander Slater; absent from reserve; sold 16 acres to G. H. Fox (evidently a mistake for Funk) for $50'. Three dollars an acre again, and he was absent from the reserve. 'Thomas Stevenson sold 92 acres to G. H. Funk for $404. Claims he was to get $5 per acre; found receipt for the price of 56 acres to be $4 per acre, and for 36 acres at $5 per acre, and balance still due of $10'. It is very strange that the Indian would sign a receipt for $4 an acre, when he was under the impression that he was to get $5 an acre for everything he had. 'Thomas Spence sold 64 acres to the Northwest Land Company for $224', or a little over $3 an acre. I might read more, but I will stop with this instance—they are all pretty much the same. In some cases, as the minister said, very few, however, the price went as high as $15 an acre; but I do not hesitate for a moment to say, on my responsibility as a man of common sense, and as a member of this House, that there was not a single parcel of that land sold by those Indians for anything like half its real value; and this sale, at the highest price that can be picked out from that return, is a sale so ridiculous that fraud is depicted on its very face. 'Jacob Reslow sold 18 acres to the Northwest Land Company; claims valuation to be made when patent came. He received $50 only. Purchaser says price was $4 per acre. Found $45 still due. Sold 28 acres to F. Heap, the price to be fixed when patent came. Got $84. Found no corroboration, and signed agreement for $3 per acre.'

That is a nice way to sell land; and here is a law clerk, a man who has been a reputable lawyer, according to the Minister of the Interior, and whose character has been in no way impaired by association with his department, a man who goes out, and reports that a sale was made of 28 acres, and that the price was to be fixed when the patent issued. Did ever man hear in the history of law a sale of that sort? The Indian got $84, but unfortunately for him, the report goes on to say, that he had no corroboration, and he signed an agreement for $3 an acre when it was produced. The Indian thought he had made a very discreet sale of his homestead at a price which neither he nor the purchaser knew anything about at the time, but which was to be fixed by Divine Providence when the patent issued, and actually signed an agreement for $3 an acre. These are the fruits of the course deliberately adopted by this department, with the result of making the Indians drunk, and the speculators rich. These are the fruits of the course they adopted, and in regard to which they put between themselves, and harm the robes of Chief Justice Howell.

There is certainly an important issue at stake in this matter. If this House votes nay to the resolution of the hon. member for Selkirk, it votes approval of that manner of treating the wards of this country. If this House votes nay to that resolution, it votes that the laws of this country can be tossed to and fro at will by any department of this government. The manhood of this country is at stake. Will the manhood of this country, as represented in this House, vote approval of conduct on the part of this government, which consists in their fleeing from their responsibility to the wards of this country, which is the most sacred responsibility resting upon them as a government.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I should not think of intervening in this debate but for one circumstance, and I do not intend to take any part in the discussion of the principal question which is before the House for consideration. But a remark was made by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) a short time ago which I think ought not to pass at any time in this House without having attention called to it. Speaking of the Chief Justice of Manitoba, the hon. gentleman said, I am told, that he had lived long enough to know that chief justiceships bestowed by this administration carried no guarantee against partisanship and no guaranty for wisdom, humanity or common every-day honesty. Now, I can quite understand any man in the heat of debate saying things which perhaps in his cooler moments he would not say, and saying things which he does not in reality believe or mean; but even making all allowance for the warmth of discussion over a party political question, I think my hon. friend, if he will do himself the justice of reflecting for a moment upon his own language, will recognize the propriety and the duty not merely of modifying it, but of unequivocally withdrawing it and apologizing for it. My hon. friend belongs to a profession, the members of which are often proud of saying that all of its members are honourable men; and at all events when a member of the legal profession has been distinguished by elevation to the bench, by being made the chief justice of his province, that circumstance alone, it seems to me, without regard to his previous political activities or sympathies, ought to afford some guaranty that he possesses the confidence and the respect of people who know him. The very fact that he has been placed in a judicial position ought to make him, to a certain extent at all events, immune from attack. I do not pretend that he should be free from criticism, but I think that he ought to be accorded the ordinary respect which men pay to each other and should not be accused, at any rate in the parliament of Canada, of lacking common every-day honesty.

Mr. CROTHERS. If my hon. friend will allow me, I did not make that observation at all with reference to Chief Justice Howell. It was a general observation. I said that I did not know Chief Justice Howell at all.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am afraid my hon. friend does not better the thing by that remark. I was only going to add that we have in the nine provinces of Canada something more than nine chief justices, because in some provinces they have a chief justice of the Superior Court, a chief justice of the High Court and also a chief justice of the Court of Appeals; and I think I am safe in saying that more than half that number of men who are adorning the Canadian bench are gentlemen who were appointed, not by the present government, but by the previous administration. And I ask my hon. friend, I ask every member of this House, whether on this side or the opposition, to think how he would feel if some one on this side, speaking of the chief justices appointed by the late administration, should use words identical with those which have fallen from the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) with regard to the chief justices selected by this administration. I would ask him to reflect for a moment on his own personal relations with the respected chief justice of Ontario, a chief justice appointed by this administration, and to say whether he means the language he used to apply to that gentleman. In the four years during which I have occupied the position of Minister of Justice, it has been my lot and responsibility to nominate four chief justices in this Dominion—the present chief justice of Nova Scotia, the present chief justice of New Brunswick, the present chief justice of Manitoba, and the present chief justice of Saskatchewan. And out of these four chief justices, three had all their sympathies and affiliations with the Conservative party before they became occupants of the bench.

Mr. CROTHERS. My hon. friend did not quite understand what I said. My remarks were not confined to the chief justices he has named. He has spoken of the four appointed since he became minister, but this government has existed since 1896, and I said that the appointment of chief justices did not necessarily carry with it certain qualities, and I have nothing to retract in that regard.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame.

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to and House went into Committee of Supply.

Public works—capital—new departmental buildings, Ottawa, $300,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Public buildings, chargeable to capital account, were all disposed of except the new departmental buildings which stood over at the request of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who said that he desired me to prepare a statement showing the different buildings now being occupied, the rents which are being paid, the number of people who are being accommodated, and that I would also produce a plan of the proposed new buildings. I had a statement made up and sent to the hon. member for North Toronto who I regret exceedingly is unable to be in his place by reason of illness. That statement, of course, is in his possession and I am not able to submit it to the committee. I have a summary of all the different buildings occupied and the rents which I should be glad to read for the information of the committee if they desire it. I have also a photograph showing the character in a general way of the new buildings. Of course it does not show the interior arrangement. That would not be possible, as we are at present laying out the building in large rooms with a view to having the rooms very much larger than those in the present departmental buildings and they will be divided up after very full consultation with the heads and deputy heads of the different departments. I have also a summary of the space occupied in the present departmental buildings.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I would suggest that the minister supplement that with the rentals in each case.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member would hardly ask for that information at this hour. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) asked for the information which has been prepared, and I caused my officials to go to a great deal of trouble to get this information. It took about two weeks. If my hon. friend who has just spoken had said he desired the rentals, I would have been glad to get them. It all appears in the public accounts, and as I said my officials took two weeks to prepare the information, a summary of which is now submitted to the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought all this information was specifically asked from the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I had a careful note made at the time and we sent the detailed information to the hon. member for North Toronto, saying that we proposed to go on with the estimates the next day. The hon. member (Mr. Foster) wrote me thanking me for sending this information, but he said he was obliged to be absent and asked if I would let it stand over. But he gave me no intimation that he desired any further information. If I had been asked for a statement of the rentals, I would have been glad to furnish it.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood a question was put across the floor for this information. I do not know if a question was put on the order paper intended to bring out the same information, but at any rate that is information that several members on this side desire and would like to have. It is not enough to say that the information is in the Auditor General's Report, because that report contains thousands of pages, and even though you went over it for hours, still you might overlook some items relative to these buildings. The minister has in his department, clerks who could get the information and furnish it to the House. I suggest that if he is not prepared to furnish it now, he might get it ready and furnish it to us when some other estimates are going through.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be glad to do so. It would have been only reasonable that, when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) requested me to furnish certain information, if he or any other hon. member wanted more information, he should have mentioned it at that time. But I do not find any fault with that. I will have one of the officials of my department get the information and submit it to the committee. I understand my hon. friend wants the names of all the lessors, together with the rents which are being paid, when the occupancy began, and the terms of the leases. I will get that information.

Mr. SPROULE. And also whether the government pay any taxes upon these buildings, because in the consideration of the lease that would be one of the elements.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I would also suggest that the minister prepare information as to any capital expenditure made on the buildings by reason of the terms of the lease.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will furnish all the information mentioned.

Mr. SPROULE. Has there been a contract let for this new building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No contract has yet been let. In due course tenders will be called for by public advertisement, probably some time during the early part of the summer. The estimated cost is something over $3,000,000 all complete.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether my aesthetic taste with regard to the architectural design is defective, but it seems to me that the design of the geological survey building is rather that of an old country private castle than of a business building where a great many people are employed in various occupations. It seems to me that the geological building is defective in that respect. I would suppose that those who are charged with the responsibility of drawing up the plans for the new building would keep in view the fact that there are other buildings on these grounds, and that the design of the new building should be somewhat in harmony with those already erected. I do not think it adds to the favourable effect to have buildings of various architectural designs standing in the same neighbourhood. I always thought that the Langevin block was defective in that respect, inasmuch as it was out of harmony with the parliament building and the east and west blocks.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is curious how people's taste differ. I have heard some very good judges say that it would be a great mistake to have all the buildings of the same design, that there should be diversity of design as well as harmony. My own view is that this is an admirable design. Anybody who looks at it will see that a building erected upon that design will be exceedingly handsome.

Mr. LENNOX. What style of architecture?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not profess to be a judge of architecture, but I would say that it partakes of the Norman style.

Mr. CROCKET. By whom was the design prepared?

Mr. PUGSLEY. By Mr. Ewart, the chief architect of the department.

Mr. CROCKET. The minister says that $3,000,000 is the estimated cost of the building; does that include the furnishing as well?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That includes everything that could be fairly considered as a part of the building, heating, lighting, ventilation and so forth. Of course it would not include the furniture.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I suppose it is the intention to let the contract for heating and lighting, and everything of that kind, at the same time as the main building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the intention.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it intended to make a crossing over the canal to enable persons to pass from these buildings to the new buildings on Sussex street?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have been thinking of the question of erecting a bridge, but that need not be considered for a couple of years yet. I think it would be very convenient to have a bridge, not an ordinary highway bridge, but a graceful foot bridge thrown across which would answer all purposes.

Mr. BLAIN. Was it for these buildings that the government offered prizes for plans?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Were the prizes paid?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Are the plans the property of the government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. To be used for what purpose?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have not adopted the plans, as none of them seemed to be entirely suitable.

Mr. BLAIN. What were the prizes?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think there were four prizes awarded, and I think they amounted to $15,000 altogether.

Mr. CROCKET. Were the prizes awarded, and none of the plans adopted?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, because in the terms of the competition it was provided that there would be four prizes awarded to the four sets which met the approval of the board of experts, they being considered the best of those submitted, but it was distinctly specified that the department would not be bound to accept any of the plans.

Mr. BLAIN. What good purpose has been served?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was supposed when the late minister, Mr. Hyman, decided to offer prizes for designs from Canadian architects that it would result in the submission of plans which would be approved, and accepted and upon which the building would be erected. No action had been taken upon the plans when I became minister, and after looking them over very carefully, and having others, in whose judgment I had confidence, look them over also with very great care, and after they were inspected by other gentlemen, because they were placed in the railway committee room where they were seen by a great many people, we came to the conclusion that none was satisfactory and we decided to have plans prepared by the chief architect of the department. It may be that the chief architect has taken certain ideas from these plans—as to that I am not aware, but the plans are the property of the department, and it was quite open to him to utilize any features that might commend themselves to him.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the minister expect that $3,000,000 will complete the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A little over $3,000,000. The chief architect expects that will complete the building, and provide heating, elevators, lighting and plumbing.

Mr. BLAIN. What about the inspector and the clerk of works?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He has not been appointed yet.

Mr. EDWARDS. Is the land included?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, that is outside of the land.

Mr. EDWARDS. How much did the land cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the vicinity of $600,000.

Mr. BLAIN. When will the work be commenced?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We hope to call for tenders during the coming summer.

Mr. CROCKET. When does the minister expect to have the building completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should think in four or five years at the very inside.

Mr. BLAIN. What kind of a man will be employed as inspector of this work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We will employ none, but first-class men. Of course, we have our own staff. We will have an expert upon each class of work, and we will employ the members of our own staff.

Mr. CROCKET. Did the experts upon these plans make any report to the department as to their suitability?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No they simply awarded the prizes.

Mr. CROCKET. Without determining whether the plans would be suitable for the purpose for which the building was designed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. CROCKET. And the department held that none of the plans was suitable?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. After paying $15,000 for them?

Mr. SPROULE. What is the superficial area of this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. As near as may be my deputy informs me that it is 100,000 square feet on each floor.

Mr. SPROULE. How many floors?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are six stories facing Major Hill Park and seven facing upon Sussex street.

Mr. CROCKET. Is the Supreme Court to be placed in the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. CROCKET. I thought I saw that in the press the other day. It is to be entirely a departmental building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the provision, if any, in reference to the Supreme Court?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no provision.

Mr. LENNOX. It was intended when this matter was broached first, to provide quarters for the Supreme Court.

Mr. EDWARDS

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was by a separate building entirely.

Mr. LENNOX. It may have been a separate building, but I understood that one of the main objects that the government had in view was to supply proper accommodation for the Supreme Court. I do not think it would be desirable to have it in the same building. I think it would be undesirable, but on the other hand I had expected that this government would have determined upon something in reference to proper accommodation for the Supreme Court. I am not in favour of extravagant expenditure, but I think that the accommodation of the Supreme Court is not at all in accordance with the position that Canada occupies. I think it is rather a disgrace to Canada to have the Supreme Court housed as it is down at foot of the hill. I do not know what the minister can say about it, or whether he proposes soon to provide accommodation for the Supreme Court, and, if so, where?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say that it certainly would not be at all desirable to have the Supreme Court housed in the departmental building. The matter of erecting a palace of justice, or supreme court building has not been considered, certainly not since I have been minister. I have understood, however, that the judges would prefer the present location. I think that in all probability, in the course of a few years, the question will necessarily be taken up of erecting a suitable building, which, as suggested by my hon. friend would be a credit to Canada, and I would think that it would be desirable that in that building accommodation should be furnished, not only for the Supreme Court of Canada, but also for the Exchequer Court and for the Board of Railway Commissioners, which is one of the most important courts in the country. That, of course, would require quite a large building, but at the present time the matter is not under consideration.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the new building cover all the land on Sussex street?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, we will have room for quite an extension to this building in the future.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Is it intended that this will do away with the renting of buildings by the government for offices?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot speak for the future, but if the new buildings were erected at the present time, it would not be necessary for us to rent buildings in the city.

Mr. LENNOX. I have a communication from the mayor of Barrie in which he points out that the post office square in the town, which is partly owned by the government, is in a very bad condition, and personally I know that to be the case. I will forward the letter to the minister and ask him to deal with the question before parliament prorogues. Only a small expenditure will be required.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How much?

Mr. LENNOX. The amount mentioned in the letter is $500, and the mayor has many good qualifications, including that of being a supporter of this goverment. You will also notice that he is very moderate in his demands, as you would expect a good Liberal ought to be, and he states the town would be prepared to bear a portion of the expense. This square is opposite the railway station, and in its present condition, it leaves a bad impression on visitors as to the good management of the town of Barrie. There has been a stone wall built there, and I think that ought to be removed. I would suggest to the minister that he should send an official to make a report, so that we may know what is best to be done. The mayor points out that the time is now suitable for doing the work, and I would ask the minister to put the government property there in reasonably proper condition, and at an early date.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend will send me the letter, I will direct an examination and report to be made. As the amount does not exceed $500, the work can be done out of the general vote.

Mr. LENNOX. I will send the letter to the department and speak personally about the matter to the minister.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any danger that my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) will be put on the patronage list?

Mr. LENNOX. I will be able to assume the burden of any patronage that will be visited on me by this government.

Chesley—public building, $11,250.

Mr. SPROULE. This is quite an important place with a population of between 1,700 and 2,000.

Mr. BLAIN. In what county is it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In South Bruce, which is represented by one of our good Conservative friends.

Mr. BLAIN. I thought it was Mr. Tolmie?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, Mr. Donnelly.

Mr. EDWARDS. What will be the total cost of this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Our hope is that it will not cost more than $15,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the site been purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was purchased in February, 1909, 104 square feet, at a cost of $3,800.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Any buildings on it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not that I am aware of.

Dresden—public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site has been purchased for the sum of $2,000, a lot having 60 feet on one street, and 103 feet on the other. The building is for a post office and custom house.

Dundas—public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site has been purchased for the sum of $5,000. It consists of five lots having a total frontage of 125 feet by a depth of 100 feet. This building is to be for a post office and custom house. We are endeavouring to secure these public buildings, in towns having a population not exceeding 3,000, at a cost not exceeding from $15,000 to $20,000. We hope to get the cost down to $15,000 including the land, in some cases down to $12,000.

Mr. S. SHARPE. When did you adopt that policy?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Quite lately. I have been urging it on the chief architect.

Elora—public building, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A site has been purchased for $380. Elora has a population of about 1,500. We expect to get this building, including the site for $10,000, or $12,000.

Mr. S. SHARPE. There seems to be a great discrepancy in the prices paid for lots.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Everything depends on local conditions.

Mr. HENDERSON. What special reasons were assigned for erecting a public building in Elora, when other places of greater population throughout the country are not equally favoured?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There has been for a considerable time, as it was represented to us, a demand on the part of the people of Elora for a public building. They are also anxious to have the town made a customs outport, and have asked for accommodation for a customs official there. I do not know that I can say anything further than this, that Elora is quite a thriving town. Its population is not as large as some others which have not public buildings as yet.

Mr. HENDERSON. I live in a town that has a considerably larger population, and I have no doubt that if it were made a customs outport the collections there would be five times, perhaps ten times, as much as they would be in Elora; yet we have not a building there, either for a post office, or a custom house. I would like to know what grounds the people of Elora expect that the Minister of Customs will make it an outport. I do not know of any industrial institutions there that would require imports of any great extent. I understand that the policy of the Minister of Customs is to open outports, not for the convenience of the people, but for the collection of revenue. I do not see why the minister should erect a building for an outport at Elora, when his colleague does not approve of opening more customs outports. There have been very few customs ports opened by the present government. When the late government went out of power, I think there were only 45 customs ports in Ontario. Now there are 52, and probably seven or eight of the increases are caused by raising outports to ports. I am satisfied that the policy of the government, and the present Minister of Customs, at any rate, is not to increase the number of ports, or the number of outports, because the government can get the revenue just as well with the present number as if they had twice as many. I understand that we in Canada, have as many custom houses as the whole of the United States.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are ahead of them in many ways.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, in extravagance particularly. The cities of New York and Brooklyn combined have only one customs port, and through that port 70 per cent of the entire revenue of the United States is collected.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How does my hon. friend know that about New York?

Mr. HENDERSON. From an officer of this governement who knows all about it. I got the information from him recently, and I believe it to be correct. 70 per cent of the entire customs revenue of the United States is collected from the port of New York and Brooklyn combined, and the United States have practically no greater number of customs houses than we in Canada. We have in Ontario at present 52 ports, and about 89 outports, and I am satisfied that the policy of the Minister of Customs is not increase the number of outports. If the minister wants to establish outports for the convenience of the people, I am satisfied he can find other towns where a great deal more business is done than is done in the town of Elora. I am not saying anything against Elora having a public building for a post office or a customs house, but I simply rise to ascertain what special reasons can be assigned why this town should be favoured as against larger towns in which very much larger business is carried on. We have learned from the hon. minister that this is due to the continued importunities of the citizens. They have persistently asked for this and finally got it. Now we know how to get the attention and favour of the minister. The best way is to keep on asking, and by and by he will get tired of refusing, and will provide the accommodation asked for.

Mr. SPROULE. More than that is required.

Mr. HENDERSON. That I do not know. I take the minister at his word, and the only reason he has given practically is that these people had persistently asked for it. In future hon. members will know just how to proceed when they want to get a public building. However, I do not want to be placed on the patronage list at present. It is a little dangerous. But I have got all the information I wanted and know how to proceed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend does not desire that any public buildings should be erected in his county, it would be unkindness for him to press any such improvement on his people. I would be very loath to do such a thing. I want to say with regard to Elora——

Mr. S. SHARPE. How far is it from Guelph?

Mr. HENDERSON. About twelve miles.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A little more than that. There are two railways which come to Elora, the Grand Trunk railway, and the Canadian Pacific railway, and there has been very urgent demand from the people for an official of the customs to go there from Guelph once or twice a week for the purpose of receiving entries. That would only mean an extra room in the building, and I think that would be a great convenience. It must be a hardship for merchants, who receive goods by rail, to be obliged to go fifteen or twenty miles to another town to make their entries. Elora is an important place, there are saw mills, and grist mills there, two branches of banks, some thirty stores, a carriage, sash and door factory, and a factory of agricultural implements.

Mr. EDWARDS. What is the postal revenue?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1889 it was $3,275, the money orders issued were $16,501, and the money orders paid $20,539.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the population?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1901 it was nearly 1,200.

Mr. S. SHARPE. It would be less now I suppose. The small towns are going back.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not necessarily, only those which have lost heart and hope, and Elora is not one of them. It is a progressive place, making headway.

Mr. RUSSELL. Would this mean the employ of extra officials?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There would be a caretaker of course.

Mr. RUSSELL. Have they a postmaster?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. The same postmaster would do the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. The idea would be to have an official from Guelph visit there once a week.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister has said that it would be a hardship for importers to go twelve miles to Guelph. I live where there are importers who have to go forty-five miles to have their entries passed, and there has been no move yet to erect a public building in that town, which is a much larger place than Elora.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend not think it would be reasonable to have a customs official go there once a week?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, but we have never been able to press the minister with sufficiently strong arguments to induce him to consider it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to remind the minister that when he made the statement that I did not want any public building in my town and he was not going to press one upon me, let me tell him that I made no such statement.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend said he did not want to be on the patronage list.

Mr. HENDERSON. No, I am one of those who believe that when a public building is necessary the government should erect it. If they thought a public building was necessary in the town of Milton for a post office, it would be the duty of the government to erect one there; and the fact that they have not done so satisfies me that they do not consider it necessary. In my town I have no doubt there is ten to twenty times as much duty collected in a year as in Elora. One firm employing a large number of hands and using a lot of material which has to pass customs, has to either send a representative or communicate with Guelph every day, and the manager told me he would be glad to pay $500 towards the salay of a customs officer if he could have one stationed in Acton.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How far is that from Guelph?

Mr. HENDERSON. About 15 miles.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does not my hon. friend think it would be reasonable to have an officer there?

Mr. HENDERSON. I think it would be.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then, would it not be reasonable to go to Elora as well?

Mr. HENDERSON. It is not the policy of the government to open these ports for the public convenience, but for the collection of revenue.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought it was for the convenience of the people.

Mr. HENDERSON The minister is behind the times. The primary object of customs houses is to collect revenue. The policy of the government is a tariff for revenue only, not for the convenience of the people. If the revenue can be collected with fewer ports, the minister will not open new ports, even although it might be a greater convenience to the public. I am not going to press to-night for a custom house in Acton or in Milton, because I have no idea that if I stayed all night it would be obtained.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will, I am sure, agree that it would be a very desirable thing if they succeed in getting it at Elora.

Mr. HENDERSON. I certainly do, and would be delighted. But either of these towns is larger than Elora, and I am sure one of them would furnish the government with 10 times as much revenue as would be furnished by Elora in a year. Apparently a building is to be obtained by persistent appeals to the minister. My idea would be rather to leave such matters to the intelligence and good judgment of the minister. I do not want the minister to think that because I am not asking for a public building I do not want one.

Mr. TURRIFF. I can assure the hon. gentleman that we on this side do not fare any better as regards custom houses than he has done, we do not get them any more than he does. I have several times endeavoured to get one or two custom offices opened in my constituency at places from 50 to 100 miles away from existing custom houses, and have not been able to do so, although there is considerable business.

Fergus—public building, $5,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any correspondence with respect to the purchase of the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was purchased from James Watt for $700. It is a large lot, 70 x 132 feet.

Mr. BLAIN. I have here a clipping from a newspaper, reading as follows:

Fergus Post Office—Liberals hold a meeting to decide on the site.

A public meeting of local Liberals was held last night for the purpose of recommending to the government a site for the proposed post office. Four sites were decided on. The final vote gave the Murray property a majority of six over the Watt property.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The vote gave a majority of six for the Murray property over the Watt property, but the government bought the property from Mr. Watt, who is a Conservative, although it was not approved at the meeting. The Murray site would have cost $3,000, whereas we bought this site from a Conservative for $700. We thought it was in the public interest. It shows how we do our business on business principles.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister bring down the correspondence between the people in this town and the department with respect to the purchase of this site and the proposed building as well?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If there is any I will be very glad to bring it down.

Mr. HENDERSON. How far is Fergus from Elora?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot say. They are two separate and distinct towns in the county of South Wellington.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it the intention to provide for a customs house in Fergus as well as in Elora?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. We are not urged to provide accommodation for customs in Fergus. The Fergus building is to cost between $10,000 and $12,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am glad to hear the minister speak about erecting cheaper buildings in small towns, because unless a policy of that kind is adopted, we can never hope to get public buildings in towns ranging from 1,500 up to 2,500 of a population. Years ago I commended that policy to the Hon. Mr. Tarte, when he was Minister of Public Works, and he did undertake to carry that policy into effect. He started with the town of Clinton, with the idea of erecting a building for a post office that would cost under $10,000. Building was cheaper in those days than it is at the present time. But I was informed, I think by the member of the county at that time, Mr. Holmes, that the chief architect told him that they would not draw plans for a building to cost less than $10,000. Mr. Tarte attempted to get a cheaper building, and I remember that before it was completed the cost went up to $15,000. Now, the minister will require to exercise a great deal of care, otherwise this $12,000 will likely reach $20,000 before the building is completed. His officers will require to keep a close watch, and if they do so, I think the cost can be kept down. But there is a danger that the officers of the government will give greater latitude, and that the whole purpose of the minister will fail. His purpose is a good one, I approve of it. It is only by erecting cheaper buildings that we can hope to have more of them. A good building to-day can be erected no doubt for $15,000 as a post office; yes, and for less, giving ample accommodation, for any town the size of Elora and Fergus, with all the fittings required. The minister, in answer to the hon. member for East Toronto, stated that in Elora an additional official would be required as a caretaker. I do not think that should be the policy of the minister. The postmaster, I think, ought to be responsible for the care of that building. In erecting a building the minister should provide a residence for the postmaster as well as the post office. Let the postmaster live in the same building and be the caretaker of the building, and thereby save considerable expense. When Mr. Tarte decided to erect the building in Clinton I understood that that was the policy, that he was going to make it a residence for the postmaster as well as a post office. That is a policy the present minister might adopt with a great deal of advantage. The use of the building as a residence would be ample compensation for looking after it.

Mr. EDWARDS. How many post office officials will be required in Fergus, and how many in Elora?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not have that information, because the postmaster at present is paid on the revenue basis, by a percentage of the receipts, and if he has an assistant, that assistant would be paid by himself, and not by the department. The only additional officer that will be required here is the caretaker. Of course there is a good deal to be said in favour of the policy advocated by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), but there is a good deal to be said the other way. If the policy were generally adopted of erecting post offices in such a manner as to provide a residence for the postmaster, it would mean a good deal of additional expense. The postmaster is quite an important man in a town, and he would want a good deal better residence than would be suitable for the caretaker. It would mean having larger rooms, and a greater number. Our experience has not been that providing a residence for a postmaster in a public building has resulted in a saving to the public.

Mr. EDWARDS. What is the population of Fergus?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The population of Fergus in 1901 was 1,396. I presume it has considerably increased since then.

Mr. EDWARDS. I am not going to enter any strong objection to the passing of this item. But I wish to say that there are many places throughout the country, with a population almost as great as these two towns, where the post office is in a part of the residence of the postmaster himself, and where the revenue runs from $700 up to $1,000 or over. Now, I do not think it is fair to expend $10,000, $15,000, $20,000 in erecting post offices in comparatively small villages such as these, while there are a great many rural sections where the people have a mail service only twice or three times a week, or perhaps where they have no service at all, and have to go several miles for their mail. I think there is too great a tendency to erect buildings, and expend money in villages and towns, that these places are getting more than their share, and I think more of the public money should go to improve postal facilities in rural districts.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up to-morrrow?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) will give, I believe, a general explanation of his estimates, and then the House will take them up in detail.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.05 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 15, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Secretary of State) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 209) to amend the Canada Temperance Act. He said: The proposed amendment to the Canada Temeprance Act relates only to the province of British Columbia. Its purpose is to enable a vote to be taken in that province under the Canada Temperance Act in the same way as that a vote is taken under that Act in any other province. For instance, in the interpretation clause of the Canada Temperance Act, the word 'county' as respects the province of British Columbia is defined to mean an electoral district therein in accordance with the division of the province for the election of members for the House of Commons. The legislature of British Columbia has passed an Act called the Counties Definition Act by which the province is divided into counties for certain purposes and it is proposed that the definition of 'County' in the provincial Act shall be substituted for the present definition of 'County' in the Canada Temperance Act.

Then the Canada Temperance Act, as it stands at present, contains no definition of a city or city municipality and it is proposed to introduce into the Act as far as British Columbia is concerned the definition of city or city municipality, which appears in another provincial Act of British Columbia, called the Municipal Clauses Act.

Part 1 of the Canada Temperance Act sets out the proceedings for bringing part 2 of that Act into force. The commencement of these proceedings is to be by the deposit of a notice and petition in certain designated offices for public examination. So far as the province of British Columbia is concerned, those offices are restricted to the five electoral divisions that existed at the time the Canada Temperance Act was revised. There are at present seven electoral divisions in British Columbia represented by seven gentlemen in this House, and it is proposed to correct that anomaly by the amendment in question.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

STRANGERS IN THE CORRIDORS OF PARLIAMENT.

On the orders of the day being called.

Mr. CROSBY. Mr. Speaker, I have received the very regrettable information that a coloured clergyman who has been seen in the corridors of this building for a few days past, was instructed by the sergeant-at-arms to leave the building, not to frequent the building. We have a large number of coloured people in eastern Canada, a very respectable class of people, and I would like to know if it is correct that this has been done, and if so who is responsible for it. I hope it has not been done, because it would be a great pity that such a course should be adopted when a man is conducting himself respectably and well as I have seen him. I have not the honour of his acquaintance, but I understand he is a clergyman of very high standing in the church.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think it is unfortunate that my hon. friend has not given to the House any more particulars. The House would be loath to believe that the sergeant-at-arms, whose courtesy is well known, would be guilty of any act of discourtesy to any coloured gentleman or anybody else, and at the present time we have to believe that everything was done regularly.

Mr. BARKER. The reverend gentleman referred to is a well known citizen of Hamilton, and a very respectable minister of the Methodist coloured church there. He told us yesterday that he had been soliciting subscriptions for his church as he has been doing in years past, and as a great many other people, ladies and gentlemen, have done, but that he was spoken to by the sergeant-at-arms yesterday in a way that he thought rather rude. He tells me that he at once told the sergeant-at-arms that if there was any objection to his soliciting he would stop at once, but that he claimed the right to be in any of the public portions of this building just the same as any other citizen. Then he says that a policeman was called and he was very much offended at that. I spoke to him and did my best to cool his anger. I told him I thought the better way would be to take no notice of it, and that I was quite sure the sergeant-at-arms could have no intention of offending him because he was coloured. He was very indignant and expressed himself very warmly, saying that though he was coloured he would not submit to be differently treated in any manner from any other person in the country. That is all I know about it, and that is I think all that can be ascertained about it. I would not for a moment intimate that the sergeant-at-arms had any feeling against this gentleman on account of his colour. I believe that an expression of regret from the sergeant-at-arms to the gentleman personally would be the simplest solution.

Mr. SPEAKER. I will have the matter inquired into.

RELEASE OF TWO PRISONERS.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to make some further allusion to the matter which the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) brought to the attention of the House yesterday. I was not aware that the hon. gentleman intended to mention this matter yesterday, and in what I said yesterday about it I was relying entirely on my memory. Of course it is impossible to keep in mind all the details of 2,000 or more similar cases which pass under consideration in the course of a twelve months. Since the House adjourned, however, I have verified my recollection with regard to this matter by referring to the past, and am therefore in a position to speak definitely and accurately at the present time. The article which the hon. gentleman read to the House is taken from the current April number of a journal called the 'Canadian Municipal Journal,' published I think in Montreal. It is entitled 'Where was the pull,' and pursuing the idea suggested by that caption, it proceeds to charge that two prisoners to whom clemency was extended by His Excellency some time ago, were released because their counsel, Mr. T. C. Robinette of Toronto, was a personal friend of mine, and a man who enjoyed with me a considerable amount of personal influence, or 'pull.' Speaking from memory, as I was yesterday, I could not feel absolutely sure that there might not be some memorial or certificate of character among the papers which bore the signature of Mr. Robinette among others. I did not think it was so, but I could not be absolutely positive. I wish now to state that in the first place, Mr. Robinette was not counsel for the prisoners, or either of them, as stated in this article; nor was he concerned in any way whatever in the application for clemency on behalf of these prisoners, and did not in any way intervene in the matter even by so much as signing a petition or certificate as to the character of the men. In short, the fact is that he had no single thing to do with this matter any more than the hon. member who brought this matter to the attention of the House yesterday. Yet this article, in order to found its attack, states categorically :

> Mr. Robinette, K.C., defended the prisoners —though it seems strange that an eminent lawyer should stoop to such a dirty case— and he, it is understood, is a personal friend of the minister.

The prisoners were defended by two gentlemen each of whom is a personal friend of mine quite as much so as Mr. Robinette. The gentlemen are Mr. Geo. Tate Blackstock, K.C., of Toronto, and his partner, Mr. Hugh Rose. These gentlemen are the men who made application for the clemency of the Crown in regard to their clients, the prisoners. The article in question states that these men were convicted for distributing obscene literature and post cards, that evidence was given by two stenographers that they had refused to work for the prisoners, so filthy was the business. After making other statements in regard to the case, the article proceeds :

> The question that is now being asked is, 'Where is the pull?'

Now, I am sorry to say, Mr. Speaker, that this article, like a good many other newspaper articles, relies upon its imagination for its facts. There is not merely inaccuracy in the statements I have referred to, there is what cannot be properly designated otherwise than untruth, in short. It is simply an instance of a newspaper writer fabricating his own news in his own back office. It is not a fact that two stenographers at the trial of these prisoners gave evidence that they had refused to work for the prisoners so filthy was the business. No evidence whatever was given at the trial; the facts were admitted. It was in short a question simply whether upon the admitted facts the offence charged in reality existed. The offence charged had nothing to do with post cards, it was the circulating of obscene books, as they were called, tending to corrupt morals. The prisoners were either partners, or one the proprietor and the other the manager of a business in Toronto for the selling of books. I have forgotten the name under which the business was done; but so far as the papers show, and so far as any report on the matter which I received, shows, the business was the ordinary legitimate business of respectable book selling. But among the volumes which had been sold by these men were such books as English translations of Balzac, of Petronius and other Latin authors, of Brantôme, also a French writer; and undoubtedly in these books, which are classics, and which are to be found on the shelves of our own library or of any other large library, in these books are to be found passages, just as I need not say there are to be found passages in that best of books that we all revere, which, if they were singled out or collected and published together, might properly be described by the word indecent. But the business which these men were carrying on was of the legitimate character I have described. A prosecution was instituted against them. It is not for me to express an opinion of the judiciousness of that prosecution, but a prosecution was instituted against them, not for distributing obscene post cards, for there was nothing of the kind, but for circulating books said to be obscene and tending to corrupt morals. The learned judge, upon the admitted facts of the case, made a conviction and sentenced the two prisoners. In sentencing them he said that it had come within his knowledge, or that he had been told—I have forgotton the exact way in which he worded his remarks—that one of two young women who had been engaged as a typewriter by this firm, had been compelled to abandon the position by reason of the character of the work that she was called upon to do. There was no evidence of it, but that observation was made by the learned judge when passing sentence. There was sent to me an affidavit or statutory declaration from this young woman who said that she was the only woman employee of the business, that she was the stenographer and typewriter engaged by this firm, that she had been with them for some length of time, and that there was not one word of truth in the charge that she had been compelled to abandon her position by reason of the improper character of the work that she was called upon to do. That statement then, as this other statement of fact to which I have adverted, is entirely without foundation in fact.

Now, with regard to the application for clemency, I have only to say this: The application was made by the solicitor whom I have mentioned. I received a large number of letters with regard to the case from prominent men, business men, men of standing not only in Toronto but in other parts of the country. I do not think it would be right that these letters should be made public. There is nothing in them to conceal, but of necessity any communications of this nature are of the most confidential character. The department must obtain information with regard to the reputation of prisoners in the community by all means available and unless all communications were permitted under the seal of confidence there would be an end to the possibility of obtaining information or getting the particulars with regard to each case which are of importance in order that the application for clemency may properly be dealt with. I, for the same reason, think that it would not be right even to mention the names of the writers of such letters. I will say simply that I have had letters with regard to this case and urging clemency from more than 25 people of undoubted respectability and standing in the community, such people as managers of banks in Toronto, clergymen, a bishop of the Protestant faith, three other prominent clergymen, one a leading clergyman in the Methodist church, and business concerns of different characters in the city of Toronto, who are acquainted with the prisoners and knew the style of business that they had been carrying on. I am quite content to hand to my hon. friend, or to any hon. gentleman in the House, a list of the writers of these letters which I have made and which I have before me, but do not wish to put it on 'Hansard.' Just one word more. I have had the advantage, in connection with this matter, of a personal discussion of the case with the Attorney General of the province of Ontario, who, I am proud to be able to say, is another warm personal friend of my own, and who, perhaps, on that account, would have had some 'pull' in the matter. He expressed his opinion to me in conversation with perfect freedom. He did more than that; in his capacity of Attorney General of the province, charged with the responsibility for the administration of criminal justice, and whose representatives prosecute in the province, he wrote me a candid, frank letter in the matter, which is upon file, expressing his own views and his own recommendation in regard to this case. I seek to put no responsibility upon him in the matter, I willingly assume the whole responsibility myself. I gave the advice to His Excellency that these men should be summarily released, because, in my humble judgment, speaking as a lawyer, they were not guilty of the offence with which they were charged.

WATERWAYS TREATY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would have any objection to a motion for the immediate printing of the documents brought down in connection with the Waterways treaty?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In that case I would move:

That Rule 72 be suspended and that the documents brought down in connection with the Waterways treaty be printed forthwith.

Motion agreed to.

HUDSON BAY RAILWAY.

Mr. MacNUTT. I would like to draw the attention of the government to a report appearing in the Montreal 'Gazette' a few weeks ago which, I think, has been referred to before. The article is a follows:

It is reported that government engineers employed in locating the Hudson Bay railroad have been obliged to stop work, having come to an impassable obstacle in the shape of an extensive muskeg, which cannot be bridged. The country may have cause for satisfaction if a physical muskeg keeps it out of the financial muskeg into which the construction of the railway threatens to plunge it.

The 'Globe' a few days ago, had the following statement:

THE HUDSON BAY RAILWAY.

A bottomless bog had been encountered on the survey of the Hudson Bay railway, the Montreal 'Gazette' said in a recent issue. The writer added that if it prevented the building of the railway it would be a public benefit. Whether this attitude towards the Hudson Bay railway represents a majority of the people of the Dominion it is impossible to say, but that it represents a number who have given the subject some attention there can be no question.

This is followed by a long article which opposes the project of building the Hudson Bay railway. I would like to ask, on behalf of the west particularly which is greatly interested in this undertaking, whether the government has any knowledge of any impassable bog having been encountered, or whether it has any intention whatever of abandoning the project of having the Hudson Bay railway constructed in the near future?

Mr. GRAHAM. I had noticed the articles in question to which my hon. friend (Mr. MacNutt) refers, and I communicated with the chief engineer, Mr. Armstrong, in reference to the statment that a bottomless bog or muskeg had been found on the proposed route of the Hudson Bay railway. The chief engineer informs me that no greater obstacle has been encountered than is often encountered in works of this importance, and that the muskeg spoken of is not at all an insuperable barrier to the construction of the road. As to the other point, I may say that the government, so far from having any intention of abandoning the Hudson Bay railway, intends to proceed with it with all possible speed, and having undertaken the construction of that line, I think the country will have confidence that this government will not stop until it completes its work.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—MR. KING.

Mr. KING. My attention has been drawn to the curious circumstance that in the press reports of the debate which took place on Tuesday last on the Combines Bill the speech delivered by myself and the speech delivered by my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) have been confused in one or two journals.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that because they were so much alike?

Mr. KING. I have been credited with the views expressed by my hon. friend, particularly in that part of the debate which dealt with the subject of protection and free trade. I feel that it is only due to the hon. member for Red Deer that I should make it quite plain that for the address which has been attributed to me credit is due to him.

CLEAN CURRENCY.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to ask some questions in reference to articles which have appeared in the Ottawa 'Free Press' on the use of dirty dollar bills. The subject does not concern some of us as much as others. I would first quote one or two items as follows:—

'Free Press.'

Why use dirty Dollar Bills when clean ones may be had from Banks.

Dr. A. R. Pyne, an analyst from Toronto, has examined a well-worn dollar bill and thereon he found no fewer than 2,067,200 microbes.

Truly it was a case of overcrowding. Nobody cares to find out how the doctor managed to make the count, but the fact remains that the dollar bill was very, very dirty.

The other day an American scientist found something over 3,000,000 microbes on a bill.

According to the Toronto 'Telegram' on the bill Dr. Pyne examined there were 243,200 microbes which he styled as 'liquifiers,' 484,400 'non-liquifiers,' and 1,337,600 moulds.

In this connection a banker told The 'Free Press' that the one dollar bills were the dirtiest, the two's next, and so on. The reason, of course, is that the one dollar bills get the most handling.

After all, is'nt it time in this country that we had clean money?

You can always get clean money at the banks, but most times you have to ask for it. If people demanded clean bills when doing business with stores and shops the banks would soon make an extra effort to have better bills.

The system by which the banks obtain the one and two dollar bills from the government is a rather complex one, but for the purpose of this article it may be briefly explained. In the capitals of each province the Finance Department of the Federal Government has officials known as Receivers General. The banks are supposed to send all their old worn-out bills there and in return get back crisp new ones. The Receivers General in turn ship the old ones to Ottawa and they are destroyed in some of the secret recesses of the Finance Department.

In these days the government keeps ahead of any demands the banks may make for clean money. In fact the federal authorities have lots of clean money on hand doing nothing, but there are lots of dirty, filthy bills floating most industriously from hand to hand.

'It is a well-known fact that bank bills are capable of carrying almost anything. Your agitation for cleaner paper money is certainly a good one.'

So said Dr. Higgins, Dominion bacteriologist, to the 'Free Press' regarding the campaign for clean money.

'Paper absorbs moisture,' continued Dr. Higgins, 'and moisture is laden with germs. Some men moisten their fingers with saliva to count bills. If such men be tubercular there is certainly direct infection. The danger is continually increasing.'

Dr. R. Kennedy said: 'Bank bills are certainly a medium for the conveying of disease germs from one person to another. Some of these old and worn-out bills simply reek with germs.'

'It is almost an insult to offer a man in payment of a debt a bill like some of those in circulation,' Dr. A. T. Shillington said. 'There is considerable danger from a sanitary point of view.'

'Soiled and dirty paper money is not fit for use any more than any other filthy thing,' remarked Dr. M. O. Klotz. 'The one dollar bills are the worst, in view of the fact that they are the most handled.'

'People would never think of picking dirty, filthy paper up in the street and putting it in their pockets, but that is just about what they do when they handle some of these dollar bills.'

'We are handing out clean money now,' one city bank manager told the 'Free Press' to-day. 'Your campaign's a good thing.'

'Are you sending all this dirty stuff to the Receiver General in Toronto?' was asked.

'No, the bills were not bad enough for that. We are just sending them to the smaller branches.'

Next time you go to a bank just ask for clean money. It is healthier, cleaner, and it feels more like money.

The teller may say things, but he'll dig down and get 'em for you. The teller has the clean money, and if he has'nt, he ought to get it for you.

'The teller has orders to be on the lookout for badly mutilated or badly soiled bills,' said the accountant of the Canadian Bank of Commerce.

If the bill is torn or tattered, he puts it aside. But if it is whole, out it goes through the wicket, utterly regardless of how filthy it may be.

'Of course, everything that passes from hand to hand very much has any amount of germs on it. Another thing that must be considered is the expense; every new note costs the bank about two cents and a half.

'In spite of considerable expense the Bank of England never issues a note a second time. The new note is issued and when it comes in it is replaced, whether it has been in circulation five minutes or a year.'

The important point is that the bank teller is the worn-out bill censor.

And so on the evidence of medical men goes. Each and every one agrees that there is danger.

'Of course, the public need some educating on this question of clean money,' he went on. 'We don't have to have dirty bills. If people only demand clean ones, they can get them. The storekeeper will then get after his banker, and the bankers will get after us, and we can keep well ahead of the game.

1. What is the government doing to assist in getting clean money into circulation? 2. Is there any standard under which bills are said to be unfit for use? 3. Has the government enough clean bills on hand to replace the dirty money now in use? 4. And if so, how far does the government keep ahead of the demand of the banks for clean money. I understand that one of the main reasons for the use of dirty money is that on each new bill issued to the bank there is a small charge of 2½ cents.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry the Minister of Finance is not here to answer my hon. friend. We are bringing in a pretty large budget this year to issue a good deal of clean money, and whether it is clean or not clean I have to say to my hon. friend that in this matter he will have to take the good with the bad as usual and take the bills with the microbes upon them.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. If that was a one-dollar bill that was examined, how many microbes would be on a fifty-dollar bill?

RAILWAY COMMITTEE REPORT.

Mr. SPROULE. Why has not the report of the Railway Committee agreed to last Wednesday been presented to the House?

Mr. GUTHRIE. The report has been prepared, but I have been asked to hold it over until Monday, as the promoter of a Bill particularly mentioned in the report is anxious to make some motion in the House when the report is presented and his motion is not ready.

Mr. SPROULE. Is such a request from a private member sufficient to justify the chairman of any committee withholding the report from day to day?

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Monday is not the day to present it, as few members are here in the morning.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I have no objection to holding it over until Tuesday. I understand the report affects only one Bill, and as no public interest will suffer, and as the report is that the Bill be not proceeded with, I can see no objection to Tuesday.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like a ruling from some authority as to whether reports from committees can be held over at the convenience of any member.

SUPPLY—ADMINISTRATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair to go into Supply, as my estimates are to be taken up in the committee, I would ask the patience of the House while I make a slight preliminary statement of the operations and the work of the Agricultural Department. Many questions have been asked by members during the session, and it will be more convenient for the members if I make a general statement in connected form free from the interruptions which necessarily take place in the Committee of Supply.

I am glad to say that, as a rule, my department has received very generous treatment at the hands of the House of Commons. The members have taken a great interest in the work of the department and shown a legitimate and laudable desire to know and to understand that work. I have also to say that the Committee of Supply have been generous in the way in which they have consented to vote the necessary sums of money to carry on the work of the department. I must confess that on this occasion I am asking parliament to grant me larger sums than have ever before been asked or spent in regard to agriculture.

I feel that some slight explanation is necessary to justify this request on my part. I do not wish to burden my remarks with any number of figures, but I would like to draw attention to the fact of a very great increase in the expenditure in regard to agriculture in Canada, and I would just read one or two figures to show this. I do not propose to-day to deal at all with any subjects which are not really of a purely agricultural character, and I will therefore allude simply to the items of that description and no other. I will show what has been effected. Here are the estimates of parliament for 1896 and 97 and for the present year 1909-10. For experimental farms in that year 1896-7, parliament voted $79,000. I asked last year and obtained from parliament $153,000 for the same purpose. For the printing and distribution of farm bulletins and pamphlets in 1896-7 parliament granted $4,000; last year we spent $8,000. For dairy in 1896-7, we spent $30,000; last year $90,000. For cold storage in 1896-7, we spent $20,000; last year $75,000. For health of animals in 1896-7, we spent $22,000; last year $250,000. In 1896-7, we spent $7,000 for the aid of agricultural societies in the Northwest Territories. Since the provinces have been established there, that work is left to the provincial governments and consequently last year we had no vote for that purpose. But in addition to the votes we had in 1896-7 for certain objects in connection with which I have given the figures for this last year, we have had in addition during last year for fumigation stations, $5,000, which was not dealt with at all when I came into office; for the seed division, $49,000, for which there was no appropriation when I came into office in 1896-7; for live stock, $52,000, for which there was no appropriation at that time; for Canned Meats and Foods Acts administration, $110,000, for which there was no appropriation when I came into office; for tobacco stations, $5,000, for which there was then no appropriation; for the Rome institute of agriculture, $10,000. Now, taking the total of the expenditure for purely agricultural subjects in the department for 1896-7, I find there was an appropriation of $162,000. For this year which was closed, for the same objects and for purely agricultural objects, there was an appropriation of $807,000.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. And not much more work was done.

Mr. FISHER. A change of this kind, an increase of this kind certainly requires justification, and for that reason I want to say a few words in regard to the agricultural industry and interests in this country. I have not the figures for the census of 1896. At that time there was only a decennial census, one in 1891 and one in 1901. But lately we have been taking census work especially in connection with agriculture much more frequently, and the result is that I have these statistics of agricultural products in Canada for the year 1909. I will, however, give as a comparison a few figures from the census of 1891, the census of 1901, and the reports of 1909. In the first place, I would say, with regard to the acreage of land in Canada which was under cultivation in 1891, that there were fifteen and a half million acres under cultivation. In 1901, there were nineteen and three-quarters million acres, and I think I am justified in saying that in 1896 there were in the neighbourhood of seventeen millions acres of land under cultivation.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Speaker, does the hon. minister——

Mr. FISHER. Will the non. member (Mr. Armstrong) be kind enough to wait until I have finished my statement, and then I will be glad to answer all questions.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I rise to a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Is the hon. minister entitled to quote a lot of figures and statistics which no doubt will be distributed in hundreds of thousands throughout the country when we are not in possession of these figures?

Mr. FISHER. There is no question of privilege in the matter. I am going to make a statement, which I hope will illumine and inform the hon. gentleman along with other people. Of course, if he does not wish to be informed or illumined, he has his recourse.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It is a very unusual way.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it is too serious to pass over. In my judgment it is eminently a question of privilege. It is the right of any member of this House to ask a question so as to get information. The hon. member (Mr. Armstrong) only asks whether he had a right to speak on a question of privilege. I ask the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. FISHER. I have just the same right as any other member.

Mr. SPEAKER. Any hon. member has a right to speak to a point of order.

Mr. FISHER. I submit that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) did not rise to ask a question connected with what I was saying. The hon. member rose to ask a question connected with ulterior and future intentions and objects. I beg leave to say that having the floor, no man has a right to interrupt me except with my permission. I politely and quietly asked that I might be permitted to make a statement without interruption, because in days gone by, in explaining the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, I have found it impossible in the Committee of the Whole to make a consecutive statement which was understandable to the members of the House.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Nobody else does.

Mr. FISHER. But I wish to do that on this occasion so that the members of the House may approach the work of the Agriculture Department in committee with a better knowledge and understanding. I stated then, and I state again, that when I come to committee I will be glad to give all the information necessary or possible. I only ask that hon. gentlemen wait until I have finished my remarks before asking questions.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. My object in asking the question was this: The hon. minister has quoted a lot of figures which we have not in our possession, and without which we will not be able to discuss the matter intelligently. Unless we can ask questions as the minister goes along, I do not see how we can criticise the statistics he is placing on 'Hansard.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House a minister having the floor can decline to permit any person to ask a question. There is no doubt about that. But it is a most unusual course for a minister to take, and I do not think he will find that it will facilitate his work so much as he may imagine. But if he sees fit to adopt that extremely unusual course, I do not know that there is any way of compelling him to do otherwise. Where figures are given, and where a statement is not altogether clear, it has been the invariable practice in this House for any speaker to submit to questions in order that his remarks might be understood. If the minister does not see fit to adopt that course, perhaps we will have to have some little delay until his speech is printed.

Mr. SPROULE. It has been the common practice in this House for any member to ask a question upon anything that is being said, if he does not understand what is being said. I desire to have the ruling of the Chair so that we may know what are the privileges of parliament.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is a well recognized rule that when a member is in possession of the floor he cannot be deprived of it without his consent, unless some question of order or of privilege should arise. It is a question of policy for the minister to say whether he is to answer questions or not. But, legally speaking, he cannot be interrupted except on a point of order or a question of privilege.

Mr. FISHER. I did not understand the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) to ask me a question in regard to the figures I was quoting. I understood him to make a statement that I was making a speech for an ulterior object. If I misinterpreted or misunderstood him, I am quite willing to be corrected. But that was my understanding of his interruption. I may say without any offence, it is my opinion, which I give for what it is worth, that I have noticed of late an inclination to interrupt in a way that prevents that continuity of statement which, under certain circumstances I consider to be advisable and necessary, and I do not wish, I confess, to yield to that kind of interruption. If anything I have said is not clear to any hon. gentleman opposite, I am quite willing to make it clear, and if any question is put to me for that purpose, I should be glad to answer it. But, when a question is put to me to elucidate information which is not contained in the statement I am making, I consider it to be entirely beside the mark, and I do object to be interrupted for that purpose. I have a right to place the information I have before the committee, and other hon. gentlemen have the same right to state what they wish to put before the committee or the House. I think each speaker ought to be the judge of what he wishes to put before the House, and ought not to be interrupted and obliged to go on with extraneous subjects.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. My object was to ask questions along the lines on which the minister was talking. For instance, he was giving some figures as to the land that is under cultivation throughout the whole of the Dominion. I would like to have had the privilege of asking him to give the amount of land under cultivation in the different provinces. We know that the west is being opened up to a great extent; and we in the older provinces know, take the province of Ontario for instance, that they are not being developed to anything like the extent the minister might lead the country to believe from the figures he is quoting.

Mr. FISHER. I do not care to have a speech of his interpolated in what I am saying. I do not think it is advisable that that should be done. I am not going to cast any reflections on anybody, but I do not think that it is a fair or proper rule to adopt in this House. If my hon. friend had said to me when I had finished my statement, have you the figures of the different provinces, I would have said to him: No, and that would have settled the matter. But to be interrupted in what I am saying is not in my opinion either fair or desirable in the interests of the public business of the House. I was saying, when I was interrupted, that I think I am fairly well acquainted with the area of land which was under cultivation in Canada in the years 1896-7, that it was in the neighbourhood of 17,000,000 acres. I find, however, that this last year there were something over 30,000,000 acres under cultivation. Of what my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) says, I am fully aware, and I am quite ready to state in general terms that there is no doubt that out of the increase, a very large proportion, perhaps the largest proportion, I will say the largest proportion, is in what we commonly call the northwest. But I would point out to him, and to other members of the House, that that is the one chief reason why it is necessary to increase the expenditure on agriculture in Canada. If we were simply dealing with old provinces, if we were simply dealing with well known conditions, if we were dealing with what had gone before, and there was nothing more to do, it would not be so necessary to increase our expenditure or to increase our organization as it is when the new development of agriculture is under new conditions and in connection with new lands. Therefore, what I stated a few minutes ago as showing why it is necessary to spend more money to-day than it was when this government came into office, in 1896, is more than justified by the fact that the development of agriculture is chiefly in the northwest. Now, my hon. friends opposite, I may say, are a little difficult to please. I did not intend to try to make any statement or any animadversion upon anybody. I had wished to make my statement without any boasting and without any comparisons between parties or anything of that kind. My hon. friends opposite, however, seem to resent what I am doing. I find it very difficult indeed to please them. If I did not do this, if I did not spend money I am attacked, and the government is attacked, because we do not spend enough money on agriculture and do not do enough for agriculture. If I undertake to make propositions in favour of agriculture, or for the benefit of agriculture, I am told, not infrequently, that I am doing it simply for the purpose of getting some more patronage, some more opportunities to appoint friends to office, and so on and so on. I may say to my hon. friends that that will not in any way debar or prevent me from doing what I consider to be in the interests of the country. I have spoken of the various measures I have been able to carry through with the good support of my friends in the House, sometimes, very frequently with the full opposition of gentlemen opposite, although I do not remember at the moment of a single instance in which they divided the House or put themselves on record as having opposed the propositions I have made in the interests of agriculture. It is true that they may delay the passing through of certain measures: it is true that they may nag at me and talk and talk, but when the time comes to put the thing through, they are obliged to acquiesce in it, because they know that the great mass of agricultural electors in this country are in favour of it and are going to support the government who vote for it. They know that if they place themselves on record against it, they would incur the opposition of the great agricultural electorate of Canada. Now, Sir, enough of this.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friends opposite may applaud if they like. I say enough of it, because I think I have given them enough. I say enough of it, because although I am quite ready to go on and fight them as long as they want on this question, or any other question that might come up, I do not want to fight if I can help it. I am of a peaceable disposition, and it is only when I am obliged to fight in the interests of the people I represent, that I undertake to do the fighting, and then, I think, I am fairly well able to maintain the principles of those I represent. There is one thing in regard to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Before the minister proceeds, I wish to ask the Speaker whether the Minister of Agriculture, or any member of this House, has a right to discuss estimates on going into supply?

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no question I know of except questions that are on the order paper that cannot be discussed on going into supply. The grievance before supply is an old established principle. Unless a question is on the order paper it can be discussed.

Mr. FISHER. The Minister of Finance says I might have a grievance against the opposition. I do not want to do that for as a general rule they treat me pretty well. They sometimes try to exhaust my patience, but I have a good fund of it and generally they do not succeed. They sometimes delay the good things I am proposing in the interests of agriculture, but in the end I get my way and the agriculturists reap the benefit of what the government is doing, and I have no quarrel with them. You know it is the man who wins who can afford to be generous, and I appreciate that the gentlemen opposite, who are losing year after year, more each year as the years go on, show a little irritation and impatience, while we on this side of the House are strong and therefore we can afford to be forbearing and let them have their fun.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Dear, dear.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friends are evidently less interested in agriculture and the people connected with it than they are in their own amusement and their party work in the House. The Department of Agriculture while it has to-day a good deal to do with agriculture, at one time had not much to do with agriculture. In 1867, although it was called the Department of Agriculture, there was absolutely no agricultural work pure and simple going on in the department. The department had under its control immigration, census and statistics, patents, trade marks, designs and copyright, and quarantine, but nothing of an absolutely agricultural character. I suppose that the reason why all these things were put under the department was the simple fact, deplorable as it was, that there was nothing doing in agriculture on the part of the government and the minister, having nothing to do in the way of agriculture, was given all these other things to attend to.

I want now to please my hon. friends opposite by telling them that the Conservative government in 1885 and a Conservative member in this House on 1885 made the first move towards getting the Department of Agriculture to do something for agriculture in Canada. In 1885, Mr. Gigault, the member for Rouville, an earnest, studious man who appreciated the interests of the people whom he represented, moved for a committee to consider the agricultural industry of Canada. The committee sat—I had the honour of being a member of it myself—and for a long time we did a great deal of hard work in obtaining information as to what other countries were doing for agriculture. The report of that committee recommended the establishment of experimental farms and the result was that Hon. Mr. Carling, then Minister of Agriculture in 1886, introduced a Bill to establish experimental farms. This was really the first purely agricultural work which the Department of Agriculture attempted to do since the confederation of this Dominion. All honour to the government of that day, all honour to Mr. Gigault who instituted the work, who brought forward the question and with a great deal of labour, thought and study presented a report of the greatest value to this House. I say again all honour to the government and all honour especially to the present Sir John Carling, then Minister of Agriculture, because I know that in doing what he then did, in the institution of experimental stations in Canada, he met with but a lukewarm assistance or support from his colleagues or from the House. He, however, carried it through successfully and he was fortunate, as well as wise in the choice of the gentleman whom he chose to carry out that work. He called to his assistance Mr. William Saunders, of London, now known all over Canada, and I might say all over the agricultural world as Professor Saunders, Director of Experimental Farms for Canada, and gave him an opportunity to study, work out and establish an organization of experimental farms and stations in Canada which would do something for the progress of agriculture in Canada. Today the work of our experimental farms is a monument to the foresight, the skill, the energy and study of Professor Saunders. Our present organization is on exactly the same lines although somewhat amplified. Professor Saunders has done a work which is recognized and acknowledged by everybody to have been of inestimable advantage to the agriculture of the country. The system is a monument to that gentleman which ought to last and ought to be recognized by everybody in Canada.

In 1890, Hon. Mr. Carling appointed a dairy commissioner in the person of Professor Robertson. Professor Robertson was first attached to the staff at the farms, but after about four years he resigned his position at the farm, was appointed dairy and agricultural commissioner, especially for outside general agricultural work, and development in the country. This was a new departure again in the Agricultural Department and one of the greatest value to the country. Professor Robertson started in on what I may call an educative campaign all through Canada. He was able with his extraordinary faculty of clear exposition, with his extraordinary power of attracting people to him and to his teaching, to arouse the enthusiasm and interest of the people in the country towards agriculture in a way that probably was never equalled in any country and certainly never in Canada. He went on with this work from year to year and in 1896, when the government changed and this government came into office, he was doing this work.

I must go back a few years to the establishment of the veterinary branch of the department. Many years ago there was an outbreak of contagious diseases among animals in the United States, and in 1868, the first order in council was passed prohibiting the importation of cattle from the United States. An Act was passed in 1869 affecting the contagious diseases of animals and in 1876 quarantine stations were established at Halifax, St. John and Quebec, and Dr. McEachran, of Montreal, was appointed head of the service. The Doctor did not give up his own private practice and gave a portion only of his time to the service. This went on until 1902, when I found it was necessary that we should have the entire time and attention of such an officer. Dr. McEachran was not willing to give up his private practice and therefore, retired from that executive position and Dr. Rutherford was appointed head of the veterinary staff with his residence and office here in Otawa, giving his whole time and attention to that work. I may say that Dr. McEachran did not have his office in Ottawa, and the secretary of the department attended practically to all the routine work. I am not going into the details of that now, because I want first to say a word or two of the general work of the department.

In the general development of the work which has been going on, the farmers of the country have taken a tremendous interest, and they have been stimulated to study their business much more than they used to do. With the exception perhaps of a few live stock men of Ontario who have always been in the forefront of agricultural progress on the continent of America, the great mass of the farmers of Canada were evolving what I may call a very elementary agriculture into the scientific work of the cultivation of the soil and the management of stock on farms. The work of the department has been mostly of the nature of instruction, for the purpose of rousing their interest and giving them information. In this connection I would like to make a statement as to the amount of literature and bulletins that we send out from the Agricultural Department to the farmers. In 1907 we sent out 534,000 bulletins or leaflets in English, and 238,000 in French, or a total of 772,000 pieces of literature distributed to individual farmers over the country, not in bundles, not in bulk, but addressed to individual farmers. In 1908 the quantity dropped a little, to 726,000 pieces. This year, however, I am satisfied, without knowing the figures, but by reason of the fact that our originization has been improved, there has been a material increase in the quantity sent out.

Now, having thus given a general outline of the work, I want to say a few words in regard to the veterinary branch. I spoke a few moments ago of the establishment in 1876, of quarantine stations at Halifax, St. John and Quebec. In 1883 a station was established at Point Edward, Ont., for the purpose of dealing with importations from the United States. In 1884 another one was established at Emerson in Manitoba, and there was an arrangement made for an inspection of animals coming in from the United States along the northwestern boundary. Five years later, in 1889, another quarantine station was established at Victoria, B.C. There was an outbreak in 1884 of the foot and mouth disease which was dealt with at the quarantine in Levis, but it never spread outside the quarantine, and it was occasioned by the importation of animals from the old country which were diseased when they landed. In 1885 we had the first case of hog cholera which no doubt came in from the United States where that disease had been very prevalent. In 1890 quarantine stations were established at Manitou and Deloraine, in Manitoba, in 1891 and onward other stations were established in the west. In 1902, Dr. McEachran resigned, and Dr. Rutherford was appointed chief veterinary inspector for the Dominion, with head office at Ottawa. Later in 1904, Dr. Rutherford's title was changed to Veterinary Director General.

I wish to say a word or two in regard to the general work of that branch. Originally the branch was only intended to work at the frontier to protect Canada from the introduction of animal diseases from abroad, As time went on the difficulty of dealing with that disease from a local standpoint and under provincial laws, has been growing, and we have found it necessary to deal with it from the Dominion point of view. The Animal Contagious Diseases Act applies to the whole Dominion, regulations made under it apply to the whole Dominion, and by reason of the fact that there is a constant passage of animals from one province to the other, and constant danger that disease may spread beyond the confines of any particular province, it has been found absolutely necessary to deal with this disease on broad Dominion lines. The work has continued to increase, and I am glad to say most successfully in some respects. The hog cholera which came in from the United States into the southwestern part of Ontario, and which, at the time I came into the office, was very virulent, continued for some years afterwards without much abatement, but it has now been practically stamped out. Some seven or eight years ago we were paying on an average something like $30,000 a year as compensation for the slaughter of hogs. The last two or three years the expense has gone down, one year as low as $2,000. I think last year in consequence of one particular herd of great value being slaughtered, the sum went up a little; but the average for the last few years has been well under $5,000. We have not completely stamped it out and do not expect to, but we have it pretty well within control, and whenever there is an outbreak we are able to localize it and prevent its spreading. There was an old disease called the Pictou cattle disease which, for a long time, was a source of great trouble in the counties of Pictou, Guysboro and Antigonish, N.S., and notwithstanding our efforts, it spread a little into Prince Edward Island. Years ago, in the early part of my administration, and before then, we were spending on that disease a few thousand dollars every year in paying compensation for slaughtered animals. The disease did not increase to any great extent, but it did not decrease at all. When Dr. Rutherford came into office he assured me that he was satisfied the disease was altogether due to the eating by the animals of a certain local weed commonly called the stink weed, or ragwort. Exhaustive experiments were undertaken to find out whether that was the case, and after several years of investigation it was absolutely proved that that weed was the cause of the disease, and we refused any longer to pay compensation for the death of those animals, because it had become very evident that the existence of the disease was due to the failure of the farmers to eradicate that weed. They naturally replied to us, how can we eradicate that weed? We immediately set to work to try experiments with sheep on a farm in the neighborhood of Antigonish, and we showed clearly in the course of three seasons that the pasturing of sheep on a piece of land infested with that weed, would destroy it and absolutely clean the land of it within a few years. The result is that to-day we have been able——

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am sorry to interrupt the minister, I did not know that he was dealing with weeds. Before he had concluded his remarks on quarantine I wanted to ask him if he would be good enough to tell the House what he had done for the removal of the cattle embargo, or whether anything had been done.

Mr. FISHER. Really, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I think this is a must unfair interruption. I am speaking of a matter of interest which my hon. friend, being from Ontario, may think of no consequence, but which is of great consequence to the provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, in which, over a considerable area of country, large numbers of farmers are seriously hampered in their operations, and have been for years past. Why my hon. friend should get up and interrupt me in talking of that subject by a question with regard to the cattle quarantine in England, is beyond my comprehension, and it is an evidence of the state of affairs I spoke of a few moments ago, showing that the hon. gentlemen opposite either intentionally or by arrant stupidity, are delaying the progress of public business.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman's expression is a little too severe.

Mr. FISHER. I am happy to withdraw the remark, it is evident that hon. gentlemen opposite do not like arrant stupidity.

Mr. LENNOX. I think the statement of the minister is very ill-timed. We have been listening attentively and courteously to his remarks and I think his statement comes with very bad grace.

Mr. FISHER. I am not speaking of unkindness; I was only remarking what I said—

Mr. LENNOX. I did not use the word 'unkindness.'

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for East Lambton just now stopped me and the interruption he made was entirely out of place. The opposition undertake to interrupt in the most unnecessary and ill-judged way asking questions about one subject when I am discussing another, and questions which are entirely irrelevant to the matter under discussion.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think the minister is most unfair. When I rose I said that I thought he had concluded his remarks on quarantine, and surely, when he was discussing the question of quarantine, it was the proper time to ask him whether the cattle embargo had been removed, and if not, why not. It was merely a straight question, and it was not innetded to be harmful in any way.

Mr. FISHER. I can only say that I cannot understand what the relevancy of that question is to the question under discussion—the Pictou cattle disease. It was put to me in the middle of a sentence, and before I had concluded my remarks upon that subject. My hon. friend now contends that it was because he feared I was going to leave that branch without dealing with the cattle quarantine in England. But, he asked me a question entirely and absolutely irrelevant to the remarks I was then making. I have no objection to fair questions with regard to the subject upon which I am speaking. If my hon. friend had asked me a question with regard to the Pictou cattle disease, I would have been glad to have given him any information and endeavoured to answer him as well as I could, but to interpolate a question about the cattle quarantine in England in the middle of a sentence while dealing with the Pictou cattle disease is to do something which is absolutely irrelevant and interrupts and prevents the continuity of the statement which I desire to make. My hon. friend now says that he had not any evil intention and I accept his statement, but I want to ask him not to repeat that kind of thing.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The minister was talking about seeds and the sheep picking them up.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman shows how little he understood what I was saying. I was pointing out that a certain disease was due to the eating of a weed by the cattle, that farmers, as a result of our proof that that was the cause of the disease, asked how they could get rid of the weed, and I pointed out that we had been able, by a series of experiments, to show how they could get rid of the weed. I will deal with weeds at a later stage in regard to the Seed Control Act and the branch of the department having that matter in charge. But this is a question entirely of animals and not of weeds. It was the weed only with reference to the disease in the animals that I was discussing.

Mr. SPROULE. If there was no relevancy in the question put by my hon. friend from East Lambton, is it not a fact that the embargo is due to diseases in cattle, and the minister is dealing with diseases in cattle which would exclude them from England or the United States? Then, if a question is asked at that particular time, under the impression that the minister is passing to another subject, how can the question be irrelevant?

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman says that he was under the impression that I was passing to another subject, and yet he put his question to me in the middle of a sentence. If the hon. gentleman had only reflected a moment, he would have known that the Pictou cattle disease has nothing to do with the cattle embargo, that the embargo placed on cattle going from Canada is from fear of pleuro pneumonia and foot and mouth disease, and only in regard to these diseases.

Mr. SPROULE. Who knew what the Pictou cattle disease was?

Mr. STAPLES. Have I the minister's permission to ask a question of him?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, in regard to this subject.

Mr. STAPLES. I will try to stick to the subject, seeing that the minister is so touchy this morning. If the minister is out for a scrap, he will probably get it before he is done. Has he not had that disease fully explained in a pamphlet, and has he not issued it throughout the districts affected by the disease?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. STAPLES. Then, what is the object of the minister, at this late stage of the session, taking up the time going into this question, or trying to formulate it in a speech when it has already been dealt with and the facts put in the hands of the agriculturists of the country?

Mr. FISHER. Well, my hon. friend will have to answer that for himself. From the way in which questions are put to me, it is very evident that a good deal of repetition has to be indulged in to inform hon. gentlemen opposite, and perhaps somebody else. But, I intend to go on with my remarks.

Mr. CAMPBELL. May I ask a question also?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, if it is relevant.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly, it will be, or I would not ask it, Sir. The question

I would prefer is this: Has this weed that products this disease any relation at all to the Loco?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does the minister know what the Loco is?

Mr. FISHER. I am not quite certain that I do.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, I will tell him.

Mr. FISHER. I do not wish to get the information from the hon. member. I will find out from a better authority.

Mr. SPEAKER. The minister certainly has the floor, and the rule of the House is that he cannot be interrupted except to order or privilege. If he wishes to answer a question, it is merely through courtesy.

Mr. FISHER. In addition to the Pictou cattle disease, which we have been able to deal with, and in regard to which we have been able to reach pretty fairly accurate conclusions, we have had a good deal to do with sheep scab, and I am glad to be able to say that by careful observation, watching, quarantine and dipping, when the disease existed, we were able a little while ago to notify the United States authorities that there was no sheep scab in Canada. That was of great value to the country, because two years ago the American authorities put on a quarantine against Canadian sheep going into the United States. That was of great importance to our sheep breeders, because one of the best markets for our sheep is in the United States, and the quarantine practically shut them out of that market. The sheep breeders of the country approached me and urged that we should deal with the American authorities and secure the abrogation of the quarantine. We made representations, and after a careful discussion of the question and satisfactory proof being submitted to the American authorities that no sheep scab existed in Canada, and that we had a comple organization which would enable us to deal promptly and effectively with any outbreak which might occur, the American authorities, some months ago, removed the quarantine to the great relief of the sheep breeders and dealers of Canada.

There is another disease which has been brought to the attention of the public just lately, which has not been altogether finally dealt with, and that is rabies or hydrophobia. The question has been up in the House recently, and I need only touch upon it as being a part of the work of that branch of the department. In conjunction with the local authorities, there being some question as to the respective powers and authority, we agreed simultaneously, and have been able to issue orders in regard to this disease. The local authorities, having local officers all over the country, undertook to enforce the regulatians. I understand that the result has been the arrestation of the spread of the disease. It was an unfortunate accident that a certain dog came across the bridge at Niagara and introduced the disease into Ontario. The spread was extraordinary, and we have been able by our organization throughout the country to follow up, and locate practically all the animals which were likely to have been affected. I am glad to say today that by the effective work of the local authorities, the authorities of the government of Ontario in whom the hon. gentlemen are very much interested, working under the regulations issued by my department, the disease has been reduced, the dangers have been confined, and I believe that in a short time the disease will be stamped out, and we will be able to reach the position which we occupied a few years ago in which it could be said that there was no hydrophobia in Canada. In connection with our other veterinary work in 1904, we established at the Experimental Farm here a biological laboratory in which specimens of diseased animals or meats can be examined biologically by experts, and a decision come to in regard to this and other diseases. This was an absoulte necessity if we were to carry on the work so as to be sure of our ground, while costing a considerable amount this laboratory has enabled us to work on correct lines, and effectually and to be sure whenever we take steps of enforcement. We had a notable example a while ago which I think is very gratifying to all Canadians of the efficiency of this branch of the department. That was in the case of an outbreak of foot and mouth disease in the New England States. As the result of that outbreak, the American government quarantined the New England and some other states, New York and Michigan, where there were also outbreaks of the disease, and the imperial government in England forbade the entry of any animals into England that came from these states or from ports in these states. We immediately put quarantine on the boundary line, and shut out all communications, not only the passage of animals, but of hides, and of cars without thorough cleaning, and of everything that could possibly bring in the disease. The result was that notwithstanding the long contiguity of territory, over 2,000 miles with territory on one side in which the disease existed, and on the other side the Canadian flocks, and herds among which not one case of disease occurred. We were able to guard our people from the terrible loss that came to the Americans on the other side of the line in consequence of this disease and to keep open the English market to our cattle.

We have lately had the question of tuberculosis before us. This is an important question, and is agitating the whole people of the country. We have done a little towards aiding the spread of knowledge in regard to it, and we have tried to see what can be done to decrease bovine tuberculosis in the country. We have refrained from taking drastic steps which might not be effective, and which would entail loss and stoppage of trade. At the same time we have been investigating, and trying to find out a method by which this disease could be dealt with without undue harshness or causing undue loss to the farmers in the slaughtering of animals, or undue stoppage of trade. Just lately we have arranged with the veterinary association of the North American continent that a committee should be established to consider and investigate methods which might be employed, in the interests of all classes of the community, to stamp out this disease. It is a most important, complex, and difficult subject, but one the importance of which I consider justifies our taking great pains, devoting to it great study, and considerable money. I am glad to know that the North American Association of Veterinary Surgeons named Dr. Rutherford the chief veterinary officer of the Dominion of Canada, as chairman of that committee, and he has taken the lead in that investigation work.

A word in regard to glanders. This disease in the old days was hardly known in Canada. There were a few sporadic cases, but some years ago it began to be dangerous. For a few years the efforts to restrain it were ineffectual, and I was obliged to ask a vote to pay compensation, and to order the slaughter of all dangerous animals. This was granted, and a large sum was placed at my disposal. I am glad to say the work has been going on very satisfactorily and successfully. We have been able to show a decided decrease in glanders which is proved by the fact that while in the first year we undertook to pay compensation we paid out about $150,000, this year we paid only a little over $40,000 in compensation, and yet the organization, and system is such that we are to-day better able to reach all cases that are reported or suspected, and I am satisfied that the proportion as between about $150,000 a year and $40,000 a year in compensation, is a fair showing of the proportion of the disease in the country.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Have the department had any complaints with regard to horses being shot by its officials that were not infected with glanders? I mention that because a drunken employee of this government came up to my riding, and shot several horses which after death were examined by a competent man residing there, and proved to have no disease at all outside of a little cold. Your official was drunk of course.

Mr. FISHER. If my hon. friend would give me the name of the official who was drunk on duty in that way, that official would cease to be my official in a very few minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I can very easily do that.

Mr. FISHER. Any official of the Department of Agriculture who is drunk on duty will receive a very short shrift from the minister or the heads of the department. Occasionally complaints of the improper slaughter of animals have reached the department. Questions have arisen. It is natural that people who own animals that they do not think are diseased, should feel impatient at the idea of their slaughter and at only getting two-thirds of the value of the animal. These complaints are not infrequent. They are always investigated, and dealt with on their merits by the chief officers of the department. The particular case my hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) refers to, I have no knowledge of, and I cannot give him any answer just now except what I have stated. But if it is the case that the man was drunk on duty, I will see that he ceases to be an officer of my department.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will be very glad to give the hon. minister all particulars.

Mr. FISHER. One question more, and it is a pretty important one for the stock men of Canada. That is the establishment of what is known as Canadian records or herd books or stud books of Canada. The live stock men of Canada and of the United States evidently depend largely upon what I might call joint books for recording and registering pedigrees of their animals and securing their certificates of pure breeding. These books in general have been managed in the United States and in the interests of the associations of that country. The breeders in Canada of pure bred stock have been rather impatient for a long time under this, and in some instances have suffered no doubt. Some time ago, in connection with the live stock interests in Canada, representations were made asking me to establish in Canada, Canadian records for the registration of pure stock. It was a difficult and involved question. I did not feel it was proper and right for the government to undertake the management of such records, and therefore I suggested to the leading stock men that if we were to establish a committee under their management, to establish and run an office of the kind, I would give them office room and the necessary stationery, printing and so on, and aid them by a grant of money. I am glad to say that this has been running now for a number of years, I think about five or six years, and that while the work is not done altogether in a way that is entirely satisfactory, it has been a great boon to the stock men. The committee have entire charge of it, and they have recently come to an arrangement with the officers of my department to make certain improvements and rearrangements which I trust and believe will lead to the satisfactory carrying on of this work. The live stock men of the country are unanimous in saying that the result of its being done, I wont say under government command, but under government patronage, if I may use that term, has been a help to them. The result has been that abroad, those records have been recognized in a way they could not have been recognized, if they had been run by private associations or individual people. There has also been a clear definition of such registers or pedigrees which are eligible for registration in Canada, and this has been a thing which has saved a large number of men who have bought what they supposed to be pure bred animals from abroad, introduced them into Canada, and after using them for breeding purposes for some time have found that the produce could not be registered under the recognized and well established books. When anything now comes into Canada and applies for free entry under the Customs Act, as a pure bred animal the register and pedigree are examined by this office and the owner or the purchaser is notified as to whether the animal is so registered and that it has such a pedigree as will be recognized in the Canadian book. This is a safeguard to the breeders of pure bred stock in the country which I think is of great value and which the stock breeders are recognizing as a great step in advance. It is costing more money to do it, but I think the results justify it, and I am very glad to say in this connection that the men themselves are able to run an office of this kind without interference and only with the assistance of the department.

Mr. HERRON. I would like to ask the minister a question. Have the customs officers at your ports been supplied with full instructions regarding the quality of animals and the certificates that are necessary to show what books the animals are registered in? There are several places along the border line of our country, and if these are not strictly kept people might be imposed upon to the detriment of the country.

Mr. FISHER. A list of the associations or books which are to be recognized is in the Customs Department and has been sent by the department I believe to every collector of customs in the country, and any pedigree which comes in and is presented to them, but which is not endorsed or signed by the properly qualified officials of this association is rejected. We have had communications and discussions with the Customs Department, and I know those instructions have been sent out from the Customs Department to their collectors all over the Dominion, and I have no doubt the collectors are carrying out their instructions. I would like to point out that in addition to this work that I have just sketched we have a live stock division, which is connected with the veterinary division, from the fact that Dr. Rutherford, who is the head of the veterinary division is also live stock commissioner. We are dealing in that division with live stock matters generally, and we are doing interesting work all over the country. We are supplying judges to the fairs, when requested by the authorities of the fairs, and the judges who have been sent have met with universal acceptance. They are chosen simply for their qualifications with respect to the stock they are to judge. They are not permanent officers of the department, as a general rule, but are picked out from well known stock men and without regard to anything at all except that they are recognized as judges of the character of stock they are called on to judge. In this connection I may say these men are paid their travelling expenses by us, but their entertainment at the places they are sent to, is expected to be provided by the association with which they are dealing. The live stock branch has also been editing some books, which I think are of value and which have met with great acceptance on the part of the public. Hon. gentlemen will remember that a few days ago, a book on the swine industry, a report of the commission sent to Denmark, was laid on the table. Since that day, I have had many requests from members of the House, for copies for distribution. My reply to each and every one has been that we had a long list of people to whom those publications were sent, and that if any hon. member sent a list of names it would be compared with the lists which are already in and he would be given the publication if he had not already received it.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. What was the object of the commission?

Mr. FISHER. I would be very glad to answer the question, but I will just speak for the moment, of the publication. A little while ago a publication in regard to the sheep husbandry of Canada was prepared and put out by the gentleman under Dr. Rutherford, who is in charge of that branch, Mr. Spencer, which has met with a great deal of praise from the people of Canada and elsewhere. It is nicely got up and a large number of copies have been printed and distributed. One reason why it was done in regard to that particular class of stock was that every one connected with the departmental work feels that it is deplorable that in Canada sheep husbandry seems to be declining. There are not as many sheep in Canada to-day as there were a few years ago. One reason it is stated, is that there is no duty on wool. Another reason given is that the dogs are so bad that they cannot keep the sheep. Another reason is that a great many of our farmers, especially the new farmers, are not disposed to raise sheep and are not successful in sheep raising. We made a special effort to give information to those who might be desirous of going into the sheep raising industry, because we all believe that in Canada there is a splendid opportunity for large industry. We think it is very unfortunate, in view of certain things connected with that class of animals, that they should not be kept in greater numbers unfortunate not only as to themselves, but because of the value of flocks of sheep on the farms for the enrichment of the soil. My hon. friend (Mr. Sharpe) asked what was the object of the commission to Denmark. Representations were made to me that the swine industry was going down, that there were difficulties in regard to the production of swine, particularly in the province of Ontario, where this industry is the largest, and that the men were not getting a fair return on their investment in swine. They pointed out that in Denmark and in Ireland and England, this industry was very successful, that the Danes were our chief competitors in the English market, and that we might be able to learn a good deal. I believed that our officers of the Agriculture Department had all the information that could be got, but I found that the farmers were not prepared to accept that statement, and I thought it would be well to send a small commission of farmers engaged in the industry in Canada, to those countries to find out how our competitors did their work, and how it was that the industry flourished in Denmark and England, while it did not seem to flourish in Canada. I felt that the swine industry is of such vast importance to the farmers and to the country, that anything we could do to stimulate it in Canada, would be money well spent. One officer of the department, Mr. Spencer, was sent as secretary, to edit the report with other men who were themselves actually engaged in the raising and fattening of swine. Mr. Ballantyne, of Ontario, Mr. Garceau, of Quebec, and Mr. Sinclair from Prince Edward Island, representing the maritime provinces. They went there, and you saw the result of their visit. Evidently from the demands for the report, it is a report that has received acceptance, not only at the hands of the people of the country, but also at the hands of the members of the House.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, when the House took recess I had given an explanation of the work of the commission which went to Denmark and the old country to investigate the swine industry. I do not think I need enlarge on that matter further unless hon. gentlemen opposite wish me to. There is, however, one feature of the work of the live stock branch of my department which I must say a word about. I refer to the establishment of books of record for French Canadian horses, and a reference to that matter is due especially to my hon. friends from Quebec who are particularly interested in it. There had been a record established in Quebec of what is known as the French Canadian horse, much in the same way as the record for French Canadian cattle had been established. When the national records were established in Ottawa, these as well as other local records were brought under the consideration of the department and of the National Live Stock Association. The records of the French Canadian cattle were accepted without hesitation as national in their character, but in the case of the French Canadian horse the officials of the department and those interested in the matter themselves were not satisfied with the existing conditions. Conferences took place between the Breeders' Association of the province of Quebec, and and the officers of the department and myself, and an agreement was come to by which the character of the records of the French Canadian horse already existing were thoroughly sifted. A commission was appointed of well known horse-breeders as well as some officers of the department to deal with the matter, and that commission instituted a new record for the French Canadian horse. It was found that a very large number of animals had been formerly listed which did not come up to the standard as pure-bred, and consequently the new book opened with a fewer number of horses on the registrar. This entailed some hardship upon individual owners, but in the interest of the industry at large and of the producers of these animals in the province of Quebec, it was decided to take that course no matter who suffered. I wish to say that it is greatly to the credit of those interested in the breed of French Canadian horses that they were satisfied to make the sacrifice in order to establish on a firm basis that breed of horses. The French Canadian breed of horses is pretty well established in the province of Quebec, and is now spreading into other parts of Canada and the United States. It is a valuable breed and I believe that the breeders will be enabled through the medium of this new record to realize in future handsome profits.

May I say a word on the question of the cattle embargo in England. This does not come within the scope of the work of my department in Canada, but my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) has referred to it and I think I should answer him. The cattle embargo in England was established by the English people and it is purely a matter of their own concern. Representations have been made by the former Conservative government and by this government from time to time since it has come into power, as to the injustice and lack of necessity for this embargo from the point of view of protecting the health of the animals in Great Britain. So far as the existence of any cattle disease in this country is concerned I have no hesitation in saying that the embargo in Great Britain to-day and for many years past has been unnecessary. Still, the British people have the right to take all the precautions they deem necessary in the interests of their live stock and it is not for me or the people of Canada to teach them how to administer their affairs. We have to accept their regulations, just in the same way, as if, were the conditions reversed they would have to accept any regulations we might impose.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. What are the regulations?

Mr. FISHER. In brief: That all horned animals coming into England from abroad must be landed at certain specified ports where there are lairages and slaughtered there within 10 days of arrival. I may say that at the present time only animals coming from the United States and Canada are permitted thus to be landed. Argentine had that privilege, but it has been taken away and I understand the government of Argentine is negotiating with the British government with a view to the privilege being restored to them.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. If we had a cold storage system in Canada would our products be held up just the same, and inspected?

Mr. FISHER. This has nothing to do with cold storage. The embargo provides that the animals shall not be distributed alive throughout England, but when they are killed the meat may be sent anywhere.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. A few years ago the Committee on Agriculture passed a resolution asking the minister to confer with the Ministers of Agriculture in the different provinces and endeavour to find a means to have this embargo removed. Would the minister give his reasons for paying no attention to that resolution from the day it was passed until the present day?

Mr. FISHER. My communication with the imperial authorities on this question and my knowledge of the opinions of various Ministers of Agriculture in England, leads me to believe that it would not be dignified or proper for the government of Canada to take any further steps until there is a change of view on the part of English statesmen. I do not think it would be consistent with the dignity or the interests of the Dominion that we should go on our knees and appeal to the imperial authorities, or undertake to censure them for a course which it is undoubtedly within their right to take. The feeling of the people of Canada on this subject has been officially expressed to them over and over again, and the replies have been such as I think make it impossible for us to deal further with that matter until such time as a different expression of opinion comes from the authorities in England. I may say further that within a year and a half there has been a most positive official statement on the part of the English board of agriculture that the embargo must remain. Under these circumstances I think it would be unwise and improper for us to take such steps.

I propose now to say something about experimental farms. The policy of the experimental farms was first adopted in 1885-6, and made a work of the Agricultural Department. I have already expressed in the highest terms of commendation what I considered to be but justice and fairness to the Minister of Agriculture of that day, and to the government and the party who established the experimental farm. I have said a few words in regard to the work, the extraordinary work, the highly important and very successful work, of the director of the farms in the original organization of the establishment and its continuation up to the present time. I would also like to say here that Dr. Saunders has been assisted and surrounded by a body of men on the experimental farms who have devoted themselves to this work with great self-sacrifice. For many years they did their duty at salaries which were not in any way commensurate with the salaries of other officials who were doing what I do not think it is improper to say was less important work for the Dominion of Canada. There had been very little recognition of that work for many years. Soon after I came into the office I felt that the time had come to increase their salaries and make some substantial recognition of the value of the work of those officers at the experimental farm. That has gone on to a considerable extent. I make no apology for that, I know the House has endorsed that action over and over again, and I am proud indeed to say in this House that the work done in the interest of Canadian agriculture has been fairly well recognized as of the highest character and as the greatest honour. I am glad to say that to-day the status of the men who are doing this work on behalf of the people of Canada, has been improved, and that to-day they occupy a position as honourable before the country as that of any other officials in the employ of the government. I think this is but due to them, and parliament has done no more than its duty in treating them in that way.

Now I want to say a word or two in regard to the expansion of the agricultural farm system. It has been the natural and legitimate consequence of the increase of the agricultural interest in this country during the last fifteen years. At the time I came into office the staff was perhaps quite equal to the demands upon it. It is true that just at that time Prof. Robertson, who had been appointed dairy commissioner at the experimental farm, had been removed from that position and placed in another position. The consequence was that there was no agriculturalist at the farm at that time. I thought it was necessary to have one, because, aside from the scientific work of the horticulturist, the chemist, the botanist and entomologist, it was very necessary to apply to the common agriculture of the country the scientific truths and discoveries which were made by those other officers. Very soon after I assumed the office, I think about 1899, I appointed Mr. Grisdale as agriculturalist at the farm. This was but a continuation of the policy that was adopted when Prof. Robertson was appointed; Prof. Robertson having been removed, there was a vacancy, and the appointment was made. I can say without hesitation that the result has been very satisfactory to the general work of the experimental farm. In the first place, the actual general work of the farm here has been somewhat changed; it has been divided up into a purely agricultural dairy farm and an experimental farm. The experimental work goes on on some parts of the farm. There are 200 acres of the farm turned into a simple dairy farm such as might be in any part of the country. That work has been going on satisfactorily. I think it was begun in 1901 or 1902, and has reflected great credit on the agriculturalist who has been managing this work. I would like to give a few figures in regard to the production of the farm to-day compared with what it was before that work was undertaken. It is the same farm and the same land. I may say that since this work was undertaken there has been no manure bought and put upon that 200 acres.

Certainly a very handsome increase, and denoting a substantial improvement of the land. I would say that the results show a profit of $573 in the case of swine alone this last year. Now I feel this is an important advance, and one that is of greatest value to the farmers. This is a work that can be taken as a model by the farmers generally in most other parts of Canada, regard being had of course to difference of climate and conditions. I may add that in numberless instances where Mr. Grisdale, and others have spoken to gatherings of farmers, usually of the leading farmers of the locality, they have imparted information of the highest practical value to the agriculturalists, who have shown their appreciation of their efforts. At the same time all experimental work, pure and simple, has been going on on a larger scale. There is a considerably larger staff now than there was then. There are to-day thirty-nine men above the labouring class on the farm as compared with twenty in 1896. The whole staff is sixty-five to-day as compared with fifty in 1896, but of the higher class men, men who are doing work in the way of experiment, in the way of investigation, in the way of spreading the knowledge that is acquired amongst the people, there is an increase of nearly double while the whole staff is only increased by about 27 per cent. The total wages were $17,000 in 1896, and $25,890 in 1910. In addition to the agriculturist, whose work I have just lightly touched upon, we have appointed a new officer in the person of Dr. Charles Saunders as cerealist. Dr. Charles Saunders has been conducting a large number of experiments, most satisfactorily, and successfully with regard to the cereal crop of the country, and has gone into the details of hybridization, and selection of seed to show the value of certain new varieties, the use of which amongst our farmers we hope will add very considerably to the production and quality of the cereal crops grown in Canada. In that connection I have to say that Dr. Charles Saunders, as is known to the members of the Agriculture Committee, has made extensive experiments in testing the quality of wheat not only by chemical, and other processes, but also in practically grinding the grain, making the flour and baking the bread. In this way he has been able to show that certain kinds of grain and wheat are better for bread production than other varieties, and has been able to spread amongst the people of the country that knowledge so as to guide the farmers in the variety that they shall sow, information which I believe to be most useful to them, and as a result of which they will be able in the near future not only to increase the quantity of the wheat production of Canada, but also its quality, and add to our advantages as the granary of the whole world.

Mr. SPROULE. He has been carrying on that work for nearly twenty years.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend interrupts me by saying that he was carrying on that work nearly twenty years ago. In the first place Dr. Charles Saunders was not appointed to the farm until seven years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. Dr. Saunders.

Mr. FISHER. Dr. Saunders was not conducting any experiments of that kind at all. Dr. Saunders was doing some hybridization in fruits, some selection of grain, but the work that is now being carried on was not begun until Dr. Charles Saunders was appointed. Dr. Saunders, I have no doubt, would have been very glad to do it, but he had not time with the multiplicity of other work that he had to do. Dr. Charles Saunders was especially appointed to take charge of this work. I am not saying anything against the work that Dr. Saunders did before, but there were not sufficient men available at the farm to do the work as it has been done since the appointment of Dr. Charles Saunders.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the minister not aware of the fact that nearly twenty years ago bread was brought to the Agriculture Committee, and shown to the committee as the results obtained by using different kinds of wheat grown in Canada. For instance, there was Ladoga wheat, and we were told that it was not wise to cultivate that variety, because it made yellower bread than other varieties. We had the bread shown to us. The wheat had been ground in the mills, and we were told how much flour the baker got out of it. That was all brought before the committee twenty years ago.

Mr. FISHER. Quite true to a limited extent, but the work that was done then was done outside and away from the farm. The bread was baked by ordinary bakers and the test was made in that way. To-day it is all done under the supervision of a scientific man who has facilities, bakeries and every condition which will enable him to obtain accurate knowledge as to the results. I am not depreciating what was done before, but I am pointing out that a new officer has been appointed for the special purpose of carrying on this new piece of work. In addition to that, just lately, unfortunately, our long-time and most valued officer, Dr. Fletcher, entomologist and botanist at the experimental farm, passed away. He had been for many years botanist and entomologist, he had done most valuable work, but he had been overburdened with work, and a good deal of work which might properly have been done in the interest of agriculture by the entomological and botanical division had not been overtaken and could not be overtaken by Dr. Fletcher or by any person else. So that, when a little while ago, Dr. Fletcher, to the great regret of everybody, passed away, I thought it would be my duty to get two officers, one a botanist and one an entomologist, to take his place and start the work in two divisions. The result is that we have now an extra division there. I may say that while Prof. Shutt, the chemist, in the old days, had one assistant, he has now two and another, not a scientific assistant, as well; that in those days, while Mr. John Craig had no assistant of any kind, Mr. Macoun has now his stenographer and typewriter, which relieves him of a great deal of work that Mr. Craig had to do. In Dr. Fletcher's department there was one assistant at that time to the botanist. To-day, Mr. Hewitt, the new entomologist, has two assistants, and Mr. Güssow, the new botanist, has two assistants, adding to the scientific and experimental staff of the farm in most important ways.

Then, may I say a word with regard to some expenditures that we have made at the farm itself? One of the first things that had to be done was to provide for necessary laboratory and chemical work. Years ago, after I came into office, the laboratory was burned. It then occupied a couple of rooms in the office building. Instead of refitting those rooms it was thought best to erect a new laboratory, and a considerable sum was spent in putting up and establishing a chemical laboratory, in which for many years past the work of the chemist and his staff has been carried on and which contains all the fittings and appliances necessary for the kind of work which they are doing. A little while afterwards additional buildings were put up for the sheep which were added to the farm stock in the period I have spoken of. A building for roots and implements was erected, and later on a horse stable was built of a very fine character, which, I think, would serve as a model for any farm in the country. Comparatively recently the stables in the big barn of the experimental farm have been entirely refitted. When they were originally built they were built without that knowledge which has been arrived at in the course of the last twenty years in our agriculture and live stock work. The kind of accommodation for cattle that we had there, which should be a model for farmers, was very severely animadverted on by farmers who came to visit the farm. I am glad to say that to-day that stable can be taken as a model. It is well ventilated, has plenty of air, no bad odours, it is convenient for the work, convenient and comfortable for the animals, is kept clean and in every way is an object of admiration. In addition, there has been a building put up to accommodate the horticultural work. In the old days when Mr. John Craig was horticulturalist, he had only a little office, but when Mr. Macoun took charge and as the work expanded it was found necessary to provide more extensive accommodation, and we have now a very good horticultural building. We also have had to add to the office accommodation to serve the increased staff who now have good and sufficient rooms for their valuable work.

I come now to the question of the branch farms. I am sorry my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) is not here, because some time ago he questioned me with reference to this matter. I have observed, as others have, that wherever branch farms are in existance they have had an excellent influence on the agriculture in their vicinity. Indian Head is one of the best wheat producing districts in the Northwest, and over and over again the work of Mr. McKay on that farm has been highly commended. The same is largely true of Brandon. With the desire to have the same kind of improvement in other parts of the country, we thought we should add to the number of branch experimental farms and several have been established. The first was at Lacombe, in North Alberta, the second at Lethbridge, in South Alberta, and the third at Rosthern in northern Saskatchewan, and more recently another was established in Prince Edward Island, as the people there thought they could not make use of the experimental farm at Nappan in Nova Scotia. Within the last few days, I have acquired another site for a station in the north part of Saskatchewan. For some time past I have had an officer of my department examining the different districts, and I believe I have now a knowledge of the needs of the particular localities throughout the country, which enables me to say that during the coming season, I shall be able to fix upon some five or six more branch stations. I want to speak on one feature of this project, which I think is of the greatest importance. The old branch farms were established on the basis of large buildings and equipment, a large staff, and the maintenance of quite a quantity of live stock. I want to say one thing in connection with the agriculture of Canada, which I would like should attract the consideration of the people generally. So far as our general agriculture is concerned, we have made greater advances in dealing with our live stock and in the utilization of the products of our land than we have in the cultivation of land and the production of crops. In the best parts of Ontario, there are a large number of first-class farmers who are not only good stock men but good cultivators of the soil as well. But, if we examine the reports from the other parts of Canada any unprejudiced mind must conclude that in view of the fertile soil which spreads all over this Dominion, and the intelligence of our people, the annual crop production per acre is not what it ought to be. I believe that is due to the fact that scientific methods of cultivating the soil and the treatment of land are not thoroughly well understood by our people generally. To instruct and teach the people, object lessons are of the primest importance. If those who live in a particular district can go to an easily accessible central point and there see illustrated the result of good management of the crops and of scientific treatment of the soil, they can learn more than they can by any amount of reading and oral instruction. It is therefore highly important that the number of branch stations should be increased. Now, if each of these stations were to cost $25,000 or $35,000 the appropriations I ask from parliament would not enable me to establish any great number. It is my belief that we should establish comparatively smaller stations and deal simply with crop production, and not include stock experiments to any great extent, if at all. After all, the experiment of feeding stock indoors is very much the same in one place as in another, and the results obtained will serve the industry in all parts of the country. But, experiments in the treatment of the soil and the production of the crops must be conducted in as many different localities as possible, and they must be shown on the land in as many places as possible. I am therefore trying to establish a very considerable number of branch stations of this character where we can show the actual application on the land of the science which has been adduced from successful experimentation. This is a new principle in the establishment of these branch farms, which I trust will appeal to the House as I know it will appeal to the farming people of Canada.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Has the minister abandoned the chicken fattening stations he established all over the country and which proved such an utter failure.

Mr. FISHER. These fattening stations were successful in proving what good results could be obtained in the poultry industry, and the fact remains that where, before the establishment of these stations, it was a rare thing to find poultry meat in Canada properly fattened, the reverse is the rule to-day. These chicken fattening stations having accomplished their mission, it is no longer necessary to maintain them. I am well satisfied with the results of our work in that direction. I will not go further into detail with regard to the establishment of these branch stations. When I mention them I notice that the hon. gentleman opposite as well as hon. gentlemen on this side of the House are all very eager for the establishment of a station in their own particular neighbourhood or county. I accept that as the very highest compliment that can be paid to the experimental stations scattered throughout the country, and I will, as far as possible, try to meet the demands which are reasonable and fair and in the interest of the country at large.

Mr. CROCKET. The Minister has mentioned a new station in Prince Edward Island and several in Alberta and Saskatchewan. Is it proposed to put any station in the province of New Brunswick? I think it is about the only province in the Dominion that has not an experimental farm.

Mr. FISHER. I think that is pretty nearly true. When the system was first established a branch farm was put at Nappan, which was just at the border between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, but on the Nova Scotia side. That farm was expected to serve the purposes of the three maritime provinces. It does serve the purpose of the eastern part of New Brunswick pretty well. The Prince Edward Island people complained that they could not reach that farm very easily and the Prince Edward Island government offered a farm near Charlottetown for us to work on a nominal lease for a number of years. We were glad to accept that offer. I hope before long to be able to investigate the possible sites for a station such as I have been describing in the more westerly part of the province of New Brunswick, inasmuch as I think the Nappan station serves fairly well the eastern part of the province.

I want now to say a word or two with regard to one of the branches established by Prof. Robertson at the time he ceased to be agriculturalist at the experimental farm. At that time he was appointed Dairy and Agricultural Commissioner. At first his work was largely what it had been before, the education and stimulation of the people connected with agriculture in Canada in the direction of improvement. But he found that certain work was needed in dairying, his first special subject, and he took up that work. I will not go into details, but I am sure that hon. gentlemen opposite will be glad to hear that Prof. Robertson was much impressed with the necessity of cold storage accommodation for the transportation of our perishable food products. I am quite sure that with his knowledge, his powers of persuasion, his acquaintance with all the interests of our country, he would have been able to persuade the ministers of the Conservative party, if they had remained in power to go on and do more than they had done in connection with cold storage. He was able to persuade them to make a beginning, which was unfortunate in its details, which I will not go into now. When I came into office Prof. Robertson was one of the first to urge me to take the matter up on a larger scale and to do more than had been done. It happened that I personally had a good deal to do with dairying, being a dairy farmer, and I knew the situation, I knew what Prof. Robertson had been saying publicly and privately, for I was an intimate friend of his before I became minister, and I was only too glad to meet his views and to take active steps to give them practical effect, and the well known and much discussed cold storage policy of the department was the result. But there was one matter which had to be taken up of the most prime importance in regard to all our work, although it is not very much understood in the country, that is, the inspection of the handling and transportation of our agricultural food products in the course of their shipment from Canada to our great export market, Great Britain. In the old days our agricultural products of whatever character, delicate and tender like butter, or less delicate and tender like fruit and cheese and meats, or the coarser products like grain and flour, were handled in the crudest and roughest ways by the transportation companies. Complaints were universal on the part of shippers and owners of the way in which their products were deteriorated in quality on their way to market. It was obvious that we must take immediate steps to see what could be done, and we very soon established a system of inspection or supervision in the handling of our agricultural food products in their transportation from the producing point in Canada to the consuming point in Great Britain. This had to be done gradually. We had no authority or power over the transportation companies; we had no power over the wharfs in Great Britain where our products were landed. We could only persuade, we could only advise, we could only use such authority as a department of the government naturally would exercise.

I cannot resist telling you an incident which occurred in the very early days to illustrate this. I went to England to meet the people who handled our products—the produce dealers of Liverpool, Manchester, London, Britsol, Glasgow and other places—in order to gain information, to find out what they thought of our products and what complaints they had to make. Amongst other things, I found at Liverpool a condition of affairs which surprised and pained me. Frequently Canadian butter would lie on the wharf at Liverpool for days in the hot sun, and our goods would be handled otherwise by the wharfingers in such a way as to bring a poor price in the English market. I may say, in justice to the Englishmen, that they were not any worse than our people in Montreal or St. John who handled our products and put them on board ship; but they were just as bad. I pointed that out to a meeting in Liverpool, where the produce dealers gave me a luncheon, and expressed the hope that they would improve their management. The Englishman does not like criticism and advice of that kind, and I was pretty severely reprimanded for having dared to say such things. I was invited to the office of a certain gentleman—I do not hesitate to give his name—Mr. Jones, who was at the head of one of the largest shipping concerns in Liverpool. We got chatting in a friendly way, and he began to criticise what I had said, saying that of course it did not apply to his business—at any rate, that they were doing the best they could, the best that it was necessary for them to do, and that of course they were going to go on just as they had begun. As I was his guest, I was of course very polite and friendly, but I could not help saying that his firm, unfortunately, was subject to the same reproach as others, and in some respects was a little worse, because the reports to me had been that this firm was very bad indeed in the way it handled our goods on their arrival at Liverpool, and that their agents at Montreal were pretty bad, too. He assured me that I was all wrong, and that at any rate, he was going to go on as before. Well, I said, Mr. Jones, there is only one alternative, and that is to tell the people of Canada what the conditions are. He said: You will not dare to do that. Oh, yes, I said, I will. It is my clear duty, and what is more, it is my clear duty to tell the people of Canada that your ships do not handle our goods as well as some others do. He said: You won't dare to do that; it is not the proper thing for a minister to do to discriminate. I said, excuse me, I appreciate my position and that it is my duty to tell the people of Canada where they can get the best service, and to see that they have an opportunity of getting the best service. I left him and came back to Montreal, and a month or six weeks afterwards Professor Robertson and I went to a meeting of produce men in Montreal, and I told them what I had told Mr. Jones, and I told them if they wanted to have their goods handled badly, they ought to send them by Mr. Jones' line. I got next day a cable asking me if a report of what I had said was true. I replied, yes it was true, and that I was prepared to repeat it if he did not change his methods, and I found next day from his officers in Montreal that they had received instructions to comply with the requirements of the Canadian Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What year was that?

Mr. FISHER. That was in the year 1898, I think. It may possibly have been in 1899.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the minister excuse me? The year in which you found butter was lying on the dock in Liverpool for 11 days after landing, was under the regime of the hon. minister?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, quite so.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought you were reflecting on your predecessors.

Mr. FISHER. Not a bit. My hon. friend is so possessed with the idea that one party is not doing so well as another party, that he cannot get away from it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would just say to the minister that I learned all that from the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. FISHER. Well, I am sorry the impression I created was so contrary to my desires. I think I have given this afternoon and this morning a full appreciation of a great deal that was done in the Department of Agriculture before I had anything to do with it. I think my hon. friends opposite will do me that credit. I have not given to anything I have done myself half the praise that I have bestowed on Mr. John Carling and Prof. Saunders in connection with the establishment of the experimental farm. I have explained as far as properly as I can, and I am sure my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) will acknowledge that I have given a sketch which is free from party bias and which has been a mere statement of facts in connection with my predecessor's as as well as of my own work. Mr. Speaker, that was the beginning of work which I think was of the greatest importance to the Canadian export trade in agricultural products. We produce first class stuff here of all kinds. We are improving in the production of it, and it is differently handled from the way it used to be handled not by the government, because the government has nothing to do with it, but by the transportation companies. Our good stuff would not get the prices it is entitled to get in the English market, if it were not for our system of inspection. It is required not only in Canada. It is required on the ships of Canada, on the railways as well as on the docks and wharfs. It is required in the packing houses of Canada, it is a rigid system of inspection by which we do not undertake to force or coerce, but to educate, to appeal and to persuade the people to do what is right in the interests of the country. I believe that is better than coercion where it is available and effective, but I do not hesitate to say that where I find that people are not open to persuasion, I have not hesitated to ask parliament to give me the power to coerce, and when I have had that power given to me I have tried to exercise it fairly, justly and reasonably, so as to accomplish what is necessary in the interests of the whole people of the country, and especially in the interests of Canadian farmers and agriculture. I wont go into the details of that work where butter and cheese and fruit are shipped under inspection and by the refrigerator car service to the wharfs and ports of Canada. It is a system which supervises and looks after the conserving of goods in the ships at Montreal, Halifax and other ports. We have officers on the docks in England to report everything that goes on there, that is detrimental to our trade. I am glad to say that after years of education, and persuasion, after the occasional exercise of coercion, we have got a vastly improved condition of affairs, and I have the testimony which has already been placed before the House on various occasions, but which I wont detain the House with now, showing that one of the most important things that have been done to facilitate the business of the agriculturalists of Canada and elsewhere, is the system of inspection by reason of which it is rare to find our goods arriving in the motherland in bad condition, whereas, 15 years ago, it was rare to find them arriving there in good condition. Now I will leave that. I want to say a word or two with regard to some of our dairy work. My hon. friends opposite are so touchy, that I do not want to talk of the cool curing of cheese, which they have always thought was a very bad thing, and all that, although our dairymen appreciate it, and take advantage of it. I wont undertake to say much about the experiments in the aeration of milk which took place last year and the year before, and the result of which is going to revolutionize the cheese making industry. I wont say anything about some experiments with regard to butter making in Canada which I hope will bring good information that will help our people in that regard. But I do want to say a word as to cow testing, as I think it is one of the most important things we have encouraged in this country, and one which I trust will lead to most important results. One of the most glaring facts in connection with the insufficient realization of the proper profits on our farms in Canada, is the small average production of the cow. Those of us who have studied this question know that in Denmark and Holland, 15 or 20 years ago, they were in about the same position in this respect as we are to-day, but by a thorough system and co-operative work and testing the individual cows, by cutting out the bad one and keeping the good one and only breeding from the good ones, they are gradually and steadily increasing the average production and have reached the point that the cows of Denmark produce more than double per year per individual cow, than the cows of Canada. Now this is a very unfortunate, a very bad condition of affairs. We knew this a few years ago, and we have been trying to induce our farmers in Canada to make some kind of co-operative or individual test as the Danish and Dutch people have done so as to bring up the average production of our cow. It was up hill work. It requires on the part of the people, a good deal of manipulation and experiment, and we had to get information to show them what the result would be. We had to make experiments. We had to get individual herds and even go so far in some instances as to make some tests ourselves before we could lay before the farming community, the dairyman especially, information which would stir their imagination and make them adapt their methods to these facts.

We got those facts, we laid them before the people, and the people to-day have begun to digest them and to act on the advice founded on these facts. The result is that to-day we have in Canada a very large number of dairymen and farmers who are testing their cows. We have a large number of herds, the records of which are known and published, and other people, by the success of those who have begun early and have done the work carefully, are to-day incited and induced to do the same work. It is one part of that reward one gets for somewhat discouraging and somewhat long passing through difficulty and doubt, that we often experience in bringing about reforms in agricultural subjects, that during the last season the effects were so striking, the success so great where it was undertaken, that this year we have a great number of applications for cow testing associations. I am satisfied the system is on the high road to success, and that in the near future the great mass of Canadian dairymen will be doing this work. There is no reason to believe that in a few years the Canadians will not be able to say that the average cow production in Canada is what the Danes produce, 7,000 pounds a year for every cow in the country, instead of the Canadian average of 3,000 pounds a year. If we can do this, I think all the expenditure, all the labour, all the intelligence that has been bestowed on dairy work in Canada would be abundantly justified and rewarded.

Mr. Ruddick has also had charge of the cold storage service of the government. This has been increased of late years by the passing of the Cold Storage Act. We have now to look after not only the refrigerator cars and the cold storage on ships, but also the subsidies to cold storage warehouses established under the Act, which require additional work and expenditure.

We have also the fruit division of our work and the administration of the Fruit Marks Act. The transportation of fruit is largely connected with our cold storage system; it was thought better to have it all under the one commissioner, and so we have not a special branch, although we have a special division in regard to fruit. I shall not go into the work of the department in connection with fruit growing. The Fruit Marks Act has been often explained in the House and is well understood. It was passed in response to a demand of exporters and people interested, who recognize that Canadian fruit had a bad reputation. They wanted to secure that Canadian fruit would be properly packed and shipped, and the Fruit Marks Act provides a law for that. We have to administer that law. I am sorry to say that although there is an improvement, there is not the improvement I would like to see, and we have to still occasionally prosecute, to still coerce to a certain extent where I would prefer to persuade if the people would be guided by the persuasion.

A word in regard to some work instituted by Mr. McNeill, head of the fruit branch, which points in the right direction, that is the encouragement and establishment of fruit growers' or shippers' and packers' associations. One of the greatest difficulties our fruit growers in Canada have experienced is that their work is largely done by each individual, and that one individual has not enough fruit to fill large orders or to make an impression on the market. By forming an association, a group of people in a particular district can get together and employ one efficient and competent expert packer and grader, who will grade and pack their fruit so that in the aggregate the fruit which is thus handled in co-operation amongst a number of people will bring in a larger return and be better accepted and received on the market than fruit sent forward by the individual. This work was started in the southwestern part of Ontario by Mr. McNeill some years ago, and to-day, I am glad to know, there are a number of such associations working most satisfactorily and most successfully. It is work of the department in one sense, because we indicate the road. It is work of the people themselves, however, and it can only be successfully carried on by the co-operative work of the people combining together, mutually trusting one another, associating themselves for combined work and carrying on the whole thing as a business transaction in a business way. I am glad they are doing it successfully as it is an important work for the improvement of the fruit trade of Canada.

Another part of the work which Professor Robertson had in charge, but which I found it better to assign to a special division when he left, is the work of the seed division. That division is under Mr. Clark the seed commissioner and carries on several kinds of work. We passed the Seed Control Act a few years ago. That resulted from the investigations of the seed commissioner, Mr. Clark, and the work of his subdivision. Mr. Clark found the condition of the average trade in agricultural seeds in Canada to be deplorable. A large portion of our people were buying seed that did not germinate and consequently they had to buy a great deal more than they needed for proper seeding and they were also buying seeds that contained the seeds of noxious weeds. These spread weeds over the country. That is easy enough under any circumstances. This is a large country. In some parts of the country one weed is prevalent which is not found in another part. The result of carrying these seeds from part of the country to another has contributed to the introduction of seeds not native to any one part of Canada from other parts where the seed was produced. We have also introduced into this country a large number of weeds foreign to the country. These were in many instances introduced by the seed bought by men who were enterprising, who wanted to get good seed and who went away from their own neighbourhoods to get it. They did this, however, without any opportunity of knowing what they were buying, without any facility for investigation and without any thought or knowledge of the results. We showed to the country and the people that the average seed sold in many parts of Canada was infested with weed seeds, would not germinate and would not grow. The result was a demand for some control of this business. That I think is a proper demand and a legitimate action on the part of the parliament of Canada because although in ordinary trade matters the old maxim 'caveat emptor' prevails, in matters of this kind the buyer cannot protect himself, he has not the knowledge, the training, the facilities, or the laboratory by which he can examine the seed he is buying and know whether or not it is what it purports to be. It is true that many old and experienced farmers can take up a handful of seed and say whether or not it is good seed, but I venture to say there is not a farmer in Canada to-day who can take up a handful of seed and can look at it and state whether it would germinate or whether there were weed seeds in it. That can only be told by laboratory examination and testing. What I have said is no reflection on the farmers of Canada. It is impossible that men by ordinary inspection can possibly tell whether the seeds they are buying will grow or not.

I am sorry to say that in many cases in Canada they have the bad as well as the indifferent. We still continue, besides the administration of the Seed Control Act, to spread abroad amongst the people information in regard to weeds and in regard to seeds. Let me say a word in regard to weeds. We are still watching for new weeds, we are still warning the farmers when new weeds appear. We issued a little while ago a well known book called the Weed Book, in which vivid pictures beautifully executed and coloured are displayed of all the noxious weeds known in Canada. We spread that throughout the country for the purpose of giving the people instruction and information, so that they can recognize the weeds when they find them in their fields. It is not a very easy thing for a farmer always to know what a strange plant is that he sees for the first time in his field. If it is a weed you may be sure that the picture of it he will find in that book will show him what it is, and what its nature is. That book has been asked for from all over Canada, from one ocean to the other, by everybody interested in agriculture. My only regret is that we have not been able to distribute it as freely as I would like on account of the cost. The first edition went out, the second edition went out, and although each edition consisted of 25,000 copies, I have no doubt that in a short time we will have to publish a third edition and perhaps a fourth, because the people of this country are aroused on the question of weeds in their fields, and are determined to fight them. They all say that the book is not only a credit to the book-makers of Canada, but it is an exceedingly useful publication.

We are also administering the Seed Control Act. This is a little difficult, but we have been trying to do our best. I must say in all sincerity that the seed merchants, and especially the wholesale seed agents, have been helping us and helping us in the enforcement of the Act. Sometimes some of them fail, sometimes we have to prosecute individuals, and sometimes bad seed is sold. But the proportion of bad seed sold to-day is infinitesmal in comparison with what was sold before the introduction of the Seed Control Act. Now the administration of this Act takes money, and I am asking for $50,000 for the ensuing year. I venture to think that if I asked five times that amount the work that is being done would justify it. But with the present sum I think we will be able to accomplish the work of instruction and properly administer this Act.

A year ago we passed an Act in regard to commercial food stuffs. I have had a good many representations made to me, especially from the province of Ontario, saying that these food stuffs contain a good many weed seeds. I think that is partially correct. I fear there is a great deal of weed seeds distributed in the food stuffs, and we have been making investigations. I am not certain yet that we have a remedy under the Commercial Food Stuffs Act, but if we have, I think it ought to be put into force. I am told that the question is largely mixed up with provincial rights, it is one of those questions that it is hard to deal with. In the laboratory last year we tested something over 6,200 samples of seeds for the purpose of determining whether they were germinable or contained noxious weeds.

Now, one word in regard to a subject that will enlist a good deal of sympathy, I am sure, among many members of this House as well as throughout the country, and that is the subject of tobacco. I am not myself a user of tobacco, some of my friends do use it considerably, and I suppose most of them have heard sneering remarks about Canadian tobacco. Now, without being able to speak from personal experience, I want to say a word on behalf of Canadian tobacco. This climate and this country seem to be very suitable for the growing of a good many varieties of tobacco. In the early days the province of Quebec was chiefly concerned in that product. The habitant raised his tobacco, cured it and used it almost entirely for home consumption. He did grow pretty good crops, for the area that he cultivated. In the province of Ontario, in the counties of Kent and Essex, considerable tobacco is grown. A few years ago there was a glut in the market for Canadian tobacco, because it was not cured sufficiently well to attract the purchaser, and the growers could not place it on the market. One reason was because of a prejudice against it, I think I may say prejudice, rather than judgment, against Canadian tobacco. Knowing the situation and believing this was a crop which could be raised advantageously in Canada, I made some investigation, and I found there was nobody in Canada, so far as I could ascertain, who was able to grow and cure tobacco according to the best scientific methods. I, therefore, took it upon myself to send to France, where they have a very large branch under the government doing that kind of work, and where they have a lot of scientific men studying the culture of tobacco and the best methods of treating it. I was fortunate enough to secure a very competent, skillful and well informed gentleman named Charlan, who was first sent to Canada by the Department of Agriculture of France. Mr. Charlan came out here, and before long he showed himself so thoroughly competent that I asked him to stay. After a little hesitation and some communication with his home, he resigned his position in France and became a permanent member of the Civil Service of Canada. I am glad to say that he has quite justified his appointment. I will not go into details, but I venture to say that the prejudice which existed a few years against Canadian tobacco has practically disappeared amongst all the people that have tested it. I do not deny that there are many people still who won't use it, there are people in Canada still who say that Canadian tobacco is no good, but these people have refused to test it. I know that a good many people who talk sneeringly of Canadian tobacco are smoking Canadian tobacco every day they smoke. As a matter of fact to-day, a very large proportion of all the cigars that are smoked in Canada are made in Canada of Canadian tobacco, and some of the highest priced cigars sold in Canada are made in Canada with Canadian tobacco in them. Perhaps the dealers and manufacturers do not like to acknowledge that, because they are still under the influence of the prejudice of consumers. But as a matter of fact, we have been able to show that we can grow tobacco and put into the hands of the manufacturers, either of plug tobacco or of cigars, tobacco that will make the finest quality of plug and the finest quality of cigars that any one needs to have.

Mr. HENDERSON. What about the flavour?

Mr. FISHER. I am only speaking on the authority of other people, because I do not know anything about the flavour of tobacco.

Mr. HENDERSON. You ought to.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think so. With all due deference to my hon. friend, while I admire him in many ways, the fact that he uses tobacco to the extent to which he does, is one of the blemishes on his character which I regret.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is very kind.

Mr. FISHER. I say it with all kindness. But I may add that while it is a blemish on my hon. friend, it is one that we can all forgive him, and none of us will criticise him for it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think the hon. minister is justified in casting any reflection on members on this side of the House for what we have said on Canadian tobacco.

Mr. FISHER. No. I did not mean to say that at all. I had reference to the people generally.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have often spoken about Canadian tobacco. They produce a good article, they grow a fine tobacco, a tobacco that will make excellent cigars and chewing tobacco that is appreciated by the people of this country, and I am not sure that they cannot produce a good smoking tobacco. The fault I have continuously found with it was that the flavour or taste of the tobacco was not congenial to people outside of the province of Quebec, and if the government could get somebody from France or some other country who would produce a tobacco with a flavour such as that of Macdonald's tobacco of Montreal, it would add millions to the wealth of the people of this country. It was with regard to the curing that I found fault and not the growing of the tobacco.

Mr. FISHER. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman has a good deal of justification for what he says. I am not prepared to dispute that. I was not giving an expert opinion as to the quality of the tobacco, but what I stated in regard to the use, the production and the change in quality of Canadian tobacco, as stated to me by the manufacturers who make it up and by users, is, I think, correct. Now, I have reached, I think, the end and I suppose my hon. friends opposite will be glad of that.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not at all.

Mr. FISHER. I have reached the end and it has taken me longer than I intended or expected to go over the work of the department. I do not think I need detain the House longer at this stage. I hope that the intention that I started out with has become evident to all parties in the House. I did not start out with any intention of boasting, of getting any party advantage, or presenting any partisan argument. I felt, as I have felt for some years, that the importance of the Department of Agriculture was not recognized in the discussions in this House for the reason that it had never come up practically except in committee, when interruptions, proper and right in committee, were made and when questions were put in such a way that it was not possible to make a fair or connected presentment of the work of the department. I am going to say frankly that I am proud of the work of my department, not because I am the minister of it, but I am proud of the work of my officials, I am proud of the large interests which are entrusted to the department, I am proud of the way in which the people of Canada generally look to the department at Ottawa for advice, assistance and information in the business of agriculture. I do not say that this is the case only to-day. It was the case in the old days when my predecessors were in office. I am proud of what the department does in recognition of the business of agriculture in Canada, of which I am also proud as a farmer, and I am not speaking in the slightest degree as the minister of that department. If there is one thing more than another that I think is important to Canada, it is that the business of agriculture should acquire, assume and maintain that status which is due to it in this country from its vast importance from the financial point of view and by reason of its wide spread diffusion throughout the great agricultural territory which Canada possesses. I do not want to be little or interfere with railway or canal work or with this, that or the other industry in the country, but I do venture to say, as a representative of the farmers and as a farmer, that agriculture as a science, agriculture as an art and as a business, has attained and holds before the people of Canada a proud, a recognized position and that this is due to the fact that the farmers have given up the old rule of thumb work, the old drudgery which was performed in the early days of the settlement of the new country, necessarily and perforce, and are to-day exercising a skill, a knowledge, a science, in the best sense of the word, in regard to this business which enables them to hold a proud position in comparison with every other class in the community. This being the case, I say again that I am proud of the work of the Department of Agriculture, which I think has contributed to the utmost extent that it could do to that position and success. If it has attained to that position to-day it has done so almost entirely and certainly largely through the efforts of the men who have been in charge of the different branches of the department's work, men who have been unsparing in their toil and energy, sparing themselves not at all in their work, who are enthusiastic, who have been specially trained and educated, who have been chosen with a sole view to those special characteristics which they possess and which fit them for the positions which they occupy. These men, I say are entitled to the credit, the rewards which they are given in a minor degree, perhaps, and to the position which they hold in the estimation of the people of the country, because I am proud to say that the farmers now generally look to the officers of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa for their guidance in all things relating to agriculture.

Mr. THOBURN. I want to ask the minister a question. I had a good many applications from farmers throughout my riding with reference to samples of seed. In many cases they ask for a sample of seed grain and a sample of seed potatoes. The rule governing, I believe at the experimental farm, is that they can only receive one sample, either of potatoes or seed grain. Would it be possible to change that rule so that a farmer could get one sample of seed grain and one sample of seed potatoes? For instance, a farmer this season wants a sample of seed grain and a sample of seed potatoes, and in the event of his getting only a sample of seed grain he has to wait until next year before he will know the result of the sample of seed potatoes. It would save a great deal of time and he would profit very much sooner if it were possible to allow him to have one sample of each.

Mr. FISHER. That is a rule which can be easily changed. It would be too late to change it for this season, because the distribution is practically over. We have a great many applications for these seed samples, and we try to make them go as far as possible, but if we send a great many to one individual, we would only have to rob somebody else.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to some three hours talk from the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), and we cannot come to any other conclusion than that he has delivered a distinctly partisan speech and, with that lack of courage that you would not expect on the part of a minister of the Crown, he sought to hide himself behind the Speaker and demand that questions should not be asked without his permission. It seems to me that he has taken the position, either of a Czar or of a suffragette—I have not decided fully which. He might as well have placed his speech on 'Hansard,' and he would have saved three hours of the time of the House, because he has simply devoted himself to telling us about the splendid work he has done in his department. No one knows better than the minister himself that he has been forced practically into almost every advancement he has mentioned by members on this side of the House. Talk about a partisan speech! He tried to show from beginning to end of his speech to-day that since he took control of the affairs of the Department of Agriculture, between twelve and fourteen years ago, the department has been conducted more successfully than it was previous to 1896.

The minister has told us of the increased acreage held for agricultural purposes, but against his boasting we have the fact that the Minister of Agriculture for the province of Ontario has declared that the population of the rural districts of that province has decreased 61,000 in the last 10 years, and in the other older provinces similar conditions prevail. The hon. gentleman also told us that he has done his best to have the cattle embargo removed, but the official correspondence before us shows that up to a few years ago he never raised a finger in that respect. He knows that before his party came to power its leaders told the people of Canada that if they were elected to office the embargo would be removed, but to-day the embargo is in the same position as it was years and years ago. Then, this Liberal government declared that when Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman became Liberal Prime Minister in England they would get the cattle embargo removed, but Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman and his government have passed away and other Liberal governments have succeeded in England, and the embargo is still a fact. Some years ago, on my motion, the Agricultural Committee passed a resolution to the effect that the Dominion Minister of Agriculture together with the Ministers of Agriculture of the various provinces should go before the imperial authorities and submit to them the contention of Canada and urge for the removal of the embargo. That resolution of the committee was adopted unanimously by the House, but the Minister of Agriculture has taken it upon himself to flatly disobey that mandate of parliament. What can you expect from a minister who would act in such a way? The hon. gentleman has told us a lot about what he says he has done for the cold storage system, but he knows full well that for the seven sessions I have been here and for years before, the member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) and others of this side have been trying to drum into his head the importance of perfecting our cold storage system and applying it to our transportation routes. The suggestions coming from this side of the House the minister has adopted to some extent, and to-day he tries to make the House believe that he was the originator of all that has been done to improve our cold storage. He has expended $600,000 or $800,000 on cold storage, but even to-day he cannot control the temperature which Canadian products are subjected to on the trains and steamers crossing the ocean. He told us that he went to England and that the people looked upon him as the great Minister of Agriculture, and he gave us to understand that he had brought them to their knees in connection with the question of providing protection for our goods once they have landed at the ports in England. I have here some remarks which I made on June 27, 1905, in this House, and I find I quoted from the report of the Department of Agriculture for that year the following:

> The bulk of the butter discharged from the steamer is removed within a reasonable time, but the balance is allowed to remain for days before delivery is taken.

He knows that our products have been allowed to remain on the wharfs in England exposed to every deleterious influence, but to-day he tries to make us believe that he has taken measures to remedy that defect. It is time we should set the hon. gentleman right. Any one who studies the subject cannot but come to the conclusion that instead of our having at the present time a broad system of cold storage that would bring the products of western agriculture to the consuming centres of England in proper condition, the antiquated sissy system which the minister has in force bears no comparison to the modern and up to date system which the Argentine republic, and New Zealand, and Australia have perfected. Let the minister himself consider this, and he must conclude that our defective system of cold storage is quite a serious loss to the producers of Canada. Then, as to transportation facilities, the minister knows full well that I have already called his attention to the fact that in 1907 freight was carried from Liverpool to New York for 7 shillings and 6 pence per ton, from Liverpool to Halifax it costs 15 shillings per ton. The hon. gentleman knows that I have frequently called his attention to the discrimination against the Dominion and in favour of the United States in the matter of freight rates on our produce. The minister must know that the farmers of Canada are paying practically $1,000,000 per annum for the privilege of sending their goods through the port of Montreal. What has he done to investigate this question and to relieve the situation? Unless we can have our products carried to the markets of the world in the best possible condition and at the lowest possible rate, we cannot expect to have the best possible returns for the farmers of this country. What has the minister done in regard to opening up markets? The great boast and cry of the men leading the Liberal party previous to 1896 was: Place us in power, and we will open up the markets of the world to the Canadian farmer; we will obtain for you the great market of 80,000,000 people to the south. Let them point to one market that they have opened up. They cannot do it, and they know it. Until a few months ago they had closed to Canada the second best market in the world, and who helped to close that market? The Minister of Agriculture boasted of his position in that respect. Let me call attention to a statement which he made on the 21st of March, 1906, in reply to an address which was delivered by a prominent apple shipper of the city of Toronto. He said:

> There is reason to believe that the Germans will in a short time seek to open negotiations, but in the meantime I think we can get along without them.

Yet the Minister of Agriculture is the man who above all others should be interested in opening up the markets of the world for the Canadian farmers. Where did we find the Minister of Agriculture in regard to the treaty with France? Was he looking after the best interests of the farmers of Canada when he allowed the only item in that treaty which would have been of advantage to them to be taken away? Instead of protesting against that being removed from the schedule, he helped to vote it through. He talked about crop bulletins. Long before he thought of issuing crop bulletins, we on this side of the House urged that policy upon him. We also urged him to let the people of Canada know what amount of money they would receive from the sale of their products in the markets of the world. He does not give the farmers of Canada any definite information as to the prices of agricultural products in the different markets of the world, because he does not want to interfere with the exporters at the port of Montreal, or the other ports. About $60,000,000 worth of perishable products are going out of this country every year; but unless we revolutionize the system of transportation and cold storage for the carriage of these goods to the markets of the world, the minister knows that our farmers will continue to lose millions of dollars every year for the lack of proper transportation facilities; and yet he will not go to work, and put into force some progressive system for carrying these goods in proper condition to the markets of the world. He talked about experimental farms, and was good enough to say that they were started by the Conservative party previous to 1896. He says he is going to change his ways and give the people throughout the country smaller experimental farms, and a greater number of them. The members of this House have for six or eight years coaxed and begged the minister to establish more experimental farms in different parts of the country, and at last it has dawned upon him to do so. He boasts of having improved the tobacco industry of this country. Who urged this upon him during every session of the last parliament? Time and again Mr. Clements, the former member for West Kent, brought to his attention the condition of the tobacco industry in the southwestern part of the province of Ontario. When we find the minister rising and taking to himself credit for all these things, we cannot help feeling that he is deserving of the severest censure for not being alive and progressive in these different matters. He tells us that the swine industry is declining. He knows that it has been declining year after year, and he has never apparently, until the last year, realized the condition that industry was in; and when he does realize it, he sends a few men across the Atlantic to investigate the swine industry in Denmark and Ireland. One would naturally suppose that they would first investigate the condition of the swine industry in their own country, and when you ask the minister why they did not, he tells us that they knew enough about it without investigating it. So the swine industry, which was formerly one of the boasted industries of this country, has been declining until to-day we hardly export any products of that industry—an industry which, in the older sections of this country, can be and ought to be developed, and there is no doubt that it would be if we had men of proper energy in charge of the Department of Agriculture. The minister tells us that the sheep industry is also declining. How many of the industries connected with this great department which the minister controls are declining year after year, when they should all be advancing with the progress of this great country of ours? He says Canada is a good country for sheep to be raised in. There is no question about that. But he says that the decline of the sheep industry may be due to the cruel dogs in this country. With regard to meat inspection, he knows the debate that took place a few days ago in this House, which went to show that the meat which goes to foreign countries is inspected, while our own people in their homes can eat whatever trash they like, and apparently the Minister of Agriculture does not care—he is not going to bring about a better condition of affairs in that regard. When our people realize that the choicest meats of our country go to foreigners and that there is no inspection of the most of the meats used for home consumption, they will resent the position taken by the Minister of Agriculture. A few years ago he told us about chicken fattening stations.

He has been spending tens of thousands of dollars on chicken fattening stations. He was to educate the people of Canada in fattening chickens in the proper way. How did he go about fattening them? You can imagine the farmers lining up their chickens and having a squirt gun to feed them with; and the chickens which cost $1.25 a piece have only sold for 25 cents apiece. Then he invented a pair of scissors for cutting peaches off the trees. He talks about the seed branch of his department. It is an important branch, in a way, but when you take into consideration the fact that if on our 15,000,000 acres of land we were producing a bushel more per acre it would mean $10,000,000 or $15,000,000, more in the farmers pockets, it will be seen that instead of having an aggressive seed policy that would be of benefit to the people, especially in the western country, we have that policy which he has described this afternoon. The minister knows that in the western provinces hundreds and thousands of acres have to be destroyed every year by the weed Inspector because of the weeds getting too much advantage over the average farmer. What about the butter industry, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture? Where is the butter industry to-day? Compare it with the position it was in some eight or ten years ago. He knows full well that in the older provinces it should be developed. He tells us he is going to develop that industry, but what is the good after 12 or 14 years of waking up to a position which he should have taken many many years ago. Then take the fruit industry. He tells the people of this country through the men in his employ to get to work and plant trees. A splendid industry for the general development of this country and of great advantage to the farmer. But what do we find? If it were not for the western market to-day where would the products of the eastern provinces go to? Instead of going into the markets of the world under proper conditions and under favourable auspices, nobody knows better than the member who is likely to follow me that we are sending out only 1,500,000 barrels when we should be sending out from 5,000,000 to 10,000,000 barrels. What is responsible for it but the lack of proper transportation facilities and proper means whereby the produce of the provinces of the Dominion of Canada could be delivered in their best possible condition in the markets of the world. There is no question that they could be delivered, and there is no reason in the world why they should not be. These are merely a few of the things which I want to call to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture. Where do we find him on many of the important questions? Where did we find him in regard to mutual preference? Why, when that question was up for discussion we found the Minister of Agriculture making use of these remarks which I am anxious to place on 'Hansard,' so that you may know what position this man has taken on many of the important questions before the country. These are some of the remarks made by the minister as reported in the Montreal 'Herald' of January 27, and in 'Hansard' of April 23, 1906.

Speaking of the products of the farms of Canada on mutual preference, he said:

> If any people were to take such a statement it would be the Canadian farmers who are purchasing and selling these products, but I say, as Minister of Agriculture, that the Canadian farmers are not interested in that question and have made no such demand. In this I am sure I represent the feeling of the Canadian farmers. The people who make these statements are not the people who produce or handle these products, or the people who know the real conditions. The farmers of Canada want no preference in the English market. Now, as to our interests, I am going to say frankly as a farmer and as Minister of Agriculture, I am rather glad that England has decided not to give us a preference.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is the position taken by the Minister of Agriculture who knows full well that if we had mutual preference with Great Britain it would increase the value of every farm in Canada, and of every product of the farms of the Dominion of Canada, and that it would bring to the shores of the Dominion immigrants by the tens of thousands, men who are interested in agriculture, men who are ready to come and develop this country for the general benefit of the empire. But the minister takes the position on that question that he knows that the farmers of the Dominion of Canada do not want mutual preference. Then what about the navy? He is prepared to spend money on a navy which a large portion of the farmers of Canada do not want, an independent navy. I might call his attention to this fact that to obtain that independent navy he will have to spend ten or twenty times as much each year as he is spending on the agriculture of this country. I only call attention to these things to show the many blunders and mistakes he has been making. Then what about the government weigher at the port of Montreal? Three million packages of perishable products go out of the port of Montreal every year. One of his own commissioners went to Montreal and investigated this question and definitely stated that the people were being robbed in the position they are placed in at the present time. Did he move the minister? No, Sir. He is still clinging to this condition. Take his position on rural mail deliveries, something that should be an advantage to the farmers of Canada. On that question he comes out boldly and frankly, says it is not in the best interests of the farmers of Canada, and that he is not willing to grant it. What kind of Minister of Agriculture is that to have in a Dominion when on an important question, which is of practical benefit to the farmers of Canada, he rises in his seat and takes that position. He tells us that the cows of Denmark produce double what they do in Canada. Yet this man has been at the head of agriculture in this country for the last fourteen years, and what has he done? He tells us of little cow testing experiments which are going to be of great benefit. We have been hearing of these little toy propositions going to be of great benefit to the farmers of Canada for many years. But instead of taking hold of this industry in a proper, manly way, he brings forward these little suggestions. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up any more of the time of the House. It is late in the session for the Minister of Agriculture to bring down the statement that he has made to-day. Might I say that it ill becomes a minister of the Crown to take the position he did this morning. It ill becomes him because he can depend upon it that if a minister of the Crown can come here year after year and, hiding behind the Speaker, give out figures which would be distributed in the hundreds of thousands all over this country without any contradiction, we are not going to have aggressive legislation in the Department of Agriculture.

Transportation facilities have improved, but instead of the minister raising his hand or doing anything worthy of the position he occupies or anything worthy of consideration, he has taken the position he has to-day, he simply tells the people he is getting along nicely, and has been developing this wonderful agricultural interest of our country through the steps he has taken. I sincerely hope that the minister another year will bring down his estimates early in the session. Year after year it is the same story, bringing down his estimates in the last days of the session, generally on a Friday when there are few in the House and generally in the evening when he knows there will not be many members present to discuss these estimates. Agriculture is a great and important industry in Canada. What would your other industries, your railways, your manufactures, or any other industry be were it not for the agricultural interests? They would amount to nothing and instead of that great industry being debated and discussed, we find the minister coming in the last hours of the session and making a three hours' speech which is a partisan speech. The minister cannot deny that he has made that speech in order to send it out to the people of Canada to show the great development of this great industry under his worthy suffragette or Czar.

Mr. M. BURRELL (Yale-Cariboo). The minister, after he had been speaking this afternoon for about an hour and a half remarked that he wished to direct the attention of his hearers, and to attract also their thought. I would only say that if the minister seriously wished to attain that object he exhibited the most singular way of going about it I have ever witnessed in this House by the elaborate campaign speech which he introduced as the result of a question by a member from this side of the House. He remarked that members on this side were touchy. I do not know that there is any gentleman more touchy than the minister himself. He remarked that we were always fighting him although we were afraid to carry our fight to the logical end of voting against his estimates as he knew we were afraid to carry our measures that far. He added that where he did not find us fighting against him and obstructing his efforts in this House as Minister of Agriculture, he found a veiled opposition from this side. In fact he assumed altogether the air of a martyr, although he did return thanks to the gods that the country, and this House had always stood by him. I would like to refer to this extraordinary statement of the minister, because I object very strongly to the tone of these remarks, which I think must have resulted from an exceptional thinness of the minister's cuticle, and probably from a lack of the sense of proportion. I object to their tone, and to their substance. Last session we had a discussion in this House upon horticultural matters, and the subject was introduced by myself, and spoken to rather extensively by various members including the minister. Let me quote the passage in which I closed my speech:—

> I sincerely trust that the minister will accede to these very moderate requests. They are made not in any political or party spirit but with the sole desire to build up what I believe can now be truly designated a national industry.
>
> Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I appreciate the spirit which has inspired the remarks of the two hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House. I recognize their criticisms as a perfectly fair and friendly effort to secure an advantage to the very important fruit trade of this country.

Why does the minister not remember this sort of thing a little longer? I think it would be better for him, and better for the progress of his estimates if he would take a somewhat fairer line. It would be foolish on our part to say that no good had ever come from the Department of Agriculture. We could not take that foolish position, we recognize the good work that has been done, we recognize the very excellent work that has been performed by many officials, and very first-class officials of the Agriculture Department. We also recognize the good work done in the various provinces by provincial officials, and otherwise by the people of the country at large. The agricultural industry has achieved great progress, and if the minister, and his department have contributed to that progress in any way, they will get the just amount of praise that is due them. And he should remember that a certain amount of praise is due to those on this side of the House who have supported the minister's hands in putting on the statute-book measures for the advantage of that industry. I sometimes think that in this country we are getting too much of the spirit of brag and boasting in what we do, and I fear sometimes the minister has fallen victim to this spirit, and occasionally in giving three blasts of the trumpet in praise of Canadian agriculture he does not forget to give an extra three for the minister. It might almost be concluded, I think, that the demerits of the Department of Agriculture must be very grave if they demand a three hours speech to introduce the estimates. I have noticed about a baker's dozen of supporters of the hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, and a good sprinkling on this side, members going in and out, and I could almost fancy the minister might have included in his speech the quotation from the poem:

> Men may come and men may go,
> But I go on forever.

The government is very prone to accuse members on this side of delaying the work of the session, but I think it will strike many that we have had the most singular instance this afternoon of delaying the work of the session at a very late period. Even in defending himself from imaginary attacks the minister has indulged in a most extraordinary redundance of phraseology, and wealth of detail which I fear is characteristic of his remarks, and which have done much to delay the work of the session. He has given us, save the mark, a 'sketch,' and I may say with all respect to what he may have said to Jones in Liverpool, or to what Jones may have said to him that it would have been better at this stage of the session in the Agricultural Committee or somewhere other than the House, where there would have been no difficulty in getting the minister's remarks printed so as to reach the country. That would have avoided this three hours' speech, and would not have encouraged the debate which must be a necessary consequence of the assertions made during his speech. I do not want to be a sinner myself in delaying the work, but it would have been better for the minister to have dispensed with his three hours' talk and to have gone on with the estimates, and to have risen as soon as possible.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE (Lisgar). Mr. Speaker, I am sure the only member in this House who was thoroughly entertained by the campaign speech delivered by the minister was himself. He even refused at the beginning of his address to allow us to ask him a question. This is putting on the thumb-screws even tighter than the Prime Minister would do. We all admit that this minister has charge of the most important department in the whole government. We may talk about our mines or our forest departments, and we are all proud of them, but we must admit that the Agricultural Department is the most important in Canada. The land will keep on producing, and will furnish employment and give support to many millions of people in this country long after our forests and mines are exhausted. Therefore, I say that agriculture in Canada is the most important industry we have. Notwithstanding all that the hon. minister has been pleased to tell us this afternoon about what he has done for the people of Canada, when we come to investigate the other departments and come back again and look at what the Department of Agriculture is doing, we are compelled to admit that the Department of Agriculture is the most undeveloped department in the whole government. Take the esimates of 1909-10, when we look at the heading we find in staring figures $1,114,000 for that department. But when we go through the estimates and sift out what is really spent in the interest of agriculture, we find that those figures dwindle down to $657,000. I know that the minister figures in another item which brings it up a good deal higher, and that item is the health of animals. Now, Sir, knowing something about how this money is being spent on the health of animals throughout western Canada, I claim it is not being spent in the interest of the farmers. Take the estimates for last year. Last year the government were retrenching, they found there was not enough money to go round, and they had to retrench. We find the other great departments cut down about ten per cent, but when we come to the Agriculture Department, we find it cut down from twenty to thirty per cent. This leads us to one of two conclusions, either that the government considers this the most unimportant department, or that the Minister of Agriculture is the weakest minister in the cabinet and cannot get what is needed for the great producing classes of this country. I claim that if the governments, whether Dominion or provincial, have any function at all that function essentially is to stand between the producer and the consumer, and to see that there is no undue toll taken from either. I would ask the minister when he has ever stood up in his place in parliament for either the producers or the consumers against the grafters. He has never done so during the two years I have had the honour of a seat in this House. Still, we find combines starting up everywhere, beef combines, pork combines, cement combines, and every other kind of combine, from one end of Canada to the other, which are taking undue tolls from the people, yet the minister has never raised one hand or one finger to protect them. I consider that the conditions in regard to his department are in a deplorable state. Would you believe it, Mr. Speaker, the exportation of everything raised or grown on the farm, except wheat, is going down year by year? I claim that this condition in that respect is not only regrettable but deplorable. Let me give you a few figures of our exportations to prove what I am saying:

Hams and bacon.. ..	$15,906,334	$ 8,835,444
Decline of $6,710,000.

These are eight of the most important products of the farm, and I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that unless these eight branches of farm production are kept up, the production of wheat cannot possibly last in this country. In the United States, some years ago, the average production of wheat was about twenty bushels to the acre; to-day the average production of wheat in that country has fallen to twelve or thirteen bushels per acre. Our average in western Canada is about twenty bushels per acre at the present time, but if we do not keep these eight branches in a flourishing condition, the production of wheat in western Canada will very shortly be down to twelve or thirteen bushels per acre. Therefore, I say that these important branches of agriculture must go hand in hand with the production of wheat. Last year we had Professor Robertson before the Agricultural Committee, and he told us that the farmers of Quebec, on account of their poor methods of farming, were losing about $100,000,000 a year. If the province of Quebec lost a revenue of $100,000,000 because the farmers do not farm the land in a proper manner, what does it mean for the whole of the other provinces of this country? If that statement is true in connection with Quebec, then the whole Dominion of Canada lost a revenue equal to $400,000,000 or $500,000,000. The minister says that the reason our farmers are not more successful is because of their slipshod methods and of their lack of interest in their work. I want to tell the minister that is not the facts. I am speaking particularly in connection with western Canada, because I am more in touch with conditions there than in eastern Canada. When, some years ago, the government and the Canadian Pacific railway joined hands and sent a train through western Canada to give demonstrations to our farmers I remember quite well the day that that train reached the town that I lived in. It was in the dead of winter, there was a blizzard, it was cold and stormy, but I know of lots of farmers throughout my constituency who drove 12, and 20 miles to be there to get the information that these men had brought for their enlightenment. Farmers, throughout western Canada particularly, are hungry for information. They want to have demonstrated to them how they should do things and they would be only too glad to follow up the instructions that were given to them. I spoke a little while ago in connection with the exportation of products of this country falling off year after year. I have spoken to several in connection with it and the argument that I have received from each one was that it was because of the great internal expansion throughout this country. When I first heard that argument I thought perhaps there was a good deal to it, but when I looked into the records of other countries that were expanding and going ahead practically on a par with Canada, I found the condition altogether different. Instead of the productions of the Argentine republic, New Zealand and Australia going down from year to year as ours are, they are going up. They are exporting more of their farm products than ever each year. The Argentine republic is expanding just as fast as we are if not a good deal faster. In 1865, 11,667 immigrants arrived on their shores and in 1895, 125,205; and in 1907, 329,122. So you can see that they are getting just as many immigrants, if not more, than we are in Canada. They exported, in 1887, 13,185,000 bushels of wheat; and in 1907 they exported 86,360,000 bushels. Their exportation of wheat is practically on a par with ours. We find that in 1900 they exported wool to the extent of 101,113 tons. That shows that they have gone into sheep breeding, and in 1907, the exportation of wool had increased to 154,818 tons. Instead of their being the same as we are in Canada, instead of the exportation of sheep and wool going down, year after year, the exportation of sheep and wool from the Argentine republic is going up year after year. I wish to speak particularly in connection with the cattle trade of the Argentine republic. We find that they have two systems of shipping their cattle. They ship some on the hoof, and some in a frozen state. In 1900 they exported 66,496 head of cattle; in 1903, 249,000; and in 1906, 509,112. That shows, in my opinion, that they must have some persons in the Argentine republic who are looking after the interests of the great producing population of that country. In Australia, our sister colony, they are expanding too. They are developing their country according to population as fast as we are. They exported beef in 1906, 294,392 quarters ; in 1907, 308,114 ; and in 1909, 390,626; showing a gradual increase all the time while our exportation is going in the opposite direction. I claim that the interest of this present government is particularly favourable to the manufacturers. I have shown how the exportation of farm products is going down from year to year, but when we look at the exportation of the manufactured article we find it going up from year to year. In 1900, $14,222,000 worth of manufactured goods were exported from Canada; in 1905, $21,191,000, and in 1909, $28,957,000, showing a gradual increase all the time. If the great expansion of our country was eating up the extra products of the farm, why should not this great expansion also eat up and take the surplus manufactured goods that we are producing in this country? I claim that this is a very serious state of affairs.

The minister took three and a half hours to tell us what a great department he had, but he forgot to tell us why the exportation of these products has been decreasing year after year. Well, Sir, I claim the reason is that the minister is not looking after the interests of his department. The hon. gentleman tells us what he is doing for Canada, but when we compare what Canada is doing with what other countries are doing it is absolutely laughable to hear him boasting. France spends $9,200,000 each year in the interest of agriculture; Austria, $9,270,000; Hungary, $9,400,000; the United States, $10,000,000; Russia, $25,280,000; Japan, $3,750,000, and all poor Canada can afford to expend on her agriculture is a paltry $657,000 a year. France has 71 experimental farms, Germany has 80, Austria has 61, the United States 60, Russia has 101, and Canada has 6 or 7. Why, Sir, I hold that in an agricultural country like this the Agriculture Department should be one of the greatest spending departments of the government in its efforts to promote the welfare of the agriculturalists of the country and to extend our trade. Now, I ask the Minister of Agriculture to give me his special attention while I refer to the question of experimental farms. Let me remind him that there is only one experimental farm in the whole province of Manitoba, and that is situated at Brandon, so that in order that the farmers of that province may obtain the object lessons in scientific farming which the minister has referred to, they have to travel long distances to Brandon and to lose a great deal of their valuable time. It may be said that to the majority of the farmers of Manitoba the experimental farm at Brandon is useless. I trust the minister will see his way to establish other such farms in Manitoba without delay. I think there should be a model farm in each farming constituency in Canada. Let me for a moment direct the attention of the minister to the combines existing in western Canada. In the little town of Mowbray, in 1908, the elevators handled over 300,000 bushels of wheat, but last spring a spur railway was built across the line into north Dakota, and an elevator erected there, with the result that last year instead of handling 300,000 bushels on the Canadian side there were only 100,000 bushels handled, while the United States elevator handled 300,000 bushels. Our farmers took their grain across the line and shipped it in bond back into Canada to the lake ports, and by pursuing this course they received from 13 to 14 cents a bushel more for their grain than if they had dealt in Canada. Let me tell the Minister of Agriculture also that whereas in the province of Manitoba along the boundary line the land is worth only $20 or $25 and in some cases $30 an acre; right across on the American side on account of the better treatment which is accorded the farmers in north Dakota, the land is worth from $40 to $50 an acre. Then, with regard to the beef industry, I might remind the minister that he has been asked many times to investigate the beef industry of the United States, Australia and the Argentine republic, but he has always refused or neglected to do so. I represent a mixed farming community, and last year we shipped 512 cars of cattle to the city of Winnipeg. I know numbers of farmers in my constituency who always in the past have kept from 50 to 75 and 100 head of cattle, but these men are selling out their herds and going out of business because the combines are robbing them of every dollar they should make. It goes without saying that the farmers must keep stock in order to keep up the standard of their land, and if the cattle industry declines so much the worse for general farming. There were 110,000 head of cattle shipped to the city of Winnipeg last year, and all the farmers could get from the beef combine in that city was an average of $3.76 per hundred weight, while at the same time the average price of similar cattle in Chicago was $6.27 per 100 pounds. There must be something wrong with the cattle trade when such a condition exists. In 1907, the Roblin government appointed a commission to look into the conditions of the beef trade in Manitoba, and they found that on each beast a farmer raised in that country he lost $5.80, that the retail dealers made an average profit of $13.60, and the abattoir men—in other words, the great beef combine of Winnipeg—made $23.10 per head. The public abattoir in Montreal charges $1 for killing, so that we may infer there was a clear profit of $22 per head to the abattoir owners, or the beef combine in Manitoba. With 110,000 head of cattle going in, the meat combine in Winnipeg took out of the producers between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000 more than they should have done. Is it any wonder that the producers are quitting? The combine is simply driving them out of business. The drovers from north Dakota come across to Manitoba and buy cattle and drive them across the line and pay the duty, which I think is 25 per cent. Alberta is the finest country in the world for producing beef and pork, but the combine is driving the producer out of Alberta. Mr. Paddy Burns, the beef king of Alberta, says that in five years Alberta will be importing beef and pork, because the producers there will not be raising enough to supply the demand. I would like to read to you what the Edmonton 'News' of February 19, 1910, says:

One of the most important matters before the people of Alberta is that of chilled meat. It is absolutely essential to the prosperity of the province, both in town and country, that the value of our flocks and herds should not only be maintained but increased, and there never was a more opportune time than now to strengthen the hands of the farmer and stock-raiser in the production of beef and mutton.

It is roughly computed that the average price of first-class beef for the last three years has been from 3 to 3½ cents on foot, hardly a paying proposition to the stock-raiser. The figure average would not be at all likely to go over 3½ cents per pound. This is a most unsatisfactory state of affairs when we consider our many and great natural advantages.

What seems to be mostly required is a stable and steady market for live stock the year round. This can only be obtained by cold storage and chilled meat exportation. By this latter method not only would the grower obtain a far better price for his beef cattle, but the markets would be steady and such as he could depend upon. It would be a fairly safe estimate to make, that good, well-fed cattle could be sustained in price at 5 cents per pound, and would seldom if ever go below that mark. The difference between selling a good 3-year-old steer of, say 1,200 pounds weight, between 3 cents and 5 cents per pound is $36 in one case, $60 in the other, a difference of $24.

Counting the cost of rearing, attention and feed, three-year-old steers, sold at 3 cents per pound, represent in most cases a deficit, while if the same animals are sold at 4½, even, or 5 cents per pound and over, they represent a healthy state of trade and are a source of profit to their owner who is encouraged to go on and bring others into the business.

This extra money earned would not only benefit the producer, but would also be found circulating in all branches of trade and would be a benefit to the whole community.

This is the condition in Alberta, and the same conditions prevail in Saskatchewan, and I am told that they are almost as bad in eastern Canada. Now, the Roblin government have offered $50,000 towards the establishment of a public abattoir in the city of Winnipeg, and while this is in the right direction, I claim that it does not go far enough. What we want in Manitoba is something to relieve the condition for the whole province, and not merely for the city of Winnipeg. While we recognize the importance of the city of Winnipeg, it is not of very much importance when it comes to the producing of beef. Therefore, what we want is something broader, something that will relieve the situation throughout the whole province of Manitoba. The government of Alberta are also talking of going into the abattoir business, and there is no doubt that in course of time the province of Saskatchewan will have to follow in the same direction, because, as I have said, it will be impossible to keep up the productiveness of the farms of western Canada if we do not keep stock on the land. I think each province should own and control the abattoirs of that province, and I think the Dominion government should put on a cold storage system throughout the whole Dominion. All the governments should work in conjunction, so that we could have our products shipped to the British market in a chilled state. In this respect we in Canada are in a very favourable position. While Australia and New Zealand, owing to their distance from the British market, must freeze their products in order to get them to that market, we on account of our nearness to the British market, can ship our products in a chilled state. In that way the chilled products of Canada will bring practically as much on the British market as the newly-slaughtered products over there, while the frozen goods of these other countries will bring a much smaller price. Therefore, we have a very great advantage over them. The hon. minister spoke of the appointment of a commission to go to Europe to look into the conditions of the hog industry there. They went to England, Scotland, Ireland, Denmark, and Holland to study the conditions in those countries. I have looked through the report of this commission, and I have also visited the Experimental Farm at Ottawa; and I may say that if there is one department of the Experimental Farm which the hon. minister deserves credit for, it is the hog department, because it is in splendid shape, and he has got there some of as fine animals as I have ever seen. So I do not think it is the conditions in these foreign countries that we need to look into. The conditions in those countries could not be on a par with ours, and anyway my idea of this question is that what we want to know of across the water is the price and the conditions of handling, what we want to look into are the conditions under which these other countries get their products to the British market. I think that if he had gone to work and sent that commission to the United States, the Argentine Republic and Australia, to look into the conditions under which these countries send their products into the British market, then I say he would have been doing a splendid thing for the producing population of this country. But instead of that, he goes to work and puts the cart before the horse, and sends the commission over to Europe to look into the conditions there, instead of to the countries on this side of the water and looked into their cold storage systems.

PRIVATE BILLS.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER TRANSMISSION COMPANY.

Mr. PARDEE moved the third reading of Bill (No. 115) to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company, Limited.

Mr. S. SHARPE. An amendment agreed to in committee to clause 6, subsection 2, line 21, the addition of the words 'transmitted or' before the word 'produced' has not been incorporated in the reprint.

Mr. PARDEE. I have no objection to those words being inserted.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I have given notice of an amendment on the third reading which I think is obviously in the interest of the country. That amendment reads:

Nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to revive any powers of the St. Lawrence Power Company, being chapter III., 1 Edward VII., which may have become null and void by reason of the said company not complying with the provisions of the said Act of incorporation.

As every one knows the St. Lawrence Power Company was incorporated by a special Act of 1901 which conferred certain powers on the company in connection with making dams, &c., along 57 miles of the St. Lawrence river. That included our water-powers and section 13 of the St. Lawrence Power Company's private Act defines the time after which the company will forfeit its right unless it goes on with its works, that is three years from the passage of the Act. As a matter of fact the St. Lawrence Power Company, incorporated under the Act of 1901 has not constructed any works whatever. Section 14 of the present Bill provides:

Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to constitute an approval by parliament of any future development of water-power by erecting a dam in or across the St. Lawrence river under the chapter 111 of the statutes of 1901, intituled 'An Act to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Company,' or otherwise; nor shall the company hereby incorporated be authorized to transmit power generated by the St. Lawrence Power Company other than the power generated by and in connection with the works already constructed by the said St. Lawrence Power Company.

That is making an affirmation that the company constructed certain works which as a matter of fact they did not. This idea is amplified in section 13 by the use of the word 'further'.

The Governor in Council shall not give his approval to the construction of any further canals, &c. . . . by the St. Lawrence Power Company.

They have not constructed any works and consequently the word 'further' is a misnomer. The whole list of amendments incorporated in the present Bill are admittedly irregular to say the least. I do not think that in the memory of the oldest parliamentarian that it was ever known that rights of certain promoters under a previous Act have been cut down or curtailed in a subsequent private Bill. Even admitting that these amendments are regular, this parliament does not want to do anything that will revive rights that have lapsed. The amendment cannot possibly do any harm, and I do not think the gentleman in charge of the Bill desires to ratify any rights if the company have lost them by not constructing their works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How by any possibility could anything in this Bill revive the powers of that company, or empower it to proceed with the construction of any works, when by another clause in the Bill it is especially provided, that the company shall not be allowed to construct any works of any kind in the river without first getting the consent of parliament?

Mr. S. SHARPE. Where does it say that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the amendment which was moved by the leader of the opposition, and accepted by gentlemen on both sides of the House.

Mr. S. SHARPE. That refers merely to the damming of the St. Lawrence. If the intention of parliament is not to revive their powers, there would be no harm in this amendment.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the use of making ourselves a laughing stock by putting in amendments that are not necessary?

Mr. S. SHARPE. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) makes a misstatement, it says 'works already constructed by the said St. Lawrence Power Company,' when as a matter of fact they have not constructed any works. My information is that they have not constructed any works at all, that they are operating works that have been handed over to them by the government.

Mr. R. SMITH. The hon. gentleman's information is entirely wrong, he is starting out on a wrong assumption.

Mr. S. SHARPE. My information comes from a gentleman who is familiar with the whole territory, who lives along the St. Lawrence river, and he tells me they have not constructed any new works. All they have done is to operate works that have been constructed by the government, and if this company of 1901 have consturcted any new works, there is no harm in the amendment.

Mr. R. SMITH. I can only repeat that whoever gave the hon. gentleman the infomation told him something that he did not know anything about, because the company have constructed works and have developed power. That power that is being used to operate the Cornwall canal is produced near Mille Roches, and is being distributed in the town of Cornwall. The company built a raceway from the basin that was developed from the Sheik's Island dam, through Sheik's Island, constructed an electric power house, put in water wheels, and developed I think some 5,000 horse-power, which is being used at the present time to the full extent.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. That is the old company.

Mr. R. SMITH. Not the old company.

Mr. S. SHARPE. If the hon. gentleman's statement is correct, and I assume it is, the company have not forfeited their rights, they are still in existence and still capable of proceeding under their Act of 1901, and for that reason there would be no harm in the present amendment.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But there is a clause which prohibits them from going on.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Only in so far as the dam is concerned. Any plans adopted for the damming of the St. Lawrence must be submitted to parliament.

Mr. R. SMITH. There may be some technical misunderstanding between the hon. gentleman and myself. The original right to develop that power was given I think to Mr. M. P. Davis, and Mr. Davis transferred his rights to this company. Perhaps that is the distinction between the hon. gentleman and myself.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Then was it the company or was it Mr. Davis who did the construction work?

Mr. R. SMITH. I am not quite certain as to the exact date.

Mr. S. SHARPE. The hon. gentleman should not get up and contradict my statement unless he has accurately ascertained the facts. It is altogether different whether Mr. Davis did the construction work or whether this company did the construction work. If the company, under this Act of incorporation, has not done any additional work, then the company are in default, and the present Bill may be reviving rights under the Act of 1901.

Mr. PARDEE. Does the hon. gentleman seriously argue as a proposition of law that anything we do under this Act may revive the rights of 1901?

Mr. S. SHARPE. We have introduced already three amendments in the Bill that interfere with that Act of 1901, and this is a private Bill. If this House can curtail the rights of the company under the Act of 1901 by inserting an amendment in this Bill, then we can certainly confer rights upon that company. If our amendments are any good at all, then we are capable of curtailing the rights of the company under the Act of 1901. I therefore move the amendment of which I have given notice.

House divided on amendment.—Mr. S Sharpe.

Amendment (Mr. S. Sharpe) negatived.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought there were two words that were to be inserted by agreement. Is this the time to do it?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, if they are verbal amendments, they can be inserted now.

Mr. PARDEE. Are these the two words that the hon. member for North Ontario referred to?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes.

Mr. PARDEE. There is no objection to their being inserted. I therefore beg to move:

That in line 35, section 13, the words 'the Canadian' between the words 'of' and 'canal' be substituted for the word 'our'. It will then read the 'safeguarding of the Canadian canal' instead of 'our canal'; also in line 21, subsection 2, section 6, after the word 'energy' there be inserted the words 'transmitted or'.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the Bill do now pass, and the title be entered as on the Order Paper?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I beg to move that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day six months hence.

Mr. SPEAKER. I declared the Bill read the third time, and the question before the House is that the Bill be now passed, and its title be entered as on the order paper. The only amendment that can be put at this stage is regarding the title of the Bill. The Bill has passed its third reading, and this amendment is out of order.

Motion agreed to, and Bill passed.

ROYAL GUARDIANS.

House in committee on Bill (No. 120) respecting the Royal Guardians.—Mr. Rivet.

On the preamble,

Mr. FIELDING. There is a question as to the propriety of using the word 'royal' in connection with public charters, and in the present case the parties concerned were careful to take the trouble of ascertaining from the Colonial Office whether there would be any objection. This was a very proper course. They have recited in this Bill that His Majesty has assented to the use of the word 'royal,' but, when His Majesty assents to this Bill in the usual way, he becomes a party to it, and I think the statement in the preamble is unnecessary. There are some reasons why we should not allow the recital to go in. I move that the words:

And whereas His Majesty has approved of the word 'royal' in the title of the said association.

be stricken out.

Mr. U. WILSON. I understood in the committee that these words had been put in at the special request of the department?

Mr. FIELDING. My understanding was that the fact that communication had been had with the Colonial Office should be recorded in the records of the committee, but I do not think it necessary to incorporate it in the preamble of the Bill.

Mr. U. WILSON. The position taken by the official of the department was that if it went in the minutes it would be lost sight of, and that if it went in the preamble it would give it publicity.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not necessary to put the statement in the preamble although, as I have said, I think the parties took the proper course.

Mr. HENDERSON. I agree with the Minister of Finance that it is surplusage to add these words in the Bill, and it would look as if it were an effort to obtain a little cheap advertising for this company.

Mr. BARKER. If you insert these words, it would imply that unless they were inserted we could not pass the Bill. I understood the minister to say that assent was not essential, but that it was discreet to apply for assent to the use of the word 'royal.'

Mr. FIELDING. We have used the word 'royal' for many years without restriction, and of recent years a communication was received from the Colonial Office, not forbidding it but pointing out that it was open to objection and expressing the desire that the word should not be used except in cases where His Majesty approved. For that reason we generally prefer that the title should not be used. Still, our right to use it, if in the judgment of this parliament it should be deemed expedient, would not be questioned.

Mr. U. WILSON. The promoter of the Bill is here, and he will corroborate what I have said.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not need corroboration for an assertion made by my hon. friend; I am quite sure it is correct. If an officer of my department put it in that way, there is a little misunderstanding.

Amendment that the words be stricken from the preamble agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 201) for the relief of John Green.—Mr. Edwards.

RACE-TRACK GAMBLING.

Mr. FIELDING. It will be in the recollection of the House that at the close of the debate on the Bill to amend the Criminal law in respect to the management of race-tracks, &c., the Bill, although in substance defeated, was allowed to stand on the order paper in the hope that some arrangement might possibly be made whereby the contending parties would agree. I am informed that such an arrangement has been reached, and upon that understanding, and in the belief that it will be acceptable to the House generally, I move that Order 37 in Public Bills and Orders standing in the name of Mr. Miller, be now called.

Motion agreed to.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 6) to amend the Criminal Code—Mr. Miller.

Mr. MILLER. It has been correctly stated by the hon. Minister of Finance that an understanding has been arrived at between the opposing forces in connection with this Bill. Let me say at the beginning that I notice a report in the Toronto papers this evening that I, acting for the Moral Reform Association, had negotiated a compromise. This I may say is entirely incorrect. It is only just to say that. I want for a few minutes to explain my position in accepting the compromise.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Dispense.

Mr. MILLER. I think it is only right that I should explain my position in that regard, because I know that I shall be criticised for having accepted a compromise, and the question may be asked as to why, if I accept a compromise now, I was not willing to do so when the matter was before the House. Let me say that I, with many of the parties who with me supported the Bill do not, by accepting a compromise, concede that it is a proper or right thing to allow professional betting in any place, either on or off a race-track, or at any time. However, I was unwilling to accept any compromise until we were defeated by a vote in the House, and it was found impossible to get that for which we asked. Then it occurred to me that there was just one of two things to do—either to renew the fight, with the hope of getting something more at another time, or else to accept some sort of compromise. If the fight were renewed, I did not know what might or what might not have been obtained; but in accepting a compromise I knew that we were certain of securing a good deal of that for which we asked. I was talking with one of the leading lawyers of the province of Ontario, a man who does not belong to the Moral Reform Association, but who was very much interested in the passage of this Bill. After the vote of last Thursday night this gentleman said to a friend of mine that he hoped that I and those associated with me would not accept any compromise. However, in talking with him afterwards, the gentleman, who is a very eminent practitioner of great ability, as well as common sense, said that I would be accepting a grave responsibility in refusing a compromise that would bring about a law that was so much better than what we have at present. I thought that in that statement he was perhaps right. Then I realized, too, that there was a danger of the public coming to the conclusion that we were wanting rather to win a fight than to obtain good legislation, and if any large number of the public had that idea, which was not a correct one, it would, nevertheless, prejudice a large number of people against the measure, and make it more difficult to obtain legislation again. I want to point out that the legislation we shall have, if his compromise be carried through, is a great step in advance. It will abolish hand-book making entirely; it will abolish the keeping of pool-rooms; it will abolish the advertising of tips and racing information, and the transmission by telegraph or otherwise of racing news; it will limit book-making on the race-track to a seven day race-meet at the longest and not exceeding two meets at any one association track in the course of a year. That will make a very great difference. It will reduce the spring meet of the Woodbine from thirteen days to seven days. It will make impossible the meet of thirty or forty days held at Vancouver, the 60-day meet at Victoria, and the long meets held at other race-tracks. We realize that a great many men both in the House, and out of the House who opposed the Bill as I first introduced it were nevertheless quite earnest, and honest in their desire to have clean sports.

Many of these men, with greater experience than mine, have stated to me that they believed that for the first six or seven days of a race-meeting men went there, because of their love for the horse and for forse-racing, but that after that it became rather an affair of gambling and these men desired to see the length of the meets shortened. The committee will also see that there is a provision that makes it impossible to establish tracks belonging to any association incorporation hereinafter unless the track be located within a Canadian town or city having a population of not less than 15,000 people. That will, I think, be a great restriction. A question that may be asked is: Why am I willing to accede to a compromise to-night, when I refused to accept it on Thursday night? It was not because of my determination to have my own way in the matter. I did not like the compromise offered at that time, and if that compromise were offered now, I would not accept it. There is a difference in the reduction of days. The compromise offered on Thursday night provided for a reduction to eight days and that offered to-night is for seven days. That is a reduction of one-eighth of the time. But another and very material difference, and one I strongly objected to on Thursday last was in the amendment introduced then, that allowed and exempted in express language, 'bets between individuals.' Now, I had been advised by the most eminent legal authority in this House, that the words 'bets between individuals' would exempt betting with the book-maker at all times, and at all places, because in the last analysis, the book-maker is after all an individual. If that advice which I got from that eminent authority was correct, and if bets between individuals in that language would have exempted the book-maker, then the amendment offered to me, perhaps not by any intention of the person who conceived the amendment, would have made the amendment and the law quite valueless, so that the amendment I offer to-night is a much better compromise in my opinion, than the compromise offered last Thursday. I know I will be criticised for having accepted any compromise. I was criticised before for being too narrow and too extreme. Criticism and fault-finding is the natural diet of a politician and I do not mind it any more than other politicians do. Now, just this in conclusion. I have said that those who promoted this Bill who were in favour of the passing of it, do not concede that it is right to allow persons to bet or gamble as a business at any place or time, and I would like to emphasise this. I notice an article in one of to-day's papers that there would be another agitation next session to wipe out the book-maker altogether. I do not think there is any foundation for making that statement. If we pass this law in this parliament, I think it is fair that there should be a reasonable time to see how the legislation passed works out in practice, and new legislation will be asked for when public opinion demands it. The coming of that time depends very largely on how the racing associations conduct their tracks in the interval. I have nothing further to say then, except to thank those who, in the House and out of the House, helped me with my Bill and to say this that I have no feelings against those who opposed the Bill, and who, possibly, were as conscientious in opposing it as I was in promoting it. I move, seconded by Mr. McColl, that clause 2 of the said Bill be reconsidered.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Then, if that is carried I beg to move that all the words in clause 2 of Bill (No. 6) after the word 'therefore' in the second line be struck out and the following substituted:

(a) opened, kept or used for the purpose of betting between persons resorting thereto, and

(i) the owner, occupier or keeper thereof,

(ii) any person using the same,

(iii) any person procured or employed by, or acting for or on behalf of any such person,

(iv) any person having the care or management, or in any manner conducting the business thereof; or,

(b) opened, kept or used for the purpose of any money or valuable thing being received by or on behalf of any such person as aforesaid, as or for the consideration

(i) for any assurance or undertaking, expressed or implied, to pay or give thereafter any money or valuable thing on any event or contingency, of, or relating to any horse-race, or other race, fight, game or sport; or,

(ii) for securing the paying or giving by some other person of any money or valuable thing on any such event or contingency; or,

(c) opened, kept or used for the purpose of recording or registering bets upon any contingency or event, horse-race, or other race, fight, game or sport, or for the purpose of receiving money or other things of value to be transmitted for the purpose of being wagered upon any such contingency or event, horse-race or other race, fight, game or sport, whether any such bet is recorded or registered there, or any money or other thing of value is there received to be so transmitted or not; or,

(d) opened, kept or used for the purpose of facilitating or encouraging or assisting in the making of bets upon any contingency or event, horse-race or other race, fight, game or sport, by announcing the betting upon, or announcing or displaying the results of horse-races, or other races, fights, games.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Then if that is carried I would like to move:

The word 'place,' as used in this section and in the preceding section, includes any place, whether inclosed or not, and whether it is used permanently or temporarily, and whether there is or is not exclusive right of user.

It will be remembered that the amendment in section 3 substituting the word 'place' for 'house' contained in the latter part of 227, was to be sufficient. For that reason we are asking that this and one or two other following sections be struck out. I move that section 3 be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

On section 4,

Mr. MILLER. For the same reason I would move to strike out section 4.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have these amendments the approval and concurrence of the Minister of Justice?

Mr. PARDEE. Yes, they have.

On section 5,

Mr. MILLER. This section does not relate in any way to racing, but to the barricading of a door in a gaming house. It is to get over a difficulty often found in connection with Chinese gaming houses where a door is barred to prevent the entrance of the police. I move that section 5 be amended to read:

Section 230 of the said code is amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:—

(e) being the owner or other person in control of premises occupied or used as a disorderly house, knowingly allows any contrivance whatsoever upon the said premises for the purpose of preventing, obstructing or delaying the entry of any constable or officer authorized as aforesaid into any such disorderly house, or any part thereof.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have all the amendments the hon. member is moving the concurrence and approval of the Minister of Justice?

Mr. MILLER. I understand they have.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that either the Minister of Justice should be here or we should have some statement from some person who does know the fact.

Mr. FIELDING. The Prime Minister having consented to the Bill being called to-night I judge from that that the Minister of Justice has given his consent. I have not myself had any conversation with the Minister of Justice about it, but I have no doubt that the statement of the hon. member (Mr. Pardee) is correct.

Mr. PARDEE. I have submitted these amendments to the Minister of Justice and he is quite content with them.

Motion agreed to.

On section 6,

Mr. MILLER. Section 6 was for the same purpose as some of the other sections substituting the word 'place' for 'house' and for the reasons I have stated I move that section 6 be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

On section 7,

Mr. MILLER. I move that section 7 be struck out, and that the following be substituted therefor:

Section 235 of the said code is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—

235. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence, and liable to one year's imprisonment, and to a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, who—

(a) uses or knowingly allows any part of any premises under his control to be used for the purpose of recording or registering any bet or wager, or selling any pool; or,

(b) keeps, exhibits, employs or knowingly allows to be kept, exhibited or employed, in any part of any premises under his control any device or apparatus for the purpose of recording any bet or wager or selling any pool; or,

(c) becomes the custodian or depository of any money, property or valuable thing staked, wagered or pledged in any case or transaction in which such staking, wagering or pledging is itself contrary to the provisions of this Act; or,

(d) records or registers any bet or wager, or sells any pool upon the results,—

(i) of any political or municipal election;

(ii) of any race;

(iii) of any contest or trial of skill or endurance of man or beast;

(e) engages in pool-selling or book-making, or in the business or occupation of betting or wagering, or makes any agreement for the purchase or sale of betting or gaming privileges, or for the purchase or sale of information intended to assist in book-making, pool-selling, betting or wagering; or,

(f) advertises, prints, publishes, exhibits, posts up, sells or supplies, or offers to sell or supply, any information intended to assist in, or intended for use in connection with, book-making, pool-selling, betting or wagering upon any horse-race or other race, fight, game or sport, whether at the time of advertising, printing, publishing, exhibiting, posting up or supplying such news or information, such horse-race or other race, fight, game or sport has or has not taken place; or,

(g) advertises, prints, publishes, exhibits or posts up any offer, invitation or inducement to bet; or,

(h) wilfully and knowingly sends, transmits, delivers or receives any message by telegraph, telephone, mail or express conveying any information relating to book-making, pool-selling, betting or wagering, or intended to assist in book-making, pool-selling, betting or wagering; or

(i) aids or assists in any manner in any of the said acts which are by this section forbidden.

2. The provisions of this section and of sections 227 and 228 shall not extend to any person by reason of his becoming the custodian or depository of any money, property or valuable thing staked or to be paid to the winner of any lawful race, sport, game or exercise, or to be paid to the owner of any horse engaged in any lawful race, or to a private bet between individuals not engaged in any way in a business of betting, or to bets made or records of bets made upon the race-course of any incorporated association during the actual progress of a race-meeting conducted by such association upon races being run thereon, or to the sale by such association of information or privileges to assist in or enable the conducting of book-making, pool-selling, betting or wagering upon the race-course of such association during the actual progress of a race-meeting conducted by such association upon races being run thereon, or to book-making, pool-selling, betting or wagering upon such race-course during the actual progress of a race-meeting conducted by such association upon races being run thereon. Provided that as to race-meetings at which there are running races no such race-meeting continues for more than seven days of continuous racing on days on which such racing may be lawfully carried on, and provided that no such association holds in any one calendar year more than two race-meetings at which there are running races and that there is an interval of at least twenty days between meetings, and provided that such race-meeting is held upon the race-course of a racing association now incorporated, or upon a race-course located in or within three miles of a Canadian town or city having a population of not less than fifteen thousand people by a racing association hereafter incorporated. Provided also that as to race-meetings at which there are trotting or pacing races no such race-meeting continues for more than three days, on which racing may be carried on, in any one calendar week, and that no race-meetings at which there are trotting or pacing races are held on the same grounds for more than fourteen days in all in any one calendar year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not wish to be controversial at all in this matter, I am and always have been strongly in favour of the abolition of the worst vices that appertain to race-track gambling; but I would point out that Winnipeg and the people of the west desire to hold a World's fair in Winnipeg sometime in the near future. Surely it is not the intention of this parliament to legislate in such a way that if Winnipeg does hold a World's fair, we can only have seven days' racing at that fair. I would like some provision inserted in this Bill that will get over that difficulty. I am only suggesting it to the good sense of the House, and not with any desire to raise any controversy in the matter.

Mr. McCOLL. The World's Fair is a special event, and perhaps we could let that matter stand, and make it a subject of legislation if necessary when the World's Fair is finally decided on.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think that is quite right, if it were possible to give Winnipeg a guarantee to that effect.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would like to ask the promoter of this Bill one question. Will this clause, as I find it in a copy of the Bill, prevent newspapers published in Canada or elsewhere from publishing bets or the odds on sporting events?

Mr. MILLER. I do not think it will. That clause is not a new one, it was before the House for a long time, and no newspaper publisher, or newspaper dealer has made any protest. I should think their interest is not being affected, or they would have protested.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I am sorry the Minister of Justice is not here, but the Solicitor General is here, and I would like to have his opinion on that question. For instance, would that clause prevent the 'Globe' newspaper from publishing the odds, we will say, on the Jeffries-Johnson fight? Also, suppose a newsdealer sells a copy of the London 'Times', which constantly contains sporting information, and odds on horse-races and on cricket matches, would the seller of the London 'Times' be subject to prosecution under the Code? It is important that that should be made clear.

Mr. MILLER. The language here is intended for use in connection with book-making, and surely it could not be held to cover any such case as the hon. gentleman mentions.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think this is important, because in case of a prosecution under this Act, the intent of the House will always be considered by the courts.

Mr. LENNOX. It cannot be considered at all.

Mr. BUREAU. I do not think it is part of my duty to guide the House of Commons with any legal opinions I may entertain on any provision of this Bill. My hon. friend may consult the Minister of Justice if he chooses.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Then perhaps the promoter of the Bill will let me know whether he has presented that view of the case to the Minister of Justice, and whether the Minister of Justice has informed him that it would not affect newspaper publishers.

Mr. MILLER. I may say that the question has never seriously arisen, although many lawyers have examined the Bill from beginning to end on every possible point. I think the Bill has received the approval of the Minister of Justice from beginning to end.

Mr. COWAN. This section provides for two meets in the year of seven days each. I think there are cases where the association only holds one meet a year. It seems to me that the Bill should make provision for cases of that kind, that it would be a better thing to make provision for, say, a 10 day meet, where the association has only one meet a year.

Mr. MILLER. I may say in reply to the hon. gentleman that there has been no willingness and no anxiety on my part in effecting a compromise to accommodate the Bill to every possible contingency or racing or gambling interest. I utterly refused to do that. The solicitors appearing for the racing association contended for an eight day meet throughout, and I said that if the number of days were not reduced to seven there would be no compromise at all. Now, we cannot legislate in one way for the eastern part of Canada and in another way for the western part, in our Criminal Code. The argument that was made for perpetuating race-track book-making at all was that racing was necessary to improve the breed of horses, and that book-making was necessary to keep up the races. Now, a gentleman from the city of Vancouver who is representing horsemen there, asked me to consent to the very thing the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Cowan) has just suggested, and his reason was this: He said, We have no race-horses in British Columbia, our horses all come from Texas and California, and they will not come for a seven day meet. I said in reply that if horse-racing is necessary for breeding good horses, and if book-making is necessary for racing, I do not think it is any part of the duty of the legislators of Canada to give special terms to racing men in Vancouver to improve horses that are bred and owned in the states of Texas and California.

Mr. CONMEE. I think there are some places in Canada where the Bill will work a little hardship. I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Cowan). According to the Bill, any association that holds two meets during the year can have races for 14 days within the year. Surely it would not be too much for an association that is supposed by its by-laws to hold only one meet, to have that meet last 10 days. Take the town in which I live, it is a long way from the general settlement of Ontario on the east and from Manitoba on the west. They have races there, and horses come from both the east and the west, not American horses but Canadian horses, and I do not believe they would come for a seven days meet. The proposition, not to increase, but to reduce by four days the racing on that track, is not asking the hon. member to yield anything. How can it work any hardship? I support the suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver.

Mr. COWAN. I made the suggestion because I think it would bring this compromise more in line with the original Bill which I supported. I can see no necessity myself for two meets in the year. I think it is our duty to encourage a reduction of the number of meets and encourage it in that way. Why do you insist on having two meets in the year? For my part I would be quite content if there were only one. But I think the least we can do is to make some provision which will be an inducement to the association to limit the number of meets to one a year. Probably it is not the number of days that each meet continues that brings the evils altogether, it is the number of meets as well. I think that the association which chooses to have only one meet in the year is doing much less to aggravate the evils of betting and race-track gambling than the association which has two meets. I think it is right that we should hold out some inducements to these associations which limit the number of their meets to one a year. I am prepared. I will prepare an amendment.

Mr. MILLER. I hope the hon. gentleman will not press his amendment for the reason that his amendment will not necessarily reduce the number of meets. The hon. member wants to make it optional as to whether a racing association will have two meets of seven days in the year or whether it will choose to have one meet of ten days. Wherever it will be possible to hold two meets they will have them, but if it is impossible to hold the two meets they will hold one meet of ten days. I am told that the undesirable, obnoxious crowd that the hon. gentleman himself spoke of as frequenting the race-track are much less likely to attend and follow a short meeting than they are a long meeting, and after six or seven days the racing becomes utterly bad, while it may be comparatively respectable for the first six or seven days. For these reasons, I am utterly opposed to the long meeting, and I hope my hon. friend will not press his amendment.

Mr. CONMEE. I must disagree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Miller).

An hon. MEMBER. What do you race there?

Mr. CONMEE. We race some very good horses, not all owned by ourselves, but horses coming from a considerable distance. I do not wish to be understood as saying that we have no good horses, because we have. I hope the hon. gentleman will not take the ground that this Bill is, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, unalterable, and that no change can be made in it under any circumstances. Here is a proposition that is in line with my hon. friend's argument from start to finish. It reduces and does not increase. It diminishes the number of meetings and diminishes the number of days. I do not agree with the idea that associations which hold their meetings for ten days are controlled by less reputable men or conduct their races less carefully, or that the class of people that attend a ten days' race-meeting is not equal in intelligence and otherwise to those whom you would meet, perhaps, at other places. The circumstances and the locality might make a difference. I am told that in the west a great many of the associations prefer one meeting in the year of ten days rather than two meetings. That is the case, I know, at the head of the lakes, and I do not like the idea thrown out that because of the extra three days the attendance there is disreputable in any respect.

Mr. NESBITT. They can race as long as they like, but they can only sell pools for seven days.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not think that is so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried, carried.

Mr. COWAN. I do object to the disagreeable accessories of race-meetings to such an extent that I want to see only one race-meeting in the year instead of two where that can be brought about, and I think it is perfectly in line with the original amendment as brought in that we should do everything we can by way of encouragement and restriction to limit the number of meetings in a year.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried, carried.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) requests a moment to formulate his amendment, and I presume the committee will grant him the time.

Mr. COWAN. I do not wish to break in on the compromise, but I think that my hon. friend who is promoting this compromise knows perfectly well that that is a principle that he and I and the rest of us should favour. I think that we should do something towards limiting the number of meetings by way of encouragement, and I would like him to consent to the amendment I suggest, which can be worded later.

Mr. M. Y. McLEAN. I do not want, at this stage of the proceedings, to discuss the merits of the case. I think the promoter of the Bill has gone too far in his concessions already, but I, with others who have supported the Bill, am willing, for the sake of a settlement, to accept the compromise made between the parties more immediately interested. If those who opposed the original Bill are not willing to accept that compromise then we had better drop the whole thing and leave the law as it is at present.

Mr. FIELDING. I believe that the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Sharpe) has some reason to complain, because I requested him to be good enough to allow us to break in on the proceedings in the expectation that this would only occupy a few minutes. If it is likely to cause a prolonged debate, in fairness to the hon. member for Lisgar, I think that we should move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Finish the Bill.

Mr. COWAN. I have just said that I do not wish to interfere with the compromise that has been reached, but I would ask the gentlemen who have agreed to the compromise to agree to the change I propose, because it is in the direction of the original Bill.

Mr. MILLER. If I thought it was I would at once agree, but it seems to be exactly the contrary. The hon. gentleman asks that we give an option to the associations so that they shall be able to choose as to whether they shall have two seven-day meetings or one ten-day meeting. If so, it is never impossible for them to have two meetings, that is their business; it is not the business of this House. Then, what they will do, if we amend the Bill as the hon. gentleman suggests, will be to hold one ten-day meeting until such time as they are able to hold two seven-day meetings, and as this would be extending rather than limiting the time, I refuse to accept the amendment.

Motion agreed to, and Bill reported.

Mr. MILLER moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it the intention to put the Bill through all its stages to-night, or will the members have an opportunity of looking it over?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Finish it up.

Mr. FIELDING. It can only go through by consent.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not want to object to the Bill going through, but did not think the promoter would be anxious to have it read a third time without giving us an opportunity of reading it over. Of course, if it is not intended to reprint the Bill, delay would not be of much use.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Bill can only go through by consent.

Mr. HENDERSON. I cannot consent to or dissent from something I have little knowledge of. I would not want to express dissent, because the Bill may be such as I am instructed to support, but in the absence of an opportunity for consideration, I thought it only reasonable that the third reading should be postponed.

Mr. MILLER. It has been said that it is very doubtful whether the Bill would get through at all if it stands, and I hope the hon. gentleman will take my word for it that I made every effort to have passed into law the Bill which I introduced originally, and failing in that, I took the best substitute I could for my Bill. I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) to accept my statement that this Bill has been guarded as carefully as it was within my power to guard it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have accepted a good deal from the hon. gentleman, but I stopped when he asked me to accept a motion to kill the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—ADMINISTRATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE (Lisgar). Mr. Speaker, before you left the Chair at six o'clock, I was speaking of the combines and mergers which harass the people of the west, and as another illustration of how we are held up by mergers and combines, I will instance the cement combine. Cement is coming into general use throughout the country, and last year the town of Manitou, in which I reside, and which has a population of about 1,000, put down cement walks costing $13,000. Had that town bought the cement since the merger, it would have cost the people between $1,200 and $1,400 more than it did. If the Minister of Agriculture is looking after the interests of the people, it is his duty to take measures to prevent such combinations in this country. The hon. gentleman took three and a half hours to explain to us what he had done for the people of Canada, but when we look at his record during the past fourteen years as Minister of Agriculture, we are compelled to come to the conclusion that he has done very little indeed to improve the condition of the people. The fact is that he has simply followed the beaten path trod by the Conservative government before 1896, and whenever he departed from that path he has found, and we to our sorrow have found, that he has invariably come to grief. His cool curing of cheese experiment is an example. He constructed four cool curing stations respectively at Brockville, Cowansville, St. Hyacinthe and Woodstock in which to demonstrate to factory men the increased money there was in the cheese business from properly curing the cheese. From the outset the experiment was not on a practical basis. On these four stations the minister spent $45,000 for construction, and he ran them for five years at a cost of $137,300. Against that outlay he had a revenue of $82,029.22, leaving a loss on operating account of $45,270. It is easy enough to understand that the cool curing of cheese is a good thing, but what the cheese producer wants to know is something about the financial results. The minister has never revealed this, and when one looks at the Auditor General's Report for the years in which these curing stations were in operation, it is easy to understand his silence. Right at the start, he began purchasing from the factory men cheese to the value of $47,514.94, and after curing it in his model stations, he sold it for $47,385 or $129 less than he paid for it originally. In this loss there is not one cent included for the cost of handling, the cost of curing, the cost of insurance, or the interest on the investment, and any one knows that it will cost a good many thousand dollars to handle a business of $47,000. It will, therefore, be seen that this attempt of the minister to butt into the cheese business in order to show the factory men how to increase their business, was quite an expensive affair for the country. It may be urged that the operation of the curing stations was more or less experimental, but there was nothing experimental about the transaction in the cheese itself, which after having been bought and paid for and cured was sold at a loss. That is a mighty poor business proposition. The stations, however, were not an experiment. They were intended as a demonstration. They undoubtedly did some good. But how much more would they have done had they been conducted along business lines and afforded factory men financial as well as technical proof of the value of cool curing.

That is only one of the many times the hon. minister has made blunders in connection with his department. At the time he started in to show the farmers' wives throughout this country how to fatten chickens, he bought a dollar's worth of feed and fed it to a dollar's worth of chickens, sold the product for a dollar, and tried to figure out a profit. But he is great on the poultry department. Some time ago during this session I took a trip to the Experimental farm, and I found conditions there in what I considered very bad shape. After I came back I asked a few questions in regard to the poultry department, and I found that they had 320 head of poultry there, and that it took five men to look after them. One of those men received $1,500 a year, another $1,300, another $640, another $620, and another $500, making a total of $4,560 to look after 320 hens. The revenue from that department during ten months of this year amounted to $350.87, and the feed would have to be bought out of this. I want to say to the hon. minister that while these conditions are here at Ottawa at the present time, if he would take time enough to visit the Agricultural College at Guelph he would find one man there, employed at $35 per month, looking after over 1,000 head of poultry. I may say that our poultry department on the Experimental farm here was started 22 years ago, and it has been on the same three acres during those 22 years.

Taking the report of the Agricultural College at Guelph, we find that the best results are not obtained by keeping fowl on the same ground all the time. For the information of the House I will read what that report says on that point.

> Our experience is that in order to grow the best chickens at the least cost and as quickly as possible, one must be careful to put them on new or untainted ground. We find year after year that where we raised chickens on new ground, they grow faster and make larger birds.

Still with this evidence before him, the minister continues to keep the fowl and tries to carry on experiments on this little three acres of land at the Experimental Farm. I might also say that the buildings which they have there are all long out of date. We are liable to look lightly on the poultry department; but I want to tell you that while we in Canada have not started in to experiment at all in poultry raising in connection with the experimental farms throughout the country, yet the revenue which we received from poultry last year amounted to over $25,000,000. In the United States, where they have experimented to a certain extent, the revenue from poultry amounted to over $600,000,000. This is only a sample of the conditions prevailing at the Experimental Farm at Ottawa. The hon. minister this afternoon spent a great deal of time on the Health of Animals Department. The most deplorable thing, in connection with that department is that when we ask the hon. minister a question, very often we cannot depend on the answer we receive. For instance, last year, in Committee of Supply, I asked the hon. minister why he kept five veterinary surgeons in the city of Winnipeg and paid them over $10,000 a year. He answered that the five veterinary surgeons in Winnipeg did all the veterinary work throughout the province of Manitoba. But I had a list, which I have before me to-night, showing that they had paid out to other veterinary surgeons outside of Winnipeg, and within the bounds of Manitoba, over $6,000. I consider that it is a very serious state of affairs when we cannot get an answer that we can depend on from one of the ministers. The hon. minister had told us what great things he was doing, and how cheaply he was getting them done. But during the year 1905, which was the last year that the Roblin government had control of the health of animals for the province of Manitoba—the next year they turned it over to the Dominion government—it cost the province to look after the health of animals $3,655, while last year this government paid for the same service over $16,000, besides paying something like $15,000 for the slaughter of animals. Then, there is the quarantine inspection. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that in 1908 we had a general election in the Dominion of Canada. They had to get up a party fund in some way for some of their friends, and we found them getting up a small-pox scare throughout the province of Manitoba. They appointed ten frontier quarantine inspectors in my constituency, and in other constituencies in southern Manitoba, and they paid them $508.06 each of the people's money. Since then I have inquired of other doctors in southern Manitoba, and without one exception, they have all told me that they never heard of one case of small-pox during that whole year in southern Manitoba.

Mr. STAPLES. Who were the men?

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. I have a list of them here: Drs. A. Bradford, J. A. Carter, E. J. Duncan, R. S. Thornton, J. C. Riddle, E. Henderson, L. B. Scott, M. Wallace, Dr. May and T. D. McKinney. They all received $508, except Dr. May, and he received $250. Now, I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that that year, as I said before, was the year of the election. I travelled from one end of my constituency to the other a good many times, and I am ready to make an affidavit at any time, that I never heard of a small-pox case during that whole year.

An hon. MEMBER. Are they Grits?

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. They are all good Grits.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It is not necessary to state that.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Some of these gentlemen never sent in a report at all. Some of them, only one, and one wrote to the department and said, tell me where you heard there was some small-pox so that I can get a case, or words to that effect. When I asked the minister for the return in connection with this matter of the appointment of these inspectors, he absolutely refused to furnish it and said it was not the custom of the House to bring them down. These men are good party workers and I want to say right here, that the quarantine inspectors and the custom house officers at Gretna were the best organizers that the reform party had in the whole of my constituency. They took an active part in every way possible, in every election in that part of the country. Now, we have 34 of those quarantine inspectors throughout Alberta and Saskatchewan. These men draw $65,258 of the people's money, and if they are anything like the quarantine inspectors we had throughout the province of Manitoba, it is no wonder there are not many members on this side of the House from those two provinces. The minister does all this under the name of agriculture. This money, I claim is being spent largely as an organizing scheme for the reform party, and before I take my seat, I want to tell the hon. minister that as far as I am concerned, and as far as I have heard from other members on this side, he will not find any criticism at all of any legitimate expenditure that he has a mind to bring forward. I would willingly support the hon. minister, if he spent ten times what he is spending to-day in the interests of the agricultural people throughout this country, because we must remember that the man who made this country what it is to-day, is the man behind the plough, and I would appeal to the hon. minister to put forth an extra effort and try to give him a fair deal, in this great country.

Mr. SCHELL. I do not propose to occupy the attention of the House at any length, but there are a few statements made by the hon. member who has just taken his seat, to which I wish to reply.

Agriculture in the Dominion of Canada occupies a position of which we are all proud, irrespective of party affiliations and notwithstanding what may be said for political effect or from a partisan standpoint. The work that has been done by our Minister of Agriculture during the last 12 years stands out clearly as evidencing progress and development on lines that make for agricultural betterment, in every sense of the word. I am sure it is not necessary for me or for any member of this House to occupy the time in substantiating what the Minister of Agriculture has placed before us this afternoon. The statement that he has made, I am sure will meet with the approval of the people of this country, when they have an opportunity to read what he has presented to us. The hon. member who has just taken his seat, has endeavoured to make a point against the department by claiming that our agricultural exports have not increased during the last two years and he quoted three or four of our products, namely, cattle and cheese and butter and one or two others. He took as his basis, the years 1903 and 1904, as compared with the years 1908-9. We all know that the exports of those products have decreased somewhat, not very materially, in fact I do not know but that the exports of our dairy produce are a little more than they were last year, perhaps not quite as much as they were in 1903-4. But there is a good reason for that. Those years 1903-4 were exceptional years for the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. The pasturage was exceptionally good and our exports were correspondingly large, especially of cheese and butter. Those products have, I maintain, not decreased materially, although as I say, they have been a trifle less probably within the last three or four years, than they were during 1903 or 1904.

Mr. THORNTON. How much have the exports for instance of butter, cheese, ham and bacon decreased, in say 1907, 1908 and 1909. How much per year?

Mr. SCHELL. In 1908, the exports of our dairy products amounted to a trifle over $21,000,000. This last year they were almost exactly the same. The general manager of the Bank of Montreal, in his annual address, said that our dairy products were larger this year than they were last year. I think that if we had the complete figures we would find that the last year's exportation is a little larger than that of the preceding year. Taking our total exports, which I contend is the proper basis on which to view this question, we find this difference:

Year.	Exports of purely agricultural products.
1896..	$14,083,361
1909..	71,997,207

Mr. SCHELL.

This is an increase of over 400 per cent. Of animals and their products the figures are:

Year.	Amount.
1896..	$36,507,641
1909..	51,349,646

Mr. HENDERSON. If the hon. gentleman would take 1874 he would find the difference would be still greater.

Mr. SCHELL. In 1885 our agricultural exports were only about $23,000,000, including animals and their products.

The total exports of agricultural products and live stock and its products were:

Year.	Amount.
1909..	123,346,853

I contend that those figures are the clearest possible evidence as to the growth and development of this country on agricultural lines. The hon. member referred to the increase of our exports of manufactured goods as being something to be proud of, and certainly the increase has been large; but taking our exports as a whole or taking our agricultural products as a whole and compare them with all our other products, I find the percentage of increase has been as large as or larger than in the case of our other exports. We have had an increase in our exports of about 120 per cent in the twelve years. During that period our population has only increased about 30 per cent, so you will see that the increase per capita has been very material. If you take into consideration the increase of population during that period, you will find that it was something over 1,500,000, and the increase in consumption owing to that increase in population amounted to at least $75,000,000 yearly, and in that fact we have perhaps the strongest possible reason why our exports of dairy and meat products have not increased as we would desire. We all know that the provinces of Ontario and Quebec are the principal provinces for the production of dairy products. With the increased demand by reason of the trend of our population to the towns and cities, by reason of the increased purchasing power of our population caused by better times, all our dairy products are finding an increased home market. Considering also the fact that the population of these provinces has not increased in the same proportion as that of the rest of Canada, it is not reasonable to expect there would be the same increase in these particular products. The western provinces have become consumers to a very large extent of our dairy products. When we consider the whole of our agricultural products, which I contend is the only proper basis, we are able to see at a glance that we are making very rapid progress on the line of agricultural development.

I have here a few figures in connection with the live stock trade of the United States, to show you that in the neighbouring republic their exports of meat products have not kept up in proportion to the growth and development of the country. Their exports of cattle were:

Year.	Value.
1896..	$38,273,132
1907..	33,796,425
1908..	24,034,193

For the nine months of 1909, 75,000 less cattle were exported than during the year 1908.

Michael Ryan of the Packers Association of the United States said:

> Unless many more cattle are grown there cannot be a lower price, and America may find itself an importer of meats.

And Mr. J. J. Hill recently made the statement that in his opinion it would be only a few years when the United States would be importers of all kinds of farm products and inside of ten years he predicted they would be importers of wheat. Thus I contend that the argument the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Sharpe) was endeavouring to make that our agricultural exports were not increasing as rapidly as they should, has really no foundation in fact. The progress we have been making on agricultural lines has been such as to attract the attention of people in foreign countries to the condition of agriculture in Canada. Only two years ago, in 1908, a commission of Scottish farmers visited Canada to gather information and ideas in regard to Canadian agriculture, and the compliments paid by that commission to the Dominion of Canada on agricultural lines are something of which we have reason to be especially proud. It was only last year that the live stock commissioner of Denmark, Mr. Peter Morteborg, visited Canada. I had the pleasure of meeting that gentleman, he called on me, and I am sure he was particularly impressed with the advanced position we were taking in agricultural pursuits.

Reference was made to the cool-curing rooms established by this government for handling and curing cheese, and figures were presented in the endeavour to show that the investment was not a paying one. I happen to have some personal knowledge and experience of the work done by the station established in Woodstock, being closely associated with one of the largest factories in that neighbourhood. We found that by having the cheese cured under the system there established we were saving from a pound to a pound and a half on each cheese, which means from 16 to 18 cents per cheese saved under the system of curing that was there inaugurated. Not only was it proven that there was a saving in weight by curing under those conditions, but we also found that we had a better product in the cheese, making it more valuable. Further experiments which were carried on proved that fact absolutely to the satisfaction of the patrons of the factory I refer to, and of other factories whose cheese was put into that curing room as an experiment. Instead of showing a loss of a few thousand dollars, as the hon. gentleman endeavoured to show to-night, it has effected a saving of thousands, and tens of thousands of dollars, indeed I think I am safe in saying of hundreds of thousands of dollars, to the cheese industry of the Dominion of Canada. So much was the value increased that throughout the western part of the province of Ontario our cheese factories have established a system of cool curing by storing ice for use during the summer months. I am sure that the work that is being carried on by the Minister of Agriculturre, whether you consider the live stock branch, the health of animals branch, the seeds branch, the experimental farms, the dairy department, or any other department you wish to investigate, that work will commend itself to the good judgment and the honest judgment of the people of this country.

Mr. C. J. THORNTON (Durham). I desire to make a few remarks on the subject introduced by the Minister of Agriculture. It has been well said and often repeated during this dicussion that the Agricultural interest is of the first importance to this country, and there can be no disputing that fact. In discussing this matter I wish to be fair to the Minister of Agriculture. I would not for a moment take the position that no good has been done by his department; I wish to give him, and his department full credit for whatever benefits they have conferred upon the country. But I could not admit for a moment that all has been done that should have been done, because I think the facts will prove the contrary. As I said, I wish to discuss the question in a fair and impartial manner, because it is the good of the country that I desire above all things, rather than that of party. As agriculture is the foundation of all the other industries, I think it is deserving of the most attention at our hands. Now, when I entered this House the idea was uppermost in my mind that the agricultural interests were the most important we have to consider, and I thought the Committee on Agriculture would perhaps be one of the most important committees of this House, and that it would have questions of the very highest importance to deal with. At the close of last session we found that nothing had been done by that committee except to sit and listen to lectures from professors from the experimental farms.

As a humble member of the committee I thought that was only preliminary to the introduction of more serious work by the committee. But this session also I have found that the committee paid less attention to the subject than it did last session. It was weeks after the House met before the committee were called together for organization, and there has been no meeting of that committee since the month of February. The chairman of that committee is the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House (Mr. Schell). It seems to me that committee has been negligent in looking after the interests of the farming population of this country. In making this criticism I do it with the honest purpose of directing the attention of the minister to the subject, and I hope he will receive the suggestions I make in the same spirit in which I offer them. That committee is called the Committee on Agriculture and Immigration, and there are many pressing questions before the country to which it ought at once to turn its attention. Now, there is one very serious problem among others to which I wish to refer; I called the attention of the chairman of the committee to it at our closing meeting held a few weeks ago, because I thought that something would be done about it in the House during this session. The question I refer to is that of production and consumption, particularly as they relate to the products of the farm. That problem has become a very serious one in the older provinces where we find the population of the towns and cities increasing, in some cases at a very rapid rate, while the population in the rural districts is decreasing. As a result of the decrease of population in the rural districts, production must naturally decrease likewise. Of course it does not always follow that a decrease in population means a decrease in production, because one man can do more work in some lines on a farm now by means of modern agricultural appliances than two or three men could do years ago. But it is a fact that in the province of Ontario the rural population is decreasing, and I am told that the same decrease is taking place in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec and the the result is a very large decrease in the amount of food stuffs produced.

Now, the superintendent of the fruit division, at the meeting of the Agricultural Committee last session, drew our attention to this problem which he said was facing us, and he proposed a solution of it. The solution he proposed was that the government should use the means at its disposal to encourage people to go back to the land. He cited an instance before the committee of a section of country where he was residing, I believe in the county of Middlesex, when he was a boy, in which there were fifteen families each on a fifty-acre farm. He told us that these fifteen farms, with a total area of 750 acres, were now in the possession of one man, and that instead of fifteen families living on these farms, they are now combined into the one farm with two families living on it. He said that the rental per acre of that land for grazing purposes was only $2, whereas, if it were divided into small farms and planted with apples, it would be capable of producing $200 per acre. Mr. McNeill's solution of the question is that the land, instead of being made into larger farms should be divided into smaller farms, that more attention should be paid to the production of fruit, especially apples, and that the land should be made to produce that of which it is capable. There was a case brought to my attention just a few days ago. The hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) is personally acquainted with the circumstances that I am about to relate. An acquaintance of his has a fruit farm of small dimensions in British Columbia, and that he was producing from five acres of strawberries $1,400 per acre. This was the amount of gross receipts in 1909. He is not getting any extravagant prices for his strawberries. They averaged him not more than ten cents per box, but he is making a fortune raising five acres of strawberries per year. The point I want to make is that this problem of production and consumption must be solved by the authorities of this country, and that means the Minister of Agriculture and his department, because that is the only department that can handle it. The problem must be solved, and it must be solved in that way. It is a broad question, but it is worthy of the attention of the minister and of the department, and I would say without any feeling of animosity or any desire to stir up party controversy whatever, that this question should receive the most serious attention of the Minister of Agriculture. He should take hold of it in a broad way. I believe there is a solution of the difficulty, but it requires to be shown that the land is capable of producing far in excess of what it is producing to-day. There should be more tillers of the soil. When we touch the question of making the land more productive, we are face to face with the labour problem. One of the difficulties that faces the farmer to-day in older Ontario is the scarcity and dearness of labour. I believe that a good class of experienced farm labourers could be had from the older countries. I saw a letter only yesterday from a member of the Ontario legislature who has been for several weeks in England, in the counties of Sussex and Kent, and he says that there are many hundreds, and,

I presume from what he says thousands of experienced farm labourers in these two counties who are willing and anxious to come to Ontario and work on these older farms. If that is so, the labour problem can be solved. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture has made some statements with regard to the export of agricultural products, and especially of dairy and hog products that are not borne out by the facts or by statistics. There is no question at all, but that the export of fine dairy products, such as butter, cheese, eggs, bacons and hams, is decreasing at quite a rapid rate. The export of hams and bacon is decreasing at the rate of $2,000,000 a year. There is no question at all but that the farmers are not taking hold of the hog industry as they should. The Minister of Agriculture will know, as well as every farmer who has experience, that one of the chief reasons for the decrease in hog production is the fact that the farmers have at least been caught three times with large stocks on their hands when the packers thought they could take advantage of them, and they were compelled, at a tremendous sacrifice, to sell their hogs away below cost price. It is not a difficult thing to fool the farmers a few times, but they cannot be fooled too often, and there is no question but that one of the reasons of the light production of hogs to-day is that if the farmers loaded up with hogs they do not know what the consequences might be within a year and a half, because it would take that time for the farmers to get hogs enough ahead to be worth while. Perhaps the main question with the farmer, in so far as production is concerned, is the question of labour. So, I think that the minister should take hold of this question in a serious way. A great improvement might be made, here in the older province of Ontario at least, if the people could be led to see that there is money to be made out of farming on small farms in a way that they do not appreciate to-day, and until they are convinced of that they will never get back on the land. One of the problems is to educate the farmer along these lines. These are important questions. I started out with the question of the scope and work of the Committee on Agriculture of this House, and I think that the committee should take hold of this question. The Minister of Agriculture should lead in it, and I know that a majority of the members of the committee are anxious that some effective work should be done by the committee along these lines. I think they are perfectly willing to do it in a manner altogether free from party spirit. Unless something is done to better the condition of things in the older provinces there is a serious problem ahead of the people living in these provinces. I trust the minister will give this matter his most serious consideration.

Dr. EUGENE PAQUET. (L'Islet). (Translation). Mr. Speaker, the hon. the Minister of Agriculture is right in requiring a larger vote than that of past years with a view to favouring the several progress of agriculture. I will always concur with pleasure in the granting of sums of money for the purpose of promoting agricultural reforms. These are badly required in the district of Quebec, for the population of the magnificent parishes on the banks of the St. Lawrence is yearly dwindling.

The minister might secure the progress of agriculture by establishing an experimental farm in the eastern portion of the province of Quebec. I will not, however, enter this evening into the reasons prompting us to insist upon an experimental farm in the Quebec region. They are well known to the head of the department.

We are in a position to appreciate the beneficial results of the fruit station established at the village Des Aulnaies by Auguste Dupuis. Such a station in our region has already become a source of very marked progress.

The Minister of Agriculture of the Quebec government has established an agricultural society in the county which I have the honour to represent. Farmers may derive great benefit therefrom and the work would be greatly helped by the establishment in connection therewith of a bee culture station. We are now making that request, in support of which you will allow me to read a petition sent by one of my electors to the hon. the Minister of Agriculture:

PETITION.

Village des Aulnaies, April, 1910.

To the Honourable Sydney Fisher,
Minister of Agricutlure,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I have the honour of calling your particular attention to the importance of beeculture in the province of Quebec.

That branch of agriculture which you have long appreciated and encouraged has progressed since the farmers have adopted the newer methods and the modern mobile hive.

All farmers who have followed the practical methods and advice of lectures on bee culture have realized excellent profits and are naturally more interested than ever in the art. The number of hives has materially increased in all the different counties of the province.

This increase would be more than doubled every year, Sir, if an experimental bee culture station were established under the auspices of the federal government in our portion of this province.

These experimental bee culture stations would attend to the numerous requests for hives which are yearly increasing it they would be in a position to dispose of the hives on somewhat better terms than private dealers.

You are aware, sir, that I am the only specialist in bee culture. I find that the business pays. I have sold hundreds of hives since 1875 at $10 a hive, and I have studied and practised the art of artificial swarming.

As a rule farmers find that $10 is too much to pay for a hive in the spring, the more prosperous alone can afford one or two at that price; the greater number do not buy and the development of this important industry is therefore greatly retarded.

The establishment of a bee culture experimental station would therefore be very useful to farmers who are anxious to go into that branch of agriculture, by enabling them to obtain hives on better terms.

Moreover, and this, sir, is an important consideration, farmers in the eastern portion of the province would enjoy the great advantage of being able to obtain information and lessons in bee culture without being obliged to incur the loss in time and money entailed by a journey to the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa.

The location of a bee culture experimental station would be easy to find as I have the honour of placing at the disposal of the minister my own apiary and laboratory, which, after the spring sales, will contain one hundred modern hives, of the Jones type, considered the best for cold countries. I have seen them in use in Switzerland, in 1889. My apiary is at the village Des Aulnaies, in the county of L'Islet, on the banks of the St. Lawrence, an ideal spot surrounded by meadows bearing during the spring every species of plant favourable to the making of honey and quite close to extensive orchards, containing not only fruit trees but also ornamental trees such as acacia, linden tree, chestnut tree, willow, poplar, aspen and alder. All these trees bear the pollen and nectar indispensable to successful bee culture, more especially with respect to the feeding of larvæ in the spring.

You are also aware, sir, that this establishment is in close proximity to the fruit farm and experimental station of Des Aulanies, managed by my brother Auguste Dupuis, to which farmers come from all parts of the province to study the culture of fruit trees. The success of this establishment is in a measure due to the presence of the bees who are the very best cross breeders of fruit blossoms.

The establishment of a bee culture experimental station in such a spot could not fail to succeed and numerous visitors would derive benefit from the object lessons to be had there both in horticulture and apiculture.

Another important consideration is the absence in the eastern portion of the province of that disease of the hive called 'foul brood'; it is unknown from the county of Yamaska on the south shore and from the county of St. Maurice to the north. The Agricultural Association of the county of L'Islet has a membership extending from the counties above mentioned to the peninsular of Gaspé. Directors and members of the association use every effort to prevent this plague of the hive from spreading here; lectures are delivered and the importation of hives and of queen bees from infected districts is guarded against. You will readily understand, sir, the importance of such an experimental bee culture station; it might save the district from a great danger by the breeding of queen bees. The disease having been originally introduced into the province by the importation of queens from abroad.

I am in a position to state that such importations, made with excellent intentions of improving the breed of bees, has been attended in many cases with disastrous results to the apiarists whose hives I have inspected since three years.

In conclusion, sir, should you decide to establish an experimental bee culture station in this portion of our province, I should be glad to be appointed to conduct it if you consider that my services, personal experimentation and observation and my studies in Europe of the best methods of breeding render me competent to do so.

And your petitioner shall ever pray.

LUC DUPUIS.

This petition is deserving of our support, and I now request that the hon. the Minister of Agriculture will establish a bee culture station as requested.

Bee culture is a very important branch of our agricultural industry.

I hope that when he is next heard from, the Minister of Agriculture will give us his opinion on the subject.

The administrative routine of a department is a matter worthy of attention. On the 17th March, 1909, the Minister of Agriculture declared that he had organized, in 1907, a French translation office in his department. The departmental documents translated into French are most useful and necessary to secure the progress of agriculture. Their immediate translation enables French-speaking farmers to study them and reap the benefit of their contents without delay.

All the English-speaking ministers should have a French translation office in their departments. The work done by the Department of Agriculture might be undertaken in all the others with the same results. They might easily secure the services of a competent staff of translators. The hon. the Minister of Agriculture understands the requirements of the national life and I congratulate him upon it.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Archives, $30,000.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. There is an increase of $2,000.

Mr. FISHER. Yes. The work is constantly expanding. Under Civil Government, I had to increase the staff somewhat. The number of documents pouring in to that office is so great that we have a great deal more work than formerly in classifying and cataloguing them.

Mr. STAPLES. This is a late hour to go into Committee of Supply to consider the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

The minister has come down to-day in the same manner that he has done every session that I have been a member of this House. He waits for an opportunity to try to steal through this House the estimates of the most important department of this government, at a period of the session and at an hour of the night when there is scarcely a member in the House. I would ask the minister to look behind him and see how many members there are to vote the money to carry on the affairs of this department. It is not fair to the agriculturalists of this country. What was the spectacle we had this afternoon? The minister knew that if he proceeded in the regular way a great many members interested in this department would be here to ask questions, ascertain facts, and make suggestions, in order that the farmers of this country might be benefited. But the minister, feeling that it was too early in the day to go with his estimates, adopted other tactics. Before the Speaker left the Chair, he brought up the administration of his department, I suppose as a grievance. Well, I want to tell the Minister of Agriculture that the farmers of this country have a great grievance against his department. He gives them data almost as old as the Laurentian hills. When I first came to this House I heard the same speech that the Minister of Agriculture has given us to-day. I said to one of the old parliamentarians: 'This Minister of Agriculture is a crackerjack, well up in his department.' He answered: 'Wait till you are here a year or two; you will find he presents the same speech to this House every session, and he expects it to go to the country to convince the farmers of Canada that he is administering the department to the best of advantage.' He came here to-day to make a great play to the gallery. Before he began he looked around. I looked around at the same time, and what did I find? I found that he had some of his officials here to listen to his oration. I think it is not just to the agriculturalists of this country that he should come at eleven o'clock at night, at a time when there is scarcely a member in the House, and ask us to make provision for carrying on the affairs of his department. I have a great many questions that I want to ask the minister, and I purpose asking them. At the same time, I do not feel that it is fair to the members of this House who have been here very late every night this week to ask them to remain any longer. Under the circumstances, I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. FISHER. I realize that it is late. I have no desire to force anything through. I think, however, that if we pass the item which has been called, which is not an agriculture item, it will not interfere with the opportunity of hon. members to discuss all the agriculture items. I have no intention of asking for more than one item to pass this evening, and I can assure my hon. friend that I will as soon as possible give hon. members another opportunity in committee to discuss all the agriculture items of the department.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I feel obliged to say a few words as to the conduct of the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon, when he made so many impertinent remarks to gentlemen on this side of the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman, I hope, will modify that expression.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I might bring to your notice that the word impertinent has two meanings, but I will yield to your ruling if you still insist upon it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman states that his use of the word impertinent is intended to mean not pertinent, I will accept his explanation. In any other sense it would not be parliamentary.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I will have to accept your ruling. There is only a little reservation that I might make. If any hon. gentleman in the House wishes to think I mean anything else, and the cap fits, he can put it on. We listened to an immoderately long speech this afternoon, and I wondered why it was given. I have the explanation from my hon. friend from Macdonald. It was surprising, when so many members were in the House wishing to discuss these estimates, that they were not brought up. I think that speech could have come at this hour with very much better satisfaction to the House than it did at the hour it was delivered. The speech reminded me of a phrase in the introduction to one of Mark Twain's books, where he said: 'I am so full of information that it exudes from me; in fact, it distils from me like the precious ottar of roses from the otter.' I do not wish to make a speech, but I wish to join in the suggestion of my hon. friend. I think a million dollars is very much too large an item to pass without discussion. If one item is desired I would suggest taking one of the smaller ones.

Some resolutions reported.

RETAIL MERCHANTS ASSOCIATION OF CANADA.

Mr. GERVAIS moved the first reading of Bill (No. 210) to incorporate the Retail Merchants Association of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. GERVAIS moved the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. No, no.

Mr. SPEAKER. If there is objection to the second reading, it must stand.

Mr. GERVAIS. I may state Mr. Speaker, by way of explanation, that there is a report which is printed in the procès verbal of the House, which declares it to be in accordance with all the rules of the House, and as the session is late, I do not see that there is any reason to send it to the Private Bills Committee.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. It must go to the committee.

Mr. LENNOX. There is no question about that.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time and referred to Standing Committee on Private Bills.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. May I ask the hon. minister what business will be taken up on Monday?

Mr. FIELDING. Private Bills, then we will take up the Naval Bill.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. And if that is concluded?

Mr. FIELDING. Then supply on the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.08 p.m

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 18, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Annual Report of the Department of Printing and Stationery—Hon. Chas. Murphy.

QUESTIONS.

WILLIAMSVILLE POST OFFICE.

Mr. EDWARDS :

1. What revenue was received by the government from Williamsville post office last year?
2. Has the Post Office Department received petitions asking that the Williamsville post office be moved nearer the city limits?
3. Would such removal entail any extra cost for carrying the mail to and from the said post office?
4. Has the inspector at Kingston reported against a change in location of said office? If so, for what reasons?
5. Are all parts of the City of Kingston served by letter carriers?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX :

1. The status of the Williamsville Post Office was changed to that of a sub-post office on the 1st April, 1909, and it is now known as Kingston sub-office No. 2. The revenue of the office for the year ended 31st March, 1910, was $605. Delivery of letters is, however, still continued at this office to certain patrons of the office living outside the city limits and who do not therefore participate in the convenience afforded the patrons of the office residing within the city limits of the delivery of correspondence by letter carrier.

2. A petition was received at the department asking that the office should be removed to a point about three-quarters of a mile from its present site and a short distance beyond the city limits.

3 and 4. The petition above mentioned was referred to the Post Office Inspector at Kingston on the 8th April, 1909, who reported that the proposed change could not be made without causing considerable inconvenience to the present patrons of the office, which was established over 25 years ago, and which has a money order and postal note business of considerable proportions. The inspector was of opinion that to deprive the residents of the locality of the privileges they enjoyed for many years would be a serious matter and he could not therefore recommend the proposed change in site.

5. The whole city is covered by letter carriers with the exception of the north side where no service exists beyond Russell Street and intersection of Montreal and Rideau Streets.

POSTMASTER AT TROY, N.S.

Mr. ARMSTRONG :

1. Has the postmaster at Troy, Inverness county, N.S., been dismissed? If so, for what reasons?
2. Has any investigation been made as to the cause of dismissal? If not, why not?
3. Has the Post Office Department been asked to make an investigation and have they refused to act? If so, why?
4. Was the contract for carrying the mail from railway train to Troy let by tender? If not, why not?
5. What is the amount of salary paid postmaster at Troy, N.S., and the amount paid for carrying the mail from Troy station to Troy?

Mr. LEMIEUX :

1. The postmaster of Troy, N.S., has been dismissed on representations made by the sitting member on the ground of political partisanship.

2. In view of the representations made to the department, and the small revenue collected and business done, an official investigation was not considered necessary.

3. Subsequent to the appointment of the new postmaster, a protest was received from a resident of the place, with a request that the matter should be investigated. As stated, this was not considered necessary, in view of the information already received.

4. Yes.

5. (a) The salary of this office is $35 per annum. (b) The amount paid for the service of the office is $48.

WINNIPEG BEACH PIER.

Mr. BRADBURY :

1. Has the contract been awarded for the protection pier at Winnipeg Beach? If so, to whom was the contract awarded and at what price?

2. How many tenders were received for said work, from whom and what was the amount of each tender?

3. Was the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer? If not, why not?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY :

1. (a) Yes. (b) John Lowry, of Ottawa, Ont. (c) $14,960.00.

2. (a) Six. (b) John Lowry, Ottawa, Ont., $14,960.00; John Gunn & Sons, Winnipeg, Man., $16,994.00ô Wm. Hurst, Winnipeg, $19,994,57; J. McDiarmid Co., Ltd., Winnipeg, Man., $20,300.00; Wm. Newman Co., Ltd., Winnipeg, Man., $22,926.00; S. B. Ritchie, Winnipeg, Man., $26,000.00.

3. Yes.

FERGUSON BALLOTING DEVICE.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR :

1. Has the government made any examination of the Ferguson balloting device? If so, have they come to any decision with regard thereto?

2. If no examination of the Ferguson balloting device has been made, is it the intention of the government to cause such an examination to be made by a committee of this House or otherwise?

3. Is it the intention of the government to make any change in the present system of voting?

Hon. CHAS. MURPHY. No.

MAGANATAWAN WHARFINGER

Mr. ARTHURS:

1. Who is the wharfinger at Maganatawan?

2. When was he appointed and at what salary?

3. Has a change been made? If so, why?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN :

1. Mr. Conrad Ross.

2. 6th April, 1910; remuneration 25 per cent of the wharfage collections.

3. No.

LETELLIER MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. STAPLES :

1. When was the last contract let for the carrying of the mail between the post office and the station at Letellier, Manitoba?

2. Who were the tenderers, and what was the amount of each tender?

3. Who was the successful tenderer and what was the price paid him?

Mr. LEMIEUX :

1. Tenders were due at the department on the 24th September, 1909, and a new contract was awarded beginning the 1st January, 1910.

2. E. Comeault, $160 per annum; Marcelin Montsin, $190 per annum.

3. E. Comeault, $160 per annum.

PATENT FOR HOMESTEAD.

Mr. MEIGHEN :

1. To whom was patent issued for S. W. ¼ 16-19-20, w. 4th, and when?

2. Did the patentee receive same as a homestead? If so, when did he enter and what homestead duties had he performed when patent issued?

3. What proof had the department that such duties were so performed?

4. If same was not granted as a homestead under the Dominion Lands Act, why was it granted, under what statutory authority, for what reasons, and on what terms?

5. Was the department in receipt of applications from others for this land as a homestead? If so from whom, under what dates, and why was each refused?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER :

1. Patented to Charles D. T. Becher, 21st April, 1909.

2. Not a homestead but a sale. No duties performed on this land.

3. See answer to Question 2.

4. This quarter-section was sold to Charles D. T. Becher at the rate of $1.00 per acre, under the authority of the orders in council of the 17th of January and 14th of November, 1908, (copies below). Reasons: Through inadvertence Mr. Becher was granted in 1890 a homestead entry for a quarter-section which had been withheld from settlement on account of its nearness to Edmonton. This entry was in consequence cancelled. The order in council sets forth that Mr. Becher, being under the impression that he would be allowed to retain the land, made improvements and proceeded with the fulfilment of the homestead conditions. It was, therefore, decided that he should be given some compensation for the loss of the land in question, and the order in council provided that Mr. Becher be permitted to buy an available quarter-section of the class of land open to homestead entry, at $1.00 per acre. The order in council of the 14th of November, 1908, extended this privilége until January, 1909.

5. The departmental file shows two applications for the S.W. ¼ of 16—19—20—W. 4th M : (1). R. Russell applied for cancellation of the previous entry 30th April, 1907. The previous entry was cancelled in November, 1908. The file does not show what took place after cancellation. Under the regulations then in force the agent would require to give the applicant for inspection thirty days to make entry, at the end of which time, if not entered for, the land would be made available for the first eligible applicant. (2). C. C. Jordan applied for inspection 25th February, 1910. The agent issued cancellation notices, but this action was taken in error because the land was held under sale by Mr. Becher and not under homestead entry. The cancellation proceedings were therefore annulled.

DISALLOWANCE OF ONTARIO LEGISLATION.

On the orders of the day being called :

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether or not there have been any reports or orders in council as to certain legislation of the province of Ontario connected with the development of electrical power and the supplying of such power to the municipalities throughout the province.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is in regard to the disallowance petition ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes; and if the report of the Minister of Justice has been made and the order in council has been passed whether there would be any objection to laying them on the table of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not see any, but I will consult with the minister about it.

NATURALIZATION LAWS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to direct the attention of the right hon. Prime Minister to a question that was asked in the Imperial House of Commons by Mr. MacMaster on the 4th April :

Mr. MacMaster (Chertsey, Opp.) asked the Under Secretary for the Colonies which of the governments represented at the Colonial Conference of 1907 had not replied to the request of the Inter-Departmental Committee on the naturalization laws; and whether, seeing the importance of the question, he could do anything to expediate the assembly of the subsidiary conference comtemplated in the resolution of the conference of 1907.

The Under-Secretary for the Colonies, Col. Seely, answered as follows :

The governments which have not replied on the question are those of Canada and New Zealand, and the Secretary of State is about to communicate with them further on the subject. The replies from the South African Colonies indicated that, so far as South Africa was concerned, the question must be left open for the consideration of the Union government and parliament.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister what is the reason of the delay in sending forward the reply alluded to, inasmuch as the subject is one of the greatest possible importance not only to the mother country but to all her Dominions throughout the empire.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The very reason is that given by my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) that the subject is one of very great importance and we thought that it would be a proper subject for discussion at the next imperial conference which would take place next year.

ST. JOHN VALLEY RAILWAY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I observe in connection with a conference between certain gentleman in the province of New Brunswick and certain Liberal members of parliament and senators from New Brunswick, with the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), the hon Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) that the Prime Minister stated that :

Owing to an agreement which he had made some time ago with the leader of the opposition, that there should be no new legislation introduced this session, it would not be possible for him to have a Bill for the operation of the road put through before prorogation, and that part of the transaction would have to stand over until next year.

It is quite true that the Prime Minister intimated to me privately and also across the floor of the House what further legislation he proposed to introduce, but I am bound to say that I did not understand it as an agreement which would prevent the government from bringing in any measure which it deemed to be of public interest and in case it should have been otherwise understood by the Prime Minister, I entirely release him from any obligation in that regard with respect to this or any other such matter which may be regarded as of public interest.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The statement is not exactly accurate. I did not say that there was an agreement between myself and my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) but I stated that as we had discussed, as we generally do before the end of the session, the matters that were to be brought forward by the government, and as I stated publicly what legislation we intended to bring in, and as this was not included it could not and would not be taken up.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I merely wanted to make it plain that the matter is entirely open in so far as I am concerned.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. CROTHERS.

Mr. T. W. CROTHERS. I wish to speak to a question of privilege. In the Toronto 'Globe' of Friday last, regarding some remarks that I made the evening before, I am referred to in these words :

Mr. CROTHERS. What I said was that I have not much respect for any chief justice appointed by the present administration, and I have nothing to retract in that regard.

To those who heard me on that occasion, or who have since read my remarks in 'Hansard,' it is needless to say that I said nothing of the kind. The report was possibly based upon an attempt made by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) with some warmth, and, I think, with considerable unfairness, an attempt that I think unworthy of the position that he holds,—

Some hon. members. Order, order.

Mr. CROTHERS. To turn the words I used—

Mr. SPEAKER. The point of order is raised as to the words used by the hon. member.

Mr. CROTHERS. What is the point of order ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The statement that my hon. friend (Mr. Crothers) made that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) used an expression unworthy of the position which he holds.

Mr. SPEAKER. If it is unparliamentary I suppose the hon. gentleman could modify it.

Mr. CROTHERS. The words I used were 'with an unfairness which I thought was unworthy of the position which he holds.'

Mr. FIELDING. I submit that upon a personal explanation my hon. friend cannot attack an hon. member. He can make the explanation for himself but he should not attack an hon. member.

Mr. SPEAKER. Perhaps the hon. member might modify the expression.

Mr. CROTHERS. Well, I will leave out that part of it—'unworthy of the position which he holds.' I say that he made an attempt with some warmth and unfairness—

Some hon. members. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not know why the word 'unfairness' is unparliamentary. 'Unfairness' is parliamentary.

Mr. FIELDING. I submit that the hon. gentleman would have a perfect right to call attention to what he deems a mistake in the press affecting himself, but he should not take advantage of a personal explanation to reflect upon another member of this House because that would provoke debate. That is my only point in the matter.

Mr. CROTHERS. What I was saying was that possibly the words I object to as appearing in the 'Globe' were based upon what the Minister of Justice had said in the attempt to turn the words I used into a reflection upon the present Chief Justice of Ontario who is a man and a judge above reproach; a man enjoying in a pre-eminent degree the respect and confidence and esteem of everybody. I made this statement in referring to the administration of the patronage system by this government:

Even the judiciary has not been spared the blighting influence of this pernicious system. In many cases in the province of Ontario the county court bench and in some of the other provinces even the high court bench has been prostituted to the necessities of political exigencies.

And last Thursday, the words I used were as follows:

The Minister of the Interior tries to shelter himself behind Chief Justice Howell, of Manitoba. Well, I am not very much concerned about Chief Justice Howell. I have not had the advantage nor disadvantage of an acquaintance with him. But I have lived long enough to know that a chief justiceship bestowed by this administration carries no guarantee against partisanship, and no guarantee for wisdom, humanity, or common every day honesty.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I have a fairly accurate knowledge of the meaning of words. On that occasion, I said just what I meant and meant just what I said; nothing more, nothing less. But what I said did not warrant the statement made in the 'Globe' newspaper, which I entirely repudiate. I may add that in my humble judgment the sooner we appreciate men by the manhood they display rather than by the positions they hold, the better it will be for the highest weal of this country.

NAVAL SERVICE OF CANADA.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, That it is expedient in connection with Bill No. 95, An Act respecting the Naval Service of Canada, now before this House, to provide that there shall be a department of the government of Canada which shall be called the Department of the Naval Service, over which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the time being shall preside; and that the Governor in Council may appoint an officer to be the deputy head of such department at a salary of $5,000 per annum, and such other officers and clerks as may be requisite for the due administration of such department, at such salaries as, under the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1908, are appropriate to the divisions and subdivisions of the services to which such officers and clerks may be assigned.

He said: I move this with a view of expediting the discussion on the Naval Bill to-morrow. I would like the motion to carry without discussion now and I will give the explanation to-morrow.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is a purely formal step and we will have the discussion to-morrow on the Naval Bill.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee thereon.

Resolution considered in committee, reported, agreed to, and referred to committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 95).

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 205) to amend the Civil Service Act.

On section 2. R.S.C. 16, amended as to outside service.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister explain what this means?

Mr. FISHER. The purpose of this clause is to correct certain anomalies that remained in the Act of 1908 and the old Civil Service Act. There is a clause in this Act which makes more difficult the passage of men from the outside service to the inside service. Heretofore they have been able to pass from one service to the other without restriction, but this Act provides that they must serve a term in the outside service before going into the inside service. The Department of Justice having gone over the two Acts carefully found certain anomalies and recommended this clause.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. By order in council the members of the inside service are permitted to drill annually with their militia unit, if they belong to the militia. Last year an order in council was passed permitting members of the outside service to do likewise. Is that order still in effect and will the members of the outside service who are militia men be permitted to drill this year without losing time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I know of no change in the order in council.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It still holds good.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I presume it is still in force.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know there will be any great advantage in that. It is the opinion of the Department of Justice, as I understand, that these clauses are at least unnecessary, and might in some cases be found inconsistent or embarrassing—that everything that is to be found there is provided for elsewhere, and therefore it is proposed to repeal them.

Mr. FISHER. That is the object of this section, and the clauses mentioned are such as my hon. friend has indicated.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose that the minister has consulted the Civil Service Commission as to this legislation and has received their sanction?

Mr. FISHER. Most of these amendments are based on the report of the Civil Service Commission, which is on the table of the House, and they have all been submitted to the commission and approved of.

On section 3—time and place of examination——

Mr. FISHER. Under the old Act the qualifying and preliminary examinations were held only once a year. Under the Act of 1908 competitive examinations are held twice a year. For certain positions in the outside service, however, qualifying and preliminary examinations have still to be held, and this provides that they shall be held twice a year at the same time as the competitive examinations, and not to be confined any longer to once a year. This has been asked for by the Civil Service Commission and by the public.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is 'the portion of the outside service defined by paragraph (b) of section 4 of the said Act?'

Mr. FISHER. Paragraph (b) of section 4 is as follows:

The second or outside departmental division which will comprise officers, clerks and employees of those classes mentioned in schedule B, and the other officers, clerks, and employees included in the Civil Service who are employed otherwise than on the departmental staff at Ottawa.

There have been certain parts of the outside service which in the old days were not included in the departmental staffs, according to the ruling of the Department of Justice. By the Act of 1908 all those who were in the city of Ottawa were brought into the inside service. That Act also provided in section 3 that the outside service shall consist of the rest of the public service. Therefore, according to the decision of the Department of Justice, paragraph (b) of the original Act is no longer effective or needed.

Mr. ROCHE. Are there any special examinations held in addition to these regular examinations?

Mr. FISHER. At any time, when a department asks the Civil Service Commission for an officer of special qualifications, not a routine officer, the commission may issue an advertisement of the need of such an officer, specifying the qualifications required, and announcing a competitive examination for the office. Then that examination is held.

On section 4—transfer from outside to inside service——

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Am I not correct in understanding that this clause gives the ministers of the Crown the opportunity of bringing in from the outside service—by the back door instead of by the front door?

Mr. FISHER. If my hon. friend will refer to section 50 of the old Civil Service Act, he will find that it says:

> An exchange of positions between two officers serving in two different departments, or in different divisions of the same department, and the filling of a vacancy in the department by a transfer from another division of the same department or from another department, may be authorized by the Governor in Council to be made without examination of either officer.

Then subsection 3 says:

> No person shall be transferred from the outside to the inside division whose age at the date of his first appointment exceeded 35 years.

When the amending Act of 1908 was passed that clause was left unrepealed. The Justice Department has given its opinion that under that clause anybody may be transferred from the outside service to the inside service. Some occasions arose of propositions for such transfers. The Treasury Board discussed these, and very sparingly indeed allowed them to be not only justifiable, but in the public interest that this should be done; and when we came to consider the question, and discussed it, we drew up the amendment proposed in section 4 of this Bill. We restrict such transfers to officers who have served for at least three years in the outside service, so that the head of a department might have an opportunity to know the qualifications of such an officer before undertaking to transfer him to the inside service.

Furthermore, that it should be done on the report of the deputy, and as you will see from section 4 it should not be made to the third division of the inside service. Hon. gentlemen will remember that the third divison of the inside service is defined as a division where routine and other elementary work is done. It was not considered to be at all likely or practically to be possible that a person in the outside service should have the particular qualifications for the kind of work, although it might usually be thought that he should display qualifications for the higher order of work partly from his experience and knowledge and his service, partly, perhaps, by the fact that he had shown extraordinary capacity and personal qualifications. We therefore decided that in the first place no officer should be transferred until he had been three years in the outside service; secondly, that no officer should be transferred to the lower inside service, where purely routine qualifications are necessary, and then in the following section we provide machinery whereby the transfer shall be still more safeguarded. It is an amendment to restrict transfer from the outside to the inside service although it does not absolutely do away with such transfers. That is one of the objects of this Act dealing with many others which came under our observation.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Are we to understand that the men who come in from the outside service have to undergo the same examination as the men who are coming in by the front door as it were?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It is not necessary then for the men who have been in the outside service for three years to undergo any similar examination to those who are going into the inside service, but who have not already been in the outside service.

Mr. FISHER. At present, before this Act becomes law, a man may be in the outside service for a week, and be transferred to the inside service without examination. This provision restricts it; he must have been at least three years in the outside service and must have been able to show to his superior officers qualifications that are not only equivalent to an examination, but in many respects better than an examination; in the second place he shall have to go into the higher division where these qualifications and experience are necessary to qualify him for it. In the third place, as will be seen by examination of the next clause, he has to come in by report of the deputy minister that his qualifications and his services in the outside service are such as, if available in the inside service, would entitle him to the position to which he is to be transferred.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Who makes that examination?

Mr. FISHER. There is no examination. It is the report of the deputy minister on the qualifications of the man his experience and his knowledge of the business of the department.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I cannot help feeling that these clauses are deserving of the severest criticisms, and I am surprised to know that the old Act allowed members of the outside service to come into the inside service without undergoing the same examination as others who were coming in as servants of the people. I would be surprised indeed, to think that the minister would allow men to go from the outside service to the inside service without proper examination, and I think the minister would be wise to have that looked into.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Have they ever been examined when they entered the outside service?

Mr. FISHER. In some cases. Certain branches of the outside service used to require what was called a qualifying examination, and they do still but not all of them. In the post office department, in certain branches of the Custom Department, and in certain branches of the Inland Revenue Department they do. My own department also requires examinations for veterinaries who are entering the outside service.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That has been a very easy way of getting into the outside service and from that into the inside service, and it looks that way yet. As I understand it, those in the inside service, now have to pass a pretty severe examination which I believe is all right. But I cannot understand why one should be taken from the outside service, even although he has had some experience, and on the advice and at the command of the deputy minister should enter the inside service, or why he should be in any different position from those who enter the inside service by way of examination.

Mr. FISHER. Under the old law there was no restriction at all. I may give an instance of the kind of thing. There was an officer in the outside service, I think in the Finance Department, in one of the Receiver General's offices, a gentleman who had shown a very considerable capacity and qualification for his work. There was an officer required in the inside service in the office of that department in Ottawa. It was obvious that this gentleman with his experience in the outside service was eminently qualified and fitted for the position. Such an officer was brought here to Ottawa and put into the inside service. He had been some years on the outside service, I do not know whether he had been three years or not, but if this amendment passes, he would require to have been three years in the outside service before he could be brought in. He would require to be brought into a part of the service where his experience and knowledge in the outside service would fit him for the position. I may say quite frankly that an experience of three years at least in the outside service, under the observation of his superior officers, and with the deputy minister possessing a knowledge of what he has done and what he is able to do, is looked upon and accepted as being as good as a competitive examination. Under the old law, they could be appointed in one service on one day and be appointed to the other service on the other. No such appointment has been made since the passing of the Act last year, and we do not wish to make any such, but we have placed here restrictions and safeguards, which in our judgment seem to be sufficient. I may say that since the Act of 1908 there have been only a very few, I think less than half a dozen, who have been so transferred in the two years.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I thought we had a Civil Service Act that was really more serviceable than it is. As it is the back door is wide open and the front door is practically closed, or at least the men who come in by the front door have to undergo an examination, while the men who enter by the back door are political appointees of this government. After they have been three years in the outside service, then the deputy heads of the department can overrule the commissioners and put them into other departments at their will. You cannot call that civil service reform, surely.

Mr. BLAIN. Has that point received the sanction and approval of the Civil Service Commission Board of Examiners. In other words, are the board perfectly satisfied that their duties should be taken over by the deputy minister and that, instead of the board giving the examinations, the deputy minister is to be the examiner under this Act?

Mr. FISHER. I can only say in regard to that that the board and myself and my deputy minister discussed this whole question, and eventually this clause was evolved. I believe that the commission consider it a sufficient safeguard.

Mr. BLAIN. Was it at the suggestion of the commission themselves?

Mr. FISHER. The commission did not make any definite suggestion. They discussed it from various points of view, as I had in dealing with them. I went over the whole of the amendments with the commission and the commission have said to me, that the amendments as proposed here were on the whole satisfactory.

Mr. LENNOX. Could an officer of the outside service, under this clause, be transferred to a different branch of the inside service, or must he be transferred in the same department? For instance, the minister spoke of officers in the Receiver General's office being transferred to the Finance Department here. That would be a transfer within the same department. But could a person, in the outside of, say, the Post Office Department be transferred to the Public Works Department in Ottawa under this clause?

Mr. FISHER. I think that under the clause that might be, though that was not the intention. I should be quite willing to consider whether words could not be introduced which would provide that an officer, if transferred from the outside service to the inside, should be transferred to similar duties. I would not like to have it confined absolutely to the same department. For instance, a man might be an excellent engineer in the Public Works Department, and it might be desirable to transfer him to a position on the engineering staff of the railway department. The words of section 5 are restrictive, but they may not cover the point referred to by my hon. friend. Section 5 provides that:

No transfer shall be made, under the authority of this section, to the inside service except upon report of the deputy head that the duties performed in the outside service by the officer to be transferred are such as, if performed in the inside service, would entitle him to the position to which he is to be transferred, and that he is qualified for the duties of such position.

Mr. LENNOX. I think the minister (Mr. Fisher) is right in saying that it might be better not to confine transfers to the same department, as there might be a change of department with similar duties. As to what the minister said a little while ago, that experience took the place of examination and guaranteed faithful and efficient service as well as examination could, that could not be carried out unless the work to which the officer was transferred were a similar class of work.

Mr. FISHER. I appreciate that.

Mr. LENNOX. Another point: This section 4 provides:

—and no transfer shall be made to the third division of the inside service.

Does that mean no transfer of any kind?

Mr. FISHER. It means no transfer from the outside service.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think that is clear.

Mr. FISHER. It ought to be; that was the intention. The whole clause refers to transfers from the outside service to the inside. When it says: 'No transfer shall be made to the third division of the inside service', that does not mean a transfer from another place in the inside service.

Mr. LENNOX. It might not.

Mr. FISHER. If my hon. friend would refer to section 50 of the present Act he will see that it provides:

An exchange of positions between two officers serving in different departments or in different positions of the same department, and the filling of a vacancy in one department by a transfer from one division in the same department, or from another department, may be authorized by the Governor in Council to be made without examination of either officer.

That all deals with the inside service—at least, we thought it did. The Department of Justice declares that it affects the outside service as well, and that under that a man may be transferred from the outisde service to the inside service. The amendments here proposed are in the nature of restrictions in regard to that transaction. This section 4 is to amend section 50 by 'adding thereto' the words enacted. And the same is true of section 5. I will consult with regard to the point raised, but the intention was as I have indicated.

Mr. LENNOX. It was because it is an addition to section 50 that it ought to be made clearer and more specific.

Mr. MURPHY. Would the introduction of the word 'such'—'such' transfer—be sufficient?

Mr. FISHER. I would be glad to insert that.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It sems to me that the best feature of this Civil Service Commission was that it was to take this work out of the hands of politicans. But this seems to be a case of power given not to the commission but to the minister and his deputy.

Mr. FISHER. Not the minister.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. When you say the deputy minister, of course you mean the minister—no question about that; they are one and the same so far as this is concerned. Certainly we do not want any repetition in relation to the Civil Service of what occurred in Ottawa during the election. We thought that the instituting of this Civil Service Commission would remedy such things as the Prime Minister and the member for Ottawa going out and —I do not want to use too strong a word—influencing the civil servants of this city. The appointment of the commission was a step in the right direction, but I am afraid this is a step in the other direction. The matter should be taken out of the hands of the minister and the deputy and the commission should be given full control.

Mr. FISHER. I think that the restrictions provided in this section are such as to take the matter entirely out of the hands of the minister and to leave even the deputy minister a very restricted choice. He must declare in a formal report that an officer who is employed in the outside service has performed duties which, if performed in the inside service, would entitle him to the position, and must also declare that the officer is efficient and properly qualified. It is only on that report that the minister acts. I do not think there is anybody in the service or among the public who mistrusts the deputy ministers.

Mr. BLAIN. How are they appointed?

Mr. FISHER. By order in council.

Mr. BLAIN. On whose recommendation?

Mr. FISHER. The ministers choose their own deputies—that is a well known fact, and it is the rule that has applied ever since the organization of the departments. At the same time, I might go out of office to-morrow and the deputy minister of my department remain. I think in a majority of the departments to-day the deputies were not chosen by the ministers now in office.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Why not leave it to the commissioners instead of to the deputy ministers? Why should this power be given outside the commission?

Mr. FISHER. I think the answer is very obvious. In the case of a transfer, the deputy minister must have been supervising the work of the officer for at least three years. Therefore, he knows all about him, and the commission do not know.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Why cannot he explain that to the commission?

Mr. FISHER. They would simply report on his advice. What would be the object of that? The deputy minister is a man who has been in touch with the officer, and it is in consequence of having been in touch with him that he believes him to be the proper man to be transferred to the place in the inside service. His report would have to be a drastic report to be acted upon. It is against the public interest that obstruction should be put in the way of bringing in a good and efficient officer in the outside service to discharge similar duties in the inside service.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it the intention that the report of the deputy minister should be in writing?

Mr. FISHER. Oh, yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it not so provided in this Bill?

Mr. SCHAFFNER.

Mr. FISHER I move that the words ' in writing ' be added after the word ' report.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. Has this Bill been submitted to the Civil Service Commissioners?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, they have considered the amendments satisfactory.

On section 5,

Mr. HUGHES. If a man appointed to the outside service has anything in him he ought to make good in two years, and why should not two years in the outside service entitle him to enter the inside service as well as three years.

Mr. FISHER. We wish to safeguard the inside service so that nobody would be appointed to the outside service simply with a view of getting into the inside service afterwards without passing a competitive examination. Since the Act of 1908 the government have refused to bring men in in that way. I think I am correct in saying that nobody has been transferred from the outside to the inside service who has been appointed to the outside service since the passage of the Act of 1908.

Mr. HUGHES. Then it has not been abused?

Mr. FISHER. We have been safeguarding it with the greatest care, because our own principle of Civil Service reform is embodied in the Act of 1908 and we wish to live up to it.

Mr. HUGHES. If there has been no abuse in the past, what is the danger?

Mr. FISHER. We wish to make it statutory so as to remove temptation from ourselves as well as from those who may come after us. I do not think that three years' probation in the outside service is any too long, and the man who knows he will have to serve three years in the outside service is not likely to enter with the ulterior object of getting into the inside service.

Mr. HUGHES. Is membership in the outside service that much inferior to the inside service?

Mr. FISHER. Not necessarily, but we have adopted the principle that the inside service should be entered only by way of competitive examination, and we wish to safeguard any exceptions to that. At the present time a member of the outside service could be brought into the inside service on a few day's notice.

Mr. HUGHES. And none have been so brought in.

Mr. FISHER. None have been brought in who have been appointed to the outside service since the Act of 1908.

Mr. HUGHES. In case this government should pass to its reward there may be a number of gentlemen in the outside service capable of filling positions in the inside service, and they would be debarred for a period of three years.

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. The weak point of it is that it gives power to the deputy minister which should be vested in the Civil Service Board, and that is not in the interest of the public service or of the country. A deputy minister may have a favourite in the department who may be appointed without examination, although others might be equally efficient or more efficient. If experience qualifies a man for promotion, experience ought to qualify him to pass his examination. Even a minister may not have a deaf ear to the request of his deputy for the promotion of favourites. When parliament is making an effort to take the service out of politics, it is in the public interest that the Civil Service Board and not the deputy ministers should have the power of promotion.

Mr. FISHER. The deputy ministers are not partisan.

Mr. BLAIN. They are appointed by the ministers.

Mr. FISHER. The deputy ministers have a very high standing in the service and in the opinion of the community. During the discussion of the Act of 1908 there was a universal tribute paid to the deputy ministers by both sides of this House. I myself spoke very highly of them. A great many of them have been appointed by our predecessors, and in one or two cases gentlemen who have risen from the lower ranks of the service and who were originally appointed by our predecessors were appointed deputy ministers by us, and, although these gentlemen may have their political predelictions, they were excellent officers and showed themselves non-partisan. There is no doubt that those who hold the honourable position of deputy minister are imbued with the idea of getting the best officers they can for their respective departments, and if they select a man from the outside service you may be sure it is because he has exceptional qualifications. Nobody, not even the commissioners, can so well know the qualifications of a man as can the deputy. It is for that reason we have left it in their hands. It was suggested by one hon. gentleman opposite that the commissioners should find out from the deputy ministers about the qualifications of any officers, but that would not avail, because the commissioners could only record what the deputies told them.

Mr. GOODEVE. This amendment will, in my opinion, cause a restriction which is not in the best interests of the service. We know that the great railroad corporatons are constantly finding young men in different branches who have developed certain qualifications which specially fit them to take promotion in other special branches of the railway service. It must be that in a service so extensive as the Dominion Civil Service, especially outside service, men will drift into particular branches of the service who develop qualifications which make it desirable that they should be promoted to other offices than those which they fill. If you insert the clause in this Bill as proposed, that they must be transferred to perform duties of like character to those which they have been performing, you limit the men in the service to a particular branch and you tie them down to machine method which is most objectionable, in that it takes from them all individuality and initiative.

Mr. FISHER. There is certainly a great deal of force in what the hon. gentleman says, but there are two ways in which the restriction can be overcome. A man specially gifted for one branch of the inside service, may enter it by competitive examination, even though he is in the outside service; and in the second place, clause 21 of the Act of 1908 says, that if a deputy head reports that the knowledge and ability necessary for a position are wholly or in part professional or otherwise peculiar, a person may be appointed to the service without competitive examination, and without refernce to the age limit.

Mr. HUGHES. Could he get in without the approval of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. FISHER. He would have to get a certificate from them, but he could be appointed in that way. We are trying to reach the point where we wish to place some safeguards around the inside service and to make it exceptional that a man shall be transferred from the outside service to the inside service.

Mr. HUGHES. One consolation is that the minister sees the early defeat of his government inasmuch as he has not abused the Act himself, he is paving the way so as to prevent his successors from filling the offices in the inside service from the outside service.

Mr. FISHER. I have not a telescope strong enough to see the day that my hon. friend hopes for.

Mr. GOODEVE. If there was a man specially qualified in the outside service, he would be able to enter the inside service?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, just the same as an outsider altogether.

Mr. GOODEVE. I have before me a petition from the outside civil servants of British Columbia, which was sent to the government through the right hon. the First Minister. That petition contains this clause:

> We therefore beg that under the new order of things which we trust will soon be established, any person now in the service who may be recommended for promotion to a higher class or division shall be required to pass no examination other than an examination on the duties of the office for which he has been recommended.

That bears on the point I have brought to the attention of the minister, and I believe that the outside service make a very reasonable suggestion in that respect. There may be a thoroughly practical man for a position such as we are at present discussing, who would not care to enter a preliminary examination on certain mathematical and classical lines, such as he might be required to pass to get into the service. That occurs every day in law and medicine. Many good men are prohibited from taking up those studies simply because of the fact that in their earlier days they did not pass the necessary examinations. It seems that you are putting the same restriction and difficulty in their way here. The minister has said that really under the amendment if they are prepared to leave the service, go into a competitive examination and start over again, they may be able to qualify for such a position.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think it would be necessary to resign their positions in the service to enter competitive examination. Men in the service may enter the competitive examination for other positions.

Mr. GOODEVE. They may do that but they have to enter a competitive examination based probably upon a particular qualification. If they have to pass an examination on the duties of the office it might be all right, but if they have to pass the regular examination before entering into the service it will debar these men.

On section 6, temporary transfer from outside to inside service.

Mr. FISHER. This is due to the fact that occasionally we wish to bring some officer from the outside to Ottawa to supplement the staff in the office here. I have an instance in my own department where, in the veterinary branch, there was some work which was only temporary. There was an officer in the outside service whom we wished to bring here for the purpose of doing that work instead of hiring some one else. This enables that to be done for temporary work, but the individual does not get any status in the inside service.

On section 7, temporary clerks for decennial census.

Mr. FISHER. This is for the purpose of enabling us to appoint the census clerks to compile the returns of the census. That work has generally gone over four or five years, but we hope that in the next census it will be done within three years, and I have therefore limited it to three years. It is necessary that we should have about 150 people employed temporarily. Under the present law temporary employment would only be for six months, and there would be no means of doing the census work in that time. We make this special arrangement for census employees, we shall only employ them for three years, but we subject them to the rules and regulations of a competitive examination before they are taken on for that work. They are still temporary, and it gives them no status in the service after the work is finished.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the minister taken any steps to lay down the lines upon which the census has to be taken? What plan has he come to for taking the names of all those who are living in the New England states, and who have gone from the maritime provinces and Quebec?

Mr. FISHER. We have no such object in view.

Mr. ROCHE. Have there been any of these special competitive examinations held up to the present time?

Mr. FISHER. You refer to those which were spoken of by the hon. member for Kootenay?

Mr. ROCHE. Yes.

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. ROCHE. When was the last one held?

Mr. FISHER. I could not say. There are several referred to in the commissioner's report of last year, and I think there have been some recently, but there is now an advertisement for a general one which takes place in May, and there are one or two special examinations for special positions. I could not give the information, but I can find it out from the Civil Service Commission, and let my hon. friend have it.

Mr. ROCHE. How is it determined as to who shall compete in these examinations?

I can understand that if any person has written on a previous examination and failed, and the government are in need of an employee, they may send him word, and give him an opportunity of trying this special examination. But, how is it determined in the case of persons who have not written, who shall be sent for to undergo this special examination? I am informed that such examinations have been held in the past, that a person who has not been in the service has been sent for by the commission, has been subjected to examination, has passed the examination, and has secured a position.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know what case my hon. friend refers to, but I think there must have been something particular about it if it has occurred. The special examination such as I had in mind was an examination for a particular office which required special qualifications. These examinations are advertised all over Canada just the same as the general examination, and they are competitive just the same as the general examinations are. Anybody and everybody may see this advertisement, and write for the examinatioin. I do not know of any such case as that which my hon. friend describes, and I cannot quite understand under the law how such a case could have occurred. The examinations are always advertised and anybody who complies with all the conditions is eligible.

Mr. DANIEL. Are these competitors to be chosen in accordance with the excellence of the marks they get?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, in the order of merit.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is this with regard to the officials that will be employed to take the census?

Mr. FISHER. No, those are employed outside of it. This section 7 refers to employees who are to compile the information collected by the enumerators all over the country. It will come here in the form of schedules, and these men will compile it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Have the census enumerators to pass any examination?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not even a political examination of any kind as to their party allegiance?

Mr. FISHER. No.

On section 8—schedule B amended—

Mr. FISHER. This is the change which the Minister of Customs desired to make. Schedule B of the old Act placed the salaries payable to Collectors of Customs at from $300 to $4,000. The Minister of Customs desired to make the scale from $300 to $4,500.

On section 9—salaries of Inland Revenue officials—

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This simply increases the minimum salary of collectors of Inland Revenue and probationary excisemen from $500 to $600.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the maximum remain as it was?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No. Under almost every head the maximum is increased by from $300 to $400—inspectors, from $2,500 to $3,000; collectors, from $2,400 to $2,800; special class excisemen, that is, the chief officers in charge of distilleries, from $1,800 to $2,200. The increases will of course be given at the rate of about $50 a year until the maximum is reached. This just gives us power to pay our outside service a little higher salaries than they are getting.

Mr. BLAIN. What will it amount to in the first year?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Very little indeed; so little that after making the calculation we did not think it necessary to take any additional vote. All salaries under the proposed minimum will, I presume, be immediately increased to $600, and then they go up annually by a percentage increase until they reach the maximum of their respective classes, the percentage of increase in the lower classes being greater than that in the higher. The amount of money involved in these changes will be very little, as the increases only take place annually.

On section 11—salaries of assistant postmasters—

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any examination for these officers?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes; they are obliged to pass a qualifying examination.

On section 13,

Mr. FISHER. I would like to insert section 8 along with the other sections mentioned here. I see it deals also with salaries.

On section 14,

Mr. FISHER. The object of doing that is to take out 38, which was included in the old Act. We are substituting a new 38 at the end of this Act.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the hon. minister if these increases were all recommended by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. FISHER. These increases are in the different departments of the outside service. I do not think the Civil Service Commission dealt with that matter. That is a question of general policy.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that the Civil Service Commission were not consulted with respect to these increases?

Mr. FISHER. These increases were discussed on a resolution in the House at some length, and were passed by the House, and this Bill is based on that resolution.

Mr. BLAIN. What about the resolution itself before it came in the House for discussion? Was it submitted to the Civil Service Commission? Salaries and appointments are very closely connected, and it seems to me that this is a matter that might receive some consideration at the hands of the government. As there is an effort to get these appointments out of politics, I think increases of salary have a good deal to do with the matter, and when resolutions for salary increases are submitted to the House, the Civil Service Commission should be consulted. What objection would the minister see to that?

Mr. FISHER. I think that is a matter of general policy, for which the government has to be responsible. There has been a request, and I think my hon. friend has endorsed it on various occasions, from the outside service to be considered in the way of increases of salary, and my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Postmaster General, after consideration, have decided that they can meet that request to the extent of these additions. The resolution was laid before the House, discussed by the House, and decided upon by the House, and now this Act is carrying it into force.

On section 15,

Mr. FISHER. In the Act of 1908 the word 'year' was used without any definition; sometimes it was determined to be a calendar year and sometimes a fiscal year. As all the salaries of the civil service take effect from the beginning of the fiscal year, it was thought advisable to define it clearly. In the second part, it provides that when a clerk had passed his examination for the second division, he could not be appointed to the third division. Now it happened that the second division was filled and a person having passed that examination wanted to be appointed to the third division. We thought it rather invidious to say that they could not do so, so we have thought it should be said that they may be appointed if they so desire.

Mr. BRADBURY. I notice that the increases are for the higher classes. I do not notice any attempt to increase the salaries of the postmen.

Mr. FISHER. Is my hon. friend going back to the question of increasing the salaries?

Mr. BRADBURY. I want to refer to the general principle of increasing salaries. I notice there has been no attempt to increase the salaries of the poorer officials.

Mr. FISHER. That is not correct.

Mr. BRADBURY. Well, I do not notice anything here about it.

Mr. FISHER. If my hon. friend will take the schedules which are amended by these schedules, he will find that the increased salaries are through the whole list from top to bottom.

Mr. BRADBURY. Do they include the postal carriers, the men who deliver letters in the street?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend is aware that last year I increased the salaries of the letter-carriers from a maximum of $2 to $2.75. I have met the letter-carriers association since, and they said they were most pleased and thanked me profusely for the substantial increase I gave them. I met two or three of them in the streets after the Bill was passed, and they said, we can marry now; we have a salary sufficient to enable us to marry.

Mr. BRADBURY. What increases did you promise for next year?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Without making any promise, and speaking for myself, for the question has yet to come before the government, but I think I have the full support of the Minister of Agriculture, I propose next year to bring under the Civil Service Act, into the inside service, the clerks in the larger city offices and the railway mail clerks. That will mean a readjustment of their salaries. They will have a chance of getting better salaries.

Mr. BRADBURY. These are the classes I am referring to.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Last year, I not only increased the salaries of the letter-carriers, but also the salaries of the lower classes, stampers, sorters and labourers. Now, for the middle classes, I shall have to study the merits of each class and adjust their salaries accordingly.

Mr. BRADBURY. I do not suppose there is any class of servants that is more entitled to good pay than the mail clerks. These men are running great risks all the time, and they deserve good salaries, and ought to be treated well by the government. I am very glad to see that the minister contemplates making that provision for them.

On section 20: salaries of temporary clerks.

Mr. BLAIN. Will this be an increase to the temporary employees?

Mr. FISHER. It might be. Under the old Act, every temporary clerk had to go in the third division. But sometimes we wanted a man of superior quality who had to be paid according to the salary of the second division.

On section 21—no additional payment to permanent officers for any service—proviso as to annual salaries from several departments to officers in outside service.

Mr. J. HAGGART. That is the law already, is it not?

Mr. FISHER. It is intended to be the law, but the Justice Department has advised us that section 38 is not iron-clad, and this is intended to make it so. It was drawn by the Department of Justice with that intention.

Bill reported.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 197) to amend the Post Office Act.—Mr. Lemieux—read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). By the Bill to amend the Civil Service Act passed this morning the superintendents of the railway mail service are taken out of the Post Office Act, and are brought under the Civil Service Act. The present Bill is necessary in order to bring about that change.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before the Bill is reported there is a very simple amendment which I want to propose. Some years ago the Postmaster General reduced the postage on drop letters in cities where there is a city delivery from two cents to one cent. Prior to that change the drop letters had been two cents in the cities and one cent in the rural districts. I contended then that if the Postmaster General was giving a reduction in cities, and as the revenues of the country were buoyant there was no reason why the rural sections should not receive a corresponding reduction. I do not think it is necessary for me to go further than to read the promise of the Postmaster General given in this House in 1908 when I moved the amendment along the line I have indicated. The Postmaster General then said:

I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) to be good enough to withdraw his amendment and to leave the rural section of the country to my tender mercy. Let us first try the one cent drop letter, and if as a result the revenue increases, as I feel quite certain it will, then I shall give my hon. friend's amendment very serious consideration. Will the hon. gentleman trust me for one year or perhaps two?

I at once acceded to his request, and I said:

I would gladly take the suggestion of the Postmaster General if I were sure he would be Postmaster General next year.

Well, he has continued to be Postmaster General, and I feel I can come before him now with a good deal of confidence. Then, after I read my amendment the Postmaster General said:

Will my hon. friend leave this as a notice of motion until next year? I fear it is I who am the Conservative to-night and that my hon. friend is the Radical, for we must not all at once revolutionize the whole postal system. Let us wait for a year or two to see what the result of the present reduction will be and if the increase of the past few years continues it is my intention to give further postal reductions. Of course, as to that I would have to consult my colleagues.

In answer to that I said:

After having heard the very strong assurance which the Postmaster General has given us, I think that my purpose will possibly be more likely to be accomplished by not pressing my amendment than by pressing it. I have no desire to embarrass the Postmaster General in this matter. I might perhaps gain a little political capital by pressing it; but my desire is to get the reduction in postage, which is of more importance than any petty party advantage I might gain. Therefore after the Postmaster General's statement, I am quite willing to allow the matter to stand over.

Then comes an important statement made by the Postmaster General:

I can assure my hon. friend that my promise to take the matter into very serious consideration is not a vain promise, and my hon. friend may remind me of it at any time. I am only too pleased in postal matters to give the best possible facilities to the people; and if any further reduction can be given, which is reasonable and acceptable to the government and the House, I shall certainly bow before public opinion.

In accordance with the suggestion of the Postmaster General given two years ago I now remind him of his promise; a promise which I scarcely see how he can get over at this time, I having waited almost two years for its fulfilment. It needs no argument to show that the country districts are entitled to a similar reduction in postage to that given in the cities. There is no letter-carrier delivery in the rural section, and consequently the government is not put to that expense as in cities, and that was my strong plea why the rural sections should get the benefit of the reduction as did the cities. A great many of the merchants in the smaller towns send out circulars to their customers and these circulars being dropped into the post office they are delivered from the same office without expense to the government. The reduction would be a great benefit to the business community as it would also be to doctors, and other professional men who send their accounts through the post office. I, therefore, move:

That section 48 of the Post Office Act as amended by section 1 of chapter 53 of the statutes of 1908, be amended by adding thereto the words:

'except that in cases where there is no delivery by letter-carriers the rate shall be half a cent per ounce, which shall also be prepaid by postage stamps.'

I do not desire to force this amendment on the government; of course I know I cannot do that; I simply appeal to the Postmaster General to do something that I think is fair, and reasonable to the rural sections, and now that he has had the matter under his serious consideration for two years I hope that he will be able to meet the request which at that time he endorsed. I have no doubt that in his usual spirit of fair play to the rural sections as well as to the cities he will accept my amendment in the interests of the country.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Before answering my hon. friend I wish to submit that the amendment is irrelevant to the question before the House. If the hon. gentleman refers to Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, page 403 and subsequent pages he will find that:

An amendment which is not relevant to the question at issue shall not be taken into consideration.

Sir Erskine May lays it down as 'an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed—except in the case of amendments moved to the question for the Speaker's leaving the chair for the Committee of Supply or Ways and Means.' A motion having been made to declare Michael Davitt incapable of being elected or returned as a member, it was proposed to amend the same by substituting an address to the Crown for a free pardon; but the Speaker promptly interposed and pointed out that such an amendment was inadmissible as it had no relation to the question before the House, but should form the subject of a distinct motion, after notice given in the usual manner.

Mr. HENDERSON.

I do not wish to evade the question at all, but I think it is not in order and if my hon. friend can find his way clear to bring it up regularly, I would be only too pleased to answer him, but at the present time I say it is not relevant, and I ask for the decision of the chairman on the point.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is a note at the bottom of page 444 which says that it is quite relevant.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Bill before the House is a Bill to amend the Post Office Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX. To repeal a section.

Mr. HENDERSON. Practically to amend the Post Office Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Of course.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am simply proposing a second amendment to the Post Office Act. I think, Mr. Chairman, that if you rule my amendment out of order you will be obliged to rule the minister's amendment out of order also, because they are exactly of the same character. I am not moving an amendment to his Bill, I am moving an amendment to the Post Office Act, which is the subject before the House at the present time. I had no doubt in my own mind that the amendment I have proposed was quite in order. I never thought anything else and I hope you will so regard it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is nothing in the Bill No 197 that indicates to me exactly what section 1 refers to but the title of the Bill is 'An Act to amend the Post Office Act.' I do not think I would be justified in excluding the amendment offered by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson.)

Mr. LEMIEUX. Well, Mr. Chairman, under these circumstances, I must say to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) that I would not feel justified in accepting his amendment, not that I have no sympathy with the rural section of the community, but I think that since the postal rate has been reduced on drop letters, the department has been giving the rural sections of the country an evidence of its good will and of its desire to improve the postal service. The other day I answered a question in the House as to the cost of rural mail delivery which is solely for the benefit of the rural section of the country. The cost of rural delivery is certainly large and will become larger and larger every year. This is benefiting the rural section of the country whose interests my hon. friend has specially at heart. As regards the rate, I do not think that the postal rate in Canada as compared to other countries is high. On the contrary I have here a memo showing that the rate in Canada is lower than in many other leading postal countries. Take, for instance, England; the lowest rate on a letter is one penny or two cents; in Germany one and three-quarters cents; in France, ten centimes, or two cents; in the United States, the same as in Canada—that is two cents for an ordinary letter passing from one post office to another and one cent for drop letters. The rates on correspondence in Canada are, taken as a whole, lower than those of any other country. In all respects postage rates in Canada are as low as in any other country, and newspaper rates are lower than in any other country. Newspapers go from one part of the Dominion to the remotest post office, that is to say from Halifax to Dawson, for one-quarter of a cent per pound, if sent from publisher to subscriber. There is besides a special concession to rural districts since weekly newspapers, which are published chiefly in villages and towns, are delivered, within a circular area eighty miles in diameter, free of postage altogether. During the last two years the department has been pursuing steadily the idea of lowering postage rates and extending the mail services. All that entails some considerable—I would not say loss—but charge upon our revenue and the benefit accrues mostly to the rural sections of the country. When the present government came into power it found the postage rates on letters within the Dominion three cents per ounce, and the rate within the British empire five cents per half ounce. To-day, inland rates are two cents per ounce, which is a reduction of more than 33⅓ per cent on postage paid by Canadian citizens for letters circulating within the Dominion. The rate within the British empire, owing to the initiative of Sir Wm. Mulock, has also been reduced, and you can now send a letter from Canada to New Zealand for a penny. This has been quite a boon for all concerned. Coupled with these reductions in rates has been a steady expansion in the service. Between 1896 and 1909, the number of post offices has increased from 9,103 to 12,479, an increase of more than 37 per cent. The number of post offices through which money can be transmitted by postal order has increased from 1,310 to 10,317, or nearly eight times as many as in 1896. The vast extent of the increase in the mail service is shown by the mileage of annual travel. There is an increase under that head of nearly fifty per cent. This increase in accommodation has, in spite of economy and the business methods of the department, augmented the expenditure from $4,706,887.84, in 1896, to $9,000,000, in round figures, in 1909. This is an increase of nearly $4,500,000, the expenditure being not far from double what it was in 1896. Fortunately, the department has been able to reap the usual compensations of extended facilities and good management, and has thus been able to convert a deficit into a surplus, and with that surplus we intend to still further extend the postal facilities in the country. I want to show by provinces what is being spent every year out of the revenue drawn from each province by the Post Office Department. I wish to show the great expansion in the service in every province. In Ontario we spent 80 per cent of the revenue drawn from that province. While, in 1896, the total number of post offices west of Lake Superior, except British Columbia, was less than 800, since 1896 we have opened nearly 3,000 post offices. All that involves a large expenditure for salaries of postmasters, establishment of postal routes and rural mail delivery. We must be careful not to decrease the revenue of the department to the extent of my hon. friend wishes. After all one cent a letter is a very low rate, and the postal rate in Canada is the lowest in the world.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The former rate on drop letters was two cents in cities, and one cent in the country where letters were not delivered by letter carriers. The minister in his wisdom, and I think it was wise, reduced the rate in cities to one cent. But if there was any merit in the argument advanced before that it cost twice as much to handle a letter in the cities as in the country, I cannot see how the proposal of the hon. member (Mr. Henderson) can be rejected. For many years the Post Office Department charged two cents for drop letters in the city just as for a letter sent to any place. The country post offices had a rate of one cent for a drop letter. The suggestion is that since the rate in cities has been brought down to one cent the country post offices should get a half cent rate. No great expense is involved, and I do not think the country would suffer.

Mr. DANIEL. But my recollection is that the old drop letter rate in cities was one cent which was raised to two cents, and every one living in cities at that time thought this was rather a backward than a forward step and objected to it very strenuously. Then the rate was reduced to the old rate. I presume the post office has not lost any money by the reduction in the city rate.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am quite sure we have not lost through the reduction in the drop letter rate in cities, on the contrary, we have done a very good business. This is because there is such a dense population and such industrial activity in cities. If we could reduce the rate in the rural districts there would be a loss of revenue.

We are doing a great deal now to improve the postal service in the rural sections, and really, I do not think my hon. friend should insist. The one cent rate is no discrimination, it is the same rate although, of course, in the rural sections they have not delivery by letter-carriers. Then, we are slowly but surely establishing the rural mail delivery and each rural mail box costs money. I take the hon. member for Halton as a witness to the advantage of rural mail delivery. I passed through his constituency last year and I had there evidence of the very satisfactory service given that county under the rural mail delivery system. Passing through Milton and through Halton generally I found boxes all along the road and the farmers getting their letters not at their doors but not very far from their doors. I thought it was a great improvement on the old system.

Mr. HENDERSON. I cannot agree that there is no discrimination. I wish to repeat and emphasize a statement of his own. Whilst in the cities these drop letters are delivered at the people's doors for one cent each, in the rural sections the government saves all the expense of delivering by letter-carriers, and yet gets as much postage as in the city.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There are more people in the cities.

Mr. HENDERSON. We cannot help that. I would not like the minister to be carried away with the idea that the rural mail delivery pervades the whole of my county. I know that he took a trip from Milton to an outlying post office called Mount Nemo, a distance of 12 or 15 miles. That is one mail route. There is another on a circuit of about 19 miles, but I am not sure that the whole distance is supplied with boxes. That is all the rural mail delivery we have in the county.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I was told that it was near that place that my hon. friend was born; so I thought it was the whole county.

Mr. HENDERSON. It was not on Mount Nemo, but on another mount not very far from that. At present I live in the northern part of the county, and the people of that neighbourhood have no advantage of the rural mail delivery. I do not think that the argument that has been presented regarding the extension of the rural mail delivery has very much weight so far as my county is concerned, because beyond 25 or 30 miles at the outside the people have not the advantage, though it cost them something as well as the government. I am sorry the minister cannot see his way to granting this small concession, which I thought he would be able to do, from the admissions he made two years ago, when he asked me to remind him of the promise he then gave. I must say I feel disappointed, and I hope he is not going to turn this down for all time. I do not propose to divide the House on this question, because if the minister is going to oppose it I know that I cannot get it. I think the country is entitled to what I ask, it is a reasonable proposition, and I hope the minister will see his way clear to grant it.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Is the minister in a position to say how the revenue is affected in towns of upwards of 1,000 inhabitants by the reduction from two cents to one cent? I understand that there is a good surplus in the revenues from these post offices. I understand also that there is a large surplus in the Post Office Department. I believe there should not be any. I believe that all the money gained in revenue in the Post Office Department should be expended in giving the people a good mail service. If the reduction from two cents to one cent in the cities has given good results, may we not conclude that a reduction from one cent to half a cent in towns would have the same result?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The revenue in the towns is quite satisfactory, but we need all that revenue for the opening of new post offices, especially in the western sections of this country. In 1896 between Lake Superior and the Rocky mountains we had 786 post offices, whereas in 1910 there are in Manitoba, 699; in Alberta, 695; in Saskatchewan, 982, and in the Yukon, 20, an increase in those three western provinces of 1,610. We have to provide in each case for the salary of the postmaster and an allowance for fuel and light, and we have increased the salary first from $10 to $25 and afterwards to $35. We have to establish mail routes between these new offices, advertise for tenders, and so forth, All this costs an enormous amount of money, and we require all our revenue for these purposes.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It is only natural that the number of post offices should increase very much, but has not the revenue increased in a greater proportion?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The revenue has increased, certainly, but we require it all to keep pace wtih the expansion of the country. Eight or ten years ago we had post offices from six to seven miles apart. To-day we do not refuse to open a post office at two miles distance from another provided there is a fair number of patrons. All this creates additional expenditure, and we must be prepared to meet that increased demand made upon us. Now, let me give the figures. In Ontario in 1896, there were 3,185 offices. There has been an increase of 563 since last year. Of course Ontario is a well settled province, where new offices are not so much needed. In Quebec there were in 1896, 1,640 offices. There are now 2,341 offices. In Nova Scotia there were 1,649 offices in 1896; to-day there are 1,953. In New Brunswick in 1896 there were 1,181; to-day there are 1,409. In Prince Edward Island there were 380 in 1896; to-day there are 467. In British Columbia there were 274 in 1896; to-day there are 571. In Manitoba there were 786 in 1896; to-day there are 699, but that included the two Northwest Territories. In Alberta in 1909 there were 600 offices, and in one year we increased the number by 95, there being to-day 695. In Saskatchewan in 1909 there were 861; to-day there are 982. So that since 1896, the number of post offices have increased from 9,103 to 12,885. Now, as regards the gross annual revenue and expenditure in the different provinces of the Dominion, for 1908-9, the last year for which figures are available. They were as follows approximately:

Ontario—revenue, $4,441,463; expenditure, $3,564,000; percentage of expenditure to revenue, 83 per cent.

Quebec—revenue, $1,905,942; expenditure $1,754,242; percentage of expenditure to revenue, 92 per cent.

Manitoba—revenue, $951,905; expenditure, $3,564,003; percentage of expenditure to revenue, 88 per cent.

British Columbia—revenue, $655,787; expenditure, $636,339; 97 per cent of this revenue was spent in that province.

Now as to Nova Scotia, I need not give the whole figures. I will give the percentage. There we spent 124 per cent of its revenue. Of course it is a small province.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. What is the reason of so many post offices in Nova Scotia?

Mr. LEMIEUX. In Nova Scotia the settlements are sparsely situated. There is practically only one or two railways operating in Nova Scotia, and we have to provide the inhabitants of the different portions of the province with proper postal facilities. In Alberta, 93 per cent of the revenue was spent; in New Brunswick 129 per cent, and in Prince Edward Island 153 per cent. Of course, it is not always the best argument to use the law of averages, but at all events I have given the figures here. In a small province like Prince Edward Island, the people have only one railway, and the fishermen are living on the bays and on the shore where the railway has no access, and we must provide for those people. When they came into confederation they came under certain terms and we must provide for them.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Will the minister read the averages, beginning with British Columbia again?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will begin with Ontario: Ontario, 80 per cent expenditure to revenue; Quebec, 92 per cent; Manitoba, 88 per cent; British Columbia, 97 per cent; Nova Scotia, 124 per cent; Saskatchewan, 94 per cent; Alberta, 93 per cent; New Brunswick, 129 per cent; Prince Edward Island, 153 per cent. The figures given represent very nearly the revenue transactions, but the expenditure cannot be calculated quite so closely. Such items as the conveyance of mails by railways, for instance, which form a very considerable proportion of the total expenditure, can only be figured out on the basis of the track mileage in each province, without respect to the weight of mail that has to be carried over the different sections of railways. There is also the mileage of railway mail clerks, whose runs are partly within one province and partly within another. But this does not prevent me from giving approximately and fairly, I think, the total expenditure and total revenue and the percentage of expenditure to revenue.

Mr. DANIEL. Has the minister the number of post offices that were opened in New Brunswick in the latter part of 1908-9?

Mr. LEMIEUX. In New Brunswick in 1909 there were 1,397 post offices; in 1910, 1,409, an increase of twelve in the year. In Prince Edward Island there is an increase of two offices over last year. I will give the increases since last year in the number of post offices. In Ontario, the increase over last year was 54; Quebec, 72; Nova Scotia, 15; New Brunswick, 12; Prince Edward Island, 2; British Columbia, 24; Manitoba, 12; Alberta, 95; Saskatchewan, 121. In the old provinces, of course, in Ontario and Quebec, the increase is less, but in the new provinces, we have to provide for the arrival of immigrants.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. To what extent has rural mail delivery been extended in Manitoba?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will give by provinces the exact number of rural mail routes authorized. In Prince Edward Island, 36 were authorized; in Nova Scotia, 6; in New Brunswick, 16; Quebec, 8; Montreal District, 2; Ottawa, 8; Kingston, 25; Toronto, 42; London, 123; Winnipeg, 29; Moosejaw, 8; Saskatoon, 3; Edmonton, 13; Calgary, 6; Vancouver, 7; Victoria, 7. The total being 339.

Mr. BURRELL. What were the totals for British Columbia?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Vancouver 7; Victoria 7—total 14. The increase in the cost of mail service arising out of the establishment of rural delivery in British Columbia is Vancouver, $4,111; Victoria, $1,497. In Winnipeg, the total increase in cost arising out of the establishment of rural mail is $6,332.52. We are only beginning, but we are beginning on a safe basis, not on the extravagant basis adopted in the United States. As I said the other day, in the United States, though they have a huge revenue, this year, they have a deficit of over $17,000,000, and, according to the assistant Postmaster General of the United States, that deficit is made up of the lavish expenditure on rural mail delivery. We must take our time, and be rather conservative as regards that, for otherwise the Post Office Department might become involved in a very large deficit.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The argument of the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) against the proposition of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) is the great expenditure that the post office has to face in the number of new post offices it is necessary to open in the Northwest. Now, the figures that the hon. Postmaster General has just given to the House are illuminating on this point. They show distinctly that, whilst there has been an enormous expansion in the west, yet in every case the revenue has more than kept up with the expenditure. We find that, in the great province of Ontario the expenditure is only 80 per cent of the revenue. The surplus, there, of course, owing to the enormous amount of the revenue, would represent a very large sum of money. But when we consider the western provinces, what do we find? In Manitoba, the expenditure is only 88 per cent of the revenue —a good surplus there. Then we come to Saskatchewan, a province which is growing more rapidly, possibly, than any other portion of Canada. We find that even there the expenditure is only 94 per cent of the revenue. In Alberta, the showing is even more favourable—an expenditure of only 93 per cent. So, the Postmaster General's argument does not really hold at all. There is no reason why the request of the hon. member for Halton should not be conceded. Especially so when we remember that every concession in the way of cheaper postal service means a greater revenue and greater profit. That has been an acknowledged maxim in the postal service ever since the success of penny posts in the old country. There is one especially strong reason why low local rates should be granted in this matter. The question brings up the big issue between the local retail merchant and the mail order house in the city. Everybody who knows anything about the post offices throughout the country knows that these post offices are flooded daily with circulars, parcels, letters and 'come-on' documents from the mail order houses in the great centres inviting the people to send in orders by mail, and have them filled at the expense of the retail dealers in the country. The retail dealers would like to take advantage of the postal service, and do likewise. But, in the first place, he has not the enormous resources of the big city concerns, and also his expenditure for printing and otherwise is relatively larger, for, his printing would have to be done locally, and in comparatively small quantities. Even with the lower local postal rate, I venture to say, it would cost one of the great houses in Toronto no more to circularize the people in Milton, for instance, than it would cost a local dealer to reach the people of the town in the same way. It would be a decided advantage, however, if this cheap rate were introduced so that the local dealer could send circulars to his customers calling attention to the things he has to sell on something like the same terms as those enjoyed by the great retail houses in the cities. For that reason, I am strongly in favour of this proposition, and hope the Postmaster General will not oppose it, because it would greatly benefit local business, and tend to build up industries in the towns against the enormous, crushing weight of the mail order houses in the large centres.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) inquired why there were so many post offices in the province of Nova Scotia. I would like to state to that hon. member and to the House what, in my opinion, is the explanation. The reason, I believe, is largely geographical. If you will look at the map, you will see that the whole coast of Nova Scotia is indented with harbours and bays. One of these, perhaps, runs twelve or fourteen miles into the country. It is settled on both sides, and there is no bridge or ferry. Consequently, you must have post offices on both sides. Again, Nova Scotia has many rivers which are settled along both banks, and the mail must run down both banks, because we are not accommodated with bridges for crossing at every point. The geographical situation in Nova Scotia, therefore, calls for a larger number of post offices than are needed in a province like Manitoba, or even Ontario, which are more regularly divided, and where the people may be more conveniently served by the post offices. As to the revenue, I may mention that, in a province situated as Nova Scotia is, at the very extreme of the Dominion, it is hardly fair to credit it with only the revenue that it pays into the post office. Take, for example, one of the business houses referred to by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie)—a large mail order house. The customer in Nova Scotia sends an order, let us suppose, to Eaton or some other concern in Toronto or Montreal. The goods are sent by mail, and the postage is paid by the large firm in the first place, but ultimately by the customer in Nova Scotia. I venture to say that there is a very large amount of money credited to Ontario and Quebec in this way that, in reality, ought to be credited to Nova Scotia. I was glad to hear the minister say that he intended to reduce the distances between post offices. My own opinion is that this is the proper solution of mail accommodation in my province. Owing to the facts that have been stated, and the distance from the railway in many places, it is impracticable to have rural mail delivery in some sections and more post offices is the only remedy. It used to be said by the department that post offices would not be placed within four miles of one another, and I was pleased to hear the minister say that he was reducing the distance to two miles. That will lead to a great improvement in Nova Scotia. It is better to increase the number of post offices than to spend money in attempting to give the people rural mail delivery, which is not suitable to that country.

Mr. STAPLES. The minister has spoken of the great improvements he is making in the mail routes of the west and has mentioned the routes running out from Winnipeg. I have been asking the minister for the last seven years to establish a post-office in a district where at certain seasons of the year the people have had to go eight miles for their mail, and at any time have had to go about 3 miles. The minister said the other day that he had met the convenience of those particular people, but I received a letter this morning which would indicate that their convenience has not been met. According to this letter certain changes have been made, and the post office at St. Charles river has been returned to St. Charles village and a new office has been opened in Sturgeon creek, but both offices are three miles from the place I spoke of, and the river intervenes. My correspondent says that mail matter, including letters, is left at his store every day for distribution to people living near, while others coming in have to go three miles for their mail. As a matter of fact, the proper place for this post office would have been in this very store. I have tried to explain the situation in that locality to the minister and have produced a map showing how thickly settled it is. The population are almost all engaged in market gardening, and if there is any place near Winnipeg deserving of rural mail delivery it is this district. The trouble has been that there is a little political quarrel between the old candidate and some of the settlers in that locality and the minister does not seem willing to accede to the wishes of the people, but seems to prefer to keep up the agitation. While the store-keeper may not be a particular friend of the government, I do not know that he is a strong opponent, in fact I understand he has been very independent, and the people have petitioned to have the post office established in his store. I understand that the people have to pay $3 a box for rural mail delivery.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I brought with me the other day the whole file on this case. The case concerns my hon. friend only and not the House.

Mr. STAPLES. I have taken it up several times.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I told my hon. friend I had given instructions to Mr. McLeod, the inspector at Winnipeg, to solve the whole question. There has been a quarrel between the two sides of the river; I received a report and have acted according to that report. The inspector has equalized the distances between the post offices and established a new one, so as to give satisfaction to the people. I am sure that Mr. McLeod has taken all the facts into consideration. However, I shall take the case up with my hon. friend in a few minutes.

Mr. HERRON. The minister's statement would lead the House to believe that we had splendid mail accommodations in our country, the post offices close together and convenient for the settlers. The figures as here presented would give that impression. I admit that the post offices have increased threefold since 1896, but the revenue has increased in a far greater proportion, and the population to-day is probably six times what it was in 1896. The hon. member (Mr. Staples) complains of having post offices eight miles apart. In my country it is quite usual to have post offices fifteen miles apart, people travelling seven or eight miles for their mail. We have also post offices getting one mail a week, where they have had the mail route in the same place for ten years or more. and a large number of people are being served in that way. I think the Postmaster General might well consider the establishment of tri-weekly services in these localities. The minister should improve these services before he accumulates a surplus in his department. There is still a surplus of 7 per cent of revenue over expenditure in our province. We are generally met with the reply that the revenue will not permit a more rapid extension of the service than is being made. I would like the minister to accede to the request of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) and give a half-cent drop rate in towns in rural localities. The position of the small merchants in towns has been well explained. With their wide opportunities for advertising the big departmental stores in the large cities are extending their business to the disadvantages of country merchants. I hope that the Postmaster General will not try to show how large a surplus he can secure until he gives better accommodation to the rural districts, particularly in the province that I represent.

Mr. WM. CHISHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I think that the Postmaster General may well congratulate himself upon the showing that he makes, and it is recognized that for the administration of the Post Office Department since 1896 to the present Post master General and his predecessors is entitled a great deal of credit. Yet, the Postmaster General's Department is far from being an institution that we cannot criticise. The statistics that have been given, whilst, on their face, they are apt to justify another conclusion, are somewhat misleading. It would appear that the postal service in the rural districts, say in the province of Nova Scotia, are better than they are in the western provinces. I venture to say that, as far as rural conditions are concerned in the province of Nova Scotia, they do not receive as good accommodation relatively considered as they do in the west. As far as the charge of extravagance or generosity on the part of the Postmaster General or his department is concerned, that is a charge which certainly cannot be made. I have had a little experience with the Post Office Department, which has not been of the most pleasant kind in endeavouring to obtain better accommodation for the people whom I represent, particularly the rural population. Let me illustrate. When I went to get a tri-weekly mail established I was obliged to surrender two offices in order to meet the increased cost of the tri-weekly service. The salaries of the two postmasters were somewhat greater than the cost of the increased accommodation. The department had to get the better of the bargain. I asked for the increased accommodation and they refused because the revenue would not justify the expenditure. They put it upon a straight business basis just as I would find if I were dealing with one of the Jews in Montreal. The proposition was put up to me in this form. I suggested the surrender of these two offices.

Mr LEMIEUX. Who suggested that?

Mr. HERRON.

Mr. WM. CHISHOLM. Not the Postmaster General.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Was it not suggested by yourself?

Mr. CHISHOLM. Yes, I suggested it for the reason that I found that this was the only way in which I could get a tri-weekly service. I wanted to benefit the greater number. These two offices had been established years ago. They were then perhaps necessary. Whilst they would afford a convenience there was not then the necessity for continuing them and they could be dispensed with without any great degree of inconvenience. Finding that I could not get this increased tri-weekly service, I suggested that these two offices be dispensed with, and I must thank the department for having carried out my wishes in this regard. I merely mention this to point out that the department cannot be accused of extravagance, nor yet can it be accused of extreme generosity. I might mention another instance of a similar character that comes to my mind in this connection. I got this tri-weekly service established and on the route there was a section between two offices about three and a half miles from either office and I suggested that an office should be established in that section. Inquiry was made and it was found that the revenue would not equal the expenditure, and my request was politely declined. Business principles were applied and the department felt that they were not justified in establishing the post office. What happened? I asked, later on, that a bag be put up, and I informed the department that one of the people living in the vicinity would take the mail and distribute it amongst his neighbours. Thanks to their generosity they granted that request, a bag was put up and the mail has been delivered in that section by a citizen who is performing the duties of a postmaster without having any salary. There is not much generosity there. I am not finding any fault with the department about that. I have not urged that he be given a salary, but I am pointing out the experience I have had as far as the generosity of the Post Office Department is concerned and I could multiply the instances. I may say that the people of the rural communities are not dealt with as generously as they should be. If you ask for a post office in a rural community one of the first questions that is put to you is: How many dollars can we get out of it, and how much will we have to pay? If the expenditure exceeds the revenue the request is politely declined. I submit that you must do what is necessary to make rural communities more comfortable and to make life in farming districts more bearable if you wish to retain your rural population. The boys and the girls go away because they have not the conveniences at home. It is not too much to expect that we should have a tri-weekly service where there has been a weekly service. We receive this answer, when we ask for increased accommodation: Oh, your fathers got along with the present service, or this service has been in existence for the last 10, 15, 20 or 25 years and you cannot show any great change in the community since then. This is very true, but 10, 15, 20 or 25 years ago you would not find a piano, or organ in some of the houses, or a top buggy, or silver mounted harness, or the houses furnished as they are to-day. The conditions have changed and the people have changed with them. You might say that there is no need of these comforts or conveniences. But the people are the best judges of that, and if they have these comforts and conveniences which are not absolute necessities surely it is not too much to expect that they should have the convenience of getting their mail two or three times a week, if they are now getting it only once a week. Newspapers are so much cheaper to-day than they were years ago that nearly everybody gets a daily paper. Large dailies, such as the Montreal 'Star' and other papers, are so cheap that they go into nearly all houses. Farmers for that is one reason want a tri-weekly or a daily service where they were quite content years ago with a weekly service. In making these remarks I do not wish to be understood as criticising the Post Office Department. The Post Office Department is entitled to the credit of the people of this country. It is a department that is recognized by every one as being run on thorough business lines, but I am afraid that in some cases they are running it on too straight and strict business lines and that the officers of the department should be a little more generous when it comes to considering the farming community. In the province of Nova Scotia we have no large cities or towns, and therefore, the showing is not as great as far as the revenue is concerned as in the provinces where they have the big centres, such as Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg. The Montreal revenue swells the revenue for Quebec, and the revenue for Toronto makes the revenue for Ontario appear very large, but if you eliminate these large towns and cities and take only the country districts you will find that Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island will make just as good a showing, so far as the rural districts go and the revenues received there concerned, as that of those other provinces.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I hope the debate, which has been wandering away from the point, will be relevant to this motion of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson).

Mr. BURRELL. I do not know that what I have to say will be particularly relevant, but it will not be particularly long. Some very interesting questions have been raised by hon. members of the House in speaking of the matter which is now before the Chair. I thoroughly agree with the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. Chisholm). I do not think that the department can be accused of any great extravagance or generosity in its treatment of some of the postal arrangements throughout the scattered portions of the country. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the view of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down that the rural communities ought to be treated with the utmost generosity. It is the cry in Canada that we want rural population, and if we want to develop that class of our population we must certainly give the fullest consideration in the matter of mail facilities to those scattered communities which are laying the foundations of their future homes, and who are cut off entirely from their old connections and associations. I believe there are many places in the country where the department will be justified in establishing post offices, even at a loss, for the sake of giving these people the facilities that they are now doing without. The geographical difficulties referred to by the hon. member for Guysboro as obtaining in Nova Scotia, are to be found in a much more aggrevated degree in my own province of British Columbia. My own riding is probably 50 per cent larger than the whole of the maritime provinces put together, and in some instances the people are 400 miles from a railway, and are struggling to build up new districts. In such cases the Postmaster General should certainly not look for revenue. The hon. gentleman has admitted that he has a margin of three per cent between revenue and expenditure in that province, and I do think that where people are going immense distances to get their letters he should at least expend all the revenue obtained in the province to supply increased postal facilities. I trust the minister will take this matter into his consideration.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—PROTECTION FOR THE STONE INDUSTRY.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. GEORGE H. BRADBURY. I desire to call the attention of the government, and the House to a matter of considerable importance which affects a large number of the working class of this country. I have here a letter from the secretary of the Stonecutters' Association of Manitoba, inclosing a resolution passed by the British Columbia Stonecutters' Association, and as the correspondence explains itself, I shall read it to the House:

TYNDALL BRANCH OF THE STONECUTTERS' ASSOCIATION OF NORTH AMERICA.

Tyndall, Manitoba, March 28 1910.

Dear Sir,—I have been instructed by this branch of the Journeymen Stonecutters' Association of North America to appeal to you on our behalf with regards to the inclosed resolutions from Vancouver branch, and which we endorse, as you are our representative in the Dominion House. Trusting that you will look over those resolutions carefully,

I beg to remain, sincerely yours,

D. MacGREGOR, Cor. Sec.,
Carson Quarry Post Office,
Tyndall, Manitoba.

VANCOUVER BRANCH JOURNEYMEN STONECUTTERS OF NORTH AMERICA.

Resolutions.

Whereas, protection is said to be in the interests of workingmen, enabling their employers to furnish them with steadier employment and higher pay than are to be had in other countries, without increasing proportionately the cost of the necessaries of life; in effect increasing their income in at least greater ratio than their outlay, and whereas:

The Canadian customs tariff, by oversight or otherwise, leaves the occupation of stonecutting entirely outside of the scheme, and has an effect directly opposite to that supposed to be intended. Duties of 30 to 35 per cent are (outside of the British preference) levied on the importation of almost every article we eat, wear or shelter ourselves with, while the one and only thing we sell, our labour in producing stone, is protected to the extent of 20 per cent only. Instead, therefore, of being beneficiaries of the system, stonecutters are being very unjustly discriminated against, and whereas:

Cut stone is being imported here from the United States in increasing quantities while numbers of local stonecutters are walking the streets idle, we are confronted, not with a theory, but a very serious condition which requires an immediate and drastic remedy.

Therefore be it resolved, that this branch of the Stonecutters' Union appeal to the Dominion government for redress in this matter, advancing no opinion as to the relative merits of free trade or protection, but claiming a right to equal treatment with our fellow citizens. If the policy of the government is in the direction of free trade we request the reduction of duties on all the necesaries of life to 20 per cent. If, on the other hand, the policy is protection, we request an increase of the duty on cut stone to the average amount collected on such necessaries. We ask for no favours, we desire none. All we want is simple justice and equal rights with other people. We wish for no more, we will not be content with less. We do not grab timber limits, water-powers, or other natural resources (they forgot to include the Indian lands, Mr. Speaker), and then agitate for further privileges and concessions. We give a fair day's work for a fair day's pay, value for value. We demand no privilege, we should be put under no handicap. And further be it resolved:

That a copy of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary to the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier with the respectful request that he give it his serious consideration.

A. DUFF, President.
J. MARSHALL, Secretary.

I presume, Mr. Speaker, that the government is in possession of this resolution as it is some time since I received a copy. In my own county, I think nearly all the quarries that are at the present time working in Manitoba, are situated. All the building stone that supplies Manitoba, and the Northwest Territorities come out of the Garson or the Gunn quarries in the county of Selkirk, and I think I may say these limestone quarries are second to none in this Dominion. You can get stone there from one foot to 20 feet; they have extensive plants, they have saws and lathes, and are capable of finishing stone in first-class style. I submit that an industry of that kind should be thoroughly well protected. The Garson quarry is only one of the quarries situated in Selkirk county, and there are 400 or 500 men engaged in it. It is a notorious fact in the city of Winnipeg, which is building so rapidly, a large quantity of the stone which they are using in these magnificient structures is at present imported, while a great many of the stonecutters, the workingmen who are the bone and sinew of our country are not receiving the remuneration they should receive for their skill as mechanics. I would therefore ask the government to take into serious consideration the protection of the stone industry, not only against the finished article, but against the partially manufactured stone.

By this I mean sawn stone. Under the improved system of manufacturing stone, the stone for window sills, stringers, etc., is sawn to any dimension required and is put in place without the stonecutter putting a hammer or chisel to it. So I would ask the government, when considering this question, to consider not only the finished article, but the partly manufactured article. I think I am justified in asking this in view of the fact that so much imported stone is coming into Canada. Right here in Ottawa, in the magnificent new station building in sight of the parliament buildings, all the stone, I understand, is sandstone imported in the finished state from Ohio. We have a similar example in the city of Winnipeg, where some years ago the government built the post office, which we designate there as the annex to the Winnipeg 'Free Press' office. It is a magnificent building, but strange to say, this government, which ought to encourage the use of Canadian stone, passed by the Manitoba stone, which is admitted to be equal in appearance and in quality to any other stone that is being used in Winnipeg to-day, and imported every foot of stone that went into that building. I say this is an outrage. The government of this country should, wherever possible, use in our public buildings the material we are producing in our own country and encourage home industry. It is an oversight which I hope the government will not be guilty of again. Some of the finest structures in the city of Winnipeg to-day —the Canadian Pacific railway station, the Canadian Northern station, and in fact most of the great buildings—are manufactured at the Garson quarry, one of the finest quarries in the Dominion of Canada; and how the government of Canada, in face of the fact that this quarry was turning out such magnificent material, could go out of the country to get stone for a public building, I cannot very well understand. I trust we shall never have a case of that kind again in the western country, and there is certainly no need of doing so in the east, because the limestone of the Ottawa valley is not equalled in any part of this continent. If men are bound to have imported stone in their buildings, let it come in the raw state, and let our stonecutters, who, as this resolution says, are paying high duties on everything they eat and wear, have equal protection and equal rights with the rest of our citizens. I do not intend to detain the House any longer, but I trust that if there are any negotiations with the United States before the House is called together again, the government will take care of this matter as well as the protection of our gardeners, which I referred to a few days ago. Both of these questions are important to us in the west.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Experimental farms, $110,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the hon. minister explain the increase?

Mr. FISHER. It is due chiefly to the fact that we are running three new farms—one at Lethbridge, one at Lacombe and one at Rossland, as well as a fourth on Prince Edward Island.

Mr. SEXSMITH. The minister gave us a very eloquent address the other day on the work of the Department of Agriculture, and mentioned a number of experiments that are being carried on at the experimental farm, but there are some which he did not tell us anything about. I had the pleasure a little time ago of visiting the farm, and I saw there what I presume were experiments such as I have never heard of or seen before. At the experimental farm in Ontario we have been taught to take care of our implements. At the experimental farm here I saw ploughs and other implements that were put under cover just as they had been taken out of the ground, with a great deal of clay on them. I thought perhaps this was an experiment to see whether it was better to leave the clay on or to have them properly cleaned and oiled before they were put away for the winter. Some machinery was properly housed under cover, while considerably more was out under an open shed, with from three to six inches of ice on the wheels. I supposed that was another experiment to see whether it would be better to have the machinery outside frozen in the ice or under cover where it would be dry. A considerable quantity of machinery was there, and one side was open and the water had frozen in the spokes of the wheels. Now, I do not know what the object of the minister was in keeping the place like that. Perhaps he will explain what his intention is with respect to those experiments.

Mr. FISHER. I sympathize with my hon. friend. We have an implement shed or building in which the great majority of the farm implements are placed, but I certainly do not consider that any implement should be put in to that house in the fall of the year without being properly cleaned. I am surprised to hear that any implements were so placed. I will certainly inquire about it and instruct the officers that that should not occur, because I think it would be wrong. So far as the shed in which there was water and ice is concerned, I can only suppose he alludes to a shed that was started last fall and which is not yet completed, and it is possible that some of the wagons and other things in the shed might be in the condition he has described. I have not been able to visit that shed during the winter, and therefore I cannot say whether the condition is such as my hon. friend describes. The shed ought to be ready soon, and the implements in the shed ought to stand in a dry place. I think that it is well established that this is a good place for implements.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I can assure the hon. minister that that was the condition of affairs when I was there. I confess I was considerably disappointed when I found machinery, wagons, horse rakes and so on in that condition. That is not my idea of what an experimental farm should be. I can remember the model farm, as we used to call it in the old days, in Ontario, and although it did not bear the same reputation that the Dominion Experimental Farm enjoys, I think it is one of the greatest institutions of the kind in America. Listening to the hon. minister's address the other day, one would have thought that he had never visited other experimental farms in Canada. He practically took to himself the credit of having monopolized the establishment of such farms.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, no.

Mr. SEXSMITH. There are a great many things that have been brought about by our experimental farm here, and by the very efficient experiments and tests that have been made. I do not wish to criticise a great deal of the work that is being done there, but I do wish to say that in my opinion, there is not more than half of the work being done that should be done. The agricultural industry in Canada is the greatest industry there is, and really it gets less attention and has less spent upon it by the government than almost any other industry in the country. An experimental farm conducted by the Dominion government, ought to be beyond reproach in every way. I would ask any farmer, or any lawyer, in this House to go out to that farm, and he will find that there are many farms in the province of Ontario that are more neatly kept. There are a great many eyesores at the experimental farm that could be removed at very little cost. One of these eyesores is the hog-pen. During the last days of the session, a year ago, another member and I visited the experimental farm, and we found the hog-pen in a deplorable condition. I was sorry, at the time, that the minister had got his estimates through and that I did not have an opportunity of drawing his attention to it. In the lower part of the pen, there were some hogs, and the manure had been piled up in to such an extent that I did not consider that half of that sty was fit to have a hog in it. That was in the latter days of April. Later, I had the opportunity of visiting the farm with a number of farmers, some 400 strong, from my riding, and West Peterborough, and West Durham, and to my utter astonishment, the manure which I had seen piled up in April, was still there, though in a smaller quantity. Now, these are things that should not exist on a model farm, if my conception of a model farm is right. I would urge the minister, if he is going to conduct experiments in the interests of the bacon industry, to at once destroy what they call the pig-pen at the experimental farm and have one put up that would be up-to-date, so that the farmers coming from all parts of the Dominion would see a model pig-pen, model cow byres, and everything else as it should be at an experimental farm. But I certainly do protest against the class of pens used for housing the hogs.

Mr. FISHER. I am glad that my hon. friend (Mr. Sexsmith) has mentioned these things. As to the particular pen of which he speaks, that was an experiment and everything about it was done advisedly and intentionally. It is known that many people in the country are short of straw for their hogs and have tried to get other kinds of bedding. We have had many applications for information as to the use of black muck. If it were satisfactory and increased the manure from the hogs, it would be a good thing for many farmers. We carried out the experiment in this case. It is true, the results are not considerd to be satisfactory. But the hon. gentleman sees that we are trying experiments with regard to the management of hogs. As to the hog pen generally, the upper part was built many years ago. According to the then ideas of the best hog raisers in the country, it was a model. I admit that things have changed since those days, and now it is not a model. But, for two or three years back, we have been testing the best way of keeping hogs. Among other things used is the large pen below, to which the hon. gentleman referred, and which has proved a good practical pen for the running of brood sows in the winter time. It is not a very gorgeous affair, but it is very practical. When the time does come for us to put up a permanent building in that new style, we shall embody in it the elementary principles of this one, but with better construction. That also was intended for a test. Of course. we did not want to spend much money in a test that might not work out satisfactorily. The hon. member may have noticed a small pig-pen near there, a little building which was put up a year and a half ago on what we thought an improved model. We wanted to see whether it would work out before we put up the large pen. It was largely a question of ventilation, and of keeping the walls dry. That is one of the most difficult problems in hog pens—to keep the walls dry, to give ventilation and yet not make the pen too cold. That building has been a success, and we hope to put up a large building for all our hogs on the same lines of construction. But, I do not think it would have been wise to go ahead on a large scale before trying this experiment. I accept the hon. member's criticisms in the spirit in which they were intended. I think we should have all the better hog pen because of the tests we have made and because of what we have learned from those tests.

Mr. STAPLES. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) took up three hours of the time of the House on Friday, explaining the wonderful progress made in regard to the experimental farms of this Dominion. No doubt some progress has been made, but it has taken the minister, who claims to know more about agriculture than almost any man in the Dominion, a long time to learn. Instead of being a source of information to the provinces, which have not the large revenue for these purposes that the Dominion has, he has been content, so far as I can see, to lag along behind. The minister speaks of the hog pen. It has been constructed only within a recent date. When I first came to this House, one of the first places I visited was the experimental farm. I must say I found the condition of the buildings very inferior. And I, with other members, did not fail to call the attention of the minister to the condition of affairs. That was about seven years ago. The minister has at last wakened up to some of the suggestions then made. The minister boasts of his great progress, but, apparently, he is afraid to take the lead to any great extent. He admits that agriculture is the greatest industry of the country, but he is always slow in moving unless he is prodded from this side. He speaks of his splendid officials. I believe he has good officials; any that I know are certainly good men. If he would listen to the suggestions of his officials, in my opinion, greater progress would be made in these experimental farms. The hon. minister has been acquiring new experimental farms, of which he told us the other night. He has acquired two in the west, and now intends to acquire another in Saskatchewan. But when he decided to establish an experimental farm in Alberta. I understand, he acquired merely a quarter section of land. I had the pleasure of being at that experimental farm at Lacombe, and found, much to my surprise, that the minister had secured only 160 acres, though he might then have secured more at a reasonable price. When he comes to extend the boundaries of that farm, he will find that he will have to pay a pretty high price, for the people know the position in which they have got him. It was not necessary that he should get into that position. In superintending the affairs of agriculture for this country, the minister is not as active as he should be, and does not appear to have the originality which should characterize one in his position. A great many of the experiments he has undertaken have turned out not greatly to his credit—I do not wish to go into the details of his experiments with chickens and other things. In considering what is necessary for the instructions of the agriculturists of Canada, he should study these matters more seriously. Instead of taking trips abroad, he might visit the experimental farms. We can go away for three or four months, it may be, but I believe he has not been able to visit these western farms more than once since they were established. His first duty is to his department, and he should pay more attention to it. He should work out bigger schemes for the education of the farmers than have been characteristic of his administration.

Mr. FISHER. I am sorry I do not go fast enough to suit the hon. member (Mr. Staples). I think I am going as fast as the means placed at my disposal and the decisions arrived at by experts permit. He cast reflections on my taking trips and not visiting the experimental farms. I can only say that, so far as I can remember, I have not taken a journey of any kind whatever for fourteen years—since I became minister—except on official business.

Mr. HUGHES. Not even a wedding trip.

Mr. FISHER. Not yet—been too busy. I have been hoping for a holiday when I might go for a trip, but I have been debarred from it hitherto. But I did visit every one of the experimental farms in the Dominion except the one at Nappan, and I hope to do so soon again. I can assure him I am doing the best I can and I am sorry if I cannot satisfy him.

Mr. SEXSMITH. The minister says he was experimenting with dried muck. I did not see any dry muck.

Mr. FISHER. No; you saw it after it got wet.

Mr. SEXSMITH. The farmers of East and West Peterborough have been in the habit of visiting the experimental farm at Guelph for some years. Some eight or ten years ago they came to Ottawa. I had not the pleasure of being here with them then, but they did not return here until last year. On arriving here they were conducted around the farm and saw everything that was to be seen, but a great many were greatly disappointed. They had been visiting the experimental farm at Guelph, which has not the Dominion treasury behind it, but a very much more meagre resource, and coming to Ottawa to visit the Dominion Experimental Farm they expected to see something on a much greater scale, but they said: This does not compare with the farm at Guelph. I was sorry the conditions were such that this great number of farmers should find the Dominion Experimental Farm not anything up to their expectation. A number of these little things I speak of were eyesores then, and they are still there. It would cost nothing to have them removed.

Mr. FISHER. What kind of things.

Mr. SEXSMITH. The rubbish pile around the buildings, old boards.

Mr. FISHER. When building operations are going on there must necessarily be some piles of lumber and debris. The office buildings have been under construction now for over a year, and during that time lumber, scantlings, etc., are of course piled around the building. The shed the hon. gentleman spoke of is not finished, and no doubt there was some lumber piled around there. There is a regular rubbish heap behind the implement shed, and the tobacco curing station, where it is well out of sight and where we do, for practical purposes, put any odd pieces of lumber, scantling beams, etc., until they become useful for our operations. We might destroy them and get new stuff, but that would be very short-sighted and extravagant.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I am aware there is some rubbish where new buildings are being erected, but what I call rubbish was a rubbish heap. There may have been some valuable stuff, but there was some that would never have any value. However, those are only trifling matters. How many foremen are there over the live stock department?

Mr. FISHER. There is one farm foreman for the farm, and a herdsman who has charge of the animals in the barn. The man who feeds the horses and is responsible for their care might be called foreman of the horse stable, but he does other work as well.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Has the herdsman complete control over the cattle?

Mr. FISHER. Not complete control; he has control under Mr. Grisdale, the agriculturist.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Is Mr. Grisdale a competent stock man?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, thoroughly.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I suppose the herdsman would not be in a position to discard a cull animal without authority?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Do you think that is the better plan, to have a herdsman and one or two over him?

Mr. FISHER. He is only under Mr. Grisdale, the agriculturist, who is a scientific stockman.

Mr. SEXSMITH. How long is it since you had the first herd of Ayrshires?

Mr. FISHER. I could not say. I think there have been some there ever since the farm was established, but there was a slight reorganization of the stock work about nine years ago, when the Ayrshire herd as a dairy herd was established.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I am not an expert in any of these breeds, but when I see a cow milked and the milk weighed, I know how much it weighs and I have a fair idea of what an ordinary cow should milk. I happened to be there when they were milking. I only saw one or two weighed, and by looking over the herd they were in fine condition and all that, but as near as I could learn there was not what we would call a first-class dairy cow in the Ayrshire herd. A three-year-old heifer milked eleven pounds.

Mr. FISHER. I am surprised that my hon. friend says that, because good experts in the Ayrshire breed would say there are some first-class Ayrshire cows. I have asked the average of the full-grown cows and it is about 8,000 pounds of good milk in the season. From the report we see that some go as high as 400 pounds of butter a year, which is a good yield. I wish I could have a herd that would average that.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I think that is a small yield when compared with many others.

Mr. FISHER. Does my hon. friend say that 400 pounds of butter a year is a poor yield?

Mr. SEXSMITH. Very moderate.

Mr. FISHER. I do not agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I would not wish to say there are not some very fine looking Ayrshires.

Mr. FISHER. It is not a question of looks, but of performance.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I happened to see the one heifer weighed, a fine looking animal, but the milk only weighed eleven pounds.

Mr. FISHER. How long had she been milking?

Mr. SEXSMITH. Only a short time.

Mr. FISHER. Was it her first calf?

Mr. SEXSMITH. Her first calf. 21,000 pounds is getting to be a regular yield for dairy cows.

Mr. FISHER. There is not an Ayrshire cow in Canada giving 21,000 pounds.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I am not speaking of Ayrshires, but of dairy cows. The minister the other day spoke of the conditions in Denmark, and the great change that had taken place there. If I remember the statistics, the average production of each cow was formerly about 2,200 pounds. In about seven years they had, with the assistance of the government, raised the average production up to 7,000 pounds all over Denmark. I do not suppose it is relevant to the question to ask the minister how that was brought about.

Mr. FISHER. Well, I can tell my hon. friend. It has been done by systematic instruction, education and co-operation through the cow-testing associations, a work which we have been striving to introduce into Canada now for four or five years back, and which we have made some progress in instituting in Canada. At the present time the prospects for the increase of that kind of work are very good.

Mr. SEXSMITH. The government has made experiments with regard to the dairy cow, but is the minister not well aware that the government there undertook to raise the standard of the dairy cow?

Mr. FISHER. How?

Mr. SEXSMITH. By importing and sending out among the farmers a great many sires of the Holstein type. They came to the conclusion that a certain cow was the best, and then they did everything to introduce that cow in the country. A great many sires were purchased by the government and put around through Denmark.

Mr. FISHER. We have been making tests for years as to the production of cows of different breeds, but we have left it largely to private enterprise to provide the best quality of sires for distribution throughout the country. I think my hon. friend would find that there would be a very strong protest if the government were to enter into that business. I do not think that is the best way to accomplish the object, and in Canada to-day there is an abundance of good dairy sires. However, we have been trying to educate and stimulate the farmers, so that they would purchase these sires and use them, and for this purpose we have been seeing on the experimental farms what the average production of each breed has been. We have at the farm four herds of different dairy breeds. I have been asked to add a herd of Holsteins, and I hope to be able to do that. But, at the present time, there are Ayrshires, Canadian cattle, Guernseys and Shorthorns, and we have tested them as to the quality of milk and butter, the amount of food consumed, and the cost of production All that information is given out for the benefit of the people. I have never thought it the duty of the farm, nor of myself, to undertake to discriminate between breeds, and I do not think that the people want us to. One breed may serve one man's purpose better than another, and we leave it to the judgment of each individual farmer to decide as to what breed he shall use.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The minister received quite a scolding the other day, and I think he must admit that he brought it on himself very largely

Mr. FISHER. I do not admit it.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. There is a good deal of money spent on these experimental farms, but I do not say there is too much. I believe there should be more. I am a little doubtful that the farmers receive the results that they should from the amount of money expended. We must make experiments, but it is very little use to make these experiments, and to spend money on them unless the knowledge that is gained reaches the people. These experimental farms have been in operation for some time, but I am afraid that the results are not reaching the people for whom they are intended. Personally, I believe that the best selection of land has not always been made in locating these experimental farms. The minister may say that he did not establish all these farms, that a number of them were established under the Tory regime. I am quite willing to admit that the Tories did not always do everything right.

Mr. FISHER. It does not matter; this is not a party question.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. No, it is not a party question. The experimental farm at Brandon is in a very unsuitable place. It is the only experimental farm in Manitoba, and for a great many years it was the principal experimental farm in the west. I believe that experimental farms should be established in the western country on land as much like the rest of the land in the country as it is possible to get.

Mr. FISHER. Hear, hear.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I am prepared to say that in the province of Manitoba there is not ten per cent of land similar to that on which the experimental farm at Brandon has been placed. It is down on the banks of the river, well protected, and on heavy soil when, if they had gone back a mile on the hill, they would have found land for experimental purposes similar to 80 or 90 per cent of the land to be found in the country. I went through the reports of the different experimental farms the other day, and I found two or three of the main experiments that should be made not touched at all. I found out that different kinds of experiments are being carried on with respect to grades of wheat and different kinds of grain and seeds, but nowhere did I find experiments as to shallow or deep ploughing, the best time to plough, and especially as to the operation of packing the soil. I did not find packing the soil mentioned in the whole of the experimental farm reports. The farmers are visiting each other's farms and conversing at their meetings trying to find out whether it is profitable to undertake this form of cultivation. The machine they use for packing is very expensive and this is information which should be placed in their possession. Yet, we have had no experiments as to the proper time to pack the ground, whether it should be packed in the fall after ploughing, whether it should be packed in spring after ploughing, or whether it is best to pack at all, or whether they should only make use of the harrow. I believe that the minister has in his mind now, something that I think will be of very great advantage. That is the establishment of small experimental stations.

Mr. FISHER. I stated it the other day.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I was not here, although I believe the minister did state it. That is something the farmers are going to get very great advantage from. Southern Manitoba is one of the very important farming districts of the west, and there could be no better place to establish one of these stations than in the constituency of Souris. There should be some means taken, whether it should be done by the local government, by the railways, or how, I do not know, to get the farmers to visit these experimental farms. I do not think that enough has been done to disseminate the knowledge gained there. It seems a most difficult thing to get farmers to read the reports that are sent out. I am sure the minister will recognize that fact. It is the same in everything else. What you see gives a far greater and more lasting impression than anything you read, and we should establish these experimental stations, not too large, or too expensive, as thickly as possible, and we should try to adopt some further means of getting the knowledge gained at these farms disseminated amongst the people. I am a great believer in experimental farms, but I think that up to the present time the experiments have hardly been as practical as they might be.

Mr. FISHER. I take the friendly advice of my hon. friend (Mr. Schaffner) in the spirit in which it is given. I may say that I have already announced in the House that I have embarked on the establishment of smaller experimental stations just as he recommended. At Lacombe, a quarter of a section has been bought, and it is not my intention to add to that.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. A quarter of a section is not quite large enough. I do not think any farmer in the west would consider 160 acres of land sufficient to make these experiments.

Mr. FISHER. The comparisons can be made in fields of three or four or five acres just the same as if they were made in fields of twenty acres each, and the farmer who comes to visit these stations can more easily study the results in the small fields than if he had to walk over the prairie. He can compare the experiments much easier and with much greater convenience if the fields are small. The hon. member from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) said that the price of the land purchased was high, but I find wherever in the west I have to get land suitable for experimental stations that the price is very high. These experimental stations have to be near a railway station so as to be easily accessible to visitors, and the land has to be suitable. Their value would be greatly curtailed if they were situated in some out of the way corner, and to get land with all the necessary requirements I have to pay a high price for it. I think the money would be better spent in buying a small area in a suitable and accessible place than in buying a larger quantity of land in an out of the way place where the land might be obtained at a less price.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What does the minister call a high price for land there?

Mr. FISHER. $50 an acre.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Oh my, no.

Mr. FISHER. I think $50 an acre is a good price for land, but I must admit that I have had $200 an acre asked me. At $50 an acre a quarter-section costs $8,000 and if I have to establish experimental stations all over the country it would come to quite a nice sum of money. My hon. friend will remember that sometimes we are criticised for extravagance. I am trying to do things effectively and still not spend too much money.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. You expect to pay the market price?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. $50 an acre is about as good as you can do in Manitoba for good land?

Mr. FISHER. Apparently, and sometimes I cannot get land for that situated near a railway station. Now, I think my hon. friend is mistaken in saying that he cannot find in the experimental farm reports the results of experiments in deep and shallow ploughing. We have been carrying on experiments of that kind for years, and if he carefully examine the reports he will find frequent references to it. Then, as to the experiments in packing the soil I may say that we have had a packer at work on the Brandon farm for three years.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I can find nothing in the report as to what is the best time for packing.

Mr. FISHER. In the report on the Lacombe farm there is a reference to that very thing. I may say that we do not like to present a report on the very first trial of a thing; we prefer to try it out sufficiently to be able to give a reasoned report on it. Frequently work has been done on the experimental farms for a series of years before any definite report is made as to results. One of the most important things in connection with the experimental farm system is that we should not lead the farmers astray, and it is a wise precaution to be sure rather than to give ill-judged and hasty reports which afterwards may have to be modified. I am very proud of the fact that Dr. Saunders has always been very careful indeed to see that the recommendations he makes are founded on experience sufficiently long to justify them.

Mr. STAPLES. I take issue with the minister when he says that 160 acres is sufficient for an experimental farm. Then again, as to the cost of the land, if the minister would not spread the fact all over the country that he is to establish an experimental farm at a certain place, before the purchase is made, he would be more likely to get the land at a cheaper price. It was advertised all over the country that the experimental farm was to be established at Lacombe, and when he proceeded to purchase the land naturally everybody in the district wanted a high price. However, the farm need not have been established at Lacombe as there are other points with equal facilities for an experimental farm. Now, I am not criticising the price paid——

Mr. FISHER. Since we bought that farm the land adjoining has been sold at a considerably higher price, and if the farm were to be sold to-day I have no doubt we could get almost double what we paid for it.

Mr. STAPLES. There is probably no question about that. I persist however, in my view that 160 acres is not sufficient land on which to carry on an experimental farm. You have to put buildings on the 160 acres which will cost just about as much as buildings which would be suitable for an entire section, and to that extent the money is wasted. The minister shakes his head, but I want to tell him that the best way to utilize these experimental farms to advantage is to supply the farmers with the best quality of seed, and, in order to do that he would need a considerably larger area of land. If instead of 160 acres he had a section or two sections, he would find the buildings he has there quite ample. One of the best purposes served by the experimental farms established throughout the west is the production and distribution of the best quality of seed. The great difficulty in that western country is that the farms are becoming polluted with weeds, and if the experimental farms were devoted to the production of clean seed, it would in my opinion be of more benefit to that country than anything else that it could do. You cannot produce much seed on 150 acres, therefore I claim that that is not sufficient land for an experimental farm.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is not often that I differ with my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner), but I certainly differ with him when he says that his constituency affords a most ideal site in Manitoba for an experimental farm. That is by no means the case, but Dauphin affords the ideal location. It comprises one-third of the whole province of Manitoba, and is situated more advantageously than any other constituency in the province. It is a delta between the lakes in the north, the Riding mountains in the south, and the Porcupine and Duck mountains in the west, and its possibilities are very much greater than those of any other part of Manitoba. A few moments ago the hon. minister said that he was doing the best he could with the money at his disposal. That is the great complaint of the representatives of the agricultural communities, that he has so litttle money at his disposal. The farmers are the greatest wealth producers of this country. Last year they produced over $500,000,000 by the sweat of their brows and the labour of their hands, for the benefit of Canada, and the minister has a paltry sum of less than one million dollars with which to experiment with for their benefit, and he sits quietly by and allows the Minister of War to snatch from the treasury of this country, for his gold-bedizoned officials, about $7,000,000 a year. Of what use are the militia of this country to the farmers? They would starve if it were not for what the farmers produce, and the Minister of Agriculture forgets his duties to the people when he allows what I would almost call a steal from him by another minister. I take it that the Minister of Agriculture is conducting experiments in all the various branches of agriculture. I have looked somewhat carefully into some of the experiments under his charge. He is making one experiment which, if it is a success will be of the greatest benefit, not only to Canada, but to the world. I see that at the experimental farm he has 18 horses of which 13 are geldings. If he ever gets these geldings to breed, he will confer the greatest benefit not only on Canada, but on the world. The minister said, in answer to my hon. friend from Souris, that $50 an acre was a great deal too much to pay for land for experimental stations. That would amount, roughly speaking, to $8,000 per quarter section. I want to point out to him that if he had the $112,000 that was spent for the purpose of building eight cottages for some pot boys and understrappers for the officers at Kingston, and diverted it to the use of his department, he would have been able to establish 14 experimental stations even at that price. While we on this side of the House, perhaps, do not take exception to the little that the Minister of Agriculture does, we do take exception to the great deal that he does not do for the farmers of this country.

Mr. BARKER. The minister mentioned the other day that a site had been selected for a new experimental farm in northern Saskatchewan. Will he tell us exactly where that site is, and any other particulars of interest to the public?

Mr. FISHER. I had reference to a site near a station called Scott, on the Grand Trunk Pacific line between Saskatoon and Edmonton.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Any relation to Walter Scott?

Mr. FISHER. Not that I know of. Scott station is about 120 miles west of Saskatoon. There is a small cluster of houses around the station, but a great many settlers have gone into the district. I was able to secure 220 or 222 acres there at what appeared to be a low rate, $13 an acre. I have a report that the land is of very good average quality all over. There is not an obstruction or a tree upon it. It is bounded on the north by the railway fence, and the eastern boundary of it is within a quarter of a mile from the station.

Mr. BARKER. Can you tell the section number?

Mr. FISHER. I could not offhand.

Mr. STAPLES. How many acres are there in the experimental farms at Indian Head and Brandon?

Mr. FISHER. There are nearly 700 acres at Indian Head, and about the same at Brandon, somewhere between 600 and 700 acres.

Mr. STAPLES. I claim that the minister has again made a great mistake, and that he has not sufficient land there to establish the kind of farm that I, as a farmer, think should be established. He will have to equip that land with the necessary buildings to carry on a certain line of farming, and he might just as well have got two sections of land for the purpose that is most beneficial to the farmers of the west, the production and distribution of the best quality of seed.

Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. HUGHES. Might I ask the minister as to the matter of an experimental farm down in what is known as the dry belt. There are a great many settlers going into what is known as the dry belt, and I understand that representations have been made to the government for some experimental station there. Some years ago, I think the minister said that if he were granted a certain piece of land, he would pay for it a reasonable price, in order to test what he called a system of dry farming, the same as they have it in the United States. Has the minister taken any steps to establish a farm such as that?

Mr. FISHER. We established a farm at Lethbridge for that purpose.

Mr. HUGHES. Oh, that is different. That is in the fall wheat district.

Mr. FISHER. It may be, but that district is dry. The hon. member knows that the southern part of Alberta is dry. We have at Lethbridge an establishment of about 400 acres, which the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company were good enough to present the government with.

Mr. HUGHES. Why not have one at Zealandia?

Mr. FISHER. Where?

Mr. HUGHES. I am surprised that the minister does not know where Zealandia is. He knows where the Scott township is. Zealandia is a place southwest of Saskatoon between Saskatoon and Calgary, in the triangle between Saskatoon, Calgary and Moosejaw.

Mr. FISHER. No, we have not any farm there. We have had representations that a farm should be placed south of that, and I have also had representations from other places in the neighbourhood.

Mr. HERRON. Has the minister made any provision for establishing an experimental station in the Macleod district? I am sure there is a splendid opportunity there to help the farmers of that locality, between Macleod and Calgary.

Mr. FISHER. Lethbridge is only 40 miles from Macleod.

Mr. HERRON. Well, it is in a semi-arid belt, you might say. It is not truly an experimental farm in a dry belt; at least I would not consider it so.

Mr. FISHER. Why not?

Mr. HERRON. Because the water distributed through the locality has a tendency to moisten the whole country.

Mr. FISHER. No, no.

Mr. HERRON. Well, I think that is the experience of the men who are in the business. It extends for a considerable distance from the irrigation ditches, so I would not claim that Lethbridge is really a dry station. There should be one between Calgary and Macleod, or even at Pincher creek, if you can go so far.

Mr. BRADBURY. Speaking of experimental farms, I should just like to say that we have a large district lying along Lake Winnipeg. About 2,000 settlers, including Ruthenians, Polanders and Germans have been placed there by the present government, and they find it impossible to make a living on these lands. It has been suggested that the government should establish an experimental farm in that district to instruct those people how to utilize their lands, and I think an experimental station could be established without any great expense. My own opinion is that these people should never have been settled there at all. I do not believe the land is fit for settlement, as it is poor and covered by water half the time. The local government of Manitoba is doing their best to drain it, but even when it is drained, I do not believe it will be of much use. This government had a grand opportunity when they had the lands of the St. Peter's reserve that I was speakng of a few nights ago. There you had 48,000 acres of the best land in the province, a part of which the hon. Minister of Agriculture could have taken for the purposes of an experimental farm. Then the government could have removed the settlers I refer to, and brought them into the neighbourhood of Selkirk and placed them on good lands. It would not have been necessary to have given the lands away, for these men would be prepared to pay reasonable prices, probably three times as much as they were sold for. They are just as fine a class of settlers as are to be found in Manitoba, but the men are forced to leave their places and their families in the summer time go into the cities to seek employment. Something should be done by the government to give these people good homesteads, or they should be placed in a position which would make them independent of the government or of anybody else. Two years ago it was necessary for the government to send out some assistance in the shape of flour, bacon and so on to these people, but they do not want charity; they are too proud for that sort of thing. I would urge upon the government and upon the Minister of Agriculture the advisability of seeing whether they could do something to help these people to get good lands.

Mr. GOODEVE. Last session when this same question was up, the attention of the minister was called to the needs of an experimental station in the southern part of British Columbia, particularly in the district of Kootenay. We have there a semi-arid or dry belt where irrigation would be of great advantage. As a matter of fact, the Canadian Pacific railway and some private corporations have put in irrigation works along the line towards Fort Steele. Last session the minister said he had the matter under consideration, and I merely want to ask him whether anything has been provided in the estimates for any experimental station in that portion of British Columbia?

Mr. FISHER. I am very glad to find that experimental farm stations are so popular.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FISHER. Everybody wants one in his own immediate neighbourhood. It is the best possible tribute to the efficiency of that kind of work. I may say to my hon. friend from British Columbia (Mr. Goodeve) that I had an officer of my department examining different places in the Kootenay and Okanagan countries last summer, and am trying to arrange for the establishment of, I hope, more than one station in what is called the semi-dry belt of British Columbia. I do not desire to say more on the subject at present.

Mr. STAPLES. The minister asks about $98,000 in this vote. Can he state to the House how many experimental stations he purposes establishing?

Mr. FISHER. I could not say positively. I hope that every now and then I shall be able to decide upon a location, and as soon as I do I will take the necessary steps to establish a station. I have every hope that I shall be able to establish several within the coming fiscal year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is very nice for all of us to hear an answer from the minister to my hon. friend from Kootenay, but I have not heard any answer to my suggestion with regard to Dauphin.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) and his hon. friend the member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) were so at variance that I hesitated to decide. I would like to have an opportunity to consider what was said by both of these hon. gentlemen.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the minister intend to make any improvements in the poultry department of the experimental farm at Ottawa?

Mr. FISHER. The poultry establishment here has been doing good experimental work along various lines. I do not consider, for my part, that the old poultry house is of the kind that is the best for the keeping of poultry in this part of Canada; I think the experiments have shown pretty clearly that it is not. I am not yet ready to make a start in building a new poultry establishment there. Some additional buildings have been put up, of a much cheaper character, but fully as successful as the more expensive buildings. Everything in the poultry experiments seems to prove that there is no need for expensive buildings. We are trying experiments also as to the performance of individual hens; which seems ridiculous, perhaps, but it is believed that by selecting the individual bird and their eggs and breeding from these, you may establish an improved breed—not a changed breed, but an improved breed. We wish to carry out these experiments and amplify them as much as possible.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the minister consider that the results attained at these experimental farms warrant the amount of money spent on the farm each year?

Mr. FISHER. I am in the judgment of those who are fit to judge in these matters, of course. The poultry industry is a very great one, and I would not like to curtail the work done. But I may say that what is done at the Central Experimental Farm is only a portion of the work of the officers in the poultry department. Both Mr. Gilbert and Mr. Fortier have spent most of their time in attending poultry meetings and farm institutes and giving instructions with regard to poultry. It is very valuable work, and there is great demand for the presence of these gentlemen in all parts of the country.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. RUSSELL. It has occurred to me that there would be a certain amount of overlapping in the work of the different experimental farms throughout the country. We have the farm at Guelph controlled by the government of Ontario, and the experimental farm at Macdonald College in Quebec. I would think that these farms would be able to cover the ground in such a way as to serve all the purposes of the farmers, for whose benefit experimental farms are conducted. They would assist them in raising the best farm products of all kinds. I cannot see that the experimental station in Ottawa is the success it should be. I am chiefly interested in the poultry department. I am a farmer and I think that to be of real service to the farmers of the country better work should be done in that department than is done. I do not think it is encouraging to say to a farmer that the yearly average of a pen of fowl would be from 80 to 100 eggs. That would hardly pay the board of a chicken for a year, and I think the experimental farm is capable of turning out better results than are apparent. As the buildings have been there for 25 years and are out of date, it might be wise to do away with the department here and allow the provincial institutions to carry on this work. The professors from the other colleges lecture throughout the country and Professor Gilbert of the Central Experimental Farm also lectures. They often meet at gatherings of poultry men and I think that either could give the necessary information at these meetings. If you abolished the poultry department here there would be a saving of $6,000 or $7,000 a year which would be an item worth considering. My idea would be that the Dominion Experimental Farm here should be the principal farm, while the provincial farms should be what you would call substations. There is some work that could be done at the institution here that is not being done by any of these institutions. The poultry industry is very important, and if properly developed would take a foremost place in our agriculture. For the year 1908 the value of the poultry and eggs produced in the United States amounted to something over $625,000,000. Taking the population of the United States and of Canada as a basis, our poultry industry here should amount to somewhere in the neighbourhood of $60,000,000 to $70,000,000 a year. I believe it has been estimated at $25,000,000, but I do not think we have any statistics in Canada to prove that. There is no doubt that the demand is much greater than the supply to-day, and our people look to the farmers to meet that demand. The farmers are not paying sufficient attention to the poultry industry, and I believe if the proper means were used to show them what there really is in the business they would take it up to a greater extent than they have done. We should have at the Ottawa station a scientific man who would study the diseases of poultry, making a thorough investigation into all the different diseases. Little is known of these diseases either in this country or in the United States. In the last few years men have been engaged in that work in the United States and they have found out a good deal, but still they seem to be to a certain extent groping in the dark. If the minister abandoned some of the work that is now being done in the poultry department and devoted the money thus saved to the employment of an expert of diseases of poultry, he would be doing more for the industry than is now being done.

Mr. WM. CHISHOLM. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman that the work of the Experimental Farm could be improved in the way he suggests. His idea is that the branch experimental farms might be dispensed with. I would suggest that what is required is more distribution, decentralization rather than the establishment of central stations. The Experimental Farm here is doing an excellent work, but the farmers throughout the country generally are not in a position to reap the advantages that are accruing because of the fact that the information which is obtained at that farm cannot be sufficiently demonstrated. Whilst the farms are doing good work and the institute lecturers do a great deal in the way of education, the people do not receive the same practical results from the operations of experimental farms as they should. Branch farms should be established all over the country. To explain my position I might quote from the speech of the hon. Minister of Agriculture on Friday. He said:

To instruct and teach the people, object lessons are of the primest importance. If those who live in a particular district can go to an easily accessible central point and there see illustrated the result of good management of the crops and of scientific treatment of the soil, they can learn more than they can by any amount of reading and oral instruction.

The idea I wish to convey is that whilst the Experimental Farm is doing very good work, yet there are other branches of farming besides the cultivation of the soil, and the raising of dairy cows and beef. It is not being done, I contend, in the best way. My contention is that the best method would be to have local farms throughout the country. The minister on Friday last referred to the disease known as the Pictou cattle disease. He explained that an experimental station had been established at Antigonish to ascertain the cause of that disease, and he said it had been demonstrated by these experiments that the cause of the disease was a weed called ragwort. The work that was done there was certainly of importance, and I take this opportunity of congratulating the Minister of Agriculture on having in his department men who are capable of conducting such experiments as those at Antigonish in the satisfactory manner in which they were conducted. I refer particularly to the veterinary director, Dr. Rutherford, who had charge of these experiments. He displayed that intelligence and executive ability which would be expected from him by all who know him and his position and standing in his profession. It is not detracting from him if I say that too much credit cannot be also given to Dr. W. H. Pethick, who was immediately in charge and those associated with him. What they accomplished in demonstrating the cause of that disease, which had baffled the best skill of the continent for many years, is a great tribute to the men in charge of that work. What they have accomplished is the best tribute that could be paid to the work that was done there. It was shown that the Pictou cattle disease was caused by a weed known as the ragwort.

Mr. FISHER. We will come to another vote in connection with that, and perhaps it would be better for my hon. friend to defer his remarks until then.

Mr. W. CHISHOLM. I was just leading up to the question of experimental farms. I am going to ask that an experimental farm be established in my part of the country, and I am trying to lead up to the reason why I shall make that request. The Minister of Agriculture stated the other day that sheep would destroy that weed known as the ragwort, and he intimated that he had been encouraging the farmers by assisting them in the way of improving their breeds of sheep, pointing out that in that way a profitable industry might be established, and in addition to that this pest of the ragwort could be gotten rid of. There is no question that sheep will destroy the ragwort, and the farmers of the weed infected district should feel a sense of gratitude towards the minister and Department of Agriculture for what they have done in that respect. I am quite sure that I am speaking for them in stating that they appreciate all the good work that has been done. They appreciate the fact that the minister has sent, as he stated in his speech, and as is stated in the report of the Department of Agriculture, a number of pure bred rams into that infected district which, after being pastured in the summer, were sold to the farmers. It is all very well to say that the sheep industry is a profitable industry, but the thing is to demonstrate to the farmer that it is a profitable industry. What I am going to put forward is the fact that one of the things that we require in Nova Scotia is a sheep farm. The government have done a great deal for agriculture generally. Beef and dairy cattle have been improved gradually. There has been a great deal of information disseminated with regard to other stock, but in so far as the poor little lamb is concerned he is obliged to bleat just as of yore. The contrast that exists between the condition of the farmers to-day, and that of twenty-five years ago is striking. You will find better cattle, the cattle better looked after, and a greater degree of prosperity. That is due, to a large extent, to lectures at the farmers' institutes, it is due also, to a considerable extent, to the work of the agricultural societies, but more than all it is due to the fact that when one farmer starts out on a certain line his neighbours are bound to copy him. The farmer goes to the experimental station, he sees how things are done, how the stock is looked after, how it is housed and fed, and he, unconsciously, if you like, copies to a certain extent and good results follow. The Department of Agriculture has done a great deal in a way to inform the people, through literature and speakers, as to how to raise sheep, but there has been no practical demonstration given. They are no farther advanced than they were twenty-five years ago as far as sheep are concerned. Nova Scotia and the maritime provinces offer one of the best fields in Canada and perhaps in the world for the raising of sheep. I venture to say that the highlands of Scotland cannot surpass the maritime provinces. Nova Scotia is in a position to rise sheep with profit, and to make sheep husbandry an industry that will be of immense advantage to the country as a whole. The climatic conditions are favourable. As the minister pointed out in his address, and as was pointed out by Mr. Spencer, who has written an article on sheep husbandry, to which the minister referred, there are a million acres of suitable pasture land there. It has a well adapted climate, and with its short nutritious native grass interspersed with white clover, Nova Scotia is particularly adapted to sheep raising. There is a large proportion of this area of one million acres which is not suitable for the feeding of dairy or beef cattle. The bleak, exposed hills can be utilized for sheep raising. This is a type of land not suitable for ordinary cattle, but the conditions in so far as climate and soil are concerned are particularly favourable to the sheep industry. A great deal has been done for fruit culture. I think there have been about thirty-two model orchards established for the purpose of showing farmers who go in for fruit the best manner of prosecuting that industry, and how the best fruit can be produced. We have an experimental farm at Nappan which is more devoted to beef and dairy cattle, and we have also an experimental farm at Truro, but there has been no practical demonstration of what can be done with sheep. The report of Mr. Spencer, and the report of the Minister of Agriculture, both bear me out in saying that sheep raising should be a most profitable industry in Nova Scotia. What do we find? We find that instead of that industry being in a prosperous state it is retrograding. We find that there are fewer sheep to-day in Nova Scotia than there were twenty-five, thirty or forty years ago. I have the figures of the number of sheep in Nova Scotia for a number of years, taken from the year-book, and they are as follows:

Year.	Number of sheep.
1871	398,377
1881	388,801
1891	331,492
1901	285,244

You will observe a gradual decrease in the number of sheep where there should have been a large increase, because of the fact that Nova Scotia is particularly adapted to sheep raising, and because in the last few years the prices of lamb, mutton and wool have been favourable. As a matter of fact, there are only 5·86 sheep per farm in Nova Scotia at the present time. It may be said that Nova Scotia is not an agricultural province. Let me deny that fact. Let me say too that in Nova Scotia the value of farm products, in the last year, increased over the previous year by upwards of $3,000,000, which shows that farming is not retrograding. I had occasion, Mr. Chairman, to interview the Minister of Agriculture with respect to the establishment of a sheep farm in Nova Scotia, and I suggested that it should be established in the county of Antigonish or within the region of the ragwort infected district. It would only be natural to ask that, because of the fact, in the first place, that experiments were conducted there to show the cause of the Pictou cattle disease for which the government have paid a lot of money in the years gone by, and because of the fact that it was demonstrated that sheep would destroy the ragwort. It is only natural to suppose that in that locality sheep farms might be established. I have no doubt that it would be a profitable business from that start, and that it would be of incalculable benefit to the people of Nova Scotia. In his address on Friday last, the Minister of Agriculture referred to what had been done with respect to the experiments in the county of Antigonish, and he was about to conclude a sentence with, as I had hoped, an assurance that this experimental farm would be established in our province. He went on to speak about what had been done with respect to the ragwort. He said:

> We immediately set to work to try experiments with sheep on a farm in the neighbourhood of Antigonish, and we showed clearly in the course of three seasons that the pasturing of sheep on a piece of land infested with that weed, would destroy it and absolutely clean the land of it within a few years. The result is that to-day we have been able——

Unfortunately, he was interrupted. I was in hopes that he would have completed the sentence by saying that: We will follow up, and finish the work we have begun, and establish a sheep farm in Antigonish. I had hopes that he would carry out the resolution which was passed by the farmers' convention of Nova Scotia, held on the 23rd February, at New Glasgow, and which was as follows:

We, the committee appointed to consider the promotion of the sheep-raising industry of Nova Scotia, beg to report and recommend as follows:—

With regard to the promotion of the sheep industry, we recommend that, whereas the ragwort and other noxious weeds are alarmingly spreading in the eastern part of Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, and it has been demonstrated, by experiments, made by the Department of Agriculture of the Dominion of Canada, that the ragwort has been the cause of the cattle disease of Pictou county, and that sheep offer the most effective and practical means of eradicating this noxious weed, at the same time thriving thereon, and whereas we believe sheep to be among the most profitable stock on a farm, and regarding, with apprehension, the diminution of the sheep-raising industry in this province, and believing that the eastern part of Nova Scotia, as a whole, to be best adapted to sheep-raising, and being the area, at present, as most infected with ragwort, therefore we, the Farmers' Association, in session at New Glasgow, recommend that the Dominion government, having already done considerable work along the line of investigating the noxious weed question, be memorialized through our federal representatives, requesting that board to establish an experimental sheep station somewhere in eastern Nova Scotia, with a view to stimulating the sheep-raising industry.

The Minister of Agriculture received the representations made by me to him and to the officers of his department on this subject, but pointed out some difficulties in the way of establishing a sheep farm. These difficulties to my mind were the reasons why I expected and hoped the farm would be established. One thing the Minister of Agriculture cannot be accused of cowardice, and I felt that he would grapple with the situation, because of the difficulties that confronted him and that he would be in a position to assure the House when he brought down his estimates, that an experimental system would be established for the purpose of demonstrating to the farmers of Nova Scotia how sheep should be looked after, that that province was specially adapted to sheep raising, and for the purpose of encouraging them to engage in that branch of farming with profit to themselves and to the country at large.

Mr. MACDONALD. I desire to add a word or two in corroboration of the views of my hon. friend from Antigonish. I might be permitted to point out that while we have an experimental farm on the border between the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, it is situated in the vicinity of the marshland country which surrounds the Bay of Fundy in those two provinces, the fertility and productiveness of which, as the minister well knows, are possibly unequalled in the Dominion of Canada. Therefore in the conditions as they exist that farm is not of so much value to other portions of the maritime provinces which are not as favourably situated. In the eastern part of Nova Scotia, beginning with Pictou and extending to Cape North in the island of Cape Breton, there exists a condition somewhat similar to what is found in the old country, where upland farming has been carried on with a great degree of success. When we consider that for over a hundred years these upland farms have been compelled to furnish the products necessary to meet the industrial conditions of that portion of the province, we shall realize at once that their power of reproduction has to a great extent become impaired. The desire of the people to turn their attention in some other direction is but a natural consequence of the conditions that exist, and I think the energy of the minister might be very well directed towards the encouragement of sheep culture in that portion of the province. I am aware that he has looked to some extent into this question, and I trust that it will be speedily dealt with by him. When we realize that on the hills and in the valleys of eastern Nova Scotia, the conditions are such as hardly exist anywhere else in the Dominion, and are especially suited to the sheep industry, we shall at once become impressed with the idea that it is a matter with which the government should deal. The proposition to inaugurate experimental farms for sheep raising in that portion of the province does not involve an expenditure on the part of the government from which there would be no return. On almost all the other experimental farms the government spends a great deal more money than it gets back. The returns from the crops do not at all compensate for the experiments made in the various branches of agriculture. But, I am assured by those who have looked into this question that there is no reason why two or three sheep farms established in the eastern part of Nova Scotia should not yield returns great enough to meet or almost meet the expenditure in establishing them and carrying them on. While I do not begrudge our friends in the West anything that will develop the agricultural possibilities of their great country, while they are asking for experimental farms in the dry belt, the grain belt and every other kind of belt, and while the minister has been generous in meeting these requests, I would ask him to lend an ear to the request which we from the province of Nova Scotia are making, which will result not only in great benefit to the people interested, but in a return to the department that will almost, if not altogether compensate it for the expenditure involved.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Might I suggest that the minister allow this item for experimental farms to stand over? The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has something to say on this question, and he is not here to-night. We shall have to ask that some one of these items stand over, and I think it will facilitate matters to let this item stand and take up the non-contentious ones.

Mr. D. A. LAFORTUNE. (Montcalm). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I cannot forbear the pleasure of making a few remarks on the subject which is now before the House. The hon. gentleman from East Peterborough (Mr. Sexsmith) complained a moment ago of the manner in which the piggery is kept at the experimental farm. I may state to the hon. gentleman that to a certain extent I agree with him on that point; not that I would blame the department or the Minister of Agriculture on that account, but merely to call the latter's attention to the state of things in that connection, and request him, after improving, as he has done, all other departments of the farm, to take up in the near future the improvement of the piggery and deal with it in the same way.

I generally visit the experimental farm at least twice a year, partly through curiosity, and largely on account of the profit to be derived therefrom. The horse stables are very well kept; the horses are very well housed, in quarters which are kept clean and are up-to-date, as they say in English. The cow stable is such as none better could be desired. The cows are kept exceptionally clean, the herd is made up of fine animals, of superb appearance. In short, nothing better than this stable could be desired.

Now, on the day before yesterday, I visited the piggery. I saw there Yorkshires, Berkshires, White Chesters and Tamworths, the latter with a hide red almost beyond imagination. These are very fine animals, of excellent breeds. The only thing to do, in my humble opinion, and in this I agree with the hon. member for East Peterborough, is to improve the buildings, which are not quite such as they should be. As for the stock, nothing better could be desired. However, if I was correctly informed by the men as late as the day before yesterday, it is the intention to rebuild part of the piggery. That is necessary, indeed, and I hope that the minister will include in the estimates the required vote.

The way things are managed at the experimental farm cannot be praised too highly. Those who, like myself, take an interest in agriculture, have observed the great strides which have been made as regards horses, cattle, sheep, poultry, and in a general way the stock kept at the experimental farm. Everything is really fine. It is a pleasure to go around with a view to following as best one can in the footsteps of these people.

Why do we find such prosperity throughout the country, and especially among the farming classes? It is because agricultural lecturers have taught throughout the province how farmers might succeed in increasing their profits and improving everything in connection with their industry. Formerly, we used to send as we now do our apples, our poultry, our eggs, and our cheese across the ocean, but those products reached the English market in bad condition. Owing to the efforts of the Minister of Agriculture, who started refrigeration on a large scale on board ships, those products now reach their destination in as good and fresh a condition as on the day they were shipped. To whom, I ask once more, are we indebted for this: to the minister who has charge of that great department.

Why have we considerably increased the revenue from our farms? It is because we obtained from the experimental farm—thanks to the generosity of the exchequer—specially well selected samples of grain. We sow that grain. From a small initial quantity we gradually obtain larger quantities, and in that way we soon secure crops of first rate quality.

We obtain eggs—I have myself ordered three hatchings of Brahmas—to improve the breeds which we now have. There we find Plymouth Rocks, Wyandots, Spanish, Minorcas, Leghorns and Brahmas. We reap great benefits through the assistance of that farm, and I hope we will be in a position to profit by it more and more from year to year.

Hon. members who preceded me have made certain statements in reference to sheep. In my opinion, a farm without sheep is incomplete. In the case of the province of Quebec—and I pray the minister to bear this in mind—sheep breeding has gone down to a large extent. And why? Because sheep are devoured by dogs. It is to my knowledge that many farmers have given up the sheep business on account of that. Recently I came across a statute of the province of Ontario whereby municipalities are required to constitute a special fund towards compensating farmers to the extent of two-thirds of the loss sustained, whenever the owner of the dog remains unknown. That is most excellent legislation. I have drawn the attention of the Minister of Agriculture of the province of Quebec to that enactment and suggested that he should introduce a similar Act for our province. In a single year my neighbour had fifteen sheep devoured by dogs whose owners could not be found. Once the sheep are strangled it is too late to collar the dogs. If only we know who the owners are, we might sue them for damages, but these people are never in a hurry to admit their responsibility.

Numbers of my fellow citizens in the province of Quebec have ceased altogether keeping sheep on that account. I suggest that the minister should introduce an Act similar to that in force in Ontario. A tax or license might be exacted in the case of dogs, and the revenue obtained therefrom applied to build up a fund which would enable the municipalities to compensate farmers whose sheep have been strangled. It is admitted by all that the breeding of sheep is highly profitable, insures substantial returns, but as I said, that branch of farming should be protected.

We have learned from the Department of Agriculture how to protect ourselves against insects which prey on orchards and crops. We have learned how to plant and prune trees, hope to shape the head and look after the roots. In a great many cases farmers plant trees which die two or three years after. Why? Because they do not know how to plant them, protect them, feed the root system, shelter them against the wind. A good many even dispensed with the use of props. Well, to-day, thanks to the instructions given by the Department of Agriculture, we know how to plant trees and keep them healthy, and we are no longer obliged to replace them every three or four years.

We have learned how to look after manure and home-made fertilizers, we know the difference between a cold, a warm and a medium manure. We know how to take care of them. Many farmers were in the habit of leaving the manure in a heap all winter long next to the stable door. The best part of it was carried away in the streams, lost along fences and among the stones. To-day farmers look more closely after their own interest and know how to get the most out of farm manures. They know besides where to apply them to the best advantage and are greatly benefited thereby. How have we come to learn these things? Through the Department of Agriculture, and through its staff of lecturers. Why is the county which I have the honour to represent so rich and prosperous? It is on account of its having been looked after as it had the right to expect.

We have learned how to prepare tobacco in a special way, and the county of Montcalm is in a position to compete henceforth with the best producers in the counties of Essex and Rouville. Owing to the establishment of a government experimental station, we are now able to prepare hot beds, to put in the seed, plant the seedlings, look after the young plants, and later on cure the tobacco properly. How is it that we have succeeded from that time on in producing a first-class product? It is because we have had on the spot a Mr. Chevalier, who has been sent from the experimental farm, to teach farmers how to grow tobacco, prepare and deliver it on the markets.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture is a practical man, well acquainted with the details of farming. I remember a time when that department was presided over by a medical man, a man of parts, whom I do not wish to run down, and regarding whom I would not utter an unpleasant word; but one day that he happened to enter a farm yard, he thought fit to congratulate the owner on the fine geese that were about them. 'I beg your pardon, sir, replied the farmer, but they are ducks.' That minister did not know the difference between a goose and a pekin duck. The present minister can tell the difference, having spent his life on the farm as a practical farmer.

I shall not speak any longer. I wished to make these few remarks as a matter of fairness to the hon. minister and to my constitutents. I wish to impress them with the fact that their representative takes some interest in agriculture, has learned something of it, and is in a position to discuss such questions without blushing.

Mr. FISHER. I wish to thank my hon. friend from Montcalm (Mr. Lafortune) for the kind references he has made to my administration of the department and for his appreciation of the success of the work of the experimental farms. I had hoped that we would get through the agriculture items this evening so that the officers might return to the farm, but in deference to the wish of my hon. friend (Mr. Geo. Taylor) who wishes the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) to be present when we are considering this item, we will pass on to some other thing in the hope that progress will be made.

For the development of the dairying and fruit industries, and the improvement and transportation of, the sale and trade in, food and other agricultural products, $75,000.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. There is $10,000 increase here?

Mr. FISHER. This work is expanding all the time. In response to the wishes of the people we shall have to appoint several fruit inspectors in British Columbia and the northwest, another one in Ontario, and another in the maritime provinces. The increase of $10,000 is largely due to this.

Towards the encouragement of the establishment of cold storage warehouses for the better preservation and handling of perishable food products, $56,250.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Was the vote of $75,000 expended last year?

Mr. FISHER. Only $25,000 was spent last fiscal year, but we will have to pay other sums in connection with new cold storages.

Mr. EDWARDS. How many applications have you had from Ontario?

Mr. FISHER. We have had an application each from Morrisburg, Peterborough, Trenton, St. Marys, Owen Sound, Hamilton, Palmerston.

Mr. PORTER. Is there any advance given to each cold storage before the plant has been completed?

Mr. FISHER. We have never paid anything before it is completed.

Mr. PORTER. Is there any exception to that general statement?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. HERRON. Has there been any application from Alberta for assistance to cold storage?

Mr. FISHER. We had a tentative application two years ago, but the promoter died and nothing was done. I understand they are now organizing to take up the project again.

Mr. HERRON. I understand they were applying to the government for the 30 per cent assistance given under the Act?

Mr. FISHER. There has been no formal application yet.

Mr. EDWARDS. What are the objections to advancing part of the cost as the work of building the plant proceeds?

Mr. FISHER. It would be contrary to the Act, which says that we shall pay the first instalment of 15 per cent on the completion of the work ready for business. It would be objectionable to pay before the plant was completed, because they might never complete it.

Mr. THORNTON. Have the fruit inspectors superintendence of the cold storages?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. THORNTON. I would like to ask if an inspector is allowed to be connected with a factory?

Mr. FISHER. Do you mean a fruit inspector?

Mr. THORNTON. Yes.

Mr. FISHER. Certainly not.

Mr. THORNTON. Complaints have been made to that effect.

Mr. FISHER. If any such complaint is brought to my attention I will see to it at once. The whole time of the fruit inspectors, when they are employed by the government, is given to the work of the government, and if any fruit inspector is himself engaged in packing, it is distinctly contrary to his contract with us.

Mr. THORNTON. Is he allowed to be a member of the firm?

Mr. FISHER. I would not like him to be even a stockholder in a joint stock concern, but he undoubtedly should not be a member of the firm. I would not like to say off-hand that he should not be a stockholder in a joint stock company, although I think even that would be objectionable.

Mr. THORNTON. He would not be allowed to go out and buy apples?

Mr. FISHER. Certainly not. I might say, however, that some of my inspectors are employed temporarily, not for the whole year, and when they are not employed they are at liberty to do as they like. But during their term of employment with the government they certainly cannot deal in or buy fruit.

Mr. THORNTON. A case has been brought to my attention where an inspector was buying apples during the fall months, while he was acting as inspector.

Mr. FISHER. If I could get such information I would certainly cease to employ that man.

Mr. STAPLES. I would like to inquire whether the minister has given any consideration of the representations made to him from the people of Alberta as to the establishment of a cold storage system throughout the west. Mr. Palmer, I think, led the deputation when it was down here a couple of years ago, and I have had communications from him and I presume other members too, asking us to urge upon the minister to take some action along the lines suggested. It is one of the most important questions that could be considered from an agricultural standpoint. We all know the importance of the cattle trade in western Canada, and if the minister would only take hold of this thing seriously, the cattle trade in that part of the country would increase much more than it has done during the past few years. The hon. member for Victoria, (Mr. White) I think, had a resolution on the order paper this year, dealing with this question. Unfortunately it was left to a late period in the session, and was not brought up. I looked forward to a keen debate on that resolution, but things have been jockeyed in such a manner——

Mr. FISHER. Order, order.

Mr. STAPLES. If the minister rises to a point of order—

Mr. FISHER. I do not think the hon. gentleman has a right to talk about the business of the House being jockeyed.

Mr. STAPLES. That is a term I find very often introduced in this House. There is jockeying done practically every day as to who should get the floor, and as to how matters shall come up in the House. If it is not a parliamentary term I shall certainly withdraw it, if the chairman asks me to do so.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to have the ruling of the chairman.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I can hardly say I am sufficiently acquainted with the term to rule it out of order, but if the hon. gentleman can find another term that would convey his meaning, it would relieve me. I would not be willing to infer that it meant anything disagreeable or wrong, so far as my knowledge goes, but if the hon. gentleman can modify it, it would relieve me.

Mr. STAPLES. At the moment I cannot think of a word that conveys the same idea. At the same time I am willing to submit to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, and if it is not a proper word to use then I shall withdraw it, but I understand the chairman has not said that it is an improper word, and I presume it will be allowed to stay on the pages of 'Hansard.' This question of cold storage is a very important one in western Canada. It is a system that should have been adopted in this House, and I think it would have been adopted in this House if the resolution of the member for Victoria (Mr. White) had not been placed in a position on the order paper that prevented it from being discussed. For that reason the matter has remained without getting the consideration I think it is entitled to from this House. But it does not excuse the minister by any means. The minister has been aware of the situation for many years, and yet he has been content to patter along behind and has not taken up the position that, as Minister of Agriculture, I think he should. He is too dilatory, he hangs back. He wants to get down to bigger issues, and he forgets not only local conditions, but the conditions of this whole Dominion. We have now almost come to the close of the session, and no action has been taken, but I hope the minister, even at this late period, will take steps to institute such a system throughout the Dominion, and build up the cattle trade and the other important industries of this country. It is most important, because while we are cultivating fruit and other cereals in the west, owing to the fact that we have a very fertile soil, the day is not far distant, in fact it has already arrived in western Canada, when the farmers have to introduce mixed farming. However, I suppose the minister is content to let it drag along without taking action. I simply rise to call the minister's attention to the state of affairs, and I would urge him to take some action and not make it necessary for us to bring the matter to the attention of the House during the next four or five years.

Mr. FISHER. I would be very glad to have a discussion on the question, and to go into it. But when a motion is on the order paper, a discussion at this stage would be out of order.

Mr. W. H. WHITE. I would like to say a word in explanation to the member for Macdonald (Mr Staples) as to why the resolution was not placed earlier on the order paper. It was a resoluton that was passed by the United Farmers and Stock Growers of Alberta. Some time in February they sent a resolution to me and asked me if I would take the matter up. I immediately placed it on the order paper, though it was a little late in the season. Since that time I have written to the minister asking him if he would put in the estimates a sum of money to enable the matter to be investigated and to see whether this project was practicable or not. I had a letter from the minister indicating that he did not have any confidence in it, or in the promoters of this scheme. I may say with regard to the promoters, Mr. Palmer and Mr. Greenstreet, that they are two gentlemen who have had a great deal of experience along that line, I understand, with the people who control the cold storage plant in New Zealand, as well as in Cape Colony. As most of the western members will remember when they visited Ottawa last year, to see the minister, they simply asked for a guarantee of two-thirds of the amount of their bonds . I understand they have already subscribed $500,000 of their own money and they only ask the government to guarantee the bonds. We must ship our cattle five thousand miles to market, and any one who knows anything about cattle knows that at the end of so long a journey cattle do not land in good shape. Therefore, we are getting practically nothing for our light cattle. Last year, light cattle sold throughout the west for from two to three cents per pound. In the spring we got a little more—up to five cents. There is only a small percentage of western cattle that are fit for export, and therefore command a high price. In a letter from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) that hon. gentleman states that there is not enough cattle to keep up a continuous supply. I do not know what he means by a 'continuous supply' or how large a plant he considers necessary in order to handle the cattle business. But, according to the report sent out by the Agriculture Department in 1908, there was some 180,000 cattle shipped to Winnipeg, some for export, and some for local consumption. The condition in the west is simply this: In Alberta, there is a great deal of waste land, for that province is not all wheat land like Saskatchewan and Manitoba. We have a lot of hay land, and other land not fit for farming. Therefore, the cattle industry is important to the people of Alberta as is wheat or any other grain. But, unless we have something like this proposition of Mr. Palmer to handle our light beef, we must go out of the cattle businesss. Last year, some 4,000 cows—breeding stock—were shipped out of the Victoria district alone. The farmers are going out of the business because they find it not profitable to carry it on.

Mr. BLAIN. Where were they sent to?

Mr. W. H. WHITE. Some were sent here to the east, but many were disposed of in the west. A considerable quantity of this cow beef went to the railway camps of the Canadian Pacific, Grand Trunk Pacific and Canadian Northern. Ten or fifteen years ago, when there was more vacant land and the cattle were allowed to roam, beef could be raised a great deal more cheaply than at present. At one time, we could grow beef profitably for three cents per pound. To-day, we have to pay as high as $10 to $20 an acre for land for grazing our cattle. Therefore, we must have a higher average price for our beef, and until we have some way of handling the lighter beef, shipping it out chilled, or something of that kind, it will be impossible to continue the business. Of course, the export business will go on as usual, but this project would give us a market for our small and light beef. I wish to be clear on this matter. Some hon. members may have thought, as the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples) did, that I was not very anxious to bring this matter forward.

Mr. STAPLES. I believe you were.

Mr. W. H. WHITE. I have been in the cattle business for many years, and have been forced out of the business for the reasons I have stated here that there is no way to handle the smaller or lighter cattle. To show the importance of this matter, I may state that the resolution to which I have reference was passed by every branch of the united farmers of Alberta, as well as by the stock growers. This body has over 5,000 members, and in their letter to me they claim that they represent nearly half a million head of cattle. So, I think the matter is important enough for the minister to consider it seriously, and to spend a reasonable amount of money to try and get this business established.

Mr. HERRON. The situation of the cattle business in the west has been well explained by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. W. H. White). The whole province of Alberta was a cattle country a few years ago, but it is falling off so rapidly that, if it continues, in a short time we should have to import beef for our own consumption. We believe there is no salvation for that western country from a state of depression in the live stock trade except through the suggestion that has been made—that the government should take up the establishment of cold storage for the purpose of chilling beef for the export trade. It has already been explained that because of the distance of the British market our beef will not land there in proper condition to kill. Still, we are in a more favourable position than the countries that supply the bulk of the meat, including pork, beef and mutton, to the British market. The meat that goes from New Zealand and Australia must be frozen, making it worth only half as much as fresh meat. On the other hand, I understand the chilled meat is worth practically as much as fresh. If we had means to chill our beef it would enable us to land it in England in a condition to command a good price. There is no way by which our farmers can continue much longer in the business in which they have been engaged except by affording them a substantial market. The ordinary farmer of our portion of the country—the same condition exists all over the province—brings his hogs to market generally in the fall of the year, and as soon as the full supply comes in, the market being only local, the price drops even below the cost of production. And almost the same is true of beef. We cannot ship it profitably in the live state, and we have no means of shipping it in any other form. There can be no profit in the business unless the country will advance the money to establish such a system as has been proposed. I think the idea is worthy of the attention of the Minister of Agriculture and the government. I admit that it will cost a good deal of money—a great deal more, I think, than the minister is prepared to expend at the present time. I think it might go to several millions. If they were to guarantee the bonds as has been suggested to two-thirds of the amount required—and as my hon. friend suggests it would be only for the time being as the business would pay for itself—it would undoubtedly be a great benefit to the western country, because we have there the conditions under which beef and pork can be produced cheaper than in any other part of Canada. We have the climate, and a great deal of open land where beef and hogs can be produced cheaply. These things all go towards producing a meat product cheap. This is a very serious matter, and I think the minister should undertake a large scheme of that kind, not go into it in the little pleasant way we are doing from year to year, contributing towards some private enterprise some few dollars after a plant has been constructed and in operation. The government should take that matter up, and I do not think the minister should wait until these conditions arise. He and his officers should ascertain what is needed for the agricultural industry of the country and he should have his share out of the treasury to advance the interests of agriculture. We spend money on every other department and what is left is what the minister gets. The minister, with his officers, should make an estimate of what is required, and as agriculture is the leading industry of the country, it should come first in the estimates. Instead of spending $400,000 or $500,000 or $900,000 as we are doing to-day, we should not be afraid to spend as many millions if necessary to advance the general interests of this industry, because when agriculture is down in Canada every other industry is down. It is the first and leading industry, it is the backbone of the country, and no industry is prosperous when the farmers are not prosperous. It should come in for first consideration from the minister.

Mr. FISHER. The problem as put forward in several representations that have been made to me was so large and so doubtful of success that I confess I could not see my way to take it up seriously. It is, however, a very big and important question, and I shall certainly take pains to make inquiry and what investigations we can through the officers of the department in regard to it.

Mr. MEIGHEN. It is true that a resolution is on the order paper dealing with the same topic, and that to some extent would rule out the present discussion, but in view of the fact that it is impossible to take that up this session, and that the undertaking contemplated in the question is so transcendently important, it seems to me the discussion should proceed further, at all events until we get some more explicit statement of policy from the Minister of Agriculture. I need not emphasize, nor could I if I wished, the importance of the proposed undertaking of establishing a chilled meat industry more than has been done by the speakers who have preceded me. I would only refer to this fact, that while the exportation of cattle and the facility of that exportation, are topics which it is supposed more directly concern cattlemen and rangers throughout western Canada, none the less they have to do in just as important a manner with the general farming industry of the whole of Canada. In Manitoba the cattle industry is marching very rapidly to extinction. Where they had ten cattle ten years ago, they have one to-day. The cattle are going out of existence. Why? Simply because it has been impossible under existing transport conditions to make them pay. The result of that, as the Minister of Agriculture, being such a practical farmer, well knows, is that the land values and the land production are affected in much the same degree. It is impossible even in a grain country to keep up the average production of grain without having cattle on the land. As a result, even in our province which is practically a grain province, the amount of land given to summer fallow has to be increased each year because there are no cattle there to keep up the fertility of the soil. The same thing will take place throughout the west. It becomes more and more important the farther west one goes. As the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) has well pointed out, the cattle industry in Alberta and Saskatchewan, Alberta particularly, is just as important as and should be more important than the grain industry. I understand that the proposal put to the government very fully and explicitly was along the lines of the formation of a chilled meat exportation company, operating on the same principle as the Pullman Company with a capitalization of $2,000,000, of which the promoters subscribe in cash $500,000, the balance to be guaranteed by the government in the form of four per cent debentures. I, of course, will not say that the proposal as put to the government should have been accepted, but I will say that it presents some very good features, features that should have prevented it from being stigmatized by the minister as unworthy of consideration. I may be wrong in my details, but from what I have read, the company put up $500,000, the remainder to be guaranteed by the government, and the guarantee to be secured by a first mortgage on all the assets of the company. That would give a margin of 25 per cent against loss on the guarantee, and at the same time, by a proper system of supervision, the government could see that all the money produced by the guarantee was expended on plant and works, and consequently that there would be assets to answer for every dollar of guarantee. Consequently it bears on its face the aspect of bona fides, there seems to be no juggling about it. The first loss would fall on the promoters. I know nothing as to Mr. Palmer; the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) appears to know something of his history and his success, but at all events if the government are not disposed to accept the proposition that has been put down, they should either undertake this work as a government undertaking or invite propositions of a different character. The minister, I understand, has taken the ground, although not in the House, that there is not sufficient production at the present time to warrant such an expenditure as would make adequate a system for the transportation of chilled meats. That may be true, but the minister must realize that it only requires the expenditure, and that the system would follow the guarantee and the business would follow in its wake. It is simply because cattle cannot be made to pay in that part of the country, where they should of all places pay, that there is not now the foundation for this industry. In eastern Canada, the market for the cattle is largely local. In western Canada that is not, and that cannot be the case. The market must be an export market and must be an adequate market if there is to be cattle industry. I think the minister should not be too much impressed by the present cattle situation in the west as not warranting the expenditure which would be necessary for this system. I do not purpose going further, but I would urge the minister, in justice to the House and in justice to the western members who are particularly interested in this question, that he do not dismiss it so briefly, as he seems disposed to do at the present time, but that he state to us—and it will be of use to use in future discussions—what specific objection he finds as a representative of the government to the proposals already made, what he considers defective or faulty in these proposals, and that he indicate to the House along what general lines he is prepared to go, because I may say once and for all, that certain, at all events, of the western members are determined to see that action, not too remote, is taken along this line.

Mr. FISHER. All I can say to my hon. friend is that without having my notes and without having the proposition before me, I could not undertake to discuss it. If the motion had been reached I would have been prepared to go into the matter. I have not all the information here, and I could not possibly answer the question that my hon. friend has put to me.

'Patent Record,' $17,000.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Is this the same amount as last year?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would like to ask the minister whether he has taken into consideration the appointment of a deputy Minister of Agriculture. If he will look back to the year 1903, when his attention was called to the fact that he had then appointed a deputy minister, he will find that he made the statement that as far as the present deputy minister was concerned he did not expect that he would be looked upon as deputy Minister of Agriculture. I wish to read the minister's own words to show that such was the case. In reply to my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) he made use of this language, as will be found on page 4356, 'Hansard,' 1903:

> My hon. friend (Mr. Henderson), of course, must be constitutionally blind to the appearance of anybody having a seat on the floor who is not a member of this House. I can tell the hon. member that the deputy Minister of Agriculture now is Mr. George F. O'Halloran, and that he was appointed within the last year to succeed the late deputy, Mr. W. B. Scarth. Mr. O'Halloran is a lawyer by profession and has been practising for many years, first of all in the eastern townships where he was born and brought up, and afterwards in the city of Montreal. He is a lawyer of repute and standing, and is specially competent, I believe, and my colleagues believe with me to deal with these matters connected with the Department of Agriculture which are not entirely agricultural in their nature. There are not only the agricultural branches but a number of other branches such as patents, trade marks, designs, copyrights, statistics and various other things. The mainly agricultural matters in the department are chiefly in the hands of experts. Dr. Saunders, the director of the experimental farm, Prof. Robertson, in the dairying and agricultural branch, Dr. Rutherford in the veterinary branch, and Dr. Montizambert in the quarantine branch deal with the matters affecting these branches. The deputy minister has the supervision as depuity minister of these branches, but has nothing to do with what I might call the technical or expert carrying on of the branches. The other branches I have alluded to do require the superintendence of the deputy minister directly and personally, and therefore this gentleman was chosen particularly to look after these branches.

That is, Mr. Chairman, that the present deputy head of this department was supposed to look particularly after the census and statistics branch, a branch that is increasing in volume and duties, and which must continue to increase, and if so, it certainly is high time, in view of the many complaints that have been made about the Department of Agriculture, that the minister give his attention to this subect. There have been constant complaints. I saw only recently that one of the papers was advertising and offering a prize of $10 for the best essay showing what the present Minister of Agriculture has done for agriculture. I am not casting any reflections upon the deputy minister as a man. In an agricultural country such as we have here, it is certainly time we took this matter into our serious consideration, and that the minister got to work and revolutionized his department along progressive lines. He can, perhaps, tell us why he has not taken any action in this regard since 1903?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think I can add very much to what I said in 1903. The different branches of the department are in charge of experts, each of whom deals with his own particular branch. The deputy minister is the business administrator and supervisor of them all. They come to him and report, as they would come to the minister, and he deals with them on the reports of the experts. There are other branches in his department which are not technical in their character, and the deputy minister deals with and administers them. I do not think that agriculture has in any way suffered, but, on the contrary, I think it has been successfully carried on and aided by the department and the administration of the present deputy minister. The hon. gentleman has referred to some newspaper paragraph and has stated that a reward has been offered, but we do not know whether that award has been made. I have heard something of it, but I have not heard yet whether the essay has been sent in.

Census and statistics, $50,000.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. This increase is due to the preparation of the census?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. The increase is almost entirely due to the printing of the schedules and getting ready for the census next year.

Mr. J. D. REID. When do you commence the census?

Mr. FISHER. In June, 1911.

Mr. DANIEL. How long does it take to get the population of the whole Dominion?

Mr. FISHER. That would depend on the force of clerks that we put on. Heretofore it has taken in the neighbourhood of five years for the whole compilation—not just the compilation of the numbers of people; that can be done in six months and perhaps less. But. I hope to force on the compilation of this coming census. The last census and the last before that took fully five years. When I came into office in 1896 there were some census clerks still compiling. I would like to have this work done in three years.

Mr. DANIEL. I want to know how long it really takes to get the numbers of people, not to have the compilation made. Is the census of the people taken in one day in the whole Dominion?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. DANIEL. In how many days?

Mr. FISHER. In this country we adopt what is called the de jure census, and not the de facto census. The census is taken as on a specified day, but the census enumerator frequently does not reach the individuals all over the country for perhaps a week or three weeks after that day has passed, and he takes down the people that were present on that day in the neighbourhood. Last census the enumeration took less than three weeks, and the census before it took six weeks; this year I should think it would take in the neighbourhood of a month from the time the census commences until the enumeration is complete.

Mr. J. D. REID. Last census they classified shoemakers, and tailors, and blacksmiths as manufacturers.

Mr. FISHER. That was the census before. Last census no one was classed as a manufacturer who employed less than five hands working in his establishment.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will that be done this census?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then, every tailor in every town will be put down as a manufacturer?

Mr. FISHER. Not if he sends out shop work, or work outside. The five hands must work on the premises.

Mr. J. D. REID. How are we going to tell how many manufacturers there are in the Dominion if you class as a manufacturer, a tailor or a blacksmith who has four or five employees? I should think that manufactories were establishments that turned out articles for consumers as compared with retail establishments?

Mr. FISHER. The restriction with reference to the five employees is the restriction in use in the United States. My understanding is that any employer engaged in the producing industry who has five employes on his premises is classed as a manufacturer.

Mr. J. D. REID. That would include a blacksmith?

Mr. HUGHES. Why shouldn't it?

Mr. EDWARDS. Inasmuch as farming is a producing industry I suppose that a farmer who employs four or five hands would be a manufacturer?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why should he not as well as the blacksmith?

Mr. FISHER. Because the farmer is in a class by himself.

Mr. BLAIN. What will the taking of the census cost?

Mr. FISHER. I have not yet undertaken to make an estimate.

Mr. HUGHES. There are living and working in the United States a number of former inhabitants of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec, and I wish to know from the minister if they would be counted in the next census? Last election a number of these gentlemen were brought in special trains and chartered steamboats from New England centres back to their homes in Canada for the purpose of voting. I understand that under the franchise law in some of these provinces they could come back and vote although they had been living and earning money in a foreign country. Are people of this class going to be included in the next census enumeration?

Mr. FISHER. The man who returns only to vote would not be counted in the census enumeration.

Mr. HUGHES. I understand they are.

Mr. FISHER. Not in the last census.

Mr. HUGHES. If the minister examines the schedules for any parish he will find name after name of those who had been living in the United States and who were still classified as members of the family in Canada.

Mr. FISHER. If that were done it is contrary to the instructions given to the enumerators.

Mr. J. D. REID. Last census the enumerators were paid so much per name, and it was to their interest to put the whole family in whether certain members of it lived in the United States or not.

Mr. FISHER. That would be contrary to instructions.

Mr. J. D. REID. From the experience we have had of the appointees of the Minister of Agriculture we know they are not reliable.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, not at all.

Mr. HENDERSON. If a farmer is not to be classed as a manufacturer, would the minister say that a man who produces lime is a manufacturer?

Mr. FISHER. I have not got the details of the census enumeration to-night and the item may stand until I get that information.

Mr. HUGHES. I know a man in a small town who employs quite a number of hands, and who does a business of $32,000 a year, why should he not be classed as a manufacturer?

Mr. FISHER. He would be under the regulations.

Mr. PORTER. Does the enumerator take an oath before entering on his office that he shall discharge his duties faithfully?

Mr. FISHER. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. Are the census enumerators allowed to enumerate persons who are not at the time in Canada?

Mr. FISHER. The question will be asked whether the people are away on a visit or permanently, and the enumerator will act according to the answer.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the head of the family sign a statement?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. CROCKET. The enumerator makes his return on the viva voce statement of the head of a family?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is the census to be taken by the same method as the last census? Has the minister considered the way in which the census is taken in other countries, whereby post office officials and I believe policemen in cities have been got to assist, thus reducing the cost?

Mr. FISHER. The system in Canada has always been that of direct enumeration, not estimate. The only people employed are the enumerators, whose duty it is to go to every individual in the respective areas, though they get information to assist them in their work from such officers as my hon. friend mentions.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister will remember that the census of 1901 cost the people of Canada double what the two preceding censuses cost. I hope that in getting ready to take another census, he will keep economy in view.

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask my hon. friend if he is receiving applications yet for enumerators?

Mr. FISHER. Oh, yes, lots of them.

Mr. BLAIN. I would assume that, because I see that in some parts of Canada they are commencing to redistribute the seats.

Mr. FISHER. I have not heard of that.

Mr. BLAIN. From whom are the applications coming?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot tell—from anybody and everywhere.

Mr. BLAIN. On whose recommendation—

Mr. FISHER. I have not asked for any recommendations. I have not yet reached the stage to make any appointment.

Mr. BLAIN. I am assuming that my hon. friend has a policy. May I ask him on whose recommendation these enumerators will be appointed?

Mr. FISHER. Some reputable person who can speak for them.

Mr. BLAIN. The last time I understood that it was the general patronage list, and I assume that there will be no change in that respect.

Mr. FISHER. We have not got a patronage list.

Mr. J. D. REID. Take my own county—there is no patronage list there.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend has one, I suppose.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will the minister receive recommendations from me?

Mr. FISHER. Oh, yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will he carry them out?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say that.

Mr. J. D. REID. As I represent the majority of the people in my constituency, I think my recommendation should be taken before that of anybody who does not represent the people.

Mr. FISHER. That is a very good reason.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will the hon. minister agree to accept the recommendation of every member of this House?

Mr. FISHER. I could not make any promise; it would not do.

Printing and distributing reports and bulletins of farms, $10,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have never seen anything about the chicken industry in this report.

Mr. FISHER. If my hon. friend will read the report, he will find it all there.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask the minister how he obtains the list of those to whom these bulletins are sent? Has he an up-to-date list?

Mr. FISHER. Anybody who applies is put on the list. The names of people who have moved away, people who are dead, or people who do not care to take out their bulletins after a time, are removed from the list. I am trying now to devise a system for a regular revision of the list. There is an alphabetical list at the farms, the dairy branch, the live stock branch and the seed branch. This is a special list of men who want bulletins or information on any particular subject. The regular list comprises between 70,000 and 80,000 names.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. If the names of all members of farmers' institutes throughout the country are sent in, will they each receive a bulletin?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, the name sent in of anybody.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is the minister willing to send these bulletins to any farmer who requires them?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then if I send in my voters' list, will they be sent to all the farmers of my county?

Mr. FISHER. If any farmer makes application, or if my hon. friend makes an application on behalf of any farmer, the bulletins will be sent to him. I would ask my hon. friends not to load up the list with the names of people who would not take an interest in the literature and would not read it. Occasionally I have had bundles of these things sent back from the post offices because names have been put on the lists of people who did not take an interest in them and they would have been wasted if the postmasters had not taken the trouble to send them back to us. I propose to make an arrangement by which we can keep in constant touch with the postmasters all over the country. I will ask the postmasters to let us know if the things being sent out are not being taken out of the offices. I think it would be unfortunate and very extravagant to send literature of this very valuable character to people who would not take it out of the post offices and read it. To anybody who wants to have it sent, and who is prepared to read it we are very glad to send a supply.

Mr. J. D. REID. There might be a farmer with two or three sons. I am sure the farmers would be very interested if they could get the literature. If I sent the hon. minister a list of the farmers in my constituency, who I know would take an interest in these bulletins would he send them?

Mr. FISHER. Certainly. If the hon. member will send a list with the names of people who he is satisfied will read them.

Mr. HUGHES. With regard to those papers being returned, I might say that there is a postal law that a paper taken out of the office must be paid for.

Mr. FISHER. These things go free.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes, but that is not the point. A great many of the farmers have been caught in that way, and I think that is the reason why they are chary about taking those papers out. In many cases they do not know that the papers are sent by the department free, and when they find them sent regularly, they think they will be stuck for the price later on.

Mr. FISHER. I would like hon. members to notify me of the names of people to whom they would like the literature to be sent, and who they think will read it when they get it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I remember some five or six years ago, I saw the list. I think it was referred to me for correction. I made up my mind at that time that I would make a selection. There were so many names of dead men and removals on the list. I think a list required for men in a rural district should be revised once a year.

Mr. FISHER. That is quite true.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is another point, and I will tell the hon. minister my own practice. Some system should be devised so that the literature could be sent to particular sections where the bulletins would be of special interest. Now, the front part of my county is entirely an orchard where apples and small fruits are grown, and I would not think of sending to my constituents in that part bulletins of evidence taken before the Agriculture Committee relating to some other subject, say tobacco. I select my bulletins and evidence very carefully. The other day the minister was good enough to send me a lot of bulletins with reference to apple packing, and I shall see that these go into the districts where they will be useful, and then I shall send the evidence of Dr. Saunders and Charles Saunders, and other men who spoke before the committee to other sections of the county where the people are interested in matters of other kinds. Now could not the minister not devise some plan by which he could exercise economy in the distribution of these bulletins? I do not know that it could be done better than by having reference to the member for the county who is familiar with the character of the district and with the occupations. I question whether there is another county that have received such large heaps of literature as my county this year. I go to a city member who, I know does not want those bulletins, and ask him to let me have them; members like the hon. Mr. Foster, and Mr. Bristol have kindly allowed me to take their bulletins, and distribute them.

Mr. JAMESON. I could give you a few.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would be very happy to have a few more for my county.

Mr. FISHER. I would say to my hon. friend that we have special lists. We have a list of fruit growers to whom fruit bulletins are sent; a list of sheep men to whom bulletins in sheep culture are sent; a special list of seed growers to whom bulletins on seed growing and that sort of thing are sent. If everybody exercised the care shown by hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) we would get along very well. I would bespeak hon. gentlemen's assistance in that direction.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to say that I think the department is very careful on this point and very helpful. I do not often commend my hon. friend in this department, but I have had occasion to send in a great many names during the years I have been in the House, and the department have given them very careful attention. The farmers of my county appreciate the promptness, and thoroughness of the department in that respect very much, and I want to compliment the government and the minister. In my opinion these bulletins are of great value, and to the department is due a great deal of credit for the splendid work it is doing along this line.

Fumigation stations, $5,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is the same vote for carrying on that work.

For renewing and improving Canadian Exhibit and Implement Institute, London, and assisting in the maintenance thereof, $8,000.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. That is the annual vote?

Mr. FISHER. That is the usual vote.

To encourage the production and sale of Canadian tobacco, $5,000.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The same vote as last year?

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister nods to me as if I were objecting. I am not objecting to it at all. I only want to see the tobacco properly cured, so as to suit my own taste, and not the taste of people in the minister's county. If you do that you will add millions to the revenue, for what is my taste is the taste of the great majority of the people.

Mr. DANIEL. Can the minister give us any information as to whether there has been any improvement in the flavour of the tobacco, of Canadian grown tobacco? Has there been any improvement in the way of removing the bad odour that obtains in Canadian tobacco. Does it find more favour with the manufacturers and users?

Mr. FISHER. Certainly, the manufacturers use it very much more. During the last year or so, there has been a ready sale of all the tobacco produced in Canada.

Mr. DANIEL. It appears to me to make a milder tobacco, one that does not burn the tongue to the same extent as these other tobaccos, and so far as my experience goes, I must say it is rather favourable.

Mr. FISHER. I think that is the general experience.

Mr. DANIEL. I thought I would like to know whether that was the general experience, and whether Canadian tobacco was being received more favourably by the people, and whether it was being cured better.

Mr. FISHER. I think so.

Mr. DANIEL. And is the area of growth extending?

Mr. FISHER. Not so rapidly as the quality is improving. There is an increase of the culture in some localities. The growth of tobacco in Canada is mostly confined to the counties of Montcalm and Rouville in Quebec, with adjacent neighbourhoods, and the county of Essex in the province of Ontario and part of British Columbia. The crop is a variable one—sometimes larger and sometimes smaller. I could not give my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) the statistics. But the people have taken much more interest in it and much more care in the management and cure of it, and they get more money for their crop.

D. A. LAFORTUNE. (Translation). Mr. Chairman, in connection with this vote 56 and the encouragement to be given to the growth of the Canadian tobacco, I wish to point out to the hon. members that there is in my constituency an association called the 'Association de plantation de tabac,' which comprises the counties of Berthier, Joliette, L'Assomption and Montcalm.

The growth of tobacco has received more care and precaution for some years. Its quality has been considerably improved, and the manufacturers have accordingly bought the whole crop in the county of Montcalm at a very good price.

The manufacturers who were not in the habit of using Canadian tobacco use it now to a very great extent and the farmers are much benefited by it.

I want, Mr. Minister, to draw your attention to a fact which interests greatly those four counties. I wish the Department of Agriculture should vote something to encourage this association of planters. There is every year an exhibition for these four counties, and the farmers take an interest in it in bringing them some exhibits of tobacco. Prizes are given in order to encourage them and to induce to better the quality of their produces. If the department should give something to those four counties to encourage them to make further progress and greater sacrifices, it would certainly have the effect of improving the quality of the tobacco, and it would be only justice for them.

I wish to point out to the minister that instead of knocking at his doors, instead of asking him to aid them every year, as is done by the counties, it might be better for him to put a small vote in the estimates, which would be a great benefit to those four counties, it might result in great improvement.

There are some counties that are now exclusively engaged in the production of tobacco, such as the counties of Rouville and Napierville which compete with the northern counties. That competition is good, and there is good work done; and our farmers need their share in the protection of the department, if they are to engage in that work more seriously and more carefully. If the minister could do something in those lines, great credit would be due to him.

Mr. FISHER. With the permission of my hon. friend (Mr. Lafortune), I will answer in English, as being more convenient. I appreciate the importance of the reasons which have led him to request that the government should give assistance to the planters in his neighbourhood in the way of a bonus or subvention. But that is a suggestion that is fraught with great difficulty. The matter of assistance to agricultural associations and societies has always been left to the provincial government. If the Dominion government were to begin assisting such associations, we should be fairly open to requests from all over the Dominion, and I am afraid that the sum total would be very great, although the assistance to any one association would be trifling. Under these circumstances, it is difficult to accede to such a request. But my hon. friend knows that already the government, through the Department of Agriculture, has done a great deal to encourage the growing of tobacco by helping to improve the maturing and curing of it, with the result, as the hon. member himself has said, of great improvements within the last few years.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister voted in favour of a Bill to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes. How does he reconcile it with his conscience to vote for legislation of this kind—to promote the growth of tobacco in Canada?

Mr. FISHER. While I object to smoking, chewing, or anything of that kind, while I do not do any of those things myself, and think it would be much better if nobody else did, still, if tobacco is to be used, I think the better the tobacco that is used the better.

Mr. JAMESON. What is the government doing under this vote for encouraging the production and sale of Canadian tobacco?

Mr. FISHER. We are carrying on experiments in the different varieties of tobacco which seem to be suitable to the soil and climate of Canada. We are experimenting also in the curing of tobacco to see how it can best be handled and managed to bring it to the needs of the market. We have an expert who came out from France, who had been engaged for many years in the department of tobacco in the French government. This gentleman has made a great success of his work in Canada, and is still carrying it on with vigour.

Mr. JAMESON. I do not use Canadian tobacco myself, but I understand that it is milder than others. But it is open to the objection that it smells a 'mile a minute.' If that could be overcome, the demand could be greatly increased.

Mr. FISHER. That is being overcome very rapidly.

For experiment in cold storage for fruit, $7,000.

Mr. SEXSMITH. What success had the minister with this work last year?

Mr. FISHER. We are not able to carry out one part of the work we had intended, that was to run a cold storage building in the western part of Ontario. We had hoped to be able to do so, and to deal with it in that way. We were, however, able to get fruit and keep it under different conditions and circumstances so as to test the best ways of doing it and to dispose of the fruit at different periods of the year, and see what condition it was in and how it met the needs of the market, and what the cost would be at different periods.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Where were the experiments carried on?

Mr. FISHER. A considerable number of boxes were put into cold storage at London in the Cold Storage Company's warehouse there, some in Montreal, some in St. John, New Brunswick, and some in a frost proof but not cold storage building at Ottawa to compare the results when kept in good cold but not refrigerator storage.

Mr. SEXSMITH. The government did not undertake to build any cold storage?

Mr. FISHER. No, we paid the usual rates for storage to these companies, just as any one else would.

Mr. SEXSMITH. In some localities where they have the co-operative societies to ship fruit, the government might furnish cold storage.

Mr. FISHER. The original intention was to join with one of these associations in western Ontario and engage a cold storage they were proposing to put up for that purpose, but they did not succeed in putting it up and we had to take the other method.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. SEXSMITH. But the minister had an item sufficient to help them to carry on the industry. It would perhaps be wise on the part of the government to build a cold storage as an experiment in one of these places.

Mr. FISHER. We expect to be able to carry out the original plan this year.

Mr. PORTER. The minister mentioned some time ago an application from a cold storage company at Trenton for the amount allowed under the Act. They have a plant there that has already cost them about $26,000, a magnificent plant built of stone and very large. They are now undertaking to put in the cold storage apparatus, whatever is required under the Act. The capital of the men is pretty largely exhausted, and I would like the minister to say whether there is any possible way by which an advance of a proportion of the amount allowed by the Act could be made to the company to assist them in putting in the cold storage apparatus. They are desirous of doing this at once, but owing to the state of their finances it will be rather difficult for them to do so, and in that section where there is so much fruit and where cold storage would be of such great advantage, it would appear to me that if some way could be devised to assist that plant it would be a very good thing to do.

Mr. FISHER. Under the Act it is impossible for us to make an advance. It is possible that the firm mentioned might be able to get an advance from the bank, giving an order on us for the bonus when it was due. We would accept such an order as that.

Mr. PORTER. That would help them very materially. They called my attention to the matter and wondered if the department could do that.

Mr. FISHER. We would do that.

Grants to Dominion exhibition, $37,500.

Mr. STAPLES. Could the minister inform me what decision the government has come to in reference to the request of the delegation that has twice visited the Prime Minister in connection with the exhibition it is proposed to hold in Winnipeg in 1912. The question is a big question, possibly too big for the Minister of Agriculture. I have been accusing him of not being courageous enough to take hold of a big question that would work out to the greatest advantage of this Dominion. The minister knows the facts. He will remember that when the delegation first interviewed the Prime Minister he told them that he thought they had not presented their case in the proper form, that they should have presented it in the form of a memorial, and he suggested that if they did so he would give it his sincere and most sympathetic consideration. As I understood from that delegation, he led them to believe that if they could show that it would be a financial success there was no doubt in his mind that the government would meet the demands to carry it to a successful issue. Later on they presented it in the form suggested. They also sent delegates to all places where such exhibitions had been held, and they presented the facts showing beyond a doubt that it would be no experiment and no great adventure on the part of this government to carry out the proposition set before them. They laid before the Prime Minister and his colleagues the whole proposition. I would like to know whether or not the government have any intention to accede to the demands of the delegation. There is no question about the financial success, and no doubt that the exhibition would be the greatest possible advertisement for Canada, not only from the agricultural point of view, but also from a commercial or manufacturing standpoint, and I would ask if the Prime Minister and the minister have intimated to their colleagues what they purpose doing or whether they are satisfied to have allowed this organization in Winnipeg, composed of the most reputable men, men of the greatest financial strength in our city, men whose statements as to their opinions as to the success of the undertaking can be accepted without a doubt. I hope the Minister of Agriculture, whose duty I believe it is more than any other minister of the government to try and advance such an exhibition, will not sit back quietly for four or five years before he wakes up to the necessity of having such an exhibition in Canada. Other countries have undertaken it and made a success of it. There is no doubt that with the experience of other countries and with the men who are behind this undertaking, it can be made a thorough success. If 500,000 people visited that exhibition and only spent $50 each, which, in my opinion, is not one-third of what they would spend on the average, it would mean that it would put in circulation over $25,000,000. This is a question that the minister, if he is as big a man as he tried to make us believe in his three hours' speech the other day, should take hold of it. I hope the minister will tell us what he purposes doing.

Mr. FISHER. I did not happen to be present when the Prime Minister met the last delegation. I was present when he met the former one some time ago. This is a project with which I have the greatest sympathy personally. I think it is one that may be fraught with greatest advantage to Canada. I understood that it was postponed until 1913 from 1912, but that is not a matter of very great consequence.

Mr. STAPLES. I think it is the intention of the organization to let the matter stand until such time as this government will try and accede to the demands that were made of the government in a definite way.

Mr. FISHER. Of course, it is not for me to say or advise, but if the exhibition is to be what these gentlemen want to have it, and what I sincerely would want to have, I do not believe it can be got ready for 1912. An exhibition of that character requires very great organization and preparation, and I think it would be necessary probably to postpone it until 1913 to accomplish that which everybody in Canada would like to have. I have personally very great sympathy with the project. I think the ideas behind it are somewhat large and that the western people would have to bear a larger share of the expenditure themselves than they now talk of, but my sympathy would be very great with a proposition to give them very substantial assistance from the Dominion government, and I think that would meet with the concurrence of people all over Canada, without respect to the city in which this exhibition is going to be held. We have a country and a western development that I think we might be proud to show to the world and to invite everybody in the world to come and see, and that will be increasingly the case between now and 1912 or 1913. I have no doubt that when it is organized and arranged Canada would present such a magnificent display as would charm, enchant and attract everybody that came to see it, and that instead of a modest estimate of 500,000 people there would be over a million people who would come to see it. I would be very much disappointed if there were not. I cannot speak for the government, they not having come to any conclusion or decision. It is a matter that is under consideration. I have heard the Prime Minister speak of it once or twice, but I cannot give any information with regard to it. I am quite sure that for its proper preparation it would have to be postponed until 1913, and that if the people of the west would take hold of it I think it would be wise for the Dominion parliament to vote a very handsome subscription to it.

Mr. STAPLES. I suppose the minister is aware of the fact that the persons who have undertaken the organization of this exhibition have already expended of their own money about $25,000. It seems to be a hardship on the people who have been so enterprising as to spend that amount of money that they should be stood off indefinitely with such remarks as those which the minister has just made. He is very hopeful that this grant would be made, but I believe that if he would go after the Prime Minister and his colleagues he could work it up in a great deal shorter time and more effectively than what he thinks.

Mr. FISHER. I am too slow, you know.

Mr. STAPLES. The minister says he is too slow.

Mr. FISHER. That is what my hon. friend thinks.

Mr. STAPLES. I am led to think so on a question of this kind. If he would show a little determination on these lines he would raise himself in my admiration as Minister of Agriculture. We were told from the other side of the House that he is the most courageous minister in the government. I suggest that the minister show a little of his courage in reference to this undertaking.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Could the minister give us the number that attended the Seattle exhibition last year?

Mr. FISHER. I think over a million.

Mr. D. A. LAFORTUNE (Motcalm). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, in connection with item 60 of the estimates, I would like to know how it is proposed to distribute that amount of $50,000? For over twenty years past, no exhibition has been held in Montreal, to the great detriment of manufacturers, business men, the farming community and trade generally.

This year the Quebec legislature has guaranteed the payment of the interest on $600,000, as a grant towards the great fair which is to be held in Montreal shortly. Besides, the Quebec legislature has subscribed $10,000 yearly towards the same object. The city of Montreal has voted a grant of $10,000 per year as an encouragement. I would like to know whether that company has applied to the Dominion parliament for a grant on behalf of the fair.

As one of those interested, intending as I do to be an exhibitor, I am desirous of getting that information. It is most unfortunate that the metropolis of Canada should have failed for the last twenty years having an exhibition for the benefit of the farmers and manufacturers of Canada. It is unfortunate that Montreal should be without its fair, while such fairs are being held in Ontario and the other provinces or parts of the province, such as Three Rivers, Sherbrooke and Guelph, Montreal in the meantime being left in the cold. For almost twenty years past the manufacturing, commercial and farming classes, have complained bitterly that Montreal has thus been left in the background. It has just been decided that something must be done.

We are without an experimental farm in the province of Quebec; we have only small stations, while in Ontario and the other provinces such farms have been established. At the opening of this session I heard the minister make an important statement to the effect that he proposed establishing illustration stations throughout the Dominion. Well, I trust he will not forget the finest section of the province of Quebec, and that he will start an illustration station in the district of Montreal.

Farmers of that district, who have to undergo expenses to visit the Ottawa experimental farm, start in the morning and reach here about half past eleven; they return in the afternoon after rapidly going over the farm without seeing all there is to see. They do not get from such a trip as much benefit as might be expected. Should the hon. minister carry out his plan and establish such stations or sub-experimental farms within the reach of the farmers, specially of those residing in the district of Montreal, great benefits would be reaped in that way. I hope the hon. minister will not forget carrying out the promise he made at the opening of this session; I hope also that parliament will find its way clear to assist toward the holding of that Montreal fair, which is so eagerly desired and so greatly needed.

Mr. FISHER. (Translation.) In answer to the hon. member for Montcalm, I may call his attention to the fact that this vote for the expositions has been given in turn to all the provinces, and that the province of Quebec has benefited by it in its turn, at the time of the Sherbrooke exhibition, four or five years ago. This year, the vote will go to the exhibition of St. John, New Brunswick, and next year, it will be given to Regina, in the province of Saskatchewan. That will complete the round of general exhibitions for all the provinces of the Dominion.

The government have not yet made up their minds as to whether these fairs should have a second time the benefit of this grant. But the province of Quebec has not been neglected and has had its turn as well as the others. Should we decide on a second series, I am satisfied that the Montreal fair will be one of the first to be considered.

As regards experimental farms, I may give the hon. member the assurance that, at the next session of parliament, I hope to be in a position to ask parliament to vote the amount required towards the establishment of an experimental farm in the province of Quebec.

Mr. DANIEL. One of the best methods of combatting tobacco is the taking of measures to educate the people in preventative means, and with that object in view, I would suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that the Dominion government should institute a tobacco exhibit at each of the Dominion exhibitions. The minister has officers in his department quite competent to inaugurate such an exhibit, and I have no doubt the central tobacco association would aid.

Mr. FISHER. The suggestion has been made that we should have a fishery exhibit, an agriculture exhibit, a railway exhibit and so on at these exhibitions, but the government has never undertaken to do so. The exhibition association would much prefer that we should give them a lump sum of $50,000 and let them carry on their work.

Mr. DANIEL. Railway exhibits and fishery exhibits are important, but nothing can possibly compare with the conservation of the public health.

Exhibitions, $100,000.

Mr. FISHER. The exhibition was at Seattle last year and this year it is at Brussels. It will open on the 23rd of this month.

Mr. EDWARDS. What was the total cost to the government of the exhibition at Seattle?

Mr. FISHER. About $100,000.

Mr. EDWARDS. Who had charge of the exhibition there?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Wm. Hutchison, permanent exhibition commissioner.

Mr. EDWARDS. I had the pleasure of seeing the Canadian exhibit at Seattle last summer, and I wish to congratulate the department on the excellence of that exhibition.

Mr. FISHER. I appreciate that very much.

To encourage the production and use of superior seeds of farm crops and for the enforcement of the Seed Control Act, $50,000.

Mr. SEXSMITH. So long as you allow noxious seeds to be scattered broadcast through the Dominion by means of the screenings which are sold for foodstuffs there is very little use in your spending money to combat the spread of weeds. These screenings from the western provinces are sent to Fort William, and are then shipped to the eastern provinces. When I mentioned this matter a short time ago the minister said it was a provincial affair, but I certainly think it is a matter which the Dominion Department of Agriculture should attend to. Many of the most dangerous weed seeds come in these screenings. It is poor policy to expend $50,000 to try and get pure seed when we allow these foul seeds to be distributed in that way at a loss of hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars to our farmers in the course of a year. Last year in the province of Ontario it was estimated that there was a shortage of $1,000,000 in the crop because of the sow thistle alone. If these people are determined to put these screenings on the market they should be compelled to try and get rid of the impure seeds in some way.

Mr. FISHER. I sympathize very much with the views expressed by the hon. member. The information in the department shows that many weed seeds are contained in feedstuffs. I do not know what remedy can be applied, but I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Sexsmith) that the department will investigate the matter with a view to seeing what can be done.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I am glad the minister has promised to look into the matter, but I would remind him that six months' delay means a great loss to the farmers.

Mr. FISHER. We do not think we can deal with it under the law as it stands to-day.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Then an amendment should have been introduced in the Bill passed this session, giving the government authority to take preventative measures. I would not advocate the destruction of these feedstuffs if any other means can be found to purify them, but I think that if they were kiln dried the germinating quality of these seeds would be destroyed. Our expenditure to procure pure seeds will be nullified if we do not put a stop to this practice.

Mr. EDWARDS. Last year notice was given that if applications were made to the department for seeds up to a certain date in February, the seeds would be supplied. I informed a number of people in my county, and they sent me their applications Most of those applications were honoured, and a great deal of satisfaction was given to the people by the seed they obtained. I would like to know if similar applications will be honoured if sent in each year. Some of the farmers who sent in applications this year have informed me that they have not received any seed.

Mr. FISHER. We send the seed for the year in which the application comes, but do not repeat it, and we make it a condition of sending the seed that the recipient report to us at the end of the season the result of his sowing the seed. We do that as a precaution against the seed being neglected or not used. One of the advantages which the country derives from the distribution of seed is that the small quantity of seed with which the farmer is supplied mutiplies year after year. Another advantage is that we get a great deal of information as to the adaptability of the seed to different localitles, which is useful to our experts. If we send a sample to a farmer, we expect him in return to send us a report.

Mr. EDWARDS. Do you send a form with the seed?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, always, and when a farmer neglects to send that report we are a little chary about sending him another sample. I do not say we do not send him one, but we reprimand him, and perhaps say that if he does not make a report on the second sample we will not send him another. We do not allow lists of farmers to be sent in for these purpose. We found when that was done that much seed was wasted. We have to get the personal application of the farmer as a guarantee of good faith.

Mr. EDWARDS. Probably the department, in sending out the seed this year has not taken into account the fact that this season is exceptionally early, which perhaps accounts for the farmers calling attention to the fact that they have not received the seed.

Mr. FISHER. We send out the samples as rapidly as we can.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. It is now eleven o'clock, and might I suggest that we run through the four items in quarantaine, and allow the balance of the items to stand.

Mr. FISHER. Very well.

Tracadie and d'Arcy Island lazarettos and leprosy generally, $11,000.

Mr. FISHER. The increase of $1,000 is in consequence of an increased allotment to the nuns who take charge of the cases at Tracadie.

Mr. EDWARDS. Is this disease increasing or decreasing?

Mr. FISHER. It is not increasing. The number at the lazaretto at Tracadie remains practically stationary at from 20 to 25. Most of the cases are from the neighbouring parts of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. For some reason, which I cannot understand, the disease has never died out, but it does not seem to increase. When a case is discovered we take steps to remove it at once to the lazaretto, and the people in the neighbourhood are always willing to report a new case. The disease in the early stages is not contagious, so that we get the cases before it is allowed to spread. There have been one or two cases from the foreign element in Manitoba, and occasionally a Chinese has been sent from British Columbia. The Chinese are always anxious to go home, and we have an arrangement with the steamship company for deporting them.

Public Works Health Act, $8,000

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. That is the annual vote?

Mr. FISHER. The same vote.

Steamer to replace the 'Argus' and 'Challenger,' $10,000.

Mr. FISHER. We have to get some new steamers in place of these. They are completely worn out.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The same amount was voted last year?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, and this ought to finish it, I think.

Mr. EDWARDS. Has item No 53 been finally passed yet?

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. No, that stands.

Mr. FISHER. Should we not take item No. 52?

Mr. SEXSMITH. 52 is a most important item.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. There are three or four items on which we may have some little discussion.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to take item 53. It is really part of the experimental farm vote.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. We discussed that pretty fully, I think.

Experimental farms—towards establishment and maintenance of additional branch stations, $55,000.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Can the minister, tell us where he intends to establish these?

Mr. FISHER. No, I cannot.

Mr. HENDERSON. We must take it by faith.

Mr. FISHER. I think I must compliment the House on a very good day's work, and I now beg to move that the committee rise and report progress.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FISHER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Might I ask the hon. minister what business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FISHER. The Naval Bill, I think, is to be taken up by mutual arrangement.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. And if that is got through with?

Mr. FISHER. We will go on with my estimates, I think.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11 p.m
