This potential problem area perturbs me also, but in a slightly different context, perhaps because I have interpreted differently the basic intent of Part II, as I shall presently explain.

My interpretation, which may be faulty, and on which I may be corrected by the sponsor, leads me to a consideration of rather different problem areas in the board's performance of its advisory functions.

As I see it, Bill C-49 makes significant improvements in our jurisdictional machinery in this whole energy field, by providing for the co-ordination of our research and study activities, upon which is to be based the advice respecting the further clarification of a national energy policy.

If I am correct in this assessment of intent respecting the second main function of the bill, then one may express the hope that this developmental step may some day lead to a more comprehensive approach to the integration and co-ordination of the study and of the control and regulation which is now to be carried out by existing agencies or departments, to which we are now adding one more. Please note that we are naming this new authority the "National Energy Board". To this national energy authority is ostensibly being given the responsibility for the co-ordination, the integration, and the partial unification of one aspect of national energy utilization, that is, the aspect of study, and review and advice.

And even here I am not clear about the extent of this co-ordination and integration, for it appears to me that there has been no clarification of policy even in this aspect. Is it intended that the National Energy Board is to have a primary or managerial status in the function of study, review and advice? For the fact remains that we shall now have several agencies or departments evidently charged with research or study functions in the separate but overlapping energy fields. I am thinking of the Dominion Coal Board, the Atomic Energy Control Board, the International Joint Commission, the Water Resources Branch of the Department of Northern Affairs, and the National Research Council.

I appreciate the import of the minister's statement, which claimed that it was considered not profitable to disturb or disrupt the efficient functioning of existing agencies in these closely-related fields. Yet, the interrelationships between and among these industries and these agencies are going to be very complex and very close. It seems only fair to ask how these interrelationships are going to be adjudicated and directed so that there will be overall co-ordination and integration, which evidently is the intent of section 22(1) of the bill. Is this to be done through the personnel or infrastructure of the board, or will some inter-agency or intergovernmental co-ordination group be set up? And is the new board, for example, going to be given the responsibility for liaison work in the international field, say, in conferring and negotiating with the Federal Power Commission of the United States?

To summarize, I believe that Canadians generally will welcome this legislation because they accept the validity and the necessity of the purpose which has prompted its introduction in Parliament. I believe, too, that Canadians will adopt an expectant attitude regarding some aspects of our national energy policy which have been inadequately defined or discussed during the debate on this bill.

I would like to pose this in the form of questions:

1. Are we going to put more of our energy to work at home? The Borden Commission underlined the advisability of encouraging the development in Canada of the processing industries relating to energy and sources of energy, and especially the working out of effective arrangements with respect to disposal of by-products and the elimination of waste.

2. Are we going to strengthen and extend Canadian ownership participation in the further development of our energy resource industries?

3. Will our tolls and tariffs be worked out on a cost-of-service basis, with their fairness and reasonableness organically related to the amount of equity invested, and to the degree of real risk involved? I suspect Canadians are wondering why the equity relationship principle in our toll structure was originally recommended by the Borden Commission, and how it will now be taken into account. Will rate-making be after public hearings? How will tolls presently being charged fit in? What about tolls on non-hydrocarbons?

4. Since our neighbour to the south is developing "deficiency" areas and we are becoming a "have" nation in terms of oil, gas and electric power, what is to be our national policy for the protection of the public interest in interregional and especially international movements of energy by producers and distributors whose operations are being increasingly intertwined and interrelated?

5. What is to be our national policy in helping to solve the problems of marketing western Canada's crude oil and gas, perhaps in the energy-deficient regions of central Canada with the proper safeguarding of the interests of the consumers and of our independent western producers?

My questions imply that I would have welcomed further clarification of the operative tenets which are to formulate the pattern of administration, if I may borrow this phrase, of what we all hope will be an integrated and comprehensive national energy policy, adequately protecting the public interest and making more secure and definite the statutory and administrative framework within which the energy industries concerned, together with those who will be responsible for financing these undertakings, will be able to operate effectively and equitably. Canadians hope that in actual practice the flexibility in the legislation will prove to be a source of real strength in the hammering-out of a national energy policy, the primary concern of which will be the protection of the public interest.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, bill referred to Standing Committee on Natural Resources.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Léon Méthot moved the second reading of Bill S-26, to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

He said: Honourable senators, as is mentioned in the title of this bill, its purpose is to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act, Chapter 217 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

This act is divided into 10 parts. Part I, which is headed "General", applies to all of Canada. Part II applies to Ontario, Part III to Quebec, Parts IV and IX to Nova Scotia, Parts V and IX to New Brunswick; Parts VI and IX to Prince Edward Island, Part VII to Manitoba, Part VIII to British Columbia, and Part X to Alberta.

I am told there is no part which refers to Newfoundland, because there is a special statute applicable to that province. I was also surprised to note that there was no provision with respect to Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I might suggest that nobody goes to jail in Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Méthot: Perhaps Saskatchewan has so many good people like the honourable Leader and the Honourable Senator Pearson it does not need any reform institutions. But that is not the question.

Sections 1, 2 and 3 of the bill apply to the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and Section 4 applies to the province of Manitoba.

In regard to sections 1, 2 and 3, may I say that the Prisons and Reformatories Act implements an arrangement made by the Government of New Brunswick with the Good Shepherd Reformatory at Saint John by providing that Roman Catholic females convicted in New Brunswick of an offence punishable by imprisonment for a maximum term of less than two years may be sentenced to imprisonment in the said reformatory institution, instead of the common jail or other prison.

The Attorney General of New Brunswick has reported to the Minister of Justice that the Mother Superior of the reformatory, for financial reasons, has given notice in accordance with the statute that no further prisoners will be received, and has closed the institution, with the result that there is now no reform school for Roman Catholic females in that province.

The Attorney General further reports that he has made arrangements with the Mother Superior of the Provincial Convent of the Good Shepherd at Halifax to receive such female prisoners in that institution, and requests that the act be amended to give effect to the arrangement.

The Attorney General of Nova Scotia has informed the Government that he has no objection to the act being amended accordingly.

It is desirable that provision be made for the sentencing of certain Roman Catholic females in New Brunswick to an appropriate reform institution with a view to their more effective rehabilitation.

Therefore, the present bill was introduced to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act by repealing the present provision that Roman Catholic women and girls who are convicted in the province of New Brunswick may be sentenced to imprisonment in the Good Shepherd Reformatory at Saint John, and substituting therefor a provision under which, in similar circumstances, the said females may be sentenced to imprisonment at the Provincial Convent of the Good Shepherd at Halifax.

Part 5 of the act refers to New Brunswick, and if we look at section 109 we see that it refers to the Good Shepherd Reformatory of Saint John. So, this section is amended by deleting the words "Saint John" and substituting the word "Halifax", and deleting the words "New Brunswick" and substituting therefor the words "Nova Scotia".

Section 2 of the bill repeals the heading of section 121 of the act and substitutes the heading "Good Shepherd Reformatory, Halifax". And the words "Saint John" are replaced by the word "Halifax" and the words "said province" are replaced by "province of Nova Scotia".

Section 3 of the bill provides for similar amendments to section 122 of the act.

In regard to section 4, I may say that the Attorney General of Manitoba has requested an amendment to the said act to enable the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General to authorize the transfer of prisoners undergoing sentence for indictable offences from one provincial jail to another. At present an order in council is required under section 3 of the said act in each case.

The act provides in section 153 for transfer of prisoners between certain institutions in Alberta, by warrant of the Attorney General or his deputy, under the authority of the Lieutenant Governer.

In British Columbia, this transfer is done by warrant of the warden or certain other officers under section 173 of the act.

Under section 52 of the Penitentiary Act, prisoners may be transferred from one penitentiary to another by warrant of the Commissioner of Penitentiaries. Therefore, the Government feels it should be possible to do in Manitoba what is actually done in Alberta and British Columbia, and we suggest an amendment to this effect. This is the only amendment in section 4 of the bill.

Honourable senators, I hope that with this explanation the bill can be given second reading, after which it is my intention to refer it to a committee.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, with the full explanation we have just had of this bill, the only conclusion I can come to is that this legislation is necessary in relation to one province, and that generally it will assist in the rehabilitation of these unfortunate women. I can see no objection to the bill; as a matter of fact, I think it is good legislation. I rather think there is some urgency about it. I understand it has not yet been introduced in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It seems to me, therefore that honourable senators might agree to give the bill second reading now and not bother sending it to committee.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I would certainly agree to the bill being given second reading tonight, with the thought that third reading be given as soon as possible so that the bill can be sent to the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Might I ask the sponsor of the bill if there is any reason for sending female persons convicted in New Brunswick to the reformatory at Halifax instead of Saint John?

Hon. Mr. Méthot: The reason is that the reformatory in Saint John, New Brunswick, has actually been closed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It is a necessity.

Motion agreed to, and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Méthot: With leave of the Senate, next sitting.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 837)

SUMMARY OF ELECTRICITY EXPORTATION FOR THE YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1956

Name of company	Kilowatt hours exported	Tax revenue paid
		$
Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario (firm)	384,138,000	115,241.40
Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario (surplus)	2,633,286,400	789,985.92
Cedars Rapids Transmission Company Limited	631,735,076	189,523.52
Canadian Niagara Power Company Limited (firm)	271,485,374	81,445.60
Canadian Niagara Power Company Limited (surplus)	35,255,400	10,576.62
Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company Limited	41,814,800	12,544.44
Maine and New Brunswick Elec. Power Co. Ltd. (firm)	15,146,683	4,544.01
Maine and New Brunswick Elec. Power Co. Ltd. (surplus)	3,795,685	1,138.70
B.C. Electric Railway Company Limited	853,525	256.09
B.C. Electric Company Limited (surplus)	89,536,537	26,860.96
Textile Sales Limited	100	0.03
West Kootenay Power and Light Company Ltd	12,862	3.85
Southern Canada Power Company Limited (firm)	4,307,750	1,292.34
Southern Canada Power Company Limited (surplus)	38,604,848	11,581.48
Northern B.C. Power Company Limited	21,203	6.34
Fraser Companies Limited (hydro-generated)	262,000	78.60
Fraser Companies Limited (steam-generated)	72,000	21.60
Detroit and Windsor Subway Company	372,800	111.84
Manitoba Power Commission	6,748	2.02
New Brunswick Electric Power Commission	28,515	8.56
TOTALS	4,150,746,306	1,245,223.92

SUMMARY OF ELECTRICITY EXPORTATION FOR THE YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1957

Name of company	Kilowatt hours exported	Tax revenue paid
		$
Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario (firm)	393,169,000	117,950.70
Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario (surplus)	3,897,060,305	1,169,118.09
Cedars Rapids Transmission Company Limited	614,390,898	184,317.27
Canadian Niagara Power Company Limited (firm)	295,906,556	88,771.95
Canadian Niagara Power Company Limited (surplus)	52,327,600	15,698.28
Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company Limited	42,961,700	12,888.51
Maine and New Brunswick Elec. Power Co. Ltd. (firm)	20,521,778	6,156.53
Maine and New Brunswick Elec. Power Co. Ltd. (surplus)	4,118,731	1,235.61
B.C. Electric Railway Company Limited (firm)	945,175	283.56
B.C. Electric Company Limited (surplus)	17,373,376	5,212.01
Textile Sales Limited	1,100	0.33
West Kootenay Power and Light Company Ltd	14,670	4.40
Southern Canada Power Company Limited (firm)	4,918,680	1,475.60
Southern Canada Power Company Limited (surplus)	42,924,564	12,877.38
Northern B.C. Power Company Limited	21,356	6.42
Fraser Companies Limited (hydro-generated)	178,000	53.40
Fraser Companies Limited (steam-generated)	831,400	249.42
Detroit and Windsor Subway Company	428,300	128.49
Manitoba Power Commission	10,380	3.11
New Brunswick Electric Power Commission	32,052	9.60
TOTALS	5,388,135,621	1,616,440.66

SUMMARY OF ELECTRICITY EXPORTATION FOR THE YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1958

Name of company	Kilowatt hours exported	Tax revenue paid
		$
Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario (firm)	394,200,000	118,260.00
Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario (surplus)	3,416,861,600	1,025,058.48
Cedars Rapids Transmission Company Limited	479,099,451	143,729.82
Canadian Niagara Power Company Limited (firm)	306,084,193	91,825.27
Canadian Niagara Power Company Limited (surplus)	48,918,000	14,675.40
Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company Limited	40,025,900	12,007.77
Maine and New Brunswick Elec. Power Co. Ltd. (firm)	32,050,471	9,615.14
Maine and New Brunswick Elec. Power Co. Ltd. (surplus)	12,182,354	3,654.71
B. C. Electric Railway Company Ltd. (firm)	1,111,775	333.55
B. C. Electric Company Limited (surplus)	11,489,489	3,446.85
West Kootenay Power and Light Company Limited	12,818	3.83
Textile Sales Limited	—	—
Southern Canada Power Company Limited (firm)	5,013,480	1,504.04
Southern Canada Power Company Limited (surplus)	38,176,938	11,453.08
Northern B. C. Power Company Limited	18,070	5.42
Fraser Companies Limited (hydro-generated)	1,246,000	373.80
Fraser Companies Limited (steam generated)	10,586,000	3,175.80
Detroit and Windsor Subway Company	441,500	132.45
Manitoba Power Commission	23,835	7.16
New Brunswick Electric Power Commission	12,308,537	3,692.55
TOTALS	4,809,850,411	1,442,955 12

SUMMARY OF ELECTRICITY EXPORTATION FOR THE YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1959

Name of company	Kilowatt hours exported	Tax revenue paid
		$
Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario (firm)	394,200,000	118,260.00
Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario (surplus)	2,429,725,220	728,917.57
Cedars Rapids Transmission Company Limited	472,275,824	141,682.73
Canadian Niagara Power Company Limited (firm)	287,150,094	86,145.04
Canadian Niagara Power Company Limited (surplus)	51,449,440	15,434.83
Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company Limited	37,970,400	11,391.12
Maine and New Brunswick Elec. Power Co. Ltd. (firm)	38,406,045	11,521.80
Maine and New Brunswick Elec. Power Co. Ltd. (surplus)	17,697,689	5,309.33
B. C. Electric Railway Company Limited (firm)	1,349,100	404.73
B. C. Electric Company Limited (surplus)	11,300,301	3,390.09
West Kootenay Power and Light Company Limited	14,650	4.40
Southern Canada Power Company Limited (firm)	4,652,080	1,395.63
Southern Canada Power Company Limited (surplus)	31,896,672	9,568.99
Northern B. C. Power Company Limited	17,165	5.15
Fraser Companies Limited (hydro-generated—firm)	587,000	176.10
Fraser Companies Limited (hydro-generated—surplus)	26,120,000	7,836.00
Fraser Companies Limited (steam-generated—surplus)	26,187,000	7,856.10
Detroit and Windsor Subway Company	413,300	123.99
Manitoba Power Commission	31,250	9.39
New Brunswick Electric Power Commission	34,381,055	10,314.32
British Columbia Power Commission	—	—
TOTALS	3,865,824,285	1,159,747.31

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 18, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

JUDGES BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, for Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill C-56.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (C-56) intituled: "An Act to amend the Judges Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 16, 1959, examined the said bill, and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: With leave, I move the third reading now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Why 8 o'clock?

The Hon. the Speaker: Any objections?

Motion agreed to.

CHATEAU LAURIER HOTEL PARKING LOT

DISCUSSION ON ANSWER TO INQUIRY

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, may I refer to the answer given by the Government to my inquiry on the hotel parking lot at the Chateau Laurier?

I am not at all satisfied with the answer, that the parking area is operated as a concession by City Parking Limited, that tenders were called and the concession was awarded on the basis of the highest return to the Canadian National Railways. I want to know something about the cost of operating the parking lot.

Certainly, we have come to a fine impasse if the great Chateau Laurier hotel in the capital city of Canada is placed in a position where it must disregard the parking needs of patrons who use its rooms and other services, and sell parking space to other than patrons of the hotel. We will no doubt soon be hearing about the deficit on other operations of the railway. I have long been interested in having this space on the west side of the hotel put to the best possible use; indeed, some fifteen years ago I suggested that this useless area should be used to facilitate access to the hotel by motorists. But now that the area has been improved it is given away as a concession to other than patrons of the hotel.

Surely we are entitled to some more information on this question. I would like to know what revenue the lot is yielding, and if the hotel has handed over full control without reserving to itself the right to accommodate its customers.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: May I suggest to my honourable friend that the information he seeks might be quite readily obtained when the Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee Bill comes before us in committee and officials of the railway are present.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I expect to be introducing that bill when it comes to the Senate, and we will make it a point to have a full inquiry at that time. No doubt the president and other officials of the railway will appear before the committee, and I see no reason why they should object to giving us full details.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: They had better have the answers.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Yes, they had better bring the material with them.

SEEDS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the third reading of Bill S-24, respecting the testing, inspection and sale of seeds.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. John Hnatyshyn moved the third reading of Bill C-38, to make provision for the reduction of certain class and commodity rates on freight traffic.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, while I have no objection to the passing of this bill I feel, coming as I do from the Maritimes, that I should put a few comments on record. First of all, the title of the bill is misleading. It is entitled "An Act to make provision for the reduction of certain class and commodity rates on freight traffic". It is true that $20 million is being assigned to the railways for the purpose of offsetting a revision of certain freight rates, and there is a general feeling in the Atlantic provinces that this will assist to reduce freight rates in the Atlantic provinces and the far west. But what do we find? The $20 million is divided as follows: The western region is to receive $11,340,000. The central region of Ontario and Quebec, which is not affected to any great extent because it has competitive rates will receive $5,300,000. The four Atlantic provinces will receive $3,360,000. So I feel this bill is not going to achieve what the people in the Atlantic provinces think it will. I wanted to put this thought on record, for it was the original intention of the royal commissions investigating transportation that measures of this kind would assist reducing freight charges on the long haul to and from the central markets. This bill will certainly not do that to any great extent.

The principle of the bill really goes back to the days of Confederation when the Maritimes were promised access to the central markets. Now, the four Atlantic provinces have a total population of only 1,763,692, compared to 10,033,311 in Quebec and Ontario and 4,283,788 in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and the Yukon, and this legislation certainly will not help to promote trade between east and west.

I hope there will be an opportunity in the future to improve the situation with respect to the Atlantic provinces. It will be noted that the bill provides that the revised rates shall not be applicable for a period exceeding one year.

Honourable senators, I hope those who were responsible for introducing this bill will give greater consideration to the needs of the Atlantic provinces, and that a higher percentage than 16.8 per cent of the total amount of $20 million will go toward assisting these provinces.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

EXCISE TAX BILL

ORDER FOR THIRD READING STANDS

On the order for the third reading of Bill C-47, to amend the Excise Tax Act:

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if he will allow third reading of this bill to stand until the next sitting? My reason for requesting this is that I wish to make a few remarks about a certain section of the bill relating to the tobacco tax. I would rather not do so now because there is more pressing legislation to come before the house today. The tax increases as specified in the bill are already in effect, so the treasury will not suffer if third reading of the bill is held over until the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That will be quite all right. I do not expect there will be a royal assent for a few days, and probably we shall have given third reading to this bill before then.

Order stands.

INCOME TAX BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the third reading of Bill C-48, to amend the Income Tax Act, as amended.

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. Méthot moved the third reading of Bill S-26, to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 11, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt for the second reading of Bill C-41, to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

Hon. Harold Connolly (Halifax North): Honourable senators, after the thrusts and counter-thrusts of yesterday, featuring I think the most brilliant impromptu debate to which I have ever listened, I find myself today in a very happy position, happy because if there were innuendoes extended or intimated in yesterday's debate there will be none today, and certainly there will be no necessity for a devasting counter-attack at some future date.

I find myself not only in a comfortable position but in the traditional position that is usually ascribed to members of my race, because I am "agin" everything, and that being so I do not expect any retaliation because, if I strike a chord which is not in harmony with the thinking of the vast majority here, I am sure that the courtesy of the members of this chamber will overcome any tendency to put me in my place.

I am to speak, as you know, on the bill already referred to by the Clerk Assistant and so well described in the explanatory notes as follows:

> The effect of the proposed amendment will be to extend for a further year the rate of 13 per cent for standard individual income tax for the purpose of calculating the tax equalization payments to the provinces and the amounts payable to the provinces under the tax rental agreements.

Honourable senators, some of the comments that I shall make will of necessity be critical, but I would like to make it clear at the very outset that I do not speak in this debate as a follower of the Liberal party. I say that because some of the criticisms that I shall make will apply with just as much force and effect to the former administration as to the present one. I speak, rather, as one who has a high regard for the provincial autonomy granted the provinces of Canada by the Constitution of this country, and I may therefore perhaps be roughly described in what I have to say today as an apostle of provincial rights.

I believe that nothing contributes more to the debilitation of public morale than the non-fulfilment of promises made at one time or another by prominent governmental figures. It weakens respect for government, it develops a devastating public cynicism and so does inestimable harm to our system of Government.

Permit me to refer to three pledges, or perhaps pious hopes would be a better term, all of which have gone down the drain. All have a direct and particular application to this bill before us and each has brought about a marked change in our system of government and in our natural economy.

To refresh our memories, let us take a brief walk down memory lane, though perhaps I should describe that avenue better from the provincial standpoint as the boulevard of broken dreams.

I would like to take you back to 1917, when the then Minister of Finance introduced the first Income Tax Act. He said he did it reluctantly and only because of the war emergency. I think that on an occasion prior to today the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) made some references to this act, but from the angle of comic relief it might be opportune to review it today, and I shall do so very briefly.

The income tax on corporations in that year, 1917, was 4 per cent on all corporations with income exceeding $3,000.

And let us gaze at the personal income tax. To those fortunate individuals whose income did not exceed $3,000, no tax whatever was applied. They were completely exempt. Those in the $5,000 bracket, which was a rather handsome income for that day, paid in taxes to the federal Government the enormous sum of $80.

The still more fortunate ones who earned $7,000—I notice a rather surprised look on the faces of one or two of my colleagues opposite.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: On the faces of some senators on your side also.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): Persons in the fortunate position of earning $7,000 paid an income tax of $180 to the federal Government. Those in the $10,000 class paid $360. And the plutocrats with an income of $25,000 paid the magnificent sum of $1,860 per year.

Well, despite what the Finance Minister of that time said, income tax has not been abolished. On the contrary, it has become greater and greater with every succeeding year, until it has now reached the point of near strangulation.

Then, in 1941, another Canadian Finance Minister introduced another change in governmental policy. He established another precedent and in writing to all the Provincial Treasurers he was most careful to set out the situation as he saw it with the utmost clarity. In his letter there was one critical, important passage, which I will read:

> It is proposed, therefore, as a temporary expedient, for the duration of the war only, to ask the provinces to vacate these two fields (corporation and income taxes). I would like to emphasize that this is not an attempt to get the provinces out of the tax fields permanently.

Well, the provinces are still in limbo. There is no indication when, if ever, they are going to be released from bondage, and certainly there is nothing on the horizon to lead one to expect that the day of their release will come soon. As a matter of fact, the whole character of the partnership of the Canadian provinces has changed as a result of that precedent, and a federal Frankenstein—no matter how benevolent it may appear to be, and, in some cases, is—rules the roost.

It is a far cry from the hope and desires of the Fathers of Confederation. If there is a moral to be gleaned from the experience, it is that nothing is so apt to be permanent as a temporary tax. That, at least, has been our experience.

So we pass to the third episode.

Prior to 1957, although agreeing, for reasons of acute necessity, to vacate those fields to which I have referred, in favour of the federal Government, the provinces were unhappy over the distribution of tax moneys —I hope I am not frightening some of my colleagues with these direful figures—and made no secret of their unhappiness. Then came an election period. During that period the right honourable gentleman who is now Prime Minister of Canada made certain positive statements which raised the hopes of people in all provinces. Permit me to recall several of them to you. In his opening campaign speech in Massey Hall, Toronto, on April 25, 1957, the present Prime Minister said:

> We believe there can be no national unity in this nation until there is a realization that the federal-provincial matters have handcuffed the provinces of this nation; have denied the municipalities adequate sources of revenue; have placed the provinces and the municipalities in a position where they cannot discharge their constitutional responsibilities or permit the necessary development in their own territorial confines of the natural resources that there are. We believe the provinces and municipalities must have the financial resources to carry out those responsibilties. We believe in the federal system of Government. We believe that its preservation is essential to Canadian unity. We believe the federal system is today being challenged by the centralization complex of the St. Laurent Government and that a healthy division and balance of revenues as between the federal and provincial Governments must be assured.
>
> We intend to form a Government to immediately convene a dominion-provincial conference to bring about a settlement of these problems, not in the spirit of arrogant domination as displayed by the present Government, but in the spirit of unity and amity and with mutual tolerance and respect.

Honourable senators, those were words of wisdom that made a stirring impression upon the people of this land. And of particular appeal was the honourable gentleman's announced aversion to centralization.

In another speech in the same campaign, made by way of a television broadcast on April 30, 1957, the right honourable gentleman said this:

> In general, may I say this—that we will reverse the whole trend of centralization of authority in Ottawa. We'll restore the rights of Parliament, and the provinces, and the people of Canada. We will take whatever steps may be necessary to restore the supremacy of Parliament over the Government, so that never again will scenes take place as they did in the House of Commons a year ago on Black Friday.

Those words too were listened to with acclaim, not only by those who followed his party fortunes, but by Canadians generally who were not happy with the existing state of affairs.

I shall give you one more quotation from the same source. In a radio speech on May 23, 1957, the right honourable gentleman had this to say:

> We will put an end to excessive over-taxation. We will call a session of Parliament in September to reduce taxes, and at that session, with five hundred million dollars over-taxation last year we will be able to increase the old age and other pensions to fair and reasonable amounts.

Now, I say this to honourable senators, and if it be heresy I stand indicted, that no one could find fault with any of those statements. Yet, peculiarly enough, on reflection we have cause to wonder.

I believe that the Minister of Finance in 1917 meant what he said when he declared that income tax was to be only a temporary expedient. I think the Minister of Finance of 1941 was equally forthright when he told the provinces that the tax fields would be returned to them at the close of the war. And I believe that the right honourable gentleman who is now Prime Minister of Canada meant exactly what he said, and that he intended to do what he said he would do, if and when he took over the reins of office.

Yet, income tax is still with us. The federal Government has not returned the tax fields to the provinces. And the present administration, whose leader started out with such high hopes, has not put an end to excessive over-taxation, and has not reversed the trend of excessive centralization in the capital city of this country.

Now where, I ask you, does this leave us? It leaves us, I suggest, with a cynical populace, a group of disgruntled provinces, an impaired faith in the utterances of public men, and this bill which we are now debating.

It had been hoped that this administration would do what the former Government failed to do. But that hope has not been realized. A dominion-provincial conference was called. It lasted two days. Then the heads of the provincial Governments were sent home to await the decision of their financial masters. In justice to the present administration, it must be said that it has been more generous to the provinces than was the preceding administration. It has been especially so in respect to the Maritimes. But, honourable senators, the principle has remained unchanged. The provinces are still without their right to tax in those fields, and are still in the same position they had been in for years under another administration, namely, that they receive as many dollars as Ottawa chooses to give them, and no more.

No province is happy in this situation. The wealthier provinces are perhaps better able to stand it, but the less well-off provinces, although they are receiving more money, are in sorry condition.

Let me recall to you, as I did on a previous occasion, and very briefly, the financial picture in my own province. I have before me the condensed statement of revenue and expenditures for Nova Scotia for the year ending March 31, 1958. The total revenues are, in round figures, $66,750,000. There are three principal items in that total, and the largest is $28,764,000, in round figures, which went to Nova Scotia from the federal treasury. That constitutes, as simple arithmetic will show, approximately 43 per cent of the total revenues of the province.

I use that figure not to reflect upon the largesse of the Federal Government, but to point up the position in which a province finds itself when almost half its revenue comes by way of a handout from another Government. And what applies to Nova Scotia applies to all the other less well-off provinces in the same way, proportionately. I do not think I exaggerate when I say that Newfoundland is unhappy, as all the world knows and as the honourable senator from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt) pointed out so effectively a few days ago. Nova Scotia is not too well pleased. New Brunswick's Premier, as quoted by the financial editor of the Montreal Gazette, refers to the "castor oil treatment by Ottawa". I will allow you to put your own interpretation on that.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Some people like castor oil.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): Quebec is violently unhappy, and I am not too sure that Ontario is too well pleased. The Premier of that province has referred frequently, although not in the last election campaign, to the extra millions of dollars his province should be receiving yearly from the federal Government. And so it goes, all the way across the country.

Ever since 1941, sated with power because of their monetary control, successive federal Governments have, it seems to me, become imbued with the idea that they can do no wrong, or very little wrong. One would almost think that they had never heard of the Magna Carta. As a matter of fact, when turning my mind back to some of the continued episodes I commence to question the knowledge imparted to me by my early teachers, and to wonder whether the provinces created the federation or the federation created the provinces. Being troubled in my mind I undertook a little research, and I discovered that my early teaching and my subsequent belief were correct, that the federation was created by the provinces. I had the good fortune to run across further authority to the same effect in the decision of the Privy Council in Liquidators of the Dominion Bank of Canada vs. Receiver General of New Brunswick, (1892) Appeal Cases, page 437. Herein it is clearly demonstrated that the federation of provinces did not affect the extinction of provincial autonomy. Rather, as the Privy Council said:

> The object of the act was neither to weld the provinces into one nor to subordinate provincial governments to a central authority, but to create a federal government in which they should all be represented, entrusted with the exclusive administration of affairs in which they had a comomn interest, each province retaining its independence and autonomy.

Doubtless, there are those who will argue that the provinces have not really lost their autonomy; that what they have yielded is by agreement, and that at the proper time will be restored to them—that time being, I take it, when an era of real peace comes to the world. However, the Premier of Quebec, who stands like Horatius at the bridge in defence of provincial rights, does not think so, and there are thousands of Canadians, among whom I am one, who do not think so.

There are a number of reasons for this thinking, but I shall refer only to several of them.

Let me say, first of all, that power is not easily yielded. That is a lesson that history teaches all to well. Power is a vicious virus that infects the blood stream of those who acquire it, and there is no known antibiotic to counteract it.

Secondly, the less well-off provinces have been placed in a precarious position by these handouts from Ottawa. They receive in cash moneys more than they could raise by taxes within their own boundaries. With these moneys they have increased their services and improved their standards of living. They are the beneficiaries of a share-the-wealth scheme that knows no precedent in Canada's history. If they are to maintain their present standards they must always continue to sign tax agreements or risk severe economic setbacks unless, of course, the federal Government, by grants in aid, can supply the deficit.

As for the wealthier provinces, they, too, have constant demands for new and improved services. It must be a disconcerting thing for a province like Ontario to see millions of its dollars drained annually and many of its projects stymied because it is not able to use its own money for its own purposes.

My belief is that every tub should stand on its own bottom. But perhaps that is too simple a philosophy, and too old fashioned, for this complex age and for this Machiavellian political era in which we find ourselves. Personally, I would rather have less than be compelled to come hat in hand and almost genuflect before the portals of Ottawa in order to obtain more. I offer this as an aside and as the product of my own thinking and belief.

Politics being what they are, it is unlikely that an effective voice will be raised on behalf of the provinces by elected representatives. I realize that my own is but a voice crying in a new economic wilderness where spending, not saving, is the order of the day; where thrift has become an old-fashioned word to be jeered and laughed at rather than respected. But surely we have not reached a level where we are prepared to disregard the constitution of the country or repudiate the promises of respected public men.

If we are to redress the wrongs already done, let the federal Government call a dominion-provincial conference without delay. Permit the provinces to arrange the agenda. Instead of being a back-slapping gathering of a mutual admiration society, let that conference, in complete frankness, get down to cases.

In case you think I am not in good company in my proposals, may I read to you a brief statement from the proceedings of the dominion-provincial conference that was held in 1957. This is a statement made by the Prime Minister in his opening remarks:

> There have been times in the past when we have criticized the extent of federal participation in various common efforts on the part of the dominion and the provinces as inadequate. We have given our undertaking that when new fiscal arrangements are determined on, no province will receive less than it is now entitled to.

And that, I think it can be said, is a promise that has been kept.

> But I want to make this clear at the beginning. We are not placing before you any "take it or leave it" attitudes; we are not taking any hard or fast positions. We are not placing before you any rigid formulae.

Yet, honourable senators, we have before us a bill which strikes me as being fairly rigid. It is a repetition of the formula of a year ago.

I concede that, in the present unsettled state of world affairs, the tax arrangements could probably not be ended at this point. But since it is the money of the provinces that is being spent by the federal Government, I submit the provinces should have a clear voice in how that money is to be spent and in what quantities. "A new concept," someone will say. Perhaps. But at least it is based upon common sense, a commodity that is being used all too rarely in these hectic times.

Honourable senators, for what it is worth, and in the hope it may find an echo elsewhere, I oppose this bill which arbitrarily determines, without formal consultation of any kind, how many dollars the provinces shall receive. I resent the attitude by which a central Government imposes its will upon the people of Canada, and I intend to vote against this measure.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I have always understood that whenever federal-provincial tax-sharing agreements are being negotiated the provinces have the right to get out of them. As to the province of British Columbia, I know it would rather have the onus and responsibility of collecting income tax rest with Ottawa. My impression is that if a province does not wish to renew a tax-sharing agreement it merely has to notify the federal authority to that effect at the appropriate time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): That is right.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, this question of federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements is very important, and I congratulate my honourable colleague from Halifax North (Hon. Mr. Connolly) upon the timely speech he gave with the authority of a former Premier of his province and with his prestige as a senator of Canada. This matter has been made to look difficult, but it is just as simple and clear as spring water. If we look at sections 91, 92 and 93, in particular, of the British North America Act we see time and time again the words "exclusive" and "exclusively" used with reference to the legislative powers of the Parliament of Canada on one hand and of the provincial legislatures on the other hand. It means that in the view of the law makers, in the view of the Parliament at Westminster which adopted our Constitution, the Parliament of Canada should be entirely free within the scope of its attributions and that each one of the legislatures should be free within the scope of their own legislative powers. This was pretty well followed until World War I, and then, as my honourable friend from Halifax North mentioned, the dominion Government borrowed some provincial powers in order to impose income tax. It was not to be for ever. It was to be for a specific time, for the duration of the war, and afterwards those powers should have been returned to the provinces. There was a real and definite promise, but it was not carried out. Everybody protested against the encroachment of the Parliament of Canada on provincial rights. Nevertheless, it went on and on until, in 1935, at a dominion-provincial conference after the general election it was suggested by the then Minister of Finance that the dominion Government should enter into the field of succession duties. This caused many difficulties at the time between the Government of Canada on one hand and some provincial premiers on the other hand. That was the difficulty. It was that instead of returning the powers that had been taken from the provinces, the Parliament of Canada was taking over more and more power that belonged to the provinces. There were many federal-provincial conferences at which the matter was discussed. I remember that in 1940 or 1941, at the start of the war, such a conference finished abruptly because Mr. Mackenzie King was dissatisfied with it, and because of the war he took more power from the provinces.

My honourable friend from Halifax North said he was not speaking as a Liberal. I am speaking as a Liberal, as a disciple of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who said very plainly that the powers of the Parliament of Canada and of the provincial legislatures were distinct, and that it was a great mistake for Ottawa to collect taxation in order to distribute it to the provinces. It is a wrong idea that the Parliament of Canada should bear the odium of taxation in order to make gifts to the provinces. A distinction has been made between richer and poorer provinces. There is no such distinction. I have travelled from coast to coast and I have found no province that is poor. It is used as an argument to induce the Government to make some Christmas gifts to one province or another.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Has the honourable senator ever been down to New Brunswick?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: New Brunswick is a rich province, and my friend will not deny it. It is a province with a capitalistic outlook; the people are very well off and lead an independent life. They are now entering the mining field. I say New Brunswick is a rich province. It has wonderful fisheries, a big lumber industry, and many tourist attractions. No one in a moment could tell all about the natural resources of that province. The same could be said about all the provinces.

In such a case, what should be the attitude of the Government of Canada apropos of taxation? It should be that the provinces themselves should collect their own share of taxation, and then there would be no more gifts and each province would be on a footing of equality. It seems that is reasonable. Therefore I hope that in the near future there will be a federal-provincial conference where the facts will be put on the table, where the discussion will be sincere, and the Government of Canada will agree to give back to the provinces what was taken from them so many years ago. It is not a new story. All those who are familiar with the history of Canada must remember what was said and done by the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec when they went together and asked for equal rights. It appealed to the sense of fairness of the people of Canada; they wanted equal rights. That is what has been asked for by my honourable friend from Halifax North, that is what I ask for, and that is what is being considered by the premiers of all the provinces, in order to stop all friction between the Government of Canada and the various provincial Governments.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald, debate adjourned.

CANADA-FINLAND INCOME TAX CONVENTION BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the second reading of Bill C-54, to implement a convention between Canada and the Republic of Finland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

He said: Honourable senators, bills similar to this one have been before this chamber on many previous occasions. The purpose of this bill is to implement a convention between Canada and the Republic of Finland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to taxes on income. As honourable senators are aware, the bill is in the same form, and the convention which it is intended to ratify is in the same form also, as others which have been before the house in recent years. The substance of the convention follows the general pattern of the income tax conventions which Canada has entered into with many other countries, including the United States, the United Kingdom, New Zealand, France, Sweden, Ireland, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Union of South Africa, the Netherlands, Australia and Belgium. In particular, the provisions of this convention are similar to those in the convention between Canada and Denmark. I think, therefore, that a very general account of the terms of the convention will be sufficient.

The main purpose of the convention is to avoid double taxation of the income of persons, both individual and corporate, who are resident in one of the countries and receive income from the other country. The taxes included in the scope of the convention are the Canadian federal income taxes, including surtaxes, and the old age security tax on income, and the Finnish national income tax. As in Canada, this tax applies to incomes of both individuals and corporations, but there is no equivalent in Finland of Canada's federal old age security tax on income.

The chief means of avoiding double taxation, as is well known, is by a reciprocal system of tax credits whereby the country of residence gives credit for the tax imposed by the country where the income has its source.

Another means is by providing that in certain instances the country in which the income has its source is not to impose tax on that income. In this case it will be taxed only once, namely, by the country of residence. This rule applies to the following kinds of income: profits of shipping and aircraft companies, copyright royalties from certain artistic activities, purchased annuities, pensions made in consideration of past services, and business profits not derived through a permanent establishment. In some circumstances it also applies to the remuneration for personal services rendered by visitors who are businessmen, members of professions, professors, teachers, students and apprentices, and the like.

Double taxation is also reduced by restricting to a maximum rate of 15 per cent the withholding tax on certain income going from one country to residents of the other. It is reduced also by the prohibition of discriminatory taxes against citizens of the other country, and by the provision for settlement of special cases of double taxation by mutual agreement.

Honourable senators, by virtue of the fact that the convention being ratified by this bill is in nearly identical terms with the rest of the tax conventions, I do not think there is any need for me to explain the articles of this convention in detail. If and when the bill receives second reading here, I will move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on External Relations.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Has the honourable senator any information regarding article IX, which says that a person earning $3,000 or less is not taxable? The way I read it is that a Canadian is not taxed until he receives an income exceeding $3,000, and similarly a resident of Finland receiving compensation for personal services in Canada is not taxable until he earns over $3,000.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is my understanding.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Each is exempt from taxation?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, up to $3,000.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Beaubien, for Hon. Mr. Hayden, debate adjourned.

PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the second reading of Bill C-64, to amend the Prime Minister's Residence Act.

He said: Honourable senators, will remember that in June 1950 an act was passed which is now Chapter 216 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, providing for the establishment of a residence in Ottawa for Canada's Prime Minister. The purpose of the bill before us is to amend the schedule of that act to bring certain property in the township of Eardley, county of Gatineau, province of Quebec, within the scope of the act.

The schedule to the act as it now stands describes only one property, that on which the house known as 24 Sussex street in Ottawa is situated. The proposed amendment adds to the property described in the schedule some 13.4 acres of property in the Gatineau hills fronting on the lake referred to as Harrington or Mousseau.

This bill takes into account the recognition of the name Harrington Lake by the Canadian Board on Geographical Names some 25 years ago, followed by the board's reaffirmation of the decision in 1951 when this property was acquired by the Federal District Commission. It also takes into consideration the not uncommon usage of the name Lac Mousseau.

This measure, honourable senators, follows expressions of approval and support, I would say, from all members of Parliament and many others. And I have here in my hand a file containing quite a number of clippings from local newspapers which have been advocating for some time that this property be used as a country residence for Canada's Prime Minister. No doubt the widespread support the bill has received springs from the realization that the burdens carried by the Prime Minister of this country in this day and age are necessarily very onerous and wearisome.

The provision for the Prime Minister of a quiet place in the countryside, relatively near to Ottawa, will undoubtedly help him to relax and afford him some opportunity for full recreation and reflection. On occasion this property will also be used, when required, to provide hospitality for distinguished guests visiting this country from other countries.

In 1951 the then Federal District Commission purchased some 4,200 acres as part of a program for acquisition of property in Gatineau National Park. This acreage had been owned jointly by Colonel C. M. Edwards and the Honourable W. D. Herridge. It is the former Edwards home that is being included in the schedule to the act. The property does not take in any part of the lake. It is just the area on which the Edwards residence is located, and comprises some 13.4 acres, extending to the shore of the lake. The remaining Gatineau Park land will, of course, remain under the jurisdiction of the National Capital Commission for park purposes.

Honourable senators, that is all I have to say with regard to this measure. I believe it received unanimous consent in the other house, and I hope it will have the wholehearted support of every member of this chamber and be given second reading. After that, I do not know whether honourable senators might wish to have it referred to a committee or not. I have a great deal of information available here.

Hon. Mr. Reid: We should have someone to tell us all about it.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: How is the fishing in that lake?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: From what I have heard, I understand the fishing is rather good, although I have never had an invitation to cast a line into that lake yet.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You will now.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Just get this bill through and you will be the favourite son.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: As I mentioned, this bill does not cover any portion of the lake. I understand the lake is approached by a private road over the property, which road has not been open to the public generally. It is not a very big lake, and if it were thrown open to the thousands of fishermen who reside in Ottawa and district it probably would soon be fished out. However, the bill really has nothing to do with whether the fishing is good or bad.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask the honourable leader a question? Does ownership of the 13.4 acres on which stands the former residence of Colonel Edwards reside in the Crown, in the name of the National Capital Commission? If so, what department will be responsible for it?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The Department of Public Works will be responsible for the care of the property, in the same way as it is responsible for 24 Sussex Street, Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Personally, I think this bill should go to committee. I make that suggestion for the reason that this property is not being procured for the present Prime Minister, but for Prime Ministers over the next hundred years.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Reid: It is a national place.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Correct.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I would like to know if anyone has visited this property and approved of it, and what the cost is, and so on. I hope we shall be able to get that information.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: What does the honourable senator mean by cost?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Is there any cost in connection with it?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: There is no cost.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I did not know that until now.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The property is owned by the National Capital Commission, and this plot of 13.4 acres will be turned over to the Department of Public Works and will be administered in the future by that department. However, I have no objection to the bill going to committee, if any honourable senator wishes to have it further investigated.

Hon. Mr. Reid: This property is something we will all be proud of, and I think the more publicity given to it the better. I am not objecting to the bill in any way.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: You just want information?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Yes, I do.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, may I remind the house that an almost similar transaction was approved in this house, as a result of a bequest in the will of the late Mackenzie King, when his property at Kingsmere was transferred to the state, under the administration of the Department of Public Works, as part of the Gatineau Park. Before the legislation was approved and the bequest was accepted, it was suggested that the property might be as useful as a pleasant retreat to his successors in office as it had been to him. The property at Harrington Lake, which is now being identified as the Prime Minister's summer residence, is also in a naturally beautiful location. I happen to know something about this property, which belonged to Colonel Edwards, and I may say that I cannot conceive of a more beautiful site for a summer residence and retreat for the Prime Minister of this country. The property was appropriated by the Federal District Commission, as it then was, along with a considerable acreage adjoining that property, belonging to the Honourable W. D. Herridge. At the time this transfer was made the late Mr. Frederick Bronson was Chairman of the Federal District Commission, and it was through him that the property was acquired.

I believe I am correct when I say that Colonel Edwards made it possible for the Federal District Commission to acquire a much larger area than is defined as the proposed property for the Prime Minister's summer residence.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: This is just a small portion.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I think there were altogether some 800 acres, which had been occupied by the Honourable W. D. Herridge and Colonel Edwards. I knew more about the property occupied by Colonel Edwards than that of Mr. Herridge, which is located farther along the lake. My only observation is that it is a most desirable location, and should afford very excellent facilities for the purposes which the Leader of the Government has outlined.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: According to my memorandum, this property was part of an original area consisting of 4,286 acres acquired by the Federal District Commission in 1951 as part of the program for the acquisition of property for Gatineau Park. It was jointly owned by Edwards and Herridge, including the house.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Am I correct in saying that the acreage acquired by the Federal District Commission at that time did not reach the figure which the honourable Leader has given?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That was the total figure.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: It was not the total acreage acquired by the commission, but the total acreage of the property occupied by the two gentlemen mentioned.

My impression is that the Federal District Commission, as it then was under Mr. Bronson, purchased from Colonel Edwards and Mr. Herridge half of the property which was formerly owned by them for an amount which I believe to be somewhere in the neighbourhood of a quarter of a million dollars. That was not an exceptional transaction, because the then Federal District Commission was in the habit of acquiring property all through the Gatineau area for the purpose of laying the foundation for the park, which now exceeds 50,000 or 60,000 acres. So the area in which the Prime Minister's residence will be located may be said to be one of the acquisitions which have been made over the years for the purpose of building up the Federal District's interest in the Gatineau Park area.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: Honourable senators, I understand that Harrington Lake is three miles long, and contains lots of fish, big fat ones, all of which are to be reserved for the use of the Prime Minister of Canada. Now, if the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) receives an invitation to enjoy the facilities of the lake, as I expect he will, I would like to ask him if he would include me in on it.

The Hon. the Speaker: For the small fish.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am sure this bill will receive the unanimous approval of this house. From what we have heard, the property concerned is a desirable one, situated within easy access of Ottawa, yet not too close to the city. It will be a retreat to which the Prime Minister will be able to escape from his official residence, and still be close enough to return to Ottawa on short notice. I think it is quite appropriate that the Government should acquire this property to be used as the summer home for the Prime Minister.

Nothing was said as to whether the Prime Minister will be required to pay rent for the use of the property. Personally, I hope he will not be called upon to do so.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I think the rental is included in the $5,000 that is paid for 24 Sussex street, because this property is added to the property described in the schedule to the act.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Well, there is no additional rental for the country home?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I will go along with that. I will go further and say I have always questioned whether the Prime Minister should be required to pay rent for his home. The Government of Canada has provided a residence for the Prime Minister. Having done so, and requiring the Prime Minister to live in that residence, the Government then says: "You must live there. You cannot live any place else, and you have to pay rent for that residence". I am quite sure that the President of the United States of America and the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom do not pay rent for their respective official residences.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: The British Prime Minister has 10 Downing street and Chequers.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am sure he pays no rent for either of those places.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Does the honourable senator know whether the President of France pays rent?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I would doubt very much whether the President of France pays rent.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I am quite doubtful myself.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There is an official residence for the President of France for which, I am quite satisfied, he does not pay rent. Surely Canada is now in a sound enough financial position that if it provides a residence for the Prime Minister, and requires him to live in that residence, it does not need to exact rent for it.

Hon. Mr. Reid: One of the particular reasons why I would like to see this bill go to the committee is that I remember the purchasing of the present residence for the Prime Minister, and I think I could have done a better job for $1 million than was done in that case. In my opinion, that house should have been torn down and rebuilt. Perhaps there are people living in Ottawa who would dispute that, but I have been through it and looked at it, and I am convinced we spent a lot of money without investigating the property. We are now going to purchase another residence, and I am all for it, but I do think we should have more information than we now have.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I remember when the other bill was before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce of the Senate the question of income tax was raised. The sum of $5,000 is not a rent payment, as I understand it. It is a payment for the food and services and everything else that the Prime Minister gets, the value of which he would have to add to his income, and thus pay income tax to a greater extent than the $5,000 if it were not dealt with in the way in which it is now dealt with. I may be wrong, but that is what I think happened.

Hon. Mr. Reid: We will find out in committee.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, we will find that out in committee. I intend to move that this bill be referred to one of the standing committees.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

PRIVATE BILL

STANDARD TRUST COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the second reading of Bill S-28, to incorporate Standard Trust Company.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a very simple bill and I will try to be very brief in my remarks explaining it. As indicated by the title, the purpose of the bill is to incorporate a trust company under the name of Standard Trust Company. The purpose of the bill is simply to set up a trust company in compliance with the terms and provisions of the Trust Companies Act, and, of course, the company would be subject to supervision by the Department of Insurance.

The sponsors of the bill, as set out in clause 1, are: Stephen B. Roman, president of a number of mining companies which own and operate properties in the province of Ontario. He resides on a large farm adjacent to Unionville, Ontario. Bertram E. Willoughby, the second sponsor, resides in Toronto. He is a well known real estate agent in that city, and is an officer and director of a number of mining companies. Wilbur C. Cochrane also resides at Toronto. He is President of Cochrane Dunlop Hardware Company Limited, a well-known wholesale hardware firm doing business throughout Ontario, as well as being a director of a number of companies. Harry A. Willis is a solicitor residing at Belfountain, Ontario. He carries on his law practice in the city of Toronto, and is a senior member of the well-known legal firm of Willis and Dingwall. He is a member of the Board of Governors of McMaster University and a director of a number of companies doing business in Ontario. Murray Axmith is an executive and a chartered accountant, and a director and officer of a number of companies in Ontario. He resides in the township of Etobicoke. Wesley G. Thompson is a large farmer and the owner and operator of a large feed mill in western Ontario. He is a former member of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario, and for a period of three years served as Minister of Lands and Forests for the province of Ontario. Mr. Thompson resides at Ridgetown in southwestern Ontario. George G. Rodanz resides at Stouffville, Ontario. He is a large farmer and is a director of the Royal Agricultural Winter Fair and the Canadian National Exhibition, as well as being Past President of the Ontario Hereford Association. John Bull, the last named sponsor, is a large farmer and breeder of purebred Jersey cattle. He resides at Brampton, Ontario, and is president and an officer of a number of nationally known exhibitions and certain purebred Jersey associations.

All of the sponsors have had extensive business experience and are well qualified to act as directors of a trust company.

Should this bill pass and the trust company be incorporated, it is the intention of the sponsors to exercise the full powers of a trust company. The company will act as a transfer agent, will exercise the full powers of a corporate trustee, will accept moneys for deposit in savings accounts, will issue guaranteed investment certificates, and do all the other necessary work that is carried on by a trust company today.

The name which has been chosen by the sponsors is Standard Trust Company. I understand that the name "Standard Trust Company" appears to be satisfactory to the officials in the federal Department of Insurance, and to the company officials in the Department of the Secretary of State. However, I want to assure all honourable senators that when the bill is considered by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, if it is by any chance felt that the name "Standard Trust Company" is not a suitable or satisfactory one as far as the Government officials are concerned, the sponsors of the bill will readily agree to change the name to one that is satisfactory to all concerned.

In the bill it is proposed that the capital stock of the company shall be $3 million, which may be increased to $5 million if such an increase is found necessary.

Honourable senators will note from clause 4 of the bill that $500,000 must be subscribed before the provisional directors can call a general meeting of shareholders for the purpose of organizing the company. This, I understand, conforms with the provisions of the Trust Companies Act.

Furthermore, the bill provides that even after the sum of $500,000 has been subscribed the company shall not commence business until $1 million of capital stock shall have been subscribed and at least $1 million paid thereon.

From information furnished to me I understand that it is the present intention of the sponsors of this bill to provide that $1,100,000 shall be paid for the first $1 million of capital stock which shall be subscribed for and issued, the purpose of this being to immediately provide this company with a capital surplus of $100,000. As all honourable senators well know, a trust company loses money when it first commences to do business, and the sponsors feel that rather than have the capital of the company impaired by a loss which the company will incur when it commences business, the company will be provided with a capital surplus of approximately $100,000, and any loss which may be incurred can be charged against the capital surplus account.

I understand from the sponsors that they are in a position to immediately provide the trust company with stock transfer business which should produce an annual income of approximately $100,000 for the company.

Finally, it is proposed that the head office of the company shall be in the city of Toronto in the province of Ontario. Clause 7, the final clause of the bill, provides that the company shall have all the powers, privileges and immunities conferred by the Trust Companies Act and shall be subject to all the limitations, liabilities and provisions of that act.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Would the honourable senator be good enough to explain how this additional $100,000 is arranged?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: By selling stock at a premium. For instance, if the stock had a par value of $100 you could sell it at $110 a share and in that way you could pick up a premium of $10 on each share sold.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Thank you.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before the house adjourns I would like to remind you that there will be a meeting of the Standing Committee on External Relations tomorrow morning at 10.30. On Tuesday next there will be meetings of the Finance Committee at 10.15 a.m. and 2.30 p.m., of the Tourist Traffic Committee at 10.30 a.m. and of the Natural Resources Committee at 2 p.m.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 23, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 23, 1959

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-43, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: With leave, next sitting.

VETERANS' LAND BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-50, to amend the Veterans' Land Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Tuesday next.

PUBLIC SERVICE PENSION ADJUSTMENT BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-60, respecting the adjustment of certain public service pensions.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS FINANCING AND GUARANTEE BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-61, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System for the period from the 1st day of January, 1959 to the 30th day of June, 1960, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

CANADIAN FORCES SUPERANNUATION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-62, respecting the superannuation of members of the Canadian Forces.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

International Wheat Agreement, 1959, as adopted at the final Plenary Session, United Nations Wheat Conference, held at Geneva on 10th March, 1959. (English and French texts).

Report of the Department of Trade and Commerce for the calendar year 1958, pursuant to section 7 of the Department of Trade and Commerce Act, Chapter 78, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Report of the Canadian Farm Loan Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 85 of Chapter 116, R.S. 1952. (English text).

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave, I move, seconded by the Honourable W. Ross Macdonald, P.C., Leader of the Opposition, that the International Wheat Agreement opened for signature at Washington, D.C., on April 6, 1959 be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this date.

Motion agreed to.

For text of agreement see appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 876-92.

PRIVATE BILL

DESJARDINS LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. Gustave Monette presented Bill S-29, to incorporate Desjardins Life Insurance Company.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Monette: With leave, next sitting.

TOURIST TRAFFIC

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. R. B. Horner, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic, presented a report of the committee.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic report as follows:

The committee recommend that they be authorized to print 600 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be considered?

Hon. Mr. Horner: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Natural Resources, presented the report of the committee on Bill C-49.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Natural Resources, to whom was referred the Bill (C-49) intituled: "An Act to provide for the establishment of a National Energy Board", report as follows:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Motion agreed to.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Relations, presented a report of the committee on Bill C-52.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on External Relations, to whom was referred the Bill (C-52) intituled: "An Act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act", report as follows:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said Bill.

66972-1—55

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson presented a further report of the Standing Committee on External Relations on Bill C-52.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on External Relations, to whom was referred the Bill (C-52) intituled: "An Act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 16, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Now.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Next sitting.

CITIZENSHIP

NOTICE OF INQUIRIES

On the notice of inquiries by Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

No. 1.

1. What is the total population of Canada?

2. By virtue of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration Act, and according to the most recent figures, how many persons in Canada:

(a) are British subjects, Canadian citizens, and citizens of the Commonwealth?

(b) are British subjects but are not Canadian citizens nor citizens of the Commonwealth?

(c) are citizens of the Commonwealth but are not British subjects nor Canadian citizens?

(d) are Canadian citizens but who are not British subjects nor citizens of the Commonwealth?

(e) are neither British subjects nor Canadian citizens nor citizens of the Commonwealth?

No. 2.

1. In Canada, how many married women have not been divorced and not separated from their husbands?

2. How many of these married women living in Canada have a citizenship distinct and different from that of their husbands?

3. Has the Canadian Government received from married women living in Canada and women's associations in Canada requests for amendment to the laws to permit married women to have a citizenship distinct from that of their husbands?

4. If so, from what persons and what associations, with the address of each one?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Stand.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, with regard to my two inquiries, it seems that it would be only fair to have that information complete before the Senate proceeds with the motion standing in the name of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for approval of the so-called convention on married women. I do not know how we can discuss such a matter without having the information that I asked for. That information should be on the desks of the Minister and Deputy Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, and if it is there they have only to copy the figures in order to inform us. It is just as simple as that. If they do not have that information, if they say it requires a lot of work to answer those questions, it means that they do not have that information on their desks as they should have. My suggestion would be, in the language of the honourable Senator Hayden, to "bargain" with the leader to postpone the motion until after I have the information asked for. I will not be satisfied with what I asked because I have some more information to ask for tomorrow about those who drafted that so-called convention, which is not a convention. They are people who belong to no country. They are citizens of the United Nations, they pay no tax, they belong to no country and they cannot be patriots. I will not insist further for the time being, honourable senators.

NEW BRUNSWICK FISHING FLEET DISASTER

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Clarence V. Emerson: Honourable senators, tonight I rise to express concern over the tragedy that has struck on the north shore of my native province of New Brunswick. Tragedies come and go, but this time human lives have gone as well. I know the sympathy of all goes out to those so bereaved.

I would urge a human and understanding Government to do everything possible to help those families thus stricken. Yesterday the British peer Lord Beaverbrook made an announcement from his London home that he would donate $5,000 to start a Fishermen's Disaster Fund for those who suffered in the New Brunswick fishing fleet tragedy. These heart-broken families have lost their breadwinners. Their livelihood has been snuffed out like a burning candle, swiftly and surely. No one can evaluate human life, but we can show appreciation of it.

I commend to our Government any help that is within its power to give. Financial assistance can relieve to a degree the added burden of worry and uncertainty at such a time. The privilege to mourn in peace is every human being's right.

In closing, may I add my own personal heartfelt sympathy to the families so bereaved. It is my prayer that they will be sustained in their great sorrow and loss by their faith and belief that a power higher than ours has ordained it so.

> Death is but a path that must be trod
> If man would ever pass to God.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I am sure that every member of the Senate will feel a deep sense of regret and sorrow at this tragic disaster to which my colleague has referred. The fishing villages concerned, at the mouth of the Miramichi River, in the county of Northumberland, are in my constituency. On Sunday afternoon last I visited the scene of this tragic occurrence, and I can assure honourable senators that notwithstanding everything that has been written so well in the press, and what has been communicated to us over radio and by television, one has to go there, on the scene, and see for himself what has taken place, to really measure the extent of this awful occurrence.

These people, and there are no finer citizens in our land, make their living by going down to the sea. They, their fathers and their grandfathers before them have fished off that coast. The sudden storm on Friday night churned up the sea, producing waves fifty feet high, as I was told by some of the survivors, and up-ended and turned over boats forty, forty-five and fifty feet long, boats which had been constructed within the last year. One has to view the damage and see how those boats were overturned, broken and destroyed, to appreciate the force of the storm which so suddenly, in the middle of the night, struck this community.

I believe that, of about fifty boats which went out on Friday afternoon, twenty-three did not return. In driving along the road, at the village of Bay du Vin I met the rector of the Anglican church, who reported that, of his small congregation, thirteen men were missing, only two of whose bodies had been recovered. When I called on Father Arseneault, the pastor of the Roman Catholic church at Baie Ste. Anne, he said that, as far as could be judged, twenty men from his congregation were missing. As one went along the highway and saw the misery and the anguish in those homes, one appreciated just what that blow has meant to the villages.

I am very pleased to hear this evening the statement of the honourable gentleman from Saint John-Albert (Hon. Mr. Emerson) that he will recommend to the Government that the required assistance will be given, for most of these people have lost not only their loved ones and breadwinners, but fishing rigs, nets and other equipment. They need help and they need it most urgently. It is, therefore, very gratifying to know that representations and recommendations are going to the Government to make provision for the urgent needs of these people.

The Hon. the Speaker: I am sure honourable senators will feel that I am expressing the sentiments of this chamber in speaking of the sorrow we feel at this tragic news. It was an event which no one could have expected. I hear that there were, in effect, two storms: the first was weathered by the boats; it was the return swish of the same storm which really did the damage and caused the deaths of the friends of our good colleagues from Saint John-Albert (Hon. Mr. Emerson) and Northumberland-Miramichi (Hon. Mr. Burchill).

As Speaker, I would ask these honourable gentlemen to convey to their constituents the expression of our deepest, strongest and most heartfelt sympathy. I understand that the Government, through the Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Mr. Diefenbaker, has already announced in the other place its willingness to help the fishermen to purchase boats and replace equipment, and to aid the mothers and children in the community who are left without husbands and fathers.

EXCISE TAX BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the third reading of Bill C-47, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before this bill is carried I should like to refer to one clause which has received scant attention by this house. It relates to the increase in the tax on cigarettes. I would point out that this bill is definitely a tax-raising measure. The honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson), when explaining the income tax amendments, said that in some respects they were helpful to the taxpayer. Most of us looked in vain for much help from that bill. Without going through it very carefully we found that there was very little assistance to those who were not making more than $25,000 a year. The honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt), when explaining the excise tax amendment, did not hold out any hope for us; he came out plainly and said that in the main this bill imposes indirect taxes rather than direct taxes. In effect, he said, "Make no mistake about it, this bill provides for taxes that you won't know you will be paying."

I refer to the tax on cigarettes. I do not particularly criticize the Government for increasing the tax on tobacco. The Government has to raise a certain amount of money, and it has seen fit to raise it in part from an increased tax on this product. What I do not like about it is that it has been done in spite of everything that was said to the contrary prior to the election.

Honourable senators, I would point out that the purpose of the increase in the tax on cigarettes is not to discourage their use. The Government, for the moment, is not interested in whether people do or do not smoke cigarettes. The tax is for one purpose only, that of increasing federal revenue. But prior to the election the Government said definitely that the tax would not be increased; rather, that it would be reduced.

When I consider this proposed increase in taxation, I must come to the conclusion that the Government has done exactly the opposite to what it said it was going to do about cigarettes. It also occurs to me that it is just another link in the Government's chain of broken promises.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Can the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) give any reference to statements made by anyone with respect to cigarettes especially?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I was not going to read the extracts I have of what was said with respect to cigarettes prior to the election, but now that the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has asked for that information I will give it to him. He is always very courteous to me when I ask for information, and I desire to be courteous to him.

Prior to the 1957 election Mr. George Hees —who was then not "the honourable", but had been a member of the previous Parliament—speaking in Simcoe, the heart of the tobacco-growing district, is reported in the Simcoe Reformer to have said:

> Tobacco I am sure is the most highly taxed commodity and has been shown rank discrimination with regard to taxation.

Then I come to the remarks made by the present Prime Minister in my own city of Brantford on February 17, 1958, as reported in the Hamilton Spectator of the following day. The headline reads:

Optimistic Prime Minister hints P.C.'s would trim tobacco taxes.

The article goes on to say:

Prime Minister Diefenbaker blew a warm blast of optimism over this sub-zero city last night.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Was that cigarette smoke?

An Hon. Senator: Hot air.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: All I can say is that it was a very cold night.

The Globe and Mail, in the edition which came out before midnight on February 17, 1958, reported as follows:

Prime Minister Diefenbaker last night dropped a clear hint that the taxes on cigarettes, cigars and tobacco soon may be cut.

He told an audience of 1,400 that no industry in Canada suffers a greater degree of taxation than the tobacco industry.

To the Brantford audience, living on the northern fringe of Ontario's tobacco belt, where production has jumped from 63,000 acres in 1943 to 120,000 in 1956, the Prime Minister's hint appeared an effective vote catcher.

Well, it not only appeared to be a vote catcher, but actually proved to be one.

I now come to the report which appeared in the Brantford Expositor under date of February 18, 1958. May I first point out that this question of the reduction of the tobacco tax was the main feature of that meeting. That tobacco taxes were going to be cut was a great announcement. The headline in the Expositor reads:

Prime Minister starts Ontario campaign. Pledges economic aid study for tobacco farmers.

The report reads:

Prime Minister Diefenbaker launched his eastern Canadian campaign here Monday night with a promise of a study aimed towards aid for tobacco farmers.

Mr. Diefenbaker said his Government was, —looking into the whole question of the tobacco business to find what action should be taken to help the tobacco farmer get a fair and reasonable return on his investment. I realize (he said) that no industry suffers a greater degree of taxation than the tobacco industry. Among all Canadian agricultural industries this one most of all has not received the consideration it should receive.

Well, honourable senators, my comment is that if the tobacco industry did not receive consideration before that time, it certainly has received consideration since. The editorial comment in the same issue of the Expositor reads:

The Prime Minister made references of specific interest to the tobacco industry. For years this industry has protested against what it regards as excessive taxation. The Prime Minister promised scrutiny with a view toward affording relief.

Honourable senators, there are other reports of what was said during that campaign, not only in Brantford, but in Tillsonburg and other parts of western Ontario. It does seem strange, after hope was held out to the tobacco growers of a reduction in the tax, that instead it has been increased.

I wish to make myself perfectly clear. I do not criticize those seeking office for making promises. We are accustomed to having promises made. But what is unfortunate is that, having made promises, not only did the Government fail to carry them out, but it has done the very opposite to that which it promised to do. I fear that that is apt to bring about a feeling of contempt for all of us throughout the community. Promises should not be made lightly, and they should not be broken lightly. Only under the most unusual and trying circumstances should something be done which is directly opposite to what was promised during the election campaign.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 11, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt for the second reading of Bill C-41 to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I have just a few remarks to make with respect to this bill. We have heard some very interesting addresses on this subject, and I shall not delay the house very long.

I might remind honourable senators that for some years prior to the war the question of the distribution of the tax dollar among the various taxing agencies—that is, the municipalities, the provinces and the dominion—was under consideration. Honourable senators will recall that prior to the war a royal commission was set up under the chairmanship of the Honourable Mr. Justice Rowell to look into this question. He died before he had completed his inquiry, and the chairmanship was taken over by Mr. Sirois who brought in his report just before the commencement of the war in 1939.

Subsequent to the bringing in of that report a number of conferences between the dominion and the provinces were held in the hope that an agreement could be entered into respecting tax revenues. I will not go into the discussions that took place at that time between the representatives of the provinces and the dominion. I will say only that they were not always amicable, and they left much to be desired. However, an agreement was entered into with respect to the revenue from personal income tax, corporation tax and the succession duties. It was put into statute form in 1942 and was intended to last for the duration of the war. In fact, it lasted until 1952, when the tax rental agreements were entered into. Honourable senators will recall that there were also a number of conferences during the period from the end of the war to 1952. The statute which was passed at that time enabled the Governor in Council to enter into an agreement with the provinces in respect to the personal income taxes and corporation income taxes and succession duties. The Governor in Council was empowered to guarantee a minimum amount to each province, and there was provision for adjusting the amount from time to time.

Honourable senators will recall that in 1956 the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act was passed. Briefly, under that statute a province could withhold up to 10 per cent of the income tax and obtain credit for it. In 1958 that act was amended, and the amount which a province could withhold was increased to 13 per cent. The purpose of the present bill is to extend that provision for the withholding of 13 per cent for another year. This will be an interim arrangement, and this time next year, if not before, another bill will come forward with respect to this matter. What that bill will contain no one knows.

I do not want to be accused of carping criticism, nor of seeking any political advantage, but it does occur to me that since the present Government took office sufficient time has elapsed for it to have called and held a dominion-provincial conference. Honourable senators will remember that during both election campaigns the present Government stated that a conference between the provinces and the dominion would be held very soon after the election. Perhaps the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) would allow me to back up that statement with something which the present Prime Minister said. I am reading from the Winnipeg Free Press of February 10, 1959, and the reference is to the hesitation that the Government is showing in calling this conference:

> There was no such hesitation twenty-two months ago. Then, during the 1957 election campaign, Mr. Diefenbaker was telling the electors that "one of the first steps" if he was Prime Minister would be "to call a dominion-provincial conference" on tax sharing.

I emphasize his words: "one of the first steps" would be "to call a dominion-provincial conference" on tax sharing.

The newspaper's editorial goes on:

> The provinces were "starved"; Canadian federation was being "gravely undermined" by the Ottawa Government's "grasping greed for dollars"; federal taxes were "needlessly high": the municipalities were being "pauperized" and having to pay "outrageous rates of interest". And so on. Mr. Diefenbaker would fix it all up by calling a federal-provincial conference which would give the provinces and municipalities more tax revenues "by agreement of all". There would be no more arrogant, "cut and dried" decisions by Ottawa about what taxes the provinces had to accept.

Honourable senators, two years have gone by and no conference has yet been called. But there is hope, for it has been announced that a conference will be held some time next month. I would point out though, that this is not to be a conference of heads of provinces with the head of the dominion, but merely a conference of provincial treasurers.

Hon. Mr. Horner: It is not going to be a summit conference?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No. All I can say is that I hope this conference of provincial treasurers will be more successful than another conference which we hope is preceding a summit conference. At any rate, I am afraid there will be some difficulty at this pre-summit conference of provincial treasurers in Ottawa. I was very much interested to read the remarks of the Premier of Ontario. I am afraid that by putting off this federal-provincial conference for such a long time it will be more difficult than ever to come to a satisfactory settlement with the provinces. On March 12, 1959 the Toronto Star ran the following headline:

> Frost wants Ottawa to pay $110,000,000 more in tax rental.

The article goes on to read:

> Premier Frost wants $110 million in tax rentals from the federal Government and not $100 million as has been his cry during the past two years.

So the amount is going up. The longer we put off calling a federal-provincial conference the more money the provinces will want. The article continues:

> He said—

meaning Premier Frost—> in the Legislation yesterday that he not only was maintaining his demand for the $100 million, but wanted—

This is very interesting.

—a cost of living bonus also. This would amount to another $10 million, he said later.

Honourable senators, I have read those newspaper articles to you in the hope that the Government will not put off too long the calling of a federal-provincial conference of the heads of Governments. There is no doubt that it is necessary to have this preliminary conference next month. The danger is, as shown by the increase which Mr. Frost is demanding, that the longer this conference is delayed, the more difficult it is going to be to arrange a solution.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I intend to say only a few words. As you have heard, there is going to be a conference of provincial treasurers in about two weeks' time. The present Government has only been in power since March 31, 1958. It is true this Government was in office from 1957, but prior to the last election it did not have a majority in the other house. Government supporters in the Senate know how difficult it is to carry on when you are in a minority group. We know all about it.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: We get more support here than we do in the other house.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Yes, it is true we get more co-operation here than they get in the other house. As a matter of fact, we get more co-operation here than does any minority parliamentary group I have ever seen.

The province of Manitoba now has a majority Government, whose Treasurer happens to be the Premier himself. He can come down to the forthcoming treasurers' conference and the people of Manitoba will be entirely satisfied with whatever arrangements he makes. This would be true if the arrangements happened to be made by the Deputy Premier, the Attorney General, the Minister of Education, or any other member of the Manitoba Government. I know them all. This majority Government has been in power since May 14. The provincial Government of Ontario has a majority. It is all right to say it had a majority before the recent election, and it could have remained in office a year and a half longer before going to the people.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It had a larger majority before the election.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It is still big enough.

Hon. Mr. Haig: It still has too great a majority. I am not saying this with any personal feelings, but I think a house is better off when the majority is not too great. I believe in the Manitoba Legislature there are 36 Conservatives, 11 Liberals and 10 C.C.F'ers.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is just right.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I think that division fairly represents the people of our province. When you go to Alberta you find that the Government is almost totally Social Credit. They have 62 Social Credit members and three C.C.F'ers. I don't know how those C.C.F'ers got in at all. They must have gone around getting votes before the others got started.

Honourable senators, I wonder when the municipal and provincial Governments and the non-Government supporters in the House of Commons are going to stop asking the Government to spend more money out of the federal treasury.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is why a federal-provincial conference should be called soon.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) will be one of the quickest to criticize any increased expenditure by the federal Government.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Haig: What he ought to do is find out what it has cost to make grants to certain groups. Take unemployment. I am quite in agreement with the Government's policy on unemployment. When men and women of our country are unable to find employment we cannot stand by and see them starve. We have to feed them, whether we like it or not. This may not be the feeling of the majority of Canadians, but it is the feeling of a great many of us. I know that our municipalities have heavy responsibilities and that each province is working desperately to relieve educational problems, to find ways to pay teachers to carry on the important work of education. These problems are crowding in on the Government. I am not standing up especially to defend the present Government, but I do say that the Prime Minister has done one thing, he has made my heart beat faster. He has shown a determination that the unemployed will not starve in this country, and he is trying desperately to give each province a works project which will provide labour during the winter months. He has spent a lot of money on housing schemes in our various provinces to give work. He is trying to develop power and industry in the Maritimes and in Saskatchewan. He may be wrong in some things, but at least he is trying.

I entirely agreed with the honourable Leader of the Opposition when he expressed hope that a summit conference of world powers would be held. We would all like to see that. Never in my twelve years as Leader of the Opposition in this house did I utter one word of criticism against the Government for spending money on defence. I did not like it in one way, but I knew it had to be done. I did not dare go back to Manitoba and have people look me in the face and say: "Jack Haig, what is wrong with you? You didn't vote one cent for defence." I kept my eyes shut and my mouth open, and said "Yea, yea, yea" all the time. The Senate was never divided. Those are things that impressed themselves on this house. Certainly we have expenditures to make, for we face a difficult situation. Canada is waging a desperate fight.

I have been in this house for a long time and I have known many of the prime ministers of this country. I knew both Sir Robert Borden and the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen very well. I knew R. B. Bennett. We didn't love each other, but I knew him well—too well, sometimes. Of course, I knew the late Mackenzie King well. I also knew Mr. St. Laurent well. I have a very warm feeling in my heart for him, and I always will. I can never forget when he was Minister of Justice. I once met him in the hall upstairs, and he said to me: "Haig, I have to appoint a judge to the Court of Appeal for Manitoba. Will it be Mr. So-and-so or Mr. So-and-so?" I replied, "I would say Mr. So-and-so, but the only trouble with him is that he is a Liberal." Mr. St. Laurent asked, "What about the other fellow?" I said, "He is a Liberal, too." To which he replied, "That is all right, that is fine." I told him that was my opinion. The prime ministers of whom I have spoken were great men for our country. I believe John Diefenbaker, the present Prime Minister, even though he got a little excited and carried away by his oratory in the election campaign, is a good man. He may have gone a little too far with his promises, but I have never seen a man so determined to carry out those promises as when he told our municipalities in Winnipeg this year, "You put your men to work where work has to be done, and we will pay a share of the cost."

Hon. Mr. Euler: Another promise.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Manitoba is only a little province, but next to Toronto I believe we get more visitors than any other part of Canada. Mr. Diefenbaker visited us and said, "We will help you out in order to find jobs for your people."

There is to be a conference of provincial treasurers on July 6. The Premier of Manitoba happens to be the provincial Treasurer, so our province will be well represented. I do not think we should criticize the Government for not calling a conference earlier. The Prime Minister could not call a conference until he had a majority in the other house. The Government has been in office for a year now, and the Prime Minister knows the problems. He has had to face a terrific problem of unemployment, as well as a serious problem of housing. In addition, the Canadian National Railways had its largest deficit last year, and will probably have another large one this year. He has had to deal with the problem of selling our grain while the United States was selling its grain or giving it away. That racket started only a couple of years ago, and it is one of the things that concern us in the west. Whether Ontario, the Maritime provinces, or any of the other provinces, like it or not, we in the Prairie provinces think that John Diefenbaker is trying his utmost to do a good job.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, I do not propose to say very much on this bill. I think the Senate knows that I have expressed some views on previous occasions indicating that I do not like tax rental agreements, but before I repeat what I have said on former occasions about that subject I cannot help but comment on the very interesting speech which the senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) for just made. I always enjoy his speeches, because I know I shall get at least a couple of things from them, one of which will be a clearer insight into practical politics. I can also be sure that sooner or later there will be in some form on his part a confession of faith in his political principles. This evening we have had two added factors, one being an explanation of the difficulties that surround a prime minister in attempting to run the affairs of the country. However, what is particularly interesting to me is that I think I almost got a supporter for my views in respect to tax rental agreements. The honourable senator said something to the effect that we should have a conference soon because of the tendency on the part of provinces and municipalities to spend too much money. The moment he takes that view he is on the way to thinking in line with the views I have expressed here from time to time. To my mind tax rental agreements are in essence wrong unless there is some supervening emergency that requires the sort of administration that we had during the war, when the purpose was to force everything in the way of availability of revenue into the federal authority, which in turn would hand out minimums to the provinces. But if you look at the financial records of the various provincial governments, you will see that notwithstanding the moneys which are paid to them under the tax rental agreements, many of them are increasing their capital debt. As I said on a previous occasion, where you have the federal authority levying taxes for the purpose of getting money to hand over to a province, you have a negation of the principle of democracy and the theory of government, as I understand it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I think that if the provinces had to raise their own revenues they would be very careful and very much concerned about levying taxes. But they turn to dad or grandad in Ottawa and rail at him that he is not giving them enough money and complain that that is why they are increasing their borrowing. I think that in provincial government administration, as in federal government administration, there should be a little bit of thrift, and the only way to get it is by the provinces having direct responsibility for taxation. Let the Government of the province of Ontario, for instance, levy taxes for the purpose for which it needs money, and borrow if it needs additional money for capital purposes. If that were done expenditures would be closely scrutinized not only by the government of the day but by the people who were carrying the direct burden of taxation. But under the existing system the provinces are yelling all the time for more money from the federal authority. I would say, as I have said on previous occasions, that federal income taxes and corporation taxes could be substantially reduced if the provinces were left to collect their own taxes. Then the responsibility of the federal Government would be to deal with those provinces which are in a less favourable position by supplementing the revenue which they are able to collect directly from their own people through taxes. In that way you would restore the real theory of responsible government. If my province of Ontario appropriates money to be spent, it should have the responsibility of raising the money. As a citizen of and resident in Ontario, I feel there would be a greater sense of responsibility afoot if those who are spending the money had to impose the taxes to provide it.

So I say that the theory of tax rental agreements is all wrong as a general principle. You only have to look at the history of it to know that it is wrong. Increased amounts go to the provinces every time the agreements come up for consideration. Demands are even now being made for still more money on the part of the provinces, and I think that trend is going to continue. The only way to stop it and get back on the basis which to me is the only proper basis of government is to do away with the tax rental agreements as such. I think we should leave these tax fields to the provinces. If that were done the provincial legislators would have to settle with their voters, and their voters would be much more alert to what government is costing them if there was a strict relationship between spending and taxing by the provincial authority.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Will the honourable senator permit a question? I have been listening to him with the greatest of interest, but do I understand him to say that he favours a plan which would permit the provinces in which our great national business corporations have their head offices to benefit from the entire tax which those companies pay instead of sharing it with other provinces in which those companies do a tremendous business?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My friend has posed a question that is the usual question put on occasions of this kind. There are two answers that can be given to it. First of all, I am not proposing any system by which some provinces would collect taxes from the operations of large businesses within their boundaries while less fortunate provinces would have to take whatever crumbs might fall. I tried to make it clear earlier that I thought the line of demarcation should be drawn between tax rental agreements and the assistance which the federal authority should give to those provinces that have not very valuable sources of taxation. I say that tax rental agreements as such are wrong in principle.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: Where will the federal Government raise the money? Will it have to impose new taxes?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is the $64 question.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I believe I could make a smart answer, which I should not do. There is only one place where it can get taxes, and that is from the taxpayers. But what I say is that if there were no tax rental agreements, notwithstanding the fact that the federal authority would contribute to make up the differences between what the less fortunate provinces needed and what they themselves were able to collect, the rate of federal income tax, on both personal and corporation income, would be quite substantially lower than it is at present. Why should we live in this unrealistic situation where the federal authority is raising the money and turning it over to the provinces? Nothing that I have suggested would leave the less fortunate provinces in a position of want. The Government would still be able to impose taxes and raise the revenue it needs, but my submission is that it would not need to raise as much revenue if it abandoned this theory of tax rental agreements, yet it would still be able to take care of the obligations that should properly be taken care of in regard to those provinces that have not the valuable sources of tax revenues that other provinces have. I think the principle behind my suggestion is sound, and that there would result a healthier and more wholesome administration so far as spending is concerned and so far as taxing is concerned if the people who are spending, and who have to get elected to office in order to be able to command the spending, had to impose the taxes to get the revenue. There would then be that direct relationship of responsibility between the voter and the person that he is putting into office to raise and to spend the money for purposes of the province.

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Honourable senators, I would like to tell this honourable house how interesting I have found the speeches to which we have just listened. This is a vital question, dealing as it does with the financial relationship between the provinces and the federal Government. Some provincial prime ministers have said that the federal Government is invading their field of taxation, and that they have no right to do this under the British North America Act. On the other hand, the federal Government asks "Where shall we get the money to fill the gap created by all the social legislation expenditures?" That is a very big problem indeed. We know very well that the Prime Minister of my province of Quebec, in insisting on his right to collect these taxes—and I am all for it—is basing himself on the terms of the British North America Act.

As the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) so eloquently said, there must be an end to asking the federal Government to impose tax after tax to meet the ever increasing demands of the people.

This difficult question of the financial relationship between the provinces and the federal Government should be studied very thoroughly, and I suggest it be done by a committee of the Senate. We have here a body of honourable members drawn from all fields of human activity. We have distinguished legists, farmers, industrialists, men of many qualifications, and notwithstanding what has appeared in the press or elsewhere I believe that the Senate comprises some of the ablest people of this country.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: We all agree to that.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: So why should the Government not refer this question of the financial relationship between the federal and provincial Governments to a committee of the Senate, with power to call witnesses from any of the provinces to obtain their opinions? I am sure, honourable senators, that such a body could study this question very thoroughly and with the prospect of finding a suitable solution.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

66972-1—56

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt, motion referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA INDIAN RESERVES AGREEMENT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. R. B. Horner moved the second reading of Bill S-25, to confirm an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Province of Nova Scotia respecting Indian reserves.

He said: Honourable senators, on February 12 we passed a similar bill—Bill S-6—in connection with Indian Reserves in the province of New Brunswick. The purpose of the present bill is to ratify and confirm an agreement made on April 14, 1959 between the Governments of Canada and of Nova Scotia in relation to lands forming part of Indian reserves in the province of Nova Scotia. During the debate on the second reading of Bill S-6 the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) mentioned that the problem it was designed to overcome existed also in Nova Scotia, where a similar agreement was under negotiation and, it was expected, would be signed shortly. The agreements are identical in form and consequence. The commentary supplied in connection with Bill S-6 and the remarks made during consideration of the bill by the Senate apply generally to the present bill. The important feature of both agreements is that they overcome problems which have been outstanding for many years, and will enable the Government of Canada at the request of the Indians in their respective provinces to lease or sell on their behalf such unrequired portions of Indian reserves land as the Indians may be disposed to surrender for the purpose.

I have looked at some of the questions which were asked in respect of the previous bill, and I find that there were no alterations made in the committee stage or later. This bill explains itself, and I do not see any object in referring it to committee. Possibly the Senate would be willing to give it third reading tonight.

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators, the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) has clearly and ably explained this bill, so I need not speak at any length.

There are eleven Indian bands in Nova Scotia and Cape Breton. These are bands of the MicMac Tribe, with a population in 1958 of 3,435 persons, distributed over 40 reserves, comprising 19,492 acres of land.

Formerly these early citizens of Nova Scotia procured the necessities of life by hunting, fishing and engaging in agriculture to some degree, so that it was necessary, when they surrendered their land under the treaty of the early 1800's, to set aside large tracts of land as Indian reserves in order that they might still provide some part of their living by these methods. Today they pursue a different way of life. Many, if not most, of the old customs have disappeared, and they have to a great extent adopted the activities and habits of the white man.

Responsibility for administering Indian affairs is now a federal matter. The relevant federal agency is today the Indian Affairs Branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Historically, relations between Indians and white men were handled first by captains of exploring vessels, and in the days of early settlement they were largely a matter for the responsible governors in Acadia and Quebec. In general terms, the relations between Indians and French under the old régime were of a somewhat informal nature, with close associations. Treaties were made with individual chiefs as circumstances demanded, but little attention was paid to the legal rights of the Indians. In 1830 Indian affairs were transferred by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the civil authorities in Upper and Lower Canada. After the Union of the two Canadas in 1841 the two departments were combined under one authority.

Early in the settlement of North America the British recognized an Indian title, or interest, in the soil; it could be parted with or extinguished only by agreement with the Indians, and then only to the Crown. This gave rise to the practice of making agreements, or treaties, as they were afterwards called, with various Indian tribes.

The Royal Proclamation of 1763 provided that no Indian could be dispossessed of his land without his consent and the consent of the Crown. In accordance with this principle, treaties have been made with Indian tribes during the opening up of the country for settlement. In general the terms were that, in recognition of the surrendering of Indian interest in the soil, the Crown undertook to set aside reserves and provide other benefits, such as cash payments, annuities, educational facilities and other considerations.

The Indian started losing mastery of the land over three hundred years ago. He gained many benefits, it is true, but he lost the Indian way of life.

After the last World War Indian lands which had been previously surrendered and which were not in use and were non-producing came in for some attention from the Governments of the provinces and the federal Government on account of the great expansion in economic development. It was realized that these idle but usable lands could be used, brought into production and thus contribute to the increasing prosperity of the country. Also it was considered easier to administer all Indian affairs from the Department at Ottawa than by the province. Sometimes these tracts were sold and the proceeds of such sales were credited to the band.

In order to legalize these proceedings, and to give clear titles to these surrendered lands, the matter had to go to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. By virtue of the decision of the Judicial Committee it has become possible for certain tracts of land in Nova Scotia to be transferred to and vested in Canada. This is the purpose of the bill, and I am very glad to support it.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I recall an occasion early this session when we considered a similar bill in connection with certain Indian lands in the province of New Brunswick. As I recall it, the purpose of the bill at that time—as it is the purpose of the present bill—was to confirm an agreement entered into between the federal Govenrment and a provincial government, in this case the Government of Nova Scotia, to rectify some defects which appear to have been found in the titles to some lands that have been conveyed to various individuals by the federal Government.

I just have one question to ask the honourable senator who introduced the bill, and one suggestion to make to him. I notice that the agreement which it is the purpose of this bill to ratify is to come into effect only upon approval of the Parliament of Canada and of the Legislature of Nova Scotia. May I ask my honourable friend, has the province of Nova Scotia as yet approved this agreement?

Hon. Mr. Horner: My understanding is that it has.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, it has.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: That answers the question I had to ask.

My honourable friend suggested that the bill might be given third reading right away, without being referred to a committee. That may be possible, but, after all, this bill deals basically with Indian lands, and I think we have to be extremely careful to see that everybody's rights are preserved. I would prefer to have the bill go to a committee, and make sure from the observations we get from the officials of the department that there is no attempt to deprive any person of any rights he might have in these lands. The only reason I make this observation is that on several occasions in the past we have had before us innocent looking bills for taking certain lands out of national parks for what we were told was the most innocuous purpose. I think in all matters connected with such lands we should act very carefully, and not pass a bill through second and third readings without sending it to a committee and making certain that everybody's rights are protected.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I apologize for my suggestion? I merely wished to take advantage of the absence of the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid).

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Horner, bill referred to Standing Committee on Natural Resources.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

66972-1—56½

APPENDIX

(See p. 864)

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT 1959

As adopted at the Final Plenary Session of the United Nations Wheat Conference 1958-59 held at Geneva on March 10, 1959

Opened for Signature at Washington, D.C., on April 6, 1959

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT 1959

The Governments signatory to this Agreement,

Considering that the International Wheat Agreement 1949 was revised and renewed in 1953 and 1956, and

Considering that the International Wheat Agreement 1956 expires on 31 July 1959 and that it is desirable to conclude a new Agreement for a further period;

Have agreed as follows:

PART I—GENERAL

ARTICLE 1

Objectives

The objectives of this Agreement are:—

(a) to assure supplies of wheat and wheat-flour to importing countries and markets for wheat and wheat-flour to exporting countries at equitable and stable prices;

(b) to promote the expansion of the international trade in wheat and wheat-flour and to secure the freest possible flow of this trade in the interests of both exporting and importing countries;

(c) to overcome the serious hardship caused to producers and consumers by burdensome surpluses and critical shortages of wheat;

(d) to encourage the use and consumption of wheat and wheat-flour generally, and in particular, so as to improve health and nutrition, in countries where the possibility of increased consumption exists; and

(e) in general to further international co-operation in connexion with world wheat problems, recognizing the relationship of the trade in wheat to the economic stability of markets for other agricultural products.

ARTICLE 2

Definitions

For the purposes of this Agreement:

(1) "Advisory Committee on Price Equivalents" means the Committee established under Article 30.

"Balance of Commitment" means the amount of wheat which an exporting country is obliged to make available at not greater than the maximum price under Article 5, that is, the amount by which its datum quantity with respect to importing countries exceeds the actual commercial purchases from it by those countries in the crop year at the relevant time.

"Balance of Entitlement" means the amount of wheat which an importing country is entitled to purchase at not greater than the maximum price under Article 5, that is, the amount by which its datum quantity with respect to the exporting country or countries concerned, as the context requires, exceeds its actual commercial purchases from those countries in the crop year at the relevant time.

"Bushel" means sixty pounds avoirdupois or 27.2155 .... kilogrammes.

"Carrying charges" means the costs incurred for storage, interest and insurance in holding wheat.

"C. & f." means cost and freight.

"Council" means the International Wheat Council established by Article 22.

"Crop year" means the period from 1 August to 31 July.

"Datum quantity" means:

(a) in the case of an exporting country the average annual commercial purchases from that country by importing countries during the years determined under Article 14.

(b) in the case of an importing country the average annual commercial purchases from exporting countries or from a particular exporting country, as the context requires, during the years determined under Article 14.

"Executive Committee" means the Committee established under Article 29.

"Exporting country" means, as the context requires, either (i) the Government of a country listed in Article 24 which has accepted or acceded to this Agreement and has not withdrawn therefrom, or (ii) that country itself and the territories in respect of which the rights and obligations of its Government under this Agreement apply.

"F.a.q." means fair average quality.

"F.o.b." means free on board ocean vessel or sea-going vessel, as the case may be, and in the case of French wheat delivered at a Rhine port, free on board river craft.

"Importing country" means, as the context requires, either (i) the Government of a country listed in Article 25 which has accepted or acceded to this Agreement and has not withdrawn therefrom, or (ii) that country itself and the territories in respect of which the rights and obligations of its Government under this Agreement apply.

"Marketing costs" means all usual charges incurred in marketing, chartering, and forwarding.

"Maximum price" means the maximum prices specified in or determined under Article 6 or one of those prices, as the context requires.

"Maximum price declaration" means a declaration made in accordance with Article 13.

"Metric ton", or 1,000 kilogrammes, means 36.74371 bushels.

"Minimum price" means the minimum prices specified in or determined under Article 6 or one of those prices, as the context requires.

"Price range" means prices between the minimum and maximum prices specified in or determined under Article 6, including the minimum prices but excluding the maximum prices.

"Purchase" means a purchase for import of wheat exported or to be exported from an exporting country or from other than an exporting country, as the case may be, or the quantity of such wheat so purchased, as the context requires. Where reference is made in this Agreement to a purchase, it shall be understood to refer not only to purchases concluded between the Governments concerned but also to purchases concluded between private traders and to purchases concluded between a private trader and the Government concerned. In this definition "Government" shall be deemed to include the Government of any territory in respect of which the rights and obligations of any Government accepting or acceding to this Agreement apply under Article 37.

"Territory" in relation to an exporting or importing country includes any territory in respect of which the rights and obligations under this Agreement of the Government of that country apply under Article 37.

"Wheat" includes wheat grain and, except in Article 6, wheat-flour.

(2) All calculations of the wheat equivalent of purchases of wheat-flour shall be made on the basis of the rate of extraction indicated by the contract between the buyer and the seller. If no such rate is indicated, seventy-two units by weight of wheat-flour shall, for the purpose of such calculations, be deemed to be equivalent to one hundred units by weight of wheat grain unless the Council decides otherwise.

ARTICLE 3

Commercial Purchases and Special Transactions

(1) A commercial purchase for the purposes of this Agreement is a purchase as defined in Article 2 which conforms to the usual commercial practices in international trade and which does not include those transactions referred to in paragraph (2) of this Article.

(2) A special transaction for the purposes of this Agreement is one which, whether or not within the price range, includes features introduced by the Government of a country concerned which do not conform with usual commercial practices.

(3) In particular, the following transactions, to the extent to which they conform with the provisions of paragraph (2) of this Article, shall be regarded as special transactions:

(a) sales on long term credit resulting from government intervention;
(b) sales under tied government loans;
(c) sales for inconvertible currency;
(d) barter transactions;
(e) bilateral trading agreements;
(f) gifts or grants.

(4) The Council shall adopt such rules of procedure prescribing the categories of transactions within the meaning of paragraphs (2) and (3) of this Article as may be appropriate.

PART II—RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS

ARTICLE 4

Purchases within the Price Range

(1) Each importing country undertakes that not less than the percentage specified for that country in the Annex to this Agreement of its total commercial purchases of wheat in any crop year shall be purchased from exporting countries in that year at prices within the price range.

(2) Exporting countries undertake, in association with one another, that at prices within the price range wheat from their countries shall be made available for purchase by importing countries in a crop year in quantities sufficient to satisfy the commercial requirements of those countries.

(3) For the purposes of this Agreement, except as provided in Article 5, any wheat purchased from an importing country by a second importing country which originated during that crop year from an exporting country shall be deemed to have been purchased from that exporting country by the second importing country. Subject to the provisions of Article 18, this paragraph shall apply to wheat-flour only if the wheat-flour originated from the exporting country concerned.

ARTICLE 5

Purchases at the Maximum Price

(1) If the Council makes a maximum price declaration in respect of an exporting country, that country shall make available for purchase by importing countries at not greater than the maximum price its balance of commitment towards those countries to the extent that the balance of entitlement of any importing country with respect to all exporting countries is not exceeded.

(2) If the Council makes a maximum price declaration in respect of all exporting countries, each importing country shall be entitled, while the declaration is in effect,

(a) to purchase from exporting countries at prices not greater than the maximum price its balance of entitlement with respect to all exporting countries; and

(b) to purchase wheat from any source without being regarded as committing any breach of paragraph (1) of Article 4.

(3) If the Council makes a maximum price declaration in respect of one or more exporting countries, but not all of them, each importing country shall be entitled while the declaration is in effect,

(a) to make purchases under paragraph (1) of this Article from such one or more exporting countries and to purchase the balance of its commercial requirements within the price range from the other exporting countries, and

(b) to purchase wheat from any source without being regarded as committing any breach of paragraph (1) of Article 4 to the extent of its balance of entitlement with respect to such one or more exporting countries as at the effective date of the declaration provided such balance is not larger than its balance of entitlement with respect to all exporting countries.

(4) Purchases by any importing country from an exporting country in excess of the balance of entitlement of that importing country with respect to all exporting countries shall not reduce the obligation of that exporting country under this Article. The provisions of paragraph (3) of Article 4 shall apply also to this Article provided the balance of entitlement of any importing country with respect to all exporting countries is not thereby exceeded.

(5) In determining whether it has fulfilled its required percentage under paragraph (1) of Article 4, purchases made by any importing country while a maximum price declaration is in effect, subject to the limitations in paragraphs (2) (b) and (3) (b) of this Article,

(a) shall be taken into account if those purchases were made from any exporting country, including an exporting country in respect of which the declaration was made, and

(b) shall be entirely disregarded if those purchases were made from a country other than an exporting country.

ARTICLE 6

Prices

(1) (a) The basic minimum and maximum prices for the duration of this Agreement shall be:

Minimum $1.50
Maximum $1.90

Canadian currency per bushel at the parity for the Canadian dollar, determined for the purposes of the International Monetary Fund as at 1 March 1949, for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur. The basic minimum and maximum prices, and the equivalents thereof hereafter referred to, shall exclude such carrying charges and marketing costs as may be agreed between the buyer and the seller.

(b) Carrying charges as agreed between the buyer and seller may accrue for the buyer's account only after an agreed date specified in the contract under which the wheat is sold.

(2) The equivalent maximum price for bulk wheat for:

(a) No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in store Vancouver shall be the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this Article;

(b) No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat f.o.b. Port Churchill, Manitoba, shall be the price equivalent to the c. & f. price in the country of destination of the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this Article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates;

(c) Argentine wheat in store ocean ports shall be the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this Article, converted into Argentine currency at the prevailing rate of exchange, making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(d) f.a.q. Australian wheat in store ocean ports shall be the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this Article, converted into Australian currency at the prevailing rate of exchange, making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(e) French wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. French ports or at the French border (whichever is applicable) shall be the price equivalent to the c. & f. price in the country of destination, or the c. & f. price at an appropriate port for delivery to the country of destination, of the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this Article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(f) Italian wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Italian ports or at the Italian border (whichever is applicable) shall be the price equivalent to the c. & f. price in the country of destination, or the c. & f. price at an appropriate port for delivery to the country of destination, of the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this Article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(g) (i) Mexican wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Mexican Gulf ports or at the Mexican border (whichever is applicable) shall be the price equivalent to the c. & f. price in the country of destination of the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this Article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(ii) Mexican wheat on sample or on description in store Mexican Pacific ports shall be the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this Article, converted into Mexican currency at the prevailing rate of exchange, making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(h) Spanish wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Spanish ports or at the Spanish border (whichever is applicable) shall be the price equivalent to the c. & f. price in the country of destination, or the c. & f. price at an appropriate port of delivery to the country of destination, of the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this Article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(i) Swedish wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Swedish ports between Stockholm and Gothenburg, both included, shall be the price equivalent to the c. & f. price in the country of destination of the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this Article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(j) No. 1 Hard Winter wheat f.o.b. Gulf/Atlantic ports of the United States of America shall be the price equivalent to the c. & f. price in the country of destination of the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this Article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned; and

(k) No. 1 Soft White wheat or No. 1 Hard Winter wheat in store Pacific ports of the United States of America shall be the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this Article, computed by using the prevailing rate of exchange and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned.

(3) The equivalent minimum price for bulk wheat for:

(a) No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat f.o.b. Vancouver,

(b) No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat f.o.b. Port Churchill, Manitoba,

(c) Argentine wheat f.o.b. Argentina,

(d) f.a.q. wheat f.o.b. Australia,

(e) French wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. French ports, or at the French border (whichever is applicable),

(f) Italian wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Italian ports, or at the Italian border (whichever is applicable),

(g) Mexican wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Mexican ports, or at the Mexican border (whichever is applicable),

(h) Spanish wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Spanish ports, or at the Spanish border (whichever is applicable),

(i) Swedish wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Swedish ports between Stockholm and Gothenburg, both included,

(j) No. 1 Hard Winter wheat f.o.b. Gulf/Atlantic ports of the United States of America, and

(k) No. 1 Soft White wheat or No. 1 Hard Winter wheat f.o.b. Pacific ports of the United States of America, shall be respectively:

the f.o.b. price Vancouver, Port Churchill, Argentina, Australia, French ports, Italian ports, Mexican ports, Spanish ports, Swedish ports between Stockholm and Gothenburg, both included, United States of America Gulf/Atlantic ports and the United States of America Pacific ports equivalent to the c. & f. price in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland of the minimum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this Article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned.

(4) For the period of closed navigation bebeen Fort William/Port Arthur and the Canadian Atlantic ports, equivalent maximum and minimum prices shall be determined by reference only to the lake and rail movement of wheat from Fort William/Port Arthur to Canadian winter ports.

(5) The Executive Committee may in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Price Equivalents, determine the minimum and maximum price equivalents for wheat at points other than those specified above and may also designate any description, type, class or grade of wheat other than those specified in paragraphs (2) and (3) above and determine the minimum and maximum price equivalents thereof; provided that, in the case of any other wheat the price equivalent of which has not yet been determined, the minimum and maximum prices for the time being shall be derived from the minimum and maximum prices of the description, type, class or grade of wheat specified in this article, or subsequently designated by the Executive Committee in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Price Equivalents, which is most closely comparable to such other wheat by the addition of an appropriate premium or by the deduction of an appropriate discount.

(6) If any exporting or importing country represents to the Executive Committee that any price equivalent established under paragraph (2), (3) or (5) of this Article is, in the light of current transportation or exchange rates or market premiums or discounts, no longer fair, the Executive Committee shall consider the matter and may, in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Price Equivalents, make such adjustment as it considers desirable.

(7) In establishing equivalent minimum and maximum prices under paragraph (2), (3), (5) or (6) above and subject to the provisions of Article 15 relating to durum wheat, no allowance for difference in quality shall be made which would result in the equivalent minimum and maximum price of wheat of any description, type, class or grade being fixed at a level higher than the basic minimum or maximum price, respectively, specified in paragraph (1) above.

(8) If a dispute arises as to what premium or discount is appropriate for the purposes of paragraphs (5) and (6) of this Article in respect of any description of wheat specified in paragraph (2) or (3) or designated under paragraph (5) of this Article, the Executive Committee, in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Price Equivalents, shall on the request of the exporting or importing country concerned decide the issue.

(9) All decisions of the Executive Committee under paragraphs (5), (6) and (8) of this Article shall be binding on all exporting and importing countries, provided that any of those countries which considers that any such decision is disadvantageous to it may ask the Council to review that decision.

ARTICLE 7

Action by the Council at or Approaching the Minimum Price

(1) If any exporting country is making wheat of any class, type or grade available for purchase by importing countries at prices not greater than the minimum price, or if such a situation appears likely to arise, the Council shall as soon as possible thereafter meet to consider the situation in the light of the rights and obligations of exporting and importing countries. It may make such recommendations as it considers appropriate regarding the manner in which those rights and obligations shall be fulfilled in these circumstances.

(2) If any exporting or importing country considers that by reason of a serious fall in the price of wheat of any class, type or grade, a situation has arisen or threatens imminently to arise which appears likely to jeopardize the objectives of the Agreement with regard to the minimum price, it may refer the matter to the Council. The Council may, in the light of advice received from the Advisory Committee on Price Equivalents, make recommendations to exporting and importing countries with regard to action which it considers necessary to meet the situation.

(3) The Advisory Committee shall advise the Chairman of the Council whenever in its opinion circumstances exist which are likely to or require that a meeting of the Council be convened under paragraph (1) or (2) of this Article. If any such meeting is convened under those paragraphs or by the Chairman, the Advisory Committee shall present to the Council all relevant information in addition to such advice as it may have given in accordance with paragraph (3) of Article 30.

ARTICLE 8

Countries both Exporters and Importers of Wheat

(1) For the duration of this Agreement and for the purposes of its application, a country listed in Article 24 shall be regarded as an exporting country and a country listed in Article 25 shall be regarded as an importing country.

(2) Any country listed in Article 25 which makes wheat available for purchase by any exporting or importing country shall endeavour so far as possible to do so at prices consistent with the price range and, in making such wheat available for purchase, to avoid taking any action which would be prejudicial to the operation of this Agreement.

(3) Any country listed in Article 24 which desires to purchase wheat shall endeavour so far as possible to purchase its requirements from exporting countries at prices within the price range and, in meeting its requirements, to avoid taking any action which would be prejudicial to the operation of this Agreement.

PART III—ADJUSTMENTS

ARTICLE 9

Adjustment in case of Short Crop

(1) Any exporting country which fears that it may be prevented by a short crop from carrying out its obligations under this Agreement in respect of a particular crop year shall report the matter to the Council at the earliest possible date and apply to the Council to be relieved of a part or the whole of its obligations for that crop year. An application made to the Council pursuant to this paragraph shall be heard without delay.

(2) The Council shall, in dealing with a request for relief under this Article, adhere to the principle that the exporting country concerned will, to the maximum extent feasible, make wheat available for purchase to meet its obligations under this Agreement.

(3) The Council shall, in dealing with the request for relief, review the exporting country's supply situation including the extent to which the exporting country has observed the principle stated in paragraph (2) of this Article.

(4) If the Council finds that the country's representations are well founded, it shall decide to what extent and on what conditions that country shall be relieved of its obligations for the crop year concerned. The Council shall inform the exporting country of its decision.

(5) If the Council decides that the exporting country shall be relieved of the whole part of its obligations under Article 5 for the crop year concerned, the Council shall increase the datum quantities of the other exporting countries to the extent agreed by each of them. If such increases do not offset the relief granted under paragraph (4), it shall reduce by the amount necessary the datum quantities of the importing countries to the extent agreed by each of them.

(6) If the relief granted under paragraph (4) cannot be entirely offset by measures taken under paragraph (5), the Council shall reduce pro rata the datum quantities of the importing countries, account being taken of any reductions under paragraph (5).

(7) If the datum quantity of an exporting country is reduced under paragraph (4), the amount of such reduction shall be regarded for the purpose of establishing its datum quantitiy and that of all other exporting countries in subsequent crop years as having been purchased from that exporting country in the crop year concerned. In the light of the circumstances, the Council shall determine whether any adjustment shall be made, and if so in what manner, for the purpose of establishing the datum quantities of importing countries in such subsequent crop years as a result of the operation of this paragraph.

(8) If the datum quantity of an importing country is reduced under paragraphs (5) or (6) of this Article to offset the relief granted to an exporting country under paragraph (4), the amount of such reduction shall be regarded as having been purchased in the crop year concerned from that exporting country for the purposes of establishing the datum quantity of that importing country in subsequent crop years.

ARTICLE 10

Adjustment in Case of Necessity to Safeguard Balance of Payments or Monetary Reserves

(1) Any importing country which fears that it may be prevented by the necessity to safeguard its balance of payments or monetary reserves from carrying out its obligations under this Agreement in respect of a particular crop year shall report the matter to the Council at the earliest possible date and apply to the Council to be relieved of a part or the whole of its obligations for that crop year. An application made to the Council pursuant to this paragraph shall be heard without delay.

(2) If an application is made under paragraph (1), the Council shall seek and take into account, together with all facts which it considers relevant, the opinion of the International Monetary Fund, as far as the matter concerns a country which is a member of the Fund, on the existence and extent of the necessity referred to in that paragraph.

(3) The Council shall, in dealing with a request for relief under this Article, adhere to the principle that the country concerned will to the maximum extent feasible make purchases to meet its obligations under this Agreement.

(4) If the Council finds that the representations of the importing country concerned are well founded, it shall decide to what extent and on what conditions that country shall be relieved of its obligations for the crop year concerned. The Council shall inform the importing country of its decision.

ARTICLE 11

Adjustments and Additional Purchases in Case of Critical Need

(1) If a critical need has arisen or threatens to arise in its territory, an importing country may appeal to the Council for assistance in obtaining supplies of wheat. With a view to relieving the emergency created by the critical need, the Council shall give urgent consideration to the appeal and shall make appropriate recommendations to exporting and importing countries regarding the action to be taken by them.

(2) In deciding what recommendation should be made in respect of an appeal by an importing country under the preceding paragraph, the Council shall have regard to its actual commercial purchases from exporting countries or to the extent of its obligations under Article 4 of this Agreement, as may appear appropriate in the circumstances.

(3) No action taken by an exporting or importing country pursuant to a recommendation made under paragraph (1) of this Article shall affect the datum quantity of any exporting country in subsequent crop years.

ARTICLE 12

Adjustments by Consent

(1) An exporting country may transfer part of its balance of commitment to another exporting country, and an importing country may transfer part of its balance of entitlement to another importing country for a crop year, subject to approval by the Council by a majority of the votes cast by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes cast by the importing countries.

(2) Any importing country may at any time, by written notification to the Council, increase its percentage undertaking referred to in paragraph (1) of Article 4 and such increase shall become effective from the date of receipt of the notification.

(3) The datum quantity of any country acceding under Article 35 (4) of this Agreement shall be offset, if necessary, by appropriate adjustments by way of increase or decrease in the datum quantities of one or more exporting or importing countries, as the case may be. Such adjustments shall not be approved unless each exporting or importing country whose datum quantity is thereby changed has consented.

PART IV—ADMINISTRATION OF RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS

ARTICLE 13

Maximum Price Declarations

(1) As soon as its wheat of any class, type or grade other than durum wheat is made available for purchase by importing countries at prices not less than the maximum price, an exporting country shall notify the Council to that effect. On receipt of such notification, the Executive Secretary, acting on behalf of the Council, shall make a declaration accordingly, referred to in this Agreement as a maximum price declaration. The Executive Secretary shall communicate that maximum price declaration to all exporting and importing countries as soon as possible after it has been made.

(2) As soon as its wheat of all classes, types or grades other than durum wheat is again made available for purchase by importing countries at prices less than the maximum price, an exporting country shall notify the Council to that effect. Thereupon, the Executive Secretary, acting on behalf of the Council, shall terminate the maximum price declaration in respect of that country by making a further declaration accordingly. He shall communicate such further declaration to all exporting and importing countries as soon as possible after it has been made.

(3) The Council shall, in its rules of procedure, prescribe regulations to give effect to paragraphs (1) and (2) of this Article, including regulations determining the effective date of any declaration made under this Article.

(4) If, at any time, in the opinion of the Executive Secretary an exporting country has failed to make a notification under paragraph (1) or (2) of this Article or has made an incorrect notification, he shall, without prejudice in the latter case to the provisions of paragraph (1) or (2), convene a meeting of the Advisory Committee on Price Equivalents. If the Advisory Committee advises either under this paragraph or in accordance with Article 30 that a declaration under paragraph (1) or (2) should be or should not have been made, as the case may be, the Executive Committee may make a declaration accordingly or cancel any declaration then in effect, whichever may be appropriate.

(5) Any declaration made under this Article shall specify the crop year or crop years to which it relates, and this Agreement shall apply accordingly.

(6) If any exporting or importing country considers that a declaration under this Article should be or should not have been made, as the case may be, it may refer the matter to the Council. If the Council finds that the representations of the country concerned are well founded, it shall make or cancel a declaration accordingly.

(7) Any declaration made under paragraphs (1), (2) or (4) which is cancelled in accordance with this Article shall be regarded as having full force and effect until the date of its cancellation, and such cancellation shall not affect the validity of anything done under the declaration prior to its cancellation.

ARTICLE 14

Establishment of Datum Quantities

(1) Datum quantities as defined in Article 2 shall be established for the first crop year of this Agreement with reference to the first four of the immediately preceding five crop years and, for each succeeding crop year, with respect to the first five of the immediately preceding six crop years.

(2) Before the beginning of each crop year, the Council shall establish for that crop year the datum quantity of each exporting country with respect to all importing countries and the datum quantity of each importing country with respect to all exporting countries and to each such country.

(3) The datum quantities established in accordance with the preceding paragraph shall be re-established whenever a change in the membership of this Agreement occurs, regard being had where appropriate to any conditions of accession prescribed by the Council under Article 35.

ARTICLE 15

Recording of Purchases and Special Transactions, and Statement of Balances

(1) For the purposes of the operation of this Agreement, including the establishment of the total commercial purchases of importing countries under Article 4 (1) and the establishment of datum quantities of exporting and importing countries in subsequent crop years under Article 14, the Council shall keep records for each crop year of all commercial purchases made by importing countries from all sources and of all such purchases made from exporting countries.

(2) The Council shall also keep records so that at all time during a crop year a statement of the balance of commitment of each exporting country with respect to all importing countries and of the balance of entitlement of each importing country with respect to all exporting countries and to each such country is maintained. Statements of such balances shall, at intervals prescribed by the Council, be circulated to all exporting and importing countries.

(3) For the purposes of paragraph (2) of this Article and of Article 4 (1), commercial purchases by an importing country from an exporting country entered in the Council's records shall also be entered as against the obligations of exporting and importing countries under Articles 4 and 5 of this Agreement, or those obligations as adjusted under other Articles of this Agreement, if the loading period falls within the crop year and

(a) in the case of importing countries, the purchases are at prices not less than the minimum price, and

(b) in the case of exporting countries, the purchases are at prices within the price range including, for the purposes of Article 5, the maximum price. However, if the importing and exporting country concerned so agree, purchases at prices above the maximum price shall also be entered as against the obligations of that exporting country. If any country considers its interests prejudiced by any such particular purchase, it may refer the matter to the Council which shall decide the issue.

Commercial purchases of wheat-flour entered in the Council's records shall also be entered as against the obligations of exporting and importing countries under the same conditions, provided that the price of such wheat-flour is consistent with a price of wheat which may be entered under this paragraph. In the case of durum wheats, a purchase entered in the Council's records shall count under this paragraph whether or not the price is within the price range.

(4) A purchase of wheat from an exporting country shall be eligible for entry in the Council's records in accordance with this Article, nothwithstanding that the purchase has been made before the deposit of the instrument of acceptance of or accession to this Agreement by the country concerned.

(5) Provided that the conditions prescribed in paragraph (3) of this Article are satisfied, the Council may authorize purchases to be recorded for a crop year if (a) the loading period involved is within a reasonable time up to one month, to be decided by the Council, before the beginning or after the end of that crop year, and (b) the exporting and importing country concerned so agree.

(6) For the period of closed navigation between Fort William/Port Arthur and the Canadian Atlantic ports, a purchase shall, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (4) of Article 6, be eligible for entry in the Council's records against the obligations of the exporting country and the importing country concerned in accordance with this Article if it relates to

(a) Canadian wheat which is moved by an all-rail route from Fort William/Port Arthur to Canadian Atlantic ports, or

(b) United States wheat which, except for conditions beyond the control of the buyer and the seller, would be moved by lake and rail to United States Atlantic ports and which, because it cannot be so moved, is moved by an all-rail route to United States Atlantic ports, provided that payment of the extra transportation cost thereby incurred is agreed between the buyer and the seller.

(7) The Council shall prescribe rules of procedure for the reporting and recording of all commercial purchases and special transactions. In those rules it shall prescribe the frequency and the manner in which those purchases and transactions shall be reported and shall prescribe the duties of exporting and importing countries with regard thereto. The Council shall also make provision for the amendment of any records or statements maintained by it, including provision for the settlement of any dispute arising in connexion therewith.

(8) Each exporting country and each importing country may be permitted, in the fulfilment of its obligations, a degree of tolerance to be prescribed by the Council for that country on the basis of the extent of those obligations and other relevant factors.

(9) In order that as complete records as possible may be maintained and for the purposes of Article 21, the Council shall also keep separate records for each crop year of all special transactions entered into by any exporting or importing country.

Article 16

Estimates of Requirements and Availability of Wheat

(1) By 15 September of each year, each importing country shall notify the Council of its provisional estimate of its commercial requirements of wheat from exporting countries in that crop year. Before 31 December of each year, each importing country shall notify the Council of any changes in this provisional estimate. Importing countries may notify the Council of any further changes they desire to make thereafter.

(2) By 1 October in the case of Northern Hemisphere countries and 1 January in the case of Southern Hemisphere countries, each exporting country shall notify the Council of its estimate of the wheat it will have available for export in that crop year. Exporting countries may notify the Council of any changes in this estimate they desire to make thereafter.

(3) All estimates notified to the Council shall be used for the purpose of the administration of the Agreement and may only be made available to exporting and importing countries on such conditions as the Council may prescribe. All estimates submitted in accordance with this Article shall in no way be binding.

(4) Exporting and importing countries shall be free to fulfil their obligations under this Agreement through private trade channels or otherwise. Nothing in this Agreement shall be construed to exempt any private trader from any laws or regulations to which he is otherwise subject.

(5) The Council, may, at its discretion, require exporting and importing countries to cooperate together to ensure that an amount of wheat equal to not less than ten per cent of the datum quantities of exporting countries for any crop year shall be available for purchase by importing countries under this Agreement after 28 February of that crop year.

PART V—CONSULTATIONS, PERFORMANCE, DEFAULTS AND SERIOUS PREJUDICE

Article 17

Consultations

(1) In order to assist an exporting country in assessing the extent of its commitments if a maximum price declaration should be made and without prejudice to the rights enjoyed by any importing country, an exporting country may consult with an importing country regarding the extent to which the rights of that importing country under Articles 4 and 5 of this Agreement will be taken up in any crop year.

(2) Any exporting or importing country experiencing difficulty in making sales or purchases of wheat under Article 4 of this Agreement may refer the matter to the Council. In such a case the Council with a view to the satisfactory settlement of the matter shall consult with any exporting or importing country concerned and may make such recommendations as it considers appropriate.

(3) If an importing country should find difficulty in obtaining its balance of entitlement in a crop year at prices not greater than the maximum price while a maximum price declaration is in effect, it may refer the matter to the Council. In such a case the Council shall investigate the situation and shall consult with exporting countries regarding the manner in which their obligations shall be carried out.

ARTICLE 18

Performance under Articles 4 and 5

(1) The Council shall as soon as practicable after the end of each crop year review the performance of exporting and importing countries in relation to their obligations under Articles 4 and 5 of this Agreement during that crop year.

(2) For the purpose of this review the tolerances as specified by the Council under Article 15 shall apply.

(3) Upon application by an importing country in respect of the performance of its obligations in the crop year, the Council may take into account the wheat equivalent of flour purchased by it from another importing country provided it can be shown to the satisfaction of the Council that such flour was wholly milled from wheat purchased within the Agreement from exporting countries.

(4) In considering the performance of any importing country in relation to its obligations in the crop year, the Council shall also take account of any exceptional importation of wheat from other than exporting countries provided it can be shown to the satisfaction of the Council that such wheat has been or will be used only as feeding stuffs and that such importation was not at the expense of quantities normally purchased by that importing country from exporting countries. Any decision under this paragraph shall be by a majority of the votes held by exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by importing countries.

(5) In considering the performance of any importing country in relation to its obligations in the crop year the Council may also take account of any purchases by the country concerned of durum wheat from other importing countries which are traditional exporters of durum wheat.

ARTICLE 19

Defaults under Article 4 or 5

(1) If, on the basis of the review made under Article 18, any country appears to be in default of its obligations under Article 4 or 5 of this Agreement, the Council shall decide what action should be taken.

(2) Before reaching a decision under this Article, the Council shall give any exporting or importing country concerned the opportunity to present any facts which it considers relevant.

(3) If the Council finds by a majority of the votes held by exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by importing countries that an exporting country or an importing country is in default under Article 4 or 5, it may by a similar vote deprive the country concerned of its voting rights for such period as the Council may determine, reduce the other rights of that country to the extent which it considers commensurate with the default or expel that country from the Agreement.

(4) No action taken by the Council under this Article shall in any way reduce the obligation of the country concerned in respect of its financial contributions to the Council except in the event that that country is expelled from the Agreement.

ARTICLE 20

Action in Cases of Serious Prejudice

(1) Any exporting or importing country which considers that its interests as a Party to this Agreement have been seriously prejudiced by actions of any one or more exporting or importing countries affecting the operation of the Agreement may bring the matter before the Council. In such a case, the Council shall immediately consult with the countries concerned in order to resolve the matter.

(2) If the matter is not resolved through such consultations, the Council may refer the matter to the Executive Committee or the Advisory Committee on Price Equivalents for urgent investigation and report. On receipt of any such report, the Council shall consider the matter further and, by a majority of the votes held by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by the importing countries, may make recommendations to the countries concerned.

(3) If, after action has or has not been taken, as the case may be, under paragraph (2) of this Article, the country concerned is not satisfied that the matter has been satisfactorily dealt with, it may apply to the Council for relief. The Council may, if it deems appropriate, relieve that country of part of its obligations for the crop year in question. Two-thirds of the votes held by the exporting countries and two-thirds of the votes held by the importing countries shall be required for a decision granting relief.

(4) If no relief is granted by the Council under paragraph (3) of this Article and the country concerned still considers that its interests as a party to this Agreement have suffered serious prejudice, it may withdraw from the Agreement at the end of the crop year by giving written notice to the Government of the United States of America. If the matter was brought before the Council in one crop year and the Council's consideration of the application for relief was concluded in the subsequent crop year the withdrawal of the country concerned may be effected within thirty days of such conclusion by giving similar notice.

PART VI—ANNUAL REVIEW

ARTICLE 21

Annual Review of World Wheat Situation

(1) (a) Guided by the objectives of this Agreement as set forth in Article 1, the Council shall annually review the world wheat situation and shall inform exporting and importing countries of the effects upon the international trade in wheat of any of the facts which emerge from the review.

(b) The review shall be carried out in the light of information obtainable in relation to national production, stocks, prices, trade, including surplus disposals and special transactions, and any other facts which may appear relevant.

(c) To assist it in its review of surplus disposals, exporting and importing countries shall inform the Council of the measures taken by them to secure compliance with the following principles: that the solution to the problems involved in the disposal of surpluses of wheat should be sought, wherever possible, through efforts to increase consumption; that disposals should take place in an orderly manner; and that, where surpluses are disposed of under special terms, exporting and importing countries concerned should undertake that such arrangements will be made without harmful interference with normal patterns of production and international commercial trade.

(d) Any exporting or importing country may for the purpose of the annual review submit to the Council any information which it considers relevant to the attainment of the objectives of this Agreement. Information so submitted shall be taken into account as appropriate by the Council in carrying out the annual review.

(2) The Council shall consider and inform exporting and importing countries of appropriate methods for encouraging the consumption of wheat. To this end the Council shall undertake studies of such matters as:

(i) factors affecting the consumption of wheat in the various countries;

(ii) means of promoting consumption, particularly in countries where the possibility of increased consumption exists.

Any exporting or importing country may submit to the Council information which it considers relevant to the attainment of this purpose.

(3) For the purposes of this Article, the Council shall pay due regard to work done by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and other intergovernmental organizations, in particular to avoid duplication, and may, without prejudice to the generality of paragraph (1) of Article 33, make such arrangements regarding co-operation in any of its activities as it considers desirable with such intergovernmental organizations, and also with any Governments of Members of the United Nations or the specialized agencies not party to this Agreement which have a substantial interest in the international trade in wheat.

(4) Nothing in this Article shall prejudice the complete liberty of action of any exporting or importing country in the determination and administration of its internal agricultural and price policies.

PART VII—GENERAL ADMINISTRATION

ARTICLE 22

Constitution of the Council

(1) The International Wheat Council, established by the International Wheat agreement 1949, shall continue in being for the purpose of administering the present Agreement, with the membership, powers and functions provided in this Agreement.

(2) Each exporting country and each importing country shall be a voting member of the Council and may be represented at its meetings by one delegate, alternates, and advisers.

(3) Such intergovernmental organizations as the Council may decide to invite to any of its meetings may each have one non-voting representative in attendance at those meetings.

(4) The Council shall elect a non-voting Chairman and a Vice-Chairman who shall hold office for one crop year. The Vice-Chairman shall have no vote while acting as Chairman.

(5) The Council shall have in the territory of each exporting and importing country, to the extent consistent with its laws, such legal capacity as may be necessary for the exercise of its functions under this Agreement.

ARTICLE 23

Powers and Functions of the Council

(1) The Council shall establish its rules of procedure.

(2) The Council shall keep such records as are required by the terms of this Agreement and may keep such other records as it considers desirable.

(3) The Council shall publish an annual report and may also publish any other information (including, in particular, its Annual Review or any part or summary thereof) concerning matters within the scope of this Agreement.

(4) In addition to the powers and functions specified in this Agreement, the Council shall have such other powers and perform such other functions as are necesary to carry out the terms of this Agreement.

(5) The council may, by two-thirds of the votes cast by the exporting countries and two-thirds of the votes cast by the importing countries, delegate the exercise of any of its powers or functions. The Council may at any time revoke such delegation by a majority of the votes cast. Subject to the provisions of Article 13, any decision made under any powers or functions delegated by the Council in accordance with this paragraph shall be subject to review by the Council at the request of any exporting or importing country made within a period which the Council shall prescribe. Any decision, in respect of which no request for review has been made within the prescribed period, shall be binding on all exporting and importing countries.

(6) In order to enable the Council to discharge its functions under this Agreement, the exporting and importing countries undertake to make available and supply such statistics and information as are necessary for this purpose.

ARTICLE 24

Votes of Exporting Countries

The votes to be exercised by the respective delegations of exporting countries on thet Council shall be as follows:

Argentina	70
Australia	125
Canada	339
France	80
Italy	24
Mexico	4
Spain	4
Sweden	15
United States of America	339
Total	1,000

ARTICLE 25

Votes of Importing Countries

The votes to be exercised by the respective delegations of importing countries on the Council shall be as follows:

Austria	8
Belgium and Luxembourg, Belgian Congo and Ruanda Urundi	36
Brazil	15
Ceylon	18
Cuba	17
Denmark	10
Dominican Republic	3
Federal Republic of Germany	166
Greece	11
Haiti	4
India	36
Indonesia	11
Ireland	10
Israel	5
Japan	87
Korea	3
Kingdom of the Netherlands	60
New Zealand	21
Norway	13
Peru	4
Philippines	22
Portugal and Overseas Provinces	10
Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland	7
Saudi Arabia	6
Switzerland	27
Union of South Africa	16
United Arab Republic	10
United Kingdom (excluding territories)	347
Vatican City	1
Venezuela	16
Total	1,000

ARTICLE 26

Redistribution of Votes

(1) Any exporting country may authorize any other exporting country, and any importing country may authorize any other importing country, to represent its interests and to exercise its votes at any meeting or meetings of the Council. Evidence of such authorization satisfactory to the Council shall be submitted to the Council.

(2) If at any Session of the Council an importing country or an exporting country is not represented by an accredited delegate and has not authorized another country to exercise its votes in accordance with paragraph (1) of this Article, the total votes to be exercised by the exporting countries shall be adjusted to a figure equal to the total of votes to be exercised at that Session by the importing countries and redistributed among exporting countries in proportion to their votes.

(3) Whenever the membership of this Agreement changes or when any country forfeits, is deprived of or recovers its votes under any provision of this Agreement, the Council shall redistribute the votes within either Article 24 or Article 25, as the case may be, proportionally to the number of votes held by each country listed in that Article.

(4) No exporting or importing country shall have less than one vote and there shall be no fractional votes.

ARTICLE 27

Seat, Sessions, Quorum

(1) The seat of the Council shall be London unless the Council decides otherwise by a majority of the votes cast by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes cast by the importing countries.

(2) The Council shall meet at least once during each half of each crop year and at such other times as the Chairman may decide.

(3) The Chairman shall convene a Session of the Council if so requested by (a) five countries or (b) one or more countries holding a total of not less than ten per cent of the total vote or (c) the Executive Committee.

(4) The presence of delegates with a majority of the votes held by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by the importing countries prior to any adjustment of votes under Article 26 shall be necessary to constitute a quorum at any meeting of the Council.

ARTICLE 28

Decisions

(1) Except where otherwise specified in this Agreement, decisions of the Council shall be by a majority of the total votes cast.

(2) Each exporting and importing country undertakes to accept as binding all decisions of the Council under the provisions of this Agreement.

ARTICLE 29

Executive Committee

(1) The Council shall establish an Executive Committee. The members of the Executive Committee shall be not more than four exporting countries elected annually by the exporting countries and not more than eight importing countries elected annually by the importing countries. The Council shall appoint the Chairman of the Executive Committee and may appoint a Vice-Chairman.

(2) The Executive Committee shall be responsible to and work under the general direction of the Council. It shall have such powers and functions as are expressly assigned to it under this Agreement and such other powers and functions as the Council may delegate to it under paragraph 5 of Article 23.

(3) The exporting countries on the Executive Committee shall have the same total number of votes as the importing countries. The votes of the exporting countries on the Executive Committee shall be divided among them as they shall decide, provided that no such exporting country shall have more than forty per cent of the total votes of those exporting countries. The votes of the importing countries on the Executive Committee shall be divided among them as they shall decide, provided that no such importing country shall have more than forty per cent of the total votes of those importing countries.

(4) The Council shall prescribe rules of procedure regarding voting in the Executive Committee and may make such other provision regarding rules of procedure in the Executive Committee as it thinks fit. A decision of the Executive Committee shall require the same majority of votes as this Agreement prescribes for the Council when making a decision on a similar matter.

(5) Any exporting or importing country which is not a member of the Executive Committee may participate, without voting, in the discussion of any question before the Executive Committee whenever the latter considers that the interests of that country are affected.

ARTICLE 30

Advisory Committee on Price Equivalents

(1) The Council shall establish an Advisory Committee on Price Equivalents consisting of representatives of not more than four exporting countries and of not more than four importing countries. The Chairman of the Advisory Committee shall be appointed by the Council.

(2) The Advisory Committee shall keep under continuous review current market conditions, including in particular the movement of prices, for wheat of all classes, types and grades and shall immediately inform the Council and the Executive Committee whenever in its opinion circumstances exist which are likely to or require that a declaration under Article 13 should be made or a meeting convened under paragraphs (1) or (2) of Article 7. With respect to the latter Article, the Advisory Committee shall have particular regard to circumstances which have brought about, or threaten to bring about, a serious fall in the price in any market of any class, type or grade of wheat in relation to the minimum price in that market for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat. The Advisory Committee shall, in the exercise of its functions under this paragraph, take into account any representations made by any exporting or importing country concerned.

(3) Whenever in the opinion of the Advisory Committee circumstances exist which require that a meeting of the Council be convened under paragraph (1) or (2) of Article 7 or whenever such a meeting is convened, it shall immediately advise the Council and the Executive Committee of any action with regard to the determination of allowances for differences of quality which it considers might suitably be taken to meet the situation.

(4) The Advisory Committee shall advise the Council and the Executive Committee on the matters referred to in paragraphs (5), (6) and (8) of Article 6 and paragraph (3) of Article 7 and on such other questions as the Council or the Executive Committee may refer to it.

ARTICLE 31

The Secretariat

(1) The Council shall have a Secretariat consisting of an Executive Secretary, who shall be its chief administrative officer, and such staff as may be required for the work of the Council and its Committees.

(2) The Council shall appoint the Executive Secretary who shall be responsible for the performance of the duties devolving upon the Secretariat in the administration of this Agreement and for the performance of such other duties as are assigned to him by the Council and its Committees.

(3) The staff shall be appointed by the Executive Secretary in accordance with regulations established by the Council.

(4) It shall be a condition of employment of the Executive Secretary and of the staff that they do not hold or shall cease to hold financial interest in the trade in wheat and that they shall not seek or receive instructions regarding their duties under this Agreement from any Government or from any other Authority external to the Council.

ARTICLE 32

Finance

(1) The expenses of delegations to the Council, of representatives on the Executive Committee, and of representatives on the Advisory Committee on Price Equivalents shall be met by their respective Governments. The other expenses necessary for the administration of this Agreement shall be met by annual contributions from the exporting and importing countries. The contribution of each such country for each crop year shall be in the proportion which the number of its votes bears to the total of the votes of the exporting and importing countries at the beginning of that crop year.

(2) At its first Session after this Agreement comes into force, the Council shall approve its budget for the period ending 31 July 1960 and assess the contribution to be paid by each exporting and importing country.

(3) The Council shall, at a Session during the second half of each crop year, approve its budget for the following crop year and assess the contribution to be paid by each exporting and importing country for that crop year.

(4) The initial contribution of any exporting or importing country acceding to this Agreement under paragraph (4) of Article 35 shall be assessed by the Council on the basis of the votes to be distributed to it and the period remaining in the current crop year, but the assessments made upon other exporting and importing countries for the current crop year shall not be altered.

(5) Contributions shall be payable immediately upon assessment. Any exporting or importing country failing to pay its contribution within one year of its assessment shall forfeit its voting rights until its contribution is paid, but shall not be relieved of its obligations under this Agreement, nor shall it be deprived of any of its rights under this Agreement unless the Council so decides by a majority of the votes held by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by the importing countries.

(6) The Council shall, each crop year, publish an audited statement of its receipts and expenditures in the previous crop year.

(7) The Government of the country where the seat of the Council is situated shall grant exemption from taxation on the salaries paid by the Council to its employees except that such exemption need not apply to the nationals of that country.

(8) The Council shall, prior to its dissolution, provide for the settlement of its liabilities and the disposal of its records and assets.

ARTICLE 33

Co-operation with other Intergovernmental Organizations

(1) The Council may make whatever arrangements are desirable for consultation and co-operation with the appropriate organs of the United Nations and its specialized agencies and with other intergovernmental organizations.

(2) If the Council finds that any terms of this Agreement are materially inconsistent with such requirements as may be laid down by the United Nations or through its appropriate organs and specialized agencies regarding intergovernmental commodity agreements, the inconsistency shall be deemed to be a circumstance affecting adversely the operation of this Agreement and the procedure prescribed in paragraphs (3), (4) and (5) of Article 36 shall be applied.

ARTICLE 34

Disputes and Complaints

(1) Any dispute concerning the interpretation or application of this Agreement other than a dispute under Article 18 or 19 which is not settled by negotiation shall, at the request of any country party to the dispute, be referred to the Council for decision.

(2) In any case where a dispute has been referred to the Council under paragraph (1) of this Article, a majority of countries, or any countries holding not less than one-third of the total votes, may require the Council, after full discussion, to seek the opinion of the advisory panel referred to in paragraph (3) of this Article on the issues in dispute before giving its decision.

(3) (a) Unless the Council unanimously agrees otherwise, the panel shall consist of:

(i) two persons, one having wide experience in matters of the kind in dispute and the other having legal standing and experience, nominated by the exporting countries;

(ii) two such persons nominated by the importing countries; and

(iii) a chairman selected unanimously by the four persons nominated under (i) and (ii) or, if they fail to agree, by the Chairman of the Council.

(b) Persons from countries whose Governments are parties to this Agreement shall be eligible to serve on the advisory panel, and persons appointed to the advisory panel shall act in their personal capacities and without instructions from any Government.

(c) The expenses of the advisory panel shall be paid by the Council.

(4) The opinion of the advisory panel and the reasons therefor shall be submitted to the Council which, after considering all the relevant information, shall decide the dispute.

(5) Any complaint that any exporting or importing country has failed to fulfil its obligations under this Agreement shall, at the request of the country making the complaint, be referred to the Council which shall make a decision on the matter.

(6) Subject to the provisions of Article 19, no exporting or importing country shall be found to have committed a breach of this Agreement except by a majority of the votes held by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by the importing countries. Any finding that an exporting or importing country is in breach of this Agreement shall specify the nature of the breach and if the breach involves default by that country in its obligations under Articles 4 or 5 of this Agreement, the extent of such default.

(7) Subject to the provisions of Article 19, if the Council finds that an exporting country or an importing country has committed a breach of this Agreement it may, by a majority of the votes held by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by the importing countries, deprive the country concerned of its voting rights until it fulfils its obligations or expel that country from the Agreement.

PART VIII—FINAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 35

Signature, Acceptance, Accession, Entry into Force

(1) This Agreement shall remain open for signature in Washington from 6 April 1959 until and including 24 April 1959 by the Governments of the countries listed in Articles 24 and 25.

(2) This Agreement shall be subject to acceptance by the signatory Governments in accordance with their respective constitutional procedures. Subject to the provisions of paragraphs (6) and (8) of this Article, instruments of acceptance shall be deposited with the Government of the United States of America not later than 16 July 1959.

(3) This Agreement shall be open for accession by any Government of a country listed in Articles 24 and 25. Subject to the provisions of paragraphs (6) and (8) of this Article, instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Government of the United States of America not later than 16 July 1959.

(4) The Council may, by two-thirds of the votes cast by exporting countries and by two-thirds of the votes cast by importing countries, approve accession to this Agreement by the Government of any Member of the United Nations or the specialized agencies or by any Government invited to the United Nations Wheat Conference 1958-1959 but which is not listed in Article 24 or 25 and prescribe conditions for such accession, and in such a case the Council shall establish the relevant datum quantities in accordance with Article 12 and 14. However, in the case of any Government which was on 31 July 1959 a party to the International Wheat Agreement 1956 and which seeks before 1 December 1959 to accede to this Agreement, any decision under this paragraph shall require only a majority of the votes cast by exporting countries and a majority of votes cast by importing countries. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Government of the United States of America.

(5) Part I and Parts III to VIII of this Agreement shall enter into force on 16 July

1959 and Part II on 1 August 1959 between those Governments which have by 16 July 1959 accepted or acceded under paragraphs (2), (3) or (6) of this Article, provided that such Governments hold not less than two-thirds of the votes of exporting countries and not less than two-thirds of the votes of importing countries in accordance with the distribution established in Articles 24 and 25.

(6) A notification by any signatory Government or by any Government entitled to accede to this Agreement under paragraph (3) of this Article to the Government of the United States of America on or before 16 July 1959 of an intention to accept or accede to this Agreement, followed by the deposit of an instrument of acceptance or accession not later than 1 December 1959 in fulfilment of that intention, shall be deemed to constitute acceptance or accession on 16 July 1959 for the purposes of this Article.

(7) If by 16 July 1959 the conditions laid down in the preceding paragraphs for the entry into force of this Agreement are not fulfilled, the Governments of those countries which by that date have accepted or acceded to this Agreement in accordance with paragraphs (2), (3) or (6) of this Article may decide by mutual consent that it shall enter into force among them, or they may take whatever other action they consider the situation requires.

(8) Any Government which has not accepted or acceded to this Agreement by 16 July 1959 in accordance with paragraphs (2), (3) or (6) of this Article may be granted by the Council an extension of time for depositing its instrument of acceptance or accession. If that Government has made no notification in accordance with paragraph (6) of this Article, Part I and Parts III to VIII of this Agreement shall enter into force for that Government on the date of deposit of its instrument, and Part II shall enter into force for it on 1 August 1959 or on the date of deposit of its instrument, whichever is the later.

(9) Where, for the purposes of the operation of this Agreement, reference is made to countries listed or included in particular Articles or in any Annex, any country the Government of which has acceded to this Agreement on conditions prescribed by the Council in accordance with paragraph (4) of this Article shall be deemed to be listed or included in those Articles or in that Annex accordingly.

(10) The Government of the United States of America will notify all signatory and acceding Governments of each signature, acceptance of and accession to this Agreement and of all notifications made in accordance with paragraph (6) of this Article.

ARTICLE 36

Duration, Amendment, Withdrawal and Termination

(1) This Agreement shall remain in force until and including 31 July 1962.

(2) The Council shall, at such time as it considers appropriate, communicate to the exporting and importing countries its recommendations regarding renewal or replacement of this Agreement. The Council may invite any Government of a Member of the United Nations or the specialized agencies not party to this Agreement which has a substantial interest in the international trade in wheat to participate in any of its discussions under this paragraph.

(3) The Council may, by a majority of the votes held by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by the importing countries, recommend an amendment of this Agreement to the exporting and importing countries.

(4) The Council may fix a time within which each exporting and importing country shall notify the Government of the United States of America whether or not it accepts the amendment. The amendment shall become effective upon its acceptance by exporting countries which hold two-thirds of the votes of the exporting countries and by importing countries which hold two-thirds of the votes of the importing countries.

(5) Any exporting or importing country which has not notified the Government of the United States of America of its acceptance of an amendment by the date on which such amendment becomes effective may, after giving such written notice of withdrawal to the Government of the United States of America as the Council may require in each case, withdraw from this Agreement at the end of the current crop year, but shall not thereby be released from any obligations under this Agreement which have not been discharged by the end of that crop year.

(6) Any exporting country which considers its interests to be seriously prejudiced by the non-participation in or withdrawal from this Agreement of any country listed in Article 25 holding not less than five per cent of the votes distributed in that Article, or any importing country which considers its interests to be seriously prejudiced by the non-participation in or withdrawal from the Agreement of any country listed in Article 24 holding not less than five per cent of the votes distributed in that Article, may withdraw from this Agreement by giving written notice of withdrawal to the Government of the United States of America before 1 August 1959. If a notification has been made under paragraph (6) of Article 35 or an extension of time has been granted by the Council under paragraph 8 of that Article, notice of withdrawal in accordance with this paragraph may be given before 15 December 1959 or before the expiry of 14 days after the extension granted, as the case may be.

(7) Any exporting or importing country which considers its national security to be endangered by the outbreak of hostilities may withdraw from this Agreement by giving thirty days' written notice of withdrawal to the Government of the United States of America or may apply in the first instance to the Council for the suspension of some or all of its obligations under this Agreement.

(8) The Government of the United States of America will inform all signatory and acceding Governments of each notification and notice received under this Article.

ARTICLE 37

Territorial Application

(1) Any Government may, at the time of signature or acceptance of or accession to this Agreement, declare that its rights and obligations under this Agreement shall not apply in respect of all or any of the non-metropolitan territories for the international relations of which it is responsible.

(2) With the exception of territories in respect of which a declaration has been made in accordance with paragraph (1) of this Article, the rights and obligations of any Government under this Agreement shall apply in respect of all non-metropolitan territories for the international relations of which that Government is responsible.

(3) Any Government may, at any time after its acceptance of or accession to this Agreement, by notification to the Government of the United States of America, declare that its rights and obligations under the Agreement shall apply in respect of all or any of the non-metropolitan territories regarding which it has made a declaration in accordance with paragraph (1) of this Article.

(4) Any Government may, by giving notification of withdrawal to the Government of the United States of America, withdraw from this Agreement separately in respect of all or any of the non-metropolitan territories for whose international relations it is responsible.

(5) For the purposes of the establishment of datum quantities under Article 14 and the redistribution of votes under Article 26, any change in the application of this Agreement in accordance with this Article shall be regarded as a change of membership in such manner as may be appropriate to the circumstances.

(6) The Government of the United States of America will inform all signatory and acceding Governments of any declaration or notification made under this Article.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the undersigned, having been duly authorized to this effect by their respective Governments, have signed this Agreement on the dates appearing opposite their signature.

The texts of this Agreement in the English, French and Spanish languages shall all be equally authentic, the original to be deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America, which shall transmit certified copies thereof to each signatory and acceding Government.

ANNEX

For the purposes of paragraph (1) of Article 4 of this Agreement, the percentages referred to in that paragraph are set out below against the name of each importing country:

Austria	45
Belgium and Luxembourg	80
Brazil	50
Ceylon	80
Cuba	90
Denmark	60
Dominican Republic	90
Federal Republic of Germany	70
Greece	50
Haiti	90
India	70
Indonesia	70
Ireland	90
Israel	60
Japan	50
Korea	90
Kingdom of the Netherlands	75
New Zealand	90
Norway	60
Peru	70
Philippines	70
Portugal	85
Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland	90
Saudi Arabia	70
Switzerland	80
Union of South Africa	90
United Arab Republic	30
United Kingdom	80
Vatican City	100
Venezuela	70

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 24, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-63, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: With leave, next sitting.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-41.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-41) intituled: "An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 23, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-64.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-64) intituled: "An Act to amend the Prime Minister's Residence Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 18, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate I move the third reading now.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the bill is given third reading I would like to refer to something that is not referred to in the bill, the fact that no rent is to be charged the Prime Minister for the use of this country residence. I am in complete accord with this and I think it would be most improper to charge any rent for its use. I will go further and say it is most unusual that the Prime Minister should have to pay rent for the use of his official residence on Sussex street, Ottawa. I think this arrangement is peculiar to Canada. If I remember correctly there is a provision in the Prime Minister's Residence Act obligating the Prime Minister to pay an annual rent of $5,000 for the use of that home. There is nothing in the act which says the Prime Minister must live there, but, notwithstanding the omission of those words from the act, I would say he is required to do so—that this is one of his duties. I doubt if it would be within the competence of the Senate to strike out the provision in the act requiring the payment of $5,000, because that would be depriving the Government of revenue to that extent.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) if it is not so that the former Prime Minister himself insisted on paying rent, although he was not required to do so? I recall that he said in the House of Commons he would insist on paying rent.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I cannot say whether the Prime Minister insisted. My recollection is that the Prime Minister of that day, the Right Honourable Louis S. St. Laurent, did approve of the provision for rent and requested that it be included in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Otherwise he could not live there without paying income tax on the whole value of the services he would receive. That was thoroughly discussed in our Banking and Commerce Committee at the time and that is why that provision was put in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Well, I was in the House of Commons at the time, and I do not recall any reference being made to the fact that payment of rent would affect the income tax of the Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It came up in the Banking and Commerce Committee and was fully discussed there.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald I cannot for the life of me see how non-payment of rent would affect the income tax the Prime Minister would have to pay.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: He receives a benefit.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: We could always reduce the rent to a dollar per annum.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It could be reduced to a dollar, yes. I doubt very much if any other country which has the standing of Canada requires the head of the Government to pay rent on the official residence provided for him.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Does the rent not include all the services and everything else that goes with the house?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It may include all the services, but surely if we are providing a residence for the Prime Minister we should provide all the services that go with it. I am convinced that Canada is the only country of any standing in the world that provides a residence for its Prime Minister and then requires him to pay rent on it. Take the two residences in England, 10 Downing street and Chequers. I do not think that the Prime Minister of Great Britain pays rent on either one of these residences. In fact, I am sure he does not.

Honourable senators, as I have said, I doubt whether it is within the competence of this house to strike out of the act the section requiring payment of rent, but I hope that members of the other house will take notice of this discussion and that next year at least we shall receive from that house a bill to amend the act further by deleting this section.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I appreciate very much what the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) has said but, in my opinion and in the opinion of the committee which dealt with this matter, if the services being received by the Prime Minister were reduced to the value of $1, the Income Tax Act would have to be amended.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Not necessarily.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: And it was felt that that should not be done.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I think it would be most inappropriate if someone from this side of the house did not get up and support the views just expressed by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). I do feel that he has expressed sentiments which are in complete agreement with those of the large majority of the people of this country, irrespective of the party of which the Prime Minister of the day may be a member. I believe that the people of Canada would derive considerable satisfaction if they could say to themselves that they had provided residence accommodation for their Prime Minister, free of expense to him.

Another thing that may be said for this point of view is that the Prime Minister is not the most highly paid official in our government services. I think it is well known that other persons who work in the service of this country receive a higher remuneration than does the Prime Minister.

In any event, as I have said, I rise to discuss this matter because I think it is appropriate that some of us on this side of the house should support the position taken in this regard by the honourable Leader of the Opposition, and I for one commend him most highly for his remarks on the subject. I believe that the position he takes would probably receive the unanimous support of the other house and also of this house.

I have heard about the income tax problem that is involved in this matter and to which the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has referred. But, after all, Parliament should easily be able to get around that question and find a means of putting residential accommodation in the possession of the Prime Minister of this country on more favourable terms than at present without complications of that kind.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, perhaps there has been a little misapprehension about the act which honourable members have been discussing. This amount of $5,000 per annum which the Prime Minister is required to pay is not only for the rent of his accommodation, but for food as well.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: A lot of food for $5,000!

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Section 5 of the act states:

> The Prime Minister shall pay the Receiver General of Canada five thousand dollars yearly pro rata for any period less than a year, for food and lodging for himself and his family.

So, as I have said, this $5,000 is not merely rent for the occupation of the premises, but it is for food also; and although I think we are all inclined to be as generous as we can to the person occupying the very important position of Prime Minister, I doubt whether we would want to pay for his food as well as his lodging.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, it is rather unpleasant for me to find myself somewhat in disagreement with the leader on this side (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) and with the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson). But, after all, we must retain some sort of reasonable perspective in matters of this kind. It is true, as the honourable senator from Winnipeg South stated a moment ago, there are at least two officials, not directly in the Government service but in what may be described as Crown corporations, who draw a higher remuneration than the Prime Minister does. But if you compare the Prime Minister's salary or, shall I say, his emoluments today with those of the Prime Ministers of other dominions and Great Britain, you will find that Canada is not lagging behind.

As the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) has just pointed out, the Government provides the lodging.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: And the food.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: That is, it provides and maintains the building and the grounds; it provides for the gardeners and for everything else, including the food; and for all that, out of a remuneration of $37,000, the Prime Minister returns $5,000 to the Treasury. Of course, we live in changed times, and we have marched a great distance in the past 40 years; but when I came first to Parliament I used to see Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was then Leader of the Opposition, walking from the house and waiting to get a streetcar to go to Laurier House on Laurier Avenue; and I have seen Sir Robert Borden, when he was Prime Minister, waiting for a streetcar to take him to his home. Today we have other standards. I am not at all convinced that they are better standards than we had in those days, for I venture to say that Sir Wilfrid and Sir Robert would rank well alongside any of their successors.

As regards this legislation to provide a residence at Lake Mousseau, or Harrington Lake—some place up in the hills—I have no particular objection to it. That property, of course, is now in the possession of what used to be known as the Federal District Commission. What is its present title?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The National Capital Commission.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: We are not only not satisfied with the old standards, but we have got more fancy names to describe some public bodies. At any rate, the National Capital Commission owns this property. On it is a residence, which was built by a very respected citizen of Ottawa many years ago, and a lake of substantial dimensions. I understand there are fish in the lake, and I believe the Prime Minister is a fisherman; so, perhaps, in the seclusion of the Gatineau hills, out some morning, no doubt at daybreak, angling for fish, he may find the recreation and the solace of spirit which will enable him much more effectively to prosecute the heavy labours of his office when he comes back to his desk.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, a fact which must be acknowledged by all is that the Prime Minister is the first citizen of Canada. I remember very well that when the question of purchasing a property on Sussex Street, Ottawa, as a residence for the Prime Minister was debated in the House of Commons, the then Prime Minister said that he would insist on paying $5,000 annually for service and food. At that time the only mention made was of the Sussex Street residence. Now we have a bill to provide the Prime Minister with a summer place at Lac Mousseau, also called Harrington Lake. One thing which has struck me in the discussion which has taken place is that, if the $5,000 by the Prime Minister is for food and services, how in the world can he eat twice, at two different places, at the same time? This I cannot understand. The food that he will not eat on Sussex Street he may enjoy far back in the woods at Lac Mousseau. However, I sincerely believe it will be a good thing for the Government of Canada that the Prime Minister of this country shall spend some time in enjoying leisure and breathing fresh air in the province of Quebec, at Lac Mousseau. Therefore I am for the bill as it is now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILL

STANDARD TRUST COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill S-28.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (S-28) intituled: "An Act to incorporate Standard Trust Company", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 18, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. William R. Brunt, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, presented the committee's fifth report.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

Your committee recommend that the usual supply of stationery, etc., which has been selected by your committee with due regard to usefulness and economy, for use of the senators in their rooms and desks in the Senate chamber, be supplied according to the lists approved by your committee and deposited with the Clerk of Stationery, and that the distribution be made in a way similar to that of the present session.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

SIXTH REPORT

Hon. Mr. Brunt presented the committee's sixth report.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

Your committee have examined the expenditures and revenues of the Senate for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959, and have found them correct.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

SEVENTH REPORT

Hon. Mr. Brunt presented the committee's seventh report.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

Your committee recommend that during the coming recess of Parliament the Honourable Senator Aseltine, Leader of the Government in the Senate, and two senators to be named by him from time to time, be authorized to act for and on behalf of the Senate in all matters relating to the internal economy of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

EIGHTH REPORT

Hon. Mr. Brunt presented the committee's eighth report.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

Your committee recommend that the Plan of Organization of the Senate be amended by adding thereto one position of:
"Assistant Chief of Reporting Branch and Chief Parliamentary Reporter, Senate".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

NINTH REPORT

Hon. Mr. Brunt presented the committee's ninth report.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

Your committee recommend that Mr. George McIntosh, temporary Confidential Messenger, be deemed a Parliamentary Confidential Messenger, Committees Branch, and that he be paid at the rate of $275 per month, effective July 1, 1959.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

TENTH REPORT

Hon. Mr. Brunt presented the committee's tenth report.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

Your committee recommend:
1. That Mr. Matthew Baillie, Cleaner and Helper, Senate, be retired on August 1, 1959, under the provisions of the Public Service Superannuation Act.
2. That Mr. Baillie be granted, in lieu of retiring leave with pay, a gratuity equal to the difference between five months' salary and annuity for that period.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-34, respecting the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Tuesday next.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. Monette moved the third reading of Bill C-52, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADA-FINLAND INCOME TAX CONVENTION BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 18, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson for the second reading of Bill C-54, to implement a convention between Canada and the Republic of Finland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, very soon we will run out of countries with which we may be able to make a tax convention. We have been moving along at a fairly rapid rate. Most of these countries with which we have concluded tax agreements happen to be maritime countries, and that is understandable when you read some of the provisions of the conventions. I have, on previous occasions, spoken on these bills and examined them, and I can say from my study of them that there is a well-defined pattern that is followed in each bill, disregarding some changes in language in one bill as against another.

There is one thing to which I would call your attention, and it is that in dealing with the avoidance of double taxation in relation to a company that operates ships or aircraft, the taxation, and, therefore, the exemption, in some of the conventions has been based on residence. In the bill before us the taxation, or exemption is based on residence. That is, if you have a Canadian company which owns ships, even though the ships never touch a Canadian port but do business in other maritime countries, it is not subject to taxation in the countries where the ships are doing business. In this particular case, the agreement is between Finland and Canada, and a shipping company which has a residence in Canada and earns income in Finland as a result of the operation of its ships there would not be subject to taxation in Finland.

In some of the other tax conventions taxation is based upon the port of registry. For instance, you will find that in the convention with Australia, which was approved in the 1957-58 session, the taxation is based on the port of registry. Personally, I would think that, from the point of view of trying to deal most effectively with the world situation or exemption is based on residence. residence may be a better basis than the port of registry.

There are one or two other things which make this convention different from earlier ones. For instance, article IX, which deals with income from personal services or professional services that a Canadian may earn in Finland, or that a Finn may earn in Canada, contains certain conditions. In relation to compensation for personal services there is a limitation of $3,000, but in the convention that was approved in the 1957-58 session there was no limitation on the amount.

Then there is the student exemption. In the case of a Canadian student receiving full-time education in Finland or a Finnish student receiving full-time education in Canada, there is an exemption from income tax in the country in which the student is studying. For example, if a Finnish student is receiving income from Finland in Canada, this is not regarded as income received in Canada, and vice versa when the position changes. This provision was omitted from the Canada-Australia Income Tax Convention, but it was included in conventions Canada has made with other countries.

Article XIV contains a provision which I have not found in any other income tax convention. It is a good idea and possibly it is implicit in the other income tax agreements, but at least it is brought out in the open here. It reads:

> A resident of one of the territories who does not carry on a trade or business in the other territory through a permanent establishment situated therein shall be exempt in that other territory from any tax on gains from the sale, transfer or exchange of capital assets.

Therefore, a Finn who comes to Canada for the purpose of speculating in our market and makes a substantial amount in the way of capital gains, needs only give an accounting when he returns to Finland. He does not have to give an accounting any place else. I cannot conceive that the same opportunity to make capital gains would afford itself to a Canadian who decided to speculate in the Finnish market, but if he did make such gains there he would not have to give an accounting for income tax purposes in Finland. When he returned to Canada, however, it might be an entirely different story.

Then we come to the hardy chestnut that I deal with every time an income tax agreement bill comes before the Senate. The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) always has something to say about it too. I refer to the provision found in article XV, which deals with the exchange of information. I do not expect that what I say will have any effect, for I have been saying the same thing for years now and Canada still enters into these conventions without making any alterations in them.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Put your comments on record again.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I am glad that the honourable Leader of the Government invited me to put my comments on record and not to make a record out of them.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: That would be easier.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Much easier.

Here is the objection I have to this provision for exchanging information. Let us suppose a citizen of Finland operating in Canada makes an accounting for income tax in accordance with the laws of Canada. Under this convention if the Finnish authorities feel he has not given them the full story they can request as much information from the Canadian authorities in relation to the tax accounting of that individual in Canada as the Canadian authorities might exact under our laws from any taxpayer in Canada. The odd point about this is that if the Finnish taxpayer is conforming entirely with the laws of Canada in making his returns, the only purpose the Canadian authorities would serve in giving information to Finland would be to assist that country in the possible enforcement of its own laws. In this way Canada would be sort of giving extraterritorial effect to the Finnish laws, and I think there is something basically wrong with that. If this Finnish individual has not committed any offence or violated any law in Canada, surely his own country, if it has jurisdiction over him, could require him to produce documents and other materials, and this procedure would be preferable to a full exchange of information between both countries.

This provision is in somewhat briefer form than similar provisions in earlier income tax conventions, but I can assure you it means the same thing. It provides for the exchange of information even though there may be no wrongdoing in Canada at all in relation to the information requested. On the other hand, if it were established that the individual has been avoiding or evading income tax in both countries, then of course I would have no objection to the exchange of proper information.

Paragraph 4 of the convention provides that this exchange of information shall not be considered as imposing on a contracting state the obligation to perform an administrative act which would be contrary to its regulations or practices. How a person affected by it could enforce his rights would present a very difficult problem. I doubt that the Canadian authorities would have any power under the income tax law to demand from an individual an accounting more than sufficient to complete their assessments and satisfy themselves that all income has been properly brought into account in Canada by the individual. I suggest that to furnish information in those circumstances might be contrary to regulations, although I am not sure it would be contrary to the practices that have been going on in Canada under existing income tax conventions we have with other countries. So, while we have something that looks like a saving provision, I would not attach much importance to it, if any. As a matter of fact, we still have the same old clause, in substance, in connection with the exchange of information, and I repeat its effect is so broad that in giving information—to Finland, in this particular case—Canada would sometimes be in fact assisting in the enforcement of a foreign tax law in relation to a person who is not a citizen of Canada, or might not even be a resident of Canada, and one who, in so far as any tax liability in Canada is concerned, might have conformed completely to Canadian requirements. There is something inherent in that which I do not like, and for this reason I keep on voicing my objection every time similiar legislation comes before us.

Honourable senators, it must be remembered that by the time a tax convention comes to us there is nothing we can do except approve the bill to which the agreement is attached or refuse to pass the bill. We cannot change the convention, because that has been signed by the representatives of the Canadian Government and of the foreign Government. If we do approve legislation incorporating an agreement as part of a statute we then have special legislation which overrides it to the extent that it contains any inconsistencies with our general income tax law.

The only other comment I want to make is that it is hard to be too critical of something that is basically beneficial.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Quite.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Certainly these income tax conventions are beneficial. Today when Canadian business corporations and individuals are trading freely in various parts of the world, and when the movement of goods and people and communication is as close to instantaneous as one can imagine, it becomes most important that there should be some facility for dealing with taxation problems that are inherent in this trading. It is extremely important that the incidence of taxation in connection with this trade be reduced to a minimum and that we have reciprocal agreements under which relief is provided against what might otherwise be double or triple taxation. This is basically good. It means encouragement to industry in Canada, and it is of some advantage to the country with which we deal. Inherently, the business of making tax conventions is an excellent idea. I feel strongly on the subject of exchange of information, but not strongly enough to say that we should refuse to approve an agreement embodying a tax convention simply because I, for one, cannot approve the extent to which the countries go in the exchange of information. Because this convention has good features in it, I am heartily in favour of it, and simply satisfy myself by voicing my objections to the continued inclusion of a provision for this form of exchange of information.

Before I sit down, may I add one remark? We have considered so many of these tax conventions that I think most of us could almost recite them in the dark. For the life of me, I cannot appreciate just what good purpose could be served by sending this bill to a committee at this stage, and I leave that to the consideration of the Senate.

Hon. W. Rupert Davies: Honourable senators, I am not going to make a long speech. I simply want to support the statement of the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) that tax conventions should not come to the Senate with a simple request for our approval. I have said before, and I say it again, that before a tax convention is entered into it should be drawn up by a committee, and not by a group of officials who know very little about the situation. I have had some experience in these matters, particularly with the convention between this country and Great Britain. Talk about exchange of information! When they start investigating a Canadian over there for income tax purposes you would think he was a criminal. In my own case, I had to furnish all my income tax returns from Canada. Not only that, I feel to give them photostatic copies of all my bank accounts. I think that is ridiculous.

Furthermore, I think we should have some arrangement whereby Canada and the other countries with which we make income tax conventions would agree on the meaning of certain words, as, for instance, the word "capital". The British income tax people have their own rules and regulations for deciding what capital is. As I understand it, in Canada capital is what you have left after you have paid your taxes. That is not the situation in Britain. If you take money into Britain, and you do so for three or four years running, you are liable for income tax. Over there your capital is the money which you had, and can prove that you had, before your first visit to Britain. Then they turn your Canadian income into British income. The next step is what they call "grossing it up", which means that before they start to put into effect the income tax convention they multiply what you took in by four. It is a very awkward and difficult procedure. I have been fighting my case for five or six years, and I am not through yet. It has cost me a lot of money. Eventually I had to get a very high-class firm in London to try to deal with these people and find out what it was all about.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: A firm of accountants?

Hon. Mr. Davies: Yes, a firm of accountants, very high-priced people. First of all I had solicitors, but they finally threw up their hands and said I had better get a high-class firm of accountants, because they, the sollicitors, did not understand my problem. I did that, and am still working at it. What it will amount to in the end, I do not know.

Honourable senators, when any more of these income tax conventions are made let us see what they are all about before they are presented in the form of bills in either the House of Commons or the Senate. I don't like having them brought to us in the finished form of this convention and being told, "Just pass this, or else you will have to change it all around." We should sit down with the officials who prepare these conventions and discuss the matter with them. Some clauses in income tax conventions deal with individuals but in the main they deal with businesses and people that are engaged in business between the two countries which enter into the convention. However, they give very little consideration to the individual. That should not be so.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, the honourable gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) pointed out that this subject-matter has often been before us. He expressed the opinion that the time will soon come when we shall run out of countries for this sort of convention. I hope that is so, because on each occasion that such a convention has come before this house I have made very much the same objection that I intend to voice now. I raised the question with regard to the provision for the giving of information, against which I protested as altogether wrong, entirely repugnant to my idea of Canadian rights. The honourable senator from Toronto has so well expressed my opinion in this regard today that I feel I need not repeat what he has said.

However, I wish to remake another objection, one which the senator who spoke before me (Hon. Mr. Davies) mentioned. I refer to the system of bringing conventions of this kind before the house and telling us to take them or leave them, reject them in whole or swallow them in whole, including the parts that are good, of which we approve, and the parts that are bad, of which we disapprove.

To understand the situation with regard to conventions one must go into history. It has always been the prerogative of the Crown, in British countries, from time immemorial, to negotiate and complete treaties with foreign countries. That has been the prerogative of the Crown, and not a function of Parliament. On the other hand, it is a settled, established principle of British and Canadian law that when the executive representing the Crown makes with a foreign country an agreement which requires for its implementation a change in the law of the land, the executive must come to Parliament and ask for the necessary legislation. If Parliament does not agree in whole or in part, well, that is just too bad for the executive. The executive should not enter into an agreement which Parliament will not implement, and in entering into agreements or treaties with foreign countries the executive should provide that such agreements shall become effective by implementation only with the consent of Parliament. The present system is wholly repugnant to the well-established principle of international and local law in dealings between nations. A conference between ourselves and the executive, or those who represent the executive, as has been suggested, is not what is required. The executive should enter into the convention as it sees fit, take its chances on what Parliament may do, and then the executive should come to Parliament for the necessary legislation to implement the agreement. It should not bring an agreement here and ask us to make that agreement law, but rather should ask us to make into law the substance of the agreement, or such of it as is required to be made into law. See what a mess we have got into by proceeding in the unorthodox manner of this bill. We now have a book of I do not know how many of these conventions, all of which are made the law of our land.

This bill provides that the convention entered into between Canada and the Republic of Finland set out in the schedule is approved and declared to have the force of law in Canada—every word of it. Much of it is not required at all to implement the terms of the agreement. Any legal draftsman could take out of this agreement those provisions which require implementation. It is not necessary to include the title and the name and everything else, including the signatures at the end of the convention, and call that the law of the land.

My friend from Toronto suggests that perhaps the giving of this information is not within the confines of the Income Tax Act and that therefore the provisions of this convention in that regard may not apply. He did not use those precise words, but he intimated as much. But listen to section 3 of this bill:

> In the event of any inconsistency between the provisions of this act, or the convention, and the operation of any other law, the provisions of this act and the convention prevail to the extent of the inconsistency.

So clerks sitting perhaps not in our country but over in Finland, and out of control of the cabinet here, enter into an agreement which takes precedence over the whole law of Canada. That is ridiculous. And then that is brought before us and we are asked to swallow it holus-bolus.

Now, I am not quite so delicate as my friend from Toronto. He says that as this is a good bill, we must accept it. The purpose of the agreement is a good one, but the time must come, honourable senators, when you and I will say that we will not put up with this procedure, irrespective of how good the substance may be, and we will send the bill and the convention back to the executive or their representatives and ask them to follow the traditional procedure in matters of this kind.

The last time I spoke in this vein I think the present Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) agreed with me, the senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) agreed with me, and a number of others who spoke at the same time all agreed that this was the wrong way to proceed. On that occasion we expressed the hope that in future the traditional methods would be followed. We should be presented with a bill, an ordinary bill drawn by lawyers as ordinary bills are drawn, simply implementing the convention as may be necesary. We would then be able to amend the bill, refuse it or pass it as we, in our good judgment, see fit.

Now, I suppose we are going to pass this bill, and so we will have similar bills, if there are any more countries to agree with, but I protest, and I shall go on protesting so long as this kind of legislation comes before us.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, I rise to draw the attention of the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) to the fact that many treaties between Canada and other countries might not have been entered into had they first been presented to Parliament and debated. Let me refer particularly to the fisheries treaties, in one of which five nations participated, one of them being Soviet Russia. Honourable senators, if ever you want to see a protracted discussion of the various articles and provisions of an agreement you should watch the Russians going to work on one of them. If there is a word in doubt they will wire to Moscow for instructions and you may have to wait around for a week or more pending new instructions from Moscow. In the case of that fisheries treaty I can say that if it had first been brought before Parliament and the various clauses discussed here and decided upon, we could not have been sure that the other countries to the treaty would have agreed with our terms.

The argument advanced by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity might be logical in regard to this bill, but I know that treaties we have entered into with foreign countries, including Great Britain, would never have gotten to the stage of signing if they were brought to Parliament first. Instead of following that procedure, our officials attend these conferences in various countries and, they tell us, that is the only way in which it can be done. At these conferences high officials of the various countries, including those representing Canada, discuss the pros and cons, iron out the difficulties and eventually bring back the signed treaty as agreed upon. After that it is presented to Parliament and we pass it without any comment.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I have the indulgence of the house just to say that approving a treaty by Parliament does not make it into a statute and give it the force of law. We have approved a number of treaties in this house—merely expressed approval—but that has no force of law and that does not make the various clauses of the treaty statutes of the Dominion of Canada. That is what is being done in this instance. I have no objection to the approving of treaties or to the laying of treaties before Parliament for approval. But when it is necessary to change the law of the land in order to implement a treaty, the appropriate legislation should be included in a bill brought before us for our consideration.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt this motion?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Next sitting.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Clarence V. Emerson moved the second reading of Bill C-43, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill respecting the Unemployment Insurance Act seeks concurrence in five amendments of a major nature, as well as in a number of minor amendments.

The major amendments are as follows: First, the schedule of benefit rates and allowable earnings has been revised; second, the schedule of contributions payable to the Unemployment Insurance Fund has been revised; third, the salary level beyond which contributions are no longer required to unemployment insurance has been increased; fourth, the maximum entitlement to benefit has been increased; fifth, provision has been made whereby short-term inmates of jails and penitentiaries will not lose the unemployment insurance contributions they had earned in the two years prior to beginning their period of incarceration.

Since the beginning of unemployment insurance in this country, honourable senators, the benefit rates payable to claimants have always been set to meet, as well as possible, two conditions. First, the rates should be high enough so that claimants will not suffer undue distress during the time they are unemployed; second, the rates should not be so high that claimants will lose their incentive to work.

Over the years it has been felt that a happy medium consisted of a benefit rate approximately one-half of the recent wages earned by claimants. In addition, the act allows claimants to earn specified amounts without there being any effect on the amount of benefit drawn. In total, these two sources provide claimants with a possible income of some 75 per cent of their normal wages. Obviously, as wages continue to rise, the desirable "benefit to wages" ratio is periodically lost, and the main purpose of this amendment is to restore the proper ratio.

The last time this correction was made was in 1955, at which time average wages and salaries were a little less than $60 per week. Consequently, the maximum benefit for a person with a dependent was $30 per week, with allowable earnings of $13 per week. Other rates were computed according to the earnings and dependency status of the claimant.

On October 1, 1958, average weekly wages and salaries were about $70 per week. The Government proposes, therefore, a new maximum benefit rate for a person with a dependent of $36 per week, with allowable earnings of $18 per week. This total of $54 per week provides, in this particular case, a possible income of about 78 per cent of gross wages. The example just given applies to those earning $69 per week and over. Also, another earnings class has been added, which provides those having a dependent and earning between $63 and $70 a week with a weekly rate of benefit of $33. The allowable earnings for those in this category are $17 per week. Other rates are, as before, computed according to earnings and dependency status.

In brief, in this amendment, account has been taken of the continued rise in wages simply by adding two new earnings classes to the old schedule, thus providing more realistic benefit rates for those whose wages are above the present maximum of $57 per week, and whose benefit rate has, therefore, been restricted to $30 per week by that maximum. It is estimated that about 28 per cent of those who contribute to unemployment insurance could benefit by these higher rates.

Further, a new principle in regard to allowable earnings has been adopted. It will be noted that the benefit rate for a person with a dependent is higher than that for a person without a dependent, even though their wages may have been the same. This is the way in which the act recognizes the greater responsibilities of those with dependents. At the present time, however, this principle is not recognized in the allowable earnings schedule, since the amount which a person with a dependent is allowed to earn without there being any effect on benefit is exactly the same as for a person without a dependent.

Hon. Mr. Davies: When you say "dependent" you mean a wife or a child?

Hon. Mr. Emerson: One dependent or more.

Therefore, a new schedule is proposed that provides for somewhat higher allowable earnings for the person with a dependent.

Furthermore, since the allowable earnings idea was first incorporated in the act, in 1955, experience has shown that the amount of earnings allowed should be higher if the claimant is to have adequate incentive to take on casual work. It is proposed, for this reason, that the allowable earnings should be one-half of the claimant's weekly benefit rate, rounded to the nearest dollar. By doing this, two desirable results will be produced with one amendment: that is, the greater responsibilities of those with dependents will be recognized and also a realistic price tag will be put on incentive to work.

Since the inception of unemployment insurance in Canada, honourable senators, there has been a gradual broadening of the original, limited concept of the plan. Coverage has been extended to such groups as longshoremen, those employed in the lumbering and logging industry, inland water transportation workers, and fishermen. The seasonal benefit idea has been adopted and extended in recognition of the fact that employment opportunities are scarcest in this country during the months of winter and early spring.

These broadenings of our unemployment insurance plan over the past eight or nine years have been costly. Their cumulative effect, sharpened by the recent recession, has meant a drain on the unemployment insurance fund of close to $400 million in the past two years.

The fund draws its revenue mainly from three sources. Workers make a specified contribution each week, according to earnings; the employer matches the worker's contribution; and the federal Government pays in 20 per cent of these combined contributions. The Government also pays the entire cost of administering the legislation. During the past two fiscal years, revenue to the fund has been running at approximately a quarter of a billion dollars annually. On the other hand, expenditures during the 1957-58 fiscal year amounted to some $385 million. In the 1958-59 fiscal year they were close to half a billion dollars.

From these figures, it is obvious that additional revenue is required if the fund is to be kept sound. This brings us to the next amendment, which consists of an across-the-board increase in the rates of contributions payable to the fund.

Under the present schedule, which was introduced in 1955, the maximum contribution is 60 cents per week. This is the contribution made by workers who earn $57 per week and over. The two new benefit rates mentioned earlier have necessitated two new contribution rates, and these have been set at 86 cents per week and 94 cents per week. The contribution rates applicable to the other earnings classes have been scaled upwards to meet the needs of the fund. Workers who now pay 60 cents a week will pay either 78, 86 or 94 cents a week, those who now pay 56 cents a week will pay 72 cents a week, and so on down the scale.

While there are slight variations in increases as between earnings classes, the new schedule provides for an overall increase to the Unemployment Insurance Fund of 30 per cent. This figure was arrived at by estimating the needs of the fund in the light of what has happened over the past five years. During that period the economic weather has ranged from fair to good to bad, and it is felt that a 30 per cent increase is what is required if the fund's revenues and expenditures are to be approximately in balance in years to come.

The third major amendment proposes to raise from $4,800 to $5,460 per annum the income level beyond which salaried employees are no longer required to contribute to unemployment insurance. This amendment, of course applies only to salaried workers, since those who are paid by the hour or day, or at a piece rate or mileage rate, continue to contribute regardless of how much they earn in a year. The reason for this amendment is, again, connected with the continuing increase in salaries. Salaried workers, when their incomes rise beyond a certain point, are considered to be in the executive and managerial class and, therefore, relatively immune to unemployment. The present ceiling of $4,800 per annum was set in 1950, and it is now felt that a ceiling of $5,460 is required if the same degree of responsibility is to be represented. It should be noted that this amendment will mean renewed protection for some 80,000 salaried workers who are now without it.

The fourth major amendment proposes to increase the maximum duration of benefit from 36 weeks to 52 weeks. Prior to 1955, the maximum duration of regular benefit was 52 weeks. When the act was amended in that year, the maximum duration was decreased on the ground that only a very small percentage of claimants required protection beyond 36 weeks. Since that time, however, the Government has received many representations to the effect that the 52-week maximum duration should be restored, and it is now proposed to do this.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Does that mean a man could be idle for a whole year and still receive benefits?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Unemployed?

Hon. Mr. Emerson: Yes.

The final major amendment seeks approval of a provision whereby relatively short-term inmates of jails and penitentiaries will not lose the unemployment insurance contributions they may have earned in the two years prior to beginning their terms. At the present time, if an inmate is out of the labour market for a year he would be unable to qualify for benefit even though he had been working in insurable employment up to the time he committed his misdemeanour.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: May I ask my friend a question there?

Hon. Mr. Emerson: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Is the inmate of a jail considered to be unemployed?

Hon. Mr. Emerson: This refers to when he comes out of jail.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: He is unemployed when he is discharged.

Hon. Mr. Davies: He does not draw unemployment insurance while he is in jail, does he?

Hon. Mr. Emerson: No. If I may proceed, I think I will presently cover the point raised by my honourable friend from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen).

Hon. Mr. Reid: We treat the prisoners well enough, but not that well.

Hon. Mr. Emerson: This amendment would add "serving a sentence of imprisonment in a jail, penitentiary, or other place of confinement" as a ground for extending the qualifying period by a maximum of two years. This means that the short-term ex-prisoner on the day he leaves jail, would be on exactly the same footing, in so far as unemployment insurance is concerned, as on the day he entered jail. It is hoped that this amendment will be of some help in the rehabilitation of those who have paid their debt to society but who still have many problems facing them.

Honourable senators, it is my intention to ask that this bill, upon receiving second reading, be referred to the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the honourable senator a question. Was I correct in my understanding with respect to the higher wage bracket, namely, the $57 bracket and over, that the insurance contribution will be increased from 60 cents to 78 cents? That is an increase of 18 cents?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: 30 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Croll: That is not the point.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Is the Government's contribution correspondingly increased?

Hon. Mr. Emerson: As I understand it, honourable senator, the employer pays the same as the workman, and the Government contributes 30 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: 20 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Emerson: Yes, 20 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: My question is, does the Government increase its contribution proportionately?

Hon. Mr. Emerson: I don't think I can answer that question.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I can help you. The answer is "No".

Hon. Donald Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Honourable senators, I am very glad indeed by chance to be able to follow my fellow Maritimer, the honourable senator from Saint John-Albert (Hon. Mr. Emerson). May I say that his statement with respect to this bill before the house was very well prepared and delivered, and I congratulate him on it.

Hon. Mr. Emerson: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): I did note that the honourable senator stressed changes in the benefit provisions in the bill which, in my opinion—and I think it will develop in the opinion of most of us—are relatively minor ones. At the same time, I observed that he passed over quite lightly some of the provisions which I, for one, consider of much more importance. Of course, I refer to the increases in the premiums to be paid by workers and employers under this bill.

Some years ago one of Canada's political figures used words which I think bear repeating at this time. He said:

There are those whose feet, by what appears to be, and is in considerable measure, mere good fortune, seem always to be in pleasant places, and there are those who, through one adversity and another, seem to have the hand of everybody against them. The object of legislation should be to remove that element so far as possible. Never can it be wholly driven out. But legislation which has for its purpose the reduction of the incidence of chance and hazard in the lives of men and women is absolutely sound.

I believe, honourable senators, that the Unemployment Insurance Act is such a measure. It is, of course, not something new; we have had the legislation in effect since 1940. I should like to point out that there are men still in public life—one of whom sits in this chamber, the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck)—who earnestly advocated unemployment insurance a long time ago. I regret that the honourable senator is not in his seat at the moment to hear my reference to him. It was in 1919 that Senator Roebuck seconded the labour resolution at the Liberal convention which, among other things endorsed the principle of unemployment insurance. I am sure we are all well aware that throughout his public life he has continued to support measures for human welfare.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): I was interested in looking up some of the debates on the Unemployment Insurance Bill of 1940 to learn that during the course of that debate Senator Roebuck expressed unwillingness to —accept as a permanent condition the mass unemployment contemplated by this bill.

In the House of Commons at that same time he used these words to express a conviction he continues to hold, and these words are worth repeating at this time:

—the time will come when the Canadian people will attack this problem effectively and abolish the anomaly of an industrious and progressive people, living in the midst of great resources, yet with large numbers of their population unable to support themselves by their labour. Stupidity, nothing else! Nature intended that we should all be busy and that we should make our living by applying our labour to the resources of nature.

I also had occasion, in doing some background reading on the subject—and, I might say, on other subjects—to examine some of the speeches that have been made by the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner). I have been interested in finding therein a general consistency of approach to social security measures. When, in recent sessions, his colleagues have introduced into Canadian social legislation a degree of benefit far beyond that which was originally contemplated, I know he must have harboured some serious misgivings. I am sure all of us have for him at least some degree of regard and respect, as is due to one of our senior colleagues, and that degree in his case is generally enlarged—and it certainly is in my case—when we have occasion to examine the record of his consistency of opinion together with his expressions of basic philosophy, with which we are all familiar.

For example, the honourable senator from Blaine Lake, speaking in support of the amendment of his then leader, the Right Honourable Mr. Meighen, to delay the operation of unemployment insurance until after the war, used these words:

I am in favour of it—

—and he is referring to the amendment—

—because unemployment insurance, as I see it, will not cure conditions, but is very likely to make them steadily worse.

He then went on to express his opinion that such a scheme would have the effect of encouraging too many people to leave the farms and seek insurable employment in urban centres.

In vindication of his opinion of almost twenty years ago he might be pleased to have me quote from the June, 1959 issue of Industry, which is published by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, in which it is stated:

The flight from farm to city over the past decade or so, has, in fact, assumed such proportions as to constitute a silent revolution.

But before he gets too much satisfaction from that statement, may I add that the same article goes on to say:

—farm production has not suffered any, thanks to mechanization, improved means of cultivation and greater efficiency of operation, and largely for these same reasons the farmer is much more important to the manufacturer than he once was.

I know the honourable senator well enough to know that, notwithstanding any evidence that may be produced, it would be surprising if the honourable senator—whose views, like those of a former leader of his, may be described as "unrevised and unrepented"—holds a different opinion in this year of 1959 from that which he expressed almost twenty years ago. The honourable senator over the years has placed on the record some basic philosophies with which most of us can entirely agree. For example, in the same speech to which I have referred he expressed a view which the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), and all of us, would likely share, when he said:

> Governments will have to find something greater than unemployment insurance to cure unemployment.

Honourable senators, to seek measures other than unemployment insurance was exactly what the former Government did during the latter years of the war and the post-war period. It is hardly necessary to remind you that such measures were found and put into operation. These measures included fiscal and monetary policies which were effective in controlling inflation to an extent, perhaps, greater than in any other country in the world, even during the dangerous period of the Korean conflict, which was a period when there developed an alarming shortage of both capital and consumer goods in relation to the demand for them.

Because of its excellence in managing its affairs, Canada was in those post-war years a country which foreign investors regarded with great confidence, from which confidence sprang the tremendous investment in resource development with its attendant boom times and high employment.

In those post-war years policies were put into effect which encouraged not only this resource development, but the house construction industry as well. Those policies built the Trans-Canada Highway, the St. Lawrence Seaway and the Trans-Canada Pipe Line which is no longer a dirty political word but is recognized as one of the important developmental projects in our history. This project released for sale the gas resources of the west, and made relatively cheap energy available for the industrial expansion of the east. The expanded use of gas gave rise to the ancillary chemical industries in the west, the building and servicing of new gas combustion equipment wherever the gas was delivered, and on all sides resulted in a chain reaction of benefit to national development.

Those were some of the policies and measures which, together with the social security payments and transfer payments to the Governments of "have not" provinces, brought about a condition where there was established a continuous level of purchasing power in the hands of all of the people in all the provinces, and a condition where unemployment was a matter of relatively minor consequence, and one, indeed, in which the Unemployment Insurance Fund reached a level of assets of almost $1 billion.

If we agree with the honourable senator from Blaine Lake that "Governments will have to find something greater than unemployment insurance to cure unemployment," then we must agree that the present amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act are in themselves an admission of failure on the part of the present Government to produce that kind of policy which would result in "something greater than unemployment insurance".

With what I have said as a background, let us ask ourselves: Why has it been found necessary to make the amendments proposed in this bill? These are some of the reasons. Late in 1957 there developed in this country an economic situation which resulted in the greatest unemployment problem since the 1930's. If this was the post-war unemployment problem predicted by so many both in Parliament and outside, and prepared for by the legislation passed in 1940, then it was delayed by the policies of the former Government for almost fifteen years.

The tragedy of the matter is that it now appears to be accepted as a continuing problem, perhaps of a lesser degree in some regions of Canada, but on very serious proportions in others. To indicate its seriousness in the region of Canada from which the honourable senator from Saint John-Albert and I come, I have only to point out that as of May 16, 1959, a time when winter and early spring labour conditions no longer exist, 10.6 per cent of the labour force of the Atlantic provinces were without jobs and seeking work. If this degree of unemployment were to apply to the total Canadian labour force of 6,186,000 there would be, as of that date, 656,000 Canadians without jobs and seeking work. I am sure that that would be regarded as a serious situation, indeed, and I am sure it adds some strength to what the honourable senator from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt) said in this house not long ago when he was referring to the Terms of Union of Canada and Newfoundland, and particularly to Term 29, which affects Newfoundland's position so very seriously.

Honourable senators, we all realize that it is to alleviate, to some degree, the effects of this continuing unemployment that this bill before us provides for these things that my honourable friend has just spoken about. These, as you may recall, are not the first important changes in unemployment insurance legislation made by the new administration. Already a period of six weeks had been added to the seasonal benefit period—an addition of 50 per cent to the original seasonal period of 12 weeks which, when instituted by the former Government and extended to include fishermen, was so severely criticized outside Parliament.

With such changes as are now proposed I have no quarrel, in view of present circumstances. Increased benefits are needed, but what I cannot agree with is that the cost of the new benefits, as well as the amount which the Government now finds is necessary to raise in order to place the fund in a more liquid state, should be collected as a tax from employees and employers. It seems to me that a Government which found itself unable to prevent a condition whereby men who wanted work could only find a "dole", thereby depleting the amount in the insurance fund which not long ago stood at more than $900 million, should at least be willing to make temporary loans to the fund. It would perhaps do so if it were willing to show this concrete evidence of its faith in its own prophecy of recovery and boom. But the least I should expect the Government to do is to replace in the fund the loss of $10 million in connection with sales of the Government's own bonds, because it must accept the responsibility in permitting this tighter-than-ever money market and its accompanying lower bond prices and record high interest rates. I should point out that this loss in the fund may not be the last, for at present Government bond prices the yet unrealized loss in book value of bonds held by the fund is some $62 million.

Honourable senators, in reading some of the debates of 1940 I find that there was strong resistance to the legislation on the part of the segment of workers and industry which felt that theirs was one which was more or less secure from the threat of prolonged unemployment. Over the years this resistance had pretty well disappeared. Now it has been discovered by these workers and their employers that their contributions are being swallowed up through extensions of unemployment insurance to an extent that has changed its original insurance concept to an income maintenance measure more in the nature of unemployment relief.

In connection with the recent departures from the insurance principle of the original legislation, the Montreal Gazette used strong words on its editorial page to describe the Unemployment Insurance Fund, when it said:

> At the present time it is in some danger of becoming a sort of political pot from which many may hope to extract some kind of benefit having only an indirect relation to unemployment.

The feeling is now growing that, in view of this new concept, instead of a 30 per cent to 50 per cent increase in contributions now being required of employees and employers by this bill, some other source of revenue should be found to compensate for the extraordinary depletion of the fund.

Such a segment of industry to which I have been referring is that which is the principal industry of my home town—the Bowaters Mersey Paper Company, whose full-time employees have never found it necessary to make withdrawals from the Unemployment Insurance Fund. Another such segment is the full-time dragger fishing industry of Lunenburg, or wherever else such a fleet may be based.

Perhaps the one segment of employers and employees who are in the category of being in employment without serious interruption and which has a national distribution is the service industries, such as stores, hotels, restaurants, et cetera.

Instead of being compelled to shoulder the full responsibility for the failure of the Government to promote better employment opportunities, these segments of which I speak would regard it as much fairer treatment to find in any new amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act provision for reduction of premiums to those with unbroken records of continuous employment, rather than an increase. Such a policy of reducing premiums is not at all new in the field of insurance. It has been applied with respect to automobile insurance and workmen's compensation, and to those groups with good records when rates for life, casualty and fire insurance are being determined.

Honourable senators, I believe I have said enough at this time to indicate why the bill before us, in its present form, does not have my support.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

DESJARDINS LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. Gustave Monette moved the second reading of Bill S-29, to incorporate Desjardins Life Insurance Company.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to incorporate under the name Desjardins Life Insurance Company a mutual life insurance company without share capital. The names of the twelve persons seeking to incorporate this company are set out in section 1 of the bill. I mention this because of the importance I attach to these people. They are all businessmen of the province of Quebec, and among them are managers of companies, managers of municipalities, engineers, notaries and even barristers. The list includes the name of the Honourable Cyrille Vaillancourt, senator and manager. In Quebec you cannot have an institution bearing the name Desjardins without immediately associating the Honourable Senator Vaillancourt with the splendid and important work done by Mr. Desjardins. The honourable senator has been a devoted follower of the social works founded by the genius of Mr. Desjardins, especially in matters of savings institutions, called Caisses Populaires or Caisses Desjardins, and savings banks attached to those institutions.

Section 2 of the bill provides that the provisional directors of the company shall be the petitioners. Though it is not set out in the bill, nearly half the petitioners herein were petitioners for incorporation under Quebec laws of a provincial company which has exactly the same name, in French, as that of the company which is seeking incorporation under this bill. That provincial act is chapter 102 of the statutes of Quebec, 1948. I mention this fact because it is provided in the bill before us that the new federal corporation will have to make certain arrangements with the Quebec corporation. These arrangements, which will be in the nature of acquiring rights, and so on, of the Quebec company, are outlined in section 10 of the bill.

Section 10 reads as follows:

> The Company may acquire by agreement the whole or any part of the rights and property and may assume the obligations and liabilities of L'Assurance-Vie Desjardins, incorporated by chapter 102 of the statutes of Quebec, 1948, hereinafter called "the Provincial Company"; and in the event of such acquisition and assumption, the Company shall perform and discharge all such obligations and liabilities of the Provincial Company with respect to the rights and property acquired as are not performed and discharged by the Provincial Company.
>
> (2) No agreement between the Company and the Provincial Company providing for such acquisition and assumption shall become effective until it has been submitted to and approved by the Treasury Board of Canada.
>
> (3) The reserve fund composed of the contributions made to the Provincial Company by the credit unions known as "Desjardins" may, when the Company's financial position permits and with the approval of the Superintendent of Insurance, be refunded in whole or in part to such credit unions in proportion to their several contributions, but a credit union shall not be obliged to accept a refund of contributions and may elect to remain as a contributor until a refund is agreed upon with the Company.

It is provided in section 11 of the Quebec act that contributions may be made by the public through a fund, and that is why this section 10, is arranged to ensure that proper refund will be made. Those who may not like to accept a refund will remain contributors, with the right to vote according to their numbers, or according to the amount of money they have in the fund, although they may not be directors.

Section 3 provides that the head office of the company will be at the city of Lévis, near the city of Quebec. Lévis is a city which is becoming more and more important.

Section 4 simply provides that the company shall be a corporation without share capital.

Section 5 specifies the classes of insurance for which the company may make contracts, namely, life insurance, personal accident insurance and sickness insurance, and it also provides that the company may carry on the business of life insurance generally in all its forms.

Section 6 is important because it provides that the company shall not commence business until a certificate of registry has been granted to it under the provisions of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, and that no such certificate shall be granted until an agreement has been entered into between the company and the provincial company as provided in section 10 of this bill, which I have read. May I point out that section 12, the last section in the bill says that the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act shall apply to the company.

Section 7 provides that every policyholder in good standing shall be a member of the company.

Section 8 provides for qualification of directors, and that a director shall cease to be a director if he ceases to be a member of the company. Every policyholder in good standing is a member of the company and eligible to be a director.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I notice clause 7 provides that every member will have a vote for each policy he holds. Does that mean that if one member holds a policy for $10,000 he will have just one vote, and that another member who holds a policy for $1,000 will also have one vote?

Hon. Mr. Monette: The honourable Leader of the Opposition is putting a question that I put to myself. For the time being I leave it as it is. However, if the bill receives second reading I will move that it be referred to a committee, at which time that point might be reconsidered.

Section 9 deals with the election of directors, and provides that at the first annual general meeting all the incorporators, the petitioners, shall be directors. After that first meeting, and at least three months before the next general meeting, the number of directors to be elected shall be determined by the company, which shall determine also the duration of their term of office, and provide for their gradual replacement if they so desire. It is provided, however, that the board shall at all times consist of not less than nine nor more than 21 directors.

Turning again to section 10, perhaps I should explain a little more about the reserve fund by reading subsection (5):

Notwithstanding sections 7 and 8 of this act, any credit union—

Unions subscribing to the fund are called credit unions.

—that has made a contribution to such reserve fund shall, so long as such contribution has not been refunded in full, be entitled to have a representative attend and vote at all general meetings of the members of the Company and such representative shall have one vote for every one thousand dollars, or fraction thereof, of contributions made by it and not refunded; such representatives may also elect from among themselves a number of directors equal to the lesser of three or the number of such representatives, and such directors shall form part of the board of directors provided by section 9 of this act.

Subsection (6) provides that a credit union, having contributed to the reserve fund, may transfer its rights to any other credit union.

Section 11 provides that this act shall come into force only at a date to be specificed by the Superintendent of Insurance in a notice in the Canada Gazette, and that such notice shall not be given until this act has been approved by a resolution adopted by at least two-thirds of the votes of the members of the provincial company. In other words, arrangements must have been fully made, and the Superintendent of Insurance must be satisfied that such arrangements have been executed. At the same time he should be satisfied, as the section says:

—by such evidence as he may require that such approval has been given and that the Provincial Company has ceased to do business or will cease to do business forthwith upon a certificate of registry being issued to the Company.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? I gather that the general purpose of this bill is to create a new federal corporation to take the place of the present provincial company. I did not hear my honourable friend give any reasons why it was felt necessary to substitute a federal company for the present provincial company.

Hon. Mr. Monette: There may exist many reasons in the mind of businessmen about it, particularly in the mind of the honourable senator from Kennebec (Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt), who is aware that this kind of insurance, this kind of savings institution, has proved to be so profitable to the people who utilize it is to justify enlargement of the company's operations throughout Canada. Federal incorporation is a normal procedure for any corporation to take in these circumstances. I cannot assign other reasons, but that seems to me to be a good reason, which again reflects credit upon the honourable senator from Kennebec.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I quite agree.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Monette, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before we adjourn I would like to obtain the consent of honourable senators to having Bill C-60, an Act respecting the adjustment of certain public service pensions, placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading as the first item of business tomorrow. I suggest this on account of the fact that the person in charge of the bill may not be here the first of next week.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 25, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Lionel Choquette, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY—MESSAGE OF THANKS FROM GOVERNOR GENERAL

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from His Excellency the Governor General, reading as follows:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa

June 23, 1959

The Honourable the Members of the Senate:

I have received with great pleasure the Address that you have voted in reply to my speech at the opening of Parliament. I thank you sincerely for this Address.

Vincent Massey

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following document:

Report of the Fisheries Prices Support Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 7 of the Fisheries Prices Support Act, Chapter 120, R.S. 1952. (English text).

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA INDIAN RESERVES AGREEMENT BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt presented the report of the Standing Committee on Natural Resources on Bill S-25.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Natural Resources, to whom was referred the Bill (S-25) intituled: "An Act to confirm an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Province of Nova Scotia respecting Indian reserves", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 23, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Horner: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that this bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. F. W. Gershaw, for Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 362 to 368 and moved, with leave, that the said reports be adopted.

Motion agreed to.

BILLS—FIRST READINGS

Hon. Mr. Gershaw, for Hon. Mr. Roebuck, presented the following bills:

Bill SD-349, an Act for the relief of Charles Guy Comeau.

Bill SD-350, an Act for the relief of Juanita Patricia Hamilton Long.

Bill SD-351, an Act for the relief of Benjamin Gordon Davidson.

Bill SD-352, an Act for the relief of Margaret Isabella MacKellar Thomas.

Bill SD-353, an Act for the relief of Philip Joseph Kelly.

He said: Honourable senators, there are six divorce petitions still before the house. Five of them were recommended by the committee, and the bills I have just presented are based on these. The other petition was refused.

Bills read first time.

SECOND READINGS

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: With leave of the Senate, I move the second reading now.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

THIRD READINGS

On motion of Hon. Mr. Gershaw, with leave, bills read third time and passed, on division.

PUBLIC BILLS

SUSPENSION OF RULES

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move:

That for the balance of the present session Rules 23, 24 and 63 be suspended in so far as they relate to public bills.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned to Tuesday next, June 30, 1959, at 3.00 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

CITIZENSHIP

NOTICE OF INQUIRIES

On the notice of inquiries by Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

No. 1.

1. What is the total population of Canada?

2. By virtue of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration Act, and according to the most recent figures, how many persons in Canada:

(a) are British subjects, Canadian citizens, and citizens of the Commonwealth?

(b) are British subjects but are not Canadian citizens nor citizens of the Commonwealth?

(c) are citizens of the Commonwealth but are not British subjects nor Canadian citizens?

(d) are Canadian citizens but who are not British subjects nor citizens of the Commonwealth?

(e) are neither British subjects nor Canadian citizens nor citizens of the Commonwealth?

No. 2.

1. In Canada, how many married women have not been divorced and not separated from their husbands?

2. How many of these married women living in Canada have a citizenship distinct and different from that of their husbands?

3. Has the Canadian Government received from married women living in Canada and women's associations in Canada requests for amendment to the laws to permit married women to have a citizenship distinct from that of their husbands?

4. If so, from what persons and what associations, with the address of each one?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Stand.

I would like to inform the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) that I am making some progress. I have the answer to one of his questions, and I hope to have the other answer in time to present both of them at the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Thank you very much.

PUBLIC SERVICE PENSION ADJUSTMENT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the second readng of Bill C-60, respecting the adjustment of certain public service pensions.

He said: Honourable senators, as is well known to you, the subject-matter of pensions frequently becomes controversial, complex and even perplexing, particularly for governments. Especially can this be true during a period of rising living costs, as a result of which hardships are created for persons whose livelihood is derived from fixed-dollar incomes.

The object of this bill is to alleviate somewhat this very problem, by adjusting upwards the pensions of former civil servants, of former members of the Armed Forces and of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and their dependents. The subject-matter of the bill has been under study for a long time, and I am informed that it was a matter of extreme difficulty to arrive at a satisfactory and fair formula, because of the many and involved factors which required to be taken into consideration.

Actually the substance of the bill, namely, the pension increases that I have referred to, were authorized by Vote No. 667 of Appropriation Act No. 5, 1958, which gave the Governor in Council the power to prescribe by regulation the terms and conditions under which the increases would be paid. Actually, the increases became effective on July 1, 1958. But, as indicated by the Minister of Finance in July last year, the intention of the Government was to introduce legislation at this session to provide permanent authority for the increases.

Because of the complexity of many of the details in the subject-matter of the bill, I will merely try to give the house the highlights of the matters involved.

The bill relates only to "length of service" pensions. That is, it does not affect other forms of pensions, such as those payable as a result of disability or death arising from public service.

The number of persons affected by the subject-matter of the bill was 15,425 during the fiscal year 1958-59, and the total cost for the nine-month period was $2,364,000. It is estimated that for the full year 1959-60 the cost will be $3,100,000.

The maximum amount of pension that is affected is $3,000. That is, pension increases will be confined to pensions not exceeding $3,000 per annum, and the total of the increase and pension combined will not exceed this amount.

The amount of increase is 32 per cent on the first $2,000 of pension in those cases where persons retired from service in 1945 and earlier. In other words, if the amount of pension for any such person is exactly $2,000, that pension will be increased by this legislation by 32 per cent, namely, to $2,640. Therefore, as one can see, the maximum increase of any pension is $640.

In cases of persons who retired between December 31, 1945 and December 31, 1952, the amount of increase is on a reducing basis, and no one who retired subsequent to 1952 is affected. In other words, it is deemed that persons who retired from service after 1952 had by then received the salary increases which were rather frequent up to the end of that year, and consequently no injustice to them is involved.

Similarly, in regard to persons retiring between 1945 and 1953, these had at various times benefited from salary increases during those years, and consequently their pensions have been correspondingly increased thereby. Therefore, these people do not benefit to the extent of 32 per cent, which is applicable only to the pensions of those persons who retired prior to the end of 1945.

It should also be said that the bill is not confined to an increase only of the pension payable to a retired employee, but extends on an equitable basis to widows and children, or orphans, who are in receipt of a pension payable in respect of the husband's retirement. In the case of a pension for a widow the increase is limited to pensions not exceeding $1,500, namely, half of the deceased husband's pension. In the case of a child it is limited to pensions not exceeding $300, and in the case of an orphan the increase applies to pensions not exceeding $600. In each of these cases the pension and increase combined will not exceed these respective amounts.

As I indicated previously, on the second reading of this bill, it was my intention to give merely the highlights, and not to go into any great detail. I think it would be much more appropriate if the various other factors that might be of interest to honourable senators were considered in committee, where we shall have the benefit of the presence of the officers of the Department of Finance who are responsible for preparation of the various formulae involved and the draft of the legislation.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask the honourable senator a question? I take it that the increase is 32 per cent across the board. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: It is 32 per cent, but only up to a maximum of $640 for any person.

Hon. Mr. Euler: It is a rather odd percentage. Is it calculated on any particular principle?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes. I think the principle is that 32 per cent is approximately the amount of the increase in the cost of living in this country from 1945 to the present time.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask a question in regard to the status of a widow? A widow who is in receipt of a pension may remarry, but she will always be referred to as "the widow of the pensioner". Will the pension be continued in the event of her remarriage?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I must say that I cannot answer that question. I am sure we will get the answer in committee.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I think very few people can quarrel with the principle which is embodied in this bill. It was a principle which was accepted last year when Parliament passed the Appropriation Act which provided the money for additional payments to certain retired civil servants who were living on what were thought to be inadequate pensions, considering the cost of living and other factors which affected their later years. It is fairly well appreciated that the level of civil service salaries in the past few years has been a great deal different from what it was in earlier times, and a good many people who rendered very valuable service to this country have been attempting to eke out an existence on inadequate pensions. Some of the pension provisions which were available under the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Civil Service Superannuation Act and other similar pieces of legislation were, perhaps, below the levels provided by some of the pension plans of industry.

I think it is very praiseworthy that the Government of this country should do something about inadequate pension payments. We know a great deal about this in Ottawa; for I would imagine that most of the 15,000 odd pensioners live in this city. The honourable gentleman who explained this bill (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson)—and I commend him for the clarity and simplicity of his explanation—said that no former civil servant who retired after 1953 can benefit from any of the provisions of this bill. In committee it might be well to question officials of the department to determine whether there may not be some hardship on pensioners who retired since 1953. At the present time the Standing Committee on Finance is studying the important subject of the threat of inflation in Canada, and I am sure all of us agree that the cost of living has advanced considerably since 1953. Even if we cannot amend the bill to provide for payments to those who retired since that time, an inquiry might point up the inequities, if any, in respect to those people.

I was interested in the question asked by the honourable gentleman from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid), and I can certainly sympathize with the admission by the honourable senator from Winnipeg South that he cannot answer the question. I do not know of any legislation that is more difficult to interpret and, in fact, more difficult to read than the Public Service Superannuation Act and the Civil Service Superannuation Act. We are told that Philadelphia lawyers are pretty astute at threading their way through statutes, but I believe these statutes would defy the ingenuity of any Philadelphia lawyer. Perhaps the answer to the question raised by the honourable senator from New Westminster is to be found somewhere in the ramifications of the language in the original pensions acts themselves, but sometimes it is very hard to dig these answers out. The same thing is true of this bill. It had to be patterned upon the mother bill, which itself, as I have said, is as complicated a piece of legislation as we find on our statute books. I feel this type of legislation could be simplified. It is important to those who benefit from it to know what their pension rights are, and I am sure there are many who cannot possibly ascertain what these rights are by reading the statutes. A similar plea has been made in Parliament many times, and it will probably be made many more times before the legislation is simplified. At any rate, we might inquire of the departmental officials if there is not a simpler and more colloquial way of expressing some of the provisions contained in these pension acts.

Honourable senators, I am particularly glad that this bill is to go to committee where I think we can obtain answers to questions that have been raised in this chamber and to others that will occur to us in committee.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I too was quite interested in the question raised by the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid). He referred to the definition of "widow" as it is used in this legislation. In effect the question he posed was: When is a widow not a widow?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: When she remarries.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am not sure if, according to this legislation, she is not still deemed to be a widow.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I understand that any pension paid under these acts is as a result of contributions made by a pensioner during his term of service, and that therefore he is entitled to draw that pension as a matter of right. I should think that if he died his widow would, as a matter of right, receive her share of the pension and would continue to receive it if she remarried. A "widow" is defined in paragraph (h) of section 2 of the bill, as follows:

> "Widow" means a person who is in receipt of a pension by virtue of being the widow of an employee.

If a widow remarries it is true she becomes a married woman, but she will always remain "the widow of an employee". According to this definition and my understanding of what contributory pensions mean, I would say that a widow, whether or not she remarries, would be entitled to receive the pension during the balance of her life.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I believe the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) has some experience in this.

Hon. John T. Haig: I know something about this through actual experience. A young woman who was my private secretary for some years in the Senate was a widow. She was dealing with a claim under a federal pension statute applying to war widows, and the legal advisers of the Crown advised that it would be necessary to enact an amendment providing that if she remarried and her new husband died within a certain period of time the pension benefits of her first husband would revive. Otherwise the pension would cease upon her remarriage. I presume the same thing would apply here.

Hon. Mr. Reid: My point is that that is not made clear in this bill.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Before this young lady remarried I told her that if her new husband lived beyond a period of so many years, she would never be able to revive the pension rights of her deceased husband. I think if he lived for five years—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is, the new husband.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Yes—the pension would not revive.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: I understand the purpose of this bill is to provide improvements in the pensions of former civil servants. Will they be eligible for old age security benefits when they attain the age of 70?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Old age security payments do not interfere in any way with the benefits provided by this legislation.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Rather, the benefits provided by this legislation do not interfere with their right to receive old age security benefits?

Hon. Mr. Haig: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I am not a Philadelphia lawyer. I am not even the ordinary garden variety of lawyer—

Hon. Mr. Euler: What kind are you?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: —but I would draw the attention of my highly esteemed colleague the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) to the fact that some former civil servants who retired in 1953, which is six years ago, are already in receipt of old age security payments in addition to their civil service pension. I am not opposing this measure, but what we are seeking to do is to provide equity and fairness to the employee, and in doing that I suggest to this house that it is worth while, occasionally, at any rate, to bear in mind that the taxpayers of this country have to provide all these increased emoluments.

Hon. Mr. Davies: Honourable senators, I take it that if the people who receive these increased pensions were still working they would be paying income tax and thus be contributing toward the old age pension.

I would like to ask the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) a question. Does this measure apply to both permanent and temporary civil servants? I understand temporary civil servants are in a different category. Will they also get the pension?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I would not think so, no.

Honourable senators, I can now answer the question put by the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) in regard to the remarried widow. The fact is that the remarried widow's pension is discontinued under the main act, and consequently she would not benefit under this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the third reading of Bill C-41, to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

He said: Honourable senators, in the absence of the sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Brunt), I move third reading of the bill now.

When this bill was before the committee certain information was given by departmental officials with respect to the estimated payments to the provinces in 1959-60 under the old rates and also under the new rates. The figures appear to be quite complicated, and the sponsor of the bill was asked if he would present them in the Senate on third reading of the bill. I have two tables here and I ask permission of the house to have them made an appendix to today's Hansard.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

See appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 919-20.

Hon. Mr. Golding: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable leader if the rate this year is not the same as it was last year?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is 13 per cent now instead of 10 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: It was 13 per cent last year.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, the 13 per cent rate was in effect last year.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Perhaps I did not put it correctly, but the headings on the tables will make the matter clear when they appear in Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The question before the committee yesterday was what amounts would have been paid to the provinces under the old rates, and what amounts will be paid after the increase in rates. I understand that the tables which are being printed as an appendix give the answer.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is what these tables show.

Hon. Mr. Golding: But I think it is expected that the revenue will be a little higher this year and that therefore the provinces will get a little more.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: These tables give estimates only.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: May I ask my honourable friend a question? I understand the original payments were 1 per cent of the corporation tax and 10 per cent of the personal income tax collected within the province.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Nine per cent of the corporation tax.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The proportions were 13-9-50.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: But that arrangement was covered by legislation for only a year, in the expectation that another conference would take place, so if we do not pass this bill now we revert to the original rate of 10 per cent of the personal income tax?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is correct.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I was very much interested in the answers that were given to the committee by the official from the Department of Finance. For a long time I was wondering what was the demarcation line between richer and poorer provinces, and I asked the witness if Alberta, which pays a dividend, is a rich or a poor province. He explained to me that the word "poor" applied to a province did not mean actually poor, that the provinces were rated not according to their natural resources but according to the revenue they obtain from taxation, and therefore the provinces that imposed the lesser taxation were considered poorer than those where the taxation was higher. I found that way of reasoning very difficult to understand and to follow, because, again taking Alberta, for example, its returns from oil have been stupendous and it has practically no debt, yet it is still classed as one of the poorer provinces.

As I said the other day, my contention is that each province should be self-supporting at the present time, as it could have been years ago at the time of the Rowell Commission, which should have been called the Dafoe Commission, because it was that self-taught gentleman who had the idea of giving a false description of some of the provinces of Canada. The purpose behind it was to create centralization of taxation here in Ottawa, and the Government of Canada had all the odium of taxing to get money to distribute it afterwards to the provinces. In my view it was a wrong arrangement and I had the satisfaction of writing editorials about the matter in one of the large Montreal dailies as well as expressing myself very plainly in the House of Commons.

The time has come when Ottawa shall not again be the collector for the provinces, but the provinces shall collect their own taxation, as is well done in the province of Quebec. Some time ago I was invited to speak to a large group of students at Hart House, Toronto, and I told them that the Premier of Quebec had more dignity than his colleagues in any other province of Canada because he was collecting his own taxes, that that province itself was imposing taxation and did not rely on gifts from Ottawa. That is an example that might well be followed.

I realize that the situation is pretty difficult and that it is much easier for the provincial Governments to ask Ottawa for a share of the federal taxation than to go to the trouble of collecting it themselves. They are in the hands of the Government of Canada for a large share of the taxation that is imposed for provincial purposes. Once more I say it is not a Conservative doctrine I am referring to, but a doctrine expounded by Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself. He said it was a great financial mistake for the federal Government to collect taxes and to distribute the returns to the provinces. I do not blame this Government at all, because this legislation, although it is temporary, means an improvement: it means that Ottawa will give leeway to the provinces to the extent of 13 per cent instead of 10 per cent as it was last year. The witness said also that the provinces will be able to get $47 million more from Ottawa under the new arrangement than if the rate remained at 10 per cent.

At my age, and after the numerous years I have spent in politics, I am ready to give anyone his due. I find this is a good piece of legislation for the time being but I hope that the representatives of the eleven Governments in Canada—the Dominion Government and the ten provincial Governments—will meet at the earliest possible opportunity to discuss amicably this most important question for the people of Canada, and come to a satisfactory conclusion about it. It can be done. Naturally, the taxation will come from the provinces, but so much less taxation will come from the Canadian Government.

Years ago, before the last war, I suggested in the House of Commons that tax revenues should be earmarked. In the province of Quebec the tax that is paid on amusements, for instance—on theatre tickets and so on—is earmarked for the hospitals. That system should be followed in other places, in order that the taxpayers may know why they are paying such a tax. If taxes were imposed in that manner and the people were informed about where their tax money goes, this would lead to a certain degree of economy and have a salutary effect for all.

Hon. J. Wesley Stambaugh: Honourable senators, just to correct an impression that my colleague may have created about the people of Alberta, I would like to say it is true that the province has resources to pay off the provincial debt, but the municipalities have been starved. They are very heavily in debt and their tax rates are high. As an illustration, on my farm the tax rate now is 67 mills. That is higher than the tax rate in the city of Ottawa, which has paved streets and the usual civic services. It is even higher than the tax rate in the city of Montreal. So you see the people of Alberta themselves are very heavily taxed and the province is really poor.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, will you permit me to say another word? If at the next conference the parties could conduct their discussions in such a friendly manner as my deskmate and I have done, there would be a happy solution of the problem.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILL

STANDARD TRUST COMPANY— THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. Aseltine, for Hon. Mr. Brunt, moved the third reading of Bill S-28, an act to incorporate Standard Trust Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADA-FINLAND INCOME TAX CONVENTION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. John Hnatyshyn, for Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, moved the third reading of Bill C-54, to implement a convention between Canada and the Republic of Finland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS FINANCING AND GUARANTEE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the second reading of Bill C-61, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System for the period from the 1st day of January, 1959 to the 30th day of June, 1960, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

He said: I wish to give honourable senators a brief explanation of this bill, and it can be sent to the Committee on Transport and Communications for very full consideration. At that time senior officials of the Canadian National Railway Company will be present.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask the honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if it is customary to send this bill to the Transport Committee or to the Banking and Commerce Committee? It is a financial measure. I do not know what the practice has been in this respect.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not remember.

This bill is the annual bill to provide for the financing of the capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways for the calendar year 1959 and for the first six months of 1960. This provision for the financing of the expenditures of the first six months of the next year was first adopted in 1952 and has been carried on annually since that time. The reason this procedure is followed is that it is not possible to have the capital budget of the railways approved in any year much before the middle of March.

These capital expenditures are financed in the first instance by loans from the Government, through the Minister of Finance. When these loans reach an amount for which a public issue of Canadian National Railway Company bonds can be made, a Government-guaranteed issue is sold and the proceeds used to repay the loans which have been made previously through the Minister of Finance.

In addition, the bill provides for authority to enter into contracts prior to the first day of July 1960 for the acquisition of new equipment and for general additions and conversions that will come in course of payment after the calender year 1959 in amounts not exceeding, in the aggregate, $81 million. This authority was first included in the legislation of 1952 and has been carried on annually since that time.

Honourable senators will see in the explanatory notes to the bill how the figure of $289,900,000 is arrived at. With permission of the house I will place these figures on Hansard, so that when honourable senators not need to refer to the bill.

The amount of $289,900,000 appearing in clauses 4(3) and 6(2) of the bill is computed as follows:

Road property		$172,295,000
Branch line construction		10,141,000
Hotels		3,568,000
Equipment		88,480,000
Investment in affiliated companies:
Trans-Canada Air Lines financial requirements	$57,000,000
Others	17,416,000
		74,416,000
			348,900,000
Less:
Uncompleted work			38,000,000
			310,900,000
Add:
Interim financing authority January 1 to June 30, 1960, on obligations incurred prior to January 1, 1960			130,000,000
			440,900,000
Less:
Depreciation accruals and amortization of discount on funded debt, etc. in relation to calendar year 1959		101,000,000 and
Depreciation accruals and amortization of discount on funded debt, etc. in relation to period January 1 to June 30, 1960		50,000,000
			151,000,000
			$289,900,000

As of today's date loans from the Government are outstanding for capital expenditures in the amount of $264,427,301.51, which were authorized by Financing and Guarantee Acts of 1955, 1956, 1957 and 1958. These are the statutes which, I understand, are passed every year for the purpose of providing for this capital expenditure of the railway company.

In addition to the provision for financing the capital expenditures of the railway, authority is requested for making temporary advances to meet the operating deficits of the railway and of Trans-Canada Air Lines up to June 30, 1960. While the operating deficit for 1959 of the railway is estimated at $34,400,000, the Air Lines expect an operating surplus of $500,000. These temporary loans for operating deficits are either repaid from surplus earnings or from a deficit appropriation in the supplementary estimates approved by Parliament. As of today's date temporary loans for deficits amount to $21 million in the case of the railway and $3,270,000 in the case of the Air Lines.

That, honourable senators, is a brief explanation of the bill. The final clause provides for the appointment of independent auditors of the railways.

If and when this bill receives second reading I will propose to refer it to the Committee on Transport and Communications, so that the President and other officials of the railway can be present to answer questions. I have already asked them to be prepared to reply to the question submitted by the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) with regard to parking at the Chateau Laurier, and probably they will have an answer for him at that time.

I therefore ask the Senate to give this measure second reading now. It is quite possible that the officials of the railway system can be here some time toward the latter part of next week to attend a meeting of the committee, but we would have to give them several days' notice.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I interrupted the leader when he was explaining this bill to ask him to what committee bills similar to this one have been sent in previous sessions. I have since been informed that it is customary to send such bills to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I am quite in accordance with that practice, and I expect, as in former years, the officials of the railway will be present. They have always been eager to give us complete answers to any problems we have posed, and the meetings have always been interesting and worth while. Therefore, any remarks which I have to make on this bill I will reserve until after I have heard from the railway officials at the committee meeting.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, bill referred to Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson moved the second reading of Bill C-63, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

He said: Honourable senators, by way of explanation of this bill, may I say that it contains certain proposed amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The act was initiated in 1944 and came into force on March 1, 1945. Its purpose was to make provision for intermediate or short-term credit to farmers for the development of farms and the improvement of living conditions on the farm. Briefly, it enables the farmer to buy new equipment, procure better live stock, and make improvements to his farm, such as breaking land and fencing, irrigating and building small dams to retain water, etc. In the matter of improving living conditions, it enabled the farmer to put in rural electrification or improve the house and outbuildings around the farm. These are just some of the benefits farmers derive from these short-term loans.

Under this act the federal Government agreed to advance the sum of $300 million, extended over a period of three years at a time. Actually, the money was loaned by individual banks, which dealt with the farmers directly, the Government guaranteeing the loans to the extent of 10 per cent. At the outset, the maximum loan a farmer could obtain at any one time in any one year was $3,000. Shortly afterwards this amount was increased to $4,000, and at present the maximum is $5,000.

Since the inception of the act a total of $813,499,000 has been advanced to farmers, and during the same period, up to December 31, 1958, there has been repaid the amount of $675,433,000, or approximately 83 per cent of the borrowings. The accumulated losses on all these loans amount to less than one-tenth of 1 per cent, which indicates the value the farmer places on the loans, and also the benefit they have been to him.

With respect to equipment or machinery, the largest borrowings during 1958 have been in the province of Saskatchewan, to a total amount of $17,583,000. This is closely followed by Alberta, with total borrowings of $17,538,000; Quebec, in third position, had borrowings of $13,925,000, followed by Ontario, Manitoba, British Columbia, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland, in that order, the total amount being $71,787,000.

On the other hand, it is interesting to note that in the matter of houses or buildings, etc. on the farm, Ontario leads the field with total borrowings in 1958 of some $4,046,000, followed by Alberta with $2,014,000. Quebec is again in third position, with borrowings of $1,158,000. The total borrowed for farm buildings was $10,004,000. Loans were also made for irrigation and the building of small dams etc., to a total in 1958 of $90,539,000.

This represents an increase of some $20 million in borrowing over each of the previous three years, 1955, 1956 and 1957. The indications are there will be a considerable increase in borrowing in 1959 over 1958. Comparing the first three months of the year with the three corresponding months of 1958, we find the loans this year are $14,707,000 as against $10,436,000 for 1958, or an increase of about 41 per cent.

Now, honourable senators, I shall refer to the bill itself and indicate the effect of the proposed amendments.

The present act defines "farm" as follows:

"farm" means land in Canada used for the purpose of farming which term includes live stock raising, dairying, fruit growing and all tillage of the soil.

Section 1 of the bill extends that definition to cover "farm" and "farming" separately. The proposed definition reads:

"farm" means land in Canada used for the purpose of farming;

"farming" includes live stock raising, dairying, bee keeping, fruit growing and all tillage of the soil.

I point out that "bee keeping" has been added.

Subsection 2 of section 1 of the bill would amend section 2(1)(h) of the act by repealing subparagraph (i), and substituting therefor the following:

(i) the purchase of agricultural implements or any stock or equipment for bee keeping.

In other words, persons now interested in producing honey may qualify for loans under the act.

Subsection 3 of section 1 of the bill amends section 2(1)(k) of the act by adding the word "poultry". That paragraph will now read:

(k) "live stock" includes horses and mares, bulls, cows, oxen, bullocks, steers, heifers and calves, sheep, swine, poultry, and fur-bearing animals.

Subsection (2) of section 2 of the act is repealed, and the following is substituted for it:

(2) For the purpose of the Bank Act, the expressions "farm" and "farming" have, in respect of a farm improvement loan, the same meanings respectively as they have in this act.

Under section 2 of the bill the maximum amount of the loan that a farmer can receive has been raised to $7,500. This is pretty well in line with the added costs of machinery and lumber, etc.

Section 3 of the bill amends subsection (2) of section 4 of the act by striking out the word "and" after paragraph (d) thereof, by inserting the word "and" after paragraph (e), and by adding thereto the following paragraph:

(f) the period commencing on the 1st day of April, 1959 and ending on the 30th day of June, 1962.

The final item is the renewal of the credit of $300 million that the Government has advanced.

In moving second reading, honourable senators, I suggest that this bill be considered by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, it is not my purpose to delay second reading of this bill, but there are one or two observations I would like to make and one or two questions I would like to ask.

May I express my appreciation of the clarity with which the sponsor (Hon. Mr. Pearson) presented the bill? The bill, in itself, is one which even a layman can well understand, and since it is an amendment to one of the best pieces of farm legislation that we have on the statute books of Canada, I fully support it. As a matter of fact, I think that this is one act which has helped, to a marked degree, to keep our good farmers on the farms, particularly during the past ten years. The fact remains, however, that from time to time certain amendments became necessary. For instance, it was necessary to clarify certain definitions. The extension of the definitions of the words "farm" and "farming" is a good idea. The new definition is clearer than the one now in the act and, as the sponsor said, it brings in those who are engaged in the honey producing industry.

Referring to the last clause of the bill—and I do not need to go over them all, because the sponsor has already indicated their purpose—I am a little concerned about the amount of money that is provided. As the sponsor has already indicated, during 1958 an amount of $90 million odd was loaned under this act, which exceeds by about $20 million the amount loaned in each of the previous three years. For the first three months of this year there has been an increase, as was indicated, of about 41 per cent, and even if it is not maintained at that rate throughout the year it will mean loans of well over $100 million. Under present conditions I anticipate that in the next three years the borrowings will increase annually. The former act provided for $300 million over a period of three years, and this bill provides for the same amount over a period of three years and three months. According to clause 3 of the bill, apparently the former act has not been in effect since March 31 this year. I am wondering if loans have been granted on the same terms and conditions during the intervening period as they were when the act was in effect. The reason I mention this is that owing partially to tight money and high interest rates, farmers undoubtedly will depend more on short-term loans under this act. I do not need to explain why this is so, but I believe it is because the interest rate has not been changed in the act.

Much has been heard of the cost-price squeeze on agriculture, and those of us in this chamber who are farmers know something about it. Conditions on the farms today are such that we have to make known the necessity for giving every consideration possible to the agricultural people of this country, and the following fact should be mentioned as often as possible. If you take the cost of agricultural production and the revenue from farms in 1949 on the basis of 100, then in 1958 wholesale farm prices dropped to 97, and farm costs rose to 127.

And as far as I can see, the gap is still widening and the cost-price squeeze on the farmer is tightening all the time. That is the chief reason for my asking whether this amount of $300 million is sufficient to meet the needs over the next three years and three months.

My questions can probably be answered in committee. I repeat that I fully support the bill. I fully supported the original act and the amendments to it. As I stated from time to time there must of necessity be amendments for the sake of clarity and for the purpose of bringing in farm groups which were not included in the original act.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: May I answer the honourable senator at this time?

Hon. Mr. Haig: No. The bill will go to committee.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: As far as I am concerned, the honourable gentleman can answer.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If the honourable senator wishes to answer, I think he may.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: I discussed these matters with the Department, and in both cases I was informed they had taken them under advisement. If the amount of $300 million proves insufficient—and they anticipate now it will not be enough if the present rate is continued—they will have to call for additional sums later on, and before the three years have expired.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): That would mean another amendment to the act?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Hon. John A. McDonald: To answer the question that was asked in regard to clause 3, I would say that when the bill becomes law and goes into effect it will be retroactive to April 1, 1959.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Yes. The minister wrote a letter advising the department to carry on on the same basis until this bill is passed, and that loans should be made at the same rate of interest as previously.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): I am very glad to know that. I anticipated that that was the answer.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: What power did the minister have to put in effect a bill which had not been passed by the other house? I would like to know by what authority he could give a letter authorizing that the provisions of the act should continue in spite of the fact that they had expired.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I will give you the answer. It was for the same reason, that I, as a lawyer, say that my client will sign papers when he comes in. I say that because I know he will.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not think that that is a very good answer.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pearson, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth reports of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, which were presented yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I would suggest that one motion be made for adoption of all these reports.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes. I was going to propose that myself.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, for Hon. Mr. Brunt, Chairman of the committee, reports adopted.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 30, at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 913)

ESTIMATED PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES UNDER FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS ACT

ESTIMATED PAYMENTS TO THE PROVINCES 1959–60 [1]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS ACT STANDARD TAX RATES 13–9–50

(All money figures except per capitas are in thousands of dollars)

	Nfld.	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.	Que.	Ont.	Man.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Total
1. Population 1959 office est. (000)	450	100	718	589	5,010	5,984	880	897	1,242	1,601	17,471
Yield of Standard Taxes	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$
2. Individual Income Tax (13%)	2,070	300	3,993	3,121	45,843	97,636	8,898	6,438	14,015	25,634	208,038
3. Corporation Income Tax (9%)	2,469	414	4,395	3,533	75,272	112,076	9,250	7,372	15,954	26,306	257,041
4. Succession Duty Tax (50%)	357	132	1,175	1,199	12,720	27,400	2,213	1,129	2,261	4,071	52,657
5. Total Yield of Standard Taxes	4,896	846	9,563	7,853	133,835	237,112	20,361	14,939	32,320	56,011	517,736
6. Total Yield of Standard Taxes—per capita	10.88	8.46	13.32	13.33	26.71	39.62	23.14	16.65	26.02	34.99
Equalization
7. Per capita Equalization to top 2 ($38.65)	27.77	30.19	25.33	25.32	11.94	—	15.51	22.00	12.63	3.66
8. Equalization Payments	12,497	3,019	18,187	14,913	59,819	—	13,649	19,734	15,686	5,860	163,364
9. Standard Taxes plus Equalization	17,393	3,865	27,750	22,766	193,654	237,112	34,010	34,673	48,006	61,871	681,100
Stabilization
10. Adjusted 1957 Tax Rental Payment	15,043	3,089	22,769	19,227	152,025	190,471	29,148	28,535	39,825	60,222	561,074
11. Projected Tax Rental Payment	16,412	4,145	24,818	20,774	163,870	205,353	31,729	30,913	43,190	64,900	606,104
12. Basic Stabilization Amount	15,758	3,969	25,744	20,823	175,817	212,877	31,542	32,218	43,057	58,460	620,265
13. Stabilization Payment	—	280	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	3,029	3,309
14. Total Standard Taxes, Equalization and stabilization	17,393	4,145	27,750	22,766	193,654	237,112	34,010	34,673	48,006	64,900	684,409
15. Total Payments to Provinces in accordance with Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements and Tax Rental Agreements thereunder	17,393	4,145	27,750	22,766	59,819	97,636	34,010	34,673	48,006	64,900	411,098
(a) less deduction under clause 9 for Special Corporation Taxes—Quebec	—	—	—	—	4,010	—	—	—	—	—	4,010
(b) plus Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grant	7,500	2,500	7,500	7,500	—	—	—	—	—	—	25,000
16. Actual Payments	24,893	6,645	35,250	30,266	55,809	97,636	34,010	34,673	48,006	64,900	432,088

[1] As prepared for 1959–60 Estimates—Bluebook pages 23–4.

ESTIMATED PAYMENTS TO THE PROVINCES 1959–60 [1]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS ACT IF STANDARD TAX RATES WERE 10–9–50

(All money figures except per capitas in thousands of dollars)

	Nfld.	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.	Que.	Ont.	Man.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Total
1. Population 1959 office est. (000)	450	100	718	589	5,010	5,984	880	897	1,242	1,601	17,471
Yield of Standard Taxes	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$
2. Individual Income Tax (10%)	1,593	232	3,072	2,400	34,088	75,106	6,844	4,954	10,849	19,720	158,858
3. Corporation Income Tax (9%)	2,469	414	4,395	3,533	75,272	112,076	9,250	7,372	15,954	26,306	257,041
4. Succession Duty Tax (50%)	357	132	1,175	1,199	12,720	27,400	2,213	1,129	2,261	4,071	52,657
5. Total Yield of Standard Taxes	4,419	778	8,642	7,132	122,080	214,582	18,307	13,455	29,064	50,097	468,556
6. Total Yield of Standard Taxes—per capita	9.82	7.78	12.04	12.11	24.37	35.86	20.80	15.00	23.40	31.29
Equalization
7. Per capita Equalization to top 2 ($34.90)	25.08	27.12	22.86	22.79	10.53	—	14.10	19.90	11.50	3.61
8. Equalization Payments	11,286	2,712	16,413	13,423	52,755	—	12,408	17,850	14,283	5,780	146,910
9. Standard Taxes plus Equalization	15,705	3,490	25,055	20,555	174,835	214,582	30,715	31,305	43,347	55,877	615,466
Stabilization
10. Adjusted 1957 Tax Rental Payment	15,043	3,809	22,769	19,227	152,025	190,471	29,148	28,535	39,825	60,222	561,074
11. Projected Tax Rental Payment	16,412	4,145	24,818	20,774	163,870	205,353	31,729	30,913	43,190	64,900	606,104
12. Basic Stabilization Amount	15,758	3,969	25,744	20,823	175,817	212,877	31,542	32,218	43,057	58,460	620,265
13. Stabilization Payment	707	655	689	268	982	—	1,014	913	—	9,023	14,251
14. Total Standard Taxes, Equalization and Stabilization	16,412	4,145	25,744	20,823	175,817	214,582	31,729	32,218	43,347	64,900	629,717
15. Total Payments to Provinces in accordance with Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements and Tax Rental Agreements thereunder	16,412	4,145	25,744	20,823	53,737	75,106	31,729	32,218	43,347	64,900	368,161
(a) less deduction under clause 9 for Special Corporation Taxes—Quebec	—	—	—	—	4,010	—	—	—	—	—	4,010
(b) plus Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grant	7,500	2,500	7,500	7,500	—	—	—	—	—	—	25,000
16. Actual Payment	23,912	6,645	33,244	28,323	49,727	75,106	31,729	32,218	43,347	64,900	389,151

[1] Prepared on the same basis as the 1959–60 Estimates—Bluebook pages 23–4 save a standard individual income tax rate of 10% was employed.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 30, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE SUPERANNUATION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-57, respecting the superannuation of members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

QUEEN ELIZABETH II CANADIAN RESEARCH FUND BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-65, to mark the occasion of Her Majesty's visit to Canada by providing for the establishment and administration of a fund to aid in research on the diseases of children.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: I move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), that this bill be read the second time now.

Honourable senators, I consider it a great honour indeed to have the privilege of presenting this bill to this honourable body of senators this afternoon.

The purpose of the bill is to establish by an Act of Parliament a fund to aid in research on the diseases of children, the setting up of which fund will commemorate the visit to Canada of Her Majesty the Queen.

I feel sure that this measure will receive the hearty support of all honourable senators. It is hoped that by unanimous consent the bill will be passed through all stages this afternoon, so that when Her Majesty arrives in Ottawa this evening it may be reported to her that the necessary legislation establishing the fund has been passed by both houses of the Canadian Parliament.

Honourable senators will undoubtedly recall that on June 11 the Prime Minister of Canada, speaking in the other place, announced the intention of the Government to establish a fund for research on children's diseases as a commemorative gesture in connection with Her Majesty's visit to this country. Her Majesty has had a long and continuing personal interest in the welfare of children and she was graciously pleased to approve the proposal of the Government for the establishing of this fund.

This fund, honourable senators, will be set up on the occasion of our Queen's visit in lieu of the usual gifts that are made to Her Majesty by Canada on such occasions. I am sure that this gesture, which will have the effect of benefiting Her Majesty's subjects in Canada, will confirm and strengthen the deep admiration and devotion in which Her Majesty is held by all of us.

If I may be permitted, I should like to make some general references to the provisions of the bill. Honourable senators have copies of the bill in their desks. It was considered that this fund would be more significantly constituted if it was in the form of a special act of Parliament rather than merely an item in the estimates. So, on that account and for that reason we have Bill C-65 before us.

The preamble to the bill sets out generally the background and intent of the legislation. The preamble reads in part as follows:

> Most Gracious Sovereign,
>
> Whereas it has pleased Your Majesty to approve the suggestion that the occasion of your visit to Canada and your personal interest in the well-being of children should be marked by the establishment in your name of a fund to be devoted to the furthering of research into the diseases of children and the prevention and cure of such diseases, to which all who wish in this way to make a gift to Your Majesty may contribute:

Clause 2 of the bill states that the purpose of the act is the establishment of the Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Fund to Aid in Research on the Diseases of Children.

The purposes of the fund are set out in paragraph 3, namely,

> —to assist individuals or organizations to undertake or carry on research into the diseases of children, and the causes, prevention and treatment of such diseases.

Parliament is being asked, honourable senators, to allocate the sum of $1 million to this fund. In reading the press of this country I find that several of the provinces of Canada are making like gifts. For example, I have in my hand a clipping from one of the daily papers, which reads as follows:

Edmonton, June 26. A scholarship fund worth $910,000 annually will be Alberta's gift to the Queen when she visits the province, July 21, Premier E. C. Manning announced today.

I understand that other provinces are making gifts of a similar nature.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: $900,000 annually?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: $910,000 annually. I cannot vouch for the correctness of that figure, but the clipping is from one of the Ottawa daily papers so I presume there is some foundation for the report.

Hon. John A. McDonald: Will the honourable senator permit a question? Can he state if gifts from individuals to this fund will be treated as charitable gifts for income tax purposes?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I had anticipated that question and am just coming to it. Provision is made in the bill for acceptance by the board of trustees which is set up under clause 5, of contributions from any private individual, corporation or other source, and here I refer to clause 10. Under clause 12, contributions to the fund shall be deemed to be gifts to Her Majesty, and will thereby obtain the benefits of tax exemption as provided for by the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act. Sections 27 (1) (b) and 112 (4) (d) of the Income Tax Act, Chapter 148 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, and section 7 (1) (d) of the Estate Tax Act, Chapter 29 of the 1958 Statutes of Canada, cover the point in question.

I would like to add that in the present bill reference is made to "gifts to Her Majesty". In the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act the reference is to "Her Majesty in right of Canada". While, technically speaking the wording is not the same, I understand from the Taxation Division of the Department of National Revenue that the term "gifts to Her Majesty" will be interpreted as being sufficient to bring such gifts within the ambit of exemptions under the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act. Also, since this is an act of the Parliament of Canada, the natural inference is that any reference to Her Majesty is a reference to Her Majesty in right of Canada.

As I have already mentioned, under the bill a board of trustees is being constituted to manage and administer the funds. In this respect I refer to clauses 5 and 11. There is also provision made, in clause 14, for an annual audit of the funds, and, in clause 15, for an annual report to Parliament.

Honourable senators, having said these few words in explanation of the bill, I will conclude by expressing again what I know must be the unanimous feeling of honourable senators, that the establishment of this fund is most appropriate on the occasion of Her Majesty's visit to this country.

The announcement of the intention to constitute this fund has met with the unanimous approval of all parties and has, I feel, been enthusiastically received by Canadians generally. I have, therefore, much pleasure in commending this measure to this honourable body for its favourable consideration today.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am happy to associate myself with the remarks that have been made by the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and to assure him that I will give my wholehearted and enthusiastic support to the passing of this bill today.

The visit of the Queen of Canada to Canada marks a happy occasion for all Canadians. Her Majesty is here for two principal purposes: to officiate, as she did on Friday last, with the President of the United States at the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway project, and to visit her Canadian subjects from coast to coast.

A royal visit to our country is always an occasion for rejoicing, and if anything were necessary to add to the pleasure of members of this house at the presence in our country of our gracious Queen it is the imaginative proposal which is before us today.

In suggesting that the bill should receive all three readings and be passed in one day, the Leader of the Government has reminded us that the normal procedure in connection with the passing of legislation in this house is not being followed on this occasion. This in itself seems to me to underline what I am sure is the unanimity of honourable senators in the very happy circumstances surrounding this legislation.

The purpose of this legislation, as has already been said, is:

—to assist individuals or organizations to undertake or carry on research into the diseases of children and the causes, prevention and treatment of such diseases.

The direct beneficiaries of the fund will be those children who are unfortunate enough to be the victims of ill health, but the indirect beneficiaries will be all Canadians, for we know full well that much of our strength and vitality as a nation is dependent upon our health. Great new horizons are daily opened in the field of pediatrics by dedicated and devoted doctors and by nurses and those concerned with research. That being so, this gift will serve a useful purpose as well as fulfilling the other desirable object of any gift, namely, to bring satisfaction to its recipient. This, we can be sure, will be the case in this instance, for it is well known how great an interest Her Majesty has always shown in the welfare and well-being of children.

In this positive step to further the health and happiness of our children we do honour to the Queen, and indeed we are happy to do so, for she represents a force that unites us in a world which is not at all times susceptible to unity.

Our sentiments toward our Queen were perhaps never better expressed than by Mr. St. Laurent when, speaking on The Royal Style and Titles Act, in 1953, he said:

> Her Majesty is now the Queen of Canada but she is the Queen of Canada because she is the Queen of the United Kingdom and because the people of Canada are happy to recognize as their sovereign the person who is the sovereign of the United Kingdom. It is not a separate office. It is the recognition of the traditional development of our institutions that our Parliament is headed by our sovereign; and it is the sovereign who is recognized as the sovereign of the United Kingdom who is our sovereign and who is loyally and, I may say, affectionately, recognized as the sovereign of our country.

And so, because of the high regard and deep affection in which we hold Her Majesty, and because of our desire in her name to take yet another step forward in the ceaseless battle against disease, I endorse this legislation as appropriate and fitting in every way.

Today we usually sing but one verse of God Save the Queen. There is another verse which is not often heard. Honourable senators will recall the first few lines:

> Thy choicest gifts in store
> On her be pleased to pour,
> Long may she reign.

This legislation which provides for a gift to Her Majesty from all our people has the wholehearted and enthusiastic approval of all Canadians from coast to coast who, I am sure, join with us today in saying fervently and affectionately, "Long may She Reign".

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, it seems fitting that a French voice should echo the words of the Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and those of the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). This bill is receiving unanimous approval because of its humanitarian aspect and because it affects all Canadians and all honest people. Who can hear of his own child's or any child's misfortune without being moved to pity? But the bill goes further than expressing such a feeling. You have probably noticed that, in the Christmas message she broadcasts every year, Her Majesty always ends her remarks by speaking of the family, of her husband, of her children and those of the whole Commonwealth. Wherever she goes, she always wants to visit the children, to whom she spontaneously shows affection and who immediately react to her kindness.

Last Friday, at the opening ceremony of the St. Lawrence Seaway, I was in a position to see the enthusiasm of the Scouts and young people who had gathered at St. Lambert grounds to see the Queen as she passed by. In her they see a mother, and is she not indeed the mother of all Canadian citizens, since she is Queen of Canada.

The gesture made by the government of Canada today goes much further than a mere material gift, because it provides for the future. In looking after the future of those who will come after us, of our children, we will ensure that they enjoy physical, moral and intellectual strength. Today's gesture is symbolic, but it is not a mere gesture, because it is to be followed by concrete action. Who knows if some day a child who may be saved owing to the research now being initiated to improve children's health may not become a great statesman? The day is no longer when children who were sick or misshapen were done away with; on the contrary, we now try to improve the lot of all unfortunate children so that those who will take our place may be better and stronger than we were.

The Leader of the Government reminded us earlier that a similar fund was established in one of the western provinces. I might say that in the province of Quebec a fund of a quarter of a million dollars was set up to encourage research into heart diseases and that that fund is of help to the children thus affected. The federal Government, as you see, is following the example of the province of Quebec.

Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II will, I am sure, be much happier tomorrow when she is presented with this gift than if we had offered her any material token, and she will be assured of the affection of the new generation.

(Text):

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, while we can all join in a very warm welcome to Her Majesty and in appreciation of the august position she occupies in our commonwealth of nations, that, nevertheless, should not preclude us from an examination of this proposed legislation. It is well known that the mind of the Government had been made up over two weeks ago to mark Her Majesty's visit in this special fashion, and I think it is to be regretted that the Government did not bring this measure before us earlier than June 30, the day on which Her Majesty comes to visit our capital city. I say that because, having hastily read the bill since the house assembled this afternoon, it seems to me that its language is in some respects rather vague and indefinite. It may be that the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) can give us some further light upon it. It is proposed to set up this fund and appropriate for it $1 million out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. I suppose none of us should object to that, although I think it may be said that the Consolidated Revenue Fund at the present moment is—well, not exactly overflowing. The purpose of the fund to be set up by this bill is:

—to assist individuals or organizations to undertake or carry on research into the diseases of children, and the causes, prevention and treatment of such diseases.

Of course, it is a fact that, through hospitals and other agencies, considerable sums of money are already being used for that purpose. That does not mean for a moment that we should not also appropriate this particular fund.

The bill provides that the fund is to be administered by a board of trustees, whose powers and duties are set out. Evidently in the expectation that this will be a continuing thing, the board is empowered to receive contributions from individuals and corporations. Such contributions may be deducted from taxable income. The board may also invest moneys of the fund, and so forth. In short, it is given the powers that one usually finds in a government board of this kind.

Clause 13 appears to me to be a very unusual one. It reads:

The National Research Council—

This is another body altogether, which is engaged in research of many kinds.

—shall provide to the board without charge such secretarial and other administrative and technical services and facilties as are required for the purposes of this act, and moneys of the National Research Council may be used for the purpose and for other costs of administration of the fund.

Parliament annually votes a very substantial amount of money to the National Research Council, and quite properly, to enable it to carry on its work. Then we set up this new body, and require that all its expenses—including, I presume, rent—all its secretarial and administrative and technical services and facilities shall be provided by the National Research Council.

As far as I am concerned, I do not think that is a sound or wise principle to incorporate in this legislation. If the fund is to be merely of a somewhat temporary nature, perhaps it could be administered much better by the National Research Council than by the new board we are setting up under this legislation. If the National Research Council is to provide the board with secretarial and other administrative costs, will it provide the remuneration of the board? What are its members to receive? Is that amount to be fixed by order in council? Who is to pay their travelling expenses? All these items put a charge against the moneys voted by Parliament to the National Research Council, if it is responsible.

Honourable senators, these are questions which, if we had had an opportunity to examine this bill a little more closely, say in committee, we could have had clarified. But the Leader of the Government tells us that he wants first, second and third readings of the bill today, so we are precluded from an examination that we should, in the exercise of our responsibilities as members of Parliament, undertake.

There is also a rather unusual provision in regard to the audit. Clause 14 reads:

The accounts and financial transactions of the board shall be audited annually by the Auditor General and the report of the audit shall be made to the board and to the Prime Minister.

Why make the report of the audit to the Prime Minister? Should not that report be made to Parliament, although I may point out that in section 15 there is a provision that the financial statements of the board and the Auditor General's report thereon shall be made to Parliament. I will read section 15:

15. The chairman of the board shall within three months after the 31st day of March in each year submit to the Prime Minister a report of proceedings under this act for the year ending on that day, including the financial statements of the board and the Auditor General's report thereon, and the Prime Minister shall cause such reports to be laid before Parliament within fifteen days after the receipt thereof, or if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

My memory may be at fault, but I cannot recall a similar provision in any other act setting up boards of this kind. I submit that consideration should have been given to having the audited report submitted to Parliament in the same way that the reports of other corporations are, and that the report should be submitted earlier than three months after the 31st of March. Quite obviously, the volume of work that this board will have to do will not be such that the board should be unable to prepare a report and submit it to Parliament within 30 days after the 31st of March. Some of our existing legislation, I believe, has that provision. But this board need not submit its report until three months after the end of the fiscal year. That is, the board is under no obligation to submit its report until the end of June, and then it shall be laid before Parliament within 15 days, which is the customary provision. But if Parliament prorogued on, say, the 5th of July, we would not get the report until the next session.

I do think it would have been far better if this legislation had been introduced ten days or two weeks ago, when it was first mooted, and we could have had an opportunity to give closer examination to it.

I apologize to the house for speaking at such length. The impressions that I have conveyed to you in these remarks have come from reading the bill since I took my seat here after the sitting opened.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I have just one observation to make. What we are doing under the bill is, of course, admirable, setting aside the million dollars. On the other hand, the Province of Alberta is setting aside almost a million dollars annually for a very fine cause, that of education, and the Province of Ontario is doing something of a similar nature in order to commemorate the visit of Her Majesty, who is a charming, dedicated lady, highly attractive and modest. I was waiting for someone to call attention to the fact that there are heads of municipalities in particular who are still making private and personal gifts to Her Majesty. I thought that when the Prime Minister had announced and had given some indication of what the dominion would do, that would be all for us, and if a province wanted to do something that was within the domain of that province. I am sure Her Majesty does not need, does not want and is embarrassed by the gifts. I think it should be made eminently clear in this house that what Her Majesty wants in the way of a personal gift from the people of Canada is something of ourselves, which I can only describe as good will and understanding.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that the bill be read a third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Statement for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, on the operations of the Veterans Insurance Act, pursuant to section 20 of the said act, Chapter 279, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Statement for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, on the operation of The Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act, pursuant to section 17 of the said act, Chapter 54 of the Statutes of 1920, as amended. (English and French texts).

Statement of expenditures and financial commitments made under the Veterans' Land Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 42 of the said act, Chapter 280, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, of the Army Benevolent Fund Board, pursuant to section 13 of the Army Benevolent Fund Act, Chapter 10, R.S. 1952, together with the report of the Auditor General relating thereto as required by section 11(1) of the said act. (English and French texts).

Statement of the Superintendent of Insurance concerning the Operations of the Civil Service Insurance Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 21(2) of the said act, Chapter 49, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Volume III of the report of the Superintendent of Insurance for the year ended December 31, 1957, pursuant to section 9 of the Department of Insurance Act, Chapter 70. R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, July 1, 1959, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, undoubtedly the honourable Leader has proposed that this house sit tomorrow morning on account of the ceremonies which will take place on Parliament Hill in the afternoon. Can he inform the house if it is the intention to sit later in the afternoon and also in the evening? I am sure we would be interested to hear what he has in mind with respect to the sittings tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will be quite pleased to inform the house.

I am proposing that we sit tomorrow morning instead of, as usual, in the afternoon on account of the unveiling ceremonies at 2 o'clock or 2.30, the presentation of colours on Parliament Hill at 4 o'clock, and the navy demonstration in the evening. It is not proposed that this house should sit tomorrow beyond the two hours in the forenoon.

I may say that another reason for our meeting tomorrow is that I wish to deal with the resolution standing in my name on the Order Papers for approval of the International Wheat Agreement. We are now almost into July, and if the agreement is to be approved it should be done before the middle of the month. I would like to get ahead with that resolution.

The Senate has before it several bills which require attention, but I doubt if we shall deal with more than one of them tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

CITIZENSHIP

INQUIRY AND ANSWER

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. What is the total population of Canada?
2. By virtue of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration Act, and according to the most recent figures, how many persons in Canada:
(a) are British subjects, Canadian citizens, and citizens of the Commonwealth?
(b) are British subjects but are not Canadian citizens nor citizens of the Commonwealth?
(c) are citizens of the Commonwealth but are not British subjects nor Canadian citizens?
(d) are Canadian citizens but who are not British subjects nor citizens of the Commonwealth?
(e) are neither British subjects nor Canadian citizens nor citizens of the Commonwealth?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: I have the following answer to the honourable gentleman's inquiry:

1. The most recent estimate for the population of Canada is for March 1, 1959, and is 17,340,000 persons.
2. Latest Census figures available for June 1, 1951 shows a total population of 14,009,429, of whom 13,567,939 were reported as being citizens of Canada. In addition, 104,071 were reported as citizens of other British Commonwealth countries and 337,419 as citizens of all other countries. No more recent data of this kind will be available until the 1961 Decennial Census.

CITIZENSHIP OF MARRIED WOMEN

INQUIRY AND ANSWER

Hon. Mr. Pouliot inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

(1) In Canada, how many married women have not been divorced and not separated from their husbands?
(2) How many of those married women living in Canada have a citizenship distinct and different from that of their husbands?
(3) Has the Canadian Government received from married women living in Canada and women's associations in Canada requests for amendment to the laws to permit married women to have a citizenship distinct from that of their husbands?
(4) If so, from what persons and what associations, with the address of each one?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The answer to this inquiry is as follows:

1. Statistics are not recorded showing the numbers of married women separated from their husbands.
2. Statistics are not available, as no record is maintained of citizenship distinctions.
3. No. Under the Canadian Citizenship Act, which came into force on January 1, 1947, women have equal status with men and the citizenship laws permit married women to have a citizenship distinct from their husbands.
4. Answered by No. 3.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, June 24, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Emerson for the second reading of Bill C-43, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, first may I warn the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) that with respect to this measure he cannot expect from me the wholehearted support which I gave to the bill we have just passed for the establishment of a fund to mark the occasion of the visit by Her Majesty the Queen. In fact, I doubt that my support of this measure could be regarded as even lukewarm.

I would like to say to the honourable senator from Saint John-Albert (Hon. Mr. Emerson) that his explanation of this bill last Wednesday was as complete an explanation as I have ever heard in this house. I commend him for his achievement in that respect.

I would also like to commend the honourable senator from Queens-Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Smith) for the excellent speech which he made on that occasion. To honourable senators who did not have the privilege of hearing his speech, I strongly recommend that they read it, for it is an excellent discourse on this subject.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Quite right.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I point out that this bill, which is entitled "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act", has nothing to do with unemployment as such. It does not propose to solve the unemployment problem, nor does it provide work of any kind. It deals with the provisions for payments to those who unfortunately are unemployed, and with contributions to be made to the fund by employees and employers.

The subject of unemployment insurance was under discussion in this country for many years. I need not go back into the history of the subject, except to refer to the fact that a former Prime Minister, the Right Honourable R. B. Bennett, during his term of office brought in a bill in connection with unemployment insurance, but it was declared to be unconstitutional. I am not saying he knew at the time the bill was passed that it was unconstitutional, but it was opposed by many in the other house at that time on account of its being so obviously unconstitutional. It was not until the time of the Right Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King that Parliament passed an unemployment insurance bill which was constitutional. Prior to that time there had been difficulty in getting the approval of the nine provinces to the passing of a bill with respect to unemployment insurance but, fortunately, Mr. King was able to bring the Prime Ministers of the provinces together, and the bill which is in effect today was passed. Of course, since then there have been amendments to it.

That bill, honourable senators will recall, was passed in the early days of the Second World War. There were many who opposed it, not because they were opposed to unemployment insurance as such, but because they thought it was the wrong time at which to bring in a bill respecting unemployment insurance, for at that time everybody was working, and besides there was some strong objection to the bringing in of a bill of this nature while we were at war. In fact, I think that the then Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, who sat in the seat I now occupy, opposed the bill strenuously on that ground, and I am not sure that some of my friends who now sit on the so-called Government benches in this house did not also oppose that bill. But I will not say more on this point, other than that my honourable friends and their party are now in power and, of course, they are the greatest advocates of unemployment insurance that have ever existed in our country.

The present act provides that payments to the Unemployment Insurance Fund will be made on this basis: 40 per cent by the employee, 40 per cent by the employer, and 20 per cent by the Government.

The fund has been in a strong financial position until the last few years, when it has reached a position which I would say is not one which an insurance company would consider as actuarially sound. There have been heavy drawings on the fund in recent years. I will give some figures with regard to its financial standing—I say "financial standing" because I am referring to the total payments into the fund from the three sources—from the year 1954. That year the fund amounted to $881 million. In the next year, 1955, it was down to $840 million. In 1956 the fund went up to $854 million, and in 1957 to $874 million. In 1958 the fund went down to $744 million, and for this year, 1959, the latest figures which I have available indicate that it is down to $496 million. So, there has been a drop from about $900 million to less than $500 million.

There are many causes for the depletion of the fund. One is increased unemployment during recent years, for of course in times of great unemployment there are heavy drawings on the fund. Then, the fund lost $10 million at the time of the conversion loan. That was a distinct loss of $10 million to the fund. I will not go into the details of that. Honourable senators are familiar with the conversion loan, and can appreciate how the fund could lose $10 million at that time.

The fund has gone down because of the taking of moneys from it for seasonal grants. Honourable senators, I am not going to say "I told you so," but in 1957 when a bill was before this house to provide seasonal benefits to unemployed I spoke on it. Honourable senators will recall that the payment of seasonal benefits is not provided for in the Unemployment Insurance Act. I questioned the right of the Government to take seasonal benefits from the fund, and I warned the result might be that the fund would not remain actuarially sound. I will just read a few of the remarks which I made at that time, as reported in the Senate Hansard of 1957-58, at page 286. After approving of the making of seasonal payments, I said:

> However, honourable senators, I must say that I am a little concerned about the method which is being used to provide funds necessary to carry out the purposes of the bill.

I also said:

> My question now is, why should the payments under this bill be a charge on this fund?

I was referring to the moneys in the Unemployment Insurance Fund.

> You may answer that the fund is well established and has a considerable amount of money on hand. But money can disappear very quickly when many calls are made upon it.

I went on:

> I observe that the other house was informed yesterday that the Unemployment Insurance Fund at present amounts to $884,800,516.26—nearly $900 million. That does seem like a lot of money. But a new charge is to be made against it.

I continued, and I objected to payments under that bill being made from the fund.

The act came up for amendment again in 1958, and at that time I opposed, not the payment of the seasonal benefits, but the procedure of paying the money from the Unemployment Insurance Fund. I said:

> Honourable senators, the first proposal I make is that the payments should be made under the Unemployment Assistance Act.

That is another statute altogether.

> If that is not done, then the amount by which this fund is overdrawn on account of this act should be refunded to it from the general consolidated revenue fund.

Then I went on to suggest that the honourable Leader of the Government should make an inquiry of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I said:

> —and if he finds, as I am sure he will, that this fund is being unduly depleted and is likely, if the practice continues for another year, to become actuarially unsound—

Honourable senators, as I have already remarked, I do not like to say: "I told you so," but I certainly suggested it then.

—let the Government take one of the two courses I have mentioned. I think it is only fair to the workers and to the employers of this country who have contributed, that their unemployment fund should be amply protected.

At that time other honourable senators supported my observations, despite what we said, payments for seasonal benefits continued to be taken from this fund, and now we find it in this condition.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: How much money was drawn from that account?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have not got the figure, but I expect to get it when the bill is in committee.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think it was $48 million.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: We had no right to allow that to happen. We were just as wrong in doing that as a life insurance company would be to take money from one fund to provide for losses in another fund—for instance, to take life insurance premiums to pay a fire loss.

This bill increases the liability to some degree. At the present time no contributions are made and no benefits are provided to persons receiving salaries over $4,800. The proposed legislation will extend the ceiling to include persons in specified employments receiving a salary up to $5,460. It is expected this will bring 80,000 more workers under the act. This will bring increased revenue into the fund and this group should pay its way. I do not believe that increasing the ceiling will weaken the fund.

Benefits are to be extended to cover two new classes: those earning $63 and under $69 a week, and those earning $69 and over.

Another provision extends the maximum benefit period from 36 to 52 weeks. It might be thought that this would result in a heavy charge on the fund, but my information is that it will not make a great deal of difference, because comparatively few are unemployed over a full period of 36 weeks.

I think we all will favour a provision which gives more generous treatment to ex-convicts. At the present time an insured person who is imprisoned loses the benefits he had built up prior to his imprisonment, but under the bill an insured person who is imprisoned, if his term of imprisonment is not greater than two years, will receive upon his discharge those benefits he had accruing to him before his imprisonment. Naturally, he does not receive any benefits during the time he is imprisoned.

All these additional provisions are apt to bring a charge of approximately $20 million a year on the fund.

A new provision allows a higher scale of allowable earnings of unemployed with dependents. A man is allowed to earn more money now than previously without its affecting his unemployment insurance. I don't think many of us will take objection to that.

There is one feature of the bill to which I must take exception, and that is the provision which increases contributions by the employer and the employee. My contention is that had the Unemployment Insurance fund been properly administered it would have been in much better shape today and a loan from the Consolidated Revenue Fund would have put it on a sound basis. This bill proposes to increase the contributions of the employer and employee by from 30 to 50 per cent. Employees will get no increased benefit from this. I do not suppose they would object too much to making higher contributions if they were to get increased benefits, but my understanding is that they will get even less.

The schedule of rates of benefit is set out on page 4 of the bill, and on the opposite page is set out the present schedule of rates. The present rates provide that an employee who has made an average weekly contribution of less than 20 cents will get $6 a week if single and $8 a week if married. Under the proposed legislation if he pays up to 25 cents a week he will get only $6 a week if single and $8 a week if married. So even there he loses something.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Five cents a week.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: At the present time the rate starts at less than 20 cents a week and under the proposed legislation it will start at less than 25 cents a week.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is petty.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: At the present time an insured person who contributes between 45 cents and 50 cents has a weekly rate of benefit of $17 if single and $24 if married. The proposed legislation provides that an insured person who contributes between 42 cents and 50 cents a week will receive a weekly rate of benefit of $13 if single and $18 if married. So there is a distinct loss in return there. Take the next line. Under the proposed legislation an insured person who pays in from 50 to 57 cents a week will receive $15 if single and $21 if married. Under the old act if he paid in from 45 to 50 cents he received $19 if he was single and $26 if he was married, which is a loss for the single man of $4 a week, and for the married man $5 a week.

Therefore, honourable senators, I am not sure that this bill is fair to those who are making the payments. What does the bill propose to do? It proposes to increase the payments in and to decrease the payments out. No wonder the bill is not acceptable to many people in Canada. I did not follow all the evidence that was given before the committee in the other house, but the impression I received from the evidence I did read was that neither the employers nor the employees like the bill, because they feel it is not fair. I can quite understand why they do not.

Honourable senators, to vote for second reading of the bill is to approve of it in principle. In some respects I approve of what is in the bill, but until I get further information in other respects I heartily disapprove of the bill. Therefore, I am going to vote for second reading on the understanding that I am not accepting generally the principle of this bill, but that I will reserve my final opinion until I hear what is said in committee.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, this bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act is not all bad. The act itself is nearly twenty years old. I think it is time we ceased patching it and that we produced a new and broader bill based on the sound principle embodied in the Unemployment Insurance Act.

The bill as I read it sets out to do five things. Three, of minor importance, it does acceptably, and two, of major importance, it does badly. I think it is good that the measure raises from $4,800 to $5,460 the income level of contributors. It increases the duration of benefits from 36 to 52 weeks, and permits larger casual earnings. It also extends the benefits of the act to short-term inmates of jails and penitentiaries. Those three minor amendments I support wholeheartedly.

It is regrettable that the bill imposes a greater burden on employers and employees, but, strangely enough, not on the Government, which in the past has contributed 20 per cent and will continue to contribute the same percentage. It does not measurably increase benefits, which was one of the great shortcomings of the old act, and in that respect what it does is negligible.

In this house while we are talking about unemployment insurance we have to dig a little deeper than the other place does in order to have some greater understanding as to what is behind this act. Why was the fund established and what was its purpose? I merely record history and the truth when I say that it was established by a Liberal Government to deal with the incidence of unemployment, which is an industrial disease. I think we should have an understanding as to what we mean by unemployment. Unemployment means people who suffer hardship and heartache, people who are willing and able to work but cannot find suitable jobs. It is the young college graduate too old at 30 for a job with a future. It is the head shipping clerk stranded when his plant is moved. It is the electrical worker fearful that automation has permanently wiped out his chance of reemployment.

During the recession which was recently with us it was true to say that puzzlement was more apparent than anger on the part of those who tramped the streets month after month with nothing to show for their efforts but holes in their shoes and mounting debts. It is also fair to say that there was less misery than we knew in the '30s. What is most rasping on today's jobless is the sense of uselessness that comes of being unwanted and unneeded in one of the world's richest and most productive nations. It has a corrosive effect on the young men of 20 to 35 years, who are facing their first real hard times, deprived in this instance of the community of suffering that helped preserve the fabric of self-respect in the depression years when everyone was in trouble.

What we have gone through recently is a young men's recession, especially in factories operating under the rigid seniority system. Those of us who heard some of the briefs presented recently before the Finance Committee, particularly those presented by agricultural communities, will realize that what is true in industry is true in agriculture. Science is moving with breathtaking speed and making the day of recall for the industrial worker more and more distant. The electronic brain with its mechanical muscles has made it possible to produce more goods with fewer workers. Thus, men with ten to fifteen years' seniority remain surplus while their companies climb past the productive peaks they set in pre-automation days.

It is known to most of us that employers hesitate to hire men in fear that their desire to safeguard their pension equities and priority status in their old jobs will cause them to quit when the recall signal is sounded. For men and women of advanced age the calendar is the ennemy.

Confronted with the necessity of going on relief, most workers will grab jobs at half or less than half the standard pay they used to enjoy. There are plenty of employers ready to capitalize on this preference of staying independent of government handout. Only under stringent union policing is there no move to pull down the pay scales or to trim fringe benefits.

I believe, as I have already indicated, that labour's problem should be better understood on the farms of this country, where a technological explosion is taking place. There is no denying that there is a technological revolution in agriculture. Mechanization is continuing—the development of new plant varieties and better cultural practices has pushed ahead, and improved types of fertilizers and insecticides are being developed. Sensational developments are being made in animal breeding and husbandry. Science and automation are affecting our farmers and transforming our agricultural aspect, as, indeed, they are affecting our industrial outlook.

Briefly, unemployment is a man without a job. But that does not tell the whole story. We should understand that there is a variety of unemployment, and I am going to take a few minutes to place it before you so that there may be a better understanding of the different kinds of unemployment.

The first is technological unemployment, which is defined as "imperfections of adjustment between labour supply and labour demand". I think I should give you Lord Beveridge's description of technological unemployment:

> While industry as a whole grows—specific trades may decay or change in methods or organization. The men who have learned to live by those trades may find their peculiar and hard-won skill a drug on the market and themselves permanently displaced from their chosen occupation while lacking both the youth and the knowledge to make their way into new occupations.

I need mention only one industry to indicate the rapid changes in industrial techniques—the electronic industry. The rapid change in aircraft design and aircraft propulsion, the growth of the plastic industry, and of the chemical industry and the petrochemical industry, are just a few other examples.

An industrial worker who has served his time and become a skilled workman cannot feel certain of his recognized status and position. Tomorrow, or maybe the day after tomorrow, he can find himself without skilled value in the modern technological industry. This kind of employment creates problems for which unemployment insurance is not the answer. This kind of unemployment can only be solved by an overall Government policy.

The second type of unemployment is seasonal. This is an unemployment created by geographical or climatic conditions or by industrial habits and practices leading to the widely fluctuating labour demand in particular industries and in particular areas.

This kind of unemployment has plagued this country. We have somehow convinced ourselves, wrongly, I believe, into accepting seasonable unemployment as a necessary labour condition in Canada. Nor do I believe that it is really necessary to have the wide swings of demand for labour in the automobile industry or in the clothing industry, who both believe that they must sell at certain periods in the year. Because these industries fall into those habits which suit them best, the industrial workers in these industries and some others are paying indirectly a substantial portion of the cost of organizing industrial production in these industries. This sort of unemployment creates problems to which unemployment insurance is not the answer.

The third kind of unemployment is called "reserves of labour":

> That is, the requirement of each trade of reserves of labour to meet the fluctuations of work incidental even in years of prosperity. The men forming these reserves are constantly passing in and out of employment.

By this I do not mean that workers are not able to hold jobs for long periods, but rather that at any given moment there are industrial processes that are tapering off, releasing workers, and there are industrial processes that are growing up and taking on workers.

In between these two activities there is a pool of persons who, at a given time, are without jobs. These, more suitably, fit the Unemployment Insurance Act.

There are other causes of unemployment. There are workers who lose their jobs because of fluctuations in international trade. Because we rely so much on export trade we are particularly vulnerable on this score.

Let me give you an example. In order to sell our agricultural and other primary products it is necessary to open markets to Japan's swelling population and industrial production. That kind of unemployment was not envisaged when the act was passed. Government policies can best cure this situation.

Another type of unemployment is caused by sickness of individual workers, but this too was not in mind when the act was passed.

I submit very seriously to this house that the fund was not established to deal with technological unemployment, seasonal unemployment, unemployment due to trade fluctuations, unemployment due to sickness, nor was it meant to be a pre-natal family allowance payment.

The function of unemployment insurance is to provide a bridge across the financial consequences to the worker and his family of the kind of unemployment which I earlier described as reserves of labour. These reserves of labour are actively employed workers moving from job to job for a variety of reasons—either because of a decline in one industry or a rise in another industry, or because there is advancement in another job, or because of personal reasons, a change is desired by the worker.

The first purpose of our unemployment policy should be to get the employee back to work. I emphasize, the only cure for unemployment is employment.

This fund was never intended for the worker who is displaced by machine or for those industries whose manpower requirements have been permanently reduced. It was intended and related to the cycle of business activity. It assumed that a worker laid off when business was bad would be rehired when business picked up.

Unemployment insurance is a social insurance. That is its purpose—one which is achieved by providing financial benefits to certain individuals who are temporarily out of work. It gives no vested interest—it pools the risk.

The Unemployment Insurance Fund was always open to serious depletion in a period of prolonged unemployment. In 1958 the fund was $130 million in the red. But by that time the fund was being used for purposes which cannot by any stretch of the imagination be described as legitimate. This was a trust fund, entrusted to the Government of the day by workers and employers, yet the Government dipped into the fund for a purpose unrelated to its origin. If a private corporation or an individual did what the Government did, we would call it fraud. I recognize, and this house should recognize, that there is no inherent right of Government to dip into trust funds.

In times of serious unemployment, it is not the function of the Unemployment Insurance Fund to solve the problems of unemployment, which require the resources of the nation.

Unfortunately, we have no adequate system of public assistance in many parts of Canada to take care of need which arises from causes other than the dislocation of the labour market for which unemployment insurance was established. Nor do we have a system of sickness benefit which would provide some kind of economic assistance to those who are unable to earn wages because they are so sick they are unable to work. Thus we take the easy way out, turn to the fund, and use it for a benefit for which it was never intended.

66972-1—59½

I appeal to this house: Does it make sense to say, as the Government did in 1958, that seasonal benefits should continue for seven months? What a long season! How ludicrous can we get? We can come to only one conclusion, that the Government is using the fund in an attempt to cover up deficiencies in its social welfare program.

The bill speaks of increasing contributions of workers and employers by 30 per cent. It does not provide for a similar increase by the Government. Actually the increase is not 30 per cent, but it ranges from 25 per cent to 56 per cent.

When we turn back our memory we recall that the fund in its heyday reached nearly $1 billion. It is now about $400 million, but at book value it is only $350 million. What a come-down! Because the Government is making the fund pay what should be paid out of the consolidated revenue, the depletion goes on at an alarming rate.

This bill imposes an unfair tax on two segments of the community, the workers and employers. It is a hidden tax, sneaked in through the back door. It imposes an overall burden of $80 million annually. It proposes to pay out new benefits estimated at not more than $24 million. Thus $56 million of the workers' and employers' money is being used to shore up and replenish the fund.

It is true that the Liberals used the fund for seasonal benefits, but they restored the money used for such limited benefits from the consolidated revenues. I repeat: this is a trust fund that does not belong to the Government. It belongs to the employer and the employee, and should be untouchable. It has been the buffer of social security measures which in the last couple of years have kept the country on an even keel. Unemployment insurance is one such measure. This act has been on the statute books of this country, as I have already stated, for almost twenty years. In that time the world has changed, industrially, agriculturally and in every way, and it is time we made changes in the act to meet modern industrial conditions, so that it should remain an insurance act, not a political pot.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I wonder if the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) would be good enough to move adjournment of the debate at this time, on account of the fact that most of us have to be at the airport at around 6 o'clock for the arrival of Her Majesty and Prince Philip. I would appreciate very much if the honourable senator would agree to postpone his remarks on this bill until tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators, there is no one in the world I would more gladly accommodate than my honourable friend the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine). My remarks were not going to be very extensive, but I have great pleasure in accepting his suggestion, and now move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Crerar, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 1, 1959

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Report of the expenditures and administration in connection with the Unemployment Assistance Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 9 of the said Act, being Chapter 26 of the Statutes of 1956. (French text).

The Canada Gazette, Part II, Statutory Orders and Regulations, 1959, Wednesday, June 24, 1959, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, Chapter 235, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT

PROPOSED RESOLUTION OF APPROVAL REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved, pursuant to notice:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the International Wheat Agreement opened for signature at Washington, D.C., on April 6, 1959, and that this house do approve the same.

He said: Honourable senators will recall that this new International Wheat Agreement was tabled in the Senate on June 23, at which time I moved that it be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of that day. That was done, and honourable senators will have had plenty of time to read the agreement and become familiar with it.

This is the fourth International Wheat Agreement. The first such agreement was made in 1949, and came to an end on July 31, 1953. The second was made in 1953 for a three-year period, and came to an end on July 31, 1956. In 1956 a new agreement was entered into for a period of three years, and it will expire on July 31 this year. The agreement now before us is for three years and will expire on July 31, 1962.

I would like to give honourable senators a brief summary of what each of these agreements contained. Under the 1949 agreement the maximum price for wheat was fixed at $1.80 per bushel, with a minimum price of $1.50 per bushel, and Canada was guaranteed 203 million bushels. Honourable senators will perhaps remember that the price remained at or near the maximum during the life of that agreement, and Canada supplied approximately the entire quantity stipulated.

Under the 1953 agreement the price range was: maximum $2.05 per bushel; minimum $1.55 per bushel. Canada's share under that agreement was 150 million bushels annually. Honourable senators will also remember that the United Kingdom did not sign that agreement because of some difficulty over the maximum price, or for some other reason of which I am not aware. As a result of the United Kingdom's not being a party to the agreement, the volume actually delivered by Canada thereunder was about one-half the specified quantity.

Under the 1956 agreement the price range was: maximum, $2.00 per bushel; minimum, $1.50 per bushel; and Canada's share was 100 million bushels. It was regrettable that the United Kingdom still remained outside this 1956 agreement, but the Argentine was a party for the first time.

Under the agreement which I am producing for ratification today, which will likely be known as the 1959 International Wheat Agreement, the price range is: maximum, $1.90 per bushel; minimum, $1.50 per bushel, in Canadian currency at parity of the Canadian dollar as of March 1, 1949, for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat, basis in store Fort William-Port Arthur. For further information with regard to the price range and other details I refer honourable senators to article 6 of the agreement. This article is quite long and complicated and I do not intend to deal with it. It has to do with the price of Argentine, Australian, French, Mexican, Swedish wheat, and so on.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: How many bushels are to be delivered under the 1959 agreement?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: If my honourable colleague will be patient for a moment I will cover all the details.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Is the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) being heckled by a member on his own side of the house?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The Canadian Ambassador signed the agreement on April 22 this year, subject to its ratification by Parliament. As of May 31 the Governments of 26 importing countries and all nine exporting countries had signed the agreement.

Honourable senators will be pleased to know that this time the United Kingdom is a signatory to the agreement. Four smaller importing countries have not yet signed, as well as several current members of the International Wheat Association who did not take part in the conference. The final date for signing by all the importing countries is fixed at December 1, 1959.

I also wish to inform honourable senators that the exporting countries now include Italy, Mexico and Spain, the others being the Argentine, Australia, Canada, France, Sweden and the United States. It is important to know that the instruments of acceptance, following ratification, must be deposited before July 16, so that the new agreement enters fully into force at that time. The present crop year will end on July 31, as will the old agreement.

The principal producer organizations of western Canada have given full support to this agreement. Their leaders, who are members of the advisory committee of the Canadian Wheat Board, formed part of the delegation to the United Nations Wheat Conference and lent valuable assistance and support to the contribution made by the Canadian delegation to that conference.

The objectives of this agreement are set out in article 1, which I propose to read for the information of honourable senators.

The objectives of this agreement are:

(a) to assure supplies of wheat and wheat flour to importing countries and markets for wheat and wheat-flour to exporting countries at equitable and stable prices;

(b) to promote the expansion of the international trade in wheat and wheat-flour and to secure the freest possible flow of this trade in the interests of both exporting and importing countries;

(c) to overcome the serious handicap caused to producers and consumers by burdensome surpluses and critical shortages of wheat;

(d) to encourage the use and consumption of wheat and wheat-flour generally, and in particular, so as to improve health and nutrition in countries where the possibility of increased consumption exists; and

(e) in general to further international co-operation in connection with world wheat problems, recognizing the relationship of the trade in wheat to the economic stability of markets for other agricultural products.

Honourable senators will no doubt agree with me that this agreement would be well worth while if a majority of those objects are achieved.

The present International Wheat Agreement, which will expire on July 31 this year, commits wheat-importing nations to buy specific quantities at the minimum price per bushel for No. 1 Northern wheat basis Fort William-Port Arthur. Canada's quota under that agreement is 103 million bushels.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Does that appear in the agreement?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: This agreement changes that entirely. That is the quota under the existing agreement, which expires on July 31, 1959.

This new International Wheat Agreement, if it is approved by Parliament, will make certain changes in the old way of doing things. Quotas are abolished. Under this agreement importing countries do not agree to buy specific quantities, but agree to purchase a certain percentage of their commercial requirements each year from the exporting countries. Honourable senators will find information on this subject in the annex to the agreement. For example, the United Kingdom agrees to purchase 80 per cent of its requirements from the exporting countries, Germany 70 per cent, the Netherlands 75 per cent, and so on. In the case of the United Kingdom it is likely that Canada, on account of the fact that we grow what we think is the best wheat in the world, will continue to sell to the United Kingdom about 100 millions bushels, as it buys most of its requirements from Canada.

Another difference in this agreement has to do with the powers of the International Wheat Council. The council will make an annual review of national production and marketing measures affecting trade in wheat and sales by member countries, not only commercial sales, but also special transactions. In that connection I refer honourable senators to article 3 of the agreement, which defines commercial purchases and special transactions.

Commercial purchases are the percentages of the purchases which the importing countries agree to make of their total requirements of commercial wheat. But in addition to that there are special transactions, which include the following:

(a) sales on long-term credit resulting from Government intervention;

(b) sales under tied Government loans;

(c) sales for inconvertible currency;

(d) barter transactions;

(e) bilateral trading agreements;

(f) gifts or grants.

In other words, honourable senators, exporting countries will give the council detailed information about its surplus disposal and concessional sales. It is considered that this will be most valuable, because it should have the effect of limiting interference by any such country in Canadian wheat sales, and should have a steadying effect on wheat disposal operations. It is a system similar to what is called confrontation as used by GATT.

In other words, instead of expressing rights and obligations in terms of guaranteed quantities applicable only at the maximum or the minimum price, in the new agreement individual importing countries are under a continuing obligation to purchase, when prices are within the price range but below the maximum, not a guaranteed quantity, but a specified minimum percentage of their total commercial imports. When prices reach the maximum, the exporting countries undertake, if requested, to supply importing countries, at prices no higher than the maximum, with quantities of wheat equal to the average of their total commercial purchases from them over a representative base period.

Another difference is that formerly the International Wheat Agreement took into account only commercial transactions. Under the new agreement provision is made for bringing the total trade in wheat, these commercial and special transactions, within the agreement. And both exporting and importing countries must give to the council full information about all transactions of every kind. In that way the council will know exactly what is going on in the whole world in connection with the sale and importation of wheat and flour.

While the text of the new agreement indicates a departure from the preceding agreements, it is designed to accord with the actual framework of international trade in wheat between exporting and importing member countries. For this and other reasons, the new agreement should cover a high proportion of world trade and elicit a wider participation. It is also expected, honourable senators, that by virtue of the broader functions and responsibilities conferred on it, the council will be able to exercise more effectively its moderating influence on international adverse effects of national policies, and provide an active forum for intergovernmental consultations on wheat problems.

That, honourable senators, is a brief explanation of the agreement.

Hon. Mr. Euler: The agreement provides that the council must be given a record of all transactions by the participating countries. Does that provision include gifts of wheat?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes. That includes not only the commercial sales that the participating countries make under this agreement, but all transactions which are described as special transactions, including gifts, grants or sales made under bilateral trading agreements and barter transactions—everything like that. Not only the exporting countries are obliged to give that information, but all the importing countries also are obliged to give information about the purchases they make, where they obtain the wheat or flour from and the terms of the contract.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask the honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) a question? Article 21, paragraph 4 reads:

> Nothing in this article shall prejudice the complete liberty of action of any exporting or importing country in the determination and administration of its internal agricultural and price policies.

Might that be called an escape clause for any of the signatories to the agreement?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Not in so far as commercial sales are concerned. The importing countries agree that not less than the percentages shown in the annex to the agreement of their total commercial purchases of wheat shall be purchased from the exporting countries, but the agreement does not give any specific control over exporting countries in connection with what I have mentioned as special sales, and my opinion is that clause 4 of article 21 has reference to these only.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask if there is any provision at all in connection with this agreement for any signatory country, either importing or exporting—it would likely be an importing country—to withdraw from this agreement at any time on giving notice?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask just one question? Supposing one of the countries mentioned in the annex does not enter into the agreement, is the agreement binding upon the other countries which do sign the agreement?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: If the importing country fails to live up to the agreement there are certain provisions—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is not my question. My question is, supposing one of the countries mentioned in the annex does not enter into the agreement, is the agreement binding on the other countries or does the agreement automatically not take effect?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: These 30 nations have all signed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): But have all the countries ratified the signatures?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am not absolutely certain on that point. Perhaps that has something to do with the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald).

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is the question I was aiming at, yes. If a country which has signed the agreement fails to ratify it, is the whole agreement null and void or does it remain binding upon the countries which have ratified the agreement?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: My understanding is that the agreement is still binding on the countries which have signed and ratified it. The same question would arise in connection with other agreements. If some countries whose officials had signed the agreement failed to ratify it, that would not mean that the whole agreement was null and void.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I cannot agree with the statement of the honourable leader. If five or six persons propose to enter into an agreement, and finally one of them does not enter into it, then unless there is a clause to the contrary the agreement is not binding on those who do enter into it.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, it is, of course, to be expected by my colleagues in the house that I should have something to say about this agreement.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: We would be disappointed if you did not.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: A number of years ago our American friends in Washington, who have some aptitude for coining new phrases and words, came up with the word "gobbledegook" to describe the jargon that sometimes appeared in communications between governmental departments. I am bound to say that if that word signifies ambiguity it could appropriately be used to describe this agreement.

The honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) in his explanation of this agreement gave us a fairly full review. It is quite evident that this agreement differs substantially from previous agreements, and I shall a little later endeavour to point out some of the discrepancies.

It is true that we got into these wheat agreements some thirteen years ago, when the Government of the day made what was known as the British Wheat Agreement. That was to continue for four years from the beginning of the crop year in 1946. In 1949 the first International Wheat Agreement was consummated, as described by the Leader of the Government.

We appeared after the war to develop an urge to make agreements. It is quite true that the leaders of the farmers in western Canada asked for these wheat agreements and urged that they be entered into. I do not for a moment wish to criticize their motives in doing so: unquestionably, they were of the opinion that agreements of this kind would lead to a stabilization of price and more security for the wheat producers on the prairies. But they did not work out that way.

I have said before in this house that at the conclusion of the war the agricultural production of Europe was almost completely destroyed, leaving an enormous void to be filled. We entered into the British Wheat Agreement at a time when we should have known that it was quite unnecessary to do anything to hold wheat prices up for four years. Rather, the reverse was the case. What as a matter of fact we did at that time—and, I repeat, it was done at the request of the leaders of the prairie farmers—was to enter into, first, the British Wheat Agreement, and then the International Wheat Agreement which, without any question of doubt, cost the wheat growers of western Canada hundreds of millions of dollars. There is no gainsaying that fact; it can be proven without any difficulty. The unfairness of it was, of course, that the wheat farmers of western Canada subsidized the British bread consumers for four years. Not only did they subsidize the British bread consumers, but they also subsidized the Canadian bread consumers, because the Canadian flour mills bought their wheat at the price fixed and determined under the British Wheat Agreement, and later the International Wheat Agreement.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Do we not pay higher prices for wheat than the world market prices?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: I understood we did.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: No. Domestic prices were based on the agreement. The point I am making is that during the period of the British Wheat Agreement world prices outside the agreement were very much higher than the prices which obtained under that agreement. If it is of interest to the house, I would point out at one time wheat sold as high as $3.40 a bushel to countries outside the British Wheat Agreement, and for the first two years of operation of the International Wheat Agreement. That was due to the immense void that had been created by the war, not only in Europe but elsewhere as well. I re-emphasize that point, because I think it is most pertinent to a discussion of this whole matter.

I do not wish to take up the time of the house unnecessarily but, as I said a moment ago, this agreement differs in many essentials from the previous wheat agreements.

Over the past two or three years there has been a good deal of criticism in Canada as to the wheat disposal methods of the United States Government. Under support legislation, running back almost to the end of the war, the United States has built up a huge surplus of wheat. It is estimated that that country has enough wheat to do it for two years, even if it did not produce another bushel of wheat in that time.

Under those support prices, on not only wheat but many other agricultural commodities as well, the United States has invested today about $9 billion in carrying surplus agricultural products. It is costing them, according to reports from Washington, about a billion dollars a year to carry these surpluses, in interest on the money invested, insurance, storage charges, and so on.

Because of that tremendous burden of surpulses, of which wheat is probably the most important, the United States naturally is trying to get its surpluses down, and in the efforts it made to that end over the last two years it came into conflict with what we in Canada thought were our traditional markets.

When the United States gave wheat away and accepted foreign currencies, and gave it away on tied Government loans, as it did in certain South American countries, it violated the spirit of the International Wheat Agreement. What happens under this new agreement? That limitation is removed. The United States today, under this agreement, may, without any question of violation of the agreement at all, in spirit or letter, sell on long-term credit to any country. It may sell under tied Government loans. That is, it may say to a country: "We will give you loans for industrial development, or for some other reason, if you will take a certain amount of wheat from us." It may make sales for inconvertible currencies—it may make sales for rupees, for instance, to India, or for some other currency elsewhere. It may engage in barter transactions. It may make bilateral trading agreements. Finally, it may dispose of wheat by gifts or grants.

That is the policy to which we in Canada have, for the last two or three years, been taking exception because we felt—rightly, I think—that this was interfering with our legitimate markets for wheat. But under this agreement these practices now receive the blessing of all the countries engaged in the wheat trade. We in Canada may want to do something of the same kind. I believe we have done it in a modest way. I am speaking only from memory, but I think we made sales of wheat a year or so ago to Poland on deferred payments. At any rate, the principle is that any exporting country which is a signatory to this agreement may dispose of its wheat in any of the ways I have just enumerated. I make the prediction now—and I trust I may be wrong—that this is going to bear heavily on our ability in the next three years to sell our wheat abroad.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is that a new provision? Could these countries not do that under the former agreement?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: No, there was no provision in the former agreement for doing that. Any country which did so was technically violating the spirit of the agreement, and that was the criticism that was made by Canada of the United States.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Do you not think that the United States would do it whether or not this clause was in this particular agreement? I think they would.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: They might do so. That emphasizes the description of the agreement that I gave a little earlier in my remarks.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The difference is that sales of that kind, which are called special transactions, must be reported to the council not only by the exporting countries but by the importing countries as well. In that way something which had been done all along would be given more prominence, and it was thought that the exporting countries which were doing that kind of thing would be a little more careful about how they were carrying on their business.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I do not know just how you would describe that sort of pressure that might be brought to bear on them.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is a pious hope.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Yes, nothing more than a pious hope. It is true that the United States, or Canada for that matter, or any other exporting country that engages in special transactions, must send a report to the wheat council, but all that does is to tell the wheat council what everyone in the world knows, anyway.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It brings it to the light of day.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: That is a little bit more of the gobbledegook.

In another respect the agreement differs from the old agreement. Under the old agreement each exporting country was given a definite quota for export. Canada and the other exporting countries each had a quota. There were six of them in the last agreement. Today that provision is absent from the agreement. The importing countries were obliged also, under the agreement, to take a certain quota of imports from the exporting countries. That obligation is replaced, as the Leader of the Government stated, by the provision that the importing countries agree to take from the exporting countries certain percentages of their requirements.

For instance, I notice from the annex to the agreement that Austria, which is an importing country and a signatory to the agreement, agrees to take at least 45 per cent of its required imports of wheat from one or other of the exporting countries. The only signatory to the agreement, curiously, that agrees to take all its wheat from the exporting countries which are signatories to the agreement is Vatican City. Vatican City in Italy agrees to take 100 per cent of its imports of wheat from the exporting countries which have signed this agreement, or which it is hoped will sign it.

It is interesting to look over this. For instance, the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland agrees to take 90 per cent of its imports of wheat from the exporting countries. But how much wheat do we expect to sell to the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland? Ceylon is another importing country, and it agrees to take 80 per cent of its requirements from the exporting countries, of which Canada is one. If you look down the list you will see there is not a great deal of comfort in it for us. The United Kingdom agrees to take 80 per cent of its import requirements from these exporting countries.

Hon. Mr. Davies: May I interrupt to ask a question? When importing countries agree to accept wheat from Canada—and I see the price varies between $1.50 and $1.90 a bushel —do they undertake to accept the wheat at a specific price now?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: No. As I understand it, this is a matter of negotiation. As the honourable Leader of the Government has stated, what has been done is to fix a maximum price of $1.90 and a minimum price of $1.50. Prices may fluctuate within this range, but the importing countries agree to buy, if necessary, at the minimum price, and the exporting countries agree to sell, if necessary, at the maximum price.

As the honourable Leader of the Government stated, under the previous agreements Canada was allotted a certain quota. For instance, under the last agreement we were guaranteed sales of 102,800,000 bushels a year. Such a provision is not contained in the present agreement. All we have in its place is the guarantee that importing countries will take a certain percentage of their imports from exporting countries, but they do not need to take them from Canada. They can take them from any other signatories anywhere they wish or can get them. So in that respect it does seem that our advantages under the agreement are weakened.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would the honourable senator give us the date of commencement of the last agreement and its duration?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It was made in 1956.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: The last agreement was made in 1956, effective August 1 that year, and it terminates on July 31 this year. Is that the information my honourable friend wanted?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes, thank you. I did not think it ran that long.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: There is no question that there is a real problem with regard to wheat. We have been accumulating surpluses in Canada. The surplus will be somewhat reduced this year, mainly because our crop on the prairies fell a good deal short of expectations last year. We do not know what this year's crop will produce. There were good rains in Saskatchewan recently and we might get a yield of 400 million bushels of wheat, but we do not know. If we do, it is almost certain that our surplus will not be lessened and may well be increased. I think that fact is becoming pretty well recognized.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask my honourable friend if he could inform us what the carryover from the old crop year to the new crop year is in Canada? I know it is much less than in previous years.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: 500 million bushels.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: By the end of this month it may be reduced by 100 million bushels from the previous crop year.

Hon. Mr. Davies: May I ask my honourable friend another question? I do not like to interrupt him, but can he say whether any other exporting country is able to undersell Canada? Under the agreement there is a price range from $1.50 to $1.90 a bushel. Can any other exporting country sell for less than $1.50?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: A country which is a signatory to this agreement would be violating the agreement if it sold for less than $1.50.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Could the country not make a special transaction?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Of course, but I am replying now to the question raised by the honourable senator from Kingston (Hon. Mr. Davies). The special transactions clause opens the door to a very wide vista indeed. While we may attempt to forecast what may happen, we shall have to await events to see how the agreement operates. I hope I am wrong, but I am afraid we may well find it much more difficult to sell wheat in the crop year that begins on August 1 than we have in the last few years. I say quite frankly that this is mainly because of the clearly stated purpose of the United States to try to reduce its burdensome surplus. Under this agreement it can do so without violating any arrangement with its competitors.

Honourable senators, I really have no faith in this type of agreement. We set up a wheat council composed of one representative from each of the exporting and importing countries, and nine exporting countries and 30 importing countries are signatories to the new agreement. If they all ratify the agreement it will mean that 39 countries will be involved. Each country has a representative on the council, and the respective Governments have to pay the expenses of these representatives to attend council meetings. An executive committee is appointed too. Expenses other than those of delegates attending meetings are paid by the respective Governments on the basis of the votes they have in council proceedings. I have forgotten the proportion of votes Canada has, but Canada, the United States and Great Britain will probably pay substantially more than half the costs of the management of this whole operation.

We have a serious situation with regard to wheat, and one cannot but feel a little bit cynical at the objectives set out in this high-sounding document. One of the objectives is:

—to overcome the serious hardship caused to producers and consumers by burdensome surpluses and critical shortages of wheat.

Now, there has not been a critical shortage of wheat in the world for 40 years—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That refers to the individual countries.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: —except in countries like China which, though often suffering famine, have been unable to buy.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Pakistan, India, China and other countries have had a critical shortage of wheat.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Oh, I know; but when we speak of a critical shortage of wheat we mean an absence of supply to meet a shortage. The fact of the matter is that the supply of wheat has been increasing. I cannot see what a wheat council sitting in London can do to dispose of our surpluses. I cannot for the life of me see how it can make any worth-while contribution to that purpose. We have got ourselves enmeshed in a lot of rigidities in the marketing of our wheat, and underneath that is the desire to hold prices up to a certain level. In my own judgment, honourable senators, for what it is worth, in the end that concept is bound to fail in the face of increasing production throughout the world. For instance, three new countries, Spain, Mexico, and Italy, are listed as exporters under this agreement. Italy has become an exporter of wheat; she used to have to import large quantities of wheat in order to feed her people. The same applies to Spain and Mexico. If world production increases—and the main factor in increasing production in the world, make no mistake about it, is the level of prices that have obtained—

Hon. Mr. Davies: I do not want to be a nuisance, and I am sorry to interrupt, but will this agreement control the price which Canadian millers pay to Canadian wheat growers for their wheat?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: They will buy their requirements, I should think, at something between the minimum price and the maximum price, which they have been doing in the past year.

Honourable senators, I may be a bit old fashioned, but I do not think that in the end the devices of governments can overcome the old operative law of supply and demand —at least if we are to retain the freedom we boast so much about. Sooner or later we shall have to recognize that fact. I know the situation is creating very much concern out on the prairies, and also among American wheat growers. Maintaining a price level, lower it is true than obtained at the end of the war, we have simply brought a number of new countries into production. If the law of supply and demand had operated for six or seven years following the end of the war the farmers of western Canada would have received in that period very much higher prices for their wheat than they did receive. In the past five years they would probably have taken lower prices than the average they received, but in the operation of the lower price level countries like Mexico and Spain, and probably Italy too, would be squeezed out.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Because of the high cost of production.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Because their costs of producing wheat are much higher. What we have been attempting to do under these agreements is to interfere with the operation of natural laws, and my knowledge of human experience indicates that in the end that is almost certain to fail unless we get complete regimentation throughout the world.

There is one other point I wish to mention, and then I shall not inflict myself on the patience of the house any longer.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Go ahead.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: We should not overlook possible competition in the sale of wheat from Russia in future years. Before the Russian revolution, some forty years ago, that country was a large exporter of wheat to western Europe. I am well aware of that fact because, as it may be known to some of you, at any rate, I was at one time engaged in the grain business, which is a pretty good operation when you are working for a farmers' company. There was keen competition from Russia in those days. There is no doubt that Russia is developing her agricultural potential and that she may well come into the market in a few years with very substantial exports of wheat. If she does so, it will be into the markets where we hope to sell our wheat. It is true that we may sell Russia some wheat. In fact, we have sold her wheat for export to her Pacific ports like Vladivostok, but that was simply because it was much cheaper to move wheat from Vancouver to that port than to move it there from Moscow by rail. We may have some compensating conditions there. However, I think that at the levels at which prices remain we are not going to be able to reduce our surpluses, but that it is almost certain that the surpluses in the world will increase. If that proves to be the case, I do not know how that problem will be handled in future by the governments that have to deal with it.

Finally, there is no doubt that the situation so far as our prairies is concerned has much in it that is serious. I have said what I have said today because I do not think this agreement is the answer at all, and that our farmers will find that they have been leaning on a broken reed, if they expect that by signing international agreements we can get a permanent stability in wheat prices.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: May I ask the honourable senator just one question? Does he not think that if we cannot have a whole loaf it may be wise to take even half a loaf? We all realize that this agreement is possibly not as good as the previous one, but does not the honourable senator think it is helpful to this country to have such an agreement as this?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Well, it is a very fair question that our colleague from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) has addressed to me. I cannot answer the question affirmatively. This agreement certainly is no improvement on, but rather a weakening of, the old agreement.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Granted.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I think we are all agreed on that. But I, for one, do not want to be reduced to the position where I have to take half a loaf as the best possible arrangement that can be made. As a matter of fact, this may well be the last international wheat agreement, because I think all over the world there has been a changing opinion about the value of these agreements. They have not worked out on other things, except in the case of a closed cartel, like a sugar agreement, for instance, where you have only two or three producting countries. They have not worked out on oil or base metals, and I think that in the end they are not going to work out on wheat. For that reason, it seems to me that we are harbouring a delusion and following a will-o'-the-wisp if we imagine that in this way we are going to find the answer to all our problems connected with the production of grain.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, I am impelled to contribute a few brief remarks in connection with this agreement because I believe that since the end of the war, and particularly among those nations and countries that associate themselves with the so-called free world, there has been a conscientious attempt made to try to arrive at a renewed measure of co-operation and understanding of international problems, whether they are economic, political or social. While this wheat agreement is full of pious hopes, if one might say so, it does represent, I think, an earnest attempt on the part of its participating and sharing signatories to rationalize a very difficult economic situation as it affects the supply and distribution of grain, and particularly wheat.

We have had a good many similar agreements of one kind or another, particularly in connection with wheat, since the end of the war. My honourable friend from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) has referred to the British Wheat Agreement, followed, as it was, by the International Wheat Agreement.

I would like to emphasize one thing very definitely, that for ten years following the end of the war there was a situation in the world that favoured sellers of grain as against buyers of grain. That era has changed now into a period which favours buyers of grain as against sellers of grain. In other words, we have passed from a sellers' market to a buyers' market. Broadly speaking, I think that is the important economic factor that should be kept in mind in connection with the application of the terms of this agreement.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: The very fact, as my honourable friend has pointed out, that exporting countries are not mentioned in this agreement as much as importing countries, is significant. No definite allocation of amounts that might be for sale from the exporting countries is made, simply because in a general way, as between the United States and ourselves, there is a great surplus already.

Now, nature is a factor that probably we do not give enough heed to in connection with this problem, but this year in western Canada, I would suggest, there is already a very definite indication that the surplus we have carried over, in which there has been a steady decline during the last three or four years, will be reduced still further. The quality of our wheat is another factor which I think has a very direct bearing on this problem. The range of prices that my honourable friend has referred to here—$1.50 to $1.90—is based on what is called the contract grades of hard wheat, basis Fort William, but a great many other grades, lower grades, are saleable and are sold on the basis of wider spreads than this, below the minimum of $1.50. In the needs of a consuming importing country the highest grade, represented by so-called contract grades 1, 2 and 3 Northern, is not an essential to life: what is needed is grain that can be used, and often this may be very low-grade grain. This country has at times sold more of grades Nos. 5 and 6 than of any other grade. Countries such as China and other Oriental areas, or the West Indies, where low-grade consumption is the standard of living, take comparatively little high-grade wheat and flour.

The United States again has a different quality of wheat from ours. It has several soft grade varieties which on the whole sell at a lower price than our higher hard wheat contract grades.

If one were going to suggest a future for this International Wheat Agreement I would suggest that, in the face of the crystallizing today of various trading blocs in the world—my honourable friend from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) has recently visited the scene of one of them, and some of the rest of us who have been in Montreal lately have visited the scene of another potential one—our possible position in relation to these developments should be considered. The resolving of blocs of this world's peoples into economic groups for self-preservation introduces an aspect of this International Wheat Agreement which I do not think can be ignored. If it has a future at all it will be in an attempt to rationalize supply and demand of this very important world commodity. Personally, I feel that as far as the export of wheat is concerned we have a special problem in Canada and in the United States. I think that Canada and the United States, in this North American zone, if you like, have a joint problem, and a responsibility which invites and indeed challenges practical co-operation in the rational liquidation of our supplies.

Hon. L. M. Gouin: Honourable senators, at the beginning of this debate my honourable friend the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) raised a very important question on international law. He was answered to some extent by the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine). In the meantime I looked up the agreement which we are considering now so as to determine the provisions which would support or not support the position taken by the Leader of the Government, and I must admit that for once I am in the position of being able to corroborate the stand taken by him.

In the Minutes of the Proceedings of June 23, at page 493W, we find paragraph 2 of article 35 of the agreement.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I found it since the question was asked.

Hon. Mr. Gouin: If the honourable Leader of the Government will allow me, I think I will say the same thing that he would say.

Like all treaties, this one requires to be ratified. Paragraph 2 of article 35 says:

> This agreement shall be subject to acceptance by the signatory Governments in accordance with their respective constitutional procedures.

That is just what we are doing now. In other words, a treaty is not binding until it has been duly ratified, and letters of ratification have been deposited.

In paragraph 5 of article 35 we read these words:

> Part I and Parts III to VIII of this agreement shall enter into force on 16 July, 1959 and Part II on 1 August, 1959 between these Governments which have by 16 July, 1959 accepted or acceded under—

And it cites certain paragraphs of article 35. In other words, the agreement will be binding between the signatories which have ratified it. It is not an agreement which requires acceptance by all parties.

I wish also to refer to the question of acceptance. Some powers may accede to the agreement, and in such cases there is required a vote of the members of the pool. On reading article 24 of the agreement, I must say I am rather proud to note that among the exporting countries the two powers which have the largest number of votes are the United States and Canada, each with 339 votes.

Honourable senators, I am not an expert on wheat marketing, and I wished merely to clear up this legal point.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I wish to thank the honourable senator from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Gouin) for bringing paragraph 5 of article 35 to my attention. I might add that the closing words of the paragraph read as follows:

> —provided that such Governments hold not less than two-thirds of the votes of exporting countries and not less than two-thirds of the votes of importing countries in accordance with the distribution established in articles 24 and 25.

I again thank the honourable senator for the information he gave.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) a question? He stated that the agreement which is just expiring allows Canada a quota of approximately 100 million bushels. What portion of Canada's total export sales during that period was under the International Wheat Agreement?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I understand Canada's total export was 316 million bushels, but I do not have a breakdown of the figures.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Roughly one-third.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I presume that this agreement will go to committee for further consideration and in order that we way obtain additional information.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The 1956 agreement was not referred to committee. However, I would like to say something before the debate is closed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have no objection to the honourable leader's speaking at this time, but I do feel that before the agreement is ratified, it should be sent to a committee for further information. This is a very important agreement, which involves a large segment of the population of Canada, namely, the wheat-growing farmers of the west. I feel very strongly, therefore, that we should refer the agreement to a committee in order to get information with respect to the world wheat situation. The honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) raised a question concerning increased production of wheat by Russia. What effect is that situation going to have on the wheat supplies of the world? There are many other kindred subjects on which I think we should obtain information before ratifying this agreement.

The honourable senator from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Gouin) has brought to our attention the provision in the agreement as to the effect of ratification of the agreement before July 16. Well, we have 16 days before the agreement has to be ratified. Surely we can spend one day in committee to get further information.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, when we ratified the British Wheat Agreement, some ten or more years ago, the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) and I were the only two rebels in the house. We said we thought the agreement was a foolish move and was being improperly endorsed by the Government of Canada. I do not know how the senator from Churchill was treated, but when I got home to Manitoba I was nearly run out of the province. I suggested that the farmers might lose $300 million through the ratification of that agreement. Well, they lost $600 million. I was a little short.

But there is something else to this agreement which did not exist in the agreements which were previously presented for ratification. When the struggle was taking place in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta over the question as to whether or not wheat should be sold on the open market, there were those who advocated the pool agreement idea. The better dealers in wheat in Manitoba told me if such an agreement were entered into we would land just where we have landed today.

In my opinion you have to sell wheat by word of mouth. True, this agreement is written out, but we sell largely by word of mouth. No matter what argument you put up, the only place where wheat can properly be sold is on the public market, where the seller and the buyer have a chance to bargain. There is such a market place in Winnipeg, one in Chicago, and one or two in Europe, and they control world prices. The exchange at Winnipeg is one of the world's largest, and it is trading in wheat every day. A miller from Glasgow, from Paris, or from Armsterdam will cable his agent in Canada to communicate with Winnipeg and buy, say, 10,000 bushels of No. 2 wheat f.o.b. Fort William. He does that to guarantee his supply against a contract which he is making as a miller, or a baker or as a purchaser in some other line of business. That system of trading has been used for the handling of grain almost since time began. By that method the seller and the buyer come together and the price paid is what the world market thinks it should be.

I think this agreement should be ratified, not because it is proposed by this Government, or by any other Government. It is practically the same as the former agreement, with a few changes in the wording here and there. The point is that representatives of the wheat pool from Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta were at the meeting held in New York at which this agreement was considered. They are the backbone of the present wheat selling scheme in the Prairie provinces. They are the people who come down here and demand $300 million for deficiency payments. They are the people who dominate the political arena of those three provinces. What we who come from the Prairies have to recognize, in my judgment at least, is that the way to deal with these people is to let them attend their meetings and state clearly their position and what they want. Then if this agreement does not prove a success, and the price of grain is not such as to make grain growing profitable in relation to cattle raising and other branches of farming, we will know where the blame lies. You do not have to be a farmer to know that. Some of us were brought up that way, and we know that happens. I can remember the day when everybody in Manitoba grew wheat and no one kept many cattle. Afterwards they found they could not sell their wheat. Often it would be hit by frost or it suffered from lack of rain, but these things did not affect cattle. Cattle sales went up very substantially in that province. Although this past year's crop itself was poor, we have had a fairly good year in the province because the cattle market was very good.

I want to see this agreement ratified because I want to give the men who are running the wheat business in Manitoba and Saskatchewan a chance. They think they have a cure for the problem, but they have not. Nevertheless, they are trying desperately hard to pull themselves out.

Let me tell you of a little incident which occurred while I was riding on a train in the west about four years ago. An Anglican bishop from Saskatchewan came along and sat down beside me. He asked, "Are you a member of Parliament?" I replied, "No. I am one of those fellows they call senators." He continued: "I would like to ask you a question. Can Mr. So-and-so"—he named a man from Saskatchewan, whose name I will not mention here—"force the people of Britain to buy our grain at the price he puts on it?" I said: "My dear sir, I do not know. You know much more about economics than I do. He can only force the people of Great Britain to buy our wheat when our price is cheaper than anybody else's, and not a minute before. When wheat goes down to $1 or to 50 cents a bushel, that is all he can get for it." I do not know whether that man is still in Regina, but he knows now that the people of Britain will not buy our wheat unless it is cheaper than anybody else's.

I want to see that the people who are selling grain have a chance to carry out their ideas, which are contained in this agreement. They have advocated it. I want them to see what can happen under their direction. This idea never did succeed and it never will. That is exactly what the honourable senator from Churchill said about the British Wheat Agreement. I backed him up, and we were two voices crying in the wilderness—just Crerar and Haig crying in the wilderness and saying it could not and would not happen.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I point out that you were not alone at all?

Hon. Mr. Haig: We told them of the loss they would take, and now everybody wants to get on the band wagon.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Look up the record.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I did not hear the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) speak that day. I remember only the honourable senator from Churchill and myself saying that they would clean us up before we were through.

Honourable senators, if you want a committee to look into this agreement, I am agreeable. The information will all come out then. After that the agreement will be ratified by this house, and the farmers of Manitoba and Alberta will not be able to say that we parliamentarians held up the agreement that they wanted passed. They themselves think it is a good agreement, so let them have it and they will learn. They are the men who sell the wheat, and they are the ones who will bear the loss. They will learn that that marketing system is all wrong and that we will have to go back to selling on the world market.

We Canadians produce wheat of a quality that will sell against any other in the world, and therefore we can get a market for it. Make no mistake about that. There has never been any fear of that in the minds of our farmers out west. They know they grow good grain, and they know they can sell it. But if you put all these conditions on the sale of wheat, such as preventing the farmers from going outside the pool, so that they cannot sell on the public market, then this sort of thing will be happening all the time.

Let us approve this agreement, and at the end of three years those of you who now support it will be glad to go back to the grain-selling system that the world has had for hundreds of years.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Would the sponsor of the resolution tell us on what basis the votes of importing and exporting countries are calculated?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is right in the agreement.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I know, but I was wondering on what basis they are made. I notice that Canada and the United States are each allotted 339 votes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: They are the biggest exporters.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: We will get that information in committee.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes, we will hear that from the technical men.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Before the motion is put I would like to clear up a few matters.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, may I interject a few words?

I have often been accused of being old-fashioned, but it is the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) who is telling us that wheat should be marketed on the grain exchange. Well, he had better try that campaign out in western Canada and see how far he can get today. We were all accustomed to hearing that wheat was a glut on the market, so the marketing of it was taken out of the farmers' hands. Then suddenly there was a drought here, and a great calamity in some other country, and wheat went up 50 cents a bushel after it left the farmers' hands. No doubt the honourable senator from the great city of Winnipeg can tell us the amount of money that was made out of trading in wheat on the grain exchange. Those in charge of selling were not anxious to secure the best price obtainable for the western farmer, but rather to make all the money they could on his grain as it passed through their hands. Will we ever go back to that? To do so would be ridiculous.

So far as the British Wheat Agreement is concerned, I opposed its ratification in this house, as the record here will show. I would quote what I said, if I were not too lazy to look it up. The honourable senator from Churchill mentioned the farmers' organizations. We are deluged by further claims because they feel that they suffered an injustice through this agreement, which I believe they endorsed and asked the Government to enter into. I was opposed to the agreement. I had no feeling, as I have said, for the position in which the British found themselves under the "have regard" clause. Surely, if someone gets the best of a bargain with you he will be more careful in the future because he will be under the impression that you are endeavouring to get the best of him. He will be more careful in his next deal with you to see that you do not get back what he took from you. Life's experiences teach us that.

Honourable senators, that is all I have to say. I had not intended to say anything, but the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Stirred you up.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I believe my remarks will close the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: If the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) speaks now on this motion his remarks will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask the Leader of the Government to which committee he proposes to refer the agreement?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have not yet proposed to refer it to any committee, but I will deal with that before I sit down. In the meantime the honourable Leader of the Opposition may be thinking about the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: What about sending it to the Standing Committee on Natural Resources?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: May I suggest that we leave that for the moment?

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the speeches which have been made on this very important and complicated matter. During the long period of years in which I have been a member of this chamber I have spoken oftener on wheat than on any other subject. In spite of what the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) has said, both my honourable colleague from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) and I are on record as having opposed the British Wheat Agreement. In saying this I do not want to take any credit away from the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg or, indeed, from the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar). I just want to say that we, too, thought the same things about that particular agreement.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: There is enough glory for everybody.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: However, my object in rising was not to point this out. I merely wanted to clear up a few matters. The honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) asked me a question and I would like to qualify what I said in reply by referring to article 35, paragraph 7, which reads:

> If by 16 July 1959 the conditions laid down in the preceding paragraphs for the entry into force of this agreement are not fulfilled, the Governments of those countries which by that date have accepted or acceded to this agreement in accordance with paragraphs (2), (3) or (6) of this article may decide by mutual consent that it shall enter into force among them, or they may take whatever other action they consider the situation requires.

Is that of any assistance to the honourable Leader of the Opposition?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, thank you.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The honourable senator from Churchill referred to special transactions. These, of course, are entirely different from commercial sales. Under the old agreements such special transactions were not a breach of the agreements in any respect.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: There was no provision in those agreements for special transactions.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Exporters were not compelled to record those transactions. They recorded only commercial transactions, which were the only ones controlled by the old agreements. The new agreement recognizes the existence of these special transactions. The old agreements ignored them entirely, and this fact undermined the effectiveness of the agreements.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Is it not a matter of common knowledge that these so-called special transactions were certainly being carried on by the United States?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Oh, yes, I do not deny that.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Every country knew that. In, I think, the Polish sale Canada took deferred payments. Everyone knew about that, so it does not mean very much to try to make a virtue out of the fact these transactions are now to be reported to this august wheat council.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I understood the honourable senator from Churchill to say that the special transactions were a breach of the old agreements. What I am saying now is that those special transactions were not mentioned in the old agreements at all.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: They certainly constituted a breach of the understanding between the exporting and importing countries.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think that is splitting hairs.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: If the honourable leader is right, why did we protest to the United States that it was violating the agreement?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: One always protests against anything when in a position like that. Under the new agreement the minimum percentages of the importing countries cover a larger quantity than was covered under the quota system of the old agreements. It is my opinion that the annual review provided under the new agreement will allow signatory countries to discuss the various problems relating to international wheat trade in a much more detailed manner than ever before.

Honourable senators, I have mentioned these few facts just to clear up the record. This is a very important matter, and it could be referred to committee if that is the wish of honourable senators. I would point out that we have no power to change the terms of the agreement in any respect and it either stands or falls in its present form. It would be interesting to find out as much as we can about the world wheat situation, and I have no objection to referring the agreement to committee, if there is any real advantage to be gained by that. However, to my recollection similar agreements presented to this house for ratification in 1949, 1953 and 1956 were not sent to committee. Several of our committees have a great deal of work to do just now, and we might clutter up things by considering this agreement in committee. I am open to conviction and would like to hear if the honourable Leader of the Opposition has anything further to say on the point.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I would suggest that the honourable Leader of the Government move that the agreement be referred to the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations. As I said before, this is a very important agreement. The entire question of the marketing of wheat is one which I think involves a larger percentage of Canada's population than does the marketing of any other commodity in this country. Any information we can get will be all to the good. I do not wish to go through the formality of suggesting that the agreement be not approved of at this time, for I have no doubt that the house will approve it, but I do suggest that it be referred to committee. There is a great deal of additional information which we should have with respect to this problem. I feel that we are entitled to it and that the country is entitled to it. In fact, to my mind this matter is so important that not only should it be referred to a committee for the information of the Senate, but a stenographic report should be made of the evidence taken in committee so that the Government and the people, as well as the members of this house, will know just what the situation in Canada is with respect to the production and marketing of wheat.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I suggested that the agreement be approved today because the previous agreements were dealt with in that way when the former Government was in office. Whether or not the matter is more serious now than then, I do not know. The overall picture in western Canada is better now than it has been. The surplus has gone down considerably; in fact, I understand that it is down to about 500 million bushels, of which 300 million bushels is the quantity that we usually regard as a necessary carryover. However, in view of what has been said, and since it appears to be the consensus of opinion of the members of the Senate that this matter be referred to a committee, I will move that it be referred to the committee on Canadian Trade Relations.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will the honourable leader amend his motion for approval of the agreement?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, Mr. Speaker, if that is considered necessary.

The Hon. the Speaker: In that event, I would suggest that the amended motion might read as follows:

Resolved: That it is expedient that this house do not approve, as yet, the International Wheat Agreement, and that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, may I say I do not like the words "as yet". They might give the impression that it is doubtful whether we are going to approve the agreement. My purpose in suggesting that the matter go to committee is that we should get information on the situation with respect to the production and sale of wheat. Perhaps the Clerk can suggest a method of getting this resolution to a committee.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: If I might say a word, honourable senators. This agreement cannot be altered. We have to ratify it as it is, or reject it. I think we are all in favour of ratification, even if some of us may not have very much faith in the agreement. I would suggest, therefore, that the customary practice be followed, that the resolution be referred to a committee and that it come back to the house to be adopted.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, I would suggest that before we approve the wheat agreement it be referred to a committee. That would be a simple way out of the difficulty.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is that suggestion unanimously agreed to?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Agreed.

By unanimous consent, proposed resolution referred to the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 2, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Hon. Lionel Choquette, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following document:

Agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Japan for co-operation in the peaceful uses of atomic energy with a Protocol and agreed Minutes, signed at Ottawa, July 2, 1959. (English text).

I may say that as this agreement was signed only this morning, the French text will not be available until next week.

PUBLIC SERVICE PENSION ADJUSTMENT BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill C-60.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-60) intituled: "An Act respecting the Adjustment of certain Public Service Pensions", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 25, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Next sitting.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-63.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-63) intituled: "An Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 25, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson: Next sitting.

PRIVATE BILL

DESJARDINS LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill S-29.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (S-29) intituled: "An Act to incorporate Desjardins Life Insurance Company", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 24, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 1, lines 22 and 23: Strike out "Desjardins Life Insurance Company" and substitute "Desjardins Mutual Life Assurance Company"
2. Page 2, line 10: Strike out "until" and substitute "before"
3. Page 2, line 11: Strike out "has been entered into" and substitute "becomes effective"
4. Page 3, line 26: After "unions" insert "or caisses populaires"
5. Page 3, line 30: After "unions" insert "or caisses populaires"
6. Page 3, line 31: After "union" insert "or caisse populaire"
7. Page 3, line 39: After "union" insert "or caisse populaire"
8. Page 4, line 2: After "union" insert "or caisse populaire"
9. Page 4, line 4: After "union" insert "or caisse populaire"
10. In the title: Strike out the title and substitute "An Act to incorporate Desjardins Mutual Life Assurance Company".

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, I move that the amendments be concurred in now.

These amendments, which were made in committee this morning, are very simple and not contentious. So far as the name is concerned, since the company is to be a mutual company it was desired that the word "Mutual" appear in the name. In the bill as it was presented to the Senate the Company was described as "Desjardins Life Insurance Company," but at the request of those representing the company before the committee we amended the name to "Desjardins Mutual Life Assurance Company." In this connection, may I point out that the bill proposes to create a federal incorporation to take over the assets and the operations of a provincially incorporated company which has been carrying on business for about ten years and which also is a mutual insurance company.

Another change is made in a number of places in section 10 of the bill. This company, provincially operated, has a guarantee fund in the nature of a reserve which was contributed to by a great number of the caisses populaires in the province of Quebec. Section 10 uses the words "credit unions" possibly six or seven times. Since in the province of Quebec there is a distinction between the terms "credit unions" and "caisses populaires", and the latter term is well known and understood in that province, the company's representatives asked us in committee if wherever the words "credit unions" appear in section 10 we would add thereafter the words "or caisses populaires". We agreed to do this in order to make the matter absolutely clear.

In section 6 the word "before" has been substituted for "until", and the words "has been entered into" have been changed to "becomes effective". May I explain why this was done? The provincially incorporated company is operating and has assets. It is proposed to transfer those assets to this company which is seeking federal incorporation, but the federal authority, the Superintendent of Insurance, will not issue a certificate until the transfer agreement has become an effective agreement. The section at present reads as follows:

> The company shall not commence business until a certificate of registry has been granted to it under the provisions of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, but no such certificate shall be granted until an agreement has been entered into between the company and the provincial company as provided in section 10 of this act.

The committee proposes that the latter part of the section should read:

> —but no such certificate shall be granted before an agreement becomes effective between the company and the provincial company.

That change is proposed in recognition of the fact that there is a difference between the date on which the agreement is entered into and the effective date, which is the date when the transfer will be made. At the moment of transfer the federal company must be in possession of a certificate so that the provincial company may, with the approval of the provincial authority, make the transfer of assets. Possibly the section in its present form conveys all of that, but in order to be absolutely sure, and to satisfy particularly the provincial authority in this case, we propose this change in the language.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill, as amended, be read the third time?

Hon. Léon Méthot: Honourable senators, on behalf of the honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette), I move that the bill, as amended, be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS FINANCING AND GUARANTEE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the report of the committee on Bill C-61.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

> The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (C-61) intituled: "An Act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System for the period from the 1st day of January, 1959 to the 30th day of June, 1960, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 25, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Next sitting.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, may I ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if he is in a position at this time to say what the adjournment will be over the weekend?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, until a few minutes ago I thought the house would have to sit tomorrow. There is now some possibility that the debate on the Unemployment Insurance Bill will be completed early this afternoon, and that the Canadian Forces Superannuation Bill and the Veterans' Land Bill will receive second reading later at this sitting. In that event, I will ask that the house adjourn until Tuesday next at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. This plan is contingent upon the progress we make this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Thank you.

ATLANTIC CONGRESS

LONDON MEETING

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I thought it might be appropriate to make a short report on the work done at the Atlantic Congress in London, which began on June 5 last, and which the honourable senator from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson) and I attended as delegates from the Senate.

I should, of course, say that we had considerable support from another member of this chamber, namely, the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson), who is Honorary Life President of the NATO Parliamentary Association. Senator Robertson was very much in the limelight during the congress, because of his unique position as one of the co-founders of the NATO Parliamentary Association.

I should also like to mention the fact that the leader of the Canadian delegation, Mr. Harry F. Jones, M.P., and the secretary, Mr. Chester MacRae, M.P., did everything that could be done to provide conveniences, comforts and other amenities, not only during the conference, but while the delegation was en route to and from the congress.

It should be remembered that the NATO Parliamentary Association is an unofficial organization. It has no official status in the eyes of the governments of the countries which send representatives, nor has it any official status before the NATO council. I think, too, that none of the recommendations of the NATO Parliamentary Association have ever actually motivated any action taken by the NATO council.

In saying that, I do not think I detract from the value which the NATO Parliamentary Association has had for NATO and for the countries of the alliance. In particular, it has made it possible for parliamentarians to understand a good deal more about the treaty, its purpose and its function.

At the meeting of the NATO Parliamentary Association in 1957 it was proposed that in 1959, during the tenth anniversary year of the treaty, there should be held a general congress which would be known as the Atlantic Congress, and at the request of the British authorities the meeting was held in London. This meeting was attended by some 650 delegates from 15 signatory countries. Only one-third of the delegates were parliamentary delegates; two-thirds were non-parliamentary persons, selected by governments or otherwise from the citizenry of their country. Canada had 46 delegates, the United States 130, Germany, Italy and the United Kingdom 70 each, and the other countries had fewer delegates.

We were specifically told before we went that as delegates we would not be expected to voice the opinions or views of the governments of the countries from which we came. We were not instructed. There were no ministers in the delegation from Canada. I should say, however, that one of the members of the delegation was the Honourable Dana Wilgress who, as you know, has had a great experience at international meetings, and in particular he knows a great deal about the NATO organization. We also had the advantage of having the Honourable Jules Leger, the Canadian Ambassador to the NATO Council, come from Paris to be with us at the meetings.

I should be very remiss if I did not say how gracious, how helpful and how kind were the Honourable George Drew, Canadian High Commissioner in London, and Mrs. Drew, to the delegation as a whole and to individual delegates. In the same breath I would like to mention the kind and superb hospitality that was provided to the delegates from all countries by the British hosts.

Perhaps it would not be amiss if I said that the chairman of the British Hospitality Committee was a person who would interest the members of this chamber. She was Baroness Elliot of Harwood, one of the first group of peeresses to be appointed to the House of Lords. She is a delightful woman and was a fine chairman. She was also very much interested in the work the lady peeresses were doing in the House of Lords. I had a great deal of pleasure in telling her about the precedents that had been established for her and her associates by the work done in this chamber for nearly 30 years now by our own lady senators.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The conference was opened with a magnificent and impressive ceremony in Westminster Hall by Her Majesty the Queen. There was present as well the British Prime Minister, who spoke as only the Prime Minister of Britain can speak on such an occasion. He was accompanied that day by the Speaker of the House of Commons, and the Lord Chancellor who, as you know, is Speaker in the House of Lords.

The general sessions of the congress were held in Church House, which everyone knows is just beside the Abbey yard at Westminster. I think I should mention some of the distinguished people who attended our plenary session. In addition to the Prime Minister of Great Britain we heard a speech from the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Gaitskill, from the Secretary General of NATO, Mr. Paul Henri Spaak, from Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands, Mr. Helvaard Lange of Norway, Dr. Mordecai Johnson, President of Howard University in Washington, D.C., the Archbishop of York, and Mr. Lewis Douglas, who at one time was American Ambassador to the Court of St. James.

There were some very distinguished individuals in some of the national delegations. It would be difficult to mention all the people who were there and who worked hard, but they included men like Senators Kefauver and Javits from the United States, Mr. Guy Mollet from France, Earl Attlee from Great Britain, and the Honourable Mr. Lombardi from Italy.

The actual work of the congress was done in five different committees. Committee A dealt with spiritual and cultural matters; Committee B, with political matters; Committee C, with economic matters. All of these matters were concerned with relationships between the members of the NATO alliance. Committee E dealt with relationships between the NATO countries and the free or uncommitted countries of the world, and Committee F dealt with relationships between NATO countries and the countries of the communist bloc.

I do not think it is an over-simplification to say that the result of the congress was an attempt to explore the possibilities available to the NATO countries under the provisions of article II of the treaty which was signed in 1949 and which provided for co-operation in matters that were not exclusively military. And I think it is not a further over-simplification to say that the combined effect of all the resolutions passed by the Atlantic Congress was to fortify the report made in December 1956 by the well known Committee of Three, the report which dealt with non-military co-operation in NATO.

I would say that the effect of these resolutions was unmistakably enthusiastic and was a general approval of the work of, and the recommendations that had been made by, the Committee of Three some three years ago. There were differences, of course, within the delegations, and within the committees, on ways and means of accomplishing certain things which people thought should be done —on procedure and on methods and on detail; but I do think, in general, the work embodied in the resolutions was an endorsement of the idea of article II of the treaty, and of the report of the Committee of Three in 1956.

Perhaps I might be allowed a personal reference at this point. At one of the receptions which were held I had the privilege of meeting Mr. Robert Schuman. As honourable senators know, Mr. Schuman has been in the public life of France for some 30 years. I was not alone at this time, I was with other Canadians, when he said: "I am so pleased to see Canadians at this congress because Canada, more than any other country, is responsible for the inclusion in the treaty of the provisions of article II. Canada has a legitimate place at this congress, and Canada should take the lead in trying to promote the ideals and ideas behind article II."

I might say to honourable senators, if I may be allowed a personal reference again, that in the earlier days of the preparation of the conference I submitted a paper for consideration by the Spiritual and Cultural Committee. I did not serve on that committee; I served on Committee E, which dealt with relations with the communist bloc. But when I arrived in London I found that there had been other papers sent to that same committee, and the Rapporteur had made a report of these various papers. I found, somewhat to my personal dismay, that I was quoted along with the very eminent French historian, Danielou, and the Archbishop of York, as authority for propositions that should be considered by the Spiritual and Cultural Committee. I know that honourable senators have been quoted in as good company before, but it was a novel experience for myself.

Hon. Mr. Power: May I ask my honourable friend why they moved him over to the fighting committee later?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps the honourable gentleman can answer that question himself. My racial background may have had something to do with it.

The subcommittee to which I was allocated was one on which I was very proud, indeed, to serve. Its chairman was a British delegate, Richard Gould-Adams. He had been a member of the staff of the Economist several years ago. He had done his homework very well. He had organized the work of the committee, and it was a great pleasure to work under his chairmanship. I would be remiss if I did not say that the delegates on that subcommittee consisted of people from the United States, two members of the British House of Commons, a very fine French group and an excellent group from Germany, all of whom contributed materially to the work of that committee. The result was that the resolutions which were prepared were brief and clear. They went through the main committee without obstruction, and through the plenary session without any difficulty whatsoever.

One of the problems that bothered me—and I must say I was a complete newcomer to any kind of international meeting of this kind—was this: in the subcommittee when they were dealing with relations between NATO countries and the countries of the communist bloc they were talking about political relationships, economic relationships and social relationships, and at one stage I said:

> We in North America have not the communist problem in our domestic, every-day life which you have. But what we see is an ever-increasing rise in our defence costs. We have higher tax levels and budgetary deficits. All of these create problems for our people and our country. We wonder whether this high level of defence expenditure is to be maintained. In other words, do these cultural and economic and other relationships you want to have with the Iron Curtain countries involve a reduction in defence effort?

Individually, the members of the national delegations rose and said they were expressing the views of their own people, and of their own governments. They said, that the military strength of NATO must be maintained if the security of the West is to be assured. This was not an easy kind of statement for them to make. They said that ten years ago the reason for establishing NATO was to establish a strength from which we could negotiate. They felt it would be fatal to the countries of the West if that strength were allowed to be weakened now. I might say that General Norstad, NATO Commander in Europe, also addressed the congress, and he spoke very encouragingly about the kind of strength the West now possesses.

Why did this conference meet? Why did we want to develop our economic strength? I think it fair to say that the reason lies in the declaration of economic warfare Mr. Khrushchev has laid down many times. I do not propose to elaborate on this, because I spoke about it on a previous occasion in the Senate when I discussed the establishment of the Common Market in Europe.

A bloc development in trading patterns such as the establishment of the Common Market, and the proposals made at the recent Stockholm meeting in which a free trade area was discussed, and the recent meeting in Montreal between legislators of Canada and of the United States, if I read the press rightly, all seem to indicate a growing desire on the part of Western countries that we should not only be strong militarily but we should also have strong economies with which to face the leaders behind the Iron Curtain. The Atlantic Congress recognized that, in the economic sphere, bloc trading facilities can strengthen the economy of areas—they are good things, although they may create economic rivalry as between blocs, which can be detrimental to the free flow of trade between different parts of the West and, indeed, between different parts of the world. The report of the Committee of Three was very clear on this point. I would say that the work of the congress was to support the recommendations contained in that report.

If economic co-operation is to be developed in the West—if trade is to be freer—the political cohesion between the NATO countries should be great. NATO can be an instrument not only for the establishment and promotion of economic co-operation, but it can also set up the means, through some agency of its own choice, for political co-operation.

I think, however, that the resolutions, and the recommendations of the Moral and Spiritual Committee were the basic ones. They explain the basic meaning and purpose of the Western alliance. Those resolutions spoke of the need to recognize the objectivity of the spiritual values which underline Western civilization—a civilization which was developed in the Mediterranean Basin originally, which is derived from Greece and Rome, with the monotheism of Israel, and which has been moulded by the Christian ethic—a civilization which has established a set of values—and values valid not only for the West, but valid also for the people of Africa, the uncommitted people of Asia with their mysticism, and valid also, if they will only be able to embrace them, for the peoples behind the Iron Curtain.

They made it clear, in that committee, that the choice is one between that philosophy and the philosophy of Marx, of Engels—of dialectic materialism. What we have in the West is a system, but it is more than a system. Beneath it is an ethic, the Christian code of morality, and in its survival lies the hope for peace and for security in the world. The means proposed at the congress to achieve these results was to set up certain agencies within NATO. There was some dispute between committees at the congress as to the most appropriate agencies needed. I took advantage on the last day to address the plenary session on this point. I said that the NATO organization is an unofficial organization, an advisory organization, and that there is no need for any Government or for NATO itself to act upon the recommendations which the Atlantic Congress might bring forth. But I did say that governments can choose what they like from the recommendations which the congress made. Some of the proposals may overlap. Those not fully appropriate will be eliminated. But it is for the people who were at the congress to make their views known in their own countries and to their governments.

The Secretary-General of NATO, Mr. Paul Henri Spaak, addressed the congress. I would hope that Mr. Spaak would find it possible to take these recommendations, which support the views of the Committee of Three, and which in turn were based upon article 2 of the treaty, and bring them officially to the notice of the NATO council. NATO can do much to strengthen the political and economic fabric of the West—it can do much to promote the spiritual ideals of the West—and if it does so effectively the West will prevail, and so too will peace.

The work of the congress was intense. A great deal of preparation is needed for this kind of conference. I would suggest there might be some help in having continuity of membership from this chamber and elsewhere. I do not say this in the idea that I personally should be sent to other such meetings. I do hope, however, that the work that I was able to do was worthy of the ideals of this chamber.

PRESS REPORT

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. I have in my hand a newspaper editorial that was published on December 18, 1957. That is quite a long time ago, but I did not take cognizance of this until recently. The reason I rise on this question of privilege today is that the Unemployment Insurance Bill is about to be discussed, and if you will allow me I will put my case before the house. I very seldom rise on a question of privilege, for my speeches are quite different here from what they were in the House of Commons. One mellows with age. My case is that a newspaper may use abusive language about anyone without causing any damage. For instance, this article about my humble self uses these terms:

—irritating gadfly . . . wordy fellow . . . stupid . . . gamut of nonsense . . . asinine comments . . . silly nonsense—

This is not the reason why I rise on the question of privilege. What I find really offensive are a few sentences to which I object very strongly, in view of the discussion that is going to take place in this house. One may be for the bill, one may be against the bill; one may speak, one may not speak; but it is simply unjust to write about anyone such a statement as appeared in The Tribune, of Campbellton, New Brunswick, on December 18, 1957, after the Unemployment Insurance Act was discussed in this house. I did not take part in the discussion; I listened to the speeches, but I did not say anything. Yet here is what was written in that paper—and I read it as a warning to the press for the protection of my colleagues in this chamber. Referring to myself, it says:

He doesn't like the National Museum; he doesn't like the way the Conservatives are trying to help out the unemployed of the country by making amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. He would rather sit in his ivory tower and watch the unemployed working men of the country starve.

Well, honourable colleagues, this I found contemptible. I will give the names of the two publishers of the paper, in order that other publishers who have self respect may put them on the black list. Their names are Roderick M. Raymond and L. G. Seely, co-publishers. They are contemptible men, they have no respect for truth, they are unjust, and they deserve to be told once and for all what honest citizens may think of them.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, June 30, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Emerson for the second reading of Bill C-43, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, there is probably no act on our statute books that by its nature is more difficult to administer fairly, equitably and in the interests of the taxpayers of this country than the Unemployment Insurance Act, and therefore the amendments proposed by the sponsor, the honourable senator from Saint John-Albert (Hon. Mr. Emerson), certainly come into the category of important amendments. The sponsor of the bill spoke with considerable clarity in his explanation of the amendments proposed. I regret, as I am sure the house does, that he did not speak with equal clarity when he gave reasons for supporting the changes proposed. He enumerated five major changes in the legislation. Without intending to delay the work of the house unduly, I should like to refer briefly to some of these amendments.

The first amendment he mentioned was that the benefit rates and the allowable earnings are revised upward; that is, the benefits the insured will draw if he enters upon a period of unemployment will be increased, and he is permitted also to increase his subsidiary earnings without imperilling his benefits from the insurance fund. The insurance benefits are substantially increased, as are also the allowable earnings. I thought the reason given by the honourable senator for the latter rather strange. His explanation, as appears in Hansard at page 902, is stated in the following words:

Furthermore, since the allowable earnings idea was first incorporated in the act, in 1955, experience has shown that the amount of earnings allowed should be higher if the claimant is to have adequate incentive to take on casual work.

In other words, if you raise the benefits, the claimant or the unemployed individual will be more eager to take on supplementary work or casual work. Well, in the light of human experience I should think that almost the opposite would be the case. However, that is the explanation given.

As I have said, this act is a difficult act to administer. I will make this further statement—based, let me say at once, not on precise evidence that could be reported to this house, but on the general view one often hears expressed. There is no piece of legislation more abused in its administration than the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Is it the abuse of the administration or the abuse by recipients that you mean?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Well, of course, abuse by recipients. Who else could abuse it? Those who administer it could not very well abuse it.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: But you referred to its administration.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: If the administration is lax the recipient may be encouraged to abuse it. But what I was endeavouring to point out earlier was that because of its very nature this act is a very difficult act to administer justly and equitably to all concerned.

Now, as to the change in the benefit rates, let me give an example. Take the case of a carpenter who, in 1955, was earning $60 a week. The maximum benefit that he could get under the fund was $30 a week, but he was permitted to earn, in casual work, $13 a week. In other words, if he could not find work as a carpenter he could draw $30 a week and he could go out hoeing potatoes or cutting grass or do any subsidiary work and earn up to $13 a week without forfeiting his benefits. That gave him a total of $43 a week, or slightly over 71 per cent of his customary earnings as a carpenter.

Under the revision proposed in this bill the benefits are increased; and the reason given by the honourable senator who sponsored the bill is that wages have advanced since then and the carpenter now may be getting $70 a week. His benefits under this amending legislation will be $36 a week if he loses his employment as a carpenter, and he is permitted to earn subsidiary benefits of $18 a week, that is, by cutting grass, hoeing potatoes, or any other casual labour that he cares to undertake. This combination of benefits and his earnings from casual work will give him $54 a week before his benefits are put in jeopardy, and that is equal to 77 per cent of the weekly wage he received as a carpenter. In other words, under this legislation we are increasing substantially the range of benefits to the people who find themselves in unemployment.

That brings me to another point. The principle of insurance against employment is a sound principle, but have we not tended in recent years, and much more than ever in the last two years, to combine unemployment insurance with unemployment relief? The two should be kept absolutely and positively separate and distinct.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I will give another illustration. Take a railway train conductor who retires at the age of 65. Since he is under a pension in virtue of his railway employment, he can commence drawing a pension from the railway company with which he served. But, he registers for employment. His work with the railway has been terminated under his contract of labour with the railway, but he still feels rather vigorous and immediately registers with the commission for new work. What work could be found for him? Perhaps something of a clerical nature, but no one wishes to employ in a clerical capacity a man who has reached 65 years, so that avenue is pretty well closed to him. He cannot qualify as, for instance, a plumber. He might qualify as a day labourer, but that is not the kind of employment he has been accustomed to. So the Unemployment Insurance Commission, after studying his case for some time, agrees he has a claim to benefits and he commences to draw them.

In that very aspect of the whole nature of the administration of this act, it seems to me, is one of the weaknesses of it. I would venture to say this to the house, that no one who is retired on a pension from a corporation, bank, or any other organization should be entitled to draw unemployment insurance for the full period that he might be able to get it, unless it could be demonstrated beyond peradventure that he was in sore need of help. Otherwise you will have this fund drained away, week after week, and you have a complete negation, or so it seems to me, of the insurance principle.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? Does he advocate the means test?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: No. I have said nothing about a means test, other than this, that after a man retires on a pension from his normal work he should not be eligible for benefits, excepting in very extraordinary circumstances—even this could be questioned—and I will give the house one reason for it. On the insurance principle I insure my house for three years. Over that period I pay premiums of, say, $30 or $40, and at the end of the three years I change my residence. It would be just as sensible for me to go to the insurance company and say to it, "I have paid you $40 over the past three years for insurance, I have made no claims upon you, and therefore I want my payments back." No insurance principle on earth could live under that condition. My point is that when people pay into the Unemployment Insurance Fund there should be an appreciation on their part of what is involved in their doing so.

The bill before us extends the benefit period from 36 weeks to 52 weeks for the employee who has paid into the fund the amount which the act requires him to pay. I cannot see how such a provision will not substantially increase the claims on the fund and the payments that will have to be made out of it. That is of course recognized in the legislation; the employers and employees will have their contributions increased by 30 per cent, as I think the honourable gentleman who sponsored the bill told us in his explanation. These contributions may vary as between certain categories but, for the purpose of consideration here, we may say the increase will be about 30 per cent.

As I recall the figures given in the report of the commission at the end of the last calendar year, the number of workers in all categories then insured was about 4 million. I should think that of that 4 million it might reasonably be estimated that at least 75 per cent were in very little danger of unemployment. For example, they might be senior employees in transportation, operators of city buses, railway trains, and the like; they could be employees of banks. It is difficult to envisage employees of these organizations being laid off, except perhaps the most junior employees. So, of the whole range of employment in Canada, probably 75 per cent of those who make contributions to the fund will not, in the normal expectation, draw anything from it. But if they register for unemployment on their retirement at 65 years of age, and manage to impress the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Fund that they are entitled to insurance benefits, they may get them. This surely was not the intention when the legislation was first put upon our statute books.

Now what happens under this measure? So far as the 75 per cent of the contributors are concerned, their contributions are increased by 30 per cent.

Here is another interesting point—at least, it is clear to me from what I have been able to learn. These amendments are not popular with labour.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I have yet to hear words from any leaders of labour—though they may have been said and I missed them—commending this legislation. I think the reason for the absence of that commendation is obvious, because the overwhelming majority of workers in all classes of employment who are paying into this fund know that their jobs are pretty secure and they are not likely to be in a position where they will have to call upon it. But these people are aware of the abuses that may creep into the administration of the fund. For instance, they may see a railway conductor—I am using him as an illustration again—who lives in, say, Calgary or Medicine Hat, and retires at the age of 65. He makes application and manages to get accepted for unemployment insurance benefits. That fact becomes known to all those with whom he has been working, and also to others who are still paying into the fund. They just cannot quite understand why their contributions should be increased now in order to pay unemployment benefits to a person who is retired on a pension of perhaps $200 to $250 a month. They just don't understand it.

There is another point that should be raised. The contributions of employers are increased equally with those of employees. When the act was first put on our statute books it provided that the employee and employer would each contribute 40 per cent, and the Government would contribute 20 per cent, and in addition it would bear all administrative expense of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

Before I deal with the effect on employers, it might be of interest to the house if I gave some information as to the contributions required from the Government, or the taxpayers, of this country.

While the taxpayers are the people who put up the money, the Government is the agency through which it is distributed. The estimated cost of administration in the present fiscal year is in excess of $35 million. This is for the administrative costs of the commission, for the maintenance of its offices, not only in Ottawa, but elsewhere throughout the country.

In addition, the statutory contribution the Government will make covering the 20 per cent of its share of the fund will be $39,500,000. In other words, the total expense that has to be voted is over $74,750,000, and that, it is interesting to note, is just about $2 million in excess of what it was last year.

I want to deal for a moment or two with the effect upon employers. I think it is correct to say that the large employers of labour in this country, outside the railways, are found mainly in our exporting industries, such as the pulp and paper industry, the base metal industry and agriculture, although agriculture does not employ so very much labour. Let us assume that a company in the exporting business, such as a pulp and paper company, earns $20 million a year gross profit. It may employ from 6,000 to 8,000 people, each of whom draw a good yearly wage. If that company's gross profits are $20 million, its tax is increased this year by the provisions of the recent budget by 3 per cent—1 per cent for old age security and 2 per cent for general purposes. That will put an additional tax burden of $600,000 on the company. If it employs, say, 6,000 people, then, on a rough estimate, I would say that the additional contributions it will be required to make under the amendments that we are considering now will be of the order of $125,000. So its expenses will be increased by $700,000 to $750,000.

Ordinarily, if this had been a few years ago, when demand was high, it would not have been so serious as it is today, but it is common knowledge that our export industries now are getting more and more into a difficult position through increasing competition from abroad. We have—and I am not going into any explanation of the reasons for it—reached a pretty high-cost economy in this country, and these companies engaged in the exporting business are concerned about their markets. Of course, the great need of this country is markets, and the companies are rightly concerned. The pulp and paper people are facing stronger competition in the markets outside Canada where they normally sell their products, than they have had at any time in the last 20 years. The base metal producers—the producers of copper, zinc, lead, nickel and uranium—if you wish to include it as a base metal—are facing the keenest kind of competition in the markets that they have normally had in the past. During only the past ten days the price of copper has been reduced by 1½ cents a pound.

Where does the competition come from? In pulp and paper it is coming from the Scandinavian countries, and there are signs of its coming also from Russia. Let us not make any mistake about it. These Scandinavians and Russians are just as competent to produce as we are in Canada; they are just as conscious of the need of having the very best equipment to carry on their operations, and they are able to invade markets which we normally have filled, because their costs are much lower than ours.

Then there is grain. We all know the position we are in, particularly with respect to our surpluses of wheat which in the past we have normally sold in the markets of the world, and we are facing competition there such as we have never faced before.

Now, I do hope I am wrong, but if my reasoning is not at fault these big exporting industries are going to find themselves in increasing trouble in regard to markets as the months go by, assuming that we maintain the uneasy peace in the world that we have today. If they do, will not unemployment commence to rise as workers are laid off and the effects are carried to the collateral industries? Unless we can maintain our vital foreign markets we are going to be placed in a position, I suggest, of very considerable difficulty. At a time like the present, when we are in this situation, it is very difficult to justify the increased imposts we are putting on these companies upon which so much of our economy vitally depends, and not only our economy but our employment figures as well.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: What is your solution? Where are you going to get the money?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: My solution, so far as this bill is concerned, would be to reject it, to reject these amendments in their entirety.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Then, from where would you get the money to take care of unemployment?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I would make another suggestion. I think the administration could be tightened up. My honourable friend waves his hand with—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That would save some money, but it would not provide the amount you are talking about.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: No, but let us get down to that. Let us cut out the people who draw unemployment insurance when they retire on pension at 65 years of age.

Hon. Mr. Horner: And many others.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Yes, and perhaps many others, as the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) says. One of the difficulties in discussing this bill adequately is that we have not complete information on it. Certainly the bill should go to committee, but I am not pledging myself to support it when it comes back to this house for third reading.

The fund has been depleted from a maximum of nearly $900 million in 1954 to approximately $500 million at the present time. My contention is that these amendments, with the extension of the benefits, will not substantially improve the position of the fund if we get into any serious unemployment situation, and we have no guarantee that we may not at some future date, perhaps not too far away, have a return of rather difficult conditions in this country. I have always believed that when things are prosperous and apparently going well, that is the time to make preperation for a period when things may not be quite so well. That is the essence of common sense, but I do not see that applied in this measure, for we are not only increasing the benefits, we are extending them to more people. I realize that the contributions are being increased, but we have yet to see by actual experience what the consequences of this legislation will be. For this reason I feel it is really a doubtful and unwise piece of legislation. It could well be that within a few years this fund would be insolvent, despite additional sources of revenue which the Government expects will be derived as a result of these amendments. What will happen then?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: My honourable friend is in a pessimistic mood today.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: No, I can assure the honourable Leader of the Government that I am not.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: A realistic mood.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Yes, I try in these matters to be a realist. I am not in this respect criticizing the present Government. I have been a critic in this house more than once of the spending of the late Government, but I want to say that we cannot go on spending and spending. We should not go on with deficits just with a rosy expectation that things this year are going to be better than they were last year, and so on. I do not believe in the Coué philosophy. Honourable senators may recall that some 35 or 40 years ago a certain Professor Coué held the theory that if an individual only believed that every day in every way he was getting better and better, everything would be well with him. I do not believe that sort of nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Who does?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I would like to put this question to the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine): If my pessimism unhappily should prove to be partially right, and if this fund should be drawn down, as it well might be, what will happen then?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: What is my honourable friend going to do about it? What has he got to suggest?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I have made some suggestions.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: What are they?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I would reject this bill, for one thing. If the revenues of the Minister of Finance fall a bit—and we know now he is in difficulty in the matter of borrowing from the public on long-term bonds—I say to the house that we have a right and a duty to consider these matters fully. The honourable leader asks me what my remedy is. I might reply that it is not my place to find a remedy and that the responsibility is that of the Government and of himself as Leader of the Government party in this house. It is our duty to point out the possible consequences that may develop from this legislation. I say that this house will fail in its responsibility if it does not weigh all these factors. We are putting an additional burden on our export industries and making it more difficult for them to compete in world markets. We are making it more likely that they will find rising unemployment in their ranks. We have put an additional burden, another 30 per cent, on the workers in these industries, and by doing so perhaps we will stir them to seek further wage increases. These are the positive results of this bill, and as far as I am concerned I am against the measure.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I have just a few words to say, but I am not going to apologize for taking the time of the house, for I consider this unemployment insurance legislation to be extremely important to the industrial life of the nation.

The honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) has made another interesting speech. He always says something worth while. Those of us who are engaged in industry are well aware of what he said about weaknesses in connection with the administration of this act. but those who are not in close contact with industry and employment probably do not realize just what is taking place in industry all across the country. I want to give full support to what the honourable gentleman from Churchill said about the competition Canadian exporters are facing today. My honourable colleague who introduced this bill (Hon. Mr. Emerson) knows how important the lumbering industry is to our little province of New Brunswick. He knows just how many of our people are dependent upon it. Perhaps our lumbering industry is a humble one when compared with the pulp and paper and base metal industries, but it is vitally important to our province. As a lumber exporter whose business is entirely dependent upon our export market to the United Kingdom, I would point out that this year, 1959, our prices have dropped by nearly $10 per thousand feet. This wipes out all profit and returns less than costs. This condition has resulted from competition with Scandinavian lumber. Mention has been made of Scandinavian pulp and paper, but in the early months of 1959 competition from Finland and Russia caused a sudden drop in the price of our lumber of something like 8 pounds per standard, a standard being 1,980 superficial feet. At present exchange rates and freight costs this means we are obliged to accept about $8 to $10 less per thousand feet this year than in 1958. This has a very serious effect on the economy of New Brunswick. It supports entirely what the honourable senator from Churchill said as to the burden which this measure would put upon exporters, and that is a very important matter to Canada.

However, honourable senators, I rose particularly to compliment my honourable friend the senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) on the excellent contribution he made to this debate last Tuesday. I would urge those honourable members who were not present in the house at that time to read that speech. The honourable senator emphasized how far we have got off the track from the original thinking and planning when the Unemployment Insurance Act was first passed by Parliament. That legislation was adopted to ease a certain situation. It was a most worthy measure, and we all applauded it. But, as the honourable senator pointed out, it has been abused, and it is being used for an entirely different purpose today than that for which it was created. Instead of being used to help over a very difficult period by providing some relief to the worker whose job has ended, until another job is available, it has taken on an entirely different role in the industrial life of this country, and is looked upon as a pillar upon which to lean. In other words, it is used as an end rather than as a means.

My honourable friend the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) asked the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) today for a suggestion as to what can be done about this. Well, certainly we have got to begin to do something about it, for we all know how important unemployment insurance is in our communities. Indeed, what in the world would we do without it today in Canada? Those of us who live in small communities have some idea of the part unemployment insurance plays in keeping the ball rolling, so naturally we ask what are we going to do about it. Are we going to allow ourselves to drift and get farther away from the original purpose of the legislation? My suggestion to the honourable leader is that we should adopt the recommendation made by the executive committee of the Chamber of Commerce in its submission to the Industrial Relations Committee of the House of Commons, in which were pointed out several of the things that have been mentioned here this afternoon and which were mentioned last Tuesday by the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina The executive committee of the Chamber of Commerce recommended very strongly the urgency for and desirability of appointment of a representative commission of inquiry to examine the operations of the act as to the sources of drain, coverage and financing. The suggestion that I make to the honourable leader is that we carry out that recommendation, in order to get back on the track which we have left during the past few years.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Emerson, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

CANADIAN FORCES SUPERANNUATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. George S. White moved the second reading of Bill C-62, respecting the superannuation of members of the Canadian Forces.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill, which relates to an act entitled Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, is to revise and re-enact Part V of the Defence Services Pension Act. Part II of the bill contains some clauses making a few minor amendments to Parts I to IV of the Defence Services Pension Act, but does not make any material alterations to those parts.

Parts I to IV of the Defence Services Pension Act applies only to persons who were enrolled in the regular forces prior to March 31, 1946. Since very few officers and men were enrolled in the regular forces between the outbreak of World War II and the fall of 1946, in the main those parts only apply to pre-war officers and men of the regular forces. Part V of the act came into force on August 31, 1946, and applies to all officers and men enrolled in the regular forces since that date. It also covers those officers and men who were under Parts I to IV and who, in accordance with the provisions of Part V, elected to come under Part V.

Whilst there are differences between the pension scheme under Parts I to IV and Part V, they are, nevertheless, basically similar. The principal difference is that under Parts I to IV, officers contribute at the rate of 5 per cent instead of 6 per cent of their pay and allowances as is the case under Part V, and men do not contribute under Parts I to IV but are required to make the same contribution of 6 per cent of their pay and allowances under Part V as in the case of officers. However, the families of men who are under Parts I to IV of the act have no protection upon the death of their husbands, whereas under the contributory scheme of Part V their families receive the same benefits as would the families of officers. Under both pension schemes the amount of the pension is one-fiftieth of average pay and allowances for each year of service. The average of pay and allowances under Parts I to IV is based on the last three years of service, while that under Part V is based on the average of the last six years.

As I have stated, the proposed bill leaves Parts I to IV of the Defence Services Pension Act substantially unchanged save for a few minor amendments. Part V, however, will be repealed and replaced by the proposed new act. In other words, all officers and men now under Part V of the Defence Services Pension Act will automatically become contributors under the new act. All of the rights which they now have under Part V will be preserved and they will also be able to take advantage of certain benefits contained in the new act. The principal purpose of the act is to correct certain anomalies, simplify the administration of the pension scheme and bring the regular forces pension plan into greater conformity with the Public Service Superannuation Act. In all important respects it will be the same as the proposed new R.C.M.P. Superannuation Act.

While retaining the basic pension scheme of Part V of the Defence Services Pension Act, the act does provide for the following important changes:

(a) Men who are granted commissions for a fixed term of service will cease to be contributors under the act; they will receive a gratuity under the act for their service as a man and a gratuity under deferred pay regulations in respect of their commissioned time. This will obviate the payment of pensions to relatively young men.

(b) Officers who are permitted to retire voluntarily and have 25 years regular force service will be eligible to receive a pension reduced by 5 per cent for each year under their retirement age.

(c) The maximum benefits payable to widows and children will be raised to those contained in the P.S.S.A., i.e., from a maximum of 75 per cent of the contributor's pension to 90 per cent.

(d) Only a return of contributions will be payable, except in the case of death or disability of the contributor, where he has served three years or less in the regular forces.

(e) Members of the forces to whom Parts I to IV of the present act now apply will be given one year in which to elect to come under the new statute. This will permit men under Parts I to IV to obtain protection for their families.

Honourable senators, if this bill is given second reading I will move that it be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee, where you will find an opportunity of hearing from the very capable officers of the department the answers to any technical or other questions that you may wish to ask.

Hon. C. G. Power: Honourable senators, it is not my purpose to discuss the details of this legislation. As was pointed out by my honourable friend from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) in referring to the Public Service Superannuation Act a few days ago, it would take all the knowledge and the ability of a Philadelphia lawyer to understand that act and the Civil Service Superannuation Act. I should like to say to honourable senators that it will take all the ingenuity of barrack-room lawyers or sea lawyers—or, if the air force ever develops such types as ground attorneys or Bomarc barristers, it will take people of that ilk—to understand all the details of a bill of this character. But perhaps there is a matter of practice or regulation or policy to which it might be desirable to draw the attention of the Senate.

The Defence Services Pension Act provides for pensions after a comparatively short period of service and provides in many instances that persons benefiting by it may be retired at a comparatively early age. There are instances of men between the ages of 45 to 50 being retired with pensions approximating $6,000 to $7,000 a year, at a time when they have an opportunity of a very fruitful career before them. They might even become senators and have before them 35 years of very useful service to the community. That has been a ground of criticism of these national defence superannuation plans.

Some time ago, with all the righteousness at my disposal and with a zeal which I can only compare to that of my honourable friend from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) when he is seeking to trace down elusive items in the estimates in order to decrease expenditures, I was discussing this particular matter with a friend of mine and pointing out to him that this practice of retiring men at an early age was very extravagant and much to be condemned. I was quite vigorous about it, and I wanted to know who the blessed idiot was who had brought this policy in. "Well," he said, "the best thing you can possibly do is to ask him." I asked, "Where will I find him?" He replied: "You had better ask yourself. You are the man who brought in this early retirement policy."

It has been the habit and custom of some of our senators to describe their early hardships and how they obtained success by hard work, struggling with the icy snows of the Prairies or overcoming difficulties in the woods of the Ottawa Valley and elsewhere, but few senators have ever made of this illustrious body a sort of confessional of their sins of commission in their earlier days. However, having become convinced that I was to some extent responsible for this very evil policy, I looked up Hansard to see what I had to say on the subject, and I find that on February 10, 1944 I was asked in the Commons, by a member there, this question:

In view of the recently reported retirement of a large number of high-ranking officers of the Royal Canadian Air Force, has he any statement to make to the house?

If I may be pardoned for reading one of my own speeches, this is what I said:

Mr. Power: My hon. friend was good enough to give me notice of the question. In reply I may say that there is a definite retirement policy in the Royal Canadian Air Force.

When the war broke out the R.C.A.F. was a small organization. It comprised a number of excellent officers who had done magnificent service in the last war. These men were the backbone of the R.C.A.F. development and expansion. The principal job of the R.C.A.F. during the first years of the war was the organization, development, expansion and administration of the air training plan. The plan has produced results and dividends far surpassing our own expectations and frustrating those of our enemies.

These officers, who gave of their time and experience to bring about those results, though comparatively young in years, were mainly too old to take an active operational part in this war. Besides, their experience, their prestige, their authority, made it necessary to retain them here or elsewhere in non-operational duties.

The rapid expansion of the joint air training plan, the western hemisphere operations and the overseas air force brought increased responsibilities and with these accelerated promotion. There are now many officers of comparatively high rank in our forces who have not seen operational service. They could not. But rapid promotion brings the penalty of early retirement, otherwise there would be stagnation at the top. The air war and the air force must be dynamic, not static.

The air training plan has reached its peak of development. From now on there will be contraction rather than expansion. The favourable war situation has brought about a shifting and contraction of our defensive home war establishments.

If all these men were retained in their positions or promoted right up to their full retiring age we might be faced with a thick ceiling, a bottle-neck at the top, comprised entirely of men who, through no fault of their own, have seen no active flying service overseas in this war. Now, after five years of war, we have at our disposal, overseas especially some younger men who have had actual fighting experience against the enemy in this war. More and more we are calling on overseas headquarters to send these men back to us.

If we are to encourage the initiative, the ambition of these young men, we must show them that there is room at the top, that the ceiling is not closing in, but that the upward path will be made clear for them.

This is the policy. There is no stigma, no reproach in retirement, but there is ruthless necessity if the R.C.A.F. is to continue during the war and after to be the young, virile, dynamic force which I am sure all Canada wishes it to be and has a right to expect from it in return for the sacrifices made on its behalf.

Mr. Sinclair:—

That is the Honourable James Sinclair.

—I wish to commend the minister for that answer.

So, Mr. Sinclair is guilty too.

The point I wish to make is, if there was some justification under the circumstances at that time—and I am not claiming there was—I cannot be sure that the same justification exists today. There was then a natural desire to reward, if you like, or to encourage these young men who had done the actual fighting overseas, to see to it that they had a chance to fulfil their ambition to get to the top. We were then faced with the prospect that men in their late forties and early fifties who occupied high positions in the air force would stay at the top for the next ten to twenty years, unless something was done about it.

But today the situation has changed. I refer to the armed services generally when I say that the positions occupied—speaking largely of officers—are of a purely administrative nature, and the work done is of a civilian character. It is difficult to understand why a man of 45 or 50 years of age, who is engaged in, say, a supply branch or personnel branch, should be forcibly retired at that age, and given a Government guarantee of a very substantial pension. This, it seems to me, is something that should be looked into by the Government. The policy is there, and I would doubt if a committee can do much about it. But as a matter of policy it should be looked into.

I recall cases that came to my attention immediately after the war where, by reason of the rapid acceleration and expansion of the air force, comparatively young men were entitled to receive on retirement pensions of twice the amount of the salaries they were getting when war broke out in 1939. That kind of thing happened, and I presume is to a certain extent happening now. It does seem a bit extraordinary that a man in his early or middle forties should retire after 20 years of service in the army, having had the benefit of the experience given him while in the service. For instance, an accountant who has served in that capacity in one of the armed forces, can on retirement draw a pension of, let us say, $5,000 a year, and immediately go into a good firm of accountants where he can earn a substantial remuneration, largely because of the education and experience he had while in the armed service.

According to my understanding, the Public Service Superannuation Act requires that a man must reach the age of 65 before he is entitled to enjoy pension benefits.

Honourable senators, I am not making an issue of this question, but I am pointing to present practices and regulations which I think should be inquired into.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. White, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

VETERANS' LAND BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. George S. White moved the second reading of Bill C-50, to amend the Veterans' Land Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a bill to amend the Veterans' Land Act, a piece of legislation which I am sure is well known to all honourable senators.

The settlement of veterans on land has been a form of rehabilitation used in this country on a number of occasions. An act somewhat similar to the present act was put into force after the First World War. The success of that measure was not all that was expected.

The present act, I think you will agree, has been outstandingly successful in enabling a large number of veterans to be rehabilitated as farmers. As the years have gone on it has become apparent that the original act might, with advantage, be further amended to enable veterans not primarily interested in farming and related occupations to secure assistance both financial and technical in the building of their homes.

In 1954, the present Part II of the act was added to enable the provision of home construction assistance. At the same time, it was recognized that price increases, which tended to make more difficult the acquisition of economical units of land were hampering, in some measure, the full benefit of the act.

In order to permit additional loans to full-time veteran farmers, the provisions of the act were extended by the addition of what is now Part III, which permits loans beyond those originally contemplated where additional amounts are required by veterans to extend or improve their properties in order to make them economically sound farm units

In addition to the proposed major change in the act, a number of lesser amendments, including some of an administrative nature, have also been put forward. These amendments propose to relate more closely the conditions with respect to the granting of farm improvement assistance under Part III of the act with respect to the maximum loan and the period of time for repayment, and will correspond more or less with the provisions of the Canadian Farm Loan Act.

The major amendment would allow a maximum loan under Part III of $20,000, less any outstanding indebtedness under Part I. The importance of this change is realized when one considers that the maximum Part III loan at present is $3,000. This much higher loan should enable a full-time veteran farmer to develop a well established enterprise under the act to one of sound economic proportions. The proposal to extend the repayment period to 30 years from the present 25-year maximum is consequent on the large increase in the total loan.

The purposes for which a loan under Part III may be used are extended by the proposed amendments to include the purchase of live stock and equipment and the refinancing of existing indebtedness.

There is also a proposal to increase the ratio of the loan to the security from the present 66⅔ per cent of the value of the real property to 75 per cent of the appraised value of the total security, including, as well as land and buildings, the value of basic herd live stock and farm equipment, although there are limitations on the percentage applicable to the latter two categories.

Perhaps I should point out that veteran farmers who are settled under this act have had, and will continue to have at their disposal, free of charge, the services of the very highly trained staff of the Veterans' Land Administration. The assistance provided by the advisers ensures that the veterans' credit needs are accurately assessed before any loan is made.

During the latter part of 1957 and 1958 the Veterans' Land Administration conducted a very intensive individual survey of progress made and future credit requirements among a cross-section of 5,000 full-time farmer settlers. The survey showed that the net worth of these V.L.A. farmers, including their conditional grant as if it had been earned, was $5,376 at the time of settlement, and that this had increased during an average of nine years since settlement to $13,486, or by approximately $900 a year. This survey of the cross-section of 5,000 V.L.A. farmers would indicate that the total credit requirements of the 22,000 farmers remaining after 8,000 had paid up and taken title, would be as follows:

Approximately	20%	require	under $5,000
"	30 "	"	$5,000 to $10,000
"	30 "	"	$10,000 to $15,000
"	14 "	"	$15,000 to $20,000
"	5 "	"	$20,000 to $25,000
"	1 "	"	over $25,000

These figures include outstanding balances owing to the director averaging $2,219 and outside debts averaging $857, of which all of the former and most of the latter would be included in the $20,000 maximum of this bill which provides for the consolidation of debts.

Since Part III was added to the act in 1954, only 4,257 full-time farmers have as yet taken advantage of this opportunity to secure additional loans, the total additional loans to those farmers being $8,158,104. We believe that this small number is due to the fact that $3,000 is not nearly enough to buy a good parcel of farm land as it comes on the market. Furthermore, the loan is not now available for live stock and equipment, but must be used for the purchase of land and the making of improvements. The Veterans' Land Administration estimate all new full-time farmer settlement at an average of 500 over the next four years, or 2,000 in all. By that time many more will have taken title.

The account I have just given refers particularly to full-time veteran farmers. There is, in addition, a further proposal in this bill that would increase the maximum loan available under Part III to small holders and commercial fishermen from $1,400, as at present, to $3,000. There is a proviso that the veteran will contribute $1 for each $3 of loan rather than the present ratio of $1 for each $2 advanced.

When Part II of the act came into force in 1954 it was provided that the director could advance $8,000 on behalf of an eligible veteran for the construction of his home. Since that limit was set the cost of land and construction has continued to increase. The present limitation has been found in a number of instances to have caused veterans to defer plans for building their homes. This bill, accordingly, proposes that the maximum amount that the director may advance under Part II be increased from $8,000 to $10,000. Honourable senators will remember that they recently considered an amendment to the War Service Grants Act which extended the period during which re-establishment credit would be made available to veterans. Benefits under the Veterans' Land Act and re-establishment credit are considered as alternative rehabilitation benefits. It is accordingly considered appropriate that the period during which a veteran may obtain a certificate of qualification under Part I of this act be the same as the period within which he may use his credits. The period proposed in each instance will end on September 30, 1962 for veterans of World War II. For those who saw saw service during the action in Korea the time limit will expire fifteen years after they were discharged from that period of service, which, in most instances, will be in 1968.

There are a number of other proposals which are not of such general application as those which I have already outlined. For example, it is proposed to remove the existing restriction that the director may not purchase land where commissions are payable in connection with the transaction. Also, it has been found that there are a small group of veterans who are now excluded from the benefits of the act. These are veterans who have received university training allowances under the Veterans Rehabilitation Act for a period of more than nine months. This bill proposes that they be granted eligibility for home construction under Part II. This will enable them to benefit from expert technical advice and to receive financial assistance during the course of construction of their homes. The act at present contains a provision that a veteran may not secure a Part III loan if he is indebted to the director.

The bill proposes that, with the approval of the minister, such a veteran who is in default under a Part I contract, or who is indebted in respect of any loan under the Veterans Business and Professional Loans Act, may be granted a loan under Part III.

The other amendments which are proposed by the bill are largely of an administrative nature. It may interest honourable senators if I give a few figures. The total number of veterans settled to date is 76,875. The number of veterans who have repaid in full and taken their title is 15,519. The number of veterans who have earned their grant is 25,112. It is further very interesting to know that the total number of veterans who have had their contracts completely rescinded for non-compliance is the small number of 182 out of a total of 76,875 veterans settled.

The total expenditure for all purposes to date is $382 million. The total amount collected to date is $113,097,000. The average amount collected each year is slightly over $21 million. Of those in arrears for one year and under two years, the number is 126,000; over two years and under three years, 11,000.

66972-1—61

Honourable senators, if this bill receives second reading I shall propose that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. May I point out that the Legion appeared before the Veterans' Affairs Committee of the House of Commons and endorsed the bill in every way. It had the complete approval of the Veterans Affairs Committee of the House of Commons, and the approval of all parties when it passed in that house.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am in complete accord with the principle of this bill. It is very interesting to hear of the successes with which those who have taken advantage of the bill in the past have carried on their operations. The number who have entirely surrendered their property is very small compared with the number who have taken advantage of the act. It would also appear that the number in default is comparatively small. No doubt we shall be able to find out in committee to what extent those who are in default have not been able to keep up with the terms of the contract. When the bill is put into effect it will enable a veteran to borrow up to $20,000 on a farm. A mortgage of $20,000 on a farm is no mean amount, and I suppose it will take at least 30 years to pay it back from the profits farmers are said to be making these days. All I can say is that I hope the years ahead will be more prosperous for them than the years just past have been. Provision is also made for increasing from $8,000 to $10,000 the amount of mortgage allowed on a private dwelling. That does not seem to be a large mortgage today, but not so long ago it was considered to be a large one. Times are changing, and apparently a mortgage of $10,000 on a four- or five-room house is considered a small one today. I admire the courage of young couples taking on such obligations, and I trust that all of them will be able to fulfil their obligations.

I am glad that the bill is going to committee, where no doubt we shall obtain detailed information.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, it is not my intention to cover what has already been said by the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. White) and by my honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), but I feel it is my duty to make a few comments on the amendments now before us.

I take pleasure in saying that in my opinion our Veterans' Land Act is the finest legislation of its kind in existence. From studying these amendments I would say that most, if not all of them, will, in the light of present-day conditions, bring about an improvement in the administration of the act.

I believe the sponsor said that the maximum financial assistance available under the act is being increased from $3,000 to $20,000. I examined the various statutes and it is my belief that the act of 1953-54 discloses a minimum of $9,000. I may be incorrect in that, but that is my impression. Part III of the bill increases the maximum financial assistance available under the act from $9,000 to $20,000, less any amount that may be loaned under Part I of the act.

It has been suggested that $20,000 is a large amount. I think honourable senators are aware that the Senate's Special Committee on Land Use has devoted its full energies this session to the study of the small farm problem. As I see it, this is one of the key problems facing agriculture today. As a result of shortage of farm labour, increased mechanization of farms, and so on, we find the small farm cannot carry out a profitable operation today. As a result many good young farmers on small farms, who have been labouring under these circumstances during the last eight to ten years and who have been caught in a price squeeze, are not in a position to purchase land unless they get help from some other source. In my opinion a mortgage of $20,000 on a farm is not too large if a farmer is to have an economic unit today, depending on the type of agriculture he intends to go into. The maximum amount will not be used in every instance, of course, but the act will make it available to those who require it. I think that is all to the good.

Section 6 of the bill provides that a veteran who has purchased a property may, with respect to the same property, enter into a new contract on a civilian purchase basis. I do not know the reason for this. In my opinion he is still a veteran and should be eligible to receive any preference a veteran may be entitled to. However, there may be terms and conditions under the Veterans' Land Act he may not be able to live up to, and I suppose the provision is put in for that reason.

I am also glad to know that the interest rate is not being changed and that it will remain at 5 per cent. I think most honourable senators received in the last day or two copies of Veterans' Land Act Administration booklets entitled A Decade of In-Service Staff Training and Production-Line Farming. These publications portray the magnitude of the administration of the Veterans' Land Act. I do not think that the service being rendered to the veterans of Canada under this act has a parallel anywhere else in the world. Complete financial and scientific advice on farming practices is available to all veterans, and you do not find departmental employees chasing the veteran every month to demand some kind of payment. I should like to pay tribute to the administrators and to every member of the staff of the Veterans' Land Act for a splendid job. In my area I do not know of a single failure under the act, and those who have successfully carried on operations under its terms and conditions are most happy about it. They speak highly of their association with all staff members.

I am not going to repeat what the sponsor of the bill has said, but there is one thing I should point out. Up to the end of 1958 there was collected in excess of the amounts due the sum of $5,319,000.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Prepayments?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Prepayments more than was due; and the amount overdue was not anything much. This will indicate the degree of success that the Veterans' Land Act has had. I give large credit to the very fact that not only has there been supervision in the matter of the purchase of land suitable for the farming that the veterans want to carry out, but advice has been given all down the line, even to the keeping of accounts and bookkeeping details, which have all been supplied by the Veterans' Land Act.

Honourable senators, I repeat that I think this is a wonderful act. So far as these amendments are concerned, I concur in them, because I believe they meet the needs under present conditions that were not existent a few years ago.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. White, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE SUPERANNUATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. George S. White moved the second reading of Bill C-57, respecting the superannuation of members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to provide a separate statute relating to pensions for members of the R.C.M.P. Bill C-34, respecting the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, which was called and allowed to stand, is another bill dealing with the administration, discipline, and things of that nature, of the R.C.M.P. It is also the purpose of Bill C-57 to bring Part V of the act more closely in line with the provisions of the Public Service Superannuation Act and the bill which has just received second reading dealing with pensions for members of the armed services.

The only new feature affecting members serving under Parts II and III, apart from an additional opportunity being afforded them to elect to have all their service count under Part V, is the provision that they may receive disability pensions for injuries sustained on duty as well as their service pensions. With the continuation of similar provisions now in Part V, sections 27 and 36 of the new bill will take care of all the cases we know where hardship results from disability which did not occasion retirement, and also assist those former members who sustained disabilities and are in receipt of very small service pensions.

It is particularly important that we take care of a number of additional cases where definite hardship is being caused at present. For example, it is desired to permit certain members of the British Columbia Provincial Police to count war service in imperial forces, which is not allowed at present, and which they could have counted had they continued serving in the British Columbia Force.

Secondly, at present a member is required to serve out his full term of engagement, even though he may have completed full pensionable service.

Thirdly, at present a member of the force must serve ten years in the force before becoming eligible for a disability pension. This bill would permit a pension after only ten years' pensionable service.

Fourthly, a member reaching the age limit for his rank with less than 20 years' service in the force cannot receive a pension. This applies to some transferees from provincial forces. It is proposed that ten years' service in the force should qualify him for a service pension on reaching the retirement age.

In addition, there are certain anomalies, for example:

(a) A member discharged for misconduct with between 20 and 25 years of service may receive a larger pension than one retiring voluntarily with the same length of service, by virtue of section 97(c) of the present act.

(b) There is no flexibility at present with regard to pensions on retirement for misconduct. A member so retired with between 10 and 20 years of service must receive either two-thirds of the normal pension or nothing. This bill would permit him anything up to a full pension at the discretion of the Treasury Board.

(c) At present, under Part V, a commissioned officer cannot retire voluntarily, even though he may have completed 35 years of pensionable service. He must be compulsorily retired. It is intended to permit such an officer to receive a pension when he has completed 35 years' service or attained his retirement age.

The equalization of pension provisions for members of the force with those available to public servants will be achieved in the following respects:

(a) It is intended that pensions in future be granted as a matter of right to conform with new concepts. Now they are at the discretion of the Governor in Council.

(b) The Public Service Superannuation Act provides for deferred annuities. The maximum period of pensionable service in the force is 35 years and, in the past, if a member retired voluntarily with under 20 years of service he could receive only the return of his contributions. This bill provides for either the return of contributions or a deferred annuity to commence at age 60, unless the member became disabled, when he could receive an immediate annuity, or, if he died, his widow would receive a pension.

(c) The Public Service Superannuation Act provides for the payment of the residual amount of pension contributions to the estate of a member following the death of his widow and after his children have reached 18 years of age. This bill includes the same provision.

It may be stated briefly that this legislation is intended to accomplish the modernization of the pension provisions applicable to the R.C.M.P. and to bring them into line with those available to the public service and to the Canadian Armed Forces.

There is also the point that, under this bill, in computing the amount of the pension the best six years of service are to count instead of the last six.

The bill also provides for reopening Part V for election for various types of service upon payment for such service with interest and with or without penalties.

Maximum allowances for widow and children combined are increased from 75 per cent to 90 per cent of pension the deceased husband might have received for his years of service.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, at this late hour I do not propose to detain the house for more than a few minutes in connection with this legislation. Again, I would make a plea in connection with pension legislation, that some time we might, perhaps even in a select committee of this chamber, look at the draughtsmanship of some of this type of legislation. We all know the people who benefit from this legislation are not lawyers. They depend upon themselves to know the rights they are given under the legislation and for the interpretation of the legislation. I think that if we could find some feasible way of simplifying the provisions of these pension acts so that the people to whom they apply can easily understand them, we would be doing a very fine public service. This applies not only to the Defence Services Pension Act and Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, but as well to the Public Service Superannuation Act.

The honourable gentleman who explained the bill (Hon. Mr. White) has done so very well. I think there are a good many more things done by this legislation than are normally done by bills which come before us. A great many details are to be changed by this measure, and only in committee can we examine them.

One of the things the honourable senator mentioned was that the discretionary power to grant or withhold a pension is to be abolished. Pensions are to be granted as of right. I think that is fair, because after a man has spent many years of service in a force, even if something unfortunate has happened to him in the latter part of his career, it seems unfair that, at the discretion of some functionary, he should lose his pension rights and perhaps see his family suffer.

When we have amendments to the Public Service Superannuation Act we hear from representatives of the groups that speak for the public service. We seldom hear any representations from members of the armed forces or from people speaking on their behalf when their pension rights are being changed. I don't suppose we could expect to hear from representatives of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in respect of this bill. There may be some value in thinking that these people who have a right to the pensions should have a right to say something about the way in which we change them.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Why should we not hear them?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not think there is any reason in the world why we should not, but the disciplinary element in these forces is something that does not make it very easy for the members of the force to come before a body like ours or a committee of the other place to make representations. Perhaps we could make it clear even on this occasion that if they desire to come it would be appropriate for them to come. It would be a very democratic thing. It might be making more work for ourselves but we would be doing a service to the force.

I am glad that the bill is to be referred to committee.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) has commended the clause in the bill which provides that pensions are to be granted as a right and I would like to join in the commendation. It is most suitable that men who receive a pension of this kind, which they have earned after long service, should feel independent and courageous, free to express their minds, take their place in politics and the rest of it, without fear of injuring themselves and their families financially.

I would like to ask the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. White) if any representations have been received from members of the forces or associations representing the forces with regard to clause (h) of section 21, which gives the Governor in Council power to make regulations. It reads as follows:

21. (1) The Governor in Council may make regulations,

(h) specifying, notwithstanding anything in this Part, the extent to which and the circumstances under which any annuity, annual allowance or pension payable under this Part or Part II, III or V of the former Act to a person who holds any office or position or performs any services the remuneration for which is payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund or by an agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada shall be reduced or suspended.

As I read that clause it means that any recipient of a pension who accepts a position the remuneration for which comes from the Consolidated Revenue Fund or from any of the various Crown companies, is subject entirely to order in council with regard to his pension, which "shall be reduced or suspended". That is to say, the principle which my friend and I commended is set aside when any pensioner accepts a position from the Crown, either directly, so that his pay comes from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, or indirectly when hired by a Crown company. He then is liable to have his pension cancelled or reduced by order in council.

I would like to know if any representations have been made to the Government in connection with that clause. If not, are steps now contemplated that will bring to the attention of the pensioners under this act the provisions of that clause, and the opportunity which they have to come before us and protest?

Hon. Mr. White: In answering the honourable senator I would point out that this is not a new section. This is a copy of what is in the act. I am afraid I cannot answer the question as to whether or not any representations have been made, but I will see that the information is obtained and given at the first hearing before the committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Would my friend go a little further than that and discover whether or not there is any association or group of representatives of these men to whose attention this matter could be called so that they may appear before us when this bill is considered by committee? If that were done I think perhaps the study would be properly made.

My honourable friend says that the clause I read is in the present act. But the principle with regard to these pensions is being changed in this bill so as to make them receivable as of right rather than by grace, and that principle has not been recognized in this clause.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. White, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to motions:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday, July 7, at 3 p.m.

It is necessary for the house to meet at 3 o'clock in the afternoon because the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce will be meeting in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE MEETING

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I would like to remind honourable senators that the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations is meeting tomorrow morning at 10.30 to consider the International Wheat Agreement, which was referred to it. I hope there will be a full attendance of committee members, and I invite any honourable senator who is not a member of the committee and is able to attend tomorrow to be present and take part in the discussion.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, July 7, at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, July 7, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

CRIMINAL CODE BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-58, to amend the Criminal Code.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Next sitting.

COAL PRODUCTION ASSISTANCE BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-68, to amend the Maritime Coal Production Assistance Act and to authorize certain amendments to the agreement made under that act with Dominion Coal Company, Limited.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Next sitting.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Report of the Department of External Affairs for the year ended December 31, 1958, pursuant to section 6 of the Department of External Affairs Act, Chapter 68, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Capital budget of the Northern Canada Power Commission for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960, as approved by Order in Council P.C. 1959-786, dated June 22, 1959, copy of which is annexed thereto, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952. (English text).

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Gray Turgeon, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations, presented the committee's report.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations, to whom was referred the proposed resolution for approval of the International Wheat Agreement opened for signature at Washington, D.C., on April 6, 1959, report as follows:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said proposed resolution.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be considered?

Hon. Mr. Turgeon: I move that the report be adopted now.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Turgeon presented the report of the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations on the proposed resolution for approval of the International Wheat Agreement, and moved that the same be tabled.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations, to whom was referred the proposed resolution for approval of the International Wheat Agreement opened for signature at Washington, D.C., on April 6, 1959, a copy of which is annexed hereto, have, in obedience to the order of reference of July 1, 1959, considered the said proposed resolution and now report recommending it to the favourable consideration of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Ordered that the report be tabled.

RESOLUTION OF APPROVAL

The Hon. the Speaker: The question is now on the proposed resolution moved by the Honourable Senator Aseltine, seconded by the Honourable Senator Brunt:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the International Wheat Agreement opened for signature at Washington, D.C., on April 6, 1959, and that this house do approve the same.

Hon. Senators: Carried.

Resolution adopted.

ROYAL VISIT

PRINTING OF SPEECHES OF HER MAJESTY IN HANSARD AND MINUTES

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I would like to suggest that the speeches delivered by Her Majesty the Queen in Ottawa on July 1, 1959, one to the nation by television, and the other at the dedication and unveiling of the Commonwealth Air Forces Memorial, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate for today and form part of the permanent record of this house. I would ask the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) to join me in this suggestion.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am very glad to do so.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Ordered accordingly.

For text of speeches see appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 972-3.

CONVENTION ON NATIONALITY OF MARRIED WOMEN

On the notice of motion by Hon. Mr. Aseltine:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament approve the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women, done at New York on February 20, 1957, and that this house do approve the same.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if it is expected that this motion will be proceeded with during the present session? We have waited for it a very long time. The women members of the Senate have, I think, been very patient.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: I agree, and I appreciate their patience and indulgence very much. If honourable senators will read the remarks under the heading "Business of the House" in yesterday's House of Commons Hansard they will find that this motion was expected to be debated over there today. If it is dealt with in the Commons today we shall be able to proceed with it tomorrow or the next day.

THE HON. THE SPEAKER

FELICITATIONS ON ELECTION AS PRESIDENT OF NATIONAL COUNCIL OF FRENCH CULTURAL UNION

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to take the opportunity on behalf of myself and my colleagues to extend our congratulations to our Speaker, the Honourable Mark R. Drouin, on his election as President of the National Council of the French Cultural Union. On the occasion of his receiving this honour he delivered a very fine speech, which met with much appreciation.

I present our very best wishes to His Honour the Speaker.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, needless to say, I would much rather be Speaker of the Senate than President of the National Council of the French Cultural Union, but I was pleased to accept the honour that was bestowed on me in Montreal. I did my best to represent the Senate, as I always do when I attend such functions or accept honours which are conferred on me, not as a person, but really because I am Speaker of the Senate. On such occasions I never fail to insist that any laudatory remarks made about me are not so much addressed to my person but in fact to you, ladies and gentlemen, as a body.

Thank you very much.

PUBLIC SERVICE PENSION ADJUSTMENT BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. George S. White moved the third reading of Bill C-60, respecting the adjustment of certain public service pensions.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson moved the third reading of Bill C-63, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS FINANCING AND GUARANTEE BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the third reading of Bill C-61, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System for the period from the 1st day of January, 1959 to the 30th day of June, 1960, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railways Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. George S. White moved the second reading of Bill C-34, respecting the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a bill to revise and consolidate the provisions of the present Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, as it relates to matters of administration and discipline.

At the last sitting of the Senate Bill C-57, respecting the superannuation of members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, was given second reading and referred to committee.

The bill now before us has 50-odd clauses, of which 38 are from the present act and 16 are new. I wish to run over the proposed amendments very briefly, and if at the end of the debate on second reading it is the wish of honourable senators that the bill be sent to a committee, I shall be glad to so move.

Under clause 2 (a) of the bill the word "Commissioner" is now defined, and the method of appointment of the Commissioner is provided for in clause 5.

Clause 6 (1)(c) of the bill adds the new commissioned rank of "Chief Superintendent".

Clause 8 provides for issuance of a certificate for the purpose of facilitating the identification and standing of an officer before the courts.

Clause 11 would regularize the employment of the 1,121 civil servants appointed under the Civil Service Act who are now serving with the force. Subclause 2 would permit the Commissioner to employ temporary civilian employees, as he has done in the past.

Clause 23(3)(b) would extend the present uses of the Benefit Trust Fund to include the making of loans to needy members of the force.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: To whom were they limited previously?

Hon. Mr. White: I am advised that no loans were made before. These loans are made more or less on compassionate grounds in cases where there has been an accident or sickness, or where there is a widow or children. I understand they are rather small. Two hundred dollars, I believe, or something like that, is the limit of the loan.

Clause 24 is new. The Attorney General of a province has authority in regard to the disposition of abandoned property, and this clause permits the Commissioner to dispose of unclaimed property in the Northwest Territories.

Clause 25 sets out in full a list of all the major service offences, and prescribes who is entitled to try the offenders.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is that new?

Hon. Mr. White: Part of it is new.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Norfolk): Which section is that?

Hon. Mr. White: Clause 25. It sets out in detail all the major offences. The minor offences are set out in the regulations.

Clause 27(1) provides for suspension from duty, and that is new to the R.C.M.P. Act. By paragraph (b) of that clause a regular member of the force may be arrested by any other regular member of higher rank, and any civilian member may be arrested by any regular uniformed member.

Clause 28, which is new, limits the time that a member of the force may be held in custody awaiting trial for a disciplinary offence. I am advised that at present there is no limit on the time a member of the force may be held in custody without being brought to trial.

Clause 33 gives instructions concerning charges. At present such instructions are contained only in the Standing Orders of the Commissioner. Under this clause an accused will be entitled to have full particulars of the charge or charges which he is to face.

Clause 36 (2) (b) provides for a fine not exceeding $300 if dismissal from the force is recommended. I will explain the reason for this heavy penalty. In joining the Royal Canadian Mounted Police the recruit has to sign on for a period of five years. If he wishes to retire before his period of service is completed he has to buy himself out for the sum of $125, or at the rate of $5 a month for each month of his unexpired term. The amount of this fine is set with the view of preventing a constable from deliberately making himself objectionable or committing some offence in order to be dismissed from the force.

The purpose of clause 38 is to make clear that a recommendation for dismissal following conviction is not part of the penalty imposed.

Clause 39 provides where a convicted person is to carry out his term of imprisonment. At the present time this provision is to be found only in the regulations, and the officers of the Crown felt it should be incorporated into the statute.

Clause 40 provides for trial of an accused member of the force in Canada or out of Canada. Today fairly large numbers of the force are located outside Canada, in various parts of the commonwealth and in foreign countries. Extraterritorial jurisdiction is now included in the National Defence Act, Chapter 184, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952.

Clause 41 sets out the procedure to be followed in the event of an appeal. Up to the present time the procedure has been prescribed by regulation.

Clause 43 is new. It creates a Board of Review to deal with appeals. I am advised that the chief reason for appointing a Board of Review is to take some of the responsibility of determining appeals off the Commissioner.

Clause 50 is new. It states that a person who acts in contempt of a service court is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

Clause 51 provides for a penalty which corresponds with the penalty following summary conviction under the Criminal Code.

By clause 53 members of the force are Crown officers or Crown agents. This establishes the relationship of master and servant for the purposes of liability in tort under the Crown Liability Act, Statutes of Canada, 1952-53, Chapter 30.

The bill is not complicated, honourable senators. As I mentioned before, if it is the wish of the chamber, after the debate is concluded, to have the bill sent to committee, I will be very glad to so move.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, the provisions of this measure commend themselves to me a great deal more than the provisions of the measure we discussed on Thursday last dealing with pensions for the members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. As the honourable senator who explained it so well (Hon. Mr. White) has indicated, this is a very easily understood piece of legislation. It is a simplification of the existing act, and I think it commends itself to the judgment of all honourable senators.

The act being repealed has some 115 sections. Part of it deals with matters covered by this bill, and part of it with pension problems covered by the legislation which was passed on Thursday last. I think there is some merit in divorcing these two subjects, because pensions are something of their own order and should be in a separate piece of legislation. I cannot help saying that I wish the pension legislation was as carefully and clearly drawn as is this.

This measure contains 54 sections, grouped under these three headings: the constitution and organization of the force, the disciplinary provisions in respect of the force, and, finally, some general provisions which are to be found in the existing legislation and are now being brought up to date.

I do notice that some details are eliminated from this bill. Perhaps this is appropriate, but I would think it might be helpful to have the bill sent to committee so that some of the questions relating to these details could be answered by the officials concerned. For example, under section 17 of the present act a constable of the R.C.M.P. is prohibited from entering a wigwam for certain purposes unless accompanied by a commissioned officer. I suppose there is an historic reason for that section, and I am wondering why it was eliminated. Perhaps it could be covered by regulations.

I also notice that section 19 of the bill provides that, unless authorized by the Governor in Council, members shall not be charged with any duties under or in connection with any municipal bylaw. The existing legislation provides an exception to the provision, in that it does not apply to the Yukon Territory. Perhaps this too can be covered by regulation, and I would like to know whether that is the intention.

Section 24(1) of the present act regulates certain types of billeting. For example, it is permissible to billet members of the force under certain circumstances in certain buildings. Subsection (2) provides there shall not be billeting in a "nunnery or convent". I suppose again there is an historic reason for this section in the existing act, and I wonder what is proposed to be done about it.

I would draw the attention of honourable senators particularly to section 34 of the bill, which deals with trials, and to section 43, which deals with appeals. Section 34 provides that a member of the force who is charged with any offence may be represented and assisted at this trial. But the assistance is to be provided by another member of the force. This is similar to a provision formerly contained in various pieces of legislation affecting the armed services. During the war it was found that many members of the armed services had legal training, and latterly almost all representation given to members of the armed forces charged with an offence was given by volunteer members of the forces who had been trained as lawyers. I think the result was, with all due deference to the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner), that the trials were conducted in a more satisfactory way than they would have been, had the old rules been applied. I know that this does not apply in the case of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. It might be of benefit to the R.C.M.P. if a few persons with legal training were to volunteer for membership in the force, but I think it is unlikely that this will happen. I wonder, therefore, in certain cases, particularly where serious, major service charges have been levied against members of the force, if they should not have the opportunity of being represented by properly trained legal counsel at their trials.

As to provisions in respect of appeals, I have this to say. The appeal which is proposed to be allowed under this bill is an appeal to the Commissioner. The appeal itself is heard by a Board of Review set up pursuant to provisions of section 43 of the bill. The Board of Review is to be appointed by the minister and will consist of a Deputy Commissioner or an Assistant Commissioner and two officials of or above the rank of Superintendent. It is provided that after the board has reviewed a trial which has been, of course, held before a member of the Force, the Commissioner may "quash the conviction, dismiss the appeal, reduce the sentence or order a new trial". Presumably he would be acting pursuant to the recommendations of the Board of Review and would not hold a hearing of his own or a further hearing after that held by the Board of Review.

I do not raise this point to be difficult, but it has been found in the armed forces, which are subject to discipline similar to that which prevails in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Force, that it was advantageous to have appeals from service tribunals heard by an independent judicial body. As a result the Court Martial Appeal Board was set up some ten years ago, and quite recently Parliament passed an act establishing that board as a court. There can never be any question about the impartiality of that tribunal. I do not say that in the case of the R.C.M.P. a Board of Review constituted as proposed in section 43 of the bill would be partial and make it difficult for the man charged, but there is always danger of criticism unless there is some impartial board. Perhaps these appeals could be handled by the Court Martial Appeal Board, and if they were, I think people within the force, as well as outside the force, would feel that the appeals were getting the kind of judicial treatment which ordinary citizens get from the courts of the land, particularly courts of appeal. This may create a problem for the R.C.M.P., but I think if it could be considered in committee we might be doing a service to the force and generally improving the legislation.

I am very pleased to see section 53 in the measure, for it makes applicable the provisions of the Crown Liability Act, under which members of the force are amenable to the civil courts in cases where there are accidents between civilians and members of the force, particularly highway accidents. It will enable a civilian who has been wronged and who has a claim in damages to have at least his day in court with respect to such damages.

Honourable senators, apart from these remarks, I have no comment to make upon the measure. I think it is a great improvement over the existing legislation, and I think it is crystal clear as to what it purports to do.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, the bill has been very well explained to the house by the honourable senator who moved the second reading (Hon. Mr. White), and by the senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly).

I rise at this moment particularly to pay a tribute to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for the splendid work it is doing for our country. It is without doubt one of the finest forces of its kind in the world. Its members are conscientious and strict in seeing that the laws are enforced, but in doing so they are always courteous and considerate. There is no doubt that they add much to the appearance of the beautiful building on this hill. In their scarlet uniforms, the Mounted Police are the envy of many young men who come here, and are an attraction, no doubt, to many a young woman. Of course, we must remember that the members of this force are not always in scarlet uniforms. We are apt to think that their work consists of walking up and down on Parliament Hill to see that visitors do not park in the wrong place. As far as I am concerned, I wish some other branch of our public service could provide men to see that the parking restrictions are adhered to. In fact, I would like to see all automobiles kept off the hill. However, apparently those who are in charge of parking have come to the conclusion that that is impossible, so they have given the task of seeing that the restrictions are enforced to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Although the Mounted Police are not always in their scarlet uniforms, it is true that they wear them on Parliament Hill and in different parts of our dominion wherever Her Majesty visits. I think that is quite right. May I mention with some pride that the Mounted Police sergeant on the Royal train comes from my home city of Brantford?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The citizens of my home city are very proud to have him on that Royal train.

The Mounted Police have more arduous and difficult tasks, which they are carrying out very efficiently. We must not forget that many members of this force are in the far northern parts of this dominion, where they sometimes remain for several years to carry out their duties. We find them all across Canada doing a very worth-while job in maintaining peace and order. And they are respected not only at home, but abroad.

Honourable senators, I think it would also be quite fitting if I referred at this time to other police forces in Canada. We are apt to think just of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. In the province of Ontario, from which I come, we have the Ontario Provincial Police. They do not wear scarlet uniforms, but their uniforms are very fine. They are a splendid body of men, well trained, well disciplined and very courteous. They are performing in Ontario a task equal to that which is performed by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police throughout the dominion.

I think also we should not entirely forget the municipal policeman—the man we call the ordinary policeman, who is on duty day in and day out, in this city and in the other cities throughout our land. I refer especially to the police of the city of Ottawa, whom I see now more frequently than those of my own city. In Ottawa, where there are so many tourists, I find that the police are very courteous. They have to be strict, they have to be firm, but at the same time I have heard very few complaints of any discourtesy by them toward the thousands of visitors who come here annually.

Honourable senators, I rise at this time for two purposes. First, to pay a tribute to the police forces generally of Canada; and, secondly, to say that I agree with the honourable senator from Ottawa West that this bill should be referred to a committee.

Hon. Mr. White: Honourable senators, before the bill receives second reading I would like to make a comment on one item brought up by the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly). He referred to section 34, on the question of an accused being represented at his trial. I discussed this matter with officials of the R.C.M.P. and I questioned whether or not a man charged should be represented by counsel. They said no, that this was not the practice that had been followed. I am glad the honourable senator brought the matter up. When the bill is in committee, I am sure that point can be gone into more fully.

It will be noticed that subclause 2 of clause 43 reads:

> All appeals under this part by persons who have been convicted of a major service offence shall be referred by the Commissioner to the Board of Review, which shall examine the records and shall make its recommendation to the Commissioner.

I think everyone will agree that the Commissioner would follow the recommendation of the board.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Although there seems to be a discretion given to the Commissioner by clause 44.

Hon. Mr. White: Yes; it does say that the Commissioner "may" quash a conviction, etc.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. White, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, the bill which has just been read the second time is the last item on the Orders of the Day for this sitting. Before we adjourn I wish to remind honourable senators that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce will be meeting this evening at 8 o'clock. There will most likely be a long meeting of the committee this evening, as well as tomorrow morning, as five or six bills are now before it for consideration. I would like all members of the committee to attend the meetings, if possible, and any other senators who wish to be present.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

66972-1—62½

APPENDIX

(See pp. 966-7)

SPEECHES DELIVERED BY HER MAJESTY QUEEN ELIZABETH II AT OTTAWA, JULY 1, 1959

Television Broadcast

Ottawa, July 1, 1959

The last time I spoke to you, from this my home in Ottawa, was when I opened the new Parliament two years ago.

This time I want to speak to you about two other great national occasions. The first was the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway in which President Eisenhower and I took part near Montreal last Friday. He represented the American people and I was there as your representative to mark the completion of this joint enterprise which has captured the imagination of the world. Although this was an international undertaking, it is worth remembering that Canada was the moving spirit in getting the project started and that two thirds of the seaway and the work on it is in Canadian territory. This was a truly great national occasion.

The other national occasion is Dominion day which we are celebrating today. If the opening of the seaway is a salute to the future, then Dominion day is a salute to the past. Five hundred years ago there were no Europeans on this continent, today over 17 million Canadians enjoy what is probably one of the highest standards of living anywhere in the world.

During the early history of what is now Canada there was controversy and fighting. Today you have achieved a unity and a sense of common purpose which is a tribute to good sense and tolerance. This did not come about of its own accord. It came about because there have been men in every generation who were not content simply to work for themselves but who worked for the nation as a whole, who sacrificed their own interests for the common good.

Dominion day commemorates the birth of Canada as a nation and the first independent country within the British Empire. So it also marks the beginning of that free association of independent states which is now known as the commonwealth of nations.

(Translation):

Very recently, I was on the very site where Jacques Cartier, in 1534, set foot for the first time on Canadian soil and there erected his great wooden cross. I have been told that the name Gaspé comes from an Indian word meaning "the end of the earth". Undoubtedly, it seemed to the Indians that it was, in fact, the end of the earth, but for Cartier, and those who came after him, it was the start of a new world and a life filled with promises and possibilities.

Today, every Canadian can justifiably be proud of the way in which these possibilities have been realized. In government centres and in industrial areas, I have been able to learn that this marvellous new world, built on work and vision and on the natural resources of our country, still remains, four hundred years later, the heritage of Canadians.

(Text):

That same vision and heritage brought the commonwealth into being with Canada as a founder member. This is no mere sentimental organization but a vigorous association for co-operation and mutual help on the widest scale.

One instance of this is the number of students from India and Pakistan and the West Indies who find places in Canadian universities. This is an admirable plan and I hope that it spreads. There could be no better way to help future generations in all the commonwealth countries to get on together. If any of these students are listening to me, which perhaps they are, I congratulate them on the hard work and enterprise which has brought them here and send them my very good wishes.

After all I have said, I am sure you can understand why this tour has given me and my husband such pleasure and why we are looking forward to the rest of it so much. We would like to see many more of you and far more of this wonderful country but it cannot be done this time. Canada is simply too big. Luckily the television network covers most of the populated parts of the country so I can at least bring this rather more personal message directly into your homes even if I cannot drive through your streets and meet some of your fellow citizens. I hope it will also let you come with me to the different parts of Canada I am going to visit and see some of the spectacles and industrial developments along the route.

This is the holiday season for many of you and a fine summer's day is not just the moment for serious matters, but I have spoken of these things because they are very close to my heart. If I have helped you to feel proud of being Canadian, if I have reminded you of the strength which comes from unity, and if I have helped to draw your attention to the bright vision of the years ahead, I shall feel well satisfied, because I believe with all conviction that this country can look to a glorious future.

At the Dedication and Unveiling of Commonwealth Air Forces Memorial

Ottawa, July 1, 1959

This memorial has been built to honour the men and women of the Air Forces of the commonwealth who during the Second World War gave their lives in Canada, in the United States of America and in neighbouring lands and seas, and who have no known graves. It is one of five such Air Force memorials, commemorating in all some 30,000 names. I have already opened two of these—at Runnymede and Malta—and the others are at El Alamein and Singapore.

Their very locations illustrate how wide was the conflict from which hardly any portion of the world was immune, and to which every part of our commonwealth made its contribution.

Some of those commemorated here were killed in active operations, based in Canada—on missions over the Atlantic and Pacific oceans and in the Arctic. But most of them were learning to fly under the empire air training scheme, or ferrying aircraft made in this continent to Europe and North Africa. They were young people with a belief in the future, many of whom, had they lived, would be playing their part in the reshaping of this modern world. Their deaths have increased the burden on us, but the example of their faith and courage will surely help and inspire us.

As those whose names are recorded here came from every part of the commonwealth, so today many of you, their relatives and kinsfolk, have come from all over the world to join with my Canadian people in honouring their memory. You will be looking for the names of sons or husbands or brothers who did not shrink from losing their lives to save our own. I share your pride in them and assure you of the undiminished gratitude of those who survived the conflict and are able to live in freedom because of their self sacrifice. I would also offer you a word of sympathy in your loss, which time can mitigate but never dispel.

Many Canadians were present when I unveiled the Runnymede memorial on which are recorded the names of 3,000 Canadian airmen. In the great window of the shrine there is engraved a verse from the 139th Psalm:

> If I take the wings of the morning: and > remain in the uttermost parts of the sea;
> Even there shall Thy hand lead me,
> And Thy right hand shall hold me.

Let these words, in which some of those whom we are honouring here may have found encouragement as they climbed up into the skies, help and support you today.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 8, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform you that I have received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa

7 July, 1959

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber Wednesday, 8th July, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Lionel Massey,
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

CROP INSURANCE BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-66, to provide for contributions and loans to the provinces in respect of crop insurance.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Next sitting.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following:

Copies of Appendixes "A" and "B" to the Preliminary Report, dated October 31, 1958, of the Fraser River Board on Flood Control and Hydro-Electric Power in the Fraser River Basin, which was tabled on January 21, 1959. (English text).

VETERANS' LAND BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill C-50.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-50) intituled: "An Act to amend the Veterans' Land Act", have, in obedience to the order of reference of July 2, 1959, examined the said bill, and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, I move that this bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE SUPERANNUATION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-57.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-57) intituled: "An Act respecting the Superannuation of Members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police", have, in obedience to the order of reference of July 2, 1959, examined the said bill, and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. White: Honourable senators, I move that this bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADIAN FORCES SUPERANNUATION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-62.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-62) intituled: "An Act respecting the Superannuation of Members of the Canadian Forces", have, in obedience to the order of reference of July 2, 1959, examined the said bill, and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. White: Honourable senators, I move that this bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-34.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-34) intituled: "An Act respecting the Royal Canadian Mounted Police", have in obedience to the order of reference of July 7th, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same with the following amendment:

Page 6: Immediately after subclause (2) of clause 20, insert the following as subclause (3):

"(3) The Minister shall lay before Parliament a copy of every arrangement made under subsection (1) within fifteen days after it is made or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting."

AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, I move the amendment be concurred in now.

Perhaps I should tell honourable senators that the proposed amendment to section 20 of the bill, which deals with organization and discipline, or shall we say the government, of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Force, has to do with arrangements that may be made with provincial Governments and municipalities for the use of that force. The proposed new subsection 3—which bears the approval of the minister—provides that a copy of any such arrangement, if Parliament is sitting at the time, shall be tabled within 15 days, and if Parliament is not sitting it shall be tabled within 15 days after Parliament convenes.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. White: Honourable senators, I move the third reading of this bill, as amended, now.

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented a report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-43.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-43) intituled: "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act", report as follows:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, I move that the report be adopted now.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented a further report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-43.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-43) intituled: "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act", have, in obedience to the order of reference of July 2, 1959, examined the said bill, and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Clarence V. Emerson: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I have just one comment to make. I would say to my honourable friend, the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig), and my honourable friend from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner), who I am sorry to see is not in his place, that they should be very happy after hearing the evidence given this morning before the committee. If my figures are correct, the Unemployment Insurance Fund collected last year the sum of $219 million and expended $479 million, thus showing a deficit or a withdrawal of $260 million. My honourable friends, who occupied seats on the Opposition side of this chamber not so long ago, should be very happy that the Grits left them such a good legacy upon which to draw.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before this bill receives third reading I would like to make a few comments. I agree with the honourable senator from Northumberland-Miramichi (Hon. Mr. Burchill) that this is excellent legislation. I think everyone will agree that it is among the very best social legislation which we have on the statute books. It was passed during the early days of the war, much against the wishes of many of those who are now sitting on the Government benches.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Why repeat that?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That should be remembered. However, I am glad that those sitting on the Government benches are now so enthusiastic about this legislation. My only hope is that in future they will do something to improve it, because it badly needs improving.

The fund, as has been pointed out before, has been greatly depleted, especially during the last two years. When this bill received second reading we understood that the increase in the contributions would help to restore the fund and put it on a sound actuarial basis. Those of us who were at the sitting of the committee this morning were amazed to learn from the officers of the department that, instead of putting the fund on a sound actuarial basis, the amendments will put it in a worse position, and if it is not insolvent now it will be nearer insolvency at the end of the present year, in spite of the increases in contributions.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Would you describe a fund as being insolvent when it has between $400 million and $500 million?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I say, if it is becoming insolvent it will be nearer that undesirable position at the end of this year, after these increases, than it is at present. I think all of us, including the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), were dismayed on getting that information this morning. In other words, the increased contributions this year will not even balance the fund against the expenditures during the coming year.

Another thing I want to point out, honourable senators, is that these amendments are pleasing to no one, except perhaps to the Government itself. Representatives of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and of industry who were before the committee of the other house were not hesitant in expressing their dissatisfaction with this bill. Mr. Jodoin, President of the Canadian Congress of Labour, stated that the advantages which the employees receive from the amendments are outweighed by the very substantial increase in the contribution rates. So this bill is not pleasing to the employee or to the employer.

Honourable senators, we are aware that there is a committee known as the Unemployment Insurance Advisory Committee. Changes are seldom made to the act without first getting the advice of this committee. We learned this morning that the committee had been consulted and had given its advice, but that the Government, except in three instances, had not accepted that advice. The Government accepted recommendations that there should be two additional classes, that the "wage ceiling" of insurability should be increased from $4,800 to $5,460, and that unemployed persons should be allowed to earn more than they had in the past. Apart from those three recommendations, the Government did not accept the advice of the committee.

One of the main features of this bill is that contributions both by employees and employers are to be substantially increased, to the extent of about 30 per cent. The advisory committee did not recommend that increase. Let me read what it recommended:

> The committee respectfully recommends that the division of responsibility for revenue to the fund as between employers, employees and Government be adjusted so that the contribution from each be made equal. In other words, that the contribution from the Government be made equal to one-half that of the combined contribution from employers and employees.

There is no doubt the Government considered that proposal, but nevertheless it set it to one side. Although there are no increased benefits to employees, the amounts which they will have to pay into this fund are increased by approximately 30 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Twenty-five per cent in most cases.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators may be interested to know just what has happened to this fund over the last five years. In 1954 the fund contained $881 million; in 1955, $840 million; in 1956, $854 million; in 1957, $874 million and in 1958 it dropped to $744 million, and as of March 31 this year the amount in the fund was down to $496 million. I am informed that the fund is continuing to go down and that at the present time it contains approximately $432 million, which means it has been cut almost in half since 1957.

This large depletion in the fund has been caused to some extent by the great increase in unemployment during the last two years. I am not going to take the time of this house to berate the Government for allowing such a condition to continue, but the fact is that the fund was depleted to some extent on account of increased unemployment. However, that was not the only reason for the depletion. Honourable senators may recall that I referred on second reading to the fund being raided in order to provide seasonal benefits for those who do not come within the provisions of the fund. In other words, the concept of unemployment insurance as understood when this legislation was enacted has been forgotten. You may say that the so-called raids on the fund did not amount to much, but they actually were of considerable extent. You may also say that the fund was raided by the former Government as well as by the present Government. That is true. In 1950 and 1951 the former Government took money from the fund to provide seasonal benefits, but I would remind the house that the Government of that day replenished the fund to the amount which it took for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: How?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: By paying into that fund a sum taken out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. In other words, all the people of Canada paid a share for those who were unemployed and who did not come within the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Fund; or, I will put it this way: those who were employed and those who were employing were not called upon to look after those who were out of work and did not come within the provisions of the fund. It was a condition which was caused by general unemployment in Canada, and therefore the Government of that day felt the public generally should pay for it.

What is the extent to which this fund has been depleted in recent years by raiding it in order to pay seasonal benefits? This year it amounted to $116 million.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Who were those for whom the Government had to raid the fund?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Those who had not paid into the fund.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Who were they?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Workers generally all across Canada, working men and women in almost every form of labour. My honourable friend from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson) will recall there was considerable unemployment in the early part of this year and the latter part of last year.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: And before that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Many of those unemployed were not covered by the fund and had no entitlement as of right to money in the fund. Notwithstanding that, the Government said, "We will take money from the fund and pay seasonal benefits to these people." I might compare the fund to a life insurance company to which people pay premiums in order that, after their death, benefits may accrue to their relatives. If somebody's house burns down and the life insurance company pays a fire claim out of the life insurance premiums, honourable senators know that that would constitute a breach and somebody would probably be sent to prison for it.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: An insurance company cannot write both life and fire insurance policies today.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The Government today is taking from employed people premiums intended to be used in paying benefits to those people if they should become unemployed, but instead those premiums have been used to pay benefits to people who did not contribute to the fund.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Benefits were still paid to unemployed who had contributed to the fund.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, but with what results? The fund is gradually being depleted and is in such an unsatisfactory condition today that the Government says something has to be done about it. In fact, the amount on hand is something like $450 million, whereas two years ago it was $850 million.

May I go back to the amount that was paid from this fund for seasonal benefits which, as I stated a moment ago, amounted to $116 million this year and $63 million last year, making a total of $179 which was taken improperly from this fund. At the present time there is approximately $450 million in the fund. Well, I will go back to my previous figure. At the end of the fiscal year there was $496 million in the fund. If that money had not been taken from the fund improperly there would be in that fund today approximately $670 million, and the fund would be in a reasonably good position. Therefore, honourable senators, we cannot blame unemployment for the present condition of this fund; we must blame the Government for taking from the fund money which it was not entitled to take. You may say, "Well, the money has to be paid, the unemployed have to be looked after." I agree entirely that the unemployed must be looked after, but this must not be done by taking money from some fund which the Government holds in trust. This money contributed by employers and employees, together with the portion contributed by the Government, is paid into the Unemployment Insurance Fund, and the Government holds it in trust—shall I say a sacred trust, held for the purpose of assisting unemployed people who have contributed to it. Honourable senators, I feel keenly that the Government should replenish that fund from which money has been improperly taken. If that were done, the fund would be in a reasonably sound position actuarially.

I think honourable senators will agree with me that the present state of the Unemployment Insurance Fund is not satisfactory. I am confident that almost all senators feel that these moneys should not have been taken from the fund in the past, and that if the Government is not going to replenish the fund it should make sure that it will not take money improperly from the fund in future. In my opinion this whole act should be carefully reviewed by the members of both houses of Parliament. I most sincerely suggest that a committee comprised of members of both houses be established early next year to consider the whole question of unemployment insurance and the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Fund.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I rise to state my approval of what has been said by the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) with regard to the Unemployment Insurance Fund. Many references have been made to the ideas, principles and the purpose in mind when the fund was originally created. At that time I was a member of the Commons, and was a member of the committee appointed for the purpose of drafting this act. We sat day after day for a long time considering the various clauses, and also considering information which we received about the Unemployment Insurance Act at that time in effect in Great Britain. I can state most definitely, from my firm memory of what took place at that time, that the committee determined that the contributions by the employer, the employee and the Government should be actuarially sufficient as compared with the obligations of the fund. That was the chief idea in the drafting of the act. We spent more time upon this than upon any other feature in order to ensure that the fund should remain actuarially sound; and we were under the impression that unless a very great depression fell upon the country and very large numbers of people became unemployed, the amounts of the contributions would at least equal the calls upon the fund. And we were right. During almost every day of all the years that followed, the fund gradually grew and grew in amount and importance until there were those who thought that we were accumulating more than was required for the meeting of our obligations. However, during the Liberal régime, those in authority held firmly to the opinion that we should stay with the actuarial determinations of the originating committee, of which I was a member, and nothing was done to deplete the fund.

The Leader of the Opposition mentioned an incident that occured during the Liberal régime, an incident which for the moment he referred to as a raid on the Unemployment Insurance Fund, which, however, he said was later repaid. I do not approve that incident. I think that not one dollar of the money in the fund should have been used for an ulterior purpose. Nevertheless, all that was done at that time was to make the administrators of this act the vehicle by which benefits were transferred ultimately from the Consolidated Revenue Fund to those who benefit under the act. It was purely administrative, because the Unemployment Insurance Fund was replenished out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

I note with great disapproval and real regret what has happened to the Unemployment Insurance Fund during recent years, and I heartily approve of the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition that this fund should be held inviolate—I think he said "sacrosanct", or something like that. The matter should be looked upon from the standpoint of honesty. It is dishonest to take moneys subscribed by people for one purpose and use them for some other purpose for which they were not intended—absolutely dishonest. I support the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition that these moneys should be replaced by the Government out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have listened with much interest to the political speeches made by my honourable friends opposite.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Oh, no, I object.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am sorry I cannot agree—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I rise to a point of order or to a point of personal privilege on criticism of that kind directed to an honest expression of opinion. Such an expression of opinion by a member of this house should not be described by my friend with an adjective of that kind. It was patriotic, if you like, but not political. My friend should withdraw that statement.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: If my honourable friend feels that I have said something that did not apply to his speech, I am quite pleased to withdraw it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am sure the honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) will agree that the term "political" is equally inapplicable to anything that I said. I know that he will at all times credit us with sincerity, at least.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I am glad to know that my honourable friends opposite did not intend to say anything which might be considered of a political nature, and if I offended them by referring to their remarks as I did I withdraw my statement.

However, I cannot agree with what they have been saying about the Unemployment Insurance Fund. I think the fund is in excellent condition.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: And getting worse.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We have nearly $500 million in it. We started out with nothing, when the fund was first created, but all through the forties and early fifties we had periods of full employment and naturally the fund was built up. The purpose of the fund is to take care of a situation such as we have had during the last two years. My honourable friend shakes his head. In my opinion that is what this fund is for.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Just a moment. Last session, when the amendments were made to this act, I do not remember any member opposite making any objection to what was being done.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I object. If the honourable leader will take the trouble to look up the remarks I made last year on the amendments to the act, he will find that I objected to seasonal unemployment benefits being drawn from this fund.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not remember the honourable senator making that objection, but if he says he made it I am ready to accept his assurance.

I think all speakers this afternoon have referred to this fund as having been raided by the present Government. Now, I am quite sure that if they had been in power they would have done exactly the same thing.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: We did not when we were in power.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: But you did not have a situation such as existed during the last two years.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: If we had been in power it would not have existed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It was coming to that. The Government was changed in 1957, and that was one reason why it was changed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: So you kept it coming.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: There was dissatisfaction in the country, and the Government was changed. I say that the present Government is not responsible in any manner whatsoever for the fact that we had a mild recession during which great numbers of people were out of employment. Something had to be done for them, and the Government stated it would take care of these people, even though it meant deficit financing.

I am quite satisfied that if we had taken this money out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and used it for this purpose we would have been told by honourable members opposite, and probably by members in the other place, that we should have taken it out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund. They would have pointed out that we had all that money there, and asked what was the use of going to the expense of running a bigger deficit than ever by transferring money from the Consolidated Revenue Fund and taxing the people to recover the money.

Hon. Mr. Golding: A poor excuse.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: This is my firm opinion, because every time we deal with the amount of a deficit or the amount of moneys being spent by the present Government there is a great complaint from honourable members opposite. I am quite sure they would have said, "Why increase your deficit by some $100 million or $200 million for unemployment when you have the money on hand and are not using it?"

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You did not have it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think if my honourable friends on the other side had been in power at the time they would have done the same thing.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The fact is that we did not.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am not going to say any more at present, honourable senators. This is Government policy and it meets with my approval. I think it is the only thing to be done at the present time. Eventually the fund will be built up and gradually restored. I think it is on an actuarial basis now. I disagree with my honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) when he says that it was actuarially sound from the beginning. It was only actuarially sound, honourable senators, as long as we had full employment and the fund was building up, but when unemployment occurred, among thousands and thousands, why quite naturally the amount paid in would not take care of the amount that had to be drained out. So I say that the fund was never actuarially sound. It may become actuarially sound if we pass this bill today and are careful to raise enough money to make it so. This is one way in which to do it.

Hon. Mr. Euler: How can it be actuarially sound when you cannot foresee what the degree of unemployment is going to be from year to year?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will take my honourable friend's statement as a qualification of what I have just said, because I have a great respect for his opinion, he having been for some time Minister of National Revenue, an office which he held with very great distinction. If we suffered a very severe depression and had to take care of the people —for we could not let them starve—under those circumstances the fund would not be actuarially sound. It would naturally be depleted, and probably depleted to a greater extent than at the present time.

So I am asking honourable senators to pass this bill. It is the policy of the Government and I stand by it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, on a question of privilege:

The honourable Leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) stated that I did not oppose the method of providing for seasonal benefits last year. I would refer him to the 1957-58 Senate Hansard at page 286. I will not read all I said, but just one brief quotation in connection with payments for seasonal benefits:

> My question now is, why should the payments under this bill be a charge on this fund?

My first proposal was that the payments should not be made out of this fund. Then I went on to say that if they were, the amount by which this fund was overdrawn on that account should be refunded to it from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. So there is no doubt that I did oppose the way in which the payments were to be made.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, the last thing at the moment that I wish to do is to wander into political pastures. This measure is one that is of great importance to the country. It is our duty as members of Parliament to try to frame our legislation wisely and well.

The Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) in the rather spirited defence he made a short time ago of the measure was a bit inconsistent. In his opening remarks he stated the fund is in excellent shape, it is not insolvent, and he endeavoured to convey the impression that there is nothing to occasion worry. But before he was finished he was arguing that this measure was necessary to supplement the fund. There, I suggest to the house, was a bit of inconsistency which we very rarely see indeed in the honourable gentleman who leads the Government side in this house.

I remind the house of my remarks on second reading of the bill—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You are saying that the fund is not in good shape. I am accepting your statement and bringing in this legislation to build up the fund.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: We shan't quarrel over that. Normally, one would think that the fund, which at the present moment stands at over $400 million, and has income on the one side and disbursements on the other, could be said to be still in reasonably good shape. I would not quarrel with that assertion. That is not the difficulty I find with the bill.

On second reading I stated to the house that I was opposed to this measure. It was referred to a committee, where we heard this morning from officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and one of the commissioners. Their evidence lasted almost two hours. I heard nothing in the evidence they gave, in the questions asked or the answers received, that in the slightest degree changed my opposition to this measure. I do not wish to repeat the arguments I put forward, perhaps not very clearly, on second reading, but there are a few things that should be said:

The honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) was on thoroughly sound ground in his criticism of utilizing this fund for seasonal benefits. This is a complete departure from the original purpose of the legislation. It is quite true that in 1950 or 1951 the late Liberal Government did the same thing. It should not have done it. This fund should not at any time, under a Liberal administration or a Conservative administration, be subjected to withdrawals for purpose of seasonal benefits, because the moment you do that you depart entirely from the principle upon which the legislation was founded. While the late Liberal Government sinned in that respect, it recognized that it had sinned, and it put back into the fund the amount it had withdrawn for seasonal benefits.

Now my friend the honourable Leader of the Government argues that the present Government had to pay out these benefits; it couldn't let the people starve; it had to provide the moneys to meet seasonal unemployment, and why should not these moneys have been taken out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund? That is his argument.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Of course.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: It is a rather remarkable argument to come from the honourable Leader of the Government, whom, I am bound to admit frankly, I have found to take a sound view on nearly every question that comes before this house. But his view in this respect is wrong. This fund should not have had a single dollar taken out of it for seasonal benefits.

The honourable Leader of the Opposition was quite right in saying that, had withdrawals not been made, the fund today would have had in it about $170 million more than it has at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: $179 million.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: In important legislation of this kind, are we going to stick to sound and proven principles in its administration? I think we must. If we are going to take money out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund to use it for seasonal benefits simply because it is there, why should we not take money from the fund to give grants to agricultural fairs or things of that kind? That would be just as reasonable. The criticism, and it is a valid criticism—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: My friend surely is not serious.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: It is a valid criticism that I direct to my friends on the Government side, that this was a departure from a sound practice and principle. The withdrawal that was made from the fund for this purpose should be returned to it from the consolidated revenue. But the Government does not do that. It says, in effect, we have taken this money out for seasonal benefits. The fund may now be in jeopardy; therefore, we will pass a flock of new amendments and get the fund replenished, and at the same time give it a good-looking façade by expanding the benefits that may be derived from it, by increasing the allowable earnings, and by raising the limit of income of employee contributions from $4,800 to $5,460.

We had no assurance from the honourable sponsor of the bill in this house on second reading (Hon. Mr. Emerson), and we have had no assurance today from the honourable Leader of the Government, that in the Government's opinion this legislation will put the fund on an actuarially sound basis. Nor did we get that assurance today from the gentleman who appeared before the committee. What deduction can one make from that situation? Quite frankly, I am at a loss to know. My own guess, for what it may be worth, is that there is no guarantee whatever in the changes made by this amending legislation that this fund will be maintained actuarially sound, should we encounter even as much unemployment as we have had in the past two or three years.

I draw attention to another fact, one which I referred to partially in my remarks on second reading. Employers and employees are each obliged under this amending legislation to increase their contributions by 30 per cent. But the Government's contribution is also increased, a fact of which no mention was made on the discussion on second reading, as far as I can recall. The Government agrees to contribute one-fifth of the combined contributions of employers and employees, and since the contribution is increased, the Government's share is increased. Under this legislation the taxpayers will, in a full year, contribute an additional $14 million.

In the light of those facts, I say, first, that further withdrawals from the fund for seasonal benefits should cease, and the Government should give assurance to Parliament that they will cease.

Secondly, the additional burdens that are going to be placed upon industry are very substantial. The estimated total figures were given to us this morning in committee. The fact of the matter is that we do not have today the full information we should have. For instance, inquiry was made this morning of the witnesses as to how many people who retire from industry of all kinds at the age of 65 on good pensions draw unemployment insurance later. The witnesses admitted that there were such persons, but could not give the numbers. That is to say, if a person who retires at the age of 65, with a pension of from $100 to $300 a month, registers for unemployment insurance, and the employment services cannot find a satisfactory job for him, he is entitled under the practice to receive insurance benefits. I submit to the house that that was never contemplated when the legislation was first passed. That, in itself, is a violation of the sound principle of insurance upon which this legislation supposedly was based. In the light of all this, as far as I am concerned, I cannot change my opposition to this bill. I am opposed to its passing. I am opposed to its being put on our statute books.

There is just one other comment I have to make, and that is in regard to the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition that this whole matter of the administration of unemployment insurance should be reviewed by a committee of both houses at the next session of Parliament. I do not know whether at the moment I am ready to cheer for that, but I will cheer loudly for a special committee from this house which will take the time to gather all the data. I would like to know, for instance, how many people are today drawing unemployment insurance benefits and who have retired on good pensions. At the moment we do not know that number. I venture the estimate that it runs into a good many thousands, maybe tens of thousands, because one hears—I admit that rumour is not a very good basis on which to make an estimate—of cases where people are getting something out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund to which they are not entitled. Let us see if we can unravel all that.

Let us try, in another session, to approach the matter, not with the idea of finding a stick with which to beat the present Government or the late Government, but with the purpose and aim of improving this legislation, of weeding out its weaknesses and its defects, and of doing what we can to strengthen it. Our approach should be wholly from the angle of the public interest because, believe me, while parties may try to score political points out of a matter of this kind, the really important thing that remains is to find legislation that will fairly and adequately meet the need, and, at the same time, be just and fair to the taxpayers of this country.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, there are a few remarks I would like to make in connection with this bill. It may well be that, when I have finished, the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) will agree with what I say. I doubt that he will be able to suggest there is anything political in my remarks on this occasion.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: You are an awfully nice fellow.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I must start off by attacking his measuring stick for determining the solvency of this fund. He said, in effect, "Why, there is plenty of money there." I was never taught to determine solvency in that fashion. I have always understood that solvency was a relative matter; that it was the relationship between what you have and what you owe, and, therefore, if you have a lot of money and few liabilities you are solvent, but if your assets, though large, are exceeded by your liabilities, potential or otherwise, you are either insolvent or you are treading very close to the line of insolvency. This reminds me of the famous comment of Mr. Micawber in one of the works of Dickens, that if you have an annual income of £20 and an annual expenditure of £19 19s. 6d. you are happy, or reasonably so, but if your annual income is £20 and your annual expenditure is £20 0s. 6d., then, of course, you are in difficulty.

Just because there may be $432 million in this fund at the present time is no reason for arguing that the fund is solvent or actuarially sound. You have to look at the other side of the picture and observe the full impact of the payments that are required to be made out of the fund.

Having said that, I would like to come to the main purpose of my speaking at this time. The Unemployment Insurance Act has been in force since 1940. My voice was a small one at the beginning of the act, because at that time I had just come into the Senate. A committee of the House of Commons was dealing with this matter then, and in the interests of dispatch, and possibly because I was the most recent appointee to the Senate, I was given the job of sitting in on that committee, so that I might learn the thinking that was being expressed in the study of this question and in the hope that I might be able to impart it to the rest of the senators to such an extent that the bill would proceed more expeditiously through the Senate. Whether I learned anything there, or whether the Senate learned anything from what I thought I had learned, I do not care to say.

In any event, the bill was passed into law and it has now been on the statute books and operating for some eighteen or nineteen years. In the meantime employer-employee relationships, union relationships with employees and economic conditions in the world have all changed. The pattern has changed so greatly that the concept of unemployment as it existed at the time this bill was enacted is entirely different from what it is now. The impact of all the changing conditions down through the years has been such that I think it is now time that we took a hard look at the whole question of unemployment and gave this problem close study.

In the beginning of this legislation the idea was to build up in a period of good times a fund which would take care of temporary unemployment. We have moved beyond that stage in the last couple of years. We now have a concept of unemployment as being something that should be dealt with on the basis of assuring to people who are out of work a measure of purchasing power regardless of the circumstances or conditions that led to their being out of work. Once you have that broader concept then, in my submission, you have to get away from the basis on which this fund was established, namely, by employer and employee contributions. That is why I say we have now arrived at the stage where the question of unemployment insurance should be reexamined, where the question of taking care of those who are out of work—not only those who are temporarily out of work in the bare sense of the word, but those who by reason of general economic conditions or of changes in the functioning of industry suffer long periods of seasonal unemployment—has to be considered. Those are factors which, in my submission, were not within the original concept of unemployment insurance, and I think it is essentially unfair that a fund which receives its contributions from persons who are regularly employed, and which is there to tide them over during the limited periods when they are out of work, should have these extended obligations placed upon it.

I heartily agree with what has been said in regard to payments out of this fund to provide seasonal benefits. I am not quarrelling with what was sought to be accomplished, but I do say that it is unfair to make use of the contributions that have been made on the former concept of the principle of unemployment insurance to provide for these extended benefits.

By that I do not mean that the people who receive these benefits should not be taken care of. Certainly they should be taken care of, but in another manner. But, this is an actuality now; it is a fait accompli. Therefore, what we must do, I repeat, is re-examine the whole question of unemployment insurance.

It may be that we shall have to divide it into two categories. In my view it is certain that we cannot go on forever imposing additional burdens such as we are doing under this bill, whereby increased payments to the extent of 30 per cent are required of employers and employees, for the purpose of maintaining a fund that will take care of that broader field which encompasses kinds of employment that were not thought of in the period when this statute was passed. I think it unfair that employers and employees should be charged specifically with the obligation of financing this expanded field. These are the things that require study. We should ascertain the views of industry, unions, employees and business generally, and we should then evolve a scheme. This scheme may well fall into a number of divisions. It may restore the original concept of unemployment insurance and it may retain the present financing system. Financing in the broader field of unemployment, which may be introduced by general economic conditions that affect the entire country, is something that should be approached in an entirely different way. The people as a whole, as represented by the Government of Canada, should be asked to deal with the financing of a plan of that kind and the contributions that employers and employees make within the limits of the present statute should be used for dealing with unemployment in the way that they intend.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: May I ask the honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) a question? I was unavoidably absent earlier and I am not familiar with the statistics in relation to this legislation. Would the honourable leader know what the unemployment figure is at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, but this type of information was given to the Banking and Commerce Committee this morning. The proceedings of that meeting were reported by the Hansard reporters and will be available in printed form to the honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Thank you.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the question is on the motion for the third reading of Bill C-43, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

An Hon. Senator: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

FIRE AT PICTOU, NOVA SCOTIA

REQUEST FOR EARLY REPLACEMENT OF DESTROYED FACILITIES

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. John A. McDonald: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with I would like to bring to the attention of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) the serious waterfront fire at Pictou, Nova Scotia, on Monday last when the main piers, transit shed and other shipping facilities were destroyed by fire. This loss was incurred despite the presence of fire-fighting equipment from six stations from Pictou and surrounding communities. It is an urgent matter and most important for the economic welfare of Pictou and other communities throughout Nova Scotia and, indeed, the Atlantic provinces, that the various structures and shipping facilities be re-established as early as possible. It is with this hope that I rise and ask the honourable Leader of the Government if he will bring this matter to the attention of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works, so that with their co-operation these shipping facilities may function again as early as possible. I make this request in support of representations that have been made by the member for Pictou constituency in the other house.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I believe this matter is already under consideration, but I will be glad to follow the suggestion of the honourable senator from Kings (Hon. Mr. McDonald).

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Thank you. There was also a waterfront fire at St. John's, Newfoundland, this morning. I do not know how serious it was. At last report I heard it was under control, but that one or more transit sheds had been destroyed.

CRIMINAL CODE BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John Hnatyshyn moved the second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Criminal Code.

He said: Honourable senators, it seems impossible to isolate the principle of this bill to be debated on second reading, for it consists of a number of detailed amendments to various sections of the Criminal Code. The bill lends itself more to a section-by-section examination in committee than to a debate in the house, and if and when it is given second reading I will be pleased to move that it be sent to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Therefore, in explaining the bill now I want to stress certain clauses only, and those that are procedural I will pass in a hurry. If I can be of any assistance in clarifying the various amended sections, I shall briefly comment on them. Many of the clauses are merely procedural and some others do not change the law but attempt to clarify it. It may be of interest to point out that the substantive main provisions in the bill are to be found in clauses 2 and 3, which are new and which provide for giving Canadian courts jurisdiction over indictable offences committed on board certain aircraft.

Clauses 11 and 12 provide a definition of obscenity. Clauses 27 and 31 provide time for payment of fines for indictable offences and summary convictions.

I intend to say more about these clauses when discussing the bill clause by clause, for I am sure honourable senators may wish to comment on some of them.

Clause 16, which is new, provides that a judge may prohibit a hit-and-run driver from further driving.

Clause 18, which also is new, provides that a news report of a preliminary inquiry published before an accused has been discharged, or the trial concluded, may not disclose an admission or confession made by the accused.

Clause 28 provides that the time spent by an accused in jail before trial is to be automatically counted in his sentence.

In most cases the amendments in this bill have been made as a result of requests from provincial Governments or of resolutions submitted by the Canadian Bar Association, or, in some instances, of submissions by the criminal law section of the Commissioners on Uniformity of Legislation.

May I also point out at this stage that the bill has been amended since first reading, when it had only 37 clauses. If any honourable senator has a bill containing only 37 clauses it is the wrong bill, for the present bill has 38 clauses.

Clause 1 is simply an amendment which would permit judges of the territorial courts to act as magistrates. This would permit them to try indictable offences under Part XVI of the Criminal Code and summary conviction cases under Part XXIV of the Code. The immediate need for this is that in the Northwest Territories there is a shortage of magistrates. This is only a procedural clause enabling the judges of the territorial courts to act as magistrates.

Clauses 2 and 3 should be taken together. Clause 3 provides for offences on aircraft. It is not intended as permanent legislation, but merely as stop-gap legislation to make provision for something that does not exist until such time as an international agreement can be reached making provision for offences on aircraft. Clause 2 adds to the definition of "peace officer" in paragraph 30 of section 2 of the act:

> The pilot in command of an aircraft registered in Canada . . . while that aircraft is in flight.

As I have stated, clause 2 should be read along with clause 3.

The effect of clause 3 is to give Canadian courts jurisdiction to try a person in respect of an act or omission (a) on board a Canadian aircraft within or without Canada, (b) on board any aircraft during a flight that ends in Canada, if the act or omission would have constituted an indictable offence if it had taken place in Canada.

As I have pointed out, this is only stop-gap legislation. When international agreement has been reached as to the jurisdiction each state should exercise, this part of the legislation will be repealed.

Clause 4. The effect of this amendment is to authorize the granting of bail on Sunday or a statutory holiday. There is some question if in many provinces this is not already possible, but it has not been statutory and in many provinces bail could not be granted on Sunday, with the result that anyone arrested late Saturday night or on Sunday has had to wait until Monday to obtain bail. This clause is, of course, only procedural and in no way varies the grounds on which bail may be granted.

Clause 5 is a substantive clause. This proposed amendment is to section 82, which at present makes it an offence to carry an offensive weapon for a purpose dangerous to the public peace or for the purpose of committing an offence, and would expand the section so as to make it an offence to carry an imitation of an offensive weapon for such purposes. There have been many crimes committed where the criminal used an imitation weapon that served the purpose of an automatic revolver. This clause makes it illegal to carry an imitation of an offensive weapon for such purposes.

Clause 6 is also substantive and extends to the lending of firearms. I assure honourable senators that they need not worry about lending their hunting guns, because those are not covered by this clause, which merely prohibits the lending of automatic weapons under certain circumstances. The effect of the proposed amendment is to extend section 90 (5) which prohibits the sale, barter or gift of a firearm, that is a pistol, revolver or automatic weapon, before it is registered or the subject of a permit in the name of the recipient, to the lending of such firearms in like circumstances.

Clause 7, which also is a substantive clause, extends the requirement to keep a record of firearms by persons in the business of repairing firearms. The effect of the proposed amendment is to extend the requirement in section 91(1) for a record of transactions in connection with pistols, receivers and automatic weapons to the business of repairing such firearms. At present section 91 (1) is confined to persons buying and selling such firearms at retail.

Clause 8 is merely procedural. The effect of the proposed amendment is to authorize the issue of a permit in Form 45 by a "local registrar of firearms".

Clauses 9 and 10 can be taken together. They are substantive clauses and are not in any way a change in the law. Their purpose is to clarify the application of subsection (3) of section 138, which sets out the circumstances under which the court may find not guilty a person accused of an offence under subsection (2) of section 138. Subsection (2) states that every male person who has sexual intercourse with a female person who is not his wife and is of previously chaste character and is under the age of 16 years is guilty of an indictable offence. Subsection (3) provides that the court may find the accused not guilty if the evidence does not show that the accused is wholly or chiefly to blame. The proposed amendment would substitute the expression "more to blame than the female person" for the expression "wholly or chiefly to blame". Attention has been drawn by judges to the interpretation of this section, and this clause is intended merely to clarify the law. The same applies to clause 10, which changes the same wording in subsection (2) of section 145.

Clauses 11 and 12 are perhaps the important clauses in this bill, or at least there has been more comment on them than on any other clauses. Their object is to provide a statutory extension of the definition of "obscenity", so as to make it perfectly clear that the law of obscenity does apply to certain types of objectionable material that now appears on the news-stands of Canada and is being sold to the young people in our country. Obscenity has never been defined in our Criminal Code. The courts have gone back to a common law ruling for the meaning of obscenity, a ruling which is almost 100 years old, as set out in the case of Rex V. Hicklin, in 1868, by the famous British Chief Justice Sir Alexander J. E. Cockburn. He said:

> I think the test of obscenity is this, whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscenity is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences and into whose hands a publication of this sort may fall.

Different interpretations can be placed upon a principle such as that. Even a layman can see how phrases like "tendency to deprave" and "those whose minds are open" might lead to a lot of wrangling. The definition in clause 11 widens the meaning of obscenity, and I think this definition will be capable of application with speed and certainty. The test will be: Does the publication complained of deal with sex, or sex and one or more of the other subjects named? And if so, is this its dominant characteristic? If so, does it exploit these subjects in an undue manner? This definition is gunning for muck on the news-stands, publications and periodicals making no pretence to literary merit and selling solely for their emphasis on sex and sex allied to violence, cruelty, horror and crime. There is no attempt to outlaw publications that have genuine literary, artistic or scientific merit.

The characteristic complained of must be the dominant characteristic. This will clearly exclude from the definition books that are otherwise meritorious but contain a passage which, if torn from the context, might be considered objectionable. The courts must look at the whole work and not at just an isolated passage.

Procedure is provided for in clause 12. This new procedure is what is described as procedure in rem. You issue a "show cause" summons against a certain periodical, not against an individual. If there is any accused, in such a case it will be the periodical. The onus remains on the Crown to prove that the periodical is obscene. Once that is determined, then of course it will be the duty of public enforcement officers to warn all dealers who may have on their stands any works which have been declared obscene. Any person who persists in selling them may be charged. But, according to the section, the charge may be laid against a retailer or any other person only with the consent of the Attorney General.

The idea is to provide a procedure to remove some of the objectionable trash and muck that appear on the news-stands today. The section already contains provisions for comic books and so on, but with this addition of the definition of obscenity in clause 11 a method is provided by which more of these objectionable periodicals that still remain on the news-stands may be removed. This procedure in rem is not new. Since 1867 there has been on the statute books of the United Kingdom an act which provides a method in rem for the removal of obscene magazines and periodicals from news-stands.

I think that the procedure outlined here provides a quick and relatively simple manner of bringing before the courts on the merits the issue of whether or not a particular publication is obscene. Under this procedure it is not necessary to lay a charge against anybody.

I now come to clause 13. This is merely a consequential clause; it provides a penalty for the breach of section 150B by inserting a reference to that section in the present penalty provision, section 154.

Clause 14 is a substantive amendment. All it does is to add "radio" to the means of transmitting betting information. Otherwise the section remains the same as it is now in the Code.

Clause 15 is procedural. Under this clause, it will not be necessary to call an analyst to testify as to drunkenness, for the certificate of the analyst will be prima facie evidence of the results of a chemical analysis. The identification will still have to be proved by the Crown.

Clause 16. The purpose of this amendment is to extend the powers of the court to prohibit a person convicted of certain offences from driving a motor vehicle anywhere in Canada during a period of disqualification arising out of a breach of the "hit and run" section of the Code, section 221 (2). At present a judge can so prohibit a person convicted of criminal negligent driving or drunken driving, but he could not so prohibit anyone convicted under section 221 (2). This amendment was recommended by the Crown Attorneys' Association of Ontario.

Clause 17 is procedural. It will allow a person who is in custody to plead guilty before a magistrate for an offence committed outside the territorial jurisdiction where he is being held in custody. At present a person being held as above described may plead guilty only to offences committed outside the province where he is being held in custody, but not to offences committed in the same province but outside the territorial jurisdiction where he is being held in custody.

Clause 18 would amend section 455, which provides that a prosecutor may give in evidence at a preliminary inquiry any admission or confession of the accused which is admissible by law. The effect of this proposed amendment is to prohibit publication of such admission or confession until the accused has been discharged or his trial concluded. The reason for this amendment is to avoid prejudice to the accused personally. That amendment applies only to publication of confessions made at preliminary hearings.

Clause 19 also is procedural. The effect of this amendment would be to permit a judge of the Territorial Court to sit as a magistrate and exercise the extended power given to a magistrate under Part XVI of the Criminal Code.

Clause 20, which also is procedural, means that a magistrate could, if it seemed to him advisable, decide not to exercise his absolute jurisdiction under section 467. As the law now stands, under section 469, if an accused has elected summary trial, and the magistrate decides that the trial should be by way of indictment, he can make it a preliminary hearing. This clause simply provides that in every case, even where the accused has not elected to be summarily tried, if the magistrate thinks the accused should be tried by way of preliminary hearing he has the right to decide so.

Clause 21, like clause 20, is procedural, and restores a provision that was in the former Code.

Clause 22. New Brunswick has decided to do away with grand juries, and requests this amendment be made. Similar legislation has already been passed in that province.

Clause 23 also deals with grand juries, and this is at the request of the province of Ontario. That province has passed legislation reducing the number of grand jurors from 13 to 7. This clause merely provides that a majority of the jury may find a verdict. This again is strictly procedural.

Clause 24 also is procedural and involves two amendments. The effect of the amendment to section 555 preceding paragraph (a) thereof is that, in addition to the evidence, the addresses of counsel shall be recorded. The amendment under paragraph (b) of that section gives permission for the taking of evidence by means of sound-recording apparatus where such is authorized by provincial legislation for use in civil cases. Some provinces have already used tape recorders and have enabling legislation providing that evidence so taken is admissible.

Clause 25 is procedural. It provides for the putting in of a certificate to prove a previous conviction.

Clause 26 is procedural. The effect of this amendment is to provide that addresses of counsel shall be transcribed and furnished to the court of appeal, if a ground for appeal is based upon either of the addresses. This amendment is consequential upon the proposed amendment to section 555, as set out in clause 24.

Clause 27 is one of the new clauses which I mentioned in my opening remarks. Its effect is to provide that a court which convicts an accused of an indictable offence and imposes a fine will have the power of a summary conviction court under section 694 to permit time for payment of the fine, subject to certain conditions set out in the section. This provision has existed with respect to a summary conviction, but not with respect to a conviction for an indictable offence. As the law now stands, the court has no power to authorize time for payment of the fine. Subclause 4 would grant this authority. Honourable senators will notice that the terminology in this subsection is permissive. The matter of granting time will still be within the discretion of the presiding magistrate. The idea behind this amendment is simply to see that nobody who is unable to pay a fine goes to jail for a debt. That, of course, does not mean that where an accused is in contempt of court, or is able to pay the fine, the magistrate should extend time for payment.

I should mention that clauses 27 and 31 should be read together.

Clause 28 simply changes the existing rule in the Code with respect to a person who is in jail awaiting the results of an appeal or awaiting trial. Upon the passage of this amendment the time he has spent in jail awaiting appeal will automatically count towards his sentence.

Clause 29 is procedural. It simply clarifies the present law. Under the present law, if an accused pays part of his fine his jail sentence is prorated. This clause makes it clear that after committal he can pay the balance of the fine, or a further sum on account of his fine; and he is also enabled to prorate his sentence, as far as spending time in gaol is concerned.

All that clause 30 does is to correct a typographical error in the present Code. It has no other significance.

Clause 31, like clause 27, deals with payment of fines.

The effect of clause 32 is to place a judge of the Municipal Court of the City of Montreal in the same position as a judge of the Sessions of the Peace with respect to a waiver of jurisdiction, by relieving him of the requirement of naming the summary conviction court in favour of which jurisdiction is waived. My understanding is that in many cases coming before magistrates in the province of Quebec the jurisdiction is waived, and very often no one is sure to which court the case may go. This amendment was proposed by Chief Municipal Judge Paquette and the Chief Solicitor in charge of the Municipal Court in the city of Montreal.

Paragraph (aa) of clause 33 provides that an appeal from a court of summary conviction in Newfoundland shall go to one judge of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland instead of two judges who constitute a quorum of the Supreme Court of that province. The other part of clause 33 relates to Prince Edward Island. It simply restates in identical terminology that an appeal from a court of summary jurisdiction in Prince Edward Island shall go to the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island.

Clause 34 is procedural. It makes it clear that the agent of the Attorney General may act instead of the Attorney General, thus clarifying the law and making it uniform throughout Canada.

Clause 35 simply puts back into the law a former provision of the Criminal Code. It is in regard to substitutional service, and simplifies the perfecting of appeals. It is procedural, and applies only in a case where the proper person to serve cannot be found. If a magistrate, let us say, dies or is out of the country, the County Court, or the District Court, as it is called in some provinces, can direct substitutional service. This applies also to the person who laid the charge, such as a constable. If he is not available the appeal court, which is the County Court or the District Court, can name someone else.

Paragraph (2) of clause 35 is also procedural. It allows an additional 30 days after the expiry of the original 30 days for serving and filing a notice of appeal. Up until now, this additional time was available only in the Northwest Territories.

Clause 36 is procedural. It allows a judge of the appeal court to set down for hearing an appeal from a summary conviction after the appellant has complied with the provisions of the Code concerning service and filing. The present provision requires that the appeal court shall set down the appeal for hearing.

Clause 37 is procedural. It exempts the agent of the Attorney General of Canada and the agent of the Attorney General of a province from providing security to cover the cost of an appeal from a summary conviction.

Clause 38 is procedural, its effect being to empower the court of appeal to order a new trial in respect of a summary conviction appeal. That power did not exist before.

That, honourable senators, is a brief outline of the proposed amendments to the Criminal Code. As I said before, if my motion for second reading is carried I will be pleased to move that this bill be sent to a committee.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, at this late hour I fancy that I should move adjournment of the debate rather than proceed to speak. I understand that the representative of the Governor General will be here at a quarter to six to give the royal assent to some bills. This bill is quite lengthy and full of detail, and I would not want to be rushed in my dealing with it.

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words in regard to this bill. I will not be very long. Maybe I could speak now, and the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) could proceed tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is agreeable.

(Translation):

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard: Honourable senators, I do not intend to deal with the whole Criminal Code Bill. It is a rather complicated bill and procedural questions are best discussed in committee.

I propose to discuss purely and simply sections 150, 150A and 150B concerning obscenity, which are being added to the Criminal Code.

We are all aware of the importance of these new provisions of the Criminal Code. They should have been placed therein a long time ago, and I believe the Government should be congratulated upon having taken a step in the right direction and having thus made a start in order to correct the most abnormal conditions existing in our country, whereby people who are not fit to be educators do in fact exercise upon our youth a most regrettable influence which undeniably tends to corrupt it.

I remember that we discussed this matter several years ago. A special Senate committee had been appointed, under the chairmanship of the Honourable Senator Davis. In its report, that committee underlined the dangers of obscene literature. Since then, the Government has been searching for ways to correct such a situation and to prevent the publication and sale of such unwholesome and corrupting literature.

Although the Government deserves congratulations with regard to the new sections 150A and 150B, I would like to comment upon their efficacy and application.

Under section 150, obscenity is defined as follows:

> For the purposes of this act, any publication a dominant characteristic of which is the undue exploitation of sex, or of sex and any one or more of the following subjects, namely, crime, horror, cruelty and violence, shall be deemed to be obscene.

I believe it is very difficult to give of obscenity a definition which covers all its characteristics and to set up remedial measures which are both objective and subjective.

This definition has been adopted elsewhere and judges have interpreted it and found it satisfactory. I am not proposing that it be changed, but I would like to point out that it will not prevent reviews and magazines which carry several articles from publishing obscene, unwholesome and immoral material because, in such case, the dominant characteristic of the publication is not the obscene article, since it is the only one out of ten or twelve; therefore, such material not being the dominant characteristic, it is undeniable that reviews and magazines cannot be found guilty of obscenity for the sake of one or two articles appearing therein.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: May I be allowed to point out that according to the amendment made yesterday, the word "a" dominant characteristic has been substituted for "the" dominant characteristic.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: In my opinion, it makes no difference; if in a publication containing eight, ten or twelve articles on science, medicine, finance or sport, you slip in an immoral or obscene one, the latter article cannot be considered as a dominant characteristic. You may find in a book which treats predominantly of medecine or literature an obscene article, which it would be very difficult to consider as the dominant characteristic of the book. Well, where you have one immoral or obscene article out of eight or ten in a magazine, I feel this definition of obscenity will not be sufficient to allow the banning of the magazine as obscene.

In France today, as in other countries, you find volumes containing the entire production of an author. Some of these books, which run to one thousand or fifteen hundred pages, contain all the works of an author, one of which may be absolutely immoral. But, as this is not the dominant characteristic of the book, I do not think it could be judged to be obscene because of the obscenity which appears in some of its pages.

The difficulty might easily be removed by providing that if a book dealing with several subjects contained any forms of obscenity mentioned in article 150, the whole book could be declared immoral or obscene. In this way, there would be no doubt whatever that the magazines and publications against which section 150 is directed would come under that section.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Is there a definition of the word "publication"?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: No, there is none in the new amendments. I believe these publications include photographs and accompanying material. Some books, published by editors who are not over-scrupulous, carry on the cover a picture which is obviously obscene. Will that come under section 150? I do not think so. In my opinion, pictures which may appear in a magazine or publication or on the cover thereof do not come under the purview of section 150.

I suggest that section 150 should be amended so that, if any part of a publication or book dealing with several subjects includes one which is manifestly obscene according to section 150, the whole work could be banned; thus it would extend to such books, or publications which include several articles, as well as to objectionable covers.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That should be discussed in committee.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I believe it should be discussed in committee, if we want to be able to convict these magazines and publications which give rise to most of the complaints as well as such works as pocket books, cheap editions which are sold on news-stands, the covers of which are manifestly unwholesome.

The second point to which I would like to draw the attention of the Senate is the following. The procedure provided is new. It is sufficient, I believe, to produce an affidavit before a judge of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec to the effect that, in the opinion of the person producing such affidavit, the book is unwholesome. And then, what happens? Let us refer to section 150A(2)

> Within seven days of the issue of the warrant, the judge shall issue a summons to the occupier of the premises requiring him to appear before the court and show cause why the matter seized should not be forfeited to Her Majesty.

And paragraph 3 says:

> The owner and the author of the matter seized and alleged to be obscene or a crime comic may appear and be represented in the proceedings in order to oppose the making of an order for the forfeiture of the said matter.

That is called an ad rem procedure. And so it is, up to a certain point. Why is a summons issued? Why not proceed in the following manner: when a book is submitted to a judge as being immoral, why would it not be sufficient for a judge to have his decision printed in the official Gazette, to the effect that such a book was seized at such a place, and asking all concerned to appear in court to express their opinion? This would include authors, printers, and distributors who are only too happy to distribute obscene books through news-stands and bookshops throughout Canada. The invitation would be extended to all interested parties, authors, printers or distributors, who could all come before the judge and show, if necessary, that the publication is not obscene.

What is going to happen under this procedure? Let us have no illusions. Suppose that in the province of Quebec, in the Gaspé district, for instance, publications are seized. What happens next? The judge summons the local distributor. I might say that in Gaspé the Superior Court sits only once or twice a year. Imagine the delay. Then again, the book is seized only in Gaspé and it cannot be seized elsewhere in Canada except with the permission of the Attorney General of the province. In my opinion, such a procedure will lead nowhere. Because the seizure was made in Gaspé, it cannot be made in Quebec, or Montreal or elsewhere without special permission from the Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Why?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Because section 150A(7) of the act says so.

> Where an order has been made under this section by a judge in a province with respect to one or more copies of a publication, no proceedings shall be instituted or continued in that province under section 150 with respect to those or other copies of the same publication without the consent of the Attorney General.

Well, I say that when you have made a seizure in one place in the province, you cannot make another anywhere else in the province.

Thousands of copies of the publication may have been distributed throughout the province, but only at one place can they be seized and removed. I say that the authors will deliberately have them seized in some remote district so that they can be distributed in the other districts of the province. There is nothing anyone can do. The Attorney General is not going to issue four or five thousand warrants in the province. The procedure is not realistic. The practical way would be to publish in the official Gazette a notice of seizure and to give the Attorney General the right to prohibit publication and distribution of the book for a definite period or until judgment is rendered. That is the only practical way, if we want to do away with these objectionable books to be found on the stands. What difference can it make to a publication issued every week or every month when there is a seizure at Gaspé but nowhere else? As judgment will not be given before a couple of years, distribution will go on unhampered.

Let us be practical and let the Attorney General, through the official Gazette, prohibit the distribution or possession for sale of books which have been seized anywhere in the province because of their obscene nature. He would not have to make a seizure but he could do so if he believed that it was in the interest of the people and of public morality. Under the proposed procedure, these publications could be sold in all the book-stalls of the province where no seizure had taken place. There may be four, five, ten thousand copies. I submit that such a procedure would be more realistic than the one proposed in this bill.

That, honourable senators, is all I had to say on this subject, which is of vital importance. If we really mean to fight obscene literature, we need a practical measure under which action can be taken rapidly. We would thus, in a very short time, put a stop to the distribution of obscene publications in Canada, and that is what we want to do. The committee should amend the act in such a way as to stop the sale of this subversive literature which is so harmful to our youth. Let us act before its corrupting influence has gone too far.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Just a word. According to your argument, it would seem that the act would give the opposite results to what is expected of it. Because if a seizure is made in Gaspé, it will be used as publicity to sell such obscene literature everywhere else in the province.

(Text):

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.40 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Patrick Kerwin, P. C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act for the relief of Maurice Castonguay.

An Act for the relief of Iris Marion Saunders Robbins.

An Act for the relief of Eleonora Dudarowa Shukoff.

An Act for the relief of Jeannette Belanger Ross.

An Act for the relief of Evelyn Isbitsky Goldenberg.

An Act for the relief of Salla Weisman Stopnicki, otherewise known as Sally Weisman Stopnicki.

An Act for the relief of Ovila Rivet.

An Act for the relief of Bella Valinsky Segal.

An Act for the relief of Alexander Pavlovich.

An Act for the relief of Catherine Anne Gillis Roper.

An Act for the relief of John Robertson Low.

An Act for the relief of Barbara Ann Foam Armstrong, otherwise known as Barbara Ann Foam Copan.

An Act for the relief of Ruth Mary Morgenstern Usher.

An Act for the relief of Eddie Ronald Joe Willard.

An Act for the relief of Michel Alphonse Dubois.

An Act for the relief of Phyllis Ann Applebaum Isenberg.

An Act for the relief of Zita May Pardoe McCall.

An Act for the relief of Monique Andree Seguin Tyson.

An Act for the relief of Bertha Sylvia Berman Maxwell.

An Act for the relief of Margery Fletcher Dennis Phillips.

An Act for the relief of Margaret Helen Dawson MacKenzie.

An Act for the relief of Eleanor Gwyneth Henley Norman.

An Act for the relief of Marie Pauline Primeau Landreville.

An Act for the relief of Ellen Wilk Tuke.

An Act for the relief of Rhoda Lillian Rabinovitch Katchan.

An Act for the relief of Roger Myre.

An Act for the relief of Lee Dacks Moscovitch.

An Act for the relief of Lillian Goldbloom Howard.

An Act for the relief of Giovanni Cavallero.

An Act for the relief of Lorna Frances Hutchinson Kerr.

An Act for the relief of Jessie Balfour Mains McCartney Manson.

An Act for the relief of Guy Charbonneau.

An Act for the relief of Meade Alexander Morgan.

An Act for the relief of Carol May Campbell Williams.

An Act for the relief of Adela Hawthorne Pattison.

An Act for the relief of Samuel Currie Millar.

An Act for the relief of Helen Mary Margeson Ransome Scudamore.

An Act for the relief of Claire Anna Theresa Verdon Monette.

An Act for the relief of Constance Edna Medcalfe Blood.

An Act for the relief of Norma Margaret Martin Raymo.

An Act for the relief of Audrey Barrasford Milburn.

An Act for the relief of Sandra Stoll Goldenberg.

An Act for the relief of Edith May Driscoll Jeffrey.

An Act for the relief of Joyce Ethel Commerford Brewster.

An Act for the relief of Hirsch Glaser.

An Act for the relief of Maria Gagne Cote.

An Act for the relief of Gail Patricia Northrup Brazauckas.

An Act for the relief of Gilbert Forest.

An Act for the relief of Yvon Poulin.

An Act for the relief of Karl Wilhelm Oskar Bartels.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Aime Paul Guy Genest.

An Act for the relief of Allan Ray Wright.

An Act for the relief of Michael Kalabiha.

An Act for the relief of Joyce Ann Breaker Lee.

An Act for the relief of Zina Goffman Filler.

An Act for the relief of Omula Karnitis Rakauskas.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Bernard Alberia Gustave Lahaise.

An Act for the relief of Michael Palangio.

An Act for the relief of Grace Evelyn Heggtveit Richter.

An Act for the relief of Ross Kevin Ladd.

An Act for the relief of Georgina Horne Parsons.

An Act for the relief of Esther Paula Beernaert Martindale.

An Act for the relief of Audrey Bruce Laborgne.

An Act for the relief of Timothy Allan Moran.

An Act for the relief of Antonio Choma.

An Act for the relief of Helen Ruby Riley Onions.

An Act for the relief of Simone Alberta Chretien Welsh.

An Act for the relief of Edward John Mendelsohn.

An Act for the relief of Marcus Gilmour.

An Act for the relief of Joyce Rosemary Hudson Plam.

An Act for the relief of Bernard Lawrence Boire.

An Act for the relief of Marie Madeleine Marielle Faust Morin.

An Act for the relief of Ruth Georgina Potts Dobie.

An Act for the relief of Patricia Burnell Fraser Rosensweig.

An Act for the relief of Dawn Jean McKenzie Barr.

An Act for the relief of Helen Ann Kovach Ujvary.

An Act for the relief of David Scott Brown.

An Act for the relief of Doris Margaret Turner Smiley.

An Act for the relief of Angelo Ciamarro.

An Act for the relief of Gustave Rene Gosselin.

An Act for the relief of Marie Berthe Jeannine Quesnel Patenaude.

An Act for the relief of Mary Athanas Copis.

An Act for the relief of Greta Libenstein Goldfeder.

An Act for the relief of Andre Maurice Petit.

An Act for the relief of Jean Huard DeRoberval.

An Act for the relief of Juanita Patricia Hamilton Long.

An Act for the relief of Benjamin Gordon Davidson.

An Act for the relief of Margaret Isabella MacKellar Thomas.

An Act for the relief of Philip Joseph Kelly.

An Act to amend the Judges Act.

An Act to make provision for the reduction of certain class and commodity rates on freight traffic.

An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act.

An Act respecting The Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Prince Rupert.

An Act to amend the Prime Minister's Residence Act.

An Act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act.

An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

An Act to implement a convention between Canada and the Republic of Finland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

An Act respecting the testing, inspection and sale of seeds.

An Act to mark the occasion of Her Majesty's visit to Canada by providing for the establishment and administration of a Fund to Aid in Research on the Diseases of Children.

An Act to amend the Length and Mass Units Act.

An Act to amend the Weights and Measures Act.

An Act to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

An Act to incorporate The Free Methodist Church in Canada.

An Act to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

An Act respecting the adjustment of certain public service pensions.

An Act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System for the period from the 1st day of January, 1959, to the 30th day of June, 1960, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

An Act to amend the Veterans' Land Act.

An Act respecting the superannuation of members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

An Act respecting the superannuation of members of the Canadian Forces.

An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 9, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following:

Report of the Auditor General on the audit of the accounts of the National Capital Commission for the year ended March 31, 1959, together with the financial statements for the year, pursuant to section 87 of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952. (English text).

CRIMINAL CODE BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn for the second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I think my first words in addressing myself to this bill should be to congratulate the honourable senator from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn) upon the very excellent service he rendered yesterday afternoon in laying before his fellow senators the facts concerning this piece of legislation. The senator from Saskatoon is a comparatively new member of our body—this is his first session—but he has already established a reputation among us for his knowledge of our rules and practices. He is a member of a standing committee of which I have the honour to be chairman, and I value very highly his presence and services on that committee.

The honourable senator said that in a bill of this kind it is difficult to find some general principle that we should discuss on second reading, but that instead we have to consider a long succession of individual sections. While that is so, there is nevertheless a general principle that runs through all legislation of this character. I may say, somewhat jocularly, that we are all opposed to sin and on the side of righteousness. That is the general idea of the Criminal Code. Moreover, do not forget that the Criminal Code is a great charter of human freedom and liberty. In that regard, it is unfortunate that it is phrased in the negative from the first section to the last. "Thou shalt not . . ." is the tenor of each one of the sections. But, of course, when we say "Thou shalt not steal" we also say that the citizens of Canada shall not be stolen from. We have set it up as a right that the citizen may live in a society without having any of his belongings pilfered by his neighbours. When we say "Thou shalt not murder," we are in effect saying that the citizen of Canada has a right to live without being murdered and we will take such steps as we can to protect him in that respect.

So the Criminal Code is a great statement of human rights and security, assuring the citizen the right to live in peace and amity with his neighbours and to live out his life as a good citizen. It is a principle that runs through this bill in a general way, and one that we can discuss on second reading. We in this house will take care of the detail to the extent of our ability to do so.

Much of the bill before us deals with procedural matters and requires no discussion on second reading, although that part should be carefully reviewed in committee, as I am sure it will be. There are, however, a number of clauses in the bill which I think are open to comment of some kind, and upon which I would like to make some observations.

The first that comes to my attention is clause 3, which deals with offences committed on aircraft, including such a crime as murder in the air. This clause in the bill recognizes, for the first time, I think, the right of Canada to enact criminal legislation of an extra-territorial character. When the British North America Act was passed Canada was given very limited territorial jurisdiction. It was thought at that time by the best informed lawyers here that our jurisdiction was limited to Canada and the three-mile limit, and it was for that reason that we enacted the peculiar sections in the Code with regard to bigamy. We thought that we did not have the right to legislate against bigamy committed abroad. The imperial Parliament did have that right, and bigamy committed in France, for instance, by a British citizen could be prosecuted in England, and was frequently prosecuted. We felt we had not the power or the jurisdiction to legislate against bigamy committed in, say, the United States, yet when Canadian citizens went to the United States for the very purpose of committing bigamy they were doing something which was repugnant to Canadian citizens. So we made it a crime to leave Canada for the purpose of committing bigamy abroad.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Statute of Westminster has been in effect since 1931 we have never changed that legislation, although I am sure we could. We let it stand in that way because it worked. This clause, honourable senators, does purport to legislate with respect to a crime committed abroad by a citizen of Canada who boards an aeroplane, passes over the borders of Canada and commits an offence elsewhere; or an offence committed by any person, Canadian citizen or otherwise, upon an aeroplane bound for Canada and which terminates its flight in Canada. It is perfectly obvious that it is morally right for us to legislate in that regard.

Honourable senators, I entirely approve of this clause. I do not think there should be any debate whatsoever in connection with it. We should pass it. If by chance it is found that in passing it we have exceeded our territorial jurisdiction then, of course, the courts can tell us so.

The next is clause 4, under which power is to be given to the proper authorities to grant bail on Sundays and statutory holidays. I am not aware that in my city of Toronto people have been kept in jail over a Sunday because of lack of such power.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: They have in Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Whether or not that has happened in Toronto or in Saskatchewan, it seems to me it is very salutary indeed that we should pass this legislation. Honourable senators will remember the parable of the man who pulled an animal out of a pit on the Sabbath. It was said that the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath. If a person is in jail and not yet convicted, it is right that he should be admitted to bail immediately, whether on the Sabbath or not. If the police can arrest on the Sabbath, I think we can grant bail on the Sabbath. As a matter of fact, bail is a very important feature of our criminal administration. One will find in the Bill of Rights of William and Mary a provision that inordinate bail shall not be imposed, thus recognizing the right of the individual to bail until he has been proven guilty of charges laid against him.

I would say a word about clause 5. It has to do with possession of imitation weapons. A person carrying a toy pistol enters, say, a bank, store or service station and demands money at the point of such instrument. There has been no legislation against that except in so far as it has been considered a threat of violence, an attempt at robbery, and so forth. But now there is to be a specific ban against using an imitation of a deadly weapon for extortion or some other such purpose. I suppose we will carry this provision unanimously.

In clause 6 there is a provision requiring registration of the passing of a firearm by loan, as there now is in the case of the purchase or gift of a firearm. This is a very dangerous thing to lend at any time. I remember an old saying that a man should not lend his dog, his gun or his wife. It is a very sound proposition. One who lends a gun takes a great responsibility. Although this clause may cause some difficulty in the matter of registering firearms that are being lent by one person to another, I think it is a very good provision.

Clause 9 is not quite so clear. It has to do with carnal knowledge of a female child between 14 and 16 years of age. Apparently some difficulty has been encountered in our courts because in the past the section has required the prosecution to show the accused male was wholly or chiefly to blame. I see in the explanatory notes to the bill a reference to the case of Regina v. Wiberg (1955), 113 C.C.C. 257, in which case a judge says:

> —if the trial judge was of opinion that the accused was "chiefly to blame", he could not acquit him, but the interpretation involves consideration whether he could, in arriving at such conclusion, ignore the effect of the words "wholly to blame". I think not. In my view, the two expressions are so related that "chiefly to blame" is restrained in its meaning by the use of the words "wholly to blame" to the extent that the degree of blame of which the accused must be guilty is greater than that of being merely more to blame than the girl seduced.

So as to meet that objection from the bench, we are proposing to change the words "the accused is wholly or chiefly to blame" to read, "the accused is more to blame than the female person". Perhaps that would improve the section; I do not know. However, it does raise in my mind the question as to how much blame an adult man would incur in having carnal knowledge of a child of 14 to 16 years of age. If there is any blame, I do not know why he should be acquitted. It may be that both are to blame, but that does not in any way affect the person accused. If the young woman is to blame, she may be dealt with, but she is not under consideration except as a witness or as a victim, when an accusation is laid in court under this section. The section might very well be reconsidered, not just to clarify it, as perhaps has been done to some extent in saying that the man must be more to blame than the female, but I think it would be better to say that the relative degrees of blame may be assessed by the court, and if there is any blame found on the part of the man, then the accused should not be acquitted; he should be convicted of something.

Clause 10 has reference to carnal knowledge of a young woman between 16 and 21 years of age. What I have said with regard to the previous clause applies here as well.

Honourable senators, we now come to the very much discussed clause with regard to obscenity. I do not wonder that it has been as much discussed as criticized. May I commence my remarks in regard to this particular clause by making some general observations? The first is that great caution should always be exercised in drafting legislation which interferes with freedom of speech and freedom of publication. I say that great care should be exercised. I do not say that we should not legislate, but we should do so with the utmost caution, otherwise we run the risk of laying the foundation of that official domination over thought and expression which is the curse of some countries with which we are familiar. On the other hand, freedom of expression and freedom of publication must not be allowed to become a matter of licence. Freedom must always be exercised with judgment and care by those who are free, lest they interfere with the equal rights of their fellow men. But gag law of any kind has no place in a democratic society. Censorship of literature can be made to mitigate against the thinking processes of the community. Legislation against freedom of speech and publication in an attempt to curb certain evils may easily create evils greater than those sought to be suppressed. So, while I am not denouncing all regulation of speech and publication, I say that great care should be exercised by the drafters of legislation designed for that purpose. Suppressive laws administered by bigots, by busybodies, and by over-zealous policemen can do a very great deal of harm in any community. Honourable senators, with that approach to the subject, which I trust you have understood and not misunderstood, let me say that we are all opposed to obscenity. There is no argument among us in that regard. We are all prepared to do what we can to suppress obscene literature according to each one's definition of that matter.

This is not the first time by any means that legislation of this kind has come before this chamber. We have most stringent laws with regard to obscenity on the statutes now. I will read from section 150 of the Criminal Code—not all of it, because there is a good deal on this subject. The opening sentence reads as follows:

> Every one commits an offence who (a) makes, prints, publishes, distributes, circulates, or has in his possession for the purpose of publication, distribution or circulation any obscene written matter, picture, model, phonographic record or other thing whatsoever,—

That is very sweeping—"any obscene written matter". Observe that so far there is no definition of what is obscene or what obscenity means; but farther down the section goes on to say:

> No person shall be convicted of an offence under this section if he establishes that the public good was served by the acts that are alleged to constitute the offence and that the acts alleged did not extend beyond what served the public good.

We have had a good deal of experience with this legislation regarding obscenity and the effort to suppress that which is evil while not suppressing that which is not evil or sufficiently evil to justify communal action. I refer, as did my friend from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn), to the definition of obscenity in the case of Rex V. Hicklin (1868), 3 Queen's Bench Reports, 360, at 371. It has been read but it is only a sentence and I shall read it again, because this is the outstanding definition of obscenity recognized in our courts and I think it is well worthy of consideration. The judge says:

> I think the test of obscenity is this, whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscenity is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences and into whose hands a publication of this sort might fall.

Note the tremendously wide and sweeping character of that statement. It is a statement with which we can all agree. That which is obscene is what may deprave or corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences and into whose hands a publication of this sort might fall.

That would cover sex and many other things besides sex, because all sex is not obscene nor indeed is all obscenity sexual. There is much else besides sex that may be exceedingly obscene.

There is another reference that I would like to make. It is a very well-known case in the United States District Court of New York City—this, I know, is not Canadian law, but I would like to observe that we in Canada are coming to consider American law much more frequently and to hold it in much greater respect in recent years than we did in the past. American decisions are being quoted in our courts much more freely than they were some years ago. In this case Judge Woolsey made this statement: > —Of course, in any case, where a book is claimed to be obscene it must first be determined whether the intent with which it was written was what is called, according to the usual phrase, pornographic, that is, written for the purpose of exploiting obscenity.

I call your attention particularly to this phrase "exploiting obscenity"—not exploiting sex, but exploiting obscenity, which, as I just said, may be sexual or may not be sexual.

May I once again observe that there is no attempt in our statutory law to define obscenity. That in the past has been left to the good sense of judges and jurors, and I think the authority which I have quoted would seem to indicate that leaving it to the court was not a mistake.

Honourable senators, if there is in circulation in Canada, as I expect there is, a large amount of literature which some people regard as obscene, the fault lies not in the comprehensive character of our statutory enactments or their interpretation in the courts, but rather in lack of action by those who are charged with the duty of enforcement. It may be, of course, that the critics have not always succeeded in marshalling public opinion behind them—that is to say, the opinion of the mass of our citizens. There are a good many people who regard those who would travel from gallery to gallery pinning fig leaves on nudes and statues as prudes and busybodies. Perhaps they are right.

Now let me return to the bill. This is the wording of the proposed amendment:

11. Section 150 of the said act is amended by adding thereto, immediately after subsection (7) thereof, the following subsection:

"(8) For the purposes of this act, any publication a dominant characteristic of which is the undue exploitation of sex, or of sex and any one or more of the following subjects, namely, crime, horror, cruelty and violence, shall be deemed to be obscene."

You will notice, gentlemen, that it does not talk about exploiting obscenity. It talks about exploiting sex.

Now the definition of "exploiting", according to the dictionary, is "making use of" or "obtaining the value of". That is exploiting. But what is wrong with making use of sex, even in a book? Every novel that I have ever read makes use of sex from page one to the very last chapter, in which we are told that the young couple lived happily ever after. If the author does not make use of sex pretty much all the way through the book, the book is no good as a novel and it will not be read. What is the matter with sex?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Are you going to refer to the word "undue"?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What is undue sex? I will come to that in a moment. Just give me time.

It is not necessary that sex be dominant to make it objectionable. If the reference to sex is of a character that it would deprave and corrupt, it does not make any difference whether it is dominant in the book or whether it is, as usual, found on just two or three pages and the balance quite inoffensive.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Would the honourable senator permit a question? Would the honourable senator concede that this definition does not supersede the definition given by Judge Cockburn in the case of Rex v. Hicklin?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, I do not concede that. I am going to come to that in a few minutes, because I think we should make it fully clear when we come to consider this in committee that this is an addition to, and not a substitution for, the law we already have. But there is nothing in the section that says that. That is left to be assumed and it may possibly be so assumed by the courts, and it may not. We should take no chances on that point.

My next observation is that in my judgment the drafters of this clause have made the mistake of failing to distinguish between sex and obscenity. Whether sex comes in small doses or big doses, sex is not obscene. Sex is perfectly clean and around it clusters the highest ideals and the purest sentiments. I do not care whether the whole book is full of it or just one page, sex is perfectly all right. I do not suppose anybody in Canada has had more to do with sex questions than I have in the last six months. We have tried no less than 360 divorce cases, in which sex has been discussed with the utmost frankness and freedom. Has it affected us? Why, not at all. Sex is clean; sex should be open to discussion, because it is one of the great master principles that govern the human race, and the animal kingdom and the vegetable kingdom as well. Sex runs through our entire living structure. It is in the mind of everyone practically all the time. So let us not legislate against sex, whether it be in large or small quantities, whether it be dominant or subservient.

What we should be legislating against is the perversion of sex. What is objectionable is the perversion of the sex principle in human life. The cleanliness of sex does not depend upon quantity or dominance. The attitude of the speaker, the surrounding circumstances, a mere inflection of the voice, a laugh or a leer, and something that would otherwise be perfectly sweet and clean becomes dirty, foul and disgusting. That is why it is so difficult to draw distinctions in written documents between what is clean and what is obscene.

I have already made the comment that not all sex is obscene, and not all obscenity is sexual. Yet, in the definition in this bill all else but sex is excluded. Anything which corrupts is obscene, and should be legislated against to the extent of our ability to control it. Murder and brutality may become obscene when described in publications or by pictures. I sometimes shudder when I see my little grandchildren with their eyes glued to the television, watching a western story of murder and rapine, with cruelty and brutality exhibited realistically. I shudder at the thought of little children becoming enured to violence and brutality and having imprinted on their minds a world of lurid unreality. Is that not obscenity? Of course it is, and it should be included in any definition of obscenity although it does not involve sex at all. The definition uses the words:

—or of sex and any one or more of the following subjects, namely crime, horror, cruelty and violence—

Why is it necessary to associate sex with any one of those things to make them obscene and such that we should legislate against them?

My honourable friend from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn) asked whether this provision adds to the law of Canada as expressed in the Criminal Code, or whether it takes the place of law already enacted. Plainly, I do not know. The subsection reads "For the purposes of this act..." and then follows what seems to be an all-inclusive definition of obscenity in our legislation. I do not think that was intended by the drafters of the bill. But this clause in the bill is badly drawn, and shows lack of thought and consideration, and it may well be that such was the intention of the drafters. Whether it was or was not, we should never let it get by us, so as to set aside the legislation which has already been enacted and which has been fairly successfully administered for a considerable number of years.

Let me read section 11 again:

For the purposes of this act, any publication a dominant characteristic of which is the undue exploitation of sex, or of sex and any one or more of the following subjects, namely, crime, horror, cruelty and violence, shall be deemed to be obscene.

Honourable senators, it is obvious from the reading of that subsection that the exploitation of sex, or of sex with any one or more of the enumerated subjects, is to be quite all right. It is when it is "undue" that it becomes a criminal act under this subsection. It is a matter for the judge and jury to determine, as to whether it is or is not undue.

So, the definition defines almost nothing. It leaves us very much in the place where we were before, except that it muddies the water; it has made it more difficult to understand, rather than clarifying the subject. It leaves the question to the judge to say what is undue in the matter of sex.

My chief criticism of this subclause is not the difficulties that it places upon the courts, but rather the wrong conception that one finds in it. The drafters have substituted "sex" for "obscenity". Obscenity is much broader than sex. It now becomes a question of determining what is "undue" exploitation of sex. We have to go through all the court proceedings again to get definitions such as I have read to you—to find out what is "exploitation" of sex, and what use of sex is "undue". My own thought is that no matter how great the use may be, sex is still clean and sweet so long as it is not perverted. It is perversion that we should be legislating against, not sex in the shallow description given in this clause.

I am sure this question will be further discussed in committee, and I hope clarified. For my own part, I think the law as it stands would be better left alone. This proposed amendment does not help us. Indeed, it does exactly the reverse: it muddies instead of clarifying the waters.

While my criticism of the section is severe I still compliment the minister on the attempt he has made to clarify the subject. He has not been successful; I think he has been unsuccessful, but I compliment him on the effort he has made, and I think that we in this mature chamber, who know something about the subject, would do well to report it back to him for further thought and consideration. That is all I have to say on that subject.

There are a few more clauses. They are not so important or very interesting. In clause 14 the transmission of information in regard to book-making, pool-selling, betting and that sort of thing by radio is made an offence. The word "radio" is added to the words "telegraph, telephone, mail or express". That is merely bringing us up to date. Radio is becoming more and more important, and so is television. I do not know why the word "television" was not added as well. Television is becoming more and more important as a means of communication, and we should include it.

In clause 15 there is a provision in regard to the very much discussed use of chemical analysis, particularly with respect to cases of drunken or impaired driving. This proposed new subsection reads:

In any proceedings under section 222

That is the section which deals with driving while intoxicated.

or 223

That is the section dealing with driving a motor car while one's ability to drive is impaired.

—a certificate purporting to be signed by an analyst stating that he has performed a chemical analysis on the blood, urine, breath or other bodily substance of a person and stating the results of his analysis or examination is prima facie evidence of the facts stated in the certificate without proof of the signature or the official character of the person by whom it purports to be signed.

That is not an unusual provision. A document of that kind when laid before a court is accepted as prima facie evidence unless it is attacked by the opposite party, and, in order that the opposite party may have the opportunity of attacking, he must be served with a copy of it seven days before the opening of the trial. That is all right, but it does seem to me that the official character of the person who signs the analysis should be stated in the document. The only person who has a right to sign such a document is somebody designated as such by the Attorney General of a province in which the prosecution takes place, and I think we should add to that that his official character shall be stated in the document as well as the appending of his signature. It would do no harm, and it might help to prevent fraud.

There is a provision here making it illegal for a newspaper to publish an admission or confession made public in a preliminary inquiry. With that I am heartily in accord. Confessions have caused us more trouble than any other single incident in the tracking down and convicting of persons accused of committing crimes. It may be that a confession which is heard at a preliminary inquiry will not be admitted at the trial. It may be inadmissible as evidence and yet accepted by a magistrate at a preliminary inquiry. I heartily approve of this clause which provides that a confession or admission shall not be published, because if published it may remain in the minds of those who later become jurors, and although it is not admissible it may actually play an unseen though unspoken part in the trial.

This raises in my mind the whole question of confessions. I do think the time has come when we should prohibit the use of confessions secured from people after they have been arrested. This type of confession is most questionable. The person who is said to have made the confession often claims that his admissions have been forced from him, and the police almost invariably deny that any pressure was applied. Just how much pressure was applied, if any, none of us can know. I think we should say to the police: "If you are going to use a confession, let it be secured before you have the subject of the confession in your power and under your control". It would be salutary to do that. However, that is not in this bill.

There is a revision here which allows the magistrate to determine that a case should be tried by indictment—that is, before one of the superior courts—at any time before the defence has been entered upon. In the past, the magistrate used to be able to do that with respect to both indictable offences and summary conviction offences, but there was some change in the Code, as I understand it, which left the magistrate with this power only in regard to summary conviction offences, and took it away in regard to indictable offences. I see no reason for doing that, and I believe it is right to restore that power to the magistrate, as is being done in this bill. Clause 24 raises a question which we are going to have to consider here and elsewhere. It reads:

> On the trial of an accused for an indictable offence the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecutor and the accused and the addresses of the prosecutor and the accused or counsel for the accused by way of summing up shall be taken.

That has not been the practice in the past in our criminal courts. I know in my own practice I have encountered great difficulty in that regard. I remember one particular case that I was defending where the Crown counsel made a statement to the jury which to my mind was entirely improper, and upon which I later appealed to the Court of Appeal. As soon as he made the statement, I asked that it be taken down, but the judge replied that the court reporter was under no obligation to take it down, and in fact he did not do so. The result was that I had to try to prove in the Superior Court the expression used by the Crown prosecutor by way of affidavits given me by those who heard the statement. That is all wrong. The addresses of the prosecutor, the judge and the defence counsel are all part of the trial and should all be made of record. I therefore approve of this provision very highly.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: Are those addresses not reported in the Exchequer Court and in the Supreme Court?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: They may be reported in the Exchequer Court, but not in the Supreme Court, the trial court. Perhaps I am out of date, but if something has been changed in that regard I have not heard of it.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I am still practising law and I can assure my honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) that the addresses are not taken down in the Supreme Court.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It is usually done on request.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Usually, but not always, and sometimes the request is refused, as it was in my case. I approve of this amendment. Let the addresses be taken down. Then we come to the difficulty of the availability of stenographers who are capable of this work. Honourable senators, all the courts are not so fortunate as we are in having very highly trained and skilful reporters. We have men quite capable of taking down, anything, but it is not so throughout the dominion of Canada. So there is this further provision, that the addresses of the prosecutor and the accused or counsel for the accused by way of summing up shall be taken:

> (a) by a stenographer in accordance with the provisions of Part XV relating to the taking of evidence by stenographers at preliminary inquiries,—

That is all right when you have such a person capable of doing it—

(b) in a province where a sound recording apparatus is authorized by or under provincial legislation for use in civil cases, by the type of apparatus so authorized and in accordance with the requirements of the provincial legislation.

That introduces for the first time the use of mechanical means for the recording of evidence. I feel that owing to the decline in the number of men capable of reporting evidence and the increase in the number of trials being held, together with the lack of enthusiasm on the part of young men to surmount the difficulties of shorthand, something of this nature must be done. It does seem to me that any record of a court or of a legislative chamber such as this must be strained through the mind of a trained hearer so that he may exclude things that are of no value and put in order things that are of value. You cannot get away from the human factor in the making of a record of this kind.

Honourable senators, before closing I would like to revert to the question of obscenity. There is a provision here that is exceedingly good: a publication which is considered by the authorities to be obscene may be seized and taken before a court where the question of whether or not it is obscene may be decided by persons capable of so doing. That is good, for when an allegedly obscene article comes before the courts in the ordinary way there are two questions to be decided. First, the character of the article and, second, the culpability of the person in whose possession it was found. When you put the article on trial you separate that from considerations with regard to the guilt of the accused. If you determine that it is obscene, then the individual who had it in his control has been given a warning. Usually that will be all that is needed. I think this will be a most useful addition to our law in regard to obscenity.

There is just one other matter I wish to deal with, and I shall then thank you for the patience with which you have heard me. I refer to the giving of time for the payment of fines. That is a reform long overdue.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I agree.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) agrees with me. No doubt he too has had some experience in the criminal courts where fines were levied upon people who did not have the money with which to satisfy them.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The rich and the poor.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, there has been a distinction between the rich and the poor, and that disparity should not be increased voluntarily by us, of all people. The sentence is usually a fine of so much and in default of payment of the fine a prison term. So the prison term is imposed, not as a penalty for the offence charged but for non-payment of the fine. That is all wrong. Here we are going to give time for making payment. This will ease the burden on the poor man and decrease to a small extent at least that disparity which exists between himself and the rich man. We all favour that type of legislation.

Honourable senators, I thank you for the patience with which you have listened to me.

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, in his speech the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) spoke on sex matters. I would be happy to say "Vive le sexe," but if sex is abused it can bring harmful results.

Honourable senators might expect that I would have something to say about clause 11, which provides a definition of obscenity. It amends section 150 of the Criminal Code by adding a new subsection, as follows:

(8) For the purposes of this act, any publication a dominant characteristic of which is the undue exploitation of sex, or of sex and any one or more of the following subjects, namely, crime, horror, cruelty and violence, shall be deemed to be obscene.

This subsection refers not only to sex, but to such subjects as crime, horror, cruelty and so on.

I want to make a few comments on clause 12, which provides a procedure for seizing copies of obscene publications. It adds to section 150 of the act a new section 150A, subsection (1) of which reads as follows:

A judge who is satisfied by information upon oath that there are reasonable grounds for believing that any publication, copies of which are kept for sale or distribution in premises within the jurisdiction of the court, is obscene or a crime comic, shall issue a warrant under his hand authorizing seizure of the copies.

Our colleague from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) referred yesterday to subsection (7) of this section 150A. It states:

Where an order has been made under this section by a judge in a province with respect to one or more copies of a publication, no proceeding shall be instituted or continued in that province under section 150 with respect to those or other copies of the same publication without the consent of the Attorney General.

After the observations made yesterday by our colleague, I am a little bit afraid of that, because some printers publish very bad literature in journals, and so on. Now, suppose that in a small village on the Gaspé coast a little journal is confiscated. All the newspapers in the province of Quebec will publish this fact, and next morning people of a certain type will try to get copies of that journal. We cannot stop that. The Attorney General can stop it, however, if the journal becomes too bad. If the bill is discussed in committee, that situation could be clarified. I think our colleague discussed the problem very clearly yesterday.

(Translation):

It is very difficult to define obscenity. Some see obscenity everywhere, while others find nothing obscene. One's attitude depends on one's mentality, culture and education. The man who goes to a museum to see beautiful paintings, beautiful marble monuments, is not concerned with obscenity; he is looking for beauty. But when the minister endeavoured to amend the act in order to clarify the definition of the word "obscenity" he was aiming particularly at those obscene sheets which are sold for 5 or 10 cents a copy, all over the place, and mostly among adolescents.

The bill provides, in part:

> For the purposes of this Act, any publication a dominant characteristic of which is the undue exploitation of sex . . . shall be deemed to be obscene.

The interpretation of that section is left to the judge. In some perfectly silly publications, covering ten or twelve pages, there may be one or two that are obscene, and they will be bought only for the sake of those two obscene pages.

If I may, I would like to tell you about a confession that was made to me by a man over thirty. This is what he said: "At the age of sixteen, I came upon a book that was well written but in which fifteen pages, out of two hundred, described scenes of captivating sensuality. I felt that one had to follow that path to find complete sensual enjoyment, and from then on I led a disorderly life and resorted to theft to obtain the pleasures I sought. One day I pulled myself together, through the help of a good friend who saw that I was slipping and who convinced me that happiness is not to be found in sensual enjoyment but in the heart, in the soul, in the mind. Today I am a married man and I have an admirable wife. She knows the kind of life I led, but with all her mind and heart she has helped and encouraged me and is still doing so. I have found happiness in my home. But how many of my former pals have not returned to the ways of their childhood and live today in degradation! Some are in penitentiaries, one of them was even hanged, and all that as a result of having read pornographic material."

What is obscenity? While it is hard to define, we know, or rather we feel what is obscene.

Do you think that those who go to night clubs to see strip-tease artists are attracted by the beauties of art or by the desire to increase their culture? No. They go prepared to see stupidity, and the shows given are aimed particularly at stimulating carnal passions. Those small sheets, those filthy skits printed on toilet paper and relating the most sordid details aim at nothing else but obscenity. You will find there a complete report of what happens in police courts: assault, rape, theft, sodomy with all the gruesome details. How can anyone claim that this is not obscenity?

And when in this bill C-58 we are told that "For the purposes of this act, any publication a dominant characteristic of which is the undue exploitation of sex, or of sex and any one or more of the following subjects, namely, crime, horror, cruelty and violence, shall be deemed to be obscene", one wonders if the expression "a dominant characteristic" will prove efficient. In a magazine or filthy sheet like Flash or Hush, which runs to eight, ten or sixteen pages, does the really obscene material amount to four pages? Would the judge consider such a sheet as having obscenity as a dominant characteristic?

But that has now been changed in the bill: "the" has been replaced by "a". It is an important improvement.

A few months ago I received a brochure of about 80 pages intitled "The Breviary of Love". Included in it were extracts from Msgr. Sheen's lectures, one of the late Pius XII speeches in extenso, texts from the great doctors of the Catholic Church and interspersed here and there, sixteen pages of unbelievable obscenity!

In my opinion, such a publication is decidedly obscene and harmful. The adolescent who falls on it, skips over the text of Pius XII or of Bishop Sheen, but he undoubtedly reads the sixteen pages on sensuality, which make him want to do likewise.

Obscenity does not develop only carnal passion; it also develops other passions such as sloth, because the sensual person is generally lazy and vicious and, as he has to do something to live, he tries to steal so as to work as little as possible. And once a man has stolen, he may not stop at killing.

Vice can lead such a man to outrage and even to kill a child. Barely two weeks ago, a fourteen-year old youngster committed rape upon a nine-year-old girl. When asked why he had done it, he replied: "Because everybody is doing it. Here are the newspapers and books I have read and what I have learned; if I did not do it, it would mean that I was not a man, that I lacked strength and virility."

Such is the generation that these pornographic magazines are preparing for tomorrow. How can a nation grow, develop, gain strength and power if today's young people, who are the men of tomorrow, are physically, morally and spiritually diseased?

The act is not perfect. Is there anything that is perfect on the face of earth? However, it is an improvement, and if other loopholes are found we will endeavour, with the help of experience, to make the necessary amendments.

There is no question about the Minister of Justice's intentions: he wants the youth of tomorrow to be better than today's and to that end he is taking the necessary means.

But it is not only obscene literature that corrupts our youth; some films and plays seem bent on showing to our young people that, today, matrimony is nothing but concubinage, the eternal triangle, and that the only thing that counts is sensual enjoyment.

Sensual enjoyment may be found anywhere, at the first street corner, but it does not bring happiness. Happiness is found in a healthy home, where there is peace of soul and peace of mind.

Another objection is found to the principle of the bill: does it not interfere with the liberty of the individual? To what extent is not the word "liberty" misused! What I find most extraordinary is that we allow hooligans, bandits, corruptors of liberty to come right into our homes, through the medium of television and radio, to corrupt our children, and that we should not even be free to defend ourselves against such a misuse of liberty. We are free to do wrong, but we are not free to protect ourselves against evil. True liberty is disciplined. When you travel through a town you have to follow the traffic lights, whether they are red, green or yellow. You could always go through the red light if you wanted to without being run over, but for fear of acquiring a bad habit that might lead to a collision some day, you abstain. Well, that light is a discipline, it disciplines my liberty in the interest of my own and of the whole population's protection. Nevertheless, I am free to cross the street, to go ahead, but plain common sense requires that that liberty be disciplined.

The same thing applies in many other fields and particularly in this field of criminal obscenity. What will happen when freedom is undisciplined, especially when a young man is carried away by his passion and acts without thinking. That is why freedom must not be abused; it must be disciplined so that each one of us may live reasonably, comfortably and in a spirit of mutual helpfulness, of charity and love, in order to inspire and procure happiness everywhere. That is how I understand freedom. Unbridled freedom is no longer freedom, it is licence, obscenity, gangsterism; it is anything you want, but it is neither good nor just.

The best laws in the world are useless if the parents do not look after their children. The law can't bring up, it only protects; it might be compared to the parapet which prevents the foolhardy from falling into the river. But the person who has not been brought up, who has abused all kinds of freedom, will jump over the railing and may drown in the river. If he is insane enough for that, no railing will stop him from committing acts of insanity.

How many parents, alas, do not bother about their children. It would seem that they do not love them. They want to avoid all effort and any unnecessary fatigue. They tell their children: "Away with you, take to the street, run along, go to the movies, read anything at all." Parents no longer watch over their children's reading—though some of them still do; but there are parents of a certain type who neglect their duty, and if our youth has taken to gangsterism and vandalism they are mostly to blame. Can parents who retire at 11 p.m. without worrying over their young girl not having come home, or at twelve, when their 14-year old boy is still hanging around the streets, be said to take an interest in their children? It is the parents who need to be educated so that they may learn to love their children in the true sense of the word love and in such a way that they will bring up men and women who are worthy of their country.

If I could reach the whole country and all the parents, I would try to convince them, with all the persuation at my command, that it is most unwise to let their offspring run where they please without any supervision. If I could only bring these parents into one of our family services, they would see the distress of certain parents who tell us about their children's depravity. If only they could be shown that, through their own fault, their children will bring dishonour upon them because they, their parents, by being too soft, have made hooligans and gangsters of their children.

If you would only take heed of my words, fathers and mothers, you would examine your conscience and, after studying your own case carefully, you would come to care more for your children and you would develop in them an attitude far removed from degeneration and degradation.

I will never forget the story of the man who came to see me, to have his children placed in an institution because he could no longer get them to obey.

"Then," he added, "my wife will go back to her parents and I will go off on my own. The children would be looked after by public charity." At this moment, the telephone rang and a man said to me: "I have put my fifteen-year old girl out of the house because she will not obey me. I am through, she can go away." And I said to him: "Will things be any better now if your child takes to the street? It seems to me that if you had shown a little more charity, co-operation, fatherly care, and your wife had been a better mother you might have found another solution." All this time, the man who had come to see me was there in front of me listening. When the telephone conversation came to an end he said: "Never mind, I'll be back another time." I met him some months later and he told me that when he had come to me to have his children placed in a public institution the telephone conversation he had overheard had been a revelation to him. He repeated the advice I had given practically word for word: "If you cared a bit more for your children, you might not find things so difficult; condemning your young girl is no way to fix things up." He added: "When I returned home I decided that I would look after my children. That very evening I started to set up a croquet set in my back yard, a sand bag game and a small garden. I told my wife that from now on we would look after the children. Today the children are playing at home and we play together. I help them with their studies and my wife looks after the little girls. I have found a happiness I had never known because I did not understand how to go about bringing up a family."

Why are there not more parents who are anxious, not only to bring children into the world, but to live with them, the mother becoming the girls' best friend and the father, his sons'. There is nothing like love and affection to sow the seeds of noble feelings and to inspire young children with noble love and affection.

The act before us is not perfect, I know, but it is an improvement and if we can improve it again in future we will have to do so. I would like to thank the minister for the action he has taken in moving these amendments to the Criminal Code.

In conclusion, I can do no better than to refer to the findings of the late Senators Davis and Doone, under whose chairmanship the committee charged with the inquiry into obscene literature sat in the Senate in 1952 and 1953. The 1953 report ended as follows:

(Text):

APPEAL TO CANADIANS

In dealing with the present executive action and legislation, and possible recommendations for its dilatation, your committee hopes that the Canadian people will back it up with all the force of public opinion, and that those who print, import, distribute or exhibit for sale salacious and indecent publications will feel the force of this public opinion and be made to realize that they are doing a filthy, immoral and nasty thing to the detriment of Canada in its present position. Might your committee be permitted to point out that in the world-wide struggle between the forces of darkness and evil and those of good, the freedom-loving democratic countries have need of all the strength in their moral fibre to combat the evil threat, and anything that undermines the morals of our citizens, and particularly of the young, is a direct un-Canadian act.

Honourable senators, perhaps that is a good thought on which to conclude my remarks. I appeal to all Canadians to help prevent obscene literature from being spread throughout our country, in order that the new generation may be stronger, better and more prosperous.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, we have listened to four excellent speeches on this bill by men most ably qualified to discuss the Criminal Code.

The honourable senator from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn) explained the bill thoroughly, clearly and concisely. Senator Hnatyshyn is a member of the Saskatchewan bar and has practised in both criminal and civil courts of that province. He is well qualified to introduce this bill, and I commend him for the excellence of his presentation.

We listened yesterday to an outstanding address by the honourable senator from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard), who spoke on only one provision of the bill. Senator Bouffard is a leader of the bar in the province of Quebec; his practice extends throughout the courts of that province and the federal courts. Further, he has taken a great interest in Laval University, and is at present a Governor of that university. He is indeed well qualified to discuss this measure, although he did limit his remarks to one clause.

This afternoon we have listened to an address by one who I may say is probably qualified beyond all others present in this chamber to discuss this bill. The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has had a remarkable career at the bar. Not only has he practised in all the courts of the land, but he served for a time as Attorney General of the province of Ontario. I suppose I can say that, apart from Senator Farris, Senator Roebuck is more familiar with the Criminal Code than any other honourable senator. He delivered an outstandingly informative and thoughtful address this afternoon. Honourable senators are, I am sure, much indebted to him for the effort he has put forward and the interest he has shown in the subject. Senator Roebuck made a number of suggestions which no doubt the chairman of the committee which is to consider this bill will bring to the attention of the Government before the bill reaches the committee.

We have also listened to an address by the honourable senator from Kennebec (Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt), who has confined his remarks to the clause of the bill dealing with obscenity. Senator Vaillancourt is a man of wide experience, who has taken a keen interest in the welfare of young people and the effect of obscene literature upon them.

(Translation):

The Honourable Senators Bouffard and Vaillancourt have spoken in French. I regret that more senators do not express themselves more often in the beautiful French language.

We have two languages in Canada and here, day after day, we only hear one language. Personally, I would prefer to hear French more often, for I would like to be able to speak French myself. I hope that in the future we shall hear speeches in French more often. As Senator Vaillancourt said, we have the "green light" in the Senate to speak French.

(Text):

Honourable senators, I would like to call the attention of the house to clause 18, to which the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity referred this afternoon. That is the clause which forbids publication in a newspaper of a confession which has been put in evidence at a preliminary hearing.

I would point out to the honourable senator who explained the bill (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn) that this clause, as I read it, would prevent publication of such a confession if it has been put in evidence at a preliminary hearing. The wording of the clause would lead one to believe that if a confession is put in evidence at the preliminary hearing it cannot be published unless the accused is acquitted or sent up for trial and the trial has been concluded. There is no provision restricting publication of a confession which has not been put in evidence at the preliminary hearing but is put in evidence at the trial.

I will explain what I mean. Suppose at the preliminary hearing the accused is sent up for trial without the confession being put in as evidence and then on the first day of the trial in the Superior Court the confession is put in. In that case there is nothing to prevent a newspaper from publishing the confession on that day.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: But the jury will have been sworn by then.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My friend says that the jury will have been sworn. But the trial may be abortive, in which event the public will have read the confession before the trial comes on for hearing the second time.

My friend says that the jury will have been sworn, but I would point out to him that under the present bill if the confession has been put in evidence at the preliminary hearing it cannot be published until after the trial is concluded. I think the chairman of the committee might bring that point to the attention of the law officers, with the object of seeing if provision can be made for prevention of publication of a confession at any time during the hearing of the case.

Honourable senators, as I have said, clause 18 provides for the withholding of a confession from the public until the trial has been concluded. The purpose of this legislation, I am sure, is not to prevent such publication by imposing severe fines on the newspapers. The purpose is to prevent absolutely the publication of a confession before the trial has been concluded. After a confession is published the damage has been done. It is no use fining a newspaper then, because the public then knows what is contained in the confession. If the purpose of preventing publication of a confession is to make sure that the accused man has a fair trial, that purpose has been defeated once publication has been made. So I say the purpose of this legislation is not to fine newspapers for publishing a confession, but rather to make it impossible for the confession to be published.

Honourable senators may say that this is encroaching upon the freedom of the press. The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) said that the Criminal Code is a charter of freedom and liberty, and that great care should be exercised in legislating against freedom of speech or of publication. There is some encroachment here upon the freedom of the press, and it is a question now whether the assurance that the accused shall have a fair trial or that the freedom of the press will not be encroached upon is the more important. I think we all agree that the assurance that the accused shall have a fair trial is paramount. I agree with the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity that we should endeavour to see that under no circumstances is a confession published before the trial takes place.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: May I ask my honourable friend a question? I am interested in this, not as a lawyer, but as one who has had some experience in the field of journalism and newspaper work. I would regard that clause in the bill as one restraining newspapers from violating the act, and I think that is the whole point of it. What my honourable friend has said about the harm having been done after publication of a confession, and there being no purpose served in fining a newspaper then, seems to me to be entirely beside the point. The point of this is to restrain the press from doing irresponsible things in regard to the requirements of the Criminal Code.

So far as freedom of the press is concerned, I think that is a very relative term in these days. I doubt very much if there is any such thing as absolute freedom of the press.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I cannot agree with my honourable friend. I do not think the purpose of this clause is to restrain the press from publishing anything. I think the purpose is to make sure that there is not created in the public mind a prejudice against an accused person. I think the press is brought into this, not because anyone wants to restrain its freedom in any way whatsoever, but to make sure that the accused will have a fair trial. If by any chance the press does publish a confession then, of course, the press will be subject to penalties, but that is only a secondary consideration.

I come now to this point, that the newspapers will be very careful, and must be very careful, not to publish a confession before the trial is concluded. I am satisfied that after this the press will not want to publish a confession while the trial is in progress.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask my honourable friend if he thinks capital punishment is a restraint on the committing of murder?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not think that has anything whatsoever to do with this. Perhaps there is some relevance, but if so I cannot follow it at the moment. I hope the honourable senator does not want to put me off my line of thought.

I was suggesting that newspapers will have to be very vigilant to make sure that a confession is not published during a trial, not because they would have to pay a fine, but—

Hon. Mr. Lambert:—because it would prejudice the case.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I wish my friend would not interrupt me. He can make a speech after I am finished. He has interrupted me already in order to make one speech, and I am sure this house will be glad to hear him make another speech after I am through.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I was saying that the press must be very vigilant not to publish the confession of an accused person until his or her trial has been held, so as to ensure that the accused will receive a fair trial. A year or two from now this provision in the Criminal Code may be forgotten and I can visualize a young cub reporter attending a preliminary hearing in some town or city. He may get hold of a confession and dash back to his newspaper and get it rushed into print so that it appears in his newspaper that very same day. You may argue that the confession story would go through the hands of the news editor or someone else in authority, but the cub reporter may not know of this provision in the Criminal Code. In fact, in a couple of years' time perhaps even the news editors themselves will not be familiar with it. If the confession appears in the press, will the accused have lost his opportunity to a fair trial? To fine the newspaper will not do any good, because the trial goes on and the newspaper merely pays the fine. The accused may be found guilty, and the public may have been prejudiced against him on account of his published confession.

I am satisfied the press would be anxious to co-operate under the provisions of this act in an endeavour to see that all accused receive a fair trial, but I feel there should be a provision whereby the presiding magistrate or judge is required, whenever a confession is tendered in evidence, to advise the public and the press at that very time that publication of the confession is not to be made until after the conclusion of the trial. I do not believe it would be impossible to do this.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Supposing the jury disagreed and a second trial was necessary?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: As soon as the confession is put in as evidence the judge should announce that it cannot be published until after the case has been determined. I do not know whether it is possible to have this provision made now, but the honourable senator who introduced this bill (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn) should bring my proposal to the attention of the law officers with a view to amending the legislation so as to ensure that an accused will get a fair trial. Incidentally, I am not suggesting this so that newspapers may avoid being fined.

If the law officers do not feel this amendment can be accepted at this time, perhaps the matter could be discussed by the provincial attorneys general at their provincial conference which I believe is to be held at Victoria, British Columbia, some time this year. They are meeting for the specific purpose of discussing uniformity of legislation.

Honourable senators, for what it is worth I bring this matter to the attention of the house. I hope something can be done to make sure that the public is not prejudiced by reason of any confession made by an accused before trial.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

COAL PRODUCTION ASSISTANCE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. John G. Higgins moved the second reading of Bill C-68, to amend the Maritime Coal Production Assistance Act and to authorize certain amendments to the agreement made under that act with Dominion Coal Company, Limited.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill now before the Senate bears the short title "Coal Production Assistance Act," and amends an act passed in 1949 entitled the "Maritime Coal Production Assistance Act, 1949."

The purpose of the amending legislation before us is to extend the provisions of the existing Maritime Coal Production Act, which provided a fund of $10 million to be advanced to coal producers in the Atlantic Maritime provinces by means of interest-bearing loans for the purpose of substantially increasing the efficiency of coal production through mechanization of mines. All loans under the act have been passed on and administered by the Dominion Coal Board.

The original act provided that the aggregate principal amount of loans made to coal producers was not to exceed the sum of $10 million and that no individual loan was to be for more than $7,500,000. The act also provided that no loans could be made after October 1, 1959, so that the act was to exist for ten years.

Section 4(1) of the act reads:

> A loan shall bear interest at a rate fixed by the Governor in Council based on the average rate of interest return that the Minister of Finance determines is yielded by bonds of the Government of Canada of a term comparable with that of the loan or, if there are no such bonds outstanding, that would in the opinion of the Minister of Finance be yielded by such bonds, and shall be repaid by semi-annual payments at a rate of not less than thirty cents per net ton of coal produced by the mines in respect of which the loan was made.

Section 4(3) says:

> A loan shall be secured by a first charge or mortgage in favour of Her Majesty on the mine and equipment in respect of which the loan is made or on other property of the coal producer or by such other security as the minister may approve.

Fifteen loans have been approved since the act was passed, and five of these loans have been repaid.

The companies which availed themselves of these loans are as follows:

(1) Dominion Coal Company, Limited, Sydney, Nova Scotia.

(2) Avon Coal Company, Limited, Minto, New Brunswick.

(3) Crawford Contractors Limited, Minto, New Brunswick.

(4) S. J. Doucet and Son, Inverness, Nova Scotia.

(5) Four Star Collieries Limited, Bras D'Or, Nova Scotia.

(6) D. W. and R. A. Mills Limited, Minto, New Brunswick.

(7) V. C. McMann Limited, Minto, New Brunswick.

The act was first passed for the purpose of giving aid to the Dominion Coal Company, Limited, of Nova Scotia, which controls the largest coal mine in Canada, producing from 3,500,000 to four million tons per year. This loan was given for the purpose of carrying out a very extensive mechanization program at its mines in Cape Breton. The estimated cost of this project at that time was $13 million, and the sum of $7,500,000 was authorized for a loan to the Dominion Coal Company. The company has paid back $1,278,000 of the amount borrowed. It now needs a further $7,500,000 to finance a coal washing plant to improve the marketability of its products. Of course, under the original act the company cannot obtain this, as it has already received the full amount that it is entitled to under the act.

The Department of Mines and Technical Surveys feels that the act has been a distinct success in its assistance to coal operators, and the help given by the mechanization projects financed under the act has had the effect of increasing the efficiency of mining coal, so that the increases in cost have not been as great as they would have been without the help given by the act. The Dominion Coal Board feels that the provisions of the present act should be extended for a further period of ten years and that, since the funds provided by the original act have been exhausted, a further sum of $10 million should be made available, and that this assistance should be made available to all coal producers in Canada.

The purposes of the proposed amendment before us are: (1) to make the original act not one pertaining only to the Atlantic Maritime provinces but to make it a national act applying to all coal mine operators and producers in Canada; (2) to increase the aggregate amount of loans to be made or authorized by another $10 million; (3) to extend the time limit for payment by five years, namely, to the 31st October 1964; (4) to increase the amount which may be loaned to one operator from $7,500,000 to $12 million.

Section 6(1) of the amendment gives authority for revision of the agreement made with the Dominion Coal Company, Limited. Representations were made by the company in 1958 for some changes in the schedule regarding repayments on its loan of $7,500,000, and it was deemed advisable to alter the schedule of repayments under the agreement. This alteration will: (1) allow the company to make no further repayments till June 30, 1963, at which time the company will again commence repayment at six month intervals based on 30 cents per net ton production; (2) increase the interest rate to 4 per cent per annum from 3½ per cent per annum as from July 1, 1957; (3) make the loan fully repayable by June 30, 1970.

I may say that in 1957 a bill, C-54, was introduced authorizing an amendment to the agreement made under the original act with the Dominion Coal Company on March 14, 1950. This provided for a change in the date of repayment of the loan and an increase in the rate of interest. This bill was assented to in November 1958.

Regarding that bill, I shall now quote what the minister said when, on June 30, 1959, he introduced the present bill:

> Unfortunately the provisions of this amendment did not fully cover the difficulties, and it remains necessary to clarify the matter by further amendment. The proposed revision provides that the total loan to this company will be fully repaid by June 30, 1970, as set out in the terms of the legislation.

The bill before us now rectifies this by the amendment to the agreement which I have just mentioned.

It is felt that the proposed legislation will be of very great importance to the coal producers of Canada. The mine operators will be given the opportunity of obtaining loans which might not be available from the usual sources. This will be of great assistance, as it will enable the mines to modernize their methods so as to bring about more stability in production and reduce costs in meeting the terrific competition that is now provided by other fuels.

Under the amendment before the house the Dominion Coal Company can receive another $4,500,000, if the board authorizes such a loan.

In the amendment there is one section, 3(2), which is necessary though it does not affect the original act. When the original act was passed the Coal Board was under the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Since then the board has been transferred to the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, so it is necessary that the word "Minister" should be interpreted now as the "Minister of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys".

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, my remarks will be rather brief and I know they will be welcomed on that account.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Not at all.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I wish to compliment the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins) on his very fair outline of the provisions of this act and its purposes and aims. It is a follow-up, as he no doubt had in mind, of the recommendations made by the Honourable Mr. Justice W. F. Carroll and his associates in 1946, who at that time, among the many recommendations made, felt that mechanization of the mines would bring about greater efficiency and greater production. Unfortunately that has not resulted. In fact, there has been an ever-decreasing amount of coal produced, especially in the Cape Breton area which is the main producing section of our coal producing country. I am particularly interested in this bill and am very happy that the Government has seen fit to follow the lead of the Liberal Government in taking action to assist the coal operators. If I remember rightly, there were something like 15 loans made, in the amount of $9,997,101, of the $10 million made available. Of the total number of loans that were made, five have been repaid in full and, as mentioned by the honourable senator from St. John's East, one loan of a fairly large balance is outstanding.

I am very pleased that there is going to be an extension of the time allowed for these repayments, and that the amount has been increased so that the operators can borrow from $7.5 million up to $12 million. That amount will be required particularly for the purchase of a new washing plant, which is so badly needed to put on the market the type of coal required and used in the greater quantities.

I was rather surprised that the honourable senator did not stress the position in which his own province of Newfoundland finds itself because of the lack of a supply of coal there, and offer some suggestions as to how production and sale of coal should be dealt with in Newfoundland. I have always felt that perhaps the companies, or the Government or a government agency, particularly the Dominion Coal Board, should have devised some plan for the stockpiling of coal in Newfoundland, say at St. John's and other places, to make it more readily available to the coal-burning districts of that province.

I am told that there is a considerable spread between the price at Sydney and the price at St. John's. I thought that when the honourable member was speaking he would bring this subject to the attention of the Government in the hope that the Dominion Coal Board would do something to narrow that spread, to make coal more readily available in Newfoundland and thus bring about its greater use there.

Nova Scotia has a large number of miners —roughly speaking, between 12,000 and 13,000, representing anywhere from 75,000 to 100,000 persons dependent on the coal industry.

Latterly there has been a decrease both in the volume and the value of coal produced in Canada. Figures do not always reflect the proper picture, but I think these will show the extent of the decline in coal production in the years 1956 and 1957. In 1956, 14,915,610 tons were mined, and the value amounted to $95,349,763, but in 1957 production dropped to 13,183,175 tons, having a value of $89,892,750. That was a decrease of $5,457,013 in the value of coal produced.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But the price of coal may have gone up in the meantime?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: The more coal costs to produce, the more it is likely to cost the consumer. Does that answer your question?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: If these loans are used to purchase new equipment to bring about greater production at lesser cost, naturally the price will go down. Of course, a good deal depends on the wages paid. In fact, that is the determining factor, I think, in the mining industry so far as price to the consumer is concerned.

We in Nova Scotia have many areas in which coal is produced, and we are greatly concerned about the production of it. If I remember rightly, production got down to 1.4 tons per man per day. That is a very low average, compared with production in Alberta, although it must be said that in the west they employ a different type of mine operation. Also it is very low in comparison with production per man per day in the United States.

We are happy to have these increased loan ceilings. They will permit installation of more modern and efficient machinery, which ought to result in a lowering of the cost of production and an increase in the coal produced per day per man. These things will benefit the consumer of coal, I hope.

We in the Maritimes know, as coal producers in the west do, that coal now faces stiffer competition from other types of fuels. This is something we must face, and we can only meet such competition by installing modern coal mining machinery.

The sponsor of the bill has outlined the reasons behind it very clearly, quoting the minister's remarks. As I mentioned a moment ago, this is really an extension of a bill brought in by the Liberal Government to aid coal operators throughout the Maritimes at that time. This bill extends the terms not only in dollars and cents, but also as to the coverage of territory. Up to date the act has applied to the Maritime provinces only, but it is being extended to apply to coal mining areas throughout the dominion. There was some question in the minds of western members in the House of Commons as to what benefit Alberta, Manitoba or British Columbia would gain by the extended coverage. I doubt very much if either Alberta or other sections of Canada will benefit to any great extent, or be able to take advantage of the loans. I hope they will, if thereby they can increase their production and bring about lower costs of production.

As stated by the honourable senator who explained the bill, the amount of loans that may be made under the act is increased by $10 million. There is some question whether that $10 million will be sufficient. That is one criticism that I have heard offered in connection with this bill. In view of the fact that almost all of the original $10 million was taken up, it is felt that a still greater amount should be provided. The exact amount taken up was $9,997,101. That leaves very little of the original $10 million. Machinery and equipment used in the mines are very expensive. I believe that was one of the reasons why the Dominion Coal Company did not proceed last year when it made application for an increased loan, which the Government was unable to give because of the terms of the act. The amount allowable was not large enough to provide the equipment which the company wished to acquire.

I am pleased to note that the time for repayment of the large loan outstanding is now being extended.

Honourable senators, that is perhaps all I can usefully say at this time, except to suggest to the honourable sponsor of the bill that it should be considered in committee in order that questions may be asked of officials of the Dominion Coal Board. I would like to ask them why the board has not shown a more aggressive spirit in the marketing of coal. True, the minister stated in the other place that it was not the function of the board to act as a selling agency for any one particular company. I do feel, however, that it should investigate the possibility of finding new uses for coal, as in this way it could help the industry to a great extent. The minister in his answer did not give much encouragement to the honourable member from Cape Breton who raised that question in the other house, and I feel it might well be pursued further in our committee.

I would also hope that the honourable senator who explained the bill will give some reasons why the terms of the bill are enlarged with respect to territory. He made the statement that the Dominion Coal Board's jurisdiction will now extend throughout Canada, instead of only to the Maritimes. I do not believe any reason was given for that change. I am wondering if any of the western provinces have made representations to the Government to have the Dominion Coal Board functions apply to that part of Canada.

In general, honourable senators, I am in accord with the principle of the bill. The act was introduced, I believe, in 1949, and was amended in about 1956. I trust that this further amendment will serve its purpose in bringing about greater production and use of coal, particularly as it applies to the Maritime provinces.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, there is little I can add to what my honourable colleague from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) has said. I congratulate him on his remarks, and also the honourable sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Higgins) on his explanation. I do not wish to delay the house, but I have a question, and perhaps the answer will be forthcoming when the bill is before the committee.

As I understand it, the amount that may be lent to coal producers is being increased in anticipation that the Dominion Coal Company will borrow a further sum. I would like to know from the sponsor of the bill what is the purpose of the additional borrowing by the Dominion Coal Company. Is the additional loan to be used to increase the production of coal, or is it to be used in connection with the washing of coal?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I understand it is to be used to acquire machines for washing coal, which would cost about $7,500,000. The company already has borrowed $7,500,000. It can now borrow an additional $4,500,000, which will bring its total borrowings up to $12 million. That is the highest amount any one producer can get under the act.

Does that answer my honourable friend's question?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Yes.

I may be wrong, but I have been under the impression that when the suggestion of making money available to assist the Dominion Coal Company to establish a washing plant was first broached it was frowned upon and not accepted. I would like to ask the sponsor of the bill if he knows whether that is so, and, if it is so, why there apparently has been a change of heart in that respect.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Honourable senators, I did not expect to be asked that question, and as I am not in the inner circles of information I am unable to answer it. I understand, however, that the Dominion Coal Board expects that the Dominion Coal Company will make representations for a further loan. I think it may have already done so. One reason why this legislation is being brought forward is to give the company an opportunity to apply for this further loan. If it is applied for, and if it is authorized by the Dominion Coal Board, the company will get it.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, it occurs to me that the Banking and Commerce Committee has already a great deal of work before it. Perhaps this measure could be considered by the Natural Resources committee.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The Natural Resources committee has about all it can handle at the present time. The Banking and Commerce committee will be meeting on Tuesday night to consider the Criminal Code and certain other measures; it will also sit on Wednesday morning. I do not see how we can have more than one large committee functioning at one time. For that reason, I suggested to the sponsor of the bill that this measure should be sent to the Banking and Commerce committee. It is really a money bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I bow to the superior wisdom of the honourable leader of the house (Hon. Mr. Aseltine).

On motion of Hon. Mr. Higgins, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

CROP INSURANCE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson moved the second reading of Bill C-66, to provide for contributions and loans to the provinces in respect of crop insurance.

He said: Honourable senators, I will not be very long in explaining this bill. There are a few remarks I would like to make, with the idea that I can explain some of the main points incorporated in the bill.

At the outset, I might say that this bill is of historic significance in that it is the first attempt on the part of the dominion Government, and, possibly, of the provinces, to inaugurate a comprehensive risk insurance for various crops grown in Canada. There has been considerable talk of comprehensive insurance by farmers for quite a number of years. In fact, when the Prairie Farm Assistance Act was passed, in 1939, I distinctly remember discussing the bill with many farmers who were pleased with it, but who felt, even at that time, that it should have gone a great deal further and covered other crop risks rather than being merely a scheme to help farmers in drought stricken areas.

While the Prairie Farm Assistance Act has had a great deal to do with helping the distressed farmers and the stabilization of the farming industry in western Canada, a number of adjustments have had to be made to the act to enable more farmers to come within the scope of its benefits. As originally set out, the act indicated that 18 sections would be the minimum area that could receive these benefits; that is, 18 sections in a block. This has been adjusted as the years progressed, and we now have a very good scheme under that act.

It is felt now that the time is ripe to go a step farther and bring in a comprehensive insurance plan. But, as honourable senators know, property and civil rights belong to the provinces and do not come within the scope of the dominion Government, and for that reason the federal Government cannot, of itself, set up a full scheme of crop insurance. Thus it decided to introduce legislation to assist the provinces so that they may enact insurance legislation in conjunction with this legislation.

Bill C-66 is entitled "An Act to provide for contributions and loans to the provinces in respect of crop insurance". This means, in effect, that the federal Government has at this time disclosed what it is prepared to do to assist each province to bring in an act with respect to crop insurance, which will be varied as from province to province, depending on the type of crop, etc., that each one wishes to have covered.

Under this act the federal Government will make a grant from the federal treasury in the amount of 50 per cent of any administrative costs of an act which may be passed by each one of the provinces. It will also pay 20 per cent of any premium charged by the provinces.

A further point that I would like to draw to your attention, honourable senators, is that if the loss to the province in any one year is greater than the current premium receipts, plus reserves built up, plus $200,000, then the federal Government will agree to advance loans in the amount of 75 per cent of any amount over and above these three items which I have mentioned. It is felt that a province should be able to carry any losses up to $200,000 without undue strain, but this provision is being put in to assist a province if in, say, the first and second year of its new act it is called upon to pay out a great deal more than the premium receipts because of some great crop disaster. The federal Government feels that the provinces should be able to finance with the assistance of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. This possible drain on insurance funds at the very beginning has been one of the deterrents to a province going on its own. It is total risk in crop insurance.

These, honourable senators, are the main points of Bill C-66.

It is hoped that the provincial Governments in enacting insurance schemes will divide their provinces into small enough units—probably the size of a township—so that they may arrive at an equitable premium rate for the farmer based on a long-term average crop yield in each area. In this manner the premium rate will be more equitably arrived at in the unit.

Another point expressed by those discussing this bill in the other place was that they felt that at least 25 per cent of the farmers, or 25 per cent of the acreage, in whatever unit is prescribed, would be covered by the provincial scheme before the federal Government would be able to contribute toward that insurance scheme.

A further point in the bill is set out in clause 5 (1), paragraph (a) (iv) as follows:

An agreement shall specify the terms and conditions of the insurance scheme, including the amount of the insurance to be effected on any crop in any area, which shall not exceed 60 per cent of the long-term average yield of the crop in the area.

Honourable senators, I think those are the main points in the bill before us. As you will see on a further reading of the bill, there will have to be a united effort on the part of the federal Government and the Government of each province in setting out all the particulars of an insurance scheme, such as defining "producer", calculating long-term average yield, specifying the time and manner of payment of contributions by Canada under this act, and prescribing the records to be kept by the provinces, etc.

The final point I wish to make is that the act brought in by each province must be actuarially sound before the federal Government can agree to making its contribution. A further point I wish to stress is that the Prairie Farm Assistance Act will not be circumscribed by this new insurance act set up by the provinces, but will continue in force, and any farmer can continue to pay the 1 per cent levy on crops sold by him if he wishes to remain under this scheme rather than taking part in the new crop insurance scheme. However, he cannot be covered by both schemes. In other words, it will be a voluntary action on the part of the farmer if he takes the insurance or stays with the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask the honourable senator if he has any classification or enumeration of natural causes on which the insurance would be applied? I take it that drought and frost would be among the causes.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: And insect pests.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: And cutworms.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: How many others? Has there been any definition of natural causes?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: They have not been described in the bill, but when the provincial Governments and the federal Government make their agreements it will be set out in the provincial acts.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I support this bill in a general way. It is something that I think should be tried out. We insure almost everything nowadays, so why not try a scheme of insuring crops? My opinion as to the value of this legislation may differ from that of persons more qualified to speak on this subject, but I do have a few comments to make. First of all, I would like to read from the following Canadian Press dispatch which appeared in the Brantford Expositor:

> Provincial Government spokesmen and farm officials in Canada are split between a wait-and-see attitude and strong criticism of federal Agriculture Minister Harkness's proposed crop insurance plan.
>
> Most outspoken against the plan, which is dependent on provincial assistance for its implementation, is Acting Premier C. M. Fines of Saskatchewan, who calls it "one of the greatest insults ever inflicted on provincial Governments by the federal Government within my memory".

Hon. Mr. Isnor: What province is that?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Fines is Provincial Treasurer of Saskatchewan. No doubt he is a farmer and certainly better qualified to speak on the value of this bill than I am. The dispatch went on to say:

> I cannot conceive any community wishing to adopt it in preference to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act," said Mr. Fines. "Even though the latter has many weaknesses, it is still a much sounder plan for most communities of western Canada."

That is what Mr. Fines, who has had more experience in farming than a great many of us—

Hon. Mr. Horner: He has had no experience in farming at all.

Hon. Mr. Haig: He has had none.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: None whatsoever.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Well, at least he lives in a province which is predominantly a wheat-growing and agricultural province. I would like to know what the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) thinks of this legislation.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I will tell my honourable friend in a moment.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I would be very glad to hear if he is of the same opinion as Mr. Fines. I wonder if he will agree with this statement by Mr. Fines, which also appeared in this press clipping:

> Non-Government agriculture officials in western Canada expressed doubt and discontent over the scheme.

Honourable senators, no matter what my honourable friend from Blaine Lake thinks, and no matter what my honourable friend from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson) thinks, there is a strong feeling throughout western Canada that the bill is not satisfactory, and that it is not superior to the provisions contained in the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

Hon. Mr. Haig: May I interrupt my honourable friend to say that these acts do not supersede each other. The farmer can make his choice.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Oh, yes, but he cannot use both.

Hon. Mr. Haig: He doesn't have to take either one if he doesn't want to.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No, but apparently he thought he was getting something better than he was getting under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. At least, that is what I gather from this article. He thought crop insurance was going to be better than the Prairie Farm Assistance Act under which he contributes 1 per cent, but now he finds that the crop insurance is not as good as the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

Who is right, I do not know. Personally, as I said at the beginning, I feel this legislation should be given a chance. It does occur to me to be unusual that this important measure should be brought in at this late date in the session, just when we are about to prorogue. In any event, it cannot be put into effect this year.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: It cannot be put into effect until the various provincial legislatures meet again.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: And unless there is a special session no legislature will meet until next February, March or April. It occurs to me it might have been better had this legislation been tabled at this session so that the provinces would have had an opportunity to peruse and consider it. Then federal legislation could have been brought in shortly after the opening of the next session of Parliament. I think that would have been a much more satisfactory way to proceed. I do not know how many provinces will take up the legislation, and I am sure my honourable friends opposite do not know either. I believe one province, Manitoba, has intimated that it fully intends to take it up. I cannot say whether the Premier of Manitoba was consulted about the legislation before it was introduced. He happens to be the only Conservative Premier in the three Prairie provinces, but I am quite sure that for this reason alone he would not have been consulted in preference to the other two premiers. However, he knows all about the legislation and is prepared to state that Manitoba is going to accept the insurance scheme as soon as it is available.

Honourable senators, I feel the bill should go to committee, where we could get detailed information and be told how it is expected the legislation will work out.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, first I would like to congratulate my honourable friend from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson) on his very able presentation of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: If I may be permitted to interrupt, I would like to join in congratulating the honourable senator from Lumsden. I fully intended to do so earlier.

Hon. Mr. Horner: My honourable colleague from Lumsden could easily answer the questions which I intend to answer, but the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) wanted to know what I thought of the legislation. It is true that we have had hail insurance for many years, but many other disasters have struck the grain products of the farmers in western Canada. Mention has been made of cutworms and insect pests, and so on. There has been a crying need and a demand on many occasions to work out some form of crop insurance. The honourable Leader of the Opposition suggested that the legislation might have been merely tabled at this session, but I think it was very wise to bring it in now so that the provinces will know exactly what the federal Government intends to do. When their own legislatures meet they will know just what they are dealing with.

The Leader of the Opposition mentioned a statement—a very extravagant statement, I would say—made by the Provincial Treasurer of Saskatchewan, who, so far as I am aware, knows little or nothing about farms.

Some years ago the provincial Government set up a commission, which spent nearly $1½ million and, after labouring for two or three years, brought in a recommendation for this very type of legislation. It made no recommendation for assistance by the federal Government.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Did you agree with the report?

Hon. Mr. Horner: Well, I agree entirely that some form of insurance is desirable. Crop insurance is a wonderful thing. If we have hail insurance, why not have general crop insurance? In these modern days I think it is needed. In the olden days, of course, we had very little fire insurance or life insurance, and when disaster of any kind struck a man his friends and neighbours came to his assistance. Then various forms of insurance were developed. It is the modern trend in every form of business to protect oneself by insurance.

To go back to my former statement, namely, that the provincial Government's own commission spent $1½ million on its investigations, I would point out that this bill provides a much better scheme than that commission recommended, because of the contribution to be made by the federal Government. The recommendation of the provincial Government's commission was that the provincial Government take care of the whole amount. It is my opinion that the people of the various provinces will be highly satisfied with the present scheme, and I am glad that the bill makes clear just what the federal Government will be contributing, so that there will be no misunderstanding with the provinces. When the legislatures meet they will have ample opportunity to pass legislation to prepare for next year's crop.

When the provincial Government's commission brought out its report to which I have already referred, immediately there was a blast from the Provincial Treasurer. He said the plan was an insult, and what not.

I am fully in accord with this measure and I hope all the western provinces will come into the scheme. Indeed, I believe they will. In my opinion it is good. I repeat that I think it would be well to pass the measure now, so that when the legislatures meet next fall they will not be in any doubt as to what part of the cost the federal Government is going to pay.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, I must be wrong, because I agree with every word spoken by the honourable member from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner).

Hon. J. Wesley Stambaugh: Honourable senators, I have looked over this bill and studied it to some extent. I must say that I can see very little value in it in its present form. Western farmers and farm leaders have for some years been crying for some form of crop insurance. While we do not have a real crop insurance under the P.F.A.A., to some extent it is of some help in a catastrophe, but that is all. I am a little hopeful that something may come out of this measure, but I would be surprised if any of the provinces took it up in its present form. The province of Alberta has enabling legislation which was passed at the last session of the legislature, and so would be able to take advantage of this legislation by passing an order in council if it wished. Of course, it hoped for something different from this. I feel quite sure we shall hear some sort of blast from Alberta, just as we did from Saskatchewan. However, this is at least a step in the right direction and the principle of the bill is all right. I would like to see the bill passed, and I intend to support it.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pearson, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to motions:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday, July 14, at 3 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, July 14, at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, July 14, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

FARM CREDIT BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-67, to provide for the extension of long term mortgage credit to farmers.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Later this day.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the following report of the Civil Service Commission concerning certain employees of the Library of Parliament.

The Clerk Assistant (reading):

To the Honourable the Members of the House of Commons and the Senate:

The Civil Service Commission, at the request—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Dispense.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Honourable senators, may I inquire from the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) whether this report will be printed in today's proceedings?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, it will be printed.

The report reads as follows:

To the Honourable the Members of the Houses of Parliament:

The Civil Service Commission, at the request of the Parliamentary Librarian, and in accordance with the provisions of sections 11 and 62 of the Civil Service Act, has the honour to submit the following report for approval:—

It is recommended that the compensation for the following classes be revised as follows, effective January 1, 1959:

CATALOGUING LIBRARIAN 1

From:		3720	3870	4020	4170
To:	3750	3900	4050	4200	4350

1. This revision shall apply to all employees who are on strength as of January 1, 1959.

2. Each employee in this class may be paid at the salary rate shown immediately below the salary rate at which he or she was being paid on January 1, 1959.

3. The present annual increase date of employees shall not be affected as a result of this salary revision and an employee shall retain any benefits to which he or she would otherwise be eligible under the terms of Order in Council of April 30, 1946, P.C. 23/1700, as amended.

That the compensation for the class—

CATALOGUING LIBRARIAN 2

which is at present:

Annual: 4350 4500 4650 4800

be revised to:

Annual: 4500 4650 4800 4950

Attached hereto is a copy of a report in connection with the above.

Ruth E. Addison
Commissioner

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the report be considered?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Next sitting.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Report of the Canada Council for the year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 23 of the Canada Council Act, Chapter 3, of the Statutes of 1957. (English and French texts).

Report of the National Research Council for the year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 16(3) of the Research Council Act, Chapter 239, R.S. 1952, including the report of Canadian Patents and Development Limited for the same period. (English text).

Report of Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada for the year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 85(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Report of the Northern Canada Power Commission for the year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 24 of Chapter 196, R.S. 1952, and report on the examination of the accounts and financial statements of said commission for said year by the Auditor General, pursuant to section 87 of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Exchange of notes between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America governing the establishment of an integrated communications system to support Ballistic Missiles Early Warning System, signed at Ottawa, July 13, 1959. (English text).

The Canada Gazette, Part II, Statutory Orders and Regulations, 1959, Wednesday, July 8, 1959, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, Chapter 235, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the National Librarian for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 13 of Chapter 330, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the National Film Board of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 20(2) of Chapter 185, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

QUEENSTON BRIDGE BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Aseltine presented Bill S-30, to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Niagara River between the province of Ontario and the state of New York.

He said: Honourable senators, the introduction of this bill and the following two bills will bring to twelve the number of Government measures introduced in the Senate this session and dealt with first in this house.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Later this day.

PIGEON RIVER BRIDGE BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine presented Bill S-31, to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pigeon River between the province of Ontario and the state of Minnesota.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Later this day.

NEWFOUNDLAND SALT FISH EXPORTATION LAWS REPEAL BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine presented Bill S-32, to repeal certain fisheries laws in force in the province of Newfoundland respecting the exportation of salt fish.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Later this day.

INFLATION

REPORT OF FINANCE COMMITTEE— DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Clarence V. Emerson presented the report of the Standing Committe on Finance on the threat of inflation in Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be adopted?

Hon. Mr. Emerson: I move that this report be adopted now.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Will the honourable senator give an explanation of the report?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: There will be a debate on it.

Hon. Mr. Emerson: Honourable senators, in recent years the problem of inflation has become a major concern of public policy throughout the Western world. An outstanding authority stated to your committee that "Inflation has replaced recession as the major topic of business concern on this continent." The nature of this problem, its cure, and its threat for the future have become matters of urgent interest and widespread discussion. The information submitted to your committee has indicated that these apprehensions have arisen because of the persistent rises in prices and costs and the consequent erosion in the value of money which has occurred during the post-war period; the continuing increases in the cost of living during the recent recession; and the obvious reluctance which has developed on the part of the general public with respect to the investment of savings in long-term fixed dollar obligations, with the result that governments in particular have encountered increasing difficulties in financing their requirements.

It was against this general background that your committee proceeded to carry out its instructions "to study the threat of inflation in Canada". The committee sought the assistance of both competent individual authorities and of representative groups in the community. Within the limited time available the committee was able to arrange 10 public meetings. At its first such meeting the committee heard from a distinguished economist, Professor F. A. Knox of Queen's University who presented an explanation and broad analysis of the nature of inflationary forces. At its subsequent meetings the committee received the views of leading representatives of industry, commerce, finance, labour, agriculture, and of the Governor of the Bank of Canada. In all, the committee heard from 44 witnesses. Their names, positions, and the organizations which they represent are shown in Appendix A.

The submissions which were received were of invaluable assistance to the work of the committee. All of the presentations were prepared with special care and were the result of much thought and effort. They were constructive and frank, and reflected the great importance which was being attached to the subject of our inquiry. Consequently, the evidence placed before the committee as pub- a most valuable contribution to the discussion blished in its proceedings does itself contitute and elucidation of a problem of great social and economic significance to the future welfare and progress of our country.

In particular, the views and information which were presented have enabled the committee, within the limited time available, to submit some preliminary, but useful, findings. Clearly, there has not been sufficient time to pursue many of the intricacies and implications of so complex and difficult a subject. Consequently, the committee will confine itself in this report to a brief consideration of certain basic issues of vital importance about which there was some consensus of view among the witnesses who came before us. These issues relate to such fundamental matters as the question concerning the historical and long-term inevitability of inflation, the nature and effects of the post-World War II rise in prices, the compatibility of the aims regarding the maintenance of high levels of employment and the preservation of reasonable stability in the value of money, the doctrine of creeping inflation, and finally the existing situation and psychology concerning the threat of inflation.

To summarize, your committee concludes that:

1. Inflation is not inevitable.

2. We reject the doctrine of "creeping" inflation as in any way desirable for Canada.

3. The maintenance of reasonable stability of prices should be a basic aim of our economic policy along with our other aims for the achievement of high levels of employment and an adequate rate of economic growth.

4. Reasonable stability of prices is entirely compatible with and essential to the attainment of continued economic progress and high levels of employment.

5. Inflation constitutes a hidden tax which falls inequitably upon the public, with grave injustices upon those least able to protect themselves.

6. Inflation is harmful to our basic primary producers and weakens the competitive position of both our export and domestic industries.

7. Tools to contain inflation are available—what is necessary is the will and determination of the people and the authorities to use them.

Honourable senators, in view of the exceptionally wide interest being shown across the country in the work of this committee, I would suggest that this report be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard and Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Agreed.

For text of report see appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 1030-44.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Robertson, debate adjourned.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. John J. MacDonald, for Hon. James Gladstone, Joint Chairman of the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian Affairs, presented the second report of the committee.

The report reads as follows:

Thursday, July 9, 1959.

The Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian Affairs make their second report, as follows:—

The Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian Affairs was constituted by those Houses of Parliament on May 5 and April 29 respectively.

Since that time this committee has held 12 meetings and has received information from the following: The Honourable Ellen L. Fairclough, Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and Superintendent General of Indian Affairs; Mr. Laval Fortier, Deputy Minister; Mr. H. M. Jones, Director of Indian Affairs; and other departmental officials.

In addition the committee called and heard evidence from the following Indian groups and organizations:

1. The Six Nations Council;
2. The Six Nations Confederacy;
3. The Native Brotherhood of British Columbia;
4. The Manitoba Indian Brotherhood.

As this is the first general review of the Indian Act by a parliamentary committee since 1951, the committee is of the opinion that the scope of this study and investigation must be very broad in order to properly understand and evaluate the problems and difficulties presently facing the Indian population.

It is necessary, too, for the committee to recognize the possibility of shortcomings in the Indian Act in its present form and, if possible, to suggest the means by which that act can be improved and strengthened, not only from an administrative standpoint, but with the purpose of assisting the Indian people in a manner that will improve their educational and economic status.

Numerous organizations, groups and private individuals have expressed a keen interest in the committee's work and in the welfare of the Indian people. Many have expressed a desire to present briefs or to make statements orally. This is particularly true of Indian groups as well as church and welfare organizations.

Early in its sittings the committee realized that it would not be possible to hear all those who wish to make representations and to adduce the necessary evidence during the short period of time at its disposal during this session. With this in mind, the committee heard a few Indian representatives with the expectation that those not heard now would be given an opportunity to make their presentation at a later date.

Your committee unanimously recommends that a similar committee be appointed early in the next session of Parliament to carry on these investigations and studies.

It is further urged that those groups or organizations who have expressed a desire to make submissions be afforded an opportunity to submit a written brief and where necessary to support that brief by oral testimony.

In the taking of written or oral evidence, it is suggested that priority should be given to the hearing of representatives of the Indian groups, organizations or bands. These are the people primarily concerned and their views should receive particular attention.

The officials of the Indian Affairs Branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and those of the Indian and Northern Health Services of the Department of National Health and Welfare can contribute materially to the effectiveness of any committee on Indian Affairs by supplying to that committee all the information possible to assist in an understanding of the administrative difficulties and other matters. These officials could further assist by requesting the regional supervisors to advise the Indian population of the committee's studies and at the same time indicate to the various bands the means by which their briefs or opinions may be brought to the attention of the committee.

This committee wishes to express its appreciation for the information tendered by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, the departmental officials and the Indian representatives.

A copy of the committee's Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence is appended.

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES GLADSTONE,
Joint Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be considered?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Next sitting.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt presented the report of the Standing Committee on National Resources on Bill C-49.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Natural Resources, to whom was referred the Bill (C-49) intituled: "An Act to provide for the establishment of a National Energy Board", have, in obedience to the order of reference of June 17, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 2: Strike out paragraph (h) of clause 2 and substitute therefor: "(h) "international power line" means facilities constructed or operated for the purpose of transmitting power from any place in Canada to any place outside Canada;"

2. Page 25, line 19: Immediately after "years," insert "from a date to be fixed in the licence,".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be adopted?

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: I move that it be adopted now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Explain.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: The honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) will explain the amendments.

Hon. William R. Brunt: Honourable senators, although I did not sponsor the bill, I had quite a bit to do with the amendments. It will be noted that the first amendment deals with the definition of "international power line". When this was first considered by the committee, the committee was of the opinion that an international power line as originally defined in the bill would include power lines which were built for domestic purposes. As an example, one could take the power line that was constructed by the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission running from Des Joachims on the Ottawa River to Niagara Falls, where it feeds into the Niagara system. At the present time no power is being exported by the Commission over this particular line, but it was felt that if a stub line were built from Niagara Falls, Ontario, to Niagara Falls, New York, to export part of this power, then under the original definition as set out in the bill the entire line from Des Joachims to Niagara Falls would become an international power line. For that reason the minister and those who framed the bill readily agreed to the amendment, so in a case such as that, if a stub line were built, only the stub line would be an international power line, and the line which is located entirely in Ontario for the purpose of supplying power domestically would not be regarded as an international power line.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: How do you define a stub line?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: My own definition of a stub line would be a line built from the Ontario source over to the United States.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: In this particular case?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: In this particular case, yes. In other words, under this amendment an international power line now would be a line which is used practically exclusively for exportation of power from Canada to the United States.

The second amendment is a very simple one. You will find it was made in connection with paragraph (b) of clause 85, on page 25 of the bill. The paragraph reads as follows:

85. The Governor in Council may make regulations for carrying into effect the purposes and provisions of this Part and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, may make regulations respecting

(b) the duration of licences, not exceeding twenty-five years,

After the words "twenty-five years" the following words were added by the committee:

—from a date to be fixed in the licence.

The reason for this amendment was as follows. It is necessary to have a licence before proceeding to build a pipe line for the export of gas or oil or before arranging for financing such a pipe line, and probably a year or two years would elapse from the time the licence was obtained until actual exportation of gas or oil took place. At the time the licence was granted the witnesses before the board could tell the board how long in their opinion it would be before they were ready to export gas or oil, and at that time the board could insert the date on which the licence was to commence to run. It would run from that date for a definite period, not exceeding 25 years. This amendment was acceptable to the minister and to the people who framed the bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask the honourable gentleman if these amendments were the result of suggestions by the Senate committee to the Government or were they suggestions from the Government to the committee?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The suggestions came from the committee, but once they were brought to the attention of the minister and the people who framed the bill they readily saw that they were good suggestions and were quite willing to adopt them.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill, as amended, be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I suggest that if this bill has to go back to the Commons it may be advisable to have it receive third reading today.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I suggest that third reading be given tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, I was one of those present at the meeting of the committee, but I take no credit. Certain gentlemen ran the whole thing. The rest of us just looked on, but we concluded that the report recommending these amendments should be adopted unanimously.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move the third reading now.

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed.

CONVENTION ON NATIONALITY OF MARRIED WOMEN

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO PROPOSED RESOLUTION OF APPROVAL

On the notice of motion by Hon. Mr. Aseltine:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament approve the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women, done at New York on February 20, 1957, and that this house do approve the same.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I wish to give notice of an amendment to this motion appearing on the first page of today's routine proceedings. I move that the motion be amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:

Under the Canadian Citizenship Act which came into force on January 1, 1947, women have equal status with men and the citizenship laws permit married women to have a citizenship distinct from that of their husbands.

The motion would then read as follows:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament approve the Convention of the Nationality of Married Women, done at New York on February 20, 1957, and that this house do approve the same. Under the Canadian Citizenship Act, which came into force on January 1, 1947, women have equal status with men and the citizenship laws permit married women to have a citizenship distinct from that of their husbands.

Honourable senators, the reason why I am presenting this amendment is that the motion is late. For some ten years we have had on our statute books legislation similar to what is proposed in the convention. Therefore Canada should be given credit for having set the precedent for the United Nations.

Honourable senators, on a question of privilege: On June 30 some answers to a series of questions of mine were given by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, and I find them far from satisfactory. I think the attitude of some departments should be changed, and I say that in all deference to the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), and even to the minister of the department, because these answers were prepared by officers of the department. The answers are incomplete and inaccurate.

In virtue of Chapter 33 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, section 1, a Canadian citizen is a British subject.

Section 23, subsection (2), reads:

—the expression "British subject" and the expression "Commonwealth citizen" have the same meaning.

I asked these questions:

—how many persons in Canada:

(a) are British subjects, Canadian citizens, and citizens of the Commonwealth?

(b) are British subjects but are not Canadian citizens nor citizens of the Commonwealth?

(c) are citizens of the Commonwealth but are not British subjects nor Canadian citizens?

(d) are Canadian citizens but who are not British subjects nor citizens of the Commonwealth?

(e) are neither British subjects nor Canadian citizens nor citizens of the Commonwealth?

We have three nationalities in Canada, and we cannot do anything about it. I wanted information about that situation, but the answer implies that there are no British subjects in Canada, that there are only Canadian citizens, and no mention is made of citizens of the commonwealth. I would like to know what is the difference, and that is why I am asking some questions today. The timing of the answer, in which no mention was made of any British subjects in Canada, was very bad. I could not understand the Government giving that answer during the Royal visit.

On a further question of privilege: I regret the high-handed attitude of some bureaucrats in answering questions raised by members of either House of Parliament. For instance, I asked:

(1) In Canada, how many married women have not been divorced and not separated from their husbands?

I do not see why the Department of Citizenship and Immigration does not have the figures with which to answer that question, but the department said it has no statistics on the matter.

And I asked this question:

(2) How many of those married women living in Canada have a citizenship distinct and different from that of their husbands?

The department says statistics are not available, but it should have statistics from which that information could be given. The information should be on the desk of the deputy minister and other officials of that department. It is unfortunate that members of Parliament have to tell them how to do their work. We get no assistance from them. When we ask questions, they reply that they don't know the answers. That is not the way it should be done. They should have a record of what is happening.

My third question was:

(3) Has the Canadian Government received from married women living in Canada and women's associations in Canada requests for amendment to the laws to permit married women to have a citizenship distinct from that of their husbands?

That is a direct question. The answer given is this:

No. Under the Canadian Citizenship Act, which came into force on January 1, 1947, women have equal status with men and the citizenship laws permit married women to have a citizenship distinct from their husbands.

I wonder why there is on our Order Paper and on that of the other house a proposed resolution of approval of the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is insisting that that resolution be passed. For what reason? We already have what is proposed in the convention. Canada has set an example second to none in the world, and we are not given credit for it. We have to sign and approve of a convention that has been prepared by men who wear long beards, long hair and goggles.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Why the goggles?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: They should shave and have their hair cut.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I understand that the motion, notice of which is on the Order Paper, will be moved this afternoon. An amendment to a motion cannot be proposed until the motion itself has been moved. Therefore, I rule this proposed amendment out of order.

PROPOSED RESOLUTION OF APPROVAL—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John Hnatyshyn moved:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament approve the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women, done at New York on February 20, 1957, and that this House do approve the same.

He said: Honourable senators, as the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women is a particularly forthright document, the resolution we have before us will not require a lengthy explanation.

The purpose of the convention is to ensure that the nationality of a married woman will not automatically be affected by marriage to a national of another country, by the dissolution of such marriage, or by a change of nationality by the husband during the marriage; that the husband's acquisition or renunciation of the nationality of a state will not prevent the retention of her nationality by the wife; and that the wife of a national will be permitted to acquire her husband's nationality should she so wish, by naturalization procedures in her favour. This is expressed in the three substantive articles of the convention, articles 1, 2 and 3.

A number of copies of the convention were tabled some time ago, and I believe they have been made available to honourable senators.

Until a few decades ago, a woman who was of different nationality than her husband acquired his nationality automatically on marriage and lost her own, but in time a number of states enacted legislation providing that no such change in a wife's nationality would take place automatically. Because this action, progressive though it was, was not followed universally, domestic laws were brought into conflict. A consequence was that while women no longer always acquired the nationality of their husbands, they still lost their own, thereby becoming stateless.

Canada did not wait for the establishment of an international convention on the subject, but took steps as early as 1931 to maintain the national status of Canadian women who married nationals of countries that no longer granted automatic naturalization upon marriage. By the Canadian Citizenship Act of 1946, Canada became the first country of the Commonwealth to provide a fully autonomous citizenship status to a woman. Unless she herself wishes, a Canadian woman will not lose her nationality, nor will an alien woman gain Canadian nationality, upon marriage. In hand with this, a simplified naturalization procedure exists for the alien wife who wishes to acquire the nationality of her Canadian husband.

Honourable senators will be interested in the history of the commendable document we are considering. At the winter session of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations in 1949 it was decided that an International Convention on the Nationality of Married Women should be prepared. The matter was subsequently considered by the Economic and Social Council, the International Law Commission and the Commission on the Status of Women. The views of member countries of the United Nations were solicited and a draft convention was prepared and circulated to the various Governments for comment.

At the Eleventh Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations, in 1957, a resolution was adopted opening the convention for signature and ratification. Canada, which had taken an active interest in this question at United Nations, and which was one of the states promoting the drafting of the convention, signed the document on February 20, 1957. At the present time twenty-two countries have signed the convention, which came into force last August.

As I have indicated, the substantive parts of the convention are already reflected in the Canadian Citizenship Act and are in harmony with Canadian law. Nonetheless, I am confident that honourable senators will wish to show their approval of the role Canada has taken in promoting the adoption of an instrument which will safeguard the rights of women by supporting this resolution.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Wilson, debate adjourned.

FARM CREDIT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson moved the second reading of Bill C-67, to provide for the extension of long term mortgage credit to farmers.

He said: Honourable senators, we have before us Bill C-67, to provide for the extension of long term mortgage credit to farmers. This is the third, and, I believe, the final, piece of legislation brought forth by the Government in this session with the idea of assisting farmers across Canada.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: What were the other two?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: The Crop Insurance Bill and the Farm Improvement Loans Bill.

Before I start my explanation of the bill I might say that according to figures of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics the present value of farms, live stock and equipment in Canada amounts to some $11 billion, the present value of lands and buildings being $6 billion 600 million, and of live stock and machinery being $4 billion 400 million. It is interesting to note that while the land and buildings have been proportionately decreasing in value from 80 per cent in 1931 to 70 per cent in 1941 and 60 per cent in 1958, on the other hand, live stock and machinery were valued in 1921 at 20 per cent and in 1941 that value had increased to 30 per cent, and in 1958 it stood at 40 per cent. The actual value, however, of lands and buildings has been going up considerably, but, in proportion, live stock and machinery are increasing in value a great deal more.

Then, again, the size of the farms shows that in 1921 the average farm in Canada was 198 acres, and in 1956 it had increased to 304 acres. On the other hand, in the Prairie regions alone the average size in 1921 was 344 acres, and in 1956 the average farm had increased to 546 acres. From those figures it will be seen that in western Canada the average farm now comprises one section of land, or very close to it.

This, in a way, shows the trend of farming and indicates one of the reasons why, under this act and previous acts, some consideration has to be given to the amounts to be lent out by the Government through loans to farmers so that they may carry on, even as they have done previously. In other words, loans or credit had to be streamlined with present-day conditions.

Bill C-67, the new Farm Credit Act, is now under consideration. If this bill receives the approval of the Senate and obtains royal assent, a Farm Credit Corporation will come into being which will take over all the assets of the present Canadian Farm Loan Board.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable senator, before he leaves the statistics, if he has the figures of land values of farms in Canada for previous years?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: No, I have not.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Are they obtainable?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: I believe so.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I think it would be well to have them.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: As I said before, the Farm Credit Corporation will take over the assets of the Canadian Farm Loan Board which now operates. I might say in passing that the Canadian Farm Loan Board has been very active in the past year, and has loaned out to some 1,523 farmers in Saskatchewan a total of $8,358,350, while to 1,216 farmers in Ontario it lent $9,950,976, or roughly $1,600,000 more.

The assets of the Canadian Farm Loan Board will be taken over by the Farm Credit Corporation. The present staff of the board will be transferred to and become the working staff of the corporation.

One of the changes made will be that the advisory committee will be increased to at least 6 but not more than 9 members and a chairman, the majority of whom will be farmers or representatives of farm organizations.

This new corporation may make arrangements with the Director of the Veterans' Land Act, utilizing the services of any person employed by him to assist in the administration of this new act.

The capital of this corporation shall be an aggregate sum of $8 million, which shall be taken from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The amount of money which can be loaned by the corporation has been increased from $120 million to $200 million—that is, 25 times the capital of the corporation. I might say that last year there was a short bill brought in whereby the capital of the Canadian Farm Loan Board was raised to $6 million.

Following are some of the purposes for which loans shall be made to farmers, namely, to acquire land, to purchase fertilizers, seed, live stock and equipment; to erect farm buildings; to clear, drain, irrigate or fence land and to discharge any liabilities. In other words, a farmer may be able to consolidate his liabilities by taking a loan from the Farm Credit Corporation.

Hon. Mr. Davies: May I interrupt to ask a question? Can the honourable senator inform the house how many farms there are in Ontario and what is their average size?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: I am sorry I have not that information, but I could get it for my honourable friend.

These loans shall be made to farmers only. If a farmer has one or more occupations besides farming, the Governor in Council may designate which, in his opinion, is the farmer's principal business, and if it is farming, the farmer can qualify for a loan. Loans may also be made to farm co-operators, who operate distinct farming entities, or to a group of men who form a society in farming. The amount per loan has been raised from the sum of $15,000 to $20,000, or to a total of 75 per cent of the valuation of the lands and chattels.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is that an increase in the percentage?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Actually it is an increase in the inflated price of money.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I understood my honourable friend to say there was an increase in the amount of the loan which a farmer can receive. My question was: Is the 75 per cent of the value an increase over the former percentage of the value?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Yes. Formerly it was 50 per cent of the value and it is being raised to 75 per cent. As I say, the maximum amount of the loan is raised from $15,000 to $20,000, or to a total of 75 per cent of the valuation of the lands and chattels.

The bill also provides for supervised farm loans. Under these supervised farm loans the total loan may be $27,500, or 75 per cent of the approved value of farm lands and chattels. In this case the corporation would require that the loan be supervised until the amount of the loan has been reduced to 65 per cent of the total amount loaned.

I mentioned earlier that the Director of the Veterans' Land Act can be called in to assist in the work of the Farm Credit Corporation. In other words, similar assistance will be given with respect to this legislation as has been given throughout the years with respect to the Veterans' Land Act.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is not that legislation for the benefit of younger men?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: This legislation is for younger men too. Only farmers between the age of 21 to 45 can get this type of loan.

Hon. Mr. Davies: Can a farmer get a loan in order to buy a farm or must he have a farm to begin with?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: He can get a loan in order to purchase a farm if he can prove he is a bona fide farmer and intends to farm.

The borrower will have to pay a fee of 2 per cent of the amount of the loan, or $100, whichever is the lesser, as the supervising fee. The interest on all loans will be 5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is that an annual payment?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Yes, an annual payment of 5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I was referring to the amount which the farmer would pay for supervision. You mentioned 2 per cent. Is that an annual payment?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Yes.

There shall also be carried an insurance on the life of the borrower. This supervised loan may be made to any bona fide farmer between the age of 21 and 45 years. The farmer receiving the full $27,500 will not be able to qualify for a farm improvement loan until the loan has been reduced to 65 per cent or less of the appraised value. These loans will be made payable over a period of 30 years.

Honourable senators, I believe this piece of legislation is somewhat overdue, in that costs of land and machinery have gone up considerably, and many farmers find themselves in a position where they cannot obtain sufficient credit to improve their position and their earning power as a full commercial proposition, which is so necessary nowadays throughout Canada. If we are to maintain farmers in a prosperous and self-help position, they must, like any other business, have sufficient credit. In my opinion, this act is the best basis on which farmers may build for a more solid and prosperous future.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: The honourable senator mentioned an interest rate of 5 per cent and he said insurance is to be carried on the life of the borrower. Can he tell me what the cost of that insurance per $100 is likely to be?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: I do not know. It would vary according to the age of the applicant.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Can you tell us the amount of the life insurance that must be carried?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: I do not know. It is not set out in the bill, but it would probably have to cover a certain proportion of the loan. I do not think it would cover the full amount.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: We could get that information in committee.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: In the province of Quebec all loans made by our caisses populaires to farmers are insured. The average cost is 5 cents per $100 per month.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, when I first saw this bill as it was introduced in the other house I intended to approach it with a different attitude, for it contained certain features that I intended to oppose strenuously. However, I say quite frankly that, because of a particular amendment, the minister has taken a good deal of thunder out of my talk. I want to discuss the bill briefly in relation to the legislation it is replacing, and I should like to make a few observations and suggestions.

First of all, I should like to congratulate my honourable colleague from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson) upon his introduction of this bill, but I think I should correct one part of his remarks. I do not believe he intended to create the impression, which he left with me at least, that the present Government was responsible for introducing three pieces of legislation which are of great assistance to farmers. It is true that the new Crop Insurance Bill was introduced by the present Government, but the Canadian Farm Loan Act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act were in existence when the present Government came into power.

The bill now before us is, I believe, an improvement on the present Canadian Farm Loan Act. I have read the bill carefully, and I realize that, as in the case of legislation of all kinds, there must be amendments made from year to year to meet changing conditions that arise. I believe that in the main the bill meets the needs of the farm people in so far as farm credit is concerned. There are some comments and some recommendations I wish to make, in which I may be alone, but nevertheless I shall make them a little later.

I wish to go back to the Revised Statutes of 1952, in which the Canadian Farm Loan Act was consolidated, and I do so to indicate the changing needs over the years—even since 1952, a period of seven years. The act at that time provided a maximum loan to an individual farmer of $5,000; the amount of the loan was not to exceed 50 per cent of the appraised value of the farm; it applied only to tillable land and buildings, and was for a maximum period of 25 years.

In the amendment of 1956 the method of financing was changed to provide money for loan purposes from the issuing of bonds to the issuing of shares of capital stock. The amendment also provided for the issuing of 30,000 shares of $100 each, making the total capital provided out of Canadian revenue funds $3 million, and it provided that the board could loan up to 20 times the capital, or $60 million. The amendment further provided for an increase in the maximum loan to an individual farmer of from $5,000 to $15,000, and increased the provision on a percentage basis of the value of tillable land and buildings from 50 per cent to 65 per cent. I believe that is a correction. That amendment made in 1956 indicates that over the years, as a result of mechanization, new ideas in farming and technology, and all the rest of it, it was obvious to everyone that farmers needed more money to carry on, if they required a loan at all.

In the amendment of 1956-57 the capital stock was increased from $3 million to $4 million, and maximum loaning capacity from $60 million to $80 million. In 1958 the act was further amended to provide for the capital stock to be increased from $4 million to $6 million, and loaning capacity from $80 million to $120 million. The bill before us increases this share capital from $6 million to $8 million, and the amount that may be loaned is increased from 20 to 25 times the amount of capital, so the total amount the board can loan under this bill is increased from $120 million to $200 million. All of this is, I think, to the good, and I approve of the changes, particularly under present conditions.

Subclause (h) of clause 2 is the one that pleases me most. I say that because I am a farmer; I was born on a farm and have lived on one all my life, and have had something to do with administration of agricultural policies in the Department of Agriculture of my province. I am very happy about this change. Subclause (h) provides that the administration of the act shall be under the Minister of Agriculture instead of the Minister of Finance. Honourable senators, it has been my experience that provincial Secretary-Treasurers or Finance Ministers are very difficult to deal with, because of the very nature of their position. In other words, it is their responsibility to control expenditures to the very minimum in every department of government, regardless of the purpose of the expenditure. This also applies to every member of the staff. They are trained in this respect, and this results, in my opinion, in many applications of good prospective farmers being turned down through lack of experienced personnel who know agricultural conditions in Canada. The transfer of administration from the Department of Finance to the Department of Agriculture, therefore, should result in more equitable and generous administration by reason of the fact that all agricultural officials, from the minister down, have a far greater knowledge of farm credit needs and farm problems.

Clause 3 provides that the Farm Credit Corporation shall consist of five members. This replaces the present provision for from three to five and, in my opinion, is an improvement, even if it may be considered a minor one.

The next important provision is in clause 9. This provides for an advisory committee to the corporation of not less than seven nor more than ten members, including the chairman, to be appointed by the minister, the majority of whom shall—and I underline the word "shall"—be farmers or representatives of farm organizations. I sincerely trust that when these are appointed all areas of Canada will be represented, and that the Atlantic provinces in particular will be adequately represented on this board. There has been some discussion, and I believe profitably so, in relation to the activities of this advisory committee. I am not too much worried about it, because over the years I have become pretty well acquainted with ministers of agriculture in Canada. I think all the officials recognize the need for advice in everything pertaining to agriculture, whether credit policies or any other matters, and while I would like to see it spelled out a little more definitely that the committee shall hold so many meetings per year, I am not too worried about it because I feel that this board will be composed of representatives of the rank and file of Canadian farmers.

In clause 11, which deals with objects, purposes and powers, the significant change is contained in subclause (d) which provides, among other things, the making of arrangements with the Director of the Veterans' Land Act for utilizing the services of their personnel in relation to the supervised loan provision of this bill, with which I agree. If the experience they have had is any criterion of the success that they have achieved in the Veterans' Land Act administration, this should mean greatly improved administration of the farm credit act.

Clause 16 is another important section of the act. It sets out the purposes for which the proceeds of loans shall be used. I am in accord with most of its provisions. First, clause (i) of subclause (a) says "to acquire farm land". The honourable senator from Lumsden did clarify this to a degree, but I would like to know if it would apply in the following case. Say a farmer has two or more sons, all working together on the home farm, where there is not sufficient work to employ all of them. One or two sons may want to purchase a farm apart from the home farm but may not possess sufficient funds to purchase the farm outright. Will the board have authority under this clause to purchase a farm for the sons, provided they can meet a down payment on the farm equal to 25 per cent of the appraised value of farm and equipment and then take a first mortgage on the property for the balance? If this is not provided for, in my opinion it should be. I will enlarge on this provision a little later.

The clause I intended to speak most strongly on is clause 16, subclause (c), which has to do with the interest rate. I have decided not to make the remarks that I had planned to make on this clause, but I still think, though some may not agree with me, that the interest rate is too high, even at five per cent. I will admit it is uniform, in that the same interest rate applies to farm improvement loans and also applies to loans under the Veterans' Land Act, but I do think that there should be further provision for a lower rate of interest and I am going to make that suggestion a little later on.

Clause 19, which provides that regulations may be made by the board, with the approval of the Governor in Council, contains a provision that is an important improvement over the present act. It is contained in subclause 2 and is as follows:

> For the purposes of this act the value of a farm for agricultural purposes may include the commercial value of any part thereof used for the production of forest products.

Honourable senators, this is particularly important to the farmers of the Atlantic provinces, since the farm wood-lot provides, in many instances, a considerable portion of the annual income to the farmer, and I fully endorse this provision. Under the act as it stands now, no provision is made for taking any cognizance of the amount of a farmer's property that involves logs, timber, pulpwood, or wood of any other kind or description. This, I think, is a good improvement over the present provisions.

Clause 21, which is the second section of Part II of the bill, provides that the amount of the loan shall not exceed 75 per cent of the appraised value of farm lands on the security of which the loan is made. Now, honourable senators, I am not sure if I correctly understood the honourable senator who explained the bill (Hon. Mr. Pearson), that this would include the 75 per cent appraised value of the farm lands. A loan up to $20,000, as I read it, is taken only on the lands and buildings. If an additional loan is made under Part III of the bill, up to $7,500, which is provided for, and I will mention it a little later, then the additional loan supplementary security must be taken by way of chattel mortgage on live stock and equipment, and there is a part there which provides for life insurance on the borrower. Also in clause 22 provision has been made for the maximum period of repayment of the loan, this period being extended from 25 to 30 years. All of these three provisions are important ones and certainly an improvement over the present act, particularly under present-day conditions.

Part III of the bill, entitled "Supervised Farm Loans", contains very important provisions which I strongly endorse and, in my opinion, they will meet with general approval by the farmers of Canada.

The important provision of this part of the bill will be found in clause 26, which provides, as I understand it, for supervised loans up to $27,500 or 75 per cent of the appraised value of the farm lands and chattels. The security taken on the extra $7,500 will be by way of chattel mortgage on live stock, equipment, or any security other than farm land and buildings. Also the loan will be further secured by insurance on the life of the borrower, and will carry with it the compulsory supervision—in other words, a farmer agrees to carry out a plan of farming operations approved by the corporation for which he is required to pay a fee. The borrower must also agree to remain under the supervised plan until the principal amount of the loan outstanding has been reduced to 65 per cent of the appraised value of land and buildings.

All of these provisions, honourable senators, I believe are important and I support them fully.

To summarize, the provisions of the bill which I endorse are as follows:

1. It increases the maximum loan available to farmers from $15,000 to $20,000, and, in the case of supervised loans, to $27,500.

2. It provides for an advisory board consisting mainly of farmers or representatives of farm organizations.

3. It brings the direction and administration of the act under the Minister of Agriculture, where it should be.

4. It provides for long, intermediate and short-term loans.

5. It provides that farm wood-lots will be taken into consideration for appraisal purposes.

If I understand the bill correctly, insurance on the owner or the farmer under the supervised farm plan, under which the loans run to a maximum of $27,500, would provide among other things that if the farmer died before the loans were all paid the policy of insurance would see to it that the balance of the loan would be paid and the farmer's children or his widow would take the farm over and own it in its entirety. I am not sure that I am right in that, but if not, I believe it should be that way.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That would mean that if a farmer were not insurable he could not get a loan under this part.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): It could be. I am not sure. I am merely stating my view of this and asking if that is correct as I hope it is. I trust that the bill will be referred to a committee so that we may be able to get more details about it.

As I said a moment ago, I am not quite happy about the interest rate as provided for in paragraph (c) of clause 2. Let me repeat that in my opinion the interest rate is too high. In saying this I am thinking particularly of eastern agriculture; I do not know the west so well. Surely, honourable senators, the farmers of Canada are entitled to a little more generous consideration in their financial problems. I think these should have been attended to and remedied some years ago.

While I realize that over the years many national policies have been adopted to assist our farmers, for which they are grateful, let us not forget that other industries, other classes, other sections of our population have been assisted too in many ways, such as tariff provisions, concessions, assistance in trade development, depreciation allowances and so on, and in many other ways to which the farmer contributes through hidden taxes on practically everything he buys. Let us not forget, either, that he is engaged in an occupation where climatic conditions, such as rain, hail, frost and drought, will determine to a very large degree the measure of his income. There is only one other group in the world who have to face similar hazards—I refer particularly to our fishermen. Therefore we should grant every possible assistance to farmers in their magnificent endeavour in what I consider the most important labour of mankind, that is, the tilling of the soil and the production of food.

It has been stated by eminent authorities in many countries that investment in farm enterprises where money costs are more than 3½ per cent to 4 per cent will not give the operator a decent wage and standard of living after the payment of all costs, including depreciation. This is particularly true in the present cost-price squeeze. You may well ask, "Why do farmers remain on the farm?" The answer is, the total investment of the farmer's life's work is tied up in the farm. He works long hours, and is reasonably well satisfied with a lower standard of living than the majority of people are, and his love for the good earth keeps him there.

I believe that we owe the farmers of Canada something better. This bill, if passed, will help in their long struggle for a happier and better life. But I had hoped, honourable senators, that before a new bill was presented to Parliament the Government of Canada, through the Minister of Agriculture, would consult with all provinces with a view to consolidating all the farm settlement and loaning policies of the dominion and the provinces under one general national act which would meet all our framers' needs in every province at an interest rate of not more than 4 per cent, with the provinces and the dominion sharing on a 50-50 basis in administrative costs as well as in any losses that might accrue, and that the act would be administered by the national Government to ensure uniform administration right across Canada. I think it is generally agreed that the national Government can borrow money more cheaply than the provinces can.

I would go so far as to suggest that the operation of such an act in any province be conditional upon that province's willingness to share, on the basis I have suggested, the administrative costs and any losses that might accrue. Not only would such an act accomplish the items I have indicated, but it would also eliminate the large number of existing duplications of farm loan services by the national Government and the many such organizations that there are in every province. In the long run, even with the lower interest rate and the absorption of losses, if any, the cost to the taxpayers would be less by reason principally of the elimination of the present duplication and overlapping of services.

Honourable senators, back in the years when the Rowell-Sirois Commission was holding its meetings throughout the provinces of Canada I presented the case of agricultural policies for the province of New Brunswick. I very distinctly recall that the view expressed by the commission at that time was that there should be no duplication of services as between the dominion and the provinces; that if any such duplication existed it should cease, and the services should be rendered through a co-operative plan whereby the provinces and the dominion would share the responsibilities on an equal basis. I realize that objections may be raised in some quarters because the question of provincial autonomy would arise. But, as far as I am concerned, I am prepared to forgo any such fanciful suggestion for the sake of cheaper money to our farmers, better supervision of farm loans and more uniform administration provided at for less than the present cost to the taxpayers of Canada.

Honourable senators, in closing my remarks I should like to pay a special tribute to the farm people of Canada. I have worked with them and have known them intimately over a long period of time, during peacetime and wartime. I know something of the contributions these people have made to the progress of this country. I am familiar with the hardships they suffered especially during the war years when older people, many of them older than some of us, did the work on the farm while their sons and daughters were fighting overseas for their country. I commend them, not only for their magnificent effort in adapting themselves to meet new problems that have developed as a result of technological and other advances, but because they have stayed on the job when the returns from their farms have been diminishing and, at the same time, costs have been increasing year after year. And they have done this without too much complaint. This characteristic is possibly the main reason why our farm population has had such a stabilizing influence on our whole national outlook.

It will be recalled that on June 25 last, in my remarks on the Farm Improvement Loans bill, I referred to the drop in farm income and at the same time the greatly increased cost of production, and I used 1949 as a basis when costs of production and wholesale farm prices equalled 100. Then I gave the comparable prices for 1958, when farm wholesale prices dropped to 97 and farm costs had risen to 127, indicating the cost-price squeeze the farmers have been caught in.

I would now like to give some more interesting figures. In 1948 the total number of men employed on farms in Canada, including owners, was 1,096,000, or 22 per cent of the total working force in Canada. Ten years later, 1958, the total number of men employed on farms dropped to 712,000, or 15 per cent less, and constituted only 12 per cent of the total labour force in Canada.

Coming now to the increased production over the same period, and using the figure of 100 for the base period 1935 to 1939, we find that by 1948 production had increased to 125.1.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is that in volume or dollars?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): In volume, not dollars.

In 1958 it had reached 139.4, or an increase of 11.4 per cent for the 10-year period, and of 39.4 per cent for the 20-year period.

Honourable senators, I realize that mechanization of our farms and technological advances, together with weather conditions, have had a considerable bearing on this accomplishment, but I honestly believe the greatest single factor has been the human element. So I would plead, if necessary, that every possible consideration be given to our farmers in this transitional period of adjustment.

We all recognize that all legislation, however good, must be revised, improved and amended from time to time. This has been the case with the Farm Improvement Loan Act since its inception. As I like to give credit where credit is due, and because I believe the general principles embodied in this bill will improve the present act, I support these general principles. At the same time, I strongly recommend the adoption of a new national farm loans act that would encompass all types of farm loans, and thus avoid overlapping and duplication of services that now exist. I intend to support this bill, but I urge upon the Government, in the strongest possible manner, that it give immediate consideration to my suggestion for an overall farm loans act.

Hon. Mr. Davies: Honourable senators, I wish to ask the honourable senator a question. Is there any organization which will enable a young man to get the 25 per cent down payment that he must have to buy a farm? That seems to me to be a rather serious matter.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): It may be serious, but provision is made in some of the provincial acts whereby a man who has some chattels, such as live stock and equipment, may have them accepted as part of his down payment. Most of the provincial farm loans acts have a 25 per cent down payment requirement, but usually a young farmer can meet it on his own or with assistance from his father or other members of his family. That has been my experience.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I have just a few words to say on this measure.

I have had a lifetime of experience in farming and among farmers, and I have watched the practice of a good many farmers in their efforts to keep the title of their farms clear. In that way they reserve to themselves the facilities for getting a short-term loan; that opportunity is always open to them when their title is clear. Good and all as this bill is, I should not like the suggestion to go out from this house that we are necessarily recommending that all and sundry farmers should go out and mortgage their farms, regardless of whether such a course suits their circumstances.

I believe this is a good bill, but my advice to the young farmer is that he should spare no effort to avoid mortgaging his farm. If he requires short-term financing he can go to the bank for it. If he has a good herd of cattle or some equipment he can, as has been suggested, sell off some of that stock and raise money without putting on a mortgage, and then re-build his herd. It seems to me that all the discussion has been to the effect that it is necessary, and even the best policy, for a farmer to mortgage his farm. My advice to him is: "Don't do it except as a last resort. Keep your farm clear of a mortgage."

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, may I say a few words? I agree with the honourable senator from Westmorland (Hon. Mr. Taylor) that it may be possible to cut losses on farm loans. For more than twenty years the farmers in Quebec have paid 3½ per cent on provincial loans. I think that this special enactment, with the proposed low interest rates, will permit savings and improvement of conditions in agriculture in Quebec.

As has been mentioned, twenty years ago 22 per cent of the people lived on farms, and now the proportion is only 12 per cent. That is because of the high cost to the farmers of labour, machinery, and so on. If too high an interest rate on loans is charged it will discourage the farmers. If we cannot improve the life of the farmers in twenty years, I do not know what will be the result. Maybe we shall be obliged to eat capsules, because the farmer will entirely disappear, and with the disappearance of the farmer from the land the social situation will be very bad.

I agree with my honourable colleague that if we can decrease the interest rate on these loans it will be an improvement. It is in the interest of all the people of Canada to save the farmers and to save the land, for by increasing the prosperity of the farmers we increase the prosperity and welfare of the whole nation.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pearson, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

QUEENSTON BRIDGE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the second reading of Bill S-30, to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Niagara River between the province of Ontario and the state of New York.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I would like to inform the house that I have not received a copy of Bill S-30. I have a copy of Bill S-31, for the construction of a bridge across the Pigeon River.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Copies were distributed.

Hon. Mr. Croll: No, just of Bill S-31.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Why not deal with Bill S-31 and let Bill S-30 stand?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I cannot do that very well, because they dovetail into one another.

Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to authorize the replacement of the International Bridge over the Niagara River at Queenston Heights. The present bridge was authorized by Chapter 43 of the Statutes of 1896, which was assented to on April 23, 1896. That act is entitled "An act to incorporate the Queenston Heights Bridge Company".

The present bill, honourable senators, has been requested by the Province of Ontario. This will be an international bridge, with one end in Ontario and one end in the United States of America. On that account federal legislation is required, because relations of Canada with another country are involved. No federal Government financial obligations of any kind are involved.

The bridge will be a toll bridge, and the tolls charged will be subject to the jurisdiction and control of the Board of Transport Commissioners, under section 42 of the Railway Act.

Authority for the construction of the United States portion of this bridge has already been granted in the United States, but the work cannot be commenced until Canadian legislative action has been taken.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Which clause in the bill fixes the tolls?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am going to deal with the clauses of the bill a little later on. I am just making some general remarks now.

On account of the international status of the project Canada has certain responsibilities which cannot be abdicated. Therefore, this bill provides for the approval of plans and the location of the bridge by the Governor in Council. Provision is also made for governing the extent and manner in which Canadian labour will be employed.

If honourable senators will refer to the bill they will see that section 1 is noncontentious and self-explanatory. Section 2 approves the construction of the bridge as defined in section 3 of the bill, subject to certain specific provisions contained in sections 4, 5 and 6. As previously stated, such express approval by the Canadian Parliament is required on account of the international character of the bridge.

With respect to section 3, as I stated at the outset Ontario has requested the passage of this bill. Ontario is therefore authorized to construct or have constructed a bridge across the Niagara River from Queenston in Ontario to Lewiston in the state of New York. The bridge is to be an all-purpose bridge, and provision is included for the acquisition and construction of approaches, roads and other works. I presume that "other works" would include immigration buildings and things of that kind on our side, possibly for use by both Governments.

Section 4 provides that the requirements of the Navigable Waters Protection Act be met in the construction of the bridge, and prior to the commencement of construction the province must submit for approval of the Governor in Council plans, drawings, maps and all other information that is required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the project. Subsection (2) of section 4 forbids any change in plans or location of the bridge once the approval of the Governor in Council has been granted without such amended plans being also approved.

Section 5 ensures that Canadian labour and materials will be employed on construction where available, to the extent of 50 per cent, as nearly as may be, of the cost of such labour and materials

Section 6 provides that Canadian workmen on construction must be given appropriate safeguards as to wages and hours of work. This requirement is necessary as Canadian workmen may be working on both sides of the international boundary. In other words, they may be employed on that part of the bridge which is in the United States as well as on that part which is in Canada.

Section 7 is interesting. It amends the Queenston Heights Bridge Company's Act which in 1896 authorized the construction of the existing bridge. However, in the opinion of legal counsel that act does not give the company power to dispose of the bridge and does not provide for disposition of the rights, privileges and franchises or other assets enjoyed by the bridge company. This section 7 remedies these omissions, and Ontario will be able to acquire or have acquired the Canadian portion of the existing bridge, together with the rights, privileges and franchises incidental thereto. These must be acquired before construction of the new bridge is proceeded with. This provision is made retroactive to January 1, 1959. I take it that before it was discovered there was no right in the other legislation to dispose of these assets, rights, privileges and franchises to the province of Ontario, certain agreements were made.

Section 8 authorizes the Province of Ontario, as defined in the bill, to remove the existing Queenston Heights Bridge and its appurtenant works, prior to building a new structure.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Does the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) know whether it is the intention of the Province of Ontario to remove the existing Queenston Heights Bridge?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, that bridge will be taken down and the new bridge erected, as I understand it, in the same location.

Honourable senators, that completes a brief explanation of this measure. If there are any questions I will do my best to answer them.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Does the honourable senator know whether the Province of Ontario will provide funds through its Public Works Department for the construction of the bridge or will it incorporate a company for this purpose?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: About all I can say in reply to my honourable friend is that the federal Government has no responsibility whatever for raising money for the construction of this bridge. I am not certain whether Ontario intends to use its own funds, but I do not think it proposes to incorporate a company.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: We should have that information.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Does the honourable leader intend to send the bill to committee?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That was not my intention.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Surely the honourable leader is not going to ask us to give second reading and final approval without our having a chance to look at the bill. We haven't even got copies of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I understood that copies had been distributed.

Hon. Mr. Croll: No. We have tried to make that point. No one around me has seen the bill. We have just been listening to your explanation. We have copies of Bill S-31, to authorize construction of a bridge across the Pigeon River, but not of Bill S-30, the one we are now dealing with.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am sorry. I did not know that.

Hon. Mr. Croll: That is the point. On this side of the house only the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) has a copy of Bill S-30.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have a copy that was handed to me while the honourable Leader of the Government was giving his explanation. Naturally, I have not had an opportunity to read it, and of course I could not agree to the bill being given second reading today unless—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have no objection to referring the bill to committee, if that is the wish of the house.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I could adjourn the debate on second reading, or the bill could be given second reading today and referred to committee.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes, one or the other.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I would be quite agreeable to either course.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, similar bills dealing with the Ivy Lea Bridge, the bridge at Sarnia, the bridge at Mackinaw, the Rainy River Bridge and other bridges have gone through the Senate in the last ten years or so, and I have a distinct recollection that they were dealt with in committee. I think it should be made clear that state authority is the only authority that has to be consulted in so far as American interests in these projects are concerned.

Due to the international character of the project provided for in this bill, the federal authority in Canada is called upon to give its approval before the province can proceed, with the co-operation of the state authority in Minnesota, to construct this bridge.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Has the United States federal authority given its approval?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: In the past the state authority has been the only authority concerned in the United States, and it has been private corporations which have built these bridges. The business interests promoting them were both American and Canadian, and in each case a company was incorporated in the province of Ontario.

I do not think there is anything exceptional about this bill at all in the light of the precedents that have been recorded here in the past ten years, but it would be interesting to know whether or not in this case there is a company involved and if the Province of Ontario has incorporated that company for the purpose of the building of this bridge. It may be so. Certainly it was so in connection with the other instances I have mentioned.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, there are some questions arising out of the discussion. Clause 3 of Bill S-30 says:

> The Province of Ontario or any commission, corporation or other authority designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council of the province of Ontario for the purpose . . . may construct a bridge across the Niagara River for the use and passage of persons,—

This contemplates a corporation or some other such body "for the use and passage of persons". For the moment, I must make reference to Bill S-31, the next bill to be considered, which by way of section 3 says:

> The Province of Ontario . . . may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, enter into an agreement with the State of Minnesota . . ., for the free use and passage of persons, vehicles and goods,—

Bill S-30 contemplates a commission, such as the Niagara Power Commission, or something like that, by which tolls will be collected. Bill S-31 provides for a bridge between the province and the state free of tolls. Under the circumstances, I think perhaps both bills should receive second reading today, and then certainly go to some committee for a reasonable explanation as quickly as possible.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think so. I will agree to second reading today, if the Leader of the Government will consent to a reference to committee.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is quite in order.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I express the opinion that the committee should know all about the proposal, if it is a company, because a toll is to be charged. I can recall some of the previous bills of this kind which we adopted in past years. We knew then exactly what the tolls were going to be, how much money the company was to get and what was the final disposition of the bridge. I remember one case distinctly in which it was provided that on receipt of so much money in tolls the bridge should then become public property. The present bridge across the Niagara River is to replace a bridge apparently in the same location that is now a public highway. That bridge crosses the Niagara River at Queenston now. I have gone across it several times. It is an old bridge, and should be replaced. The public has an interest and a real stake in that bridge.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It belongs to the Queenston Heights Bridge Company, which was incorporated.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It may still belong to a company, but it is a public highway, and it is the only one in that neighbourhood. The committee should ascertain the authority in detail, what the proposition is, and the public interest involved.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) in introducing this bill stated, if I understood him correctly, that there was a reference in the bill to the tolls that would be charged. I see no such reference whatsoever there.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Such tolls as the Board of Transport Commissioners—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Where do you see that? I cannot see it, and I do not think it is in the bill. There is an indirect reference to tolls in the clause 3 of bill S-31, to which the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) referred, namely, "the free use and passage of persons", etc. In bill S-30 now before us the words used are "for the use and passage of persons". The word "free" is omitted. Therefore, I take it that under Bill S-31, for the construction of a bridge across the Pigeon River, no tolls can be charged, whereas under Bill S-30, for the construction of a bridge across the Niagara River between the province of Ontario and the State of New York, the authorities can fix whatever toll they deem advisable.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, that is not correct. They make an agreement, which covers all these items, and that agreement must be submitted to the Governor in Council. They will then submit their schedule of tolls to the Board of Transport Commissioners, under the section of the Railway Act which I mentioned, and they will not be able to charge higher tolls than are approved, though they could charge lower tolls. These matters have to be approved by the Governor in Council before they can even start the bridge.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do think the bill should go to a committee, where these problems could be clarified.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, bill referred to Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

PIGEON RIVER BRIDGE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the second reading of Bill S-31, to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pigeon River between the province of Ontario and the state of Minnesota.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is similar in many respects to Bill S-30, which has just received second reading, with the difference that this is to be a free bridge, while the other is to be a toll bridge. The bill now before us is almost word for word the same as a bill we passed last year.

The purpose of this bill is to provide for the construction, maintenance and operation of a bridge over the Pigeon River near the settlement of that name in the province of Ontario, to form a link with the highways in Ontario and in the state of Minnesota.

The bill provides for an agreement to be entered into between the Province of Ontario and the state of Minnesota.

The United States Congress has already passed the necessary authority in so far as Minnesota is concerned, including the right to enter into an agreement with the Province of Ontario.

The Province of Ontario has asked the federal Government to pass enabling legislation, this being necessary because it is an international project. The present bridge was built in 1930 and is now unable to carry the increased traffic. The new bridge will be built entirely by the Province of Ontario and the State of Minnesota, at no cost whatever to the federal Government. And, as I said before, it will be toll free.

This agreement will be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, so as to make sure that the responsibility of the Government of Canada is properly discharged and not abdicated.

The agreement also will require specifically that during the construction phase Canadian labour and materials will be used to approximately 50 per cent of the total, and further that the employment of Canadians on the project will be in accordance with Canadian law, as I explained in the other bill.

This is what is known as matching legislation. At the national level one part is approved by the United States Congress and the other part by the Canadian Parliament. At the provincial or state level, complementary legislation must be passed by the Province of Ontario and the State of Minnesota, and this legislation must also match. Notes will eventually be exchanged between Canada and the United States, each informing the other what has been done to facilitate the completion of this international project.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Does that apply to the former bill also?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, I would say so. I was referring to the bill to authorize construction of a bridge which is in the Maritimes, the Campobello-Lubec Bridge. The text of that bill was identical with that of the Pigeon River Bridge Bill.

I will now deal with this bill section by section.

Section 1 is self-explanatory and is noncontentious.

Section 2 merely approves the construction, operation and maintenance of the bridge.

Section 3 extends express authority to the Province of Ontario to enter into the agreement, with the approval of the Governor in Council, including securing title to approach roads and other things, the same as in the Queenston Heights Bridge Bill. This section also provides that the bridge be toll free.

Section 4 has to do with the safeguarding of navigation on the Pigeon River, and to that end provides that the plans, etc. be submitted to the Governor in Council for approval. Subsection 2 forbids commencement of work until that approval has been obtained.

Section 5 is the labour and materials section, the same as in the Queenston Heights Bridge Bill.

Section 6 has to do with the application of the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act.

And finally, provision for the approval of the agreement by the Governor in Council has been deliberately inserted in order to make sure that Canada's federal interests are properly taken care of in any agreement that may be concluded.

I presume honourable senators will want this bill referred to the Transport and Communications Committee, so that this bill may be considered along with the Queenston Heights Bridge bill.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I have only one comment to make. We have here bills to authorize construction of two international bridges, both extending from a point in Canada to a point in the United States. In the first bill, Bill S-30, I looked for a clause which I thought should be there, and which I think is usually to be found in bills of this character, authorizing the Government of the province concerned to make an agreement with the state opposite it for the construction of a bridge. In Bill S-31 this standard clause appears, in section 3, authorizing the Province of Ontario, with the approval of the Governor in Council, to enter into an agreement with the State of Minnesota for the construction of this bridge. Of course the reason for that is that our federal Parliament has jurisdiction over international matters of every kind and a province cannot by itself and of its own motion, without authorization from the federal authority, make an agreement with any foreign state or a section of a foreign state. But there is no similar clause in Bill S-30, the one dealing with the Queenston Bridge. In fact, I was rather startled at a clause which appears in that bill authorizing the Province of Ontario to construct a bridge from a point in Ontario to a point in New York. I was wondering what the reason is for the difference between the two bills and whether it would not be essential to insert in the first bill a provision similar to the clause which is properly inserted in the second bill, authorizing the Province of Ontario to make an agreement with the State of New York. There may be some perfectly good explanation for omitting the clause, but it should be very clearly explained to us in committee why the clause appears in one bill and not in the other.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not know whether I can explain that or not, but there is a commission in the United States to which American and Canadian members are appointed. Section 3 of the Bill S-30 says that the Province of Ontario or any commission, corporation or other authority designated by the Governor in Council may build the bridge. That commission, I understand, is still in existence but I am not sure what its powers are, or if a commission is going to build the bridge.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Is that commission set up by international treaty?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think we can get more information along that line in committee.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Then I think that the proper form the bill should take is an authorization of the commission and not of the Province of Ontario to build the bridge. It seems rather strange to me that we should be passing an act of Parliament authorizing the Province of Ontario to construct a bridge in the state of New York.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, bill referred to standing committee on Transport and Communications.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I understand the Transport and Communications committee meets tomorrow morning at 9.30. I just mention the fact that these bills could probably be considered at that meeting.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: As chairman of that committee, I am perfectly willing to hold a meeting at that hour. I only hope that honourable senators who are members of the committee will turn up for the meeting.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I understand that the Banking and Commerce committee meets at 10.30. It might be possible for the Transport and Communications Committee to consider these bills and give honourable senators the information they require between 9.30 and 10.30.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX

REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON FINANCE

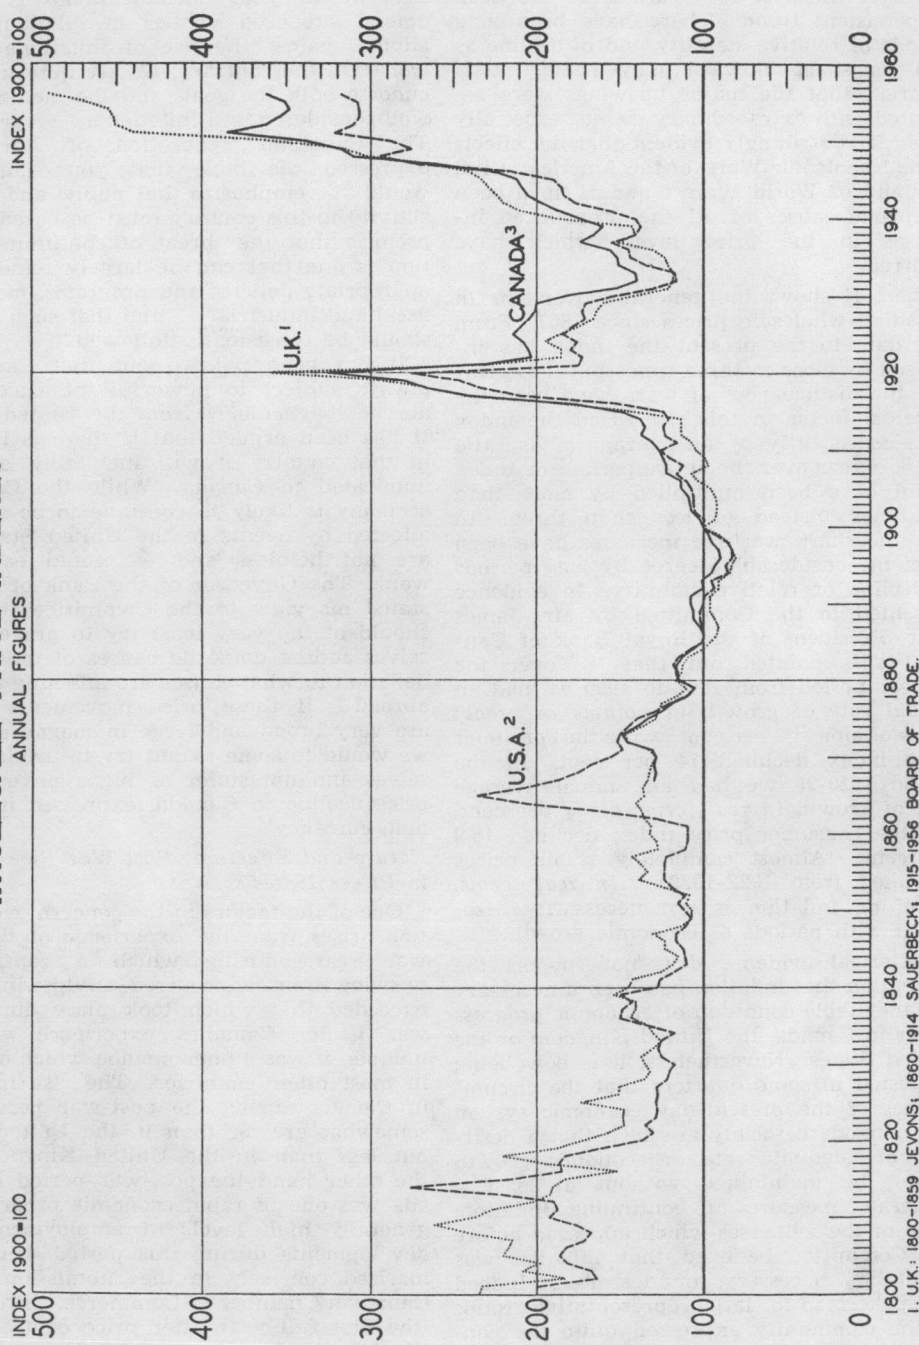
(Presented by Hon. Mr. Emerson. See p. 1014.)

Tuesday, July 14, 1959.

The Standing Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the instruction to study the threat of inflation in Canada, reports as follows:—

In recent years the problem of inflation has become a major concern of public policy throughout the Western world. An outstanding authority stated to your committee that "Inflation has replaced recession as the major topic of business concern on this continent". The nature of this problem, its cure, and its threat for the future have become matters of urgent interest and widespread discussion. The information submitted to your committee has indicated that these apprehensions have arisen because of the persistent rises in prices and costs and the consequent erosion in the value of money which has occurred during the post-war period; the continuing increases in the cost of living during the recent recession; and the obvious reluctance which has developed on the part of the general public with respect to the investment of savings in long-term fixed dollar obligations, with the result that governments in particular have encountered increasing difficulties in financing their requirements.

It was against this general background that your committee proceeded to carry out its instructions "to study the threat of inflation in Canada". The committee sought the assistance of both competent individual authorities and of representative groups in the community. Within the limited time available the committee was able to arrange 10 public meetings. At its first such meeting the committee heard from a distinguished economist, Professor F. A. Knox of Queen's University, who presented an explanation and broad analysis of the nature of inflationary forces. At its subsequent meetings the committee received the views of leading representatives of industry, commerce, finance, labour, agriculture, and of the Governor of the Bank of Canada. In all, the committee heard from 44 witnesses. Their names, positions, and the organizations which they represent are shown in Appendix A.



The submissions which were received were of invaluable assistance to the work of the committee. All of the presentations were prepared with special care and were the result of much thought and effort. They were constructive, frank, and reflected the great importance which was being attached to the subject of our enquiry. Consequently, the evidence placed before the committee as published in its proceedings does itself constitute a most valuable contribution to the discussion and elucidation of a problem of great social and economic significance to the future welfare and progress of our country.

In particular, the views and information which were presented have enabled the committee, within the limited time available, to submit some preliminary, but, useful findings. Clearly, there has not been sufficient time to pursue many of the intricacies and implications of so complex and difficult a subject. Consequently, the committee will confine itself in this report to a brief consideration of certain basic issues of vital importance about which there was some consensus of view among the witnesses who came before us. These issues relate to such fundamental matters as the question concerning the historical and long-term inevitability of inflation, the nature and effects of the post-world War II rise in prices, the compatibility of the aims regarding the maintenance of high levels of employment and the preservation of reasonable stability in the value of money, the doctrine of creeping inflation, and finally the existing situation and psychology concerning the threat of inflation.

Inflation not Inevitable

It is not necessary, before entering upon a discussion of this subject, to attempt to present a highly sophisticated definition of inflation. For all practical purposes inflation may be defined as a condition in which there is a persistent rise in the general level of prices. There are some who argue that inflation, defined in this way, has existed throughout the long sweep of history and that this historic trend can be expected to continue its inevitable course in the future. In support of this contention these observers point to the rise which they claim has taken place in the indexes of prices over the last several centuries. However, a close examination of the actual movements of prices in the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada does not support such a sweeping generalization. Professor Knox has explained that "In Great Britain and the United States, for instance, the record since 1800 shows great and long-continued swings in the general wholesale price level. Yet over that long period their indexes of wholesale price levels show no clear trend; increases have, in time, been offset by decreases...the price level (in Great Britain) in 1940 was almost exactly where it was in 1840, and yet there

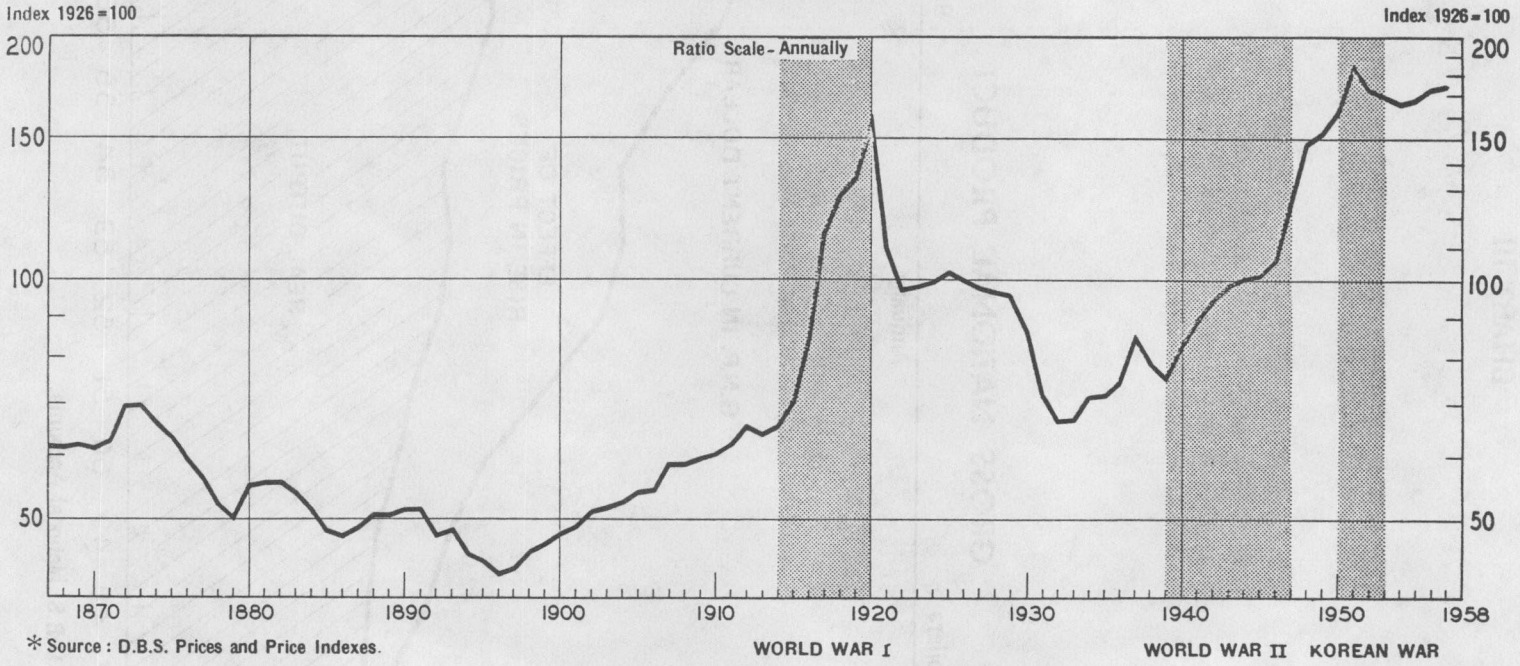
CHART I

WHOLESALE PRICE INDEXES
ANNUAL FIGURES
INDEX 1900=100
INDEX 1900=100
500
400
300
200
100
0
1800
1820
1840
1860
1880
1900
1920
1940
1960
U.K.¹
CANADA³
U.S.A.²
1. U.K.: 1800-1859 JEVONS; 1860-1914 SAUERBECK; 1915-1956 BOARD OF TRADE.
2. U.S.A.: BUREAU OF LABOUR STATISTICS.
3. CANADA: D.B.S.: GENERAL WHOLESALE PRICE INDEX.

has been considerable growth in output over that period." These movements in the general levels of prices in the three countries may be observed in Chart I. It will be seen that over the past 150 years there has been no persistent trend. There have been long periods of relative stability and of decline as well as sharp upward movements. It is apparent that the major upswings were associated with extraordinary events, especially wars. It is strikingly evident that the effects of the Napoleonic Wars, of the American Civil War and of World Wars I and II have been the prime causes of all the pronounced increases in the price levels which have occurred.

Chart II shows the general movements in Canadian wholesale prices since 1867. From that date to the present the index has increased by close to three times but it is clear that the disturbances of wars have been the principal factor in this rise. Had the index risen consistently by an average of as little as 2% a year over the entire period the index would have been multiplied by more than six times instead of less than three. In fact, the sharp wartime increases have been offset in considerable degree by long periods of decline or relative stability. In evidence presented to the Committee by Mr. James Muir, President of the Royal Bank of Canada, it is pointed out that "...over the 33 year period from 1867 to 1900 we had an annual rate of growth in volume or "real" terms of almost 3 per cent, while the consumer price index declined 14 per cent. In the period 1920-29 we had an annual average rate of growth in real terms of 3½ per cent, but the consumer price index declined 16.9 per cent. (Almost completely stable prices prevailed from 1922-1929)...In real terms, therefore, inflation is not necessarily associated with periods of economic growth."

Historical evidence does not support the contention that inflation has been a necessary and inevitable condition of economic progress either in Canada, the United Kingdom or the United States. Nevertheless, it is now being suggested in some quarters that the circumstances of the present-day economic system and of modern society are such that a desirable or adequate rate of economic growth cannot be maintained without at least a moderate measure of continuing inflation. None of the witnesses which appeared before the Committee believed that inflation was inevitable, necessary, or desirable. Indeed the spokesman for large representative groups in the community expressed quite the contrary view. The Canadian Manufacturers' Association stated that "We do not accept the philosophy that inflation is either inevitable or desirable and we believe that the will to prevent inflation must be kept vital." The Railway Brotherhoods informed the committee that "Our position (and we repeat this because here especially we want to be sure that we are not misunderstood) is not to defend supposed virtues in inflation or to advise against the use of inflationary controls. On the contrary, we are quite ready to endorse both the goals and the methods of a well considered anti inflationary programme." The Canadian Federation of Agriculture expressed the hope that your Committee would "...emphasize that public and private activity in this country must be based on the premise that the threat of continuing inflation is one that can be largely removed by appropriate policies and programs, monetary, fiscal and industrial ...and that such policies should be consistently followed."



It has been pointed out that Canada is always subject to powerful influences from abroad, particularly from the United States. It has been argued that if there is inflation in that country it will inevitably be communicated to Canada. While the Canadian economy is likely to continue to be strongly affected by events in the United States, we are not helpless and we could easily do worse. The Governor of the Bank of Canada stated his view to the Committee that "we should at the very least try to prevent ourselves adding domestic causes of inflation or deflation to what causes are affecting us from abroad ...if these price movements abroad are very broad and large in magnitude, that we would to some extent try to insulate ourselves and not suffer as big a price rise or price decline in Canada, expressed in Canadian currency".

Nature and Effects of Post-War Rise in Prices 1946-58.

One of the factors in the concern over inflation arises from the experience of the post-war years during which a considerable upswing in prices occurred, an upswing which exceeded that which took place during the war itself. Canada's experience was not unique—it was a phenomenon which occurred in most other countries. The rise in prices in Canada during the post-war period was somewhat greater than in the United States but less than in the United Kingdom. On the other hand the post-war period in Canada was one of rapid economic progress and generally high levels of employment. The developments during this period were summarized concisely in the submission of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. "From 1947 (the first full year after price controls were lifted in 1946) through 1958 the Consumers' Price Index in Canada increased 47.5 per cent or 3⅝ per cent per annum, compounded. During this 11-year period, however, the

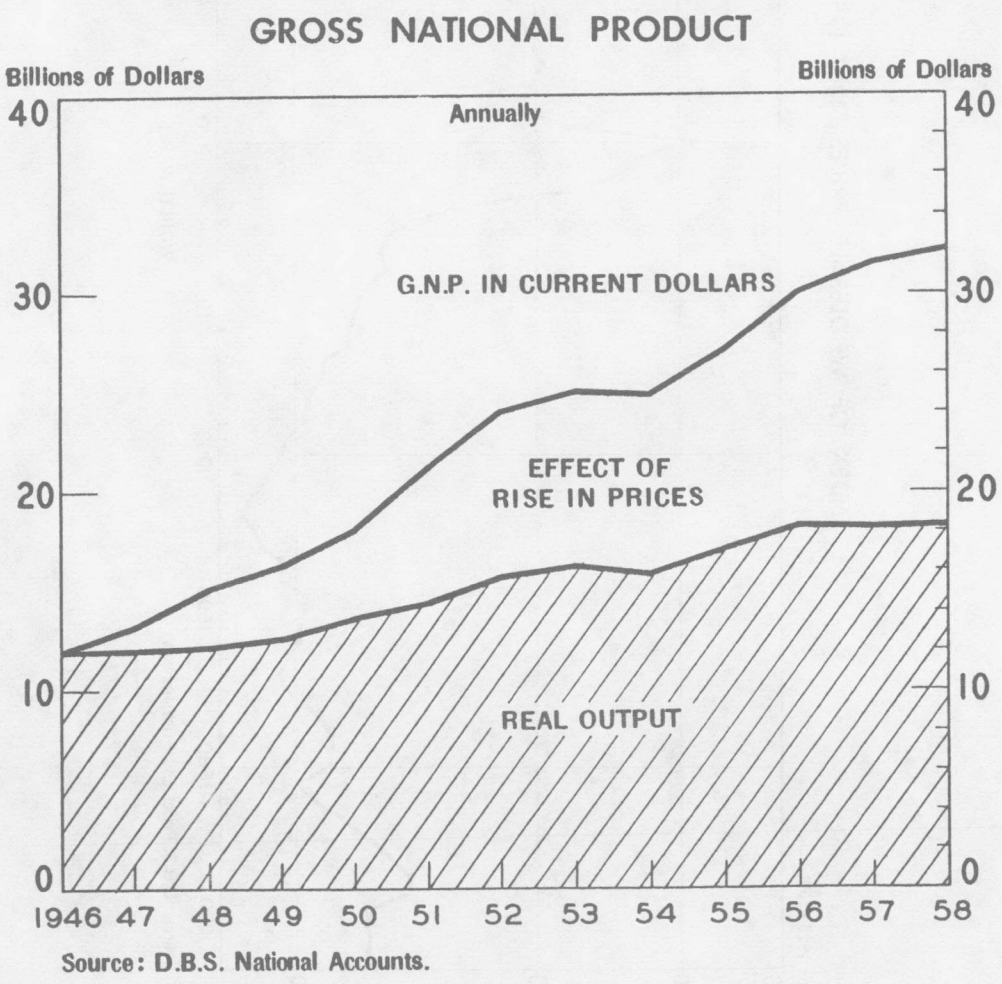


CHART II

INDEX OF WHOLESALE PRICES, 1867-1958 *

* Source : D.B.S. Prices and Price Indexes.

CHART III

Source: D.B.S. National Accounts.

Canadian economy experienced dynamic growth on a scale seldom equalled by any country. Population increased 35.8%, G.N.P. 133.8%, employment 18.1%, and unemployment as a percentage of the working force averaged 3.3% per annum. Gross capital expenditures of all kinds totalled $65.7 billions, or, an average 23.0% of G.N.P. per annum."

Chart III shows the growth in the total physical volume of Canadian production, the growth measured in money, and the effect of the rise in prices over the period 1946-58. In money terms Gross National Production (G.N.P.) rose by an average of 8.7% per annum but more than half of this rate of increase was the result merely of higher prices on the actual goods and services produced.

However, even during this period there was not a relentless and persistent trend. As was emphasized in the submission of the Canadian Congress of Labour there were three distinct periods of inflationary pressure; from 1946-1948 (release of long pent-up consumer demand), from 1950 to 1951 (Korean war and re-armament), and from 1955 to 1957 (investment boom). In the intervening years, some of which were periods of business recession, prices were reasonably stable. While special factors were present during the periods of sharpest upswing these special factors would not have brought about the results they did had it not been for certain underlying conditions which produced a distinct inflationary bias over the period as a whole. The underlying factors most frequently stressed in the evidence placed before the committee were the undue expansion in the supply of money and the substantial increase in government expenditures.

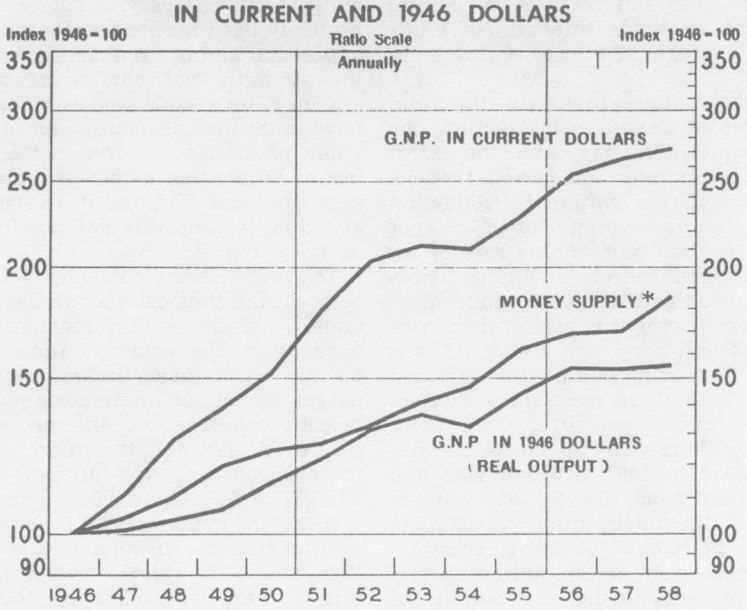

Chart IV shows the relationship which has existed between the increase in the supply of money and the growth in real production. It will be seen that throughout the period the supply of money ran ahead of the rise in the actual output of goods and services in relation to 1946—a year in which the money supply had already been enlarged tremendously as a result of the exigencies of war finance. Furthermore, the effects of the increasing money supply were greatly enhanced by the rise which has occurred in the rate of turnover of bank deposits, as indicated in Chart V. During the early part of the post-war period the expansion of the money supply was the result largely of the so-called "easy money" policy which was designed to promote economic expansion and to help avoid a depression which was widely feared. In the most recent period the expansion of the money supply was the consequence, primarily, of the problems arising out of the financing of the federal Government's cash deficit and the condition of the public debt. Mr. J. Douglas Gibson, General Manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia stated his opinion to the committee that "...the experience of the post-war period, including the recent recession and present recovery, suggests that we have probably been too concerned about the risk of depression and not sufficiently impressed with the strength and vitality of our economic system. The record suggests that we should have put more emphasis on defending the value of money.... It is, of course, fundamental that the money supply should be kept in hand because if the money is not available it simply is not possible for prices to keep rising."

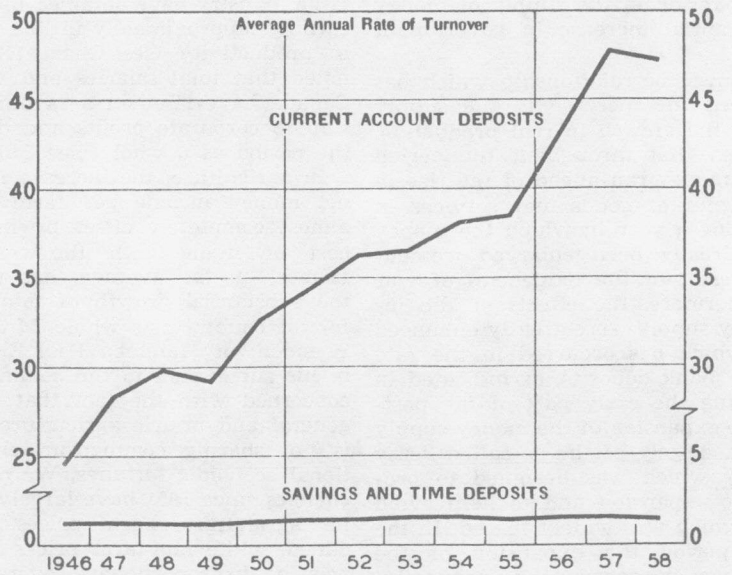
The inflationary movements in prices and costs during the post-war period has had very uneven effects on different groups and industries in the country. Indeed, these disparities which have become increasingly apparent are one of the important causes of the present concern over the prospects for the future. A few of the more important of these disparities are illustrated in Charts VI, VII and VIII. It will be seen that wage earners in manufacturing achieved a substantial increase in money earnings between 1946 and 1958 (135%) but a large part of this increase was offset by the rise in the cost of living (61%). Nevertheless wage earners in manufacturing received an increase in real income, of about 46% over the period. This increase in real income, however, compares quite closely with the rise in real output per man-hour in manufacturing with the result that wage-earners as a whole in this large industry have obtained increases in real earnings approximately in line with advances in productivity (see Chart IX). It will be noted that total salaries and wages paid in Canada have risen in a favourable relationship to corporate profits and dividends over the period as a whole (see Chart X).

In agriculture, the increase in the average net money income per farm operator was almost completely offset by the rise in the cost of living with the result that the farmer, on the average, has not shared in the substantial growth of total real income for the country as a whole. Mr. W. J. Parker, President of Manitoba Pool Elevators stated in his submission to the committee "We are concerned with the fact that agriculture in general and prairie agriculture in particular is not sharing commensurately in the national economic fortunes. We note that price changes since 1951 have largely been adverse for agriculture. Farm prices generally declined, while non-farm prices rose, or there was a disproportionate overall price rise unfavourable to agriculture, producing the commonly known 'cost-price squeeze' for

CHART IV



MONEY SUPPLY COMPARED WITH G.N.P. IN CURRENT AND 1946 DOLLARS

* Total currency outside banks plus total chartered bank deposits (less float). Includes Govt. of Canada deposits at the chartered banks.

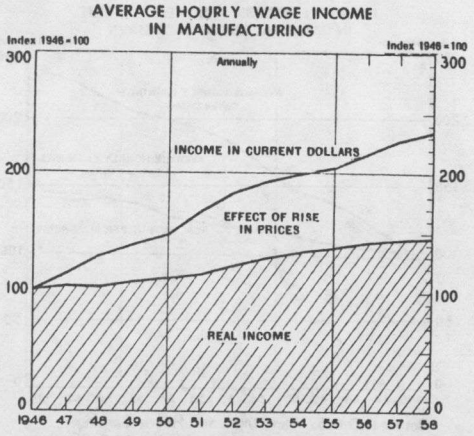


CHART V

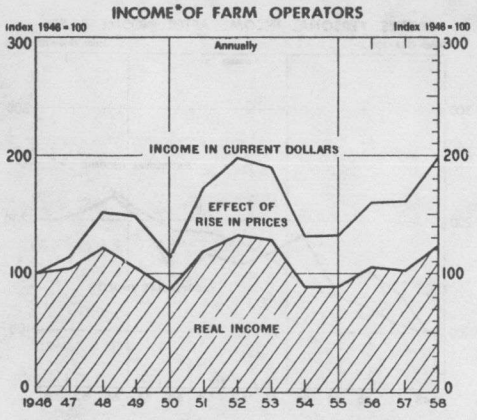
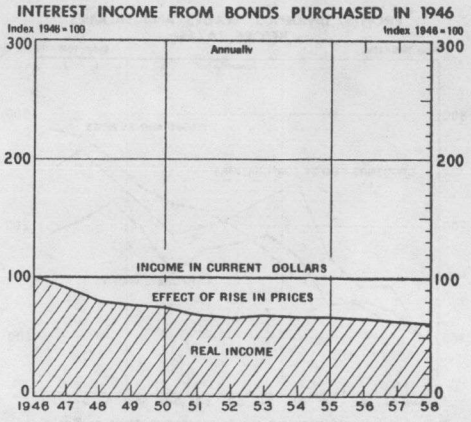
VELOCITY OF CIRCULATION OF CHARTERED BANK DEPOSITS



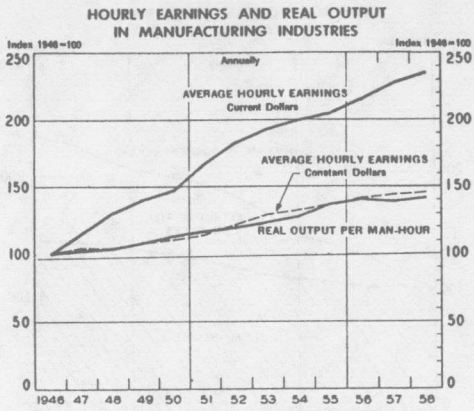
Sources : D.B.S. Cheques Cashed in Clearing Centres and Bank of Canada Statistical Supplement.

CHART VI



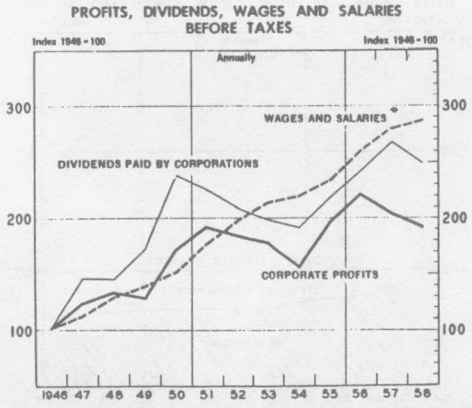
Source: D.B.S. Hours and Hourly Earnings.

CHART VII



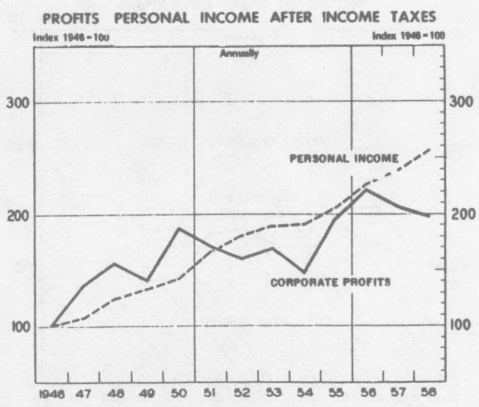
* Average net realized income per farm operator.
Source: D.B.S.

CHART VIII



Real Income calculated by deflating money incomes with D.B.S. Consumer Price Index.

CHART IX



Sources: D.B.S. Man Hours and Hourly Earnings.
D.B.S. Revised Index of Industrial Production.

CHART X

* Includes employer and employee contributions to Social Insurance and government pension funds

Source: D.B.S. National Accounts, Income and Expenditure.

farmers... It would appear that inflation has caused the agricultural industry to receive less than a reasonable share of the national income."

Important parts of the vital Canadian mining industry have been similarly affected. Mr. V. C. Wansbrough explained in his brief on behalf of the Canadian Metal Mining Association that "The mining industry affords an interesting example of how inflationary trends operate, because within the industry we have two types of operation, one type of operation where the price of the product is fixed, and has been fixed, not only for the ten-year period under review but for the past twenty-five years, viz., gold mining, and a type of operation where, as is most general in industry, the price of the product fluctuates with market conditions of supply and demand... vast sums of risk and development capital are constantly required and constantly at work. ...what at a lower level of operating costs is profitably minable ore has, under the impact of inflationary cost trends, to be written off as waste rock, and usually for good. Both these factors render the mining industry highly susceptible to inflationary pressures. ...From the point of view of the mining industry, the important factor is rather the steady trend of cost increases over the last ten years."

Chart VIII illustrates the substantial decline (nearly 40%) which has taken place over the post-war period in real value of incomes and investments which were fixed in money terms in 1946. The groups affected by this loss in real value, averaging 3.8% per year, include bondholders, owners of mortgages, pensioners, owners of life insurance policies, owners of savings accounts in banks etc. The number of persons included in these groups is very large. The committee was informed in the submission of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association that there are "between 1.75 million and 2 million persons covered by employee pension plans; 9.5 million individual savings accounts in the chartered banks; over 2 million owners of Canada Savings Bonds." Mr. A. R. Poyntz, President of the Canadian Life Officers Association, told the committee that "More than eight million Canadians owned $38.6 billion of life insurance at the end of 1958." The Investment Dealers Association in their submission to the committee estimated that "At the end of 1958 there were outstanding some $24.1 billion of Canadian bonds, an estimated $9 billion of mortgages, and $6.8 billion of personal savings deposits...a total of $39.9 billion..." The size of these figures serves to give some indication of the substantial losses which are brought about by the decline in the real value of money, and of the large number of people who are affected. Of course, the losses of the investors accrue to the benefit of the debtors. The difficulty is that in large part these are not the same persons. In other words, the erosion in the real value of money has, over a period of years brought about a very considerable re-distribution of income, not as the result of deliberate policy, taxation, or productive effort, but as the silent outcome of the subterfuge of inflation.

Another effect of the post-war inflation most frequently mentioned by witnesses before the committee was the impact of rising prices and costs upon Canada's competitive position in the international trading world. A number of important Canadian exporting industries have, for one reason or another, found it difficult or impossible to adjust their export prices in line with rising prices and costs at home. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce described the position to the committee in this way—"Thus import competition has been accentuated by costs rising more rapidly in this country. Moreover, some of our exporters are meeting increasingly stiff competition, in part from countries where the tempo of inflation has been less pronounced, thus weakening our terms of trade."

This discussion of the nature and effects of the post-war inflation in Canada is by no means complete, nor is it exhaustive in its analysis. It is intended merely to be illustrative of some of the major dislocations, inequities, and economically disruptive disparities which result from a prolonged and substantial decline in the value of money. Inevitably, the heritage of the immediate past pervades the problems of the present. Hopefully, also, it should hold lessons for the future.

The Compatibility of Economic Goals

The experience of the post-war years, a period of dynamic growth and generally high levels of employment in an environment of rising prices has led to some questioning as to whether the socially desirable aims concerning high levels of employment, an adequate rate of economic progress, and the maintenance of reasonable stability in the value of money are compatible with each other. Most of the witnesses which appeared before the committee referred to this important question and expressed the definite and unequivocable view that these basic objectives of public policy were not only mutually consistent and compatible but that in the end not any one of them could be accomplished without the others.

The submission of the Canadian Life Officers Association stated that "The main objectives of Canadian policy should be a relatively high level of employment and reasonable stability of the currency. The life companies believe that these two objectives are not incompatible. In fact, the companies believe that if these twin objectives are not given equal weight in the formation of policy and in its implementation, Canada will fall short of the sustained economic growth which could be achieved." The Executive Council of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce stated that "It is of the opinion that the objective of non-inflationary growth over a period of years while difficult is not impossible of attainment. It further believes that steady economic growth is so important to Canada that every sound method for encouraging it should be employed." Professor Knox gave his opinion that "...very few economists will be found, however, to argue that our policy choice lies between full employment plus sizeable price increases, on the one hand, and price stability plus stagnation in the national output on the other... Our policy objectives should... aim at long run stability in the price level... Provided that the economic system retains its competitive and flexible nature and movements of the price level are kept within reasonable bounds, fluctuations of the index of prices below as well as above the long-run average position are not incompatible with high levels of employment and great growth in national output."

The representatives of labour unions who made submissions to the committee agreed that a "stable or reasonably stable" price level was a desirable goal of policy provided that the concern for price stability did not outweigh or obscure what they regarded as the more important issues of the level of employment and the rate of growth of the economy. This attitude emphasizes the importance of pursuing at one and the same time the twin goals of high levels of employment and reasonable stability of prices. Neither unheeded inflation nor substantially and protracted unemployment is socially acceptable. It was frequently pointed out to the committee that prolonged or rapid inflation would sooner or later result in a bust and bring about serious unemployment. Consequently the modern state, and the industrial and labour groups within it, have a heavy responsibility to pursue policies which are designed to make our basic economic objectives compatible with each other.

Creeping Inflation

The experience of the post-war period and recent social and economic trends have caused some observers to think that it is not possible to maintain high levels of employment and an adequate rate of economic growth without at least a mild degree of continuing or "creeping" inflation. These persons point to the increasing concentration of business, the growth of powerful trade unions, the provision of floor prices for agriculture, the rising trend of government expenditures and taxes, and the limited tolerance for any degree of unemployment however small or temporary. It is argued that under these circumstances prices in key sectors of the economy are inflexible against decline, are "administered" and will only move upwards; wage settlements will exceed increases in productivity and will therefore impose a continuing upward "cost push" upon industry; necessary adjustments in the economy will be frustrated by immediate and large increases in government expenditures. It is maintained that under these conditions the highly organized claimants and conflicting interests in the society can resolve their differences only by coming to agreements which involve constantly rising prices and costs, and constantly expanding government outlays. It is further contended that if these upward pressures are effectively resisted by monetary and fiscal policy, unemployment and stagnation would result. Therefore, a "creeping" inflation of prices of say 2 to 3% a year is argued to be the lesser of two evils and is a consequence that should and must be accepted.

These arguments seem to provide an easy and accommodating answer to what have always been fundamental problems in any society, old or modern. The difficulty always with such accommodating answers is that they rest on assumptions which are neither explicitly explained or proved. Basically they are founded on what has been described "a tantalizing fascination in the illusion of greater wealth created by rising prices." It is a fascination which has always caused men and governments to try to find solutions to difficulties in some new and novel method of inflation. It is assumed of course that irresponsibility and almost complete inflexibility in our economic affairs is inevitable in our modern society. It assumes also, that the degree of continuing inflation envisaged will in fact guarantee high levels of employment and that the inflation can in reality be contained within the moderate limits contemplated.

Nearly all of the witnesses who gave evidence to the committee commented on this doctrine of "creeping" inflation and discussed the assumptions on which it is based. The great majority were opposed to this doctrine as a basis for policy. Nor was this doctrine regarded with resignation or impotence.

The spokesman for the Canadian Chamber of Commerce told the committee "that the Chamber of Commerce feels it could not as a policy tolerate even a creeping inflation. All you can say about creeping inflation is that it is not as dangerous and it is easier to adjust to than a more rapid inflation; but if you are going to erode the dollar the long-run effect is the same. Even the creeping variety has the effect of creating a psychological impact on people which spreads, and people are going to do the very things you don't want them to. In other words, they are going to assume a trend and take actions that will tend to bring about that trend". The Interprovincial Farm Union Council in its brief explained that "The farmer, unlike his counterparts in most other industries, is not in a position to increase his prices to the consumer to compensate him for rising costs of production which are the result of inflationary trends. We cannot increase the price of our wheat and grains in export markets and will be fortunate if these do not continue to decline. Thus even 'creeping inflation', over a period of time, has serious repercussions on the financial stability of farming operations". The submission of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool emphasized that "In the post-war years, rising costs have become a serious problem for farm people. Farmers are particularly vulnerable to the pressures of inflation because they are unable to pass on their increased costs to someone else". Mr. R. M. Fowler, President of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, told the committee "For many reasons, the Canadian pulp and paper industry fears inflation and believes in price stabilty...If the situation over the next few years is one of slow or creeping inflation, it may well be that the impracticability of recovering cost increases in price will have a bad result for this industry and for Canada...It could have serious effects, on the long-term competitve position of this industry in world markets". Mr. James Muir made the emphatic statement that "...over time it (a moderate dose of inflation) would increase the incidence of unemployment, reduce productive efficiency, undermine equity and incentive in the distributions of income, and so prevent Canada from attaining an appropriate rate of economic growth". The Investment Dealers Association discussed the effect on saving "...continually rising prices—or the expectation of rising prices—stimulates spending and discourages the saving needed to finance the new and productive capital equipment on which a rising standard of living depends". Professor Knox commented on the psychological situation which would be created and its likely consequences. "But when you lay it down as an element in national policy that you are not only going to tolerate it if you cannot help it, but you are going actively to assist and to promote, if necessary, a rise in prices of several per cent a year, then it seems to me that you put the public under notice that this is going to happen; and it better begin to protect itself against it. When the public begins on a large scale to protect itself against inflation, your inflationary pressures rise and the keeping of it moderate becomes, I think, impossible." Mr. James E. Coyne, Governor of the Bank of Canada, stated his opinion to the committee "... I do not believe there ever has been or ever will be creeping inflation for any length of time. I think it will either break into a gallop or lead to a collapse...".

Those who expect, or would accept, a situation of creeping inflation have suggested various devices which they argue would ameliorate or overcome some of its evils and inequities. They would facilitate and encourage arrangements for the escalation of otherwise fixed dollar payments and fixed dollar commitments according to some formula geared to the degree of inflation contemplated. Thus there would develop a vast system of more or less automatic adjustments in fixed dollar claims respecting salaries, wages, pensions, utility rates, interest, mortgages and other fixed investments, savings accounts, life insurance policies, annuities, agricultural prices, etc. etc., so that their real values are kept in line with the decline in the value of money. Even if enough electronic computers could be produced to make this untold number of calculations, the result would be merely a crude attempt to restore the real positions which would have existed under a much simpler and more direct policy of reasonable stabilty in the value of money.

Once such a system of escalations, hedges, and dodges is in full operation the whole purpose of the creeping inflation policy is gone. Once it is no longer possible for particular groups to gain at the expense of others, through the process of inflation, the policy loses its supposed virtue as a device for reconciling conflicting economic and social claims. Of course there would always be some who would try "to beat the game" (no one has shown how this could be avoided) in which case the escalation formulas would become an engine for converting the "creeping" inflation into a "galloping" inflation. If, in these circumstances, the gallop could be contained through appropriate monetary and fiscal policies as is sometimes claimed, then these policies could have been used effectively in the first place to maintain a reasonable stabilty in the value of money, with at least equally good results in respect of employment and economic progress. Furthermore, the goal of reasonable stabilty in the value of money is a much more easily understood objective of public policy. In a free and democratic society any policy, such as creeping inflation, which gives rise to vast complications and uncertainties not easily comprehended is a policy that cannot be soundly based.

The Existing Situation and the Fear of Inflation

There was virtually unanimous agreement among those who gave evidence to the committee that there was no actual inflation at the present time, as indicated by the relative stability of the consumer price index over the past year. The problem rather is one of the possibility of renewed inflationary pressure as full capacity output of the economy is approached. It was emphasized that despite the encouraging recovery in business there was still unemployment and a good deal of unused capacity in industry. Consequently the present position was not one in which there are "too many dollars chasing too few goods." The output of goods and services can be increased further by a considerable amount before full industrial capacity is attained. Also, it was pointed out that the deficit position of the federal Government has improved significantly since the last budget and that the deficit is likely to be overcome in the relatively near future as revenues rise following continued improvement in business. This assumes, of course, that in the meantime expenditures will not be materially increased.

In spite of this reassuring picture, there is a widespread fear of inflation. It has been described as an "inflationary psychosis". This fear is said to have arisen from the experience of prolonged inflation during the post-war years, the continued increase in the cost of living and the costs of production during the recent recession, the further increase in government expenditures, the appearance of a large deficit in the federal budget, the rapid expansion in the supply of money associated with the problems of financing the federal deficit, and finally, the persistent talk in certain quarters about the inevitability of some form of inflation in the future, creeping or otherwise. This fear has expressed itself most prominently in the market reluctance of the public to purchase bonds and other forms of fixed interest investments except at short term and sharply increased rates of interest. On the other hand there is a strong preference for stocks, mutual funds, and inflation-hedge properties. The Dominion Mortgage and Investments Association told the committee that "Pressures are developing on our member companies to direct their investments away from their historically fixed interest channels to larger proportions of equity investments of one kind or another... this pressure has a tendency to reduce the amount of funds available for investment in fixed income securities".

Many witnesses emphasized to the committee the dangers which are inherent in a widespread fear of inflation. The greatest danger lies in the possibility that this fear could in itself bring about the inflation which is feared. Mr. J. Douglas Gibson explained how this could come about and the consequences which could follow. "...there is the danger that fear of inflation will set the groundwork for a serious recession. Sooner or later stock prices may get so high in relation to corporate earnings and bond prices that a marked reaction may set in. People may suddenly realize that things are getting out of proportion. This is all the more likely if fear of inflation leads to ill-considered capital investment in some directions or to unnecessary accumulation of inventories."

It is a matter of vital concern that this inflation psychology be overcome and that confidence in the future value of money be made secure. This is an essential and urgent task in the battle against the threat of inflation. However, this task cannot be accomplished by some legerdemain or empty exhortation. There must be, not only a clear statement of purpose, but, above all, there must be a positive demonstration by the authorities in day to day policies that inflationary actions will be avoided. This means the exercise, when necessary, of the required restraint in monetary and credit policies. It means restraint in the growth of government expenditures and the avoidance of deficits, especially when these are inflationary in their effects. However, these restraints cannot work smoothly unless there is also restraint in the pressures which can be exerted by labour, business and other groups. If these pressures are too great either politically or economically they can frustrate the efforts of the authorities and result in unemployment and stagnation.

Authoritative witnesses emphasized to the committee that adequate tools of monetary and fiscal policy for the control of persistent inflation are available. We can muster the will and determination to use them. With the necessary will there is no cause to fear that inflation is inevitable, especially in the present circumstances when the supplies of goods and resources are sample. In a free society public understanding and support are essential. It has been said the "monetary and fiscal policies must not only be intelligent, they must also be intelligible." To this end responsible bodies must be willing to make particular efforts to discuss and explain the issues involved and the aims which are sought. Your committee hopes that its proceedings, the valuable evidence it has received, and this report will make a constructive contribution to this purpose.

To summarize, your committee concludes that:—

1. Inflation is not inevitable.

2. We reject the doctrine of "creping" inflation as in any way desirable for Canada.

3. The maintenance of reasonable stability of prices should be a basic aim of our economic policy along with our other aims for the achievement of high levels of employment and an adequate rate of economic growth.

4. Reasonable stability of prices is entirely compatible with and essential to the attainment of continued economic progress and high levels of employment.

5. Inflation constitues a hidden tax which falls inequitably upon the public, with grave injustices upon those least able to protect themselves.

6. Inflation is harmful to our basic primary producers and weakens the competitive position of both our export and domestic industries.

7. Tools to contain inflation are available —what is necessary is the will and determination of the people and the authorities to use them.

Your committee records its deep appreciation of the invaluable help received from its consultant and adviser, Dr. John J. Deutsch. He was uniquely fitted by his experience and qualifications to assist the committee in its study and he has had the confidence of all members of the committee.

All which is respectfully submitted.

CLARENCE V. EMERSON
Chairman.

APPENDIX "A"

WITNESSES

F. A. Knox, B.A., F.R.S.C., Professor of Economics, Queen's University.

The Canadian Chamber of Commerce: Mr. Morgan Reid, Chairman, Executive Council. Mr. H. H. Edmison, Co-chairman, Public Finance and Taxation Committee. Mr. W. J. Sheridan, Assistant General Manager.

Mr. A. Ross Poyntz, President, The Canadian Life Insurance Officers Association, and President of Imperial Life Assurance Co. of Canada, Mr. E. C. Gill, President, The Canada Life Assurance Company. Mr. D. E. Kilgour, President, The Great-West Life Assurance Co. Mr. J. A. Tuck, Q.C., General Counsel, The Canadian Life Insurance Officers Association. Mr. David Kirk, Secretary-Treasurer, Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

Mr. W. T. G. Hackett, Assistant General Manager, Bank of Montreal, representing The Canadian Bankers' Association. Mr. G. Arnold Hart, President, Bank of Montreal. Mr. Neil J. McKinnon, President, Canadian Bank of Commerce.

Canadian Pulp and Paper Association: Mr. R. M. Fowler, President. Mr. A. M. Moore, Economist.

Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada: Mr. E. R. Alexander, Vice President Finance. Mr. J. W. Popkin, Economist. Mr. W. J. McCarthy, Assistant Treasurer.

The Canadian Metal Mining Association: Mr. V. C. Wansbrough, Vice President and Managing Director; Mr. H. J. Fraser, Past-President and Director. (President, Falconbridge Nickel Mines Ltd., President, Ventures Ltd.); Mr. J. R. Bradfield, President. (President, Noranda Mines Ltd.); Mr. W. S. Row, Vice President. (President, Kerr-Addison Gold Mines Ltd.); Mr. A. J. Anderson, Director. (President and Managing Director, Giant Yellowknife Gold Mines Ltd.).

The Investment Dealers' Association of Canada; Mr. N. J. Alexander, Deputy General Manager, James Richardson & Sons, Winnipeg; Mr. M. D. Cox, Director, Anderson and Co. Ltd., Toronto; Mr. G. Cretzianu, a Vice-President, Greenshields and Co., Montreal.

The Railway Brotherhoods: Mr. H. E. Campbell, Secretary; Mr. John Weldon, Economic Adviser.

Canadian Labour Congress: Mr. Claude Jodoin, President; Mr. R. Bell, Assistant Research Director; Mr. Eugene Forsey, Director of Research.

Mr. James Muir, Chairman and President, Royal Bank of Canada. Mr. J. Douglas Gibson, General Manager, Bank of Nova Scotia.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association: Mr. J. C. Whitelaw, General Manager; Mr. J. A. Calder, Past President, C.M.A. (Vice President and Treasurer, Imperial Tobacco Co. of Canada Ltd.); Mr. John D. Pattison, Economist, Imperial Oil Ltd.; Mr. Ira G. Needles, Chairman, Tariff Committee, C.M.A. (Chairman of the Board, B.F. Goodrich Canada Ltd.).

The Dominion Mortgage and Investments Association: Mr. A. H. Lemmon, President.

Manitoba Pool Elevators: Mr. W. J. Parker, President. Interprovincial Farm Union Council: Mr. A. P. Gleave, Chairman.

Mr. L. D. Byrne, Edmonton, Alta.

Mr. Paul Emile Charron, Assistant Secretary, Federation des Caisses Populaires Desjardins, Levis, P.Q.

Mr. G. L. Harrold, President, Alberta Wheat Pool.

Mr. C. W. Gibbings, Second Vice-President, Saskatchewan Wheat Pool.

Mr. James E. Coyne, Governor of the Bank of Canada.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 15, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following reports:

Report of the Secretary of State of Canada for the year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 8 of the Department of State Act, Chapter 77, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Civil Service Commission of Canada for the year ended December 31, 1958, pursuant to section 4(4) of the Civil Service Act, Chapter 48, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 36 of the Broadcasting Act, Chapter 22, Statutes of 1958. (English and French texts).

Report of the Board of Broadcast Governors for the year 1958-59, pursuant to section 36 of the Broadcasting Act, Chapter 22, Statutes of 1958. (English and French texts).

QUEENSTON BRIDGE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the report of the committee on Bill S-30.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (S-30) intituled: "An Act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Niagara River between the Province of Ontario and the State of New York", have, in obedience to the order of reference of July 14, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: This bill was introduced first in the Senate and has still to be passed by the House of Commons. In view of that I move that it be read the third time now.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Honourable senators, before the bill receives third reading perhaps I should say a word about it, in view of some of the criticisms that were made and the questions that were asked in this house yesterday afternoon when the bill received second reading. It was pointed out at that time that this bill, which authorizes the building of an international bridge across the Niagara Gorge, does not take the form of similar bills respecting international bridges—the form to which we are accustomed—or, indeed, the form of the bill which we are to consider next this afternoon, in that this bill does not contain a clause authorizing the Province of Ontario to enter into an agreement with the State of New York for construction of this bridge.

It was explained to the committee this morning that this is a rather peculiar situation which arises from the fact that the present bridge which it is proposed to replace under this bill is owned and operated by a body called the Niagara Bridge Commission. The commission has been in existence for a great number of years and owns and operates three bridges across the Niagara Gorge. It is a body incorporated in the United States but having authority to carry on business in Canada. It has the power to own and operate these bridges, so there is no need to provide in this bill for an agreement between the Province of Ontario and the State of New York.

Honourable senators will recall that this bill authorizes the Province of Ontario, through any commission designated by it, to construct a new bridge in place of the existing one at Queenston Heights. It was indicated to us in committee that the province of Ontario intends to designate the Niagara Bridge Commission for the purpose of constructing the new bridge. We were also told that this is a more or less temporary bill. Section 3 merely permits construction of the bridge but makes no provision for its operation. We were told that negotiations are now under way between the federal authorities of Canada and the United States, and the provincial and state authorities involved, for the purpose of constituting a new international authority to own and operate all the international bridges which cross the Niagara Gorge.

I think some honourable senator raised the question as to whether the new bridge was to be a toll bridge. The answer is in the affirmative. We were also told in committee that the present bridge is a toll bridge.

Honourable senators, these circumstances explain why this particular bill does not take the form which we normally expect to be taken by bills providing for the construction of a bridge between Canada and the United States.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Do the terms of the bill not require the bridge to be a toll bridge?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I do not think so. Section 3 merely authorizes construction of the bridge. But Bill S-31, which authorizes construction of a bridge across the Pigeon River between the province of Ontario and the state of Minnesota, provides for a free bridge. The bridge authorized by this bill, however, will not be a free bridge. The existing bridge which is to be replaced is a toll bridge, and I am told that the new bridge also is to be a toll bridge.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PIGEON RIVER BRIDGE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hugessen presented the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on Bill S-31.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill S-31, intituled: "An Act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pigeon River between the Province of Ontario and the State of Minnesota", have, in obedience to the order of reference of July 14, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: For the reason mentioned with respect to the previous bill, I move the third reading now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

COAL PRODUCTION ASSISTANCE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West), Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill C-68.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-68), intituled: "An Act to amend the Maritime Coal Production Assistance Act and to authorize certain amendments to the agreement made under that act with Dominion Coal Company, Limited", have, in obedience to the order of reference of July 9, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I move that this bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FARM CREDIT BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-67.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-67) intituled: "An Act to provide for the extension of long term mortgage credit to farmers", have, in obedience to the order of reference of July 14, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Honourable senators, I move that this bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CROP INSURANCE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-66.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-66) intituled: "An Act to provide for contributions and loans to the provinces in respect of crop insurance", have, in obedience to the order of reference of July 9, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Honourable senators, I move that this bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-58.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-58) intituled: "An Act to amend the Criminal Code", have, in obedience to the order of reference of July 9, 1959, examined the said bill, and now report the same with the following amendment:

Page 5, lines 13 to 21: Strike out subclause 8 of clause 12 and substitute therefor the following:

"(8) In this section,

(a) 'court' means a county or district court or, in the Province of Quebec

(i) the court of the sessions of the peace, or

(ii) where an application has been made to a District Magistrate for a warrant under subsection (1), that district magistrate,

(b) 'crime comic' has the same meaning as it has in section 150, and

(c) 'judge' means a judge of a court or in the Province of Quebec, a district magistrate."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be adopted?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I move adoption of the report now.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, perhaps I should give a short explanation with reference to the proposed amendment.

The amendment was proposed by the honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette). It arose principally because of a special situation which obtains in the province of Quebec, and not elsewhere in Canada, in respect of the personal jurisdiction of a magistrate in that province.

That is a very brief explanation, but I think it covers the effect of the substance of the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I am sorry, I did not quite follow the effect of the definition of "crime comic". Where does that come into the picture?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is no change in that. It was only in connection with jurisdiction in Quebec that the bill was amended.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The paragraph referring to "crime comic" was not amended, but is was necessary to include it in the report in order to give the complete clause.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I understand.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, before the motion for adoption of the report is carried may I say I was present at the meeting of the Banking and Commerce committee at which this bill was considered, and there are two points to which I would like to refer.

In committee I moved, seconded by the honourable senator from Kingston (Hon. Mr. Davies), an amendment to the new section 150A, that a judge be required to hear the person in whose custody the objectionable material is found, before the judge may order the seizure of what might be, in certain circumstances, the whole edition of a daily newspaper. However, it was thought by some other members of the committee that this might delay proceedings, and the amendment did not carry. I still think, honourable senators, that it would be better if provision were made to hear the parties concerned before drastic action is taken by a judge. I do not like ex parte proceedings. However, the committee has reported otherwise.

The question of obscenity is my next point. In that regard I have made my position very clear to the members of the house.

Hon. Mr. Croll: And to the country.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: And, I hope, to some extent to the country at large. I had hoped that the department would reconsider its position on this point and at least have made it amply clear in the bill that the definition of obscenity there found does not set aside all our other law—that Parliament is not giving this definition and saying, in effect, "That is it". My hope was that the department would make clear that that was not the intention of this section. However, a representative of the minister was at the meeting, and took no such action, and the committee passed the section.

I repeat what I said earlier in the house, that this section does not clarify the situation, that it has only muddied the waters. Therefore, I had hoped that some revision of the section might have been made. However, the committee passed it, notwithstanding all that was said, and it is in the same form in which I criticized it a few days ago. Now I can only hope that the wisdom of our judges is such that it will offset the stupidity of this section.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I agree in principle with the proposal of the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), seconded by the honourable senator from Kingston (Hon. Mr. Davies), that it would be advisable to hear from a vendor or publisher, or someone on their behalf, before allegedly obscene literature is seized. However, a satisfactory amendment was not tendered to the committee; at least, I did not think the amendment proposed improved the section sufficiently for me to support the amendment. If a satisfactory amendment had been proposed along those lines, so as to give to the vendor or the publisher an opportunity to be heard before literature was seized, I would have supported it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Will the honourable senator permit me to say a word? The amendment was not that the author or publisher should be notified; rather, the owner of the premises where the literature was seized.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The vendor.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Not the vendor. Honourable senators will take note of the wording of subsection 3 of section 150A. Would my honourable friend give me the precise wording?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Subsection 3 reads:

The owner and the author of the matter seized and alleged to be obscene—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The section names the parties to whom the notice must be given after seizure takes place. My amendment was to the effect that the occupier of the premises be given notice before seizure.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I can say to the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity that I am with him in spirit, but I was not with him in the wording of the proposed amendment. Perhaps some day a satisfactory amendment in this regard will come to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Why doesn't my honourable friend move an amendment?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I can't think of a satisfactory one. Let me hasten to say that I am not criticizing the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity; I only wish that he had moved an amendment which appealed to me; then I could have been with him in word and in deed.

I am not satisfied with section 18 of the bill, which prohibits publication of any confession or admission of an accused person that was tendered in evidence at the preliminary hearing. Here again, I agree with the spirit of the section. I do not think a confession should be published before the trial of the accused takes place, because I feel it would to some extent interfere with his assurance of a fair trial. However, the wording of the section is very confusing. Until last evening I was under the impression that if a confession were produced at a preliminary hearing, that confession could not be published until the trial of the accused had taken place, but if a confession was not submitted at the preliminary hearing and only at the trial, then the confession could be published immediately it was presented at the trial. We find now that it is not the confession which cannot be published at the time of the trial. It can be published whether it is presented at the preliminary hearing, or whether it is not presented at the preliminary hearing but only at the trial. What cannot be published is a report that the admission or the confession was tendered in evidence at the preliminary hearing.

I am sure that will be very confusing to the newspaper world, to those who produce the newspapers. I felt that we could have framed an amendment to that section but again, as with the previous section, I could not think of a satisfactory amendment. For that reason I am accepting the section as it is at the present time, but I hope that both of these sections will be amended in the days to come.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the report?

Some Hon. Senators: Carried.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: On division.

Report adopted, on division.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I now move the third reading of the bill, as amended.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion for third reading of the bill, as amended?

Some Hon. Senators: Carried.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed, on division.

NEWFOUNDLAND SALT FISH EXPORTATION LAWS REPEAL BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. John G. Higgins moved the second reading of Bill S-32, to repeal certain fisheries laws in force in the province of Newfoundland respecting the exportation of salt fish.

He said: Honourable senators, the brevity of this bill should warrant brevity on my part. The bill has only two sections. The first section provides that a Newfoundland act shall be repealed, and the second section provides that the repeal shall become effective on August 1, 1959.

The purpose of this bill is to repeal Act No. 10 of the Statutes of Newfoundland, 1942 which is The Exportation of Salt Fish (Permits) Act, 1942. This act is restated in chapter 211 of the Revised Statutes of Newfoundland, 1952. From the bill itself it would seem that there are two acts, namely, The Exportation of Salt Fish (Permits) Act, 1942, No. 10 of the Statutes of Newfoundland, and The Exportation of Salt Fish (Permits) Act, chapter 211 of the Revised Statutes of Newfoundland, 1952, but, as I have said, these are the same act.

Under this act the exclusive right to market salt fish is held by the Newfoundland Associated Fish Exporters Limited, usually known as NAFEL, which is a name composed of the initial letters of the words in the full name. This exclusive right of NAFEL expires on July 31 of this year. After that date no permits for the exportation of salt fish shall be necessary.

Under the Terms of Union between Newfoundland and Canada, NAFEL was continued in the right to this exclusive licence to export salt fish for five years. NAFEL had been given this right some years previously by an act of the Newfoundland Legislature. After the expiration of the five years, which was in 1954, that exclusive right was renewed year after year, up to 1958, when it was intimated to NAFEL that the right would cease one year thereafter, namely, on July 31, 1959.

As the necessity to control exports of such fish by permits is no longer required, because the exclusive NAFEL export licence has been terminated, it becomes necessary to do away with the continuing requirement for export permits under the act by repealing the act.

This bill was initiated in the Senate, and when it has passed here it must go to the House of Commons to be passed.

The Newfoundland act that is being repealed was passed before the Act of Union between Newfoundland and Canada, passed in 1949. Section 22 of the Terms of Union between Newfoundland and Canada, which section deals with the fisheries, mentions certain Newfoundland acts dealing with fisheries, including Act No. 10 of 1942, and sets out that all fishery laws and orders, rules and regulations made thereunder shall continue in force in the province of Newfoundland as if union had not been made for a period of five years from the date of union, and thereafter until the Parliament of Canada otherwise provides.

That five-year period has long expired, and now there is no necessity for this act. NAFEL will soon cease to have the exclusive right to the licence to export, and the necessity of permits will be done away with by the repeal of the act.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins) has given us a clear, yet concise, explanation of this bill. I rise at this time as a citizen of the province of Ontario to assure him that the citizens of all parts of Canada are deeply interested in the welfare of the fishermen of Newfoundland and are, indeed, very anxious that they should prosper.

As the honourable senator has said, for some years the export of salt fish, which, I believe, is mostly cod, has been under the control of NAFEL. He has informed us that the right of this organization to an exclusive licence to export was to continue for five years after the Union, which was consummated in 1949, and since the expiration of the five-year period it has been renewed annually. So it has been in effect almost five years longer than it was required to be by the Terms of Union. My information is that one of the reasons why the right was not terminated previously is that it was felt by some people that another organization should take its place, but no such organization has yet been established. I am also informed that NAFEL has been of assistance to the fishermen and to the exporters by enabling them to sell their fish on an organized basis, especially in the European market. Without NAFEL each exporter would have dickered independently with foreign purchasers. The honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins) will correct me if I am wrong, but as I understand it NAFEL enabled the fishermen and exporters to speak with one voice.

I am informed that prior to the setting up of NAFEL the period of dickering on prices might be so prolonged that an exporter would have to sell his fish at a low price because it would go rotten if he did not get rid of it right away. That was especially so in former times when there was no refrigeration. Apparently NAFEL has rendered a very good service to the fishermen and exporters, and this service has continued down to the present time. By pooling their resources the fish exporters were able to reduce their marketing costs. As I understand it, there was some criticism of NAFEL because in order to become a member of it a fish exporter had to pay $10,000 into the association. A few years ago a new type of membership, known as associate membership, was granted for the sum of $1,000. The fishermen themselves had no representation on the board, and they were dissatisfied on that account because they felt they had no say as to the price they would get for their fish. Another criticism was that the fishermen only shared in the profits after the expenses and NAFEL's profit had been taken.

But, honourable senators, I would not want it to be gathered from anything I have said that NAFEL has been all bad for the fishing industry and the fishermen of Newfoundland. I feel some exporting organization is required to prevent cut-throat competition among fish exporters, especially at a time when there is a buyer's market. If I have any complaint about this legislation it is that it is doing away with NAFEL without providing anything in its place. If no other organization is brought into existence it is quite likely that NAFEL will continue to operate as a private organization, but that would not likely be satisfactory either to the exporters or to the fishermen themselves. Honourable senators, I say that the Government, having asked Parliament to abolish NAFEL by legislation, should at the earliest possible moment bring down a bill to set up something more satisfactory to take the place of NAFEL.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Honourable senators, it is a very nice thing indeed for me to find that there is at least one person in all these Parliament Buildings who has real knowledge of Newfoundland. I have been extraordinarily surprised at the general lack of knowledge of my province, and very often my opinion as one who was born and bred in Newfoundland has been ignored. I won't say that is so in the Senate.

The honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) is perfectly correct when he says that in Newfoundland "fish" means codfish. We have only one kind of fish in Newfoundland and that is codfish. Fish is codfish. Salmon is salmon. Herring is herring. Caplin is caplin. Halibut is halibut. Trout is trout. But there is only one kind of fish and that is codfish. That was always the traditional meaning of the word "fish" in Newfoundland, and it was confirmed by a judgment of the Supreme Court many years ago. It happened that a certain purchaser had contracted to buy so many quintals of fish, and the seller put in some haddock or other kind of fish. The purchaser took an action in the Supreme Court and obtained a judgment, on the ground that the contract called for so many quintals of fish and the seller was thereby bound to deliver nothing but codfish.

We buy our fish by the quintal. Apparently Newfoundland is the only place where that word is used. Before the Union a quintal consisted of 112 pounds, but since the Union we have had deflated weights and measurements. With us a ton was always 2,240 pounds and a quintal was 112 pounds. We always tried to be over-honest. Now, of course, a quintal is 100 pounds.

There is no doubt at all that NAFEL has done a very good job. For many years the fishery of Newfoundland had not been as good as it should have been, because at times the European market had been glutted. In the olden days schooners of from 50 to 120 tons used to sail to Italy, Spain and Portugal with fish on consignment, and every merchant attempted to get his fish over to Europe as early as possible, for the first fish brought the highest prices. The next fish brought reduced prices, and finally when the last of the fish got over there the market was so glutted that the fish sold for very little. Over the years some attempt was made to improve marketing conditions but these efforts met with little success until NAFEL was organized. What was against NAFEL was the fact that it put the export of fish in the hands of a few people who, incidentally, were obliged to contribute $10,000 each to a central fund. There was a good deal of protest against this, but I do agree with the honourable Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, and I have said this to the minister, that some other association should be formed for the purpose of regulating the export of fish, otherwise the marketing activity will result in cut-throat prices. Unless such an organization is established our fish will be sent over on consignment, which means to us in Newfoundland—and I think the same is understood here—that it will be sent over without any price being settled upon beforehand, and will be sold in the foreign market at whatever price the industry can get. If an enormous quantity of fish is sent over at one time it will sell at a small price. The main object of NAFEL was to send to Spain, Portugal, Italy or England so much fish from time to time, finding out beforehand on every occasion if there was a shortage. Incidentally, at one time we also had a great market in Brazil, and we may yet recover that market.

I repeat that I agree with the honourable Leader of the Opposition on the necessity of securing a replacement for NAFEL. It is absolutely essential that some other association should be formed to regulate the export of codfish in European countries.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Would it not be entirely possible for the fishermen to form an association on their own now?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: That would be the same thing, but they would have to get some fish exporters, some merchants who know about the export of fish, to join with them in the association. I would not be surprised if the Government formed one now; that is probably what will happen. Of course, I am not a fish merchant.

Hon. Mr. Davies: May I ask the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins) a question? Has there been a settlement of the dispute over the minimum distance which foreign fishermen were required to keep off Newfoundland shores? The distance was increased, was it not, from three miles to nine miles or more, and there was a great deal of trouble about that?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I think that according to international law a country cannot make any such increased distance applicable to foreign ships. My understanding is that a Canadian ship within the twelve-mile limit could be made amenable to the laws of Canada, but ships of other countries could not be. The three-mile limit is fixed by international law. Was it not the Hague tribunal of 1904 which decided that? I think it was the same tribunal which decreed that every country has full authority over the area from headland to headland, that the whole water within the line between two headlands, even if they are 20 miles apart, belongs to the country in which the headlands are located.

Hon. Mr. Davies: But did not Newfoundland itself arbitrarily increase the distance against outside fishermen?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Oh, no, Newfoundland could not have done that. And it could not do so now, because all regulations of that kind are made at Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I am one of those whose ignorance of Newfoundland the sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Higgins) deplores. Am I to understand that the Government of Newfoundland actually gave to private people a monopoly to buy all the fish that are produced in that country for export? If that was done I would not be surprised to learn that the fishermen were rather poor.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: No, NAFEL had no authority to buy. Fishermen were paid a certain amount after receipt of their fish, and received the balance after the fish was sold. The exporters were paid three per cent; the fishermen got the balance.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: And the exporters got their expenses, I presume?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: No, I think the three per cent covered everything. The great thing about it was that as soon as the fish was received the fishermen were paid so much, and the balance was paid as soon as the fish was sold.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Did that come about after competition? Was there competition at one time before a private monopoly of this kind was given by the Government?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: In the old days the price used to be set by competition, and prices varied from time to time. Whoever paid the highest price was sure to get the fish. I suppose NAFEL has been getting the highest price in European markets.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I think British Parliament abolished monopolies of that kind more than three hundred years ago. They became a subject of some controversy between Parliament and the Crown. Queen Elizabeth gave way and Parliament abolished such monopolies, and they have never existed since. Had that not been done the English people might have been as poor as I understand the fishermen of Newfoundland have been.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I do not see how the fishermen could get a good price at all if the exporters had to compete with one another on the markets of Europe.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I move the third reading now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION APPROVED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Civil Service Commission concerning certain employees of the Library of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine moved that the report be approved.

Motion agreed to.

INFLATION

REPORT OF FINANCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Emerson for adoption of the report of the Standing Committee on Finance on the threat of inflation in Canada.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, the report presented to this house yesterday was an excellent one. I cannot say I was surprised to find it was so good, for the Finance Committee of the Senate certainly knows its business in regard to this question. This is not the first time that committee has prepared a report bearing on this very important subject of inflation. Under the active leadership of the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) and the late Senator Hawkins, assisted by the very great experience of the senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig), to say nothing of other honourable members, the committee has presented from time to time to this house reports in respect to the financial situation in this country and the imminent difficulties that might arise unless serious consideration was given to this subject. Consequently, the committee was quite capable of dealing aptly with this situation when the time came, and there are now evidences that what it predicted has taken place.

As I say, this is an excellent report. It reflects the greatest credit on the chairman of the committee, Senator Emerson, the deputy chairman, Senator Leonard, the Steering Committee and the members of the committee generally. I have no hesitation in saying so since, while I was a member of the Steering Committee at the inception of the inquiry and at the very end, I was unfortunately absent during most of the hearings and could not take my share of the work. The committee was particularly fortunate in being able to secure the services of Dr. John J. Deutsch as adviser. Dr. Deutsch brought to the assistance of the committee the advantages of wide experience, great prestige and a keen mind which enabled him to assess accurately the evidence presented to the committee by 44 highly competent witnesses drawn from the fields of industry, agriculture, labour and finance, in addition to leading economists and the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

I personally regret that time did not permit the members of the committee to add to the testimony of the very important witnesses who came before us the advantages of their own wide experience, but the time of the committee was definitely limited. As far as I am concerned, I am disappointed and do not agree with some of the conclusions of the report, but they are items of emphasis rather than detail.

On the basis of the evidence presented by witnesses of the highest repute, the Finance Committee has presented a report which I believe will rank high among the many excellent reports the Senate has presented in the past and I commend it to honourable senators for their favourable consideration.

The subject dealt with by the report is, as honourable senators know, the question of the threat of inflation in Canada. The report takes a strong stand on the question of inflation, believing that it is neither desirable, necessary or inevitable to our continued growth and prosperity. It presents evidence that, over a long period of time, increases in the price index generally associated with wars have been compensated by corresponding decreases and have not interfered with great economic growth and development. It comes to grips with the extraordinary conditions that have persisted in Canada since World War II, in which from 1946 to 1958 there has been an overall rise in the consumer price index of 47.5 per cent or 3⅝ per cent per annum. For the past 12 months there has been no appreciable change in the price level. The question is where do we go from here, or perhaps it would be more accurate to say, where do we want to go from here?

The answer to these questions is complicated by the fact that not only has this 12-year period from 1946 to 1958 shown a marked increase in the price level, but it has been a period of very great and sustained prosperity. Public opinion therefore tends to be divided. Did this great development take place as the result of the price rise? Did it occur despite the price rise? Is its continuance dependent upon a continued price rise? Will it cease if prices do not continue to rise? Have we in Canada discovered a magic formula whereby we belie the experience of the past? Are steadily rising prices likely to lead to steadily increased prosperity? How better could we decide these difficult questions than to hear evidence as to what has happened to major groups in our economy over the last 12 years, as a guide to what we would like for the next 12 years?

This is exactly what the committee did. It would take too long to go into details which are set forth in the report, but, generally speaking, the evidence was that manufacturing, agriculture, mining and forest products industries were in no better position as a result of the price rise. Any increases in price which they received were either offset or more than offset by increased costs. And what is common to them all is the haunting fear that they have in various degrees priced themselves out of their ability to compete successfully with outside competition in the export markets and in the domestic markets as well.

There is one apparent exception. I say "apparent" because I am not sure what is the meaning of the report in this respect. It refers to wage scales in industry and manufacturing, and indicates that the increase of 135 per cent in average wages over a given period represents, or is offset by, increased living costs, but that over and above that increase there was a gain in real income. Let me read what the report says in that respect:

> Nevertheless wage earners in manufacturing received an increase in real income of about 46 per cent over the period. This increase in real income, however, compares quite closely with the rise in real output per man-hour in manufacturing with the result that wage-earners as a whole in this large industry have obtained increases in real earnings approximately in line with advances in productivity. It will be noted that total salaries and wages paid in Canada have risen in a favourable relationship to corporate profits and dividends over the period as whole.

As I say, I do not get a clear meaning from that section. It is an important point, and no doubt those who are more capable of explaining it than I am will indicate its true meaning. It seems to me to say that organized labour has not only received an amount equal to the rise in the cost of living, but an amount in excess of that, which amount represents almost the whole increase in productivity in manufacturing. Further, it seems to say that the increases in wages and salaries compare favourably with increases in dividends.

The point I wish to make, and I regard it as a vital one, is that there might not be as great an advantage in increased prices as there would appear to be at first sight. Our experience over the past twelve years would seem to be that any gain which took place through increased productivity in manufacturing was to a large extent taken up by wages. I hasten to assure honourable senators that it is not my attitude that labour is not entitled to as much as it can get. Indeed, under our competitive system everybody tries to get all he can. But I suggest to honourable senators that if we are to look forward to a period when the consumer will get no benefit whatever, and capital will stand to gain nothing, then the question will arise as to how long the consumer will put up with that condition before he looks for his requirements outside Canada, and before capital begins to think of more profitable places in which to invest.

While attending the meetings of the recent Atlantic Congress I had a very interesting discussion with a prominent American who has large investment interests in Canada, particularly in our natural resources, and more recently in mutual funds. He talked about the general position of Canada and what was likely to happen in the future, and he made what I thought was a most significant remark. I may say I was associated at that time with a committee which was considering the implications of development in the Western European economy. One of the interesting questions was the increased volume of investment by United States private capital in Europe because of the prospect of earnings and extensive development, particularly in building small cars in Europe, where they can be produced more profitably, and sending them to this continent. To return to the remark of my American friend: while talking about the position of Canada in the future, he said, "I want to tell you something you should never forget: there is nothing as nervous as a million dollars."

I believe that the experience over the next 12 years, or a lesser period, with respect to earnings and increased taxation on capital will have a vital bearing on our capital development program.

With respect to our relative position in the export markets, we must remember that business men, government, labour and every other group on the continent of Europe are giving a great deal more consideration to this question. If we read the reports of public discussions that have recently taken place, particularly in Germany and to a lesser extent in the United Kingdom, we see that the whole idea is to increase the real income of labour by decreasing the cost of living rather than increasing wages, thus keeping industry in a competitive position. It is for that reason that European countries are moving into larger trading areas in order to get the advantages of mass production, and thus a lower cost of living.

But with us, the philosophy of labour and of everybody seems to be that it makes no difference what we pay for what we have to buy, as long as our salaries and wages go up. I emphasize that that is the point of view not alone of labour, but of every one of us. I sometimes think there is in this country practically no consumer consciousness at all.

Therefore, as the matter stands, I think the committee has shown that there is actually no group, be it labour, business or agriculture, in this country that has really shown any net gain by reason of price increases over the past twelve years. On the other hand, over the heads of everyone is the haunting fear of competition in the future, and what it will do to employment and business generally in this country.

I come now to the other side of the picture, and to cover the question adequately I cannot do better than to place on the record a portion of the committee's report. First, I wish to emphasize the reference it makes to the loss suffered over the past twelve years by investors in fixed incomes.

I am reading now from the paragraph which is opposite charts IX and X in the appendix to yesterday's Minutes of the Proceedings:

Chart VIII illustrates the substantial decline (nearly 40%) which has taken place over the post-war period in real value of incomes and investments which were fixed in money terms in 1946. The groups affected by this loss in real value, averaging 3.8% per year, include bondholders, owners of mortgages, pensioners, owners of life insurance policies, owners of savings accounts in banks etc. The number of persons included in these groups is very large. The committee was informed in the submission of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association that there are "between 1.75 million and 2 million persons covered by employee pension plans; 9.5 million individual savings accounts in the chartered banks; over 2 million owners of Canada

Savings Bonds." Mr. A. R. Poyntz, President of the Canadian Life Officers Association, told the committee that "More than eight million Canadians owned $38.6 billion of life insurance at the end of 1958." The Investment Dealers Association in their submission to the committee estimated that "At the end of 1958 there were outstanding some $24.1 billion of Canadian bonds, an estimated $9 billion of mortgages, and $6.8 billion of personal savings deposits . . . a total of $39.9 billion . . . " The size of these figures serves to give some indication of the substantial losses which are brought about by the decline in the real value of money, and of the large number of people who are affected. Of course, the losses of the investors accrue to the benefit of the debtors. The difficulty is that in large part these are not the same persons. In other words, the erosion in the real value of money has, over a period of years brought about a very considerable re-distribution of income, not as the result of deliberate policy, taxation, or productive effort, but as the silent outcome of the subterfuge of inflation.

Honourable senators, to me that is most startling and damning evidence of the unfairness and iniquity of inflation and the erosion of the dollar, particularly to those who can least afford it. Considering the tremendous number of people who are affected, I am amazed that there has been so little reference to it in Parliament, and particularly in the other house. We in this chamber are not supposed to be near the people. It is the members of the House of Commons who are the elected representatives. Here is a robbery that has been taking place, a robbery even more serious than ones that are given headlines in the newspapers day after day, and there has been hardly a word about it. It is to the everlasting credit of this committee and, indirectly, of the Senate as a whole, that they have championed the cause. Whatever else they may do, they have at least brought to the attention of the public this situation which has been developing. I put to honourable senators this question: What do you want to do in the next twelve years? I ask you if we want to sit here, and if the authorities in this country want to sit here, and let another 40 per cent be taken off the investments and pensions, and everything else in this country? Can we afford to do that?

During the sitting of the committee the Governor of the Bank of Canada was asked what he thought about creeping inflation, and he said he was not in favour of it because it could not creep very long. He said it would either break into a gallop or lead to a collapse. I say to honourable senators that we cannot contemplate another loss of 40 per cent from the capital and the income of the people who have provided for their future without realizing that a fatal blow will have been given to the whole structure of savings in this country.

Let us see what it means. Somebody has a pension that he is looking forward to, that he is working for and contributing to, that is worth $3,000. Overnight, as a result of our carelessness, the value of savings has decreased—and I say "our carelessness" because we in this chamber are just as responsible as are the members of the other house, except that we have done something about it. Perhaps nobody pays much attention to what we say, but that is not our fault. We have tried to do something to stop this silent theft of wages and incomes, particularly from those who can least afford the loss. We cannot contemplate that with indifference any longer.

What the Senate committee has pointed out is exactly what we are up against today. In the past we have said—those of us who have spoken—that inflation would end up with people refusing to purchase any kind of fixed investment, annuities or bonds, and the ultimate effect would be chaos and unemployment that would, to use an expression of our American neighbours, make our hair curl. We have yet to realize the full effects of such unemployment, but today we are right up against the reluctance on the part of the people to buy Government bonds and other fixed obligations, and everyone in this house knows it. Where will that end?

I say that we must be prepared to take action in this matter now. It is said that it is a fear psychology, that it is only a threat of inflation. But who is going to buy the Government bonds? Who is going to buy other fixed obligations? Why should a man provide for a pension, why should he provide money for mortgages, if it is going to be constantly eroded? We have got to do something about this. Make no mistake about that.

Honourable senators, I want to deal with the last paragraph of the report. It reads:

> Authoritative witnesses emphasized to the committee that adequate tools of monetary and fiscal policy for the control of persistent inflation are available. We can muster the will and determination to use them. With the necessary will there is no cause to fear that inflation is inevitable, especially in the present circumstances when the supplies of goods and resources are ample. In a free society public understanding and support are essential. It has been said the "monetary and fiscal policies must not only be intelligent, they must also be intelligible." To this end responsible bodies must be willing to make particular efforts to discuss and explain the issues involved and the aims which are sought. Your committee hopes that its proceedings, the valuable evidence it has received, and this report will make a constructive contribution to this purpose.

Perhaps I am not close enough to public opinion to know, but I feel that the public of this country is either indifferent to the threat of inflation or is not at all sure that inflation is not inevitable or, indeed, that it is not desirable. Consequently I have grave doubts whether the Canadian public is yet prepared to support the Government in whatever steps it must take to solve this problem. Those more competent than I am take a reasonably optimistic view of the situation. I notice a report in the Toronto Globe and Mail is headed "Senate Group Finds No Inflation But Urges To Forestall It".

I recall that at the last meeting of the committee Mr. James E. Coyne, Governor of the Bank of Canada, was being pressed by I think Senator Lambert and Senator Euler to answer the question: "Have we actually reached the state of inflation?" There was no clear explanation, but Mr. Coyne did say that for about twelve months the consumer price index had shown very little change. That can be interpreted, as I think it has been from this newspaper report, as meaning that there is no inflation now but there might be later. Well, I do not know that I can agree with that viewpoint, particularly when we are in a position where, on the basis of 1946 levels, 40 per cent of the value of all fixed investments and incomes is lost. Is that not an indication of an inflationary situation? The economy may be steady for the moment, but it is constant at a level of 47.5 per cent higher than the 1946 level. That is one sure thing. Should this percentage of loss increase by another 40 per cent and then remain constant at the new level for a further twelve months, it will be no answer for someone to say "It has been constant now for the last twelve months."

Honourable senators, this kind of thing cannot go on indefinitely or it will result in a chaotic condition which will destroy everything we have known and cherished in this country. I have not the slightest doubt as to what will happen to the administration of the day, but I am not too sure who would take its place. It could well be a group whose viewpoints are entirely different from those shared by honourable members on both sides of this house. Let us remember that we have a most serious problem on our hands. I am probably as partisan as anybody in this house, but I am prepared to give the present Government my wholehearted support in any organized campaign to awaken the public to the seriousness of the situation with which we are faced. By the same token, I think it is reasonable to say that if nothing is done by the Government, I certainly am going to use every power at my command to criticize the Government. Perhaps we are having a respite, as it were, from any inflationary trend and those in authority may know that there will be no further inflationary increases in the price level. But I think the Government is faced with such terrific demands that it is not humanly possible for it to resist additional financial expenditures. I think we are spending entirely too much on armaments, yet just recall the hullabaloo raised when it was suggested that certain armament expenditures be reduced. I think it is absolutely ridiculous to have in this country a situation where provincial Governments get money from the federal Government and spend it without being responsible in any way for its collection. I don't know how the federal Government can prevent a further hoist in these demands.

A third factor that I think will affect our economic position is the proposed attempt by Canada to do something that is absolutely impossible to do in light of modern conditions. We have erected around a country of 17 million people a tariff designed to make us self-contained, and this at a time when every other country in the Western world realizes the futility of this and is moving into larger areas to take advantage of mass production. We cannot do this in a country with only 17 million people, unless we pay a terrific penalty by way of increased costs.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Right.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: This will have an immediate impact on our competitive position, which in turn will affect the income of the federal Government. I can see very grave difficulties facing us in the realm of public financing, and, realizing the serious consequences all this will have on my children and grandchildren, I am prepared to support this Government to the very limit in any effort it makes to awaken the people of Canada to the serious situation we face. By the same token, I will criticize the Government to the full extent of my ability if it fails to make any effort at all.

In summarizing the committee says:

> Tools to contain inflation are available—what is necessary is the will and determination of the people and the atuhorities to use them.

I do not think the committee could have gone any further than that. I do not think it was its field to go any further than that. But, I want to say this, that I have the feeling that there are not, by any means, in this country the will and determination on the part of the public generally to do anything about it.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I wish to congratulate the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) upon the excellent speech he has just made. I wish to indulge in a little history for a few minutes. For the last 24 years I have sat on various committees of the Senate and I do not hesitate to say that this session the Finance Committee has done the best job I have ever seen a committee of this house do. I wish to pay tribute to the individual members of the committee. I had heard that the chairman (Hon. Mr. Emerson) was an able man. He proved to be a capable chairman and he exhibited those qualities of integrity and fairness with which the people of the Maritime provinces are endowed. We appointed as our deputy chairman a gentleman from Ontario, the honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale (Hon. Mr. Leonard), one of the ablest men in the field of business and finances in his province. He rendered great service to the committee. Without giving offence to the members of the main committee, I would say that the greatest service of all was rendered by the steering committee in deciding what witnesses would be called. There were no limitations imposed, and if any member of the steering committee suggested the name of someone he thought could make a real contribution, that person was invited to appear and make representations.

In the reports of the committee's proceedings there is a very great deal of valuable information. I sincerely hope they will be made available to the people throughout Canada, because the facts contained in them are fundamental. Anyone who reads them will be given an understanding of the problem we are facing. I must confess quite honestly that for the past six or eight months I have been uneasy about the financial situation, because I have seen bonds sold on the market within a few weeks of their issue for much less than their original price. Yet at the same time business was improving. Dominion bonds bearing 4½ per cent interest, which a year ago were selling at 100, have been selling at 92. I asked myself why? It seemed to me that somebody who had the money to spend lost faith. Canada cannot carry on if our people lose faith in the country itself. This report of our Finance Committee should be available to everyone interested in the financial affairs of this country and who wants Canada to overcome the problem of inflation. The facts are all gathered together in the report, and the committee's conclusions are honestly drawn.

I think we were very fortunate in choosing the young man who was economic consultant of the committee. Perhaps I should not say this, but I was the only person on the committee who knew anything about him. His work was simply superb. Dr. Deutsch is now Vice-Principal of Queen's University. He is a genius as far as finance is concerned, and we realize now that formerly he did not have a chance to show his genius. If we had not invited him to undertake this work for the committee and taken advantage of his willingness to do so, this country might never have received the services he has just rendered.

Honourable senators, by inviting experts to come to the committee and by allowing every member of the committee the opportunity to ask questions we made a great effort on behalf of all the people of Canada to deal with this problem of inflation in Canada. It was important to do so, because we all love our country and the people who live in it. My children and my fifteen grandchildren were born and grew up here. Some of them went to war and fought for Canada. One of my grandnephews died for Canada. It is my duty as a senator to do my very best to make Canada the greatest country in the world, to see that the ordinary people get a chance to make a living, an honest living under decent conditions. It is not my duty to make money for J. T. Haig or for onyone else, but it is my duty to try to see that our people get an opportunity unequalled anywhere else in the world. We can give them that opportunity. We have the natural resources, and we have a wonderful country, which I have travelled from one end to the other many times. We are all proud of Canada. I am reminded of that pride every time I see people at a curling game. This year a team from Canada and one from Scotland are going down to the United States to play for the world championship, and I am confident they will come back with the championship.

Honourable senators, to return to this report, I want to point out that we in the committee have not taken sides, and we have not laid the blame to the manufacturers, the speculators, to this class, that class, or some other class. We have given the facts to show that we have had a period of inflation, and we have tried to show how and why the dollar of a few years ago is worth probably only about 75 cents now by comparison. That has placed the old age pensioner and the annuitant, among others, in a most unfortunate position.

I do not intend to discuss a cure for inflation. Certainly that was not the purpose of our committee. We felt that the thing to do was to get representative groups of the community—farmers from the west, people from the Maritime provinces, manufacturers, union men, and members of different kinds of organizations across Canada—to tell their story. In fact, we had one man from Alberta about whom some one asked, "Who left the door open?" He got in, and although perhaps we didn't agree with him we listened to what he had to say, and we asked him questions which he answered.

The object of our report was to give the cold facts, and, as my honourable friend from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) said, to try to find some means of solving this problem of inflation. Some may not agree, but I think that in making this investigation we have done a great service to the Parliament of Canada and as well as to the provincial governments. At the start I was a little afraid our investigation might have developed into some political action, but I must say that I only had to be present in the committee for a very short time to find that nothing of that kind was intended. I soon realized that we were truly representing all the people of Canada. That is as it should be. We should try to do what we feel the people of Canada would want us to do. Those of us who have been in political life for some time, either in this house or some other house, know that the people have respect for a member or a senator who speaks on their behalf. The people may not express their thoughts, but they have respect in their hearts for the man or woman who tries to serve them. They feel that a member of the Senate or the House of Commons knows a little more about this problem than they do, and are inclined to say, "I would like to know what he thinks about it." We have put on record in our report what we believe to be the facts regarding inflation, and what people in all departments of activity feel about inflation. I believe this report can be used by the Government —indeed, by any government—and by both Opposition parties to obtain a reasonable understanding of the position in regard to inflation in Canada, because the facts in the report are based on official records that cannot be denied.

Honourable members, I have said about all I want to say. I admit that, as my friend from Shelburne says, there has been a loss in the value of insurance dollars. I agree also with his statement as to the loss in the value of bonds. Money has gone down in value. It is the small people who are affected most by this. If as a member of this house I get a reasonable indemnity, what about the fellow who earns, say, $600 or $700 a month and drops back to $150 a month? He just can't live on that. Many a railroad man and many a man from other walks of life has come to me in Winnipeg and said, "Haig, what am I going to do? I used to work on the C.P.R.—or the C.N.R., or with such-and-such a company—and earned, say, $500, $600, or $700 a month. I am now getting a pension of $100 or $150, and my money will only buy half as much as it would buy before. What am I going to do?" We discussed such problems in our investigation, and the men and women in Parliament have the duty to try to do something for these people.

Honourable senators, when you think about the Senate you realize that it is a constantly changing body. When I was appointed to the Senate I was number 93 on the roll, now I am number seven. Eighty-six senators have died since I first came here, 24 years ago. That fact shows how fast changes take place in this body.

Every member of the Finance Committee worked very hard to make a success of the study of the matter that was referred to them. We are grateful for the support we got from honourable senators who were not on the committee and we appreciate the kindness with which you received our report. We tried to give the Senate an illustration of what we thought a Senate committee ought to do.

As I said before, this is the best report that has ever been made by the Finance Committee. If ever a committee justified itself this one has done so this time. It has made a real contribution to the financial welfare of our country. I recommend to our Government, to both Opposition parties, and to the provinces that they study this report. It would also be a good thing if people would read this report before making demands for expenditures by the federal Government or the provincial Government at Winnipeg, Halifax, Toronto or Fredericton or wherever their capital is.

I quite agree that a lot of money is being spent upon armaments, but as long as I live I shall never forget that up to a certain date during the last war many of our airmen who were overseas fighting our battles did not have a special apparatus on the front of their bombers when they went out on a raid from the bombing stations in East Anglia. On one occasion a young minister from our part of the country was there and at that time a troup of young ladies came down from London to entertain the forces. One of the young ladies sang The Lord's Prayer and she was encored twelve times. The minister asked the commanding officer how that could be explained. The officer replied, "These boys are crew members of bombers that fly over Germany, and in three months one-third of them will be dead." Through money spent on research a radar apparatus to be attached to the front of the bombers was invented, and as a result of that attachment the percentage of losses went down to about five per cent in three months. When your own boy is not one of those five per centers you are pretty happy about it.

We have to spend money to go on experimenting and trying to discover things like that. I am not criticizing the Government for making such expenditures, but I do criticize it for continuing to spend money as if the earning capacity of the country was as good as ever. Of course, it would be as good as ever if the world was sane and united.

The report shows conclusively that we in Canada feel this inflation. I ask honourable senators to adopt the report and I ask each individual senator to use his influence in the part of the country from which he comes to see that the people are furnished with copies of it. I have not thought about how this can be done, but it should be done. As I suggested earlier, copies of the report should be sent out so that the people may obtain an understanding of the principles of inflation.

I hope we may all be spared to see real results come from this investigation. I am sure that in the lifetime of the younger members of this house great benefits will flow to Canada from the committee's study and report.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hugessen debate adjourned.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Joint Committee on Indian Affairs, which was presented yesterday.

Hon. John J. MacDonald, for Hon. Mr. Gladstone, Joint Chairman of the committee, moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, I do not think there is any need for me to spend much time in discussing this report. I imagine that all senators have read it. It is in the Minutes of the Proceedings of yesterday. It recommends that the committee be reconstituted at the next session of Parliament. In view of that fact I do not see that much can be added to what is contained in the report, so I propose to leave it at that. If I am present when the work of the committee is completed, I will have more to say about it.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, as a member of the Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament on Indian Affairs I would like to support the recommendations that are contained in the report, particularly the recommendation that a similar committee be appointed early next session to carry on the investigations and studies.

The meetings of this committee did not commence until May 20, and the committee has been able to hear but a fraction of the witnesses who wish to appear and make representations before it.

There are problems involved in Canada's dealing with the Indian population that have caused many Indians living in Canada dissatisfaction and unhappiness, and also have caused heart-searchings by many Canadian non-Indians. These problems deserve the most careful study and consideration which the committee, through lack of time, was not able to give this session.

Canadians who support the United Nations in promoting universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion and who, in accordance with these principles have passed legislation providing for fair employment practices and equal pay for men and women, should realize that these principles must be strictly observed in dealing with our Indian population. It is time that we took a good look at our present legislation and reviewed our policy to be sure that in dealing with the Indians in Canada we are following the principles enunciated in the United Nations charter to which we subscribe.

From the few meetings held by the committee it seemed clear that the Indians' means of getting higher education, of earning a livelihood and acquiring a profession are limited, and in many cases they are inadequate. Many of these people would appreciate and make good use of the kind of education and assistance that would help them to become independent, self-reliant and self-supporting citizens.

It is to be hoped that, after further study of these problems, recommendations can be made by the committee which, if implemented, will improve both the economic and social status of our native population, and make for greater happiness and satisfaction not only for Canadian Indians, but for all Canadians.

Motion for adoption of report agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 16, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

HUMANE SLAUGHTER OF FOOD ANIMALS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-71, to provide for the humane slaughter of food animals.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the second time?

Hon. John Hnatyshyn: I move second reading now.

Honourable senators, I think the bill will find universal acceptance throughout the country. I do not think it is a partisan bill in the sense that anyone would be opposed to the humane slaughter of animals. There cannot be any opposition to the principle of the bill. Throughout the years humane societies have made representations to the Government through members of the Senate and the House of Commons to pass legislation dealing with the humane slaughter of food animals. I believe an attempt was made in 1957 to do this by amending the provision in the Criminal Code requiring the humane treatment of animals, but nothing was done and a new bill was introduced in 1958. However, this is the first legislation of its kind.

As honourable senators are aware, the problem of how to ensure humane slaughter of food animals has received a great deal of attention during recent years, and representations have been heard from many interested organizations. This bill is the result of serious and considerable study given to the matter, especially by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization.

The bill prohibits the interprovincial movement or export out of Canada of any meat product unless the animal from which the meat was derived was slaughtered in accordance with the regulations authorized by this bill and the establishment in which the animal was slaughtered meets fully the requirements of the regulations. The drafting of the bill in this manner follows closely the pattern of the Meat Inspection Act of 1955, which requires all meat slaughtering establishments dealing in interprovincial or export trade to be registered under that act and to conform with the regulations.

This legislation providing for the humane slaughter of food animals will be administered by officers engaged in the administration of the Meat Inspection Act, and the bill provides inspectors with the same powers they now possess under that act.

This bill, when passed, will ensure that humane slaughter practices are followed in all packing plants within federal jurisdiction and that come under federal meat inspection. These plants account for some 80 per cent of the total slaughtering of meat animals in Canada. That is the percentage that applies now to the Meat Inspection Act. In some provinces it may be slightly over 80 per cent, and in others less than 80 per cent, but for all Canada the average is 80 per cent of the slaughtering.

It will be noted that the bill does not list acceptable or unacceptable humane slaughter practices specifically but provides for them to be established by regulations. The regulations will state what things are considered humane and can be done and what things are not considered humane and cannot be done. This will permit the approval of slaughter methods and devices now in existence which have been determined to be humane, and will provide the necessary flexibility to recognize newer methods which may subsequently be developed. The detailing of acceptable methods of slaughter in a bill of this kind would be extremely difficult, for while certain shooting methods or electrical stunners and anaesthetizing agents are certainly acceptable, these methods could be used in a manner which would not be acceptable. Because of this it is considered that the details involved must be left to regulations.

I would point out that while the Meat Inspection Act of 1955 consists of some 13 sections only, the regulations in connection with that measure consist of 185 pages. If this bill before us were to detail what is humane and can be done and what is not humane and cannot be done it would probably take 185 pages to cover it all. For this reason that aspect of the legislation is to be left to regulations. Methods of slaughter change and up to now there has been no definition of humane slaughter that is acceptable to all. It would be an enormous problem to specify all acceptable and unacceptable methods in a bill, and then whenever new devices were thought of it would be necessary to bring the legslation before Parliament for amendments. This would probably have to be done at least once a year.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Are there any regulations now under provincial laws in respect to slaughtering of animals?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am not familiar with provincial regulations, but there are certain regulations under the Meat Inspection Act.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): But not in respect to slaughtering?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, not in respect to slaughtering, but the principle is the same. Meat inspection is governed by regulations. The point I am making is that I do not think this is any attempt to legislate by Order in Council, because the same principle of giving effect to the provisions of an act by regulations is already followed in the Meat Inspection Act. To my way of thinking, the only reason why the details are going to be dealt with in regulations is that it would be impossible to provide for all these details in the act itself.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If the honourable gentleman does not mind a further question, may I ask if the provinces have legislation on this subject-matter, and if so are there provincal regulations, or is this the first of such legislation in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am certain that this is the first of such federal legislation, but I cannot answer as far as the provinces are concerned. There may be some provincial legislation, but I am not aware of any.

The packing industry has already adopted the use of mechanical stunners for cattle and I understand that all establishments are now using this humane method.

Honourable senators will note that the slaughter of chickens is not covered by this bill. They are considered to be birds, and the slaughter of birds is found to be satisfactory, according to the reports of officials of the department.

Considerable study and experimentation have gone into the development of humane slaughter methods for hogs and other small livestock, and this has progressed to the point where alternative methods for the humane slaughter of these animals should soon be available. It is appreciated that these newer methods with respect to swine and other small stock cannot be developed and installed overnight. Therefore, I wish to give assurance that reasonable time will be provided to the packing industry for installation of the necessary facilities. I also assure the house that no expensive devices will be made a requirement and thus cause hardship to the smaller packer.

As already indicated, it is expected that through continuous study improvements in humane slaughter methods can be looked for, and as improvements are developed it will be possible to alter the regulations to provide for the most up-to-date methods.

The Criminal Code has, of course, for many years contained a provision requiring the humane treatment of animals, and this provision will continue to apply.

After careful study of this problem, it is believed that the act embodied in this bill will provide for the humane slaughter of food animals in Canada in a manner that will eliminate as much as possible needless pain and suffering of animals.

As far as I can see, there are only two criticisms that can be made of the bill. One of these I have already mentioned, namely, that the bill provides that humane slaughter be defined by regulation; and in my earlier remarks I outlined reasons why it would be impossible to legislate or define humane slaughter in a manner satisfactory to everyone. The other objection that may be raised —it was raised when the problem was being studied by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization— is that this act may interfere with the religious practices of certain people, such as the Hebrews. May I say there is absolutely no intention of such interference. My understanding with regard to the religious practices of certain peoples, particularly the Hebrews, in the slaughter of animals for food, is that the actual cutting is not considered to be inhumane; however, the hoisting of a steer some 13 or 14 feet is considered inhumane. I am informed that when this problem was studied, rabbis and other prominent individuals stated hoisting is not a part of their religious ritual.

It would be very difficult to include in the bill a provision to the effect that this legislation does not apply to religious rituals, because if we were to do that we would have to set out what the religious rituals were. My information is that there has not been any definite agreement by the parties concerned on that point. If the bill contained such a provision, it would present an almost impossible problem from a legislative standpoint. I assure honourable senators that as far as this bill is concerned there is absolutely no intention of interfering with the religious ritual of any person or group.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would the honourable senator permit a question? Does this bill apply to the slaughter of all animals in Canada, or only to those animals which are slaughtered in an establishment?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: It covers only the animals that are slaughtered in an establishment where inspection of meat is a requirement. It does not cover slaughtering on farms, nor slaughtering in small establishments that are not under the Meat Inspection Act. There are a number of smaller abattoirs or meat-packing plants that sell only within a province. Unless a meat-packing plant can come within the Meat Inspection Act it cannot export or import meat. Such a plant could not sell meat to, let us say, the Air Force or to the Army or any public institution. This bill does not cover some 20 per cent of the slaughtering in this country which is done individually or in small abattoirs.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: So it will be possible in the future to have two methods: one under this bill, and the so-called old method?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I think the honourable senator is correct in that assumption, because this bill does not cover anything except what is done in those establishments which come within the Meat Inspection Act.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Have you a fuller definition there of "establishment"?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: "Establishment" means an establishment that is registered under the Meat Inspection Act and in which meat products are prepared.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Have you a copy of the Meat Inspection Act with you?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes, I have a copy here.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What does it say with respect to "establishment"?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I think it says more or less the same thing.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is not a very complete definition.

Hon. John A. McDonald: I think the honourable senator should say that it means an establishment where inspections by federal meat inspectors take place.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have the meat inspection regulations here, and there is a long definition to which the honourable senator is welcome. With regard to the remark of the honourable senator from Kings (Hon. Mr. McDonald), I thought I had made it clear in my short explanation that the same inspectors who operate under the Meat Inspection Act will deal with this problem.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: And this bill will apply to about 80 per cent of the slaughtering in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes. about 80 per cent.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, the honourable senator from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn) has given a very good explanation of this bill. One thing I congratulate him upon is that he has anticipated the objections which probably would have come from this side of the house. In any event, he has anticipated the objections which would have come from me. He has dealt with those objections before I have had an opportunity of putting them on the record.

He pointed out that the bill has been under study in the other house. Indeed, it was under study for some considerable time before the Standing Committee of that house on Agriculture and Colonization, which heard many witnesses and brought in a report. I might say that the committee's recommendations were not wholly included in this bill. The committee, in general, recommended that Parliament require the humane slaughter of meat animals in plants covered by the Meat Inspection Act; that is to say, plants that are within the jurisdiction of Parliament and in which federal meat inspection is carried out. The honourable senator from Saskatoon said that this bill will cover 80 per cent of all slaughtering in Canada. Another honourable senator asked: "What about the other 20 per cent?" My information is that the other 20 per cent would come within provincial jurisdiction. But the honourable senator from Saskatoon stated he was doubtful—and I also am doubtful—if there is at present any provincial legislation, with respect to this 20 per cent. However, it is hoped that the provinces will bring in legislation similar to the measure before us.

Honourable senators, the committee recommended also that the legislation be made by amendment to the Meat Inspection Act. The Government, you will notice, did not follow that recommendation. This is an entirely new and distinct bill.

It should be further noted that the bill does not list acceptable or unacceptable practices specifically, but says that they are to be provided for by regulation. That, of course, is one of the objections which the honourable senator has endeavoured to answer. I may say that he has not answered it completely to my satisfaction.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Still, it was a pretty good explanation.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, it was a good explanation. He said it could not be done. The record will show that in the other house—I will not refer to any speeches made there—it was felt that it could be done. Certain amendments were proposed in that house which were not acceptable to the Government and did not carry.

I also point out—and this is repeating what the honourable senator from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn) said—that for many years the Criminal Code has contained provisions requiring the humane treatment of animals, and these provisions will continue to apply. There is no amendment to the Criminal Code before us at the present time, and my information is that it is not intended to amend it in that respect.

Notwithstanding what the honourable senator from Saskatoon has said, I feel that the Government has not taken sufficient care to provide for a safeguard against the possible invasion of the freedom of religious practices of Canadians. I was hoping that the Government would accept an amendment in that respect. The honourable senator will recall that the committee recommended that the humane methods of slaughter should be deemed to include shooting, the Hebrew method of slaughter as practised in connection with the Hebrew religious requirements, and other methods of pre-slaughter which include stunning with a mechanical stunner, certain electrical methods, and the use of anaesthetics. That is one of the committee's recommendations which are not given effect to in the bill. In the other house an amendment was proposed which many members thought would answer the objections and fears of certain religious bodies in that respect. That amendment, however, was not acceptable and was defeated.

Honourable senators, I have no more to say about this bill. Someone might ask why I do not propose these amendments to this house. I think it would be useless to do this. The amendments were carefully considered in the other house and by the Government, and the Government has stated that it will not accept them. I feel that the Government should have accepted them, but, as it is determined not to do so, in my opinion there is nothing we can do other than accept the bill.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, in moving the second reading the honourable gentleman from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn) said he thought the bill would receive unanimous approval in this country. I would be less than honest if I did not say I am not at all enthusiastic about it. No doubt humane societies throughout Canada have pressed for this legislation, but I want to say there is a lot of misunderstanding as to where abuse of animals takes place. Incidentally, I often think that officials of humane societies are never where you want them or where they ought to be. In my opinion animals receive far greater abuse in western Canada stockyards than when they are being slaughtered. I give myself some credit for stopping the abusive practice of using octagon-shaped hickory canes on animals in stockyards. I have seen young calves knocked down by these canes. I refused to allow the stockyard people to use them on my cattle in Saskatoon and Winnipeg, and I think it is because of the row I raised that they are now using whips instead of canes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is whipping more humane?

Hon. Mr. Horner: It is. You can't knock cattle down with a whip.

I wish somebody would take representatives of humane societies into the stockyards to see what goes on. Somebody's pet cow may be used to being driven but not to being abused with a whip. Any farmer knows that if you continue hitting an animal over the eyes it cannot see where you want it to go. That is a worse kind of cruelty than usually occurs in the slaughter of animals. I have seen more cruelty in stockyards, especially in the loading and unloading of animals, than I have ever seen in a slaughter house.

I remember that when I bought a ranch in Alberta a young chap there had a pet saddle horse which was 26 or 27 years old. The lad asked me if the horse could end its days on the ranch. I pointed out to him what a cruel thing that would be, that any method of slaughter would take only a few minutes but that it takes quite a while for a horse to die on the prairie. It will stagger about for a month or two and then lie down and suffer for two weeks or a month longer, staying alive by eating the very ground. Some people have the mistaken idea that it is kindness to let an animal die in the place where it was raised. Actually, it often dies in agony.

I realize that in the slaughtering of animals there is a difficulty involving a certain religious group which believes in using only the knife and not in stunning the animal. I have slaughtered sufficient animals by the knife to know that this method does not cause great suffering to them. In fact, war veterans will tell you that when you are bleeding to death you feel no pain. An animal does not feel much pain if a really sharp knife is used. This method is not cruel, but the hanging-up process might be prevented.

I have sometimes found fault with actions taken by humane societies. Perhaps a farmer may be plowing a small field with a horse that has a little bit of a sore. Even though the farmer is careful in the way he uses the animal, if a humane society inspector happens to come along he will have him arrested for cruelty. The real cruelty to animals takes place in the stockyards and no one is there to prevent it. So I have no liking at all for this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, tomorrow. We are sitting tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Next sitting.

NEWFOUNDLAND ADDITIONAL GRANTS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-72, to provide for the payment of additional grants to the Province of Newfoundland.

Bill read first time.

MOTION FOR SECOND READING— DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Lionel Choquette: I move the second reading now.

Honourable senators, article 29 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada provided for appointment of a royal commission within eight years from the date of the union to review the financial position of the province and to recommend the additional financial assistance that would be required to enable public services to be maintained at the level and standards reached without more burdensome taxation than that prevailing in the Maritime provinces generally.

Term 29 is important enough that at this stage it should be read in toto, for it is due to this term that we now have the present bill before us.

Term 29 provided that:

> In view of the difficulty of predicting with sufficient accuracy the financial consequences to Newfoundland of becoming a province of Canada, the Government of Canada would appoint a royal commission within eight years from the date of union to review the financial position of the Province of Newfoundland and to recommend the form and scale of additional financial assistance, if any, that might be required by the Government of the Province of Newfoundland to enable it to continue public services at the levels and standards reached subsequent to the date of union, without resorting to taxation more burdensome, having regard to capacity to pay, than that obtaining generally in the region comprising the Maritime Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island.

A royal commission was appointed, under the chairmanship of Chief Justice McNair of New Brunswick. It reported under date of May 31, 1958, after extensive study of the situation. We must look to the report itself to find out how the commission interpreted the terminology "levels and standards". On page 20 of the report we read:

> The third matter for settlement is the meaning of "levels and standards", particularly as it affects the unit of measurement to be adopted. The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary defines level as "position, plane, standard in social, moral or intellectual matters" and standard as "a definite level of excellence, attainment, wealth or the like, or a definite degree of any quality viewed as a prescribed object of endeavour or as the measure of what is adequate for some purpose". To some extent, therefore, the words "level" and "standard" are synonymous, each reinforcing the meaning of the other. It seems clear that the expression "levels and standards" has quantitative and qualitative meaning. We are concerned with the problem of measurement, and, therefore, for our purposes quality is viewed as an aspect of quantity. A higher quality service is taken simply to mean more service, which, in practice, is achieved by larger expenditure on men and materials.

The next point dealt with is the cost of levels and standards of public service, and this appears on the following page of the same report:

> It should be made clear, at this point, that we have decided to proceed upon the assumption that the levels and standards of public service are indicated by their cost. For example, if $100,000 is spent on the salaries of doctors and nurses to provide a health service, we assume for the purpose of our study that $100,000 is the measure of the flow of service which results from that expenditure. We know of no other practical method of measurement.

This bill provides authority for the payment to the province of Newfoundland of the amounts recommended by the commissioners for the years 1957-58 to 1961-62. The report itself had set no definite date of termination of payments. The commissioners faced a very difficult task in translating the rather vague terms of the article into positive recommendations.

The Government, in presenting this bill, has shown its confidence in the report. It is only in the matter of the duration of the payments that there has been any deviation from the terms of the recommendations.

In referring to the period after 1961-62 the report used the word "thereafter" as governing the duration of payments. This terminology can only be regarded as intentionally vague in the circumstances under which it was used.

It is my submission, honourable senators, that if the commissioners had felt that they could recommend these payments "in perpetuity", those words were available to them. The commissioners were learned men and well versed in the English language. It is my submission that they felt that they could not bind any government in perpetuity, and that is why this word "thereafter" was used. That is the word that creates the present difficulty or difficulties here, if there are any at all.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I do not like to interrupt the honourable senator, but I wonder if, having given some definitions from the Shorter Oxford English dictionary, he would be good enough to give us the definition of "thereafter" from the same dictionary.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Well, I have not the dictionary here. I can say that in my younger days I listened to a lot of stories in which people "lived happily thereafter."

Hon. Mr. Robertson: This bill makes grants for only five years.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I will deal with that later.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: It does not appear as if the province of Newfoundland is disposed to "live happily thereafter".

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Well, I would think so, because I feel, and I think everyone will agree, that no matter what party is in power the special needs of Newfoundland will be discussed and considered and looked after. However, in a few minutes, I will deal with that from a constitutional point of view, although I am not an authority on constitutional language.

In view of the fact that Canada and Newfoundland had both recognized at the hearings that an award based on one selected year could have little validity over an indefinite future period, the Government has proposed that payments be limited in this instance to the period that coincides with the present financial arrangements under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act. As honourable senators all know, the whole question of federal-provincial financial arrangements is now undergoing extensive study on a co-operative basis by Canada and the provinces. It has therefore seemed appropriate that any special circumstances relating to the financial position of Newfoundland after that date should be taken into account through these means. The fairness and logic of this approach to an ever-changing problem seem obvious, and I am sure will appeal to all those who give it their objective consideration.

In order to make it perfectly clear that the province's rights will be protected by this process, reference to the procedure has been included in a recital of the preamble to the act.

The bill, which is entitled "Newfoundland Additional Grants Act", will provide for unconditional payments to the province for the five fiscal years ending in 1961-62. These payments, which are additional to the transitional grants under article 28 of the Terms of Union, are as follows:

For	the	fiscal	year	1957-58	-	$6,600,000
"	"	"	"	1958-59	-	6,950,000
"	"	"	"	1959-60	-	7,300,000
"	"	"	"	1960-61	-	7,650,000
"	"	"	"	1961-62	-	8,000,000
						$36,500,000

The amount of the transitional grant in each of these first four years is the difference between the amount of the payment stated in this table and $8 million.

These payments due for the fiscal years 1957-58 and 1958-59 and the first half-yearly payment for 1959-60 will be made as soon as the act comes into force. The balance will be paid half-yearly.

Honourable senators, that is about the extent of this bill. I said I might deal briefly with the constitutional standpoint on the question of perpetuity. It is my submission that any change in the terms of article 29 which would be binding on Canada and Newfoundland alike could only be achieved by an amendment to the British North America Act passed by the Imperial Parliament, as was the B.N.A. Act of 1949 which confirmed the terms of the agreement. That is the submission I make after studying the amendment and the import of the act. I am happy to say other honourable members will discuss the bill, among whom will be my learned friend from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins). I am sure that his speech will be more enlightening than mine.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Would the honourable senator be good enough to read the closing words of the last part of section 3, which states how the payments are to be made?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Section 3 subsection 2, reads:

> One-half of the grant payable under this act in respect of the fiscal year 1959-60 shall be paid immediately upon the coming into force of this act and the balance thereof on the 1st day of January, 1960, and the grant payable under this act in respect of a subsequent fiscal year shall be paid as follows, namely, one-half thereof on the 1st day of July next following the beginning of the fiscal year and the balance thereof on the 1st day of January next thereafter.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That word "thereafter" is the same word that was used in the recommendation of the commission, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yes.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, first of all I must congratulate the honourable senator from Ottawa East (Hon. Mr. Choquette) upon the very clear explanation he has given of this bill. It has been a concise explanation and I believe he has covered the main points very well indeed. He said a "more enlightening" address will be delivered by the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins), but before we hear from the honourable senator may I be permitted to make just a few remarks?

I do not intend to delay unduly the passing of this bill. In fact, so far as I am concerned, I would not object to the bill receiving second reading today. However, if it is deemed advisable to put over second reading until tomorrow I will not object to that being done.

The record shows that the bill has been very fully discussed in the other place and I feel that most of what can usefully be said is already on the record. I use the word "usefully" because there is no doubt that the Government has made up its mind to pass this bill in its present form and I am sure that no words of mine will persuade the Government to change its mind.

The honourable senator from Ottawa East has given the impression that all is well and that the province of Newfoundland will not suffer as a result of the passing of this bill, but I can assure him that the people of Newfoundland have not got that confidence and they are still very disturbed about this bill.

The bill, as the honourable senator has said, has to do principally with article 29 of the Terms of Union. This deals with a matter which, if it had been settled satisfactorily, would in my opinion have completed the work of Confederation. For many years statesmen of both Canada and of Newfoundland had been endeavouring to bring about a union between our two countries. This was successfully accomplished ten years ago under the leadership of the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent, who was our Prime Minister at that time. I recall that one member of this house, the honourable senator from Bonavista-Twillingate (Hon. Mr. Bradley), took a very prominent part in the negotiations leading to union and the final agreement, as did also the present Premier of Newfoundland. It is needless for me to say how happy all Canadians were at that time, and since then they have become even more happy, to have Newfoundland as our tenth province, having equal rights in all respects with the other provinces. We are now one great nation of ten provinces.

At the time of Confederation it was admitted by both parties that there were certain financial arrangements which had not been concluded. The financial arrangements between the two countries had for many years been the stumbling block to the concluding of an agreement. In order that Confederation might be no longer delayed Newfoundland agreed to enter into the contract establishing Confederation by having included in the agreement Term 29, which dealt with this difficult financial problem. I have been told by many Newfoundlanders—and I can be corrected if this is wrong—that it is doubtful if Confederation could have been completed at that time without the inclusion of Term 29 in the agreement, and that Newfoundlanders consider this article to be a specific and solemn undertaking given by the Government of Canada and accepted as satisfactory by the Newfoundland Government, as the result of which these two sovereign nations within the Commonwealth of Nations signed a pact or, shall I say, a treaty, which provided for their union.

The views of the people of Newfoundland with regard to the significance of Term 29 were well expressed in a speech which was delivered by the Minister of Finance of Newfoundland at the time he brought down his budget this year. I would like to quote a portion of that speech. He said:

> It will be useful, I think, if I put the simple facts on the record. These facts are unmistakable. It would require almost a wilful attempt to misunderstand them. This term—

That is Term 29—

> —was passed by the Parliament of the United Kingdom, House of Commons and House of Lords. It was passed by the Parliament of Canada, House of Commons and Senate. It was confirmed by the Government of the day in Newfoundland. That would be the commission of Government. It forms part and parcel of Canada's Constitution, the Brtish North America Act of 1867 with amendments. It is therefore no ordinary document. It is not a contract made between two tradesmen. It is rather a solemn agreement made between two high contracting parties, these being the Government of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada at a time when they were separate countries.

Well, honourable senators, there is no doubt as to the importance which is placed by the people of Newfoundland on Term 29. It had been my intention to read Term 29 into the record but the honourable senator from Ottawa East has done that.

Honourable senators will recall that this term requires the appointment of a royal commission within eight years from the date of Union to review the financial position of the province of Newfoundland, so that that province—and I call honourable senators' attention to this condition—might be enabled to continue its public services at the levels and standards reached subsequent to the date of Union without resorting to taxation more burdensome generally than that obtaining in the Maritime provinces.

As has been said by the honourable senator from Ottawa East, a commission was appointed. Its members were three very competent men. The chairman was the Honourable Mr. Justice J. B. McNair, Chief Justice of New Brunswick; and the members were the Honourable Sir Albert J. Walsh, the then Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, and Mr. John James Deutsch, who has recently been advising our Standing Committee on Finance in its study of the threat of inflation.

The commission made an exhaustive and painstaking examination in accordance with the terms of its appointment. I do not wish to read at length from the report of the commission, but if honourable senators will bear with me, I shall read a part of that report.

At page 4 the commission says:

The natural resources

That is the natural resources of Newfoundland.

—were largely unsurveyed and unexplored. Very few intensive investigations had been carried out. Little or no research had been applied to problems of utilization and marketing, even in the fisheries—

The deficiency in the public services was strongly evident in the lack of social capital and in the limited development of the social services. Aside from St. John's, and a few other centres the province was without municipal organizations or municipal facilities. In this respect Newfoundland was at about the same stage as the Maritime provinces were in 1867—

And at page 8 of the report:

There have been few really major improvements in the levels and standards of services. The deficiencies of the past have not been substantially overcome—

The Newfoundland portion of the Trans-Canada Highway is not more than a quarter completed in terms of total estimated cost. There is no trans-provincial road whatever. The majority of the numerous small settlements in the province are still without any road connections—

In short, Newfoundland is confronted with the urgent task of modernization, but is without the modern means of mobility and communication—

At page 9 the report goes on to say:

The average per capita incomes in Newfoundland are further affected by the more limited opportunities for female workers and by the fact that the proportion of the population of working age is significantly smaller than elsewhere in Canada. In 1956, 41 per cent of the population of Newfoundland was under 15 years of age as compared with 32 per cent for Canada as a whole—

The addition of Labrador to Canadian territory has added also another frontier rich in minerals and water power. Labrador is already making its contribution to the vital role which undeveloped frontiers have played in the history of national economic expansion.

Reading from page 16 of the report:

The total of the federal payments comprised 73 per cent of the total provincial net revenue in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1951 and 48 per cent in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1957—

In other words, during the past three years the revenues of the province on ordinary account have fallen more and more short of the requirements for ordinary expenditures—

In the most recent fiscal year ending March 31, 1958, the estimated financial requirement was nearly $16 million, all of which would have had to be borrowed.

Honourable senators, I have read these excerpts from the report so that there will be no doubt in the minds of any of us that Newfoundland does need considerable financial assistance. The honourable senator from Ottawa East has read the finding of the commission, and I will not delay the house longer on that, except to emphasize what the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) referred to a moment ago, that the last clause contains the words, "thereafter $8 million per annum".

It was, I am sure, the view of the province of Newfoundland that the amount awarded was not sufficient. That is what I read in the press, and I am sure it is an authoritative statement. Newfoundland had, however, entered into a solemn pact with Canada in a spirit of fairness which had been displayed on both sides, and the province did not doubt that it would be necessary for it, and also for Canada, to accept the finding of the commission as to Newfoundland's requirements.

I need not remind the house of the surprise, the keen disappointment, and the indignation with which Newfoundland received the news that the Government of Canada, without consultation with the Government of Newfoundland, had set aside the findings of the commission and declared that the payments would cease in 1962. I am emphasizing the fact that the Government of Canada did this without consultation with the Government of Newfoundland. That arbitrary action on the part of our Government is, without doubt, contrary to the spirit of the obligation which the federal Government entered into with Newfoundland, and which was set forth so clearly and concisely in article 29 of the Terms of Union.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Does the honourable senator interpret the agreement, or the report of the commission, in such a way that commencing with the year 1961-62 $8 million shall be paid annually in perpetuity to Newfoundland?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I interpret the agreement as a solemn pact between these two countries, which were sovereign states at the time it was entered into, that the findings of the commission would not be interfered with without consultation, and that the most powerful party to that agreement would not assume the power to disregard the report of the commission. That is why I am objecting to this bill.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is not what I asked.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It is not for me to interpret the agreement. I am stating what the arrangement between these two sovereign states was. When two people enter into an agreement, or when two sovereign states enter into an agreement, they have equal rights. I maintain that one of them cannot change the agreement without the consent of the other or, at least, without consultation with the other. That is my stand, and I cannot make it any clearer.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Do you maintain there was an agreement made between the two states that after the fiscal year 1961-62 $8 million would be paid annually to Newfoundland in perpetuity?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There was no mention of 1961-62 or of any year in article 29. The provision was that there would be review, and I have no doubt whatsoever that in the minds of both parties at that time there was an understanding that the recommendations of that commission would be carried out; in any event, that those findings would not be put aside without consultation between both parties. That is where I stand, and that is as far as I am going. My friend is not going to force me to make any further interpretation. What must be done is a matter for consultation between the two Governments. Because one Government now holds the big stick it should not use its power without consultation with the other administration, but the federal Government has not consulted with the other Government.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am not trying to trip up the honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Do not worry; I am not going to be tripped up.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is the farthest thing from my mind, but I would like the honourable senator to give me his understanding as to the payment of $8 million. That is all I am asking. Is it the honourable senator's opinion that the commission decided that the payment of $8 million should continue in perpetuity after 1962?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Why not give us your opinion?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I will give it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I can only repeat what I have already said, that the $8 million payment should be paid thereafter until there is some arrangement satisfactory to each side. If there is an arrangement satisfactory to each side then it will be changed, but my point is that the strong party to that agreement should not assume the power to ignore the terms of article 29 and say: "We will interpret it without consultation with the other party".

Hon. Mr. Brunt: But they are going to give them a chance to open it up again in 1962.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, they will give them a chance. They will give them a chance in the same way, and reduce it a lot more. They did not consult them this time. What assurance has the Province of Newfoundland that the same procedure will not be followed in 1962? There is no assurance, but I will give an assurance in a moment.

Honourable senators, I have explained the circumstances which have brought about the introduction of this bill at this session of Parliament. I might say that it is pretty late in the day to introduce it, but it has been introduced, and there you are. I have said that I will not endeavour to delay passage of this bill, and I stand by my remarks.

One reason why I would not delay the passage of the bill is that if we succeeded in stopping its passage we would prevent Newfoundland from getting at this moment assistance which it so sadly needs. The only way now in which it can get its rights is by an ultimate appeal to the electorate.

Honourable senators, if it would serve any good purpose I would propose a number of amendments to this bill. Again, you may ask me: "Why do you not do it?" Well, amendments were proposed in the other house, and not one of them was acceptable to the Government of the day. Why should we just delay passage of this bill by sending the same amendments forward? The Government would simply say: "We have heard this story before. We have made up our minds."

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Maybe we would have new amendments.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not know of any new ones. The ones that I have in mind are the ones that the Government has said it definitely will not accept.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Maybe the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) has one.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, I am happy with the bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Well, I am unhappy with it.

All I will say in conclusion, honourable senators, is that I am in complete accord with the stand that has been taken by the Liberal party in connection with this matter.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am not surprised at that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No, I am sure my friend is not surprised at that, and I am sure my friend feels that we have taken the right stand. I am sure my friend feels that this bill should not have been presented to this house before the whole question had been discussed with Newfoundland.

We take that stand firmly, that discussion should have taken place first. We feel that we should stand firm—and I am referring to the Liberal party—on the commitments made and the obligations undertaken in the pact of Union signed at the time of Union. We stand for carrying out that pact both in letter and in deed.

I have referred to the fact that the recommendations of the commission were changed by the Government without consultation with the province. Our stand is, and I am in complete accord with it, that when the commitments of that pact are to be changed it should not be done by arrogant imposition of federal decisions on a province, but by consultation and in agreement with Newfoundland.

Honourable senators, I would like to tell the honourable senator from Hanover that when there is a change in the administration—and it may not be so far in the future as the honourable senator thinks—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am not a prophet; I am just listening.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: —I am confident that the Government of Newfoundland can be assured that the injustice which has been done to it will be removed, that this violation of a contract will be corrected, and that the Act of Union will be honoured in all its parts and will be carried out both in letter and in spirit.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: And that means $8 million a year in perpetuity.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Higgins, debate adjourned.

LAND USE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson, Chairman of the Special Committee on Land Use in Canada, presented the second report of the committee.

The Clerk Assistant (reading):

The Special Committee of the Senate on Land Use in Canada make their second report as follows:

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be adopted?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Next sitting. I would point out that a number of honourable senators have not had an opportunity of seeing the report.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Would there be any objection to my giving a brief explanation now?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Next sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker: Consideration next sitting.

For text of report see Appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 1078-87.

DIVORCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's 369th report.

He said: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the 369th report for this session of the Standing Committee on Divorce. This is the general report usually made by the committee through its chairman, and of course it is the final report. It may be worthy of note that this is the eighth final report it has been my good fortune to present, and in which I have recounted the activities and accomplishments of this committee of which I have the honour to be chairman. My first report was made in 1953. There were two reports in 1957 because of two sessions that year.

As is usual when making this final report, my first word is to express my thanks to the working members of the committee for the devotion with which they discharged their onerous duties, for the loyalty which they showed in their attendance, which was excellent this year, and for the care and industry which they brought to the hearings. There was a minimum difficulty this year in the matter of manning our subcommittees, and for that I am exceedingly grateful to the members of the committee. In this connection I might mention we had one addition to our membership, in the person of the honourable senator from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr.

Hnatyshyn), whom we welcomed at the first of the session. I take this opportunity to express my pleasure in having him on the committee and I thank him for the services he rendered.

Honourable senators may recall that session after session in the course of my report on the activities of the committee I have mentioned that the honourable senator from Huron-Perth (Hon. Mr. Golding) has led the committee members in the matter of attendance. Last session we were all deeply sorry when he became seriously ill and was unable to maintain his fine attendance record. But I am delighted to report that this session he once again ranks first in attendance at the Divorce Committee's sittings. So I may say to my honourable friend that he takes first prize.

The next person to whom I would refer in this connection is the honourable senator from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw). I have special reasons for being grateful to him, for on several occasions when it was not possible for me to be present to discharge my usual duties he acted as general chairman. He did so with efficiency and in that spirit of kindness and courtesy which has endeared him to all of us. I am only sorry that he is not here to accept my compliments and my expression of gratitude.

I am very pleased indeed with the co-operation I have received from all members of the committee and from the members of the staff, a general co-operation which has characterized and marked our proceedings. In this connection I would like to acknowledge the efficient, faithful and excellent services rendered by the Committees Branch under the direction of Mr. Harvey Armstrong. The management of 449 divorce petitions and the bringing to trial of 356 of them in a single session of Parliament is an accomplishment of no small magnitude. There is a great amount of detail involved and there is no room for sloppiness, but the work has been carried out in an efficicent and accurate manner. The responsibility for the function of bringing these cases to trial has fallen on the shoulders of Mr. John Hinds, who is next in seniority in the staff under Mr. Armstrong. I have some knowledge of the painstaking labour that is involved in this matter, because the interlocutory work which precedes the actual trial is done in my office and the number of orders which I have been called upon to make and decide is very considerable.

We members of the Divorce Committee pride ourselves, I think rightly, on the courtesy with which we carry on our proceedings, and if we have, as I think we have, acquired some reputation in this regard, a considerable portion of the credit is due to the three gentlemen who act as registrars or clerks of the courts at our subcommittees. They are Mr. J. D. MacDonald, Mr. A. Fortier and Mr. G. Lemire. Nor should I overlook the two attendants, Mr. George MacIntosh and Mr. Alexander MacFarlane. The gentlemanly good nature and courtesy of these five men in the course of our trials, and the equally good nature and courtesy of Mrs. Anderson in the office upstairs, has put many a nervous and troubled litigant at ease and facilitated very greatly the normalcy of our proceedings. I express to them the gratitude of the whole committee for the services they have rendered.

In the Department of National Defence the navy is known as the silent service. With us in this committee, and also elsewhere, the silent service is the Hansard staff—the men under Mr. Basil Lake. I refer to Mr. Hagen, Mr. Hubbard, Mr. Lemire, Mr. Crockett and Mr. Lawrence. I add to those names Mr. George Baker, who recently joined the staff on the retirement of Mr. Percy Shelton. We all regretted Mr. Shelton's departure, and I have noted with some interest and pleasure that when we were hard up for reporters he helped us out, notwithstanding the fact that he is living in Montreal.

In this category of courteous civil servants I should also include Mr. Henri Perrault, our very competent interpreter.

I am sorry, of course, to note the continued absence of the honourable senator from St. Boniface (Hon. Mr. Howden), who has been ill throughout the session. I know we all send him our best wishes for his early recovery.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I will now proceed to read the report:

The Standing Committee on Divorce make their 369th report, as follows:

For the present session of Parliament 449 petitions for bills of divorce were presented to the Senate and dealt with by the Standing Committee on Divorce, as follows:

Petitions heard and recommended	353
Petitions heard and rejected	3
Petitions withdrawn	10
Petitions not disposed of	83
Total	449

Last session 93 cases remained undisposed of. In other words, they went over to the next session. That is the regular procedure. We tried every case that was ready to be tried, but there were a number of cases where petitions were filed but the proceedings were not completed, so those cases were not open for trial this session and will go over to the next session. Such cases are tried without any additional fee.

Of the petitions recommended 352 were from petitioners domiciled in the province of Quebec, and one was from a petitioner domiciled in the province of Newfoundland.

That is the lowest number of petitions dealt with in the past five or six years.

Of the 352 petitioners domiciled in the province of Quebec, 106 were husbands and 246 were wives.

The petitioner domiciled in the province of Newfoundland was a wife.

Of the petitions heard, 7 were opposed at the hearing.

May I add that there were many notices of contestation in which no contest finally took place at trial. That is a problem we shall have to meet in the course of time. Sometimes women apply for an order compelling their husbands to pay something for their defence, and then do not turn up at the hearing. In such cases the notice of contestation is really a means to get money from their husbands rather than to contest the divorce.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Does the husband pay the money to the wife or to the committee?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Usually he pays it to her solicitor.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Why not have it paid to the committee?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The present intention is to have the money paid to the committee or to have it held by the committee until the trial actually takes place before a wife gets the money. We intend to do that next year.

The main or general committee met 57 times during the session on 57 separate days. The general committee divided into subcommittees for the hearing of evidence in support of petitions and these subcommittees held 114 meetings.

In 15 cases, where the petitioner pleaded hardship on account of straitened circumstances in respect to the payment of the full parliamentary fee, the committee recommended a partial remission and in one case a full remission.

The fees paid to Parliament for bills of divorce heard and recommended during the present session amounted to $72,325.00.

According to my calculation, there is a net saving to the Consolidated Revenue Fund of about $30,000, after paying the expenses of the trials—that is to say, after the wages of all the employees, a proportion of those in the Committees Branch, and so on, and costs of translation and printing, and all the rest of it, have been taken into account. So we have not altogether been a burden on the finances of the country.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: You haven't anything in for overhead.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The report continues:

Assuming that all bills of divorce recommended by the committee, now in various stages before Parliament, receive the royal assent, the comparison of dissolution of marriage granted by Parliament in the last ten sessions is as follows:

1951	294
1952	312
1952-53	282
1953-54	378
1955	402
1956	356
1957 1st session	338
1957 2nd session	187
1958	319
1959	353

Honourable senators will notice a fairly regular number year after year, growing slightly but not very markedly, up to the present time.

Statistics covering the number of divorces granted in the different provinces during the years 1954 to 1958, both inclusive—1959 for Quebec and Newfoundland are as follows:

	1954	1955	1956	1957	1958	(1959)
Canada	5,922	6,031	5,890	6,688	6,211
Newfoundland	8	1	5	6	7	1
Prince Edward Island	8	7	1	2	1
Nova Scotia	249	253	230	250	220
New Brunswick	117	181	215	206	150
Quebec	370	401	351	519	311	352
Ontario	2,468	2,509	2,472	2,873	2,708
Manitoba	371	237	221	242	281
Saskatchewan	250	237	221	242	281
Alberta	610	627	685	726	743
British Columbia	1,471	1,483	1,502	1,559	1,498

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Did my honourable friend say there were approximately 6,200 divorces granted in Canada in 1958?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: 6,211.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: How many divorces were granted in the Senate that year?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: From Quebec and Newfoundland—and Newfoundland never gives us more than half a dozen—there were 311.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Are they included in the 6,211?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is right.

In Ontario during that year there were 2,708, which is a very good showing, indeed, for this province.

There were from British Columbia, 1,498. The population of British Columbia, of course, is very much less than that of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Kamloops): Would the honourable senator say if there are any statistics available indicating the number of minor children whose lives are influenced by these divorces?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, we have no such records, and, as far as I know, none are kept by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

The national divorce rate per 100,000 population granted in Canada in 1958 was 36.5, divided as follows:

Newfoundland	1.6
Prince Edward Island	1.0
Nova Scotia	31.0
New Brunswick	26.0
Quebec	6.4
Ontario	46.7
Manitoba	33.6
Saskatchewan	31.6
Alberta	61.9
British Columbia	97.0

The following statement shows a comparison between the number of divorces granted to husbands and wives respectively in the years mentioned.

	Husbands	Wives
1954	2,337	3,585
1955	2,357	3,674
1956	2,279	3,611
1957	2,701	3,987
1958	2,532	3,679

All of this is respectfully submitted by myself as chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is ordered that this report lie on the table.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I would like to thank the chairman of the Divorce Committee (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) and his very capable colleagues for the able manner in which they carried on their strenuous work. I was chairman of that committee for many years, and although I did not find the work particularly difficult from a legal standpoint it was onerous and confining, and at times quite disagreeable. I know we are all grateful to the committee for having performed its onerous task in such a capable manner, and I want to thank everyone concerned, the chairman of the committee, the members, the officials and everyone else who had anything to do with this work.

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, I wish to join in the concert of praise of the honourable Chairman of the Divorce Committee (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) and of the honourable senators who helped him in his heavy task.

All senators know that because of my religious principles I cannot pass comment on the desirability of granting divorce, but I am fully aware that by law the Senate has been given power to deal with divorce petitions and that senators have to perform the duty imposed on the Senate. Catholic senators and others who wish to refrain from participating in these inquiries and subsequent decisions are not pressed to do otherwise, and, that being so, I say frankly and positively that those who accept that duty and fulfil it deserve great respect and commendation from their co-senators. We who cannot participate in the handling of these petitions deeply appreciate the services rendered by the honourable members of the Divorce Committee.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I would like to join with the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and the honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette) in the tribute which they have paid to the distinguished, industrious and never-tiring chairman of the Divorce Committee (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). He has given splendid leadership to the committee. I also join in complimenting all the members of that committee. The committee sits frequently when the Senate is adjourned. Indeed, when the Senate stands adjourned from Thursday afternoon to Tuesday evening, it is usual, over a period of many weeks, for members of this committee to conduct hearings on Friday, Monday and Tuesday. We are greatly indebted to them.

May I say that I was much interested in the remarks made by the honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette). We know his views and those of others from his province on this question. But by his remarks he has shown that he is a man of deep intelligence and broad tolerance. It must be some satisfaction to him and to other senators from the province of Quebec to note that in the past year there were only 311 divorces granted to parties from that province, compared with 2,708 divorces in the neighbouring province of Ontario.

Report tabled.

LAND USE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, may I ask, with the unanimous consent of the house, that the honourable senator from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson), Chairman of the Land Use Committee, be allowed to review briefly the report of the committee which was presented this afternoon?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is there unanimous consent to revert to the order for consideration of the report?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

By unanimous consent the Senate reverted to the order for consideration of the report.

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson moved adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, I appreciate the privilege that has been granted me to review briefly the report of the committee, and I thank the honourable Leader of the Opposition for his kindness.

In bringing the second report of the Land Use committee before this house I would like to take this opportunity of thanking all the witnesses who appeared before our committee.

Also at this time I would like to express the appreciation of the committee for the fine work done by our technical advisor, Mr. Ralph A. Stutt, of the Economics Division of the Department of Agriculture, at Ottawa. The committee had a short discussion with Mr. Taggart, the Deputy Minister, and Dr. Booth, and also a brief from Dr. Andal, which gave us considerable assistance in striking a stand which we wanted to take in a study of the uneconomic small farm unit.

I also want to say that I personally appreciate the assistance given throughout the session by the members of the Land Use committee.

It was evident to the committee that there is great public interest in the plight of the farmer on the small farm unit, as shown by the evidence submitted to us. This interest centered around the welfare of small farmers who operate farms on a full-time basis and whose farms are too small to provide an acceptable standard of living.

The term "small farm" has been used to cover a wide group of farm units. These farms have been described by various terms such as "low income", "uneconomic farm units", "small scale", "part-time", "residential" and others. In the main, the committee considered the class of truly commercial or full-time farms. There are many small farms in Canada which are not considered strictly as commercial farms, since a considerable part of their income is obtained from off-farm sources. Some small farms, mostly adjoining urban centres, are strictly residential and their owners work elsewhere. Some small farms are occupied by elderly people who remain on the farm because they are satisfied with conditions as a way of life.

All evidence presented to the committee indicated that it is impossible, with our present knowledge, to give a precise answer to the number of "problem" small farms in the various provinces. There are three main reasons for this conclusion. First, there is no general agreement as to what constitutes a minimum, acceptable standard of living; second, full information with respect to farm income is not available; and, third, statistics are not available in sufficient detail to show the number and location of these farms. According to a classification in the 1956 Census of Agriculture, 21 per cent of all farms in Canada are non-commercial, the income from each being less than $1,200 per annum. At that time there were some 120,242 of these farms in Canada. The evidence, however, indicated heavier weighting of small farms—most likely in the "problem" group—are occurring in sections of the Atlantic and central provinces.

The evolution which has been taking place in farming across Canada in mechanization, technology and the use of more capital has resulted in a higher degree of efficiency and more production. These changes have led to an increase in size of farms and a drop in the number of workers on the land. The problem of the commercial farmer and the main aspect of the farm problem at the present time would appear to be production in excess of the amount that can be sold at prices which are believed to be fair and just. This development, in essence, boils down to fewer farmers, and thus the "small farm" problem is a part of the overall farm problem. The current view of organized farmers is that the problems of the "commercial" and the "small" farm should be treated through a blend of action by third parties such as governments, or co-operatives, since the considerations involve moral facets relating to justice and fairness as well as to economic factors of material well-being. We do not want to rely on the mechanism of economic forces alone to eliminate or squeeze out the low-income farmer for a practical and satisfactory answer to this segment of the problem.

The "small farm" problem results from a lag in adjustments in the agricultural sector of the economy. The present rapid changes in technology taking place in Canadian agriculture have only served to enlarge and make the problems more acute. One of the characteristics of this change is a shift from farming as a way of life, to farming as a business. The small farm problem is also accentuated by the type of soil, climate and limitation of crops that can be grown in particular areas. Again, many of the problems of the small farm are the result of original settlement policies and patterns established in the past and to circumstances beyond the control of farmers. In many cases, even today, there has been a concentration and extension of settlement beyond the areas in which an economic unit can be established.

Modern farming requires a large capital investment in land and equipment, as well as fairly large cash outlays for operating expenses. As the usual spread between the cost per unit and price per unit is rather small, the critical problem of limited output makes the small farm particularly vulnerable because of the low volume of production. It was pointed out that part of the problem in many cases is due to poor farming methods and practices, poor planning and management and unawareness of land use capabilities, lack of initiative and limited alternative opportunities. In the past, our "Extension Programs" have been aimed too much at the needs of the commercial farmer with respect to production matters and not enough to matters of good farming and management. This seems, then, to create a need for a change in the educational program. Whenever there is a fairly large concentration of small farms other economic and social problems develop. The area frequently takes on the characteristics of a slum. The services of the community reflect the situation. School and church facilities are often poor, community life, generally, suffers, and roads and other services are neglected or lacking.

In the Maritimes the "small farm" problem may be attributed to a variety of factors such as the size of operation, available land area, soil, topography, capital and management, etc., whereas on the Prairies uneconomic units may result from low average yields, long freight hauls, export market, original settlement pattern or lack of capital resources.

The problem of the full-time or near full-time farms is derived from two main problems—low farm income and instability of farm income. In the case of the part-time, residential and other small farms, the problems are sociological and institutional. When families and communities making up the small, full-time farm group have failed to meet new conditions of mechanization and technology as they have occurred, or to increase income from the farm or elsewhere, yet stayed on their farms through lack of means to change or through attachment to their homes, or both, the problem has grown increasingly acute.

There are certain explicit objectives which ran through all the submissions with a high degree of similarity and agreement. These are outlined in one of the presentations, as follows:

1. The improvement of the level of living of farm families on low-production farms.
2. The improvement of the income position of farmers. This includes income also from the non-farm sources.
3. The consolidation or integration of small farms into larger and more productive units.
4. Facilitating the transfer of part of the agricultural labour force from agriculture to other occupations.
5. The maintenance of the family farm.
6. The maintenance of the rural community.
7. Better use of both human and natural resources.

Some other objectives noted were the adjustment in the use of poor lands from agriculture to other uses such as forestry, grazing and recreation. In certain regions of the country other major land use in occupations such as lumbering, pulpwood cutting, etc., farm wood-lots and fishing should be recognized as the best alternative use, either in place of or as complementary to agriculture.

The federal Government must be concerned with the best use for conservation of these resources since they are basic to the needs of the nation.

The interest of members of society as it related primarily to our commercial farmers is a deep concern for the assurance of a continuous and adequate supply of food and other farm products to meet the consumers' needs. This brings up the need for conservation of soil, water and other natural resources and for continuing research and education with a view to further advances in the field of agricultural technology.

There also was general agreement in the belief that national policies and programs consistent with the objectives which have been stated might be organized and developed under, at least, three divisions. These were stated in one case in the following manner:

1. Better land use.
2. Creation of an economic climate designed to facilitate and improve "off-farm" income and employment conditions.
3. More efficient levels of production on farms remaining in agriculture.

Certain policies and programs designed to meet the needs of the majority of commercial farmers were not believed to be appropriate to improve the lot of the low-income small farmer. Most briefs stressed the need of new or particular types of programs aimed directly at the low-income farmer. The main need would be flexibility of policies and programs adaptable to co-ordination of effort, continuous research study and service on a co-operative basis between federal and provincial Governments.

The need for the development of a national "Land Use Policy" was probably the most frequent and strongly-advocated proposal.

As a prerequisite, the conducting of land use surveys to provide the information on the best usage of specific areas of land and on problems of prospective problems arising from existing use was stressed. These would enable the study of proper land use by local land use committees and an economic classification of land for alternative uses of poor lands. These studies would determine:

1. Areas which should continue in agricultural production.
2. Soil and water conservation, drainage and other types of development measures.
3. Delineation of areas where movement of resources out of agriculture is deemed best, and
4. Areas to which non-agricultural activities might be attracted.

They would provide authority for the federal Government to participate financially with the provinces and possibly municipalities in approved projects such as reclamation of problematic prairie lands, conservation, irrigation, drainage, diking, marsh land rehabilitation, river erosion and other erosion problems; watershed development, wood-lot management, land clearing, development of community pastures and any other projects for the benefit of an agricultural or wooded area which could include the greater use and development of recreational facilities in the wooded area.

A strong request was made in one presentation that the federal Government investigate the possibility of introducing some financial incentive to private owners to certify land under the "National Tree Farm Movement". This is a voluntary movement with the purpose in mind of encouragement or conversion of poor land in the production of tree crops. At present this is promoted through the Forest Management Educational Program. The major problems involved in the conversion of this class of land to forest use are:

1. The non-productive waiting period for a merchantable tree crop.
2. Land ownership.
3. Lack of credit for the acquisition of a satisfactory forest crop unit.
4. Taxation policies which are largely based on an annual grain crop yield and tend to discourage the production of timber crops.

One main proposal related to the need for a program of supervision for the application of good farm business principles and management in conjunction with more credit of appropriate types. The success of the supervised credit program of the Veterans' Land Administration was cited as a model of assistance to operators of small farms.

Time after time, mention was made of the fine work of the universities and agricultural colleges in providing good scientific and technical knowledge through regular courses and extension work. Some felt that all young farm people contemplating farming as a life occupation should be assisted and even asked to obtain a basic scientific training in agriculture with special emphasis on farm management training.

It was felt that the main gain to the nation from a reduction in the number of former inefficient farms would largely consist in an improvement in levels of living accruing to those making the shift through improvement of income distribution. I might say that on most small farms, outside the commercial type, there is little actual production which would affect the food situation in the dominion. Some increased production in the non-agricultural sector to which the low-income farmers move might be expected. This suggests the need to make sure that the families shifted will really be better off in non-farming employment. Several briefs pointed out that, in general, the best course would be to step up arrangements to train young farm people for skilled work and locate the right sort of jobs for them. Associated with this course of action would be creation of favourable conditions in industry and particularly in decentralization of industry.

One brief suggested a well-planned recreational use of our land and water areas could well provide a pleasant and economically rewarding return for terrain which is definitely submarginal for agricultural purposes. The small-farm operator, through the use of recreational facilities, could supplement his income substantially. Recreational needs are increasing with the growth of the population and the increase in leisure time because of shorter work hours and early retirement.

There was general commendation throughout the briefs of certain federal assistance programs. They specifically mentioned:

1. Federal-provincial fertilizer and lime program.
2. Federal freight assistance on the railroad movement of feed grain.
3. Assistance to Boys' and Girls' 4-H Clubs.
4. Assistance to live stock improvement and promotion of good seed and horticultural development.
5. The building of dikes and aboiteaux and breakwaters under the Marshland Rehabilitation Program.
6. The organization and development of community pastures.

All our provincial Governments have done and are doing a great deal to alleviate and improve the farming sector. Each province is engaged in projects that are worthy of recognition. It was repeatedly stressed, however, that there should be greater co-ordination between federal and provincial Departments of Agriculture in exchange of scientific knowledge and planning. Reference was made to the fine work done in western Canada by the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Association.

Basic to the solution of the small farm problem is an inventory and assessment of the land resources of Canada. The economic and social problems which arise in the use of land are acute when the capacity of the farm unit is inadequate and unable to adjust to the new situations.

Four recommendations made by this committee during the last session dealt with land use problems. The committee wishes to reaffirm its support of these recommendations in their original form, as follows:

(1) That the soil survey being co-operatively carried out by the federal Department of Agriculture, the provincial Departments of Agriculture and the Colleges of Agriculture be speeded up and expanded not only in order to complete the soil mapping of the whole settled area of Canada, but also of the unsettled areas.

(2) That it be called to the attention of the proper authorities the need of a systematic land use survey based upon appropriate factors to provide for an economic classification of the land according to its use suitability.

(3) That the work of various agencies in the study and management of our water resources be expanded—specifically that work relating to drainage and erosion problems, irrigation, levels of water-tables and present and likely future water requirements.

(4) That more emphasis be given studies which designate requirements respecting farm size, organization and practices according to the physical characteristics of the land and economic conditions which prevail.

In addition to the above, the following recommendations are presented for consideration:

(5) That a special body be instituted to assemble, co-ordinate and arrange for the dissemination to farmers of agricultural research done by the federal and provincial Departments of Agriculture, universities and agricultural colleges, and other research organizations.

(6) That an expanded extension service be inaugurated to deal with active farm planning, sound business principles and farm management for the alleviation of problems of the small uneconomic farm unit. These services are regarded as necessary conditions in the use of credit and the expansion of loans to farmers in the long-, intermediate- and short-term fields.

(7) That provision be made for an expanded program of vocational and technical training in rural areas.

(8) That governmental employment agencies improve and expand their services to facilitate employment of persons from low-income farm areas in off-farm jobs. Associated with this service we would urge the complete listing, categorizing, and reporting of the farm labour supply. A special counselling service should be instituted.

(9) That consideration be given to extension of resettlement assistance to any farmer on a small uneconomic farm wishing to move to another area of employment, after due consideration of the existing farm potential and employment situation.

(10) That this committee request the federal Department of Agriculture to send a delegation to the United States to study and report on the Rural Development Program.

(11) That this committee be reconstituted at the earliest possible date after the opening of the next session of Parliament, due to the great importance of proper land use in Canada.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Bois, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

AMENDMENT TO RULES

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I have a small matter which I wish to bring before the house. It has to do with an amendment to our Divorce Rules. It is not very consequential. Honourable senators will probably approve the fact that this session our committee has worked in fine co-operation with the Private Bills Committee of the House of Commons. On a recent occasion we had a get-together that was very fruitful of good thought. The gentlemen from that house pointed out to us that they depend upon the evidence we produce and therefore are interested that we get all the facts that seem to them to be necessary in deciding whether or not a divorce should be granted.

After we had heard the evidence in one particular case the Private Bills Committee of the Commons discovered there had been previous proceedings in connection with the marriage, a fact that had not been divulged to our Senate committee. The Private Bills Committee asked us about this and we replied, through counsel, that there was nothing in our rules requiring a petitioner for divorce to divulge the existence of any previous matrimonial proceedings. However, there is such a provision under the Ontario Supreme Court rules.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Also in Saskatchewan, and I think in every province that has a divorce court.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That may be. The members of the Private Bills Committee thought it was a lapse on our part that we did not require this information, and we have agreed that it should be made available to us. I do not know whether it will do much good, but it certainly will do no harm.

The proposed amendment indicates a willingness on our part to co-operate with members of the Private Bills Committee of the House of Commons. I am happy to say we have had the finest co-operation from them during this session. It may have been noticed that our work has been passed by that house almost without comment. This has been due to the bona fide careful consideration given to it by that committee, especially by its chairman, Mr. R. J. McCleave.

Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the honourable Senator Golding:

That the Standing Rules and Orders of the Senate of Canada relating to divorce be amended by adding to Rule 139 thereof and inserting after the word "made;" in the third line, on page 10, prior to subsection (h) the following subsection:

"A statement of all previous proceedings instituted with reference to the marriage or to any children thereof, including applications to the Parliament of Canada, petitions and writs for divorce actions, alimony or maintenance, separation from bed and board and the custody or maintenance of any children of the marriage, and the results of any such proceedings; and a statement of any agreements or financial arrangements between the spouses with reference to the marriage or any children thereof."

And that such rule be further amended by striking out the letter (h) in the last line of such Rule and substituting the letter (i) therefor.

If this is passed it will require that in the petition which is sworn to by the petitioner a statement with regard to previous proceedings with respect to the marriage shall be included. I see no reason why this should not be done. As I have said, it could do no harm, and it might do some good; also it would show co-operation by us with our fellow workers in the other house.

Honourable senators, I so move without notice, by unanimous consent.

May I add that I think honourable senators should know that we would not apply that rule until the end of September and that in the interval a circular will be sent to all those who are regular practitioners before our committee, calling it to their attention.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: If it is overlooked by some new practitioner, I assume you will allow him to amend in the first instance?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Oh, yes. We do that quite frequently now. For instance, when a plea comes in that adultery was committed at a certain time and at a certain place, and it is proved in evidence that it was at another time or at another place, and thus the respondents have not had proper notice, we never reject the petition, but we allow the solicitors to give notice of a motion to amend. There is now a regular form for that purpose. Then if no reply is given within ten days we allow the motion to amend.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICES OF INQUIRIES

On the notices of inquiries by Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

No. 1.

Each year since 1947, how many applications have been made in Canada for passports by

(a) British subjects;
(b) Canadian citizens;
(c) Citizens of the Commonwealth?

No. 2.

1. Are there any categories of British subjects who are presently living in Canada and who are neither Canadian citizens nor citizens of the Commonwealth?
2. If so, what are they?

No. 3.

What is the amount of each of the fellowships for nationals of foreign countries enumerated in the categories described as 8*a* and 8*b* of the Second Annual Report of the Canada Council?

What is the particular object of each of these fellowships?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I am surprised to find these inquiries on the Order Paper, because I understood that the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) intended to make the inquiries next session.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: He is going to make sure of them.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have no objection to the inquiries remaining on the Order Paper, but it may be quite impossible to obtain the answers before prorogation. I suggest that the inquiries stand.

The Hon. the Speaker: The inquiries stand.

SENATE REPRESENTATION ON INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I refer to the general question of the representation of this house on various delegations that are sent abroad? It will be recalled that some time ago I expressed my opinion that the Senate is not accorded proper representation on many of these delegations. I brought this to the attention of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and he undertook to bring it to the attention of the Government. I am sure he is getting very good results. In fact, on the delegation to the recent Atlantic Congress there were two members from this house. The honourable senator from Huron-Perth (Hon. Mr. Golding) has reminded me that we had three, but one, the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson), went in his capacity as honorary Life President of the NATO Parliamentary Association. I want to express my appreciation to the leader for his interest in that regard.

Honourable senators will also recall that when the question of representation on the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association came up it was pointed out that at the last general meeting of that association the Senate had one representative only. I think it was the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) who reminded us that previously the Senate had had two representatives at the meeting. The honourable senator from Shelburne took part in the discussion and said he felt we should have at least two representatives. He brought this to the attention of Mr. Speaker, and I did also. Honourable senators will be glad to know, I am sure, that Mr. Speaker, as usual, has taken notice of the representations that have been made here and of the wishes of the Senate, and he has succeeded in persuading the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association to appoint two representatives of this body to attend the meeting which is to be held in Australia this year. On behalf of all honourable senators, I wish to express appreciation to Mr. Speaker for his interest in this matter.

CONVENTION ON NATIONALITY OF MARRIED WOMEN

On the order:

Resuming the postponed debate on the proposed resolution moved by Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament approve the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women, done at New York on February 20, 1957, and that this house do approve the same.—Hon. Senator Wilson.

Hon. Mrs. Wilson: Honourable senators, the honourable senator from Sorel (Hon. Mrs. Jodoin) intended to speak after me, but she is not present in the chamber. May I therefore ask to be allowed to adjourn the debate once more?

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Honourable senators, this item has been standing on the Order Paper since March 16. I propose to speak on this proposed resolution myself. When I do so I shall give my reason for thinking it should be dealt with as soon as possible, but I do not want to go into that this afternoon. However, I ask the indulgence of the house to have precedence given to this matter when the Orders of the Day are called tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have no objection to that at all.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Victory for the women!

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 1068)

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON LAND USE

Wednesday, July 8, 1959

The Special Committee of the Senate on Land Use in Canada make their second report, as follows:—

I. ORDER OF REFERENCE

The following resolution was adopted on Tuesday, February 17, 1959, by the Senate:—

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to consider and report on Land use in Canada and what should be done to ensure that our land resources are most effectively utilized for the benefit of the Canadian economy and the Canadian people and, in particular, to increase both agricultural production and the incomes of those engaged in it;

That the committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Barbour, Basha, Bois, Boucher, Bradette, Buchanan, Cameron, Crerar, Emerson, Gladstone, Golding, Higgins, Horner, Inman, Leger, Leonard, MacDonald, McDonald, McGrand, Methot, Molson, Pearson, Power, Smith (Kamloops), Stambaugh, Taylor (Norfolk), Taylor (Westmorland), Turgeon, Vaillancourt, Wall and White;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such counsel and technical and clerical personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to report from time to time;

That the evidence taken on the subject during the three preceding sessions be referred to the Committee.

A Steering committee was appointed as follows:—The Honourable Senators Pearson, Chairman; Bois, Deputy Chairman; Basha, McDonald, Power, Taylor (Norfolk), Taylor (Westmorland) and Wall.

The scope of the inquiry for this session was confined to a consideration of the problems of the small uneconomic farm unit within the general framework of the subject of land use. The particular plan of the committee was to study the situation respecting small farms and particularly the welfare of the farm family in which full-time work is directed to agricultural production in the hope of attaining an adequate living. The term "small farm problem" was taken to mean the substantial number[1] of farms in Canada whose economic position was believed to be completely unsatisfactory and constituted a public problem; and who could not hope to achieve an adequate standard of living without help and action programs by the governments. The concern thus lies within the context of inadequacy of farm income to provide the amenities of life from the particular farm unit.

[1]The 1951 Census of Agriculture reported 235,117 farms with value of farm products sold in 1950 of $250 to $2499 excluding part-time farms. The 1956 Census of Agriculture reported 120,242 farms as "non-commercial" with potential annual production of less than $1,200. The $1,200 benchmark is believed to represent the lower limit of these farms which provide substantial employment to the operator. While an income of $1,200 is clearly below desirable living standards it does represent a farm unit which has passed the subsistence stage.

II. COMMITTEE PROCEDURE

A procedure was adopted which was similar to that used during the previous sessions of the committee. Witnesses were invited to give reports related specifically to the small farm problem. These included some federal agricultural government officials, the provincial ministers or deputy ministers of agriculture in each province, the leaders of national farm organizations, one provincial cooperative organization and one forest industry association. This approach was taken with the thought in mind of obtaining a national, regional and local picture of the problem. A total of 15 meetings were held at which 17 witnesses were heard. These witnesses were supported by 24 other persons at 7 of these different meetings.

The list of witnesses is shown in the appendix. A total of 469 pages were recorded and published. Other reference material was provided to the committee by the witnesses.

III. REVIEW OF SUBMISSIONS

The evidence presented to the committee showed real concern over the plight of the farmer on small farm units. Public interest in the welfare of small farmers who operate farms on a full time basis and whose farms are too small to provide an acceptable level of living, was apparent. It may be taken as a broad premise, based on the submissions, that there is a general unwillingness to permit levels of material well-being of any individual or group in our society to fall below certain minimum standards, irrespective of the cause. In the interest of fairness and justice, the briefs pointed out, the small farm group as outlined above, although largely outside the framework of the commercial agricultural economy, should be put in the position of sharing in the economic growth of the country. Because of the nature of the problem it should be treated through collective action by governments at all levels and with a public purpose in mind involving ethical as well as pure economic considerations.

More and more people in our society are concerning themselves with human welfare.

(a) Defining the problem, its extent and location

The term "small farm" has been used to cover a wide group of farm units. Various terms have been used to describe these farms such as low-income, uneconomic farm units, small scale, part-time, subsistence, residential and others. In the main they are not considered to be in the true commercial class of farms and they produce a relatively small part of our total marketed farm product. These farms are operated by a large group of farmers who for various reasons have been unable to become efficient commercial operators.

In Canada, we have many small farms which form a commercial viewpoint, do not pose any serious problems and which may even represent a desirable type. These include among others (1) part-time farms (those on which the farm income is less than income from other off-farm sources, where the farm income is low and the operator works at other jobs for a substantial part of the year), (2) residential farms and (3) farms operated by elderly persons. These types are often found close to urban centres having alternative employment opportunities, modern transportation facilities and other amenities available to urban dwellers. Major problems in these urban fringe areas are in the field of land use, in maintaining community organizations and related service facilities.

If the total income of the farmer and his family, from non-farm employment and from other sources is insufficient for the unusual family needs for a modern level of living, the situation presents important social and economic problems. When these problems persist in any area, slum conditions are evident and result in a wastage of natural and human resources.

The problem of the small farm may be viewed as a consideration of those farms on which the volume of business is usually inadequate to attain the level of living desired by the average farm family. Stated another way, low farm income potential is the critical measure when determining the extent of the small farm problem. The briefs pointed out that size of farm in terms of total acres, acres of cropland, numbers of livestock or any other material measure is not a satisfactory way to identify the problem small farm. The problem has been aggravated by our changing way of life and an ever-increasing content of material needs, by the mechanization and commercialization of our agriculture.

All the evidence presented to the committee indicates that it is impossible with our present knowledge to give a precise answer to the number of problem small farms in Canada and in the different provinces. There are three main reasons for this conclusion. First, there is no general agreement as to what constitutes a minimum acceptable standard of living, second, full information with respect to off farm income, that is income obtained from work off the farm, is not available, and third, statistics are not available in sufficient detail to show the number and location of these farms.

Many witnesses used information from the 1951 and 1956 Censuses of Agriculture to indicate, in a general way, the number of small farms and their location. The censuses give data for Canada, each province and each census division. The measures used were (1) gross value of sales of farm products, (2) value of farm production, (3) capital investment in farms and (4) size of farm in term of acres. Classified on the basis of gross value of sales of farm products (1951 census) these data indicated that 38 per cent of all farms in Canada had sales valued between $250 and $2500 in 1950. These did not include the 10 per cent of all farms which were classed as part-time farms (sales between $250 and $1199, the operator having worked more than 100 days off the farm and farm income was smaller than income from other sources), and the 14 per cent of all farms which were classed as small scale farms and reported value of farm products sold in 1950 of less than $250. Most of the small-scale farms were very small in size. These were classed in the census as farms if the holding consisted of three acres or more or from one to three acres with agricultural production in 1950 valued at $250 or more and if agricultural operations were carried out. These are really not farms at all when considered in the usual sense.

It was pointed out to the committee that the farms having sales between $250 and $2500 (excluding part-time and small-scale farms) constituted the main small farm problem group. In 1950, on a regional basis, they represented 34 per cent of all farms in the Atlantic Provinces; 35 per cent in the Central Provinces; 43 per cent in the Prairie Provinces; and 38 per cent in British Columbia.

An economic classification of farms was included in the 1956 Census of Agriculture. According to this classification 21 per cent of all farms in Canada are non-commercial farms having an estimated potential gross annual value of production of crops and livestock (including farm products consumed in the home) of less than $1200. In all of Canada there were 120,242 of these farms in 1956.

On a provincial and regional basis they made up the following percentages of all farms:

	Number of non-commercial farms	Per cent of all farms
Newfoundland	1,857	78
Prince Edward Island	2,468	26
Nova Scotia	12,945	61
New Brunswick	13,071	59
Atlantic Provinces	30,341	55
Quebec	34,241	28
Ontario	26,786	19
Central Provinces	61,027	23
Manitoba	5,555	11
Saskatchewan	4,487	4
Alberta	7,337	9
Prairie Provinces	17,379	8
British Columbia	11,482	46
CANADA	120,242[1]	21

[1] Includes Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Source: Dominion Bureau of Statistics, Census of Agriculture, 1956.

These figures might be reasonably adjusted slightly upwards in the Prairie Provinces for unprofitable small commercial farms and downwards in areas other than the Prairie Provinces for profitable small commercial farm businesses.

On the basis of these and other data, and taking account of the limitations of the measures, some witnesses concluded that from one third to one half of our farms are too small and do not possess enough resources to produce a satisfactory income to provide a reasonable level of living. The evidence indicated a heavier weighting of small farms most likely in the problem group in sections of the Atlantic and Central provinces. It must be recalled, however, that off-farm sources of incomes are not included in these estimates and in many sections of the country income from the primary industries of forestry, trapping, fur farming, and fishing are of prime importance in addition to urban industrial employment and other income sources. But in any case the magnitude of the problem is of such extent as to involve a large proportion of the farm population.

(b) Interrelationship of the farm problem with the small farm problem

The evolution which has been taking place in farming across Canada in mechanization and technology and the application of more capital have resulted in a higher degree of efficiency and more production. This series of changes has led to an increase in size of farm and a drop in the number of workers on the land. The problem of the commercial farmer and the main aspect of the "farm problem" at the present time would appear to be production in excess of the amount that can be sold at prices which is believed to be fair and just. The interest of members of society, as it related primarily to our commercial farmers, is a deep concern for the assurance of a continuous and adequate supply of food and other farm products to meet the consumer's needs. This brings up the need for conservation of soil, water and other natural resources and for continuing research and education with a view to further advances in the field of agricultural technology, and the problems of marketing.

Technological development, however, boils down in essence to fewer farmers and thus the "small farm problem" is a part of the over-all "farm problem". The current view of organized farmers is that the problems of the commercial and the small farm should be treated through a blend of action by third parties such as governments or co-operatives, since the considerations involve moral facets relating to justice and fairness as well as economic factors of material well-being. We do not want to rely on the mechanism of economic forces alone to eliminate or squeeze out the low income farmer for a practical and satisfactory answer to this segment of the problem.

(c) Cause of the small farm problem

The small farm problem results from a lag in adjustments in the agricultural sector of the economy. The rapid changes in technology which have taken place in Canadian agriculture have served to enlarge and to make the problems more acute.

The presentation of the Government of the Province of British Columbia lists the most important and basic changes which have accompanied technological advances and mechanization and revolutionized the character of the agricultural economy, as follows:

"(1) the shift from farming as a way of life to farming as a business,

(2) the shift of farming from an art to a science,

(3) change from diversification to specialization,

(4) change from small scale to assembly line character,

(5) a greater responsibility in management,

(6) tremendous increases in operating costs,

(7) changes in farm living standards."

Most of the witnesses mentioned that the basic reason for farms with a small volume of business stems mainly from the inadequacy of agricultural resources. Closely connected with this is the use to which the land is put. This is pointed out in the brief from the Ontario Department of Agriculture in this manner: "There are small farms and a small farm problem in all parts of the province, but it is most acute on the Canadian Shield, and on other high land with rough terrain. This is largely explained by the soils and climate and the limits these place on crops that can be grown". Much of it is the result of settlement policies and patterns established in the past and circumstances beyond the control of farmers. Often there has been a concentration and extension of settlement beyond the possibilities of establishment of economic units.

Modern farming requires a large capital investment in land and equipment as well as fairly large cash outlays for operating expenses. As the usual spread between cost per unit and price per unit is rather small the critical problem of limited output makes the small farm particularly vulnerable because of its low volume of production.

Some briefs point out that part of the problem in many cases is due to poor farming methods and practices, poor planning and management and unawareness of land use capabilities, lack of initiative and limited alternative opportunities. This is really a part of the whole educational problem. In the past probably our extension programs have been aimed too much at the needs of the commercial farmer with respect to production matters and not enough to matters of good farm planning and management.

In some cases small farms persist on the fringe of the agricultural frontier because of the conflict of operator and family labour between agriculture and other primary industries such as lumbering. The need of off-farm employment to obtain enough income for family living and farm development is often at variance with a desirable concentration on farm enlargement. If the physical resources of the area are too poor to permit desirable land use and a satisfactory farm income then this situation might persist for a long time.

The persistence of depressed income conditions on farms which have inadequate income levels leads to inertia, apathy and immobility of farm people and a lack of enterprise and hope. Whenever there is a fairly large concentration of low income farms other economic and social problems develop. The area frequently takes on the characteristics of a slum. The services of the community reflect the situation. School and church facilities are often poor, community life generally suffers and roads and other services are neglected or lacking.

All of the above causes and conditions were mentioned in the presentations to the committee. The briefs indicate also that low-income farms are found to a greater or lesser degree in all sections of Canada. Most of the same causes of small farms are found throughout the country but with different emphasis. One of the presentations from a Maritime Province states: "The persistence of the small farm and its attendant problems can be attributed to a great variety of factors such as size of operation, available land area, soil, topography, capital, management, etc. These factors may appear singly or in combinations, but a definite pattern is difficult to define for, in many cases, one can find prosperous farmers side-by-side with so-called low-income operators". In the case of the Prairie Provinces, one of the briefs states the situation in these terms: "Non-economic units in this Province have stemmed from a number of basic causes. Low average yields (mainly due to moisture limitation), the long freight hauls, the export market, original settlement pattern, lack of adequate capital resources, immobility of labour resources in agriculture and restricted production alternatives are among the more important sources of the problem". One of the witnesses grouped the cause of small farms under three main divisions namely (1) historical, (2) physical and (3) economic. Another Prairie Province witness said: "Problems exist today mainly in the areas where settlers were permitted to settle on land unsuitable for grain production. . . . We contend that farms both in respect to size and land use must bear very definite relationship to the economic conditions and environment of the area in which they are located".

(d) Problem areas

It was pointed out that specific types of small farms can be identified but that one need not be concerned with some of these types. Part-time and residential farms of small holdings, in general, are viewed as desirable types.

In the case of the part-time farms the sale of farm products may not be large. But coupled with a substantial part of the income from off-farm employment and with the quality of country residence, this type is probably a desirable way of life. With decreasing hours of work in industry and the resulting increased leisure and recreational time, this type permits many intangible benefits. These benefits also accrue to small farms which can be classed as residential farms where the occupants have full time city or town jobs and raise a few farm products purely as a hobby and prefer to live in the country. There are also small farms which are operated by older people in semi-retirement. These farms enable these persons, who probably have farmed all their lives, to remain where they wish and to work at farm tasks at their leisure. They probably have no desire nor any particular need to increase the scale of their operations.

There are others on small farms who wish to have a great deal of independence and at the same time are not concerned about getting the latest conveniences and therefore prefer a small scale operation. Somewhat similar to this type is the small scale farmer who has limited ability and responsibility and is really not capable of operating an efficient unit. For him, the small farm unit provides a desirable place and way to make a living commensurate with his standard.

Because of the high capital requirements in modern day farming, many beginning their farming career must start on a modest scale. If they are established on farms with a fairly high potential productive capacity they can usually be improved through regular channels of assistance to all commercial farmers.

It is the balance of the small farms, (depending on the basis used to determine the extent), which represent full-time or near full-time work and rely on the income from the farm, that constitute the "small farm problem". Another condition of this group relates to the desire of the farm operators to overcome their problems. These might be contrasted with operators of small farms who are unable to operate larger scale farms because of old age, poor health, etc., and those operators who are willing to accept a low standard of living and wish to remain on the farm as a way of life.

The problem of the small full-time or near full-time farms derives from two main causes: (1) low farm income and (2) instability of farm income. In the case of the part-time, residential and other small farms, the problems are sociological and institutional The economic problems are mainly in the industrial employment field. When families and communities making up the small full-time farm group have failed to meet new conditions of mechanization and technology as they occurred and to increase income from the farm or elsewhere, yet stayed on their farms through lack of the means to change or through attachment to their homes, or both, the problem has grown increasingly acute.

(e) Objectives of programs for small farms

There are certain explicit objectives which ran through all the submissions with a high degree of similarity and agreement. These are outlined in one of the presentations as follows:

(1) the improvement of the level of living of farm families on low production farms;

(2) the improvement of the income position of farmers. (This includes income from non-farm sources also.)

(3) the consolidation or integration of small farms into larger and more productive units;

(4) facilitating the transfer of part of the agricultural labor force from agriculture to other occupations;

(5) the maintenance of the family farm;

(6) the maintenance of the rural community;

(7) a better use of both human and natural resources.

Further to these objectives which express the central framework in an over-all program to alleviate the problems of the small farm, several other important objectives were pointed out in the briefs. Some of these objectives are: (1) a satisfactory adjustment in the use of poor lands from agriculture to other uses such as forestry, grazing and recreation. The rigidity of institutional factors and other difficulties in this transfer were pointed up by certain statistical data for Ontario and Nova Scotia on the process of abandonment of farm land and the reverting of land to non-use rather than other appropriate uses. (2) In certain regions of the country, other major land use and occupations such as lumbering, pulpwood cutting, farm woodlots and fishing should be recognized as the best alternative use either in place of or as complementary to agriculture. (3) Help to low income farmers should be offered on the basis of voluntary participation and the final management decisions should rest with the farmer. (4) A co-ordinated federal-provincial set-up should be the basis for action notwithstanding the fact that land and water resources are under the control of each province. The federal government must be concerned with the best use and conservation of these resources since they are basic to the needs of the nation.

There was also general agreement in the belief that rational policies and programs consistent with the objectives, which have been stated, might be organized and developed under at least three divisions. These were stated in one case in the following manner:

(1) better land use

(2) creation of an economic climate designed to facilitate and improve off-farm income and employment conditions

(3) more efficient levels of production on farms remaining in agriculture.

Certain policies and programs designed to meet the needs of the majority of commercial farmers were not believed to be appropriate to improve the lot of the low income farmer. These included policies relating to price support, crop insurance, marketing, extension of agricultural production information and the usual formal types of credit. Thus, most briefs stressed the need of new or particular types of programs aimed directly at the low income farm. It was also stressed repeatedly that the problems of the low income farmer could not be met by any one program or administration. In addition to the need for federal and provincial co-operation, as has been mentioned, many types of services and separate administrations would be involved. The main need would be flexibility of policies and programs adaptable to co-ordination of effort, continuous research, study and service, and any particular needs of each province.

(f) Solutions proposed

The need for the development of a national land use policy was probably the most frequent and strongly advocated proposal. As a prerequisite, the conducting of land use surveys to provide the information on the best uses of specific areas of land and on problems or prospective problems arising from existing use was stressed. These would enable the study of proper use of land by local land use committees and an economic classification of land for alternative uses of poor lands. These studies would determine: (1) areas which should continue in agricultural production, (2) soil and water conservation, drainage and other types of development measures in which the expenditure of public funds is justified by economic conditions, (3) delineation of areas where movement of resources out of agriculture is deemed best and (4) areas to which non-agricultural activities might be attracted. This practice of having local people study their conditions and decide on the solutions is understood to be the basic philosophy of the Rural Development Program in the United States. Members of the committee expressed keen interest in this program and would like to obtain information on it. It might provide valuable guides to an appropriate program in Canada.

Most briefs envisaged federal enabling legislation followed by federal-provincial action programs. Federal enabling legislation mentioned was a "Rural Planning and Development Act"; a "National Land Use Act"; a "National Soil and Water Conservation Act"; and a "Federal Conservation and Reclamation Act". Most had in mind an Act of sufficient flexibility that it could be applied to any section of Canada, followed by complementary provincial legislation and a co-operative program of land use. It would be accompanied by some means of financing to help the small farms. The proposed legislation would include the work of the present Prairie Farm Rehabilitation and Maritime Marshland Reclamation Administrations. It would provide authority for the federal government to participate financially with the provinces and possibly the municipalities in approved projects, such as reclamation of problematic prairie lands, conservation, irrigation, drainage, dyking, marshland rehabilitation, river erosion and other erosion problems; watershed development, wood-lot management, land clearing, development of community pastures, and any other project for the benefit of an agricultural or wooded area.

One possibility of speeding up the process of land use adjustment was suggested in the brief from the Ontario Department of Agriculture. Reference to this was made as follows: "Land purchase for forestry or grazing with older operators given the right to sell and still live out life span on the farm". It is understood that this method is available in the State of New York.

In the area of land use policy, a strong request was made in one presentation to investigate the possibility of the federal Government introducing some financial incentive to private owners to certify land under the National Tree Farm Movement. This is a voluntary movement with the purpose in mind of encouraging the conversion of poor agricultural land to the production of tree crops. At present this is promoted through a forest management educational program. The major problems involved in the conversion of this class of land to forest use are: (1) the non-productive waiting period for a merchantable tree crop, (2) land ownership, (3) lack of credit for the acquisition of a satisfactory forest crop unit, and (4) taxation policies which are largely based on an annual grain crop yield base and tend to discourage the production of timber crops.

Another main proposal related to the need for a program of supervision or the application of good farm business principles and management in conjunction with more credit of appropriate types. Traditional credit services have proven inadequate to meet the need of farmers with limited resources. Some witnesses pointed out that the only farmers who can get credit are the ones who need it the least.

Many briefs mentioned the lack of sufficient credit to small continuing farmers with which to finance desired expansion or adjustment. Increased activity by provincial credit agencies in recent years is a reflection of the desire on the part of small uneconomic farm units to expand the scope of their operations. In the case of loans for short duration favourable comment was made of the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The expansion of loaning in recent years under the Canadian Farm Loan Board was noted. But stringent features of the Canadian Farm Loan Board came in for a lot of criticism. One particular matter was the lack of recognition of the Board of the role of the farm wood-lot as a source of increased farm income under a program of forest management. It was said that "little account was taken of the woodlots as a source of possible annual revenue or as a considerable factor in appraising the soundness of the over-all (farm) operation".

The success of the supervised credit program of the Veterans' Land Administration was cited as a model of assistance to operators of small farms. Guides and conditions were proposed in some briefs. These included: (1) careful selection of applicants, (2) a sufficient amount of credit to lift the status of a low income farm to an economic sized unit with adequate annual income, (3) provision of competent planning and supervisory services, (4) repayment provisions with flexibility related to the inherent productive capacity of the expanded farm.

The provision of supervised management is part of a general maintenance and improvement in the educational process which needs to be stressed in a program for farm people. Time after time mention was made of the fine work of the universities and agricultural colleges in providing good scientific and technical knowledge through regular courses and extension work. Some felt that all young farm people contemplating farming as their life occupation should be assisted and even asked to obtain sound basic scientific training in agriculture. Special emphasis was laid on the need for farm management training. Present-day farming requires technological and economic knowledge in order to operate successfully.

Associated with the need of scientific knowledge for farm people, most witnesses stressed the need for more research. Most emphasized the need for more economic studies in the production and marketing of agricultural products, establishment of the economic size of farm business, rural zoning, type of farming, rural re-organization and adjustment, rural-urban migration and many other areas. It was stressed in most briefs that research information now available at the universities and the federal and provincial departments of agriculture should be co-ordinated.

In the creation of an economic climate designed to facilitate and increase off-farm income and employment conditions, a number of proposals were made. Since low income farms produce so little for sale, the consolidation of these farms and the displacing of farm families would not materially affect the output situation and surpluses. It would not be sufficient to offset to any extent the continuing surge in output per acre, per animal unit and per worker. The main gain to the nation of a reduction in the number of small inefficient farms would largely consist of an improvement in levels of living, accruing to those making the shift, through improved income distribution. Some increased production in the non-agricultural sector to which the low income farmers move might be expected. This suggests the need to make sure that the families shifted are really better off in non-farm employment.

One witness said that "most of the young people are leaving the farm but the parents are remaining. Many of these people are reluctant to leave because they feel that they have insufficient qualifications for employment other than farming." Several briefs pointed out that, in general, the best course would be to step up arrangements to train young farm people for skilled work and locate the right sort of jobs for them. This would accompany a policy of leaving many families on present small farms as part-time or even residential farms, certainly in the case of older farm operators.

Associated with this course of action would be the creation of favourable conditions in industry and particularly in decentralization of industry so as to encourage people to move off the farm. In the case of part-time farms, off-farm employment would be a means of supplementing their farm income.

Proposals to increase off-farm income and employment require opportunities for jobs and informational and educational aids. Types of assistance in this regard, which may be on either a full time or part-time basis, were stressed in all the presentations. These types of assistance were:

(1) encouragement to industry, to establish in rural communities to provide off-farm employment opportunities. This would allow some family groups to remain intact in their familiar environment. This type of development is important from the standpoint of the employer who depends on a seasonal labour force. If the industry fits in with favourable local features and the employment does not conflict with the main seasonal farm tasks, these complementary undertakings can yield satisfactory livelihoods for many families.

(2) provision of vocational and technical training in rural areas to improve the skills of farm people and increase their chance of finding better industrial jobs. This program might be provided along the same lines as current vocational courses in agriculture.

(3) expansion and improvement of present employment services in rural areas which would inform low income farmers and their families of all employment opportunities. The labor supply on these farms might also be more regularly reported and categorized.

(4) special assistance or settlement compensation to help farm families move to appropriate employment areas. Financial assistance might be provided for part of the familiarization period and for counselling.

Other suggested aids include: (a) development of a community planning program by all sections of the community such as business, schools, churches, farms, financial, etc., to assist people out of agriculture, and (b) unemployment insurance for farm workers to provide added income security.

Some presentations indicated that the recreational aspect of land use has not been seriously investigated and developed in Canada. The brief from the Department of Agriculture and Marketing in Nova Scotia referred to the commercial value and use of certain grades of land, which is appropriate in many areas, in this manner: "Well-planned recreational use of our land and water areas could well provide a pleasant and economically rewarding return for terrain which is definitely submarginal for agricultural purposes.... The small farm operator, through the use of recreational facilities, could supplement his income substantially." The increasing need for a rational appraisal of the growth in population, the basic shifts of age groups within the population, the increase in leisure time because of shorter work hours and earlier retirement, increased urbanization and improved transportation facilities.

Two briefs suggested that there should be a national agency or special federal authority to deal specifically with the small farm problem, to study its implications and evolve a policy by which adjustments could be carried out. In one case, this national agency was proposed in conjunction with a federal administration which would deal directly with existing problems of the use and conservation of our land resources. Here the national agency would deal primarily with the economic and social aspects of the small farm problem rather than the technical. It was stated in the other brief that the primary function of the special authority would be development and rehabilitation, which intimates a combination of both functions of the two separate administrations proposed in the first brief.

Both briefs implied federal-provincial co-operation in a program, flexible in nature and adaptable to the needs of each province; access to financial resources; a centre for achieving co-ordinated federal-provincial action and gathering of information; facilities and staff to undertake research in the economic and social phases of the problem; and active participation with inter-departmental and advisory committees. In the case of Nova Scotia, the Minister of Agriculture and Marketing suggested that.... "A development program might be started in northern or eastern Nova Scotia on a restricted scale as a pilot program".

There was general commendation throughout the briefs of certain federal assistance programs which have been in operation for varying periods of time. Presentations from the Maritime Provinces mentioned specifically (1) the federal-provincial fertilizer and lime program (2) federal freight assistance on the railroad movement of feed grain (3) the assistance to boys' and girls' 4-H clubs (4) assistance for live stock improvement and promotion of good seed and horticultural development (5) survey, engineering and construction of the main protective works of dykes, aboiteaux and breakwaters under the Marshland Rehabilitation program, and (6) of more recent date, the organization and development of community pastures.

In Quebec, in addition to mention of the federal freight assistance on western feed grains and the excellent demonstration work of the Experimental Farms and Illustration Stations (now Research Branch), special reference was made to the provincial programs of the "Better Farming Competition" and the Drainage Service.

Reference was made to the fine work done in western Canada by the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration. This included all the phases of the program such as small and large water project developments, land utilization projects, particularly the removal of lands unsuitable for cultivation and their development as community pastures for live stock production, and the resettlement of farmers from drought areas. The financial assistance provided to western farmers under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act was cited as a means to assure a minimum income to meet pressing expenses in years of crop failure.

In summary, general agreement was evidenced by provincial bodies in these and other federal policies and measures which contribute directly or indirectly to better conservation and use of land and to improvement in farm income. Provincial bodies not only wish them to be maintained but to be enlarged and expanded to increase the efficiency of production and incomes of those wishing to remain on farms, and to aid in the transfer of the underemployed farm people to industry.

IV. RECOMMENDATIONS

The conditions which are common to small or low-income farms have been set out in this report from information presented to the committee by organizations and individuals with a wide knowledge of the problems. These conditions are many and varied.

Basic to the solution of the small farm problem is an inventory and assessment of the land resources of Canada. The economic and social problems which arise in the use of land are acute when the capacity of the farm unit is inadequate and is unable to adjust to new situations. Considerable progress has been made in the classification of soils for agricultural purposes and the inventory of forested areas in Canada. In these and other important work, the federal Government has participated with the provinces.

Four recommendations made by this committee during the last session dealt with land use problems. The Committee wishes to reaffirm its support of these recommendations in their original form as follows:

(1) That the soil survey being co-operatively carried out by the federal Department of Agriculture, the provincial Departments of Agriculture and the colleges of agriculture be speeded up and expanded not only in order to complete the soil mapping of the whole settled area of Canada, but also of the unsettled areas.

(2) That it be called to the attention of the proper authorities the need of a systematic land use survey based upon appropriate factors to provide for an economic classification of the land according to its use suitability.

(3) That the work of various agencies in the study and management of our water resources be expanded,—specifically that work relating to drainage and erosion problems, irrigation, levels of water-tables and present and likely future water requirements.

(4) That more emphasis be given studies which designate requirements respecting farm size, organization and practices according to the physical characteristics of the land and economic conditions which prevail.

In addition to the above, the following recommendations are presented for consideration:

(5) that a special body be instituted to assemble, co-ordinate and arrange for the dissemination to farmers of agricultural research done by the federal and provincial Departments of Agriculture, universities and agricultural colleges, and other research organizations.

(6) that an expanded extension service be inaugurated to deal with active farm planning, sound business principles and farm management for the alleviation of problems of the small uneconomic farm unit. These services are regarded as necessary conditions in the use of credit and the expansion of loans to farmers in the long, intermediate and short-term fields.

(7) that provision be made for an expanded program of vocational and technical training in rural areas.

(8) that governmental employment agencies improve and expand their services to facilitate employment of persons from low-income farm areas in off-farm jobs. Associated with this service we would urge the complete listing, categorizing, and reporting of the farm labor supply. A special counselling service should be instituted.

(9) that consideration be given to extension of resettlement assistance to any farmer on a small uneconomic farm wishing to move to another area of employment, after due consideration of the existing farm potential and employment situation.

(10) that this committee request the federal Department of Agriculture to send a delegation to the United States to study and report on the Rural Development Program.

(11) that this committee be reconstituted at the earliest possible date after the opening of the next Session of Parliament due to the great importance of proper land use in Canada.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

ARTHUR M. PEARSON,
Chairman.

APPENDIX

List of Witnesses Appearing Before the Special Committee of the Senate on Land Use in Canada

1959 SESSION

Printed Proceedings No. 1

CANADA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Dr. J. F. Booth, Director, Economics Division.

Printed Proceedings No. 2

CANADA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Dr. J. G. Taggart, Deputy Minister; Dr. J. F. Booth, Director, Economics Division; Dr. M. E. Andal, Chief, Production Economics Section, Economics Division.

Printed Proceedings No. 3

CANADIAN AGRICULTURAL ECONOMICS SOCIETY

Dr. M. E. Andal, President; Dr. W. E. Haviland, Vice-President. Professor P. A. Wright, Executive Member.

Printed Proceedings No. 4

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The Honourable Eugene Cullen, Minister.

Printed Proceedings No. 5

ONTARIO FOREST INDUSTRIES ASSOCIATION

Mr. Gordon Godwin, Director; Professor D. V. Love, Mr. J. B. Matthews, Mr. J. W. McNutt, Past-President; Mr. D. R. Rogers, Director; Mr. C. R. Mills, Manager; Mr. S. F. Rook, Vice-President.

Printed Proceedings No. 6

INTERPROVINCIAL FARM UNION COUNCIL

Mr. Ed. Nelson, Vice-President and President of the Farmer's Union of Alberta; Mr. James Patterson, Director of Public Relations.

SASKATCHEWAN DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The Honourable I. C. Nollet, Minister; Mr. W. H. Horner, Deputy Minister, Mr. Grant Mitchell, Research Economist.

Printed Proceedings No. 7

LA COOPÉRATIVE FÉDÉRÉE DE QUÉBEC

Mr. Adelard Bellmarc, President; Mr. Omer Deslauriers, Vice-President; Mr. Raynald Ferron, General Manager; Mr. Roger Perreault, Economist.

ALBERTA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The Honourable L. C. Halmrast, Minister.

Printed Proceedings No. 8

CANADIAN FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE

Dr. H. H. Hannam, President; Mr. J. M. Bentley, 1st Vice-President; Mr. Jean B. Lemoine, 2nd Vice-President; Mr. E. A. Boden, Director, Saskatchewan Wheat Pool; Mr. C. R. Belyea, Economist, Ontario Federation of Agriculture; Mr. Roy Grant, Secretary, Maritime Federation of Agriculture; Mr. J. M. Johnson, Director, C.F.A.; Mr. L. Laventure, Executive Member, Ontario Federation of Agriculture; Mr. J. Ferguson, Past President, Ontario Federation of Agriculture; Mr. Kirk, Secretary, C.F.A.

NOVA SCOTIA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND MARKETING

The Honourable E. D. Haliburton, Minister.

Printed Proceedings No. 9

BRITISH COLUMBIA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The Honourable M. P. Steacy, Minister.

NEW BRUNSWICK DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. R. D. Gilbert, Deputy Minister.

Printed Proceedings No. 10

MANITOBA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND CONSERVATION

The Honourable E. F. Willis, Minister; Mr. L. B. Kristjanson, Extension Economist; Mr. J. Parker, Director, Soils and Crops Branch.

Printed Proceedings No. 11

ONTARIO DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Dr. H. L. Patterson, Director, Farm Economics and Statistics Branch; Dr. N. R. Richards, Head, Department of Soils, Ontario Agricultural College.

THE SENATE

Friday, July 17, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Exchange of notes between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America governing the establishment of an integrated communications system to support Ballistic Missiles Early Warning System, signed at Ottawa, July 13, 1959. (French text).

Agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Japan for co-operation in the peaceful uses of Atomic Energy with a Protocol and agreed Minutes, signed at Ottawa, July 2, 1959. (French text).

Report of Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation for the year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 23 of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act, Chapter 42, R.S. 1952, together with the report of the Auditor General relating thereto, pursuant to section 22 of the said Act. (English text).

CONVENTION ON NATIONALITY OF MARRIED WOMEN

RESOLUTION OF APPROVAL

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, July 14, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament approve the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women, done at New York on February 20, 1957, and that this house do approve the same.

Hon. Cairine R. Wilson: Honourable senators, the few remarks I intend to make have been postponed so often that I have no doubt you will expect a speech from me that is a masterpiece. I am equally confident that you will be sorely disappointed.

Certainly in the past forty years we have seen many changes and improvements in the status of married women. In my native province women were once classed with inmates of mental institutions, minors and Indians, and not permitted to vote even in municipal affairs. I well remember my astonishment when ownership of a property in Montreal West registered in my name did not qualify me to vote; the voting papers used to be sent to my husband, a lifelong resident of Ontario. It was not very long after this incident that through the efforts of five courageous women of Alberta, women were declared by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council at Westminster to be persons, and, therefore, eligible for appointment to the Senate of Canada. It was thanks to these efforts and the support of the Right Honourable Ernest Lapointe, then Minister of Justice, that I was named a senator in 1930. During that year and the following year many women's organizations and individual women strongly urged that Canada should sign and ratify the Hague Convention.

On July 8, 1931 the Honourable W. B. Willoughby, then Government Leader in the Senate, moved the second reading of Bill 3, an Act to Amend the Naturalization Act. I will quote from the report at page 388 of the Senate Hansard of that date:

Hon. W. B. Willoughby: Honourable members, I have little or nothing to add to what I said to you when this bill was called before. The object of the bill is to bring our legislation into conformity with the Hague Convention, which, I believe, is going to be applied to all the British dominions. This measure, like most Naturalization Acts, has to do with the status of the wife and how she may acquire or how she may lose her rights, which became very insecure in this country by reason of the Cable Act, passed in the United States a few years ago. The provisions of the bill are very simple, and deal with the nationality of the wife in case of marriage to a foreigner.

Hon. Raoul Dandurand: Honourable members, I am really sorry that the honourable member for Rockcliffe (Hon. Senator Wilson) is not in her place to extend her congratulations to the Canadian Parliament and the Hague Conference upon having given women a more dignified status. Heretofore, in the matter of nationality, the wife has had to follow the whim of her lord and master, being obliged to accept his nationality. He might leave one country, go to another and ask for letters of naturalization there; then, after some years, he might come back and resume his original nationality. The nationality of the wife changed with that of her husband.

Hon. Mr. Willoughby: She is now a person.

Hon. Mr. Dandurand: Now she is a person and has full control of her own nationality. I am speaking not only on behalf of women, but on my own behalf as well. I have always felt that they should have the right to decide under what flag they would live and to what country they would bear allegiance.

The Honourable Senator Dandurand was always a supporter of women in this chamber and everywhere else. However, the women in the province of Quebec were in a very anomalous position, for since 1921 they could vote in a federal election but they were not permitted to vote in elections of the provincial legislature. But our late regretted colleague the Honourable Senator Godbout, immediately after his election as Premier of Quebec, fulfilled a promise that he had made to the women of his province and brought in a measure granting them the right to vote.

Prior to the passing of the Canadian Citizenship Act, of which the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) has spoken in such glowing terms, in many cases Canadian women married to aliens, even to citizens of the United States, found themselves without a country. I think we in Canada felt that the Canadian Citizenship Act was long overdue. I know that even the late Chief Justice Anglin, on returning from trips abroad, insisted upon signing himself "Canadian" on the forms demanded for re-entry into Canada. However, I feel this protest was not recognized by our citizenship authorities.

I had the honour to be named a delegate from Canada to the Fourth General Assembly of the United Nations in 1949, and there I met Mrs. Begtrup who then represented her country, Denmark, in Iceland, and who was the first chairman of the Status of Women Committee. Mrs. Begtrup told us of one or two rather amusing instances in which women had not quite their full rights. At a banquet a woman who had worked very hard for a certain cause found herself seated at one of the side tables, while the wives of the male representatives were at the head table. One of the women said "I know I should not be here, but after all I deserve some privileges on account of being married to Sir George." In her own case Mrs. Begtrup mentioned that her husband who had occupied a much more important diplomatic post than she, was always put at a lower table in Iceland.

Canadian women's organizations have repeatedly petitioned that Canada appoint a representative to the Status of Women Committee. But this was not brought about until 1957. The present resolution with respect to the nationality of married women was signed by Mrs. Ann Shipley in 1957. I am surprised that so fine a document should have encountered so much difficulty and delay in ratification. I am delighted to lend any support I may have to the ratification of this resolution.

(Translation):

Hon. Mariana B. Jodoin: Honourable senators, I agree with the statement of the honourable senator from Rockcliffe (Hon. Mrs. Wilson) concerning woman's right to preserve her own nationality upon marriage. This being the first time I have had the opportunity of addressing this house during this session, allow me to congratulate both the mover and the seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, and to pay my tribute to our Speaker, and to our two leaders. Furthermore, I should like to welcome the new colleagues we have had the honour of receiving among us during this session. We all know that those new senators have, like ourselves, no particular axe to grind, and will be concerned solely with the interests of all Canadians.

In 1947 the United Nations, after considering the problem of the nationality of married women, recommended that they be allowed to preserve their own nationality, and that children born of such marriages should be free, on reaching majority, to elect the nationality of their mother, thus establishing their legal status.

The Secretary General of the United Nations has supplied detailed information, based on data obtained from countries that have prepared statistics on the subject. On February 20, 1957, the resolutions introduced on January 29, 1957 by the General Assembly of the United Nations were submitted for ratification by the member states of that organization. On June 1, 1957 fifteen states, including Canada, had signed them. Mr. Robert Mackay, permanent representative of Canada, and Mrs. Ann Shipley, ex-member of Parliament, both signed the document on behalf of Canada.

We are pleased to note that Canada has signed this agreement, since in some countries some privileges are granted to men which are not granted to women. Each step made by women toward equality of legal status with men leads to better understanding between both sexes.

The spirit of this convention is generous, since, under its terms, a married woman may acquire the nationality of her husband, for particular reasons or in special circumstances.

In debates on the matter it was noted that, in many countries, the right to a specific nationality constitutes one of the most serious problems in relation to the legal status of married women. In some countries a woman who marries an alien is automatically deprived of her nationality, and an alien woman who marries a national of one of those countries acquires the nationality of her husband.

The convention also applies if the husband changes his nationality in the course of his married life.

In most signatory countries that general principles applies, subject to certain exceptions and reservations, such as the right of option granted to the woman in some circumstances. It will be noted that any legislation concerning nationality has a tendency to emphasize the national status of woman.

That is why I thoroughly approve the motion.

The question of married women's nationality prompts me to deal with the provisions of the Civil Code of the province of Quebec in respect of women's rights.

It is with some apprehension that I venture upon this ground because I know that, just at this time, eminent jurists are studying the deficiencies of that Civil Code which, from certain points of view, is obsolete and does not meet the requirements of modern life.

As far back as 1907 the National Women's Federation of St. John the Baptist drew the attention of our lawmakers to the deficiencies of the Quebec Civil Code.

In 1914 the Federation asked Sir Lomer Gouin, Prime Minister of the province of Quebec, who was the distinguished father of the Honourable Senator L. M. Gouin, to appoint a government commission to revise our Civil Code, and the organization reiterated this request to the Honourable Alexandre Taschereau, who asked that a definite program be set up. The Honourable J. H. Dillon, member for Montreal-Ste-Anne, introduced a bill to this effect in the Legislature.

On second reading in the Quebec Legislature the bill was referred to the committee on public bills, where it was explained by Mrs. Marie Gérin-Lajoie, President of the National St. John the Baptist Federation. The arguments brought forward were such that the Honourable Alexandre Taschereau suggested the creation of a government commission to which a bill to that effect would be submitted the following year. This opened the door to real progress. The ladies had the Married Women's Salary Act passed, and women were admitted as trustees and members of family councils.

In 1954 Mrs. N. M. Holmes, B.A., B.C.L., and Mrs. J. C. Gilchrist, B.A., B.C.L., published a book dedicated to married women in the province of Quebec, in which women were offered a solution which would clarify their legal status and discussing the advisability of bringing up to date legislation concerning women.

According to the Quebec law, a woman married under the system of community property may neither sign a lease, nor buy any property in her own name, nor sell such property, nor buy an insurance policy in favour of her husband without the latter's signature. She has no power to authorize her child's admission to a hospital. The problem becomes even more serious when the husband is away, and when a matter of life and death is involved. A woman should be entitled in such cases to take the emergency steps required. Restrictions imposed by the Civil Code could often affect the happiness of a married couple, especially when the woman has more initiative and is more practical-minded than her husband.

My husband often told me that it is a very delicate and sometimes even dangerous thing to tamper with a section of the Civil Code, which is the basis of our laws. But that Code is based on old French law, which was excellent in its time but is obsolete in our day. This law did not discriminate against women solely on account of their sex, because unmarried women and widows enjoy every right granted to men. Only married women do not enjoy such rights. In the province of Quebec anyone may sign a contract, except minors, judicially disabled persons, the feeble-minded, the mentally ill, and married women.

Does that mean that marriage deprives us of our skills and qualities? Yet women have long proved that they can rise to the great aspirations developed by modern times. They have proved that, without neglecting their everyday family tasks, they can get even closer to a man's heart if they take a more active part in the administration of their common affairs.

They have also proved that in all professional, scientific, political and administrative fields, they can hold their own. There is a world association of women executives with a membership of 5,000,000. We have a branch of this organization in Montreal, which was founded by Mrs. Flore Jutras, an insurance broker, who has met with outstanding success in her profession. There are now 1,346,000 women workers in Canada, and this includes 43,370 executives. Such figures speak for themselves. Those women from every province, who have been successful in every sphere of human activity (and let us not overlook some outstandingly successful women in the province of Quebec, such as Mrs. Jutras) deserve to be helped in their efforts to bring about some needed amendments to the Civil Code.

A woman can often go to court if she finds that her interests are being encroached upon, but this is always a source of difficulties. A marriage contract may involve all kinds of stipulations, and it is the separate maintenance contract that works to the best advantage of a married woman, because under such a contract she can manage her property, though she may neither sell nor remove nor accept such property without her husband's authorization.

However, there has been some progress, because in 1931 an amendment was made to the Civil Code by the Quebec Legislature giving women absolute control over savings they have earned by their own work, and over property acquired from such savings.

In closing, I will quote the following resolutions adopted by the United Nations and which could inspire the legislators when they revise the Civil Code of the province of Quebec:

To ensure equality of rights and duties for husband and wife in family affairs;

To ensure to married women full civil capacity, the right to work outside the home, the right to acquire, to administer, to alienate property and to possess them with the husband on an equal basis; (July 23, 1953)

To guarantee married women the right to choose an independent profession, to exercise it and to manage the revenue of her labour and to dispose of it without having to obtain her husband's approval. (July 12, 1954)

Our lawmakers must take into account the requirements of modern life, in order to ensure the adoption of laws that are practical and in accordance with present conditions.

I know that our lawmakers will use all their wisdom improving the lot of married women, and that, by doing so, they will contribute to the welfare of their own country. I count absolutely on honourable senators to encourage us.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Vive la femme!

(Text):

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, the convention that is before us for ratification today has been well explained by the mover of the motion, the honourable gentleman from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn), and it has now received able support from the honourable senator from Rockcliffe (Hon. Mrs. Wilson) and the honourable senator from Sorel (Hon. Mrs. Jodoin).

As the mover stated, this convention is the product of years of study, research and much hard work by the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, by the International Law Commission of the United Nations, and particularly by the Commission on the Status of Women, which is a subsidiary of the Economic and Social Council.

The convention has been explained so well by the honourable senator from Saskatoon that it is not necessary for me to go into the particulars of it. However, I would like to tell you about the Commission on the Status of Women. The function of the Commission on the Status of Women is to prepare for the Economic and Social Council, which is perhaps more familiarly or generally known as ECSOC, reports and recommendations on the position of women throughout the world in the political, economic, social and educational fields. Since the Commission on the Status of Women held its first session, in 1947, among its work it has given very high priority to the problem of the nationality of married women and to finding some way of recognizing and safeguarding the rights of women so that no unmarried woman should be in danger of becoming stateless through entering into marriage and no married woman would be in danger of becoming stateless through dissolution of her marriage or because her husband had changed his nationality while the marriage was in existence.

This commission is made up of 18 members, who according to established custom are women. These women are very knowledgeable about the status of women throughout the world and are well aware of the conflicts of laws regarding the nationality of married women, laws which have been and in some countries still are causing hardship to many women. The members of this commission include some of the world's outstanding authorities on the status of women. Ranking very high among them is Mrs. Agda Rossel of Sweden, who was appointed permanent delegate to the United Nations from her own country and was the first woman ever to be made a permanent delegate to the United Nations. She is also Sweden's representative on the Status of Women Commission. Mrs. Rossel had been a member of the commission for some time before she became chairman, and she was chairman of the commission in 1957 when the convention came before the General Assembly for approval. Honourable senators, I mention Mrs. Rossel because, as you will recall, she visited Canada in 1956 as Acting President of the International Congress of Business and Professional Women's Clubs which was meeting in Montreal at that time. Many honourable senators will, I am sure, remember that one afternoon in July 1956 when we came back from a weekend recess we found that these 1,200 women who were meeting in Montreal had come by special train to Ottawa to see Canada's capital, of which they had heard a great deal. I know that some of you met them on that occasion. These 1,200 delegates came from twenty different countries. They were entertained by the missions from their own countries, and were also given other entertainment. They toured the city and were highly impressed with our beautiful Parliament buildings. I mention this because the Acting President of the group was also the Chairman of the Status of Women Commission when this convention was approved. I would like to read what Mrs. Rossel, as Sweden's permanent delegate, said in the General Assembly when the matter came up for consideration:

Today, with the presentation to the General Assembly of a convention on the nationality of married women—a convention designed to eliminate one of the great sources of discrimination against women—we see the culmination of many years of work by the Commission on the Status of Women.

She also said:

This convention provides that the woman shall not, upon marriage to a person of a different nationality, automatically lose her own nationality, whether she wishes to or not. This automatic loss of nationality has given rise in the past to many injustices. For the woman who wishes to take her husband's nationality, special privileged procedures are provided in the convention, but this choice will be exercised by the woman because it is her expressed wish, and not because the law has arbitrarily deprived her of her own nationality.

Another outstanding member of the Commission on the Status of Women is Madam Marie Helene Lefaucheux, of France. She is now President of the International Council of Women, which has affiliated with it National Councils of Women in 30 countries, including Canada. This group also came to Montreal to hold a congress in 1957, at which time Madam Lefaucheux was elected President. The National Council, as you may know, in many countries is often referred to as the Parliament of Women. In 1957, when the International Council of Women met in Montreal, our Parliament was not in session, but, following the example of the Congress of Business and Professional Women, they too came to Ottawa and visited the Parliament Buildings. I have mentioned two outstanding women of the 18 members of the commission because they had some connection with Canada, but there are others who are equally distinguished in their own countries. These two women I have referred to, however, have attained international recognition. One group which they lead is composed of representatives from 20 countries, and the other of representatives from 30 countries.

Honourable senators, after Canada had expressed, through our then Secretary of State for External Affairs, its willingness to act on the Commission on the Status of Women, Canada was elected a member of the commission, in May 1957. At the first meeting following Canada's election, which was held in Geneva, Switzerland, in March 1958, Canada was represented by Mrs. Harry Quart, O.B.E., of Quebec City, who again represented Canada at the 1959 meeting of the commission in New York, in March this year.

To go back to the history of the convention, I may say that in 1947 at the request of the Economic and Social Council of the U.N., the Secretary General of the United Nations sent a questionnaire to all member nations regarding legal systems and conflicts of law in the field of the nationality of married women, and according to an analysis which was based on replies to this questionnaire and some supplementary research it appears that regarding the nationality of married women three main systems prevail in the world today.

First, the nationality of the wife follows automatically the nationality of the husband, with no exceptions. This was the law in Canada until 1932, and it often caused hardships. There were many Canadian women who while living in Canada married aliens, lost their British nationality arbitrarily and became aliens, even though they never set foot outside Canada. There were some cases where, on marrying an alien, they did not assume the nationality of their husband but they did lose the nationality which they had before marriage and therefore they became stateless.

Under the second system the nationality of the wife follows automatically the nationality of the husband, subject to the requirements of the law of the other country concerned, in order to avoid statelessness and double nationality. There is a proviso that if the wife does not acquire the nationality of her husband she does not become entirely stateless. From 1931 to 1947 this was the system in force in Canada.

Under the third system the nationality of the wife is entirely independent of that of her husband. Now this, as honourable senators will recognize, is the only system which recognizes that women have equal rights to nationality with men, as is stated in the preamble to both the charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Article 15 of the Universal Declaration, which is quoted in the convention, states that everyone has a right to a nationality and that no one shall be deprived arbitrarily of his nationality or denied the right to change his nationality. It is this third system on which Canada's present Citizenship Act is based and which forms the basis of the Convention of the Nationality of Married Women, which we are considering.

Honourable senators, in view of our Canadian Citizenship Act, which came into force in 1947, Canada had no difficulty whatever in supporting this convention. Drafts of a convention came before the United Nations several times; these were sent out to member countries and some changes were made. All this took a lot of time, until finally, in 1957, the convention in its present form came before the General Assembly. Immediately prior to that it had been considered by the Third Committee of the United Nations, on which Mrs. Ann Shipley, a Canadian woman Member of Parliament who was referred to by the honourable senator from Rockcliffe (Hon. Mrs. Wilson), was Canada's representative. In this Third Committee Mrs. Shipley said that Canada would not have to make any reservations, as may be done under article 8 of the convention if a country cannot accept everything in the convention wholeheartedly. She pointed out that Canada's domestic legislation was already fully in accordance with the principles of the convention. On January 29, 1957 the convention was adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations and was opened for signature on February 20, 1957, and on that very day Mrs. Shipley signed on behalf of Canada.

It has been the subject of much concern to Canadian women that, although Canada signed this convention as soon as it was opened, our Government has taken so long to bring it before Parliament for ratification. We looked for ratification in the 23rd Parliament, which opened in October, 1957 and was prorogued in February, 1958; and again we looked hopefully for ratification in the 24th Parliament, which opened in May, 1958 and was prorogued in September, 1958. The convention was introduced into the Senate on March 16 this year and into the House of Commons on about the same date. It seems inexplicable to many of us that there has been so much delay in considering it. In fact, we had serious doubts if it would receive consideration before prorogation of the present session. That is why I asked at yesterday's sitting that it should be given priority today.

Some of us wondered if, as in the appointment of the delegation to the Commonwealth Conference on Education, which is being held in Oxford, England, this week and next, women's interests had been overlooked entirely. Honourable senators will no doubt have noticed in the press that a delegation of 19 Canadians went to England to attend this conference, but it was only when the Canadian Federation of University Women brought to the attention of the Prime Minister that there were no women on this delegation that any action was taken to provide a woman delegate. This omission came to the attention of the Canadian Federation of University Women through an article in the London Times of June 29, stating that there were four women in the delegation from Britain. The Times also had an editorial congratulating Britain upon having women on its delegation to the conference, because this is a subject in which women are particularly interested. I believe that newspaper also said it was astonishing that there were no women on the overseas delegations. Honourable senators may be interested to know that when the Prime Minister learned of this omission he had his office advise the Canadian Federation of University Women that if they could find three women suitable, willing and able to attend the conference, one would be appointed. This was on Monday last, July 13. A number of long distance telephone calls were made—and I can assure you it is difficult even in such a big country as Canada to find three women who would be suitable as representatives and who could leave for England at a moment's notice—but finally three qualified women were found. Their names were reported to the Prime Minister on Wednesday, and one of them has been appointed to attend this conference. The appointment is a very excellent one. Honourable senators may be interested to know that Canada's woman delegate is Mrs. Mary Quayle Innis, Dean of Women at Toronto University, the widow of a distinguished political scientist, Professor Harold Innis. Mrs. Innis was vacationing on the west coast, but she immediately flew back and has gone to the conference.

I am very happy that there is a woman on that delegation, and I congratulate the Prime Minister on the action he took. I think it is well that a woman has been appointed even though the appointment is late. It is better that an appointment be made late than never. Maybe that is the principle that was adopted in connection with the convention we are studying, that ratification is better late than never. I know that most women feel we deserve better consideration than this.

It is provided in article 6 of the convention that the convention shall come into force 90 days after the deposit of the sixth instrument of ratification or accession. Canadian women were hopeful that, if Canada had not already ratified the convention, it might be the sixth country to do so, and thus have the honour of bringing it into force. But we did not have that honour, as Sweden was the sixth country to accede, and she deposited her instrument of ratification on May 13, 1958. The latest report I have is dated March 27, 1959, and it must be a little later than the information of the honourable senator from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn), because my report says that 25, rather than 22, members have signed the convention, and 14 have ratified or acceded to it.

Honourable senators, although Canadian women now enjoy the rights guaranteed by the convention, we women who have attended some of the international women's meetings realize that many women of other countries look to Canada, and to the women of Canada, for leadership regarding laws that guarantee equality and freedom. If we are going to continue to give that leadership we must give our wholehearted support to such international agreements as this, which state a principle and establish a standard for other countries to follow.

Another reason why I think we should have ratified this convention earlier, and why Canadian women feel there is a special urgency about it, is that following a recommendation made by the commission on the Status of Women to ECOSOC, and by ECOSOC to the Secretary-General, the Secretary-General has arranged for publication of a pamphlet, and subsequently a book, on the history of the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women. This pamphlet is, I believe, in the course of publication; indeed, it may already have gone too far to include Canada as a ratifying country. But we Canadian women feel that if the book and pamphlet are published without the inclusion of Canada as one of the ratifying countries, we will be—and I don't think I put it too strongly—ashamed and embarrassed.

Honourable senators, the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) asked the Government for information about whether or not women's associations in Canada had asked the Government for an amendment to the laws to permit married woman to have a citizenship distinct from that of their husbands. As you know, the honourable senator received a reply in the negative, with an explanation that women already have had such independent citizenship since 1947. I assure honourable senators that Canadian women's organizations, especially on the national level, are too well informed about Canadian laws that affect women to have asked the Government for something we already have. However, had the honourable senator asked the Government if it had received such requests before the passage of the Canadian Citizenship Act in 1947, I know he would have received a different answer. Also, had he asked if women's organizations had requested the Government to ratify the convention now before us, he certainly would have received a different answer, for I myself know of at least three national women's organizations that have made such a request, and I think it very possible there have been others.

As the honourable senator from De la Durantaye was apparently seeking evidence of Canadian women's interest in this legislation, he and others may be interested to know that prior to May, 1957, when Canada became a member of the commission on the Status of Women, many representations were made to the then Secretary of State for External Affairs asking that Canada have representation on this commission which was giving priority to the study of legislation regarding the nationality of married women. I know this from my own personal experience, for on several occasions I was among those groups representing national women's organizations that made such representations to the Honourable Mr. Pearson, then Secretary of State for External Affairs, which representations I believe convinced him of the deep concern of Canadian women about this problem and similar problems involving women's rights, and I believe also persuaded him to take the steps which resulted in Canada's being represented on the commission, as she is today.

However, in case we Canadians pride ourselves too much on the fact that, even before this subject came up for study by the United Nations in 1947, Canada had already passed legislation in accordance with the terms of the convention which was the outcome of the study, I would like to point out that Canada's naturalization laws had not for long recognized the right of a married woman to retain her own citizenship. Immediately prior to the coming into force of the Canadian Citizenship Act in 1947, under the law in force at that time naturalization certificates could not be granted to persons under a disability, and persons under a "disability", according to the definition in the act included married women along with minors, lunatics and idiots.

Up to 1931 Canadian law provided that the wife of a British subject—and it was only as a British subject that anyone could be naturalized in Canada, prior to the passing of the Canadian Citizenship Act of 1947—was a British subject, and the wife of an alien was an alien, and there were no exceptions.

This was harsh treatment as far as Canadian women were concerned, especially for those born in Canada. If such a woman married an alien in Canada she immediately became a subject of an alien country and lost her rights as a British subject, even though she might never have stepped foot out of Canada all her life. The hardship was greatly increased when, in 1922, the United States passed what is known as the Cable Act, which provided that a woman who married an American citizen did not become an American citizen herself. The result of these two laws, the Canadian law and the American law, was that a Canadian woman who married an American citizen—and hundreds of them were doing so at that time—lost her British nationality and did not acquire an American nationality, and actually became stateless.

There were similar troubles between some other countries regarding this matter, which led to a meeting in 1930 at The Hague where, after consultation a number of countries, including Canada, signed The Hague Convention. Following this, it was neccessary that Canada's naturalization laws be changed, and they were changed to provide as follows:

(1) That a woman on marrying an alien shall not lose her nationality unless at the same time she acquires the nationality of her husband.

(2) That if her husband changes his nationality during marriage she shall not lose her nationality, unless as a consequence of her husband's change of nationality she also acquires his new nationality; and

(3) Naturalization of the husband during marriage shall not affect the nationality of the wife except with her consent.

To bring Canada's laws in accord with the terms of this convention, which we had signed, an act amending the Naturalization Act was passed by Parliament in 1931. At the present time we do not have to change our law to come within the convention now before us. An act to bring us in accord with the Hague Convention was passed in 1931, and the general principle that the wife of a British subject was a British subject, and the wife of an alien was an alien still held, except in these cases which would result in hardship, or, as in many cases, statelessness.

The amendments to this act of 1931 prevented a woman from becoming stateless on marriage—that is, they prevented her from losing her British nationality without acquiring another one—and also prevented her from losing her British nationality in cases where her husband, after marriage, became a citizen of another country and his naturalization did not give her his new nationality. However, in such cases the wife was required within a short period of time to make a declaration that she wished to maintain her British nationality.

This amending act also required that if the wife of an alien who became naturalized wished to become a British subject she must make a declaration stating that such was her wish, otherwise she remained an alien even though her husband had acquired British nationality.

There were many husbands who were naturalized and who, either ignorantly or wilfully, did not advise their wives that they must take some action in this matter. Thus often the wife unnecessarily either lost her British nationality on her husband's becoming an alien, or did not acquire British nationality when he did because she had not made the required declaration that she wished to be naturalized.

In 1946 the Honourable Paul Martin, then Secretary of State, introduced in the House of Commons the Canadian Citizenship Act, which came into force on January 1, 1947, and which puts married women in the same position as any other person in regard to citizenship. Under this act a Canadian-born woman, unless she renounces her rights, retains her citizenship all her life even though she may acquire on marriage the nationality of her husband, and thus she may hold dual nationality. I hope that similar progress may some day be made along the lines of other matrimonial relations, particularly in regard to the domicile of married women. That is another very vexed question which causes difficulty and hardship to many married women. It has been studied by the Commission on the Status of Women. That is a matter I will not go into now, but I expect you will be hearing about it from me at some time in the future.

Under the Canadian Citizenship Act which became effective in 1947 Canadian women are no longer under the disability of being placed in the same class as minors, lunatics and idiots. This is very enlightened legislation. As we were told by the honourable senator from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn), Canada is the first country in the British Commonwealth to follow the United Nations' Charter and Declaration of Human Rights in putting women on the same footing as men with respect to citizenship.

However, there are one or two things I would like to bring to your attention in regard to the Canadian Citizenship Act of 1947. Its provisions are not retroactive, and there are many Canadian women who had lost their citizenship before the act was passed and who would not have done so had they married subsequently to 1947. There were special cases of hardship which aroused very much sympathy in 1948 and 1949, some of which received much publicity. There were the cases of 30 Canadian girls who had married Norwegian airmen in 1947 during their husbands' training in Canada. They discovered that under the law which was in existence prior to 1947—they had married before that year—they had become aliens, and that if they wished to return to Canada they must do so as immigrants. Even to come home to Canada for a visit they must make an application for a visitor's permit, as any other alien is required to do. There were many other unfortunate cases which caused difficulty and hardship, but I think the cases of these 30 Norwegian marriages received the most sympathy.

It was following publicity regarding this and the interest aroused that an amendment was made to the act in 1949 providing that the minister in his discretion—or in her discretion, for we have a woman Minister of Citizenship and Immigration at the present time—may grant a certificate of citizenship to a woman who by virtue of any law in effect before 1947 ceased to be a British subject through her marriage.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: When was that passed?

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: In 1949.

It is in the discretion of the Minister to grant a certificate of citizenship to a woman in this position. One of the great difficulties is that there are at present many women in Canada who do not realize that because of their marriage before 1947 they lost their British nationality and they are not now Canadian citizens. Often they do not know it until they apply for a passport, or have some other reason for making use of their citizenship. There are others who realize they lost their Canadian citizenship and British nationality, but who do not know that the minister can grant them a certificate. Not too many people are aware of the provisions in our laws, unless they are lawyers or have received legal advice. They do not know that by application they can receive from the minister a certificate, should he or she decide to give it, which would restore to them their rights as citizens.

Honourable senators, I am certainly not prepared to introduce—of course, I could not do so now—an amendment to the Canadian Citizenship Act, but I think the amendment of 1949, which is now section 10, subsection 3 of the act, should be enlarged and should do away with the minister's discretion in these cases, and should make these women who lost their citizenship through marriage prior to 1947 Canadian citizens without their having to apply to the minister for such a certificate. If that is not possible—and I have not discussed this with anyone who is able to give me advice about it—then I think wide publicity should be given to the necessity for such women to apply for a certificate which will make them true Canadians in law as well as in allegiance. I am sure there are many who are unaware of that provision in the act.

Honourable senators, I come back to the convention. This is a human rights document, the ratification of which by Canada not only demonstrates to the world Canada's stand on such questions but also, I believe, provides greater protection for the nationality rights of Canadian women than any statutory enactments such as a bill of rights or, even, the Canadian Citizenship Act can do. Any law passed by Parliament can be repealed by Parliament, but after Canada has once become a party to a solemn international agreement such as this, it is inconceivable, in view of the leadership which Canada has given in the international field, that any Canadian Government could withdraw from it.

This convention represents commendable progress in one of the most important spheres of international law, the recognition of the status of women, and I feel sure it will receive the unanimous support of this house.

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators, the recognition of the family as a social institution cleared the way for social control. Throughout the Western world secular legislation, or let us say the same type of legislation, has been extended to practically the whole sphere of domestic relations. It was a many-sided movement for spiritual liberation through which the mother and child were being recognized as equal personalities in the family circle and in society. It was a process of individualization, or specifying for the sake of socialization, by which the corporate unity of the patriarchal family was destroyed, or at least dissolved.

In fact the rise of democracy in the household is one of the major results of the general levelling process which is releasing the individual from class, sex, or group control, and constituting him or her as a free and distinct unit of the sovereign authority.

The family bond is no longer coercion, but persuasion. It is the releasing of the wife from the husband's hand and making her an equal member in the marriage partnership; and in the field of larger society it is accomplishing her political, economic and intellectual independence.

Old beliefs and prejudices die hard. But property disqualifications have been entirely removed from women, and the right of guardianship has become theirs. Women, as normal intelligent people, have the right to retain the nationality of the country of their birth.

Who would place a limit on the influences which may be exerted in a commonwealth by these thousands of earnest, intelligent women, when they are fully awake to their duties and responsibilities to their country as citizens, still without losing their own nationality?

Honourable senators, in 1929 when the Privy Council of Great Britain gave to Canadian women the legal status of persons with the right to sit in the Senate of Canada—and here we may pay tribute to the honourable senator from Rockcliffe (Hon. Mrs. Wilson) —other rights and privileges were not defined in detail.

The legal status of married women in regard to nationality has been the concern of many people in many countries, and this was especially so during and at the close of World War II. From 1940 to the present time there has been much mixing of nationalities in marriage, followed in many cases by discontent and confusion with regard to the nationality of the contracting parties.

In the past the status of married women has been most seriously affected in a great number of countries, with respect to their right to nationality, their right to choose or maintain a domicile or residence, and their rights and duties with regard to their children. This has considerably restricted their property rights and civil capacity.

To remedy this situation, as honourable senators know, a Commission on the Status of Women was set up in June 1946 by the United Nations for promoting universal respect for, and observance of, freedom and equality in all spheres of economic, national, cultural, social and political life. This commission felt the most important task was to awaken women to their civic and political responsibilities, to encourage them to participate in electoral processes, and to remove the prejudices against their participation in public life. The commission recommended as one of its aims that married women keep their nationality and that it be the right of their children upon attaining their majority to choose the nationality of the mother.

As honourable senators know, up to a few decades ago the nationality of women all over the world followed that of their husbands. Then a few nations began to grant autonomy, but as the movement was not universal it resulted in women becoming stateless upon marriage, where they still lost their own nationality and failed to gain that of their husband. Let me give an example of just such a case, one that I am personally aware of.

The young lady I speak of was born and brought up in Prince Edward Island, of Prince Edward Island parents, and was, for all purposes, a Canadian citizen. During the war she married. Her husband had been an officer serving with a foreign air force and had escaped to Britain, where he fought in the Battle of Britain. Subsequently he came to Canada as a flying instructor. According to the then regulations she immediately became a citizen of a foreign country, but by reason of the fact that her husband was serving with the Canadian forces, he having transferred to the Royal Canadian Air Force, he automatically became a Canadian citizen. Thus we had the anomalous or abnormal situation of a Canadian-born wife being regarded as a foreigner, while her foreign-born husband was regarded as a Canadian citizen.

When her husband was demobilized after the war, she often expressed amusement at being considered a foreigner, notwithstanding the fact she had never been off Prince Edward Island.

In order to become a Canadian citizen she later had to go through the usual procedure of filing an application for Canadian citizenship, waiting a period of five years while residing in Canada, and finally appearing before a judge of the county court to take her oath of allegiance to the Crown, and to receive her Canadian citizenship.

Thus she was born a Canadian, became a citizen of a foreign country by marriage and finally had to apply to again become a Canadian citizen, although she had never been out of Canada in her life. I could give examples of other cases involving Canadian-born women who found themselves in a similar position.

To eliminate this type of thing it is necessary to have an international regulation or code of law which would be universal. This was the prime purpose of the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women. Canada was one of the states which sought the drafting of the convention and showed an active interest in the discussions concerning it at the United Nations. Women's organizations throughout Canada have repeatedly encouraged and sought ratification of the convention, and I, personally, fully and heartily support it. This convention, adopted by the General Assembly in 1957 and signed by 15 countries, eliminates the automatic acquisition by a woman of the nationality of her husband. This applies also to any change in the nationality status of the husband during marriage, as happened in the case I cited previously.

The convention provides also for privileged naturalization procedures for the wife who wishes to acquire her husband's nationality, and preserves her right to that nationality in countries where the law grants it to her at her request.

The convention is consistent with the Canadian Citizenship Act of 1946 by which women in Canada were given full independence or autonomy of status. Canada has always been an active promoter of the convention since it was first brought up at the United Nations, and signed it on its completion. Mrs. Ann Shipley, as has been stated, signed for Canada on February 20, 1957, and now we wish to ratify the Convention.

The honourable senator from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn), who introduced this motion in the Senate, and the honourable senators from Rockcliffe (Hon. Mrs. Wilson), Sorel (Hon. Mrs. Jodoin) and Fredericton (Hon. Mrs. Fergusson) have each given a very detailed and explanatory resumé of this Convention on the Nationality of Married Women. I know that honourable senators are fully acquainted with the articles of the convention, and I wish at this time to register my full support and to say that it was a great day for the women of Canada when this convention was signed by Mrs. Ann Shipley.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I think I am safe in saying that we are all delighted with the manner in which our lady senators have dealt with this subject. I compliment them most sincerely on their fluency of expression and their obviously complete knowledge of the subject which they have been so ably discussing. I feel sure, as I am confident that all other senators do, that the status of the nationality of married women will always be safe in their hands.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I join with the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) in complimenting the four women members of this house who have given us such excellent addresses today. If any of us had any doubt about it previously, I am sure we are all now convinced that it was a very fortunate occasion for all Canadians when in 1929 the highest court of the commonwealth declared that women were persons within the meaning of that term as used in the British North America Act and therefore entitled to become members of this chamber.

One of the women senators referred to the fact that this resolution has been on our Order Paper since March 16 last. They have waited four months to deliver these addresses.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think their speeches have been all the better for that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am sure their addresses have improved with time. In any event, the honourable ladies have been very patient in waiting for this order to be called. I understand the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) did not call this order earlier—as I know he would have wished to do—because a request came to him from the other house that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, who is a woman, should be allowed to introduce the motion in the other place before it was introduced here. Why that was done, I do not know. It may have been thought that the other house is more important than this house. I notice that the wheat agreement, for some reason or other, was introduced in this house first. I thought it was introduced here because it was felt that our house was more important than the other house. Now, whether the Government of the day thought that wheat was more important than women, or that women were more important than wheat, I do not know. In any event, we are all happy that after today these conventions will have been approved by Parliament.

I am glad that the four women senators who are present here today have spoken on this resolution. Unfortunately, the honourable senator from Victoria (Hon. Mrs. Hodges) was not able to be present, on account of ill health. She had prepared an address on this subject, and I know she would have joined with the four women who have spoken today in expressing her approval of this convention.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will write her a letter of sympathy.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Thank you. The convention was introduced by the honourable senator from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn). He is the only one who spoke on it who is not a woman. May I add that he also is a person. I am sure that all the male members of the Senate join with the women members in expressing very deep and sincere approval of this measure.

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, may I be allowed, as a man, to speak on this subject? I shall not be very long, but I wish to raise just two questions. I shall do this not with a desire to oppose the views of the eminent ladies who have spoken, but rather with a view to trying to understand the situation. Let me say that I too greatly appreciate the clear and well-expressed opinions to which we have listened this afternoon. These eminent women senators possess full knowledge of the matter under debate. They have given special study to it. When I first came to this chamber I formed a high opinion of the ladies sitting here as senators, and since then my admiration for their ability and the proper execution of their role in this chamber has steadily increased. Until today I had felt they could not conduct themselves more admirably than they had in the past, but I have been more than ever impressed by the manner in which they dealt with this difficult subject, in well-guarded yet good, legal language.

The points I have in mind to raise will be very brief. First I will address myself to the speech made by the honourable senator from Sorel (Hon. Mrs. Jodoin). I regret that she has since left the chamber. I am not going to criticize her in absence. I appreciate very much what she said about parts of our Quebec law which are, as she put it, in desuetude and so on, but which, to my mind, are not all in desuetude. Of course, progress is necessary and in Quebec we all feel, as other parts of the country do, that some improvement could be made in the laws with relation to women. In fact, the Senate itself has been slow, as well as the provinces, in recognizing more and more fully the rights and the capacities of women, in not only economic and social life but in political life as well.

The honourable senator from Sorel said, inter alia, that the marriage conventions would be better arranged if married women were under the system of separation as to property. That is not totally consonant with my theory, although I may be wrong. Last session when we were in committee discussing the Estate Tax Bill I was made to realize the difficulties that arise in provinces other than Quebec in determining the part of the husband's estate that should pass free of succession duty to the surviving wife. At that time I explained to the committee that in Quebec, under the régime of the community of property, from the moment of marriage half of all property that is acquired after marriage by both consorts or by the husband alone belongs automatically and as a matter of right to the wife.

It is recognized that the wife is not in a position to attend to matters of business as is the husband. The wife has a function to accomplish from which she generally does not flinch. Her function is bringing children into this world, rearing them and looking to their education, while on the other hand the husband is condemned, if I may use that term, to provide for the household.

If a couple are married under the system of separation of property, as they may elect to do in the province of Quebec, any property that the husband accumulates during the marriage belongs solely to him. Under community of property, however, the wife is assured that while attending to her numerous duties in connection with her family the law does not forget her. She participates equally with her husband in the building up of the common heritage and automatically one-half of the property acquired during the marriage belongs to her, although she cannot dispose of it without permission of her husband. On the death of her husband this property does not pass to the heirs of the husband named by will or otherwise, but remains her property. She does not have to look to any legislation to claim exemption from succession duties; she has no such tax to pay on her share of the property.

Despite the brilliant, intellectual and clear exposé given by the honourable senator from Sorel, I feel it my duty not to let her statement pass unquestioned before this august assembly of senators representing the whole country. She contends that the system of separation of property is better than community of property, and that the latter should be gradually discarded throughout Canada. Well, I may be wrong, but the honourable senator's view is not my view. I am not yet convinced that a wife, who cannot participate in business affairs on the same level as her husband, because she exercises her function in the home, should be faced on the death of her husband with the prospect of obtaining nothing from her late husband's estate simply because they were married under the régime of separation of property, under which régime all property acquired by the husband during marriage is his property and in his name exclusively.

I beg to be excused for mentioning all this, because it is a little outside the scope of the debate, but the point was raised and I thought it was in the common interest to give my point of view and to raise this issue. If I am wrong, at least it will have been discussed.

As to the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women, I may say that I have not yet studied the whole convention. I understand it provides for maintenance of the right of the wife to her own nationality after marriage—that is, if she is of a nationality different from that of her husband she is entitled to preserve her own nationality. Of course, there is no obligation on her part to adopt the nationality of her husband. Now, what troubles me is a possible consequence that to my mind is serious. In referring to this I beg the indulgence of honourable members, and especially of the honourable ladies, for I am far from opposing what they advocated so ably in their speeches this afternoon. Suppose one member of a married couple in Canada is of a certain nationality and the other is of a different nationality, and war breaks out between the two nations to which each of these people belong separately. You will then have under the same roof, in the same family, two different national interests. The family interest is very strong, it is very sacrosanct, but the national interest also is very strong, and thus the husband and wife may come to feel some opposition to each other. However, if they are not too patriotic and are prepared to help each other out, despite the conflicting national interests, they might be able to continue to maintain the marriage into some political wrong, even possibly into some treasonable manœuvres. The law in Canada or in any country where there is a similar system, and there are many such, does not force a consort to testify of what he or she has learned through the other. Our criminal law does not compel a wife to be a witness against her husband, or vice versa.

I simply bring up that point, although I have given no elaborate study to it. My impression at this time is that there seems to be a little danger in this respect, which might become greater. It is something that has to be balanced against the advantages of enabling a wife to maintain her own nationality if she so wants to do after marriage. That is the question which came to my mind, and I would bring it to the attention of honourable senators for consideration.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Honourable senators, I too would like to join in congratulating the four women senators who have made such a valuable contribution to this important subject.

Resolution adopted.

HUMANE SLAUGHTER OF FOOD ANIMALS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. John Hnatyshyn moved the third reading of Bill C-71, to provide for the humane slaughter of food animals.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, I cannot let this bill pass without expressing my approval of it. If I thought its passage were in any way dependent on my support, I would feel it necessary to speak at length to it. As you have already listened to me at some length this afternoon, I have no intention of making extensive remarks at this time.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Go ahead.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: In my own province of New Brunswick great interest has been taken, particularly during the past year, in legislation regarding the humane slaughter of animals for food, and many organizations, among them some women's organizations which I referred to in an earlier debate today, have passed resolutions seeking legislation in this field.

Furthermore, in April a resolution, moved by an Opposition member and seconded by the Premier of the province, was passed in the New Brunswick Legislative Assembly, in support of this kind of legislation. It expressed strong support and approval of the principle and intent of legislation for the prevention of inhumane and cruel methods in the slaughter of food animals. The resolution expressed the wish that the Parliament of Canada would as soon as possible see fit to enact and place in force a measure for the humane slaughter of food animals, provided that such legislation did not conflict with any religious rituals.

Honourable senators, in view of my personal feelings in this matter, which have developed through much reading and study on the subject, and also through visits I have made to slaughter houses—I may say they were not pleasant experiences, but I went as an appointee of some of the groups to which I belong, who wished reports on this matter—I feel I must express my strong approval of legislation of this kind. I believe that approval is shared by the majority of the people of my province, and therefore I want to express my support of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

NEWFOUNDLAND ADDITIONAL GRANTS BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette for second reading of Bill C-72, to provide for the payment of additional grants to the province of Newfoundland.

Hon. John G. Higgins: Honourable senators, in order to appreciate the financial and economic situation in which Newfoundland is at present placed, and to understand what brought about that situation, it is necessary to unroll the pages of history for a few years and learn something of the story of Newfoundland, particularly that period just before the time when Confederation between Canada and Newfoundland was consummated. If I should be long in my remarks, I apologize beforehand, but this a subject of vast importance, not only to me, but to my country, to one of the provinces.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: The telling is not an easy or a pleasant task for me, and the hearing may be a bit tiresome for you. I shall state the facts as I know them, and I shall make no statement whatever unless I believe it to be true. I crave your attention and forbearance, and I trust I shall not strain the charity of your patience.

In 1832 Newfoundland was granted representative government, and in 1855 was granted responsible or self-government; and up to the year 1933 that form of government was enjoyed under the Letters Patent granted in 1855. On several occasions in that period Newfoundland found herself in serious financial difficulty, but on no occasion did England offer any assistance. It is a well-known historical fact that the imperial policy of Great Britain toward Newfoundland was that she should enter into Confederation with Canada, and on more than one occasion when Newfoundland looked to England for financial support, the British Government as a quid pro quo demanded that a royal commission should be set up.

However, the bait was never taken by Newfoundland and the Government always resisted such an attempt to set up a royal commission, knowing that it would be just a prelude to the carrying out of an imperial policy of bringing about Confederation between Canada and Newfoundland.

When Newfoundland received responsible government, in 1855, the country was almost entirely undeveloped and without the modern amenities; she had no railways, no docking facilities, and hardly any roads; her education and health facilities were almost of little account. The population at the time was approximately 115,000. When the movement for the union of the British colonies in North America was started, Newfoundland accepted the invitation to send two delegates to the 1864 conference at Quebec. Both became supporters of Confederation, but when the question became a party issue in Newfoundland the party supporting Confederation suffered a terrific defeat. It was almost wiped out. That was the last that was heard about Confederation for approximately 25 years.

The year 1895 became a period of great crisis. In 1892 St. John's, the capital city, had been almost completely destroyed by fire. In December 1894, before the country had recovered from this calamity, there was an overwhelming and crushing financial disaster. There were two commercial banks in the country at that time, the Commercial Bank and the Union Bank. They had discounted large bills drawn by fish exporters on a London house, which was compelled to suspend payment of the proceeds of its sale of salt cod. The Commercial Bank, unable to meet its commitments, closed up. A run was made on the Union Bank, which also had to close up. It was a terrible misfortune that the latter bank was unable to borrow any money, because it eventually paid 99 cents on the dollar. All business was brought to a standstill, and the Government was unable to provide interest due on the national debt. All efforts to obtain temporary loans in Great Britain and in Canada failed. The Government Savings Bank was also in a precarious position, but Sir Robert Bond, the Colonial Secretary, pledged his private fortune to procure the money needed to protect this bank.

In desperation, the Government sought the opening of discussions on confederation with Canada. These began on March 17, 1895, and were abandoned one month after, on April 16 of the same year. The failure was due to the refusal of the Government of Canada to assume a greater share of the Newfoundland debt than the debt would have been if the per capita debt of Canada applied. The difference was little more than $5 million. I shall revert to this later. Our ancestors could boast, as we cannot, that, at that period of depression, the most desperate and precarious which Newfoundland ever experienced, they had the courage to spurn any offer they did not consider adequate. They would not sell their country for a mess of potage.

Let me go back for a short period of time. In the year 1890 Newfoundland made a treaty with the United States which would have been of inestimable benefit to Newfoundland and would have saved her from the terrible panic of 1895. A treaty known as the Bond-Blaine Treaty was arranged. Bond was at that time the Colonial Secretary of Newfoundland, and Blaine was the Secretary of State of the United States. Under this treaty United States fishing vessels could enter Newfoundland ports free of duty to obtain fish and bait supplies, and the United States would allow the free entry of Newfoundland fish and crude minerals into the United States.

This was a matter of supreme importance to Newfoundland, and would have built up the economy of the country through what turned out afterwards to be hard, bitter years. However, Sir John A. Macdonald, at that time Prime Minister of Canada, made representations to the imperial Government that this would affect the fisheries of the Maritimes, and demanded that further progress with regard to this treaty be stopped. As a result of that, the treaty never came into effect.

This interference in the external affairs of Newfoundland, and the refusal of Canada to help Newfoundland after the bank crash I have just mentioned, were never forgotten for over two generations, and Confederation was a dead issue during all that period.

During the next years, while responsible government existed, considerable progress was made in the country. A cross-country railway of 550 miles was built. Roads and bridges were constructed, health services were of good account, and education advanced rapidly and expertly. The iron ore mines of Bell Island, the lead and zinc mine at Buchans in the interior of the island, and, above all, the great paper mills at Grand Falls and Corner Brook, had given Newfoundland a more diversified economy than that which, in 1856, consisted only of the exports of the products of the sea. The population by 1930 rose to over 300,000.

In 1914 Newfoundland recruited, trained and sent overseas its own regiment, which fought side by side with regiments from all over the British Empire. The cost of this increased our national debt by nearly $50 million.

After some years of prosperity during and following the war the world depression of the early 1920's struck Newfoundland heavily. The depression of 1929-30, which was also world-wide and which struck Canada almost as heavily as Newfoundland, played havoc with our economy, which was largely dependent on exports of fish, wood and ore, and it was impossible for us to get a fair return from these products. But the depression also precluded the country from raising loans to tide over the consequent falling off in revenues and to take care of necessary relief for the distressed. Newfoundland, which did not follow the practice of some other countries of refusing to pay the interest on the national debt or reducing the amount of interest, appealed to Great Britain in 1931 for a loan. This was refused unless the Government in power would consent to the setting up of a royal commission.

At the elections in 1932 the Government, known as the Alderdice Government, was returned. This Government had guaranteed the people there would be no change in the Constitution unless the matter was placed before them for their consent. A royal commission was accordingly appointed on February 17, 1933 under royal warrant, its function being:

> To examine into the future of Newfoundland and, in particular, to report on the financial situation and the prospects therein.

The report of this commission was presented to the British Parliament in November of 1933. The constitutional recommendations were that, until such time as Newfoundland should become self-supporting again, there should be a form of government under which the full legislative and executive power would be vested in the Governor acting on the advice of a specially created Commission of Government, that the existing Legislative and Executive Council would be suspended, that the existing Letters Patent and Royal Instructions would be suspended and new Letters Patent and Royal Instructions would be issued in their place, and that the members of the commission would be appointed by His Majesty.

One paragraph of the report reads as follows:

> It would be understood that, as soon as the island's difficulties are overcome and the country is again self-supporting, responsible government, on request from the people of Newfoundland, would be restored.

Both houses of the Newfoundland Parliament, relying on such a pledge of the British Government, accepted the recommendations and submitted an Address praying that the recommendations be implemented. As a result thereof the Imperial Parliament passed the Newfoundland Act of 1933 and, based upon that act, His Majesty issued new Letters Patent, dated January 31, 1934, and instructions were issued to the Governor. These Letters Patent contained this preamble:

> And whereas we have received an Address from the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of the said Island praying that we may be graciously pleased to suspend the aforesaid Letters Patent and to issue new Letters Patent which would provide for the administration of the said Island until such time as it became self-supporting again on the basis of the recommendations which are contained in the report of the royal commission appointed by us on the 17th of February, 1933—

Clearly, then, it can be seen that these Letters Patent were passed on the recommendations of the royal commission, and contained a solemn pledge to the people of Newfoundland that Newfoundland's former status, that of responsible government, would be restored when the island's difficulties were overcome, and on the request of the people.

By 1941 the financial difficulties of Newfoundland had been overcome. This was due largely to the increased demand abroad for Newfoundland products of fish, ore and wood, and was also due to the fact that the United States of America had been granted certain concessions regarding bases in Newfoundland.

When the war ended Newfoundland emerged in a healthy financial position—the healthiest of any country in the world. Her national debt had been reduced from $110 million to about $73 million, and she had over $40 million in the treasury. The paper mills were in full production. The United States bases were expanding, and the fisheries were still flourishing.

I may remark that during the Second World War the people of Newfoundland were more interested in contributing to the success of that war than in the constitutional position. Newfoundland contributed 10,000 men for service overseas out of a population of just over 300,000, and some $12 million was advanced to the mother country in free loans. There was never any doubt that as soon as the war was won the pledge given to Newfoundland would be fulfilled, and that Newfoundlanders would be given the chance to work out their own political and constitutional destiny. In fact, Mr. Emery Evans, the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Affairs, said in the House of Commons, on December 2, 1943:

> The arrangements made in 1933 included a pledge by His Majesty's Government, that as soon as the island's difficulties had been overcome and the country was again self-supporting, responsible government on the request of the people of Newfoundland would be restored. Our whole policy is governed by this undertaking.

But remember this, that in the meantime (1), the United States of America had been given 99-year leases to bases in Newfoundland, and (2), it had been proven without doubt that Newfoundland-Labrador possessed the greatest undeveloped iron ore deposits that had been found anywhere in the world.

After the beginning of World War II the United States had been granted 99-year leases to bases in Newfoundland, which bases were understood to be of a permanent nature. As a result of these bases, much employment was provided to the people of Newfoundland and, in the year of Confederation, millions of dollars were paid in wages besides the large amount of money spent by the Government of the United States and by those serving with the United States army and by contractors engaged in work on the bases.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I interrupt to ask the honourable gentleman who granted the bases to the United States and what procedure was followed in granting the bases?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: They were granted to the United States by Newfoundland, with the consent of England.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: By the Commission of Government?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Yes. We were only concerned with the British Government, so it had to be done with their consent.

The strategic importance of Newfoundland and the existence of mineral wealth changed the whole outlook of the British and Canadian Governments with regard to their relations with Newfoundland. It must be mentioned here that the Canadian Government was not consulted when Britain handed over certain portions of Newfoundland territory to the United States for 99 years and was very indignant over the project.

There seems no doubt that Canada and the United Kingdom Governments feared that Newfoundland might become too closely allied to the United States and, despite any feeling of Newfoundland in the matter, they decided that in order that Canada should control the big and, at that time, important airport at Gander and have some control over the American bases, the bringing about of Confederation was necessary, and subsequent events seem to prove this beyond doubt.

In 1945 a movement for the return of responsible government was started by the circulation of a petition throughout the country asking for restoration of our former status; but this was forestalled by the action of the Commission of Government of Newfoundland, who were really the servants of the British Commonwealth Relations Office, in passing an act known as the Convention Act, which provided for the setting up of a national convention whose duty it would be:

> To consider and discuss amongst themselves as elected representatives of the people of Newfoundland the changes that have taken place in the financial and economic situation of the island since 1934 and . . . to examine the position of the country and to make recommendations as to possible forms of future Government to be put before the people at a national referendum.

An election to choose the members of this convention was held in the beginning of 1946. This convention started its deliberations in September 1946 and closed the last week of January 1948.

Someone moved that a delegation be sent to Ottawa to discuss if any equitable basis for Union with Canada existed. This was objected to at first, but it was decided that no harm would be done and a delegation was appointed and went with distinct instructions that no negotiations should be carried on. The delegation came back empty-handed, but later there were received through the Governor certain proposals of the Prime Minister of Canada.

Finally, the National Convention voted unanimously to recommend that two forms of government go on the ballot paper to be submitted to the people at a national referendum, namely: (1) a continuation of the Commission of Government, and (2), responsible government.

A motion to place Confederation with Canada on the ballot as a third choice was defeated by a vote of 29 to 16. However, contrary to recommendations of the National Convention, the Commission of Government, on instructions from the British Government, passed the Referendum Act in which the two forms of government recommended by the convention were set out, together with the beaten third choice, Confederation with Canada.

This so-called referendum was held on June 3, 1948, and the result showed: 21,753 votes for Commission of Government, 62,441 for Confederation with Canada, and 68,239 for responsible government.

As the Referendum Act called for an overall majority, a second referendum was rendered necessary.

Previous to the first referendum a campaign of deception and sectarianism was openly staged by the proponents of Confederation, and this campaign was aided and abetted by Government officials. Public officials in post offices not only delayed the distribution of responsible government literature but, in many instances, destroyed it. Telegrams were never delivered. Even the Eskimos and Indians on Labrador, who never had a vote and who have not the right to vote now, were granted the franchise for this election, because Labrador was on the confines of Canada and these people had more dealings with Canadians than Newfoundlanders.

But before the second referendum this campaign showed its full rottenness. A most intensive propaganda was carried on. Sectarianism was loudly rampant and unlimited. I may say that campaign funds were supplied to the Confederate party from outside Newfoundland.

It is a sad commentary on the situation that one of the leading proponents in this campaign of setting class against class and creed against creed was the Governor of the Island, who was the chairman of the Commission of Government, a Welshman named Sir Gordon MacDonald.

Under such prejudicial conditions it was that the next referendum was taken. The elections showed: 71,334 for responsible government and 78,323 for Confederation. There were 6,000 people fewer voted in this referendum than in the first referendum. The total electorate was in the neighbourhood of 180,000, and Confederation secured 52 per cent of the votes cast, or just over 43 per cent of the registered voters.

In the two referenda we had the extraordinary situation that the people were asked to vote on Confederation with Canada as a form of government, although there had been no negotiation of terms. The Right Honourable Mackenzie King had given a unilateral proposal based on fact-finding discussions with the delegation which came up to Ottawa during the convention and had not been accompanied by expert advisers on any of the subjects under discussion.

In other words, the people of Newfoundland had voted without really any knowledge of the financial implications and apparently had simply expressed a faith in Canada's good intentions. The delegation had the assistance of, we presume, well-informed advisers but one can understand the impossibility of arguing controversial points and exacting new concessions after the matter had been settled by the referendum.

I would like to say here that the Prime Minister of Canada had previously stated that if the people in Newfoundland expressed their will beyond all possibility of misunderstanding as being in favour of Confederation, then the Canadian Government for its part would be prepared, with the consent of Parliament, to introduce the necessary legislation to receive Newfoundland into the Union.

After the second referendum, he said there was a substantial vote for responsible government. In other words, he clearly stated that he regarded this small majority of less than 4 per cent as not beyond all possibility of misunderstanding of the will of the people of Newfoundland to enter into Confederation. Yet it was under these circumstances that Canada agreed to accept Newfoundland into Union.

The drama moved on. Another step was made when the British Parliament passed the Newfoundland Act, and then the Canadian Parliament accepted the Union with Newfoundland under the British North America Act.

I may say that the Newfoundland Act passed in the British House of Commons on a division. The big majority of Liberals and Conservatives present voted against the bill. The Government party had made the bill a party measure, but only a small portion of its members attended to vote on second reading of such an important bill.

The opposition against the bill was led by the internationally known Sir Alan P. Herbert, and those who supported him were men of first-class calibre in the House of Commons; and the opposition in the House of Lords was led by Baron Sempill. They were all well-known men of high standing in the political world. They were imbued solely with the principles of democracy and the desire for rule by democratic institutions. They were champions of the rights of small nations, and they were fighting for a small country whose rights were being violated; and the claims and methods of big countries did not intimidate them. They fought the bill at every stage, and if they lost out they had the satisfaction, like many an honoured fighter for lost causes in the past of English history, of knowing that they were doing what they considered their duty to aid a country which played a small part in the eyes of a commercial world, and which was regarded as so unimportant that it became only a pawn in the game of politics.

The Commission of Government, with Sir Gordon MacDonald as chairman, appointed a delegation of seven to proceed to Ottawa to conclude the terms of Union, and this was done in spite of the fact that the people had decisively shown they had lost confidence in the Commission of Government.

I may say that only one of the seven chosen was known to be an open supporter of responsible government. This was Mr. Chesley Crosbie, whose father had in previous years played a big part in the political life of Newfoundland.

In October 1948 this delegation went to Ottawa to meet the Canadian cabinet committee of which the new prime minister, the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent, was chairman. The negotiations took only two months—and in a matter of this kind this can hardly be called protracted negotiations —and ended in a formal agreement which was signed on December 11, 1948. All signed except Mr. Chesley Crosbie, who refused to do so because, in his opinion, the agreement would be financially ruinous for Newfoundland.

This was the grand finale. This agreement sealed the Union, and on April 1, 1949 Confederation became un fait accompli.

The negotiations, as I said, took about two months. There must have been a multifarious number of matters to be discussed, and many of these must have been lightly touched on or ignored. In proof that the terms were not by any means extensively and exhaustively dealt with—and this must be admitted in view of the short period of negotiations—Term 29 was added.

The honourable Senator Pratt on June 11 last delivered a most able and comprehensive speech about the rights of Newfoundland. He is one of the best-known businessmen in Newfoundland, and can speak with authority on the commercial side of that country. He discussed at some length the meaning of Term 29 and what he felt Newfoundland should receive under it. It is not my intention to quote any portion of his speech, because it can be read. However, he did quote Term 29, and I shall repeat the quotation:

> In view of the difficulty of predicting with sufficient accuracy the financial consquences to Newfoundland of becoming a province of Canada, the Government of Canada will appoint a royal commission within eight years of the date of Union to review the financial position of the province of Newfoundland and to recommend the form and scale of additional financial assistance, if any, that may be required by the Government of the province of Newfoundland to enable it to continue public services at the levels and standards reached subsequent to the date of Union, without resorting to taxation more burdensome, having regard to capacity to pay, than that obtaining generally in the region comprising the Maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island.

As to what this means, and how it was thought by the parties concerned it should be interpreted, one must read an extract from a speech of Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent in the Commons Hansard, Volume 1, 1949, at page 289:

> After long negotiations it proved possible, I think, to arrive at the scheme which is set out in the terms of Union, and which is apt to achieve that result. Human foresight, however, is never as good as hindsight. It was also provided that within eight years from the coming into force of the terms of Union a commission would be set up to examine the situation anew, and to report as to whether or not the terms provided are working satisfactorily and are sufficient to bring about the object of equalizing the lot of the people of the new province with that of the people of the older provinces. There is no undertaking to implement any terms of recommendation that may be made at that time by a royal commission. It was felt by the Newfoundland delegation, and by the representatives of the Canadian Government, that this was something that was being entered into in a spirit of fairness on both sides, and that it was not necessary to make binding stipulations about what would happen with respect to the report of a royal commission. It was felt if there was an investigation and a report by a commission, in which the public at that time would have confidence, the legislators of that day could well be trusted to do what would prove to be right in order to make this enlarged nation a united nation continuing on its path of progress toward its great destiny.

You will note that Mr. St. Laurent says:

> There is no undertaking to implement any terms of recommendation that may be made at that time by a royal commission.

That means nothing more than that a royal commission would be set up to examine the position of Newfoundland and to report as to whether or not the terms provided were working satisfactorily, but the Government could accept or reject these recommendations. And a couple of days ago in the House of Commons the honourable the Minister of Finance said exactly that, namely, that the Government was under no obligation to accept the recommendations and that Mr. St. Laurent had said the same thing. This means nothing more than that Term 29 was meaningless.

Under these circumstances I have no doubt that the bill before us has stronger and more effective force than Term 29, and that the words in the preamble of the bill > —in the course of such a review any special circumstances relating to the financial position of the province of Newfoundland after the 31st day of March, 1962 would be taken into consideration—are legally effective, which Term 29 does not seem to be regarded as being, according to the authorities.

It could be argued, and perhaps the argument may be regarded as irrefutable, that there was no intention to regard Term 29 as meaningless, but it should be used as if it had laid down that the Government or Parliament of Canada would accept the recommendations of the royal commission, that the commissioners would be chosen by the Government of Canada and it would be assumed that they would be men of the highest probity and ability and worthy of trust in such an appointment, that it would be expected they would not have been appointed just to make a report which might or might not be accepted, that it would be hardly honourable to think that their work would be nugatory, and that the trust placed by the Newfoundland delegation would be abused otherwise.

But let me say this, to deal with an interpretation which is heartening. The Prime Minister in his speech on July 14, as set out in the Commons Hansard of that date, intimated clearly that full regard will be given to assuring the conditions inherent in Term 29 being upheld, so that Newfoundland should enjoy a reasonable degree of equality of opportunity along with the other provinces in this country. In other words, this means that Term 29 shall be read along with the undertaking contained in the bill at present. That is what the Prime Minister said in the other house, and I am re-stating it here in this house so there shall be a clear record. And I have used this undertaking before this bill has been passed, so that we shall all understand exactly what will be the position of Newfoundland in 1962.

There are two clear undertakings, one in the bill and one in the speech of the Prime Minister. The undertaking of the Prime Minister is clear and unequivocal, and I trust that the good Lord shall give me length of days so that when the matter of Newfoundland comes up in 1962 I shall be able to repeat the words that I have just used. And it will not be then answered that the undertaking of the Prime Minister is meaningless.

Let me remark that at no time was there ever mention of Newfoundland joining the United States. I know of no instance where a movement was started in Newfoundland to have her as one of the states of the Union. I shall go so far as to say that the people of Newfoundland desire and always desired to stay under British rule, or, rather should I say, within the commonwealth.

There was talk of a trade treaty at different times, because we purchased most of our commodities from England and the United States. We purchased heavily throughout the years from the United States and the United States purchased our paper and fish. It was only natural then that Newfoundlanders looked to the United States for trade treaties. And that was done, as I have already said, as far back as 1890.

In spite of the fact that for over a hundred years there has been a steady flow of Newfoundlanders to the United States, so that at present the number of citizens of Newfoundland descent in that country is larger than the population of Newfoundland, there has never been any talk of any annexation by the United States of America. And I, with almost entirely Irish blood flowing in my veins, say clearly, emphatically and dogmatically that the Irish Newfoundlanders had the strongest desire to stay within the British empire or commonwealth. In the short periods when I came to the mainland on visits I heard more talk of a political alliance between Canada and the United States than I heard in a lifetime in Newfoundland.

The people had voted on the question of Confederation and the only terms for Confederation offered were those contained in a brochure sent by the Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Honourable Mackenzie King, on October 13, 1947, to the Governor of Newfoundland. How such terms could ever have been made up, I cannot understand. In it the federal revenue from Newfoundland was placed at $20,185,000. On what this is based it is impossible to tell. I trust that the financial advisers to Mr. King on this were different from the advisers to the delegation who came to Ottawa after Confederation had been passed.

For instance, he puts liquor taxes that would be raised annually at $400,000 and tobacco taxes at $500,000, a total of $900,000. I suppose he thought that we drank most of our liquor in Newfoundland tax fee, or were an out-of-the-ordinary temperate crowd. We paid a lower rate of taxes on our liquor before Confederation than was paid in Canada, yet our excise amounted to over $3 million. At Canadian excise rates it would amount to much more than that.

Tobacco taxes were far more than $3 million. If the $20 million had been more than doubled it would have been nearer the truth. At the same time he showed that our expenditures would amount to about $27 million. In other words, that Canada would have to make allowance for this $7 million.

It was for these terms that the proponents of Confederation fought. Men who must have known or, by proper study, should have known that they were not fair, were not alone ready to accept them, but by lurid propaganda and foolish promises tried to persuade the people to support their action. If these terms had been finally accepted, Newfoundland would have been ruined in a short while. Fortunately the delegation appointed by the Commission of Government to settle on the terms brought back somewhat better, but by no means adequate, terms.

As I said already, they had the assistance of what we were told were well-informed advisers, but they certainly could not take up an independent stand in view of the fact that Confederation was a settled issue, and it would be impossible to go to the limit on the arguing of controversial points and getting new concessions. Apparently they had to depend on the good will of the Canadian Government.

The terms which we received were not the terms that independent men, or, rather I should have said, an independent country, would accept; and the terms we received were not adequate terms. The flourishing condition of Newfoundland at the time warranted something better than was offered.

There should have been no necessity for Term 29. But the inclusion of Term 29 shows that the people who were settling the terms were doubtful. I hold no doubt that these terms should never have been signed.

What is worst of all is that these delegates were responsible to no one. They were apparently sent to try to get better terms but, above all, to sign in any case either the original terms or whatever extra terms were offered. Can you imagine anyone placing the destiny of a country in the hands of seven men not elected by that country but picked by a body, also of seven men, who had lost the confidence of the people?

The time given to negotiate terms was outrageously short. The Governor gave instructions that terms had to be settled in December 1948, as three months would have to be allowed for the transfer of services to the federal authorities, which the Newfoundland Government was to transfer, as for instance the post office, customs, taxation division, railways, telegraphs, etc. These had to be organized in line with the federal system and would take at least three months. It was essential that the Union be un fait accompli on March 31, 1949—in other words, that Union would come into effect on that date.

The delegation had some advisers but they were not experts to carry out a union of two countries. Only those who were conversant by long experience and study with Newfoundland affairs, who had spent much time studying the history of the country and the social life of the people, who had come to understand the economic structure of the country and her financial affairs, who could fully understand every aspect of Confederation as it affected the country and who could decide how the country could carry on after the event, should have been the advisers.

The committee appointed by the Government of Newfoundland to prepare the case for Newfoundland to be presented to the McNair Commission in connection with the revision of terms under Term 29 was engaged continuously for over two years. And it took the members of the McNair Commission more than a year to give the decision, which was done early in 1949.

It is wearisome to hear the platitudinous talk of how Canada has been a fairy godmother to Newfoundland and how well and timely Canada has solved her financial difficulties. People who talk that way seem to think that, as soon as Union was consummated Newfoundlanders, with the greatest joy, fervour and relief, raised their eyes and hands on high in thanks that they had become Canadian citizens, so great was the contribution of Canada to aid her in her hour of need. Let me tell you that is not true.

Newfoundlanders, despite the reputation of the island's poverty and backwardness which foreign reports have created, have pride in their country. They have an old tradition. They are a quiet, courteous people. They are a soft-spoken people to whom violence is abhorrent. You will find that they still call themselves Newfoundlanders. Thousands of members of the Canadian armed forces who served in Newfoundland during the war can vouch that they are different people from what propaganda preaches, and these men can tell that Newfoundlanders do not form a benighted race.

Now, I was rather surprised at the contemptuous or, should I say, the hostile manner in which the name of Newfoundland was bandied around for a period not so many weeks ago by some people and newspapers on the mainland. The opinions of leading churchmen and other reputable gentlemen, whose only fault or misfortune apparently was that they lived in Newfoundland and had first-hand knowledge of what they spoke about, were not only ignored but treated with contumely and contempt.

Newfoundlanders are an independent people and they resent any dictatorial methods to be used on them. They object to being regarded as second-rate individuals or as possessing subnormal intelligence. They do not regard themselves as inferior to other Canadians. It is time for some people to drop the highbrow attitude towards them and to cease their flippant remarks regarding them.

Perhaps you think I am raking up the dead past unnecessarily. "Let the dead past bury its dead," sang the poet. Yes, charity often demands our following this dictum. But in the search and struggle for justice, everything to prove the right to justice must be brought forward.

You will say the people voted on the matter —and that should be final. "The voice of the people is the voice of God," has been often proclaimed. I will not subscribe to such a blasphemous remark. The voice of a people! For 15 years responsible government was suspended in Newfoundland. There was no such thing as politics as we understand it. There were no political parties, no political campaigns and elections, no meetings of the legislature. Public matters were not discussed and argued about. A generation had grown up which had no experience of politics. The older people had forgotten politics and were suddenly called on to vote on the most important matter to come before a country.

Can you imagine a people, without any experience to guide them, and without any discussion or without any explanation of the pros and cons, being asked to vote on such an abstruse matter as Confederation? Can any intelligent person say that this was the proper way to have the question decided? Imagine asking a people, practically all of whom had no knowledge of the implications involved, to vote on such a complicated and mighty scheme as Union, to decide on the destiny of a country and to vote for themselves and future generations. It seems nonsensical, outrageous and un-Christian.

This was not an ordinary plebiscite, like the few plebiscites that have been held in democratic countries where people were asked to vote on one question about which they may not know a lot, but of which they have some understanding because of their experience. Take for instance the question, "Do you think there should be prohibition of liquor?" Anybody could vote on a question like that. Some people would have gained an experience in public houses, some would have lesser experience and some would read about it in the newspapers; anyway, it is a subject which could be discussed.

I have a purpose in what I have said. All I have said is my premise. Let me come to my conclusion.

Confederation should have been effected through the medium of two independent legislatures, as the British North America Act outlined and as the Fathers of Confederation felt proper. The Terms of Union should have been settled between the delegates appointed by the two legislatures, that is, the legislature of Canada and the legislature of Newfoundland. Two separate bodies of delegates would debate clearly, openly and independently, responsible to their legislatures. Their interim findings would pass the scrutiny of each legislature until finally terms agreeable to both would be settled. This procedure would not take only two months. Considering the implications involved, the complexities of finance and economy pertaining to a country nowadays, perhaps a year, perhaps two years, would be required for the proper study and deliberation.

If Newfoundland had got back responsible or self-government and an independent legislature, the Terms of Union would have been settled by countries of equal powers, by countries with independent legislatures, and that is by elected representatives of the people, not by a few who owed no responsibility to a legislature or to the people.

If Newfoundland had had its legislature, a resolution of the majority of the members, if they desired it, would have been passed to enter into Confederation and, for that purpose, delegates would have been elected. If that had been done nobody could offer any criticism. The people would have spoken through their duly elected representatives.

And there would have been no necessity for Term 29. The future would have been well looked into and all problems would have been discussed and solved. Everything that was settled from time to time by the delegates would have been aired in the two legislatures. The people would have had full information regarding the terms and a full chance in the newspapers or on the radio to support or to criticize any term. And when the terms had been settled and the necessary acts passed, thereafter there could have been no objection. Two independent legislatures would have settled the matter of Union and everything would have been over. We could have said Consummatum est.

But what happened? I have told you enough to show you the unfortunate manner in which Union was carried out. The concept was wrong, the procedure was illegal and the result was unfortunate and calamitous for Newfoundland. Some future historian will not mince words to tell that it was the case of a small country overridden by two large ones. Surely, now, we Newfoundlanders can say that when the larger nations talk about the rights of smaller nations they do so only if their interests are not affected. Democracy seems to have run amuck. Would such treatment be shown to Quebec or Ontario or any other province in Canada? Would England have dared to treat New Zealand likewise, if Australia had tried to force her into a union by such means as were adopted with regard to Newfoundland?

There is and has been too much pleading as to what Newfoundland gained by Confederation. If the relations between the two countries are properly and honestly investigated, it will be found that, if some advantages have come thereby to Newfoundland, Canada also has been a gainer and, in the balance, perhaps it is difficult to tell which is the gainer.

But the indifference of the mainland to Newfoundland's contribution is disturbing, nay appalling. The boundaries of Canada were extended and now its territory runs from the Pacific on one side to the Atlantic on the other.

Union brought into Canada the vast area of Labrador with its immense iron ore deposits which, while they may bring little money to Newfoundland, will probably bring untold wealth to Canada when developed. And Canada got possession of the great Gander airport.

At the same time let us consider the losses suffered by Newfoundland. Union deprived her of her chief sources of revenue, which passed into the hands of Ottawa. It took away from Newfoundland the cheapest markets of the world. It ended the right of Newfoundland to bargain with the United States in connection with the bases of that country in Newfoundland. Do not think that the last mentioned consideration is a minor one. The United States bases have provided and are providing a major industry in Newfoundland.

The United States must have spent over a billion dollars in erecting these mighty bases, and the amount of wages paid Newfoundlanders who worked on their erection is colossal, that is, for Newfoundland. There is still much employment for Newfoundlanders in this way, and the wages earned every year go into millions.

But, if further bases are desired to be built, the Canadian Government must be approached, and we know that Ottawa is not sympathetic to further extension of bases or of United States influence. If Newfoundland were independent she could make independent agreements with the United States regarding the bases. And if another Bond-Blaine Treaty were made regarding fish or some other commodity, it would stand this time if Newfoundland were an independent country.

I mentioned that Newfoundland produces less than 10 per cent of the goods she needs. She formerly could turn to the cheapest markets of the world and at that time the Canadian market supplied her with little, very little, in comparison with what she got from England and the United States.

Confederation has turned her trade to the Canadian market and the material gain for the mainland has been enormous. If Newfoundland as a separate country purchased the same amount of Canadian goods she would rank third in the Canadian export trade, next to Great Britain and the United States. I had computed that about $225 million worth of Canadian goods are purchased annually. But in a recent issue of the Financial Post I noted that Newfoundland provided for Canada "a market for mainland goods estimated at $250 million a year". What a boon this is to Canadian manufacturers.

How much does Ottawa get from this in the form of federal tax? We cannot tell from any publication of official statistics, but a fairly reasonable estimate can be worked out. Unfortunately no one considers this as money for Ottawa from Newfoundland, because the taxes are collected in Ontario or in whatever province the goods are manufactured. I may say that the amount paid as excise and other taxes on motor cars and accessories coming to Newfoundland can be estimated at nearly $2 million. The honourable Senator Pratt estimated the taxes on motor cars to be about $1 million, but he informed me that he had forgotten to include accessories and parts, which would make the amount from $500,000 to $1 million more.

I have not got the figures for the income tax for 1958, but the income tax collected for 1957 amounted to approximately $28½ million, and the succession duties amounted to $582,000. When the Right Honourable Mackenzie King put the excise on tobacco, which I presume included tobacco, cigarettes and cigars, at $400,000, he must have drawn these figures out of thin air. I may say that the total amount of tax that would have been collected on tobacco and cigarettes, apart from cigars, based on the Newfoundland consumption for the year 1946-1947, at the present Canadian tax rate, would have been $4,887,729.

When Newfoundland entered into Confederation cigarettes sold for 24 cents a package, but as soon as Confederation came the price rose to 34 cents. Tobacco practically doubled in price. In fact, one kind of plug tobacco which was used extensively by the fishermen and on which a small excise was paid, cost 27 cents for a quarter-pound plug, and under Confederation the price rose to 60 cents a plug.

Today the following would seem to be a conservative amount contributed by Newfoundland to the federal authorities:

	million
Income tax—that is personal and corporation tax and succession duties	$29
General sales tax	13
Excise tax on cigarettes, tobacco and liquor	13
Import duties	8

I have taken the excise on cigarettes, etc. at $13 million from the speech of the honourable senator from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt), who informed me that he had received sufficient information to warrant thinking this was a reasonable estimate.

Besides these amounts I would estimate excise taxes on motor cars, trucks, buses and vehicles, radios, electrical appliances, furs and fur garments, watches, jewellery, athletic and sporting goods and various articles to be at least $6 million.

I must pay a tribute to the present Government, which has contributed large amounts recently to the Atlantic provinces, of which Newfoundland got a substantial share. These were generous amounts. That cannot be denied. They came at an opportune moment and were a source of financial aid at a time deeply needed. I am also aware that Newfoundland received certain amounts apart from those given the Atlantic provinces, and for these Newfoundland should be deeply thankful. I am glad to pay this tribute to the Government.

But, after what I have said, I, as a Newfoundlander, cannot be fully satisfied with any arrangement other than what justice dictates. I shall never be satisfied until Newfoundland receives what she would have received if Union had been properly carried out—a union between two legislatures, representative of the people of the two countries; not a union between a big country and a small downtrodden one represented by individuals who had no standing, but a union between two free and independent countries.

Perhaps it is too late to talk this way now. It may be thought that Newfoundland should have risen up in one violent protest, a protest not of one crowd, but of the whole people. And that not having been done, it can hardly be expected that a Government which had nothing to do with the Terms of Union can go back and start negotiations for entirely new terms. Perhaps that would be expecting too much.

The one matter that apparently was not brought forward or, if it was brought forward, was never pushed, was the amount of the Canadian debt that was thrust upon us by Confederation and the manner in which this should be met. The amount was over $300 million, the difference between our national debt and our share of the Canadian national debt.

I mentioned earlier and said I would revert to the fact that in 1895, when Newfoundland was in financial difficulties, she tried to start negotiations with Canada about union and that after a short while negotiations were brought to an end because Canada insisted that Newfoundland should pay interest on $5 million, the difference between her national debt and her proportionate share of the Canadian national debt.

Now, with the cards reversed, at the meeting of the delegates apparently no offer was made to Newfoundland because of the difference between her national debt and her proportionate share of the Canadian national debt.

I have no doubt that the question of debt allowance, or yearly payments to Newfoundland due to the difference between her share of the national debt and the federal debt, was never brought up before or ever treated seriously by the delegation. When I was Leader of the Opposition in Newfoundland, I brought the matter on at least two occasions before the House of Assembly, and on each occasion my remarks were treated with indifference and contempt by the Premier, who had been one of the delegates. He just thrust aside my mention of this matter as if there was not the slightest merit in it and it was not worth while discussing. In my estimation it just showed how little the delegation knew, or how little they were instructed in the abstruse subject of Canadian politics, or the ramifications of the British North America Act, or the history of the Constitution of Canada.

What happened in the case of Confederation in 1867? What provision was made for provinces whose debts were less than the debt of the other provinces? I refer you to Munro on The Constitution of Canada, 1889 edition, re Prince Edward Island. I read first from page 318:

> That Prince Edward Island not having incurred debts equal to the sum mentioned in the next preceding resolution shall be entitled to receive by half-yearly payments in advance from the general Government interest at the rate of five per cent per annum on the difference from time to time between the actual amount of its indebtedness and the amount of indebtedness authorized as aforesaid, viz. 4,701,050 dollars.

Now, I have mentioned the features of Confederation which outlined the method by which Union should be granted—

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Am I to understand that the honourable senator is making the statement that the other Maritime provinces did not pay interest on their debts which were outstanding?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Nova Scotia and New Brunswick did, but Prince Edward Island did not. The debt of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick was higher, and they paid interest, but Prince Edward Island was allowed interest.

The British North America Act of 1867, under the title "Admission of Other Colonies", says:

> It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, on Addresses from the Houses of the Parliament of Canada, and from the Houses of the respective Legislatures of the Colonies or Provinces of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, and British Columbia, to admit those Colonies or Provinces, or any of them, into the Union—and so on. It says there "Legislatures of the Colonies". That is the democratic method. It is clear what is meant. It had to be done by the people through their proper representatives, not by a Commission of Government appointed haphazardly for a certain term, not by seven men who were not elected and who owed duty to nobody.

Hon. Mr. Monette: May I ask what section was quoted by the honourable senator?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Section 146 of the British North America Act of 1867.

The gross public debt of Newfoundland at the date of Mr. King's proposed terms, namely, October 31, 1947, was $82,377,047. As England had agreed to guarantee the debt, the amount due was payable in sterling which, at that time, was $4.04 to the pound. At the date of Union, namely, April 1, 1949, the rate was $2.80. With $82,377,047, less a sinking fund of $9,221,748, the Newfoundland net debt was, as of October 1, 1947, $73,155,299. However, as the rate had dropped to $2.80 at the date of Union, the net national debt at that time was approximately $50,700,000. Canada took over about $45 million and Newfoundland retained the balance of approximately $5½ million. The population of Canada, as at January 1, 1949, was 13,549,000. This included the population of Newfoundland.

At what figure the population of Newfoundland was decided, I do not know, but 400,000 would be a conservative estimate. When the voters' list for the National Convention was taken in 1947 the number of voters was 180,000, so that a total population of 400,000 should be a conservative estimate. The population of Canada apart from Newfoundland was thus on June 1, 1949, 13,149,000. At the end of 1948 the gross debt of Canada was $17,197,348,981 and active assets were $4,825,712,088. The net debt was thus $12,371,636,893. The per caput debt of Canada was $960.31.

The national debt of Newfoundland at the end of 1948 was approximately $50,700,000, of which Canada assumed approximately $45 million. The per caput debt of Newfoundland was, at the end of 1948, $125, whereas the Canadian per caput debt was, as I have said, $960.31.

The difference between the national debt of Newfoundland assumed by Canada and the share of the Canadian debt taken over by Newfoundland was approximately $335 million. This, at 5 per cent, would give Newfoundland an annual amount of $16,750,000.

We are forced to pay a share of all the money which has been spent to build up Canada throughout the years since Confederation in 1867.

Of course, it will be said: "Oh, yes, but your country will have the use of some of the undertakings which are still in existence. There is, for instance, the beautiful, magnificent and superb building where the deliberations of Canada are carried on, and in which we are sitting now." I would answer: "That is true, but only partly true. Let you not forget that we have to pay for the building that was burnt and restored, and pay our share of the running of this building throughout the years."

It will be said that we have the use of the Canadian National Railways. But what of the C.N.R. of the past? What of all the railway beds rebuilt? What of all the coaches and engines of the past that have been discarded? What of the tremendously heavy debt which has been paid every year on behalf of the C.N.R. deficit? Should we be responsible for this?

We have to pay our share of the terrific expense incurred by Canada on account of two great wars. We, ourselves, as an independent country, had to pay for the expenses of our efforts in the First Great War. Why should we have to pay our share of Canada's?

I am aware that we must pay our share of the Korean war, for we were then in Confederation. In that war Newfoundlanders fought as Canadians, shoulder to shoulder with Canadians of other provinces, and I am glad to say that my son was one of them. But why should we pay our share of the great projects which were carried on to develop Canada, many of which have ceased to be? There are the public wharves and the public buildings which have been torn down and restored, and torn down again and restored. We must pay our share of all the money that was paid on account of the Civil List for the employees of Canada. We must pay our share of all these, and we have received no quid pro quo. Is it then nothing that Newfoundland is saddled with a share of the heavy national debt incurred by Canada before Union with Newfoundland?

Would six, seven or eight million dollars for five years compensate for this?

It is not pleasant for me to have spoken as I have. I say that most sincerely. My days have been pleasant days here in the Senate, and in Parliament generally. I have enjoyed my moments here. My stay has been an experience of culture and education; I have made many friends and I have been received cordially in every quarter. It is with the utmost regret that I have spoken as I have. I thought my mind was a closed book on the matter in discussion. I did not think I would ever have to bring it up again publicly. I never thought the necessity would arise.

Much as I disagree with the manner by which Confederation was carried, much as I deplored the methods used, much as my feelings as a Newfoundlander were outraged, much as I knew that every principle of decency and justice was violated, much as I felt the fundamentals were ignored and spurned and thrust aside, I still felt nothing could be done to rectify the wrong. But the exigencies of the moment have changed all that and my mind is reopened. There comes a time when every man must take a stand. There arises an occasion when speech becomes a duty, and silence is treason.

I was one of those who put crepe on the door of my house on the day of Union, and I am not ashamed of my action. I had witnessed and realized the degradation of a country even as I have told it to you.

Ten years after, on April 1, 1959, when the Prime Minister of Canada made the announcement which Newfoundlanders felt and claimed was not a proper interpretation of the McNair Commission's report, no mourning was made by men like me, but black bunting was put on all the public buildings by those who had brought about Confederation and attained the end irrespective of the rights of their country and their duties as citizens thereof. They can now realize that if Confederation had been properly brought about there would have been no trouble or heartbreaks today.

Newfoundland is a small province. It may be regarded perhaps as a small corporation. In dollars and cents it can be bought over and over again. In the commercial eyes of the modern world, perhaps it looms small. But politically it enjoys the rights that any other province enjoys. Socially it is the same as any other province. It holds the joys and ambitions and sorrows and tragedies of a people. It pulses with the life of a people. It is a living entity.

That a country may, by bad legislation or some economic disaster, become hopeless financially is national bankruptcy. But if a people stand idly by without raising a hand of help or deliberately aid in the destruction of their country, that is national dishonour.

And at this time of her hour of need I shall not become an accused by my silence. I have tried to say a word for Newfoundland and to put our position before you. I have told the truth and I trust that the truth shall set you free as regards Newfoundland. Too long has the truth been hidden, but it must eventually come into the open.

Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise again;
The eternal years of God are hers.

I have told you of things of which probably you were not aware. I have spoken so that the position of my country shall be clearly recognized in the future, and I have no cause to withdraw one word.

The lines of Omar Khayyam quoted by another honourable senator some weeks ago are, I think, more appropriate now:

The Moving Finger writes; and, having writ,
Moves on: nor all your piety nor wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a line,
Nor all your tears wash out a word of it.

When the last payment of the grant set out in the bill before us today is due and payable, I trust that the Government will consider the obligation for the future of Newfoundland outlined in the bill as binding and of full force and effect and not mere surplusage and meaningless; and that, in view of the fact that Newfoundland never received the treatment that was due her, and that her rights were violated, a full, free and liberal interpretation of the words "special needs" shall be made.

I have told what I have told to vindicate the rights of my country and to rectify the wrong done her. I have called up the errors and injustice of the past to get redress for the future of Newfoundland.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, I had intended speaking on the second reading of this bill, but in order not to delay the house at this stage I will speak instead on the third reading. Even at this late hour, however, I feel I should make one or two brief comments.

We have just been given an excellent historical picture of the province of Newfoundland. Only a keen student such as the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins) could place before the house such an interesting paper. However, he gave us an historical background not only of Newfoundland but also of himself, and I think he clearly showed he was not in favour of Confederation. In view of this fact I am rather surprised that he is so willing to give his blessing and approval to the bill before us. He said that mourning crepe was hung on his door after Confederation, and he referred to the black bunting of mourning which was hung on public buildings in Newfoundland after the announcement by the Prime Minister of Canada on April 1, 1959. The honourable senator said that this display was a rebuke to those who were responsible for Confederation, but I believe that people throughout the Maritime provinces, and indeed throughout the rest of Canada, interpreted this display of public mourning by Premier Smallwood and others as being one of deep regret for and dissatisfaction of the Prime Minister's announcement. I think that was the meaning taken by the vast majority of people in the Maritimes—not that given by the honourable senator from St. John's East.

The honourable gentleman said little about the bill itself. In fact, he did not even touch on the all-important part, which was so well explained yesterday by the honourable senator from Ottawa East (Hon. Mr. Choquette) and so fully covered by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald).

As I stated a moment ago, there are many points I would like to touch upon in this debate, but I am going to refrain from doing so for the time being. However, I do want to mention one other matter. The honourable senator from St. John's East emphasized the fact that interest payments are being made by the province of Newfoundland on its outstanding debt. Well, Newfoundland would have had to pay that interest whether it had entered Confederation or not. There is no question about that. The same is true of the province of Nova Scotia, from which I come. We had a debt at the time of Confederation. We entered into Confederation on the distinct understanding that we would pay the interest on that debt, and it has been charged against us down through the years.

While the honourable senator presented a very fine picture from his point of view, he did not present what the great majority of Newfoundlanders would consider as a very fine picture. We have heard about the delegation which came to Ottawa, carried out negotiations, and entered into a certain agreement. I propose to give tomorrow my layman's understanding or definition of what an agreement is. As to the agreement itself, I believe the people of Newfoundland must have been fairly well satisfied with the negotiators and, particularly with the Premier of Newfoundland, for they returned him to office with a very handsome majority. Certainly down through the years since 1949 they have shown their very loyal support of the same gentleman who is so widely known as "Joey Smallwood".

With that comment I will conclude my remarks on second reading.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Honourable senators, I had intended speaking on second reading of this bill, but I do not wish to delay the house at this late hour. I am not opposed to the bill, but I have a few general remarks that I wish to make, and therefore I reserve the right to speak on third reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Next sitting.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I understood from information that I was able to gather that there was a possibility Parliament might prorogue late tomorrow night. For that reason, I decided it was necessary for us to sit this afternoon. For the same reason, I think it will be necessary for us to sit again tomorrow. There will be further speeches on the Newfoundland bill, as well as on the report of the Special Committee on Land Use in Canada.

With leave of the house, may we now revert to motions?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave, I now move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until tomorrow, Saturday, July 18, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Saturday, July 18, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the report on the Public Archives for the years 1955-1958. (English text).

NEWFOUNDLAND ADDITIONAL GRANTS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Lionel Choquette moved the third reading of Bill C-72, an Act to provide for the payment of additional grants to the Province of Newfoundland.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, you will recall that yesterday, after the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins) had made his excellent address on his native province of Newfoundland, I made a few brief remarks and stated that I hoped to enlarge on them today on the motion for third reading. I did that because I certainly did not wish to hold up the second reading of the bill. Nor do I intend today to throw any obstacle in the way of third reading, but, coming from the province of Nova Scotia, and being of the same mind and in the same position as I understand a good many Newfoundlanders themselves are, I thought I should give a little background material, not as brilliant as that given by the honourable senator from St. John's East, in an attempt to show the atmosphere of the 1867 period and its effect on the Maritime provinces.

I hesitate—especially after yesterday's sitting, which it could be said was ladies' afternoon—to mention my age, but I was born in 1885, about 18 years after the Confederation terms were agreed on in Nova Scotia, so I am 74 now. I recall that in my early school days the Confederation terms were a very live topic in Nova Scotia, and I think in other parts of the Maritimes. I believe that a feeling similar to that which there was in the Maritimes then exists in Newfoundland today. I remember, as I am sure every Nova Scotia senator does, that the fine Nova Scotian flag—of which our province is the proud possessor having been awarded the privilege of flying it in 1621—used to be flown at half-mast on Dominion Day. That was because of the feeling created by the terms of Confederation.

The more one reads of the history of the Maritime provinces, the more one becomes imbued with the thought that perhaps we in the Maritimes did not get what some might regard as our just dues. I was not and have never been one of those who preached blue ruin. Being of a rather optimistic frame of mind, I did not subscribe to that view, nor do I now. We sometimes hear in the Maritimes references to central and upper Canada for the purpose of creating in the minds of Upper Canadians the suspicion that everything was not as it should have been in the treatment that Nova Scotia received after Confederation. I think that same attitude exists to some extent in Newfoundland at present. This is borne out by newspaper reports and editorials.

It is very interesting to note references that were made during the debates in the other place on July 13, 14 and 15 to historical background contained in the report made in 1939 to the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate by the former Parliamentary Counsel and Law Clerk of the Senate, the late Mr. W. F. O'Connor. There one gets a picture of the feeling which prevailed in Newfoundland years ago on proposals for union with Canada.

One could not help but be impressed with the stand taken by the Premier of Newfoundland after the announcement made by the Prime Minister of Canada on April 1. I rather took exception yesterday to the manner in which the honourable senator from St. John's East referred to the draping of public buildings in St. John's with crepe on April 1. As he interpreted it, that action was a protest against Union. I stated yesterday that from my reading—my careful reading, I would say—I did not look at it in that way. It is borne out by the newspapers of Newfoundland, particularly of St. John's Newfoundland, that this was not the case. It was, rather, a case of regret at the announcement made by the Prime Minister, the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker. I think that should be made clear. There has been a great deal of misunderstanding in regard to the general situation so far as Newfoundland is concerned. To me the whole matter of the grants rests, as the bill states, on Term 29. The honourable senator from Ottawa East (Hon. Mr. Choquette) explained the bill very clearly, but after he had finished his speech I asked him to read the closing words of subclause (2) of clause 3, namely, "on the 1st day of January next thereafter".

The honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) who followed the honourable senator from Ottawa East, was asked a question by the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt). The Leader of the Opposition was a little more polite than

I might have been, or, perhaps a little more diplomatic. I think I would have answered differently, because my idea of the meaning of the word "thereafter" is quite definite.

I looked up the meaning of certain other words—"agreement", "treaty" and "mutual understanding"—just so that I would have the meanings at hand in case I was asked any questions as to how I would interpret them. However, I will not deal with these now.

In dealing with the bill I want to refer to the feeling which used to prevail in Nova Scotia and perhaps still does to a limited extent. Just a few days ago I read in a New Brunswick paper an account of an address by Dr. J. W. Reid, a very well-known Nova Scotian doctor. I will not weary you with the account in detail, but he made one or two statements which I should like to quote.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: What is the date?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I am sorry to say that I was unable to find the date, but it was some time last week.

> Nova Scotia must bear some of the blame for Mr. Smallwood's unhappy position, for we who, nearly a century ago, entered the enticing garden of Confederation only to hear the iron clank of the confederate gate lock shut behind us, and see the door to the warmth, comfort and prosperity of the inner sanctum of industry slammed shut in our faces forever, have lived to see a flourishing trade done to its death by the hand of a murderous tariff; have been seen a proud and prosperous people impoverished to satisfy the greed of our "Upper Canadian" masters.

Now, I do not fully subscribe to that. I just place it on record to show the feeling which still exists in some sections of the Maritimes. I wish to create an atmosphere that will help you to understand more fairly the position Premier Smallwood finds himself in today as a result of the announcement made by the Prime Minister of Canada on April 1 this year, and the introduction of this bill by the Finance Minister a few days ago.

Dr. Reid goes on:

> When I think how this courageous man, this valiant premier, is almost single-handedly struggling with Ottawa to secure the recognition and rights of these Atlantic provinces, and how he came to Halifax to plead with Nova Scotia for moral, spiritual and political assistance in his efforts for Newfoundland, only to find our public men engaged elsewhere . . .

Further on he says:

> In the face of our strange indifference, it is not much wonder, come election time, that Mr. Smallwood seems disinclined to send many of his children to school at Diefenboys Hall, for the sting of an unjust "switch" is not a punishment that a free and able man esteems or endures!

Thus it can be seen there is some feeling in the Maritimes in respect to this bill.

On July 13, 14 and 15, during hours when the Senate was not in session, I listened to the debates in the House of Commons on this bill, and I think I can say without fear of contradiction that five of the seven Newfoundland members who spoke were wholeheartedly in favour of the idea of Confederation, as opposed to the thoughts expressed yesterday by the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins) who, I would take it, was very much opposed to the idea. In fact, one Newfoundland member informed me that Senator Higgins was known as an anti-Confederate and had stumped the country to make his views known. I do not say this in an unkindly way, but I want to place the two sides of the picture before the house so that honourable senators may be in a better position to judge the merits of the bill, particularly in regard to Term 29.

I mentioned that I had looked up the meaning of the word "agreement". I think it is well understood that Newfoundland and the Dominion of Canada entered into an agreement that was along the same lines as the agreement entered into with Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in 1867. I am not a lawyer, but just a plain ordinary businessman, a layman, and the interpretation I have, which was given to me some years ago by a legal firm, is that an agreement is an arrangement or contract entered into between two parties, and that legally it stands until both parties agree to discontinue it.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: May I interrupt to ask my honourable friend a question?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Did the law firm which furnished this definition explain that there should be consenus ad idem, and that both parties must understand the terms of the agreement before it becomes a binding contract?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Yes, I believe those were the last few words the firm used after giving me the definition in general layman's language. I think that general understanding of an agreement is as good today as it was then. However, to make certain I looked up the meaning in my office dictionary, which stated that an agreement is a mutual understanding, a covenant, a treaty, a contract legally binding all parties. Therefore I say that the agreement entered into between Newfoundland and Canada is along the same lines as the Confederation agreement of 1866. The honourable senator from Ottawa East explained what that undertaking was in the way of dollars and cents. That is set out by section 2 of the bill, which reads as follows:

There shall be paid to the Province of Newfoundland out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund in respect of the fiscal years set forth in this section, additional grants as follows:

Fiscal year 1957-58	$6,600,000
Fiscal year 1958-59	6,950,000
Fiscal year 1959-60	7,300,000
Fiscal year 1960-61	7,650,000
Fiscal year 1961-62	8,000,000

These additional grants amount to a total of $36,500,000.

Section 3 sets out when these additional grants shall be paid, and it ends with the word "thereafter". I hope now to give my answer to the question put by the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt).

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I shall be very happy to have it.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: My interpretation is that the grants shall continue until such time as the Province of Newfoundland and the federal Government meet and decide upon some other arrangement, or until the financial resources of Newfoundland become so improved that the grants should be reduced or increased.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I fully agree with the honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I prefer the statement which the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) made a couple of days ago.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I believe certain questions were raised in regard to the subsidies of the various provinces. I looked in the estimates for 1959-60, and under Department of Finance, at page 23, I found that Newfoundland by statutory authority was given a grant of $1,560,133 out of a total of $20 million for all the provinces. The amounts are all set out in detail, and with permission of the house I will place them on record. The details are also shown on page 43 under Department of Finance Public Accounts.

ESTIMATES 1959-60, PAGE 23

SUBSIDIES TO PROVINCES

(British North America Acts 1867-1952 and other statutory authority)

	1959-60
Newfoundland	$ 1,569,133
Prince Edward Island	656,932
Nova Scotia	2,056,838
New Brunswick	1,679,022
Quebec	3,300,869
Ontario	3,640,940
Manitoba	2,051,584
Saskatchewan	2,089,375
Alberta	2,352,575
British Columbia	1,281,319
	20,678,587

Before the house opened this afternoon I told the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) that I had a lot of material. I have not had an opportunity since yesterday to select the most important points, but I am going to refer to some newspaper clippings, and am sure the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins) will not suspect I am taking these from unfriendly sources. I wish to point out at this time that when the Confederation idea was advocated by those who were responsible for it, it must have met with general favour by the great majority of the people of Newfoundland, because they have had three, or possibly four, elections since 1949, and in every case Mr. Smallwood was returned by an overwhelming majority. Certainly Mr. Smallwood could not be looked upon as an anti-Confederate. If anything, perhaps he is a little too rabid in his views in so far as Confederation is concerned. He thought he was doing a wonderful thing for Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Well, didn't he do a wonderful thing?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I think he is a wonderful man.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Didn't he do a wonderful thing for Newfoundland when he brought about Confederation?

Hon Mr. Isnor: Oh, I think he did. That is where you differ from your colleague from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins).

Hon. Mr. Higgins: He is not a Newfoundlander, you know.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: However, I will pass that for the time being. I shall now refer to an editorial which appeared in the Daily News, published in St. John's, Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Is my honourable friend going to read a lot of editorials to us? I have been stopped several times for trying to do the same thing.

The Hon. the Speaker: The honourable senator is not supposed to do so. He may read excerpts, however, if they are not long.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is quite in order to give a summary.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I would not attempt to read all I have in my hand.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am sure Mr. Speaker would not rule out all editorials.

The Hon. the Speaker: No. In a speech it is not permissible to read editorials in extenso. The honourable senator may give a summary of the arguments in editorials—that is, he may summarize in his own words.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I like my own words best.

The Hon. the Speaker: We all do.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I contribute articles to the Halifax Herald three days a week, sometimes six days a week. The difference between a contributor who writes under his own name and myself, who does not, is that he gets paid for his articles, whereas I have to pay for mine as though they were advertisements.

I have here an editorial entitled, "This Giving and Getting". We have heard a lot about Newfoundland being on the receiving end—getting everything and giving nothing in return. The newspaper from which I am quoting is a well-known supporter of those who were against Confederation in the early days. It takes a different view in this editorial, from which I shall now quote:

> Canada wanted Newfoundland. She needed this island to round out the dominion and relieve her from the fear of American encroachments and influence.

That was mentioned yesterday, and I think there is something in that. We all know that during World War II a 99-year lease was entered into with the United States with the thought in mind that by using Newfoundland as a base we could erect fortifications which it would be very nice to have. Similarly, in Mr. Mackenzie King's day Canada called upon Newfoundland in much the same way, as I think perhaps also the Mother Country did. The honourable senator from St. John's East referred yesterday to the Union which the negotiators took only two months to make, whereas the McNair Royal Commission on Newfoundland finances took two years to complete its report. That is not surprising, because the negotiators had as a background for the preparation of the agreement the British North America Acts, agreements and debates, which they were able to study long before, as well as the terms suggested by Mr. Mackenzie King.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would the honourable senator tell us what paper the editorial is taken from?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: The Daily News, of St. John's, Newfoundland. It is a very well-known paper.

In point of fact, Newfoundland has received nothing that is not part of the services which the federal Government provides proportionately for all provinces, or at least for certain other provinces. There are no distinct privileges accorded to Newfoundland. That is something that seems to be ignored by many who try to make comparisons with what we get from Ottawa in the way of services and returns.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Nor are there any distinct burdens put on Newfoundland. The taxation is the same, as well as the benefits.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Yes, and Union has created a great benefit for the industries of central Canada, to the estimated extent of $200 million to $250 million trade per year. At one time it was suggested that Newfoundland should boycott Canada as far as the purchase of goods is concerned for the purpose of teaching a lesson to the people in central Canada and bringing home to them the fact that Newfoundland is an important part of the country.

Honourable senators, you might almost think I was a Newfoundlander instead of a Nova Scotian, but the cases of the two provinces are so similar that I feel at home in discussing Newfoundland also.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Do you know who suggested the boycott?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Yes, I know who suggested it. I have the information right here, if it will interest you.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes, I would like to know who it was.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: It was Mr. Derrick Bowring.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Bowring's is one of the biggest firms in the world.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Well, that just goes to show you how big some of the people were who spoke like that. However, I am not going to labour this point. There is a lot of good material here that I could speak on, but in view of Mr. Speaker's ruling I certainly would not dare to put myself in wrong.

I would refer honourable senators to a very interesting article which appeared in the Edmonton Journal of April 4, 1959 and was reproduced in the St. John's Daily News of April 23. This article sums up the situation as understood by Bruce Hutchison, well-known Canadian writer, and I think you will agree and say that he is very unbiased in his judgment. I read:

> Let us never forget that this nation needs Newfoundland—not because it has rich economic resources yet to be tapped, not even because it introduces a valuable, lively and lovable new strain into the Canadian breed but because our dealings with Newfoundland test our true capacity as a nation, our capacity to weld together a structure of diverse minorities.

I think that is a thought we should bear in mind. We need Newfoundland, but not because of the national resources of Labrador and other parts of the province that in years to come will create added wealth for Canada.

I would like to read also a paragraph from an editorial headed "Mr. Browne's Viewpoint," in the St. John's Daily News of April 30, 1959:

> We get a little weary of being told by mainlanders about the bountiful generosity of the federal Government towards this province. It is a little strange this well-worn tune. His Prime Minister put a gravely distorted picture before the country when he talked recently about the large sums that Newfoundland had received.

Honourable senators, I think I have said enough in regard to the feeling that exists in Newfoundland concerning this bill. As I stated a moment ago, I did not intend to say anything which would lead you to think I was objecting to the bill. However, if it had been presented to us earlier in the session I certainly would have placed before the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) amendments designed to make clear what is meant by the provisions of Term 29 and to safeguard Newfoundland's future, and I would have sought permission to introduce the amendments. I think Newfoundlanders are entitled to know just what the royal commissioners meant by the word "thereafter". I repeat, my interpretation is that the grants should be continued at the maximum amount for a further period after 1962, or until such time as the two parties, namely, the Newfoundland Government and the federal Government, have come to some distinct understanding.

The explanatory note to the bill reads:

> The purpose of this bill is to authorize the payment of additional annual grants to the Province of Newfoundland in accordance with the scale contained in the report of the Royal Commission on Newfoundland Finances that was appointed as required by Term 29 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada.

I am not going to vote against the bill nor obstruct its passage, for by so doing I would be adding to the troubles of Newfoundland.

I appeal to the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) to convey these thoughts to the Government as representing an unbiased view of a Nova Scotian with respect to this bill, who is in sympathy with the feeling concerning it that exists in the Maritimes.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, I must say that I greatly enjoyed the speech of the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins), and I think I can understand his views, particularly since I am an anti-Confederate myself, though from a different province and for a different reason.

Concerning the legislation itself, I have no comments to make. Nothing I could say would add particularly to what has already been said here and elsewhere. But I can't help thinking that it is another demonstration of the feeling that has developed in the past, and in my judgment will continue to develop in the future, from this absurd and ridiculous situation we have allowed to grow up in Canada of one Government collecting the money and giving it to other governments to spend—governments which have had no responsibility whatever for collecting it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: That system has turned at least eight of the ten provinces of Canada into suppliants, begging from the federal Government a part of what that Government has collected and which the provinces feel belongs to them. The process results in endless controversy and ill feeling, and in my judgment it will be worse in the immediate future than it has been in the past.

So I say to my honourable friend from St. John's East, let him have no fear that the position of his province in these financial controversies is any different from that of other provinces. His province joins very excellent company in Canada, all members of which are in the same position, in varying degree. I am not at all sure that this controversy applies to only eight provinces; it may apply to the whole ten. Ontario has recently entered into the discussion, and of course Quebec has for some time made its position felt. Indeed, I think Mr. Duplessis has shown a more logical approach to the problem than have all the other negotiators for the provinces and the federal Government for some time past. He puts it on this simple basis: "Give us our own tax area, and we will collect our own taxes and pay our own expenses. We don't want the federal Government mixing up in our responsibility for education, roads and the like."

In that attitude Mr. Duplessis is quite right. The only difficulty with his approach is that he stops in the middle of the stream. He should realize that to give the various provinces their own tax jurisdictions at this time, which would seem to any sensible man the proper thing to do, and to allow them to collect their own taxes and meet their own expenses would, under the present set-up, be inequitable, because the fiscal system of Canada is so loaded that it would give certain areas a tremendous advantage over other areas which, despite their intelligence and resources, would have no opportunity for equal development.

So, in varying degrees as it applies to the provinces, we have built up a ridiculous and absurd system in Canada. Let us look at what is going on today. Every time one picks up a newspaper he reads of a new demand being made on the federal Government for a contribution toward some responsibility with which that Government has nothing to do, such as education, highways and many other fields.

Whether, on the ground of necessity, the responsible parties will get together, I do not know. But we have reached what might be called, if it were not so serious, a ludicrous situation. I was amused at the exchange of views at a recent conference. Mr. Duplessis said: "I don't want any more conferences; I want cash." And the Minister of Finance replied: "I feel the same way. I don't want any more conferences, but I have no cash."

It seems to me, honourable senators, that sooner or later the intelligence of the people of this country ought to assert itself, in order to make some permanent and lasting arrangement that would replace the present absurd situation.

I said that I liked the speech of my honourable friend from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins), because I was an anti-Confederate, although I came from a different province and held that view for a different reason. I understand and sympathize with what was stated by my honourable friend about the way Newfoundland was brought into Confederation. In Nova Scotia our objection to Confederation was not on that ground. It was on the ground that because Canada, geographically speaking, was a long narrow strip of land along the United States border—although at that time it consisted largely of Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime provinces—it was most certain to change our relative position in Confederation to our disadvantage.

On previous occasions I have told the Senate that I well remember my grandfather taking down the flag on July 1, reverently, I must admit, and at the same time muttering to us children who were following him that he would not allow it to fly on that day. He was right in his attitude. The system we have today, as I have said, has changed at least eight of the ten provinces of Canada into suppliants and poor relations.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Which two are not suppliants?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: One of the provinces is the province from which my honourable friend comes; the other is Quebec.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What about British Columbia, a very prosperous province?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: No. It is one of the eight provinces which are affected to a varying degree; each is to a greater or lesser extent in the same position.

I am suggesting that in these modern times the system has to be changed: we have to enter into a larger trading area where through its natural resources each province will be able to stand on its own feet. I am in no way casting reflections upon the central provinces because of the great advantages they enjoy, or because of their geographical location. I would say otherwise, that in the time since Confederation, with the difficulties that we have been in, we have never failed to receive most generous response on the part of the central provinces. They have contributed tremendous sums of money. They have acquiesced in all sorts of devices to ameliorate our position. For instance, there have been increased subsidies and subventions; and so far as the west is concerned, the central provinces have acquiesced in such things as the Crowsnest Pass rates. We have set up all sorts of devices; I think we have built up a checker-board of finance that would dazzle anyone who endeavoured to follow its ramifications.

That, in my judgment, is all wrong. I will go further and say that there will be no permanent settlement of this difficult financial position we are in today until our fiscal position is changed. I will go still further and say that there will be no satisfactory settlement of the economic position of this country until we in Canada have joined some larger trading area and follow the pattern of what is happening all over the world today. It is just impossible for a country of 17 millions of people to continue as a self-contained unit, and to put the tax burden upon the consumers of the country. The basis for that statement is apparent in what is happening elsewhere throughout the whole western world.

So, I say to my honourable friend that I am interested in his position. I have not the slightest intention of commenting further on this specific legislation, but I believe that unless the present system is changed there will be enormous bitterness and countless controversies between the provinces and the federal authority as to the division of revenues, and all of that will injure and delay the real development of Canada, economically and otherwise.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of privilege. I hope honourable senators will not mind my saying one word in answer to remarks of the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor), who stated yesterday:

> However, I do want to mention one other matter. The honourable senator from St. John's East emphasized the fact that interest payments are being made by the province of Newfoundland on its outstanding debt. Well, Newfoundland would have had to pay that interest whether it had entered Confederation or not.

With regard to that I say, first, I never emphasized the fact that Newfoundland was making interest payments; secondly, I never said it was a fact; thirdly, it is not a fact. I thought my remarks were quite clear, so clear that nobody could misunderstand them on that point. I said the per caput national debt of Canada was $960.31, and the per caput debt of Newfoundland was $125. So why should we have to pay interest the same as Nova Scotia did?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: If I may be permitted I would answer that.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

LAND USE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, July 16, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Pearson for adoption of the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Land Use in Canada.

Hon. Henri C. Bois: Honourable senators, I do not intend to speak at length on this matter. I merely wish to draw your attention to certain aspects of the task which was intrusted to the Special Committee on Land Use in Canada. In so doing my only objective is to contribute, to the extent of my ability, to the creation of a more favourable climate of public opinion concerning farmers in general, and, more particularly, owners of marginal lands.

This condition is indispensable, in my opinion, to the successful conclusion of the work of this committee. But, first of all, I wish to offer my congratulations to the honourable senator from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson) who brilliantly presented this report. I wish also to congratulate our Civil Service collaborators upon the efficiency and devotion they have shown.

The problems caused by farms with low or insufficient revenues are not new. Those who have studied the history of agriculture in all countries know that the difficulties encountered by a certain category of farmers have been the subject of detailed research from time immemorial. That they were encountered several thousand years before Christ is proven by archaeological discoveries. The Greeks and Romans, as is evidenced in their writings, were intent upon improving the living conditions of the small land owners. Similar efforts were attempted during the Middle Ages, and during the Renaissance period, and are still being attempted today in most of our countries.

This is not a problem peculiar to Canada, or to any of its provinces in particular. This is a world-wide problem which exists on a permanent basis with, from time to time, more acute crises resulting from many causes, political, social and economic, or simply a rapid development of industrial and technological sciences which spurs industrial expansion and often interferes with the progress of agriculture.

Thus, in the United States there are approximately 2,700,000 farms whose cash revenue is less than $2,500 per annum, and those farms contribute only 9 per cent of the total sales of agricultural products in the United States. In this figure are included 576,000 so-called farms which are operated on a part-time basis, and 897,000 farms which are termed "residential". How many of these 2,700,000 farms really belong to the category of farms which produce insufficient revenue? John D. Black of the University of Harvard in 1956 estimated their number at 1,800,000.

After having attempted to establish the exact situation in this country the Special Committee on Land Use in Canada stated in its report:

> All the evidence presented to the committee indicates that it is impossible with our present knowledge to give a precise answer to the number of problem small farms in Canada and in the different provinces.

There are three main reasons for this conclusion:

1. There is no general agreement as to what constitutes a minimum acceptable standard of living.

2. Full information with respect to non-farm income, that is, income obtained from work off the farm, is not available.

3. Statistics are not available in sufficient details to show the number and location of these farms. In the end, it was decided to take the figures of the 1956 Census of Agriculture, which show that 20 per cent of all farms in Canada are non-commercial farms with an estimated potential gross annual value in production of crops and live stock —including farm products consumed in the home—of less than $1,200. There were 120,242 of these farms in all Canada. I think this figure is as accurate as any that can be established.

A problem arises when one wishes to determine just what is meant by the word "acceptable" or the term "reasonable standard of living". How does $1,200 a year permit a standard of living which is either reasonable or acceptable?

There are other values besides material values. Down through the years a certain mode of life was developed in the civilization of older countries, and even in our own country, but this mode of life has disappeared, much to the regret of most sociologists. One sure fact is that in the Maritime provinces and the province of Quebec, as well as in the older districts of Ontario, one can still find people who have contributed, or whose parents have contributed, in no small measure to the progress of our country. Those persons are, or were, natives of districts where farm revenues have never been very high. It seems that we should revise our opinion and appreciation of this class.

I also wish to emphasize the following point. Many people think that the decrease in the number of farmers is a bad omen. On this subject it will be noted that any increase in the production capacity of farmers necessarily leads to a reduction in their number unless, in my opinion, unlimited markets are made available on a permanent basis. This is not the present case, which cannot continue on a permanent basis. A growing number of farmers' sons and daughters are benefiting from technical progress in the agricultural domain, and they must find employment that is useful to the community while earning a decent living. The decrease in the number of people whose work and services are necessary to satisfy the primary needs of their fellow-citizens is a good measure in itself. This migration from the farm must proceed in an orderly fashion so as to allow those who so migrate to find a proper abode in town or elsewhere.

(Translation):

Honourable senators, desirable though this move is, it must be a planned one—and planned it can be! You must think of these people not so much as guilty parties, but rather as victims. I do not wish to lay an indictment. There are all sorts of causes for this emigration. I will mention one about which I can certainly not be reproached in any way, and which is quite uncontroversial. I am speaking of a purely historical cause which has given rise to our present complaining; it arises from scientific, industrial, commercial, agricultural, and other changes. When the East of Canada was settled, the opening up of the thick forests, so hard to clear, and situated on land even harder to develop, required many years of hard work. One can well imagine that it took a lifetime to develop a lot of, say, 75, 100, or 120 arpents (the normal sizes of the first concessions). For decades these people had no opportunity of economizing. On they went, handing down from father to son, and some of these families have remained in the same lots, in Quebec, for a matter of two, two and a half, three centuries, and I could give you the names of families of some of my colleagues whose forefathers were among the first settlers. These people lived, economized, and took part in the country's activities, and they gave of their best. The type of life they had to adopt, and the obligation they sensed of developing all the standards necessary for success as settlers, made sterling men out of them.

And it is today the descendants of those who, I would say, were the most resolute in playing their full part, who, impoverished by the competition from other parts of the country and unable to keep abreast of developments because of lack of capital, these are the people who, today, are so disadvantageously placed.

And one can wonder how it is possible to help them. Can you take a farm, say, in the south-east of Quebec or the Maritime provinces, of 80, 90 or 100 arpents, and make a going concern out of it? It can be done.

That has been quietly going on for more than 30 years in Quebec, without capital, in that there is no specific type of credit, and the people give of their best in endurance, courage and intelligence and manage to do what they are told.

This undertaking comes under the Department of Agriculture; it has been called—I don't know why—"Concours de Fermes"—farm competition. Eight thousand Quebec farms have been thus affected, and the results achieved so far have been more than satisfactory.

That is an initial solution. Is it as rapid, as effective as it could be, if assistance came from elsewhere? I think one would do well to enhance these farms by giving more attention to their financial requirements, while at the same time it would be advantageous to "organize"—and that is a word which can provoke prolonged discussion in Quebec, but I use it just the same—to "organize" the employment placing of the sons and daughters of farmers who, for a host of reasons, cannot or do not wish to stay on the land, or at least to do agricultural work. This would not be very expensive, but it would still entail some disbursement on the part of public authorities, whether municipal, provincial or federal. It would be a matter of looking after departures. After taking note of the ability of each person, as I said a moment ago, they would have to be guided toward other occupations of their choice, and given training facilities in industry or elsewhere for the kind of work these farmers' sons and daughters wanted to do. Care would also have to be taken to preserve the homestead, to promote its development, its earning potential, its credit facilities—not the sort of credit which is granted on the mere filling-in of a form, but rather after consideration of each case and under supervision as to its use. In other words, the necessary money should be placed at the disposal of the farmer and the use he makes of it supervised. By the same token, men who had the ability to do this work would also have to be trained. There are some in all the provinces, but maybe not enough of them.

And finally, the public and the public authorities would have to stop considering these people as misfits who have not managed to make a success under conditions where others have, which, psychologically speaking, is a great hindrance to the accomplishment of that kind of work.

Some of this work has already been done and, if I may be allowed, I would like to speak of a personal experience. About thirty years ago I was searching for means of increasing the farm income in some poorer districts. In many cases, I could find absolutely nothing which could improve the lot of these people, who lacked both money and technical training, although they were as honest and had as much courage as anyone else, and were able and willing to work.

I moved a few. As far as I can remember, there were eleven of them and out of that number only one met with failure. All the others succeeded magnificently because they had better lands and because they had not lost the habit of working.

Although it may not be conclusive, an experiment of the same kind is conducted in the case of veterans' re-establishment on the farm. Veterans are granted loans and the use to which they put the money is supervised and directed.

So that this inevitable emigration could be channeled, and directed, it could operate in the interest of the country, provided it is properly co-ordinated.

Those people cannot be forsaken. We older people know what that means. Most of them have reached the end of their tether.

It is high time that we thought of establishing them under more favourable conditions, in order that they may become happier citizens and fulfil their task more easily.

I would like to quote an extract from a brief which, to my mind, summarizes very aptly the farmer's insecure condition, for which he is not alone to blame. This brief was submitted by the two main farm organizations of Quebec: La Coopérative fédérée de Québec and the Union catholique des cultivateurs. It has even been said that the virtue of prudence which characterizes the farmer takes its origin in the insecurity of his condition. I quote:

> Being required to make advances in the form of work or of capital, uncertain as to the result of his work, dependent upon the qualities or faults of the land he tills, exposed to the havoc which insects and disease may bring to his crops and livestock, the farmer must also very often resort to his own ingenuity to protect himself against the vagaries of the weather: late seeding because of cold or rain, damaged crops because of excessive rainfall, early frost, etc.

I could hardly give a more concise explanation of the farmer's insecurity and of the fear that accompanies it. Some may see there the source of the farmer's sense of thrift. He never knows in the spring, however great may be his capital advances or the quality and cost of the work he has done, what he will reap. He may hope for the best, he may make an average estimate and he does, but still he may lose his crop. That may have been his experience for several years when his crops were destroyed by insects or disease which he did not manage to control, or by bad weather. He has to take things as they come and pay the cost. But his fixed charges remain, as do his family obligations. It must be recognized however, that he generally pays his debts as faithfully and as quickly as anyone else. He can claim no tax deduction because the farm is not up to scratch, or because it was not a good season or because markets were not favourable.

In short, and this is what arises from the report which my honourable friend from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson) introduced, the basic problem is that the farmer, for a host of reasons—some of which may be under his control, but many of which are quite beyond his control—finds himself in receipt of a portion of the national income which he considers too small or inequitable.

And furthermore, it is hardly creditable to us that we have not been able yet to find a method other than that of leaving men prey to harsh economic laws. We are told it is "the survival of the fittest". We should know the exact meaning ascribed to the word "fittest", if we are not to argue at cross purposes. First and foremost, it is not Christian to leave men to the play of economic laws, nor is it a social proposition. What is called for in the report of the Committee on Land Use is that the problem be looked at in another way. That is to say, we should look at things as they are—rather than as we would like them to be. In broaching the problem in this way, and in seeking its solution earnestly, I think we will succeed. And in saying this I believe I express the opinion of the committee members. We would manage to keep a large agricultural community, which no doubt would become smaller as time went on, but it would be pleased with its lot, and able to play its full part in our country's life.

(Text):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Will the honourable senator permit a question? He said at the beginning of his speech that in Canada there are 120,000 farmers who have incomes of less than $1,200 a year.

Hon. Mr. Bois: Yes, and there are 36,000 or 38,000 in the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, our colleague from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Bois) has delivered a splendid speech and I congratulate him. I hope all honourable senators who do not understand French will read the translation of his speech in Hansard.

Our colleague is a well-experienced agronomist in the province of Quebec. He has worked with farmers all his life, and as a result knows not only the work farmers have to do, but he knows soils. In addition, he was general manager of a big co-operative association in the province of Quebec known as the Co-Opérative Fédérée de Québec. He therefore knows the problems of the farmer from all sides, the practical side, the working side, and the revenue side.

I hope that in future our colleague will favour us with more excellent speeches such as the one he has given this afternoon.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, I will say just a few words, as I do not wish to delay adoption of this report. I rise at this time because the honourable senator from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson), the Chairman of the Land Use Committee, is not here today.

I will not attempt to repeat anything that has already been said by both the chairman of the committee (Hon. Mr. Pearson) and the vice-chairman, the honourable senator from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Bois), because each has given a clear-cut account of the workings of the committee. I do, however, want to express one thought. I am a little disappointed in the progress that this committee has made, having been functioning now for some two and a half years. The recommendations of the committee have not been too clear, concise, or definite.

I reach that conclusion perhaps by reason of the fact that I have worked in the field of development and administration of agriculture for a quarter of my lifetime or more, and I probably see more clearly than do some other members of the committee the absolute need of agriculture. To illustrate what I mean I would like to give this reference: We have the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, for the benefit of western Canada. We have for the benefit of the Maritime provinces the Maritime Marshlands Reclamation Act. Now, we should be able to recommend to the Government one national farm assistance act with sufficient flexibility that it could be applied to any problem such as, for instance, the conservation of water in a dry area, or the procurement of water in another section, or the matter of soil conservation, a problem that is becoming quite serious in certain sections of Canada. The problems are numerous and complex.

As it is, the committee felt it was not in a position to make definite recommendations at the present time. I do hope that in the future this committee will be given sufficient time to study our farm problems more thoroughly and completely, and to review, if necessary, what action is being taken to solve the problems that exist across Canada, so that some definite recommendations can be made. Because of vast technological advances that are going on continuously and changes which are taking place rapidly, it is quite difficult to make recommendations on a long-term basis, but I think there are one or two problems on which the committee should take a definite stand.

But my main purpose for rising at this time, in the absence of the chairman of the committee, is to point out that several provincial departments of Government were inadvertently omitted from the list of witnesses heard and set out in the appendix to the committee's report as printed in our records. I would ask that the names of the witnesses omitted be now incorporated in both Hansard and the Minutes of the Proceedings, so that the persons concerned will not think we have forgotten them or failed to give them full credit for their contributions to the study made by the committee.

The names omitted are as follows:

Printed Proceedings No. 8

Mr. J. Ferguson, Past President, Ontario Federation of Agriculture. Mr. Kirk, Secretary, C.F.A.

NOVA SCOTIA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND MARKETING

The Honourable E. D. Haliburton, Minister.

Printed Proceedings No. 9

BRITISH COLUMBIA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The Honourable M. P. Steacy, Minister.

NEW BRUNSWIK DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. R. D. Gilbert, Deputy Minister.

Printed Proceedings No. 10

MANITOBA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND CONSERVATION

The Honourable E. F. Willis, Minister. Mr. L. B. Kristjanson, Extension Economist. Mr. J. Parker, Director, Soils and Crops Branch.

Printed Proceedings No. 11

ONTARIO DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Dr. H. L. Patterson, Director, Farm Economics and Statistics Branch. Dr. N. R. Richards, Head, Department of Soils, Ontario Agricultural College.

For complete list of witnesses, including those named above, see p. 1087.

Report adopted.

INFLATION

REPORT OF FINANCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, July 15, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Emerson for adoption of the report of the Standing Committee on Finance on the Threat of Inflation in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I understand that the Honourable Senator Monette would like to say something with regard to this report, but he can only do so with the consent of the Senate. The order now stands in the name of the Honourable Senator Hugessen.

The Hon. the Speaker: I am sure the Honourable Senator Hugessen would yield to the Honourable Senator Monette in this instance with unanimous consent of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, that is agreeable, on the understanding that if the session goes over into next week Senator Hugessen will not lose the right to speak.

(Translation):

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, the Senate is just about to finish its very important task concerning the general economy of the country. Our Finance Committee has now brought to a close its inquiry into and consideration of the question of inflation, which gave rise in Parliament, and especially in our Chamber to a discussion of very high calibre and awakened a large number of our parliamentarians and, indirectly, some public opinion.

As early as January of this year, as may be seen from page 33 of the Senate Hansard, the Leader of the Opposition in this Chamber (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) pointed in most serious though well-guarded terms to the danger of inflation which, in his opinion, was beclouding the future of our country.

(Text):

Honourable senators, I was just saying in French that in January of this year the honourable Leader of the Opposition, (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) was pointing in most serious, though well-guarded, terms to the danger of inflation which in his opinion was beclouding the future of our country.

He said:

> But the Government must give leadership, and that cannot be done by minimizing the importance of this problem, or by saying, for example, "It isn't as bad as some people think", nor by calling it "really only creeping inflation". In combatting the rising tendency the Government must give the necessary leadership, and people are expecting that leadership from the Government.

He continues:

> The former administration did face up to that issue and give the necessary leadership. When the present administration came into power it adopted a financial policy which was a direct reversal of the policy of the former administration. And with what dire results! I have not any doubt, honourable senators, that if the present administration had followed the financial policies of the St. Laurent Government under its able Minister of Finance, the Honourable Walter Harris, we should not have had either the unemployment or the inflation which today beclouds the future of our country . . . today we are seeing an upward spiral of inflation during a period of recession and high unemployment. That is where the danger lies.

Honourable senators, that was an important, and no doubt sincere, warning implying serious fears about the economic future of our country, especially in the hands of the present Government. The reading of it in retrospective does not diminish the admiration and great esteem I have had for the honourable senator since I was called to this house. His fears may now appear to have been too great at the time; but they were expressed sincerely, in a high sense of duty.

After that warning the question of inflation has remained in this house under constant consideration. So on February 25 the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) moved that our Standing Committee on Finance be instructed to study this question of inflation. Speaking on the motion, he said:

> It is an insidious technique of literally stealing money without the embarrassment of identifying the victims or too closely pointing out the beneficiaries. Holders of savings accounts, bonds, pensions, annuities and insurance policies are being systematically and inexorably victimized. Only the organized, the influential and the knowledgeable, and governments, are able to benefit from these extra dollars, and they do so, wittingly or unwittingly, at the expense of their weaker fellow citizens who are not in a position to enforce their just demands for an equitable share of this inflated national product.

I have already expressed myself with regard to that paragraph, and I need not comment further.

The motion was debated in this chamber for a long time. A great number of speeches were delivered on the subject, many of them quite severe and apprehensive, some not so discouraging, but all of them, no doubt, sincere and showing great attention to the interests of our country.

The committee was ordered to hold the inquiry, and it has just presented its report, which is attached as an appendix to Hansard of July 14.

I read from the first page of the committee's report:

> The committee sought the assistance of both competent individual authorities and of representative groups in the community.

The committee heard some 44 witnesses.

Reading further from the report:

> The evidence placed before the committee, as published in its proceedings, does itself constitute a most valuable contribution to the discussion and elucidation of a problem of great social and economic significance to the future welfare and progress of our country.

Honourable senators, I need not try to add anything to the atmosphere of satisfaction, which no doubt is unanimous in this house as to the exhaustive search made by the committee, the clear and most substantial conclusions of the report, expressed in adequate and impressive language. And I wish to join in the remarks made in this respect by the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) and the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig).

I wish to refer to some very important remarks made by our colleague from Shelburne. The honourable gentleman has had an outstanding career in public life. After having served in France in the First Great War he was elected a member of the Nova Scotia Legislature, where he remained until the provincial general election of 1933, in which he was not a candidate. He was summoned to the Senate in 1943, and in the same year was elected President of the National Liberal Federation of Canada. Two years later he was appointed Government Leader in this house and a member of the Privy Council, and in 1953 he was elevated to the Speakership of the Senate, a post he filled with great dignity and ability up to the change of Government in 1957. He had also been elected President of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association in May 1954, and Chairman of the Conference of NATO Parliamentarians in Paris in 1955. Since I was called to this house, in 1957, I have been constantly impressed by the dignity of the honourable senator, his devotion to the interests of the country, and the remarkable speeches he has made from time to time on many topics of paramount importance. It seems to me that his remarks on the report of our committee dealing with the so-called problem of inflation must be given great weight. On page 1052 of Hansard the honourable senator is reported as having said this of the report:

> It presents evidence that over a long period of time increases in the price index generally associated with wars have been compensated by corresponding decreases and have not interfered with great economic growth and development. It comes to grips with the extraordinary conditions that have persisted in Canada since World War II, in which from 1946 to 1958 there has been an overall rise in the consumer price index of 47.5 per cent or 3⅝ per cent per annum. For the past 12 months there has been no appreciable change in the price level.

This, honourable senators, is a fair statement of what is expressed in the report itself. It is there made clear and definite as a fact that this overall rise in the consumer price index of 47.5 per cent has taken place during a period of 12 years, that is, from 1946 to 1958.

We also should give credit to the honourable senator for having made it clear at the same time that:

> For the past 12 months there has been no appreciable change in the price level.

That comment also is very fair, though I might add that the change, not appreciable, as he said, was nevertheless on the improvement side. The process of inflation had been checked.

The honourable senator from Shelburne also commented on another conclusion of the report, that is, the increase of about 46 per cent made by wage earners in their real income, over that period of 12 years. As to that conclusion he said:

> It seems to me to say that organized labour has not only received an amount equal to the rise in the cost of living, but an amount in excess of that, which amount represents almost the whole increase in productivity in manufacturing. Further, it seems to say that the increases in wages and salaries compare favourably with increases in dividends.

The honourable senator continued:

> The point I wish to make, and I regard it as a vital one, is that there might not be as great an advantage in increased prices as there would appear to be at first sight. Our experience over the past twelve years would seem to be that any gain which took place through increased productivity in manufacturing was to a large extent taken up by wages. I hasten to assure honourable senators that it is not my attitude that labour is not entitled to as much as it can get. Indeed, under our competitive system everybody tries to get all he can. But I suggest to honourable senators that if we are to look forward to a period when the consumer will get no benefit whatever, and capital will stand to gain nothing, then the question will arise as to how long the consumer will put up with that condition before he looks for his requirements outside Canada, and before capital begins to think of more profitable places in which to invest.

Again, I am honoured to join in those remarks on the incidence of increase in wages in relation to the whole issue of inflation. In fairness to labour and capital, as well as to the consumer, this problem of the spiral of increases, in wages as well as in the cost of living, has to be made the subject of a very serious and impartial, but firm, investigation. The Government is the supreme power in the nation. On the other hand, labour and, most particularly and distinctly, labour unions, have a power which, due to the importance of majorities in the Parliamentary system, is becoming more and more a state within the state, if it has not already become so—a power distinct from the Government power—and that may appear to be one of the biggest problems confronting our society at this time.

I wish to assure the honourable senator from Shelburne that the veiled implications of his remarks have been well noted and understood, not only by myself but, I am sure, by all honourable senators. No doubt, we all feel that they are, and will be, considered by all persons in authority.

Again, it is worth noting that this state of affairs about steady increases in the real income of wage earners, and the corresponding increases in the cost of living, is distinctly admitted as having obtained during the whole twelve-year period above-mentioned.

I am also deeply impressed, as is the honourable senator himself, by that part of the report illustrated by chart VIII therein reproduced, and showing:

> —the substantial decline (nearly 40%) which has taken place over the post-war period in real value of incomes and investments which were fixed in money terms in 1946. The groups affected by this loss in real value, averaging 3.8% per year, include bondholders, owners of mortgages, pensioners, onwers of life insurance policies, owners of savings accounts in banks etc. The number of persons included in these groups is very large. The committee was informed in the submission of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association that there are "between 1.75 million and 2 million persons covered by employee pension plans; 9.5 million individual savings accounts in the chartered banks; over 2 million owners of Canada Savings Bonds." Mr. A. R. Poyntz, President of the Canadian Life Officers Association, told the committee that "More than eight million Canadians owned $38.6 billion of life insurance at the end of 1958." The Investment Dealers Association in their submission to the committee estimated that "At the end of 1958 there were outstanding some $24.1 billion of Canadian bonds, an estimated $9 billion of mortgages, and $6.8 billion of personal savings deposits . . . a total of $39.9 billion . . . " The size of these figures serves to give some indication of the substantial losses which are brought about by the decline in the real value of money, and of the large number of people who are affected. Of course, the losses of the investors accrue to the benefit of the debtors. The difficulty is that in large part these are not the same persons. In other words the erosion in the real value of money has, over a period of years real value of money has, over a period of years, income, not as the result of deliberate policy, taxation, or productive effort, but, as the silent outcome of the subterfuge or inflation.

One cannot appreciate better than I do the guarded expressions therein used.

On that very serious point the honourable senator from Shelburne made this very serious comment:

> Honourable senators, to me that is most startling and damning evidence of the unfairness and inequity of inflation and the erosion of the dollar, particularly to those who can least afford it. Considering the tremendous number of people who are affected, I am amazed that there has been so little reference to it in Parliament, and particularly in the other house. We in this chamber are not supposed to be near the people. It is the members of the House of Commons who are the elected representatives. Here is a robbery that has been taking place, a robbery even more serious than ones that are given headlines in the newspapers day after day, and there has been hardly a word about it. It is to the everlasting credit of this committee, and indirectly, of the Senate as a whole, that they have championed the cause. Whatever else they may do they have at least brought to the attention of the public this situation which has been developing. I put to honourable senators this question: What do you want to do in the next twelve years? I ask you if we want to sit here, and if the authorities in this country want to sit here, and let another 40 per cent be taken off the investments and pensions, and everything else in this country? Can we afford to do that?

Those are very severe, but sound, warnings. In this respect I hope I do not appear to be unjustified if I again remark that this "substantial decline" in real value of incomes and investments has been, according to the terms of the report itself, taking place "over the post-war period", particularly in incomes and investments which were fixed in money terms of 1946. The whole conclusion of the report as to that decline in incomes and investments covers the full period already mentioned between 1946 and 1958, and it is to the undisputed credit of the honourable senator that he had the courage to refer to the matter in such clear terms.

From all those facts, the honourable senator concludes, quite properly:

—this kind of thing cannot go on indefinitely or it will result in a chaotic condition which will destroy everything we have known and cherished in this country.

He now comes to a solemn conclusion and warning:

I have not the slightest doubt as to what will happen to the administration of the day, but I am not too sure who would take its place. It could well be a group whose viewpoints are entirely different from those shared by honourable members on both sides of this house. Let us remember that we have a most serious problem on our hands. I am probably as partisan as anybody in this house, but I am prepared to give the present Government my wholehearted support in any organized campaign to awaken the public to the seriousness of the situation with which we are faced. By the same token, I think it is reasonable to say that if nothing is done by the Government, I certainly am going to use every power at my command to criticize the Government.

Here, honourable senators, I feel quite embarrassed in view of the great admiration and esteem I have for the honourable senator. Most certainly I do not want to cast any doubt on the fairness and unbiased integrity of our honourable friend. Yet, in view of the plain fact that all along, the committee and the honourable senator himself have asserted that this whole process of so-called inflation has been going on steadily, at least over the whole period of 12 years from 1946 to 1958, though there was a slight favourable change in the last year, I cannot but assume that the honourable member must have intended to direct his remarks and warning not only to the "administration of the day," as he put it, and not only to the group that may be in power in the future, but also, if not principally, to the previous administration, during whose term, specially from 1946 to the middle of 1957, the process of inflation was going on continuously and so badly.

I hasten to say, however, that possibly this result may not be attributed to a distinct fault of the previous administration nor of the present one. But, if there has been any fault, if there has been some government responsibility in the matter, I beg leave to speak frankly, though with great respect, and state that out of those 12 years of so-called continued inflation, 11 of them were under the previous regime, while less than one came under the present administration. And it is admitted, as we have seen, that in 1958 inflation was checked at least for the time being.

True, the evils created by those eleven years of inflation have not yet been eradicated, but they have been checked. The process of curing and eradicating may take some years. However, it may well occur that "the administration of the day" will be clearly credited, when time comes, by the people of Canada for having in so short a time created economic conditions which it is now hoped, though with no certainty, will bring quite an important development in the economy of the nation. One can find the idea of such a hope on the first page of yesterday's edition of the Montreal Gazette.

Honourable senators, it is far from my mind to make, on this particular point, an insinuation as to any spirit of partisanship in the remarks of the honourable senator from Shelburne. It was perfectly his right and duty to give the warning he gave; it is even clearly understandable that he directed his warning only to the Government of the day. However, in case his remarks might have been construed in a way that would not give full justice to the political fairness of our honourable friend, I thought he might agree with my humble submission that the words he directed at "the government of the day" he might also have directed, though discreetly at the time, at the previous Government.

At this juncture, may I recall that in June 1956, before the new administration came into power, the Senate's Standing Committee on Finance, then presided over by the late Senator Hawkins, and of which, if I am not mistaken, the honourable senator from Shelburne was a member ex officio, presented a report on inflation, in which it recommended as follows:

Your committee gave some consideration to the danger to Canadian export markets inherent in the inflationary trend, with its higher costs of production.

The danger inherent in this trend is immediately obvious. The ability to compete successfully in foreign markets is based, to a large extent, on the domestic cost of production, and increases in the latter cannot help but have damaging effects on the former.

Your committee feel that a study of all production costs should be made if these inflationary trends are to be curbed and if Canada's valuable export market is to be safeguarded. An exhaustive inquiry into this subject at the next session of Parliament is strongly recommended.

I have great pride in pointing out that this report reflects at this moment great credit upon this house, its Finance Committee and, in particular, upon the honourable senators who sat on that committee: they foresaw the danger of inflation and recommended a very exhaustive inquiry into the matter. Unfortunately, at the next session, which took place at the beginning of 1957, when the former administration was still in power, that report was for some unknown reason not implemented. One cannot assume, however, that it was the desire of the Finance Committee not to do the work it had so earnestly recommended be done.

Honourable senators, I have just another point to deal with. It is said in the present report of the committee, as appears at page 1054 of Hansard:

> Authoritative witnesses emphasized to the committee that adequate tools of monetary and fiscal policy for the control of persistent inflation are available. We can muster the will and determination to use them. With the necessary will there is no cause to fear that inflation is inevitable, especially in the present circumstances when supplies of goods and resources are ample.

Let us all agree with the report as to what those witnesses said and their honest belief in the possibility of controlling inflation, particularly in times like these. Let us not forget that on that point the report merely set out what the witnesses said.

However, there is one paramount circumstance—I may say catastrophe—that Government cannot definitely control, namely, war and the consequences of war. For a long time we have realized that war may be imminent. That imminence, in spite of constant vigilance by governments involved, cannot always be controlled or subordinated to our will for peace. The consequences of war, as everybody knows, are unpredictable; they cannot be determined in advance. In great world wars such as we have witnessed in our time the extent of loss and destruction might well go beyond expectation. The state itself could be destroyed; humanity could almost be annihilated, at least in some large areas of our planet. If war is to be declared again it will be the duty of our Government, as well as of other Governments, to do everything possible to save us from defeat and destruction, even at the risk of disrupting our economic structure for a century or more. Our prime necessity will be to save our life as a nation, our lives as citizens, and the lives of all those who are dear to us. That obligation may be so urgent as to supersede our desires, important as they may be, to save our economy, our manufactures, our labour facilities, and our dollars. In that connection, it is quite in point to quote another part of the report of the committee to which attention has not been sufficiently given. I quote:

> These movements in the general levels of prices in the three countries may be observed in Chart I. It will be seen that over the past 150 years there has been no persistent trend. There have been long periods of relative stability and of decline as well as sharp upward movements. It is apparent that the major upswings were associated with extraordinary events, especially wars. It is strikingly evident that the effects of the Napoleonic wars, of the American Civil war and of World Wars I and II have been the prime causes of all the pronounced increases in the price levels which have occurred.

If we again look at Chart I we will at once observe the accuracy of this terrible conclusion that the occurrence of world wars is unpredictable, and that, once launched, their consequences on the economy and on the survival of nations are almost uncontrollable and illimitable.

Let us hope that Providence will spare us from any such new world-wide catastrophe, and especially from a nuclear war. Let us not in this house have a tendency to impute to the governments of the day the responsibility for inflationary disturbances resulting from wars. Let us bear in mind that, according to the terms of the report, "the prime causes . . . of all the pronounced increases in price levels" have been great wars, the periods of which have exactly corresponded to the respective periods of inflation.

Honourable senators, in this Upper Chamber, where at the invitation of our Speaker, we all pray daily to the one God of the Bible, the God of the Jewish and of all the Christian faiths, let us beg Him to surround us more and more with His Supreme Providence in our legislative endeavours, in our hopes and efforts for the good of our country, and in our fears of the catastrophe of uncontrollable events. Let us humbly feel we all remain in the hands of the Almighty.

May I ask honourable senators to allow me to make at this stage a remark I had in mind to make earlier about the speech delivered by the honourable senator from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Bois). I greatly appreciated his speech also and am well aware of his valuable contribution to the work of the committee. I knew him when I had a farm, and when I asked for his advice he came and gave it to me. My only difficulty was that I could not follow intelligently all of his remarks, but as was said by the honourable senator from Kennebec (Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt), he is very competent, not only as a practical farmer and grower, but also as a technical man, sometimes giving advice ahead of his time. I am glad that he found it convenient to deliver his speech, which will no doubt be of great help to the farmers in this country, particularly in the province of Quebec.

Hon. L. M. Gouin: Honourable senators, I wish to say a few words on the subject my honourable friend from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette) has just discussed with such accuracy and, indeed, eloquence.

This subject is of such importance that I would not like to remain silent. I am only sorry that I did not have time to prepare an address which would do full justice to a problem of such difficulty.

First of all, I would like to plead, so to speak, the cause of the party to which I have the honour to belong, and to say that of course after World War II—and I find my argument in the remarks of the honourable senator who has just spoken—there was bound to be a certain degree of inflation. The inflation is not an evil which must always be present; it is not a plague which is uncontrollable. However, at certain moments we have to face that problem and to adopt the best policy which can possibly be applied to its solution.

May I say most sincerely that during the years 1956 and 1957 I failed to see in the administration of the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent anything which contributed to inflation. Although, to be quite honest, inflation was present, we have had a surplus every year, which would indicate that we have been living within our means. In my opinion the only solution that can be applied as a matter of principle to the eradication of inflation is for everybody in Canada, and that means individuals as well as governments, federal, provincial or municipal, to live within their means. I ask this question: Does a policy which brings a surplus contribute more to inflation than what I would call a system of deficit financing? If our party was defeated, I believe it was to a very great extent due to what I would call our planned policy of restrictions which were placed on credit, generally known as a "tight money" policy. However, I do not intend to deliver a political speech. I merely wish to tackle the difficult task of trying to throw a little more light on the problem of inflation.

Honourable senators, first of all, I am not a member of our Committee on Finance, so I am quite pleased to address my most sincere compliments and congratulations to the honourable members who presented us with a report which, in my opinion, is a masterpiece.

As was remarked by our honourable colleague from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) excellent work was done in the past also by our Finance Committee on income tax and other subjects. Every session we used to study in that committee the different items of the estimates, so that in the last hours of the dying session we would have a clearer understanding of the millions or billions of dollars we were called upon to vote.

This session the question of inflation has been studied admirably by the members of the Committee on Finance and by the experts who were called and who gave evidence. To define inflation adequately and scientifically is a goal which is absolutely beyond our means. At page 471, in report No. 11 of the proceedings of our Finance Committee, we find a very short definition which, in my opinion is as good as any other:

> For all practical purposes inflation may be defined as a condition in which there is a persistent rise in the general level of prices.

We all realize that in recent years the question of inflation has become a major concern, I would almost say the major concern of public policy throughout the western world. It has replaced recession as the main topic of discussion and it is indeed a matter of urgent interest. That is why we were fully justified in referring to our committee on finance this great, great problem.

Now, apprehensions exist in the public mind as a result of inflation. I am not at all a pessimist. I have complete confidence in the future of our country, and my task just now is not in any way to create a panic. It is, on the contrary, to reassure the good people of Canada and say that apparently inflation is now being brought under control. It may run out of hand, of course, through circumstances which are absolutely beyond our power to control, such as war, or a crisis, or such as a budgetary policy which would be unwise.

Why did those apprehensions exist? They existed, of course, as well as the persistent rises in prices and costs, because of the fact that our money has been losing its purchasing power to a great extent, to the extent of about 40 per cent.

Now, when money becomes unsound—and that is not the case as regards Canadian money; I don't want any misunderstanding about that—there is a weakening of its purchasing power. We remember that in other countries—in Germany for instance, after the First World War—money became simply worthless, and of course the economy of the German people was absolutely ruined.

Our economy is sound. I want to repeat that, so there will be no mistake about it. Nevertheless, there is, so to speak, a red light, a danger sign, ahead, on account of inflation. As a consequence of the erosion of the value of money various phenomena have arisen—we have, so to speak, sky-high prices of living, and we had what was apparently a very paradoxical or illogical situation in the fact that the recession, which in my opinion is now practically over, was accompanied by exceedingly high prices. To the best of my knowledge, and I do have a slight knowledge of economics, it was the first time this had happened. As a natural consequence of that we have run into difficulties in public financing, whether by the federal authorities, the provinces or the municipalities, owing to the fact that many people who depend on so-called fixed incomes fear that if they purchase bonds the amount of money which they or their heirs would receive, say 25 years hence, would have only 40 per cent of its present purchasing power. Of course, we cannot expect such people to be willing to invest in long-term fixed-dollar obligations. The committee's report indicates clearly by charts, which were referred to by my honourable friend from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette), the major dislocations, inadequacies and economic disruptive disparities which have resulted from a prolonged and substantial decline in the value of money.

Honourable senators who spoke before me have pointed to the loss of some of our foreign markets through what are considered to be excessive costs of production. We are unable to compete successfully with countries where the tempo of inflation has been less pronounced than here.

Hon. Mr. Monette: May I interrupt my honourable friend? He just has referred to what senators who spoke before him have said, but I do not recognize myself in that reference.

Hon. Mr. Gouin: My last reference was not to my honourable friend from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette), but merely to the charts.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Gouin: These charts are entirely graphic. They show much better than any words which I could use the situation over a long period of years. My last words concerned simply the effects of inflation on our foreign trade. That is what I would call a question which is absolutely vital because to a great extent we have to live by our exports, since we produce much more than is needed for domestic consumption.

I wish to refer next to an extract from the submission of the Canadian Life Officers Association, mentioned in the report of the committee at page 480. I quote from the submission of that association:

> The main objectives of Canadian policy should be a relatively high level of employment and reasonable stability of the currency.

I believe it would be a great mistake to say that we have to choose between inflation and unemployment, because if we have inflation—be it creeping inflation, or what is called in the report "galloping inflation"—we would have unemployment, and that would be a threat to our economy.

I understand very well that our friends from the labour unions are most anxious to protect their interests and their rights; that unemployment, to use the words of an economist, is "a cancer of the heart"; that unemployment is for labour the worst of all evils. No decent Canadian can ignore unemployment, even when we have it to a reduced degree, but especially when there is a rather considerable amount of it, as there is to-day.

Referring again to page 480 of the report, we see that the representatives of the labour unions agree that the stable or reasonably stable price level is a desirable goal:

> —provided that the concern for price stability did not outweigh or obscure what they regarded as the more important issues of the level of employment and the rate of growth of the economy.

To be quite frank, I believe that the two parties in this house agree on what I would call a policy of full employment, which really means a policy of maximum employment. Quite honestly, we have to face up to seasonal unemployment, and we also have to reckon with various factors which bring about a degree of unemployment. It is precisely for this reason that we have a system of unemployment insurance and unemployment assistance.

The attitude of the unions emphasizes:

> —the importance of pursuing at one and the same time the twin goals of high levels of unemployment and reasonable stability of prices. Neither unheeded inflation nor substantial and protracted unemployment is socially acceptable.

This is indeed a great truth, and to this principle I fully subscribe.

At the bottom of page 480 I read these words:

> —It was frequently pointed out to the committee that prolonged or rapid inflation would sooner or later result in a bust and bring about serious unemployment.

That is exactly what I mean: it is, so to speak, two horns of a devil: one is inflation, the other is unemployment. We can ignore neither the one or the other; we have to find a remedy for each. We have to find a solution which will protect us against these two evils.

The Canadian Chamber of Commerce is quoted at page 481 as saying that > ...it could not as a policy tolerate even a creeping inflation. All you can say about creeping inflation is that it is not as dangerous and it is easier to adjust to than a more rapid inflation; but if you are going to erode the dollar the long-run effect is the same.

The Investment Dealers Association had some interesting observations to present. Its representative said, as reported at page 482 of this report:

> . . . continually rising prices—or the expectation or rising prices—stimulates spending and discourages the saving needed to finance the new and productive capital equipment on which a rising standard of living depends.

My next quotation is from the submission of Mr. Coyne, Governor of the Bank of Canada, as appears on page 482 of the report. Mr. Coyne said:

> . . . I do not believe there ever has been or ever will be creeping inflation for any length of time. I think it will either break into a gallop or lead to a collapse.

On page 483 of the report there is an interesting reference, to the question of further increases in Government expenditures, to which I have already referred to some extent. There is of course reference to the fact that people today are reluctant to invest in bonds, and prefer investment in stocks and equities. At the bottom of page 483 Mr. Gibson is quoted as saying:

> . . . There is the danger that fear of inflation will set the groundwork for a serious recession. Sooner or later stock prices may get so high in relation to corporate earnings and bond prices that a marked reaction may set in. People may suddenly realize that things are getting out of proportion. This is all the more likely if fear of inflation leads to ill-considered capital investment in some directions or to unnecessary accumulation of inventories.

The conclusion to which I come, and I believe it is our unanimous conclusion, is that we have at our disposal the necessary tools to fight inflation; that it would be a great mistake to create, so to speak, a psychosis of inflation; that we must continue to have confidence in our country; that our rhythm of development has excelled that of any country in the history of the world; that such a development is bound to continue if we do our duty, if we practice economy, and if we all try to co-operate and work together, putting above any party consideration the well understood interests of our beloved country.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I adjourn this debate until later this day?

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have recently had a report on the progress being made in the other place. I understand they will be considering estimates until 6 o'clock, and will deal with legislation from then until 8 o'clock. Therefore, I suggest we rise now until the call of the bell at approximately 8 o'clock.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have been keeping a close check on the proceedings in the other house and it would appear that it will be 10 o'clock before we receive any legislation from that house.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is that a guarantee?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In the circumstances I would suggest that we rise now, to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 10 o'clock.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 10.30 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

INFLATION

REPORT OF FINANCE COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The order having been called for resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Emerson for adoption of the report of the Standing Committee on Finance on the threat of inflation in Canada, and the question having been put on the motion:

Report adopted.

INCOME TAX BILL

COMMONS DISAGREEMENT WITH SENATE AMENDMENT

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following message had been received from the House of Commons, returning Bill C-48, to amend the Income Tax Act:

ORDERED:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this house agrees to the first amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-48, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, being an amendment to clause 18 of the said bill, but disagrees with the second amendment, whereby the Senate would strike out clause 19 of the said bill, for the following reasons:

1. The outright exemption of foreign business corporations from tax under the said act should not be extended to corporations which have not qualified or cannot qualify as foreign business corporations in accordance with the provisions of the said clause 19.

2. The class of tax-exempt foreign business corporations under section 71 of the said act should be closed pending a review of the position of such corporations and the value to Canada of permitting more corporations to qualify as such.

3. The said amendment of the Senate infringes the sole and undoubted right of the Commons to impose taxation; it alters the application of taxes and interferes with the public revenue.

CONSIDERATION POSTPONED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move:

That the Senate do not insist upon its second amendment to Bill C-48, intituled an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, to which the House of Commons has disagreed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, I doubt if that motion should be put now. We have not had an opportunity of seeing the reasons for the disagreement.

The Hon. the Speaker: I think the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) is right. Perhaps he would like to scrutinize the reasons I have just read.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I should like to see a copy of the reasons, if I may.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The only copy available is now in the hands of His Honour the Speaker, I understand.

The Hon. the Speaker: I take pleasure in sending my copy of the reasons over to the Leader of the Opposition for his perusal.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In the meantime, I withdraw my motion. I now move that the message from the House of Commons be taken into consideration later this day.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I inquire if the message from the Commons is a typewritten or a mimeographed document?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It is typewritten.

Honourable senators there is other business that the house could proceed with while I peruse the reasons for non-acceptance of this amendment by the Commons.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 5

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-73, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending March 31, 1960.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move second reading to this bill now.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Explain.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I would like to make a brief explanation of this supply bill.

This bill, when passed, will be Appropriation Act No. 5 for the year 1959. Previous Appropriation Acts passed in this session were as follows:

Appropriation Act No. 1, which granted full supply for the further supplementary estimates for 1958-59.

Appropriation Act No. 2, which granted interim supply for the first two months of 1959-60, based on the main estimates. The amount involved in that act was $616,654,-878.69.

Appropriation Act No. 3 granted full supply for the final supplementary estimates of 1958-59.

Appropriation Act No. 4 provided interim supply for the months of June and July, 1959, based on the main and supplementary estimates for the year 1959-60. The amount involved in that act was $634,617,069.94. The total therefore that we have granted for the full year 1959-60 is $1,251,271,948.63.

The bill we are now considering will grant the balance of the main estimates for the fiscal year 1959-60 in the sum of $2,409,439,-428.04, and the balance of the supplementary estimates, $100,441,528.33. These amounts total $2,509,880,956.37.

The form of this bill is the same as that of the main supply bills passed in the last two fiscal years. I may also say that borrowing authority in the amount of $1 billion was approved in the first interim supply act, Appropriation Act No. 2, 1959, which I have referred to.

The total 1959-60 estimates including budgetary expenditures, old age security payments and loans are as follows. Main estimates, $6,296,336,356, of which $2,655,713,-285 is statutory, and the amount to be voted is $3,640,623,071. In addition there are the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year 1959-60 of $120,529,834, making the total amount of main estimates and supplementary estimates for this fiscal year $6,416,866,190.

That, honourable senators, is a brief explanation of the purpose of this bill.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has been very frank, and has read off this huge sum of over $6 billion as if it were a comparatively small amount. I compliment him on his frankness, but he did not inform the house that this is the largest expenditure in the history of Canada—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I knew you would mention that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: —by any Government, in peacetime or in wartime.

The Leader of the Government smiles. Well, I cannot smile at that, honourable senators. It is a very serious situation in which we find ourselves, because the $6 billion, whether it is statutory or budgetary, has to be raised, and it can only be raised in one manner, by taxing the people of Canada. We are passing legislation which will cost the people of Canada—some 17 million people—over $6 billion in one year.

Honourable senators, we are spending more money each year. Last year we thought we had reached the top in expenditures when we spent $5,508,000,000, but even now, when half of the present fiscal year has not elapsed, we are up to more than $6 billion, and I have no doubt whatsoever hat before next March 31 we shall have another supply bill.

I mention these things so that we may realize that we are dealing with very important legislation, and I do not think it should be passed in the light, off-hand and even frank manner in which it was explained to this house. Not only are we in a serious position, but we find ourselves in a precarious position in connection with our trade. The foreign trade deficit shows a big increase for this quarter of the year.

I have in my hand a clipping from the Brantford Expositor of a factual statement recorded by the Canadian Press:

> Canada's deficit in foreign trade of goods and services in the first quarter of the year stood at $450 million showing a big increase from $282 million in the corresponding period last year.
>
> The Bureau of Statistics reported today that the increase was due mainly to a trebling of the deficit on the balance of trade in goods, from $63 million a year ago to $188 million this year.

Honourable senators, the position with respect to our exports is serious indeed. In 1958 Canada's exports were only approximately the same as her 1957 exports; in fact, they were down slightly to $4,928,000,000 from $4,934,000,000. In the first quarter of this year our exports have continued to show a decline. At the same time there is more money in circulation. Prices have gone up and the purchasing power of the dollar has gone down. So the effect on the actual volume must have been very severe indeed. Only this afternoon we had a further discussion on inflation. I thank the honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette) for referring to a speech which I made here earlier in the session. I was very flattered to think he remembered the speech, and even more flattered when he thought part of it was worthy of being placed on Hansard once again.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The honourable gentleman from Mille Isles said he hoped that as a result of the findings of the Finance Committee my fears of the inflation we now have would be allayed. I can assure him they have not been allayed in any respect whatsoever. Notwithstanding the report of the Finance Committee, I am still fearful of the inflationary position in which we find ourselves at the present time. It is all very well for the report to state what it did regarding the present situation in Canada, but I recall a great deal of evidence that was given to the committee by prominent financiers throughout Canada, which established beyond a shadow of a doubt that we are now experiencing a period of inflation. I go on record at this time as saying that we should be ever on guard against this condition of inflation, and that we should do everything in our power to prevent it from increasing.

Honourable senators, I have mentioned three very serious facts: the great expenditures which we are making, the condition of our trade, and the present inflationary trend. They involve serious problems, and I know that during the recess all senators will give them their best thought in order that we may assist the Government in solving these very serious problems.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I move the third reading now.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Are we going on to give this bill the third reading without having a copy of it before us? I think we went far enough, if not too far, when we allowed second reading of the bill. I do not think we should be asked to give the third reading under the same circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It happens that only ten copies of the bill were printed.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Why?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I understand the bill will be distributed after prorogation. I am informed that has always been the custom. Honourable senators have had the estimates before them for five months, and the supplementary estimates in pamphlet form for several weeks. That is all I can say about it.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, if my memory serves me correctly, at this stage in the session, when these final estimates come before us, we have been accustomed to accept the statement of the Leader of the Government with respect to the final budget paper without copies having been distributed.

On this occasion, however, I think the very great importance of the function of the Standing Committee on Finance of this house has been empasized. I have been a member of that committee since its revival under the leadership of the late Senator King. Its original purpose was to examine estimates so that the members of this house might be thoroughly acquainted with the items of the budget and the main items in the estimates before being faced with the final supply bill, voting billions of dollars without any familiarity with the items.

I do not intend to discuss the report of the Finance Committee at this time, but I would suggest that in future that committee be charged with this very responsible work, and find time to attend to it during the session, so that senators will be acquainted with the contents of the final presentation of the budget figures before being called upon to deal with them.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) give us any assurance as to how much money we are going to be asked to vote before this fiscal year is over? The Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) has just told us—and I think the Leader of the Government did too—that we are now granting sums which add up to more than $6 billion. We are a long way from the 31st of March, 1960, and the Leader of the Opposition has suggested that in all probability further sums will be asked of us. What astronomical figures will be reached before the completion of this year? Can the Leader of the Government not give us any idea of what the situation is?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, the estimates have been discussed fully in the other place for several weeks, and as far as I know these are the amounts that the Government thinks it will need between now and March 31, 1960.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: These votes are to take us to March 31, 1960?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes. This is the total that the Government thinks it will require to carry on the services of the country between April 1, 1959 and March 31, 1960.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-70, to amend the Combines Investigation Act.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. William R. Brunt: I move the second reading now.

Honourable senators, I understand that copies of the bill have been distributed. There is left in the bill one clause, that which is clause 4 in the original bill as printed and now becomes clause 1.

I think I should point out, honourable senators, that for quite some time representations have been made to the Department of Justice that certain amendments be made to the Combines Investigation Act and to the Criminal Code. Naturally, such amendments require considerable study by the Department of Justice before any action could be taken. Finally, the Department of Justice decided that certain amendments were in order with respect to the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, and during the early part of June of this year Bill C-59, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, was introduced in the other place, and given first reading.

Once the bill was introduced, and its detailed provisions made known, numerous representations were received from businessmen and trade associations that the measure should be deferred until they had an opportunity of studying it more thoroughly, and of making representations with respect to the combination, monopoly and merger sections.

All honourable senators will realize that in a matter of this kind it is of particular importance that all interested parties have every reasonable opportunity of making their submissions to the Department of Justice. As a result of the submissions which were made it was decided that the proper course to adopt was to proceed with those parts of the bill which relate to the problems of the smaller businessmen, and to defer until the next session of Parliament the provisions relating to combinations, mergers and monopolies, and the provisions incidental thereto, as contained in this bill.

Accordingly, it was decided not to proceed with Bill C-59, and in its place Bill C-70 was introduced in the other place.

Bill C-70 originally dealt with the enactment of the three provisions relating particularly to small business, including the section on misleading advertising, and it was found necessary to introduce a fourth provision in this particular bill which deals with the situation in the fishing industry in British Columbia.

Due to the fact that Bill C-70 did not receive second and third readings in the other place until today, it was decided to drop clauses 1, 2 and 3 from the bill, and pass only clause 4 which deals with the fishing industry in British Columbia.

In connection with clause 4 I think I should point out that the director under the Combines Investigation Act recently submitted to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission and to various fish packing companies, associations and individuals in British Columbia a statement of evidence alleging that certain agreements and activities which were being carried on relating to the supply of raw fish by the fishermen to companies were illegal. As a result of the doubt that was thereby cast upon the legality of such agreements and activities, the fish canning companies declined to negotiate prices with the fishermen's union as they have done in past years, and it appeared that a strike might result which would lead to the loss of the salmon catch and perhaps other catches of fish.

In the present anti-combines legislation there is a provision to the effect that nothing therein shall be construed to apply to an organization of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as such workmen or employees, and I understand that it is being argued by the fishermen that they come within the protection of this provision. If, however, it should turn out as a result of the inquiry that the agreements dealt with therein are not wholly or even in part legal, it may be that the report will disclose a situation which it will be necessary to take steps to deal with in a definitive manner. However, it is not possible to take these steps now. Therefore, clause 1 has been put into this bill and the effect of it is that the anti-combines legislation now in existence shall not apply to arrangements between fishermen or associations of fishermen in British Columbia and persons or associations of persons engaged in the buying or processing of fish in British Columbia with respect to the price, the remuneration or other conditions under which fish shall be caught and supplied between January 1, 1959 and December 31, 1960.

The latter date was chosen because it is hoped that by that time the remaining steps in the inquiry will have been completed and a report will have been made by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission; so that at that time, namely December 1960, one will be able to see what, if any, further action should be taken to eventually dispose of and clear up this particular situation.

Honourable senators, I realize that it is usual and customary to refer such bills to committee. In this case, with the leave of the Senate, I hope to have the third reading of the bill this evening. I am asking for this concession for two reasons. First, the bill is a very short one. It has only one clause, and I think I have given a full explanation of it. In the second place, I understand that we are drawing close to the end of this session of Parliament and if the bill goes to committee we will have to meet next week.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, a full-dress debate on the Combines Investigation Act, and the amendments that had been originally proposed to it would be impossible in the short time at our disposal. I am not going to deliver myself of an oration on the iniquities of the Senate's receiving legislation at too late an hour in the session. I think this practice has been followed since the Senate was established, at the time of Confederation, and it is usual for people in opposition to stand in their places and refer to the iniquitous position in which the Senate is thereby placed. I suppose it is part of the procedure one can expect in Parliament.

As a member of an Opposition party, I do not make this plea to the members of the Government party opposite on political grounds, but I do make it from the point of view of this chamber itself. We are all anxious that this chamber work well, and we all have our responsibility to discharge our duties here as senators, whether we belong to the Government or to the Opposition. I believe that honourable gentlemen opposite are just as much concerned about their responsibility as are we on this side. During the few years I sat on the Government benches in this chamber I too felt concerned about our receiving important legislation at the end of the session; and I can still hear Senator Haig leading for the Opposition on this side saying the same thing. It is not a matter affecting one party or another, it is a matter affecting the Senate. It is a matter of the responsibility which every individual senator owes to this chamber and to the people of the country, to try to get the important legislation here in time to give it full consideration. I make that plea not in any partisan sense, nor with the idea of imposing further worry upon the Leader of the Government in this chamber. I do think that some kind of arrangement could be worked out so that we will not be put in this embarrassing position.

Let me take a little recent history to illustrate what I mean. Last year, on the last day of the session, in the dying hours of the session, we received an amendment to the Customs Act. We on this side of the house said that we felt that amendment was a violation of the provisions of GATT. We were assured that this was not so. Parliament closed on Saturday night, and on Monday morning a press conference was held at the American legation at which it was stated not only that the Americans had objected to this legislation because it was in violation of GATT, but that their objections had been placed before the Government several weeks before the bill received parliamentary consideration. We were not told that. That is an iniquitous position for the Senate to be put in, and I hope that kind of thing will not happen again.

I do not say that those considerations apply to this measure. I think if this measure came to us in the normal course of events earlier in the session we could do what the honourable gentleman from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) has asked us to do tonight, namely, pass it without having it go to committee, and I for one would be glad to do that. I am not too sure that I can follow the factual explanation which he gave, because I am not quite sure from what I understand of this measure that that information is completely accurate.

Let me say this: I understand that in the fishing industry, in the packing industry, in British Columbia, before the fishermen go out for their catches they sit down with the canners, with the people in the industry to whom they sell their fish, and an arrangement is made about the price the fishermen will get.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It goes much further.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps it goes further, but this point I think is crucial. I think the price is predetermined. It is based upon what the sellers of the fish feel they can get in their markets. Starting with that price, they then determine what the fishermen will be paid for their catches as they bring them in. I think it is this combination of agreements made between the packers and the fishermen which is thought to offend against the act. In other words, the market for the year in question is surveyed and then the price is determined; after that the fishermen are told how much they will get, and off they go.

If this is a situation which offends against the Combines Investigation Act and is not favoured by the law, and if, on the other hand, prosecutions under the Combines Investigation Act or even an investigation by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission will upset the industry, then I think it is the part of wisdom on the part of the Government to defer this development until such time as the situation can be properly studied. I think this is all this section does, and it should commend itself to the judgment of all of us that further study be given to it. It may be that an amendment will have to be made to the Combines Investigation Act and to the Criminal Code to change the position in which these people in the fishing industry in British Columbia find themselves. If that is so, then I think that when such a measure comes before Parliament we should have, and I am sure we will have, ample opportunity to give it full consideration. In the meantime, this postpones the day of decision. I think it is a wise move, and I will certainly support the bill.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I have heard nothing yet that would justify me in supporting this measure. I look upon this enactment as a matter of very great importance, and the effect of it I regard with grave concern.

Here we are told that the fishermen's union and the processers' association propose to do something which they fear may bring them within the limits of the Criminal Code, and they come to this house at 11 o'clock at night and ask us to set aside these two very important acts made for the protection of the public, without any real knowledge on our part of the situation or of what we are doing.

Unfortunately, I do not have the Criminal Code before me, so I must rely on memory. The Code says that an act, to be criminal, must unduly—we have heard that word "unduly" used so frequently—affect the public interest; that the act must be contrary to the public interest, and unduly so at that.

I say we are asked to set aside a provision for the protection of the public without any real knowledge of what we are doing. A simple statement by one of the members of this house, based on instructions which have been handed to him, is all we have, and we are asked to adopt a measure of this kind—three readings, one right after the other—without even an opportunity of reading the sections of the act affected by this bill.

It is outrageous; it is extraordinary; it is unprecedented in this house. I have never heard of an assembly such as this being asked to stultify itself in this way. We might at least have been given the sections of the acts to be affected by this bill which we have before us. Even that is not handed to us.

If I were to agree to three readings of this legislation at one sitting I do not think I would be doing my duty as one charged with the task of giving sober second thought to legislation from the other place. You cannot have my support for that kind of proceeding.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I would like to point out to the honourable senator—

The Hon. the Speaker: If the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) speaks again in this debate his remarks will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I am not going to speak to the bill. I merely wish to ask a question or two in reference to Bill C-59 which was mentioned as having been withdrawn. I take it that that bill was printed and distributed in the other place?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: If that is so, why was it not distributed to the honourable members of the Senate?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I received one.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: There is no copy on my file, and there is none on the files of the senators to my left. What is more important to me is to know to whom it was distributed, and from whom objections were received. Were objections received from a group of businessmen or fishermen or associations?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Representations were received from businessmen from Halifax to Vancouver, and from large corporations; representations were received also from small businessmen with respect to the sections that deal with loss-leaders, and representations were received from the fishing industry in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I do not have a copy of Bill C-59 in my records.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I would like to inquire if any honourable senator has a copy of Bill C-59 on his or her file.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Why should everybody be informed but us?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I received a copy of Bill C-59 in the mail, and then I received a copy of Bill C-70. That is all I can say. I do not know how the distribution is carried out. That is not part of my function.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the question is on the motion of the honourable Senator Brunt, seconded by the Honourable Senator White, that this bill be now read the second time. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Not with my consent.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I move third reading now.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: On division.

Motion agreed to, and bill read third time and passed, on division.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE BILL

AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN BY COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill C-34, respecting the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and acquainting the Senate that the Commons have agreed to the amendment made by the Senate to the said bill, without amendment.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD BILL

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN BY COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill C-49, to provide for the establishment of a National Energy Board, and acquainting the Senate that the Commons have agreed to the amendments made by the Senate to the said bill, without amendment.

CRIMINAL CODE BILL

AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN BY COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill C-58, to amend the Criminal Code, and acquainting the Senate that the Commons have agreed to the amendment made by the Senate to the said bill, without amendment.

INCOME TAX BILL

NON-INSISTENCE UPON SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the message from the House of Commons on Bill C-48, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, is it now in order for me to make my motion in connection with the amendment to the Income Tax Act that was not approved of in the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I therefore move:

That the Senate do not insist upon its second amendment to Bill C-48, intituled An Act to amend the Income Tax Act, to which the House of Commons has disagreed.

Honourable senators, I would like to make a few remarks in support of my motion. It will be remembered that when this bill was introduced in this chamber it was given second reading and then referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. The committee dealt with the bill and eventually made two amendments to it, one of which has been accepted by the other house. However, that house objected to the second amendment, to strike out section 19, which had to do with the taxing of new—and I emphasize "new"—foreign business corporations but did not change the status of foreign business corporations incorporated before April 1, 1959.

It was my opinion when the matter was before the committee—and it is still my opinion—that this was not a good amendment, and I was not in favour of it from the beginning. The Income Tax Act is a taxation statute, and Bill C-48, which amends that act, is a taxation measure. We in the Senate should hesitate very much before amending and thereby interfering with a statute of that kind. Honourable senators, our amendment might not immediately affect ways and means, but it might do so in a substantial way eventually.

For the reasons I have given, and for the reasons stated in the memorandum received from the House of Commons and read by His Honour the Speaker, I ask the Senate not to insist on this amendment.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): May I ask the honourable leader a question? I note that the House of Commons has accepted an amendment made by the Senate to section 18. Can he tell us whether section 18 as amended interferes in any way with the public revenue?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Well, that amendment, I understand, was agreed to by all parties in the Senate committee, including the officials who were present on that occasion, and I was convinced that it had nothing to do with ways and means or the raising of money by taxation. It was just a definition change, if I may say so.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It does not appear that way in the section. It appears to apply to the "hire of chattels or charterparty fees or remunerations". The wording of the section was:

...not more than 10 per cent of its gross revenue was derived from rents...

And the following words were added by way of amendment:

...hire of chattels or charterparty fees or remunerations.

It seems to me to provide a new source of revenue for the Crown. Therefore the amendment which we made was interfering with the revenue, I would submit.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That was a clarification. The officials stated quite emphatically that it meant that anyway, and they only agreed to the change to satisfy the committee.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I might say that I was greatly surprised,—I was shocked—to learn that the House of Commons had not accepted the amendment of this honourable chamber. Honourable senators will recall that this amendment was passed in this house on June 18. I will read from the Minutes of the Proceedings of this house, at page 483:

Pursuant to the Order of the Day, the Honourable Senator Thorvaldson moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Pearson, that the Bill C-48, intituled: "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act", as amended, be read the third time.

The question being put on the motion it was Resolved in the affirmative.

The bill, as amended, was then read the third time.

The question was put whether this Bill, as amended, shall pass.

It was resolved in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the Clerk do go down to the House of Commons and acquaint that house that the Senate have passed this bill with two amendments, to which they desire their concurrence.

Now, that was on June 18.

The amendment appeared on Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons from June 19 onwards.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is only a month ago.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: And I suppose most honourable senators assumed, as I did, that the amendment woud be satisfactory to the other place. In fact, I made inquiries and I was advised by those who I thought were informed of what the House of Commons proposed to do that there would be no objection to this amendment.

Then, on July 14, I read in the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons at page 707, as follows:

The Order being read for consideration of the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-48, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act;

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton), seconded by Mr. MacLean (Queens), moved,—That the said amendments be now read a second time and concurred in; but that this house, while disapproving of any infraction of its privileges or rights by the other house, in this case waives its claims to insist upon such rights and privileges, but the waiver of said rights and privileges is not to be drawn into a precedent.

And that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours therewith.

That was on July 14, last Tuesday. Naturally, I assumed, as did all other honourable senators, that the amendments would be approved by the other place, but that it would assert its right to certain privileges, and so forth.

I think it was five minutes before eleven o'clock this evening, the 18th day of July, when the Senate received the message acquainting it that the House of Commons was not accepting one amendment, for reasons which were not referred to in any way in the report in the Votes and Proceedings of that house of July 14.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Indirectly.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My honourable friend says "indirectly". I say there is no reference to them whatsoever.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Do you have to put the reasons in?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, you have to put the reasons in. I do not suppose they would be so impolite as to say: "We do not accept them, and that is the end of it." Certainly, they put the reasons in, and the reasons were read by His Honour the Speaker.

The Hon. the Speaker: Three reasons were read.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, and I shall refer to those reasons in a minute. My point is that here, in the very last hour of the last day of the session, we receive word from the House of Commons saying, in effect, although we have had your amendments before us for almost a month, we decide now at the very last minute we are not going to accept one them, and that is the end of it. Of course, that is the end of it. We know it is the end of it. If we insist on our amendment there is no Income Tax Bill—that is the end of the legislation.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is an end to the increase in taxes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, it is an end to the increases in taxes which the Government is putting into effect. I am sure we would not take the responsibility upon ourselves of throwing out the income tax amendments, as much as many of us object to them. So we are left with this situation, and we have to accept the decision of the other place.

I would point out, honourable senators, that the refusal to accept this amendment made to the bill comes to this house when the honourable senators who sponsored the amendment, or most of them, are not here to speak to it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: They should be here.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The Government may have known they were not here.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I think that is an unfair statement.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It may be unfair. If it is, I withdraw it. In any event, it is not nearly as unfair as asking us to meet the refusal of this amendment in the dying moments of this session of Parliament. I simply say that those honourable senators are not here and cannot answer the objections raised.

I would point out that not all honourable senators who supported this amendment sit on this side of the house.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Many, if not most, of those who were keenly interested in the passage of this amendment are supporters of the Government rather than of the Opposition. I say that in order that the Government and the people will know that this is not primarily an Opposition amendment.

It presents two problems: first, the sponsors of the amendment are not here to answer the objections; and secondly, if the Senate does not accept the refusal of this amendment by the other place, the whole Income Tax Bill is defeated.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Why, may I ask, do you say the whole bill is defeated?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Because we cannot pass half a bill. We pass the bill as amended, or we do not pass it at all. If we do not accept the refusal of the amendment by the other place, the bill in that respect goes back to its original form, and all the amendments to the Income Tax Bill are thrown out.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It means that we throw out Bill C-48, not the whole act.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think I said it means that we throw out the whole Income Tax Bill.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It means that Bill C-48 fails.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: And the Income Tax Act will remain as it was previously.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Now, honourable senators, are we prepared to throw out the income tax amendments and go back to the legislation as it stood last year? Personally, I would not think of assuming that responsibility.

I am disappointed in the Government for taking this stand in the last moments of the session. We in this house are reasonable persons. If the Government did not want to accept the Senate's amendment, why did it not say so three weeks ago? Those honourable senators who sponsored this amendment are reasonable men; they would have talked the matter over with the Government and I am sure a satisfactory compromise would have been reached. All I can say at this time is that I cannot condemn too strongly the method that has been used to prevent this amendment from being put into effect.

May I give it as my opinion, honourable senators, that in spite of what members of the other house have said, this amendment does not affect the revenue of the country; it does not impose taxation, it does not result in expenditure of public funds, nor can it in any way affect the balance of ways and means. As far as I am concerned, if it had been explained to the members of the Banking and Commerce committee that this amendment brought about any imposition of taxation, or altered the application of taxes, or interfered with public revenue, I am confident that the committee would never have passed it. But the explanation we received in committee was entirely contrary.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Would the honourable senator tell us what the amendment in question does? I have it before me, but I find difficulty in absorbing it in its completeness. A statement from the honourable leader as to what it does would be most useful.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: To put it in a few words, the amendment contained in the bill that we were asked to consider provided that in future Canada will not incorporate so-called foreign business corporations.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It prevents incorporation of any foreign corporations in future.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It does not affect any that are already incorporated.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: As I say, in the committee we were given the impression that by striking out this particular clause we were not in any way affecting taxation. Mr. Irwin, who appeared for the department, said, as reported at page 43 of the Proceedings of the Banking and Commerce committee:

> The minister stated that the right to qualify as a foreign corporation under the act in its present form can be used as a means of maintaining in Canada a tax haven or as a means of avoidance of tax.

Then he quoted from the debates of the other place as follows:

> We are asking the committee for that reason to close the door at that point because there is a very serious question as to whether any more foreign business corporations are going to be of any advantage to Canada anyway.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I wonder if the honourable gentleman would allow me to interrupt to say that I understand if we do not have royal assent within the next fifteen minutes we cannot have it until Monday next.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Well, I will not be fifteen minutes more.

The statement was made that there was no suggestion there had been any abuse in Canada. Then there was also this statement:

> We therefore think this situation is one that calls for some review and we propose that no more corporations not yet entitled to qualify as foreign business corporations should be in a position to do so hereafter until at least this whole situation has been carefully reviewed.

Now, the committee felt—and this was the main point raised—that these foreign corporations should not be prevented from coming in before the review takes place, but that during the next year there should be a full review of this whole situation, and that if it was found there was an abuse the section could then be put into effect.

It is said now that this Senate amendment does infringe on the rights of the House of Commons with respect to legislation regarding taxation; yet the minister himself said in effect that had this amendment related to something having to do with revenues he would have opposed it very strongly. At a time when he was going to accept the amendment, he said that had it related to something affecting revenues he certainly would not have allowed it.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That was the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes. He said that three or four days ago. But now, at 11 o'clock on the last day of the session, he says, "Oh, it does affect the finances of the country." Well, I have not got time to find out from him now in what way it does affect the finances of the country. Personally, I am not able to see how it does, but in view of the lateness of the hour and the fact that we are about to prorogue, and because I do not want to throw out all the income tax amendments that have been passed this year, I am not going to object to accepting the findings of the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to.

PROROGATION

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform you that I have received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
OTTAWA

July 18, 1959

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber at 11.45 o'clock p.m. today, the 18th July, 1959, for the purpose of proroguing the Second Session of the Twenty-Fourth Parliament.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Lionel Massey,
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Patrick Kerwin, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to incorporate Standard Trust Company.

An Act to incorporate Desjardins Mutual Life Assurance Company.

An Act to amend the Public Lands Grants Act.

An Act to confirm an Agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Province of New Brunswick respecting Indian Reserves.

An Act to confirm an Agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Province of Nova Scotia respecting Indian Reserves.

An Act to provide for contributions and loans to the provinces in respect of crop insurance.

An Act to provide for the extension of long term mortgage credit to farmers.

An Act to amend the Maritime Coal Production Assistance Act and to authorize certain amendments to the agreement made under that act with Dominion Coal Company, Limited.

An Act to provide for the humane slaughter of food animals.

An Act to provide for the payment of additional grants to the Province of Newfoundland.

An Act respecting the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

An Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

An Act to provide for the establishment of a National Energy Board.

An Act to amend the Criminal Code.

An Act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Niagara River between the Province of Ontario and the State of New York.

An Act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pigeon River between the Province of Ontario and the State of Minnesota.

An Act to repeal certain fisheries laws in force in the Province of Newfoundland respecting the exportation of salt fish.

An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code.

Hon. Roland Michener, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Comomns, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1960.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the said bill.

SPEECH OF DEPUTY OF GOVERNOR GENERAL

The Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General was pleased to close the Second Session of the Twenty-fourth Parliament with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

Canadians have welcomed with profound gratitude the visit of Her Gracious Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip. Her Majesty and the Prince are assured of the affection and devotion of the Canadian people and of their deep attachment to the Crown. To mark Her Majesty's visit you have established the Queen Elizabeth II Research Fund for research into the diseases of children.

It has been gratifying that the President of the United States was able to be present with our Queen on the occasion of the official opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

Canadians are convinced that every effort must be made to attain and to preserve lasting peace in the world. My Government is hopeful that it will be possible at summit meetings of heads of governments to make progress towards the settlement of such important issues as Germany, Berlin, nuclear test explosions and towards agreement on general disarmament.

Meanwhile, it is necessary to maintain the strength of the free world provided by the North Atlantic Alliance. To this end an important decision has been reached to re-equip the Canadian Air Division in Europe with modern and up-to-date aircraft. You have been informed of the steps being taken for sharing with the United States the production and procurement of defence equipment and have approved an appropriation to support selected development programs related to production sharing.

The Government recognizes that the peace of the world cannot be assured by defence measures alone and that economic assistance to less developed countries is a necessity and in Canada's interest. You have authorized an increase in Canada's contribution under the Colombo Plan to provide further help for Asian and African nations, particularly those within the Commonwealth. You have also voted substantial assistance for the new Federation of the West Indies. You have approved a measure to increase Canada's subscriptions to the International Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

It is encouraging to note the strong recovery from the recent recession both abroad and here at home. My Government will continue to take whatever steps lie within its power to maintain employment and to sustain sound economic gowth.

To improve the lot of those who unfortunately from time to time find themselves unemployed, you have made important amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Emphasis has continued to be placed on national development and financial provision has been made for numerous projects in this field.

Important measures have been approved for the agricultural sector of our economy. You have enacted legislation to provide for loans and grants for provincial crop insurance schemes and a statute has been passed under which long term mortgage credit can be made available to farmers. The new Farm Credit Act provides for substantially larger loans than have hitherto been available.

A National Energy Board has been established. This important new agency will ensure that, so far as it is within the power of Parliament, Canada's energy resources will be conserved and used in the best interests of all our people.

The Maritime Coal Production Assistance Act has been amended to enable a further measure of assistance to this industry on which the livelihood of so many Canadians depend.

You have amended the Export Credits Insurance Act and thus provided a further stimulus for our exports and our trade generally.

Several statutes which go to make up the Veterans Charter have been amended, broadening the range of benefits to veterans, particularly those who settle on the land.

The Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act has been amended to extend the increase made last year in the provincial share of personal income tax revenue.

A conference of dominion and provincial ministers of finance and provincial treasurers was held early this month at which it was agreed that a comprehensive study should be undertaken of the problems of intergovernmental financial and economic relations. A further meeting will be held next October. Meanwhile, reports on many of these questions are being prepared by the federal-provincial continuing committee of officials.

You have enacted a measure to authorize the payment of additional annual grants to Newfoundland in accordance with the scale contained in the report of the Royal Commission on Newfoundland Finances appointed in fulfilment of the obligation of the Government of Canada under the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada.

You have enacted a measure to alleviate the discriminatory effects of the last horizontal increase in freight rates and an inquiry has been instituted into a broad range of railway problems.

Changes have been made in the Criminal Code, including an important provision respecting obscene literature.

After study of the subject by a committee, you have approved a measure for the humane slaughter of food animals.

You have signified your approval of a new International Wheat Agreement negotiated within the past few months. The agreement has since been accepted.

You have provided for the appointment of parliamentary secretaries to ministers of the Crown.

The supplementary pensions for retired civil servants, members of the armed services and of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, provided by appropriations last year, have been placed on a statutory basis.

Other measures enacted at this session include the Act to approve the Income Tax Convention with Finland, the C.N.R. Financing and Guarantee Act, a new Seeds Act, Acts to confirm Agreements with the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick respecting Indian Reserves, an Act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Niagara River between Ontario and New York, an Act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pigeon River between Ontario and Minnesota, and an Act to repeal certain fisheries laws of Newfoundland respecting the exportation of salt fish.

You have also amended the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act, the Northwest Territories Act, the Farm Improvement Loan Act, the National Defence Act, the National Housing Act, the Trans-Canada Highway Act, the Old Age Security Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, the Public Servants Inventions Act, the Income Tax Act, the Customs Tariff, the Excise Act, the Excise Tax Act, the New Zealand Trade Agreement Act 1932, the Prime Minister's Residence Act, the Judges Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act, the Length and Mass Units Act, the Weights and Measures Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, the Public Lands Grants Act, and the Combines Investigation Act.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public services in the current fiscal year.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I pray that Divine Providence may continue to bless, protect and guide our nation.

INDEX

Abbreviations

1r, 2r, 3r	= First, second, third reading
Amdts	= Amendments
Com	= Committee
Div	= Division
M	= Motion
Ref	= Referred
Rep	= Report
r.a.	= Royal Assent

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne at opening of session
Motion for (Hon. Mr. Pearson), 18-21; seconded, (Hon. Mr. Choquette), 21-25; agreed to, 442
Speakers:
Hon. Senators:
Aseltine, 38-46
Baird, 132-3
Bradette, 152-9
Brunt, 62-69
Cameron, 191-6
Croll, 108-15
Euler, 249-53
Gershaw, 95-98
Gladstone, 133-5
Higgins, 141-5
Hnatyshyn, 302-6
Horner, 368-74
Hugessen, 86-95
Inman, 185-91
Macdonald, 28-36
MacDonald, 441-2
McDonald, 117-20
McLean, 120-2
Reid, 167-73
Robertson, 47-53
Smith (Queens-Shelburne), 69-74
Smith (Kamloops), 145-9
Thorvaldson, 102-8
Vaillancourt, 224-8
Wall, 176-81
Message of thanks from Governor General, 909

Agriculture
Agricultural Stabilization Board, operating loss, 454
Atlantic provinces
Farm lands, vacant, 187
Marketing problems, 187
Cost price squeeze, 918, 1023-4
Crop Insurance bill, 974, 1008-11, 1046, 1141
Farm Credit bill, 1012, 1018-25, 1046, 1141

Agriculture—Concluded
Farm Improvement Loans bill, 893, 916-18
Grain
Alberta production, 133
Imports and exports, 767-8
Industrial use of agricultural land, 165
Manitoba, farm production, 41
Production costs, 20, 918, 1023-4
Saskatchewan, progress in, 19-20
Seeds bill, 721, 765-8, 819, 852, 991
Western feed grains, 221-2
See Land use

Alberta
Economic outlook, 42
Education, Royal Commission on, summary of report, 193-5
Freight rates, 784
Grain production, 133
Housing, senior citizens, 346
Industrial progress, 133-4
Mineral potentials, 95-97
Gas, 97-98, 377; lack of markets, 784-5
Discovery at Medicine Hat, 97
Utilization of, 97-98
Oil discoveries, 133
Sulphur markets, 376
Municipalities, debts and taxes, 914

Animals, humane slaughter
Humane Slaughter of Food Animals bill, 1059-63, 1100, 1141
Religious rituals, 1060-1, 1062
Stockyard abuse of animals, 1062

Appendixes
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, Washington meeting
Extract from United States Congressional Record of January 9, 1959, 77-83
Report on organization meeting tabled, 537
Text of report, 544-6

Appendixes—Concluded
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, news commentators, 198-200
Convention on Nationality of Married Women, 433-4
Education, federal Government contributions, 721-2, 732-8
Electricity exportation for year ended March 31, 1956, 850-1
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act, estimated payments to provinces, 919-20
Food for Peace Conference, joint communique, 586, 595-6
Inflation, report of Finance Committee, 1030-44
International Wheat Agreement, 1959, 876-92
Land Use, report of Special Committee, 1078-87
National Gallery, answers to inquiry, 99-100
Royal Visit, itinerary, 12-15; Speeches of Her Majesty, 972-3
Selection Committee report, 16-17

Appropriation bills
No. 1. 1r, 182; 2r, 201-24; 3r, 231-4; r.a., 246
No. 2. 1r, 428; 2r, 428-31; 3r, 445; r.a., 459
No. 3. 1r, 454 2r, 454-8 (See also 467); 3r, 458; r.a., 459
No. 4. 1r, 739; 2r, 737-51 (See also 755-6); 3r, 751-2; r.a., 754
No. 5. 1r, 1132; 2r, 1132-3; 3r, 1133-4; r.a., 1141

Arrow CF-105—See Defence, Unemployment

Aseltine, Hon. W. M., Leader of the Government in the Senate
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 38-46
Agricultural Stabilization Board, operating loss, 454
Appointment to cabinet urged, 49, 153
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 182, 201-7, 208-9, 210-11, 214, 220, 222, 224, 231, 233-4, 255-6
No. 2, 428-9,430
No. 3, 454-5, 456-7, 458 (See also 467)
No. 4, 739, 747, 748, 750, 751 (See also 755-6)
No. 5, 1132, 1133-4
Atlantic Congress, members, 526-7, 553, 554
Atlantic ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 600, 601, 602, 603, 608
Grain shipments, statistics, 601
Seaway, international accomplishment, 601
Austria, treaty for re-establishment of an independent and democratic Austria, resolution for approval of, 585 (See also 617-18)
Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company bill, 183

Aseltine, Hon. W. M., Leader of the Government in the Senate—Continued
Bonds
Canada Savings, 429
Government, answer to inquiry (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), 255
Public holdings, 41
British West Indies, Canadian trade and currency relations, answer to inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pratt), 462-3
Cameron, Hon. Donald, award of Canadian Conference of the Arts, 707
Canada Council, report referred to Finance Committee, 413
Canada-New Brunswick Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 60, 123-8, 151-2
Mineral rights, 124, 128
Sale of lands, 124
Canada Shipping bill, 10, 55-56, 59
Boundaries, definition of, 55
Great Lakes navigation, pilot officer's certification, 56
Inspection of small vessels, 55
Pilotage dues, exemption, 56
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, report on organization meeting tabled, 537
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
Answers to inquiries (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 139, 183, 198-200
Broadcast Governors, salaries and expenses, estimates, 203, 210-11
Operating deficit, 204, 210
Canadian National Railways
Capital expenditures, 915-16
Chateau Laurier parking lot, answer to inquiry 820-21, 852
Contracts prior to July 1, 1960, 915
Deficit, 454, 455; temporary advances, 916
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill, 915-16
Citizenship, answer to inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 926, 1076
Citizenship of married women, answer to inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 926
Civil servants, designation, answer to inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 462
Civil Service, answers to inquiries (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), classification of positions, 248, merit system, 463, salaries, 255, 412
Columbia River, documents tabled, 560, 665
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill, 584, 641-55, 656, 667-9, 754
Divorce
Committee, 1071; appointment, 11
Rules, 1075
Documents tabled, 9, 18, 38, 47, 60, 84-85, 101, 130, 138, 150, 162, 175, 182, 201, 230, 247, 254, 273, 291, 314, 341, 375, 394, 410, 431, 461, 467, 473, 480, 508, 517, 537, 547, 586, 600, 611, 625, 665, 683, 707, 805, 819, 864, 909, 925, 933, 947, 966, 974, 992, 1012, 1045, 1088, 1114

Aseltine, Hon. W. M., Leader of the Government in the Senate—Continued
Dominion Marine Association, estimate for assistance to, 456
Economic conditions in Canada, 41-43
Education, answer to inquiry (Hon. Mr. Wall), 721-2, 732-8, 805
Emergency sittings, 341
Estimates
Answers to questions, 255-6
Undertaking that passage will not preclude further discussion, 748
Excise Tax bill, 695, 699, 771, 807, 822-3, 844
Electricity, export duty on, 822-3
Peace River Power Development Company, 822
External Affairs, terminable services, 454-8, 467
Farming, Prairie provinces, 41-43
Cash income, 41
Mineral production, 42
Wheat exports, 41
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 913, 919-20
Fisheries
Field services, 204
Fish inspection employees, pension credits, 204
Food for Peace Conference, joint communiqué, 586, 595-6
Forest research, 751
Freight assistance, western feed grains, 202, 224 See also 256
Freight rates
Crowsnest Pass agreement, 43-45
Effect on economy of Prairie provinces, 45
Hockey, World Amateur Tournament, 468
Ice-breaking costs, answer to inquiry (Hon. Mr. Isnor), 85
Immigration, answer to inquiry (Hon. Mrs. Wilson), 586, 597-8
Income Tax bill, 673, 689, 1132, 1137-8, 1140
Foreign business corporations, 1137-8, 1140
Indian affairs, motion to appoint joint committee, 537, 548-9
Indians and Eskimos, speech by South African High Commissioner, request for copy (Hon. Mr. Croll), 667
Inflation, 42-3, 353, 464-6, 510
Conversion loan, public holdings, 464-5
Cost of living index, 464
Senate study, dangerous precedent, 466
Unemployment and, 465-6
International Wheat Agreement 1959, resolution of approval, 864, 876-92, 933-5, 937, 938, 939, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946; agreed to, 966
Jackson Building explosion, repairs, 211
Labour, forced, Convention on abolition of, 695

Aseltine, Hon. W. M., Leader of the Government in the Senate—Continued
Lamb, Dr. W. Kaye, text of address at Canadian Historical Society, tabled, 183
Land Use Committee, appointment, 163, 164
Length and Mass Units bill, 584, 635-7, 667
Library of Parliament, Joint Committee, Senate Members, 36
Livestock, health of animals, supplementary estimates, 202
Married Women, Convention on Nationality of, notice of motion for resolution of approval, 395, 432, 480, 1017, 1098. See 443-4
Medway River, Nova Scotia, salmon rearing ponds and fishways, answer to inquiry (Hon. Mr. Smith, Queens-Shelburne), 461-2
National Gallery, purchases, answer to inquiry, (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 86, 99-100
National Housing bill, 254, 285, 286
Nicol, the late Hon. Jacob, tribute to, 5-6
Northwest Territories bill, 336-9
Council members, term of office, 337, 338
Governor in Council, powers of, 337, 338
Nova Scotia
Coal industry, 207-8, 256
Pictou fire, 983-4
Steamship and ferry service, 456-7, 467
Old Age Security bill, 619, 624, 660
Parks, national, 209
Parliamentary Secretaries bill, 527-8, 657
Appointments, term of, 527
Salaries, 527
Parole Board, 204-5
Pigeon River Bridge bill, 1028-9
Polar Continental Shelf Project, 750
Prairie Farm Assistance Act, 203
Prime Minister's Residence bill, 859-60, 861, 862
Rent for 24 Sussex Drive, 862, 893, 894
Printing of Parliament, joint committee, Senate members, 37
Public bills, suspension of rules, 909
Public Lands Grants bill, 9-10, 53-54, 55
Public Service Pension Adjustment bill, 912
Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Research Fund bill, 921-2
Queenston Bridge bill, 1025-6, 1027-8, 1045
Restaurant of Parliament, joint committee, Senate members, 36
Royal visit
Itinerary, 5, 12-15
Speeches of Her Majesty, 966-7, 972-3
St. Laurent, Right Hon. Louis S., presentation of portrait to House of Commons, 273
Science Service Administration, Laval University, Quebec, 202
Secretary of State for External Affairs, Hon. Sidney Earle Smith, death of, 409, 413

Aseltine, Hon. W. M., Leader of the Government in the Senate—Concluded
Seeds bill, 765-8
Grain imports and exports, 767-8
Laboratory work, Plant Products Division, 765-6
Licensing of crops, 766
Regulations establishing classes and grades, 766
Seed Grocers' Association, 767
Senate
Adjournment, 617-18, 965, 1113
Business, 46, 340, 453, 472, 610, 635, 657, 706, 908, 925-6, 948
Function, non-partisan, 40
Standing Committees, 36-7
Springhill Disaster Relief Fund, 204
Subsidies
Cold storage warehouses, 456, 467
Transportation, 162-3
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 361-5
Background, 361-2
Costs - Federal, 362, 363, provincial, 363, 364-5
Unemployment Insurance bill, 953, 976, 979-80, 983
United Nations Emergency Force, 455
Weights and Measures bill, 637-8, 639
Western grain producers, payments to, 202-3
Winter works program, 205-6, 209, 210, 211, 750-1. See also 256
Yugoslavia, Canadian Graphic Art Exhibition, answer to inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 361

Atlantic Congress
Canadian delegation, 468, 520, 522, 526-7, 553-4; London meeting, 948-52

Atlantic provinces
Chignecto Canal, immediate construction advocated, 324-5, 326-7. See also 359
Coal Production Assistance bill, 966, 1004-8
Coal subventions, 72-73
Economic conditions, 540-1
Economic Council, efforts on behalf of industry, 52, 186-7
Exports
Lumber, depletion of markets, 367
Newsprint, competition from United States and other countries, 367-8
Farm lands, vacant, 187
Ferry service, 441-2
Deficits, 442
Fisheries
Advertising needs, 73, 386
Control, 12-mile limit advocated, 287-8
Loans under Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 383, 385
Medway River salmon, 461-2
Salt fish, 385-6
Subsidies, 385

Atlantic provinces—Continued
Free trade area advocated, 289-90, 403
Freight rates, 705-6, 725-7, 758-9
Burden on industry, 71, 726
Competitive and non-competitive rates, 727
Intercolonial Railway agreement, 725-6
Wheat shipments, 405
Industry
Exodus from Maritimes, 567
Handicaps, 607
Mercantile and manufacturing industry, 403
Opportunities, 599
Research and development advocated, 270-2, 322, 325, 403
Steel, 325
Old age social security problems, 624
Ports—Resolution urging greater degree of use, 501-6, 536, 538-41, 563-72, 574-8, 598-609; amdt proposed, 607-9; resolution negatived, 609
Foreign tonnage, 502-3
Halifax
Contribution to Canada, 571-2
National Harbours Board, report on, 502-3
Proximity to world markets, 503-4
Revenues of port, importance to provincial economy, 539
Wartime experience and services, 502, 541, 575
Ice-breaking expenditures, not excessive, 604
Newfoundland
Free port development, need for, 564-5, 577
Labrador, potential benefits, 565
Trade expansion, solution to Maritime problems, 569
Problems
Economic, 185-6
Industrial and regional, 72-73
Marketing, 187
Political, 186
Revenues, 401
St. Lawrence Seaway
Effect on economy of, 270-2, 325, 326, 403
Shipping costs, 230
Tourist industry, 188-9, 190-1, 434
Trans-Canada Highway
Extra financial aid necessary, 401-2
Federal Government share, 391-2
Newfoundland
Terms of union, deficiency in, 435
Unfavourable comparison per capita expenditure, 435
Nova Scotia, 434, 436, 437

Atlantic provinces—Concluded
Transportation facilities, provincial needs, 566
Unemployment, 5, 72-74, 117-18, 208, 401
See also New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island

Austria
Treaty for re-establishment of an independent and democratic Austria, motion for approval of, 585, 625-35; adopted, 635
See also 617-18

Baird, Hon. A. B.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 132-3
Government expenditures, 132, 133
Inflation, 132-3
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 362
Unemployment, 133
War Service Grants bill, 594

Baloise Fire Insurance Company of Canada bill. 1r, 130; 2r-ref to com., 160; rep. of com., 175; 3r, 183-5; r.a., 459

Banff School of Fine Arts, 392-3

Barbour, Hon. George H.
Appropriation bill No. 1, 207
Atlantic provinces
Ferry service, 389
Causeway, Cape Tormentine to Borden, 389
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 388-9

Beaubien, Hon. Arthur L., Chief Opposition Whip in the Senate
Appropriation bill No. 1, 203, 207, 256
Canadian General Council of Boy Scouts Association bill, 360-1
Congregation of Sisters of Holy Family of Bordeaux bill, 360
Evangelical Mennonite Conference bill, 162, 196-7, 247, 274-5
Excise Tax bill, 698-9, 700
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 741, 744
Indian affairs, 560, 640, 721
Old age Security bill, 683
Restaurant of Parliament, 739
Tourist traffic, Parliament Buildings, parking regulations, 714

Bill of Rights, 22, 24-25

Bills, Divorce, 61, 98, 101-2, 129, 130, 131-2, 138, 151, 160-1, 165, 166-7, 173-4, 175, 182, 201, 228-9, 245, 248, 255, 306-7, 342, 365, 394-5, 432, 445, 506-7, 508-9, 536, 538, 547-8, 560, 572, 573-4, 583, 585-7, 609-10, 611-12, 640, 669-70, 786-7, 820, 909, 990-1

Bills, private
Baloise Fire Insurance Company of Canada. 1r, 130; 2r-ref to com, 160; rep of com, 175; 3r, 183-5; r.a., 459

Bills, private—Concluded
Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada. 1r, 116; 2r, 135-7; ref to com, 137; rep of com, 175; 3r, 183; Commons amdt, 314; Commons amdt concurred in, 342; r.a., 459
British Pacific Life Insurance Company. (also Pacific Standard Life Insurance Company, Paramount Life Insurance Company) 1r, 254; 2r, 307-8; ref to com, 308; rep of com, 360; amdts concurred in-3r, 386; Commons amdts, 480; Commons amdts concurred in, 496; r.a., 559
Canadian General Council of Boy Scouts Association. 1r, 254; 2r, 308-10; ref to com, 310; rep of com, 360-1; 3r, 361; r.a., 559
Canadian Legion of British Empire Service League. 1r, 480; 2r, 514-15; ref to com, 515; rep of com-3r, 573; r.a., 754
Canadian Medical Association. 1r, 38; 2r, 75-76; ref to com, 76; rep of com-3r, 116; r.a., 459
Congregation of Sisters of Holy Family of Bordeaux. 1r, 255; 2r, 310-13; ref to com, 313; rep of com-3r, 360; Commons amdts, 480; Commons amdts concurred in, 496; r.a., 559
Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company. 1r, 341; 2r, 375; ref to com, 376; rep of com-3r, 410; r.a., 559
Desjardins Mutual Life Assurance Company. 1r, 864; 2r, 906-8; ref to com, 908; rep of com-amdts concurred in, 947-8; 3r, 948; r.a., 1141
Evangelical Mennonite Conference. 1r, 162; 2r, 196-7; ref to com, 197; rep of com, 247; 3r, 247-8; refund of fees, 274-5, r.a., 559
Export Finance Corporation of Canada, Ltd. 1r, 410; 2r, 445-53; ref to com, 453; rep of com-amdts concurred in, 497-9; 3r, 508; r.a., 754
Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. 1r, 341; 2r, 376-82; ref to com, 382; rep of com-amdt concurred in, 431; 3r, 445; r.a., 559
Free Methodist Church in Canada. 1r, 769; 2r, 802-4; ref to com, 804; rep of com, 819; 3r, 819-20; r.a., 991
Gore District Mutual Fire Insurance Company. 1r, 101; 2r, 128-9; ref to com, 129; rep of com, 150-1; 3r, 151; r.a., 459
Lutheran Church—Canada. 1r, 461; 2r-ref to com, 479; rep of com-amdts, 486; amdts concurred in-3r, 507; refund of fees, 508; r.a., 754
North American Accident Insurance Company. 1r, 130; 2r, 159-60; ref to com, 160; rep of com, 175; 3r, 185; r.a., 459

Bills, private—Concluded
Pacific Standard Life Insurance Company —See British Pacific Life Insurance Company
Paramount Life Insurance Company—See British Pacific Life Insurance Company
Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Prince Rupert. 1r, 707; 2r-ref to com, 752; rep of com-3r, 786; r.a., 991
Standard Trust Company. 1r, 805; 2r, 862-3; ref to com, 863; rep of com, 895; 3r, 914; r.a. 1141
Waterloo Mutual Insurance Company. 1r, 38; 2r, 74-75; ref to com, 75; rep of com-3r, 101; r.a., 459

Bills, public
Appropriation
No. 1. 1r, 182; 2r, 201-24; 3r, 231-4; r.a., 246
No. 2. 1r, 428; 2r, 428-31; 3r, 445; r.a., 459
No. 3. 1r, 454; 2r, 454-8, (see also 467); 3r, 458; r.a., 459
No. 4. 1r, 739; 2r, 737-51, (see also 755-6); 3r, 751-2; r.a., 754
No. 5. 1r, 1132; 2r, 1132-3; 3r, 1133-4; r.a., 1141
Bretton Woods Agreements. 1r. 755; 2r, 796-801, 815-17; ref to com, 817; authority to print com proceedings - rep of com, 865; 3r, 896; r.a., 991
Canada-Finland Income Tax Convention. 1r, 805; 2r, 858-9; 896-901; 3r, 914; r.a., 991
Canada-New Brunswick Indian Reserves Agreement. 1r, 60; 2r, 122-8; ref to com, 128; rep of com, 138; 3r, 151-2; r.a., 1141
Canada-Nova Scotia Indian Reserves Agreement. 1r, 755; 2r, 873-5; ref to com, 875; rep of com-3r, 909; r.a., 1141
Canada Shipping. 1r, 10; 2r, 55-59; ref to com, 59; authority to print proceedings, 116; rep of com, 247; amdts concurred in, 265-8; 3r, 286-90
Canadian Forces Superannuation. 1r, 864; 2r, 957-60; ref to com, 960; rep of com, 974, 3r, 975; r.a., 991
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee. 1r, 864; 2r, 915-16; ref to com, 916; rep of com, 948; 3r, 967; r.a., 991
Coal Production Assistance. 1r, 966; 2r, 1004-7; ref to com, 1007-8; rep of com-3r, 1046; r.a., 1141
Combines Investigation. 1r, 1134; 2r, 1134-7; 3r, 1137; r.a., 1141
Criminal Code. 1r, 966; 2r, 984-90, 992-1004; ref to com, 1004; rep of com, 1046-8; 3r, 1048; amdts concurred in by Commons, 1137; r.a., 1141

Bills, public—Continued
Crop Insurance. 1r, 974; 2r, 1008-11; ref to com, 1011; rep of com-3r, 1046; r.a., 1141
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement. 1r, 584; 2r, 641-55; ref to com, 655; rep of com, 656; 3r, 667-9; r.a., 754
Excise. 1r, 584; 2r, 612-17; ref to com, 617; rep of com, 656; 3r, 667; r.a., 754
Excise Tax. 1r, 640; 2r, 695-702, 716-20; authority to print com proceedings, 721; rep of com, 769-70; m for concurrence in amdts, 770-9, 821-44; m negatived, 844; r.a., 991
Export Credits Insurance. 1r, 640; 2r, 692-4; ref to com, 694; authority to print proceedings-rep of com, 806; 3r, 844-5; r.a., 991
Farm Credit. 1r, 1012; 2r, 1018-25; ref to com, 1025; rep of com-3r, 1046; r.a., 1141
Farm Improvement Loans. 1r, 893; 2r, 916-18; ref to com, 918; rep of com, 947; 3r, 967; r.a., 991
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements. 1r, 755; 2r, 791-6, 853-8, 868-73; ref to com, 873; rep of com, 893; 3r, 913-14; r.a., 991
Fisheries Improvement Loans. 1r, 360; 2r, 383-6; ref to com, 386; rep of com-3r, 411; r.a., 459
Freight Rates Reduction. 1r, 625; 2r, 702-6; 722-31, 740-7, 756-9; ref to com, 759; authority to print proceedings - rep of com, 819; 3r, 852-3; r.a., 991
Humane Slaughter of Food Animals. 1r, 1059; 2r, 1059-63, 1100; 3r, 1100; r.a., 1141
Income Tax. 1r, 656; 2r, 670-82, 684-92; ref to com, 692; authority to print committee proceedings, 721; rep of com, 806; amdts concurred in, 845; 3r, 853; Commons disagreement with Senate amdt, 1131-2; non-insistence on amdt, 1137-41; r.a., 1141
Judges. 1r, 755; 2r, 801-2, 817-18; ref to com, 818; rep of com-3r, 852; r.a., 991
Length and Mass Units. 1r, 584; 2r, 635-7; ref to com, 637; rep of com, 656; 3r, 667; r.a., 991
National Defence. 1r, 247; 2r, 327-36; ref to com, 336; authority to print proceedings, 358; rep of com, 358-9; amdts concurred in-3r, 361; amdts concurred in by Commons, 428; r.a., 459
National Energy Board. 1r, 739; 2r, 779-85, 787-91, 807-15, 845-8; ref to com, 848; authority to print proceedings, 865; rep of com, 1015-16; 3r, 1016; amdts concurred in by Commons, 1137; r.a., 1141

Bills, public—Continued
National Housing. 1r, 254; 2r, 275-86; ref to com, 286; authority to print proceedings, 291; rep of com, 291; 3r, 342-50; r.a., 459
Newfoundland Additional Grants. 1r, 1063; 2r, 1063-8, 1100-13; 3r, 1114-20; r.a., 1141
Newfoundland Salt Fish Exportation Laws Repeal. 1r, 1013; 2r, 1048-51; 3r, 1051; r.a., 1141
Northwest Territories. 1r, 254; 2r, 336-9; ref to com, 339; authority to print proceedings, 359; rep of com-amdts concurred in, 411-12; 3r, 412; amdts concurred in by Commons, 445; r.a., 459
Old Age Security. 1r, 584; 2r, 618-24, 657-63; ref to com, 663; rep of com, 683; r.a., 754
Parliamentary Secretaries. 1r, 461; 2r, 527-36, 554-8, 561-3, 587-91; ref to com, 591; rep of com-amdts, 656; amdts concurred in-3r, 657; amdts concurred in by Commons, 707; r.a., 754
Pigeon River Bridge. 1r, 1012; 2r, 1028-9; ref to com, 1029; rep of com-3r, 1046; r.a., 1141
Prime Minister's Residence. 1r, 805; 2r, 859-62; ref to com, 862; rep of com, 893; 3r, 893-5; r.a., 991
Prisons and Reformatories. 1r, 769; 2r, 848-9; 3r, 853; r.a. 991
Public Lands Grants. 1r, 9-10; 2r, 53-54; ref to com, 54-55; authority to print proceedings, 101; rep of com-amdt concurred in, 273-4; 3r, 292; r.a. 1141
Public Servants Inventions. 1r, 375; 2r, 395-400; ref to com, 400; rep of com, 411; authority to print proceedings, 411; r.a., 459
Public Service Pension Adjustment. 1r, 864; 2r, 910-13; ref to com, 913; rep of com, 947; 3r, 967; r.a., 991
Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Research Fund. 1r, 921; 2r, 921-25; 3r, 925; r.a., 991
Queenston Bridge. 1r, 1012-13; 2r, 1025-8; ref to com, 1028; rep of com, 1045; 3r, 1045-6; r.a., 1141
Railways. 1r, 3
Representation. 1r, 547; 2r, 578-82; 3r, 582; r.a., 754
Royal Canadian Mounted Police. 1r, 896; 2r, 967-71; ref to com, 971; rep of com-amdt concurred in-3r, 975; amdt concurred in by Commons, 1137; r.a., 1141
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation. 1r, 921; 2r, 963-5; ref to com, 965; rep of com-3r, 974; r.a., 991

Bills, public—Concluded
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. 1r, 247; 2r, 268-72, 319-27; authority to print proceedings, 357-8; rep of com-3r, 358; r.a., 459
Seeds. 1r, 721; 2r, 765-8; ref to com, 768; rep of com, 819; 3r, 852; r.a., 991
Trans-Canada Highway. 1r, 291; 2r, 361-5, 401-3; ref to com, 403; rep of com, 410; authority to print proceedings, 411; 3r, 432-9; r.a., 459
Unemployment Insurance. 1r, 864; 2r, 952-7; ref to com, 957; authority to print com proceedings-rep of com, 975; 3r, 975-83; r.a., 991
Veterans' Land. 1r, 864; 2r, 960-3; ref to com, 963; rep of com-3r, 974; r.a., 991
Veterans Rehabilitation. 1r, 573; 2r, 591-3; ref to com, 593; rep of com-3r, 611; r.a., 754
War Service Grants. 1r, 573; 2r, 593-4; ref to com, 594; rep of com-3r, 611; r.a., 754
Weights and Measures. 1r, 585; 2r, 637-8; ref to com, 638-9; rep of com, 656; 3r, 667; r.a., 991

Bishop, Hon. Charles L.
Petitions, private bills, extension of time for filing, 375

Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada bill. 1r, 116; 2r, 135-7; ref to com, 137; rep of com, 175; 3r, 183; Commons amdt, 314; Commons amdt concurred in, 342; r.a., 459

Bois, Hon. Henri C.
Land Use
Committee report, 1120-3
Organized guidance and training, necessity for, 1121-3
Small farms, problem of, 1120-1

Bonds, Government, 120, 233, 238
Allotment of recent short-term issue, inquiry, Canada Savings, 429 (Hon. A. K. Hugessen) and answer, 255
Canada Savings, 429
Conversion loan, 104-7, 373-4
Bank holdings, 108
Cost of, 151, 179, 661-2, 663
Interest rates, 89-90, 92, 104-5, 110, 241-2, 250
Interest tax credits, proposal for, 120
Public holdings, 32, 41, 91, 92, 93, 464-5
Loss to investors, 91

Bouffard, Hon. Paul H.
Baloise Fire Insurance Company of Canada bill, 175
Canadian Medical Association bill, 116
Criminal Code bill, 988-90
Obscenity, definition of, 988-9
Seizures, 989-90

Bouffard, Hon. Paul H.—Concluded
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 913
Free Methodist Church in Canada bill, 819
Judges bill, 817-18
Quebec, Superior Court appointments, 817-18
National Energy Board bill, 807-12
Crown lands, 812
Her Majesty bound by Act, 811-12
International and provincial power lines, 808-11
Orders and decisions of Board, 807-8
Enforcement at owner's expense, suggested, 807
Nicol, the late Hon. Jacob, tribute to, 8
North American Accident Insurance Company bill, 175
Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Prince Rupert, 786
Unemployment Insurance bill, 928

Boy Scouts—See Canadian General Council of Boy Scouts Association bill

Bradette, Hon. Joseph A.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 152-9
Austria, resolution for approval of State treaty, 628-9
Economic conditions, 157-8
Federal-provincial relations, 158-9
Governor General, 153-5
Suggested alternate appointment of English- and French-speaking Canadian, 153-5
International relations
Russia, attempts to gain control of West Germany, 155-6
United Nations, 156
United States
Investments in Canada, 155
Rejection of British bid on installation of army project at Arkansas, 517
Leader of Government in Senate, should be member of Privy Council, 153
Northern development, 159
Trade, 156-7
Tariff war, 156

Brazil
Rio de Janeiro, 47th Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference, 355-6
Recommendation for Canadian participation in Union, 356

Bretton Woods Agreements bill. 1r, 755; 2r, 796-801, 815-17; ref to com, 817; authority to print com proceedings-rep of com, 865; 3r, 896; r.a., 991

British Columbia
Columbia River
Documents requested, 560, 665
Proposed diversion to Fraser River, 171-3

British Columbia—Concluded
Fisheries, field services, construction of spawning channel, Robson Creek, 204
Freight assistance, western feed grain, 220-3
Kamloops, anniversary celebrations (1962), 149

British Empire Service League—See Canadian Legion of British Empire Service League bill

British Pacific Life Insurance Company bill. (also Pacific Standard Life Insurance Company, Paramount Life Insurance Company). 1r, 254; 2r, 307-8; ref to com, 308; rep of com, 360; amdts concurred in-3r, 386; Commons amdts, 480; Commons amdts concurred in; 496; r.a., 559

British West Indies—See West Indies

Broadcasting
Board of Broadcast Governors, salaries and expenses, 203, 210-11
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
Artists, salaries of, 61, 131, 139
Expenditures, 663
News commentators, 183, 198-200
Operating deficit, 204, 210
Producers' strike, 60, 116-17, 131, 139. See also 201, 232-3
Press comment on inquiries, 84
Television programs, receipts from sponsors, 61

Brunt, Hon. William R., Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 62-69
Appropriation bill No. 3, 458
Austria, resolution for approval of State Treaty, 627, 633
Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada bill, 116, 135-6, 137, 342
Bretton Woods Agreements bill, 816
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, meeting at Washington, 62-69, 77-83
Subjects proposed for discussion, 67-68
Combines Investigation bill, 1134-5, 1137
Agreements and activities between fishermen and companies, legality of, 1135
Divorce rules, 1076
Excise bill, 612, 613, 614, 616, 617
Liquor and tobacco, duty increases, 612, 616
Excise Tax bill, 695-702
Export Finance Corporation of Canada bill, 410, 445-6, 447, 448-50, 451, 453
Authorized capital, 450
Directors, 447
Loans for facilitating overseas trade, 446, 448-9

Brunt, Hon. William R., Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate—Concluded
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 791
Personal income tax, provincial, 791
Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. bill, 341, 376-80, 381, 382, 431
Rail transportation, problems, 377
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 384
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 742, 743, 744
Humane Slaughter of Food Animals bill, 1060, 1061
Internal economy, reports of committee, 895-6
International Wheat Agreement, 937, 938, 939, 940
Income Tax bill, 671, 673, 674, 675, 676-7, 680
Medical expenses, 676-7
Judges bill, 801-2, 818
Appointments
Superior Court, Quebec, 802
Supreme Court, Alberta and British Columbia, 802
Salaries, 802
Monopolies, large corporations, 264
National Defence bill, 331
National Energy Board bill, 1015-16
International and provincial power lines, 1015
Licences, 1015
Newfoundland Additional Grants bill, 1066, 1067, 1068, 1117
Old Age Security bill, 658, 661, 662
Orders and Privileges Committee, 4
Parliamentary Secretaries bill, 556
Prime Minister's Residence bill, 894
Public Servants Inventions bill, 395-7, 398, 399, 400, 440
Awards, 400
Canadian Patents and Development Limited, 396
Selection Committee, 4
Senate Pages hockey team, 476
Standard Trust Company bill, 805-6, 862-3
Tourist traffic
Parliament Buildings, rest room facilities, 713,714
Unemployment Insurance bill, 977
West Indies, Economic Mission of Canadian Chamber of Commerce, 318

Buchanan, Hon. John A.
Appropriation bill No. 1, 213
Introduction to Senate, 26

Burchill, Hon. G. Percival
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 208
No. 2, 430

Burchill, Hon. G. Percival—Concluded
Atlantic provinces
Chignecto Canal, 324-5
Exports
Lumber, depletion of markets, 367
New Brunswick, 956-7
Newsprint, foreign competition, 367-8
Subject for study by Senate Committee, 368
Freight rates
Burden on industry, 726
Competitive and non-competitive rates, 727
Intercolonial Railway Agreement, 725-6
Oil refinery of K. C. Irving, industrialist, dependence on, 325
Canada-New Brunswick Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 125
Excise Tax bill, 700
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 872
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 725-7
Crowsnest Pass agreement, 725, 726
Inflation, 365-8
Corporation and public utilities, 366-7
International Wheat Agreement, 942
New Brunswick fishing fleet disaster, 866-7
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill, 269, 324-5
Effect on Atlantic ports, 325
Unemployment Insurance bill, 956-7, 975
Commission of Inquiry into operations of act, advocated, 957

Caisses Populaires, 285, 407

Cameron, Hon. Donald
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 191-6
Appropriation bill, No. 1, 204
Award of Canadian Conference of the Arts, 707-8
Co-operative Fire and Casualty Co. bill, 341, 375-6
Education and government, 191-6
Alberta Royal Commission, summary of report, 193-5
Communist countries, achievements, 192, 195
National Conference on Education, 193
Rural problems, 195
Teachers, 194, 195
Salaries, 195
University residences, 347
Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. bill, 382
Government grants, restriction suggested, 196
Land use
Committee appointment, 164-5
Subcommittees suggested, 165
Industrial use of agricultural land, 165
National Energy Board bill, 787-91
Economic expansion, 787, 790-1

Cameron, Hon. Donald—Concluded
National Energy Board bill—Con.
Petroleum industry, 787-91
American investments, 788-9
Firestone, Dr. O. J., Department of Trade and Commerce, speech in New York, quoted, 789
Reaction to report of Energy Commission, 788
National Housing bill, 346-7
Senior citizens, 346-7; Alberta 5-year plan, 346
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 436-7
Western section too narrow, 436
United Kingdom Prime Minister, Right Hon. Harold Macmillan, Ottawa visit, 394

Campbell, Hon. G. Peter
Canada-New Brunswick Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 127-8

Canada Council
Report referred to Finance Committee, 413
Authority to print com proceedings, 467
Scholarships for nationals of foreign countries, inquiry, 1076

Canada-Finland Income Tax Convention bill. 1r, 805; 2r, 858-9, 896-901; 3r, 914; r.a., 991

Canada-New Brunswick Indian Reserves Agreement bill. 1r, 60; 2r, 122-8; ref to com, 128; rep of com, 138; 3r, 151-2; r.a., 1141

Canada-Nova Scotia Indian Reserves Agreement bill. 1r, 755; 2r, 873-5; ref to com, 875; rep of com-3r, 909; r.a., 1141

Canada Shipping bill. 1r, 10; 2r, 55-59; ref to com, 59; authority to print proceedings, 116; rep of com, 247; amdts concurred in, 265-8; 3r, 286-90

Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Washington meeting, 62-69, 77-83, 118, 146-7
Report of organization meeting tabled, 537
Text of report, 544-6

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—See Broadcasting

Canadian Forces Superannuation bill. 1r, 864; 2r, 957-60; ref to com, 960; rep of com, 974; 3r, 975; r.a., 991

Canadian General Council of Boy Scouts Association bill. 1r, 254; 2r, 308-10; ref to com, 310; rep of com, 360-1; 3r, 361; r.a., 559

Canadian Legion of British Empire Service League bill. 1r, 480; 2r, 514-15; ref to com, 515; 2r, 514-15; ref to com, 515; rep of com-3r, 573; r.a., 754

Canadian Medical Association bill. 1r, 38; 2r, 75-76; ref to com, 76; rep of com-3r, 116; r.a., 459

Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill. 1r, 864; 2r, 915-16; ref to com, 916 rep of com, 948; 3r, 967; r.a., 991
See Railways

Cape Breton—See Atlantic provinces

Capital punishment, commutation of death sentences, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 85; answer, 86

Census questionnaire, 553

Chamber of Commerce, Canadian, Economic Mission to British West Indies, 314-19, 445

Chateau Laurier parking lot, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Horner), 820; answer, 821; discussion on answer, 852

Chevrier, Hon. Lionel, President of St. Lawrence Seaway Authority (1954-57), 321, 605

Chignecto Canal, immediate construction advocated, 323-7. See also 359

China
Communists
Labour unions, 709-10
Tibet, invasion of, 709

Choquette, Hon. Lionel
Acting Speaker, 182, 805, 909
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 21-25
Bill of Rights, 22, 24-25
Commonwealth Economic Conference, Montreal, 22, 23
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill, 641-4, 650
Fruits and vegetables, 642-4
GATT, 644
Machines and machinery, 641-2
"Made in Canada" rulings, 644
Most-favoured-nation tariffs, 641, 643, 644
Economic recession, 22
Inflation, 476-9
Cost of living index, 477
Deficits, cardinal feature of budgeting, 477
Senate study, impracticability of, 477-9
International affairs, Canada's role, 22
Newfoundland Additional Grants bill, 1063-5, 1115
Payments (1957-62), and method of, 1064
Royal Commission on Finances, quoted, 1063
Salacious publications, 22-23
Simultaneous translation system, symbolic bond between English and French Canadians, 23
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill, 268-72
Borrowings, increase in, 268-70

Churchill, port of, Grain shipments through, 505-6, 606

Citizenship, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 820, 865-6, 910; answer, 926; further inquiry, 1076

Citizenship of married women inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 820, 865-6, 910; answer, 926. See Married women, Convention on nationality of Civil servants, designation, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) and answer, 462

Civil Service
Inquiries (Hon. Mr. Pouliot)
Classification of positions, 201, 248
Merit system, 463
Salaries, 255, 412
See Public Servants Inventions bill

Coal, 96
Springhill mines, 117-18
See Minerals

Coal Production Assistance bill. 1r, 966; 2r, 1004-7; ref to com, 1007-8; rep of com-3r, 1046; r.a., 1141

Colombo Plan, 454, 455, 457-8
Canada's participation, 663

Columbia River
Documents requested, 560, 665
Proposed diversion to Fraser River, 171-3

Combines Investigation bill. 1r, 1134; 2r, 1134-7; 3r, 1137; r.a., 1141

Commissions, Royal
Alberta—Education, summary of report, 193-5
Energy, 779-80
See National Energy Board bill
Manitoba—Flood protection, 178
Railway problems, 600-1, 606
Transportation, 723, 725, 729, 730

Committee of the Whole House, suggested study of defence expenditures, 542; and of supply bills, 211

Committees
Banking and Commerce—Members, 16; reports, 101, 173, 273, 291, 357, 358, 359, 360, 386, 410, 411-12, 497, 611, 656, 683, 721, 769, 806, 852, 893, 895, 974, 975, 1046
Canadian Trade Relations—Members, 17; reports, 966
Civil Service Administration—Members, 17
Debates and Reporting—Members, 17
Divorce
Committee
Appointment, 11
Members, 10, 27, 47

Committees—Concluded
Divorce—Concluded
Committee—Concluded
Reports, 18, 38, 59, 60, 85, 98, 101, 115, 116, 129, 137, 162, 175, 181, 197, 201, 245, 255, 306, 341, 374, 412, 461, 472, 486, 507, 508, 536, 538, 547, 559, 572, 585, 609, 611, 639, 756, 806, 909, 1068-71
External Relations—members, 16; reports, 865
Finance—members, 16, 102, 721; reports, 467, 560, 665-6, 756, report on threat of inflation, 1013-14, 1030-44
Immigration and Labour—members, 17, 102
Indian Affairs—members, Senate, 548, 560, 640, 721; Commons, 553; reports, 683, 1014-15, 1058
Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts —Members, 16; reports, 84, 432, 895-6, 918
Land Use—Members, 163; reports, 182, 228, 1068, 1071-5, 1078-87
Library of Parliament—Report of Librarian tabled, 9; Members, Senate, 16, 36, Commons, 150; reports, 1012, 1051
Miscellaneous Private Bills—Members, 16, 102; reports, 116, 175, 360-1, 486, 507, 573, 786, 819
Natural Resources—Members, 17, 102; reports, 819, 865, 909
Orders and Privileges—Appointment, 4
Printing of Parliament—Members, Senate, 16, 37, Commons, 150
Public Buildings and Grounds—Members, 17
Public Health and Welfare—Members, 17
Restaurant of Parliament—Members, Senate, 16, 37, Commons, 150
Selection—Members, 4; reports, 11, 16-17, 36
Standing Orders—Members, 16; reports, 375, 683, 769
Tourist Traffic—Members, 17; reports, 865
Trade Relations—Members, 17, 102
Transport and Communications—Members, 16, 102; reports, 116, 431, 819, 1045, 1046

Commonwealth Economic Conference, Montreal, 22, 23

Communists
China, 709-10
Education, 192, 195
Labour unions, 709-10
Tibet, invasion of, 709
See Russia

Congregation of Sisters of Holy Family of Bordeaux bill. 1r, 255; 2r, 310-13; ref to com, 313; rep of com-3r, 360; Commons amdts, 480; Commons amdts concurred in, 496; r.a., 559

Connolly, Hon. Harold
Atlantic provinces, 269-72, 401-3,
Economic conditions, 540
Export of dollars to central Canada, 271
Financial position, extra aid needed, 401-2
Free trade area for, 403
Mercantile and manufacturing industry, suggestion for Federal aid to, 403
Nova Scotia, financial report, 401
Ports
Resolution urging greater degree of use, 536, 539-41
Halifax, revenues of port, importance to provincial economy, 539
Wartime experiences and services, 541
Research and development, neglect of, 270
Revenue sources, 401
Defence expenditures, effect on economy, 539
St. Lawrence Seaway
Ocean tariff, discrimination against port of Montreal charged, 403
Toronto, freedom from National Harbours Board jurisdiction, 403
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill, 269-72
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 401-3
Unemployment, 401

Connolly, Hon. John J.
Appropriation bill No. 1, 210. See also 256
Atlantic Congress, London meeting, 948-52
Canada Shipping bill, 266-8
Annual inspections, 267
Flag discriminations, 267
Pilotage dues, 266-7
Pilot officers, 266
Coal Production Assistance bill, 1046
Combines Investigations bill, 1135-6, 1137
Delay in receipt of legislation from Commons, 1135-6
Fish prices, predetermination of, 1136
Criminal Code bill, 989, 1046-7
Crop Insurance bill, 1046
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill, 644-6, 652
Most-favoured-nation tariffs, 646
Tariff Board report of 1957, 645
United States competition, 645
European Common Market, 418-24
Business enterprises in Europe, possibilities from establishment, 423
Economic aid to devastated areas, 419
Free trade area, 422
Legislative Assembly, 421
Tariffs, 421-3
External, should be low, 423
GATT, 422, 423, 645-6
World exports, 419-21, 423

Connolly, Hon. John J.—Concluded
Excise bill, 615-16
Excise Tax Act and Excise Act, suggested combination, 616
Tobacco and liquor, imported, 615-16
Excise Tax bill, 695, 700, 701, 702
False representation as to use of goods, 701-2
Export Finance Corporation of Canada bill, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451-2, 453
Directors, 447
Foreign policies of Government, question of, 451, 452
Preferred shares, provision for by-law, 452
Farm Credit bill, 1046
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 853-7
Nova Scotia, revenues, 855-6
Provincial rights in taxation, 854-7
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 411
Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. bill, 378, 379, 380, 381-2, 431
Humane Slaughter of Food Animals bill, 1060
Income Tax bill, 674, 1138, 1139, 1140
International Wheat Agreement, 935
National Defence bill, 329
Northwest Territories bill, 337, 338, 339, 411-12
Parliamentary Secretaries bill, 589-90
Public Lands Grants bill, 54, 55
Public Servants Inventions bill, 411
Public Service Pension Adjustment bill, 911-12
Royal Canadian Mounted Police bill, 969-70, 971
Offences, trials and appeals, 969-70, 971
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation bill, 964
Senate
Cabinet representation needed, 590
Senators who have held cabinet portfolios, 589
Constitutional position of, 589-90
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 410-11
Unemployment Insurance bill, 928

Construction—See Housing, Trans-Canada Highway

Convention on Abolition of Forced Labour, resolution of approval, 695, 708-10, 759-65; adopted, 765. See Labour

Convention on Nationality of Married Women, resolution of approval, 395, 432, 443-4, 480, 548, 821, 967, 1016-18, 1088-1100; amendment proposed, 1016-17; ruled out of order, 1017. See also 865-6

Conversion loan,—See Bonds, Government

Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company bill. 1r, 341; 2r, 375; ref to com, 376; rep of com-3r, 410; r.a., 559

Cost of living, 297-9, 301
Newfoundland, 794
Price levels, interferences with, 481-2
Foods, 482
Statistics (1945-59), 105, 414-17
See Inflation

Crerar, Hon. T.A., P.C.
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 202, 203, 204, 209, 211
No. 4, 739, 749-50
Atlantic Congress, 553
Atlantic ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 568-9
Freight rates, 569
Protectionist policies, opposition to, 568-9
Trade expansion, solution to Maritime problems, 569
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill, 584, 650-1, 652, 653
Consumer interest, 651
Dumping principle, 650
Information on bill lacking, 651
World markets, necessity for reciprocal buying, 650-1
Excise bill, 614-15
Excise Tax bill, 700
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 913
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 727-9, 730
Crowsnest Pass agreement, 727-8; inquiry advocated, 729, 730
Canadian Pacific Railway, land grants and mineral rights, 728-9
Government spending, 614-15, 749-50
Indian affairs, 551-2
Integration, 552
Inflation
Causes, 298-9
Cost of living index, resumé, 297-9, 301
Effects, 299
Freight rates, effect on commodity prices, 299
High cost economy, 301
Senate right to study problem, 299-301
International Wheat Agreement, 936-40, 944, 945, 946,
Lumber industry, competition from abroad, 622, 954-5
National Housing bill, 283-4
Large houses, devaluation of, 283-4

Crerar, Hon. T.A., P.C.—Concluded
Northwest Territories bill, 338-9
Appeals from decision of local court, 339
Governor in Council, powers of, 338-9
Population increase in Territories, 338
Old Age Security bill, 621-2
Parks, national, 209-10
Parliamentary Secretaries bill, 557-8
Appointments, term of, 558
Expenditures for, 558
Prime Minister's Residence bill, 894-5
Rent for 24 Sussex Drive, 894-5
Public Service Pension Adjustment bill, 912-13
Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Research Fund bill, 923-5
Social security, increasing Government assistance, 283
Tourist traffic
Parliament Buildings, parking privileges, question of authority for, 713, 714
Trade, 622, 954-5
Unemployment Insurance bill, 954-6, 980-2
Administration, weaknesses of, 953
Depletion of fund, 955-6, 981
Increase in contributions, effect on employers, 954-5, 981
Insurance and relief, separate categories advocated, 953
Retired persons, eligibility for benefits, 953

Criminal Code
Confessions, withholding of publication, 997,1002
Obscene publications, definition of, 993-6, 998-1001

Criminal Code bill. 1r, 966; 2r, 984-90, 992-1004; ref to com, 1004; rep of com-amdts, 1046-8; 3r, 1048; amdts concurred in by Commons, 1137; r.a., 1141

Croll, Hon. David A.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 108-15
Appropriation bill No. 1, 207, 213-17
Canadian Legion of British Empire Service League bill, 514-15
Conversion loan, 110, 261; interest rates, 110
Criminal Code bill, 1047
Defence
Aviation industry in Canada
Arrow CF-105, 112-15, 212-17

Croll, Hon. David A.—Concluded
Defence—Concluded
Arrow CF-105—Concluded
Building of United States planes by A. V. Roe Co., should be arranged, 216
Lobbying, need for, 111, 215
Rejection of British bid on installation of army project in Arkansas, 157, 215
Expenditures, 111-13
Skilled workers, emigration to United States, 114, 214, 216
Western military unity non-existent, as far as Canada is concerned, 216
Deficit financing, 110-11
Divorce
Bills, 572
Committee reports, 572, 583, 609
Excise bill, 613, 614, 616, 617
Price increase on Ontario liquors, 614
Excise Tax bill, 769, 770, 772, 806-7, 826-9
Electricity, export duty on, 826-9
Peace River Power Development Company 827
United States-Canada relations, defence policies, 829
House of Commons members' indemnities inadequate, 529-30
Indians and Eskimos, request for copy of speech by South African High Commissioner, 667
Inflation, 110, 260-5
Labour, fight against, 261-3
Monopolies, large corporations, 262-4
Consumer fair price council, suggestion for, 264
Related problems, financial experts concern for, 261, 262-3
Labour, forced, Convention on abolition of, 710
National Housing bill, 285
Old Age Security bill, 683
Parliamentary Secretaries bill, 528-30
Salaries, 529-30
Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Research Fund bill, 925
Queenston Bridge bill, 1026, 1027
Representation bill, 581, 582
Royal Canadian Mounted Police documents requested, 394. See 431
Unemployment, 109-10, 113-14, 213-17
Insurance bill, 929-31
Insurance Commission reports, 597, 625
Insurance Fund, 109

Crop Insurance bill. 1r, 974; 2r, 1008-11; ref to com, 1011; rep of com-3r, 1046; r.a., 1141

Crowsnest Pass Agreement on freight rates, 43-45, 220, 706, 722-8, 731, 757

Curling. Dominion Champions and Scotch Cup Champions, tribute to victorious Richardson Rink, 395

Customs Tariff
Consumer position, 646, 649, 651
GATT, 422, 423, 644, 645-6
Dumping principle, 650, 653
Fruits and vegetables, 642-4, 646-50
Potatoes, 653
Machines and machinery, classification of, 641-2
Most-favoured-nation tariffs, 641, 643, 644
Pulpwood, 645,654
Statutory classifications as result of "Made in Canada" ruling, 644
United States producers, competition from, 645
World markets, necessity for reciprocal buying, 650-1

Customs Tariffs and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill. 1r, 584; 2r, 641-55; ref to com, 655; rep of com, 656; 3r, 667-9; r.a., 754

Davies, Hon. W. Rupert
Canada-Finland Income Tax Convention bill, 899
"Capital", definition of, 899
Information exchange, 899
Farm Credit bill, 1019, 1024
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 744
Income Tax conventions, presentation in form of bills desirable, 561, 899
International Wheat Agreement, 938,939
Newfoundland Salt Fish Exportation Laws Repeal bill, 1050, 1051
Parliamentary Secretaries bill, 561-3
Salary, 561
Travelling expenses, 561
United Kingdom, comparisons, 561-2
Nicol, the late Hon. Jacob, tribute to, 8-9
Public Service Pension Adjustment bill, 913
Tourist traffic
Parliament Buildings, parking regulations, 714
Unemployment Insurance bill, 902, 903

Debates of the Senate, distributed to members of United States Senate, 69

Defence
Aviation industry in Canada
Arrow CF-105, 111-15, 212-18, 251, 305-6, 332-3, 372-3
Contracts
Lobbying, need for, 111, 215
Rejection of British bid on installation of army project in Arkansas, 157, 215
Expenditures, 52-53, 111-13, 701, 1057-8
NATO member countries, 251-2, 469-70, 476, 518, 520, 521, 541-2
Effect on economy, 518, 521, 525, 539
Suggested study by committee of whole house, 542

Defence—Concluded
Newfoundland, importance in, 564
Royal Canadian Air Force, future role, 333-5
Russian threat, 155-6, 218, 251-2, 541
Skilled workers, emigration to United States, 114, 214, 216
Western military unity non-existent as far as Canada is concerned, 216

Desjardins Mutual Life Assurance Company bill. 1r, 864; 2r, 906-8; ref to com, 908; rep of com-amdts concurred in, 947-8; 3r, 948; r.a., 1141

Dessureault, Hon. J.-M.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 354-7
Brazil
Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Company, Ltd., Canadian-owned, 357
Historical sketch, 356-7
Rio de Janeiro, 47th Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference, 355-6
Recommendation for Canadian participation in Union, 356
St. Laurent, Right Hon. Louis S., presentation of portrait to House of Commons, 273
Unemployment, 354-5

Deutsch, Professor John J., economic consultant to Finance Committee, 665-7, 1043, 1056

Diefenbaker, Right Hon. John G., P.C., M.P., Prime Minister
World tour, beneficial results, 18, 21-22, 23

Divisions in Senate
Excise Tax bill, m for concurrence in com amdts, negatived, 844
Finance, m to instruct Finance Committee to study threat of inflation, 514

Divorce
Bills—See pp. 1187-93
Petitions, 85, 166, 585
Co-respondent, naming of, 166
Filing date, 166, extension of, 515-16
Remission of parliamentary fee, 166
Statistics, 166, 516
Reisinger case, press report on royal assent to, 574
Rules, amendment to, 1075-6
Statistics, 166, 1069-71; parliamentary, 1069; provincial, 1070, 1071

Documents
Historical records, destruction of, 232, 233
Reports tabled, 9, 18, 26, 38, 47, 60, 84-85, 101, 130, 138, 150, 162, 175, 182, 201, 230, 247, 254, 273, 291, 314, 341, 375, 394, 410, 431, 461, 467, 473, 480, 508, 517, 537, 547, 586, 600, 611, 625, 665, 683, 707, 755, 805, 819, 909, 925, 933, 947, 966, 974, 992, 1012, 1045, 1088, 1114
Requested, 394, 560, 597, 625, 665

Dominion Marine Association, 456

Dominion-Provincial relations—See Federal-Provincial relations, Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill

Drouin, Hon. Mark R., Speaker
Canada-United States Interparliamentary group, report on organization meeting tabled, 537
Felicitations on election as President of National Council of French Cultural Union, 967
New Brunswick fishing fleet disaster, 867
Royal Assent notice, 234, 458, 547, 974, 1141
Rulings and statements
Amendment to motion cannot be proposed until motion itself has been moved, 1017
Committee amendments cannot be concurred in on day bill reported, without unanimous consent, 770
Interruption not permissible while Speaker is putting question, 129
Question out of order, 54
Senator cannot amend own motion without leave, 608-9
Senators, new, introduced, 26
Uruguay, presentation to Parliament of works of Carlos Vaz Ferreira, Uruguayan philosopher, 161
Visitors in Senate Gallery—India, 26; Soviet Union, 821

Dupuis, Hon. Vincent
Atlantic ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 608
Canada-New Brunswick Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 151
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill, 647-8
Farmers, right to protection, 647-8
Information lacking, 647
Excise Tax bill, 829-30
Electricity, export duty on, 829-30
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 873
Senate study suggested, 873
Ice-breaking costs, St. Lawrence River, 505
Inflation, 510
National Capital Centenary, 61-62
National Energy Board bill, 813

Dupuis, Hon. Vincent—Concluded
Parliamentary Secretaries bill, 535
Prime Minister's Residence bill, 893
Public Servants Inventions bill, 400
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 363, 437-8
Quebec, rejection of assistance, 437-8

Economic conditions, 41-43, 88-89, 157-8, 406
Economic security for the aged in the United States and Canada, report on, 291, 623-4
Outlook for 1958, report on, inquiry, 26-27
Statistics, (1938-58), 406

Education
Alberta Royal Commission, summary of report, 193-5
Communist countries, achievements, 192, 195
Federal Government contribution, 538, 721-2, 732-8, 805
Distribution, 181
Formula suggested in relation to per student enrolment, 180-1
Government and, 191-6, 538
National Conference on, 193
Rural problems, 195
Scholarships
Government action lacking, 179
Intercommonwealth, 179-80
Teachers, 195
University residences, 280, 281, 282-3, 284, 343, 346, 347-8
Veterans, 591-2
West Indies, students enrolled in Canadian Universities, 317

Electricity
Consumer costs, 173
Export duty on, 719-20, 770-9, 822-44
Summary of exportation, 1956-59, 850-1
See Excise Tax bill

Emerson, Hon. Clarence V.
Inflation
Report of Finance Committee on threat of inflation in Canada, 1013-14, 1030-44
Conclusions, 1014
Problem a major concern of public policy throughout Western world, 1013
Proceedings of committee, authority to print, 560, 756
New Brunswick, fishing fleet disaster, 866
Unemployment Insurance bill, 901-3
Contributions, increase in, 902
Income level for contributions to fund, 902-3
Prisoners, retaining of contributions, 903
Weekly benefits, 901-2; duration of, 903

Energy
National Energy Board bill, 739, 779-85, 787-91, 807-15, 845-8, 848, 865, 1015-16, 1137, 1141
Economic expansion, 787, 790-1
Energy Board rules, enforcement of, 807, 814
Export and import licences, 781, 782, 783, 784
Expropriation of lands, 812-13
Her Majesty bound by Act, 811-12
Licences, 1015
Minerals, developments since 1947, 780, 884
Orders and decisions of Board, 807-8
Petroleum industry, 787-91
American investments, 788-9
Pipe and power lines
Control of, 781
International and provincial power lines, 808-11, 813-14
Royal Commission on Energy, activities of, 779-80
Traffic, tolls and tariffs, 781-2

Estimates
Finance Committee, proposed future examination by, 1134
Interim supply, 747-52
Undertaking that passage will not preclude further discussion, 748
Supplementary, 201-24, 255-6
Committee of the Whole House, suggested consideration by, 211

Euler, Hon. W. D., P.C.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 249-53
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 202, 204, 207, 208
No. 4, 747
Atlantic ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 502, 599-600
Austria, resolution for approval of State treaty, 634
Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada bill, 136
Bonds, Government, interest rates, 250
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill, 648, 652
Fruits and vegetables, seasonal restrictions, 648
Defence, 250-3, 701
Arrow CF-105, 251
Expenditures, 701
NATO, 251-2
Excise Tax bill, 700-1
Margarine sales tax, 701
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 741
Crowsnest Pass rates, effect on Canadian National Railways, 757
Gore District Mutual Fire Insurance Company bill, 101, 128-9, 151

Euler, Hon. W. D., P.C.—Concluded
Government financing, 249-50
Income Tax bill, 672, 685-6
Officials of department, attitude, 685-6
International Wheat Agreement, 935
Labour
Canadian National Railways, employees' demand for increase in wages, 757
Railway wage disputes, public interest paramount and strikes should be illegal, 757
Lutheran Church of Canada bill, 479
NATO, motion to authorize review by External Relations Committee, 526
Parliamentary Secretaries bill, 590-1
Public Service Pension Adjustment bill, 911
Russia
Achievements, 251; industrial war, threat of, 252
Senate
Cabinet representation in, question of, 590-1
Publicity lacking, 249
Tourist traffic, 712
Unemployment Insurance bill, 980
Wages, steel industry, 523
Waterloo Mutual Insurance Company bill, 38, 74-75

European Common Market (European Economic Community), 418-27, 467-72
See Trade

Evangelical Mennonite Conference bill. 1r, 162; 2r, 196-7; ref to com, 197; rep of com, 247; 3r, 247-8; refund of fees, 274-5; r.a., 559

Excise and sales tax
Cigarettes, 700
Cosmetics, 697, 696
Electricity, export duty, 719-20, 770-9, 822-44
False representation as to use of goods, 697, 698-9, 701-2
Margarine, sales tax, 701
See Taxation

Excise bill. 1r, 584; 2r, 612-17; ref to com, 617; rep of com, 656; 3r, 667; r.a., 754

Excise Tax bill. 1r, 640; 2r, 695-702, 716-20; authority to print com proceedings, 721; rep of com-amdts, 769-70; m for concurrence in amdts, 770-9, 821-44; m negatived, 844; r.a., 991

Export Credits Insurance bill. 1r, 640; 2r, 692-4; ref to com, 694; authority to print proceedings—rep of com, 860; 3r, 844-5; r.a., 991

Export Finance Corporation of Canada Ltd. bill. 1r, 410; 2r, 445-53; ref to com, 453; rep of com—amdts concurred in, 497-9; 3r, 508; r.a., 754

Exports, 34-36, 405, 419-21, 423, 816
Atlantic provinces
Lumber, depletion of markets, 367
Newsprint, competition from United States and other countries, 367-8
Dependency of country on, 483
Electricity, 719-20, 770-9, 822-44
High prices, danger from, 405
Western feed grains, 221-2

Farm Credit bill. 1r, 1012; 2r, 1018-25; ref to com, 1025; rep of com—3r, 1046; r.a., 1141

Farm Improvement Loans bill. 1r, 893; 2r, 916-18; ref to com, 918; rep of com, 947; 3r, 967; r.a., 991

Farris, Hon. J.W. deB.
Appropriation bill No. 1, 208
Congregation of Sisters of Holy Family of Bordeaux bill, 313
Excise Tax bill, 770, 772-9
Electricity, export duty on, 770-9
British Columbia Electric Railway Company, 772, 773, 776, 777, 778
National Energy Board bill, effect on exporting of electricity, 778-9
Premier of British Columbia, telegram from, 777
Public interests, 773, 775
Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. bill, 378, 380, 382
Free Methodist Church in Canada bill, 804
Inflation, proposed study by Finance Committee supported, 265
Judges bill, 802

Federal-provincial relations
Conferences, election campaign statements, 177, 869
Tax-sharing arrangements, 158-9
Capital debt of provinces, increase in, 871-2
Income tax revenue, 177
Newfoundland, need for adjustment in terms of Union, 791-6
Nova Scotia revenues, 856
Ontario requests, 869-70
Provincial rights in taxing and spending, 854-8, 872-3 1118-19
Treasurers' conference, 870, 871
University grants, 180-1
See Newfoundland Additional Grants bill

Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill. 1r, 755; 2r, 791-6, 853-8, 868-73; ref to com, 873; rep of com, 893; 3r, 913-14; r.a., 991

Fergusson, Hon. Muriel McQ.
Canada-New Brunswick Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 124-5
Defective land titles, 125

Fergusson, Hon. Muriel McQ.—Concluded
Humane Slaughter of Food Animals bill, 1100
Indian affairs, 1058
Married Women, Convention on Nationality of, 1091-6
Citizenship Act, marriage to aliens prior to 1947, amendment suggested, 1095-6
Commission on Status of Women, 1901-2
Commonwealth Conference on Education, Canadian delegate, 1093
Delay in ratification of convention, 1093-4
National Housing bill, 277, 278, 342-6, 347-8
Limited dividend housing, 346, 348
Publicity branch of CMHC needed, 346
Senior citizens, 343, 347-8
Centrally-located accommodation, 345, 346
Federal assistance incentive to provinces, 345, 346
University residences, 343, 346, 347-8

Ferry service
Deficits, 441-2
Nova Scotia, 456, 457
Prince Edward Island, 189-90

Finland
Canada-Finland Income Tax Convention bill. 1r, 805; 2r, 858-9, 896-901; 3r, 914; r.a., 991

Fisheries
Atlantic provinces
Advertising needs, 73, 386
Control, 12-mile limit advocated, 287-8
Medway River salmon, 461-2
Newfoundland, 142-3
Salt fish, 385-6
British Columbia
Sockeye salmon, 167-73
Dams, danger from construction of, 171-3
International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission, 168, 171
Marketing of, 169-70
Spawning channel, Robson Creek, 204
United States-Canada relations, 173
See Newfoundland Salt Fish Exportation bill

Fisheries Improvement Loans bill. 1r, 360; 2r, 383-6; ref to com, 386; rep of com—3r, 411; r.a., 459

Fisher, John, Executive Director of Canadian Tourist Association, 189

Food for Peace Conference, joint communiqué, 586, 595-6

Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. bill. 1r, 341; 2r, 376-82; ref to com, 382; rep of com—amdt concurred in, 431; 3r, 445; r.a., 559

Forest research, appropriation for, 751

Fournier, Hon. Sarto
Montreal civic employees, visit to Parliament, 140
St. Lawrence Seaway, official opening, 139-40

Free Methodist Church in Canada bill. 1r, 769; 2r, 802-4; ref to com, 804; rep of com, 819; 3r, 819-20; r.a., 991

Freight rates
Atlantic provinces, 705-6, 758-9
Competitive and non-competitive rates, 727
Effect on industry, 71, 726
Intercolonial Railway agreement, 725-6
Newfoundland, 565
Distribution costs, 758
Steel industry, 71
Wheat shipments, 405
Canadian Pacific Railway
Land grants and mineral rights, 728-9
Class and commodity rates, subsidy to, 702-3, 705
Competitive rates, 703
Crowsnest Pass, 43-45, 220, 706, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727-8, 731, 757
Possible loss to railways as result of, 724, 757
Export and local shipments, difference in rates, 221-2
Montreal, port of
Foreign cargo tonnage handled, 503
Ocean tariff, discrimination charged, 403
Rail and sea, 504-5
Regional benefits, 704
Royal Commission on Transportation, 723, 725, 729, 730
Trucking, effect on railways, 724-5
"Piggy-back" services, 725
Western feed grain, 220-4

Freight Rates Reduction bill. 1r, 625; 2r, 702-6, 722-31, 740-7, 756-9; ref to com, 759; authority to print proceedings-rep of com, 819; 3r, 852-3; r.a., 991

French Cultural Union
Drouin, Hon. Mark R., Speaker, election as President of National Council, 967

Gas, natural—See Minerals

GATT—General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, 422-3, 667-8
Customs Act amendments of 1958, alleged violation by, 30-31
Tariff changes, 644, 645-6; consideration by countries subscribing to, 667-8

Germany
Consumer interest of prime importance, 668
Recovery in economy, 668-9
Russian attempts to gain control of West Germany, 155-6
Trade union with other countries, 669

Gershaw, Hon. F. W.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 95-98
Alberta, mineral potentials, 95-98
Gas, 97-98
Markets, lack of, 784-5
Divorce
Bills, 255, 365, 609-10, 669-70, 909
Committee reports, 255, 374, 639, 909
Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. bill, 381
Freight charges in central provinces, 784
Income Tax bill, 684-5
District income tax offices, 684
Information pamphlets advocated, 684
Tax collectors, 684-5
Indian affairs, 549,50
National Energy Board, 784-5
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 389-90
Tourist industry, benefits to, 390

Gladstone, Hon. James
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 133-5
Alberta
Grain production, 133
Industrial progress, 133-4
Oil discoveries, 133
Indian Affairs, Joint committee on, 683; report, 1014-15
Indians
Councils, lack of experience in administration, 135
Social and economic problems, recommendations ignored, 134-5

Golding, Hon. William H.
Divorce bills, 394-5, 445
Excise Tax bill, 699, 772, 823-6
Electricity, export duty on, 823-6
Licences, 824-5
Peace River Power Development Company, 824, 826
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 913
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 730, 731

Gore District Mutual Fire Insurance Company bill. 1r, 101; 2r, 128-9; ref to com, 129; rep of com, 150-1; 3r, 151; r.a., 459

Gouin, Hon. L. M.
Atlantic ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 569-70
Inflation, 1129-31
Fixed incomes, fears of investment losses, 1130, 1131
Foreign trade, effect of production costs, 1130
International Wheat Agreement, 941

Government
Bonds—See Bonds, Government
Education, contributions to, 538, 721-2, 732-8
Expenditures, 132, 133, 211-13, 249-50, 748-9, 751
Foreign mortgage debt, 482-3
Grants, 196

Government—Concluded
Legislation, withholding of information, 176-7

Governor General
Appointment of alternate French-speaking and English-speaking Canadian suggested, 153-5
Deputy of Governor General:
Kerwin, The Hon. Patrick, P.C. Chief Justice of Canada
Royal Assent, 246, 458-9, 558-9, 752-4, 990-1, 1141
Opening of Parliament, 1; Speech from the Throne, 1-3
Message of thanks for Address in reply, 909
Prorogation, Speech of Deputy of Governor General, 1141-3

Grain
Churchill, port of, shipments through, 505-6, 606
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 625, 702-6, 722-31, 740-7, 756-9, 819, 852-3, 991
St. Lawrence Seaway, shipments through, 598-9, 601-3, 606
Seeds bill, 721, 765-8, 819, 852, 991
Western producers
Freight rates, 220-4
Payments to, 202-3, 224, 256
Wheat
International Wheat Agreement 1959, 864, 876-92
Prices, 223
Storage, 373
Subsidies paid by United States to West Indies, 318

Grant, Hon. Thomas V.
Appropriation bill No. 1, 210

Gross national product, 108, 234-5, 240, 388-92, 488-92, 787
Devaluation of dollar, 235
Price increases, 234, 237, 241

Haig, Hon. John T., P.C.
Appropriation bill No. 1, 217-19
Arrow CF-105, 217-18
Austria, resolution for approval of State Treaty, 633-4
Crop Insurance bill, 1009
Defence expenditures, 1057-8
Export Finance Corporation of Canada bill, 452
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 870-1
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 730, 731, 743, 744
Crowsnest Pass agreement, 731
Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company bill, 415-16
Income Tax bill, 686, 689-91
District tax offices, 691
Foreign business corporations, 689-90, 691

Haig, Hon. John T., P.C.—Concluded
Inflation, 298, 301, 353, 414-17, 418, 666-7, 1055-8
Bonds, drop in value, 1056, 1057
Cost of living index, 298, 301, 414-17
Economic consultant, appointment to Finance Committee, motion seconded, 666-7
Fixed incomes, effect on, 1057
International Wheat Agreement, 942-3
National Housing bill, 348-50
Senior citizens, 349-50
University residences, 348, 349, 350
Separate legislation suggested, 350
Student responsibility in, 348-9
Old Age Security bill, 619, 620-1
Overall payments, criticism of, 620-1
Prime Minister's Residence bill, 894
Public Service Pension Adjustment bill, 912
Russian competition—defence, 218, trade, 415
Supply bills, consideration of, 219
Trade, world markets, production costs, 217
Unemployment, 870-1
Weights and Measures bill, 639
Western farmers, problems of, 417

Hardy, Hon. Arthur C., P.C.
Committees, question as to propriety of Senate instructing, 466

Hayden, Hon. Salter A.
Appropriation bill No. 1, 208, 209, 210, 211
Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company bill, 175
Canada-Finland Income Tax Convention bill, 897-9
Capital gains, 897
Companies operating ships or aircraft, 897
Income for personal services, 897
Information, exchange of, 897
Student exemption, 897
Canadian Forces Superannuation bill, 974
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill, 656
Desjardins Mutual Life Assurance Company bill, 947-8
Excise bill, 656
Excise Tax bill, 716-20, 721, 769, 770-2, 840-4
Electricity, export duty on, 719-20, 770-2, 840-4
Peace River Power Development Company, 771
"Bargaining", 771-2, 840-1
Manufacturer or producer, designation of, 716-19
Cosmetics and pharmaceuticals, 717-18
Packaging, 718-19
Export Credits Insurance bill, 806
Export Finance Corporation of Canada, Ltd. bill, 497-500
Amendments considered in committee, 497, 498-500
Farm Improvement Loans bill, 947

Hayden, Hon. Salter A.—Concluded
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 871-3
Capital debt of provinces, increase in, 871-2
Taxing and spending, provincial responsibility, 872-3
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 729
Income Tax bill, 671, 672, 673, 674, 676, 677-80, 681-2, 721, 806, 845
Foreign business corporations, 677-81, 845
Individual tax rates, increase in, 671,676
Medical expenses, 676, 677
Inflation—Senate capacity and right to study problem, 292-7
International Wheat Agreement, 946
Length and Mass Units bill, 656
National Defence bill, 358, 361
Court martial, 358-9
RCAF, designation in French, 359
National Energy Board bill, 783, 812-15
Enforcement of Board rules, 814
Expropriation of lands, 812-13
International power lines, 813-14
National Housing bill, 291
Northwest Territories bill, 359
Pacific Standard Life Insurance Company bill, 360
Parliamentary Secretaries bill, 656, 657
Public Lands Grants bill, 101, 273
Lands not required for public purposes, 273
Public Servants Inventions bill, 396, 397
Public Service Pension Adjustment bill, 947
Royal Canadian Mounted Police bill, 975
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation bill, 974
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill, 357-8
Standard Trust Company bill, 895
Trans-Canada Highway, expenditures, 209
Unemployment Insurance bill, 975, 982-3
Extended obligations of unemployment insurance should be re-examined, 982-3
Veterans' Land bill, 974
War Service Grants bill, 593, 594
Waterloo Mutual Insurance Company bill, 101
Weights and Measures bill, 656

Higgins, Hon. John G.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 141-5
Appropriation bill No. 1, 223
Atlantic ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 574-7, 608
Free port development, need for, 577
Wartime experiences and services
Halifax, 575
St. John's, 575-6
Coal Production Assistance bill, 1004-5, 1007
Loans approved, 1004
Congregation of Sisters of Holy Family of Bordeaux bill, 312

Higgins, Hon. John G.—Concluded
Criminal Code bill, 1003
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 796
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 383-4
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 703, 743
Historical records, destruction of, 233
Income Tax bill, 691-2
Foreign business corporations, 692
Introduction to Senate, 26
Newfoundland
Fisheries, 142-3
Historical sketch, 142-3
St. John's, 142
Newfoundland Additional Grants bill, 1100-12, 1119-20
Historical background, 1100-12
Terms of Union
Disadvantages in, 1108-11
Interest payments on outstanding debt, 1110-11, 1119-20
Statement by Prime Minister re Term 29, 1105-6
United States bases in Newfoundland, 1102-3, 1108-9
World Wars I and II, 1101, 1102
Newfoundland Salt Fish Exportation Laws Repeal bill, 1048-9, 1050, 1051
NAFEL, exclusive right to export, 1049-50, 1051
Necessity for replacement, 1050
Old Age Security bill, 618-19
Tax increases to implement fund, 618-19
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill, 326
Tourist traffic
Parliament Buildings should not be considered a summer resort, 716

402.841 233.458

Historical records, destruction of, 232, 233

Hnatyshyn, Hon. John
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 302-6
Criminal Code bill, 984-8, 1047, 1048
Defence
Arrow CF-105, 305-6
Sovereignty of Canada, 305-6
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 702-6, 724, 744
Class and commodity freight rates, subsidy, 702-3
Competitive rates, 703
Regional benefits, 704
Housing policy of Government, 304
CMHC commended, 304
Humane Slaughter of Food Animals bill, 1059-61
Humane slaughter, difficulty of definition, 1060
Religious rituals, no interference with, 1060-1
Introduction to Senate, 26
Married Women, Convention on Nationality of, 1017-18

66972-1—75

Hnatyshyn, Hon. John—Concluded
National Housing bill, 278
Opening of Parliament, traditions of, 306
Saskatchewan
Minerals, 303
Saskatoon
Industrial expansion, 302-3
University and hospital, 302
South Saskatchewan River dam, nation-building project, 303
Ukraine, 303-4

Hockey
World amateur tournament, Canadians score against Russian team, 368

Horner, Hon. R. B.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 368-74
Appropriation bill No. 1, 216
Arrow contract, cancellation of, 372-3
Atlantic ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 505-6
Bonds, Government, conversion loan, 373-4
Canada-Nova Scotia Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 873, 874, 875
Chateau Laurier parking lot, inquiry, 820; answer, 821; discussion, 852
Churchill, port of, 505-6
Crop Insurance bill, 1010-11
Dominion Curling Champions and Scotch Cup Champions, tribute to victorious Richardson rink, 395
Farm Credit bill, 1024
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 724, 740-1, 743
Crowsnest Pass, 740, 741
Economic war affecting railways, 740-1
Operation costs of railways, 740
Homesteading in Saskatchewan in 1907, 371
Humane Slaughter of Food Animals bill, 1062-3
Stockyard abuse of animals, 1062
Indian affairs, 550
Inflation, 368-70, 373
International Wheat Agreement, 943-4
Newfoundland Salt Fish Exportation Laws Repeal bill, 1050
Petitions for private bills, extension of time for filing, 683
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill, 322
Tourist traffic, 641, 684, 710-12, 865
Canadian National Railways
Chateau Laurier, parking facilities, 711
Other hotels, sale of, 711
Motion to inquire into and report on various agencies and to send for persons, papers and records, 684, 710-12; approved, 716
Trade competition, 369-70
Unemployment, 372
United States-Canada relations, 371, 711-12
Wheat storage of, 373

House of Commons
Chamber, 486
Members, indemnities, 529-30

Housing
Building statistics, 276, 278
Caisses populaires, 285, 407
Construction costs, 225
Co-operatives, 406-7
Large houses, devaluation of, 283-4
Limited dividend projects, 277, 346, 348
Low-income groups
Public housing, 277-8
Statistics in relation to loans, 280-1
National Housing bill, 254, 275-86, 291, 342-50, 459
Older homes, mortgages for, 275
Small-homes loans program, 276-7
University student residences, 280, 281, 282-3, 284, 343, 346, 347-8

Howard, Hon. Charles B.
Nicol, the late Hon. Jacob, tribute to (read by Hon. Mr. Hugessen), 7-8

Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company, 415-16

Hugessen, Hon. A. K.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 86-95
Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada bill, 137
Bonds, Government, inquiry and answer, 255
Conversion loan, 151
Interest rates, 89-90, 92
Provinces and municipalities, borrowings, effect on, 89-90
Public holdings, 91, 92, 93
Loss to investors, 91
Canada-Nova Scotia Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 874-5
Canada Shipping bill, 59, 116, 247
Chateau Laurier parking lot, 852
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill, 642
Desjardins Mutual Life Assurance Company bill, 908
Economic conditions, 88-98
Excise Tax bill, 698
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 722-5, 819
Class and commodity rates, subsidy, 722-3
Crowsnest Pass rates, 722, 723, 724
Possible loss to railways, 724
Royal Commission on Transportation, 723, 725
Trucking industry, effect on railways, 724-5
"Piggy-back" services, 725
Western farmers, request for deficiency payments, 724
Government financial policy, 90-95
Income Tax bill, 674, 679, 686-9
Foreign business corporations, 686-9
Tax agreements with other countries, 688
Tax evasion, 688-9

Hugessen, Hon. A. K.—Concluded
Inflation, problem of, 92, 93-95
Judges bill, 852
National Energy Board bill, 783, 810, 811
Nicol, the late Hon. Jacob, tribute to, 7-8
North American Accident Insurance Company bill, 130, 159-60, 175, 185
Parliamentary Secretaries bill, 534-5
Appointments, term of, 534
Salaries, 534, 535
Status of appointees, 534-5
Pigeon River Bridge bill, 1029, 1046
Prime Minister's Residence bill, 894
Rent for 24 Sussex Drive, 894
Public Lands Grants bill, 55
Queenston Bridge bill, 1045-6
Tight money, 89-90
Unemployment Insurance bill, 903
Veterans Rehabilitation bill, 611
War Service Grants bill, 611

Humane Slaughter of Food Animals bill, 1r, 1059; 2r, 1059-63; 3r, 1100; r.a., 1141

Ice-breaking costs, St. Lawrence River, 85, 325-6, 502, 504, 604

Immigration
Eligibility of immigrants for old age security, 658-9, 661
Inquiry (Hon. Mrs. Wilson), 500-1, 586, 597-8

Imports, 35-36, 147-8, 149
Automobiles, 51-52, 503
Sugar from West Indies, 319
Trade policies, unfavourable, 35-36

Income Tax
Deceased employees, gratuities to dependents, 673
District Income Tax offices, 684
Foreign business corporations, 671, 675, 677-81, 686-9, 692, 1131, 137-41
Information pamphlets advocated, 684
Medical expenses, 671-2, 676, 677
Officials of department, 684-6
Pension and group insurance plans, 673-4
Provincial revenues, 177

Income Tax bill. 1r, 656; 2r, 670-82, 684-92; ref to com, 692; authority to print com proceedings, 721; rep of com, 806; amdts concurred in, 845; 3r, 853; Commons disagreement with Senate amdt, 1131-2; non-insistence on amdt, 1137-41; r.a., 1141

India, visitors from, 26

Indians
Canada-New Brunswick Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 60, 122-8, 138, 151-2, 1141
Canada-Nova Scotia Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 755, 873-5, 909, 1141
Councils, lack of experience in administration, 135

Indians—Concluded
Government expenditures, 551
Indian Affairs, Joint Committee, 537, 548, 553, 560, 640, 721; reports, 683, 1014-15, 1058
Social and economic problems, 134-5, 549-52
South African High Commissioner, press report of speech, 667

Inflation, 31-32, 42-43, 92, 93-95, 110, 119-20, 132-3, 368-70, 373
Bonds, Government, public holdings, 32, 41, 250, 352-3, 1056, 1057
Consumer price index, 491, 511, 1125-7
Cost of living, 105, 297-9, 301, 414-17, 464, 477
Price increases, 234, 481-2, 488, 491, 511
Defence expenditures, inflationary effect of, 518, 521, 525, 1057-8
Dollar erosion, 1126
Economic position of country, statistics (1938-58), 406
Effects, economic and political, 299
Exchange rates, 491-2
Exports, dependency of country on, 483
Finances of Government, resumé of past years, 258
Fixed incomes, effect on, 407, 1130, 1131
Gross national product, 234-5, 240, 488-92
Interest rates, foreign mortgage debt, 482-3
Monopolies, large corporations, 262-4, 351
Motion to instruct Finance Committee to study threat of, 230, 234-45, 256-65, 292-301, 350-3, 365-8, 403-8, 413-18, 464-6, 476-9, 480-5, 486-95, 509-14; agreed to, on division, 514
Addition to committee membership, 720
Economic consultant, authority to appoint, 665-7. See also 1043, 1056
Proceedings, authority to print, 560, 756
Recommendation of Finance Committee of 1956 quoted, 418, 492, 494, 510-11
Report of Finance Committee, 1013-14, 1030-44, 1051-9; adopted, 1131
Witnesses, selection of, 512
Production costs, 485, 522-4, 1055
Relation to other factors of economy, 259
Social security measures and, 623-4
Unemployment, doubtful priority, 235, 236
United States committees on, 258, 259, 260, 481
Wages increases, 106, 261-3, 481, 484-5, 1052-3
Yearly differentials, current and constant dollars, 488-90

Inman, Hon. F. Elsie
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 185-91
Atlantic provinces
Economic Council, 186-7

Inman, Hon. F. Elsie—Concluded
Atlantic provinces—Concluded
Farm lands, vacant
Subsidies and deficiency payments lacking, 187
Prince Edward Island
Attractions, 190-1
Industrial possibilities, 190-1
Transportation, 189-90
Canadian National Railways, accommodation, 189
Ferries, 189-90
Increases in traffic costs, 189
Problems
Economic, 185-6
Marketing, 187
Political, 186
Canada-Nova Scotia Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 873-4
Married Women, Convention on Nationality of, 1096-7
Citizenship, loss of by Canadian married to foreigner transferred to R.C.A.F., case cited, 1097
Tourist industry, 188-9, 190-1
Opportunities should be developed, 188-9
United States visitors, border relations, 188
Tourist Traffic Committee, 640-1, 716
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 437

Inquiries
Atlantic provinces, shipping costs, (Hon. Mr. Isnor), 230
Bonds, Government (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), 255
British West Indies, Canadian trade and currency relations (Hon. Mr. Pratt), 462-3
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
Artists, salaries of, (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 61, 131, 139
News commentators (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson), 183, 198-200
Producers strike, (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 60, 116-17, 131, 139, 201. See also 84, 232-3
Television programs, receipts from sponsors (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 61
Canada Council scholarships for nationals of foreign countries (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 1076
Capital punishment, commutation of death sentences (Hon. Mr. Smith, Queens-Shelburne), 85-86
Census questionnaire (Hon. Mr. Reid), 553
Chateau Laurier parking lot (Hon. Mr. Horner), 820-1, 852
Citizenship (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 820, 865-6, 910, 926, 1076
Citizenship of Married Women (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 820, 865-6, 910, 926
Civil servants, designation (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 462

Inquiries—Concluded
Civil Service
Classification of positions (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 201, 248
Merit system (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 463
Salaries (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 255, 412
Education, federal Government contribution (Hon. Mr. Wall), 538, 721-2, 732-8, 805
Ice-breaking costs, St. Lawrence River (Hon. Mr. Isnor), 85, 325-6, 502
Immigration (Hon. Mrs. Wilson), 500-1, 586, 597-8
Medway River Salmon (Hon. Mr. Smith, Queens-Shelburne)
Fishways, 462
Rearing ponds, 461-2
National Gallery purchases (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 47, 86, 99-100
Prime Ministers, portraits of, Commons collection (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) withdrawn, 413
Transportation subsidies (Hon. Mr. Isnor), 162-3
Yugoslavia, Canadian Graphic Art Exhibition (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 291, 361

Interest rates, 89-90, 104-5, 110, 179, 241-2, 250

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development
Activities in economy and security of nations, 799-800
Bretton Woods Agreement bill, 755, 796-801, 815-17, 865, 896
National contributions to Bank and International Monetary Fund, 797-8
Canada's contribution, 797, 801

International conferences, Senate representation, 29, 554, 588, 1076-7

International relations
Meetings of various organizations held in 1958, 29
Russia, attempts to gain control of West Germany, 155-6
St. Lawrence Seaway, opening ceremonies, 322-3
Treaties and agreements, shipping, 286-7, 288-9, 290
United Nations, 156
United States, 62-69, 77-83, 146-7, 155, 173
Investments in Canada, 21, 155

International Wheat agreement, 864, 876-92; resolution of approval, 933-46; ref to com, 946; resolution adopted, 966

Inventions
Public Servants Inventions bill, 375, 395-400, 411, 459

Irving, K.C., New Brunswick industrialist, 325

Isnor, Hon. Gordon B.
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 207, 208, 209, 224. See 256
No. 4, 748, 750, 751. See 755-6
Atlantic provinces
Coal
Lack of markets, 208
Payments in connection with movements of, 207, 208, 256
Unemployment in mines, 207, 208, 256
Industrial handicaps, 607
Ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 501-6, 602, 606-8. Proposed amendment, 608, ruled out of order, 609
Halifax
Foreign tonnage, 502-3
Insurance rates on shipping, 504
National Harbours Board, report on, 502-3
Proximity to world markets, 503-4
Wartime experiences and services, 502
St. Lawrence Seaway, hazards of, 504
Shipping costs, 230
Steel industry, need for development, 325
Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada bill, 137
Coal Production Assistance bill, 1005-7
Newfoundland Additional Grants bill, 1064, 1065, 1112-13, 1114-18
Amendments to Term 29 of Union agreement needed, 1118
Interest payments on outstanding debt, 1113, 1120
"Thereafter"—meaning of word in bill and in royal commission's report, 1064, 1065, 1115-16
Parks, national, 209
Public Servants Inventions bill, 398
Royal Canadian Mounted Police
Nova Scotia-federal Government agreement, document requested, 394, 431
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill, 321, 325-6
Standard Trust Company bill, 863
Tourist traffic
Accommodation and meals, high rates of transportation companies, 715-16
United States-Canada relations, currency exchange, handicap, 715
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 432-4, 436
Maintenance costs, sharing by federal Government proposed, 433
Nova Scotia, highway through Halifax as aid to tourist industry, 434
Transportation subsidies, inquiry, 162; answer, 162-3
Unemployment Insurance bill, 903
War Service Grants bill, 593
Winter works program, 750-1

Jackson Building, Ottawa, explosion damage repairs, supplementary estimates, 211

Jamaica, Canadian Government Trade Fair at Kingston, 120-2

Jodoin, Hon. Mariana B.
Married Women, Convention on Nationality of, 1089-91
Background of Convention, 1089
Quebec Civil Code, deficiencies in regard to women's rights, 1089-90
United Nations, resolutions adopted by, 1090-1

Judges, appointments
Salaries, 802
Superior Court, Quebec, 802, 817-18
Supreme Court, Alberta, 802; British Columbia, 802

Judges bill. 1r, 755; 2r, 801-2, 817-18; ref to com, 818; rep of com-3r, 852; r.a., 991

Kerwin, Hon. Patrick, P.C., Deputy of Governor General
Royal Assent, 246, 458-9, 558-9, 1141
Speech at prorogation, 1141-3

Kinley, Hon. John J.
Canada Shipping bill, 56-59, 288-90
British Commonwealth Merchant Shipping Agreement, 57
Flag discrimination, 289
Free trade with United States, 289-90
Atlantic provinces, potential benefit, 289-90
Governor in Council, powers of, 289
Merchant seamen, wages, 290
Pilotage dues, exemptions, 58, 59, 288-9
Newfoundland, effect on, 58, 59
Treaties and agreements, international, 288-9, 290
United States, reciprocity with essential, if Canada to benefit by St. Lawrence Seaway, 57
Excise Tax bill, 830-3
Electricity, export duty on, 830-3
Export Finance Corporation of Canada bill, 447
National Energy Board bill, 784
Petitions for private bills, extension of time for filing, 769

Labour
Arbitration in strikes affecting national economy, 757
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, strike, 60, 84, 116-17, 131, 139, 201, 232-3
Canadian National Railways employees, demand for increase, 757
Convention on Abolition of Forced Labour, resolution of approval, 708-10, 759-65; adopted, 765
Articles of Convention, 708
Communism
Press and writers quoted on, 709-10
Tibet invasion, 710
Ukraine, sovietization of, 762-3
Unions, communist countries, 709-10

Labour—Concluded
Convention on Abolition of Forced Labour —Concluded
International labour conventions and reports, 760-3
Merchant seamen, wages, 290
Pressure on costs, 106
Steel industry, 522-3

Lamb, Dr. W. Kaye, Dominion Archivist, address at meeting of Canadian Historical Society, 9, 183, 231-2; text tabled, 183

Lambert, Hon. Norman P.
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 203
No. 5, 1134
Atlantic ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 577, 601-2
Grain shipments, 601-2
Austria, resolution for approval of State Treaty, 617, 618, 627-8
Procedure in ratification of treaties, 628
Bretton Woods Agreements bill, 817
Canadian General Council of Boy Scouts Association bill, 254, 308-10
Assets of Association, 309-10
Criminal Code bill, 1003
Confessions, withholding of publication, 1003
Crop Insurance bill, 1009
Customs Tariff bill, 648-9
Consumer interests, 649
Fruits and vegetables, seasonal restrictions, 648-9
Estimates, proposed future examination by Finance Committee, 1134
European Common Market, 424-7
Common market of Americas, possibility of, 425-6
United States-Canada relations, 424-6
World trade, decline of, 425
Communist threat, 425
Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. bill, 378, 380-1
Free Methodist Church in Canada, 769, 802-4, 819-20
Freight rates, rail and sea, 504-5
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 724, 745-7
Inflation, 260
International Wheat Agreement, 935, 938, 940-1
Labour, forced, Convention on abolition of, 710
Newfoundland, historic meeting at Placentia Bay, 577
Prime Minister's Residence bill, 860-1
Queenston Bridge bill, 1026-7
Seeds bill, 767, 768
Tourist traffic
Parliament Buildings, parking regulations, 714-15
Weights and Measures bill, 639

Land use
Committee
Appointment, 163; reports, 182, 228, 1068, 1071-5, 1078-87; authority to print proceedings, 228
Recommendations, 1075
Subcommittees suggested, 165
Industrial use of agricultural land, 165
Land use surveys, 1073-4
National Tree Farm Movement, 1074
Small farm problems, 163-4, 1072-3

Laval University, Science Service administration, supplementary estimates, 202

Leader of the Government in the Senate—See Aseltine, Hon. W. M.
Deputy Leader—See Brunt, Hon. William R.

Leader of the Opposition in the Senate—See Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C.
Deputy Leader—See Vaillancourt, Hon. Cyrille

Length and Mass Units bill. 1r, 584; 2r, 635-7; ref to com, 637; rep of com, 656; 3r, 667; r.a., 991

Leonard, Hon. T. D'Arcy
Inflation
Motion to authorize Finance Committee to make study, seconded, 243-5
Economic consultant, appointment, 665-6
Function of Senate in matter of, 243, 244-5
Threat to economy, 243-4
Unemployment, 244

Library of Parliament, report of Librarian tabled, 9

Liquors and tobacco, tax increases, 612-17

Live stock
Compensation for diseased animals slaughtered, 202
Humane Slaughter of Food Animals bill, 1059-63

Lumber industry, competition from abroad, 622, 954-5, 957

Lutheran Church in Canada bill. 1r, 461; 2r—ref to com, 479; rep of com—amdts, 486; amdts concurred in—3r, 507; refund of fees, 508; r.a., 754

MacDonald, Hon. John J.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 441-2
Atlantic provinces
Ferry service, New Brunswick-Prince Edward Island, 441-2
Causeway, 441, 442
Deficit, 442
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 746
Indian Affairs, report of Committee, 1014-15, 1058

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C., Leader of the Opposition in the Senate
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 28-36
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 202, 203, 204, 207, 210, 211-13, 218
No. 2, 429, 430, 431
No. 3, 457, 458
No. 4, 739, 748-9, 751
No. 5, 1132, 1133
Atlantic Congress, members, 520, 526, 553
Atlantic ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 600, 604-6
Foreign shipping, 605
Ice-breaking, necessity in Maritimes, 605
Austria, resolution for approval of State Treaty, 629-30
King, Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie, speech at London, England, quoted, 630
Negotiations preceding signing, 630
Cameron, Hon. Donald, award of Canadian Conference of Arts, 707
Canada-New Brunswick Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 126, 127, 128, 152
"All outstanding problems", settlement of, 126
Canada Shipping bill, 56, 57
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, Canadian delegation, 554
Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League bill, 515
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill, 915, 916
Coal Production Assistance bill, 1006
Committee of the Whole House, suggested consideration of supply bills by, 211
Congregation of Sisters of Holy Family of Bordeaux bill, 312
Criminal Code bill, 1001-4
Confessions, withholding of publication, 1002-3, 1004, 1048
Obscene publications, 1047
Crop Insurance bill, 1009-10
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill, 642
Desjardins Mutual Life Assurance Company bill, 907
Divorce, 1070, 1071
Petitions, 165
Documents requested
Economic outlook for 1958, 26-7
Economic security for the aged in the United States and Canada, 291. See 623-4
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 394, 410. See 431
Excise bill, 613-14, 617
Liquor and tobacco, Government revenue, 613-14
Excise Tax bill, 696, 698, 700, 769-70, 771, 822, 838-9, 853, 867-8
Cigarettes, increase in tax, 867-8
Electricity, export duty, 838-9

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C., Leader of the Opposition in the Senate—Continued
Export Credits Insurance bill, 693-4, 844-5
Directors, change in, 694
Powers of Corporation, 694
Risk to Government, 844-5
Export Finance Corporation of Canada bill, 446, 449, 450, 451
External Affairs, terminable services, 457-8. See 467
Farm Credit bill, 1019, 1022, 1024
Farm Improvement Loans bill, 918
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 868-70, 913
Conferences, election campaign statements, 869
Ontario requests, 869-70
Financial policy of Government, 33, 211-13
Food for Peace Conference, joint communique, 586, 595-6
Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. bill, 379, 380, 431
Free Methodist Church in Canada bill, 819
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 703, 704, 706, 723, 729, 730, 731, 742
Gore District Mutual Fire Insurance Company bill, 128
Humane Slaughter of Food Animals bill, 1061-2
Provincial jurisdiction, 1061
Religious rituals, 1062
Income Tax bill, 673, 674, 1132, 1138-9, 1140-1
Indian affairs, 549, 552
Inflation, 493-5
Dangers of, 1133
Debates of 1919, quoted, 494
Factors contributing to, 495
Government bonds, decrease in public holdings, 32
International conferences, Senate representation, 29, 554, 1076-7
International Wheat Agreement, 935, 936, 937, 938, 941, 942, 945, 946
Labour, forced, Convention on abolition of, 695
Land Use, committee appointment, 164
Legislation, objection to hurried consideration, 30, 1139
Length and Mass Units bill, 637
Married Women, Convention on Nationality of, 821, 967, 1098
National Energy Board bill, 1016
National Housing bill, 278-9, 285
Government grant, increase in, 279
Primary purpose should be studied, 279
Newfoundland Salt Fish Exportation Laws Repeal bill, 1049-50
NAFEL, exclusive right to export, 1049-50
Newfoundland Additional Grants bill, 1065-6, 1067-8
Royal Commission on Finances, quoted on needs of Newfoundland, 1066
Terms of Union, significance of, 1065
Continuity of payments, 1066-7
Nicol, the late Hon. Jacob, tribute to, 6

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C., Leader of the Opposition in the Senate—Continued
Northwest Territories bill, 338
Old Age Security bill, 619-20, 621, 624
Taxation increased to supplement funds, 619
Palestine refugees and Colombo Plan, expenditures on, 457-8
Parliamentary Secretaries bill, 554-7, 560-1, 657
Appointments, term of, 555
Duties, 555-6
Salaries, 556
Status of appointees, 555-6
United Kingdom comparisons, 555, 556-7, 561
Prime Minister's Residence bill, 861, 862, 893, 894
Rent for 24 Sussex Drive, 861, 893
Public Lands Grants bill, 54, 273-4
Public Servants Invention bill, 440
Public Service Pension Adjustment bill, 912
Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Research Fund bill, 922-3
Queenston Bridge bill, 1026, 1027, 1045
Royal Canadian Mounted Police bill, 970-1
Royal visit, itinerary, 5
St. Lawrence Seaway
Atlantic provinces, possible effect on, 321-2
Chevrier, Hon. Lionel, President of Seaway Authority (1954-57), 321, 605
History of project, 320
Opening ceremonies, attendance of Her Majesty and of President Eisenhower, 322-3
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill, 319-23, 326
Trade, potential markets from, 322
Secretary of State for External Affairs, Hon. Sidney Earle Smith, death of, 409
Senate business, 46, 340, 472, 410, 657, 706, 925, 948
Tourist traffic
Parliament buildings, parking regulations, 713, 714
Trade
Customs bill violations in respect to GATT, 30-31
Exports, 34, 35-36
Foreign, deficit in, 1133
Import quotas and currency restrictions, 35-36
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 391-3
Atlantic provinces, suggestion that federal Government pay 90 per cent, 391-2
Banff School of Fine Arts, advantages derived from, 392-3
Unemployment, 34, 36, 212-13
Arrow CF-105, 212-13
Trade and, 34, 36
Woollen and textile workers, 34

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C., Leader of the Opposition in the Senate—Concluded
Unemployment Insurance bill, 903, 926-9, 976-9, 979, 980
Depletion of fund, causes, 927, 976-8
Conversion loan, 927
Seasonal benefits, 927-8, 977
Increase in contributions by employer and employee, 928-9
Veterans Rehabilitation bill, 592-3
Veterans' Land bill, 962
War Service Grants bill, 593, 594
Weights and Measures bill, 638, 639
West Indies, Economic Mission of Canadian Chamber of Commerce, 315, 317, 319, 445
White, Hon. George S., Special Ambassador to Venezuela, 86

Manitoba
Farm production (1958), 41
Flood control problem, 177-8
Costs, 178
Nelson River, effect of lake levels on power potential, 178

Margarine, sales tax, 701

Maritimes—See Atlantic provinces, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island

Married women
Citizenship, 820, 865-6, 910
Loss of by Canadian married to foreigner in R.C.A.F., case cited, 1097
Commission on Status of Women, 1089, 1091-2, 1097
Education, Commonwealth Conference on, Canadian woman delegate, 1093
Naturalization Act, amendments on status of women, 1088, 1094-5
Quebec Civil Code, deficiencies in regard to women's rights, 1089-90

Married women, Convention on nationality of, 395, 432, 443-4, 480, 548, 821, 967, 1016-18, 1088-1100; amendment proposed, 1016-17; ruled out of order, 1017. Resolution adopted, 1100. See also 865-6

McDonald, Hon. John A.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 117-20
Appropriation bill No. 1, 223
Bonds, Government, proposed interest tax credits, 120
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, 118
Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company bill, 410
Evangelical Mennonite Conference bill, 247
Farm credit, extension needed, 118-19
Farm Improvement Loans bill, 918
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 703
Government aid, restriction to urgent cases suggested, 120

McDonald, Hon. John A.—Concluded
Humane Slaughter of Food Animals bill, 1061
Inflation, 119-20
International Wheat Agreement, 943
Land Use Committee, 118
Nova Scotia
Pictou fire, request for early replacement of destroyed facilities, 983
Springhill mine disaster and resulting unemployment, 117-18
Rehabilitation of miners, 117-18
Veterans Rehabilitation bill, 592
West Indies, Economic Mission of Canadian Chamber of Commerce, 315

McGrand, Hon. Fred A.
Inflation, 483-5
High standards and expensive standards, need for distinguishment, 484
Production costs, 485

McKeen, Hon. Stanley S.
Appropriation bill No. 2, 429
Canada-New Brunswick Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 124
Canada Shipping bill, 288
Treaties and agreements, international, 288
United States, advantages to, 288
European Common Market, 422, 424
Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. bill, 379, 380
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 731, 741
National Energy Board bill, 813
Pacific Standard Life Insurance Company bill, 254, 307-8
Change of name, 307-8
Directors, 307
Tourist traffic
Parliament Buildings, underground parking suggested, 715

McLean, Hon. A. Neil
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 120-2
Inflation, 480-3
Exports, dependency of country on, 483
Foreign mortgage debt, 482-3
Price levels, interferences with, 481-2
Foods, 482
United States committees on, 481
Jamaica
Canadian Government Trade Fair at Kingston, 120-2
Shipping facilities, West Indies-Canada, 121

Medway River, Nova Scotia, salmon rearing ponds and fishways, 461-2

Méthot, Hon. Léon
Export Credits Insurance bill, 692-3
Guarantees and other financial arrangements, 692-3

Méthot, Hon. Léon—Concluded
Prisons and Reformatories bill, 848-9
Alberta, transfer of prisoners, 849
New Brunswick and Nova Scotia Roman Catholic females, provision for rehabilitation, 848-9
Representation bill, 578

Minerals
Alberta, 95-98
Gas, 376-7; lack of markets, 784-5
Oil discoveries, 133
Cape Breton, coal, lack of markets, 208
Coal, possibility of market depletion from suggested closure of winter navigation, 569
Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. bill, 341, 376-82, 431, 445, 559
National Energy Board bill, 739, 779-85, 787-91, 807-15, 845-8, 865, 1015-16, 1137, 1141
New Brunswick, oil refinery, 325
Petroleum industry, 787-91
Saskatchewan, wealth undeveloped, 21

Molson, Hon. Martland de M.
Atlantic ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 603-4
Ice-breaking expenditures, not excessive, 604
Quebec
St. Lawrence River, highway of commerce to province, 604
Excise bill, 613

Monette, Hon. Gustave
Bretton Woods agreement bill, 796-801, 817
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development
Activities in economy and security of nations, 799-800
National contributions to Bank and International Monetary Fund, 797-8
Canada's increased contribution, 801
Canada-New Brunswick Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 126-7
Congregation of Sisters of Holy Family of Bordeaux, 255, 310-13, 360
Desjardins Mutual Life Assurance Company bill, 906-8
Divorce Committee, 1071
Evangelical Mennonite Conference bill, 196, 197, 248
Excise Tax bill, 697-8, 699
Gore District Mutual Fire Insurance Company bill, 128
Inflation, 486-92, 1124-8
Consumer price index (1946-58), 491, 1125-7
No appreciable change last 12 months, 1125
Dollar erosion, 1126
Economic matters involved in definition of, 488
Exchange rates, 491-2
Finance Committee, 1956, 492

Monette, Hon. Gustave—Concluded
Inflation—Concluded
Gross national product, 488-92
Consumers price index, 491
Table of price increases, 488
Yearly differentials, current and constant dollars, 488-90
War, inflationary dangers of, 1128
Judges bill, 818
Quebec, Superior Court appointments, 818
Married Women, Convention of Nationality of, 1098-9
Quebec Civil Code, separation as to property, 1099
Right of wife to retain own nationality after marriage, 1099
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 391

Montreal
Civic employees, visit to Parliament, 140
Over-expansion of, 577-8
Port of
Foreign cargo tonnage handled at, 503
Ocean tariff, discrimination charged, 403

National Capital Centenary, 61-62

National Centennial, 1967, immediate planning for celebrations urged, 149

National Defence bill. 1r, 247, 327-36; ref to com, 336; auth to print proceedings, 358; rep of com, 358-9; amdts concurred in-3r, 361; amdts concurred in by Commons, 428; r.a., 459

National Energy Board bill. 1r, 739; 2r, 779-85, 787-91, 807-15, 845-8; ref to com, 848; authority to print proceedings, 865; rep of com, 1015-16; 3r, 1016; amdts concurred in by Commons, 1137; r.a., 1141
See Energy

National Gallery, purchases, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 47, 86, 99-100. See also 231

National Housing bill. 1r, 254; 2r, 275-86; ref to com, 286; authority to print proceedings, 291; rep of com, 291; 3r, 342-50; r.a., 459

NATO—See North Atlantic Treaty Organization

New Brunswick
Beechwood Power Project, 73
Canada-New Brunswick Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 60, 122-8, 138, 151-2
Fishing fleet disaster, 866-7
Lumber industry, Scandinavian competition, 156-7
Oil refinery, 324-5
Prisons and Reformatories bill, 769, 848-9, 854
See Atlantic provinces

66972-1—76

Newfoundland
Contributions to federal treasury, 795
Cost of living, 758, 794
Defence, importance in, 564
Distribution costs, 758
Fisheries, 142-3
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, loans under, 383, 385
Freight rates, increase in, 565
Historical sketch, 142-3
Newfoundland Additional Grants bill, 1063-8, 1100-13, 1114-20, 1141
Newfoundland Salt Fish Exportation Laws Repeal bill, 1013, 1048-51, 1141
Pilotage rights to foreign vessels, effect of, 58-59
Placentia Bay, historic meeting at, 577
Ports
Free port development, need for, 564-5, 577
Labrador, potential benefits, 565
St. John's, 142; wartime experiences and services, 575-6
Public services, immediate needs, 794, 796
Terms of Union, 1108-11
Federal debt before Union, unrelated to Newfoundland, 796
Interest payments on outstanding debt, 1113, 119-20
Statement by Prime Minister on Term 29, 1105-6
Trans-Canada Highway, special needs, 435, 759
United States bases in Newfoundland, 1102-3, 1108-9
West Indies, trade with, 317
World War II contribution, 1101, 1102
See Atlantic provinces

New Zealand
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill, 584, 641-55, 656, 667-9, 754

Nicol, Hon. Jacob
Death of (September 23, 1958), tributes, 5-9

North American Accident Insurance Company bill. 1r, 130; 2r, 159-60; ref to com, 160; rep of com, 175; 3r, 185; r.a., 459

North Atlantic Treaty Organization
Atlantic Congress, 468, 520, 522, 526-7, 553-4
London meeting, 947-52
Defence expenditures, 469-70, 476, 518, 520, 521, 541-2
European countries, curtailment in, 470
Economic clauses in treaty not implemented, 468, 470-1, 519, 520, 521, 522, 525
Economic union, alternatives for Canada, 526-6
Advantages to Nova Scotia, 567
Free trade area, negotiations of European countries, 49, 418-24, 468-72

North Atlantic Treaty Organization—Concluded
Information services, 542-3
Motion to authorize External Relations Committee to review activities of, 473-6, 514, 517-27, 541-3; agreed to 543
Production costs, Canada and other countries, 522-4
Russia, economic offensive, 541

Northern development, 159

Northwest Territories bill. 1r, 254; 2r, 336-9; ref to com, 339; authority to print proceedings, 359; rep of com-amdts concurred in, 411-12; 3r, 412; amdts concurred in by Commons, 445; r.a., 459

Nova Scotia
Canada-Nova Scotia Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 755, 873-5, 909, 1141
Coal industry
Cape Breton, lack of markets, 208
Springhill mine disaster, 117-18
Relief fund, 204
Supplementary estimates, 207-8
Unemployment in mines, 208, 117-18. See also 256
Financial report, 401
Halifax
Foreign tonnage handled, 502-3
Insurance rates on shipping using port, 504
National Harbours Board, report on, 502-3
Proximity to world markets 503-4
Revenues of port, importance to provincial economy, 539
Wartime experiences and services, 502, 541
Industrial centres, 568
Liverpool bicentennial, 69-70
Medway River salmon—Rearing ponds, 461-2, fishways, 462
Pictou fire, 983-4
Prisons and Reformatories bill, 769, 848-9, 854
Steamship and ferry services, 456-7, 467
Subsidies, cold storage warehouses, 456, 467
Trans-Canada Highway, 434, 436, 437
See Atlantic provinces

Old Age Security bill. 1r, 584; 2r, 618-24, 657-63; ref to com, 663; rep of com, 683; r.a., 754

Organization for European Economic Co-operation 418-27, 467-72. See Trade

Ottawa, National Capital Centenary, 61-62

Pacific Standard Life Insurance Company—See British Pacific Life Insurance Company bill

Paramount Life Insurance Company—See British Pacific Life Insurance Company bill

Parks, national, 209-10

Parliament
Legislative program, 103
Opening, 1; Speech from the Throne, 2-4
Prorogation, 1141-3; Speech of Deputy Governor General, 1141-3
See Address in Reply

Parliament Buildings
Parking regulations, 712-15; underground facilities, suggestion for, 715
Rest rooms, lack of, 713

Parliamentary secretaries
Appointments, term of, 527, 531, 534, 535-6, 555, 558
Expenditures for, 558
Parliamentary assistants, outstanding services of, 531-4
Salaries, 527, 529-30, 534, 535, 556, 561
Status of, 534, 535, 555-6
Travelling expenses, 561
Under-secretaries, appointment recommended, 531

Parliamentary Secretaries bill. 1r, 461; 2r, 527-36, 554-8, 561-3, 587-91; ref to com, 591; rep of com-amdts, 656; amdts concurred in-3r, 657; amdts concurred in by Commons, 707; r.a., 754

Parole Board, supplementary estimates, 204-5

Paterson, Hon. Norman McL.
Atlantic ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 602-3
Grain shipments, 602-3

Pearson, Hon. Arthur M.
Acting Speaker, 394
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 18-21
Appropriation bill No. 1, 213
Atlantic ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 598-9
"Feather-bedding", question of, 598
Grain shipments, statistics, 598-9
Maritime industrial opportunities, 599
Crop Insurance bill, 1008-9, 1010
Loans and grants to provinces, 1008
Excise Tax bill, 699
Farm Credit bill, 1018-20
Supervised farm loans, 1019
Age limit, 1019
Insurance on borrower, 1019
Farm Improvement Loans bill, 916-17, 918
Loans since inception of act, 916-17
International Wheat Agreement, 933

Pearson, Hon. Arthur M.—Concluded
Land use
Special committee appointed to conduct inquiry, 163
Printing of proceedings, 182, 228
Report of committee, 1068, 1078-87
Discussion, 1072-5
National Tree Farm Movement, 1074
Recommendations, 1074-5
Small-farm problems, 163-4, 1072-3
Prime Minister's world tour, 18
Saskatchewan
Agriculture progress, 19-20
Production tools, costs, 20
Mineral wealth undeveloped, 21
Unemployment Insurance bill, 953, 977
United States
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, Washington meeting, 19
Investments in western Canada, 21

Petitions for private bills
Filing date, extension of, 375, 683, 769

Pigeon River Bridge bill. 1r, 1012; 2r, 1028-9; ref to com, 1029; rep of com-3r, 1046; r.a., 1141

Pipe lines
Foothills Pipe Lines Limited bill. 341, 376-82, 431, 445, 559

Polar Continental Shelf Project, appropriation for, 750

Pouliot, Hon. Jean-François
Appropriation bill No. 1, 219-20
Canada Council, notice of inquiry, 1076
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
Contract with producers, inquiries, 60, 131; answer, 139
Press comments on inquiries, 84
Producers on strike, 232-3
Payments to and programs, inquiry, 60, 116-17, 131; answer, 139; further inquiry, 201
Receipts from sponsors of television programs, 61, 131
Salaries of artists, inquiry, 61, 131; answer, 139
Citizenship, inquiry, 820, 865-6, 910; answer, 926; notice of inquiry, 1076
Civil Servants, designation, inquiry and answer, 462
Civil Service
Classification of positions, inquiry, 201; answer, 248
Merit system, inquiry and answer, 463
Salaries, inquiry, 255; answer, 412
Colombo Plan, expenditure to Canada, 691
Concentration camps in Canada, 764
Divorce, committee appointments, 10
Estimates, supplementary, 219-20, 230
Schedules lacking, 220

Pouliot, Hon. Jean-François—Concluded
European Common Market, 423
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 857-8, 913-14
Provincial rights in taxation, 857-8, 914
House of Commons
Chamber, 486
Members entitled to income tax exemptions not allowed to senators, 691
Inflation, proposed amendment to motion for appointment of Finance Committee members, 368
Income Tax bill, 691
Labour, forced, Convention on abolition of, 764-5
Lamb, Dr. W. Kaye, Dominion Archivist
Address at meeting of Canadian Historical Society, 9
Copy of text tabled, 183
Historical records, destruction of, 232
Married women, citizenship of, inquiry, 820, 865-6, 910; answer, 926
National Gallery purchases, inquiry, 47, 86; answer, 86, 99-100. See also p. 231
Parliamentary Secretaries bill, 531-5
Parliamentary assistants, outstanding services of, 531-4
Proposal that bill should specify ministers to whom secretaries shall be appointed, 535
Status of appointees, 534
Portraits of Prime Ministers, Commons collection, notice of inquiry withdrawn, 413
Public Lands Grants bill, 274
Governor in Council, powers of, 274
Public Servants Inventions bill, 398, 400, 439-40
Exploitation, 398-9, 440
Opposition to passage of, 439-40
Representation bill, 578-82
Family participation in Timiscouata County politics, 579-82
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill, 326-7
Atlantic provinces, Chignecto Canal, 326-7
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 438-9
Quebec, non-acceptance of assistance, 438-9
Unemployment Insurance bill, press report, question of privilege, 952
Yugoslavia, Canadian Graphic Art Exhibition, inquiry, 291; answer, 361

Power, Hon. C. G., P.C.
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 211
No. 3, 458
Atlantic ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 577-8
Amendment to motion, suggested, 577
Montreal, over-expansion of, 577-8
Quebec city, navigational aids required, 578

Power, Hon. C. G., P.C.—Concluded
Canadian Forces Superannuation bill, 958-60
Retirement policy, inquiry advocated, 958-60
Canadian General Council of Boy Scouts Association bill, 310
Divorce
Reisinger case, press report on Royal Assent to, 574
Excise Tax bill, 702, 826
Export Finance Corporation of Canada bill, 446, 448, 450
National Defence bill, 330-5
Chaplains, rank of, 330
Court martial appeal court, 331
Integration of services, 330, 333-5; with United States, 333
Commonwealth Air Training Plan, parallel instance, 333-5
Royal Canadian Air Force
Arrow CF-105, cancellation of contract, 332-3
Future role of, 333-5

Pratt, Hon. Calvert C.
Appropriation bill No. 1, 207, 208. See also 256
Atlantic ports
Resolution urging greater degree of use, 563-6
Canada Shipping bill, 288
Coal, payments made by Dominion Coal Board, 208, 256
Excise Tax bill, 696
Export Credits Insurance bill, 694
Powers of corporation, 694
Export Finance Corporation of Canada bill, 449, 450
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 791-6
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 703
Atlantic provinces, 758-9
Increase in rates, 758-9
Crowsnest Pass rates, 759
National Housing bill, 276, 284, 347, 348
University residences, subject for special legislation, 284, 347
Newfoundland
Contributions to federal Treasury, 795
Cost of living, 758, 794
Defence, importance in, 564
Federal debt before Union unrelated to Newfoundland, 796
Free port development, need for, 564-6
Labrador, potential benefits, 565
Mining operations, 565
Prime Minister's statement on duration of payments to, 795
Public services, immediate needs, 794, 796
Terms of Union, 435, 563-4, 791-3, 796

Pratt, Hon. Calvert C.—Concluded
Newfoundland—Concluded
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 434-5
Per capita expenditure, 435
Transportation facilities
Constant review by Government necessary, 566
Distribution costs, 758
Freight rates, 565
West Indies
Canadian trade and currency relations, inquiry and answer, 462-3
Economic Mission of Canadian Chamber of Commerce, 314-19
Economic progress, 316-17
Education of students, 317
Exports to, and imports from Canada, decline in, 317-19
Tariff agreements, Canada and, 316
Trade Liberalization Plan, 315-17
Wheat subsidies paid by United States, 318

Press and periodicals
Brantford Expositor
Crop insurance, 1009
Foreign trade, deficit, 1133
Inflation, 32
Seaway history, 606
Tobacco tax, 868
Eastern Economist, New Delhi, Canada as world power, 21-22
Edmonton Journal, Hon. John A. Buchanan, appointment to Senate, 39
Financial Post, Crowsnest Pass Agreement, 744
Free Labour World, Red "Unions", 709
Globe and Mail
Divorce, Reisinger case, press report on Royal Assent to, 574
Federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements, 158-9
Tobacco tax, 868
Halifax Herald, Newfoundland Union, 1117
Maclean's Magazine
Government financing, 157-8
Inflation and unemployment, 465
Montreal Gazette
Arrow, CF-105, cancellation of contract, 332-3
Inflation, 296
Tourist traffic, 711
Unemployment Insurance Fund, 906
Montreal Star, Commonwealth scholarships, 180
Newsweek, "The Inch that Isn't", 636

Press and periodicals—Concluded
Ottawa Journal
Arrow CF-105 and sovereignty of Canada, 305-6
Arrow contract, 372-3
Export trade, 369-70
Pravda, George Bernard Shaw quoted on Russian communism, 710
Printed Word, Toronto, Seaway history, 605-6
Rural Scene, Midland, Inflation, 92
St. John's Daily News
Hon. John G. Higgins, appointment to Senate, 39
Terms of Union, 1117, 1118
Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, Hon. John Hnatyshyn, appointment to Senate, 38-39
Saturday Night, Opening of Parliament, comment on traditions, 306
Simcoe Reformer, Tobacco tax, 868
Tribune, Campbellton, New Brunswick, Hon. Mr. Pouliot's stand on Unemployment Insurance Act, 952
Vancouver Province, Governor General of Canada, appointment of, 154
Winnipeg Free Press
Federal-Provincial conference, 869
Manitoba Royal Commission on flood protection, 178

Prime Ministers, portraits of, Commons collection, notice of inquiry withdrawn, 413

Prime Minister's Residence bill. 1r, 805; 2r, 859-62; ref to com, 862; rep of com, 893; 3r, 893-5; r.a., 991

Prince Edward Island
Attractions, 190-1
Industrial possibilities, 190-1
Transportation, 189-90
Canadian National Railways, accommodation, 189
Causeway, need for, 442
Ferries, 189-90
Traffic costs, increases in, 189
See Atlantic provinces

Prisons and Reformatories bill. 1r, 769;; 2r, 848-9; 3r, 853; r.a., 991

Public bills, suspension of rules, 909

Public Lands Grants bill. 1r, 9-10; 2r, 53-54; ref to com, 54-55; authority to print proceedings, 101; rep of com-amdt concurred in, 273-4; 3r, 292; r.a., 1141

Public Servants Inventions bill. 1r, 375; 2r, 395-400; ref to com, 400; rep of com, 411; authority to print proceedings, 411; r.a., 459

Public Service Pension Adjustment bill. 1r, 864; 2r, 910-13; ref to com, 913; rep of com, 947; 3r, 967; r.a., 991

Quebec
Navigational aids required by Quebec City, 578
St. Lawrence River, highway of commerce to province, 604
Timiscouata County, 578-82
Trans-Canada Highway, non-acceptance of grant, 437-9

Queen Elizabeth II—See Royal visit

Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Research Fund bill. 1r, 921; 2r, 921-5; 3r, 925; r.a., 991

Queenston Bridge bill. 1r, 1012-13; 2r, 1025-8; ref to com, 1028; rep of com, 1045; 3r, 1045-6; r.a., 1141

Questions—See Inquiries

Quinn, Hon. Felix P.
Atlantic ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 570-2
Halifax, contribution to Canada, 571-2
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 434, 436
Nova Scotia, 436

Railways
Canadian National Railways
Capital expenditures, 915-16
Contracts prior to July 1, 1960, 916-17
Temporary advances to meet operating deficits, 916
Deficit, 454, 455
Financing and Guarantee bill, 864, 915-16, 948, 967, 991
Hotels
Chateau Laurier, parking facilities, 711, 820-1, 852
Other hotels, sale of, 711
Canadian Pacific Railway
Land grants and mineral rights, 728-9
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 625, 702-6, 722-31, 740-7, 756-9, 819, 852-3, 991
Intercolonial Railway agreement, 725-6
Royal Commission on Railway problems, 600-1, 606
Trucking industry and "Piggy-back" services, 724-5

Reid, Hon. Thomas
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 167-73
Appropriation bill No. 1, 205, 212, 220-3
Appropriation bill No. 4, 750
Austria, resolution for approval of State treaty, 631
Bretton Woods Agreements bill, 815-17
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, 815
Canada's share in funds of bank increased, 817
International Monetary Fund, 815
Canada's obligations in United States dollars, 816

Reid, Hon. Thomas—Continued
Canada-Finland Income Tax Convention bill, 900-1
Canada-New Brunswick Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 126
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
Expenditures, increase in, 663
Television, doubtful good, 663
Census questionnaire, inquiry, 553
Colombo Plan, objection to payments under, 663
Columbia River, documents requested, 560, 665
Conversion loan
Administration costs, 661-2, 663
Interest payments and rates, 661-2, 663
Customs Tariff bill, 654-5
Excise bill, 615
Excise Tax bill, 697, 700, 837
Export trade, 816
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 857
Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. bill, 377, 378, 380
Freight assistance, western feed grain, 220, 222-3
Crowsnest Pass, 220
Export and local shipments, difference in rates, 221-2
Subsidies, various provinces, 223
Wheat prices, 223
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 703, 704, 706, 741-4
Crowsnest Pass, 741-2, 744
British Columbia, contribution to building of, 742
Canadian Pacific Railway, lands grants and mineral rights, 742
Royal Commission on Transportation, subject for investigation by, 744
Grain
Losses on shipments, 744
Wheat, difference in freight costs, export and home use, 742-3
Hydro-electric power, consumer costs in Vancouver, 173
Income Tax bill, 672
Inflation, 351
Labour, forced, Convention on abolition of, 710
Length and Mass Units bill, 637
National Energy Board bill, 783
National Housing bill, 282, 283
NATO, 520
Old age security bill, 657-63
Background of legislation, 657-8, 659
Conversion loan, relation to Old Age Security contributions, 661
Formula for financing fund, 659
Election promises, 659-60
Increase in taxation, 659-60
Immigrants, eligibility for benefits under, 658-9, 661

Reid, Hon. Thomas—Concluded
Parliamentary Secretaries bill, 530-1
Appointments, term of, 531
Salary, 531
Under-secretaries, appointment recommended, 531
Prime Minister's Residence bill, 860, 862
Public Lands Grants bill, 54
Public Service Pension Adjustment bill, 911
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill, 320
Sockeye salmon, 167-73
Dams, danger from construction of, 171-3
Columbia River, proposed diversion to Fraser River, 171-3
Provincial right to consultation, 172, 173
United States-Canada relations, 173
International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission, 168,171
Marketing of, 169-70
Tourist traffic
Parliament Buildings, lack of rest room facilities, 713-14
Parliament Hill, parking for tourists, 390-1
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 390-1

Representation bill. 1r, 547; 2r, 578-2; 3r, 582; r.a., 754

Robertson, Hon. Wishart McL., P.C.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 47-53
Atlantic Congress, 468, 519, 520, 521, 522, 526-7, 553-4
Atlantic ports, resolution urging greater degree of use, 566-8
Industrial exodus from Maritimes, 567
Nova Scotia
Economic union with NATO, advantages to, 567
Industrial centres, 568
Protectionist policies, opposition to, 566-8
Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, efforts on behalf of industry, 52
Coal production Assistance bill, 1007
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill, 654, 667-9
Consumer viewpoint of primary interest, 668
Germany
Recovery in economy, 668-9
Trade union with other countries, 669
Production costs, 668-9
Russia, competition from, 669
Secondary industries, need for larger markets, 669
Tariff changes, consideration by countries subscribing to GATT, 667-8
Defence expenditures, 52-53, 518
Effect on economy, 518
Inflationary, 518

Robertson, Hon. Wishart McL., P.C.—Continued
Economic position of Canada, participation in larger trading area required, 1119
European Common Market, 468-72
Atlantic Congress, 468
Production and living costs, creation of "economic curtain" in North America, 469, 526
Lowering of in Europe to aid export markets, 470
Tariffs, 471-2
Federal-provincial financial relations, 1118-19
Inflation, report of Finance Committee, 1051-5
European decrease in cost of living, 1053
Fixed incomes, investors' losses, 1053-4
Increased costs, as result of tariff rates, 1055
Industry, increased costs and resulting decline of markets, 1052, 1053
Wages increase, 1052-3
International conferences, Senate representation, 588
Leader of Government in Senate, appointment to Cabinet urged, 49
National Housing bill, 277, 284-5
Newfoundland Additional Grants bill, 1064, 1118-19
North Atlantic Treaty Organization, 517-27
Defence expenditures by member countries, 469-70, 518, 520, 521
Economic collaboration, neglect of, 468, 470-1, 519, 521
Parliamentary secretaries, need for in Senate, 48
Parliamentary Secretaries bill, 561, 587-9
Senate
Being downgraded year by year, 587-8
Position in structure of government, 588
Protector of minorities, 588, 589
Steel industry
Prices, tables of, 524
Wages, selected countries, 522-3
Trade
Conferences, representatives should be briefed on Senate viewpoint, 50
International, resolution urging progressive removal of trade barriers between Western countries, 547; withdrawn, 597
Negotiations of European countries in free trade area, 49
Russian competition, 50-51, 526
Secondary industries, competition from western Europe, 51-52, 523
Automobile imports, 51-52; U.S., 521

Robertson, Hon. Wishart McL., P.C.—Concluded
Trade—Concluded
Tariff restrictions, necessity for removal, 49-50. See 471-2, 667-8
United States trade policies, 50-51

Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W.
Appropriation bill No. 1, 203, 211, 221
Appropriation bill No. 5, 1134
Atlantic Congress, 554
Austria, State Treaty with, 630-1
Soviet Union rights under treaty, 630-1
Baloise Fire Insurance Company of Canada bill, 184-5
Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada bill, 137
Canada-Finland Income Tax Convention bill 899-900, 901
Conventions, presentation in form of bills desirable, 899-900
Canada-New Brunswick Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 123, 124, 127, 151-2
"All outstanding problems", settlement of, 123, 127
Canada Shipping bill, 55
Combines Investigation bill, 1136-7
Delay in receipt of legislation from Commons, 1136-7
Congregation of Sisters of Holy Family of Bordeaux bill, 312, 313
Criminal Code bill, 992-8
Confessions, withholding of publication, 997
Obscene publications, definition of, 993-6, 998, 1047
Seizure, 1047, 1048
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill, 646-7, 654
Consumer position, 646
Fruits and vegetables, 646-7
Information on bill lacking, 646, 647
Divorce
Amendment to rules, 1075-6
Bills, 61, 98, 101-2, 129, 130, 131-2, 138, 151, 160-1, 165, 166-7, 173-4, 175, 182, 201, 228-9 306-7, 342, 432, 445, 508-9, 536, 538, 547-8, 560, 573-4, 611-12, 640, 786-7, 820
Committee
Reports 18, 38, 59, 60, 85, 98, 101, 115, 201, 245, 306, 341, 412, 461, 472, 508, 536, 538, 547, 559, 585, 611, 756, 806, 1068-71
Services of members and staff, 1069
Petitions, 85, 116, 165-6, 585, 1069-70
Co-respondent, naming of, 166
Extension of filing date, 515-16
Last date for filing, 166
Remission of parliamentary fee, 166
Statistics, 166, 1069-71
Parliamentary, 1069
Provincial, 1070, 1071

Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W.—Concluded
Excise Tax bill, 772, 833-8, 841
Electricity, export duty on, 833-8
Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, 834-5
Statistics on export of electricity, 836-7, 850-1
Evangelical Mennonite Conference bill, 197, 247-8
Farm Credit bill, 1018
Gore District Mutual Fire Insurance Company bill, 128, 129
Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Chairman of Senate Special Committee (1950), 25
Income Tax bill, 1140
Inflation, 350-3
Bonds, Government, 352-3
Dollar value, decline in, 350-3
Land costs, 350-1
Monopolies, 351
Rentals 350-1
National Defence bill, 335-6
Court martial, rules of evidence, 336
National Energy Board bill, 807, 809, 810, 811, 1015
Newfoundland Salt Fish Exportation Laws Repeal bill, 1051
Pacific Standard Life Insurance Company bill, 308
Public Lands Grants bill, 55
Queenston Bridge bill, 1026, 1027
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation bill, 965
Unemployment Insurance bill, 953, 978

Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Prince Rupert bill. 1r, 707; 2r-ref to com, 754; rep of com-3r, 786; r.a., 991

Royal Assent, 246, 458-9, 558-9, 752-4, 990-1, 1141
Notice, 234, 458, 547, 752, 974, 1141

Royal Canadian Mounted Police, documents requested, 394

Royal Canadian Mounted Police bill. 1r, 896; 2r, 967-71; ref to com, 971; rep of com-amdt concurred in—3r, 975; amdt concurred in by Commons, 1137; r.a., 1141

Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation bill. 1r, 921; 2r, 963-5; ref to com, 965; rep of com—3r, 974; r.a., 991

Royal Commissions—See Commissions, Royal

Royal visit, Itinerary, 5, 12-15
St. Lawrence Seaway, official opening, 139-40
Speeches of Her Majesty at Ottawa (July 1, 1959), 972-3
Commonwealth Air Forces Memorial, dedication and unveiling, 973
Television broadcast, 972-3

Russia
Achievements, 218, 251
Forced labour, 762-3, 764
Industrial war, threat of, 252, 541
Labour unions, dominated by communism, 709-10
Trade competition, 50-51, 415, 425, 669
West Germany, attempts to gain control, 155-6
Visitors in Senate Gallery, 821

St. Laurent, Right Hon. Louis S., portrait presented to House of Commons, 273

St. Lawrence Seaway
Atlantic provinces, effect on, 270-2, 321-2, 325, 326
See Atlantic provinces, ports, resolution urging greater degree of use
Hazards, 504
Ice-breaking costs, 85, 325-6, 502, 504
Ocean tariff, discrimination charged against port of Montreal, 403
Official opening, 139-40
Ports, proposed closed season, 501-6, 536, 538-41, 563-72, 574-8, 598-609
Toronto, freedom from National Harbours Board jurisdiction, 403

St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill. 1r, 247; 2r, 268-72, 319-27; authority to print proceedings, 357-8; rep of com—3r, 358; r.a., 459

Salacious publications 22-23, 225-8, 993-6, 998-1001
See Criminal Code bill

Saskatchewan
Agriculture, progress in, 19-20
Economic outlook, 41-42
Mineral wealth, 21, 42, 303
Saskatoon
Industrial expansion, 302-3
University and hospital, 302
South Saskatchewan River dam, nation-building project, 303
Wheat exports, 41-42

Savoie, Hon. Calixte F.
Income Tax bill, 672

Secretary of State for External Affairs, Hon. Sidney Earle Smith, death of, 409; State funeral, 413

Seeds bill. 1r, 721; 2r, 765-8; ref to com, 768; rep of com, 819; 3r, 852; r.a., 991

Senate
Accounts tabled, ref to com, 84
Adjournment, 617-18, 965, 1113
Business, 46, 98, 340, 453, 635, 657, 706, 908, 925-6, 948

Senate—Concluded
Cabinet representation, question of, 49, 153, 590-1
Committee of the Whole, suggested study of defence expenditures, 542; and of supply bills, 211
Constitutional position of, 589-90
Debate procedure
Rulings and statements by the Hon. the Speaker
Amendment to motion cannot be proposed until motion itself has been moved, 1017
Committee amendments cannot be concurred in on day bill reported, without unanimous consent, 770
Interruption not permissible while Speaker is putting question, 129
Question out of order, 54
Senator cannot amend own motion without leave, 608-9
Debates distributed to members of United States Senate, 69
Divisions
Excise Tax bill, m for concurrence in com amdts, negatived, 844
Finance, m to instruct Finance Committee to study threat to inflation, 514
Emergency sittings, authority to convene during adjournment, 341
Guests in gallery, 26, 821
Inflation
Function in matter of, 243, 244-5
Right to study problem, 299-301
International conferences, Senate representation, 29, 554, 588, 1076-7
Leader of Government, appointment to Cabinet urged, 49, 153
Members who have held Cabinet portfolio, 589
Non-partisan function, 40
Pages Hockey Team, 476
Parliamentary secretaries in, advocated, 48
Partisanship, political, 517
Protector of minorities, 588, 589
Publicity lacking, 249
Role of, 40, 243, 244-5, 292-7, 299-301, 368, 414, 418, 464-6, 478-9, 481, 484-5, 487, 492-5, 509-13, 587-8, 589
Rules—Suspension of, public bills, 909
Senators
Cameron, Hon. Donald, award of Canadian Conference of the Arts, 707-8
Deceased
Nicol, Hon. Jacob, tributes, 5-9
New, introduction to Senate:
Buchanan, Hon. John J., Higgins, Hon. John G., Hnatyshyn, Hon. John, 26
Visit to Washington by members of Canadian parliamentary group, 65, 77-83

Shipping
Atlantic provinces, 230, 501-6, 536, 538-41, 563-72, 574-8, 598-609
Canada Shipping bill, 10, 55-59, 116, 247, 265-8, 286-90
Rail transportation, problems in shipping natural gas products, 377
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill, 247, 268-72, 319-27, 357-8, 459
West Indies-Canada, 121

Smith, Hon. Donald
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 69-74
Appropriation bill No. 3, 455-6, 457
Atlantic provinces
Beechwood Power project, 73
Coal subventions, 72-73
Financial concessions to industry suggested, 74
Fish products, advertising needs, 73
Freight rates, effect on manufacturing, 71
Industrial and regional problems, 72-73
Nova Scotia
Liverpool bicentennial, 69-70
Steamship and ferry services, 456, 457. See 467
Unemployment, 72, 73-74
Canada Shipping bill, 286-8
Fisheries control, 12-mile limit, negotiations with United States suggested, 287-8
Pilotage dues, exemption, 286, 287
Treaties and agreements, international, 286-7
Capital punishment, inquiry, 85; answer, 86
Cold storage warehouses, subsidies, 456. See also 467
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 384-6
Markets, salt fish, 385
Advertising, 386
Subsidies, 385
Medway River salmon rearing ponds and fishways, inquiry and answer, 461-2
Unemployment Insurance bill, 903-6
Contributions, increase in, 904, 906
Depletion of fund, 905-6

Smith, Hon. Sidney Earle, Secretary of State for External Affairs, death of, 409; State funeral, 413

Smith, Hon. Sydney J.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 145-9
Appropriation bill No. 1, 224
Baloise Fire Insurance Company of Canada bill, 130, 160, 183, 184
Canada-United States relations
Interparliamentary group, Washington meeting, 146
Recommendations, 146-7
Divorce, 1071

Smith, Hon. Sydney J.—Concluded
Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Prince Rupert bill, 752
Tourist trade, 147-8, 149
Kamloops, anniversary celebrations, 1962, 149
National centennial celebration, commendation of suggestion for, 148-9
Travel Bureau appropriation, 148
Trade with United States, imbalance of, 147-8, 149
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 386-8
Date of completion, 386-7
Importance to national economy, 388
United States-Canada tourist trade, imbalance of, 387
Western grain producers, payments to, 224

Social security
Economic security for the aged in the United States and Canada, report on, 291, 623-4
Increasing Government assistance, 283
Old Age Security bill, 584, 618-24, 657-63, 683, 754
Unemployment Insurance bill, 864, 952-7, 975-83, 991

Speaker, The
See Drouin, Hon. Mark R.
Acting Speakers
Choquette, Hon. Lionel, 182, 805, 909
Pearson, Hon. Arthur M., 394
White, Hon. George S., 751

Speech from the Throne
At opening of Parliament, 1-3. See Address in reply
At prorogation, 1141-3

Springhill, Nova Scotia, mine disaster and resulting unemployment, 117-18

Stambaugh, Hon. J. Wesley
Crop Insurance bill, 1011
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 914
Alberta, municipal debts and taxes, 914
Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. bill, 380
Prime Minister's Residence bill, 861

Standard Trust Company bill. 1r, 805; 2r, 862-3; ref to com, 863; rep of com, 895; 3r, 914; r.a., 1141

Subsidies
Cold storage warehouses, 456, 467
Fisheries, 385
Transportation, 162-3
Western feed grain, 223

Sullivan, Hon. Joseph A.
Canadian Medical Association bill, 38, 75-76
Labour forced, Convention on abolition of, 708-10
Articles of convention, 708
Communism
Domination of labour unions, 709-10
Press and writers quoted on, 709-10
Tibet invasion, 709

Tariffs—See Trade

Taxation
Canada-Finland Income Tax Convention bill, 805, 858-9, 896-901, 914, 991
Corporations, 618-19, 622, 623
Foreign business, 677-81, 845
Excise
Government revenues, 613-14
Liquor and tobacco, duties increased, 612-17
Excise bill, 584, 612-17, 656, 667, 754
Excise tax
Cosmetics and pharmaceuticals, 717-18
Electricity, export duty on, 719-20, 770-9, 822-44
British Columbia Electric Railway Company, 772-8, 835-6
Peace River Power Development Company, 771, 822, 824, 826, 827
Manufacturer or producer, designation of, 716-19
Packaging, 718-19
Excise Tax bill, 640, 695-702, 716-21, 769-79, 821-44, 991
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 755, 791-6, 853-8, 868-73, 893, 913-14, 991
Income Tax
Deceased employees, gratuities to dependents, 673
District Income Tax offices, 684
Foreign business corporations, 671, 675, 677-81, 686-9, 692, 1131, 1137-41
Information pamphlets advocated, 684
Medical expenses, 671-2, 676, 677
Officials of department, 684-6
Pension and group insurance plans, 673-4
Provincial revenues, 177
Income Tax bill, 656-82, 684-92, 721, 806, 845, 853, 1131-2, 1137-41, 1141
Provincial rights, 854-8, 1118

Taylor, Hon. Austin C.
Agriculture
Cost price squeeze, 918, 1023-4
Federal-provincial sharing of financing for farmers under one general act, suggested, 1023
Production costs, 918
Appropriation bill No. 1, 223
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill, 649-50, 652
Fruits and vegetables, 649-50
Potatoes, tariff to United States, 653
Season restrictions, 649-50, 652
Export Finance Corporation of Canada bill, 451
Farm Credit bill, 1020-4
Administration, transfer of, 1020-1
Advisory committee, 1021

Taylor, Hon. Austin C.—Concluded
Farm Credit bill—Concluded
Loans
Amount of, 1022; interest, 1021, 1022
Provisions respecting, 1021
Farm Improvement Loans bill, 917-18
Freight assistance, western feed grain, 224. See 256
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 703
Land Use Committee, 1071
Report
Recommendations indefinite, 1123
Witnesses, 1123-4
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill, 323-4
Atlantic provinces
Chignecto Canal, immediate construction urged, 323-4
Question of privilege, press report, 359
Trade, internal, 324
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 362
Veterans' Land bill, 962-3

Thorvaldson, Hon. Gunnar S.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 102-8
Appropriation bill No. 1, 216
Austria
Resolution for approval of State Treaty, 617, 625-7, 634-5
Importance of Canada's accession to, 627
Negotiations preceding signing, 626
Bonds, Government
Conversion loan, 104-5, 106-7
Bank holdings, 108
Interest rates, 104-5
Stabilizing factor in economy, 105, 108
Canada Council, 467
Canada-Finland Income Tax Convention bill, 858-9
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
News commentators, inquiry and answer, 183, 198-200
Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League, 573
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill, 652, 653, 654
Dumping principle, 653
Potatoes, tariff to United States, 653
Pulpwood, production costs, 654
United States, exports to debtor countries, 654
Divorce
Bills, 506-7
Committee reports, 486, 507
Excise bill, 615
Price increase on liquors in Ontario, 615
Excise Tax bill, 696

Thorvaldson, Hon. Gunnar S.—Concluded
Income Tax bill, 670-5, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682
Corporations, 671, 674
Deceased employees, gratuities to dependents, 673
Foreign business corporations, 675, 679, 680, 681, 682
Individual tax rates, increase in, 671
Medical expenses, 671-2
Pension and group insurance plans, 673-4
Inflation
Cost of living, statistics (1945-59), 105
Government finances, resumé of past years, 258
Joint Economic Committee of United States Congress, studies made by, 258, 259, 260
Labour, pressure on costs, 106
Motion to authorize Finance Committee to make study, opposed, 256-9
Relation to other factors of economy, 259
National Energy Board bill, 779-84, 790
Control of pipe lines and power lines, 781
Export and import licences, 781, 782, 783, 784
Mineral resources, developments since 1947, 780, 784
Public hearings, 783
Royal Commission on Energy, activities of, 779-80
Traffic, tolls and tariffs, 781-2
National Housing bill, 275-8
Advance from Consolidated Revenue Fund, increase in, 276
Building statistics (1958), 276
Insured mortgages, 276
Limited dividend projects, 277
Winnipeg development, 277
Public housing, low income families, 277-8
Recommendations of Finance Committee (1958), 275
Small homes loans program, 276-7
North Atlantic Treaty Organization
Motion for review of activities by External Relations Committee, 473-6
Defence expenditures by Canada in proportion to other members, 476
Economic clauses in treaty not implemented, 519
Parliamentary Secretaries bill, 535-6
Appointments, term of, 535-6
Status of appointees, 535
Prime Minister's Residence bill, 894
Rent for 24 Sussex Drive, 894
Public Service Pension Adjustment bill, 910-11, 913
"Length of service" pensions, 910-11

Tibet, communist invasion, 710

Tight money, 89-90
Interest rates, 241-2

Tobacco and liquors, tax increases, 612-17, 867-8

Tourist industry
Accommodation and meals, high charges, 715-16
Banff School of Fine Arts, 392-3
Canadian Government Travel Bureau, appropriation for, 148
Canadian National Railways
Chateau Laurier, parking facilities, 711
Other hotels, sale of, 711
Fisher, John, Executive Director of Canadian Tourist Association, 189
Kamloops, anniversary celebrations (1962), 149
National centennial celebration, need for immediate planning, 148-9
Ottawa, Parliament Buildings, parking regulations, 713
Tourist Traffic Committee, 641-1, 684
Empowered to conduct inquiry, 710-16
Proceedings, authority to print, 865
Trans-Canada Highway, 365, 387, 390, 391, 392, 402
United States-Canada relations, 711-12
Border relations, 188
Exchange on United States currency a handicap to industry, 715
Imbalance in tourist trade between two countries, 387

Trade
Bretton Woods Agreements bill, 755, 796-801, 815-17, 865, 896
Conferences, representatives should be briefed on Senate viewpoint, 50
Customs Act amendments of 1958, alleged violation of GATT, 30-31
European Common Market (European Economic Community) 418-27, 467-72
Common market of Americas, possibility of, 425-6
Economic aid to devastated areas, 419
Economic collaboration, neglect of, 468, 470-1, 519, 520, 521, 522, 525, 1119
Legislative Assembly, 421
World trade, decline of, 425
Exports, 34, 35-36, 419-21, 423
Import quotas and currency restrictions, 35-36
Increasing costs, danger from, 235, 301
Inflationary effect from high cost economy, 235
Internal, 324
Maritime problems, 569
NATO, negotiations of European countries in free trade area, 49, 418-24, 468-72
Production and living costs, 217, 469, 522-4, 668-9, 1130
Creation of "economic curtain", 469
Resolution urging progressive removal of trade barriers between Western countries, 547; withdrawn, 597
Russian competition, 50-51, 415, 425, 541

Trade—Concluded
St. Lawrence Seaway, potential markets from, 322
Secondary industries, competition from western Europe, 51-52, 622, 669
Automobile imports, 51-52, 503
Tariffs, 49-50, 421-3, 471-2
Unemployment and, 34, 36
United States, imbalance of trade with, 147-8, 149
West Indies
Canadian trade and currency regulations, 462-3
Economic Mission of Canadian Chamber of Commerce, 314-19
Imports from Canada, decline in, 317-18
Shipping facilities, 121
Sugar from, 319
Tariff agreements, Canada and, 316
Trade Liberalization plan, 315-16
See GATT, North Atlantic Treaty Organization

Trans-Canada Highway
Divided highway, advantages of, 437
Newfoundland, special needs, 759
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 291, 361-5, 386-93, 401-3, 410, 411, 432-9, 459
Western section too narrow, 437

Transportation subsidies, 162-3

Turgeon, Hon. Gray
Inflation, 417-18
Finance Committee of 1956, recommendations quoted, 418
International Wheat Agreement, 966

Ukrainian National Republic, 303-4
Forty-first anniversary of Declaration of Independence, 27-28

Unemployment
Arrow CF-105, cancellation of contract for, 111-15, 212-17
Atlantic provinces, 5, 72-74, 117-18, 208, 401
Inflation and, 235, 236, 244, 465-6
Springhill mines, 117-18
Relief fund, 204
Unemployment insurance
Depletion of fund, 109, 927-31
Conversion loan, 927
Increase in contributions by employer and employee, 928-9, 931
Seasonal benefits, 927-8
Types of unemployment considered not responsibility of fund, 930-1
Unemployment Insurance Commission reports, 597, 625
Winter works program, 205-6, 210, 211
Woollen and textile workers, 34

Unemployment Insurance bill. 1r, 864, 2r, 952-7; ref to com, 957; authority to print com proceedings-rep of com, 975; 3r, 975-83; r.a., 991

United Kingdom
Prime Minister, Right Hon. Harold Macmillan, visit to Ottawa, 394

United Nations
Convention on Abolition of Forced Labour, 695, 708-10, 759-65
Convention on Nationality of Married Women, 395, 432, 443-4, 480, 548, 821, 967, 1016-18, 1088-1100. See also 865-6
Emergency Force, 455
International Wheat Agreement 1959, 864, 876-92, 933-46, 966

United States
Canada-United States Interparliamentary group, Washington meeting, 62-69, 77-83, 118, 146-7
Report on organization meeting tabled, 537; text of report 544-6
Common market of Americas, possibility of, 425-6
Customs tariff, 645, 654-4
Economic dependence of Canada upon, 426
Fisheries, 12-mile limit in Atlantic waters advocated, 287-8
Free trade with, potential benefit to Atlantic provinces, 289-90
Inflation, committees on, 258, 259, 260, 481
International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission, 168, 171, 173
International relations, 62-69, 77-83, 146-7, 173
Investments in Canada, 21, 155, 788-9
Rejection of British bid on army project in Arkansas, 157, 215
St. Lawrence Seaway
Agreements with Canada, 320
Opening ceremonies, 322-3
Tourist traffic, 188, 711-12
Trade policies, 50-51
Treaties and agreements, 287-9, 290

Uruguay
Presentation to Parliament of works of Carlos Vaz Ferreira, Uruguayan philosopher, 161

Vaillancourt, Hon. Cyrille, Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 224-8
Appropriation bill No. 1, 202
Canada-Nova Scotia Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 909
Criminal and immoral tendencies, 225-8
Obscene publications
Campaign to counteract should be promoted, 227, 228
Definition of, 998-1001
Parental responsibility, 1000-1

Vaillancourt, Hon. Cyrille, Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate—Concluded
Criminal and immoral tendencies—Concluded
Obscene publications—Concluded
Producers imprisonment suggested, 226, 227
Criminal Code bill, 988, 990, 998-1001
Customs Tariff and New Zealand Trade Agreement bill, 652
Drouin, Hon. Mark R., election as President of National Council of French Cultural Union, 967
Farm Credit bill, 1020, 1024-5
Housing
Caisses populaires, loans by, 285, 407
Construction costs, 225
Co-operatives, 406-7
Ice-breaking, St. Lawrence River, 504
Indian affairs, 552-3
Inflation, 404-8
Economic position (1938-58), 406
Exports, danger from high prices, 405
Fixed income groups, 407
Freight rates, wheat shipments, eastern provinces, increase in, 405
International Wheat Agreement, 936
Land use, 1123
Length and Mass Units bill, 637
National Energy Board bill, 865, 1015
Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Research Fund bill, 923
Seeds bill, 768, 819
Penalties, 768

Venezuela
White, Hon. George S., Special Ambassador to, 86

Veterans' Land bill. 1r, 864; 2r, 960-3; ref to com, 963; rep of com-3r, 974; r.a., 991

Veterans Rehabilitation bill. 1r, 573; 2r, 591-3; ref to com, 593; rep of com-3r, 611; r.a., 754

Vien, Hon. Thomas, P.C.
National Energy Board bill, 808, 811, 812
Seeds bill, 768
Regulation by order in council, objection to, 768
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 363, 365

Visitors—India, 26; Russia, 821

Wall, Hon. William M.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 176-81
Atlantic Congress members, 520, 522, 526-7
Austria, State treaty with, 631-3
Reparations, 632-3
Baloise Fire Insurance Company of Canada bill, 184
Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada bill, 136-7

Wall, Hon. William M.—Continued
Bonds, Government, 237, 238
Budgetary expenditures, 234, 237
Canada-New Brunswick Indian Reserves Agreement bill, 125-6, 127
Education
Federal Government contribution, 538, 721-2, 732-8, 805
Federal grants to universities, 180-1
Distribution of, 181
Financing by parents, 179
Formula suggested in relation to per student enrolment, 180-1
Scholarships
Conversion loan, interest charges, 179
Government action lacking, 159
University student residences, 280, 281, 282-3
Intercommonwealth, 179-80
Excise Tax bill, 696
Federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements
Conferences, 177
Income tax revenue, 177
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 704, 705
Gross national product, 234-5, 240-1
Price increases, statistics, 234, 237, 241. See 511
Immigration, 597
Income Tax bill, 672
Inflation, 230, 234-43, 509-14
Motion to authorize Finance Committee to make study, 234-43, 509-14
Causes of inflation, 237
Fixed incomes, effect on, 242
Internal high cost economy, danger from, 235
Social security measures affected by, 623-4
Tight money, 241-2
Interest rates, 241-2
Unemployment, doubtful priority, 235, 236
Senate's right to study problem, 513
Study recommended by Finance Committee in 1956, 510-11
Witnesses, selection of, 512
Labour, forced, Convention on abolition of, 759-65
Forms of forced labour, 762
International labour conventions and reports, 760-3
Suggestions on Convention, 105, 763-4
Legislation, withholding of information, 176-7
Lakehead harbour facilities, 176
Manitoba, flood control, 177-8
Costs, 178
Nelson River, effect of lake levels on power potential, 178

Wall, Hon. William M.—Concluded
National Energy Board bill, 845-8
Advisory functions, 847
Gordon Commission, resumé of research on economic prospects, 845-6
Government control, extension of, 846-7
National Housing bill, 275, 279-82, 283
Low income groups, statistics in relation to loans, 280-1
Mortgage insurance fund, study of, 275
Older homes, 275
University student residences, 280, 281, 282-3
Canada Council, capital grant, 282-3
North Atlantic Treaty Organization, 541-3
Defence expenditures, 541-2
Information services, 542-3
Russia, economic offensive, 541
Old Age Security bill, 622-4
Atlantic provinces, social security problems, 624
Corporation and individual taxes, 623
Economic Security for the aged in the United States and Canada, report on, 623-4
Recipients, increase in, 623
Trade
Internal high cost economy, danger from, 235
Ukraine
Forty-first anniversary of Declaration of Independence of National Republic, 27-28
Sovietization of, 762-3

War Service Grants bill. 1r, 573; 2r, 593-4; ref to com, 594; rep of com-3r, 611; r.a., 754

Waterloo Mutual Insurance Company bill. 1r, 38; 2r, 74-75; ref to com, 75; rep of com-3r, 101; r.a., 459

Weights and Measures bill. 1r, 585; 2r, 637-8; ref to com, 638-9; rep of com, 656; 3r, 667; r.a. 991

Western feed grains—See Freight Rates Reduction bill

West Indies
Canadian trade and currency regulations, 462-3
Economic Mission of Canadian Chamber of Commerce, 314-19
Imports from Canada, decline in, 317-18
Shipping facilities, 121
Sugar from, 319
Tariff agreements, Canada and, 316
Trade Liberalization plan, 315-16

Whips
Chief Government Whip in the Senate—See White, Hon. George S.
Chief Opposition Whip in the Senate—See Beaubien, Hon. Arthur L.

White, Hon. George S., Chief Government Whip in the Senate
Acting Speaker, 751
Canadian Forces Superannuation bill, 957-8
Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League, 515
Divorce
Committee, appointment, 10; members, 10, 27, 47
National Defence bill, 327-30
Amendments, 327-30
Court martial
Law of evidence, 327-8
Supreme Court, appeals to, 329-30
Royal Assent, notice, 752
Royal Canadian Mounted Police bill, 967-9
Loans, 968
Offences, 968-9, 971
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation bill, 963-4, 965
Special Ambassador to Venezuela, 86
Standing Committees, report of Committee of Selection, 11
Veterans' Land bill, 960-2
Loan statistics, 960-1
Veterans Rehabilitation bill, 591-2
Education opportunities, 591-2
War Service Grants bill, 593-4
Re-establishment credits, 593-4

Wilson, Hon. Cairine R.
Immigration, inquiry, 500-1; answer, 586, 597-8
Married Women, Convention on Nationality of, 1088-9
Improvements in status of women, 1088-9
Naturalization Act, amendments, 1088, 1094-5

Winter works program, 205-6, 210, 211

Yugoslavia, Canadian Graphic Art Exhibition in, 291, 361

DIVORCE BILLS

Abel, Louise Martel. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Adams, Nita Stella Pollock. 1r, 61; 2r, 98; 3r, 102; r.a., 458
Albrechtson, Barbara Ann Mary Curran. 1r, 560; 2r, 583; 3r, 586; r.a., 753
Andrews, James Kennedy. 1r, 151; 2r, 174; 3r, 175; r.a., 459
Andrews, Marie Marguerite Louise Leclerc. 1r, 394; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 559
Arial, Mary Ann David. Ir, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 574; r.a., 753

Armstrong, Barbara Ann Foam, otherwise known as Copan, Barbara Ann Foam. 1r, 640; 2r, 663; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Armstrong, Violet Winnifred Kean Newton. 1r, 306; 2r, 342; 3r, 365; r.a., 559
Aschner, Klara Schillinger. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Ashburner-Collins, Phyllis Pamela Allen. 1r, 508; 2r, 536; 3r, 538; r.a., 753
Aubin, Marie Louise Marguerite Therese Bernaquez. 1r, 395; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 559

Backman, Ruth Millstein. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459
Baker, Martina Bernice Patterson. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 508; r.a., 753
Baldo, Mario, 1r, 473; 2r 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Bamber, Margaret Stewart Cairns. 1r, 61; 2r, 98; 3r, 102; r.a., 458
Barr, Dawn Jean McKenzie. 1r, 201; 2r, 245; 3r, 248; r.a., 991
Bartels, Karl Wilhelm Oskar. 1r, 786; 2r, 787; 3r, 787; r.a., 991
Beckett, Helen Margaret Davidson. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 458
Bell, Maurice William. 1r-2r, 432; 3r, 445; r.a., 559
Bellefleur, Rita Lucia Palmieri. 1r, 255; 2r, 306; 3r, 339; r.a., 558
Bereznik, Susan Pick. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459
Bernstein, Jacqueline Ann Rosenfeld. 1r, 255; 2r, 307; 3r, 339; r.a., 559
Besner, Eva Greenblatt. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459
Bissett, Elizabeth Ann Nelson. 1r, 560; 2r, 583; 3r, 587; r.a., 753
Bissonnette, Albert Reginald. 1r, 508; 2r, 536; 3r, 538; r.a., 753
Blondin, Louis Marcel. 1r, 586, 2r, 609; 3r, 612; r.a., 753
Blood Constance Edna Medcalfe. 1r, 786; 2r, 787; 3r, 787; r.a., 990
Boire, Bernard Lawrence. 1r-2r-3r, 820; r.a., 991
Bond, Mary Friend. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 612; r.a., 753
Bonneville, Edward Bruce. 1r, 306; 2r, 342; 3r, 365; r.a., 559
Boucher, Joseph Fernand Roger. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459
Bourget, Marc Aurèle. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459
Bourque, Wauneta Langill. 1r, 255; 2r, 307; 3r, 339; r.a., 558
Bourret, Elsie Elizabeth Wand. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Bouthillette, Patricia McDonald. 1r, 586; 2r, 609; 3r, 612; r.a., 753
Bowness, Olive Florence Andrews. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Bradley, James Alvin. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Brazauckas, Gail Patricia Northrup. 1r, 786; 2r, 787; 3r, 787; r.a., 991
Brazier, Joan Brazer. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Brewster, Joyce Ethel Commerford. 1r, 786; 2r, 787; 3r, 787; r.a., 991
Brown, David Scott. 1r, 201; 2r, 245; 3r, 248; r.a., 991
Bruce, Moira Elizabeth Latham. 1r, 560; 2r, 583; 3r, 587; r.a., 753
Bruggemans, Yvonne Catherine Marie Vranckken. 1r-2r, 432; 3r, 445; r.a., 559
Burchmore, Dorothy Sarah Sheehan. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Burton, George Meredith Scott. 1r, 473; 2r, 507; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Butas, Constandina Alimanisteanu. 1r, 101; 2r, 129; 3r, 132; r.a., 458
Buzzell, John Andrew. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 611; r.a., 753

Canny, Margaret Sonia Lawrence. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Cant, Leslie Ronald. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Caplan, Gloria Helen Gross. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Cardinal, Rita Thibeaudeau. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Castonguay, Maurice. 1r, 225; 2r, 306; 3r, 339; r.a., 990
Cavallero, Giovanni. 1r, 786; 2r, 787; 3r, 787; r.a., 990
Charbonneau, Guy. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 990
Chartrand, Marguerite Louise Agathe Piche. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 574; r.a., 753
Chesna, Emilia Mildora Kavalas. 1r, 508; 2r, 536; 3r, 538; r.a., 753
Choma, Antonio. 1r-2r-3r, 820; r.a., 991
Chussereault, Pierrette Bertrand, otherwise known as Suchereault, Pierrette Bertrand. 1r, 255; 2r, 307; 3r, 339; r.a., 559
Ciamarro, Angelo. 1r, 201; 2r, 245; 3r, 248; r.a., 991
Clarke, Andree Pauline Dorothy Pryce. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Clarke, Barbara Lorrain Campbell. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 458
Clarkin, Norma Mary Rose Purchard. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459
Claxton, Percy Kark. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459
Coffin, Dorothy Louisa Stradwick. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459
Collier, Winifred Martin. 1r, 508; 2r, 536; 3r, 538; r.a., 753
Cook, Donald Edward. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 612; r.a., 753
Cook, Geraldine Joy Conway. 1r, 102; 2r, 129; 3r, 132; r.a., 458
Coombes, Patricia Anne McKenna. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753

Copan, Barbara Ann Foam, see Armstrong, Barbara Ann Foam
Copis, Mary Athanas. 1r, 394; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 991
Cosh, Eleanor Patricia Henderson. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 612; r.a., 754
Cote, Maria Gagne. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Coulombe, Janet Marianne Louise Kippen. 1r, 586; 2r, 609; 3r, 612; r.a., 753
Creber, Pamela Margaret Clark. 1r, 306; 2r, 342; 3r, 365; r.a., 559
Crites, Lawrence. 1r, 394; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 559
Cross, Paul Alexander. 1r, 586; 2r, 609; 3r, 612; r.a., 753
Dagenais, Janine Sutto. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Davidson, Benjamin Gordon. 1r-2r-3r, 909; r.a., 991
Davies, George Frederick. 1r, 306; 2r, 342; 3r, 365; r.a., 559
Deacur, Constantin. 1r, 255; 2r, 307; 3r, 340; r.a., 559
DeRoberval, Jean Huard. 1r, 640; 2r, 664; 3r, 670; r.a., 991
Desjardins, Roger. 1r, 394; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 559
Desnoyers, Enis (Ines) Vit. 1r, 61; 2r, 98; 3r, 102; r.a., 458
Desroches, Claude. 1r, 508; 2r, 536; 3r, 538; r.a., 753
Dickman, Celia Claire Kanigsberg. 1r, 255; 2r, 307; 3r, 340; r.a., 559
Dijiro, Mohammed. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753
Di Pietro, Margherita Elaina Milano. 1r, 508; 2r, 536; 3r, 538; r.a., 753
Dobie, Ruth Georgina Potts. 1r, 102; 2r, 129; 3r, 132; r.a., 991
Dollard, Helga Fisher. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 574; r.a., 753
Dorion, Nina Olga Titow. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459
Dorotich, Alice Schleicher. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 458
Dossett, Catherine Mary Rita Durning. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 611; r.a., 753
Downey, Helen Elizabeth Macdonald. 1r, 61; 2r, 98; 3r, 102; r.a., 458
Draper, Phyllida Fairbairn Smith. 1r, 61; 2r, 98; 3r, 102; r.a., 458
Dubois, Michel Alphonse. 1r, 640; 2r, 664; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Esber, Euphemia Caldwell Miller Armitt, otherwise known as Esber, Effie Monas. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Farago, Aline Brunette. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 508; r.a., 753
Farren, Raymond Winston. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Fatter, Silvia Frederike Diethilde Beate Angela Buchsel. 1r, 61; 2r, 98; 3r, 102; r.a., 458
Fields, Joan Turvey. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753
Filiatrault, Fernand. 1r, 547; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753
Filler, Zina Goffman. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Firth, Heather Joan Maxwell. 1r, 560; 2r, 583; 3r, 587; r.a., 753
Flahault, Jacques. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Fleming, Dorothy Elizabeth Fremantle. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 611; r.a., 753
Flood, Lucinda Marguerite Vaughan. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753
Forbes, Alexander Hill. 1r, 560; 2r, 583; 3r, 586; r.a., 753
Forest, Gilbert. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Fortin, Evangeline Vaughan. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Fourcade, Bernard. 1r, 306; 2r, 342; 3r, 365; r.a., 559
Fraser, Llui-Amoy Wheatley. 1r, 508; 2r, 536; 3r, 538; r.a., 753
Frechette, Jean Paul (Annulment). 1r, 586; 2r, 609; 3r, 612; r.a., 753
Freedman, Goldie Yelin. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Frigon, Joseph Roger Wilfrid Girard. 1r, 586; 2r, 609; 3r, 612; r.a., 753
Fyfe, Ronald Ernest. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459

Gaboriau dit Lapalme, Marie Cordelia Marie-Ange Pigeon. 1r, 101; 2r, 129; 3r, 131; r.a., 458
Gadoury, Rose Ange Lorange. 1r, 547; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753
Garber, Patricia Elizabeth Tobias. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 574; r.a., 753
Gardeler, Helen Lyon Bain. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Gardner, Jacqueline Shirley Mary Parnell. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459
Garlick, Marie Adrienne Maryse Dagenais. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 574; r.a., 753
Gascon, Joseph Louis Charles Gabriel. 1r, 201; 2r, 245; 3r, 248; r.a., 558
Genest, Joseph Aime Paul Guy. 1r, 786; 2r, 787; 3r, 787; r.a., 991
Gilmour, Marcus. 1r-2r-3r, 820; r.a., 991
Girard, Florida Seyer. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 611; r.a., 753
Glaser, Hirsch. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Glovinsky, Daniel Myer. 1r-2r, 432; 3r, 445; r.a., 559
Goldenberg, Evelyn Isbitsky. 1r, 640; 2r, 663; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Goldenberg, Sandra Stoll. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Goldfeder, Greta Libenstein. 1r, 640; 2r, 663; 3r, 669; r.a., 991
Goodson, Irene Balk. 1r, 151; 2r, 173; 3r, 175; r.a., 459

Gordon, Morris. 1r, 255; 2r, 306; 3r, 339; r.a., 558
Gosselin, Gustave Rene. 1r 255; 2r, 306; 3r, 339; r.a., 991
Gourd, Aurore Giguere. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753
Gray, Audrey Isabella Wanda Patterson. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 508; r.a., 753
Grayburn, Audrey Edwardeen Scanlan. 1r, 560; 2r, 583; 3r, 587; r.a., 753
Groot, Alex. 1r, 255; 2r, 306; 3r, 339; r.a., 558
Grossin, Emilienne Celestine Mallard. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753
Grover, Norman, otherwise known as Grover, Norman Bernard. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 574; r.a., 753
Gruia, Rita Steinbach. 1r, 473; 2r, 507; 3r, 509; r.a., 753

Hammill, Maria Carmella Gentile. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 612; r.a., 753
Harper, Jacqueline Jeanne Lamy. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Haymond, Agnes Forget. 1r-2r, 432; 3r, 445; r.a., 559
Hemmings, Ethel Marguerite Nimick. 1r, 560; 2r, 583; 3r, 587; r.a., 753
Hendy, Alexander Abraham. 1r, 508; 2r, 536; 3r, 538; r.a., 753
Henshaw, Marie Yolanda Marotta. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459
Hill, Karl Efraim. 1r, 394; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 559
Hirtreiter, Lorlotte Juliane Selma Wilhelmine Gude. 1r, 394; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 559
Hislop, Sydney, otherwise known as Hislop, Sidney. 1r, 138; 2r, 160; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Hortig, Gertrude Mary Prosser. 1r, 547; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753
Howard, Lillian Goldbloom. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 990
Hughes, William Lawrence. 1r, 473; 2r, 507; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Hunting, Gordon Clarence. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Hutchison, Mary Alice Hadley. 1r, 394; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 559
Hyde, Ina Charlotte Charleson. 1r, 394; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 559

Isenberg, Phyllis Ann Applebaum. 1r, 640; 2r, 664; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Izenberg, Gertrude Scharge. 1r, 138; 2r, 160; 3r, 167; r.a., 459

Jeffrey, Edith May Driscoll. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Jennings, Lenoir Grace Spencer. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Johnson, Yaroslavna Zonia Lazarowich. 1r, 138; 2r, 160; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Josephovits, Viola Bleier. 1r, 101; 2r, 129; 3r, 131; r.a., 458
Juneau, Elisa Gislena Maria Blankaerts. 1r, 547; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753

Kadar, Tibor. 1r-2r, 432; 3r, 445; r.a., 559
Kalabiha, Michael. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Kallus, Hanna Liselotte Gertrud Tiegs. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459
Katchan, Rhoda Lillian Rabinovitch. 1r, 640; 2r, 664; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Keay, James John Thompson. 1r, 101; 2r, 129; 3r, 131; r.a., 458
Keelty, James Alfred. 1r-2r, 432; 3r, 445; r.a., 559
Keller, Emily Mary Kredl. 1r, 473, 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Kelly, Philip Joseph. 1r-2r-3r, 909; r.a., 991
Kerr, Lorna Frances Hutchinson. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 990
King, Clarice-Mae Barraclough. 1r, 507, 2r, 536; 3r, 538; r.a., 753
King, Judith Ortenberg Baxt. 1r, 138; 2r, 160; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Klein, Susan Gilda Levin. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Korn, Marlene Marle. 1r, 306; 2r, 342; 3r, 365; r.a., 559
Kunst, Jean Scott Bain. 1r, 395; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 559
Kusleika, Jeannine Genevieve Jagelavicus. 1r, 101; 2r, 129; 3r, 131; r.a., 458

Labonte, Lucille Gagne. 1r, 508; 2r, 536; 3r, 538; r.a., 753
Laborgne, Audrey Bruce. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Lacombe, Armand. 1r, 473; 2r, 507; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Ladd, Ross Kevin. 1r 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Lahaise, Joseph Bernard Alberia Gustave. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Laliberte, Alfred. 1r, 394; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 559
Landreville, Marie Pauline Primeau. 1r, 640; 2r, 664; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Larsen, Nelly Hugentobler. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 508; r.a., 753
Lazare, Sarah Friberg. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 574; r.a., 753
Leblanc Gerald. (Annulment). 1r, 201; 2r, 245; 3r, 248; r.a., 558
Lee, Joyce Ann Breaker. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Leff, Miriam Hirsh. 1r, 61; 2r, 98; 3r, 102; r.a., 458
Lerman, Etta Rose Palevsky. 1r, 306; 2r, 342; 3r, 365; r.a., 559
Levy, Esther Mendelson. 1r, 201; 2r, 245; 3r, 248; r.a., 538
Levy, Jean Trachtenberg. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Liberman, Ruth Dankner. 1r 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459

Libich, Joseph. 1r, 394; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 559
Light, Mary Barbara Jex. 1r, 547; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753
Link, Daisy Naydia Pretula. 1r, 560; 2r, 583; 3r, 586; r.a., 753
Liogas, Demetra Paul Garini. 1r, 586; 2r, 609; 3r, 612; r.a., 753
Loeb, Bernice Helena Peritz. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Logan, Barbara Lucy Bain Forbes. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 611; r.a., 753
Long, Juanita Patricia Hamilton. 1r-2r-3r, 909; r.a., 991
Low, John Robertson. 1r, 640; 2r, 663; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Lunghi, Lise Nolet. 1r 61, 2r, 98; 3r, 102; r.a., 458

MacDonald, Ivy Mildred Patch. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 612; r.a., 753
MacGillivray, Audrey Lynn. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
MacKenzie, Margaret Helen Dawson. 1r, 640; 2r, 664; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Macovetsky, Gertrud Maria Meta Wauer. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753
Mahaut, Jeannine Aimie Alice Mercier. 1r, 508; 2r, 536; 3r, 538; r.a., 753
Makad, Sylvia Mary Mefrige. 1r, 306; 2r, 342; 3r, 365; r.a., 559
Malcolm, Margit Elizabeth Mary Temke. 1r, 255; 2r, 307; 3r, 339; r.a., 559
Manson, Jessie Balfour Maines McCartney. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 990
Manuel, Percy Herbert. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Marcovitch, Helen Borer. 1r, 473; 2r, 507; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Martin, Joan Natalie Miller. 1r, 102; 2r, 129; 3r, 132; r.a., 458
Martin, Theodora Cornell Moore. 1r, 547; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753
Martindale, Esther Paula Beernaert. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Marvin, Gladys Allen. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Mathieu, Jean Louis. 1r, 508; 2r, 536; 3r, 538; r.a., 753
Maxwell, Bertha Sylvia Berman. 1r, 640; 2r, 664; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
McAllister, James Donald. 1r, 560; 2r, 583; 3r, 587; r.a., 753
McCall, Zita May Pardoe. 1r, 640; 2r, 664; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
McClure, Martha Waugh. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
McConnell, Eric Alexander. 1r, 306; 2r, 342; 3r, 365; r.a., 559
McNulty, Joan Howell McShane. 1r, 151; 2r, 174; 3r, 175; r.a., 459
Meehan, Marion Beulah Francis. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459
Mendelsohn, Edward John. 1r-2r-3r, 820; r.a., 991
Metcalfe, Maria Adriana Sluis. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 611; r.a., 753
Milburn, Audrey Barrasford. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 990
Miletics, Tibor Matthias. 1r, 586; 2r, 609; 3r, 612; r.a., 753
Millar, Samuel Currie. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 990
Monette, Claire Anna Theresa Verdon. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 990
Moore, William Irvine. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Moran, Mary May Helen McCormick. 1r, 560; 2r, 583; 3r, 586; r.a., 753
Moran, Timothy Allan. 1r-2r-3r, 820; r.a., 991
Moreau, Joseph. 1r, 138; 2r, 160; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Morgan, Meade Alexander. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 990
Morin, Cecile Desjardins. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Morin, Marie Madeleine Marielle Faust. 1r-2r-3r, 820; r.a., 991
Morrison, Marjorie Barbara Hawthorn. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 574; r.a., 753
Morrow, Margaret Viola McCullough. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Moscovitch, Elaine Shirley Dorfman. 1r, 306; 2r, 342; 3r, 365; r.a., 559
Moscovitch, Lee Dacks. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 990
Mulcahy, Lois Genevieve Good. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 611; r.a. 753
Murdoch Margaret Craig. 1r, 61; 2r, 98; 3r, 102; r.a., 458
Murphy, Yolande Bosse. 1r, 255; 2r, 307; 3r, 339; r.a., 558
Myre, Roger. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 990

Nash, Sarah Goldfarb. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Norman, Barbara Mary Scott. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 458
Norman, Eleanor Gwyneth Henly. 1r, 640; 2r, 664; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Nosek, Zdenek. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Nussenbaum, Mary Friedman. 1r-2r, 432; 3r, 445; r.a., 559

O'Hanley, June Bernice Rath. 1r, 306; 2r, 342; 3r, 365; r.a., 559
Onions, Helen Ruby Riley. 1r-2r-3r, 820; r.a., 991
O'Regan, Esther Daisy Moynan. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459

Palangio, Michael. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Pare, Alexandre. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 574; r.a., 753
Pare, Marie Jeanne Madeleine Saint-Pierre. 1r, 395; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 559

Parent, Marie Lucille Pauline St. Jacques. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Parsons, Georgina Horne. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Patenaude, Marie Berthe Jeannine Quesnel. 1r, 255; 2r, 306; 3r, 339; r.a., 991
Patrick, Alice Christine Leduc. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Pattison, Adela Hawthorne. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 990
Pavlovich, Alexander. 1r, 640; 2r, 663; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Pearson, Majorie Seymour Hammond. 1r, 306; 2r, 342; 3r, 365; r.a., 559
Petit, Andre Maurice. 1r, 640; 2r, 663; 3r, 669; r.a., 991
Phillips, Margery Fletcher Dennis. 1r, 640; 2r, 664; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Phillips, Mary Jane Holmes. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 458
Pinsky, Ghitta Caiserman. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 611; r.a., 753
Plam, Joyce Rosemary Hudson. 1r-2r-3r, 820; r.a., 991
Plamondon, Flore Crevier. 1r, 394; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 559
Plotkin, Ben. 1r, 586; 2r, 609; 3r, 612; r.a., 753
Pottel Claire Segal. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Poulin, Yvon. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Powell, Sydney Arthur. 1r, 102; 2r, 129; 3r, 132; r.a., 458
Prader, Franz. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753

Rajeczky, Margaret Soll. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Rakauskas, Omula Karnitis. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Raymo, Norma Margaret Martin. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 990
Reed, Abbie Alice Mahon. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Reisinger, Rosalie Jakes. 1r, 255; 2r, 307; 3r, 339; r.a., 559
Rewoski, Paul. 1r-2r, 432; 3r, 445; r.a., 559
Rey, Louis Gustave. 1r, 547; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753
Richter, Grace Evelyn Heggtveit. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Rivet, Ovila. 1r, 640; 2r, 663; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Robbins, Iris Marion Saunders. 1r, 640; 2r, 663; 3r, 669; r.a., 990
Robert, Audrey Edna Watson. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Roberti, Jan. 1r, 394; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 559
Robinson, Kathleen Iris Daunt. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Roblee, Mildred May Eunice Charron. 1r, 508; 2r, 536; 3r, 538; r.a., 753
Roper, Catherine Anne Gillis. 1r, 640; 2r, 663; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Rosen, Esther Lillian Issenman. 1r, 151; 2r, 174; 3r, 175; r.a., 459
Rosensweig, Patricia Burnell Fraser. 1r, 102; 2r, 129; 3r, 132; r.a., 991
Ross, Audrey Elsie Asbury. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Ross, Jeannette Belanger. 1r, 640; 2r, 663; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Ross, Marian Ida Rex. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 574; r.a., 753
Ross, Vivien Joyce Taylor. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Rotman, Frances Lerner. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 611; r.a., 753
Roy, Helene Dagenais. 1r, 306; 2r, 342; 3r, 365; r.a., 559
Roy, Marie Louise Fauteux. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Roy, Oscar. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 611; r.a., 753
Rudner, Lillian Haber. 1r, 151; 2r, 174; 3r, 175; r.a., 459

Sainitzer, Gisela Antonie Anita Popp. 1r, 394; 2r-3r, 418; r.a., 559
Sandberg, Marie Luise Ahnhudt. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Schiller, Josephine Zauberman. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459
Schrieder, Pearl Severs. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Schwartz, Sheila Carole Neidik. 1r, 473; 2r, 507; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Scudamore, Helen Mary Margeson Ransome. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 990
Seeman, Ana Nili Indursky. 1r, 151; 2r, 174; 3r, 175; r.a., 459
Segal, Bella Valinsky. 1r 640; 2r, 663; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Segal, Irene Kramer. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 611; r.a., 753
Segal, Miriam Keppel. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Senecal, Jeanne D'Arc Gravelle. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 458
Shacklock, Jean Grant. 1r, 151; 2r, 174; 3r, 175; r.a., 459
Sherwood, Brenda May Newbury. 1r, 547; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753
Shukoff, Eleonora Dudarowa. 1r, 640; 2r, 663; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Smiley, Doris Margaret Turner. 1r, 201; 2r, 245; 3r, 248; r.a., 991
Smith, Georgina Joan Saunders. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Somerville, Bernice Sylvia Sinclair. 1r, 138; 2r, 160; 3r, 166; r.a., 459
Sorba, Pierre Joseph Gabriel. 1r, 508; 2r, 536; 3r, 538; r.a., 753
Stamp, Robert William. 1r-2r; 432; 3r, 445; r.a., 559
Staples, Frank William. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753

Stopnicki, Salla Weisman, otherwise known as Stopnicki, Sally Weisman. 1r, 640; 2r, 663; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Strathy, Thelma Georgine Ferguson. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Suchereault, Pierrette Bertrand, otherwise known as Pierrette Bertrand Chussereault. 1r, 255; 2r, 307; 3r, 339; r.a., 559
Sztesinics, Jean, otherwise known as Sztecsinics, Janos. 1r, 61; 2r, 98; 3r, 102; r.a., 458

Takacs, Mose. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 611; r.a., 753
Tatelman, Rosy Fish. 1r, 585; 2r, 609; 3r, 611; r.a., 753
Taylor, Bryan Mills. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Theroux, Viola Gertrude Elizabeth Boyd. 1r, 101; 2r, 129; 3r, 132; r.a., 458
Thomas, Gertrude Czerny, otherwise known as Thomschitz, Gertrude Czerny. 1r, 61; 2r, 98; 3r, 102; r.a., 458
Thomas, Margaret Isabella MacKellar. 1r-2r-3r, 909; r.a., 991
Thomschitz, Gertrude Czerny, otherwise known as Gertrude Czerny Thomas. 1r, 61; 2r, 98; 3r, 102; r.a., 458
Tremblay, Raymonde Gagnon. (Annulment). 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 508; r.a., 753
Trudel, Dorothy Vera Doyle. 1r, 560; 2r, 583; 3r, 586; r.a., 753
Tuke, Ellen Wilk. 1r, 640; 2r, 664; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Tyson, Monique Andree Seguin. 1r, 640; 2r, 664; 3r, 670; r.a., 990

Ujvary, Helen Ann Kovach. 1r, 201; 2r, 245; 3r, 248; r.a., 991
Usher, Ruth Mary Morgenstern. 1r, 640; 2r, 664; 3r, 670; r.a., 990

Vadnais, Gaston. 1r, 508; 2r, 536; 3r, 538; r.a., 753
Volchuk, Lillianne Reed. 1r, 547; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753

Walker, Elisabeth Marguerite Le Febvre. 1r, 586; 2r, 609; 3r, 612; r.a., 753
Watson, Joan Elizabeth Healy. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 573; r.a., 753
Weber, Sylvia Florence Van Straten. 1r, 130; 2r, 160; 3r, 165; r.a., 459
Welsh, Simone Alberta Chretien. 1r-2r-3r, 820; r.a., 991
Whiston, Henry Frank. 1r, 138; 2r, 161; 3r, 167; r.a., 459
Willard, Eddie Ronald Joe. 1r, 640; 2r, 664; 3r, 670; r.a., 990
Williams, Carol May Campbell. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 990
Wojciechowski, Witolda Poplawska. 1r, 182; 2r, 228; 3r, 245; r.a., 459
Wright, Allan Ray. 1r, 786; 2r-3r, 787; r.a., 991
Wright, Joseph Rolland. 1r, 255; 2r, 307; 3r, 339; r.a., 559
Wright, Marcelle Flore Terreault. 1r, 560; 2r, 583; 3r, 586; r.a., 753

Yerzy, Tanya Burstein. 1r-2r, 432; 3r, 445; r.a., 559
Yound, Marjorie Winifred Joyce White. 1r, 548; 2r, 572; 3r, 574; r.a., 753
Young, Suzanne Mary Florence Peyton. 1r, 560; 2r, 583; 3r, 587; r.a., 753

Zimendstark, Ida Shlafman. 1r, 473; 2r, 506; 3r, 509; r.a., 753
Zuk, Michael. 1r, 306; 2r, 342; 3r, 365; r.a., 559