I can't help but point to the great amount of integration and collaboration with the countries of the Western world in the matter of defence since the end of the last war. But defence in these days—the provision of defence equipment, and soldiers, sailors and airmen—is not enough, unless the economies which are to be defended are strong economies. Canada on her part, and the countries of the Western world, must if possible follow a policy of progressive reduction of tariff barriers, and seize every opportunity to do so, if these free economies are to be further strengthened.

The London Economist has given some considerable attention to the problems of the Common Market and its effect on Great Britain. In the issue of February 7 last, the Economist had this to say:

> —there has to be a new approach. The feeling has to be removed that Britain simply wants to remain the exclusive meeting point of two great trading areas, enjoying preferences in both. There would seem to be only one logical new approach: that is, a broader association between the Commonwealth and Europe, opening the preferences the Commonwealth gives British industries to Europe too, and giving Commonwealth farmers markets in Europe in return. The Commonwealth itself should welcome this. Its economic advantages —cheap food for industrial Europe, cheap industrial products for the Commonwealth—are plain: so plain, indeed, that if no lead comes from Britain, some Commonwealth countries will make their own terms with the Six.

In conclusion, I would say this—

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Before the honourable senator concludes, may I ask him a question? Could he give us a comparison between the total trade of Canada, imports and exports, with the countries of the Common Market, on the one hand, and on the other hand her trade with countries of the British Commonwealth?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am sorry, I do not have the figures with me to answer that question in detail. But as honourable senators know, I have given the figure on the value of our exports to the Common Market.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: What I want to know is if our actual trade with the Common Market countries is larger than our trade with the Commonwealth countries, and what are the possibilities in that connection?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I can answer that question with the figures I have, to this extent only, by saying that the value of our trade in the Common Market countries is probably less than 10 per cent of our total, while the value of our trade with Great Britain alone is from 18 to 19 per cent. So, obviously, the trade with the Common Market is not as important a branch of trade as that with the Commonwealth countries.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Would it be larger than our trade with the Commonwealth, excluding the United Kingdom?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, that is probably true.

I do want to point out to honourable senators that we should not say, and I am sure we won't, that we are embarking on a trade war with the Six. I hope, too, that the Six will not feel that they are embarking upon a trade war with the rest of the world.

I think it was a great act of statesmanship on the part of the Americans to decide to help to re-establish the economies of the Western European countries and to supply so much financial and economic assistance to them, knowing perfectly well that in the future these countries would provide competition for American goods within Europe itself, as well as in third-party markets. The same can be said of Canada. The reason for this act of statemanship—and perhaps it was not altruistic, it seldom is—was the fact that the economies of the Western countries were subjected to a declared trade war from the Russians. Indeed, the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act which was passed last year in the United States Congress was largely motivated by the fact that it was important to strengthen the economies of the Western world as an answer to the economic attack that they were subjected to from behind the Iron Curtain. There are a great many quotations available from Mr. Khrushchev and others to the effect that their objective is to undermine the economies of countries which do not belong to their system, with a view to getting political domination over those countries. It is a question of one method of doing business, one system of government, one philosophy of life as against another. In that respect, in so far as the establishment of the Common Market is directed to strengthen the Western way of life as against the Eastern way, it is something which should be welcomed. I think, however, so far as Canada is concerned—because we are so concerned in this country with export trade—we should in our own interests watch the development very carefully and act with prudence and toward freer and freer world trade.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: Honourable senators, I did not wish to interrupt the honourable senator during his speech, but I should now like to ask a question on a matter that comes very close to this subject. Since one of the offsets of this Common Market that has been suggested is a common market of the Americas, I was wondering whether the honourable senator had in his research found any figures to show the potential of such a market.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think the honourable senior senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) will deal with that question.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, it is with some diffidence that I propose to speak on this resolution. So many very good speeches have been made in this chamber this session, dealing mostly with the related subjects of trade and finance, that one hesitates to add to what has already been said so well, lest the record become repetitious and tiresome. I must say that during my time in this chamber I have not heard or read so many able addresses as have been delivered here this session; and the one to which we have just listened this afternoon is by no means the least important of them. Had it not been for uncontrollable and unfortunate circumstances yesterday, the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) might have had the great inspiration and pleasure of making this speech on March 17. But by way of compensation, if the Western European Common Market really amounts to anything, we can look forward to seeing Ireland enjoying a very important place in that market and benefiting from it.

This resolution stresses the importance of the proposed European Common Market, and its sponsor has said a good deal about the importance of that possible development to this country and to the United States. I think that the word "importance" is the keynote of the whole proposition as far as this country is concerned.

As a declaration of faith in the soundness and redemptive value of the principle of increased international trade throughout the world, one is wholly in agreement with it. As a means of bringing immediate beneficial results to Canada, however, one may justifiably have some doubts. We all know that the proposal of a European Common Market embodying Great Britain is still a matter of some uncertainty, because of the problem of preferential tariffs within the British Commonwealth, and also owing to the questioning attitude of France, which, as everybody knows, has recently revalued her currency. To my mind, therefore, the present importance of the so-called Common Market in Europe should be to emphasize the value of Canada's trade with the United States and the vital position which this country occupies on this continent and in this western hemisphere. In directing attention too greatly, from a fairly remote position, to Britain's dilemma in connection with trade in Europe, it may be easy for us to miss the substance of our own North American position for the shadow of a European bloc. I think it important to observe at this point that our approach to this resolution and the problem represented by it is on the basis of economic development and industrial production, not of intercontinental defence and military strategy, which has been also mentioned by the honourable senator who has just taken his seat.

For many years Canada's largest and most important customer has been the United States, just as Canada has been the most important customer of the United States. During and since World War II this relationship has grown to the point where over 60 per cent of our exports go to the United States and over 70 per cent of our imports come from that country. The United States sells more to Canada than to all of Latin America, and more than to all the countries on the continent of Europe. All transactions between Canada and the United States are for cash. We have never sought nor received grants in aid in any form from any country. Therefore it must be important to both our countries, and even others to avoid new barriers or new prejudices on our common border which might affect a volume of trade which is now vastly larger than that between any other two nations of the world.

The trend of world trade as a whole is now in decline, and has been since the end of the last war, and the weight of evidence at present suggests that this slackening is likely to continue. The principal cause of that deterioration is the persistent continuance of what is known as "the dollar gap", which arises from the expenditure by foreign countries of more dollars than they can earn or borrow. At the end of 1958 that so-called dollar gap represented an annual rate of $8 billion. The year before the adoption of the Marshall Plan, when the lack of dollar credits abroad was regarded as a serious threat to world peace, the dollar gap amounted to the equivalent of $8.1 billion per annum. So it may be clearly seen that the basic cause of the movement in various parts of the world toward economic blocs and common markets is traceable to the unequal exchange value of the dollar in relation to other currencies, and this in spite of the financial aid rendered by the United States through such schemes as the Marshall Plan. The vast wasteful expenditure of capital wealth by those European countries, including Britain, during the last war is the real reason for the prolonged inequality of their exchanges with the geographically more fortunate countries on this side of the Atlantic.

As has been pointed out by my colleague who has just spoken, the Common Market in Western Europe embraces the Six countries which he mentioned, and these states represent at the present time about 22 per cent of the world's trade.

I might divert for a moment to refer to an address which was delivered at the United Nations, in Committee One, the political committee of the United Nations, in 1947, when I had the privilege of attending the Assembly as a delegate from Canada. Doctor Oscar Lange, the representative of Poland, delivered an address before this committee and pointed out what he deemed to be some of the fundamental weaknesses of the application of the Marshall Plan to the assistance of Europe at that time. For some years before the war Dr. Lange was Professor of Economics at Chicago University. Upon the outbreak of the war he returned to Poland, and later came to Washington as Chief Ambassador to the United States for Poland. In 1947 he represented his country in the Russian bloc of delegates. I was struck by the cogency of his arguments at that time, and frequently since then I have thought of them, in view of movements which are now taking place to resolve various groups of countries into trade blocs. Doctor Lange pointed out that the result of the war, as far as Europe was concerned, had been to create a vacuum in Central Europe, by the division of Germany; and he insisted that if Europe was to recover economically, as the world hoped she would, the restoration of Germany to her former unity was essential to provide that necessary economic mainspring which had been a large factor in sustaining Europe in the days gone by. He was accused, of course, by those on the committee who spoke in opposition to him, of espousing the cause of Russian ambition and he was discounted to that extent at that time. But he did not speak from the point of view of Russia's ideology at all. I think he spoke sincerely and genuinely as an economist who appreciated the forces that had been dissipated and disrupted on the continent of Europe.

Despite all that has been done since that time to stimulate or "prime the pump"—if we want to use that term—to rehabilitate life in Europe, we find the tendency has developed of one bloc after another taking form for the purpose of setting up free trade areas among themselves, with the application of tariffs against others.

In addition to the Western European market of which we have been speaking, a real threat to world trade is the offensive now launched by the communist countries with an objective chain extending from southeastern China to the west coast of Africa, embracing 20 nations with a combined population of over 700 million.

In South America the same isolationist movement is under way. The first common market there is likely to comprise Brazil, Chile, Argentine and Uruguay. Another group is to include Peru, Ecuador and Colombia, while a Central American zone is being described around Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and El Salvador.

The ultimate objective of all these common markets is free trade among the member countries of each group, and a common tariff against goods from outside.

In view of the zonal pattern which is beginning to take form in so many different regions of the world, the relative positions of the only two countries based as they are on a common dollar currency, and a natural exchange of goods between them, Canada and the United States, are being confronted with the logical proposition of a common market of their own. That raises the point that was suggested a few minutes ago by my honourable friend from Vancouver (Hon. Mr.

McKeen). This common market should include as far as possible South America as well. Surely common sense indicates the importance of leaving that possibility open. The great example of industrial and financial co-operation between these two nations during the urgent days of the last war should still be a guide and an inspiration to their peoples and their Governments in dealing with the present change in world trade and finance.

But we have our busy alarmists in this country who, if they are not disturbed over possible loss of Canadian sovereignty in connection with defence, seem to be worrying daily about a steady large-scale invasion by industrial capital from south of the line. These people see Canada condemned to an indefinite future as hewers of wood and drawers of water for America, and almost on the verge of being owned by foreigners, with a loss of both political and economic independence. This rather blatant and bleating negative point of view is not new in this country, but it has been more vocal than usual recently, particularly in certain sections of our press. It serves to emphasize a continued lack in this country of positive, constructive policy, thinking and outlook on the part of Government leadership. This emphasizes the truth that Canada's industry is largely concerned with the development of primary raw materials and farm products. Of the 12 chief export commodities in our trade, only newsprint is a manufactured product. And further, figures in my hand show that Canada is less of a manufacturing nation than it was 10 years ago. In 1947 manufacturing represented nearly 31 per cent of all Canadian production. By 1956 it was only 28.6 per cent, and today it is less than that. So I think people in this country should realize that, as in the past, our prosperity for some time will be in the wholesale development of latent raw materials which nature has so lavishly bestowed upon them.

"The North Atlantic Triangle" is a diplomatic term which has been used to describe the position of Canada, Great Britain and the United States for over a hundred years. As pointed out by a distinguished Canadian historian, Mr. Frank Underhill, Canada has survived by the feat of balancing herself in a triangle of forces in which Britain has been at one corner and the United States at the other corner. We have balanced the geographical pull of the United States against our historic connection with Britain. And thus Canada has avoided becoming an insignificant dependent colony of Britain on the one hand, or an insignificant satellite of the United States on the other hand, and has achieved independence without separation or annexation.

Since 1940, however, we have entered into a new era. As Mr. Arnold Toynbee indicated even in 1938, the world has passed from a British century to an American century; and that is particularly true of Canada's history. We have become dependent upon the United States for our security, and we have no alternative but to adapt ourselves to their leadership.

As Mr. Underhill expresses the situation so well:

> "Until we have proved ourselves mature in meeting this test, we are not in a good position to indulge in sneers about the immaturity of American leadership. Mature people", he adds, "know how to accept the inevitable."

As I have already indicated, Canada is more dependent economically upon her neighbour than ever before. We operate in the dollar area, not in the sterling area of the rest of the British Commonwealth. Our post-war boom of the 1950's derived primarily from the flow of American investment capital into Canada. Furthermore, it has been made clear that the things we can best develop are the commodities that the American economy requires in increasing quantities, such as forest and mineral products. As the result of these circumstances, already we are moving towards an integrated continental economy.

All of this inevitable and inexorable tendency has within the past few years caused a lot of worry to a certain class of Canadians, sometimes described as "egg-heads". They say that culturally we are becoming more and more influenced by American class culture through such agencies as radio, television, mass circulation of magazines and newspapers with their advertisements of American fashions in clothes, cars and innumerable gadgets. In spite of all this, we see very little evidence that the average Canadian citizen, in welcoming it, does anything but "what comes naturally".

Those who favour the development of a European Common Market hope that we North Americans, Canadians and Americans, may support it by co-operating with it, whether in the role of actual member nations or not. That is the implied challenge in the resolution before us; and it is to be hoped that such a challenge in the long run may be accepted. But, at this moment, Canada cannot afford to engage in any action parallel to that attempted in 1932, when proposed Imperial trade agreements did much to prejudice the trading interests of this country in America as well as abroad.

Eventually, I believe, multilateral trading, as conceived by the United Nations Organization at the end of the war, and which has been advocated and supported consistently by Canada and the United States, will prevail. It should be remembered that multilateral trading was the avowed aim of the United Nations charter in 1945, and, before that, was mentioned as a post-war objective by Mr. Churchill and President Roosevelt in the Atlantic Charter of 1941. Since then the germ of economic nationalism has played havoc with those idealistic conceptions, and Canada and her neighbour remain the two chief advocates of multilateral trading throughout the world. Right now, as I have said, the trend of things seems to be in the direction of zones or blocs of nations with common, econmic and financial interests. This may be a rational move to bring about some measure of order out of the chaos of a cold war period. But in the end the very force of resistance of one bloc to another generated by the natural progressive demands of human beings, regardless of national identity, must induce co-operation on a larger international world scale.

So, in conclusion, let me repeat that for the present, and that means for this generation, Canada must adapt herself to her important potential position as a North American nation, and not be induced to yield the substance in hand for a shadow elsewhere.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Robertson, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 8 p.m.

NATIONAL DEFENCE BILL

AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN BY COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill C-27, to amend the National Defence Act, and acquainting the Senate that the Commons have agreed to the amendment made by the Senate to the said bill, without amendment.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-35, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1960.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I will move the second reading now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Has the bill been distributed?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Would the honourable Leader give an explanation of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: This bill, honourable senators, was passed by the House of Commons yesterday. Its short title is the "Appropriation Act No. 2, 1959". I am told that these supply bills are numbered consecutively. Honourable senators will recall that about three weeks ago we passed a bill entitled "Appropriation Act No. 1", which voted supplementary supply for the current fiscal year.

Honourable senators will be pleased, I am sure, to notice that the form of this bill follows the form recommended last year by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald).

In accordance with custom, this bill proposes that one-sixth of all of the items to be voted in the estimates for 1959-60 be authorized. The proportions requested in this bill are intended to provide all the necessary requirements for the public service up to May 31, 1959. In no instance is the total amount of any item being released by the bill.

I want to give honourable senators the usual assurance that the passing of this bill will not prejudice their rights and privileges to criticize any item in the estimates when it comes up for consideration in committee of supply, and the usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected, and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of the measure.

In addition to one-sixth of Vote 209, an additional five-twelfths is to be voted. Honourable senators will see by Schedule A attached to the bill that Vote 209 deals with the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. Generally the vote has to do with contracts for air photography of the Arctic Archipelago, including provisions for advance payments amounting to over one-half of the vote. A lot of that work is done early in the spring, and for that reason a request is now made for five-twelfths of that vote.

An additional one-third of Vote 38, which has to do with the Atomic Energy Board, is asked for. As honourable senators will see by Schedule B attached to the bill, the vote provides for grants for researches and investigations with respect to atomic energy. One-half of this vote provides for research projects carried in the universities, and is required for the first two months of the fiscal year when awards are being made to the universities.

The bill also provides an additional one-sixth of four votes, namely, 175, 182, 183 and 358. As will be seen from Schedule C, Vote No. 175 has to do with general administration in the Senate, Vote 182, under general administration in the House of Commons, covers estimates of the Clerk, and Vote 183 covers estimates of the Sergeant-at-Arms. The expenses under these items are concentrated in the period when Parliament is in session.

The next and last item in Schedule C, Vote 358, relates to Public Works. Generally speaking, this is to cover balances required to complete certain projects undertaken in previous fiscal years and for which no specific provision is made in the fiscal year 1959-60. By its nature, honourable senators, this vote is subject to heavy expenditures in the early part of the fiscal year, as final payments are made on projects completed or nearly completed during the previous fiscal year.

Under Schedule D are grouped Votes Nos. 64, 210, 259, 384, 451 and 454. Vote 64 has to do with education; that is administration, operation and maintenance, in the Indian Affairs branch. It provides for teachers' salaries and tuition fees for Indian pupils for a ten-month academic year. This item, together with a recently-adopted policy of making advances to the authorities in charge of residential schools, leads to a requirement in excess of the one-sixth or two months' general provision which I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks. Vote 210 has to do with Mines and Technical Surveys, particularly with regard to the Polar Continental Shelf project. This project will end in June or July, and entails a heavy concentration of expenditure in the first part of the fiscal year. Vote 259 has to do with National Revenue, taxation division. The bulk of this vote is for salaries. As honourable senators know, April and May are the peak-load months, during which seasonal help is hired to process tax returns, April being, of course, the main income tax month of the year. I come now to Vote No. 384, under Trade and Commerce, general administration, standards branch. Expenditures from this vote are heavier in the spring and summer months because the inspectors of weights and measures, electricity and gas cannot travel in the rural areas in the winter. Vote 451 has to do with Veterans Affairs, treatment services, operation of hospitals and administration, including authority for payments during the current and subsequent fiscal years, and provides for net treatment expenditures after reimbursement from outside sources. Vote 454 has to do with the same department, and deals with prosthetic services, the nature of which I do not fully understand. There is a lag between expenditure and recovery in this vote in the early months of the year. That is why an additional one-twelfth of this vote is required.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: May I interrupt to ask a question? As I understand it, one-twelfth of every item in this schedule is required to be voted, but evidently one-sixth is asked for in the first part of the bill. Why is one-twelfth asked for in this part?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The first part of the bill asks for one-sixth of all the items in the estimates. This one-twelfth is only to take care of the expenses which have to be met early in the year.

I would like to deal with section 2 of the bill. Each year the supply bills contain new authority to borrow money by means of the issue of Canada Savings Bonds and other bonds and treasury bills. From 1952-53 through 1954-55 authority to borrow up to $500 million was annually granted. In 1955-56 this limit was raised to $1 billion. In 1956-57 it was raised to $1,500 million. In 1957-58 it was raised an additional $1 billion. In 1958-59 it was again raised to $2 billion, and the amount of $1 billion referred to in this bill was required to meet the issue of Canada Savings Bonds in 1959 and other market obligations. For the information of honourable senators I might say that Canada Savings Bonds issued in 1958 totalled approximately $850 million.

Honourable senators, I trust that my summary of the provisions of this bill will be satisfactory to the house.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, in the first place I wish to say that I am sure we are all pleased with the form in which this bill has been prepared. It is a great improvement on former appropriation bills, for it sets forth quite clearly the amounts that are required and it does not take a chartered accountant to understand it.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has explained that the purpose of the bill is to put funds in the hands of the Government so it can carry on the business of Government during the next two months. This deals with the estimates for the financial year commencing April 1. The amounts set forth in this bill should not be taken too seriously, however. We do not know how much money is going to be required during the coming year. We know a lot of money was required last year and no doubt more will be required next year. But we are pretty much in the dark when we are dealing with this bill, for we shall not have any information upon which we can rely until the budget is brought down, probably in two or three weeks' time. I am confident that it will show a deficit of somewhere between $500 million and $1 billion in the amount of money received last year compared with the amount of money spent last year. We have heard that repeated from time to time. The Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has not denied it, nor has the Minister of Finance denied it. We can expect, therefore, that the huge sum that we are voting tonight to enable the Government to carry on business during the next two months will not by any means be one-sixth of the total amount required to carry on the business of the country. I have no hesitancy in saying that it will be one-twelfth, rather than one-sixth of the amount required.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You are not very optimistic.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No, I am not very optimistic, because from past performance we know that the Government has spent much more money than was set forth in the estimates tabled at the beginning of the year.

Tomorrow, or at the beginning of next week, we will receive a bill in connection with further supplementary estimates.

Hon. M. Aseltine: We hope tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It may be tomorrow; but it will be quite a shock when we receive it, because when the estimates were tabled last May—if that was the time that they were tabled—the amount shown as required was considerably less than the amount being spent this year. However, when we will receive the further supplementary estimates we will be able to speak with more confidence and authority.

Tonight we are asked to give the Government enough money to pay the expenses of running the country, including the salaries of civil servants. I have no doubt that we shall all approve of this bill, because the business of the country must be carried on. The leader has stated that the amount required is one-sixth of the total amount of the estimates as shown in the Blue Book which was tabled some time ago. In addition to that are amounts required during the next two months on account of heavy expenditures during that period of time, as appear in the schedules shown in the bill.

Honourable senators will notice that subclause (a) of clause 2 of the bill sets forth that one-sixth of the total amount of all expenditures for the next fiscal year is required. Sub-clause (b) specifies an additional amount of $791,666.67, being five-twelfths of the main estimates as set forth in Schedule A of the bill. That means, in connection with that item, that we will have granted this evening two-twelfths under clause 2(a), plus five-twelfths under clause 2(b), making a total of seven-twelfths of that amount. In other words, of the items set forth in Schedule A, we will have voted seven-twelfths.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: On one vote only; that is, Vote 209.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: On the one vote set forth in Schedule A. The total percentage of Schedule A will be seven-twelfths of the total amount as set forth in the main estimates. In connection with clause 2(c) the total amount will be one-half. In connection with clause 2(d), the total amount will be two-twelfths, plus two-twelfths—that is four-twelfths, or one-third.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Not of the total estimates, just of those votes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Of the total amount required in the estimates set forth in Schedule C.

In connection with clause 2(e) we will be granting two-twelfths, plus one-twelfth, or three-twelfths of the amount required in the main estimates of expenditures set forth in Schedule D.

Honourable senators, I do not think any of us can object to the passing of this bill at this time. All I can say is that we will look forward with great interest to the budget which will probably come down in two or three weeks time, and I predict that the amount we are approving tonight will be considerably less than one-sixth of the amount which will be required during the coming year.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable Senators, there is a point I would like clarified. The total amount asked for is roughly $616,654,000, made up of $606,770,000, which is one-sixth of the main estimates, plus amounts of $791,666, $216,666, $713,163, and $8,162,000.

The only thing that puzzles me, following the question put by the honourable member from Vancouver (Hon. Mr. McKeen), is that while the amount of $606 million is based on one-sixth of the main estimates, sub-clause (b) of clause 2 shows an additional amount of $791,666, based on five-twelfths of Schedule A.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, five-twelfths of Vote 209—only one vote.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Five-twelfths, that is right. Clause 2(c) votes $216,000, or one-third of the amount of one item in the main estimates, and clause 2(d), $713,000, or one-sixth of several items in the main estimates. They are all different proportions. I am wondering why that is.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have explained that. For example, I explained what Vote 209 was.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: I know that.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I explained why the five-twelfths of the item was needed in addition to the one-sixth. They say they need that much money before we shall have another supply bill, at the end of May. The same applies to the one-third of Vote No. 38 and so on. I cannot give any more explanation than that. I am sorry if it is not satisfactory.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, may I have a word? No doubt the house will be sitting tomorrow. I can see no reason why the bill should receive third reading this evening. I think it should be deferred until tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, the only purpose in asking for a third reading now is so that the bill will be ready in case we happen to have royal assent tomorrow evening before we adjourn for the Easter recess. I have in my hand the further Supplementary Estimates which are now being considered in the other place and in connection with which quite a lot of progress was made last night. If that progress continues we should have these estimates for consideration some time tomorrow and we might have royal assent tomorrow evening, but if no progress is made I presume that the Senate will have to adjourn until next week. If the honourable senator wants this bill to stand over until tomorrow I have no objection. I cannot see the necessity for it, but I am quite agreeable.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I still feel that there is no urgency about this matter this evening. I am quite sure we shall have ample time to give this bill third reading tomorrow, and I would like to have it stand over until then.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be given third reading?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Next sitting.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Copies of the letter of resignation, dated March 12, 1959, of the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, addressed to the Minister of Justice and of the letter in reply thereto of the Minister of Justice, dated March 16, 1959, to the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. (English text).

Copies of the agreements respecting the employment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, entered into between the Government of Canada and the Governments, respectively, of the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. (English text).

PRIVATE BILL

FOOTHILLS PIPE LINES LTD.—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West), Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the report of the committee on Bill S-16.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (S-16) intituled: "An Act to incorporate Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd.", have in obedience to the order of reference of March 12, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same with the following amendment:—

1. Page 1, line 17: Strike out "five million" and substitute therefor "ten million".

AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this amendment be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I move that it be concurred in now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Explain.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, the amendment was made in response to a request by the applicant. The company had originally calculated that its requirement of capital would be 5 million shares of $5 each, but the requirement now turns out to be 10 million shares of $5 each, and therefore the company has asked that this alteration be made in the section referred to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to concur in this amendment?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, I would like if possible to have this bill come up for third reading before the Easter recess, and I am one of those optimists who think we might recess tomorrow afternoon. So, if it meets with the approval of the Senate, I would like to have the amendment concurred in now.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The reason I objected to the third reading of the previous bill tonight was that it does not have to go to the Commons. This private bill has to go to the Commons, and had the sponsor of the bill asked for third reading of this bill tonight I would not have objected.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, with the permission of the Senate I would be very pleased to move third reading of this bill tonight.

Hon. Mr. Power: I will not consent.

Hon. Mr. Monette: As a newcomer to the Senate I do not understand the atmosphere here. Usually there is agreement one way or the other.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, if I might rise to a point of order, I will help the honourable gentleman out. Half of the house wants to finish tomorrow afternoon, and the other half does not want to finish until next week. That is the picture.

The Hon. the Speaker: Third reading tomorrow.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the first, second, third and fourth reports of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt, Chairman of the committee, reports adopted.

DIVORCE

FIRST READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following bills:

Bill SD-151, an Act for the relief of James Alfred Keelty.

Bill SD-152, an Act for the relief of Agnes Forget Haymond.

Bill SD-153, an Act for the relief of Maurice William Bell.

Bill SD-154, an Act for the relief of Robert William Stamp.

Bill SD-155, an Act for the relief of Tanya Burstein Yerzy.

Bill SD-156, an Act for the relief of Yvonne Catherine Marie Vrancken Bruggemans.

Bill SD-157, an Act for the relief of Mary Friedman Nussenbaum.

Bill SD-158, an Act for the relief of Paul Rewoski.

Bill SD-159, an Act for the relief of Tibor Kadar.

Bill SD-160, an Act for the relief of Daniel Myer Glovinsky.

Bills read first time.

SECOND READINGS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave of the Senate, I move the second reading now.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Next sitting.

CONVENTION ON NATIONALITY OF MARRIED WOMEN

On the notice of motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine:

That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament approve the convention on the Nationality of Married Women done at New York on February 20, 1957, and that this house do approve the same.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government if he has tabled the convention referred to in this notice of motion?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: The convention has not been printed in the Minutes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I tabled 50 copies of the convention, and any honourable senator who wanted one could obtain one.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I have had a number of requests for copies of this convention, and it has occurred to me that perhaps it should be printed as an appendix to our Hansard or to the Minutes of the Proceedings.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It would be preferable to have it appended to Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I move that the convention be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day.

Motion agreed to.

See Appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 443-4.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the third reading of Bill C-29, to amend the Trans-Canada Highway Act.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, I am of the same optimistic frame of mind as the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt), and hope that we will get through our business and be able to adjourn tomorrow for the Easter recess. Those of us who live in the east or in the west like to get home for Easter.

My remarks in connection with this bill, which was so well explained by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), will take a little different approach to the measure. The honourable leader said that the bill meant a further expenditure of $100 million for the building of the Trans-Canada Highway. I remember back in the period 1928 to 1935, when I was a member of the provincial Legislature of Nova Scotia, I strongly advocated hard surfacing of roads in that province. It was not until Angus L.

Macdonald came into power in 1933 that we were able to bring into effect a very extensive hard surface highway program in that province. The result has been that in the past 25 years we have been able to build a fine grade of highways throughout the whole province. In 1949 when the Honourable Robert Winters introduced the Trans-Canada Highway bill in the House of Commons, I on that occasion again showed my approval of the proposal by speaking to the bill, as I am doing at this time. I made one or two suggestions at that time which, I feel, if they had been carried out would have improved the program greatly and would have saved considerable money.

I was pleased to note that the honourable senator from Kamloops (Hon. Mr. Smith) spoke of the same thing in his remarks on the bill the other day, namely, that certain portions of this long trail, known as the Trans-Canada Highway, and extending generally speaking some 5,000 miles across the country, should have four-lane approaches to the principal centres of population. I still think that would have been a good move, but of course it would be more expensive today than if it had been done years ago.

As I said at the outset, honourable senators, I intend to adopt a different approach from that of the honourable Leader of the Government. I look upon this $100 million not so much as an expenditure, but rather as an investment.

There are those who say, "What is the difference, if you are spending $100 million, between calling it an "expenditure" and giving it your name of an "investment"?" I shall answer that later by showing the extent of revenues which have been derived through the provision of high-grade roads across our country. But at this point I would emphasize something which has been touched on by the honourable senator from Prince (Hon. Mr. Barbour), when he suggested that 50 per cent of the maintenance costs of highways should be borne by the federal Government. I do not go quite that far, but I believe that the federal Government should pay 50 per cent of the cost of the maintenance of the Trans-Canada Highway, because the benefits of the highway belong not merely to one province but to the whole dominion. I base that statement on the fact that it has brought to our country thousands of tourists from the United States and extended their travels from one province to other provinces, and I propose in a moment or so to give figures in proof of this fact.

While I favour the 50 per cent feature of the scheme—and the scheme is a good one—it favours the provinces which "have" and puts a big strain on provinces with small revenues. I can well understand the value to Ontario of an extensive program, which they are embarking upon at the present time, and towards the cost of which they receive 50 per cent from the federal Government, thus lessening their expenditures. But we who live in the smaller provinces are unable to undertake programs of similar magnitude, and we find a proposition involving the same terms much harder to finance.

So I urge honourable senators, and address my remarks particularly to the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), that the Government be asked to take into consideration the sharing of the maintenance costs of the Trans-Canada Highway. They promoted it, they brought it into being, and there is no reason why they should not share in the upkeep throughout its extent of 5,000 miles.

I have one other thought in mind in this connection. Although the Trans-Canada Highway extends from the east to the far west, in some provinces its course is far from the main centres, especially the provincial capitals. It is natural to suppose that anyone who visits a province wishes to visit the capital of that province. To follow the example of the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig), who frequently speaks of Manitoba, I would perhaps be well advised to talk about Nova Scotia. The highway which extends across that province comes no nearer to Halifax than 60 miles. I suggest that the federal Government would be well advised to provide an access road from Truro into Halifax, and, further, to extend the Trans-Canada Highway system to connect with the Bar Harbour-Yarmouth ferry, the big point of entry in so far as our tourist trade is concerned. If they ran the Trans-Canada line from Yarmouth to Truro, or a connecting point down, perhaps, to the south shore, the tourists who land at Yarmouth would have an opportunity of seeing that wonderful country.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Would that road pass through Halifax?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: No. I am speaking now of the effects on the tourist trade.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Who laid out the original course of the highway through your province?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I give full credit to the Honourable Robert Winters for bringing into effect this very fine scheme; and I am not reflecting in any way on the present Government when I ask for a $100 million grant. As for the Honourable Robert Winters, he is to be congratulated upon putting this highway scheme into effect.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Would the honourable senator permit a question? He made reference to a road from Yarmouth to the south shore. Such a road would have to pass through Halifax. You could not get away from it.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That would be all the better for Halifax. I am glad that the honourable senator from Bedford-Halifax (Hon. Mr. Quinn) brought that point to my attention. He knows how valuable such a connection would be, and I am pleased that he is in accord with the thought I have expressed, that we should have a connecting line from Yarmouth either into Halifax, or with Truro. Particularly he will have in mind the scenic beauty of the south shore and the beautiful Annapolis Valley. I am sure that he will agree with me that these are worth-while tourist spots.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: He will be the last one to say that the Government should not assist this project.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: What about toll charges?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That is getting off the line.

I now propose, honourable senators, to quote a few figures in support of my contention that what I have in mind is a good investment. I have here a table which shows the yields from gasoline taxes, and registration fees, as well as a number of other figures which I do not propose to read. They are distributed by provinces, but I shall give merely the totals. In 1957, the last year for which figures are available, the revenue from motor vehicles sales taxes amounted to $93,168,955, and from excise taxes $71,703,733, or a total from these two sources of $164,872,688. That is the net return on the investments we have made in connection with the Trans-Canada highway program. Then there is another source of revenue in the form of provincial gasoline taxes, which for the year 1957 totalled $324,205,000, along with registration fees, $128,850,000, or a further sum of $453,055,000 to be added to the aforementioned amount of sales tax and excise tax.

As a businessman I would say we have a fairly good customer for what we spend on the Trans-Canada Highway. I have not mentioned the revenue derived from tourist sources, but in 1958 American tourists alone spent $325 million. Honourable senators will see how important it is to have good highways for a customer willing to spend $325 million in one year, and will appreciate why I consider this expenditure on the Trans-Canada Highway as being a good investment on the part of the provincial and federal Governments.

At the outset of my remarks I said I would be as brief as possible, but I did not wish to let this opportunity pass without saying a few words in respect to this worthy program in connection with the Trans-Canada Highway. In conclusion I wish to say that I am in complete accord with the increased amount requested in this bill, and I look forward to the Government giving favourable consideration to my suggestions. I know that the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) will carry my views to the Government. If it will do just those two or three small things I have suggested for the province of Nova Scotia, the money being expended on the Trans-Canada Highway will bring even greater returns. Thank you.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, I would like to take a few minutes to deal with the bill under consideration, and particularly how it affects my province of Newfoundland. I listened with a great deal of pleasure to my honourable colleague from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor), who brought forth some excellent points. Each province has its own advantages and disadvantages in connection with the Trans-Canada Highway.

Following my honourable friend's point, Newfoundland could also bring great revenue to Canada from tourist traffic with a Trans-Canada Highway which will connect with Gander airport, the cross-roads of the world, as well as attracting tourists to other airports and steamship terminals in the province.

Up to the present time Newfoundland has made less progress in the construction of its portion of the Trans-Canada Highway than has any other province in Canada. Notwithstanding that fact, this project has more significance and is more indispensable to Newfoundland than it probably is to any other province. This highway is needed in Newfoundland to correct the isolation of the large productive areas around the coast, and to serve as feeder lines for the local roads which the provincial Government has been building. The Newfoundland Government has diverted a lot of money to the construction of provincial local roads around the coastline, and a through provincial highway is most essential for connecting the fishing and industrial areas that are so served. As a matter of fact, this Trans-Canada Highway project has a distinct relationship to uniting many promising parts of Newfoundland where progress has been retarded by isolation for many years past.

The Trans-Canada Highway Agreement with the province was made in 1950, a year or so after the Terms of Union between Newfoundland and Canada. Certainly if the Trans-Canada Highway legislation had been introduced by the federal Government a year earlier it would have been a subject of special consideration in the discussion of the Terms of Union. We in Newfoundland have felt it was altogether wrong that in the taking over of the Newfoundland Railway, a narrow-gauge line, there was no provision for standardizing it and making it similar to the railway services enjoyed by the other provinces of Canada. Certainly this narrow-gauge line should have been converted to a standard-gauge or else a special provision should have been agreed upon for the financing by the federal Government of a Trans-Canada Highway through the province. There is, of course, a federal obligation to provide adequate interprovincial communications, and throughout the years prior to union of Newfoundland with Canada the Government of Canada spent hundreds and possibly thousands of millions of dollars on the construction and servicing of Canada's railway systems, but not one dollar of that money had been spent in Newfoundland. Despite the taxes which have been collected from the people of Newfoundland throughout the years, none of the heavy expenditure by Newfoundland people over the years on the railway construction had been returned or even considered in the Terms of Union. I realize, of course, that the Newfoundland railway, like the Canadian National Railway, is not a money-making system. As a matter of fact, more money goes out than comes in by way of revenue. Nevertheless, there was a great deficiency in our Terms of Union because of the fact there was no provision for the conversion of our railway to meet the standards of the national railways which service the other provinces of Canada. In any event, in lieu of such an expenditure, there should have been a special provision for the financing of Trans-Canada highway through Newfoundland.

The burden of a fifty-fifty agreement as far as Newfoundland is concerned is intolerable. The highway does not pass through large agricultural areas, as it does in most other provinces, and except for a comparatively short portion of the highway through parts of British Columbia, and other relatively short distances, the highway in Newfoundland crosses the roughest terrain in Canada. It is costly to build over this terrain, and it is costly to build the unusually large number of bridges that are necessary. The Trans-Canada Highway survey calls for construction of about 600 miles in Newfoundland. It is true that the federal Government has come in with a contribution of 90 per cent of the cost of 60 miles in each of the provinces. That is of assistance. Then there is about 30 miles for the national park. Notwithstanding that, there are still 500 miles under construction or remaining to be built in Newfoundland on the fifty-fifty basis. In addition, an unfavourable comparison as far as Newfoundland is concerned is that our province has not the advantage of being able to save by a reconstruction of existing roads and dovetailing them into the Trans-Canada Highway. It would be interesting to record here that there are 600 miles of the Trans-Canada Highway required to be built in Newfoundland, 388 miles in New Brunswick, and 310 miles in Nova Scotia. Those figures may not be precise. I took them from the original estimates. The number of miles to be built in British Columbia is about 700, and in Ontario about 1,400. Newfoundland's estimate of expenditures on a per capita basis runs at about five times that of Ontario—and of course there is no comparison so far as per capita earnings are concerned—and Newfoundland's per capita expenditure is about three times that of Nova Scotia.

I bring out these points, because I feel, in fact, I know, the Newfoundland public generally think, that by reason of the Trans-Canada Highway project coming along just after Newfoundland entered Confederation, and after the agreement being made, Newfoundland lost out by not having special consideration being given to it, for it was definitely unrealistic to think that Newfoundland should, in the circumstances, have to accept a fifty-fifty basis.

Honourable senators, representations have been made to the federal Government for a revision of the Terms of Union. It must be remembered that written into the agreement itself was a provision that within eight years of the consummation of union the terms would be considered and revised. The case has been before the Government for over a year, and no word has been received yet except that it is being considered. Lengthy consideration is a poor substitute for the meeting of an obligation.

The Trans-Canada Highway project, to some extent, stands apart from the special provisions required under the legal revision of the Terms of Union. That revision, however, does have a very definite bearing on the financial ability of the province of Newfoundland to proceed part way, at all events, with this urgent project. I appeal to the Government of Canada to give very special consideration to Newfoundland's case because, both morally and legally, the province has a right to very special consideration in this connection, and not to just an across-the-board fifty-fifty arrangement.

Hon. Felix P. Quinn: Honourable senators, it is rather unusual to have so much discussion in this chamber on the third reading of a bill. What the previous two speakers said could very well have been said on second reading. A practice of this kind creates a precedent, and I do not think it speaks well for the conduct of business in this house.

My principal reason for rising this evening is in connection with the statements made by my good friend opposite me, the member from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor). He went out of his way to take a lot of credit for paved roads in Nova Scotia, and mentioned especially the late Angus L. Macdonald. He was as good a friend of mine as of any member in this chamber; I knew him when he was a law student at Dalhousie University. I followed his career with interest, and I admired him right down to the date of his death. In fact, I was one of the last to see him laid in the ground, for Sir James Dunn and I stood together and practically wept over his grave.

The honourable member from Halifax-Dartmouth could have told us that in Nova Scotia the Liberal Government was continuously in office for 43 years up to 1925. Then there was a break, and the Conservative party was elected and held office for eight years. Up until the time of its taking office the record of road building in Nova Scotia was a very poor one. There were no paved roads, with the exception of a bit of road from Halifax to Bedford—a twisted, crooked road. When the Conservative party came into office in Nova Scotia, it had the difficult task of straightening out crooked roads, widening them in a good many cases, and also grading and preparing them. Miles and miles of roads were already graded and ready for paving, when the Government changed. That is the time for which my honourable friend takes credit for paving of so much road. I will not take any of the credit away from him.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Let me point this out—

Hon. Mr. Quinn: My authority is the Minister of Highways in Nova Scotia, who stated in the Legislature, according to an account which I read in the only Halifax newspaper, that there were more highways paved in Nova Scotia in the last two years than in any other two years in the history of the province.

Honourable senators, I do not want to continue further, because if I did I would be breaking the tradition, for which offence I have criticized my two predecessors.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order to say that I am within the rules in speaking on third reading of a bill.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, there is an aspect of the Trans-Canada Highway that has not been touched upon, having to do with the western section of that highway. Westerners are extensive travellers; they come east and drive new cars home. For a great many years the custom has been to drive on U.S. highways, but honourable senators will be interested to know that since a first-class road has been put through west from Winnipeg, Canadian traffic that used to go on U.S. highways is now coming on to our own Trans-Canada Highway, with the advantages that the senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) mentioned.

The point I wish to make is that, eastern traffic travelling through Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, to the coast usually went down through Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and up to Vancouver. When the new road is through the traffic will travel on our own side of the line, with consequent benefit to the whole tourist industry.

My third point has to do with the Trans-Canada Highway going through the National Parks. Every part of Canada has scenery that is well worth seeing, and one of the great pleasures of travelling through this country is that every province has its beauty spots. I think it is generally accepted that the Rocky Mountains include some of the finest scenery in the world, and when the Trans-Canada Highway goes through the Rockies it will be one of the finest routes to be found anywhere.

The road from Calgary west was opened last summer, and already it is too narrow. It is a two-lane road with wide shoulders, and it could be widened to make a three-lane road later on. Time and again within a period of six months from the opening of that highway cars run bumper to bumper between Calgary and Banff for day after day, on weekends particularly, and at the height of the tourist season. So, it is evident that that road will have to be widened. At least, that is one solution.

Another solution is this, and I hope the Government will pay some attention to it. The Trans-Canada Highway mostly takes a new route, which means that the old road is still in existence. The Trans-Canada Highway being a first-class highway, trucks bowl along at top speed, passenger cars on business errands go through at 60 miles an hour and have no time to stop, and that means that the person who just wants to loaf along and see the scenery does not get much opportunity to do so. So the suggestion I want to make is that where possible the old road should be maintained as a sort of slow-poke highway, or a route on which the tourist can loaf along and enjoy the scenery without being tooted off the road, as happens on the Trans-Canada Highway.

Another related matter is this. The building of a highway of this type through the Rockies is tremendously costly. Most of the work has to be done in the summertime, when the traffic is heaviest. I do not know what the costs per mile are on that highway, but anyone who is thinking about the cost will be appalled to see large construction crews stopped every few minutes while tourists' cars are allowed to pass through. This is another argument for planning the road as a divided highway, so that when it is being widened or a new road is being built paralleling it, construction crews working on the new road will not have to be held up every few minutes to allow the passage of thousands of cars, thus slowing considerably the progress of the work.

Honourable senators, that is all I want to say. I did not want to let this opportunity pass without mentioning these points. I am delighted that the Governments—and mark that I say Governments—of Canada have got this road very near completion. It is a great forward step in Canada; it will make for Canadians knowing their own country better, and it will also encourage, what is too often overlooked, one of Canada's biggest industries, the tourist trade. Frankly, I am surprised how little attention Chambers of Commerce pay to this very important industry. Dollar-wise it is one of the biggest in Canada, and as time goes on I hope it will get more encouragement.

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if he would bring to the attention of the Government the fact that we are still waiting for the causeway to be built. That causeway I believe is to be considered part of the Trans-Canada Highway. The tourist business will soon be on us and we would like to see something done.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Has that anything to do with the Chignecto Canal? Do you want it too?

Hon. Mrs. Inman: I will go along with that also.

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Honourable senators, I rise to add a few words to the debate on the Trans-Canada Highway bill. As we know, provision is contained in this legislation whereby the central Government will come to the assistance of the provinces in sharing the cost of building the Trans-Canada Highway through each of the provvinces from Newfoundland to Vancouver Island. Construction of that highway will be a progressive step and will be advantageous for the nation. People like myself and others who have relatives living in the west and who are anxious to travel there by automobile will not now have to cross the border and travel through United States territory for long distances to reach British Columbia. On completion of the Trans-Canada Highway we shall be able to motor across the country on Canadian soil.

Now, honourable senators, the province of Quebec, for reasons of its own, has decided not to avail itself of the money made available to it in virtue of the Trans-Canada Highway legislation whereby 50 per cent of the cost of a provincial portion of the highway would be paid for by the federal Government. The province of Quebec has adopted that stand, and that remains its policy. I do not want to enter into the question of approving or rejecting that stand. Those who now govern that province have their own responsibilities in the matter and they will be called upon to render account to the people. But what I am thinking about is this—and I would say that this follows from important statements made by my colleagues in this chamber—that the province of Quebec will not accept federal aid in the construction of its highways because that province claims to have a very good highway system now. Seeing that the province of Quebec does not wish to avail itself of this money, why could not the federal Government allow that money to be used by the province of Newfoundland, a province which has 600 miles of Trans-Canada Highway to build. As my honourable and distinguished colleague from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt) said a moment ago, building highways in Newfoundland is a very costly proposition. That being so, coupled with the fact that Quebec is not using what might be called its share, I do not see why it would not be possible to apply the economic principle of perequation in road building, much the same as is done in other fields of governmental activity, for instance, in education. I understand that in matters of education the provinces which are ready to accept moneys under the principle of perequation receive their shares accordingly.

There are many precedents for the adoption of that policy. Let me illustrate: When the automobile came into use, around 1912, the province of Quebec decided that better roads should be built. At that time roads were under the control of the municipalities. The Government of the province of Quebec was then under the premiership of Sir Lomer Gouin, and later the Honourable Mr. Taschereau. Sir Lomer Gouin decided to take from the municipalities control of the roads. Of course the municipalities could have objected, because the principle of autonomy was a principle that should be maintained, and refused to accept the intervention by the provincial Government in the building of roads, which was their business. But the municipalities decided, in the cause of progress, to accept that intervention. So the principle of perequation which was established by the Liberal Government, was continued by the succeeding Conservative Government and now is carried on by the Government of the Honourable Mr. Duplessis.

The reason why the control of roads in Quebec was taken from the municipalities was that it was impossible for some municipalities to pay for the building of their roads. A poor municipality could not meet the cost. So it was necessary to establish the principle of perequation, by which the provincial Government took over the roads, and by the imposition of a gasoline tax it was able to build roads all over the province, including the poorer municipalities.

For many years the city of Montreal objected to the collection of the gasoline tax by the provincial Government, because the city said that it paid about 90 per cent of the tax and should have a share of it. But the provincial Government, including the Government of Mr. Duplessis, contended that the city of Montreal could not share in that tax because the money was needed to build roads throughout Quebec, not only around Montreal. The purpose of good roads was largely to attract tourists to that province, and to such beauty spots as the Matapedia valley. I know some parishes in that area that are very poor and unable to build their own roads.

So without perhaps realizing it, the provincial Government established a precedent of taking away the autonomy of the municipality and establishing the economic principle of perequation. I humbly submit that the same principle could be applied by the federal Government, so that the larger share of the money to build roads could be collected from the richer provinces. In that way roads of equally high standards could be built all across the country. I am sure the federal Government will see to it that adequate revenues are collected from the more wealthy provinces to take care of the less wealthy provinces.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, there is nothing I dislike more than disagreeing with my colleague the honourable senator from Rigaud (Hon. Mr. Dupuis), who has just spoken. It is unfortunate he was not in committee yesterday when this bill was being considered, and when we heard the testimony of an engineer from the Department of Public Works, who has driven extensively over the highways of the province of Quebec from east to west. I asked him this very question: "Are the roads in the province of Quebec just as good as those in the other provinces?" He answered "Yes."

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: Excuse me. On a question of privilege: that is just what I said. My statement was that according to the information given by the representatives of the Government the roads in Quebec were good.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I know that.

I remember when Mr. Godbout was in power on the eve of an election the highway department would send a truckload of tarvia to be dumped in front of the church, and that was all that was done.

In my part of the country, from Rivière du Loup to the border of New Brunswick, everyone knows we have a splendid highway, just as good as one finds in the New England States.

And what about the road on the south shore of the St. Lawrence? As my honourable friend knows, there is between Montreal and Lévis a double highway, which is just as good as the Queen Elizabeth Highway which runs between Toronto, Hamilton and Niagara Falls.

I invite everyone to come to the province of Quebec and see for themselves that our roads are just as well built as those in any other province. We are proud of those roads; they are a credit to the province. So why complain about this and that when everybody, except a few, agrees that our roads are excellent?

When I made a comparison between the roads in my province under the former Government and those of the present day, it was because it was then impossible to have the road work completed. Under a former Minister of Roads in the province of Quebec, the roads around St. Hyacinthe were the only ones that were looked after, and very little was done.

Just two days ago the Honourable Antoine Rivard, Minister of Transport for the province of Quebec, said that the Quebec Government would not accept any money from Ottawa for highways, because the province wanted to be free. One reason the province cannot accept the highway specifications as laid down by Ottawa is that in certain parts of the province, especially along the north shore of the St. Lawrence, the road is rather narrow. It was built in the first place by a great Canadian, Sir Lomer Gouin, who was Premier of the province for a long time, and was Minister of Justice in Ottawa, and a director of the Bank of Montreal and the C.P.R. He was indeed a great Canadian and pioneer in the construction of highways. The houses are built close to the roads, and the roads are narrow. So, one of the reasons why the specifications laid down by Ottawa for the building of the Trans-Canada Highway have not been accepted by Quebec is that Ottawa requires that the highway be 100 feet wide. This standard is impossible to meet in some parts of the country. But let us look at the magnificent double highway on the south shore of the St. Lawrence River and all the highways of Quebec. They are most satisfactory. As the honourable gentleman from Rigaud pointed out, we are both saying the same thing, so there can be no doubt about it.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PUBLIC SERVANTS INVENTION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the third reading of Bill C-33, to amend the Public Servants Invention Act.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I do not regret what I said on the second reading of this bill, because the evidence which was given by the President of Canadian Patents and Development Limited exactly confirms what had been said here. The bill is a bad piece of legislation. The reason why the Government is asking for it is precisely that there is no item in the estimates to permit this kind of business to be done, although it would be easy for the Government to insert an item to provide for the operations of Canadian Patents and Development Limited.

The problem is much greater than my honourable friends who support the Government may suppose. It involves the very principle of parliamentary control of expenditure. How many times have I heard speeches from Conservative members, when their party was in opposition, complaining that information from Crown companies for which they asked was not made available. Not so long ago I asked for returns which would show the occupations and salaries of civil servants in each of the departments and in the Crown companies. Why, even now, have I not received that information? Because, according to the reason which was given, it is not the practice of the Government to disclose any information about the salaries paid in Crown companies. The other day, in committee, the president of the Canadian Patent agency was "in the box"—to employ the usual expression—for about an hour and a quarter. Everybody was anxious to have the bill passed, but there were many questions which could have been asked. I had the support of two or three colleagues who seemed to be very interested in the subject-matter of the bill, and asked the witness very pertinent questions, and it was very good of some of our colleagues to remain there to listen to the answers which were given by this gentleman. As he began his statement, he mumbled a few inaudible words, from which even those who were close to him were unable to understand anything. Eventually he spoke more clearly. But the story is easy to understand. Most of the top civil servants are greedy for power: And what occurred in this case? We were told what had been said by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the House of Commons. I asked the witness, "Did you induce the Minister to bring in this legislation?" He admitted that he had spoken to him about it but, he said, "There are other ministers; there is this one and that one, the minister of this and the minister of that". But I got no definite answer, and I had not the time to press for a direct and definite reply.

Why has this legislation been sponsored in the House of Commons by the Minister of Trade and Commerce? For a very simple and obvious reason. The agency, Canadian Patents and Development Limited, is a branch of the National Research Council, which is under the Minister of Trade and Commerce. For this reason the Minister of Trade and Commerce could not answer the very pertinent questions which were put to him by Mr. Pickersgill, the former Secretary of State. He told him that in virtue of the law and according to the practice it was the Secretary of State who was in charge of patents. That is well known to everybody. Mr. Pickersgill then asked, "When was the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State over patents transferred to you, the Minister of Trade and Commerce?" The minister said, "I don't remember exactly, but I will let you know at the next sitting." But at the following sitting, when the bill came again before the House of Commons, and the same question was asked of the Minister of Trade and Commerce by Mr. Pickersgill, the minister replied, "I will tell you privately." I did not get in touch with Mr. Pickersgill to know what he was told. But I affirm that it is my first experience, in a parliamentary career of 35 years, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has come to Parliament with legislation to satisfy the greed of a bureaucrat. And when you have one more mushroom company that is called a Crown corporation, about which we have no information in the future, that is the thing. It is just as simple as that. It is just as clear as spring water. That is the story, and I cannot understand how it is that a gentleman of the experience, ability, knowledge, and astuteness—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Easy, easy.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: —of the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) would sponsor a piece of legislation like that in the Senate. What the Senate must do is defeat this bill on third reading, and it will end there and it will be a warning not only to the Government but to bureaucrats to stop trying by devious and circuitous ways to get more power and to infringe upon the rights and jurisdiction of Parliament. That is my feeling. I have been asked to look into this bill, and I will report this to my honourable colleagues. I will tell you honestly what I think of it. I find it is a bad piece of legislation, and they were bold enough to say that its purpose was to give more awards to the inventor, to look after the poor inventor. You will be shocked when you hear the number of inventions that have been accepted by the agency since 1955. Has it been 2,000? No. Has it been 5,000? No.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Get down to a reasonable figure.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Has it been 500? No. It has been 250. How many inventors have got something out of it? How many poor civil servants who have worked hard in their cellars or attics to make some useful discovery for the state have got anything out of it? One hundred? No. Fifty? No. Forty? No. Thirty? No. Twenty? No. Ten, just ten. Nobody can deny it. What do they get out of it. Two years ago $1,800 was paid out in awards, and last year some three thousand-odd dollars were paid out, which means they got an average of $100 to $300 a year.

We are told that it is on behalf of the inventors in the Civil Service that this legislation is before us, to help them and give them a chance to continue their magnificent work for the people of Canada. Well, I am not from Missouri, but I do not believe it. They say: "We want to be fair. So far awards have been made only to inventors from the National Research Council who have sent their inventions to us, but we want to pay inventors from other departments, those whose inventions have been sent by other departments. We want to pay them."

How is it that the civil servant who does not belong to the Department of Trade and Commerce and who does his duty for his department should not be rewarded on the recommendation of his own minister, and that he should be rewarded under the recommendation not of his minister but of this or that agency, which would be just as free as the Cinque Ports of which Churchill was a warden?

Very able questions were asked by a certain member of the committee. I will not mention his name, because I do not wish to offend his proper modesty, but as to the retroactive aspect of the bill the answers were most unsatisfactory. This bill means nothing for the civil servants, and when we make a comparison between a man who makes an invention for the C.N.R., the C.P.R., the Bell Telephone Company, or the C.I.L., all the big organizations, we find he is treated ten times better than a civil servant who invents something. And we have to say "Amen" to what is suggested by those gentlemen in the Canadian Patents and Development Limited. I have no grudge. I have no anger. I was in committee, in an impartial way wanting to get the truth. It was impossible to get it all in such a short time. I have nothing to say about the character of the man who was there as a witness. His ambition, if it was not legitimate, was natural. But they want to run the show in the back of the minister and in the back of the Parliament of Canada. This is why it is high time to put a stop to it. What I will ask is to vote the bill down and then we will render a great service to the Civil Service as well as to the country at large and to the Government.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the question is on the motion of the Honourable Senator Aseltine, seconded by the Honourable Senator Brunt, that this bill be now read the third time. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the bill is read a third time I think some member of the Government who was at the committee meeting should answer some of the questions—I will not say accusations—which have been raised by the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot).

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I was at the committee meeting, and the honourable senator did not give the witness a chance to answer the questions put to him.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It was one of the most unsatisfactory committee meetings we have had in a long time. I am not going to attempt to answer that kind of thing.

The Hon. the Speaker: Does the motion carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, March 11, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Pearson, seconded by Hon. Mr. Choquette, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. John J. MacDonald: Honourable senators, I know that you will expect me to be very brief this evening.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Oh, no; we have lots of time.

Hon. Mr. MacDonald: Let me say that last night I attended quite a banquet at the city of Charlottetown, and I am getting tired. I was supposed to speak on this debate a week ago, but nobody is to be blamed for the delay.

First, I want to associate myself with all who have spoken on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I extend my compliments to the mover (Hon. Mr. Pearson), who gave a vivid description of the early pioneering days of the west. I also compliment the seconder (Hon. Mr. Choquette), who delivered an able speech in both the French and English tongues. After re-reading his speech, I feel that it was of a very high order.

Honourable senators, though I intend to be very brief I do not feel that I can let the occasion go without mentioning the delegation which came from the west a few days ago, and which probably most of us entertained. I found the members of the delegation most interesting. It does not surprise me if they have a problem. We farmers of the east also have a problem. Many of us probably have more serious problems today than we have had for some time past. All honourable senators from the great provinces of Ontario and Quebec know that we farmers in Prince Edward Island buy our automobiles and trucks from your area; we buy all our farm machinery, most of our clothing, household appliances, and so on from you. We also pick up the tab on freight both ways, so to speak, and that is quite a tough proposition now, especially when it is considered that when we lay down potatoes in central Canada we can only realize 60 cents for a 75-pound bag at the farm.

I listened attentively to the remarks made on the Trans-Canada Highway bill this evening, but I am going to take a few minutes to speak about boats, and then about the proposed causeway.

First of all, with the permission of the house, I will put on Hansard a table showing the capital cost to March 31, 1958 of ferries and terminal facilities between Tormentine, New Brunswick, and Borden, Prince Edward Island.

CAR FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN TORMENTINE, N.B., AND BORDEN, P.E.I.

(Operated by Canadian National Railways on behalf of the Government of Canada)

CAPITAL COST TO MARCH 31, 1958 OF FERRIES AND TERMINAL FACILITIES

Terminals		Capital cost to March 31, 1958	Funds provided by Canadian Government	Funds provided by Canadian National Railways
Tormentine, N.B., Docks and Terminal Yards, etc....		$6,787,420.22	$6,662,003.42	$125,416.80
Borden, P.E.I., Docks and Terminal Yards, etc.....		6,038,280.37	5,702,201.12	336,079.25
FERRIES
(1) S.S. Prince Edward Island.....		$ 878,484.08	$ 705,521.45	$172,962.63
(2) S.S. Charlottetown—Total Cost...	$ 2,189,145.44
Less: Insurance recovery.....	995,000.00
		1,194,145.44	1,194,145.44	——
(3) M. V. Abegweit.....		7,067,709.58	7,032,720.47	34,989.11
(4) S.S. Scotia No. 2—
Cost to May 1, 1955.....	$ 358,539.00
Cost of refitting for Prince Edward Island Service.....	437,963.33
		796,502.33	786,911.33	9,591.00
TOTALS.....		$22,762,542.02	$22,083,503.23	$679,038.79

It might be noted that the above table shows the gross capital costs. In accordance with Government accounting practice, no provision is made in the annual operating expenses of the service to cover depreciation of the assets.

In 1913 a start was made on the construction of docks and terminal facilities at Tormentine and Borden to provide landing facilities for the car ferry service from the mainland to Prince Edward Island, at which time the old dock at Tormentine was transferred from the Department of Public Works to the Department of Railways and Canals to serve the ferry service. Extensive improvements were made to this dock, and docking facilities and a new terminal were constructed at Borden. Construction of the dock and terminal facilities was completed in the early fall of 1917, and regular ferry operations between the two points commenced on September 17, 1917.

In 1942 it was decided to carry out extensive improvements to the terminals at both Tormentine and Borden to provide landing facilities for the new ferry the M.V. Abegweit, and from 1942 to 1945 capital expenditures amounted to $4,654,988.14 on the Tormentine terminal and $3,043,457.70 at Borden.

The S.S. Prince Edward Island was built for this service and delivered in December 1916, and was operated from May to September, 1917 between Charlottetown and Pictou pending the completion of the Borden-Tormentine terminals. On September 17, the vessel commenced regular operations between Borden and Tormentine.

The S.S. Charlottetown was built for this service and commenced regular scheduled service between Tormentine and Borden on July 26, 1931. In June 1941 this vessel, while proceeding to Saint John, N.B. for annual overhaul, grounded on a reef and sank, and was subsequently abandoned to the underwriters.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Any loss of life?

Hon. John J. MacDonald: No, honourable senator, no loss of life.

The capital cost of the vessel amounted to $2,189,145.44, insurance recovery amounted to $995,000, leaving a net capital loss of $1,194,145.44.

Now I am going to tell a story about the old Prince Edward Island. She has done yeoman service for 40 years. Last year she was just about ready to pull away from the wharf when a fireman who was stripped to the waist was starting up another boiler—it is an oil burning vessel now—with a torch of some kind, and the fire blew out the top, forcing the fireman to jump though an old ash hatch into the water. That was about six months ago, and I understand he is still in hospital. There could have been a sad story in connection with that ship. If she had been about a mile out when that happened they could not have saved her. However, fire-fighting materials were obtained from Summerside airport, which eventually saved the vessel. It can easily be seen just what can happen to boats at any time.

Now, honourable senators, let me give you the deficits, on the operation of the ferry service each year between 1954 and 1958. They are as follows:

1955	1,604,639
1956	1,804,287
1957	2,027,639

This operation, in round figures, has cost the country $47,854,495.

Honourable senators, what I would like to know is how long are the people of Canada going to stand for such an expensive operation as this. At the end of March I believe we are going to receive the report of the engineers, and it is anticipated—if it is feasible, and we hope it is—that the causeway might be built for about $60 million, and that if the Government were to give the go ahead signal now it might be completed within 10 years. We are now in need of another boat, not a luxurious one, but one that can carry automobiles and so relieve the bottleneck that exists in the summer season in these ports.

We from the province of Prince Edward Island are deeply interested in the causeway to the island and we intend to keep up the pressure for its construction. I know our members in the House of Commons are going to keep up the pressure to have it built.

Honourable senators, I leave with you that thought, and will not detain the house longer.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Ordered that the said address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General by such members of this house as are members of the Honourable the Privy Council.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

(See p. 432)

CONVENTION ON THE NATIONALITY OF MARRIED WOMEN

Adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations at its Eleventh Session.
Signed by Canada February 20, 1957.

The General Assembly,

Considering that it is appropriate to conclude, under the auspices of the United Nations, an international convention on the nationality of married women, designed to eliminate conflicts of law arising out of provisions concerning the loss or acquisition of nationality by women as a result of marriage, of its dissolution, or of the change of nationality by the husband during marriage,

Decides to open the Convention annexed to the present resolution for signature and ratification at the end of the eleventh session of the General Assembly.

Annex

Convention on the Nationality of Married Women

The Contracting States,

Recognizing that conflicts in law and in practice with reference to nationality arise as a result of provisions concerning the loss or acquisition of nationality by women as a result of marriage, of its dissolution or of the change of nationality by the husband during marriage,

Recognizing that, in article 15 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the General Assembly of the United Nations has proclaimed that "everyone has the right to a nationality" and that "no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his nationality nor denied the right to change his nationality",

Desiring to co-operate with the United Nations in promoting universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to sex,

Hereby agree as hereinafter provided:

Article 1

Each Contracting State agrees that neither the celebration nor the dissolution of a marriage between one of its nationals and an alien, nor the change of nationality by the husband during marriage, shall automatically affect the nationality of the wife.

Article 2

Each Contracting State agrees that neither the voluntary acquisition of the nationality of another State nor the renunciation of its nationality by one of its nationals shall prevent the retention of its nationality by the wife of such national.

Article 3

1. Each Contracting State agrees that the alien wife of one of its nationals may, at her request, acquire the nationality of her husband through specially privileged naturalization procedures; the grant of such nationality may be subject to such limitations as may be imposed in the interests of national security or public policy.

2. Each Contracting State agrees that the present Convention shall not be construed as affecting any legislation or judicial practice by which the alien wife of one of its nationals may, at her request, acquire her husband's nationality as a matter of right.

Article 4

1. The present Convention shall be open for signature and ratification on behalf of any State Member of the United Nations and also on behalf of any other State which is or hereafter becomes a member of any specialized agency of the United Nations, or which is or hereafter becomes a Party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice, or any other State to which an invitation has been addressed by the General Assembly of the United Nations.

2. The present Convention shall be ratified and the instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 5

1. The present Convention shall be open for accession to all States referred to in paragraph 1 of article 4.

2. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 6

1. The present Convention shall come into force on the ninetieth day following the date of deposit of the sixth instrument of ratification or accession.

2. For each State ratifying or acceding to the Convention after the deposit of the sixth instrument of ratification or accession, the Convention shall enter into force on the ninetieth day after deposit by such State of its instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 7

1. The present Convention shall apply to all non-self-governing, trust, colonial and other non-metropolitan territories for the international relations of which any Contracting State is responsible; the Contracting State concerned shall, subject to the provisions of paragraph 2 of the present article, at the time of signature, ratification or accession declare the non-metropolitan territory or territories to which the Convention shall apply ipso facto as a result of such signature, ratification or accession.

2. In any case in which, for the purpose of nationality, a non-metropolitan territory is not treated as one with the metropolitan territory, or in any case in which the previous consent of a non-metropolitan territory is required by the constitutional laws or practices of the Contracting State or of the non-metropolitan territory for the application of the Convention to that territory, that Contracting State shall endeavour to secure the needed consent of the non-metropolitan territory within the period of twelve months from the date of signature of the Convention by that Contracting State, and when such consent has been obtained the Contracting State shall notify the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The present Convention shall apply to the territory or territories named in such notification from the date of its receipt by the Secretary-General.

3. After the expiry of the twelve-month period mentioned in paragraph 2 of the present article, the Contracting States concerned shall inform the Secretary-General of the results of the consultations with those non-metropolitan territories for whose international relations they are responsible and whose consent to the application of the present Convention may have been withheld.

1. At the time of signature, ratification or accession, any State may make reservations to any article of the present Convention other than articles 1 and 2.

2. If any State makes a reservation in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present article, the Convention, with the exception of those provisions to which the reservation relates, shall have effect as between the reserving State and the other Parties. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall communicate the text of the reservation to all States which are or may become Parties to the Convention. Any State Party to the Convention or which thereafter becomes a Party may notify the Secretary-General that it does not agree to consider itself bound by the Convention with respect to the State making the reservation. This notification must be made, in the case of a State already a Party, within ninety days from the date of the communication by the Secretary-General; and, in the case of a State subsequently becoming a Party, within ninety days from the date when the instrument or ratification or accession is deposited. In the event that such a notification is made, the Convention shall not be deemed to be in effect as between the State making the notification and the State making the reservation.

3. Any State making a reservation in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present article may at any time withdraw the reservation, in whole or in part, after it has been accepted, by a notification to this effect addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Such notification shall take effect on the date on which it is received.

Article 9

1. Any Contracting State may denounce the present Convention by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Denunciation shall take effect one year after the date or receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

2. The present Convention shall cease to be in force as from the date when the denunciation which reduces the number of Parties to less than six becomes effective.

Article 10

Any dispute which may arise between any two or more Contracting States concerning the interpretation or application of the present Convention, which is not settled by negotiation, shall, at the request of any one of the Parties to the dispute, be referred to the International Court of Justice for decision, unless the Parties agree to another mode of settlement.

Article 11

The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall notify all States Members of the United Nations and the non-member States contemplated in paragraph 1 of article 4 of the present Convention of the following:

(a) Signatures and instruments of ratification received in accordance with article 4;

(b) Instruments of accession received in accordance with article 5;

(c) The date upon which the present Convention enters into force in accordance with article 6;

(d) Communications and notifications received in accordance with article 8;

(e) Notifications of denunciation received in accordance with paragraph 1 of article 9;

(f) Abrogation in accordance with paragraph 2 of article 9.

Article 12

1. The present Convention, of which the Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts shall be equally authentic, shall be deposited in the archives of the United Nations.

2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit a certified copy of the Convention to all States Members of the United Nations and to the non-member States contemplated in paragraph 1 of article 4.

(Note: This Convention was tabled in the Senate on April 9, 1957.)

THE SENATE

Friday, March 20, 1959

BRITISH WEST INDIES

ECONOMIC MISSION OF CANADIAN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE—ORDER FOR RESUMED DEBATE DROPPED

On the Order:

Resuming the postponed debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Pratt:

That he will draw the attention of the Senate to the Economic Mission of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce to the British West Indies, and will place before the Senate information obtained in the discussions with representatives of industry and government in Jamaica, Trinidad, Barbados and British Guiana which has a relation to policy of the Government of Canada in that area.—Hon. Mr. McLean.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, on March 9 I adjourned the debate on this inquiry on behalf of the honourable senator from Southern New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. McLean), who at that time was in the West Indies. The item has remained on the Order Paper in his name since then but unfortunately he has been ill and unable to attend our sittings. I am not sure that he will be in the chamber when the Senate resumes sitting after the Easter adjournment. In the circumstances I would suggest that the order be dropped now, on the understanding that it may be revived by the honourable senator from Southern New Brunswick upon his return to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Order dropped.

PRIVATE BILL

EXPORT FINANCE CORPORATION OF CANADA —SECOND READING

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the second reading of Bill S-17, to incorporate Export Finance Corporation of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of Bill S-17 is to incorporate a company under the name of the Export Finance Corporation of Canada. I feel I should speak briefly in a general way in respect to this particular company, but I would suggest that an examination of the individual clauses of the bill be left until it reaches committee. If the bill is given second reading I will move to have it referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The objects of this corporation would be to finance and facilitate exports and imports and the exchange of commodities between Canada and other countries of the world.

In the early days, because the foreign trade of Canada was largely confined to the British Empire, the facilities of an export and import corporation such as this were not necessary, but as foreign commerce grew Canada became an important world trader. In recent years, as a result of this increase in trade, a need has arisen for a Canadian corporation such as this to become engaged in international financing to assist and encourage overseas trade.

The corporation would extend and grant loans for the primary purpose of facilitating overseas trade by Canada, and by this means the corporation would finance exports of Canadian manufactured goods and agricultural products of all kinds. It means also that the corporation could finance the purchase of Canadian materials and equipment and services as the same are required for the development of natural resources located in foreign lands.

All loans which would be made would have to have the assurance of repayment with interest, and as a fundamental lending condition of any loan the borrower would have to have a good credit standing, plus the assured ability of such borrower—and this is important—to obtain the dollars necessary to finance and repay the loan. This corporation could never consider making a loan if at the beginning it was advised that the borrower could not obtain the necessary Canadian dollars to finance and service the loan.

Furthermore, I think it should be pointed out that loans would only be made for specific purposes; that is to say, loan commitments would be entered into only upon the borrower providing evidence that the proceeds would be used for the importation and use of Canadian products or services. Financial assistance would not be extended by this corporation if financing is readily available for the purpose from Canadian banks or private lending institutions. In other words, it is not the purpose of this corporation to enter into any contest with banks as to who will loan the money. If in the export business Canadian banks have the facilities to handle it, then this corporation will not be interested in making a loan under circumstances such as that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Why should not the corporation be allowed to compete with the banks?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Well, it does not want to do it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It feels that if the present financing facilities of the chartered banks can look after any export business that is tendered to them, then the banks should do it. This company wants to come in after the banks and look after those types of loans the banks do not feel they want to make.

Honourable senators will see, in a minute or two, why the corporation will make the type of loan that the banks would not want to make.

Hon. Mr. Power: Are all those limitations, to which the honourable senator has referred, contained in the bill, or are these just good intentions?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Possibly they are good intentions.

Hon. Mr. Power: They are not contained in the bill?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, I doubt if they are contained in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: So there would be nothing to prevent this new corporation from competing with the banks?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Oh, no. The corporation's powers are not going to be restricted, but I am now giving to honourable senators the ideas expressed by the sponsors of the bill, and what they propose to do if this bill is passed.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Is this a private bill?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes, it is a private bill. The Government has nothing to do with this bill.

Furthermore, it is the intention of this corporation to participate with other lenders in the financing of any particular transaction which would be of benefit or help to Canada.

With respect to the organization of the company, it should be pointed out first that the name the sponsors propose to use is Export Finance Corporation of Canada. This name has been cleared with the appropriate Government departments, and as far as can be ascertained there is no objection to the name.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask another question? It is clear that this corporation can compete with the banks for clients to whom they can loan money, but will this corporation be in competition with the provisions of the Export Credits Insurance Act?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No. I understand that is not the case. Under that act the Export Credit Insurance Corporation guarantees loans. It does not make loans, it only guarantees loans, whereas this particular corporation will be making loans.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: They guarantee payment don't they?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not think they guarantee the loan, I think they guarantee the payment under the terms of the contract.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is correct, they guarantee the money due to the Canadian exporter.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): They insure.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: This company does not do that, this company makes loans. That is the main difference between the Government company and this private company.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I suppose this company may make a loan to a company whose loans have been insured under the Government act.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, and that would be a very good loan.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: You could not ask for any better loan than that.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): A 100 per cent insured loan would be all right.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That would be the best possible loan that one could make.

It is proposed that the management of the affairs of this company will be vested in a Board of Directors of at least nine, all of whom must be properly elected by the shareholders of the company. The nine directors in turn would elect from among their number an Executive Committee of three, in addition.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Where is that in the bill? I can tell the honourable gentleman that it is not in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It will be in the by-laws, I take it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is a different thing.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: This information was provided to me by the sponsors of the bill, and I thought that at this stage it was advisable to tell honourable senators what the sponsors have in mind as to the management of the company.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Does the honourable gentleman mind if I interrupt?

Now, I may be mistaken about this, but I think this is what is intended: they start out by proposing three people to be the first directors of the company, but the bill does not say how many directors the company will have. I am not criticizing the honourable gentleman on this score, but I think that this bill should provide specifically for the number of directors of the company. If, for instance, a company is going to have nine directors, normally the petition to Parliament is made by nine persons and they are set up as the first directors of the company. Honourable senators, there may be a hole in the bill in that respect.

On the question of the Executive Committee, honourable senators know there is a provision in the Companies Act for an Executive Committee, and it may be that some of these sections of the Companies Act referred to in a later section of the bill bring the provision of the Companies Act in that respect into force. But I think there may be an omission here in connection with the directors.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Well, I will say this, that if there is a deficiency I know it is something that can be rectified and corrected when the bill reaches the committee stage.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Is it suggested that part 3 of the Companies Act governs this point?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Section 9 of the bill, where certain clauses of the Companies Act are made to apply, is the saving section. If it is proposed to have more directors than the number of sponsors named in the bill, however, I think that is something that can be definitely settled in committee, or under section 9 of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Although the bill says nothing about this, the directors also intend to have an Advisory Committee. This committee would be chosen by the directors from the leading representatives in Canada of industry, commerce, finance and agriculture. The intention is that the Advisory Committee would meet at the call of the Board of Directors, but in any event the by-laws of the company will provide that the Advisory Committee must meet at least once a year, in order to advise the Board of Directors. Now, while this is not covered in the bill—

Hon. Mr. Power: This sounds like the Social Register.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Not exactly. The Social Register includes a good many women, but I doubt if there will be many women on the Advisory Committee.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Why not?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: They often give advice of that kind, don't they?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You had better be careful on that score if you want to get the bill through this house.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I would like to say a few words with respect to the types of credit this corporation proposes to grant. I do not intend to cover each and every type of credit and assistance the company is prepared to give, but to mention only about half a dozen.

The first relates to the financing of exports. The corporation proposes to purchase from Canadian manufacturers and exporters the dollar obligations due to them as a result of sales of capital goods and services abroad. Such purchases would include sales in respect of which credit terms up to five years have been given by Canadian manufacturers and exporters. There is a field that this company can service, a field which the banks would not ordinarily be interested in servicing, and it includes making a loan where there are credit terms up to five years. Banks as a rule like to make short-term loans and keep their money turning over during short periods of time.

Also, loans would be made to foreign importers from Canada. The corporation proposes to make both direct or indirect loans to foreign buyers of Canadian products. Such loans of course would have to be supported by a financial agreement entered into with the foreign importer. Briefly, the agreement would provide for the purchase by the corporation of dollar obligations in favour of one or more Canadian manufacturers and/or exporters. In the event a foreign importer of Canadian products was unable to obtain dollar exchange, but was willing and able to pay in terms of the local currency of its country, the corporation might purchase such currency and pay the Canadian exporter therefor in Canadian dollars.

The company also proposes to give serious consideration to the matter of making loans to foreign governments, in order that such governments may purchase products, materials and equipment as required by them for the development of their own countries.

It is possible that the corporation will make agency loans, and these would be transactions in which the corporation would act as an intermediary or an agent. In such cases the corporation would entertain financing applications for resale to a lender in another country on a fee or commission basis.

Hon. Mr. Power: Just there, may I ask my honourable friend what is meant by the language? Are you asking for the right to entertain financing applications for resale to a lender in another country? What do you mean by the word "entertain" in that sense, to think about it?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: To think about it, consider it, and I think even to go as far as to grant it.

Hon. Mr. Power: Are you not going a little far in your use of the word "entertain"?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It is perhaps stretching the use of the word a little, but you have to entertain a loan before you make it.

Hon. Mr. Power: Why put in the word "entertain"? Surely a corporation can think about making a loan any time it likes. We will either give the corporation power to make loans or we will not. We don't need to give it power to think about them.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Does that provision appear in the bill?

Hon. Mr. Power: Section 6(e).

You can give the corporation power to make a loan if you like, but not to think about it. Surely people still have the right to think in this country, without applying to Parliament for it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I know of a more interesting way of entertaining.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Probably it would not be as lucrative.

Also, this corporation may participate with a financing syndicate for the purpose of underwriting a loan, or a series of loans. It might participate with a buyer and seller in an export-import transaction; and finally, it could participate with others prepared to accept instalment payments on loan transactions, provided such instalment payments do not extend beyond the period of five years.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is that in the bill?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No. I am giving a general statement of what the sponsors of the bill have in mind. I did not propose this afternoon to discuss it clause by clause, but to leave that for consideration when the bill comes before the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You are giving a discussion of the policy of the sponsors' thinking.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am giving the thinking of the people behind the bill, which I believe is what honourable senators would like to have.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Finally, in the case of a foreign corporation, partnership or even an individual of extremely high credit standing, and engaged in trade with Canada and wishing to expand for the primary purpose of improving business with Canada and Canadian exporters, the corporation could grant a direct loan for such purpose. In consideration of such financing the corporation might well expect to retain a common stock interest, royalty or other equity benefits.

The sponsors of this bill have—and they will tell you about it when they appear before the committee—worked out a rather elaborate system for making applications for credit. The system which they propose to adopt is certainly a very thorough and efficient one. However, I do not propose to elaborate and set out in detail those things which must be done step by step in applying for credit. But I can assure honourable senators that when this bill is considered by the Banking and Commerce committee there will be present someone from among the sponsors who can and will be able to outline in detail everything which relates to an application for credit.

I have spoken about the type of loans which this corporation proposes to make. I would like now to say a few words about the types of loans that will not be considered by this corporation.

The first is known as bail-out loans. By this I mean the corporation would not entertain any financing which is required to bail out an existing creditor.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Why not?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They do not feel that is the type of loan they should give. When you offer a bail-out loan you are usually offering it to save somebody's hide, so to speak. It is a bad type of loan.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is because it is a bad risk for them?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: A bad risk for them. That is one type of loan that will not be considered by this corporation.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): This again is a matter of policy.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: This is all policy.

Secondly, the corporation does not intend to provide working capital for the normal of business. This is not considered the function of this corporation, and loans for this purpose will not be considered.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But they will have power to make such loans.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There might be a change of policy.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: There might be; but at the present time that is not one of their purposes in coming to Parliament and asking to be incorporated by this private act.

Thirdly—and this I want to emphasize—the corporation would not under any circumstances compete with the finance facilities ordinarily provided and furnished by the chartered banks of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Do you know why?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They still feel they should not get into that field, and that they should not be a competitor of the banks. When I come to speak of the proposals with respect to stock, you will learn of an additional reason there.

The corporation does not propose to entertain any loan below the sum of $500. This is the minimum amount, and at the present time no maximum figure for any loan is contemplated. Should, however, a single transaction or a series of transactions call for a higher amount of financing than the corporation is willing to entertain and make, it might form a financing syndicate with other approved lenders to furnish the total financial assistance which would be required.

I think it should be pointed out that one or more types of guarantees are generally available in the financing of export loans. For example, where an importer is required to obtain an import licence in order to secure dollar exchange it is usual for the local national bank or some government credit organization to guarantee the availability of the exchange. Any such guarantee of course would have to be in favour of the corporation. In certain other instances due to special factors within a foreign country, and also due to the credit standing of the borrower, additional guarantees might be required in the form of liens on exports, and the corporation would have to be subrogated to all the security rights held by an exporter.

The powers of this corporation are set out in section 6 of the bill. For the purpose of avoiding any controversy, if for no other reason, I do not propose to get into lengthy discussions today about them. I feel they could be covered much more fully and much better when the bill is before a committee.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: May I ask the honourable senator in what manner the corporation would proceed in order to get a line of products which might be exported and which do not come within the provisions of the Bank Act?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Suppose, for instance, that motorcars were to be exported. The importer might buy them under a conditional sales agreement, or he might give a chattel mortgage to cover them. That security would be assigned to this company if it made a loan against that account. That is one illustration which occurs to me at the moment.

With respect to the capitalization of the company, it is proposed that the corporation will have an authorized capital of $50 million, consisting of 10 million shares of par value of $5 each, and in the event of additional capital being required the corporation will have access to lines of credit and borrowing as provided by Canadian banks. Possibly another reason why the corporation does not want to compete with the banks is that it will be going to the banks from time to time to borrow money.

Furthermore, if it is found that the corporation requires additional capital funds beyond the amount realized from the sale of its capital stock, and beyond the amount which it can borrow from Canadian banks, the corporation will issue and sell to the general public its notes and serial debentures.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is there power for that in the bill?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Oh, yes; clause 8.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Finally, I would like to point out to honourable senators, I am advised—and I have every reason to believe this is correct—that it is proposed, when the capital stock of this corporation is offered for sale, that part of such offering will be taken up by the chartered banks of this country, and the general public will be given the right to subscribe and take up the remainder of any such offering.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Now we know why they do not compete with the banks.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I said I would eventually come to that point. The corporation will be borrowing from the banks, and the Canadian public also will be shareholders in the company.

Hon. Mr. Power: The honourable senator has not told us which Canadian banks will be their sponsors.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: All of them. It is proposed that all the banks subscribe for stock.

Hon. Mr. Power: "It is proposed"?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: And all the banks are willing to subscribe.

I have nothing more to say about this bill. As I have said, and I now repeat, I have not dealt this afternoon with the clauses; I set out to tell this honourable chamber something of the thinking of the sponsors; and of course the bill will be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee. I shall arrange for the sponsors to be there, so that a full explanation can be given with respect to each and every clause, and the sponsors will be available to answer any other questions, grammatical or otherwise.

Hon. Mr. Power: May I suggest to the sponsors that they might try to have a title for their corporation other than Export Finance Corporation "of Canada", because it gives the impression that the company has some governmental support.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I may tell the honourable senator that numerous names were suggested. One I know of is "Canadian Export-Import Finance Corporation".

Hon. Mr. Power: It is the words "of Canada" to which I object. I think the promoters should reconsider that.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Let me say that this name was submitted to the Finance Department of Canada. It was, I believe, looked at by the Inspector General of Banks, and the name in the bill was found to be satisfactory to the Government departments to which it was submitted. For that reason it was finally adopted. I realize it might give the impression that this is a Government corporation. It is not, however, a Government corporation, but surely the company should not be barred from using the word "Canada" in its name, because after all we want the world to know that this is a Canadian company. How can we bring it to world-wide attention if "Canada" is not included?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It might help if "Limited" were put at the end.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: The objects of the corporation are to finance and facilitate exports and imports. We infer from that, of course, that the financing of exports or imports is by the finance corporation and not actually the importer or the exporter. Would it have the right to insure under the Export Credits Insurance Act?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, this is a loaning company.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: It would not have any right to insure?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, it does not insure loans of any type. It makes loans. We have a Government agency which now insures loans, and this corporation would stay entirely out of this field.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: And they could not use the facilities of the Export Credits Insurance Act for their own ends?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Oh, yes; that would be the best type of loan they could make.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: And not be exporters themselves.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They would buy an export loan that could be insured by the Government. Of course, they would take any of these particular loans which were available.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): What section of the bill authorizes the company to issue debentures?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Section 9, where use is made of sections of the Companies Act.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Section 63 of the Companies Act, which is referred to in clause 9, provides the general powers to do that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: While the honourable senator is referring to the Companies Act, what is set forth in the sections of the act which are mentioned in clause 10 of this bill? These particular sections are not to apply to this bill.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: We can get that information in committee.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The honourable senator has not that information at hand?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No. I have not a copy of the Companies Act here.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, there are a couple of matters I would like to mention now. I think they would be more appropriately taken up in committee, but to clear the air to my own satisfaction I should like to say a few things now.

This bill, I believe, is an entirely new departure from anything which has hitherto come before Parliament; and as, presumably, the corporation is going to deal with a great many foreign corporations in various countries of the world, there are two or three concrete things which occur to me that may be of great importance.

It is a new kind of company. It is to deal with foreign trade which in many respects is very closely tied up with the foreign policy of the country, and there is no restriction contained in this measure which makes the activities of this company subject to the foreign policy of the Government of the day. This is a very general consideration, but since we are starting into a new field perhaps it is a pertinent point to be considered.

The second point is that this company even contemplates making loans to foreign Governments. Here again the question of our foreign policy may be involved. There may be countries to which the Government of the day—any Canadian Government—might object to making loans. Would there be anything to restrict the activities of this company if it were to violate the foreign policy of the Canadian Government at any given time?

Another point is that, as honourable senators are aware, small loan companies which operate in the domestic field in Canada are subject to the restrictions of the Small Loan Companies Act. A few years ago a Senate committee spent a considerable length of time dealing with legislation involving restrictions to be applied to small loan companies.

Here we have a business company, a loan company, operating not in the field of domestic trade but in the field of foreign trade, and we have no restriction of any kind as to interest, carrying charges and that kind of thing. Perhaps there is no room for that type of requirement.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: May I interject that the bill in question was submitted to Mr. MacGregor, Superintendent of Insurance, and he went over it carefully and sent it back. I understand he expressed the opinion that neither he nor his department had any interest in it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That might answer this problem. As I say, these are matters which can be considered in committee.

Section 6 of the bill provides that the company may purchase and sell securities and generally deal in coin, bullion and the like. Certainly the banks can deal with these elements. The honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) has said that the banks are vitally interested in the activities of the proposed corporation, and I wondered whether there might be some conflict between this section of the bill and what the banks do.

The honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power) raised an objection to the word "entertain" in paragraph (e) of section 6. I think that the first few lines of section 6 are unusual in a power clause like this. They read:

> The corporation, in the furtherance of its objects and not excluding the other powers necessary to their achievement—

Section 9 of the bill refers to various sections in the Companies Act, the first one being section 14, which provides for the incidental and auxiliary powers which all companies incorporated by letters patent have. Whether the words in the first part of Section 6 are necessary, in view of section 14, is again, I think, a matter for study in committee. I have not got down to a consideration of the sections of the Companies Act which have been eliminated by section 10 of this bill, but again I think that is a matter for study in committee.

At this time I should like to raise a question in connection with section 8 of the bill, which provides that the corporation may from time to time make by-laws with reference to the issue of preferred shares. Normally in a letters patent company the issuance of preferred shares can be made by by-law, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State. I thought section 9 might require the Secretary of State to approve the terms and conditions of preferred shares. However, section 59 of the Companies Act, which appears to deal with this matter, has not been included in the list of sections of the Companies Act which are brought into play by section 9 of this bill. Generally speaking, the overriding thought I have is that the bill may be a perfectly valid one and it may promise to fill a need with respect to the problem of financing the exports and even the imports of this country, but the proposal is a new departure and the company presumably is going to be able to operate without regulations of any kind. It is going to be its own master, and may even have the right to do things which may be contrary to the foreign policy of the Government of the day.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I am afraid I do not view this legislation in the same way as some honourable members do. Perhaps my experience has been different from theirs, but I have never found people to complain when they have been able to borrow from a loan company. They have only complained when a loan company has demanded exorbitant interest rates. I might say quite candidly to my honourable friend from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) that we in western Canada are finding it difficult to sell such products as grain, cattle and hogs on foreign markets. If I had any spare money I don't know that I would be anxious to buy stock in this company. It is taking all the risk. We are taking none at all. No dominion Government is going to go into the foreign investment market, at least I hope not. We can get into enough trouble in our home investment market. The present Government, like the previous one, has engaged in new deals—financing industries, and one thing and another. The federal Government has been engaged in the financing of railways for a very long time, but has not made much success of the railways, as all of us know. If there is a body in Canada that is willing to put up money to make loans to foreign countries in order to facilitate the sale of our goods to those countries, I for one have no objection, and I am confident that the people in the province I represent would be one hundred per cent in support of this bill. The problem we face if, for instance, we wish to sell grain to Poland, or to any other foreign country, is that we cannot feel sure of being paid right away. Our farmers have no organization to find out whether the government of another country is good for the money or not. The corporation that is proposed by this bill would have the means to ascertain if the credit of another country is good and whether the goods would be paid for or not. I have always found that the fellow who is in the business of lending money is always a good business man and able to look after difficulties as they arise. The fellow I always feel sorry for is the one who has made and saved some money and makes loans personally. He generally ends up in the ditch.

Honourable senators, there may be some merit in the points my friend has raised, but we can take care of them in committee. If there is one thing that this house can take credit for, it is in being a capital body in committee. When a bill gets to committee we try to clear up all misunderstandings concerning it, and I think we are quite capable of doing so. While the honourable member from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) may be a very able man, I think the rest of us can take care of him when a bill is being discussed in committee.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am the first to admit that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: A pretty difficult task.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I do not think we would give in to any power that might be to the detriment of Canada. Of all the legislative bodies in Canada, this house represents that side of Canadian opinion that is terribly anxious to see that the man who has had no training in law, or who lacks experience, does not get a bad deal against himself from some others in his own country. We will see to it, therefore, that this legislation does not give anyone any special power over the Canadian borrower. At the same time, I want reputable lenders to have every encouragement. If they are able to lend money to foreign countries, such as China, for instance—for we have been trying to do business with that country—let them go ahead. The Government should not do it. In fact, I would vote solidly against the Government doing so. I for one would do my very best in committee to make the legislation look as attractive as possible to men who are willing to put up the necessary money required, because I am positive Canada would benefit from it now and in the years to come.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators,—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Are you closing the debate?

The Hon. the Speaker: May I remind the honourable senator that if he speaks now, it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, my friend from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) referred to clause (b) of clause 6 of the bill, which says that the corporation may —purchase and sell securities, coin, bullion and exchange and guarantee securities.

Am I right in assuming that he had some doubt that it would be lawful for this company to deal in bullion? Anybody can deal in bullion today. You can go down to the Toronto stock exchange and deal in it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You can even buy gold.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes, you can even buy gold; and bullion is generally considered as gold.

Honourable senators, in connection with loans to foreign governments, I realize that if I started to enumerate every type of loan which might be made to a foreign government we would be here most of the afternoon. I have three examples here of what the company proposes in respect to loans to foreign countries. They are not all inclusive, but they will give honourable senators some idea of the thinking of the sponsors of the bill.

The first example they give is this: A government wishes to purchase Canadian-made fire-fighting apparatus and pay for it over a period of five years; such a loan they would be glad to entertain. The second example: The government of a small country wishes to build a public highway, and for this purpose will engage Canadian engineering skills, a Canadian roadbuilding contractor, and will purchase steel and other supplies and equipment in Canada; such a loan would be entertained by this corporation. The third example: A government wishes to purchase—and I am sure the honourable senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) will be glad to hear this—Canadian food products—wheat, barley, oats, rye—and will make payment over a period of five years; a loan for that purpose to a foreign government would be entertained.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No such loans are made by banks now?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, I do not think there is any bank in Canada today that makes a loan to a foreign government. I believe the banks have a two-year limit on loans today.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Loans can always be renewed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The two-year limit does not apply to loans for housing.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Well, they are a special type.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, that is the last item on our order paper for today. The only item of any urgent importance to be dealt with before the Senate adjourns for the Easter recess is consideration of the final supplementary estimates. Honourable senators have had these estimates in their possession for a week or more, and have been able to study them. Some honourable senators have sent me questions they would like to have answered when these estimates are being considered here. I may say the House of Commons is still dealing with the estimates; a moment or so ago I was informed there were 40 or more votes awaiting consideration. Under its rules the Commons will not be able to continue dealing with the estimates beyond 5 o'clock. At that hour it must take up private members' bills. In that house Monday is private members' day, so if we do not receive the supplementary estimates today there will be no object in adjourning till Monday. In those circumstances we could adjourn until Tuesday evening, in the hope that by then the supplementary estimates would have been passed and sent to the Senate. Royal assent could perhaps be given to them, and to the supply bill and other bills, that evening or the following afternoon.

What I had in mind when I came into the chamber, honourable senators, was that if the supplementary estimates had not reached us by the time we were ready to adjourn we should adjourn during pleasure, to come back at the call of the bell, around 5 o'clock. By then we should know what the prospects are. That is what I now suggest. I see the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) nodding his head, so I make a motion to that effect.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, the Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I wish to make an announcement with respect to further sittings of the house.

It has been decided in the other place to continue to discuss the supplementary estimates until 6 o'clock, without taking up any private bills. It is therefore possible that these estimates will reach us today, and in the circumstances I think we should again adjourn during pleasure, to meet at 6 o'clock.

The Hon. the Speaker: In that event, would we have royal assent tonight?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I cannot say yet, Mr. Speaker, but at six o'clock we ought to know whether or not we should adjourn until Monday.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): May I ask the Leader of the Government this: If the bill comes before us tonight, will we have any opportunity whatever to ask questions on any of the items contained in it?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes. I have the answers to the questions that my honourable friend told me he would ask.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, the Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 6.15 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 3

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill C-36, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1959.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: With leave, I move the second reading now.

I should like to draw attention to the fact that the further supplementary estimates have been in the hands of honourable senators for a week or more, and if any honourable members have not brought their copies with them, there are others available for distribution. I know that honourable senators have studied these estimates carefully, and for that reason I may not be required to give such a detailed explanation as I might otherwise do. The honourable gentleman from Queens-Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Smith) gave me notice that he would ask certain questions, and I hope to be able to satisfy him with the proper answers.

It will be seen that Vote No. 723, in the amount of $15,017,182, is required to cover the net operating loss of the Agricultural Stabilization Board. That is one of the large items, and later on I shall give a brief explanation of it. Another large vote is No. 734, having to do with the cost of providing flour for Palestine refugees; the amount is $1,500,000. Vote No. 741 has to do with the furnishing of wheat and flour to commonwealth countries in south and southeast Asia to relieve food shortages up to April 1, 1960: the amount is $13,500,000. In Vote No. 752 provision is made for the cost of administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act, $2,227,000. Vote No. 764 covers reduction of loans made by the Minister of Finance to the old age security fund, $184 million. Vote No. 788 is for another large amount, $51,591,424, to provide for the Canadian National Railways deficit. These six votes I have mentioned total $267,835,606, and constitute by far the greater part of the total supplementary estimates contained in the bill.

Honourable senators, I said I would give a brief explanation of each of these large items. First of all I will deal with Vote 723. The Agricultural Stabilization Act chapter 22, Statutes of 1957-58, provides authority for the establishment in the Consolidated Revenue Fund of an account known as the Agricultural Commodities Stabilization Account. It also provides authority to credit this account with all moneys received by the board from its operations and to make expenditures out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund under this act providing that the debit balance in the account shall not be greater than $250 million.

The act also directs as follows:

> At the end of each fiscal year the Minister of Finance shall determine the net profit or loss on the operation of the account for that fiscal year, and if he determines that there is a net profit it shall be charged to the account, but if he determines that there is a net loss no amount shall be credited to the account in respect thereof without the authority of Parliament.

It has been the practice for several years to include an item in the final supplementary estimates for the purpose of reporting the results of the annual operations under the act, and to gain parliamentary authority to recoup the account for any known loss sustained throughout the year. An amount of $15,017,182, is being voted for that purpose.

I now wish to make a few remarks with regard to Vote 734, which has to do with the purchase of flour for the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East. The amount is $1,500,000. This agency has been supplying food, shelter and medical care, as well as such rehabilitation facilities as funds permitted, to the Arab refugees.

In 1958 Canada gave its usual cash contribution of $500,000 to U.N.R.W.A. and also $1,500,000 as a special flour contribution similar to the contribution now proposed. For 1959, a $500,000 cash contribution is included in the main estimates. It is expected that this flour will begin to move almost immediately, and for that reason the item is included in these estimates.

I would like to make some remarks now with regard to Vote 735, which has to do with the Canadian Government's assessment toward financing the United Nations Emergency Force in respect to the calendar year 1959. The amount is $458,118. Along with our assessment for membership in the United Nations Organization there was received this year a notice of assessment toward the financing of United Nations Emergency Force, which has operated on the borders of Egypt since November, 1956. This item represents Canada's share, as one of the members of the United Nations, of the 1959 costs of maintaining that Emergency Force. It will be recalled that this force was organized in 1956 without prior agreement as to the reimbursement of costs incurred. Canada was one of the main contributors of military services for the force. It has now been agreed in principle that the United Nations will reimburse Canada for the costs of maintenance of spare parts required for unit equipment and aircraft, for food and billeting costs overseas and for transportation costs outside of Canada. An amount of $1,827,729 is expected to be refunded to Canada by the United Nations during the current year on this account. Such refunds are paid to the Consolidated Revenue Fund, but we require the $458,118 to make up the difference.

Vote 741 has to do with the purchase of wheat and flour to be given to commonwealth countries in South and Southeast Asia to relieve food shortages. It is one of the large items, and provides for the gift of $13½ million of wheat and wheat flour, or some 8 million bushels, to the Commonwealth Colombo Plan countries. It is expected that the wheat and wheat flour will start moving as soon as the necessary shipping arrangements can be made, and that all of it will have moved not later than the end of the current crop year.

Vote 764 is a very large item having to do with the reduction in the amount owing by the Old Age Security Fund, pursuant to section 11 of the Old Age Security Act, in an amount equal to the amount of outstanding temporary loans made by the Minister of Finance to the fund before the first day of April 1959. In that connection, honourable senators, may I say that under the authority of section 11 of the Old Age Security Act payments of old age pensions are charged to the special account called the Old Age Security Fund, to which are credited from time to time the amounts collected from the special assessments of two per cent on personal incomes, two per cent on corporation profits, and two per cent sales tax. To cover off temporary deficits arising in the fund, the Minister of Finance may direct that the necessary amounts be credited to the fund as temporary loans, to be repaid and charged to the fund in such manner as he directs.

Vote 788 is another large item. It covers the Canadian National Railways deficit for 1958, in the amount of $51,591,424. In this connection, I would like to inform honourable senators that section 9 of the Canadian National Financing and Guarantee Acts of 1957 and 1958 authorized the Minister of Finance to make advances to the Canadian National Railways Company on deficit accounts to enable the company to meet its current financial obligations, subject to reimbursement from the annual revenues of the company in so far as such revenues are sufficient, and any insufficiency shall be provided by subsequent appropriation by Parliament. Advances made to the Company by the Minister of Finance on account of the 1958 deficit under the above statutes are recoverable from this appropriation.

Honourable senators, that gives a brief explanation of the six votes or so that I mentioned when I made my opening remarks. In view of the fact that they cover the greater part of these further supplementary estimates, I thought it as well to give honourable senators as much information as I am able to give at the present time.

I am informed by the honourable senator from Queens-Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Smith) that he has certain questions to ask me, and I would like, with the leave of the Senate, to deal with them now, if he will put them to me.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): I will be very glad to. First I want to thank the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for making use of the notice I gave him a few days ago of the questions I am going to ask.

My first question is in connection with vote 718, Department of Agriculture, Marketing Service. This is an item for subsidies paid to cold storage warehouses. My curiosity was aroused because one item is a very small one and the others are not so very large, for the provinces of Newfoundland, Quebec and Ontario. I would like to know what the situation was with regard to the other Maritime provinces, and in particular Nova Scotia, and I would appreciate it if the leader could provide the names of applicants for subsidies for cold storage facilities in Nova Scotia during the last three years, the names of those to whom subsidies were granted, and the amount of each subsidy.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will be glad to give the answer. I thank the honourable senator for giving me advance notice of his questions. It has helped me a great deal, because in studying these supplementary estimates it is very hard to keep in mind all the details.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You do very well.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The answer to the honourable senator's question is as follows:

In 1956, Bridgeport Co-operative Small Fruits Association, Bridgeport, Nova Scotia, received an approved subsidy of $35,571. In 1957, A.C.A. Co-operative Association Limited, of New Minas, Nova Scotia, received an approved subsidy of $56,834. In 1958, Eastern Co-operative Services Limited, Sydney, Nova Scotia, received an approved subsidy of $50,000.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Will the honourable leader furnish the names of all applicants who might have applied for subsidies over the last three years? I am wondering whether or not some applications were made that the Department of Agriculture did not see fit to deal with in such a way as to make subsidies available to the applicants.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not think I have the answer to that question, but in view of the fact that these subsidies were granted I presume they were asked for.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Yes, but my question is whether or not there were other applicants for subsidies whose applications were not granted.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am sorry I have no information on that point.

Hon. Mr. Smith: Would the honourable leader let us have the answer some time later?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will take notice of your question and I will see that the answer is placed on Hansard in due course.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Thank you very much.

While I am on my feet may I ask a question with relation to item 779, Department of Transport, Marine Services, Steamship Inspection Service. What is the purpose of the contribution to the Dominion Marine Association of Toronto, Ontario? We have so few opportunities to ask questions of this kind when final estimates come to us, as we are usually in a greater rush than we are tonight. If the honourable leader has the answer to that question I would like to have it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The purpose of the contribution is to provide financial assistance to the Dominion Marine Association toward the maintenance of a Marine Engineering School in Toronto to prepare candidates for Department of Transport examinations with a view to obtaining certificates of competency as marine engineers.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Thank you very much.

May I now ask a question with regard to item 786, also a Department of Transport item, relating to Steamship Services, Yarmouth, Nova Scotia-Bar Harbour, Maine Ferry? What is the total estimated deficit for the year 1958-59? I would also like to know whether the honourable leader is in a position to put on record the number of passengers, automobiles, and trucks entering or leaving Yarmouth by the steamship Bluenose. Those of us who are from Nova Scotia have received all sorts of requests to provide some extra service connecting Nova Scotia with the United States, and I am wondering whether the Government of Nova Scotia has requested assistance with respect to additional steamship service between the province of Nova Scotia and the United States.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will do my best to answer the honourable senator's question.

The total estimated deficit for 1958-59 for the Yarmouth-Bar Harbour ferry is $203,346. The number of passengers, automobiles and trucks entering and leaving Yarmouth in 1958 by way of the ferry is as follows:

	Leaving Yarmouth	Entering Yarmouth	Total
Passengers	44,140	43,866	88,006
Automobiles	12,859	13,424	26,283
Trucks	1,386	1,213	2,599

My honourable friend also gave notice of this question:

Has the Government of Nova Scotia requested assistance with respect to the providing of additional steamship services between Nova Scotia and United States?

The Department of Transport advises that they have no official record of any recent representations by the province of Nova Scotia with respect to the Yarmouth-Bar Harbour ferry.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Honourable senators, may I say that my question did not relate to additional service from Yarmouth to Bar Harbour. My question was with respect to providing additional service between Nova Scotia and the United States, which service could very well be from Shelburne, for instance, to Boston.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: To some other port?

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Yes. I was wondering if any discussions were being held between the two Governments with respect to some other service to be provided between our province of Nova Scotia and the United States.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: My answer does not seem to go far enough. I shall get the information for the honourable senator and see that it is placed on the record.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): I am grateful to the leader.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That, honourable senators, is a brief explanation of the main items of the supplementary estimates.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, this is the third supplementary estimates bill that has come to us during the present fiscal year. It is a financial bill, has been approved by the other house, and I have no doubt will be approved by this house. In effect, there is very little point in our voting against the bill, because practically all the money has been spent; at least if it has not been spent, it will be spent by March 31.

I should, however, point out—and this is all I intend to say—that in passing this bill we are approving the final items of the largest expenditures ever been made in one year by any Government of Canada.

If honourable senators will refer to the main estimates that were tabled during this fiscal year, they will note that the amount was $5,178,800,000. The first supplementary estimates amounted to $116,800,000; the second supplementary estimates amounted to $28 million; and the supplementary estimates now before us amount in all to $284,942,864. If honourable senators total the supplementary estimates and add them to the main estimates, they will find, as I said a moment ago, the grand total is greater than any amount ever spent by any Government in Canada, either during war or in peace.

I emphasize that by the passage of this bill for $284 million-odd, we are actually approving the total expenditures of this huge amount to which I have referred.

I wish I could have been as courteous as the honourable member from Queens-Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Smith), and have given the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) notice of the question I am going to ask, but it came only recently to my attention. If he has not the information now I hope he will make it available early after the Easter recess.

I said at the beginning of my remarks that all this money has been or is being spent or will be spent by March 31. In that statement I am not correct, because, if honourable senators will look at Vote No. 734, on page 5 of the bill, they will notice under the heading, "External Affairs—Terminable Services":

> Purchase of flour to be given to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,—Further amount required and, notwithstanding section 35 of the Financial Administration Act, to authorize payments to be made pursuant to this vote up to the 1st day of April 1960.

Honourable senators will also observe Vote 741, which reads as follows:

> Purchase of wheat and flour to be given to commonwealth countries in South and South-East Asia to relieve food shortages and, notwithstanding section 35 of the Financial Administration Act, to authorize payments to be made pursuant to this vote up to the 1st day of April, 1960.

The estimate is for the financial year which begins April 1, 1959 and extends to March 31, 1960, and it seems to me that this expenditure will be made not during this fiscal year, but during the next. My question to the honourable leader is, why has this amount been included in the estimates for the fiscal year which is about to close? I am not going to suggest that it is added to this amount so that next year's expenditures will not appear to be as large as they really are—probably another record is to be established next year in connection with expenditures—but I wish the honourable leader would explain why we are asked to approve tonight of an expenditure which will not be made until the next fiscal year.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The memorandum I have here in this connection is that it is expected the flour will begin to move immediately.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, but the expenditure is not to be made until next year.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It will be if the flour is moved now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Only for the flour which is moved this year.

Hon. Mr. Power: The honourable Leader of the Government said that this flour would be moved before the end of the crop year, which is when, July?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The 31st day of July. I think this question was answered in the other place, but if the reply then given is not satisfactory I shall furnish the answer, perhaps before we adjourn tonight.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Certainly the answer is not satisfactory. Even if the movement of the flour began today and the money was spent today, it should be included in these estimates. If the flour is to be moved after April 1, then the money will be spent after April 1 and should be included in the estimates for next year.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Presumably the department had to buy the flour so that they could begin to ship it out, and that is the reason the item is in the estimates.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I don't think so. I don't believe the money has been spent.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: There may be a commitment to the flour mills, and for that reason the amount is included. However, we shall get a further explanation.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be read the third time now, so that it may be given royal assent along with other bills later this evening.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform you that I have received the following message from the secretary to the Governor General:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa

March 20, 1959.

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 20th March, at 7.15 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Lionel Massey,
Secretary to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Honourable senators, as you know, Disraeli once said that only the young are disappointed. I am beginning to think that if a certain eventuality had not taken place here quite a number of older people would have been very disappointed. We ought to be thankful to the members of the other house for expediting the passage of this supply bill so that we older people would not be disappointed.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, the Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

Motion agreed to.

MEDWAY RIVER SALMON REARING PONDS

INQUIRY AND ANSWER

Hon. Donald Smith inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

With respect to salmon-rearing facilities on the Medway River at Charleston, N.S.—

(1) What financial contribution has been made by the federal Government for (a) operation, (b) construction and maintenance?

(2) What is the number of young salmon released directly from these facilities into the Medway River?

(3) How does the size and condition of the released young salmon compare with those of the same age from rearing ponds wholly owned and operated by the federal Government in Queens County, N.S.?

(4) What consideration is being given to federal participation in the enlargement of such facilities on the Medway River?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have the following answers to the honourable gentleman's inquiry:

1. (a) None.
(b) None.
2. 47,500.
3. No information available.
4. Federal Government will co-operate by supplying small fish and by giving advice but will not otherwise participate.

MEDWAY RIVER SALMON FISHWAYS

INQUIRY AND ANSWER

Hon. Donald Smith inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

(1) During 1958 how many Atlantic salmon were taken from the Medway River, Queens County, N.S., its tributaries and adjacent coastal waters by
(a) Anglers,
(b) Net fishermen?

(2) For what distance do suitable spawning areas extend in the Medway River and its tributaries above the Nova Scotia Power Commission dam at Harmony?

(3) Does the Department of Fisheries operate a salmon-counting trap and fishway at Harmony?

(4) If so, how many salmon have passed through the Harmony installations for each year of record?

(5) When will the operation of the present counting-trap be discontinued?

(6) What steps are being taken to improve the efficiency of the fishway facilities at Harmony by
(a) New construction,
(b) Provision of a constant flow of water at optimum levels?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have the following answers to these questions:

1. (a) 1,038.
(b) In Medway estuary and area from Frying Pan Island to Rugged Harbour—368.
2. 72 miles of stream and tributaries.
3. Yes.
4. 1953—17
1954—16
1955— 1
1956— 1
1958— 3.
5. 1959.
6. Complete investigation is planned for 1959 to provide basis for decision as to need for new construction or change in regulated flows.

CIVIL SERVANTS

DESIGNATION—INQUIRY AND ANSWER

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. Referring to all those who are in the service of the Government of Canada and who are under the head of a department or who are in any Government agency, are there any who are not called Civil Servants nor designated as such?

2. If so, why? And what is the demarcation line for the appellation of Civil Servant?

3. Can the Civil Service Commissioners be properly called or designated as Civil Servants?

4. If not, why?

5. During each one of the last five years, how many persons have been appointed by order in council in the service of the Government of Canada, without any qualifying Civil Service test?

6. Can they all be properly called Civil Servants and designated as such?

7. If not, why?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, the following answers have been received from the Civil Service Commission:

1. The expression "civil servant" has not been defined by federal law. Consequently, varying interpretations can be placed on its meaning. Although the expression "civil servant" has no legal definition, the expression "Civil Service" has been defined as follows in the Civil Service Act:

" 'Civil Service' means the civil positions and employees in and under the several departments of the Government of Canada, and in the offices of the Auditor General, the Clerk of the Privy Council, the Governor General's Secretary, the Public Archives, the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, the Civil Service Commission, and all other civil positions under and persons in the civil employ of Her Majesty, but not including the members of any commission or board appointed by the Governor in Council."

2, 3 and 4. See 1 above.

5. The total numbers of appointments made by the Civil Service commission without competition during the past five years are set out hereunder:

1954	144
1955	1538*
1956	151
1958	119

Although the approval of the Governor in Council was obtained to exempt the appointments referred to above from Section 19 of the Civil Service Act, the actual appointments were made by the Commission, not by the Governor in Council. The reasons for which no examinations were held in these cases are set out in yearly reports to Parliament by the Commission. The Civil Service Commission has no direct knowledge of the number or character of appointments made by the Governor in Council or by Crown agencies that are not subject to the Civil Service Act.

6 and 7. See 1 above.

*Amendment to the Defence Production Act in July, 1955, provided for the continuation of the Department of Defence Production. It was considered in the public interest to continue on a permanent basis those employees who had been on the staff since January 1, 1955, whose services had been satisfactory and who met the requirements of the Civil Service Act as to citizenship and residence in Canada. Approximately 1400 employees were affected.

BRITISH WEST INDIES

CANADIAN TRADE AND CURRENCY RELATIONS —INQUIRY AND ANSWER

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. If it is their policy to consider the early abandonment of the British West Indies Trade Liberalization Plan which came into effect some years ago to meet the Sterling Dollar exchange problems, which are now greatly alleviated, and whether in Canadian interests the plan should be regarded as having outlived its purpose and usefulness by reason of the fact that the value of imports from the British West Indies far exceeds the value of Canadian exports to that area, as well as the fact that there is currently going into the British West Indies large amounts of Canadian investment capital.

2. If the Government has made inquiries and is fully aware of the retarding effect the present system of currency clearance has on the sales enterprise of Canadian exporters in its application to the exporting from Canada of all goods except a limited number of items which come under the open general licence and whether they are aware of the fact that, by reason of the more complex procedure required, the exporters in Canada are at a great competitive disadvantage compared with exporters in the United States whose customers in the West Indies can arrange for currency clearances through the medium of their own Governments.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have the following answers to the honourable gentleman's questions:

1. The Government is well aware of the importance of expanding Canadian trade with the West Indies and is endeavouring to secure the early removal of remaining import restrictions against Canadian goods. The West Indies Trade Liberalization Plan came into effect in 1951 to provide some access to the West Indies for Canadian goods which would otherwise have been excluded from these markets because of dollar exchange difficulties. The need for continuing the Liberalization Plan is related to the progress made in dismantling the remaining restrictions on dollar imports. Since 1951 many of the items covered by the Plan have been transferred to Open General Licence, including potatoes, salted fish, meats, cheese, newsprint, kraft paper, apples and lumber. In the last few months most of the West Indian islands have further relaxed import restrictions in line with the decisions announced at the Commonwealth Conference. Nevertheless, a number of items which are of special interest to Canada, particularly in the field of manufactured goods and processed foods, are still restricted. For these goods, the Plan does ensure access to the West Indies Market. At the end of December, 1958, an announcement was made that the Liberalization Plan would be continued in 1959. Honourable senators may be assured that the usefulness of the Plan to Canada is being kept under close and active review in the light of changing circumstances.

2. The Government is satisfied that on balance Canadian exporters are not at a disadvantage under the Plan, relative to the position of U.S. exporters under the system of licensing applicable to them. The Canadian and U.S. Liberalization Plans were set up along somewhat different lines because of differences in the composition of trade with the West Indies and in the traditional trade relationships with these territories. For Canadian exporters all that is necessary to obtain an import licence from the West Indian authorities is to present a voucher obtained from the Department of Trade and Commerce in Ottawa. The Department has tried to keep the operation of the Plan as simple and flexible as possible. Participants are informed at the beginning of each year of the minimum value of business for which they will be able to obtain import licences. During the course of the year they may be given additional vouchers if unused balances are available. In practice, the Department has been able to approve most of the applications made by Canadian exporters for allocations to ship items covered under the Plan. Many Canadian exporters have testified to the value of the Trade Liberalization Plan in enabling them to maintain their business connections in the West Indies during the last seven years, when our exports to the Islands have been under severe restriction.

CIVIL SERVICE

MERIT SYSTEM—INQUIRY AND ANSWER

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. In the Civil Service of Canada is there any such thing as the so-called merit system?
2. If so, what is it?
3. Does it apply to appointments by order in council without any previous competitive test?
4. If so, how does it work?
5. If not, why?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have the following answers to the honourable gentleman's questions:

1. Yes.

2. The Civil Service Act, which has remained substantively unchanged since 1918, provides inter alia that "all appointments to the Civil Service shall be upon competitive examination", that "such examinations may be written or oral or in the form of a demonstration of skill or any combination of these, and they shall be of a character fairly to test and determine the relative fitness and ability of candidates actually to perform the duties of the class to which they seek to be appointed, and any investigation of training and experience and any test of technical knowledge, manual skill, or physical fitness that, in the judgment of the Commission, serves to this end may be employed", and that "except as herein provided, the examinations shall be open to all persons who may be lawfully appointed to any position within the class for which they are held, with such limitations as may be specified in the regulations of the Commission as to age, sex, health, habits, residence, moral character and other qualifications that are, in the judgment of the Commission, requisite to the performance of the duties of such positions".

The above extracts from the Civil Service Act are directed to the manner in which initial appointments are to be made to the Civil Service. With regard to promotions within the service, subsection (2) of section 49 of the act states that "promotions shall be made for merit by the Commission upon such examination, reports, tests, records, ratings or recommendations as the Commission may by regulation prescribe".

3. In a relatively few cases, appointments are made without competition to positions which are subject to the provisions of the Civil Service Act. All these appointments, together with the reasons for which no competitive process was employed, are reported annually to Parliament by the Civil Service Commission. After initial appointment, however, all persons in this category are subject to all the provisions of the Civil Service Act, including the provisions relating to promotion referred to above. This, however, does not apply to individuals and groups of individuals in the Public Service who are not subject to the provisions of the Civil Service Act.

4 and 5. See 3 above.

INFLATION

MOTION TO INSTRUCT FINANCE COMMITTEE TO MAKE STUDY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, March 18, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Wall:

That the Standing Committee on Finance be instructed to study the threat of inflation in Canada;
That the committee have the authority to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I would sooner be some place else this evening, in view of the fact that during my younger days I had a great deal to do with hockey, having played in quite a few hundred games. But duty comes first.

I will be as brief as possible. During the past few weeks we have heard a great deal about inflation; in fact, I have listened to many speeches in this chamber, impassioned and otherwise, dealing with that question. I have read and re-read those speeches, and I am afraid I am little the wiser. I am still at a loss to distinguish between natural growth and this new thing they call "inflation". When I was a young boy in the Ottawa Valley, in the nineties, life was simple compared with the complexities of our present way of life. Goods and services were then quite cheap and the dollar went a long way. One cent purchased a good deal of candy—more than ten cents will purchase at the present time. In the district where I lived eggs were five cents a dozen; beefsteak and butter were less than ten cents a pound. Many quite large families were raised on $40 a month. A good house could be built for between $600 and $1,000. I remember living in a good brick house of eight rooms that cost only $800. Rents were $5 a month. Of course, we had no automobiles and mechanized farm equipment, no electric refrigerators, washing machines, dryers, dishwashers, radios, television sets, and other luxuries such as we have today. We studied our lessons by the light of a coal-oil lamp, and wore homespun clothes—a good suit could be bought for $5.

Since then we have advanced a long way from a very simple mode of life to the second highest standard of living in the whole world. Ordinary houses now cost ten times as much as the figure I have given. The man who was then paid $40 a month receives $400 a month now. It costs ten times more to live. Is this natural growth, or has not inflation, which is perhaps the same thing, been with us all these years and we are just now discovering it? Have we not had creeping inflation all the time and not recognized it as such until recently?

Honourable senators, I do not intend to continue along this line any further, except to say that the cost of living index which stood in 1939 at 100 has now increased to 186. The greatest increase took place between 1939 and 1951 or thereabouts, and the index figure has gone up gradually since then.

Honourable senators, this motion is now before us as though the present Government were responsible for all the inflation that has taken place. Why was no motion of this kind made during the 22 years the previous Government was in office? And why should the Senate of Canada through its Finance Committee investigate the whole fiscal policy of this Government, or for that matter any other Government, and thus turn itself into a more or less partisan, political body—a thing which we have been trying to avoid ever since I have been a member of this chamber? Of course, we have the power to do such things, even though we have never exercised it at any time previously, to my knowledge. The Senate can do almost anything under the sun except introduce a money bill.

As has been said, the Senate investigated the Income Tax Act and performed a valuable service to the country in bringing about the formation of the Income Tax Appeal Board. The honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) was chairman of that committee at the time. The committee was also responsible for bringing in a report which had as its final result a reduction in the number of arbitrary decisions by income tax division officials. Also, as has been said by the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden), the Senate investigated the gold mining industry and made certain recommendations which were later acted upon. But, honourable senators, those matters were not the same as an investigation of the fiscal policy of this Government or any other Government by a Senate committee.

Also in speeches here attempts have been made to show that the great conversion loan of last year was inflationary and a dismal failure. But we now have the report of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, which reads as follows:

Important and valuable benefits were achieved by the success of the conversion loan campaign through the lengthening of the term of the debt. The reform of the structure of the Government debt, and the contribution it made to improving conditions for the sale of future issues of Government bonds to non-bank investors, were important elements in monetary policy in the broadest sense, and an essential non-inflationary achievement.

I think honourable senators should also remember that at the end of February this year 56.3 per cent of the Government of Canada debt was held by the public, being an improvement of 10 per cent over the low point of public holdings at the end of September 1958 and only one per cent less than it was in 1957.

I could refer honourable senators to a speech by the Honourable the Minister of Finance, in which he dealt fully with inflation. It was delivered on January 5, 1959 to the Canadian Club in Toronto. But I do not intend to go into that. I could also refer honourable senators to a speech made in Cincinnati on January 17, 1959 by A. T. Lambert, General Manager of the Toronto-Dominion Bank, in which speech he made a very important contribution to this question of inflation. I could also refer you to a brief on inflation submitted to the Government by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in February, 1959 but I have not time to go into any of these matters tonight.

In this chamber we have been listening to quotations from newspaper editorials and from speeches and sayings by bank executives, financiers, economists and others on this question of inflation until I, for one, am more confused than ever I have been on this question.

But there is one editorial, in the March 14 issue of Maclean's magazine, which seems quite sensible to me and perhaps I could give honourable senators a summary of it. It is headed, "Let's not let inflation blind us to unemployment". Briefly, it states that if inflation was the only problem the Government had to face it would be comparatively simple to solve this problem by raising taxes, cutting expenditures, letting interest rates go up and that kind of thing. That would keep our currency hard.

At this point, before I go on summarizing that editorial, I would like to mention an interview I had with a friend of mine on the street. He said to me, "I see you are debating inflation in the Senate." I said "Yes, what do you think about inflation?" He replied, "Oh, I could end inflation in no time." I said, "How would you do that?" He replied "All you have to do is drain off the excess money in the hands of the public by raising taxes, putting a ceiling on wages, goods and services, cutting down on Government spending at all levels, curtailing the social benefits and that kind of thing, and you wouldn't have any more inflation." I said, "But that would ruin the country, and hundreds of thousands more people would be unemployed." He said, "I know that, but you asked me how I would cure inflation and I have told you."

I hear somebody say, probably the advisable thing to do would be to put into effect a system of compulsory savings. I would point out that such a system has never been successfully launched in peacetime and I doubt very much if it could be made to work at this time.

I now return to the editorial to which I referred. It goes on to say that we have other problems, such as some 500,000 persons out of work and looking for jobs. In many cases unemployment insurance benefits have run out. Fishermen of Newfoundland have suffered a famine by nature. These people are in desperate distress. What will anti-inflation measures do for them? Cutting expenditure sounds fine, but in practice Government spending means Government employment. Also, the editorial states, higher taxes and higher interest rates mean fewer jobs due to slackening of industrial activity. It goes on to deal briefly with the great depression and what was said in the United States of America before Roosevelt took over about "Balancing the budget". We heeded that slogan in Canada —but I do not need to go into that, for you know what happened.

The editorial concludes by saying that the situation is different today, or at any rate, it is not so desperate. Nobody has a formula for dealing with inflation and unemployment at one and the same time. Some business leaders seem to think inflation the graver of the two. But no cure is worth while that tries to make inflation better by making unemployment worse.

That is the end of my summary of the Maclean's editorial.

Honourable senators, I proceed now with the main point of my address, that the making of economic and financial policy is an area of activity charged to the Government's responsibility. Indeed, ways and means in our federal Government practice is a matter peculiarly intimate to the administration and to the House of Commons. The Government is charged with the determination of expenditure and with the means of raising the appropriate revenue. In both these activities is implied the highest responsibility for the husbandry and promotion of national economic growth in real and lasting terms. No such study as that proposed could at this time serve a purpose useful beyond those functions properly and normally falling to the administration through the instrumentality of the budget.

Through the normal lines of communication the opinions of those outside the Government qualified to discuss the various facets of the economy come to the attention of the Government and are taken under consideration. In addition, the Government has the expert advice of those charged with appraisal of the forces at work in the economy through the regular channels of Government practice. Under the Canadian system, it is the Minister of Finance who is peculiarly charged with the decision-making function respecting fiscal and monetary policy. As indicated, he has available all the relevant data, opinions and advice. It would be impossible for the proposed study to reach any concrete conclusions without in some measure exercising a function constitutionally assigned to others.

In fact, just such a study of just such a scope as is proposed is annually made by the appropriate authority in the preparation of the budget—appropriate because it is made by the authority vested with the responsibility for making the decisions. The policy of the Government has been clearly enunciated by the Government. It is to preserve and foster sound and stable growth, to maintain the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar. Having this as its aim and objective, it follows that those whose task it is under our system to make fiscal and monetary decisions are most intimately concerned with and aware of the threat of inflation. This process of appraisal and determination has been in progress in the preparation of the budget just handed down in the other place. It was conducted where it should be by those responsible for economic policy.

It is proposed that the Standing Committee on Finance should call witnesses. This, one supposes, suggests the appearance of officials of the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada as well as such private persons as the committee might deem advisable. The propriety of such persons giving evidence at any time in respect of Government policy —and their testimony could hardly fail to touch on policy, if it were to be useful at all—is doubtful. Yet it is difficult to see how the proposed study could fulfil any significant purpose, other than as a forum for propaganda and political dispute, without the evidence of the experts on whose advice Government policy is based. Having regard for the fact that the testimony of every other kind of expert has been available to all, in copious quantity, in the columns of the daily, periodical and specialized press, it is therefore difficult to perceive what a study of the threat of inflation by the Standing Committee on Finance could usefully add to the sum total of knowledge on the subject.

Honourable senators, in conclusion may I say I have taken the trouble to read again the speeches of Senators Lougheed, Meighen, Dandurand, King and others, and am of the opinion that if they were here today they would not want the Standing Committee on Finance of the Senate to proceed with a study of this kind, which might in the end turn this house into a partisan, political body. I am of the opinion that the mover and seconder of the motion would be well advised to withdraw the motion, and I hope they will do so. We have had a good debate, but if we go ahead with the proposed study there is a possibility that we will turn this chamber into a partisan, political body, a thing which was never intended by the Fathers of Confederation, and which would be most detrimental by creating a dangerous precedent. At best, the discussion in committee would be more or less academic and have a tendency to develop in Canada an "inflation psychosis" which, in my opinion, would be a bad thing.

Honourable senators, I have convinced myself that I should vote against the motion. The Government of the day must stand or fall on its fiscal policy. While the efforts of the Government prior to the 1959-60 budget have been devoted almost entirely to an attempt to solve the unemployment situation, the present budget is a sincere effort to find ways and means to fight inflation and unemployment at one and the same time. Some so-called experts say it cannot be done, but that is what the Government is trying to do, and I know we all wish them every success.

Hon. Mr. Hardy: Would the honourable leader care to give an opinion as to whether it is proper for this house to give any instructions to one of its committees as to what it is to do? I would consider it entirely improper.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, April 15, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table certain reports as follows:

Report of the Canadian National Railways for the year ended December 31, 1958, pursuant to section 40 of the Canadian National Railways Act, Chapter 29 of the Statutes of 1955. (English and French texts).

Report of Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited, for the year ended December 31, 1958, pursuant to section 85(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Auditor's Report to Parliament on the accounts of Canadian National Railway System and of Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited, for the year ended December 31, 1958, pursuant, respectively, to section 40 of the Canadian National Railways Act, Chapter 29 of the Statutes of 1955, and to section 85(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of The Canadian National Railways Securities Trust for the year ended December 31, 1958, pursuant to section 17 of the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act, Chapter 311, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

CANADA COUNCIL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson, for Hon. Clarence V. Emerson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, presented the first report of the committee.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Finance to whom was referred the Report of the Canada Council for the year ended March 31, 1958, report as follows:

Your committee recommend that they be authorized to print 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their day to day proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Motion agreed to.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 3

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, when the final supplementary estimates were being discussed in this house on Friday, March 20, two questions were asked by the honourable senator from Queens-Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Smith), and one by the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). I wish now to file the answers to those questions, so that they may be printed in today's Hansard.

Question by Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne):

After being provided with a list of subsidies payable to Co-operatives in Nova Scotia during 1956-1957 and 1958, Senator Smith asked "Whether or not there were other applicants for subsidies whose applications were not granted?"

Answer: No (formal) applications for cold storage subsidies in Nova Scotia were rejected by the government during 1956, 1957 or 1958.

Question by Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne):

Senator Smith wondered "whether the Government of Nova Scotia has requested assistance with respect to additional steamship service between the province of Nova Scotia and the United States".

Answer: Representations regarding additional ferry service from Nova Scotia to the United States, New England seaboard, have been received from a variety of sources, relating in particular to the matter of service between Shelbourne and Boston.

Preliminary review has indicated that there appears to be a reasonable summer potential but raises questions as to the possibility of obtaining reasonable traffic during the rest of the year; and as to the amount of the deficits that would therefore result from such an operation, as well as the heavy capital investment involved.

This matter, however, is continuing to receive study.

Question by Hon. Mr. Macdonald:

External Affairs Votes 734 and 741 in the Further Supplementary Estimates (3), 1958-59, which provide for gifts of wheat and flour to Palestine Refugees in the Near East and to Commonwealth Countries in South and South-East Asia authorize payments to be made up to the 1st day of April, 1960. Senator Macdonald asked why these amounts were included in the "estimates for the fiscal year which is about to close".

Answer: The decisions to propose to Parliament that these gifts be granted was not taken by the government in time to include them in the Main Estimates, 1959-60. The alternative to providing for them in the Final Supps(3) of 1958-59 was to wait until Supps for 1959-60 were tabled normally sometime in June and this was considered to involve too long a delay. It was hoped that shipments could be arranged to commence almost immediately and be completed before the end of the crop year (July 31, 1959). In fact it has been possible to arrange for shipments to begin in May—more than a month sooner than would have been possible if the items had been withheld until normal Supps for 1959-60 could be considered and passed by Parliament.

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET

IMPORTANCE OF EXPORT TRADE TO CANADA

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, March 18, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) drawing the attention of the Senate to the importance of the European Economic Community, known as the Common Market, to the export trade of Canada.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, the motion of the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) calling to the attention of the Senate the importance of the European Economic Community known as the Common Market to the export trade of Canada immediately attracted my interest and, I think, the interest of all of us, because it is an effort on the part of six major countries of NATO to implement the spirit of article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty which Canada was so vitally interested in originally and about which, unfortunately, as honourable senators know, nothing was ever done in the ten intervening years and I doubt very much if anything will be done.

The North Atlantic Treaty, honourable senators, was signed on April 4, 1948. Before Canada signed it she insisted that it be something more than a military alliance by requiring the signatories to agree that:

> They will seek to eliminate conflict in their international economic policies, and will encourage economic collaboration between any or all of them.

In the intervening period nothing has been done by the organization to implement that pledge. Today, ten years later, NATO is fundamentally a military alliance and Canada, I believe, honourable senators, stands to suffer most for that reason.

On June 5 an Atlantic congress called by the NATO parliamentary conference will be held in London to review the past and plan for the future. It will be opened by Her Majesty the Queen. Six hundred and fifty delegates will attend, 45 from Canada. Of this total 30 will be non-parliamentarians and 15 members of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Can the honourable senator tell me how the 30 non-parliamentarians are chosen and who chooses them?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: It is beyond my ability to do so.

The Senate will be represented by the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) and the honourable senator from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson). Both, I may say, are excellent representatives. Experience has shown that Canada can exercise a decisive influence in conferences of this type if her representatives know in advance what they want and do their homework before going there.

Two excellent and timely motions stand on our Order Paper. One, by the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson), asks that the Standing Committee on External Relations be authorized to review the activities of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in so far as the interests of Canada are concerned. The other, by the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly), seeks to draw our attention to the dramatic developments towards economic collaboration which have taken place outside of NATO by some of our allies on the other side of the Atlantic. May I bespeak for both of the senators the keenest interest and the maximum participation by members of this house in their motions.

Some senators have been delegates to NATO conferences in the past. All senators are qualified by experience and their knowledge of current events to participate. For the moment I intend in what I have to say to concentrate on the motion of the honourable senator from Ottawa West.

In order to make myself perfectly clear honourable senators, and to lay a basis for my argument, I would draw the attention of the house to the fact that the North Atlantic Treaty—the organization known as NATO—is roughly divided into two halves, Europe and North America. The population of the 13 participating European countries is something more than 200 million; and the population of the two countries on this side of the Atlantic is something less than 200 million.

The countries of Europe have small territories and limited natural resources, while the two North American countries, as honourable senators know, are quite different. Europe, or parts of it, has suffered from war devastation; we were unscathed. To a certain extent Europe has lower living standards, although perhaps not as low as we may think; we on this side of the Atlantic have higher standards. On the other hand, our problems have much in common. They, like ourselves, are faced with rising defence expenditures. They, like ourselves, are cursed with all forms of trade restrictions which are pushing up their costs of living and production, and are seriously affecting their chances to export. They welcomed Canadian initiative in having the clauses referring to economic collaboration and elimination of trade rivalries included in the North Atlantic Treaty. They were deeply disappointed when nothing was done. Tired of waiting for NATO to do something, six of them moved outside NATO to accomplish the same ends. The other seven, under the leadership of the United Kingdom, are negotiating to join them.

It would be a mistake to think what has already been accomplished among some of our European NATO partners and what they are seeking to accomplish is being done in the easy way. This successful effort of six countries—France, Germany, the Netherlands,

Italy, Belgium and Luxembourg—who together have formed a Common Market on 170 million people, has not been accomplished without facing almost insurmountable obstacles and difficulties.

Negotiations are still proceeding under the leadership of the United Kingdom to join themselves—that is the remaining seven and the four non-NATO members—into a free trade area with the Common Market. What the outcome will be remains to be seen. Personally, I think the need is so great that they will succeed. Failing that I would expect the remaining eleven to form themselves into a second European Common Market, for I do not believe they, and particularly the United Kingdom, can afford to live alone economically under this current situation.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Would my friend give the names of the other eleven who would like to follow a similar course?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Well, there are the seven other members of NATO. If I remember correctly, they are the United Kingdom, Denmark, Portugal, Iceland, Norway, Greece and Turkey—the four non-NATO members are Switzerland, Ireland, Sweden and Austria. They are all members of the original O.E.E.C., the Organization for European Economic Co-operation.

In either case—that is, the case of either a single Common Market or two Common Markets—the chief obstacle has been and, I think, will continue to be the reluctance of the United Kingdom to give up the Commonwealth preferences in their present form. I believe—and I base it on a reading of the influential journal The Economist and similar publications—the chances are that the Commonwealth preferences will undergo a change. I would expect a proposal to be forthcoming—indeed, it has already been sounded out with the respective Governments—that there should be a broader association between the Commonwealth and Europe, opening the preferences the Commonwealth gives to British industries to Europe, too, and giving Commonwealth producers markets in Europe in return. Whether the Commonwealth preferences will be changed, I do not know, but I think it is probably necessary to do so, even in the case of a second Common Market. So far as I have been able to notice, the great objection of France to Britain's coming into the free trade area was that since France had placed her African possessions or dependencies into the Common Market where Germany, for instance, has just as many rights and privileges as France has, France thought it was a scheme of Britain to get into her North African dependencies and still keep a preferred position in her own Commonwealth and territories. In any event, that is the situation in regard to Europe.

I am sorry that the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) is not here because, while I do not always agree with his conclusions—for he is as staunch a Tory as I am a Grit—the fact is that I have never yet heard a speech from him in this house which failed to have in it something which appealed to me as being down to earth and good common sense. In a speech he made just before the Easter adjournment—honourable senators will remember it—he quoted, I think, Mr. Crump, the President of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in just these words:

> He (Mr. Crump) reminded his Canadian and American audiences that this continent is not an exclusive depository for the world's wisdom, that there are other nations with just as many brains and perhaps more ambition.

These are timely words. What the European half of NATO is doing, or trying to do, is, in my humble opinion, so far ahead of what is happening on this side of the Atlantic that it offers an object lesson to us which we would be well advised to note. The honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) did well in drawing our attention to it. I can think, honourable senators, of five object lessons that we should bear in mind. What is growing up today is almost another iron curtain or, one can say, an "economic curtain", in the centre of the Atlantic because our costs of production and of export on this side of the Atlantic are becoming so far out of kilter with those on the other side of the Atlantic that, in my humble opinion, unless something is done about it—and it is not easy to do something about it at this late hour—the situation will produce economic rivalries which might well split the North Atlantic Treaty countries in two.

I now want to give my five object lessons, the first of which is in the realm of defence expenditures. As a result of bitter experience our European allies have kept their defence expenditures to a minimum, not only to lessen the cost to the taxpayer but to lessen the dislocating effects on their economies that disarmament will bring. Generally speaking, the 13 European partners of NATO have only about doubled their defence expenditures since 1949. Incidentally, it is sometimes difficult to assess these expenditures because the various European currencies are not easy to convert. In any event, I had not seen any authoritative figures until I saw certain figures contained in a copy of the NATO Letter, a monthly publication distributed by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to members of Parliament and others. The February issue contains information pertaining to the first ten years of NATO's existence, and it sets out a most illuminating table on defence expenditures of the member countries beginning in 1949, the year before NATO really got started, down to the forecast of expenditures for the year 1958.

The great burden of expense is carried by the countries on this side of the Atlantic. The 1958 combined defence expenditures of the European half of NATO is approximately 13 billion U.S. dollars, while the defence expenditures of the North American half of NATO—Canada and the United States—is 47 billion U.S. dollars. Of course, the United States carries a large part of that burden.

It is interesting that the European partners of NATO have kept their defence expenditures to slightly over twice as much as they were in 1949. Take, for instance, the United Kingdom. In 1949 their defence expenditures totalled 779 million pounds sterling, while the forecast of their expenditures for 1958 amounted to 1,608 million pounds sterling, just slightly over twice as great as in 1949. In the case of France the defence expenditure is about three times as great in the 1958 forecast as it was in 1949. In the case of Canada the forecast for 1958 is five times greater than the expenditure for 1949. In other words, we have increased our defence expenditure five times since 1949. Had it increased in the same proportion as that of the United Kingdom since 1949, we would be spending only $750 million to $800 million; actually, we are expending over a billion dollars more than that. I am not arguing for the moment whether we should or should not make these expenditures. I am merely giving the facts. If our defence expenditures under NATO were only half what they are, I have no doubt the Minister of Finance in Canada could have made as good a showing financially by way of reducing expenditures and budgeting for a larger surplus, as did the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the United Kingdom.

I think this is one object lesson we can take from the experience of our 13 European NATO partners who, I am to assume, are just as much interested in defence as we are. I am not arguing that we should not contribute more but I am merely stating the position as it exists. If and when the motion of the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) is adopted, and the Standing Committee on External Relations is authorized to review the activities of NATO in so far as the interests of Canada are concerned, I think that the committee should endeavour to get some authoritative information as to whether these defence expenditures on Canada's part are really necessary.

The second object lesson we should draw from what has happened on the other side of the Atlantic concerns demands for higher living standards. Europe is achieving a higher standard of living for labour by lowering the costs of production and living, and at the same time keeping wage scales relatively level. Thus she fights rising costs of Government and taxation, aids those engaged in agriculture and those who live on fixed incomes, and aids her export industries to compete successfully in world markets. North America is trying to do it by increasing wages, though rising living costs keep taking the advantages away.

I noticed something of interest in the 1958 White Paper referred to by the Minister of Finance when the budget was brought down recently. This White Paper, which is contained in Hansard of the House of Commons, discusses the question of rising costs and rising wages, and, at page 29, makes the following reference:

> The advance in per capita earnings in 1958 failed to keep pace with the rise in consumer prices and there was a slight decline in real income.

In other words, there was no advantage to those getting increased wages and, if anything, there was a slight loss because of the rising cost of living. To those in agriculture and those who depend on fixed incomes there was another load added to their burden. And an additional disadvantage was placed in the way of export business. A whole economic sermon could be written around that statement, and I congratulate the Minister of Finance for putting his finger right on the point.

Costs of government are pyramiding with inevitable rising taxation. Agriculture, squeezed by rising costs demands price supports, subsidies and deficiency payments. Those living on fixed incomes are faced with constantly lowering standards of living. Export industries, by increased costs, are being driven out of export markets, and our industries that depend mainly on domestic markets find it increasingly difficult to meet foreign competition. That is a second object lesson that we might well heed in making our plans for the future.

I come now to the third object lesson, the matter of economic collaboration: I think that what the six countries are doing, and what the remaining eleven are trying to do, is a most intelligent approach to the problems of today, and I am sure it must appeal to the common sense of every person who has given any thought to the question. Honourable senators, fifteen of us are bound together by one of the most revolutionary doctrines in the North Atlantic Treaty. We have bound ourselves for at least ten years more, that if one is attacked all are attacked. I do not need to explain to this house how revolutionary a doctrine that is considered by members on all sides. Prior to that we never admitted that we were attacked, even if Britain were attacked. We might have said that the logic of the circumstances would take us into war, but we reserved to Parliament the right of determining war and peace. When we voted as we did, our national sovereignty went out the window, and well it might. I am not against it; I think it is right. However, I want to draw attention to the fact that I have grave doubts that Canada would ever have taken that revolutionary step if we had stopped to consider that the provision in regard to economic collaboration was going to be laughed at or totally ignored by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. It is going to become increasingly important to us now that we are in a trade war, that six of the most far-seeing leaders of NATO, in my judgment, have gone ahead and are doing what we wanted every one of the 15 countries to do. The fact that they are doing it is creating great problems for those that are outside. Greater problems will arise, too, because the six countries are going to bring their costs down to such an extent, as a result of mass production methods, that I doubt, even if public opinion permitted it, whether we could put a tariff wall around this country high enough to keep their products out. Every industry in this country is in jeopardy from our own friends. We are not alone, of course, because the United States is in much the same position. We have put ourselves up on a high pinnacle, and other countries on lower pinnacles of varying heights.

Honourable senators, six European members of NATO have already agreed to progressively remove all trade barriers over a period of 14 years. This is not a plan; it was done two years ago and was ratified by all their parliaments, and went into force a year ago. The remaining seven members, together with four other non-members, are negotiating to join them. Financial provision is made to compensate industries that are unduly affected. Together they will form an economic bloc of upwards of 300 million people, with all the corresponding advantages of mass production. Europe's bold, enlightened and dramatic approach to economic collaboration makes our existing trade practices in North America as obsolete as the horse and buggy.

Another phrase used in the North Atlantic Treaty was the "Elimination of International Trade Rivalries." The significant thing in regard to what is happening in Europe is that only will our European allies have the inestimable advantage of progressively removed trade restrictions over the next 14 years, but they will be free of all the increases of trade obstacles that have so often occurred in the past with every chill economic wind that blows. I think we all agree that nothing has poisoned the wells of what would otherwise be good international relations as the recurrent resort by national governments to increase tariffs, imposition of dumping duties and quotas, in an attempt to compensate for some temporary situation. I do not need to elaborate on what is happening on this side of the Atlantic.

Now, object lesson No. 5: I want to point out that it is the manufacturing industry in the European countries, both large and small, who are spearheading the drive for mutual removal on trade restrictions. I indicate that because in the past, generally speaking, the manufacturers, the secondary industry producers in Canada, were the protectionists, and, in varying degrees, agriculture, depending on the extent to which they relied on the export market for low tariff. We have all become protectionists in varying degrees, regardless of party or interest, or so it appears to me. In Britain, Germany, France and similar countries, the manufacturers are the real driving force for economic collaboration because of their physical inability to meet outside competition, unless they have the advantages of mass production. I think that is the most significant fact. Moreover, the manufacturers of a little country like Luxembourg, with a population of 300,000, are trying to get into the market of a population of 170 million just as readily as are the countries who have a domestic market of 50 million people. They simply must get into it. In the past the characteristic of the economy of Western Europe was that they had more devices to encourage their domestic trade by way of tariffs and quotas of every kind than we have ever thought of in this country. Now they have come to the point where they are going exactly in the other direction as rapidly as they can. Are they right, or are we right? Of course, the reason the Common Market developed more rapidly in countries like France, Germany, Italy and Luxembourg, is that seven years ago the steel manufacturers in countries such as The Netherlands and Belgium, with nine million people, and Luxembourg with 300,000 people, joined with the steel manufacturers in countries such as Germany, France and Italy, with populations of 50 million each, in creating a Steel and Coal Community. They decided that the benefits of a larger market would be of greater advantage to them than depending on tariffs, quotas, etc. to protect them in their home market. Their venture was very successful. I am talking now about the European Steel and Coal Community which has been in existence for seven years. Their venture has been so successful that two years ago these countries made the same arrangement for all manufacturers. If they join the other eleven countries there will, in due course, be a free trade area containing some 300 million people with corresponding reductions in production costs. This is a complete reversal of our thinking on this side of the Atlantic.

Again I congratulate the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) for giving us a chance to discuss what has happened in the European half of NATO. For my part I will look forward to the discussion as to where Canada is going to fit into this picture in the years that lie ahead. This will undoubtedly arise when the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) moves his resolution.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce, Nos. 167 to 198, which were presented yesterday.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved that the reports be adopted.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Before we adjourn may I ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) what the business will be for tomorrow. I ask this question because I had expected that we would have proceeded today with Item No. 1, the motion of the honourable senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) to instruct the Finance Committee to study the threat of inflation in Canada, and I was surprised when the request was made that is stand. I notice, honourable senators, that this motion has been on the Order Paper since February 25, which is almost two months. Surely we have heard enough about inflation in this house from the non-experts. In fact, as the Leader of the Government said yesterday he, and probably some of the rest of us, are little the wiser after hearing all this discussion. I feel that we should decide soon whether we are going to refer the question to committee and hear the experts. I do not know if I am alone but, speaking for myself, I feel that I have heard about enough in this house from those who can qualify as experts on this subject and from those who cannot but who would like to express their views.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, as far as I am personally concerned, I think I made it quite clear last night that I think this is a dangerous thing we are dealing with and I personally do not care if it ever gets to committee or not. But that is neither here nor there. If we carry that motion to committee and it goes as far as I think it might go I am afraid that I see the handwriting on the wall, and I do not want to be a party to it.

However, the honourable Senator Thorvaldson intends to go on with his motion tomorrow. Then we have the continued debate on the motion of the honourable Senator Wall; we have second reading of a private bill by the honourable Senator Euler, and I may be ready to go ahead with second reading of the bill to provide for the appointment of parliamentary secretaries to ministers, although I am not just sure of that. But I do know that the honourable Senator Thorvaldson wants to speak tomorrow, and I hope we will be able to go on with the debate on the honourable Senator Wall's motion.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Thank you.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, April 16, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following document:

Report of the Commissioner of Penitentiaries for the year ended March 31, 1958, pursuant to section 14 of the Penitentiary Act, Chapter 206, R.S. 1952. (French text).

DIVORCE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following bills:

Bill SD-161, an Act for the relief of Audrey Isabella Wanda Patterson Gray.

Bill SD-162, an Act for the relief of Raymonde Gagnon Tremblay. (Annulment).

Bill SD-163, an Act for the relief of Aline Brunette Farago.

Bill SD-164, an Act for the relief of Martina Bernice Patterson Baker.

Bill SD-165, an Act for the relief of Nelly Hugentobler Larsen.

Bill SD-166, an Act for the relief of Jean Trachtenberg Levy.

Bill SD-167, an Act for the relief of Louise Martel Abel.

Bill SD-168, an Act for the relief of Marie Louise Fauteux Roy.

Bill SD-169, an Act for the relief of Helen Lyon Bain Gardeler.

Bill SD-170, an Act for the relief of Joan Brazer Brazier.

Bill SD-171, an Act for the relief of Maria Luise Ahnhudt Sandberg.

Bill SD-172, an Act for the relief of Susan Gilda Levin Klein.

Bill SD-173, an Act for the relief of James Alvin Bradley.

Bill SD-174, an Act for the relief of Emily Mary Kredl Keller.

Bill SD-175, an Act for the relief of Raymond Winston Farren.

Bill SD-176, an Act for the relief of Marie Lucille Pauline St. Jacques Parent.

Bill SD-177, an Act for the relief of Mario Baldo.

Bill SD-178, an Act for the relief of Frank William Staples.

Bill SD-179, an Act for the relief of Zdenek Nosek.

Bill SD-180, an Act for the relief of Margaret Viola McCullough Morrow.

Bill SD-181 an Act for the relief of Sheila Carole Neidik Schwartz.

Bill SD-182, an Act for the relief of Gordon Clarence Hunting.

Bill SD-183, an Act for the relief of Ida Shlafman Zimendstark.

Bill SD-184, an Act for the relief of Audrey Elsie Asbury Ross.

Bill SD-185, an Act for the relief of Patricia Anne McKenna Coombes.

Bill SD-186, an Act for the relief of William Lawrence Hughes.

Bill SD-187, an Act for the relief of Armand Lacombe.

Bill SD-188, an Act for the relief of Rita Steinbach Gruia.

Bill SD-189, an Act for the relief of George Meredith Scott Burton.

Bill SD-190, an Act for the relief of Helen Borer Marcovitch.

Bills read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: With leave, next sitting.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, April 21, 1959, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE EXTERNAL RELATIONS COMMITTEE TO REVIEW NATO ACTIVITIES—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved, pursuant to notice:

That the Standing Committee on External Relations be authorized to review the activities of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in so far as the interests of Canada therein are concerned;

That the said committee have power to send for persons, papers and records.

He said: Honourable senators, I believe it to be most appropriate that there should be some discussion in this house concerning the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, of which Canada is so important a part. I am sure everyone who was present in this chamber yesterday listened with unbounded interest to the very knowledgeable remarks of the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) in his extended references to NATO. I follow the honourable senator with much humility because I know that, in comparison with him, I am a mere novice in my study of this organization.

However, the honourable senator dealt largely with the economic side of NATO and confessed, as I think we all must confess, its deficiencies and indeed failures, in affairs other than those on the military side. For instance, I, for one, held high hopes that NATO would be the agency best qualified to achieve a settlement of the question concerning Cyprus, involving as it did three members of that organization. But that was not to be. NATO seemed to be so futile in that field. I also had hoped that NATO would suitably solve that miserable dispute concerning off-shore fisheries which involved two NATO members, the United Kingdom and Iceland. That unfortunate controversy is still raging.

Also, of course, as the honourable senator from Shelburne has intimated, NATO has not been very successful in efforts to create an improved economic climate between its members. However, I do not want to be critical of NATO for this default for I do believe that as far as Canada is concerned our concentration of purpose in regard to trade should be through the United Nations agency responsible for the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, known as GATT, rather than through NATO.

In any event, my few remarks concerning the North Atlantic Treaty Organization alliance will be directed toward its role as a defender and guardian of the free world and of Canada's position relative to that purpose.

Among others, there are at least three good reasons for such discussion at this time. First, NATO, is, in this month of April, observing the tenth anniversary of the signing of the treaty, which event occurred on April 4, 1954. Second, Canada, through its then Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Louis S. St. Laurent, and its then Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Lester B. Pearson, played a most important role in the early negotiations leading to the founding of the organization. And, third, NATO is right now entering upon what may be the most critical and potentially dangerous period of its existence.

But apart from these things, I believe that we, in this house, may well acknowledge and pay our respects to the very valuable contribution to world peace which NATO has made during the decade of its existence.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear,

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Unquestionably, without this powerful alliance, the countries of western Europe would, at least, have been subject to continuous harassment and bullying, and indeed more likely to complete subjection by their known enemy. I need not ask the question: What then of America?

No doubt, at the recent anniversary celebration in Washington much was said about the past glories of NATO. As is well known, however, we now move into a sphere of negotiation which can spell much for the future peace and security of the world. And although the negotiations relative to the problem of Berlin are primarily in the hands of the great powers, nevertheless Canada is both directly and vitally concerned with the success of those negotiations.

Just to refresh one's memory, may I briefly review how we became directly responsible for the security of Berlin. In October 1954 a conference in London dealt with the making of plans for the termination of occupation by Allied troops in the Federal Republic of Germany, and for the incorporation of West Germany in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. At that conference the three Western powers—the United States, the United Kingdom and France—issued a declaration stating:

> The security and welfare of Berlin and the maintenance of the position of the three powers there are regarded by the three powers as essential elements of the peace of the free world in the present international situation. Accordingly, they will maintain armed forces within the territory of Berlin as long as their responsibilities require it. They therefore reaffirm that they will treat any attack against Berlin from any quarter as an attack upon their forces and themselves.

Following the London conference there was held a meeting of the NATO Council at which West Germany was admitted into membership of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and at the same meeting all the members of the NATO Council, including Canada, associated themselves with the three-power declaration which I have referred to. In other words, from then on any attack against West Berlin would be deemed to be an attack upon all the NATO powers, including, of course, Canada. This was in addition to the covenants contained in sections 5 and 6 of the treaty which recognized that an attack on any one NATO member was an attack against them all.

Now, although Canada's actual stake in the Berlin issue may not be quite so immediate as that of the three great powers, the United States, the United Kingdom, and France, in so far as we are not an occupying power, nevertheless our stake in the broader question of world peace is just as great as that of any other power, large or small. Hence it is to be hoped that Canada's voice will be listened to, and paid attention to, in the formulation of policy for the pending conference of foreign ministers and, indeed, at a summit meeting, if such should be held.

Then, what, if any, is Canada's contribution to a policy, or what is our position in respect of the principal questions at issue in the Berlin controversy, and, indeed, in the broader issue relating to East and West Germany?

Naturally, and as any sensible people must do, we take the position that there is simply no alternative to peace; that in the present circumstances a global war is unthinkable, and consequently the issue at stake must be resolved by negotiation. That, of course, is an obvious position to take, and, no doubt, has universal acceptance. When I say that I believe this view has universal acceptance I am also attributing it to the countries behind the iron curtain as well as to those on this side of it.

On the other hand, our Prime Minister has said, and I have heard no dissent from this view, that no agreement is acceptable which places in jeopardy the security of West Berlin or the freedom of its citizens; also, that no solution can be accepted which may endanger the ties between the Federal Republic of Germany and its NATO partners, nor one which, as the Prime Minister has said, would have the effect of foreclosing on the prospect of the ultimate reunification of Germany. It is seemingly also the view of our Government that in any future settlement of the Berlin problem the United Nations should have an opportunity to play a part, and we are informed that definite suggestions along this line were made by Canada's representative at the recent NATO Ministers' Conference in Washington.

I will admit that anyone who has observed the United Nations organization in action, especially in its efforts to deal with the larger problems directly affecting world security such as disarmament, inspection of nuclear weapons and so forth, must feel a deep sense of frustration resulting from what at least we of the West consider the intransigence of the Soviet bloc at the United Nations. Nevertheless, I think it of real importance that the middle nations such as ours should continue to press to have the United Nations admitted to play at least some part, either in the pending negotiation or thereafter, in the application of any acceptable solution of the Berlin issue. For instance, it is nearly inconceivable that the occupying powers will, for an indeterminable time, be willing to continue to tie down forces as they are now doing in Berlin. Hence, for example, if a system of appropriate guarantees for the permanent security of the city could be developed, perhaps the United Nations would become the logical agency to supervise the performance of such guarantees.

In any event, I think that in advancing to the big NATO powers a suggestion for an eventual United Nations "presence" in these troubled spots of Europe, Canada may have made a particularly valuable contribution to the current thinking on this problem.

On the wider German problem, our Government appears to take a realistic view in respect of the improbability of any quick marriage between East and West Germany. Consequently, it favours a proposal once made by the West German Republic, that a continuing commission be instituted to supervise and promote progress toward an eventual union of the two parts.

On the other important question, namely, the question relating to arms limitation in this European area, I presume that one can only hope that some progress can be made toward this end, even though reunification of the two Germanys may lie in the distant future.

In regard to the general prospects for prevention of a world holocaust, I imagine we can agree they are good, even despite the threats and blustering and double talk of the Soviet Premier. But in my view they are good for one reason and one reason only, namely, the great military strength and unity of the NATO alliance. I believe it to be a fact of history, which we can all verify, that a would-be conqueror has never started a big-scale war unless he was completely convinced that he could win it. And what must bother the heads of the Soviet Union greatly at the present time as a would-be aggressor, as we believe them to be—for if not, why are we spending nearly two billion a year upon national defence?—is the tremendously increased and increasing power, ability and determination to resist aggression, especially of those two NATO partners, the West German Republic and France. Increase of West Germany's strength has, of course, been fairly continuous over the last few years, but not even the Soviet Premier could have prophesied the recent rebirth of France, resulting in its becoming, practically overnight, a powerful and determined nation and at long last certain of itself.

It is perhaps a horrifying thought that the world must continue to live in a balance-of-power situation, but then it is also comforting to know, at least to believe, as we do, that the balance is on our side, and also to know that our side covets no one's territory or property and merely asks not to be attacked.

So the tribute that I believe one must pay to NATO on the occasion of its tenth anniversary is that this alliance of free nations has in this brief span of years built well. It has erected a solid barrier against aggression and the very strength of this barrier is, at the moment, the one really effective hope for a continuance of the peace of the world. We Canadians can be justly proud of the part played by Canada in this alliance.

Before I close these remarks I would like to hark back for a moment to the speech delivered yesterday in this house by the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson). He brought to our attention a most significant fact and one that this body should pay heed to. I refer to the statement that the increase in Canada's proportion of cost of national defence since 1949 far exceeds the proportionate increased costs of our European NATO partners. Does this mean, for instance, that in NATO affairs, in the same way as we have fairly well followed United States foreign policy to the letter, we have also followed the United States proportionately to the dollar in our defence expenditures? That may be good policy, but also it may not. I believe that our defence expenditures should be tied to no one else's but should be determined completely on our own. And so I am wondering if there really has been any exhaustive and systematic review for many years of our defence expenditures as to whether they are adequate, inadequate or excessive. I wonder, perhaps, if there had been such a continuous review during the last few years by, say, a committee of the Senate, whether this country might not have been saved from the Arrow fiasco. In any event, in the light of the facts produced yesterday by the honourable senator from Shelburne, I believe that a review such as I have referred to is overdue and could do much good. Especially if, as we hope, results indicative of an easing of world tensions and some thawing out of the cold war should come about from pending negotiations in the international sphere, perhaps then some part of the Parliament of Canada, even a committee of the Senate, might assume the task of reviewing in a comprehensive way the financial burden that this country should appropriately assume in the realm of national defence.

A great many people in this country are getting very tired, and indeed critical, of the crushing burden of defence costs, particularly at a time when it is recognized that neither side in the cold war has really any effective defence against the weapons of offence which are now available to both sides. Apropos of that, I was interested in a short news item appearing in last evening's Ottawa Journal, under a London dateline, reading as follows:

> Arnold Toynbee celebrated his 70th birthday Tuesday still confident that man will survive the H-Bomb. The British historian-philosopher said at his home: "We shall dance on the edge for a while until people get tired of all that. Then sooner or later an agreement between nations will be reached."

May we all pray that the dancing on the edge that will be done during this summer may produce a result leading to some easing of present world tensions such as might then give some hope of a stoppage in the farcical armaments race which is presently the number one curse of the whole world.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Robertson, debate adjourned.

SENATE PAGES HOCKEY TEAM

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. William R. Brunt: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with I should like to bring to the attention of the house the record of a now famous hockey team with which perhaps some members here are not acquainted. I refer to the record of the Senate Pages Hockey Team. The team is composed of six 60-minute men. They have no substitutes. Their record for the current season is as follows. They played four games against the House of Commons Pages Team, defeating them by a score of 6 to 4 on March 18 and tying them 2 all on March 26. Then the Senate team began to improve and they won the next game, on April 3, by a score of 7 to 2; and finally, on April 6, they defeated the same rivals by a score of 4 to 0. As a result of these victories our team from the Senate is now known as the champions of Parliament Hill.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Any chance for the Maple Leafs?

INFLATION

MOTION TO INSTRUCT FINANCE COMMITTEE TO MAKE STUDY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, April 14, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Wall:

> That the Standing Committee on Finance be instructed to study the threat of inflation in Canada;
> That the committee have the authority to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, I think it was George Bernard Shaw who once said, "If you want to learn something about a subject, write a book on it". One would think this would be true of a speech as well, but I must confess that after preparing my remarks on inflation I am still at sea on this question which seems to have created a psychosis in Canada and the United States in the past few months. I will therefore deal very briefly with what is being referred to as a threat of inflation, and confine my remarks mostly to the impracticability of the Standing Committee on Finance studying the threat of inflation in Canada, if such a situation exists at the moment, and the almost insurmountable obstacles the committee would encounter if it ever were instructed to conduct such a study.

Incidentally, before I forget, I would like to ask the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) if a similar motion was ever made in the past eight years, and if so if a committee was appointed, if it functioned, and if not, why? The answer can be given when the honourable senator closes the debate.

Anyone who looks over the history of Canada since Confederation can see at a glance that budget deficits have been in the majority of years a cardinal feature of budgeting. In the period from 1867 to 1892 there were only three years in which there was a surplus, and a small surplus at that. From Confederation up to and including 1937 there were only six years in which there was a surplus, and in the other years there were deficits ranging up to $45 million. Up until 1900 the total annual revenue of Canada would not exceed $50 million. In 1909 the revenue was $85½ million, and the deficit $45 million, more than 50 per cent of the budget. Then in 1913, under the Government of Sir Robert Borden, there was a substantial surplus—more than twice as much as ever before. I pass over the war years. In the depression years, which Canada by itself was helpless to correct, we had deficits amounting to approximately two-thirds of the revenue collected. Was there inflation at that time? All the efforts, many of them unavailing, were in the direction of raising prices instead of cutting them down. There was no trouble about the credit of Canada; there was no trouble about the dollar. At the present time it is all this Jeremiah prophesying of blue ruin that is causing hesitation on the part of the Canadian public about where they will invest their money.

Now, how about the rise in prices? During the six years of World War II the cost-of-living index went up about ten percentage points, and between 1946 and 1948, as price controls were removed, it shot up twenty points annually. Was this house then eager to embark on a study of rising prices? After 1948 the increase became moderate. Then the Korean War set off another burst of inflation, and the index went up about 16 points in a year and a half. Were honourable senators at that time eager to study inflation? During the four years 1952 to 1955 prices were relatively stable. In 1956 the index rose less than two percentage points, but between June 1958 and November 1958 it moved up five points. Was there a move then to study inflation? No. Then why does this move come now? Why, when in the past two months there has been a drop in the cost of living, do some honourable senators want to instruct a committee to study inflation? The Government of the day has been left the legacy of a dilemma. It is the dilemma of unemployment on the one hand and inflation on the other, and, rightly or wrongly, the Government decided that unemployment was the long horn of this dilemma. The Government may be wrong. Events will prove it right or wrong, but why try to embarrass it now, before we know what its plans and premises are?

If this house is now going to assume the responsibility of undertaking fiscal measures, its constitution should be changed. It should be made a democratically constituted body, competent to act in conflict, if necessary, with the lower house. That is what they have in the United States. That is not what we have in Canada.

Let us examine the motion carefully. The first part of it reads:

> That the Standing Committee on Finance be instructed to study the threat of inflation in Canada.

The first question, I submit, which should be asked is: Who will decide that there is a threat of inflation, or, to put it in other words, an imminent danger of inflation? There is an old Latin maxim, Tot homines quot opiniones—"There are as many opinions as there are men." I think there certainly are many economists and teachers of political economy in Canada who hold divergent opinions on the subject of inflation.

Even before the budget was brought down, newspapers and magazines were announcing that inflation pressure was lowered.

I wish to refer to an article which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of April 4, 1959, entitled "Inflation pressure lowered". The article quotes figures given by the Bureau of Statistics showing that prices are better and that the inflation threat, if there ever was one, is certainly disappearing rapidly.

On Friday, April 10, there appeared in the Ottawa Journal a comment on the budget from which I will read just a few lines:

> And Mr. Fleming's patient, which happens tc be Canada, is not in desperate straits, anyway; certainly not with the economic death-rattle in its throat that some people have been crying about lately.
> For months on end we have had people going up and down the land, many of them professed experts, saying that Mr. Fleming would have a billion-dollar deficit, with an even greater deficit in prospect next year. Niagara, said these Jeremiahs, was right ahead; deficits were going to engulf us, inflation ruin us to boot. With the word "inflation" they were simply infatuated.

Well, these crepe-hanging gentlemen were wrong; wrong by more than $300 million in the size of Mr. Fleming's deficit in 1958-59 and seemingly even more wrong about its probable size this fiscal year.

Again, in yesterday's mail I received a copy of the magazine Industry, which is well known in Canada. In a front-page article headed "The pace of recovery" it states that things are certainly getting much better and the threat of inflation, if there ever was one, in the past few months, is disappearing rapidly.

Honourable senators, we all know that the Finance Committee is one of our busiest and most important committees. The study contemplated in this motion could last for months, if not years.

The second part of the motion reads as follows:

That the committee have the authority to send for persons, papers and records and to report from time to time.

Honourable senators, there are, as you know, two categories of witnesses who can be brought before a committee of this type. First, there are those within the ranks of the Civil Service, and they do not require a subpoena. They are told that on a certain date the committee will sit and will hear their evidence, and they have to be present. Those people have been advising the Minister of Finance, and they, like many other civil servants in Canada, give of their best talents to any Government, no matter what party is in power. Now, if they are going to be called before this committee, surely we cannot expect them to give us any advice which would differ in any way from the advice that they have been giving to the Minister of Finance. So I submit that this feature would probably eliminate that category of witness.

The second category of experts would be those from outside the ranks of the Civil Service, and for this type of witness a subpoena would be required. Now, honourable senators, can you imagine a Senate committee sending to a man who, say, is writing a series of articles for magazines that are going to yield him $400 or $500 each, a subpoena duces tecum with a letter saying: "We want you to be present on such-and-such a date, and you shall bring with you all your papers" —and maybe, in some instances, he would be asked to have himself accompanied by his ghost writer—"bring all the articles you have written and published in the last five years and be prepared to answer questions"? He could say, "Gentlemen, surely you are not going to sap my brain! If you want me to get you out of peril, if you want me to help the country, unless you appeal to my patriotic sense—and I do not think the country is in such danger as to justify your doing so—you will have to remunerate me for my services." If he did appear he might be asked, "What do you think of the threat of inflation?" His answer could very well be, "What threat of inflation? I do not agree with your premise." That man would become an embarrassing witness for the committee and would be declared hostile, and then I am sure there would be a period of cross-examination by honourable members trying to convince him that he was wrong and that the committee was right.

Also there is always a chance that a few politically-inclined Liberals might appear as witnesses and they might want to condemn the policies of the present Government. There might also be witnesses who have Conservative leanings. All of this certainly would inject a sour political note into the committee's proceedings.

All the evidence, briefs, theses, etc., would be reported in shorthand and would form a large volume of divergent pet theories and opinions of self-styled experts and even well-known economists, from which report the Finance Committee would be called upon to glean pearls of wisdom and then, maybe after months or even years of study, it might offer to the Minister of Finance some recommendation.

Honourable senators, the question is not whether the Senate is legally competent to study the threat of inflation, but rather it is whether it should embark upon such a project. As we all know, it is the Government which is constitutionally charged with making the calculations essential to the preparation of its financial program for each fiscal year. It must make its estimates of required public expenditures and devise ways and means of meeting such expenditures in the light of the anticipated state of the Canadian economy for the year. It is also the exclusive constitutional prerogative of the Government to initiate the legislative measures designed to bring its financial policies into effect. Moreover, under our Constitution, such measures must be introduced, in the first instance, in the House of Commons. Once this process has been completed, these measures reach the Senate, where they are considered and dealt with prior to their receiving Royal Assent. In my view this is the proper occasion for the Senate to consider such legislation and the policies inherent therein, whether in relation to inflation or any other aspect of the Canadian economy.

There is no doubt about that. Now, would not the intervention of the Senate in this process, in the manner suggested by the resolution, be regarded as an effort on the part of the Senate to substitute itself for the branch of Government which is specifically and constitutionally charged with the responsibilities I have just mentioned? I submit that it would, in a sense, be doing indirectly what could not, under the Constitution, be done directly. I can see at once the legality of the motion introduced by the honourable and genial junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall), but personally I very much question the wisdom or desirability of adopting the motion, and I intend to vote against it.

In addition, I must say that I share the fear which was so eloquently expressed yesterday by the honourable the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), to the effect that the embarkation of the Finance Committee upon a formal investigation of this problem, which is one in respect of which the Government has and must accept primary responsibility, might, and indeed probably would, tend to promote the sort of political partisanship which has not been regarded in the past as desirable in the Senate.

Honourable senators, I would like to close by quoting the words of the late Right Honourable Senator Dandurand, whose statements have always commanded the utmost respect, when he spoke in this chamber on February 12, 1936. He said this:

> The framers of the Confederation intended this chamber not to be a duplicate of the Commons... if we felt and acted as though we were, our usefulness as a second chamber would be gone. The Senate is not a duplicate of the House of Commons. We stand above the sharp divisions of party that exist in the other chamber, and we approach all questions with a desire to do our best for the general interest of the country.

On motion of Hon. Mr. McLean, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

LUTHERAN CHURCH IN CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. W. D. Euler moved the second reading of Bill S-18, to incorporate The Lutheran Church in Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, until a few moments ago I had very little information as to the details of this bill; however, those of you who have taken the opportunity to read it through will have noted that it declares its purposes quite specifically. May I say, briefly, that it seeks to incorporate certain Lutheran churches in a way similar to that in which churches of other denominations have been incorporated.

Section 4 of the bill sets out the purposes of the proposed corporation, and these may be summarized as being to organize, establish, maintain and carry on residences, missions, churches, places of worship, parsonages, orphanages, homes for the aged, and so forth—in short, to carry on the ordinary work of an organized church.

Sections 9 and 10 provide power to acquire, hold, invest in and sell property. As I have said, this bill is similar to bills passed for the incorporation of churches of other denominations.

I might add that from information just received I have learned that the proposed organization will embody 333 congregations, with 76,000 baptized members. Some of these churches have been affiliated with organizations in the United States, and it is now proposed that they come under the Canadian organization. The churches are located in the provinces of Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, and television and radio coverage is provided by the denomination in all the provinces of Canada.

Honourable senators, that is about all the information I can give at this time. Since no principle is involved in the bill, and the church merely seeks incorporation in the ordinary way and is not a profit making body, I would suggest that, when second reading is given, the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Motion agreed to.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Euler, bill referred to Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, April 21, at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, April 21, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PRIVATE BILLS

PARAMOUNT (PACIFIC STANDARD) LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—COMMONS AMENDMENTS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-12, to incorporate Paramount Life Insurance Company, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with two amendments, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The amendments were read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

1. Page 1, line 16. Delete the words "Paramount Life Insurance Company" and substitute therefor the words "British Pacific Life Insurance Company".
2. The titles: Delete the words "Paramount Life Insurance Company" and substitute therefor the words "British Pacific Life Insurance Company".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Next sitting.

CONGREGATION OF SISTERS OF HOLY FAMILY OF BORDEAUX—COMMONS AMENDMENTS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-14, to incorporate the Congregation of the Sisters of the Holy Family of Bordeaux, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with several amendments, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The amendments were read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

1. Page 1, line 2. After the word "famille" insert the words "de Bordeaux"
2. Page 1, line 24. After the word "Bordeaux" insert the words "in Canada"
3. Page 1, line 25. After the word "Bordeaux" insert the words "au Canada"
4. Title: After the word "Bordeaux" add the words "in Canada".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Méthot: Next sitting.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Report of the Royal Commission on the criminal law relating to criminal sexual psychopaths. (English and French texts).

Report of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority for the year ended December 31, 1958, pursuant to section 85(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Copy of Order in Council, pursuant to section 37 of the Canadian National Railways Act, Chapter 29 of the Statutes of 1955, as follows:

Order in Council P.C. 1959-336, approved March 21, 1959, approving the capital and operating budgets of the Canadian National Railway Company for the year ending December 31, 1959. (English texts).

Copy of Order in Council, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952, as follows:

Order in Council P.C. 1959-123, approved March 3, 1959, approving the capital budget of Trans-Canada Air Lines for the year ending December 31, 1959. (English text).

Report on operations under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, for the year ended December 31, 1958, pursuant to section 13 of the said act, being Chapter 110, R.S. 1952. (English text).

PRIVATE BILL

CANADIAN LEGION OF BRITISH EMPIRE SERVICE LEAGUE—FIRST READING

Hon. David A. Croll presented Bill S-19, respecting The Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Next Tuesday.

CONVENTION ON NATIONALITY OF MARRIED WOMEN

On the notice of motion by Hon. Mr. Aseltine:

Resolved, That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament approve the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women, done at New York on February 20, 1957, and that this House do approve the same.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I ask that this stand until May 5, 1959.

INFLATION

MOTION TO INSTRUCT FINANCE COMMITTEE TO MAKE STUDY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, April 16, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Wall:

That the Standing Committee on Finance be instructed to study the threat of inflation in Canada;

That the committee have the authority to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

Hon. A. Neil McLean: Honourable senators, in rising to speak on the resolution to study the threat of inflation in Canada, introduced by the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) and seconded by the honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale (Hon. Mr. Leonard), I might say I would have spoken on this subject previously but I learned of the resolution only recently, as I was absent from Canada attending the Canadian Government Trade Fair held in Trinidad, which had even more Canadian exhibitors than the fair recently held in Jamaica. The Trinidad Fair was a successful one and was highly appreciated by the citizens of that fine island. The departments of our Government which initiated these fairs deserve due credit.

I am glad the problem of inflation has been placed before this honourable body by the sponsor and seconder of this resolution. In the United States there are several committees at work in Washington at the present time investigating the economy of the nation and inquiring into such things as growth and development, inflation, recession, unemployment, price stability, tight money, interest rates, etc. First, there is President Eisenhower's special cabinet committee on price stability and economic growth, of which Vice-President Nixon is chairman. Another is a presidential committee on Government activities affecting prices and costs, under the chairmanship of Raymond J. Saulnier, who is also head of the President's Council of Economic Advisers. A third is a joint committee of Congress under the chairmanship of Senator Paul H. Douglas of Illinois, known to many of us. These committees have had many hearings and some of the most outstanding authorities in America have appeared before them, and they have accumulated very valuable economic data. For instance, it has been discovered, or rediscovered, that the greatest interference with stability is the economic process known as recession, inflation, deflation, etc. So I think the timing of this resolution is well taken.

Inflation, to my mind, has seldom been properly explained to the man on the street. On the other hand, the scare of inflation has been over-emphasized. Inflation is a word that is often distorted and misunderstood. Inflation and deflation have been interwoven into our commercial system down through the ages. They can be controlled, as there are remedies, but no practical cure exists at the present time. Those who pretend they have a cure should know full well that such suggested cures are far more upsetting to our economic system than the disease itself, if we want to call it that.

I see no politics in the situation, as practically all governments have been plagued, and sometimes helped, by inflation or deflation. There is no use in pretending inflation is something like the Bubonic Plague or Black Death that is thrust upon us from the outside. It is caused from within, and most of us have at some time had a hand in generating it. It might well be said, whoever is not guilty let him cast the first stone.

Under the gold standard system nations tried to regulate prices by fixing the price of gold and circulating it as a medium of exchange or paper money, immediately convertible into gold coin, but time and again the gold measuring stick had to be adjusted owing to changed conditions and world economic disruptions. According to a chart published by the Bank of International Settlements, in the year 1250 A.D., before the Battle of Bannockburn, gold was valued at around 25 shillings an ounce. At the time of the Spanish Armada's invasion of England it took a substantial rise, and after the Napoleonic Wars debts grew to such an extent that Sir Robert Peel, Prime Minister of England, after consulting the best authorities of the time, raised the price of gold to $20.67 in our money. This lasted until sometime after World War I, which increased the debts of the world ten times, and economic conditions got so bad, owing to deflation and loss of confidence, that President Roosevelt, after acting as Sir Robert Peel did in consulting the most outstanding authorities of the time, raised the price of gold to $35 per ounce, which is equivalent to 250 shillings at the present value of a shilling, and of course gold circulates no more as a medium of exchange. It is held by the Reserve Banks.

Growth and development of a nation is not inflationary, but spending without productive growth is. It would be an ideal system if growth and development could be progressively maintained and over a period of years steady advancement carried on in a stable and even way without big changes either up or down in the price level, and having a trade dollar that is steady regarding the stability of its purchasing power, with labour receiving a fair and just return for services given, and capital the same on the investment and replacements—all this without the worry of an unstable dollar. But the question is, how can this be brought about when so many outside inflationary, and sometimes deflationary influences interfere with the price level? Let me name some of the important ones:

1. The wages, prices and profit spiral. If wages are raised without an increase in production per unit of labour, and such wage increases cannot be absorbed by the profits of industry and a raise in the prices of the product follows, it is elementary that such a procedure is inflationary.

2. Inefficiency in management.

3. Cartels and other price-fixing schemes.

4. Floors under commodities that raise prices higher than necessary.
5. Excessive import quotas and tariffs.
6. Dumping duties.
7. Excise taxes and taxation which penalizes growth.
8. Sales taxes.
9. High freight rates.
10. Excessive debt and high interest rates.
11. Pressure on governments to overspend.

All these are inflationary as far as the price level is concerned. I am not necessarily arguing against the things I have named, for I know in our comprehensive society some are quite necessary.

In the days of the gold standard system inflation was supposed to mean that people accumulated more money than goods and they therefore were bidding up prices unnecessarily because they had the excess money with which to do it. However, economic conditions have changed a great deal in recent years and many things that generate inflation are seemingly beyond the control of the ordinary person.

We in Canada have been trying to fight inflation by monetary action which, in its present form, is the weakest of the weapons for attacking inflation, for this so-called cure has some features worse than the disease, since it is often inflationary within itself and, if effective at all, it cuts down the rate of economic growth.

Those who support a tight-money policy are calling, in fact, for a slower rate of investment and slower economic expansion, which means that unemployment follows.

I quote the Christian Science Monitor of March 24 last in this regard. The Federal Reserve Board is juggling the cost of credit, making borrowing of money more expensive to halt inflation, and it has not worked. It is a blunderbuss weapon, like extinguishing an electric light with a shot gun. Even the experts of the Federal Reserve Board now agree that fiscal and monetary manipulation alone will not halt inflation.

Inflation, in certain respects, has some resemblance to a way of life. Take the welfare state, for instance. Citizens ask for more and more services from governments and cheques are issued, so to speak, on our national stockpile of goods, often without a corresponding amount of goods being added to the stockpile through production, perhaps until long afterward. However, the people vote themselves these services of their own free will, but they must be paid for and the amount paid for them has, of course, an effect on living costs.

To get nearer home: We often hear complaints of the higher prices of foods. Well, the old brown paper bag and brown paper wrapper seem to have gone out of business. Visit a supermarket and it is self-evident how purchasers desire their goods put up in fancy packages, which are the style. Since the last war this country has been paying around $150 million per annum for packages of different kinds. In the old days we had the brown cake of soap for cleaning purposes. Now soap cleansers are packaged—at a substantially advanced price, of course. Breakfast foods the same, often with a prize contained therein for the children, which inflates the price.

I asked a tea producer what a purchaser got who paid a dollar for packaged tea in linen bags. His answer was, about 60 cents' worth of tea and 40 cents' worth of linen bags and packaging. Foods are now being prepared in the factories as nearly ready for the table as possible. Kitchen work is gradually being turned into a warming-up operation. I believe the servant problem has something to do with it, and I do not wonder the housewife buys food ready, or almost ready, for the table. But if the work of preparing food is to be done in the manufacturing plants, of course it will inflate the price. I am not arguing against this situation at all. I am just trying to throw light on conditions as to why higher prices prevail for many foods.

The interest bills of our country are steadily going up and there is no corresponding production to offset interest payments. Take our foreign bonded or mortgage debt, for instance, which is nearly all held in the United States. The following figures will show how it has increased during the last few years:

In	1953	we	borrowed	$ 307,774,000
"	1954	"	"	184,281,659
"	1955	"	"	161,614,000
"	1956	"	"	425,000,000
"	1957	"	"	732,000,000
"	1958	"	"	629,000,000
			Total	$2,439,669,659

This is not venture capital at all; this money is borrowed mostly by governments, including municipalities, and Crown companies, plus some corporations, on long terms at fixed rates of interest. The provincial governments, for instance, used it for education, roads, hospitals, and many other services. In 1957 our interest bill abroad was $154 million and in 1958 it was much greater. I have not been able to get the exact figures yet. However, I quote from the Financial Post of November 8, 1958, as follows:

> You can safely reckon on interest payments soon reaching between $200 million and $250 million per year. Most of it will be due to the United States with which we already have an overwhelming trade deficit.

That is, as far as merchandise is concerned. Now, this has to be paid by exports, for which there will be no corresponding imports to add to our stockpile of goods, which of course tends to be inflationary.

According to the Montreal Gazette of April 20, our deficit with outside countries, principally the United States, will likely be greater in 1959 than the deficit of $1 billion 100 million incurred in 1958. $940 million of this amount was in non-merchandise transactions and, according to the Gazette, present government requirements, at the current cost of borrowing, will add considerably to the charges on the taxpayer for debt service, which, of course, adds to the cost of living.

I notice a recent dispatch in the New York Times that Canadian provinces and municipalities are expected to borrow heavily this year in the American markets because interest rates are still significantly lower in the United States than in Canada. They expect $100 million offerings in the near future, among them three provincial borrowings. These borrowings drive up the exchange rate. The exchange rate in turn inflates the Canadian dollar and results in higher prices on our exports. If this goes on, the exchange rate is going to price us out of some of our export markets. We will have to accept a lesser return for our exports such as newsprint. Canadian exporters have to compete with all foreign producers, and for a great quantity of our exports we are obliged to accept American funds in order to compete. Exports are sold in large quantities and often there is as low as a 5 per cent profit margin in order to compete, so when 3 or 4 per cent goes for exchange it is very discouraging and almost an impossible situation.

It is the policy of our country, I know, to increase our national production. This is a sound progressive policy that will, we hope, bring our national accounts into balance, which would mean less borrowing and lighter taxation. For such a policy to be fully successful we must put forth our utmost efforts to increase our exports. As stated, at the present time our inflated dollar is placing a tax on exports and a premium on imports.

I asked the head of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association recently what it cost this industry in exchange. He estimated about $35 million per annum. Well, at that rate, and taking into account all other exports, exchange is costing exporters upwards of $100 million per annum, and the Government many millions in taxes. If this $100 million or thereabouts was saved it would be an asset in the balance sheets of the exporting companies and the Government would receive half this sum in taxes. Trade in merchandise transactions is not inflating our dollar. It is being inflated by these large debt transactions. I can see no reason why our bonded debt financing cannot be done within our country. Canada, for its size, is one of the wealthiest countries in the world. We proved that during the war, when we did our own financing to the extent of over $5 billion and loaned or gave away a similar amount to our allies.

If we go on doing as we are doing, juggling our interest rate upward and forcing governments to borrow in an outside country to carry on their ordinary services, thereby inflating our dollar unnecessarily, a day of reckoning is sure to come.

We, as a country, are more dependent on exports than any other nation I know. For instance, we are dependent 25 per cent on exports, England 17 per cent and the United States 6 per cent. Exports are our life blood and one of the chief cornerstones of our prosperity. Competition in the export trade is becoming keener every month. We are now facing the European Common Market and if our export trade falls off, as I fear it may, the chief responsibility will lie on the doorstep of the Bank of Canada, whose unwise and shortsighted policy of high interest rates has been the cause of inflating our dollar by making it the servant of outside debt borrowings instead of being a normal merchandise dollar that would serve our export trade in an efficient and proper way so competition can be met by our exporting companies being placed on a fair and equal basis with their competitors throughout the world.

I have tried to bring out into the open many of the things that are inflationary and affect price levels, taken from my experience and study. Some of these can be remedied fairly easily, and the remedy would bring lasting benefits to the economy of the country. Others will be more difficult to deal with.

I do not know whether or not I have done a very good job in making myself clear, I can only hope for the best. I am in favour of the resolution.

Hon. Fred A. McGrand: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to make any lengthy remarks on inflation, its causes and cure. There is no unanimity of opinion in this chamber or in public opinion across this country on the question of inflation and the ill effects it has on the economy of this country.

The honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) said in this chamber on April 14:

> I am still at a loss to distinguish between natural growth and this new thing they call "inflation".

He left no doubt in the minds of honourable senators that he is opposed to a committee of this Senate making a study of inflation, and in this he has the support of the senators appointed since 1957 who have spoken on this motion.

I see no need for this chamber to be divided along partisan lines by the adoption of the motion moved by the honourable Senator Wall and seconded by the honourable Senator Leonard. It would give authority to the Senate Finance Committee to invite before it anyone in Canada who could give information as to the existence of inflation, the extent of inflation and the dangers of inflation. There should be nothing partisan in such an inquiry.

While some inside or outside of Parliament may say there is no inflation, or see no danger from inflation as it exists today, there are thousands of Canadians, including some of the most independent and best informed minds, who consider inflation as an evil and unnecessary thing and look upon inflation, unemployment and increased taxation as a trinity of evil. The farmer of the west who cannot sell his wheat; the farmer of the Maritimes who cannot ship his products into the markets of central Canada because of exorbitant freight rates; the worker who worries about job security; the civil servant whose salary does not keep pace with the cost of living; the pensioner on fixed income whose monthly cheque does not meet out-of-pocket expenses; the manufacturer who cannot put his products into the world market because of high production costs—these people know there is something wrong, call it "inflation" or by any other name.

No doubt the term "inflation", like the term "rheumatism" at the turn of the century, covers a multitude of ailments. It may not be easy to distinguish natural growth from inflation. It is not always easy to distinguish between normal growth and malignant growth in the human body. A malignant growth invades and destroys the function of normal tissue. Inflation invades and destroys the natural growth of industry.

Natural growth is a day-by-day occurrence. It took a long time to go from the horse and buggy to the automobile, to bring the turf roads up to the paved highways and the horse-drawn machinery to mechanized equipment.

In the days of low wages, low farm prices, low property taxes and no income taxes, the farmers did not march on Ottawa, nor did labour go on strike as it does today. Civil servants did not talk of collective bargaining with the Government. The consumer's dollar was divided between food, clothing and shelter. Education costs were low; so was the cost of medical care and the cost of amusement. Hospitals had few X-rays and laboratories, but daily care cost only a couple of dollars a day and each man paid his own way. Now it costs $18 to $20 a day under a Government-financed scheme. If we ever get the 30-hour week, hospitalization will cost about $30 a day and greater demands will be made on the taxpayer.

I agree with the honourable Leader of the Government that it is hard to distinguish between natural growth and inflation—the difference between the adoption of natural and normal methods of raising the standard of living and the introduction of unnecessary and expensive methods that increase the cost of living—and here is the need of the inquiry the motion proposes.

We must distinguish between a high standard of living and an expensive standard of living. A high standard does not mean two cars in every garage and a crime picture on every television set. Are there too many built-in and unnecessary services that take too much of the consumer's dollar? A study of this would help to distinguish between normal growth of services and inflationary ones. Surely no one should object to a comprehensive study of what the public calls "inflation" for the want of a more descriptive term.

There either is inflation or there is none. If there is, how dangerous is it? There must be a search for and identification of the causes before a remedy is suggested. How much of the consumer's dollar goes into the unnecessary advertising of a more or less useless product? How much of our dollar goes to the promotion of some television shows that are more dangerous than inflation itself?

"Keeping up with the Joneses" was always an expensive habit. Keeping up with the American way of life is too expensive for a country that must export its raw, mineral wealth, because our high-cost production prices Canadian products out of the world markets. The Clark report bears witness to it.

I agree with the honourable senator from Ottawa East (Hon. Mr. Choquette) that it would de difficult to bring top civil servants before the committee. These are the people who have already advised the Government. They would be embarrassed to turn over to the committee another confidential report already given to the Government. It could be interpreted as another "hidden" report. I am sure that no one in this chamber would wish to use again in Parliament such unparliamentary tactics.

I would like to know why honourable senators oppose investigation of this so-called inflation. They must agree all is not well in the Canadian economy. The honourable senator from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) speaks for the Government in this chamber. Was he speaking for himself or for the Government when he voiced his disapproval of the proposed investigation? If the Government has an alternative plan, the Canadian public wants to know of it.

There is unrest that has manifest itself in more than one province. In Newfoundland, conflict between labour and the paper companies caused the provincial Government there to enact drastic labour legislation. Labour demanded that the federal Government disallow the legislation. The Newfoundland Government asked the federal Government to investigate the complaints of labour and management and then decide on the merits of the legislation. The federal Government's solution was a cooling-off period for all parties concerned. The quarrel between labour and the paper companies is not settled. The public is not in possession of all the facts that forced the provincial Government to enact this legislation, however drastic it may appear.

The public wants to know the cause of high unemployment and inflation. Labour tries to meet the squeeze of higher living costs by asking for higher wages. It wants to protect job security by less automation. Industry believes that higher wage rates will result in higher prices and less employment. In the meantime Canadian-made goods are squeezed out of the world markets and cannot compete in the domestic market against equally good and cheaper-made goods from European countries. The public wants to know and is entitled to know the reasons why.

A cooling-off period may be the treatment for one who sees visions. The wheels of industry have already cooled off and there is a laying-off of Canadian labour. A cooling-off period will not solve the demand of the Canadian people for more information about the condition of Canadian industry. It wants to know the difference between normal growth and inflation.

We realize Canada is a nation great in natural resources with a comparatively small population. The Canadian North has untapped mineral wealth. Railways have been built and are being built to bring iron ore from Labrador to the steel industry of the United States and Europe. Canadian industrial potential cannot be developed if high-cost production is to bar its goods from the world markets. Keeping up with the Americans is a heavy handicap to carry.

To meet the challenge of inflation and all the elements that integrate to form it, a full and thorough investigation should be carried out by some agency appointed by the Government. The Senate takes a second look at all legislation passed by the House of Commons, but its authority does not end there. Some years ago it investigated the drug traffic; three years ago, at the suggestion of the Government, it undertook a study of land use in Canada. It has the power to introduce legislation; it must have the right to investigate any danger to the well-being of the Canadian nation. This should be done with the concurrence of the Government. The members of the House of Commons are overtaxed with responsibility; the Senate has the time and the talent to undertake this work in the interests of the Canadian people. What greater purpose could it serve?

On motion of Hon. Mr. Monette, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, April 22, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson, for Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 199 to 214, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

LUTHERAN CHURCH IN CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE, WITH AMENDMENTS

Hon. Harold Connolly, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, presented the report of the committee on Bill S-18.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, to whom was referred the Bill S-18 intituled: "An Act to incorporate The Lutheran Church in Canada", have in obedience to the order of reference of April 16, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 1, line 16: Strike out "The Lutheran Church in Canada" and substitute therefor "Lutheran Church—Canada".

2. In the title: Strike out "The Lutheran Church in Canada" and substitute therefor "Lutheran Church—Canada".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Next sitting.

COMMONS CHAMBER

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, during the week-end I visited the House of Commons chamber, and I was sorry to see the bad condition of the green rug there. It is all worn out and very shabby. I ask the Government to see to it that the House of Commons chamber is as well looked after as is the Senate chamber, and that a new green rug is installed in the Commons chamber at the earliest possible opportunity.

The Hon. the Speaker: Would the honourable senator refer to the "other place"?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but somebody might not understand.

I further noted that the brass railing in the other place was not shining. This would give a wrong impression to the countless visitors.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: What about the brass hats?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: They are not in this building.

INFLATION

MOTION TO INSTRUCT FINANCE COMMITTEE TO MAKE STUDY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Wall:

That the Standing Committee on Finance be instructed to study the threat of inflation in Canada;

That the committee have the authority to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, I ask permission to place on Hansard a little later a table, of which I have prepared a number of copies for honourable members, if they are interested in following it. It contains figures taken from a table placed on record by a previous speaker, plus two columns of figures added by me.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask the honourable senator to what the table refers?

Hon. Mr. Monette: It refers to the table which was presented by the mover of the motion (Hon. Mr. Wall) and which appears in Hansard of February 25, at page 234.

Hon. Mr. Reid: On what authority is the table based?

Hon. Mr. Monette: I will come to that later. There are five columns in the table which I will file. Three of them are a reproduction of the table already filed, and two contain calculations which I have made from the figures given in the original table.

Honourable senators, I had it in mind to say a few words in French, but I have had them translated into English, and perhaps time would be saved if I made my remarks exclusively in that language.

I have long hesitated before deciding to participate in this debate. First of all, I do not assume to be an economist. Then too, the data and conclusions of experts on the problem are very changing and doubtful, divergent in the extreme. Therefore, I apologize in advance for anything which in my remarks might appear debatable or which might offend the intelligence of honourable senators. Moreover, in this matter almost everything is relative and uncertain, and almost all the conclusions of economists, as well as of businessmen, are disputed.

There is, however, a reason which has determined me to speak on this motion. I have long thought, with others, that at the end of this debate, the proposal for a second study of this question of inflation by a standing committee of this house, after the whole house itself has fully explored it, would not be insisted upon. In fact, it appears that we have been and are having here, in open official sittings of the whole Senate, as full and exhaustive consideration as possible of all the aspects of the subject-matter. We have had a long debate of almost two months, a brilliant and no doubt a very fruitful one, for a large number of our members are experienced in many kinds of business and are well aware of the facts and realities of practical economics. They are even, I would say, well learned in the fascinating, though ever-changing theoretical and dogmatic conclusions of writers on economics.

I take this opportunity to congratulate our chamber, especially upon the high credit those honourable senators have brought and are still bringing upon us by their discussion of the matter.

But could the Finance Committee determine and report to us anything superior or more enlightening than the views so eminently expressed here by our own colleagues, though they might have differed in their respective conclusions? To my mind such a repetition of the investigation would, at this time at least, appear useless. However, realizing that a large number of our colleagues seem determined to look for some authority as if—if I may say so, without offence—to qualify their own authority, I have to take my share of responsibility in this debate.

Inflation, it is contended, is a science. But that science, as well as economics generally, is most uncertain. It rests to a great extent, if not exclusively, on the interlocking of new facts and evidence, innumerable and complex, always changing, always moving toward most irregular and unpredictable directions and at a speed often disconcerting. And all of this takes place in a world itself always moving, where all the nations of the earth clash more and more among themselves, in their opposed ambitions and interests, with all their covetousness and hatred, the whole culminating in wars, which nowadays become world wars, leaving after them the disruption of nations, unbelievable misery in certain countries and instability of the universal economy.

No formula could better mark this moving and uncertain character of world economic tendencies than that given by Jules Verne in his imaginary and somewhat prophetic submarine, the Nautilus. That formula was mobilis in mobili—moving in the moving element.

There is this difference, however, that in the moving waves of the sea the expert pilot can always guard against extreme dangers, because he knows the exact location of reefs and sandbanks, the maelstroms, and other whirlpools, so extremely dangerous. Economists, however, were not able to warn or protect us beforehand against the ambitions of the Kaiser, the catlike traps of Stalin, or the maniacal tendencies of the Fuehrer. And today, who shall give the nations of the West the prescience necessary for our leaders to make proper decisions at conferences and in relations so imponderable and dangerous as exist now and which we are to face in the near future with the communist world and its unpredictable leaders?

The honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) has moved:

> That the Standing Committee on Finance be instructed to study the threat of inflation in Canada, ... and to report from time to time.

This would appear to be a very wide and involved subject-matter, as the term "inflation" is here mentioned in no qualified or particular meaning. Let us assume, however, that it is meant to be restricted to the financial aspect of the word. Yet, in that sense, it could refer to any kind of assets, resources, products, revenues and credits, as well as to any kind of indebtedness, public expenses, commitments and taxes, and even to the budget. In that sense also it might refer to the more special monetary aspect, that is, to anything which in any way, near or remote, points to money or currency. Then, it would involve inflation of prices and inflation of wages, with their progressing spiral, both of which imply inflation of the sums of money or other currency required for the settlement of such increased prices and wages. The expression would also apply to the inflation of buying power, that is, to my mind, the increasing of the revenues available for consumption.

In its strictest meaning, inflation would concern the instruments of payment, money of all kinds, paper money and other currency which serve in daily transactions; or it might concern the sum total of the monetary bulk—which includes all the means of settlement, even the most immaterial, particularly deposits, either in banks, caisses nationales d'économie, or other similar institutions, and deposits in diverse kinds of accounts in so far as such accounts allow payment by cheques, counter-accounts or other accountancy methods.

And, honourable senators, I conclude here what I have to say on this, though there are a number of other aspects of the term inflation. An investigation of inflation, or simply an investigation of the "threat of inflation", as it is put in the motion, would involve discussion, direct or indirect, of rather numerous economic matters, affecting ultimately the budget now before the House of Commons. I do not mean to say we have no right here to speak of matters that may at present be before that house, but I just suggest what to my mind would appear to be improper to do at a time when the budget is being discussed.

In proposing his motion the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg referred to and put on Hansard a table which he prepared, and which he described as follows:

> ... to indicate the extent of annual price increases in our gross national product when related to constant 1949 dollars.

He declared that the figures in the table were secured from Dominion Bureau of Statistics. No one would—certainly I myself would not—cast any doubt on this assurance by the honourable senator.

Taking the table as reproduced in Hansard of February 25 last, at page 234, we have a very concise and clear exposé of the import of those figures. They indicate, for each of the years 1949 to 1958, both inclusive, the sum total of the gross national product of Canada, showing in distinct columns their value in current dollars, as well as in constant dollars, respectively; and in a third column there is a list of the respective yearly increases of such values in current dollars over their given values in constant dollars. This third column is entitled "Amount of price increase in gross national product". Without meaning any offence, I suggest this column could also be described as, "Difference in value of the dollar figures, as between current dollars and constant dollars".

The table also shows that the figures, given in thousands, are meant to represent millions.

I have no inclination to dispute the accuracy of the figures so given. However, the table does not happen to give a similar column to indicate the amount of increases or decreases, from year to year, of those yearly differentials between the current values and the constant values. For convenience of discussion I beg consent of the house to put on record in our Hansard— and I understand consent was given at the outset of my remarks—a new table reproducing entirely the table already filed by the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg, to which I have added a fourth column, indicating a list of the increases and decreases, from year to year, of those yearly differentials between values in current dollars and values in constant dollars. I have also added a fifth column, indicating the percentage of increase, year by year, of the constant 1949 dollar value of those differentials.

Year	G.N.P. in current $	G.N.P. in constant 1949 $	Amount of price increase in G.N.P.	(Added 4th column) Difference of increase over previous year	(Added 5th column) Percentage of yearly increase of prices over constant 1949 dollar
1949	$16,343	$16,343
1950	$18,006	$17,471	$ 535	not given	3 %
1951	21,170	18,547	2,623	$2,088	over 14 %
1952	23,995	20,027	3,968	1,345	over 19 %
1953	25,020	20,794	4,226	258	over 20 %
1954	24,871	20,186	4,685	459	over 23.2%

1958	32,900	23,746*	9,154*	1,269	over 34.4%
Nine-year total			$44,773,000,000.00
Average annual price increase in G.N.P.			$ 4,974,777,777.77

*Preliminary estimate based on 11 months' data.

As honourable senators will see, the original table filed by the honourable senator and appearing on page 234 indicates the total value for 1949, which is given as the basic year, of the gross national product, as being $16,343 million, in constant dollars, which sum is also for that year the value in current dollars.

For the year 1950, the total value of the gross national product is given at $18,006 million current dollars, as against $17,471 million constant 1949 dollars.

As honourable senators will notice, the years and the first three columns of figures in this table are taken from the table originally filed. Then in the fourth column I show the difference between the yearly figures in the third column, this third column representing the annual increase from 1950 to 1958 in the value of the gross national product, which increase is the difference between the value expressed in current dollars, as shown in the first column, and the value expressed in constant 1949 dollars, as shown in the second column. In 1950 this last mentioned difference amounted to $535 million. In 1951 the difference between the current dollar figure of $21,170 million and the constant dollar figure of $18,547 million amounted to $2,623 million, as shown in the third column. Similarly, for 1952, $23,995 million represents the gross national product in current dollars, and $20,027 million represents the gross national product in constant 1949 dollars, and it will be seen that the difference amounted to $3,968 million.

Honourable senators will see, from the fourth column, that for 1951 I show the figure of $2,088 million, this being the difference between the gross national product of $535 million in 1950 and that of $2,623 million in 1951. Column 4 shows the annual increase in the differentials between current dollars and constant dollars over each of the previous years. For instance, in 1952 the amount was $1,345 million, and in 1953, $258 million, and so on down to 1956, when the differential jumped to $1,479 million.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Would the honourable senator mind explaining the meaning of the terms "constant dollars" and "current dollars"?

Hon. Mr. Monette: The "constant dollar" is something that is arbitrarily determined from time to time. For instance, the constant dollar used here is the value of 100 cents in buying power as of the year 1949. Then, if in any subsequent year there is a decline in the buying power of the dollar, the expression "current dollars" applies to the depreciated dollars, a greater number of which will be necessary to buy a given product than would have been required to buy the same product in 1949.

For the purpose of information, here the value of the gross national product is given from year to year in constant dollars, and then in current dollars, and the increased cost in current dollars, it is assumed, represents inflation.

To return to the year 1956: it shows a differential of $1,479 million between the increase in value of the gross national product for that year over the increase for the preceding year, the increase each year being the difference between the value in constant dollars and the value in current dollars.

The following year, 1957, was the year in which the old administration had the responsibility for the conduct of affairs for the first six months, and then a new administration took over. Without taking account of the time required for the new administration to take full possession of office in the year 1957, it may be said that the responsibility for that year was shared half and half between the two administrations. The figure for that year shows a reduction in the differential to $1,297 million. In 1958 the differential was further reduced to $1,269 million.

Honourable senators will appreciate with respect to these yearly increases that there was at the outset a big spread of $2,088 million, which was gradually reduced. Then in 1956, which was the year in which there was a move in this house to make a thorough and exhaustive investigation of inflation, there was a jump in the differential to the amount of $1,479 million. During the years 1957 and 1958 this differential was gradually reduced.

Honourable senators this is an arithmetical calculation of the results over these years, and except for clerical errors—though I have checked it many times—I believe it to be correct. As I have said, this calculation flows from the figures given by the honourable senator whose motion we are debating (Hon. Mr. Wall). To my mind the conclusion shown in column 4 is not necessarily the best conclusion, though it is eloquent.

The fifth column gives the percentages of the yearly increase of prices expressed in current dollars over constant 1949 dollars. The percentage of the increase is based on the 1949 dollar, taken at 100 cents, and is shown in percentage figures in the fifth column. The fifth column indicates that by 1950 the 1949 dollar had increased by 3 per cent, that is, to $1.03. In 1951 it suddenly increased by over 14 per cent, so a little over $1.14 was required to equal the constant dollar of two years previous. In 1952 a similar progression took place: by that year the percentage of increase would make the constant dollar of 1949 equal to $1.19.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In 1951 it was how much?

Hon. Mr. Monette: In 1951 it was 14 per cent. In 1952 it was 19 per cent, so the increase would bring the constant dollar of 1949 to $1.19.

In the following years there was a similar progression. In 1953 the constant dollar of 1949 was inflated, if that is the right word, to $1.20. In 1954 the figure was $1.232, and in 1955, the same, $1.232. In 1956 it was $1.275, and in 1957 the increase was over 33 per cent, which would make it $1.33 for the 1949 constant dollar. Finally, in 1958 there was an increase of 34.4 per cent, a little more than one point over the previous year, so the constant dollar of 1949 was equal to $1.34 last year.

That last column, which gives percentages, indicates the real increase, or inflation, in the 100-cent dollar of 1949.

The honourable junior senator from Winnipeg summarized the general results of his table of three columns for all those years, and those differentials in value are given for current dollars and constant dollars. He said, as reported at page 235:

> Honourable senators will see that based on current dollars our 1958 gross national product is presently being forecast at a total of $32.9 billion...

That is correct. It was a forecast, because there were still in 1958, at the time that table was prepared, some months of the year to come. I have checked it, and instead of being $32.9 billion it is $32.2 billion, and that translated into constant 1949 dollars is the basis of our consumers price index.

The honourable senator referred to the consumers price index, and then said:

> ...our gross national product for 1958 amounts to only $23 billion 746 million. By subtracting these two figures we get a startling price cost increase in our estimated 1958 gross national product of $9 billion 154 million.

That is for one year, 1958. He continued:

> If we add these inflation cost differentials for the past nine years we get the staggering sum of almost $45 billion, and an average annual price increase figure in our gross national product of almost $5 billion.

Without disputing the figures I would like, with respect, to make some comments. In those remarks the honourable senator has accurately summarized in a lump sum the total amount for the year 1958 of what he has called the startling price cost increase in our estimated 1958 gross national product of $9 billion 154 million. He did not happen, however, to mention, nor qualify, as startling or otherwise, the price cost increase in our estimated gross national product for each of the previous years indicated in his table. Nevertheless, he did give the total for the past nine years of those inflation cost differentials, which total amounts, as he put it, to the staggering sum of almost $45 billion, the whole constituting, as he said, an average price increase figure in our gross national product of almost $5 billion, and that is yearly.

Then the honourable mover of the motion continued:

> This very pertinent question plagues all of us: Who has been shouldering the major part of the cost burden of this amount of relative inflation in our gross national product? And if not the Parliament of Canada, then who is to attempt to locate the answers and to give direction to controlling this most insidious of all taxes—inflation?

That question I will answer immediately. It may not be Parliament, but it is the Government that will attempt to locate the answers and give direction. It is the Government which gives the direction, though legislature measures that come before Parliament have to be considered by both houses.

He continued:

> It is insidious...

He had already referred to inflation as being the "most insidious of all taxes".

> It is insidious because although it actually puts more dollars into some, though not all, hands, it stealthily dilutes the value of each dollar; it is insidious because everybody has not shared in these extra dollars.

Again, may I interrupt to say that it is on the regular market that people buy with the dollar of the new value. The poorer man sometimes has to cease buying as much as he did before his dollar money was devalued in that way.

> It is an insidious technique of literally stealing money without the embarrassment of identifying the victims or too closely pointing out the beneficiaries. Holders of savings accounts, bonds, pensions, annuities and insurance policies are being systematically and inexorably victimized. Only the organized, the influential and the knowledgeable, and governments, are able to benefit from these extra dollars, and they do so, wittingly or unwittingly, at the expense of their weaker fellow citizens who are not in a position to enforce their just demands for an equitable share of this inflated national product.

Those words, well expressed as they are, are well guarded. But, honourable senators, I submit that the description of this so-called inflation as the "most insidious of all taxes . . . an insidious technique of literally stealing money without the embarrassment of identifying the victims or too closely pointing out the beneficiaries", might not appear to be justified—I think I can say that without offence—since the inflation referred to is thought in many quarters to be the natural growth of prices in relation to the gross national product of each year, and this growing process has existed not only since 1949, but since 1938, and surely even long before that. It is, at least relatively, a natural growth in the opinion and experience of many economists and businessmen. It is the natural growth referred to by the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) on the occasion of his speech the other day.

There is nothing in the whole speech of the mover of the motion to support the possible implication of the existence of a "technique of literally stealing money" in relation to this yearly increase of the differentials between the actual buying power of the dollar in comparison with its buying power in 1949. He did not point out any actual refusal by anyone, either within or without the Government, to embarrass himself in, as he put it, "identifying the victims or in too closely pointing out the beneficiaries". Neither does there appear to be any justification for the charge that "Only the organized, the influential and the knowledgeable, and governments, are able to benefit from these extra dollars, and they do so, wittingly or unwittingly, at the expense of their weaker fellow citizens who are not in a position to enforce their just demands for an equitable share of this inflated national product."

Moreover, as we will see, the purport of those remarks will strike back at those who before the year 1957 would have failed to embarrass themselves with trying to make such identification.

I now invite honourable senators to take a look at the fourth column that I have added to the table which I have placed on record. Reference has been made to the constant dollar of 1949 and, in some places, to the cost of living index. The two bases are not the same and they give different results. If you take the table and calculate the yearly increase in cost of living in relation to the yearly increase in national growth, you will find a difference. Because of this, though I may not be qualified to do so, I would like to express my remarks on what information I have gathered. I have summarized my conclusions and if they are not correct I will take no offence at being corrected.

During the period 1949 to 1958 the consumers price index rose by about one-quarter, reaching exactly 125.1 in 1958. During the same period the increase in prices, in terms of gross national product, amounted to somewhat more than one-third, that is, as appears in the fifth column of the table I have just filed, 34.4 per cent, making a rise to 134.4.

The difference between these two price movements arises because the gross national product measures the market value of the total of goods and services produced in a given period by Canadian residents, whereas the cost of living index measures the prices of goods and services which a typical Canadian family normally buys. The sources of calculation are somewhat different. In other words, each of the two series is designed to fulfil a specific and different function. It can be seen that the concept underlying the measurement of gross national product is much more broadly based than that which serves to determine the cost of living. The total of the gross national product comprises the market value of goods and services produced not only for consumption but also for the purposes of capital investment for export and for use by governments. The cost of living index, on the other hand, is primarily concerned with the retail price of consumer goods and services.

It is also important to note that year-to-year changes in the cost of living index are designed to measure price changes of a "fixed basket" of goods and services.

This basket of goods and services conforms as closely as possible to the typical expenditure pattern of the average family. On the other hand, year-to-year changes in the gross national product or in its components are calculated in respect of the actual production in each year. For instance, the production of washing machines might go up in one year by 20 per cent, though prices of washing machines might rise by 10 per cent. This would have a relatively large effect on the overall price movement of the gross national product. However, it would be relatively less important in the cost of living index, because this series would be affected solely by the 10 per cent rise in prices, since the quantity assumed to be purchased by the average family remains stable. It seems reasonable to assume, therefore, that the impact of price changes on the average man and his family is more truly reflected in the movements of the consumers price index, because this statistical series is specifically designed to reflect the expenditure pattern of consumers.

With these explanations in view, I will now give honourable senators a comparison of some tables. I have procured from officials of the Department of Finance a table which I assure honourable members is well verified. It shows the consumers price index in 1949 as 100. At the end of 1958 it had risen to 125.5. The choice of the year 1949 as a base year was arbitrary. I find that in 1939 the consumers price index was 63.2. In the 20-year period from 1939 to 1958 the price index rose from 63.2 to 125.5, an increase of 98 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Of course, 1939 was a time of deflation, not of inflation.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I have also secured a table showing the exchange rate on U.S. dollars in terms of Canadian dollars. This table indicates that in 1949 the American dollar stood at $1.03 in relation to the Canadian dollar. In 1950 it stood at $1.08, and in 1951 at $1.05. Then our dollar picked up. In 1952 the American dollar stood at 98 cents; in 1954, 97 cents; in 1955, 98 cents, and the same in 1956; in 1957, 96 cents, and in 1958, 97 cents.

Honourable senators, as I mentioned at the opening of my remarks, our discussion of the past two months on the motion before us has constituted a thorough investigation of the subject-matter of inflation. Adoption of the motion, I submit, would call for a second investigation.

May I remind honourable senators of what happened in 1956? The former administration was then in office. During the session which started on January 10 that year the Standing Committee on Finance was authorized to examine the expenditures proposed by the estimates.

At page 753 of Hansard for 1956 the committee's order of reference is set out as follows:

> That the Standing Committee on Finance be authorized to examine the expenditures proposed by the estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1957, in advance of the bills based on the said estimates reaching the Senate:
> That the said committee be empowered to send for records of revenues from taxation collected by the federal, provincial and municipal Governments in Canada, and the incidence of this taxation in its effect upon different income groups, and records of expenditures by such Governments, showing
> (1) Sources of income and expenditures of same under proper headings, together with
> (2) estimates of gross national production,
> (3) net national income,
> (4) movement of the cost-of-living index, and
> (5) their relation of such total expenditures for the year 1939 and for the latest year for which the information is available and such other matters as may be pertinent to the examination of the estimates, and to report upon the same.
> That the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records.

The committee, of which the late Senator Hawkins was chairman, sat and made what I would judge to be a very exhaustive, serious and conscientious study. It reported on June 20, 1956, and as will be seen from page 756 of Hansard, this is what it said, in item No. 8, under the heading "Inflation and Export Markets":

> Your committee gave some consideration to the danger to Canadian export markets inherent in the inflationary trend, with its higher costs of production. The danger inherent in this trend is immediately obvious.
> The ability to compete successfully in foreign markets is based to a large extent on the domestic cost of production, and increases in the latter cannot help but have damaging effects on the former.
> Your committee feel that a study of all production costs should be made if these inflationary trends are to be curbed and if Canada's valuable export market is to be safeguarded. An exhaustive inquiry into this subject at the next session of Parliament is strongly recommended.

That was a recommendation of the Senate's Finance Committee, and it was unanimously adopted.

May I say in passing that the late Senator Hawkins, in the short time that it was given to me to know him impressed me deeply by his personality and devotion to duty, as well as by his integrity.

That session of Parliament was prorogued on August 4, 1956. The next session of Parliament, referred to in the report for the holding of an exhaustive inquiry on inflation, opened on January 8, 1957 and prorogued on April 12 that year.

Well, honourable senators, if I am not mistaken, an exhaustive inquiry, particularly as to the subject of inflation and export markets, as recommended unanimously by the Senate for study by its special committee, was never held, either in the remaining part of that 1956 session or during the whole of the 1957 session. To this I want to make a little exception: on June 26, 1956, there was a short debate on the motion for concurrence of the Senate in the committee's report, and at that time the honourable chairman of the committee, the late Senator Hawkins, made a few remarks on the subject-matter of inflation, which remarks were absolutely devoid of any desire to criticize the Government. Another speech was also then delivered by the then Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Senator Haig), and his speech also was devoid of any idea of criticism of the Government.

Now, honourable senators, as I have said, from the figures in my table there appears to be no purpose to be served by a new inquiry. The Senate has been conducting one for the last two months, and a new one by a committee of the Senate would probably be useless and might last several months more. It would have to cover the conditions which existed in 1956, about which an inquiry and a report have already been made, as well as the conditions in prior and subsequent years.

If in 1957 the Government of the day did not decide to sponsor an exhaustive inquiry, or any further inquiry at all, it means simply that it did not accept the suggestion of the Senate. I do not pretend it is unconstitutional or unparliamentary to discuss this matter here, but the fact is that the Government took no steps to have an inquiry, although the Senate, because of the Government's majority here, would not have been expected to be critical of Government policy. In any event, the investigation did not take place, for what reason I do not know. Perhaps someone could tell me. And now, when an exhaustive inquiry has been made this session by the whole Senate, I see no reason why we should have a second investigation, not by the Senate, not by Parliament, but by a committee of the Senate.

Quite apart from that, if the motion were passed we might have to make a study of conditions that existed as far back as 1951, as indicated in the table I filed. Then in what position would we be here? For many years we have been following the example set by two eminent senators, many others I am sure, the late Senator Dandurand and former Senator Meighen, each of whom was in turn Leader of the Government in the Senate and Leader of the Opposition in the Senate. I do not need to quote their words, for they have been referred to here many times. My sincere desire is to be unprejudiced, and I cannot see any reason why we should continue the inquiry, in another form, as proposed. I recommend that we do not do so.

May I say that I respect contrary opinions of honourable senators, from whatever side they come, and I welcome favourable opinions from either side. Since coming to the Senate I have acquired the feeling that we in this house do not consciously base our speeches or decisions on narrow political considerations. In matters of investigation our task is to gather the facts and comment on them, as was done in this instance. It is then for the Government to decide on budgetary matters and other questions of policy.

In conclusion, I honestly beg honourable senators not to take the risk, even in a small measure, of turning this house into a body that might appear to have the psychology of of undue partisanship.

I am grateful for the kind attention honourable senators have given to my remarks this afternoon. As to the motion before the house, I feel I shall be justified in voting against it.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, there remains very little for me to say on this motion, and even if I were inclined to make a speech on inflation, which I am not, I would hesitate to do so at this late stage in the debate.

I rise at this time for one purpose, and that is to endeavour to allay the fear of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) that I or any senators with whom I have spoken have any intention of gaining any political advantage from a discussion of this subject in committee. I say further, I have spoken to a great many senators—to all who have participated in this debate and not one of them has any desire to obtain any political advantage.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Why were we not consulted about the matter before the motion was brought in?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I did not bring in the motion, and I cannot speak for its mover. The Leader of the Government will recall that I did mention to him that the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) had said he wanted to bring in the motion.

I may also say at this time that I am surprised that there is any opposition to a reference of this subject to the committee. I was quite surprised when the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) intimated that he would oppose the motion. That was the first intimation I had that the motion would be opposed. I admit that when I mentioned the proposal to the Leader of the Government he was not too enthusiastic about it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I said there was a lot of objection to the proposal. I remember telling you that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No doubt the leader did tell me that, but he did not suggest there would be opposition to the motion. I repeat, I was quite astonished when I came in the house and heard the honourable senator from Winnipeg South make a speech in which he stated definitely that he would oppose the motion.

Honourable senators, this motion was introduced in the house on February 25, but even before that a number of honourable senators had discussed and had warned us of the pitfalls which will surely beset us if we allow to go unchecked the present inflationary trends. The speech on this subject which impressed us most forcibly was, without doubt, the one delivered by the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen). It was only after that speech that the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg introduced his motion, at which time he delivered, I think we will all agree, an exceptionally fine, scholarly and well-documented address, which was supported by an equally commendable, concise and forthright statement by the honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale (Hon. Mr. Leonard).

Since then there has been a very worthwhile discussion on this subject, with eloquent and informative addresses from both sides of the house. Honourable senators will pardon me if I do not refer directly to any of these speeches. We have had an excellent debate. Those who participated in it have spent a great deal of time and have done considerable research in preparing their speeches. In view of the number of speeches which have been made and the information which has gone on the record, I feel—and I am speaking personally—that we should, with as little delay as possible, carry out the proposal of the mover and seconder of this motion, namely, instruct the Standing Committee on Finance to study the threat of inflation in Canada.

It has been suggested in this house, either by inference or by direct statement, that creeping inflation is inevitable. This, honourable senators, is not in accordance with the opinion expressed by the present Minister of Finance. He is one who does not agree that creeping inflation is either desirable or inevitable. He has used very strong language in this connection, and has said that to argue that inflation is inevitable is a reflection upon and an insult to the intelligence and moral fibre of free peoples.

It has been said during the debate in this house that the House of Lords would not entertain a motion of this type. Honourable senators, I am not so sure that that is so. In fact, I feel certain that the House of Lords would not hesitate to undertake a study of this kind. It was my good fortune to be in London last fall, and while there I attended a sitting of the House of Lords. Honourable senators will recall that the powers of that house are much more restricted than are the powers of this house. The day I attended a sitting of the Lords a motion was made by Lord Lloyd, a supporter of the Government, for production of certain papers. The purpose of the motion was to require the Government to spend more money on the rehabilitation of expelled British nationals from Egypt. That was a financial question. The House of Lords could not bring in a bill, but it could pass a motion requiring the Government to produce the papers which would mean that in the opinion of that house the Government should spend more money on the matter referred to.

Now, the honourable leader in this house stated during his speech, as reported at page 466 of Hansard, that he had taken the trouble to read again speeches of Senators Lougheed, Meighen, Dandurand, King and others, and he said he was > —of the opinion that if they were here today they would not want the Standing Committee on Finance of the Senate to proceed with a study of this kind.

Well, honourable senators, I am not too sure of that. In fact, I am quite sure that if they were in this house today they would take a different attitude entirely. I took the trouble to look up the debate in this house on May 22, 1919 when the motion was made to set up the Committee on Finance. Did Senator Dandurand or Senator Lougheed oppose the setting up of the committee? Neither of them did. Senator Lougheed did not go all the way on the proposal, because he thought that the supply bills might be referred to this committee at the end of the session, or during the session, and he did not think that supply bills should be referred to the Finance Committee. I agree with him wholeheartedly. I was quite interested in this, and I was quite flattered when I read in his remarks that he thought supply bills should be referred to a committee of the whole house. Honourable senators, I do not want to boast, but do you not recall that last year I suggested that the supply bills, when they come to us, should be referred to the whole house?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Supplementaries only.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: We were dealing with a supplementary supply bill, at the time, but I made that suggestion then, and I was amazed to find the same suggestion had been made in 1919 by no other than Sir James Lougheed. That was the only objection he took to the setting up of this committee. I would like to read his opening remarks, but before I do so may I say that the debate on the setting up of this committee did not go on for almost two months; it was decided in one day to set up the committee. I am sure the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) would be very interested in the opening remarks made by Senator Lougheed on that day. This is what he said:

> Honourable gentlemen, I must confess that I feel a degree of uncertainty in saying anything upon this subject, because it possibly might be construed or interpreted as meaning that the Government, in submitting its financial bills to the Senate, did not desire that scrutiny and that close examination which a special committee of this character could give. That, I need scarcely say, is not the case.

He hesitated even to speak on the subject. Then, in another paragraph in his speech he said:

> Now, there is a class of financial questions that come before the Senate from time to time with which members of the Senate might very well acquaint themselves.

Remember, this was Senator Lougheed, the gentleman who the honourable Leader of the Government said would not be in favour of this motion. He went on:

> It would be not only expedient but very desirable in the public interest that they should do so. There is no reason why such a committee should not make a close study of problems of this kind. There is no reason why the Senate should not give closer attention to questions of taxation than they do—I mean, to the policy involved in the many problems of taxation which come before the Parliament of Canada from time to time.

That is what Senator Lougheed thought of this committee and of its functions. Senator Dandurand supported the motion without reservation because he felt that the Senate would not, in any event, send supply bills to the committee.

I felt I should read those excerpts from Senator Lougheed's speech so that honourable senators would feel, as I do, that if Senator Lougheed were alive today he would support the motion. I am confident that he would not have spoken against the motion.

My honourable friend the Leader of the Government said that he did not think these gentlemen would support the motion for fear it might in the end turn this house into a partisan political body. With all due respect to my honourable friend, I think that is a pure figment of his imagination. I cannot be too emphatic when I say I can find no intention of that sort from anyone in this house.

The honourable leader used these words:

> Honourable senators, this motion is now before us as though the present Government were responsible for all the inflation that has taken place.

I have listened to all the speeches that have been delivered in this house, I have re-read many of them, and I can find nowhere in any speech any suggestion that the present Government is responsible for all the inflation which is with us today.

There are many factors apart from the financial policy of the Government which contribute to inflation. It was only the other day that the Prime Minister, to use the words of a certain newspaper, blasted certain businesses for inexcusably increasing the prices of their commodities beyond the tax increases in the recent budget. Honourable senators, if such increases have been made it is bound to have an effect on inflation, apart altogether from Government financial policy.

Then, there is credit buying. What effect does credit buying have on inflation? Labour says that management—or shall I use the word "capital"?—is largely responsible for inflation. Capital, or management, turns around and says the responsibility is on the part of labour. I am sure that the Government would welcome an inquiry into this aspect of this perplexing subject. Probably that is one of the things that the Minister of Finance had in mind when he recently stated that he not only always approved of, but had always welcomed, public discussion on the subject of inflation. It was he who stated in no uncertain terms, referring to the subject of inflation, that nothing but good can come from a better public understanding of its causes, aspects, risks, dangers and of the serious economic distortions which it produces.

Honourable senators, nobody gains from inflation. Some may get a temporary advantage but it would seem to be properly described as a dangerous disease that attacks and possesses everyone. Education is an essential part of the treatment that can lead to its arrest and defeat. It must be forcefully and repeatedly publicized in order to marshal support at all levels so that its spread may be checked. Why, I ask, in such circumstances should anyone oppose research and study on this question that requires so much public support if any treatment is to be successful?

I feel, notwithstanding what has been said in this house, that the Prime Minister would welcome an inquiry free from bitter political partisanship into this subject. The committee's findings, after its inquiry conducted in the spirit which I have mentioned, could only be helpful to the Government. The Prime Minister has confidence in the committee. He has referred to it and, Mr. Speaker, I hope you will not object if I refer to a few words used by him.

The Hon. the Speaker: Words used by the Prime Minister in another place?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes. Speaking on a motion to refer the Canada Council Report to a committee of that house, the Prime Minister said:

> My understanding is that if this motion is acceptable a committee of this house will be set up, and in the other place the action taken will be to submit a report to the Finance Committee.

So there can be no doubt, honourable senators, that the Prime Minister has confidence in our committee.

So far as I am concerned, I would welcome a conclusion of this debate today, if possible, so that the committee may commence its task forthwith. I am still hopeful that there will not be a recorded vote on this motion. I think all honourable senators must now feel assured that no one hopes to gain any political advantage from referring this matter to committee.

It is needless for me to say that the task is going to be a very difficult one, but on the other hand, I am sure it will be a very rewarding one. I am convinced that under the capable chairmanship of the honourable senator from Saint John-Albert (Hon. Mr. Emerson) the committee will assume its function not in a spirit of narrow political partisanship but with the sole object of preventing Canadians from suffering the hardships and worries of less fortunate peoples who have lived in countries where runaway inflation has resulted in making their money valueless. With this aim in view the committee can and, I am confident, will perform a worthwhile service not only to the Government of Canada but to the people of Canada as a whole.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Wall, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

EXPORT FINANCE CORPORATION OF CANADA, LTD.—COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce presented the report of the committee on Bill S-17.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (S-17) intituled: "An Act to incorporate Export Finance Corporation of Canada", have in obedience to the order of reference of March 20, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 1, line 13: After "Canada," insert "Ltd.,"
2. Page 2, line 31: Strike out "entertain" and substitute therefor "deal with"
3. Page 2, line 32: Strike out "in another country" and substitute therefor "within or outside Canada"
4. Page 3: Strike out clause 8
5. Page 3, line 13: After "14," insert "15,"
6. Page 3, line 14: After "58," insert "59,"
7. Page 3, line 14: After "65," insert "84,"
8. Page 3, line 16: After "sections" insert "59,"
9. Page 3, line 27: After "Sections" insert "153, 162, 163,"
10. In the title: Strike out "Export Finance Corporation of Canada." and substitute therefor "Export Finance Corporation of Canada, Ltd."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move that they be concurred in at this time.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I was going to ask for an explanation, but I believe we are going to get it anyway.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: There is something ominous in that remark of the honourable senator from New Westminster, but I can assure him that he will get an explanation whether he has asked for it or not.

Honourable senators, I felt I would like to give an explanation of these amendments at this time so that afterwards, if you decided that consideration of the amendments should be deferred, you would have the explanation as well as the rather bald statement in the committee's report. What I propose to do, honourable senators, is to state the purpose of the various amendments and then give you a very short statement as to the nature of the evidence before the committee.

You will recall that the purpose of this bill is to assist in the financing of transactions involving exports from Canada to various countries. Canada has been peculiarly lacking in the machinery for doing that sort of thing. The banks have a very limited range within which they operate. In other countries of the world—in practically all the other countries—there are facilities quite apart from the Government which provide financing so that there may be substantial exports carried on by that country. Those exports can take the form of exports of consumer goods, capital goods, services, the financing of projects and participations in operations in other countries.

We had before us in the committee representatives of several banks. I particularly recall Mr. E. Ernst, Assistant General Manager of the Bank of Montreal, who said that in his view this bill was sound in principle and would fill a gap in our financing of exports. He thought it would be of great value to Canadian industry. Mr. Arthur Mayne, Associate General Manager of the Royal Bank of Canada, supported that view. Mr. K. W. Taylor, Deputy Minister of Finance, indicated to the committee that there was a definite field for the kind of thing contemplated in this bill and which does not exist now in financing in Canada. Mr. Hugh Aitken, President of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, was very strong in his statement as to the purpose which a company of this kind could serve. He indicated there would be no conflict between the operations of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation and this new corporation, if and when it is incorporated.

The Export Credits Insurance Corporation insures exporters to the extent of 85 per cent against default in payment for goods exported. There are limitations to the operations of the company. These are dictated by the amount of money it has available, and the amount and duration of the credit risk involved in the contracts it is asked to insure. Generally, he indicated they have a policy under which, on consumer goods, they would not insure the payment even of the 85 per cent in any case where the credit was for a longer duration than, say, 90 or 180 days. With respect to capital exports on light equipment, they might look at a term of two to three years. In the case of heavy capital goods that are being exported they might be prepared to consider a term up to five years. However, there are many limitations upon their operations, which are dictated by their assessment of the economic position and all the other factors of the country importing these goods. Of course, the real difference is that the Export Credits Insurance Corporation is an insurer, whereas the purpose of the company seeking incorporation under this bill is to finance. Even if an exporter is able to get export insurance he may, nevertheless, be unable to get the necessary financing. It was indicated to us in committee that, if and when the company is incorporated, possibly 10 or 15 per cent of its business would consist of that which has the benefit of export credit insurance. For the substantial part of the business however, that type of insurance would not be available and the company would have to be agile and resourceful enough, and have sufficient understanding of world markets in dealing with foreign country currencies, to be able to negotiate, as a result of which the manufacturer in Canada who is manufacturing for export would get his money, and this corporation would intervene itself between the manufacturer and the buyer of the goods and carry the risk, and hope to make a profit from it.

In the course of our consideration of the bill in committee, we had before us not only these bankers and other men I have already mentioned, but also a Mr. Stanger, who was one of the promoters of the bill. We also had Mr. Hurter, the head of a very large engineering firm with engineering operations in various parts of the world, who was able to cite chapter and verse from contracts and tenders that had been invited from various parts of the world, this year, last year and the year before. The nature of the capital goods required was such that Canada could have been in the competitive market, but the terms presented difficulties. For instance, Egypt wanted five years' credit in relation to certain capital goods, and although some manufacturers in Canada considered the invitation tender, not one was in a position to take on the job, because not one could get the financing. I say this corporation is intended to fill that need. Whether it will do so completely, or at all, will depend upon how skillfully it is operated once it is incorporated and gets going.

Honourable senators, in a very summary way that is the nature of the evidence we had before us. I should say that when we were considering the bill section by section we also had before us Mr. Catanach, who is in charge of the Companies Branch of the Department of the Secretary of State. As we went over the various clauses in the bill to decide what sections of the Companies Act should be made applicable and if additional ones should be added, we had the benefit of his view. We feel, therefore, all in all, that the committee has given as thorough consideration to the bill as it reasonably could do.

I come now to the nature and extent of the amendments to the bill and the purpose behind them. It will be noticed that the name of the company as proposed in the bill is Export Finance Corporation of Canada. There was some feeling in the committee that, with such a name, the company might be regarded abroad as in some fashion a Crown company, or as having the Government of Canada behind it. We explored the possibility of various changes in wording and using some other name. As a practical matter we ran into the difficulty, as pointed out to us by the sponsors of the bill, that when you start translating the name into the many foreign languages of the many countries where you would be operating, you would be presented with many problems. Finally we decided that if we put the word "Ltd." at the end of the name that should be significant enough to indicate that this was not a Crown company. So we decided that that was the way to meet the objection of all present, that it would present the least difficulty to the promoters of the bill in the work of promotion and advertising that they would be doing afterwards—and a corporation of this fashion will operate to a very considerable extent through the commercial intelligence agencies of the Government of Canada in various parts of the world in promoting trade that will be of benefit to Canada.

The next amendment was simply a choice of words and maybe there is a little bit of humour in it. The bill as presented to us gave power to the corporation to entertain financing applications for resale to a lender in another country on a commission or fee basis. Well, some members of the committee felt that as "entertain" is a word that has many connotations we should be very scrupulous about its use, so we decided that possibly it would be better to substitute for it the words "deal with". That made every person very happy who previously had felt bothered by the word "entertain". Frankly, I was not bothered by the word "entertain"; I think it is an excellent word in all its connotations.

The next amendment is hardly worth mentioning. It strikes out the words "in another country" and substitutes "within or outside Canada". That is a change the promoters requested.

When we came to clause 8 of the bill we struck it out. Clause 8 provided for creation of preference shares by by-law, and in place of that we included in clause 9, which then became clause 8, section 59 of the Companies Act of Canada, which sets out the whole plan for creation of preference shares, for conversion of shares, for reduction of preference shares or cancellation of preference shares or both. We thought it was better to tie this company through its act of incorporation as closely as we reasonably could to the well-known and well-tried provisions of the Companies Act.

I come to clause 9, which is now clause 8. The bill originally contained many of the sections in Part I of the Companies Act, and we added several more. I have mentioned our addition of section 59 and its purpose. We added section 15, because it deals with the restrictions on a company loaning money to a shareholder, and there are provisions in that section which spell out the terms and conditions under which that may be done. As set out in this bill the company was going to be in a position to make loans, if it wished, to a shareholder, without restriction. The company accepted the change, which as a matter of fact the committee insisted on.

If it is the wish of the Senate I could describe very briefly the various sections of the Companies Act which are referred to in former clause 9 of the bill, which is now clause 8.

Section 14 of the Companies Act provides ancillary powers. If you are incorporated under the Companies Act, by virtue of section 14 you enjoy very broad ancillary powers, and that section is drawn into the bill so that the company when incorporated will have those powers.

Section 15, I have already explained. Section 39, which is purely formal, deals with transmission of shares by will or intestacy, and the procedures that must be followed in dealing with those shares in such event.

Section 40 deals with transfer of shares of a deceased shareholder of a company.

Section 48 deals with the alteration of share capital.

Section 49 makes the procedures of the Companies Act of Canada applicable to any steps taken by way of reduction in capital.

Section 50 provides that when the capital of a company has been reduced for a period it must put after its name the words "and reduced".

Section 51 deals with the rights of creditors to object to proceedings for reduction of capital, and section 52 deals with supplementary letters confirming such.

Section 53 deals with the liability of shareholders in the case of reduction in the value of shares which they hold; and section 54 has to do with the penalty for concealment of the name of a creditor in such circumstances.

Section 55 deals with publication of reasons for reduction. The Secretary of State may require a company to publish the reasons for reduction; and section 56 provides for issue of supplementary letters patent to confirm a by-law for any purpose set forth in sections 48 and 49.

Section 57 is procedural, and has to do with the furnishing of evidence as to the enactment of a by-law. Section 58 deals with the duties of the Secretary of State in relation to those functions.

Section 59, I have already explained.

Section 60 has to do with consent that may be required of shareholders in connection with a redemption or conversion of shares; and section 61 deals with conditions upon which a redemption may not be a reduction of capital. Section 62 deals with filing, and such procedures as that.

Section 63 is an important one, making the borrowing powers of the Companies Act applicable to such a company.

Sections 64 and 65 deal with the creation of perpetual debentures, and what one would have to do in order to be entitled to reissue debentures that have been issued and paid off.

Section 84—this is one the committee inserted in this clause—provides for a minimum of three directors.

Section 91 is an important one, dealing with the indemnity of directors in the performance of their duties.

Section 94 provides powers for the establishment of an executive committee of the board of directors.

Honourable senators, I have skimmed through these sections to give you a running account of their headings and what they do. It simply means that in this regard we are making Part I of the Companies Act applicable to this company, once it is incorporated. If we did not do so the sections would not be applicable to a company incorporated by special act.

Then, in former clause 10 of the bill, which is now clause 9, we added three sections, which are recited in the report. Those sections all appear in Part III of the Companies Act.

I should preface what I have to say about Part III of the Companies Act by pointing out that it deals with companies incorporated under special act. The provisions of Part III are, by virtue of section 150 of the Companies Act, applicable to any company incorporated by special act unless there is a specific exclusion in the bill incorporating the company by special act. The three exclusions which we added to what is now clause 9 of the bill were approved by the promoters of the bill. I will just touch on these exclusions. Section 153 provides for a board of directors or not more than nine members. The company did not want that limit, because it indicated its plan at the moment was to have at least 15 directors. There an exclusion was necessary, so we struck out that requirement. Section 162 deals with preference shares. We had already incorporated section 59 of Part I of the Companies Act into this bill; therefore, it became necessary to exclude what would otherwise be a conflicting section dealing with the same subject in Part III. Section 163 deals with the location of the chief place of business or head office of the company. We excluded that, because that has already been provided for.

I will now mention the four sections which were excluded by the original bill. Section 167 deals with the minimum cost of partly paid up shares. Since this company is not proposing to have any partly paid up shares, it was unnecessary that this provision should apply. Section 190 deals with loans to shareholders and their liability. Since we had made section 15 apply, section 190 became unnecessary. In order to avoid a contradiction, we excluded it. Section 193 also deals with loans to shareholders, and provides in certain circumstances a prohibition against making loans to shareholders. We struck that out, having already incorporated section 15, which provides restrictive terms for making loans to shareholders. Section 194 also prohibits purchase of shares in other companies. The company has already taken the power in its objects to purchase stock in any company, if the circumstances warrant it. One such set of circumstances might be an arrangement by the corporation with a local company in, for instance, France or Germany, in order to carry on the other end of the financing business that was being done in that country. The corporation must have power to invest in the shares of that local company, if so desired.

Honourable senators, I have made my explanation as brief as I can. The hearing of evidence by the committee took some time, and in a very brief and cursory way I have given you the substance of it. I have also outlined the nature and purpose of the amendments. Now it is for the Senate to decide whether it will concur in the amendments, today or later on.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Tuesday evening next.

IMMIGRATION

On the notice of inquiry of Hon. Mrs. Wilson:

Pertaining to Order in Council P.C. 1959-310, dated March 19, 1959, which appeared in The Canada Gazette, Part II, Volume 93, of April 8, 1959:

1. (a) How many persons were admitted to Canada since May 24, 1956, to the latest available date, from each of the countries covered by the revoked paragraph (c) of section 20 of the Immigration Regulations?

(b) How many of these persons from each of these countries were:

(i) Married children, and the unmarried members of their respective families?

(ii) Brothers, and their wives and unmarried children?

(iii) Sisters, and their husbands and unmarried children?

2. On March 19, 1959, or at the nearest available date, how many applications were there from each of the countries covered by former paragraph (c) of section 20 of the Immigration Regulations, in the 3 categories listed in question 1(b)?

3. What are the definitions of the special skills of the persons who are to be substituted in immigration selection for the close relatives of families now living in Canada?

Hon. Cairine R. Wilson: Honourable senators, I think it is scarcely necessary for me to refer to the inquiry of which I gave notice on Tuesday, but I should like to give a brief explanation of my interest in this subject.

In 1938 I was named Chairman of the Canadian National Committee on Refugees. I suppose few people realize how very restrictive were our immigration laws at that time. Only three classes of immigrants were admissible: (1) bona fide agriculturists with five years experience and a minimum capital of $1,500; (2) first degree relatives of those in Canada, provided there were no other members of the family in other countries; (3) scientists or those with special intellectual qualifications, and others with capital who were likely to establish new industries.

In the intervening years I have made many visits to the immigration office, and I was much concerned about Order in Council P.C. 1959-310, particularly with regard to the unfortunate cases. There was one young man who received a visa from Canada eleven years ago, but before he could leave the country he was put in prison, where he spent four months. Within the last three years the regulations in Poland governing departure from that country were liberalized to a very limited extent, and he received consent then to leave the country. I thought that this man, for whom his aunt stood sponsor and to whom she was a parent in every sense of the word, would not be admissible to Canada under this order in council.

During the winter another Pole, whom I have known for a matter of twelve or more years, asked if he could be responsible for bringing to Canada his wife, his brother and his brother's wife and family, as well as his mother. I was told at the immigration office that if they could fulfil our requirements in regard to health and reliability they should be admitted, but that I should move quickly because there was always danger that the gates of exit might be closed.

I have cited those two particular cases as examples. I am exceedingly thankful that the order in council has already been rescinded, and that we no longer need fear exclusion of classes to which the order refers.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday, April 28, 1959, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

ATLANTIC PORTS

RESOLUTION URGING GREATER DEGREE OF USE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor moved, pursuant to notice:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Government, through the Department of Transport, or any other agency or means, bring about a greater degree of use of the Atlantic ports.

With this in mind it is urged that "open" and "closed" periods be agreed upon, and that the ports of the St. Lawrence be considered "closed" ports from November 15 until April 15, and "open" ports as from April 16 to November 14 of each and every year until such time as this arrangement is revoked.

He said: Honourable senators, as I listened to the honourable Chairman of the Banking Committee (Hon. Mr. Hayden) explain so cuearly, concisely and eloquently the committee's proposed amendments to the Export Finance Corporation's bill, I could not but envy him his ability to place before you facts in such a way as to earn your ready approval. I felt that if I had been able to arrange to have him present my resolution there would be no question in your minds as to the merit of the resolution.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You always do very well.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You are too modest.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I realize my limitations. You will recall, honourable senators, that when I introduced this resolution, a little over a week ago, I incorrectly prefaced it with statements of the reasons for introducing it. Those were quite properly struck out of the records, and notice of the resolution appeared on the following day in the terms which His Honour the Speaker has just read. I think I would now be in order in referring to the reasons as outlined in the original statement which I made on that occasion. They were as follows:

Whereas it is desirable to assist the ports of the Atlantic provinces in every possible manner because of their importance during war, as well as in peace;

And whereas ports of the Atlantic provinces are free of ice to a greater extent than are the ports of the St. Lawrence;

Therefore, it is resolved that the Government, through the Department of Transport, or any other agency, or means, bring about a greater degree of use of Atlantic ports.

So as to have the material in proper sequence in my remarks I will repeat the text of the resolution as just read by His Honour the Speaker:

That it is expedient that the Government, through the Department of Transport, or any other agency, or means, bring about a greater degree of use of the Atlantic ports.

With this in mind it is urged that "open" and "closed" periods be agreed upon, and that the ports of the St. Lawrence be considered "closed" ports from November 15 until April 15, and "open" ports as from April 16 to the 14th of November of each and every year until such times as this arrangement is revoked.

I recall very well that immediately after the sitting during which I introduced that resolution an honourable senator said to me, "Your resolution is rather fantastic." I see him smiling now. The following day another honourable senator said, "That was a pretty potent notice of motion you gave yesterday." I agreed with one and disagreed with the other.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Which one did you agree with?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Honourable senators, I say that the resolution is not fantastic, it is not extravagant. I think it is fairly reasonable and sensible. I looked up the meaning of the word "fantastic", and after studying the terms of my motion I say that the word "fantastic" does not describe it at all. I will give you the reasons why.

I think you all realize the conditions which have existed on the St. Lawrence, not during this winter alone but during every winter for as long as your memory serves. No shipping is possible on the river during the four months when it is frozen, namely, December, January, February and March. My resolution covers a further period, from November 15 to April 15, making a total of five months.

Honourable senators will recall that they received invitations to take a trip on one of the ships opening the seaway this coming Saturday. That is really an indication that the St. Lawrence is about ready for use. Of course, the official opening will not take place until June. In any case, shipping will not commence until April 25, so I feel I am quite within proper limits when I say shipping on the river is closed from November 15 to April 15. That is why I hesitate to agree with my honourable colleague who said that my resolution was fantastic.

But I do hope that my resolution is potent. I hope it is sufficiently powerful to gain the support of each and every honourable senator, for I feel it is very necessary that the St. Lawrence River ports be closed during certain months, for reasons I shall endeavour to give later.

I might add that many individuals in the east have spoken or written to me stating that I was lenient in putting the opening date at April 15, that a much later date should have been specified.

Honourable senators will recall that in January I placed on the Order Paper certain questions, which the honourable leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) very kindly and courteously answered in full. When I asked those questions I was contemplating introducing a resolution similar to the one now before the house. Those questions dealt with ice-breaking on the St. Lawrence River during the period from November 15, 1958, to January 15, 1959, and I was particularly interested in the answers giving the number of ships used for ice-breaking and the total cost of their upkeep and operational expenses. The answers to my inquiry, which appear at page 85 of Hansard, under date of February 3, indicate that seven ships were used for ice-breaking, at a total cost of $323,912.52 per month, which would amount to a total of $1,295,650.12 for the four months of the operation. This has been referred to by many as an unnecessary, extravagant, economic waste of the taxpayers' money. I am just wondering whether the $1\frac{1}{4}$ million could not have been far better used to construct a grain elevator at Saint John, New Brunswick, or Halifax, Nova Scotia, or to erect on George's Island in Halifax harbour a standing statue with outstretched arms extending to the thousands of immigrants entering Canada through this great Canadian port a real Canadian welcome, in much the same manner as the Statue of Liberty welcomes American immigrants at New York. I think that would not have been a wasted expenditure, but indeed a fine gesture of welcome to our many immigrants.

Honourable senators, I fully appreciate that many of my honourable colleagues feel that every time I rise to speak in this chamber my remarks centre around the city of Halifax. I cannot help this, for I am from Halifax. I endeavoured to represent my native city in another place in days gone by. It is only natural for a person to talk about a subject he feels he knows something about, so I hope honourable senators will pardon me if in my remarks I make direct references to the port of Halifax. I mention this because I would not want to displease those honourable senators who have been so friendly toward me.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Would the honourable gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Yes, certainly.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Did it occur to you that if it would be a good thing to close the ports on the St. Lawrence River several months every year for the benefit of Atlantic ports, it would naturally follow that when the St. Lawrence is open the Maritime ports should be closed?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I am very happy to answer that inquiry. There is not much logic to it and I am rather surprised that the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler), who has such a keen mind, should put a question like that. I referred to ice conditions as a very good reason for closing the St. Lawrence ports. But we have no ice in the port of Halifax, and we have a channel with a minimum depth of 50 feet at low tide.

Hon. Mr. Euler: If the St. Lawrence ports were closed you would still want the Atlantic ports kept open?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: We would like the Atlantic ports kept busy twelve months a year.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That is all right. I am quite happy to answer any question of that nature.

Perhaps I should quote an unbiased definition of Halifax harbour as it is given in the 1957 report of the National Harbours Board:

> The harbour of Halifax, situated on the Atlantic coast of Nova Scotia, is approached directly from the ocean by a channel with a minimum depth of 50 feet at low tide. It is open to navigation the year round and is served by both the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways.

The report goes on to give the number of berths and handling facilities for ships. I could also mention, of course, the Queen Elizabeth being able to come into Halifax harbour without the use of a single tug. That is the kind of harbour I have reference to.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Was that not due to a strike?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: No, that was done in an effort to expedite the transport of Canadian troops overseas during wartime.

Another interesting part of this report of the National Harbours Board shows the number of arrivals and the cargo tonnage handled in the ports of Quebec, Montreal, Halifax and Saint John. Arrivals of foreign cargo ships in 1957 were as follows:

Quebec	4,537
Montreal	5,426
Halifax	2,933
Saint John	1,589

Foreign cargo tonnage handled by these ports in 1957 was:

Halifax	5,373,631
Saint John	2,106,326
Quebec	905,061
Montreal	8,722,262

These figures indicate that Halifax handles 60 per cent as much foreign cargo tonnage as Montreal does.

I now turn to maintenance and repair costs, as given in the same report:

Halifax	$ 288,907
Saint John	361,867
Quebec	840,747
Montreal	1,446,019

It will be seen that maintenance and repair costs at Halifax were 20 per cent of those at Montreal. So the port of Montreal, which handled only about 40 per cent more tonnage than the port of Halifax, costs five times as much to maintain and repair.

I put these facts on record so that shippers and others, as well as honourable senators, will be familiar with the advantages of using so important a port as Halifax.

At this stage I wish to make it clear that I am not opposed to the development of the St. Lawrence Seaway. The Seaway is a dream that has become realized as far as central Canada is concerned, and it will serve our nation in the way of increased shipping. However, this dream should not be realized at the expense of any other section of our country. That is the point that I wish to make.

May I refer to the Report of the Royal Commission on Transportation in 1951, under the chairmanship of the Honourable W. F. A. Turgeon, assisted by Dr. H. F. Angus and Dr. H. A. Innis. In their report these gentlemen went back to the days of Confederation and dealt with shipping by water and rail and other means of transportation. They referred particularly to Halifax. In dealing with the Trans-Canada Highway the report states, at page 152:

> That the highway is important for national defence and for the economy of the country and must therefore be planned on a national rather than a provincial basis.

I think the same thought should be in the minds of those who spent hundreds of millions of dollars in the development of the St. Lawrence Seaway, and I would substitute for the thought as expressed by the Honourable Mr. Turgeon, the following words:

> The eastern ports are important for national defence and for the economy of the country and must therefore be planned on a national rather than a provincial basis.

I feel strongly that the planning should be on a national rather than a provincial basis, not on a central basis alone.

Further reference to the port of Halifax is made on page 167:

> What the port of Halifax needs is, of course, more traffic from and to the port...

One other reference, and I will have finished with the Turgeon report. A sentence on page 274 reads in part as follows:

> The construction of the National Transcontinental Railway to encourage the shipment of goods through Canadian ports...

I mention that because I want to make use of it a little later in dealing with shipment of goods through our Canadian ports.

As I was preparing my remarks on this motion, I wondered what the Canadian National Railways would do in respect to freight rates from the east to central Canada because of the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway, and whether they would follow the step taken by the New York Central Railway, as announced by Arthur E. Baylis, that the United States railway would fight the competition of the Seaway by lowering freight rates and offering other inducements to shippers. He went on to describe the Seaway, due to be opened officially, and with great pomp and circumstance, in June, as a politically inspired drain on the taxpayers' money, and he said the Seaway would further encourage the dumping of foreign goods on the North American market. He also referred to the use of foreign ships, through the generosity and fine political consideration of Canadian and the United States governments and taxpayers. I think perhaps this applies to a far greater extent to Canada than to the United States, because of the fact that we have practically no ships now afloat flying the flag which represents Canada.

One particular item of cargo I have in mind is the small foreign cars which are now landed at Atlantic ports and shipped by rail to central Canada, and which in the future probably will be carried directly to St. Lawrence ports, thus depriving Atlantic ports of this as well as other kindred business. I am wondering what will happen to that type of cargo in the future, and whether ships will carry it directly to Quebec and Montreal instead of to Halifax, as at present.

I would like to place on record the fact that Halifax is the nearest North American port to world markets. I will not bother to name places and give distances, but it is closer to all European, South African, Asiatic and South American ports than is any other North American port.

Honourable senators, I think it is important to give favourable consideration to this motion for many reasons. I was happy to note the following passage in the House of Commons Hansard of Tuesday, January 20, 1959, at page 82:

HON. A. J. BROOKS (MINISTER OF VETERANS AFFAIRS): I wonder whether I might supplement the answer given by the Minister of Transport. I should like to point out that in Canada we have two other winter ports besides Quebec and Montreal. I refer to Saint John and Halifax, the winter ports of Canada.

He went on to say:

The Minister of Transport could very well have answered that there is no necessity for keeping the St. Lawrence open between Quebec and Montreal during the winter months. This winter has shown it would be an impossibility in any case. I suggest that the hon. member forget it.

So we have it on record that the honourable minister in the other place is in favour of the closing of the St. Lawrence ports during the winter months.

I am reminded that the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) said the other day that he had many newspaper clippings. I too have a large number, and they all support my resolution, but I do not think it is necessary to read any of them. However, I did come across an item this morning which I would like to put on the record. It is a statement made in Toronto by Howard A. Mann, Executive Manager of the Maritime Transportation Commission, and reads as follows:

That in 1957 80 per cent of the American automobile industry's exports went through U. S. ports. Canadian ports handled only 14 per cent of U. S. rubber exports.

On the other hand, vast quantities of Canadian goods were shipped through U. S. ports.

Think of what some of that traffic would mean to Canadian Atlantic ports. Take the earnings only of their longshoremen, freight handlers, checkers and watchmen—estimated at $9 million.

I have already mentioned certain risks and costs. One other item I think I should mention. It is in connection with the view held by the Canadian Board of Marine Underwriters that there will be an added hazard to ships after the Seaway's official opening. This assessment is based on the increased number and size of ships using the Seaway. The consultants estimate that the hazards to vessels using the Seaway west from Montreal will be greater by 15 to 20 per cent on larger ships, and by around 5 per cent on small vessels. More and larger ships will tend toward greater congestion, which in turn will mean that they will be obliged to operate in confined waters for a longer period than heretofore.

While it might be said this has no direct effect on the proposal made in my resolution, it is cited simply to show the additional hazard at all times of the year, and more particularly if an endeavour is made to continue traffic during the suggested closed period of navigation.

Honourable senators, in conclusion, I feel that I have given sufficient reasons in support of this resolution, but there is just one other point I would like to emphasize. I believe if this proposal were brought into effect it would result in clearing up confusion in respect to the uncertainty of traffic in the St. Lawrence, and also assist shipping firms in arranging their winter schedules. This, in turn, would I believe, bring about a lowering of insurance rates on shipping. In this connection, I might mention that I understand those using the port of Halifax enjoy the lowest shipping insurance rate applicable to any port in Canada. A regular winter season there would improve conditions for longshoremen, checkers, freight handlers and general repair workers.

These reasons, along with the one already given, that the ice-breaking operations as carried out during the past year were considered to be an unnecessary extravagant economic wastage, will, I trust, influence the honourable Leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), on behalf of the Government, to support this motion.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Will the honourable senator permit a question? He said a few moments ago that the Government spent over a million dollars in keeping the St. Lawrence free from ice by the use of an ice-breaker. But may I point out that the clearing of the ice from the St. Lawrence River is not only for the benefit of shipping; it is also to prevent flooding of adjacent lands which undoubtedly would occur and cause great damage if the ice were allowed to remain until its natural break-up.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: The question that I asked was, "What was the maintenance cost for the operation of the ice-breakers engaged in ice-breaking?"—and I drew to the attention of the house the fact that the cost was not the only important matter involved here. For instance, a ferry operating between Pictou, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island was deprived of the assistance of an ice-breaker because they were all engaged in freeing the St. Lawrence River from ice, and as a result great inconvenience was caused.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask the honourable senator if he has given thought to or has any information on the additional cost involved in the rail freight rates from Montreal to Saint John or Halifax as compared with the cost by the all-water route from the head of the lakes to Montreal and thence overseas?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I do appreciate that question. It is a well-known fact that transportation by water is far cheaper than rail. At the same time, coal carried from Sydney, Nova Scotia, west to the Great Lakes must have a reduced rate to balance things out.

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Honourable senators, I just want to add a few remarks in connection with the motion of our distinguished Haligonian colleague (Hon. Mr. Isnor). I have always known him as an astute businessman, a practical man, but I never thought that he was at the same time an idealist. This is a great idea he has, that for certain months of the year the centrally-located Seaway be kept closed because of ice conditions, and that the eastern seaports would continue to remain open throughout the year. I must admit that I listened to his remarks with a great deal of interest, and while doing so I was reminded of the words of the poet Kipling:

Daughter am I in my mother's house;
But mistress in my own.
The gates are mine to open,
As the gates are mine to close.

I really think that the honourable gentleman would like to appropriate that idea to himself. But in our midst we have some recent additions to the Canadian family, the Newfoundlanders, and I really believe that this dictum of the poet very properly belongs to their province. It is the one who could very appropriately say:

The gates are mine to open,
As the gates are mine to close.

Honourable senators, I have often pondered the problem of how to avoid the necessity of keeping our St. Lawrence Seaway closed for quite a long time each year because of ice. I may be mistaken, but I am under the impression that if the proper ways and means were studied by scientists and adopted, we could solve the problem and keep the St. Lawrence free from ice the whole year round.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: As far as Montreal?

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: Honourable senators, I consider myself to be an idealist, and I think it might become practical to keep the St. Lawrence free from ice in the wintertime. I would say, as Churchill said during the war, "Give us the tools and we will finish the job." I repeat my belief that through proper investigations and research on this problem ways and means could be devised whereby the St. Lawrence River would be kept free from ice in the wintertime. Now, honourable senators, that may be just a dream but I believe it could become a reality.

In closing, I would like to congratulate our colleague from Halifax-Dartmouth upon his speech.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I too wish to congratulate the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor). I can well understand his position with respect to the great harbour of Halifax. I do not know whether he has visited the harbour of Churchill, but this seems an opportunity for me to tell honourable senators something about it. It is perhaps one of the finest harbours in the world.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Ninety feet deep at low tide.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Yes, and a ship needs a pilot for only 15 minutes, if at all, instead of four or five days as is required on the St. Lawrence.

The honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth mentioned the possibility that some day the St. Lawrence River throughout its great length of 400 miles could be cleared of ice. I would point out that at the port of Churchill there is an area of only 20 miles to be cleared of ice. It is generally acknowledged that the icebergs that are encountered come all the way down to Belle Isle as late as June and July. I believe that navigation in Hudson Strait and Hudson Bay would be easier in January than in July, as far as danger from ice is concerned. The captains I have spoken to prefer the Churchill route to the St. Lawrence route. Our wheat from Saskatchewan can be shipped via Churchill, which is a shorter trip by a thousand miles, for 12 per cent less than via the St. Lawrence route.

May I say to honourable senators who have not visited the Churchill port that the Canadian National Railways run a special train to that area. It is a pleasant trip, on which one can view such sights as the rapids on the Kettle River. The hotel accommodation at Churchill is limited, but if necessary one can retain accommodation in his sleeping car and spend a delightful two-day period visiting the harbour.

There are extensive freight sheds and storage facilities at Churchill. Many people said at one time that very little wheat would be shipped via that route. I would point out that last year some 20 million bushels went through Churchill, and that is only a small fraction of what could be handled there.

As to the motion by the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth, I disagree with the setting of arbitrary dates, November 15 to April 15, as a closed period of navigation on the St. Lawrence. We are all aware of the fact that in Canada seasons vary sometimes as much as a month in different years. One year the river might be free of ice in November, but icebound in April. That is why I suggest greater use of the facilities at Churchill. As a matter of fact, last December there was less ice in the port of Churchill than in the St. Lawrence River. Because of the exceptionally mild fall in the north, ships moved in and out of that port until December.

We in western Canada know that the break-up of ice on the Saskatchewan River varies from year to year. The average date is about April 22, but in some years it is as late as May. This year the ice on the south branch of the river went out on April 3, and on the north branch on April 9 or 10. So there is quite a variation.

Churchill is the nearest port of shipment of grain from Saskatchewan, and I object to our people having to pay tolls on the St. Lawrence Seaway when it is impossible for us to receive any benefit from the power produced, which is the chief advantage of the seaway. I fear it is our grain from Saskatchewan that will pay the tolls to meet the cost of production of power for the province of Ontario. Therefore, I think we are entitled to greater consideration with respect to storage facilities and greater use of the port at Churchill.

The honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth mentioned the cost of ice-breaking in the St. Lawrence. He should have included in his estimate the dredging costs, which will continue for all time.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Not at the port of Halifax.

Hon. Mr. Horner: In the St. Lawrence dredging is a continuous operation, particularly between Montreal and Quebec. The only way it can ever be avoided is by cementing the bottom of the river.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Even if that were done, the river would fill up with silt.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Honourable senators, I only wish to put before you the suggestion that if any scheme of ice clearance is undertaken, it should apply to the port at Churchill, where only 20 miles of clearance is necessary, rather than to the 400-mile stretch in the St. Lawrence River.

Hon. Harold Connolly: Honourable senators, before somebody hits upon a practical plan for keeping ice out of the port at Churchill or out of the St. Lawrence River for 12 months of the year, I move adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North), debate adjourned.

INFLATION

FINANCE COMMITTEE INSTRUCTED TO MAKE STUDY

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, April 22, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Wall:

That the Standing Committee on Finance be instructed to study the threat of inflation in Canada;

That the committee have the authority to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must remind this house that if the honourable Senator Wall speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Honourable senators, as the original sponsor of this motion, I wish to make what I hope will be pertinent observations in a final summation. Basically this summation will take the form of a frank and sincere advocacy for your support of the resolution now under discussion and debate. It will also attempt to answer the major objections which have been raised by some honourable senators.

I find it difficult to accept the suggestions to drop this resolution, because I believe it is one whose non-partisan public service intent has not been successfully challenged and therefore one which I could support had it been moved by any other honourable member. Quite frankly, I would also be defaulting on my conviction that at each and every parliamentary session, other things equal, this honourable house should, at an early stage, undertake an organized and comprehensive inquiry into one or more significant problem areas of national interest and concern, totally with a view to providing an important public service which I believe the Senate is uniquely fitted to perform.

In essence, honourable senators, what has been proposed by this motion, which has been vigorously and extensively debated, is that this house, through the instrumentality of its Standing Committee on Finance, should undertake the more prosaic and workshop-type of task which the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen claimed it should perform with thoroughness and with fearlessness. I refer you to Queen's Quarterly, 1937, Volume 44.

Fortunately, when I had originally discussed the idea of this motion with the honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale (Hon. Mr. Leonard) I found that he was thinking of doing much the same thing, and for the same general reasons, and very graciously he consented to support the motion by seconding it. I am very grateful to the honourable senator for this support, which he gave in an address marked by judicious discretion and deep understanding. And I wish to thank all other senators who have shown their deep interest in this national problem by participating in the excellent debate which this motion has engendered.

In all fairness I must point out that this motion, prompted as it was by the concerns and convictions I had intimated, was the fruit of considerable study and meditation. So that I might be reassured about the rights and privileges, about the organization and procedure, of both standing and select or special committees of the Senate, I spent some time in reading Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, Fourth Edition, especially pages 454-487, and Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Chapter IX, especially annotations, comments and precedents respecting standing and special committees.

When doubts were raised about what one may term the appropriateness of this motion, I was disturbed, and I have reviewed the Debates of the Senate, 1919, when the Standing Committee on Finance was originally set up on motion of the honourable Senator Nicholls. In these debates, referred to by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), we find a clear indication of the purposes and responsibilities this committee was to fulfil, which purposes and responsibilities are not violated by the motion now under debate. I have also studied the work done by the Standing Committee on Finance during the intervening period.

It is significant to note what the committee did study and consider. I ask honourable senators whether the few examples I shall refer to are not really the best answer to the criticisms which have been raised in opposition to this motion. I have here a complete list prepared of the work done by the Standing Committee on Finance since 1919. I will read just the later years: in 1943 the committee held 13 meetings, dealt with Excess Profits, Special War Revenue Tax, Customs Tariff, Income War Tax Act, and the House of Commons resolution to provide $3.8 billion for the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada; in 1944 it held 13 meetings, examined the House of Commons resolution to provide $3.650 billion for the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada.

And so I may go on, year by year, where the Standing Committee on Finance actively studied and discussed ways and means resolutions and acts dealing with the raising of moneys and problems of fiscal and economic policy.

The honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has pointed out examples of the valuable service-type inquiries performed by the Senate through its Finance Committee in studying the Income Tax Act, as one example, and I would expect that his commendation and approval would extend to the activities of the Standing Committee on Finance when it vigorously, and with fair but critical attention, examined the House of Commons Ways and Means Resolutions, Estimates, and acts involving the raising of national revenue.

The honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette), who I regret is not here today, drew our attention to the fact that the 1956 report of the Standing Committee on Finance had recommended an exhaustive inquiry—or that, and I quote:

> —a study of all production costs should be made if these inflationary trends are to be curbed and if Canada's valuable export market is to be safeguarded.

I am very pleased that this reference was introduced into this debate.

The debate on that report of the Standing Committee on Finance was initiated by the late, and deeply respected, Senator Hawkins when he introduced the report to this house on June 26, 1956. When speaking to the sub-topic "Inflation and Export Markets", the Chairman of the Finance Committee said:

> This is a large subject and the realization of its magnitude leads us to recommend further study.

I believe it is of some importance to ask whether this recommendation to study inflation was, in fact, directed specifically to the Government, or whether it was a recommendation which at the next session of Parliament was to receive the attention of the Senate. How did the senators who participated in this debate interpret this recommendation?

Secondly, the report was debated, and on June 28, 1956 it was resolved in the affirmative, or unanimously adopted, as the honourable senator from Mille Isles so correctly put it. Please note that there was no division. I have re-read the debate on the adoption of the report to find if any honourable senators had expressed any reservations whatever with respect to the recommendation that a study of inflation be made. There were no such reservations.

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: May I ask the honourable senator if he has with him a copy of the resolution that was passed at that time?

Hon. Mr. Wall: I did not bring the Journals with me. I regret that.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: I was just wondering how the present resolution compares with that of 1956. The present resolution does not call for a study of the cause of inflation and the finding of a remedy thereto, but merely for a study of the threat of inflation. I would like to know if the previous resolution was worded in the same way.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: There was no resolution on this subject in 1956.

Hon. Mr. Wall: There was no resolution. It was a recommendation from the Standing Committee on Finance to study inflation. I have already read the exact recommendation, and I will re-read it:

> Your committee feel that a study of all production costs should be made if these inflationary trends are to be curbed and if Canada's valuable export market is to be safeguarded.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Was the recommendation acted upon?

Hon. Mr. Wall: No, it was not acted upon.

In the context of this background, why is the resolution we are now debating being prosecuted on the charge of inappropriateness?

With great respect to all concerned, I cannot accept as valid the hypothesis that because we have individually done some homework in this problem area, and because we have debated the motion, therefore a group, workshop-type study is unnecessary or inappropriate.

The honourable senator from Ottawa East (Hon. Mr. Choquette) asked me directly whether a motion exactly similar to the one under debate was ever made during the preceding eight years. I assume that his query referred to the Finance Committee. The answer, as he probably well knows, is negative.

Now, this answer may prove something—or nothing. I suggest the pertinent analogy of a motion passed by the Senate on March 16, 1950, relating to the Standing Committee on External Affairs. Perhaps more pertinent is an understanding of the inquiries already carried out by the Finance Committee in recent years, to which record I have briefly referred.

The honourable senator from Mille Isles made interesting and pertinent extensions to the table which I had prepared to indicate in gross amounts the magnitude of the price-cost increases in the gross national product since 1949, and I accept his valid differentiation of the respective bases involved in the consumer price index figures and cumulative percentage price increases in the gross national product which he had prepared. His extensions and refinements do not detract from, and merely underscore, the extent of the inflationary price increases which have occurred since 1949, which is a baseline or conventional year which was chosen by me simply because it corresponded to the baseline for our consumer price index.

Going back to 1939 simply underlines the persistence and the magnitude of these inflationary tendencies, and as the honourable senator gave us figures indicating the 98 per cent dollar value decrease during the preceding two decades, in terms of what those dollars could purchase, I could not help but be reinforced in my convictions that we should study the problems and the hardships these have brought to the many who suffer most from inflationary price increases, about which hardships I shall continue to be bitterly critical.

We have been asked how we would or could distinguish between what has been termed natural growth and this new thing called inflation. Now, I, too, cannot subscribe to or accept an equating of national growth with or to inflation; hence I cannot accept the thesis that there should not be serious concern about and study of the implication of this theory which implies the desirability or indeed the inevitability of rising prices.

As the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) has already pointed out, this doctrine is vigorously rejected by the Minister of Finance as a reflection and, indeed, an insult to the intelligence and the moral fibre of free peoples. I leave this objection to the motion at this point.

I don't know what to say about the repeated suggestion that by inquiring into the threat of inflation we are trying to study an indefinable, evanescent problem, whose national importance is no longer imperative because we have lately had some decreases in the consumer price index. That the consumer price index has decreased lately is true, and we all hope that this is not simply a pause that refreshes.

Please note, however, first, that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics Price Movements of March 1959 tells us that this decline was largely attributable to a decrease in the food index—that is, at the expense of one sector of our economy—and that most of this decline was seasonal in nature. I quote from that March pamphlet:

> In the current period, a decline of 1.0 per cent in foods accounted for all the decrease in the total index.

Secondly, please note that most current prices of our 30 basic industrial raw materials are rising lately, as is the general price index of manufactured goods, and there is no disagreement among economists as to the inflationary effects these are likely to have on the consumers price index, with what further erosion of the value of the Canadian dollar, to whose benefit and at whose expense.

May I remind honourable senators of the statements of the honourable the Minister of Finance, found in his budget address at pages 2404 and 2408 of Hansard of the House of Commons, where he speaks of disturbing inflationary potentials and price-rising rigidities, in which problem areas the Minister welcomes study and discussion, so that we may continue to guard more effectively against potential inflationary pressures, which I gather are still hanging over our heads like the proverbial sword of Damocles.

To infer that the latest price movements have eliminated the need for the study of inflation is simply not realistic or logical.

Some honourable senators have suggested that the study of the facts of the inflation case would increase confusion, and would heighten inflationary psychosis. I would like to believe that we would all collectively be the wiser, the stronger and more competent if the apparent confusions about inflationary trends and potentials were clarified, even a little.

Competent observers tell us that the fear of inflation is very real, that it exists apparently no longer as a temporary phenomenon, but as a more permanent factor. If so, how will this affect the decisions of Canadians everywhere, regarding both their spending and their saving? To me, this apparent solidification of the fear of inflation is a problem of crucial importance. We must shed more light, not only upon the reasons for the fear of inflation to see if they are valid, but we must, it seems to me, try to assess the consequences of this continuing fear. To get this improved clarification is the simple intent of this motion.

In my initial statement in support of this resolution I had explained what fears and what concerns about our inflationary trends and potentials had prompted me to propose an inquiry into this problem area, both last year, and again, in this form, during the present parliamentary session. This statement I had deemed reasonably satisfactory to explain why I was doing so, and these explanations I do not intend to review.

I must, however, object to the intriguing but unwarranted addendum to the "why query" introduced by the honourable senator from Ottawa East, which implied that the purpose of the motion was to embarrass the Government. Why are some members who support the Government insisting on interpreting the motion as an attack on the Government? There is not a single syllable in the resolution providing a basis for such thinking. Surely no such inference can be deduced from a resolution which asks for an inquiry into the facts of any national problem?

I feel impelled to observe that neither the mover nor the seconder of the motion can be held responsible for what I would term a tone of partisanship with which some of this discussion has been marked. It has even been inferred that the study of inflation herein proposed can validly be subjected to the sweeping innuendo that the Standing Committee on Finance, rather than addressing itself to an objective and dispassionate analysis of the evidence which may be submitted, will be unwilling or unable to practise judicious discretion, and thus unable or unwilling to prevent this inquiry from deteriorating into propaganda, or narrow, political partisanship. This is an operative dimension which was not in the minds of the sponsors of this motion when it was moved in the first place.

I am grateful to the honourable Leader of the Opposition for the commitment he gave that no political advantage is being sought on the part of those who are supporting this resolution. The motion was not so intended. What was intended is that the Senate should consider the advisability of performing a significant, fact-finding service in a problem area of concern. This kind of service was admirably described by the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) in a speech reported in the 1956 Senate Hansard, page 794. It is this kind of service which the words of the resolution so carefully spell out. Our thought was that we might, through this study, render a service to the people of Canada and also, perhaps, be of some help to governments. After all, we are all gravely concerned with matters which might prejudice the economic health of the nation. I believe that inflation is such a prejudicial problem. Surely, honourable senators, it is conceivable and probable that more facts may be adduced which would be invaluable to the Canadian people and to their governments. What fault is there in this proposition?

And when honourable senators dealt with the problem of summoning witnesses, I could not help but wonder whether their observations applied with equal validity to another motion introduced by the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson). I commend to honourable senators the striking analogy between these two motions.

Honourable senators will understand why it is not for me to say whom either of these standing committees is to call as witnesses or how they are to be invited, but is there any justification for us not to have every confidence that this operative aspect of this or any other inquiry will be handled with the judicious care, the impartial objectivity and the friendly purposiveness which has been a tradition with Senate committees?

Dealing with the witnesses who appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance, the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg had this to say, as recorded on page 795 of the 1956 Hansard:

> Even the Government, which I sometimes say is over-apprehensive, realizes that our committee is not out to gun it, or to get it on political grounds, but is simply trying to procure facts for presentation to the public. The Government now seems to be quite willing to have its officials come and give us full information on which to found our opinions.

Later, complimenting one of the main witnesses, then one of the senior Government officials, the honourable senator said:

He not only gave us valuable information, but he told us how to look for facts and where to find them.

And on pages 796-7 we find these statements, which I am mentioning for reference purposes only:

May I say that the committee received every assistance from the Minister of Finance and his officials; in fact, he went out of his way to facilitate us in getting the information we required. His co-operation was very much appreciated.

I, too, must object to this statement of the Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine):

Honourable senators, this motion is now before us as though the present Government were responsible for all the inflation that has taken place.

True, questions were asked which revolved around the proposition that it would be beneficial to know more about the extent of governmental responsibility for inflationary pressures—at the three levels of government —if the committee so decides. Were assertions made by either the mover or the seconder of the motion that present governmental policies are alone uniquely responsible for price increases?

From a position which I could understand, namely, that governmental expenditures at all levels should not be held accountable for more than their share of responsibility, the part, if it is proved to exist, has been predefined as the whole, an unwarranted assumption and identification.

Honourable senators, what am I to think, and how am I to assess the implications of what I consider to be the basic objection to this motion, namely—and here I am summarizing as adequately as time permits—that, somehow, the proposed study of inflation would trespass and transgress upon the exclusive, constitutional responsibility of the Government in its formulation and execution of economic and financial policy?—which responsibility, to my knowledge, no one in this chamber has questioned during this debate.

Now, what perturbs me most in all this is the inference of the practical existence of a jurisdictional injunction, which would or could effectively prevent the Senate from studying any governmental policy. Is this an argument whose indirect effect may well be to deny to the Finance Committee the exercise of rights and the performance of duties which it has undertaken in the past? If that is so, what will this denial do toward paralyzing and nullifying the usefulness of a Senate committee, which usefulness has been both recognized and appreciated?

With humility and with sincerity I venture to ask honourable senators to consider the ultimate implications of this ostensible denial to the Senate of Canada of the right to study and to report on matters construed to be the exclusive domain of the Government of the day; to consider, if you will, the logical and sequential connotations of this hypothesis upon the duties, the public responsibilities, the privileges, and the legislative status and parliamentary integrity of this honourable house. I hesitate to make any further observations upon this particular problem area.

May I respectfully draw attention of honourable senators once again to the substantive meaning of the motion proper, which is what we are concerned with. I must insist on the importance of distinguishing adequately between the substance of the motion and the personal observations which I have made in support of its adoption.

As you read the simple and direct text of the resolution, you will see that it instructs the Finance Committee to study the threat of inflation, and gives to it authority to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time. It is for the Standing Committee on Finance to decide what aspects of this problem it is to study, how that is to be done, whom it is to summon as witnesses, and what it is finally to report to this honourable house. Surely we are not questioning the full competence and responsibility of the Finance Committee to do this important task, in the light of the debate upon this resolution, but within the operative framework of the substantive part of the motion?

I had hoped that the substantive motion would commend itself to honourable senators, because of its directness and simplicity and because of its public service intent. Although I had expected the discussion to be vigorous and informative, I had anticipated that the debate would not be lengthy and protracted, and that the Finance Committee would have been engaged with this inquiry long before the Easter recess. However, that was not to be so; but I believe that no serious obstacles exist which should prevent the adoption of this motion, and I want to believe that nothing but good could come from this proposed inquiry into the facts.

I continue to believe that such a study is timely and necessary. I believe that our Canadian democracy requires a balanced and unexcited exposition of the inflation situation, giving due and proportionate weighting to all causative factors and to their sequential results. If we can ascertain more of these facts and if we can communicate them to the Canadian people in a kind of balanced exposé, then all—industrialists, bankers, businessmen, farmers and wage earners—will be helped to co-operate more effectively and with greater wisdom and reason in so adapting their actions as to forward a more balanced growth of our economy, without inflation.

We have had an extensive and fruitful debate upon this motion. I am sure that the seconder of this motion joins with me in thanking all honourable senators for the interest they have shown throughout this debate, and should the motion receive your approval we hope that this interest will be sustained so that we may perform the suggested public service.

Some Hon. Senators: Question.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the question is on the motion of the Honourable Senator Wall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Leonard:

That the Standing Committee on Finance be instructed to study the threat of inflation in Canada, and

That the committee have the authority to send for persons, papers and records and to report from time to time.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Those in favour of the motion will say "content".

Some Hon. Senators: Content.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those against the motion will say "non-content".

Some Hon. Senators: Non-content.

The Hon. the Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Some Hon. Senators: Let us have a vote.

The motion of Hon. Mr. Wall was agreed to on the following division:

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

MOTION FOR REVIEW OF ACTIVITIES BY EXTERNAL RELATIONS COMMITTEE

On the Order for resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson:

That the Standing Committee on External Relations be authorized to review the activities of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in so far as the interests of Canada therein are concerned;

That the said committee have power to send for persons, papers and records.—Hon. Mr. Robertson.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Honourable senators, as the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) is not in the chamber tonight, I would ask that this order be allowed to stand and appear as the first order of business tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILL

CANADIAN LEGION OF BRITISH EMPIRE SERVICE LEAGUE—SECOND READING

Hon. David A. Croll moved the second reading of Bill S-19, respecting The Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a very simple bill. One of its purposes is to change the name of the organization that is known to all of us as "the Legion". Its legal name is "The Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League". This bill drops the words "of the British Empire Service League" and retains the words "The Canadian Legion", which is what the organization really is. So after the bill has become law the legal name will be simply "The Canadian Legion".

One of the reasons for the proposed change is that the British Empire Service League has changed its name to "British Commonwealth Ex-Service League", and it may be changed again. The Canadian Legion will still be associated and affiliated with the British Commonwealth Ex-Service League.

One of the other purposes of this bill is to permit the Dominion Convention of the Canadian Legion to delegate authority to the Dominion Executive so that the Legion may operate efficiently between conventions. This is a normal procedure and will be fully understood and appreciated by honourable members of this house, many of whom are members of executive boards. Any action taken by the executive must be ratified by the next convention, and if not ratified it will cease to be effective.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask the honourable senator if the provisions of this bill have been presented to and approved by the general membership?

Hon. Mr. Croll: This bill emanates from the Legion and is, I believe, the result of resolutions passed at its last convention.

The bill also provides, in clause 3, for an enlargement of the purposes and objects of the Legion. These added purposes and objects are:

> —to encourage, promote, engage in or support all forms of national, provincial, municipal or community service, or any charitable or philanthropic purpose.

The Legion has been doing these things throughout the country for many years, and it now asks that they be included among the other purposes and objects set forth in the act.

That is all that is contained in this bill. I need not paint the lily in speaking about the Legion, of which most of us are members. I bespeak the support of all honourable senators for the second reading of the bill.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, I rise to say a few brief words in support of this bill. In speaking to so many honourable senators who are, and who have been for many years, members of the Canadian Legion, it is hardly necessary to attempt to recount in any detail the splendid record and work of the Legion over the years. Every honourable senator who is a member can readily recall many instances in his own region where the Legion has taken hold of most deserving cases and has done much beneficial work in the immediate vicinity.

The new proposal name of the Legion appeals very strongly to me: I think the name "The Canadian Legion" is most appropriate.

It may be of interest to honourable senators to read the long list of the Legion's purposes and objects as set out in the act. Despite that very long list, the Legion, as pointed out by the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Croll), desires to extend the good work which it is doing.

I am sure that this bill has the support of all honourable senators.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I wish to join with the honourable senator from Hastings-Frontenac (Hon. Mr. White) in approving this bill, and to congratulate the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) for bringing it before this house. The Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League is, if I remember correctly, the outcome of the Great War Veterans' Association, which was formed toward the end of the First Great War. A number of honourable senators, as the honourable senator from Hastings-Frontenac has mentioned, belong to this organization and know something of the splendid work which it has done. Many of us know personally of its splendid work because we have benefited by it. The Legion has been a boon to many a young man and woman who upon returning from overseas encountered difficulty in finding his or her place in life.

I heartily approve of the change of name, as I am sure all honourable senators will. The Legion, as the sponsor of the bill has said, has been commonly known over the years as "The Canadian Legion".

Motion agreed to and bill read a second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Croll, bill referred to Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

DIVORCE

PETITIONS—EXTENSION OF FILING DATE

The Senate proceeded to consideration of report No. 214 of the Standing Committee on Divorce, recommending that the time limit for receiving petitions for bills of divorce, which expired on Wednesday, February 25, 1959, be extended to Friday, April 17, 1959.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the committee, moved adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, I think that perhaps some explanation is due from me in regard to this report. Most reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce pass without comment, but this is a little unusual.

As honourable senators will recollect, for the last three years, at least, the Standing Committee on Divorce has been adamant in opposing any extension of the date set for the filing of petitions. There is very good reason why we should be firm in that matter, because it is very unfair to ask honourable senators to sit throughout the session hearing evidence in support of divorce petitions.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: How many additional petitions will this proposed extension allow in?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Under this proposal 28 petitions will be allowed in.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That means 28 more cases the committee will have to hear this session?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No; probably about half of that number will have to be heard this session. That is, of course, only an estimate.

One of the cases that leads us to take this action involves a co-respondent who is pregnant. We have not the heart to refuse that case, because we do not want to place a stigma on the child that is involved.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is it a defended case?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is not a defended case. That case alone is sufficient reason for the extension.

Then, there are two cases which, by mere accident, were filed one or two days later than the time limit, and representations have been made to us that there is urgency in these matters. We could stand obstinate, of course, and say: "No, you are too late, and your case cannot be tried". However, I think it is better in the long run to be good natured on certain occasions, and this is one of them.

Having regard to those facts the committee has unanimously passed the resolution to open up the time. As will be noticed from the report, the committee recommends that the time limit for receiving petitions for bills of divorce, which expired on Wednesday, February 25, 1959, be extended to Friday, April 17, 1959, the latter date being the date upon which we passed the resolution.

As I have said, two petitions were late by mere accident, and one has a very compelling human reason. However, if we extend the date for one we have to extend it for all. My estimate is that we will have from 10 to 15 additional cases to try as a result of this good nature on our part.

I think it should be said also that it should not be regarded as a precedent. We may say "Yes" this time and "No" on another occasion. It is just a matter of good nature on our part, and kindness, which I think is something we should exercise all the time.

Perhaps this is a good opportunity for me to give my honourable colleagues some statement on the progress of the work of the Divorce Committee. There have been 448 petitions presented during this session. That is a very large docket indeed. However, six of those were withdrawn. There have been 248 petitions heard and recommended by the committee, most of which have been passed by this house. We have rejected only one petition so far. Seven petitions have been partly heard, and 186 are still to be heard. Of course, not all of those 186 will be heard at this session, for various reasons. The parties may not have sufficient funds to finance the attendance of witnesses or to pay the parliamentary fees, and so on. Perhaps one-half of that number will actually come to trial during this session, and the rest may go over to the next session. That is just an estimate.

There is one other matter which I would like to mention at this time. Honourable senators may have noticed that I and a number of other members of the Divorce Committee were not in our seats in this chamber during the whole of last week. It is only fair to say that the Honourable Senators Bradley, Gershaw, Golding, Hodges, Kinley, Hnatyshyn, Taylor (Westmorland) and myself were engaged in hearing one contested case. We sat from 10 o'clock to 6 o'clock on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, and from 10 o'clock to 12 o'clock noon on Friday. That is why we were not in our seats in the Senate chamber. It was unfortunate that we had to miss the interesting sittings in the house, but we were performing our duty in the committee, and there was no complaint from any of us.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS PRESENTED

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, now that the time for filing divorce petitions has been extended, I present certain petitions that were allowed in under the extension.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, April 29, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I lay on the table the following document:

Convention No. 105—concerning the abolition of forced labour, adopted by the International Labour Conference at its Fortieth Session at Geneva, 25th June, 1957. (English and French texts).

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE EXTERNAL RELATIONS COMMITTEE TO REVIEW NATO ACTIVITIES—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, April 16, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson:

That the Standing Committee on External Relations be authorized to review the activities of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in so far as the interests of Canada therein are concerned;

That the said committee have power to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, I like the motion of the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) and I am only too happy to give it my wholehearted support. Moreover, I like very much the debate that has been taking place in the Senate in recent days, with viewpoints met by conflicting viewpoints. It reminded me of the good old days when I first became Leader of the Government in the Senate. Honourable senators will remember that there were then still some 35 or 40 members of the official Opposition in the Senate. I can assure you that, under the leadership of my distinguished colleague Senator Haig, they presented the Government party of the day with very vigorous opposition. My honourable friend's own attacks on the Government were certainly real thunderbolts, and he was ably assisted by the honourable Senators Aseltine, Horner and Quinn. In addition, there was a whole host of very able speakers in the Senate. I can remember the rapier-like thrust of Senator Calder, and the tongue lashing Senator Fallis could give whenever she felt so moved. I had never thought of all this in terms of political partisanship. My honourable friend Senator Haig and I settled that matter early in our careers by the one admitting that he was as much a partisan as the other. I do not know why we should not be partisans, or why we should be ashamed of it. I think all of us here are partisans. With a few possible exceptions, I do not imagine there is a member in this house who was not appointed because the Government thought he or she was a partisan, in the sense of being interested in the fortunes of his or her own political party. In my case I make no apology for that, and I see no reason why we should not approach matters in that light. I have no doubt each of us is very much disposed to support measures which reflect the viewpoint of our own political party, and to oppose measures otherwise, and I see no harm in that, because after all Canada has a party political system.

I must confess that I enjoyed listening to the debate on inflation—as I say, it reminded me of the old days—but I found it difficult to understand the arguments by honourable gentlemen opposite why they could not support the resolution for a study by the Finance Committee. I am not questioning at all their right to oppose the resolution. They stated their viewpoints, and that is what we are here for, to express our viewpoints on public matters.

The only real reason I could see advanced for opposing the resolution was that the mover, the seconder and the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) did not take honourable members opposite into their confidence as to what the motives for the resolution were. Well, I do not think that is much of a reason. And I say that because this particular motion, which I am giving my wholehearted support, curiously enough deals with much the same situation.

I will refresh the minds of honourable members of the Senate. On the morning of January 25 the mover of the present resolution, in his capacity as Chairman of the External Affairs Committee, called the members of the committee to plot out a program for the future. Some fifteen or twenty of us attended and there was a general discussion. My impression when we left the committee room was that there was general agreement that we would take no action or do anything until we had heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs give us an outline of the general situation. So I was a little amazed when at 3 o'clock that afternoon my honourable friend introduced this resolution. I regarded it as a good resolution. My honourable friend may remember that I immediately sent a note across to him to say that I liked his resolution, and that when the opportunity came I would support it.

Now, it would be easy enough to get party opinion worked up to the idea that because the mover of this motion, for some reason or other, had not taken the members of the Opposition in the Senate into his confidence we as a party should oppose it. I say to my friends on this side of the house that I hope we do nothing of the kind. It is a good resolution, and while I am going to make some criticism it will not be of the resolution itself, but rather of the possible trend the review might take. On the idea of proposing the resolution, I compliment my honourable friend.

I also compliment the honourable gentleman upon the suggestion he made when, I think it was at the time he introduced his resolution, he said that at some future date a committee of the Senate might be set up to review the whole question of defence expenditures in Canada, as to magnitude. I assure my honourable friend that if a convenient time comes for him to propose such a review he will have my wholehearted support, and I believe he will have support from a good many members on this side of the house.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I would point out to my friend, however, that such a review of expenditures is not as easy as he or I may think. True, I agree with him wholeheartedly that the taxpayer in Canada is sick and tired of these tremendously high expenditures. But when it comes to considering the volume of defence activity this country, like the the United States, would find there is as much interest in defence expenditures from the point of view of employment as from security. Perhaps it is a question of degree.

In a speech I made in this house a few days ago I mentioned that if our defence expenditures in 1949 were in the same ratio as those of Great Britain we could reduce our costs from $1,800 million to $800 million. Suppose we confronted the Minister of Finance with the suggestion that defence expenditures be cut by $1 billion, he would be delighted to hear it. But I can imagine what the reaction of the Minister of National Defence would be. He might well say to me: "That is all very well, Senator Robertson, but do not forget what such a reduction will do to your province of Nova Scotia". Now, I am not arguing for or against such a proposal. I would think that such a drastic cut in the national expenditure might almost cripple the city of Halifax.

I saw in yesterday's Halifax Chronicle a headline to the effect that some $10 million was going to be spent on an air field at Greenwood, and that the population of Kentville would be doubled. If I was swayed by public opinion I would be inclined to think twice before advocating that that program be thrown on the ash heap. I have no doubt a similar situation exists across the length and breadth of this country, as it does in the United States. So, honourable senators, it is not as easy a problem as one might at first think; nevertheless, it is most serious.

In my humble opinion the committee that has been instructed to investigate inflation will find that the inflationary trend in the last ten years has been sparked largely by the tremendous and staggering amounts of money spent on defence expenditures and mutual aid. In most other fields there is a yardstick to go by. For instance, in a house-building program the houses are to be sold. But armaments and a great deal of mutual aid are destined to be thrown in the ash can—at least, so far as the armaments are concerned, because they so quickly become obsolete, and mutual aid is given away. So the ordinary restraints on cost do not exist, and I think that when the real history in regard to inflation is written it will be seen that inflation in Canada and the United States has been running in parallel ways, as the honourable senator himself pointed out in the inflation debate. That is why we have got ourselves on to such a high level, such a peak, as compared with our European partners. Nevertheless, I am not opposing the suggested review of defence expenditures, for as I have said I would be happy to support it.

I come now to the resolution before us, and I want to deal particularly with one of the comments of the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) when he introduced it. The resolution, as honourable senators will remember, is:

> That the Standing Committee on External Relations be authorized to review the activities of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in so far as the interests of Canada therein are concerned.

My honourable friend in moving the resolution made an excellent speech, with almost all of which I heartily agree. Referring to a remark I had made a day or two before in speaking to a resolution of Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) he said this:

> Also, of course, as the honourable senator from Shelburne has intimated, NATO has not been very successful in efforts to create an improved economic climate between its members. However, I do not want to be critical of NATO for this default for I do believe that as far as Canada is concerned our concentration of purpose in regard to trade should be through the United Nations agency responsible for the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, known as GATT, rather than through NATO.

If my honourable friend meant that economic collaboration between our allies is desirable, but that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization is not the vehicle through which to do it, then I would not have much difficulty in agreeing with him. At least, that has been my thinking, although I did not originally hold that idea. But if he says there is no place for economic collaboration between the allies other than through the medium of their participation in GATT, in which of all the countries in the world there are 38 or 40 members, then I must take most vigorous exception to that view.

The reason why I do so, honourable senators, is that I think it is a complete reversal of the thinking of the overwhelming majority of the Canadian Parliament for the last ten years. I remind this house that originally when the North Atlantic Treaty Organization was formed, at Canada's insistence a clause, which in part called for economic collaboration and elimination of international trade rivalries, was put in the treaty. It met with the unanimous approval of this house, and it met with the almost unanimous approval of the other—I think there were one or two dissenters. It is my opinion, for what it is worth, that the insistence of the Canadian Government of that day upon including this provision in the North Atlantic Treaty was the wisest and most far-sighted action that has been taken in my generation. The persons responsible for drafting it and putting it through—and I give full credit to the various leaders in our Parliament who supported it—showed an appreciation of future events that is, in my opinion, without parallel. One of the most tragic things in our relations with our allies is that this was never implemented.

I do not know if what my honourable friend from Winnipeg South has said reflects the opinion of the Government—perhaps the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) will indicate his view on the matter—but the honourable senator expressed a vital and important viewpoint that should elicit discussion. I believe we should have economic collaboration among the NATO countries, and the great fault is that we have not had it. I do not believe that GATT is the medium through which to bring it about. As I understand it, GATT is the maker of rules for the development of multilateral trade. If you want to raise your tariff because of some inflow of goods you must negotiate through GATT and give some quid pro quo. The direct agency, as far as the Atlantic community or our European partners is concerned, is a separate and distinct matter entirely. In recent years Canada has been represented on three different committees that attempted to get NATO to implement the economic clauses. At least, it was my conception that the whole genesis of the formation in Canada of the NATO Parliamentary Association was based largely upon the failure of NATO to implement the economic clauses. Indeed, I thought that was the general feeling at the time.

I had the honour to be the first president of the NATO Parliamentary Association and Mr. John Diefenbaker was vice-president. The various Canadian political parties were represented on the executive committee as follows: Gordon Churchill, Conservative; Alistair Stewart, C.C.F.; Victor Quelch, Social Credit, and Elmore Philpott, Liberal. The honourable Senators Aseltine, Fergusson and Roebuck were Senate members on the executive of the association. If and when the External Relations Committee undertakes a review of NATO activities I will take strenuous objection if the investigation does not deal with the economic impact consequent upon our not having implemented the economic clauses at that time.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I wonder if the honourable senator would allow me one comment. I am in complete agreement with what he has said. The difficulty is that I tried to deal with this point in a few words. I was really trying to deplore the fact that NATO had not been as effective in the economic sphere as we had hoped in the beginning it would be. That is really what I intended to convey and I just want to say to my honourable friend that I am in complete agreement with what he has had to say on the economic side about NATO.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I accept my honourable friend's explanation and I would remind him that I prefaced my remarks by saying I did not know exactly what he meant. I interpreted the phraseology he used to mean that we would depend entirely on GATT, and in my judgment that is not enough. It raises the big question: if NATO is not the vehicle, then what is? This is one of the problems that will face the Atlantic Congress called by the NATO Parliamentary Association for early June. It arises primarily because the participants are not satisfied that NATO has done enough. It is felt that NATO is purely and simply a military organization, although strangely enough I noticed in a NATO anniversary pamphlet I received only yesterday that NATO is going to concern itself with one aspect of economics, the coming trade economic offensive of the Soviet Union. But it will have nothing to do with relations between the member nations themselves. The argument the participants have advanced is that NATO has left this to other agencies, but the difficulty in this is that the member nations of NATO never created any other agencies. They are referring to the European partners, who are going ahead with it, whereas I am afraid we on this side are drifting. The Atlantic Congress must deal with the question of increasing the collaboration that has existed in the last ten years in what is generally referred to as the Atlantic community.

I pause here to make myself perfectly clear. When I referred to the Atlantic Congress when speaking on the resolution of the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) recently, one honourable senator thought I was making an announcement. I was not doing that at all, for I am not qualified to do so. If an announcement is to be made it has to come from the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) or the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). I have nothing to do with the Canadian delegation. As I have said, there are 45 members in all going to London. I am going in my official capacity as an honorary International Life President of NATO. I have also maintained an interest in the local association, of which I am also an honorary life president, and I sit in on all their meetings but I scrupulously avoid interfering with their activities unless they ask for my advice.

Hon. Mr. Wall: May I interrupt the honourable senator to ask a question?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wall: How is Canada's 45-member delegation distributed among members of the House of Commons, the Senate, and among the government and non-government personnel?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I cannot say as to the non-parliamentary delegates except they are supposed to make up 30 of the 45. Of the 15 parliamentarians, 13 will be from the House of Commons and two from the Senate. I understand that five alternates have been named from the House of Commons to make the trip, increasing to 18 the number of delegates from that house.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Have any alternates been named from the Senate?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Not unless the honourable Leader of the Government or the honourable Leader of the Opposition have appointed any.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I will be glad to appoint one if I am empowered to do so.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Could the honourable senator indicate how many from outside Parliament are appointed?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: The last list I saw of acceptances that were in, which was not all complete, showed 27. I think the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly), or the honourable senator from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson) will bear me out on that point, because they were both at the meeting; that was some eight or ten days ago.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Who nominates them?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I must give you the same answer as I gave the honourable Leader of the Government: I do not know.

Hon. Mr. Reid: From your information and knowledge of NATO, do you think that any danger arises in bringing economics into the picture as the prime motive of setting up NATO?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: That is a debatable point. In my judgment, and I will give my theory later, it was a failure not to implement economic collaboration, which was part and parcel of the agreement, running concurrently with the creation of the huge military machine, for two reasons. First, it would increase the ability of the member partners to respond to their financial obligations in connection with military expenditures; secondly, it would tend to eliminate international trade rivalries which have poisoned political relationships. If my friend asks if it would interfere, I can only say that I do not know, except that rightly or wrongly it has had nothing whatever to do with it. There is a very definite movement on the part of the Americans and the British in the background, I understand, to take all other forms of collaboration and set them up under another agency altogether outside of NATO. They take the attitude that NATO is purely a military organization that will die when it serves its immediate purpose. They feel that plans should be made for the economic and cultural aspects to go on indefinitely. That is not necessarily my view, but that is the view expressed, as I understand it. However, my judgment of it—and I am glad my honourable friend agrees with this viewpoint, as I am sure all of us do, for there never was any great disagreement—I believe the whole question of Atlantic community relations revolves around economics. I think it is the kernel of the whole situation, and I think it is a question of most vital interest.

Honourable senators, when I hear or read about the magnitude of the provision that the Western world has made in armaments—now totalling something over $500 billion—a vast machine, which I hope and believe is a very effective machine, sometimes I have an uncomfortable feeling that in principle it is not unlike the French Maginot Line. It is said that Khrushchev and those who are with him aim at world conquest. I do not know whether they do or not, but my common sense tells me that they are very shrewd men, and that if they aimed at world conquest they would rather have it as a going concern than as a smouldering ruin.

Hon. Mr. Euler: That is common sense.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Every time I think of this vast military machine I think of the Maginot Line and how easily Hitler circumvented it by going around the end of it. That is our danger today. Khrushchev has declared war upon us economically. He has said that he is going to outstrip the United States in seven years, and that he is going to beat us. If he slips around the end of our "Maginot Line" he will find us with very precarious economic defences. We may ignore what is going on among the rest of our allies on the question of non-implementation of economic collaboration, but, as the honourable senator from Ottawa West pointed out to us, our friends are not ignoring it. In actual fact, six member countries of NATO have entered into a Common Market, which means economic co-operation and an economic unit. Seven other member countries, led by Great Britain and four others, are faced with one of two alternatives, that is, of joining up in some form with the Common Market, or, what I am led to believe is now being actively canvassed, a second economic community with 130 million people. The alternatives are: (1) A community with 300 million people; (2) two communities, one with 170 million people and one with 130 million people. The seriousness of the situation has to do with what will happen to the remaining two members on this side of the Atlantic, which are drifting whither I do not know, and I do not know if anyone can give an answer.

I need hardly say that those two members are the United States and Canada. Curiously —perhaps I should not say curiously—we have very much in common with regard to our huge armament expenditures. I am not saying we should not make them, but it is a fact that these expenditures have been terrifically inflationary. Both countries have given generous assistance to build up the economies of Britain and Western Europe. Both have a grossly aggravated wage scale— I believe it is four or five times that of the Common Market countries in Europe. That has put us on this side of the water in a most precarious position, as far as competing in world markets is concerned.

There is a marked similarity between our two countries. I will refer to the United States first. In the April 27 edition of United States News and World Report is an article entitled "Is the United States Pricing Itself Out of Markets?" The article discusses the effects of high production in the United States of such products as barbed wire, nails, bicycles, sewing machines, steel flatware, typewriters, fishing tackle, jewel watches, clocks, woollen gloves, hardwood plywood, cameras, woollen fabrics, cotton cloths, automobile tires, automobiles, radios and turbine generators, and what is happening in each case. In some instances, the article points out, industries are going out of business, unable to meet the competition. In other instances the proprietors are contemplating moving their industries to the Common Market countries of Europe where their production costs will be so much lower, and then shipping to the North American market.

The article concludes as follows:

> The trend is toward the rising of imports from abroad, and a decline of exports from the United States to nations abroad. The United States producers trying to meet this competition have two alternatives if they want to stay in business— Turn to more automation, using fewer people, or shift production overseas.

There are a number of tables given, but I will simply quote from the figures for automobiles:

U.S. Imports:

1953	29,505
1958	431,608

U.S. Exports:

1953	186,262
1958	125,834

As honourable senators know, many of these imports are from manufacturing plants of the United States located in Europe.

I want to refer also to an editorial in the Montreal Gazette of March 12. It quotes the current Monthly Letter of the First National City Bank of New York to the effect that during the second half of 1958 the United States exported about 10 per cent less manufactures than during the first half of 1957.

At the same time, according to preliminary data, West Germany increased her exports of manufacturers by 14 per cent, and Japan by 6 per cent. The United Kingdom experienced a drop of 4 per cent. France remained unchanged, but Italy and The Netherlands both improved their positions.

The Monthly Letter states:

> The possibility of the United States pricing itself out of world markets cannot be dismissed. Renewing inflationary pressures ought to be prevented, of course, for overwhelming reasons of a domestic nature, economic, financial, as well as social, but injuries to export and employment clinches the case.

I want to make one other reference. I apologize to honourable senators for spending so much time on the United States, but I point out the deadly parallel between the circumstances in that country and those in Canada. I have an extract from a letter that a friend of mine in the United States wrote to a mutual friend of ours in New York in regard to this coming Atlantic Congress, hoping that from it might emerge some means to bring the United States into economic collaboration to a far greater extent than it is at the moment. He supported that stand. I am going to take the liberty of reading the extract because it appeals to me so much. It is not long. I might say that the writer is Will Clayton, a very prominent cotton distributor in the south. For two years he served in the Truman administration as Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs and is generally credited with being responsible for the details of the Marshall plan, which, as honourable senators know, contributed so much to European rehabilitation. The extract from his letter reads:

> I favour alliances between nations of the free world but only if the scope of such alliances is sufficiently comprehensive as to draw the contracting nations closer together.
> Military alliances are short-lived and undependable.
> It was no doubt for this reason that the NATO agreement contemplated economic collaboration between the contracting parties.
> Unfortunately, the U.S. seems to have successfully blocked any action by NATO toward this end.

This is the first time I have ever heard a responsible person say where the opposition to collaboration came from. He goes on:

> In the face of the successful launching of Benelux and now of the European Common Market setting Western Europe firmly on the way to free trade, we have turned in the opposite direction. We have imposed import quotas, raised tariffs, dumped commodities abroad and recently rejected a low bid by a British electric concern for furnishing a turbine for a public installation in Arkansas and gave the order instead to an American manufacturer at a price some thirty per cent over the British bid.
> Most of this has been done on the pretext that it is in the interest of national security.
> This type of economic nationalism just won't mix with political and military internationalism.
> As long as we continue to act in the short-term special interest of our minority groups against the national interest and against the needs and interests of our allies and other nations of the free world, just so long will we find the unity of the free world weakened.
> The expectation of a continuation of inflation in the U. S., induced by deficit financing, is inevitably causing an advance in our prices, gradually squeezing us out of world markets and intensifying foreign competition in the domestic market. This is bringing demands for the imposition of further import quotas, the further raising of tariffs and the further dumping of excess production abroad.
> If we take this course we will surely drift into isolationism and in time probably become a lonely, second-rate power.

I am indebted to two of the "night owls" in the Senate, Senator Crerar and Senator Euler, for the information that in the television world there is a phenomenon which takes places in the wee small hours of the morning called the "late, late show". If the United States prices are high-cost, the only comment I can make is that Canadian prices are "high, high cost", because, as everyone knows, Canadian costs are higher than corresponding American costs.

I will not bore the house with any further references, except to say that I commend to honourable senators a very excellent speech made by Mr. Muir, President of the Royal Bank of Canada, on this subject of pricing ourselves out of world markets. Also I would like to refer honourable senators to an excellent editorial in the Montreal Gazette along the same lines, saying that if the United States is worried about this question, what about us?

I want now to come back to our immediate Canadian position, to the question of high-cost competition.

I am indebted to a recent speech by Mr. Stuart Armour of the Steel Company of Canada, which interested me because of the great deal of valuable information it contains with regard to our competitive position. In reply to an inquiry he sent me some figures. I will not undertake to put them all in but I have here a table in which he gives the average hourly earnings paid in the steel industry in the Western world, including Japan, and if honourable senators permit me I will place it on Hansard.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Thank you.

HOURLY EARNINGS IN THE STEEL INDUSTRY

Selected Countries

(U.S. dollar averages for 1957)

Country	Average hourly earnings
Austria	$0.471
Belgium	0.757
Canada (Stelco) 1958	2.622
	(In Canadian funds including fringe benefits)
	2.701
	(Canadian earnings in U.S. funds including fringe benefits)
Denmark	0.874
France	0.583
Germany (West)	0.694
Great Britain	0.827
Italy	0.550
Japan	0.361
Luxembourg	0.969
Netherlands	0.615
Norway	0.916
South Africa	1.286
Sweden	1.076
Common Market	.70
United States	3.33

The average hourly wage paid in these Common Market countries is 70 cents. That is, the per hour earnings in the steel industry in selected countries are, in the United States dollars, 70 cents an hour. In Italy, they are 55 cents; Great Britain, 87.2 cents; Sweden, $1.076.

The significant thing is that the figures he gave me are comparative figures. In the case of hourly Canadian earnings, including fringe benefits, the corresponding figure is $2.70 expressed in Canadian funds. The comparative figure in the United States is $3.33.

Hon. Mr. Horner: That includes the coffee break as well?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I presume they are all on the same basis.

I am giving his figures. I believe Mr. Armour is a very well-informed man; he is working for one of the most efficient industries in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Those are hourly earnings you gave us?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Hourly earnings.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: What would the figure be in Japan?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: 36.1 cents.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Have you any figures on Russia?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Not yet.

I noticed Mr. Muir's very caustic remarks in regard to our price structure, after his trip to Russia, and I believe he might be a good witness for the Senate committee to call to get information along that line.

I want to remind honourable senators of the characteristics of our secondary industries in Canada vis-à-vis those in the United States and these European countries. Generally speaking, because of our small production the unit cost in Canada as compared with that of the United States is approximately 35 to 40 per cent higher. That information will, I think, be found on page 239 of the Gordon Report. That higher cost is, in part at least, offset by the generally lower level of wages in Canada—as much as 25 per cent—as compared with wages in the United States.

The converse is true in respect of competition from overseas countries, although the level of wages is lower than it is in Canada, and so is their average productivity. Our technology and research gives us a significant advantage over most overseas producers in the secondary industry sector. Canadian unit labour costs in secondary industries are generally below those in overseas countries, despite their lower wages.

I wrote again to Mr. Armour and I received a reply in which he enclosed a list of sixteen different steel items on which he quoted the landed price, duty paid, in Montreal and Toronto, which would come into effect upon the opening of the Seaway. This list shows landed prices of from 22 to 52 per cent less than the Canadian prices.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask my friend a question? Does his comparison regarding wages on this side of the Atlantic with those on the other side apply to secondary industries and basic industries as well?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: It applies only to the steel industry. Mr. Armour is the economic adviser to the Steel Company of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Euler: My friend does not know whether these figures apply as well to the secondary industries?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: They apply to that secondary industry, the steel industry.

I wrote to Mr. Armour and drew his attention to the statement in the Gordon Commission report. His reply, which I found very interesting, is as follows:

> The increase in output in western Europe and Japan is based on modern automatic equipment. The post-war physical plant of the world steel industry is modern and productive. In output per hour it is probably close to the Canadian situation. While rising internal steel consumption has probably taken the larger part of their increase in output, these countries can be highly competitive in price and quality in the export market.

I asked Mr. Armour if I might make use of the information he had enclosed in his reply, and he replied that I could do so. He gave me two tables, one with reference to the delivered price of steel merchant bars, and another with respect to steel reinforcing bars. With the permission of the house, I will place these tables on the record. I am not familar with the technical terms of the steel industry, so I will let the tables speak for themselves.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Would the honourable senator care to tell us whether these tables also show the comparable Canadian prices?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Yes, the Canadian prices are shown. That is where Mr. Armour gets the difference of from 22 to 52 per cent.

However, I must confess that without any special knowledge of the steel industry I find it difficult to reconcile it with certain information as to what is going on. At the time Mr. Armour sent me this information—which discloses facts that to my mind would tend to increase their competition rather than lessen it—information came to my attention that the Steel Company of Canada was making a $20 million extension to its plant. And over the past weekend while in Montreal I read that the Dominion Coal and Steel Company is considering calling tenders for an $80 million steel plant on the St. Lawrence. Further, I understand that the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company is building a steel plant in the west.

There you have both sides of the argument, and it will be a very interesting job for the appropriate committee to reconcile the two sides.

Before I forget, let me say that I think the crux of NATO's failure to encourage economic co-operation brings the question right down between the two gentlemen, Senator Emerson and Senator Thorvaldson, who will perhaps be calling the same witnesses in their committees on the same subject. Certainly the present situation has a bearing on NATO's position, and on the question of inflation. As I have said, it is the tremendous armament expenditure that in part is responsible for the inflationary trend. However, these are matters which the committees will be looking into and considering carefully.

It is my own conclusion that economic unions are the order of the day. There is already one in existence, with the whole idea of getting mass production to reduce costs. Starting from the low-wage level it has, I believe it will present some serious competition to other countries, so serious that I personally do not think Great Britain and others can refrain from making some corresponding arrangement. I have heard one of the non-member countries of NATO say that the latest move is to form Economic Union No. 2 in Europe, headed by the United Kingdom.

This presents a real problem for us in Canada. Actually, the third economic union is south of our border, a country with 175 million people, highly developed, but with an economy distorted by tremendous armament expenditures. If Britain, with 50 million people should be forced into it, what earthly chance have we got, with 17 million people? I ask that because the ordinary practice of raising tariffs to keep competition out is not an easy thing to do under GATT. I come back to the theory that I have had from the start, and I believe everything is moving toward it. We have got to get into some larger trading area. The scope of where we can go is continuously getting smaller.

I have mentioned the speech by Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) on the European Common Market. Senator Lambert, who has one of the keenest minds in regard to trade, misunderstood, I think, what Senator Connolly said. I do not think Senator Connolly meant that, great as this development is going to be in Western Europe, it will hold out much opportunity to us as markets. I think he was pointing out to us that fact, so that we could draw some lessons from it. As Senator Lambert said, we had better look at the substance rather than the shadow. I suspect, knowing his views and how close they have been to mine over the years, that he meant we should not do anything to harm the real substance, which is our economic relations with the United States, for the sake of the shadow, which is very obscure.

Actually, we have been pricing ourselves out of the market on every hand. The idea we have had in our minds that markets overseas are of course going to be available to us is a thing of the past. There is not one single market where we have any particular advantage or preference in which our European competitors could not beat us. My honourable friends may say that there is a chance in the West Indies, but they will beat us there.

Hon. Mr. McLean: They are beating us there now.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: There may be some preference because of their Commonwealth association, but I hazarded a guess the other day that in due course, having regard to the relations of Britain with the European countries, the Commonwealth preferences, as we know them, are going by the board and will be extended to all of Europe. Actually, there is very little about it in our papers, but in the last issue of the Economist there was a reference to a Commonwealth Conference under the auspices of the Royal Institute of International Affairs in Palmerston, New Zealand, at which their whole deliberation was taken up with the attitude of the Commonwealth towards the Common Market countries, whether they should deal with them individually or collectively. Sir David Eccles is quoted as imploring South Africa not to make bilateral agreements with those Common Market countries, and stressing the better opportunities if they act collectively. But I suspect that vis-à-vis our European partners in a year or two years we will not have a preferential tariff advantage at all. We will give to them just the same preference as we give to Commonwealth countries, and the European countries will give us opportunities in regard to our markets as well.

I believe today, just as I did formerly, that the dramatic events which are taking place in the economic world mean that Canada is drifting—I would not say "rapidly", but I would say it is drifting—toward economic union with the United States, as that is the only possible market we can sell in, and which is in the same position as we are. That would not terrify me so much as it would others, but I realize that whatever the great material advantages might be there would be very great political dissatisfaction, and I am using that term in its broader meaning.

I think we have got to choose one of two courses: an economic union with one member of NATO, or an economic union with them all. Personally, I would rather see it made with them all.

One of the most interesting debates I ever heard in this house—I say this for the information of the newer senators—took place in the first session of 1950 on a motion by the honourable Senator Euler, seconded by the honourable Senator Crerar:

> That the Senate of Canada do approve of the calling by the United States of America of a convention of delegates from the democracies which sponsored the North Atlantic Treaty and representing the principal political parties of such democracies, for the purpose of exploring how far their peoples and the peoples of such other democracies as the convention may invite to send delegates, can apply among them within the framework of the United Nations, the principles of federal union.

The debate on that motion brought forth some of the finest speeches I have ever listened to in the Senate—and there have been many good ones. The mover and the seconder both made excellent speeches, as did the honourable Senator Horner and the honourable Senator Haig. But the speech that stands uppermost in my mind was the one made by the honourable Senator Gouin, who, dwelling on this question of collaboration between these various countries and our allies, or a concentration of one or other of them, and speaking in the kindliest terms of the United States, registered in most eloquent terms how much rather he would have that association in an association of which the United States was a member but in which it was not the only member. If honourable senators would like to read a masterpiece they can refer to Hansard.

These are the two economic alternatives, as far as I can see. The problem now is much more difficult than it would have been if it had been faced ten years ago, but somehow we have got to do something or there will be an economic curtain drawn right down the middle of the Atlantic which will strike at the very foundations of NATO.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Honourable senators, I agree with almost all of what the senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) has said, but I would like to ask him a question. Whether an economic combination is formed with the United States, or whether perhaps the United States will merge with one of those which have been formed in Europe, how would he meet the threat of competition from Russia, where they can fix the wage scale at any point they wish?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I do not think there is any action we could take. Obviously, if they want to injure us economically there is nothing we can do about it, except that we have the great mass of the Western world—those with whom we are in direct economic co-operation and those who are connected with it in some peripheral way—which would present a bulwark that I think Russia could not successfully frighten.

The difficulty with our economic defences is that they are not co-ordinated, and there could be the most serious political differences of opinion arising from trade rivalries between this side of the Atlantic and the other side. It is a simpler thing for the European people to get together on this, because of their relatively similar conditions, and relatively similar wage levels, when ours are four times what theirs are. Having regard to their exceedingly modern and improved machinery for production, this matter is no child's play, I can tell you.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Honourable senators, I do not wish to delay the debate but I have a few observations to make in support of the resolution, and if no other honourable member wishes to adjourn the debate I would like to do so now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Before the debate is adjourned may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if, in view of the comments made by the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) about the membership of the Canadian delegation to the forthcoming Atlantic Congress, it would be possible to have two alternate delegates appointed from the Senate? The honourable senator from Shelburne said, I think, that there were eight additional members appointed from the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Five.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Five in addition to the 13 originally named. I understand that the attendance of these members in London will not depend upon inability of the regular delegates to attend, but the alternates will be available to vote in case any regular delegate should become ill. My suggestion to the honourable Leader of the Government is that two alternate delegates should be appointed from the Senate, and I would appreciate it if he would take this matter up with the Government.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have no information on the subject. I do not know whether I can do anything about it, but I will take the matter up and do what I can.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I suspect the honourable Leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) will find that the list has been pretty well closed. I would point out that this is only the beginning of something that is in contemplation. I do know that the NATO Parliamentary Conference will take place in Washington next September. I think the Senate on a proportionate basis can seek to have more members on the delegation than it now has.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Wall, debate adjourned.

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the second reading of Bill C-37, to provide for the appointment of Parliamentary Secretaries to Ministers.

He said: Honourable senators, you will find this bill in your desks and it might assist you if you have it before you while I give my explanation.

The bill is a brief one and is in uncomplicated language. It consists of only six paragraphs and its purpose is to provide for the appointment of not more than 16 parliamentary secretaries to assist ministers in the discharge of their duties. The appointments would be for not more than 12 months' duration and would automatically terminate when the incumbents ceased to be members of the House of Commons. The bill provides for the payment of salaries at the rate of $4,000 per annum, to be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. It further provides for the payment of reasonable travelling and other expenses incurred by parliamentary secretaries in the discharge of their duties.

I would refer honourable senators to section 6 of the bill, which provides that a person will not be disqualified from sitting or voting in the House of Commons because he is in receipt of additional remuneration for his services as a parliamentary secretary.

In my opinion the appointment of parliamentary secretaries is quite necessary and should contribute greatly to the efficiency of Parliament. The practice of appointing parliamentary secretaries has been found to be of invaluable assistance in Great Britain, and also in Canada where parliamentary assistants were appointed in 1943, and then again in 1947, after the general election of that year. There is no intention here of introducing any entirely new system. The proposed legislation, with the exception of a few modifications, would follow what has been done in the past but, unlike the former practice of appointing parliamentary assistants under authority of an item in the estimates, these appointments would be made under authority of a statute—and this bill, if passed, would be the statute. The persons performing the duties outlined in this bill would bear the title of parliamentary secretaries and not parliamentary assistants.

The embodying of the system in a statute is quite important, because there was some doubt as to whether or not appointments made by reason of an item in the estimates were in contravention of the Senate and House of Commons Act. That is the reason why section 6 has been inserted in the bill.

I should like to say that in adopting the expression "parliamentary secretary" the Government is following a thought first expressed on the subject by the Right Honourable Mackenzie King in 1935. The term "parliamentary secretary" is based on the British practice. It would be impossible to define the duties of parliamentary secretaries, and for this reason the bill provides generally that their duties will be to assist ministers in such a manner as they may direct. In my opinion these provisions are broad enough to govern the relationship of parliamentary secretaries with their ministers who, by delegating certain of their duties to parliamentary secretaries, will be relieved of many excessive burdens. It is generally understood and believed that cabinet ministers are overworked and that they need help in fulfilling their increasing obligations. In the past, ministers who were particularly heavily burdened have made great use of their parliamentary assistants. This system has been of immense help in expediting the business of Parliament.

Honourable senators, this system has the added advantage of providing those who secure positions as parliamentary secretaries with an excellent opportunity for gaining experience in governmental matters, and perhaps fitting them for ministerial appointments later on.

In proposing that the appointments be for a period of twelve months it is not intended to introduce a system of rotation, for that would be contrary to the general purpose of these appointments.

Parliamentary assistants will not be obliged to remain in Ottawa for the entire year. Whether or not they came to work in their departments between sessions would depend upon instructions they received from their respective ministers.

The bill provides for the reimbursement of travelling and other expenses made by parliamentary secretaries in the performance and discharge of their duties. Thus, if a parliamentary secretary incurred expense in the discharge of his responsibilities in travelling away from Ottawa during a session he would be reimbursed. Also, if a parliamentary secretary were called away from his ordinary place of business between sessions or when Parliament was not in session, the expenses which he incurred in the discharge of his duty would also be paid to him.

It is not intended that parliamentary secretaries shall be given the status of junior ministers; that is quite clear.

In my opinion, honourable senators, a bill of this kind should be supported, because it provides for establishment of a system which has been found to be of great value in the Parliament of the United Kingdom and also in our Canadian Parliament, by relieving cabinet ministers of many onerous burdens and thus contributing to the more efficient carrying on of the public business.

Honourable senators, that is a brief explanation of what the bill provides.

Before I sit down, I think I should say that in Britain there have been parliamentary assistants, called secretaries, for many years.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Are they not called under secretaries?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Perhaps they are called under secretaries. They are persons connected with the ministry. Each of the under secretaries, if that is the correct term, is selected by the Prime Minister in consultation with the minister concerned. Usually they are members of the House of Commons, and their duties have always been to assist their respective ministers and work under their direction.

In Canada, during the First World War, in 1916, by an order in council under the War Measures Act, provision was made for appointment of parliamentary secretaries for the duration of the war only.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: How many?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Only one was appointed, and he was assigned to the minister in charge of the Department of Militia and Defence. I could give the honourable senator the name, if he wants it, but probably he knows it better than I do.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I know it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Why can we not have it?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Well, I was not exactly expecting to—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: All right, I do not insist.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: However, I think I have it here.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not insist.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will give it to you. Mr. McCurdy was appointed parliamentary secretary for the Department of Militia and Defence, but he resigned later on and was succeeded by Colonel Hugh Clarke, Member of Parliament for Bruce.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: He is still living, and he is in his nineties.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: He is a very fine gentleman, and I know it.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Haig: He can tell a good story, too!

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Colonel Clarke, in turn, was succeeded by Mr. F. H. Keefer, M.P. This was in 1916, and was no doubt a result of a report made in 1912 with respect to the organization of public services, which report recommended that ministers of the Crown be given help of this kind. Then in 1919 the Senate set up a special committee on the machinery of Government, and made a similar recommendation. In 1936 the Right Honourable Mackenzie King, then Prime Minister, announced in the Speech from the Throne of that year that parliamentary secretaries would be provided. However, no steps were taken to this end until 1943, during World War II, when the work of the various ministers of the Crown became very heavy. But no Act of Parliament was passed; there was merely an item placed in the estimates providing for appointment of these men who were then called parliamentary assistants. After the election of 1957 the Government of the day did the same thing, and several parliamentary assistants were appointed, but none have been appointed since the election of March 31, 1958. In order to make sure that such appointments, if and when made in future, will not in any way contravene the Senate and House of Commons Act, this bill has been brought in, and I feel sure that it will receive the unanimous approval of the honourable members of this chamber.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I want to say that, as far as I am concerned, I support the principle of this bill in full. I adopt the words that the honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has expressed to the house.

I am reminded, after watching the House of Commons operate, that they ought to be given all the assistance they ask for as quickly as possible. It can only improve the situation. I am glad that the honourable gentleman finished his speech by telling us that Mackenzie King brought the parliamentary assistants on the scene. We recognize them today under the name of parliamentary secretaries, but nevertheless they are the same people.

The only criticism I have to make is that there was neglect on the part of the present Government in not appointing parliamentary secretaries at a much earlier date. There are a great number of capable, anxious and ambitious young men sitting around with nothing to do, waiting for these appointments —men who deserve them—and the Government of the country has been deprived of their services for some length of time. As to the cost, I will have something to say about that in a few minutes. My point at the moment is that these appointments ought to have been made much sooner.

The young men—and perhaps some who merely feel young—who accept appointment as parliamentary secretaries devote their services all year round, and as such they are assigned many tasks. They are very much underpaid. A parliamentary secretary cannot do a competent job if when the house is not in session he is in Vancouver looking after his constituency or if he is in Halifax looking after his constituency. He has to be in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The year round?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes. The most effective ones that we had were the ones who stayed here the year round and continued to do their job. Some departments need them very badly, and $4,000 a year is a much too inadequate sum to pay them.

I know there are limitations in this house. If it were possible under the rules for me to move an amendment to increase their increment I would have done so. It is possible for me to move an amendment to decrease, but I do not intend to do that.

And while we are speaking about appointments, I think something needs to be said about how underpaid the members in the other place are. That house has been fortunate, on all political sides, in having young men come there as members without realizing for a moment what was in store for them in a pecuniary way. I know it will be said they are over 21 and they knew what they were getting into. They did not know that, any more than I did when I first got in.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: How old were you, senator?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I was 29. These young men dreamed of being fortunate enough or able enough to be elected to the House of Commons. They did not plan their lives out, and then they found themselves in some difficulties, as many of us in that house found ourselves from time to time. I know from talking to them that many of them find it impossible to discharge their parliamentary duties and at the same time maintain their normal family life without going heavily into debt. A great number of our young men in the other house will soon have to reconsider their position and their loyalties. They are going to have to ask themselves, "Does my family or my country and my party come first?" I am not so sure what the answer will be.

I think the time has come for the members of the House of Commons to be paid a decent salary. In fact, I think they ought to be paid what they are worth, and I consider they are worth a great deal more than they are getting. I talk from some knowledge and some experience. I think this country is on the cheap with Parliament.

I am not suggesting that they raid the treasury, nor that they dip their elbows into the public trough, but I am appealing to the country to give these people fair play.

You can appreciate that members of that house feel uncomfortable when speaking about remuneration. Well, I am speaking of their needs with some knowledge and some concern, but without any discomfort. Those members are both underpaid and underestimated, and some of the underestimation results from their being underpaid. I think Canadians expect too much sacrifice from their public men, particularly from the young men who enter public life. Government is manifestly complex; and the people, who demand so much from their representatives, should lessen the burden upon the shoulders of public men by giving them better compensation. I realize this country is faced with many problems, but the underpayment of members of Parliament should be added to those problems. This problem begs a solution.

Recently a royal commission in Australia, composed of competent people, recommended remuneration for members of Parliament which will bring them to a point where they will receive $7,500 a year. The basis salary of the workingman in Australia is $33 a week, whereas the basic salary of the workingman in Canada is about double that. So, if you measure it on that basis our parliamentarians should be paid a minimum of $15,000 a year. In addition to that, the Australian member of Parliament has a pension provision for his widow and his dependents, something that is not available to members of Parliament here, although they have time and again said they were prepared to pay for it.

In the United States of America the first secretary to a senator, or the first secretary to a congressman, receives more money than does a member of Parliament in Canada. As for the pension provision for congressmen and senators in the United States, I can only describe it as affluent. Never did I know of a better pension provision than they make for their members in the United States. There are city councils in Canada that pay their members more than we pay members of Parliament, and there are provincial legislatures where members sit from six to eight weeks which pay their members more, with allowances, than we pay members of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Would the honourable gentleman permit a question? When he speaks of members of Parliament he includes senators?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: He is coming to that.

Hon. Mr. Croll: All of us are members of Parliament, I must say, but I was speaking about members of the House of Commons, and I placed particular emphasis upon the young people in that house. It was their grievance I was expressing. A great number of members of the House of Commons get along very well on what they are receiving, as do the members of the Senate, but there are many young people in the other place who are being badly handicapped and whose life plans and careers are being jeopardized, who find themselves giving public service without adequate compensation. Now, we have been talking for a long time in this country about attracting better men and women to Parliament. We have tried many formulas, without much success. I think the time has come when we should try one which could conceivably help, that of paying these people decent compensation and adequate allowances. If the country thinks it inadvisable to increase compensation to members of Parliament, then it should increase the present allowances.

I have a suggestion to make which I think can be helpful: there should first be an adequate basic allowance for all members of the house, and I think there should be an additional allowance for young members with young families. For want of a better name, I am suggesting there be "Parliamentary family allowances" for members with young children, who find themselves handicapped in their careers because of lack of adequate compensation for their public service.

I throw out that suggestion for discussion, and I hope it will be discussed in the country. It is a serious problem, and its solution is long overdue. I hope my suggestion will at least result in a debate. In any event, I have tried to bring the question out into the open, so that all can take a look at it and make up their own minds as to what should be done. One thing should not be done: the matter should not be ignored, because it is begging a solution, and this country will be the poorer if we don't do something about it. We will surely lose the services of some of our abler and keener young men in whom we have some investment, because they already have some experience in public life, and if conditions do not change they will not be able to continue serving.

Certainly, we cannot argue that taxes are already too high and that such a proposal as I make would cost too much money. Why, in some of these high-spending departments they waste more in two minutes than would pay an adequate allowance to these young members of Parliament, whose need is much greater than that of the departments of which I speak.

I suggest to this house that some expression of opinion on the question should be forthcoming; we in the Senate can do it much more easily than can members of the other house, because we take an objective view of the matter. That is my submission.

I, of course, support the bill. In principle I think it is very good, but, as I previously indicated, it should have been put into effect at an earlier date.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, with much of what the previous speaker has said I am not in very great accord. However, if I thought an increase in the salaries or allowances of members of the other house would bring about an increased attendance in that house, I would be perhaps more enthusiastic about it.

I speak as one of the few senators who have had experience as a parliamentary assistant. I was parliamentary assistant to three cabinet ministers, and I know something of the duties of that office, for I saw it from the inside, not from the outside.

When the question of the appointment of parliamentary assistants was introduced in the other house by the late Mackenzie King, who had become imbued with the idea while on a visit to the Old Country, I think he was afraid to call them under secretaries, as is done in Britain, for the reason that they might demand to be sworn in and taken into the cabinet.

I am going to predict that the proposal contained in this bill for appointment of parliamentary secretaries will just lead to confusion, and they will be of no particular help to the cabinet ministers. The ministers already have secretaries, both private and personal. When anyone visits Ottawa to see a minister, he is usually told to see the minister's secretary. Therefore, I am suggesting that consideration should be given to the appointment of under secretaries who would be taken into the cabinet.

To be quite frank, one reason why cabinet ministers were not enthusiastic about taking their new assistants into the cabinet in the earlier days was that they were afraid the assistants might overshadow the ministers, or perhaps make better speeches. So it was decided that they should be called parliamentary assistants.

A great deal of a minister's time is taken up with meeting delegations. Now, if we really want to lighten the burden of the minister, here is a way in which it can be done. I can assure you that calling these persons parliamentary secretaries instead of parliamentary assistants will not mean they will do any more for the ministers—and, as I say, I speak from experience. But if these appointees were called under secretaries, and were under the control of the cabinet ministers, then any delegation coming to Ottawa could be referred to the appropriate under secretary, who would be able to take care of them, because he would be a member of the cabinet, and would in turn report to the minister. By this legislation we are not doing any more than changing the title to "secretaries".

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Parliamentary secretaries.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I am rather intrigued by section 2(3) of the bill, which provides that parliamentary secretaries shall be appointed for a period not exceeding twelve months from the date of their appointment. This means, of course, that a secretary can be removed from office in a year. With the large Government majority in the other house, some members will be kept happy and contented, because they know that the secretaries are appointed for this short term, and perhaps at the end of the year some will be removed from office and new appointments made.

However, my contention is that the weakness of the whole thing is in the failure to appoint under secretaries. If we are going to follow the system in Great Britain, why not go all the way? If under secretaries were appointed they would relieve the ministers of many duties—and there are a great many duties of which a minister should be relieved. Of course, the parliamentary secretary will do such things as table returns in the house, but they are only returns prepared by another secretary and handed to him. My point is the only way the assistant to the minister can really become helpful is by being sworn in as an under secretary and becoming a member of the cabinet. If that were done, these men could remain in Ottawa twelve months of the year.

I am not offering my remarks by way of criticism, but, having been parliamentary assistant to three cabinet ministers, I think I know something about the duties these parliamentary secretaries will be called upon to do. I can tell you that my work as a parliamentary assistant never made me weary —and I worked hard at it—but I was glad to get the extra $4,000 per annum that went with the job.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, when this matter was first brought up in the House of Commons, in 1940—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I read your speech.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: My honourable friend will remember that I used the expression "caseous" or "cheese-like".

I did not know at all what a parliamentary secretary was, but I heard of a quite similar job that was given to an eminent gentleman who became a cabinet minister sometime later. I thought it was something which would give the appointees an opportunity while waiting until they could get something better and more important than the position of parliamentary secretary. I studied Whitaker's Almanack, which is a very good reference book, and I saw that in Britain, where the number of members of Parliament is about two and a half times as large as it is in Canada, there were 60 gentlemen who occupied, under different designations, the position of parliamentary secretary.

I still did not know what it was, and finally I ended up by contacting those who were to be appointed, and offered my deepest sympathy to their wives because it seemed unfortunate for them that their husbands would have to do so much work for the various departments.

My idea about it was that the parliamentary secretary would be in an unenviable position. He would have no authority. He would be a go-between between the cabinet minister and the department, and between the minister and the House of Commons, and naturally, the high-ups of the Civil Service—the bureaucrats—would give him the evil eye. I had a great deal of sympathy for those who were to become parliamentary secretaries, but my great surprise was in the selections that were made. Some members of the House of Commons are most gifted men, of eminence in their professions. The first appointee who comes to my mind is the late Cyrus Macmillan, who was my deskmate for some years. I have always been very fortunate in having remarkable desk-mates. We were good friends and they all helped me a lot by their good advice. Cyrus Macmillan had been for years Dean of the Faculty of Arts at McGill University, and, strangely enough, for a politician, he knew Shakespeare by heart and made no mistake in his quotations. He was a Privy Councillor. He had been appointed to the Privy Council in the elections of 1930.

Hon. Felix P. Quinn: He was never a member, was he?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: He was my desk-mate when I sat in the House.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: In what year was he elected?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I was elected in 1921 and in 1924.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: When was he elected?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: He was elected in 1940 and 1945. I am sure my honourable friend knew him well and had a high regard for him. I was surprised that he accepted the position of parliamentary assistant to one of the cabinet ministers, because he was qualified to be Deputy Prime Minister of Canada. In fact, he was selected for a most difficult function, that of being chairman of the committee to decide about social security and the like. He was very active as Parliamentary Assistant to the then Minister of National Defence for Air. He was most helpful. He was a most remarkable man, and he did not mind accepting the position of parliamentary assistant to a cabinet minister during the war. He was a veteran of the First War. He was an officer of the army, and he was pleased to accept the position, and he did exceptionally well in it. He was helpful to everybody, and all those who have family allowances and old age pensions can thank him, as well as Mackenzie King, because he was instrumental in having that legislation drafted.

Another Maritimer who was most helpful to me was an eminent member of the Nova Scotia Bar, the late W. C. Macdonald, Q.C., who was at Harvard with Cyrus Macmillan. Both were students at the same time.

Naturally, during the war I had to fight the brass hats, just as hard as the army fought the Germans, in order to protect the soldiers and the draftees. But I had friends in that group. One of them—I can name him now, because he is retired—was Colonel Henri DesRosiers who was the first to command Le Vingt-deuxième Régiment when they got into Germany at the time of the victory. The other one was W. C. Macdonald, who was the parliamentary assistant to the minister. When a draftee went to the medical board and was suffering from chronic appendicitis or a weak heart, or any other disability, I had to go to Mr. Macdonald and explain the case to him, because the brass hats that were on the examination board considered men not as men but as units, and sick men were sent into the army. I could rely on W. C. Macdonald to see that instructions were given for the men to pass another examination before a competent and reliable doctor. He thought, as I did, that the army was not a place for men who were not physically fit. They were then returned home, after having gone through an examination before doctors who were not rubber stamps to send them to the army.

It was done with a very high sense of duty by Mr. Macdonald, who would have honoured the bench if he had accepted a judicial position, but as a gallant gentleman he said, "I will continue to serve my country in Parliament", as did all the members of Parliament during the war, and they did it magnificently. He was a man who had a very high and true sense of justice. He has been dead for many years. A few honourable senators never met him, and that is their misfortune. But he was my friend. He was a kind-hearted man who would not do an injustice to anyone. Things were difficult for him, for he was surrounded by all sorts of people who did not agree with him. But I could rely on his fair play and his patriotism. Those are two gentlemen who were among the first parliamentary assistants.

Then there was another one, but he did not come from the Maritimes. He was a big man. A hard-working lawyer of prominence, he was a good speaker and a man of independence. I refer to Walter Tucker, who was Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

I was honoured once by a message I received from a man in British Columbia. It came to me direct, over the head of the Legion and even over the head of the minister himself. It was from the first Canadian winner of the Victoria Cross in World War I. I will not mention his name, but I will repeat what he told me. He had been decorated by His Majesty King George V at Buckingham Palace for valour, as it is inscribed on the Victoria Cross, and he returned to Vancouver to the beating of drums. Nothing was too good for him. He was the toast of the town. But at the time he wrote to me he was so destitute that his wife had to use sackcloth to make his clothes, and he was not able to be properly dressed to accept an invitation to call on His Majesty King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, the present Queen Mother, when they came to Canada in 1939. When this war veteran wrote to me the only thing for me to do was to see Walter Tucker and tell him of the plight of that unfortunate veteran. I said how terrible it was for this country to allow a great hero like that to suffer such shame and humiliation after he had brought glory to our army and to the name of Canada. Walter said, "Let's work it out together".

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Might I suggest to the honourable gentleman we are discussing parliamentary assistants?

The Hon. the Speaker: Mr. Tucker was a parliamentary assistant.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: If the honourable gentleman will wait I will tell him much more than that. I was just starting, but I will adjourn the debate if—

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Go ahead and adjourn it.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I am speaking about what a parliamentary assistant, Walter Tucker, did for a winner of the Victoria Cross.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Talk about this bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: The honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) is in order.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: If honourable senators wish, I will adjourn the debate. I have something more to say about it.

Some Hon. Senators: Go ahead.

The Hon. the Speaker: Proceed.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I am not telling about what I have done. I do not want any credit for that. I am telling the Senate of Canada about the accomplishments of the first private secretaries I knew. There were a few appointed before Mr. Macdonald. One was Lucien Pacaud, a protegé of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and the son of the editor of the famous L'Electeur which later became Le Soleil. Another parliamentary assistant was John McCurdy.

I have spoken of those I have known and who at the request of a member of Parliament accomplished so much. It shows that men of prominence, great Canadians, did not refuse the position of parliamentary secretary during the war in order to serve the country to the best of their ability.

It is difficult to mention only a few names, for I should mention them all one after the other and tell of their accomplishments to the best of my knowledge. Perhaps they did much for other members and for other parts of the country as well. What I am recalling to honourable senators is history that is forgotten and never taught to our youth. People say, "Oh, there is to be a new position of parliamentary secretary, with an additional $4,000 income for every appointee. How lucky they are. The minister does the work and the department is there, and the position is just to satisfy their ambitions. It is a bone to a dog to satisfy his ambition." That is the impression of many people, but that is not the truth at all.

Now, to speak of others, there was George McIlraith who was Parliamentary Assistant to the biggest minister of the Canadian Government, Mr. Howe. What did he do for us? There was an airport to be built in my constituency. I went to see George McIlraith and he helped me to prepare everything up to the moment when Mr. Howe said—

Hon. Mr. Quinn: I don't know why we have to put up with this.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I am glad that I am awakening somebody, and if it is necessary I will speak even louder for those who do not understand what I am saying.

The Hon. the Speaker: I would ask the honourable senator not to digress too far. I have allowed some latitude and I would ask the honourable senator to be reasonable.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This involved a big airport and it was a technical matter. George McIlraith helped my constituency, and he was ready to help me wherever possible. This is my satisfaction. I had an opportunity to mention something about him in the House of Commons once, and I wish to pay him this tribute in the Senate of Canada.

And what about Maurice Bourget, who was Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Public Works? He rendered yeoman service not only to the Liberals but to the Conservatives as well. Today if he is one of the most popular members of the House of Commons it is because he was willing to give heed to all members, without any political deference.

Then what about Leo Langlois, who was Parliamentary Assistant first to the Postmaster General, and afterward to the Minister of Transport? He helped me to establish rural routes, to iron out the difficulties that occur, as they always do, in a large constituency.

I could mention many others.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I ask a question? Has the airport ever been used to the extent of the purpose for which it was built?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I am very glad to answer my honourable colleague. The plans were made and everything was ready to have the airport built, but some of my constituents wanted to have it somewhere else. I have never understood why, but the work was done, everything was ready to be done, and now a much smaller airport is to be built, but if they had accepted the offer made by Mr. Howe the county would have had the airport twelve years ago. Well, that is unfortunate, but I take it casually and with a smile—just as good a smile as that of my honourable colleague from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner).

One thing that astounded me was the manner in which parliamentary assistants could replace ministers in the house. They were given the opportunity to attend meetings of the cabinet, and they would explain the policy of the Government to the satisfaction of the members of the house—the members of the Opposition as well as the supporters of the Government. I could name many of those parliamentary assistants. I must say that all the Parliamentary Assistants to the Minister of Finance, from Jean Lesage to Mr. Benidickson, did their work exceptionally well in the House of Commons. I remember also that Mr. Chevrier, before he became a member of the cabinet, was the very brilliant Parliamentary Assistant to Mr. Howe, and that the Honourable Paul Martin, who made his name as the well-known Minister of National Health and Public Welfare, was also well accepted as Parliamentary Assistant to some of the cabinet ministers before becoming a cabinet minister himself.

It has been said that every private can become a marshal of the army. It would be wrong to put all the parliamentary assistants under the impression that it is a certainty that sooner or later they will be in the cabinet. It would not be fair, because the number of vacancies in the cabinet makes that impossible. On the other hand, I can tell my honourable colleagues that of all the parliamentary assistants I knew while I was a member of the House of Commons, none of them was not of cabinet timber.

The Prime Minister has a very difficult decision to make, on account of the large number of his supporters. He has the embarrassment of choice. He cannot please everyone, and he showed courage in sponsoring this bill. I hope he will make the best selections and that those appointed will do as well as did those who were my colleagues in the House of Commons. Some years ago, when an appointment to the Senate was being made, the Prime Minister of the time said to the appointee that those who would not be satisfied with his appointment would be those who wanted the job for themselves. History may repeat itself.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, this bill has already given rise to some interesting discussion in this house, and I am sure the discussion will continue. That of course is a good thing, because this is a bill dealing with the efficiency of one of the branches of Parliament, and is a matter which should obviously interest those of us who are concerned with the proper working of our parliamentary institutions. I do not think any of us could take any great objection to the bill now before us. My only comment on it is that I do not think it goes quite far enough. The provisions of the bill in regard to this new office of parliamentary secretary do not seem to give sufficient importance to that position. For one thing, if the appointees are to be really worth-while assistants to the Government of the country, I fully agree with the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) that the proposed salary is not sufficient.

Then I am a little disturbed by the provision in section 3 of the bill that:

> The parliamentary secretary to a minister shall assist the minister in such manner as the minister directs.

That is putting the parliamentary secretary in rather a minor position and subject to whatever the particular minister may happen to decide that he wants his parliamentary secretary to do. I am rather reminded of that verse in Gilbert and Sullivan's The Gondoliers where the pair of kings sing about their duties, and one of the duties which they perform they describe like this:

> We run on little errands for the ministers of state.

That seems to me to be the sort of thing that is contemplated in section 3 of the bill.

The third thing I would mention is the provision that:

> A parliamentary secretary shall be appointed to hold office for a period not exceeding twelve months—

I took note of the statement made by the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) that it was not intended to have these positions as a sort of rotating offices to be held twelve months by one man, who would then be suceeded by another, but the bill does rather give the impression that that may be done. I think if you are going to have men who are really to take their position seriously as assistants to ministers in important departments that you should emphasize the importance of their office a little more than is being done in this measure.

The Leader of the Government stated that in appointing parliamentary secretaries we shall be following the precedent set by the British Parliament. Well, that is only so in a very limited degree. In fact, it is only so in relation to the title, because in Great Britain a parliamentary secretary occupies a completely different position from the position which such a person will occupy under this bill. There parliamentary secretaries—or, as some of them are called, under-secretaries of state—are members of the administration, though not members of the cabinet. The members of the cabinet, I understand, are limited to 17, but the under secretaries are members of the administration, members of the Government, and hold office as long as the Government holds office, unless of course they should resign in the interval. There is no twelve months business about that. Furthermore, they are in receipt of a substantial salary, which I think is £2,500, in addition to their salary as members of Parliament. Also, their position is much more important, much more clearly defined and much more responsible than the position which parliamentary secretaries will hold under the bill before us.

I do not object to this bill. I think it is a step in the right direction, but I do suggest to the house that, when we come to consider this matter in the long range, what we should do—and it really would be a more satisfactory solution—is to approximate a good deal more closely to the British precedent than this bill does. I would suggest that the proper step would be, not to say that there shall be not more than 16 parliamentary secretaries and to leave completely unspecified the ministers to whom they are to be parliamentary secretaries, but that each of the various departments where the work of the minister is extremely onerous and known to be so should have a parliamentary assistant—or parliamentary secretary, if you like—designated in the legislation. For instance, I would suggest that a parliamentary secretary should hold office as assistant to the Minister of Finance. Likewise, there should be a parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of External Affairs and the Minister of Defence. The Prime Minister himself obviously needs a parliamentary secretary, and so probably does the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Transport. I would make those permanent offices of the administration, and when a Government comes into power I would appoint parliamentary assistants to those ministers, to hold office as assistants to the ministers during the life of that Parliament. And I would provide for substantial salaries for those individuals.

I think under that system you would have much more competent and much more responsible secretaries than you would have under this proposed legislation. If this bill passes, a man may be asked to hold a position as parliamentary secretary to any minister whatever for a period of twelve months and then be let out.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? Under the system he suggests, that is the system in operation in the British Parliament, what would happen to a parliamentary assistant if the minister changes?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: In Britain they are members of the administration and they are members of Parliament. The great majority, of course, are members of the House of Commons, but two or three are members of the House of Lords.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: But if the British system were adopted here what would happen to a parliamentary secretary if his minister is defeated?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: If he is defeated he has to resign office.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: So if at the next general election a minister is not re-elected, the position of his parliamentary secretary would be abolished?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Of course not.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I wish to make just one or two observations on this bill, and part of my reason for so doing is that no one from this side of the house has spoken on it except our leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), who introduced the bill.

I am very much in agreement with practically everything that the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) has said in regard to this bill. In particular I, for one, am quite unhappy about clause 3, which reads:

> The parliamentary secretary to a minister shall assist the minister in such manner as the minister directs.

Now, it seems to me that this clause puts the parliamentary secretary in a very inferior position.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: He becomes merely the servant of the minister and does as the minister directs. What I am wondering is—and indeed it is because of this that I rise to say anything about the bill—whether this point was brought up in the other place. I wonder if anyone thought of it or whether it was debated there. If it was, then I regret very much that I have not read the debate in the other house on that point. I would certainly be more in favour of this bill if an attempt were made to define with some exactness the duties of parliamentary secretaries.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That question was debated in the other place.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Further, I would much prefer if the term of office were not limited to one year. To me, that in itself puts the parliamentary secretary in a somewhat invidious and unfortunate position.

However, honourable senators, I do not want to suggest any amendment; nor do I wish to suggest that this bill be referred to a committee of the Senate, for the reason that it pertains largely to the other place. I did, however, wish to make these few remarks, because I am not in full accord with the bill in its present form.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, a number of senators who have of necessity left the chamber in order to attend another meeting at this time told me they wished to speak on this bill. Under the circumstances, I would move adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald, debate adjourned.

ATLANTIC PORTS

RESOLUTION URGING GREATER DEGREE OF USE

On the order for resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Isnor:

That it is expedient that the Government, through the Department of Transport, or any other agency or means, bring about a greater degree of use of the Atlantic ports.

With this in mind it is urged that "open" and "closed" periods be agreed upon, and that the ports of the St. Lawrence be considered "closed" ports from November 15 until April 15, and "open" ports as from April 16 to November 14 of each and every year until such times as this arrangement is revoked.—Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North).

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): Honourable senators, I had hoped to be able to make my little contribution on this resolution this afternoon, but in view of the rolling tide of oratory I recognize the futility of attempting to raise my feeble voice—a tide of oratory in fact so great that it even stopped the Senate clock, which only recently has been repaired. Therefore, I suggest that the order stand.

The Hon. the Speaker: The order stands.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 215 to 242, which were presented yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved that the reports be adopted.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MESSAGE FROM COMMONS PROPOSING APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that a message has been received from the House of Commons in the following words:

That a Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to examine and consider the Indian Act, chapter 149, R.S.C., 1952, and amendments thereto, and to suggest such amendments as they may deem advisable, with authority to investigate and report upon Indian administration in general and, in particular, on the social and economic status of the Indians;

That twenty-four members of the House of Commons, to be designated at a later date, act on behalf of the House as members of the said committee, and that Standing Order 67(1) of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto;

That the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses under oath; to sit while the house is sitting, and to report from time to time; and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee and that Standing Order 66 be suspended in relation thereto;

And that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems advisable some of its members to act on the proposed joint committee.

Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: With leave of the Senate, I move that the message be taken into consideration now.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am not prepared to consider the matter at the present moment. I think the proper procedure would be for the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) to give notice of a similar motion.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I intended to do so as as soon as this message was taken into consideration, but I am in the hands of the house.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I now wish to give notice of a motion for next Tuesday night, as follows:

That the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the appointment of a Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament to examine and consider the Indian Act, Chapter 149, R.S.C., 1952, and amendments thereto, and to suggest such amendments as they may deem advisable, with authority to investigate and report upon Indian administration in general and, in particular, on the social and economic status of the Indians;

That the following Senators be appointed to act on behalf of the Senate on the said Joint Committee, namely, the Honourable Senators Boucher, Crerar, Croll, Dupuis, Fergusson, Gladstone, Horner, MacDonald, Méthot, Reid, Stambaugh and White;

That the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses under oath; to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to report from time to time; and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee.

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house accordingly.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following document:

The Canada Gazette, Part II, Consolidated Index and Table of Amendments to the Statutory Orders and Regulations for the period January 1, 1955, to March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, Chapter 235, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

REPORT ON ORGANIZATION MEETING TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table a report, signed by the Honourable Mr. Michener, Speaker of the other place, and myself, reporting on the organization of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, held in Washington, January 9 and 10 last. I have only the English version, but on Tuesday I shall be able to table the French version.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask, Mr. Speaker, is it your intention that the report be incorporated in the records of this house?

The Hon. the Speaker: I think that should be done, if the Senate concurs.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move that the Report of the Organization Meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group be printed as an appendix to today's Debates and Minutes of the Proceedings.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I second the motion.

Motion agreed to.

For text of report, see appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 544-60.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 234 to 255, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, May 5, 1959, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

Bill SD-203, an Act for the relief of Mildred May Eunice Charron Roblee.

Bill SD-204, an Act for the relief of Pierre Joseph Gabriel Sorba.

Bill SD-205, an Act for the relief of Gaston Vadnais.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

ATLANTIC PORTS

The Senate resumed from Thursday, April 23, the adjourned debate on the resolution of Hon. Mr. Isnor:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Government, through the Department of Transport, or any other agency or means, bring about a greater degree of use of the Atlantic ports.

With this in mind it is urged that "open" and "closed" periods be agreed upon, and that the ports of the St. Lawrence be considered "closed" ports from November 15 until April 15, and "open" ports as from April 16 to November 14 of each and every year until such times as this arrangement is revoked.

Hon. Harold Connolly: Honourable senators, my contribution to this debate will be brief, for a variety of reasons, the principal one being that I do not wish to delay unduly the speech of the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) on another matter, which speech he courteously postponed, with your permission, until later today in order that I might speak at this time.

I am in the same frame of mind as was the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) when, speaking a few days ago on the so-called inflation motion, he said that he would prefer to be some place else. He had reference, of course, to the National Hockey League playoffs, and well he might, for in his day—and I say this with all graciousness—he was a luminary of the ice lanes. He was, in fact, known as the human corkscrew, and I don't suppose any more apt compliment could have been paid to his prowess. There is evidence to support the thinking and the belief that had he decided to cast his lot with the sports world rather than with the world of law, finance and Parliament, he might have been one of the immortals of Canadian hockey.

Well, I can claim no such great prowess. My reason for preferring to be some place else differs from his, mine being that I consider it unfortunate that any citizen of Canada should have to debate a resolution which appears to ask a body of this kind to take something away from one section of the country and give it to another. The resolution itself, as was so ably explained by its sponsor (Hon. Mr. Isnor) the other day, is not really a fantastic resolution. It is, in fact, quite a simple one, containing only two paragraphs. Surely no one can argue with the first paragraph, because all it says is this:

That it is expedient that the Government, through the Department of Transport, or any other agency or means, bring about a greater degree of use of the Atlantic ports.

I am sure there is not a Canadian in this chamber or across the broad upper half of this continent who can disagree with the language of the first paragraph of the resolution. So I conclude that up to now the sponsor has won a 50 per cent victory. But when we pass to the second paragraph we run into a little difficulty. I may say very frankly, at the outset, I have no high hopes that this great body of legislators will accept the resolution as it now stands. Indeed, were it not for the political immunity which my place in this chamber guarantees, I should be almost fearful of prosecution for restraint of trade.

Honourable senators, this resolution has to do basically and fundamentally with the economy of that part of the country in which the honourable gentleman who proposed it resides, as do myself and others here. Before getting to the subject-matter of my brief discourse I should like to say that in all my adult years—and I say this because it ought to be said publicly in an arena of this kind—the Halifax City and County constituency was never more diligently or more ably represented than it was by the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor), who proposed this resolution. He has had extensive experience both in the provincial and in the federal arenas. He has had judicious experience in the realm of human relations, in business and finance, and you may well assume that, knowledgeable as he is, he would not have introduced a resolution of this kind unless he was satisfied beyond any doubt that the economy of our section of Canada, known as the Atlantic provinces, requires something out of the ordinary and away from the orthodox.

Yesterday the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) in his very able presentation, which was listened to so avidly by those of us who were here, made a very significant point which fits into this resolution. Discussing inflation, he said, in passing, that he would hesitate very much to argue against defence expenditures, which are largely responsible for inflation, because of the effect which their discontinuance would have upon his native province of Nova Scotia. He uttered no greater truism throughout the course of his remarks. Let me say that in the city of Halifax, the capital of Nova Scotia, upon which rural Nova Scotia largely depends, there are two great factors in our economy: first, defence expenditures, that is, actual expenditures for supplies and defence purposes; and secondly, the port of Halifax. If by some mischance the revenues of the port of Halifax should seriously deteriorate, and if in association with that situation we should reach an era of normalcy under which defence expenditures were drastically cut, I say to you, with every bit of seriousness and vehemence that I can summon up, that Halifax and Nova Scotia would be in a pitiful condition. I ask honourable senators to believe me when I say that I do not exaggerate by one iota the statement I have just made.

That, then, is the reason for the suggestion put forward by the proposer of this resolution that certain definite limits should be placed upon the annual period of operations of the port of Montreal. He also said that none of us wants to protest against any worth-while thing that comes to any other section of Canada so long as it does not too seriously jeopardize the economic position of our own section. That, I feel, is the view of every right-thinking Canadian, from the Atlantic provinces to the far western province of British Columbia.

If any demonstration is needed of recognition in high places in this country of the serious economic plight in which the Atlantic provinces find themselves, may I refer to the printed proceedings of the Dominion-Provincial conference held in November 1957. I will quote very briefly from statements by two gentlemen whom I consider to be experts in this matter, and who have no object but to present the facts. The first gentleman, the Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. Diefenbaker, in his opening remarks said, as reported at page 12 of the proceedings:

> I believe that we all recognize, however, that the Atlantic provinces as a group are confronted with greater difficulties in public finance than the rest of the nation, if they are to maintain the sort of provincial and municipal services that Canadians generally expect. The taxable capacity of the Atlantic provinces, even in the best of times, is significantly lower than that of the other provinces.

The second gentleman I should like to quote, who is equally estimable in his own field, and a Nova Scotian—as many of us are before we are anything else—is the Premier of Nova Scotia, Mr. Stanfield. He made a very significant contribution in his remarks on the occasion to which I refer. He had been discussing Confederation, not in any nauseous sense, nor in a sense of opposition, but judicially and academically, leading up to the point which he desired to make. That is the point I wish to call to your attention. In dealing with subsidies to the provinces, he said, as reported at page 30:

> I suggest that no formula can properly compensate for the disparity in natural resources, concentration of industry and the distance from markets. I am convinced that no formula of general application can give a realistic recognition to the financial problems of the various provinces of Canada.

Honourable senators, I am basing my presentation entirely upon sympathetic grounds, for, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, I have very little hope that this chamber will accept the resolution as it now stands. So in that vein let me say that I have in my hand a clipping from the Montreal Gazette of Tuesday, April 28. It shows a scene in Bedford Basin, which is at the northern end of Halifax harbour. Lying at anchor in that harbour are 70 or 80 ships. The picture was taken during wartime, when those of us who lived in Halifax and in Nova Scotia saw as many as 90 ships in a convoy hastening from this New World to the rescue of the Old World. We in Nova Scotia and the people of all the Atlantic provinces will celebrate on this coming Sunday, May 3, what is known as the Battle of the Atlantic. And well we might, because, had that battle not been fought and won, no one can say what the result of the war might have been.

May I also remind honourable senators that Halifax is the only city in Canada which has had actual participation in war, which has seen war in all its grim reality, and whose citizens themselves paid toll by the several thousands as a result of World War I. In 1945, as World War II was coming to a close, Halifax almost suffered the same fate as it did from World War I. It was upon those shores that there drifted the broken, burning hulls of allied ships, and even worse, the broken, decomposed bodies of the Allied dead. We have had a ringside seat in Canadian wars, and that ought never to be forgotten, I say in all modesty, by the rest of the people of Canada. I regret, therefore, that the great Atlantic port of Halifax, indispensable in war, should be so expendable in peace.

Honourable senators, time wears on, and I owe a debt for your courtesy in allowing me to proceed at this time. I shall therefore conclude with what I had intended to say at first. If this chamber in its wisdom decides that it cannot accept the resolution sponsored by the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor), then I should like to submit an alternative proposal. Having regard to the fact that we have already involved ourselves in a study of the threat of inflation, let me propose to this house—and more particularly to the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine)—that without loss of time a select committee of the Senate engage in a continuing study to determine the impact of the St. Lawrence Seaway upon the Atlantic ports, so that before the shoe pinches too tightly there may be forthcoming from that committee proposals and suggestions which will help an already overburdened people and enable them to see the sun more clearly—I refer to the economic sun—than they have been able to see it thus far.

Let us not permit things to drift until we find ourselves confronted one day with a dreadful realization that the Atlantic region has been struck another blow, perhaps a death blow. Let us think in terms of elevating the economy, so that when our young people graduate from the universities of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland they will not have to leave their native heaths and seek occupations in some other section of Canada or elsewhere throughout the world in order to do justice to their academic background.

And so, honourable senators, with that in mind, I leave you a thought, perhaps even a warning, in the words of the poet-philosopher who said:

> The Moving Finger writes; and, having writ,
> Moves on: nor all your piety nor wit
> Shall lure it back to cancel half a line,
> Nor all your tears wash out a word of it.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Beaubien, debate adjourned.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

EXTERNAL RELATIONS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO REVIEW NATO ACTIVITIES

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson:

> That the Standing Committee on External Relations be authorized to review the activities of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in so far as the interests of Canada therein are concerned.
> That the said committee have power to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, the purpose of this resolution is to authorize the Standing Committee on External Affairs to review the activities of a working alliance of 15 free Western democratic nations, an association whose role as a very powerful defender and guardian of the free world must continue to be studied, understood, assessed, appreciated and strengthened.

There have been NATO collaboration and co-operation mainly in common defence, and in political problems, and to a lesser degree in economic, social and cultural matters; and this co-operation has contributed significantly to the composite democratic strength of western Europe, a development of import as we move into the sphere of forthcoming negotiations with those whom we have some justification to regard as potential aggressors.

I welcome this motion, because I believe that the Senate can render an important public service through the instrumentality of this review, which, I hope, will deal both with NATO accomplishments and with its problem areas, so that we may be helped better to understand what has been done and what remains to be done more effectively.

Thanks to the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly), the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) and the other honourable senators who have participated both in the resolution on the economic developments in western Europe and now in this one, I believe we are all alerted to the dangers of the potential U.S.S.R. economic offensive, an offensive that is becoming visible now; and if honourable senators read, as I read this morning, the target figures for economic development adopted by the 21st congress of the communist party of the Soviet Union, and try to assess the implication of these target figures written in mandatory imperatives of "will," then perhaps the alerting of our attention to the forthcoming dangers of the U.S.S.R. economic offensive should engage our attention.

The same thing holds true of the economic developments for trading and commerce in western Europe. I believe that after the challenging and informative analysis by the honourable senator from Shelburne of the problems and the emerging imperatives for economic collaboration by the members of the North Atlantic community, in which process the North American partners may have to reappraise their policies, I would think that there is little likelihood that this aspect of our activities in NATO will not receive the committee's scrutiny.

References have been made in this debate to the mounting burden of defence costs in all NATO countries. It is substantially correct to say that the military budgets of NATO countries collectively are on the average three times as high for 1958-59 as they were for 1949, and that until recently they had temporalily flattened out to what has been termed "cruising speed". During these same years the collective production of these countries rose by only 35 per cent, and, during this period, too, the NATO countries have contributed significantly toward the economic development of less fortunate countries.

Other things equal, however, this burden of defence costs could become still greater. The latest issue of the NATO Letter warns that military budgets of NATO partners may have to increase—in fact, there have been increases this year—because of the constant rise in the cost of equipping modern forces, and because of current developments both internationally and within the Soviet Union.

It would be useful if a better perspective of the relative burden of defence expenditures by the respective NATO countries were provided by relating the ability to pay, say by figures of per capita national income to per capita total national budgetary expenditures and to per capita expenditures for national security. We might do this for current years and over a period of years, with beneficial results to our better understanding of the whole problem.

The honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson), referring to the crushing burden of Canadian defence costs, some of which flow from our defence commitments in the NATO alliance, suggested the advisability of some part of the Parliament of Canada, even a committee of the Senate, assuming:

—the task of reviewing in a comprehensive way the financial burden that this country should appropriately assume in the realm of national defence.

If I can assume this to be a separate study at a later date, then I submit for your consideration the suggestion that perhaps this committee of the Senate could be a committee of the whole house. The suggested study of defence expenditures would give us an opportunity to assess their burden against the defence requirements which this nation needs, can, or is willing to afford. I would hope that pertinent and useful facts could be furnished by competent witnesses to help the average Canadian understand better the primary operative concepts upon which are predicated our national defence requirements.

Many basic questions rise in one's mind as one thinks of this tremendous problem, but these would best be left to the study that has been suggested.

As I read NATO Letters, I am impressed by the long and varied list of the many activities which are being reported, and which I construe to have an important relationship to the co-ordinated "defence-of-democratic-freedoms" concept which is basic to the NATO organization. Considerable attention is devoted to what I might loosely term the public relations dimensions of the association, and it is to this aspect of our review of the activities of NATO that I would like now to draw your attention.

In the Special Issue of the NATO Letter honourable senators will find an article written by the Director of Information, under the title "Public Opinion and NATO". The article poses this basic problem: "Why then are people not better informed about NATO?" and proceeds to describe NATO's organization of its information services, and the results being attained. The director tell us that the primary responsibility for NATO information is placed upon the respective national information services, and that the regular 1959 budget for NATO information services is less than $300,000. Then the director logically asks us: How many thousands of times less is this amount—which as a matter of fact is approximately $285,000—than the sums the Soviet Union provides for its hard-hitting, day-by-day propaganda? He warns us that it would be a dangerous error for us to think that we are doing enough in the field of information.

I mention this article because I, for one, would like to know more about our international and national program in this continuing battle of public relations, about its substantive content, and about the results we appear to be achieving. Specifically, I would appreciate knowing more about the Atlantic Treaty Association, and its Canadian branch, the Canadian Atlantic Co-ordinating Committee. Receiving, as we do, considerable informational material from a variety of embassies, I cannot help but ask myself what we are doing in this regard.

The C.B.C. International Service is performing a very useful and significant duty in the international informational field. Perhaps it would be in order for the Standing Committee on External Relations to be better informed about the informational purposes this service is attempting to achieve, and the kind of message it has been beaming overseas. Then we would know what difficulties it has had to overcome and the accomplishments it has to its public service credit.

Of course we must work for relaxations of world tensions through negotiations, but should we not make certain also that the proposals for co-existence, containment, disengagement and what have you, are not hamstrung by one-sided formulas, with unique, unilateral definitions of the concepts of "co-existence", "non-interference" and the "status quo"?

Let me give you an example. As reported in the February issue of the NATO Letter, and according to Mr. Walter Lippmann, Mr. Khrushchev's definition of "status quo" appears to be a continuation of the existing situation, which the Soviet leader defines as a process of social and economic revolution now in progress in the U.S.S.R., China, and elsewhere in Asia and Africa, which process the West must not attempt to alter or interfere with, because all peoples of the world want to live under a new system of social life.

Thank you very much!

Mr. Lippmann validly suggests that this is a one-sided definitional bargain, because it asks us not only to shut our eyes to what has happened or is happening behind the Iron Curtain, but it also asks us to shut our eyes to further Soviet expansion and interference in other peoples' affairs, peoples not now behind the Iron Curtain.

In this context, and with a desire to know more about NATO information services which must help to meet more successfully the challenges of the ideological aspects of the cold war, many questions need to be asked. For although it is true that the communist deception which has been masquerading behind ideological jargon and semantical double talk has largely been found out, and although thoughtful and informed men in the Free World know that the so-called Marxist-Soviet rule, after 40 years of experimentation, must stand condemned or acquitted by the naked facts of its non-democratic form of evolution and present practice—

Hon. Mr. Reid: It has never been tried in Russia.

Hon. Mr. Wall: I said "so-called".

Although these things are known, are we asking enough questions of the right kind about facts, about people, about their pains and hurts, about their unquenchable longing for national freedoms and individual human dignity?

For ours must continue to be a simple, direct message, cutting across and through the confusing, loosely-used verbiage of capitalism, imperialism, socialism, revisionism, and pointing out that the basic conflict lies in our respective interpretations of man and his God-given nature, of man's responsibilities and rights in society, and of his socrosanct value in all human existence. For ours is a universal message, ordered by a high moral passion against all forms of oppression, and warmed by a faith in the truth of eternal principles which will always stir men's souls. And in the interests of this common man, as well as in the interests of historical truth, we must continue to repeat and repeat that the true political, social and economic revolution is toward human betterment and happiness—through political and national freedom, through the legal safeguarding of the rights and freedoms of the common citizen, through greater respect for the individual on the basis of his sacrosanct human dignity, and all these through the instrumentality of laws which have been evolved by democratic processes.

If we speak, as we must, in the name of a higher international law based upon the brotherhood of men, I submit that this message must not hesitate to ask questions about the real status of the ordinary farmer, the ordinary worker, and the humble citizen, wherever he may live, embarrassing though these questions may be to some. And, can we shrink from speaking frankly about the issue of the freedoms of the satellite and the submerged nations behind the Iron Curtain, not because we want to pull these peoples over to our side and not because we suspect that the problem of what we can term "Soviet colonies" is the Achilles' heel of the U.S.S.R., but because we know that these people know that their national and individual freedoms have been abrogated and are presently being denied?

Hence, we believe that they aspire to peace under freedom, to national liberty, and to individual human dignity, for their own sake.

I welcome, honourable senators, this opportunity of expressing my warm support of this resolution, and I repeat the suggestion that the External Affairs Committee might deem it advisable and profitable to hear and to consider evidence dealing with the information programs involved in our NATO participation.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 5, at 8 p.m.

REPORT ON THE ORGANIZATION MEETING OF THE CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

Held in Washington, D.C., U.S.A.

January 9 and 10, 1959

On August 12, 1958, the House of Commons gave unanimous approval to a proposal of the Rt. Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker, Prime Minister, in the following terms:

> My proposal is that I should request the Speaker of this honourable House, in consultation with his colleague in the other place, to establish a committee of members of both Houses and for all parties, for the purpose of exploring jointly with appropriate representatives of the executive and legislative branches of the Government of the United States the means whereby increased systematic discussions between legislators of the two countries on problems of common concern may be provided.

Similar authorizations were given in the Canadian Senate and in the Congress of the United States of America. Correspondence and preliminary discussion began in September but it was found that a first group meeting for organization purposes could not take place conveniently until after the congressional elections in November, 1958. Accordingly, the first interparliamentary group meeting was planned for and held in Washington on January 9 and 10, 1959, immediately after the opening of the 86th Congress and immediately before the opening of the second session of the 24th Parliament.

REPRESENTATION

United States Group

The United States group was made up of four Republicans and four Democrats, four of whom were Senators and were selected as a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, namely, Senator George D. Aiken, Republican from Vermont and Chairman of the Senate Group, Senator Homer E. Capehart, Republican from Indiana, Senator Wayne L. Morse, Democrat from Oregon and Senator Michael J. Mansfield, Democrat from Montana. The four from the House of Representatives were named by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs and comprised: Mrs. Edna F. Kelly, Congresswoman from New York, Democrat, who was Chairman of the House group, Frank M. Coffin, Congressman from Maine, Democrat, Walter H. Judd, Congressman from Minnesota, Republican, and Chester Earl Morrow, Congressman from New Hampshire, Republican.

Canadian Group

Although there were only eight in the United States' group they generously consented to a Canadian group of nine which would permit a more balanced representation of both Canadian Houses and all three Canadian political parties. Accordingly, the Canadian group was constituted with the approval of all party leaders as follows:

From the Senate, Hon. Mark Drouin, Speaker of the Senate, Hon. Wm. R. Brunt of Hanover, Ontario (P.C.), Hon. Sydney John Smith of Kamloops, B.C. (Lib.), and from the House of Commons, Hon. Roland Michener, Speaker of the House of Commons, Hon. Lionel Chevrier, Member for Laurier (Lib.), Hazen Argue, Member for Assiniboia (C.C.F.), Wm. L. Houck, Member for Niagara Falls (Lib.), Erik Nielsen, Member for Yukon, (P.C.), and Richard D. Thrasher, Member for Essex South (P.C.).

WASHINGTON MEETING

The Canadian group left Ottawa at 4.00 p.m. on Thursday, January 8th, by Department of Transport Viscount aircraft and arrived at Washington at 6.00 p.m. where they were met by a number of members of the American group and conducted to the Mayflower Hotel where they were accommodated until their return by similar transport on Sunday morning, January 11th. The Canadians were accompanied by their wives and by three members of the Canadian Parliamentary Press Gallery.

RECEPTION IN WASHINGTON

The Canadian delegation was received with the greatest cordiality and shown the highest consideration by the President, the State Department and both Houses of Congress as well as by the Canadian Embassy. The highlights were:

Friday, January 9

9:00 a.m.—The President of the United States received both delegations, wives and reporters at the White House.

12:00 noon—Attendance of the Canadian delegation at a joint session of Congress for the State of Union address by the President of the United States.

1.30 p.m.—Luncheon, Speaker's dining-room, House side of the Capitol, attended by many Congressmen including the Chairman of most of the Standing Committees.

3.00 p.m.—Reception of Canadian delegation on the floor of the Senate at which short speeches of welcome were made by sixteen U.S. Senators. The text of these speeches appears as an appendix to Hansard of January 23rd, 1959, at page 288.

6.30 p.m.—Reception given by the Canadian Chargé d'Affaires, a.i., A. E. Ritchie at the Canadian Chancery, attended by both delegations and many guests from Congress and the State Department.

8.00 p.m.—Dinner at the Mayflower Hotel at which the Chairmen of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the House Foreign Affairs Committee were hosts.

Saturday, January 10

1.00 p.m.—Lunch in the Old Supreme Court Room on the Senate side of the Capitol, attended by Senators and Congressmen, including Speaker Rayburn.

6.00 p.m.—State Department reception for both delegations and other guests in the President's Guest House.

BUSINESS SESSIONS

The two delegations met in business sessions on the afternoon of Friday, January 9th, at which Congresswoman Edna Kelly was Chairman, and on the morning of Saturday, January 10th, at which Senator George D. Aiken was Chairman. Press releases were given at the end of each business session and there was a short meeting with the representatives of the Press on Saturday afternoon.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF CONFERENCE

The Conference unanimously agreed to make the following recommendations to their respective bodies:

Name

A suitable name for this and subsequent meetings would be: "Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group" or "United States-Canada Interparliamentary Group", depending on which country was host.

Future Meetings

Future meetings between the legislators of both countries were both feasible and desirable. There should be at least two such meetings each year, one in each country. The next meeting should be held in Canada at the end of June, at the time of the official opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

66972-1—35

Organization

Organization of meetings should be in the hands of a small steering committee, composed at first of the present group, but subject to change in accordance with the following principles:

(a) There should be equal numbers from each country;

(b) Eight was possibly a suitable number for this committee, but notification could be given by either side if it wished to change the number or composition of its representation on the steering committee;

(c) Each would keep the other informed of its wishes in this matter.

Staff

There should be a joint relationship between the staffs of the two groups to arrange schedules and make other administrative provisions. Appropriate staff would be provided by each group as required. Experts on each side would not sit in on discussions.

Financing

Each group would pay its own transportation to the host country and hotel bills. The host country would pay other expenses. This arrangement would be subject to revision if meetings did not alternate between the two countries.

Character of Meetings

It was agreed that substantially larger numbers of Congressmen and Parliamentarians should participate in future meetings, that such meetings should not always be held in Washington and Ottawa, and that the group might divide into smaller parties on occasion and visit areas of special interest. It was suggested that at the next meeting twenty-four from each country would be an appropriate number. It was agreed that the meetings should be informal in character and that the purpose was to exchange information and to promote better understanding of our common interests, and accomplishments, as well as our differences and difficulties, rather than to arrive at binding decisions. It was understood that neither group would have authority to commit or bind its respective legislatures or government.

Agenda for Discussion

Without attempting to settle an agenda for the next meeting in June the following topics for discussion were suggested: Defence relationships, trade problems, boundary water issues, wheat disposal, investment policies, defence production arrangements as under the Hyde Park Agreement, fisheries problems and joint action for peace.

Agenda Committee

It was agreed that an agenda committee composed of Senators Aiken and Drouin, Speaker Michener and Congresswoman Edna Kelly should be given the responsibility of settling the agenda for the next meeting. The agenda would be made up of:

1. The topics selected by the agenda committee.

2. Such additional topics as the agenda committee might place on the agenda on written request from delegates given one month prior to the date of the next meeting.

3. Any other business which there was time to discuss after the set agenda had been disposed of.

Ground Rules

For the Conference in Washington, the delegates agreed on the following rules which, subject to change, would be appropriate for future meetings:

1. The host country would provide the Chairmen for the business sessions.

2. Business sessions are to be held in camera, that is, without the Press or experts or any staff except one or two secretaries from each side present for the purpose of preparing summaries of the discussion and drafting press releases for approval.

3. Delegates will be free to say what matters were discussed in the business meetings but shall not attribute any statement to any delegate.

4. Press releases will be issued at the close of the business meetings or conference outlining in a general way the course of the discussions.

5. Each group will be free to report on the conference to its authorizing committee or legislature, as well as to its State Department and Government.

On behalf of the Canadian Group, April 29, 1959.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 5, 1959

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform you that I have received the following message from the Secretary to the Governor General:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa,

May 5, 1959

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber on Tuesday, the 5th May, at 9.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,

Lionel Massey,
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable,
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

REPRESENTATION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-21, to amend the Representation Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Méthot: Thursday next.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following reports:

Report on the audit of the accounts of the Canadian Farm Loan Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 85 of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Report of the Federal District Commission for the year ended December 31, 1958, pursuant to section 20 of the Federal District Commission Act, Chapter 112, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 256 to 284, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday, May 13, I will move the following resolution:

That in the opinion of the Senate of Canada:

(1) The Western world should eagerly accept the challenge of the recently launched economic offensive of the Soviet Union, and prepare accordingly.

(2) The Governments of the fifteen nations who signed the North Atlantic Treaty should take the initiative in seeking to provide for the progressive removal, over the next fourteen years, of all trade barriers between their five hundred million people and the peoples of all nations who may thereafter become associated.

(3) This action should in principle follow, as far as is feasible, the precedent already established by our six NATO partners, namely, Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, Luxembourg and the Netherlands.

(4) Since this association contemplates the inclusion of nations that are not signatories of the North Atlantic Treaty, the necessary machinery to accomplish the purpose should be entirely outside, and quite independent of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

May I say that the responsibility for this motion is entirely mine, personally. I have not consulted anyone on either side of this chamber, not even the Leader of my party, and I have not consulted anyone outside the chamber. At the moment I have not even a seconder. Should I obtain a seconder between now and May 13 I shall move the motion on that day.

CONVENTION ON NATIONALITY OF MARRIED WOMEN

NOTICE OF MOTION STANDS

On the notice of motion by Hon. Mr. Aseltine:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament approve the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women, done at New York on February 20, 1957, and that this house do approve the same.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I would ask that this motion stand until Tuesday next, May 12.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: May I inquire whether this order could stand until another date? I had hoped to speak on the motion, but I shall be away from Ottawa during all next week.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The minister in the other house would like to open the debate on this motion, and I think we could arrange to have our debate commence at a time suitable to the honourable senator from Fredericton (Hon. Mrs. Fergusson).

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Thank you.

The Hon. the Speaker: The order stands.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JOINT COMMITTEE—SENATE MEMBERS

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved, pursuant to notice:

—That the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the appointment of a Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament to examine and consider the Indian Act, Chapter 149, R.S.C., 1952, and amendments thereto, and to suggest such amendments as they may deem advisable, with authority to investigate and report upon Indian administration in general and, in particular, on the social and economic status of the Indians;

That the following senators be appointed to act on behalf of the Senate on the said Joint Committee, namely, the Honourable Senators Boucher, Crerar, Croll, Dupuis, Fergusson, Gladstone, Horner, MacDonald, Méthot, Reid, Stambaugh and White;

That the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses under oath; to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to report from time to time; and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that House accordingly.

He said: Honourable senators, I would like to make a few comments at this time. Some honourable senators will remember that in 1946 a similar Joint Parliamentary Committee composed of certain members of the House of Commons and the Senate was appointed for the purpose of examining the administration of the Indian Act and Indian affairs in general. The committee held many meetings that year and was reconstituted in 1947 and again in 1948. During those three years an exhaustive inquiry was made into the subject, and I believe I am correct in stating that more than 100 witnesses were heard and some 400 briefs were submitted. The committee finally reported in June of 1948. I see the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) is smiling. I believe he was a member of that committee and took a very active part in its deliberations.

As a direct result of recommendations of that joint committee a new Indian Act was passed in 1951. It appears now that certain matters have arisen in connection with Indian affairs which make it necessary that another joint committee of both houses be set up to consider the present and future position of Indians in this country. I am sure honourable senators will welcome this motion and agree that the Senate should pass this motion and take part in the deliberations.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, the motion to set up this joint committee met with unanimous approval in the other house about a week ago, and the members of that house who will sit on the committee have now been named. I feel that we should concur in the request, that has come to us from that house to unite with it in the formation and work of the committee.

The Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) referred to the joint committee which sat on this subject more than ten years ago. That committee made a very exhaustive inquiry, and sat not only in Ottawa, but across Canada at or near different reservations. I presume that this new committee, or at least a subcommittee of it, will do the same thing this year. Indians have served Canada well in the past, and we owe a great deal to their forebears. They were loyal to the Crown at a vital time in our history, the days of the American Revolution, and many of them left their homes in that part of America which lies south of the Great Lakes in order still to continue to live under our flag. They received a tract of land under a treaty with the British Government. They do not own all the land at the present time, but they still have part of it. After the American Revolution they also joined with Canadians in the war of 1812, and again rendered great service to our country.

Honourable senators have doubtless read in the press that there has been some difference of opinion as to the way the reservation near Brantford should be conducted. I would point out that the proposal to set up this committee was made long before mention of those differences appeared in the press. This committee is not being set up as a result of what took place a few months ago. It was decided many months before then that it was time to review the conditions under which Indians live in Canada.

I am very pleased to second this motion. I hope it will carry, and that the committee will be able to get to work very soon.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, I assume that the object of this committee will be to inquire into the economic and social affairs of the Indians in Canada. Of course it is our hope that something will be done to improve the standard of living and to increase the happiness of those people. All down through the ages the records show that the Indians have often been visited by pestilence and famine, and become the victims of the weather and climatic conditions. They have lived in tents called wigwams, and often their food was not fit for human consumption. It is therefore fitting that some inquiry should be made of the conditions under which they live.

Now the best knowledge is that in ages long gone by, so long ago that no one can tell, they came from the heart of Asia. They made their way possibly across the Behring straits in winter on the ice or in the summer by boats. They worked their way down along the eastern foothills of the Rockies on what has been called the Old North Trail, which has long been overgrown. Then they spread across the country and discovered a new continent, although they were not conscious of the fact. They were here when Christopher Columbus came to this continent, late in 1492, and he, thinking he was close to India, called them Indians. Some of them are not very proud of that title at the present time.

All down through the ages there were tribal wars among the Indians, with all the cruelty and torture of pagan times. Also, they have had a hard time making a living. When the white people first came to the West, about 90 years ago, there were great herds of buffalo. It was said that in the spring time they would cover the lands as far as the eye could reach. In the northern states river boats were held up while great herds of these animals swam the streams, and the herds also held up railway trains on the rights of way. But when the white people came with their repeating rifles the buffalo disappeared and the Indians were left in a very unfortunate position. Then some of the whites—this is one of the darkest pages in Indian history—lawless, cruel men, without any moral feeling, came in the role of whisky traders and exchanged their potent liquor and their trinkets for the valuable buffalo and other furs. This liquor was a great hazard because it led to crime and cruelty and caused much suffering, and even death, among innocent people. It culminated in what was called the Cypress Hills massacre, where some of these traders went up the ravines there and shot down some 30 helpless Indians. A few others escaped by making their way into the hills. When news of this gruesome tragedy reached Toronto and Ottawa the Government of the day recruited some 300 men and dressed them in scarlet and gold. After an amazing march they reached that wilderness and succeeded by kindness, firmness and justice, in controlling those roving bands of Indians, in establishing law and order and also particularly in driving out those whisky traders.

As more white people came in, it was seen that some arrangement would have to be made about the land, so the Government made a series of treaties with the Indians. The territory that the tribes of Indians roamed over was considered to be theirs. There were the Chippewas in the north, the Assiniboines in the south, the Crees and the Blackfeet, the Blood Indians and so on. A series of treaties was made, some in Manitoba, some in Saskatchewan. The last one was made in Alberta, at Crowfeet Crossing, on September 17, 1877. It was a very colourful scene, with thousands of Indians, the Northwest Mounted Police, in bright uniforms, and the Lieutenant Governor and other dignitaries. It was felt that these treaties were necessary in order to clearly establish and settle the situation.

Captain Pallister, back in 1857, while making an investigation for the British Government, advocated the setting up of reservations. So reservations were set up and treaties were made and each family of five Indians were given 640 acres of land. Some of these reservations were large. The reservation of the Blood Indians contained some 500 sections of land, which would mean an area of about 25 miles long and 20 miles wide. These Indians were also promised teachers to help their children, and farm instructors. They were also promised annuities as long as the sun would shine and the grass would grow and the streams would run on to the seas. Of course, those promises have been kept.

It is quite impossible to know how many Indians there were in Canada when the white people came, but it is supposed there were about 200,000. However, the white people brought with them diseases which, as the Indians had no immunity to them, spread like wildfire, so that large numbers of Indians died. One awful event is recorded. A trader named Evans lost some of his horses and he wreaked a terrible vengeance. He went south, got some blankets, impregnated them with a virulent type of smallpox and put them in boxes where the Indians would find them. The Indians, of course, found them and used them, and a whole tribe was wiped out with smallpox at that time.

At the beginning of the century there were less than 100,000 Indians, but now there are 155,000 or more. Modern health methods have helped to curb tuberculosis and other diseases so that the Indian population is increasing.

Many Indians are now doing well on their reserves, but still there are a great many who are not on reserves and who still roam around and live under very unfortunate conditions. It is well that the treaty should be revised from time to time, for as it has been said:

> New times demand new measures and new men;
> The world advances, and in time outgrows
> The laws that in our fathers' day were best;

Some of the Indians were very outstanding. I might mention, for example, Tecumseh and Rona Teka, and particularly Crowfoot, who had a very great mind and saved the white population from being wiped out altogether at the time that Sitting Bull and his followers came to Canada. Crowfoot was the chief of chiefs who, like Saul of old, stood head and shoulders above the tribe. He had wisdom. He welcomed the Northwest Mounted Police, saying they came to protect the Indians, as feathers protect the birds from the frosts of winter. He was very active and killed as many buffalo as anybody else did. He led his followers in many tribal battles and on occasion, when hard pressed, he gave them a pep talk: "Although our enemies may be as strong as the sun and as numerous as the stars of the heavens, yet we will defend our lodges."

Honourable senators, I am glad that these people are going to have their conditions investigated, because all over the world primitive people are beginning to see that they are in an inferior position. There is some smouldering discontent, there is some resentment, there is, as somebody says, "a rising tide of colour", and it is quite evident that something should be done in these circumstances.

D'Arcy McGee, a long time ago, said something which might be appropriate at the present time:

> The politics preached at present will grow old and will lose their lustre but the conciliation of class and class, the keeping together of all our people, the linking of order with order, the smoothing out of the sharp and wounded edges will never seem old and will never lose its lustre.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, as one who sat on the former joint committee, I think it is now time, after the passage of more than ten years, to take another look at Indian problems. As the honourable senator from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw) said, there are many pages of history both in Canada and the United States, which indicate that we have little to be proud of in our treatment of the Indians. I sometimes wonder, as their affairs are handed down from father to son, why they have as much confidence in us as they have.

I was interested recently to hear that there is a group of some 250 hardy, independent Indians living on the border of Alberta and British Columbia, near Jasper. The members of this particular group, I understand, have refused to take treaty or to go on a reserve; they maintain their right to freedom in this country.

The previous joint committee heard many splendid briefs from chiefs and elected councillors of the various Indian bands in Canada. To a large extent the complaints were about money: that their band money was being held up in the department in Ottawa and that they continued to be treated as children. I noticed a recent news item to the effect that some bands are now being given the handling of their money. As pointed out by the honourable gentleman who comes to us from the Blood Tribe in the Blackfoot Nation, who sits with us in this chamber (Hon. Mr. Gladstone), the sooner the Indian is allowed to do as other men do and to take his place amongst other men, whether he succeeds or fails, the sooner will many of his problems be solved. The first step in this direction is to allow the Indian to handle his money.

As I said at the opening of my remarks, the history of our treatment of the Indians leaves us nothing to be proud of. I abhor the words "pagan Indian", so often applied to the first inhabitants of Canada. There are none of them but have a belief in the hereafter, and it is not too much different from my own. They believe if they treat their fellow man rightly and are good people on this earth they will go to a happy hunting ground.

As the earlier joint committee was told, the Indians were confused because of the different religious denominations. They believed that regardless of what denomination they adhered to, it would be fairer if all the Government schools were public schools and if religion were taught separately in the evenings, on Saturdays and on Sundays. They also pointed out that many of the quarrels that arose on the reservations were caused by differences over the question of schools and churches. I fully expect when the new joint committee is set up it will face these same questions and problems, for which a solution must be found.

That is all I wish to say at the present time.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, the purpose of this motion is, of course, to set up a joint committee that will, I presume, make a general inquiry into the affairs of the Indians of Canada. It was my good fortune, or ill fortune, whichever way you wish to look at it, for a number of years to have the administration of the Indian affairs in Canada under the direction of the department over which I presided for the time being.

The Indian problem is a very difficult one. Here again we have rather tended, I fear, to the concept that money is the main problem in the handling of Indian affairs. Upon looking up the estimates, I find that the total vote in the Department of Citizenship and Immigration for part of the Indian administration is in excess of $41 million. It happened about ten years ago that the administration of Indian affairs was divided between two departments. For some reason, which I am still unable to quite comprehend, the health of Indians was put under the Department of National Health and Welfare. That, in my opinion, was unwise. At any rate, today we have two departments dealing with the problems of our native population.

As I have already stated, the Department of Citizenship and Immigration has a vote in excess of $41 million for Indian affairs. The Department of National Health and Welfare, for the purpose of Indian health, has a vote in excess of $20 million. In other words, through these two departments of Government we propose to spend this year more than $62 million. I believe the honourable senator from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw) gave an estimate of the Indian population at the present time. That question will probably be more accurately determined at the next census, but so far as my knowledge goes the Indian population in Canada is somewhere between 160,000 and 170,000. If honourable senators wish to do a little mental arithmetic, it is not difficult to determine what we are spending per capita on our Indian population through these two departments of Government. I am bound to say that so far there is little evidence that we are getting full value for the money.

I believe we started out in the wrong way in the handling of Indian problems, back perhaps a hundred years ago. The attitude of governments then toward our native inhabitants was something like this: in the process of time the problem would solve itself by extinction of the race. There was evidence to support that attitude in the steady decline of the Indian population for many years. Then a change came about: the various churches became interested in the welfare of the Indians.

Residential schools were established which, I am bound to say, had doubtful results, on the whole. But the sympathy and understanding of the Canadian people were enlisted in support of programs for the betterment of our Indians, and so we had educational programs, health and welfare programs, and food programs to avoid starvation among these primitive people. The natural result of all this is that the downward curve in Indian population has touched the bottom and is now on the up-swing. Our Indian population is increasing, and almost certainly will continue to increase, probably at an accelerated pace.

The problem, then, is how can these people, these native people, be brought to a state of affairs where they can be self-supporting? With the increase in Indian population—which is the result, largely, of the money that is being spent on health and welfare—it is rather difficult to look ahead and envisage a state of affairs when we are not going to be for ever in the position where we will have to steadily increase our votes for Indian affairs.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Could the Indians not gradually be integrated into the rest of the population?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I was coming to that. My honourable friend suggests they could be integrated into the rest of the population. I would think that is a possibility, but not a near possibility at all. For instance, some of the advanced Indians, certainly in eastern Canada, are on the reserve mentioned earlier by the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), I visited that reserve years ago when I had charge of the administration. There are some excellent houses and well-dressed people, but they are still Indians, and many of them are still refusing to take on the status of white men.

I have not looked at the Indian Act for years, but I know that 20 years ago an Indian could cease to be an Indian by a voluntary act in giving up the treaty money, for instance, and becoming a full-fledged citizen with the right to vote. But that did not happen on many of these large Indian reserves.

When one assesses this problem one cannot ignore the background of the Indians. They were nomads. Very rarely did they have any settled habitation before the advent of the white man in America. They carried on their Indian wars with one another. It is proverbial that the Indians in the past had a philosophy of life that led them to the view that sufficient for the day is the evil thereof. There was no, or very little, effort to make provision for the days ahead.

Hon. Mr. Euler: It is that way now.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Because of that fact, very often there was starvation, and disease following starvation. The problem, of course, is how to build up self-reliance in the Indian, and to give him the dignity which is associated with and springs inevitably from the development of self-reliance. That is the task that I think has to be taken in hand. Education is useful, but not all education of Indians is useful; I will say that. It is a subject of vast extent.

I come back to the fact that we are spending over $60 million a year in the administration of our Indian affairs. That is a fact that is of very considerable consequence, and my earnest hope is that this committee may do some useful work.

If I were to make my own observation on the committee, I would say it is far too large. My experience in parliamentary work, going back over a good many years, has led me pretty well to the conclusion that if you want to make a thorough and effective study of a problem you do not have a committee of forty or fifty members, half of whom turn up on one day and not on the next, and, when they come on the third day, want to know what happened the day before. It would be more effective, I am sure, to have a small committee of not more than nine well-selected people—probably seven would be better—who would take an active interest in this subject and give it their thought, attend the meetings regularly and study the problem. This is a type of case where in a multitude of voices there very often is not wisdom.

At any rate, honourable senators, I think the effort in establishing this committee is a worthy one, and I, for one, hope it will produce some very useful results.

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words with respect to the integration of the Indian people into the general population of this country. In Quebec we have experienced that in the old Village des Hurons.

(Translation):

Today, in the Huron village there are practically no more real Hurons. For instance, last year I met a delegation of visitors to Quebec who wanted me to take them where they could see Indians wearing feathers on their heads. These delegates were Frenchmen. I told them it would be rather difficult. We went to the Huron village but we did not manage to identify one true Huron. In that village, located near Quebec, the descendents of the Hurons have established very prosperous industries, such as manufactures of shoes, gloves and similar products. When they are living in proper surroundings, these people are easily integrated into the community. Several of them have married white girls. At college, I had a fellow student named Sioui who has made a name for himself in financial circles; he married a French Canadian, and no one would know that their children are of Indian descent.

One day, speaking before a meeting in Paris, I heard a lady whispering to her neighbour: "Why, that Indian from Canada is speaking French!" I countered with: "The Indians from Canada have mixed with the Indians from Versailles, and this is the result." A large number of these Indians have taken from us the best we had to offer and we have received from them their daring; together we have developed a great country.

JOINT COMMITTEE—COMMONS MEMBERS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, a message has been received from the House of Commons to inform the Senate that Messrs. Badanai, Baldwin, Barrington, Cadieu, Charlton, Dorion, Fairfield, Fraser, Gundlock, Hardie, Henderson, Howard, Korchinski, Leduc, Martel, McQuillan, Michaud, Montgomery, Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria), Murphy, Pickersgill, Robinson, Small and Stefanson have been appointed to act on behalf of the Commons as members of the Joint Committee on Indian Affairs.

CENSUS QUESTIONNAIRE

INQUIRY

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I should like to inquire of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) whether the minister responsible for census-taking in Canada has sanctioned certain questions that it is proposed to put to the Canadian public? Evidently the census-takers will want to know something about the mother's fertility, her marriage age and the number of babies she has had, and not only the wages but all of the earnings of the breadwinner.

According to a recent newspaper report the census-takers will also pose such other new questions as:

> Were you ill or injured yesterday and did this interfere with your work or play?

I hope these questions are not being accepted as official ones, but if they are I want to say they are going very far into the private lives of the citizens of this country. I would advise anybody in my household to slam the door in the face of any person asking such questions.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Who proposes to ask these questions?

Hon. Mr. Reid: The census-takers. My question to the honourable Leader of the Government is this: Does the minister responsible for census-taking support these questions?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I shall inquire into the matter.

Hon. Mr. Reid: This matter was reported authoritatively the other day and I am amazed at the list of questions the census-takers propose to ask householders. They intrude on people's lives. Census-takers will be appointed by members of Parliament and there will be no secrets at all. I would not allow my wife or anybody else in my home to answer such questions.

ATLANTIC CONGRESS

CANADIAN DELEGATION

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if he has been able to have the number of senators on the Canadian delegation to the forthcoming Atlantic Congress increased?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I looked into this question as fully as possible and I found out that this is not a Government matter at all. A voluntary organization called the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association was set up and its membership is open to members of the Senate and House of Commons. It is in no way a Government organization and its own members decided upon the representation from each House of Parliament to the forthcoming Atlantic Congress. The Leader of the Opposition in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) and myself are members of this association and as such we each received a letter from the secretary requesting each of us to name one delegate from this house. I have not been able to alter this arrangement.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: May I inquire who pays the expense incurred by the delegates to this congress in London, England?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators may recall that in the estimates there was a grant to the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association for this purpose. This grant will pay only part of the expenses of the delegates and the remainder will be contributed otherwise.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, apparently I have not had much success in getting the number of Senate members on that delegation increased.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: May I ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) at this point what the practice is by the Commonwealth Parliamentary Group with regard to representation? There are always seven votes in Canada. What proportion goes from the Senate? There are certainly not more than two, and my impression is that it is only one.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I was the only one that went to India.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Yes. I believe the practice has been for only one to be a representative of the Senate, and I think that is entirely unreasonable.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No doubt His Honour the Speaker would have been the representative if Parliament had not been sitting at the time.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: The meeting will be held in Australia this coming fall. Seven delegates going from Parliament for two or three months would mean great cost to the host government.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I say that in 1948 when the Commonwealth Association held a convention in England two senators were present.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I think the practice lately has been to have just one.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

CANADIAN DELEGATION

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, with your permission, may I refer to the forthcoming June meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group? Before doing so I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate both you and the Speaker of the House of Commons on the excellent report you presented to this house Thursday last on the organization meeting of the group, held in Washington on January 9 and 10 last. I have now had an opportunity to read the report carefully and I find it both concise and complete. This report, together with the information we received earlier this session from the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) and the honourable senator from Kamloops (Hon. Mr. Smith), gives this house a clear picture of what took place at the organization meeting. The report discloses that the United States had eight representatives at the meeting and Canada had nine. The United States delegation was composed of four members from the House of Representatives and four from the Senate, whereas the Canadian delegation was made up of six members from the House of Commons and three from the Senate, including His Honour the Speaker. Furthermore, the American delegation contained an equal representation of Republicans and Democrats from both the House of Representatives and the Senate.

Honourable senators, I am raising this point now because I understand from the report that a small steering committee was appointed, which consists of the representatives who attended the first meeting, and that this steering committee will make arrangements for the meeting to be held in June. I also note from the report it is suggested there should be 24 senators from each country at that meeting. My suggestion to His Honour the Speaker and the members of this house who are on that steering committee is that the Senate should enjoy equal representation with the House of Commons at the next meeting. I will go farther and say that the parties should be equally represented in the organization. May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that at the present time in the United States Senate there are 64 Democrats and 34 Republicans, making a total of 98. In the House of Representatives there are 283 Democrats and 153 Republicans, making a total of 436. In each house there is a majority supporting the Democratic party, yet notwithstanding that fact there is equal representation in this organization from both parties. That may appear to be unusual, but to my mind it would be quite consistent with the purpose of the organization, for as the wording of the report says:

> It was understood that neither group would have authority to commit or bind its respective legislatures or government.

Whatever the organization does, therefore, will not be binding upon the Government. I trust that when the delegation is set up, the steering committee will keep in mind what has been done in the United States, and that a similar course will be followed here.

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, April 29, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine for the second reading of Bill C-37, to provide for the appointment of Parliamentary Secretaries to Ministers.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I have very few remarks to make in connection with this bill. It is a House of Commons bill, and provides for the appointment, according to the wording of the bill, of parliamentary secretaries to ministers. The bill was considered very carefully in the other house and met with its approval. Suggestions were made for changing certain provisions, but I think I can say that the principle of the bill received unanimous approval of the other house. I have no intention of opposing the bill in the Senate. If we can suggest changes that we think might be of benefit and of assistance in the administration of affairs in the other house, I think we should put them forward. However, as far as the principle of the bill is concerned, I would hesitate to oppose it.

It was suggested by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) that the appointment of parliamentary secretaries here is similar to the procedure for the appointment of parliamentary secretaries in the United Kingdom, but as the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) stated, that is so in a very limited way. The similarity is probably in name only, yet not altogether in name only, for some of the parliamentary secretaries in the United Kingdom are known as under secretaries. The main difference between parliamentary secretaries in Canada and those in the United Kingdom is that in the latter country they are members of the administration and are appointed for the duration of the time that the Government party is in power. When a new party takes over the reins of office, parliamentary secretaries are appointed at the same time as ministers are appointed, and if an election intervenes, and they are returned, they continue on as parliamentary secretaries. But the appointments under this bill are entirely different. It provides that a parliamentary secretary will be appointed for a period not exceeding twelve months.

I would further point out that in the United Kingdom a parliamentary secretary is a full-time member of Parliament in the same manner in which a minister of the Crown is a full-time member of Parliament. In the United Kingdom, as was pointed out last Thursday, a member of Parliament is paid £1,750 per annum, but a parliamentary secretary receives the sum of £2,500 per annum in addition to his parliamentary indemnity of £750. Honourable senators will see, therefore, that in Britain the duties of a parliamentary secretary are considerably more important than his duties as a member of Parliament. It is the reverse under this bill. Here in Canada a member of Parliament receives $10,000, including his expense allowance, but a parliamentary secretary, instead of receiving a larger additional sum for his office, receives a smaller one: he receives $4,000. The duties of a parliamentary secretary in Canada, therefore, cannot be compared to the duties of a parliamentary secretary in the United Kingdom.

Honourable senators, I wish to refer to a few provisions of this bill. In the first place, the name of the bill is "An Act to provide for the appointment of Parliamentary Secretaries to Ministers. Clause 1 says:

> This act may be cited as the Parliamentary Secretaries Act.

Well, in days gone by we had parliamentary assistants, and I think that term is more in keeping with the duties and responsibilities of those who are to become parliamentary secretaries under this act. The term "parliamentary secretaries", to my mind, is too grandiose altogether, and implies a far more important and responsible position than is contemplated by this bill. I think the Government would have been wise if it had continued the title "parliamentary assistants". However, after consideration the House of Commons decided to change the title and give them this great name of parliamentary secretaries, so they will have the same title as very important members of Parliament in the United Kingdom.

Then I read paragraph 3 of clause 2:

> A parliamentary secretary shall be appointed to hold office for a period not exceeding twelve months—

Under the former arrangement no limit was set to the term of appointment of parliamentary assistants. He certainly did not end his term of office at the end of 12 months. Under that system no separate bill was brought before Parliament, but on the other hand there was an item in the estimates providing for the appointment of parliamentary assistants.

I doubt if it is a good thing to provide for a limited term of appointment. However, I do not think it would do any good for us to press this point, even if most of us agreed with it. The point was pressed in the other house and an amendment was offered, the text of which read something like this:

> A parliamentary assistant shall hold office at the discretion of the Governor in Council and shall cease to hold office when he ceases to be a member of the House of Commons.

I think that that would have been a very good amendment and that it would have improved the bill. However, the members of the House of Commons did not accept it—it was defeated by 103 to 26.

I would also like to refer to clause 3 of the bill, which provides:

> The parliamentary secretary to a minister shall assist the minister in such manner as the minister directs.

There was some objection taken to the word "directs" in this house when the bill was up for consideration last week, and a number of honourable senators thought it put the parliamentary secretary in a very secondary position, as if he were an employee of the minister. Well, I suppose someone has to decide just what the parliamentary secretary's duties are. He is going to have some connection with the department over which the minister presides, and I do not take too much exception to that clause. Perhaps honourable senators would be interested in the provisions under the old system. There was an item in the estimates, from which I will quote in part:

To provide—

That is, to provide money.

—to each . . . parliamentary assistant . . . to assist a minister of the Crown in such manner and to such extent as the minister may determine and to—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What is the difference?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Not a great deal of difference. There are also these words that I feel I should read:

—and to represent his department—

That is, the minister's department.

—in the House of Commons in the absence of the minister therefrom—

Well, I suppose the parliamentary assistant would represent the minister in the other house, but I am sure he did not answer for the minister unless he received directions prior to going into the house as to what to answer.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Isn't that clause a little more restrictive than the one in this bill?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That may be; there was certainly some restriction under the old system. As I say, I think there would have to be some reference to his duties, but whether the words used under the old arrangement were more suitable than the word "directs" I am not prepared to say. Personally, I cannot take too much exception to this clause.

Then I would like to refer to clause 4, which provides for the salary. It is suggested in this house that the salary is not high enough. Well, if the parliamentary secretary is going to be in Ottawa only during the time that Parliament is sitting, probably the salary is high enough, and apparently it is not intended that the parliamentary secretary is to be in Ottawa all the time when the house is not in session. If he were expected to remain here, throughout the year, of course the salary would be entirely inadequate.

What would a member of Parliament have to do if he was to be a full-time parliamentary secretary? He would have to give up his business, probably move his family to Ottawa, set up a home in Ottawa and also keep a home in his constituency, if he hoped to be re-elected—and most of them do hope to be re-elected.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I would say they all do.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I say he could not do all that on the additional $4,000 a year, and if I thought it was the intention of this bill to make the position of parliamentary secretary a 12-month job I would consider the salary altogether inadequate.

It is suggested that most ministers will have a parliamentary secretary. There are many ministers who do not need a parliamentary secretary. I think there are some ministers who can scarcely keep themselves busy, whereas others are completely overburdened, so much so that I do not see how they can possibly do all their work alone. The Minister of Finance, for instance, speaking in the house about a year ago when he brought down his first financial statement, said he was then working 18 hours a day, or 100 hours a week. He is working, probably still working at least that long. I am not a physician, but I do think that no man can keep up that pace very long. I would say that the Minister of Finance requires a parliamentary secretary, perhaps two parliamentary secretaries.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Maybe three.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: As my honourable friend says, he probably requires three full-time parliamentary secretaries, but of course he could not get them under this bill, on this salary.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: If he keeps up those hours he will need a nurse too.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Two full-time parliamentary secretaries and a nurse. There is no provision for that in this bill.

Honourable senators, in the British house —I looked up the record there—I find that at the present time there are five ministers who each have two full-time parliamentary secretaries, and one has three full-time parliamentary secretaries.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Just as a matter of information, would the honourable senator tell me which minister over there has three secretaries?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I always come fully armed to answer questions. My friend will be interested to know that the hard-working member who holds the ministry for Scotland has three full-time under secretaries of state.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): He needs them.

Hon. Mr. Davies: How many for Welsh Affairs?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I will name the under-secretaries to the Minister for Scotland. They are Lord John Hope, M.P., J. Nixon Browne, C.B.E., M.P., and Niall Macpherson, M.P.

I think it has been proven conclusively that some ministers need more parliamentary secretaries than others.

Hon. Mr. Euler: And other ministers do not want them.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Some ministers do not want them, and probably do not need them. I think, for instance, the Prime Minister would probably need two or three parliamentary secretaries. If the Minister of Finance works 18 hours a day, I think the Prime Minister probably works 19 hours. We have it on record that the Minister of Finance does work 18 hours a day, and 100 hours a week. The Prime Minister is a more modest man, but we know they are both very hard-working.

I hope that when parliamentary secretaries are appointed the Government will not necessarily appoint only one to each of the 16 ministers. In some instances it might well appoint two or probably three.

I personally believe that if the Government does not choose to appoint full-time parliamentary secretaries, it would be a good thing to appoint associate ministers, who could assume part of the responsibility of ministers. Honourable senators will recall that not too long ago the Department of National Defence had a full-time minister and an associate minister.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Two associate ministers.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: During the war years there were a Minister of National Defence and two full-time associate ministers.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think the honourable senator from Ottawa West is, as usual, correct. During the war there was the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of National Defence for Air and the Minister of National Defence for Naval Services. There were three ministers in that department. A few years later there was one Minister of National Defence and an associate minister.

If parliamentary secretaries are to be only part-time, why should there not, in the more important ministries, be a minister and an associate minister? That is an idea I am pleased to offer to the Government, and I do not say that the Government always ignores suggestions that come from the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that on Thursday last you tabled the report of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary group, and on the motion of the honourable Leader of the Government, seconded by myself, it was printed in the records of this house on that day. On the very next day the House of Commons, having seen what we did here, followed the same procedure. I hope that house will take note of my suggestion in this instance.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, let me say at once that I have no wild enthusiasm for this bill. In fact, I cannot bring myself to any belief that it is of very great value. It is true that there is a precedent for it. The Government of Mr. Mackenzie King inaugurated—I have forgotten how many years ago—the scheme of parliamentary assistants.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: 1943.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I was no more enthusiastic about it then than I am now.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Have you not mellowed at all?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I think I may be pardoned a personal allusion. Mr. Mackenzie King asked me one day whom I would like to have for my parliamentary assistant. I told him I did not want any parliamentary assistant. He said, "Would not an assistant be of great help to you?" I said: "No; I can't see it that way. I think he would be more in the way than anything else." My reason for saying so was that, after all, in our administration the minister of a department cannot in any way shelve his responsibility onto anyone else; he has to accept that responsibility for administration to parliament and to the country. In the scheme of the administration, the deputy minister is really the administrative head, and the minister, in addition to the many duties he has outside his own department, such as attending Council and Parliament, is mainly concerned with questions of policy.

For the life of me, I cannot see how a parliamentary assistant, such as we are providing for in this legislation, can be of any assistance to a minister in his duties of administration. As far as questions of policy are concerned, the minister has to accept final responsibility for them.

Apparently one of the reasons why it is proposed that this business of parliamentary assistants be established by law—and I will have something more to say on that point in a moment—is that ministers in Great Britain have parliamentary assistants.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: They have secretaries and under-secretaries.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Yes. The under-secretary in Great Britain, I understand, corresponds to our deputy minister.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Perhaps I am wrong. At any rate, the parliamentary secretary has to be a member of Parliament. It is well worth recalling that Britain has not a federal system of government. Consequently, the Parliament at Westminster has to deal with a multitude of matters which in this country are dealt with by provincial legislatures. I can understand that, because of the multiplicity of things, such as education and the administration of law, which come under the central Parliament at Westminster, parliamentary secretaries are useful there.

This bill will no doubt pass, and I have a bit of doubt in my mind how far we should criticize or oppose it. I have some respect for the view expressed by the Leader of the Opposition on that point, but I draw attention to this, that we are providing in the legislation for the appointment of 16 parliamentary secretaries, and for their salaries. Today everyone within the walls of Parliament knows, or at least should know, that our country is facing some grave financial problems. I am still old-fashioned enough to think that there is a great deal of virtue in economy. There is no more responsible duty resting on legislators, than to carefully husband and administer the taxes that the people entrust to their care. The cost of providing 16 parliamentary secretaries will not be limited to $64,000, because each of these parliamentary secretaries will require an office and a clerical staff. However, that objection in this day and generation may not get a great deal of support—I am quite willing to recognize that—nevertheless . . .

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Would the honourable senator mind adjourning the debate to allow the royal assent to be given to some bills?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I will finish in two minutes.

—nevertheless, I maintain that is a valid objection.

The other point, which I think was raised by a speaker the other day when I was not in the chamber, is that this legislation should in some way define the duties of the parliamentary secretary. It states:

> The parliamentary secretary to a minister shall assist the minister in such manner as the minister directs.

That gives very wide latitude to the minister. Suppose a minister says: "Well, you are my parliamentary secretary. You have an extra $4,000 a year, so I will give you something extra to do"—and then sends him out to do some political chore somewhere in the country.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No minister would do that.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: It might be sacrilege to think that a government with such high principles as the present Government would engage in that, but I have known, honourable senators, of governments in the past which would have done that sort of thing.

I do suggest, before I sit down—and I must not interfere with the representative of His Excellency—that the legislation should give some definition of the duties of parliamentary secretaries.

There is one other point. For the life of me I cannot see why, if we are to have these parliamentary secretaries, we should have to renew them every twelve months. I am not of a suspicious mind, honourable senators, but may it be that these jobs are to be passed around, that one group will enjoy the emoluments for one year, and a new group will come in and enjoy them for the next year, and another group after that?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, no; that lets us get rid of the inefficient.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I have great respect for my honourable friend from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) but, honourable senators—and this is my final word—I would like a little more assurance than that which he is able to give.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Robertson, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 9.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

Your committee recommend that they be authorized to print 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their day-to-day proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Emerson: With leave, I move that the report be adopted.

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CHANGE IN MEMBERSHIP OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Turgeon be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Reid on the list of senators appointed to serve on the Joint Committee of both Houses on Indian Affairs; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

BILLS—FIRST READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following bills:

Bill SD-234, an Act for the relief of Marcelle Flore Terreault Wright.

Bill SD-235, an Act for the relief of Daisy Naydia Pretula Link.

Bill SD-236, an Act for the relief of Alexander Hill Forbes.

Bill SD-237, an Act for the relief of Barbara Ann Mary Curran Albrechtson.

Bill SD-238, an Act for the relief of Dorothy Vera Doyle Trudel.

Bill SD-239, an Act for the relief of Mary May Helen McCormick Moran.

Bill SD-240, an Act for the relief of Ethel Marguerite Nimick Hemmings.

Bill SD-241, an Act for the relief of James Donald McAllister.

Bill SD-242, an Act for the relief of Heather Joan Maxwell Firth.

Bill SD-243, an Act for the relief of Suzanne Mary Florence Peyton Young.

Bill SD-244, an Act for the relief of Elizabeth Ann Nelson Bissett.

Bill SD-245, an Act for the relief of Moira Elizabeth Latham Bruce.

Bill SD-246, an Act for the relief of Audrey Edwardeen Scanlan Grayburn.

Bills read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, next sitting.

DOCUMENTS REQUESTED

REPORTS ON COLUMBIA RIVER

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to place before the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) a request, that he be good enough to bring down two reports. One was placed before the House of Commons Committee on External Affairs on Thursday, April 23, and copies were distributed. That is the Engineering Report of the Boundary Commission on the Columbia River. The other is the report of the British Columbia Engineering Company, and I call that the hidden report, because it has been hidden for two years. The people of this country put up $280,000 to the British Columbia Electric Company, under the name of the British Columbia Engineering Company, with the view of taking the water from the Columbia River and diverting it to the Fraser. The report on that is in the hands of General McNaughton. I wonder if the honourable leader would be good enough to get a copy of that. That is the key report so far as British Columbia fisheries are concerned, and for some unkown reason it is being hidden.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: All I can say is that I will see what I can do about it.

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES BILL

REPLY TO QUESTION

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, may I refer to the remarks which I made last evening in this chamber when speaking on Bill C-37, to provide for the appointment of Parliamentary Secretaries to Ministers.

I referred to the fact that the Minister of State (Scottish Office), the Right Honourable Lord Strathclyde, has three full-time under secretaries. The honourable senator from Kingston (Hon. Mr. Davies) asked me how many under secretaries there were for the Minister for Welsh Affairs. I did not hear his question and of course I did not answer it, but I would be pleased to do so now. The Minister for Welsh Affairs does not have a parliamentary secretary.

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the calling of the Order for resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine for the second reading of Bill C-37, to provide for the appointment of Parliamentary Secretaries to Ministers:

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Honourable senators, I would ask that this order, which is in my name, stand.

Hon. Mr. Davies: Honourable senators, may I speak on this motion now?

The Hon. the Speaker: As they say in the United States, will the Honourable Senator Robertson yield to the honourable senator who wishes to speak?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I would be happy to yield to my honourable friend but I would like to have it unanimously agreed to by the house that after he has spoken the debate will stand adjourned in my name.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Debate on the motion was then resumed.

Hon. W. Rupert Davies: Honourable senators, I have no objection to the bill at all. We have had parliamentary assistants for some time and now we are going to pay them under authority of a statute. I have always believed that the labourer is worthy of his hire, and I do not think these parliamentary secretaries will be overpaid, by any manner of means. I am not altogether happy about one section of the bill, to which I shall refer a little later.

Some reference has been made to under secretaries in the United Kingdom and what they are paid. Honourable senators, the system of secretaries, under secretaries and parliamentary assistants in Great Britain is fearful and wonderful, just like the United Kingdom Income Tax laws and regulations, to which I shall refer now. I want to say only two things about those laws and regulations. I am not quite sure whether I am in order or not, and I hope His Honour the Speaker will pardon me if I am not, because what I am going to say has something to do with the $70,000 or $80,000 we are asked to pay for parliamentary secretaries. This money will come out of the pockets of the Canadian taxpayer, and it is the position of the Canadian taxpayer to which I refer. I was very surprised indeed to note that the British Government in its 1959 budget took ninepence off the pound in the income tax, and reduced the tax on cigarettes and beer, this despite the fact that in 1957 the British Government came to the Government of Canada and said that it was hard up and could not pay the $22 million which it owed on the loan of $1¼ billion which we made to Britain in 1946.

The other thing I want to say in connection with that matter is that we have with the United Kingdom as with several other countries, an income tax convention. I remember very well when that tax convention went through this house in 1946. When it was brought before us I protested, but nothing could be done by us, other than to ratify it, for it had already been accepted and signed by the two governments. Honourable senators, I am going to suggest that if that income tax convention which we passed in 1946 is ever revised in any way it should come before Parliament and be discussed, because there are clauses in it which are beyond belief. There is altogether too much in the convention which is regulated by what they decide over there, not by what we think is the agreement between Canada and Great Britain.

Coming back to Bill 37, I have no objection to it, but I do not like section 5, which provides for the travelling and other expenses of a parliamentary secretary:

> (a) incurred by him in the discharge of his duties during a session of Parliament when away from Ottawa, or
> (b) incurred by him in the discharge of his duties while away from his ordinary place of business during a period when Parliament is not in session.

I do not know what particular duties a parliamentary secretary would have when Parliament is not in session. However, I hope that appropriate regulations will be made by the Governor in Council and that the accounts will be very carefully scrutinized.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Don't they have to make political speeches?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That was only done under the previous Government.

Hon. Mr. Davies: There has been some reference to parliamentary under secretaries in Britain. When I was over there in March I had the pleasure of dining with the parliamentary assistant to one of the ministers.

After we had dined he said, "I will take you along to the House of Commons".

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Is he called an assistant?

Hon. Mr. Davies: He is an assistant.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Or an under secretary?

Hon. Mr. Davies: He is an unpaid assistant. I will come to that. He took us along to the House of Commons, and to his great amazement the place was like a morgue; it was closed up. They are very careful over there. However, we went in. Then he said he would take us down to his office. We found ourselves in a corridor; it was quite dark and he switched on a light, turned on another light, and eventually found the office. I felt like Guy Fawkes. Now, this young man is a parliamentary assistant to one of the ministers. He is not an under secretary or a secretary to an under secretary, but he was very happy about the appointment because it meant he got an office of his own. None of the ordinary members of Parliament have offices. They sit around the halls and dictate their letters wherever they can. But this man, because he is a parliamentary assistant, has an office. I have a very fine single office on the main floor of our Parliament Building. His office is about half the size of mine, furnished with an old desk and chairs which I would not have at all. However, he is very pleased to have it. But remember that he does not receive any salary as a parliamentary assistant, and he pays for his own postage, as well as £2 a month for the parliamentary stationery which he uses. However, he was very happy about it all. As a parliamentary assistant he is given a railway pass, as all members of Parliament are. This enables him to travel free from London to his constituency and back, but nowhere else. The Leader of the Liberal Party in Britain told me that one time when he was coming up to his constituency from London he made a mistake and got off at a station in Shropshire. He motored from there to his home, and received a letter about it from the man in Parliament who is in charge of these passes, each of which is issued to a member of Parliament for a specific trip only.

The United Kingdom Parliament pays good salaries for a country which cannot afford to pay a $22 million debt when it becomes due. The Prime Minister receives £10,000 a year, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer receives £5,000. The Leader of the Opposition gets £3,000. For the last couple of years the ordinary member of Parliament has been receiving £1,750 a year, which is roughly $5,000 a year. That is liable to income tax, although a member can make some application for deductions for genuine parliamentary expenses. Members of the House of Lords, of course, get no salaries but they are paid three guineas a day expenses for every day they put in an attendance.

The reason why there are so many parliamentary under secretaries over there is that there are always a lot of Government members who sit in the House of Lords and have no say in the House of Commons. There are 17 members in the cabinet, four of whom are in the House of Lords. I have been wondering, as I read this bill C-37, whether it might be in the back of the mind of the Prime Minister that he is going to appoint some ministers from the Senate. If he does I think it would be a very good thing indeed.

There are 17 ministers in the United Kingdom cabinet, and there are other ministers of cabinet rank to the number of 14. Four of those 14 sit in the House of Lords and cannot answer questions in the House of Commons. There are 29 other ministers and parliamentary under secretaries, two of whom are in the House of Lords.

It was very kind of the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) to answer my question this afternoon, but I do not know whether his information is quite correct or not. I was very glad to see, when I was looking up the information, that the Under Secretary for Wales, Morgan Jones, is paid £3,400 a year, and the salary of his assistant, whose name is Davies, is £1,845. So the Welsh do get something out of it.

Honourable senators, you will be interested to know that since the time of Sir Robert Walpole there have been 43 Prime Ministers in the British House of Commons, 18 of whom sat in the House of Lords. I remember well hearing about the resignation of Gladstone, when I was a bit of a boy in Wales. It was talked about in our house. He resigned at the age of 84 and his place was taken by Lord Rosebery, who held it for less than a year, and then he too resigned. He was succeeded by the Marquis of Salisbury, the last Prime Minister who sat in the House of Lords.

I travel around a good deal, and perhaps the Senate will pardon me if I relate two personal incidents which struck me as humorous. Recently I was in London, visiting an old friend of my mother, who is 101 years old. She said to me, "I remember you very well as a little boy, standing on the street in your kilts." Incidentally, my mother was a Robertson, so I had to wear the kilt. And let me say, to wear the kilt at a Welsh boys' school does not make life easy, but it does teach one how to fight. This old lady went on to say that she remembered seeing me standing on the street watching the soldiers coming back from the Crimean war. Well, they came back from the Crimean war in 1852, and my mother was born in 1854. So, she was a little out in her recollections.

I had a much more pleasant experience on a market day in our little Welsh town, when I encountered a drover who exchanged the time of day and a few other pleasantries. "It is a pity we did not meet earlier" he said; "we could have gone into partnership and made a lot of money." I said, "Yes, perhaps we could have." He said, "You know, we are about the same age." I inquired how old he was, and he said he was 67. Well, honourable senators, I threw out my chest and tried to look as much like 67 as possible, and then I grasped him by the hand and bid him good day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Adjournment of the debate on this motion will still stand in the name of the Honourable Senator Robertson.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, April 30, the adjourned debate on the resolution of Hon. Mr. Isnor:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Government, through the Department of Transport, or any other agency or means, bring about a greater degree of use of the Atlantic ports.

With this in mind it is urged that "open" and "closed" periods be agreed upon, and that the ports of the St. Lawrence be considered "closed" ports from November 15 until April 15, and "open" ports as from April 16 to November 14 of each and every year until such times as this arrangement is revoked.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Honourable senators, on this order, which stands in my name, I yield to the honourable senator from St. John's West (Honourable Mr. Pratt).

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, I am glad of the opportunity to speak on this resolution relating to the use of Atlantic ports and which has particular application to the operation of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

The St. Lawrence Seaway is a great national undertaking. The honourable senators from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) and Halifax North (Hon. Mr. Connolly), the mover and seconder of the resolution have, I am sure, no thought whatever of discrediting the long-range view of the need for such a service in the development of Canada. I have no hesitation in saying that to curb its usefulness, as proposed in the resolution, by the fixing of arbitrary dates for the opening and closing of the St. Lawrence ports, is something I could not support.

The general implication of the motion before us is, I feel, to have a close appraisal of the seaway's operation in relation to established services of Halifax, Nova Scotia, and Saint John, New Brunswick, and also to appraise its usefulness in relation to development of other services and resources of the dominion.

I agree entirely with the suggestion of the honourable senator from Halifax North that a select committee of the Senate engage in a continuing study to determine the impact of the St. Lawrence Seaway upon the Atlantic ports. The terms of reference of that committee, if set up, should include consideration of auxiliary transportation services, which would encourage industrial promotion from time to time in areas affected by the seaway.

I see no reason whatever why a great movement for the economic advancement of Canada should have a retarding effect on any port. One port will advance more than another port, it is true—that will always happen—but what is good for the whole should be good for all ports, provided a properly balanced outlook is maintained for over-all helpfulness.

As a newcomer to Canada, having only ten years of citizenship, I have seen far less general understanding and appreciation of the problems of various provincial sections of Canada than I had expected. In the days before the Union we Newfoundlanders were on the outside of Canada looking in. Our economy was tied in with England, the United States and foreign countries far more than with Canada. During the past ten years we have been looking around on the inside, and very much so, but so far Canadians generally are looking in at us too much from the outside.

In some respects, and from the point of view of citizens generally, that may be natural. We are on an island off to the east, and so little known that it is going to take quite some time before the people of the rest of Canada are well acquainted with us and know our needs.

Don't misunderstand me. From the point of view of citizen relationship there is definitely a kindliness, even though there is not much understanding. On that score I am not complaining. What I do feel, however, is that it is high time for a correction of Government policy, and particularly of Government administration, so that Newfoundland will be no longer regarded as a province having ninety years' relationship with the others. Its particular needs for adaptation to a place in a balanced Canadian economy are not being met and, indeed, are not understood. I can assure you, honourable senators, there is no partisan significance in that remark. For the ten years since the Union official understanding has been coming along in a deplorably slow manner. The unawareness of Newfoundland's particular circumstances, and even of the contractual and moral obligations to Newfoundland, has been outstandingly evident in recent months.

While speaking on the motion before us, I know it is not appropriate for me to dwell on the undue delay in the implementation of the provisions of the Terms of Union which is so obvious to us all, but I hope there may be an opportunity to say more on that issue very soon.

The subject before us for consideration at this time is tied in with the needs of transportation and transportation facilities, and with the St. Lawrence Seaway in particular.

The honourable senators who spoke on the motion stressed the importance of the eastern ports in national defence. That is unquestionably a valid argument for adequate maintenance and development of those ports. Apart from that, such use creates social and economic responsibilities which continue and must be met. It is quite true, as the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth said, the city of Halifax has suffered from devastating calamities such as have not been experienced by any other city of Canada. From those sad experiences came a rebuilding and a gearing up of shipyards and other services for future use, which cannot be overlooked.

From the point of view of national defence, I am sure we all agree with his citation from the Turgeon report which, quite properly, stressed the importance of the eastern ports. It was recommended in that report that consideration be given them on a national, rather than a provincial basis. That is entirely proper and logical. With Newfoundland now a province, such a recommendation has a very special significance to Newfoundland seaports, and certainly to its airports. As a matter of fact, with the American participation, no part of Canada, and, in fact, no part of the continent, has a more vital relationship to defence than the Island of Newfoundland and Labrador.

On last Sunday the Battle of the Atlantic was commemorated throughout Canada. Newfoundland was a focal point in that phase of the war. Lord Beaverbrook called the Battle of the Atlantic "The Battle of Newfoundland". I quote his words:

> Without Newfoundland as a base for both air and naval operations, it would have been impossible for the Allies to have won the Battle of the Atlantic, which was a determining factor in the world war.

I quite agree with the point made that to keep facilities in preparation for the greatest usefulness in times of war emergency there must be maintenance and development in times of peace. Such development must be thought out and planned so that it will naturally encourage trade and industry, and also give employment of a permanent character.

There are some specific considerations in that connection, particularly applicable to Newfoundland, that would make very important subjects for examination by such a committee as proposed by the honourable senator from Halifax-North.

I would mention first a proposal which has for a long time been in the public eye but never has been officially studied by Government. I refer to a possible free port development in Newfoundland. We all realize the St. Lawrence Seaway would never have been undertaken if there had not been an official investigation of its utility and cost. I think there is a very definite requirement for a thorough survey into the possibilities of further facilitating the overseas trade, not only of Canada but of the North American continent. Linked in with that should be an examination of the usefulness of a free port on the Atlantic Ocean.

For many years two ports on the south coast of Newfoundland have been talked of and written about as having great advantage for that purpose. One is Mortier Bay and the other Bay D'Espoir. These are both ice-free ports—ice-free all the year—located on the south coast of Newfoundland, and, of course, they lie on a direct course out of the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the ocean. Those ports are in the direct line of overseas traffic. That area is closer to South America by several hundreds of miles than is New York, and closer to Brazil than is New Orleans, which is a great American centre of traffic from the United States to South American.

Well-developed facilities in such a port might attract tremendous traffic through the Great Lakes from the ports of the United States. Those facilities could provide scheduled transportation for overseas traffic when the upper reaches of the St. Lawrence Seaway will always be closed by winter conditions. While, as has been pointed out, Halifax is very important, as it handles about 4 million tons of freight a year, there are more than 20 harbours on the American side of the Great Lakes handling over 3 million tons a year each. Duluth alone, which is one of the chief ports of the United States, handles 60 million tons a year. Any substantial diversion of American traffic through such a port in Canadian territory would have a tremendous advantage to Canada.

We have undertaken a tremendous project in the St. Lawrence Seaway in close relationship with the United States, and I think there is every reason for a very close and joint investigation into the mutual use of a modern seaport on the south coast of Newfoundland. This would be complementary to the joint services provided by the seaway in the open period of navigation.

I might say that the use of free ports is increasing in international trade. As we know, there are some in the United States, and now the Bahamas, I understand, are setting up a very big operation in that respect. A well-known free port is Hamburg, Germany. In the Netherlands there is one. Panama is receiving great advantage from that policy. By setting up a free port in Newfoundland we would be following an approved pattern in international trade and to a great extent overcoming the effect of winter closure of freight from the interior. It is certainly time for a thorough investigation into such an operation.

While traffic as now existing in Newfoundland would not be a determining factor in a decision for such a promotion, nevertheless there are developments in Newfoundland that could add greatly to such a port and also assist tremendously in establishing more stability in Newfoundland's industrial economy.

We have right now important mineral operations involving lead, zinc, fluorspar and copper, and other developments, which could be connected by a comparatively short railway line to the south coast of Newfoundland. Also, a more important consideration would be the use of such a port for the products of Labrador. There is no question that the great resources of Labrador will one day be of outstanding importance in the economy of Canada. The iron ore development in the interior has already made a great start in that direction. What is needed to encourage the greatest progress is a strategic distribution centre during the long period when the coast is closed to shipping.

In addition to all that, there is in the Bay D'Espoir area a proven hydro-electric potential of 350,000 horsepower, which could be brought in to support developing industry.

While on the subject before us, which is related to transportation, I would like to say a word concerning the need for more consideration being given to the railway freight rates as applicable to the Maritime provinces and, particularly, to Newfoundland. Nothing retards progress so much as isolation. The greatest cause of isolation of one community or section of the country from another is the application of high transportation costs. As we all know, the principle of sharing transportation facilities and costs on a national basis was an outstanding consideration when Confederation of Canada came into effect in 1867. Railway service was to be inaugurated and supported as a public service to equalize opportunities of the eastern and central provinces. That principle, both legally and morally stands, but its application has been thoroughly rejected. Freight rates between the Maritime provinces and central Canada have increased 154 per cent during the past 11 years, the last increase being 17 per cent, effective as of last December. While in itself that percentage is striking and very significant, it only indicates part of the handicaps to the province of Newfoundland, which is at the end of the line. There is something terribly wrong in such a horizontal increase. As an example, in 1956 there was an 11 per cent increase in freight rates. I saw it worked out in a document that that increase from Toronto to Montreal, on the basis of the established freight rate, amounted to only 8 cents per 100 pounds, while from Toronto to St. John's, Newfoundland, the increase amounted to 44 cents per 100 pounds. The disparity in the application of increases continues in ever greater ratio as the increases are applied.

Newfoundland now gets most of her imported goods from the other provinces of Canada rather than from outside countries, and because of this almost complete switch in the source of her purchases, the urgency is all the greater for a constant review of the changing conditions applying to her economy. I shall not take your time just now to go into the details of this, but Newfoundland, being a province with the minimum of local manufacture, is extremely vulnerable in the matter of commodity cost factors. I noticed recently a statement by an economist who estimated that the tariffs for the protection of Canadian industry cost Canadian consumers a billion dollars a year. If that figure is approximately correct, and making due allowance for the much lower per capita spending power within Newfoundland than within the rest of Canada, a reasonable estimate of the cost of these tariffs to Newfoundland consumers runs anywhere from $16 million to $20 million a year. Our local difficulties are very apparent when we add to the tariff costs the constantly increasing freight rates which are becoming particularly retarding to the economy of Newfoundland, which, as I have said, is at the end of the line as far as Canadian transportation is concerned.

I am in entire accord with the principle advanced by the two honourable senators who have spoken to this motion, that an overall traffic development policy is of national importance but should be closely reviewed in the light of provincial circumstances and needs. I feel that an outstanding government function is to see there are facilities for expediting transportation by the most economical services, and also that the greatest possible encouragement is given to maintenance of strong competitive and efficient services. It must always be remembered that within the sphere of transportation promotions and improvements the most essential consideration is that of economically servicing industry, which provides the basis of our economy.

This country unquestionably requires, I repeat, constant reviews and long-range planning for its needs in the field of transportation. The gross national product of Canada, as anticipated by the Gordon Report, will in 25 years be three times what it was in 1955. The per capita earnings are expected to rise from $1,714 to $2,859. The labour force is expected to increase by 4 million by that time.

Because of the tremendous areas of Canada and the regional variations in stages of development of resources, it is most urgent that properly balanced transportation facilities between one part of the country and another be under constant review by the Government. Such a policy is necessary in a positive approach to an equalizing of opportunity and a strengthening of the overall economy.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, habit plays such a strong part in one's make-up that I have always instinctively moved to support anything proposed by the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) or the honourable senator from Halifax North (Hon. Mr. Connolly). My association with these two honourable gentlemen has been very long. The honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth and I entered public life over 30 years ago in the Nova Scotia Legislature. I sat at his feet in all matters of political wisdom but I never acquired one-tenth of what he possessed. The honourable gentleman from Halifax North is relatively a newcomer. He came on the scene later, but I am bound to confess that once he got his foot in the political door he made up for lost time, since prior to his appointment to the Senate he occupied the high and exalted position of Premier of Nova Scotia.

But though I have always instinctively moved to support these two gentlemen, I am bound to say that I cannot do so in this case. It is not that I am opposed to bringing about a greater degree of use of the Atlantic ports, which is what is sought in the first paragraph of the resolution. But I think the resolution advocates protection of the worst type, and I hate any kind of protectionism. I must confess I have lived with it for a long time, and no doubt I shall live with it a lot longer, but I have an increasing dislike for it each year. I will admit that perhaps it is natural enough to depend constantly upon subventions and subsidies and every device known to modern science to bring about a degree of economic development in the Maritime provinces in general, and in Nova Scotia in particular, but I do not like these things. I do not say I oppose them, but it goes against my grain to support them. Since I have been in public life I have always held that view and I shall always do so. I used to despair of anything happening that might change it, but now I think there is a possibility. I think the tide of world events is going to bring it about.

I recall the many, many conversations the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth and I have had on the subject. He always held the view of a hard-headed businessman. Well, he would say, this theory is all right, but in the meantime people have to live. The result of it all was that the honourable senator was closer to the public than I ever thought of being, and I know that if we presented ourselves to the convention for nomination he would beat me hands down. Nevertheless, my instinct was that as far as the province of Nova Scotia was concerned, as well as the other Maritime provinces, our basic position was changed the day that Canada embarked upon a policy of protection that put the Maritime provinces on the circumference. The time is coming, and I will argue it when I present the resolution of which I gave notice yesterday, that, strange to say, for the first time in my public life the interests of the province I represent and those of the great section in the middle of Canada are going to run parallel. That will be a happy day for us.

I am instinctively against any kind of subventions and subsidies. I suppose that is on account of my upbringing. I was brought up in the household of my paternal grandfather, who was opposed to Confederation, because he feared it would kill our waterborne commerce. My maternal grandfather came from Edinburgh and started out in a little town in Nova Scotia about the year 1840. He was without money, for his profession as a school teacher provided him with only £40 a year. Within fifteen years he had ships going all around the world, without the help of subsidies or assistance of any kind. That was because our maritime position was our greatest asset, and was free for those to use who had ambition and energy. But that disappeared. As my honourable friend from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) once said in a most notable speech, "It took the breath of the sea out of our nostrils". Therefore I take an entirely different view from that of the sponsors of the resolution. I want our waterborne commerce markets opened to use. I thought I might never see it, but now I am beginning to have hope.

On the question of this resolution, I understand it contemplates for us some action being taken by some person in authority that would, so to speak, chop a week or so off one end of the St. Lawrence Seaway season, and a week or so off the other end of the season, in the hope that as a result an additional number of ships would use the port of Halifax and the port of Saint John, which would derive additional revenues therefrom. I suppose that must be the intention; I do not know what else it could be.

Honourable senators, I do not like it in principle. I feel bound to say that because of the long and traditional relations of friendship between the province of Quebec and the Maritimes, it goes particularly against my grain to do anything to injure that province, even though it might be for the benefit of Nova Scotia. If I had to take from anybody, I would prefer to take from Upper Canada rather than Lower Canada.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Oh, no!

Hon. Mr. Roberston: For instance, I would perhaps get to the point that if it had to be done I would rather take this business from the honourable senators from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden), or Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll), or Toronto (Hon. Mr. Campbell) than from my seatmate (Hon. Mr. Power) and the honourable senator from Kennebec (Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt). However, perhaps I had better stand to my principles and draw no distinction.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It is safer.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: My hopes, therefore, are that at some time the interests of the central part of Canada in matters of fiscal policy will run parallel with those of the Maritime provinces. I am confident that the present Government is willing, as the Government which preceded it was, to do everything possible to assist in the way of subventions or subsidies, or ex gratia payments, or the giving of more money to provincial governments, and so on; but as things stand today, if Nova Scotia attempted to get anywhere industrially it would have an almost impossible task. I know there are some hard-working, conscientious people who are begging and cajoling industry—and with some success—to establish in the Maritime provinces. Whether their efforts will continue indefinitely remains to be seen. However, the simple fact is that year after year there is a steady exodus of industry from the Maritimes. Despite the fact that employees of the steel industry in Nova Scotia have for years taken a lower scale of wages than the Steel Company of Canada pays, DOSCO is calling for tenders for a $80 million steel mill in the valley of the St. Lawrence, and attempts are made to set us in the Maritimes at ease by telling us that it will not hurt us. Honourable senators, I am saying this, that if we were part of an economic union with about 500 million people comprising the NATO partners in the Western world, which circumstances seem to be forcing us into, the province of Nova Scotia would be in a most eminently desirable position. It would be right in the centre of that whole trading area, and it would have waterborne markets. My idea would be not to close the St. Lawrence, but to keep it open as long as possible, for the reason that it would provide access to other markets open for our waterborne commerce. By a curious coincidence, last night when I arrived home, after the Senate rose, I turned on television. Mr. Hees, the Minister of Transport was being interviewed by newspapermen, and he was making an exceedingly good job of it; he was very cool and collected. Just at the point at which I turned my television set on, the newspapermen must have been questioning him as to the likelihood of improved scientific methods making it possible to keep the St. Lawrence Seaway open all the year round.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): That is right.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Mr. Hees was very cagey. He stated, in words to this effect: "Even if that is so, and I doubt it, I would not spearhead any campaign to take away from the Maritime provinces the business that comes to them at a time when the St. Lawrence is closed to shipping." The newspapermen were pressing him on that point. They said, "Well, if it is good for seven months of the year, why isn't it good for all the year, even for the Maritime provinces, and anywhere else?"

He stood his ground on that one and said it may be, but again he said he would not spearhead such a campaign.

Now, as far as I am concerned, with my vision of the future development of all parts of Canada, I would like to see the St. Lawrence waterway kept open as long as possible, because it is necessary to have waterborne carriers to take our goods to the markets of the world.

I have always felt, and we in Nova Scotia have always felt, that reciprocity with the United States would be of very great assistance, but I would take the view that I would want reciprocity with all other markets in order that the real potential of our position industrially could have the greatest advantage. Actually that is the trend of world opinion at the present moment.

I am bound to say that despite the great eloquence of my honourable friends from Halifax, Senator Isnor and Senator Connolly, I must disagree with them a little, not on facts but on the degree of emphasis. You have to remember this, that they were two of the most outstanding and active representatives that the city of Halifax ever had. It is fortunate for my honourable friends opposite that both are in the Senate now and do not have to stand for office, because they were dangerous men in an election. But the fact remains that not everybody in Nova Scotia thinks that Halifax is the sum and substance of Nova Scotia. Similarly, I have no doubt that, convinced though the senators from Saint John may be that that city is the sum and substance of the province of New Brunswick, others in the province would not agree.

I may say that I exclude Senator Quinn, who comes from Bedford, and myself, who lived about ten miles outside of Halifax, from those contaminated with the Halifax viewpoint. I represent Shelburne, which is in the western part of Nova Scotia.

I would like to make a brief quotation from the aspect of my honourable friend from Halifax North (Hon. Mr. Connolly):

> Let me say that in the city of Halifax, the capital of Nova Scotia, upon which rural Nova Scotia largely depends, there are two great factors in our economy: first, defence expenditures, that is, actual expenditures for supplies and defence purposes; and secondly, the port of Halifax. If by some mischance the revenues of the port of Halifax should seriously deteriorate, and if in association with that situation we should reach an era of normalcy under which defence expenditures were drastically cut, I say to you, with every bit of seriousness and vehemence that I can summon up, that Halifax and Nova Scotia would be in a pitiful condition.

Now, honourable senators, I would be the first to admit and to take pleasure in the fact that Halifax is prosperous, but I do not subscribe to the opinion that the rest of the province would be in the extreme condition that my friend has pointed out, if there was some cessation of activity in Halifax. There are other very basic and prosperous industries in Nova Scotia than my friend indicated. One is the fisheries industry, which I suspect is more concerned with whether or not the American Congress decided to put an embargo on some types of our fish than with the question of some additional shipping going through the port of Halifax. Fishing is a basic industry with us.

We also have a prosperous forest products industry. Senator Smith comes from the town of Liverpool, and in that locality is situated the most prosperous forest products industry. While I admit the progress and development in Halifax in recent years has been nothing more than fantastic, yet the town of Truro, where I live, has a very stable industry operated by the famous firm of Stanfields, which ships its products everywhere in Canada. Its employees, I am told, make a considerable contribution, like the steel workers in Sydney in that they accept lower wages than are paid elsewhere in Canada, thereby making it possible for the firm to carry on successfully.

So I think we should take with a grain of salt the natural exuberance and enthusiasm of my honourable friends in relation to Halifax. I am glad to see it prosperous too, but, as I have said, I represent the county of Shelburne, in western Nova Scotia, whose chief business is the fishing business. That is the main activity of the people there, and only very remotely are they affected by the prosperity of Halifax.

To a certain extent my honourable friends have put the cart before the horse. However, I feel their motion may have served its purpose, because if the prosperity of Halifax is tied in a large measure to armament expenditures and shipping, it is on a weak foundation. I see no reason why shipping could not continue, but I am not so sure about armament expenditures. I think there is a higher target than that for Nova Scotia to aim at, and I will explain what I mean next week. In the meantime I hope my honourable friends, having drawn attention to the concern that exists in Nova Scotia with regard to the port of Halifax, will not feel it necessary to press the resolution.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, this motion proposed by our colleague from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) can fairly be described as a rather unique one.

I cannot recall in my experience of the doings of Parliament a motion of a similar character to this, wherein it is proposed that in the interests of the city of Halifax, if not in the general public interest, the port of Montreal should automatically be closed on the 15th of November in each year.

I am bound to say I cannot agree with my honourable friend from Halifax-Dartmouth. I shall take only a few moments, I trust, and certainly shall endeavour to keep within the ambit of this motion.

As the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) has said, what is proposed in the motion is clearly a protective device. In my young manhood days, when protection was a subject of very considerable discussion, one instantly thought of tariff protection, of duties levied against foreign goods to make it more difficult for them to enter the country. But our honourable colleague goes a little bit further than that and proposes that from the 15th November every year the port of Montreal shall be closed. He gave some reasons, one being the expense of keeping the St. Lawrence open through the use of ice-breakers that the federal Government has to provide. But even if this resolution carried and the Government acted on it, the ice-breakers would still be required. I am informed that a very substantial part of the work of the ice-breakers is done in the Maritime provinces.

From the western point of view—and having, as I do, my abode in that favoured part of the dominion, I would naturally be expected to say a word in its behalf—this proposal, if adopted, would have a definite impact on the costs of transporting grain to the markets of the world. I do not think that can be denied. Over the past ten years, the average closing date for the port of Montreal —that is the date when the last ocean-going ship goes out—has been December 15. My honourable friend's proposal would close that port for the shipment of grain overseas for an additional 30 days at least, and that at a time when the movement is particularly heavy. Such a change would have considerable effect, as the cost of shipping grain from Montreal to Halifax is approximately 23½ cents a hundred pounds, or 14 1/10th cents per bushel of wheat. That is, the western producer pays the freight charges on moving his wheat to Montreal, and if it goes through Halifax in the winter months he pays an additional 14 cents a bushel. Halifax benefits somewhat from it. And if my honourable friend's suggestion were carried out, the western producer would be deprived for a full 30 days of the opportunity to ship out of the St. Lawrence.

There was a time, as some of my colleagues know, when I was active in the grain business, and I can recall frequent occasions when the cost of chartered freight on wheat from Montreal to Liverpool was less than 14 cents a bushel. I think probably on the whole it was very rarely above that figure.

My honourable friend's suggestion would mean that for 30 days there would be an additional tax on the grain moving out of Canada. But there is another reason that I bring to the attention of the house, and this, may I suggest, is one that may appeal to the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor), and the honourable senator from Halifax North (Hon. Mr. Connolly), who by the way, made a rather qualified address on this motion.

Recently the federal Government, in its wisdom—or lack of wisdom, whichever you like—increased the subsidy on Nova Scotia coal moving up the St. Lawrence. As everyone knows, the main market for coal that comes up the St. Lawrence is Montreal island.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: And the city of Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: The total tonnage of coal moved in 1958 to the St. Lawrence River ports —Montreal being to a great extent the largest —was 1,800,000 tons, a sizeable market for Nova Scotia coal moving up the St. Lawrence.

I suggest to my honourable friend that if the Montreal port were closed on November 15, as suggested in his resolution, he would deprive producers of coal in the province of Nova Scotia of a substantial market. My honourable friend shakes his head. But otherwise, if the total volume of coal was to be marketed in the St. Lawrence River port it would have to come into Montreal before November 15. Now, the longer the period between the time coal is received and the time it is consumed, the greater the cost, and that would make it more difficult for Nova Scotia coal to compete with coal that came down the lakes rather than up the St. Lawrence.

Make no mistake. I assure my friend that, if his proposal were adopted, coal would move down the lakes and be stored in Montreal up to the close of navigation there. So I think it a reasonable suggestion to my honourable friend, and I am sure he will take it into full account, that this proposal might stand a little closer examination than we customarily give a matter in a debate in the Senate.

Everyone is sympathetic—certainly I am—to the development of all parts of Canada. There is no doubt that the physical configuration of our country imposes very substantial disabilities in that respect. There is no gainsaying the fact that the central provinces of Ontario and Quebec enjoy a greatly privileged position in the economy of the country, as against the more outlying parts. That I think can be and is accepted without question. But the solution of the problems of the provinces distant from the centre is not, I am convinced, to be found in more protection or in tying down trade. Rather, it lies in the other direction, that of expanding our trade as widely as possible, not only within our own borders but in the much wider world outside.

Hon. L. M. Gouin: Honourable senators, I believe in my native city of Montreal, I believe in my province, and I believe in our country as a whole. I have often said, and I want to say it once more, that our Canadian patriotism should be as broad as the continent; that it should extend from sea to sea and from our southern border to our northern frontier. No country in the world now has a greater future before it than Canada. Our development has taken place more rapidly than we would ever have dreamed of some twenty years ago. However, Canada is a northern country and our long and severe winters create some serious problems. But the winters did not daunt the earlier settlers, in spite of all the hardships endured by Jacques Cartier, Champlain, LaVerendrye, and all their followers. They had plenty of courage and initiative, and they adapted themselves to the rigours of our climate.

I believe in progress, and I consider that it would be unwise, even useless to resist progress. In doing so I would be condemned to a humiliating defeat. For me, true liberalism means faith in progress. So I find it strange that we have before us a motion to set back the hands of the clock of our national growth, to close during five months every year the ports of the St. Lawrence.

Nature, it is true, prevents shipping from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic for about four months every year, but this is not enough for my honourable friend from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor), who wants, I assume, to close even the port of Quebec from November 15 to April 15 every year.

Since we have had steam navigation there has always been a ferry operating between Quebec and Levis, and during the last two years I understand we had winter shipping from Quebec City and from Murray Bay to the north shore of the lower St. Lawrence. It seems to me that every good Canadian should rejoice at that conquest of nature by our fellow countrymen.

The motion now before us results, I understand, from the expenses which were incurred in December of 1958 and in January of this year in freeing some ice-jammed ships from the Great Lakes which were blocked at Montreal.

By the way, we Montrealers do not expect to receive much profit from such ships which come from the Great Lakes and pass through our port on their way to the ocean. We are faced, moreover, with a great change brought about by the seaway. The St. Lawrence is bound to be one of the greatest trade routes of the world, but Montreal will cease, to a great extent, to be an ocean terminal port. We know, however, that Canada neither begins nor ends at Montreal, and we realize that our metropolis is the gateway to Ontario and to the Great Lakes. The opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway is thus for us a source of rejoicing, because now ocean-going ships of up to 15,000 tons will be able to go to the heart of the continent.

I might mention also that we have to use ice-breakers to prevent floods between Cap Rouge, near Quebec City, away up to Montreal. Otherwise, every year a great part of the country there would be flooded. But that question of the prevention of floods is raised only indirectly by the motion now before us, and I do not think it is necessary for me to discuss it.

All I want to say further is that with our present rate of national development there is room enough, in my opinion, for Halifax, for Saint John, New Brunswick, for St. John's, Newfoundland, for Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Fort William, and so on. We must realize that if our country is to fulfil her mission we must all try to help one another. It would be a great error to take the attitude that the progress of Toronto is opposed to the survival of Halifax or Montreal.

In the case of Halifax, you have the great privilege of finding there an all-year-round harbour. I admit that the Maritime provinces have serious problems to face. There is the question of freight rates, and the difficulties arising out of our tariff. I do not want to give the impression that I myself profess the creed of free trade, but at all events I want justice for the Maritimes, I want justice for our central provinces, I want justice for the Prairies, and I want justice also for our great province on the Pacific coast. A deep and true solidarity must exist and grow between all the various regions of this immense land of ours, and I can say that I am at home myself anywhere in the 3,500,000 square miles which represent this Canada of ours. I want Canadians of every part of that great territory to receive a full measure of fair play, to be given equal opportunity, and to have their share of prosperity and progress.

Honourable senators, I am in favour of opening ports and of opening new lands, not of closing them.

Hon. Felix P. Quinn: Honourable senators, I promise you I am not going to make a long speech. Even if I wished to do so I could not because I am suffering from a throat ailment. But, I cannot help telling my colleagues in the Senate that the resolution of the honourable gentleman from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) has my hearty approval, especially the first part of it, which I do not believe any honourable member of the Senate will disagree with or oppose. It reads:

> That it is expedient that the Government, through the Department of Transport, or any other agency or means, bring about a greater degree of use of the Atlantic ports.

I think if a vote were taken that would carry unanimously.

But in regard to the second part of the resolution I am afraid my honourable friend would have a lot of difficulty. That can be determined by the expressions of opinion which we have heard from those who have already spoken to the resolution. It would be rather difficult for anyone, even a dyed-in-the-wool Maritimer to expect, after our Government has expended nearly $500 million to develop the St. Lawrence Seaway, that it would limit the season through which navigation might be carried on through that great waterway.

When some of the Fathers of Confederation visited Halifax to advocate the passing of the British North America Act they promised that Confederation would mean the development of Atlantic ports. Sir Charles Tupper, speaking in the old drill hall, said:

> Halifax harbour will be a forest of masts of ships that will carry the produce of Canada to the countries of the world.

Unfortunately his prophecy never materialized. Then, coming down through the years to when our Liberal friends were in power under Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that Government undertook to promote the building of a second transcontinental railway. At that time similar prophecies were made, and one of them was that the existing north-south trade between Canadian and American Atlantic ports would be replaced by an east-west trade route through Canada. In those days Portland, Maine, was a great competitor of our port because it was a terminus of the Grand Trunk Railway. It no longer is a competitor but, in any event, neither one of those prophecies I have referred to came true.

My honourable and good friend who moved this resolution (Hon. Mr. Isnor) referred to the following statement made in Toronto by Howard A. Mann, executive manager of the Maritime Transportation Commission:

> That in 1957 80 per cent of the American automobile industry's exports went through U.S. ports. Canadian ports handled only 14 per cent of U.S. rubber exports.
> On the other hand, vast quantities of Canadian goods were shipped through U.S. ports.

Complaints have been made time and again over that very thing, Canadian produce being shipped through American Atlantic ports in preference to our great ports of Halifax and Saint John, which have all the necessary facilities. I think Canadian shippers should be taught a lesson in patriotism. We should try to make them fully aware of the facilities at Halifax and Saint John for shipping goods overseas. We should try to influence them to ship their goods through our ports at least during the months when the great ports of the St. Lawrence are closed.

I have little more to say except to thank the honourable gentleman from Halifax-Dartmouth for bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate. Even if his resolution does not carry he will have accomplished something worth while, for he has brought attention to the great facilities and advantages of the Atlantic ports and the contributions they—especially Halifax—made to Canada's war effort. This was emphasized by a question raised by the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) when the mover was addressing the house on this motion. The mover said:

> Perhaps I should quote an unbiased definition of Halifax harbour as it is given in the 1957 report of the National Harbours Board:
> "The harbour at Halifax, situated on the Atlantic coast of Nova Scotia, is approached directly from the ocean by a channel with a minimum depth of 50 feet at low tide. It is open to navigation the year round and is served by both the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways."
> The report goes on to give the number of berths and handling facilities for ships. I could also mention, of course, the Queen Elizabeth being able to come into Halifax harbour without the use of a single tug. That is the kind of harbour I have reference to.

Then the honourable senator from Ottawa asked this question:

> Was that not due to a strike?

Well, perhaps that was the occasion when there was a strike of dock workers at New York, and the tug boatmen and longshoremen at Halifax, in sympathy with the New York strikers, refused to take any part in the berthing of the Queen Elizabeth coming into Halifax. But, like the old Olympic in World War I, the Queen Elizabeth came into the harbour, made a turn like a ferry boat, and, without the assistance of a single tug, docked at pier 2.

The Queen Elizabeth and the Queen Mary carried on what was almost a transatlantic ferry service, transporting thousands and thousands of our service personnel between Halifax and Great Britain during the war.

I don't know who is responsible for advertising our Atlantic port facilities, but these are things that should be brought to the attention of shippers and people in general. I recall coming up to a session of Parliament right after World War II and a young Ontario member said to me, "That was an awful riot the navy had down in Halifax." When I replied that it was a disgraceful thing he said, "But Halifax had it coming." Well, my Irish blood boiled right up and I said to him, "Damn you, do you realize just what Halifax did for Canada during the war?"—I hope you will excuse my expression, Mr. Speaker—I admitted that because of a sudden increase in population, due to the influx of service personnel, many outsiders who were anxious to make a quick dollar opened up small businesses in the city and overcharged the service personnel, and this got their dander up. "But," I said "the merchants and people of Halifax went all-out to play the game for our servicemen, particularly our navy personnel." I said, "Do you realize, young man, that, when you were enjoying your Christmas dinner last year, ships were being sunk right in the mouth of Halifax harbour?" He replied he didn't know this and I said, "Well, you have a lot to learn."

Honourable senators, people should know of the great advantages of the port of Halifax and the contribution it has made to Canada.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Higgins, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 256 to 284, which were presented yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Croll, for Hon. Mr. Roebuck, moved that the reports be adopted.

Motion agreed to.

BILLS—SECOND READINGS

Hon. Mr. Croll, for Hon. Mr. Roebuck, moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-206, an Act for the relief of Theodora Cornell Moore Martin.

Bill SD-207, an Act for the relief of Rose Ange Lorange Gadoury.

Bill SD-208, an Act for the relief of Brenda May Newbury Sherwood.

Bill SD-209, an Act for the relief of Lillianne Reed Volchuk.

Bill SD-210, an Act for the relief of Fernand Filiatrault.

Bill SD-211, an Act for the relief of Elisa Gislena Maria Blankaerts Juneau.

Bill SD-212, an Act for the relief of Louis Gustave Rey.

Bill SD-213, an Act for the relief of Gertrude Mary Prosser Hortig.

Bill SD-214, an Act for the relief of Mary Barbara Jex Light.

ROYAL ASSENT TO DIVORCE BILL

RADIO AND PRESS REPORTS—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. C. G. Power: Honourable senators, with the consent of the house I should like to draw attention to something which I think is a matter of privilege not only of the Senate but of the whole of Parliament. I was astounded this morning when listening to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation radio to hear that—I cannot quote the exact words, but the implication was that owing to the goodness of heart of the Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Mr. Diefenbaker, and his sympathy for a person who had recently obtained a divorce and ardently desired to get married this Saturday, arrangements had been made whereby the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General came here and gave the royal assent to certain bills.

This story is somewhat confirmed by what I read in the Globe and Mail of this morning, Thursday, May 7. It is a dispatch from Ottawa, dated May 6, on the first page of the paper, under the heading:

PM HELPS SOLVE DIVORCE TANGLE

And then a subheading:

CUPID GETS BOOST, TOO

The dispatch begins by stating that a young Montreal businessman—I am not quoting at length—by the name of Eric Reisinger, had divorce and marriage problems. It goes on to say:

> Today, following a sympathetic hearing by Prime Minister Diefenbaker, the New Canadian no longer has a divorce problem, and this Saturday he'll be married again, on schedule.

The article sets out that Mr. Reisinger had in fact sought and obtained from Parliament a bill of divorce, but for some reason or other the bill had not been sanctioned by the Governor. Faced with this fact, and an engagement to be married on Saturday of this week, he called on the Prime Minister and on Chief Justice Patrick Kerwin, and, though it does not say so in so many words, the commentator on the radio this morning implied that because of the intervention of these gentlemen the Chief Justice was brought here Tuesday night to give the royal assent to a number of bills. In the words of this dispatch:

> Last night Chief Justice Kerwin gave royal assent to 58 private bills, an event considered unique by parliamentary observers by the fact that there were no Government bills included in the list.
> Among the list of 54 divorce bills was one for the relief of Rosalie Jakes Reisinger.

I would like to inquire from the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) whether there is any truth in this story. Naturally I expect that there is not any, but that at least a contradiction will be made to the public.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have no knowledge whatever of what is reported in the newspaper which has just been read by the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power). All I know is that on Tuesday I was informed that there was going to be royal assent to bills that evening. I am quite satisfied there is nothing to the allegation contained in the press item.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the resolution of Hon. Mr. Isnor:

> Resolved: That it is expedient that the Government, through the Deparmtent of Transport, or any other agency or means, bring about a greater degree of use of the Atlantic ports.
> With this in mind it is urged that "open" and "closed" periods be agreed upon, and that the ports of the St. Lawrence be considered "closed" ports from November 15 until April 15, and "open" ports as from April 16 to November 14 of each and every year until such times as this arrangement is revoked.

Hon. John G. Higgins: Honourable senators, in speaking on this resolution, the honourable senator from Halifax North (Hon. Mr. Connolly) reminded us last Thursday that the resolution was divided into two parts which, of course, is self-evident, but then he went on to say that he felt nobody could help but support the first section of the motion, but he was very doubtful whether this body would support the second portion.

If the resolution were, like Gaul, divided into three parts, I do not know whether he would have given it a fifty-fifty chance of passing. Anyway, I cannot think of any third part to add in order to help him out.

With regard to the first part, I heartily agree with him that the proposal meets with the approval of each and everyone present who would like to help the Atlantic ports in every way possible. But the senator spoke only of the port of Halifax, Nova Scotia, his native city. What he said was true. No one can deny the immense use which was made of Halifax harbour during the last war. There is no doubt that this harbour was of vital importance and played a big part in the winning of the war.

We all realize that Halifax experienced the grim realities of war in the 1914-1918 period, when that city was so badly shattered by the explosion caused by the blowing up of the Mont Blanc in the harbour.

I must admit that I admire Halifax. It is a beautiful city, with many open spaces, nice parks, green swards and beautiful trees. I like its streets and avenues and its fine public buildings. I admire the way its citizens and its civic bodies have preserved old landmarks. This shows they have a civic responsibility and a pride in their city. There is no doubt that it also saw the grim realities of war in the large number of broken vessels which took refuge in its harbour during the second world war, and in the landing of dead and wounded sailors from these vessels.

But at the same time I must plead that there are two other great Atlantic ports: Saint John, New Brunswick, and St. John's, Newfoundland. Some senator from New Brunswick will probably tell what great and useful part was played by the harbour of Saint John during the period of the last war. Naturally, we all turn to our native province, and I shall turn to St. John's, which is my native place.

St. John's played a very important and vital part in the winning of the battle of the Atlantic. As you know, St. John's is thrust out by some mighty upheaval right into the Atlantic far beyond the North American continent. It is the nearest port to Europe by many hundreds of miles. Into this harbour during the war came hundreds, I may say thousands, of allied ships. It was a starting place for the frigates and cruisers and submarines that carried on the battle of the Atlantic. I have seen hundreds and thousands of these ships come into the harbour after patrolling the Atlantic, and leave again for the same purpose. I have seen steamer after steamer entering the harbour with gaping holes in their hulls. I have seen from the window in my office on Water street, which is on a level with the harbour, in the evening that expanse of water absolutely bare, and in the morning that same expanse covered with ships, come to take refuge there, and often they would be landing dead and wounded. I have seen there submarines and warships of all sizes.

St. John's became a garrison city during the last war. Thousands of soldiers and sailors were stationed there. The United States had a big base on the outskirts of the city, and 80 miles away, at Argentia, there was the great and important United States naval base. On the west coast of Newfoundland was the very important United States base now known as Ernest Harmon airfield.

At St. John's, Canada had a large number of military units—infantry, heavy artillery, ack-ack batteries, the R.C.A.F. and the Navy. It had an infantry camp at Botwood, about 200 miles from St. John's, and there was, of course, the important airfield known as Gander airport, where many Canadians were stationed.

I may also say that many submarines were hovering around the shores of Newfoundland during the war. Once a steamer was only three miles from the harbour mouth when she was sunk by an enemy submarine. One day the boom at the narrows leading to the harbour of St. John's was lifted in order to allow a steamer to come in. A submarine was hovering outside and it fired three torpedoes at her, but not one struck. Two were duds, and the third one struck at the bottom of Signal Hill. At Bell Island, which is only twelve miles from St. John's, two large ore carriers of 17,000 tons each were sunk by an enemy submarine while they were at the pier, and some months later two others were sunk at the same place. Then nets were dropped and no more casualties took place.

The senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) said that Halifax was the closest American port to world markets. The honourable senator from Rigaud (Hon. Mr. Dupuis) answered this and said that Newfoundland held that title and that she was the one who could control the gates to Canada, which is quite true. Verily, we Newfoundlanders can sing:

Oh Canada, we stand on guard for Thee.

Nova Scotia cannot sing that. Nova Scotia sits in our shadow as we sing it and gets our echo.

Moreover, St. John's harbour has been used since the dawn of civilization on the American continent. It was of importance for more than a century before the ports of Halifax and Saint John were ever heard of. It was a resort for thousands of fishermen from all parts of the then known civilized world when the whole of the North American continent was an untrodden wilderness—untrodden except by wild beasts and Indians.

The honourable senator from Halifax North, when speaking of Halifax, said he was basing his presentation upon sympathetic grounds. I do not agree with this. If another war comes, which God forbid, but everything talks of war today—the building up of armies and of warships of all kinds, and fighting airplanes and other portentous signs—surely the Atlantic ports must be of vital importance, and it would be sheer nonsense to allow them to fall into neglect. In his peroration the honourable senator drew a sad picture of what may happen unless some effort is made to prevent a deadly blow at the Atlantic region, which may see itself depleted mainly because its young people, through force of circumstance, must go to the more prosperous parts of Canada in order to make a living, and leave only the old people behind. He quoted some lines from Omar Khayyam:

> The Moving Finger writes; and, having writ,
> Moves on; nor all your piety nor wit
> shall lure it back to cancel half a line,
> Nor all your tears wash out a word of it.

I do not know why he should have used these words. After all, he spoke the truth. There was nothing controversial in his remarks. His conscience was not bothering him, and he spoke well. I do not know whether we possess much piety or wit or humility, but no matter whether we have any or not we would not want for a single moment to lure him to wipe out even a word of his fine oratorical effort.

I would quote another quatrain from that same poem:

> A Book of verses underneath the bough,
> A jug of wine, a loaf of bread—and thou
> Beside me singing in the Wilderness—
> Oh, Wilderness were Paradise enow!

If it should happen that the rest of Canada should be given prosperity at the expense of the Atlantic provinces, so that all the young people should leave there for the more prosperous provinces, and the older people should be the only ones left, then the loaf of bread and the jug of wine and the book of verse and the "Thou", whoever that may be, will not be sufficient compensation for the wilderness so created.

I do not think a question asked by the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) was apt. I trust he will pardon me for joining issue with him, for I have admired his great qualities ever since I came here; in fact, I have admired the virility and wonderful method of speaking of some of the older members, and—if I may paraphrase—"age cannot wither their infinite variety." The honourable senator asked if when the seaway is open the Atlantic ports should be closed. I would say: No,—

Hon. Mr. Euler: Surely, my honourable friend, being Irish, recognizes a joke when he hears one.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Well, I was going to go on and say: No, for once the seaway is open there is no competition. Only those ships that have to go to the Atlantic ports will go there, and it would be useless to order them to the seaway where they would be bringing goods or passengers for the Atlantic provinces only. Ships which will find the seaway a more advantageous course will naturally go that way.

With regard to the second part of the resolution, which proposes closing the ports of the St. Lawrence for five months of the year, it reminds me that once upon a time we used to have our railway closed sometimes—I would not say all the time, but very often—during the five months of winter which we have down in Newfoundland on the Gaff Topsails. Sometimes the trains were stuck there for a week or so, but we felt it was necessary to keep up the service and we did not declare a curfew of five months.

With regard to that second part of the resolution, we are treading on disputatious and contentious ground. It must be remembered that the United States has an interest in the St. Lawrence Seaway, and the Senate cannot interfere with the rights of the United States. I think that is a truism.

Would it be dignified or proper to suggest to the United States that, in order to help out our Atlantic ports, the seaway should be closed for five months every year? If so, do you think for one single moment that the United States would agree, or would be expected to agree, to such a proposal, unless perhaps New York or some other ports on the eastern side of the United States joined in the appeal for their own benefit, which hardly seems likely?

However, a vast amount of money has been expended which will be beneficial at least to all the provinces except the Atlantic ones—and, whether it will be of any use or interest to the latter, I do not know. It is open to question. It may be of vital importance to them. At any rate, I think some means should be devised to do something for the Atlantic provinces if they are to suffer from the building of the seaway. For instance, as goods will be moved more cheaply now from east to west and as a consequence places west of Quebec and Montreal will gain thereby, then I think we in the Atlantic region should receive a quid pro quo in the form of lower freight rates, for our freight rates are very high at the present time.

As far as Newfoundland is concerned, the building of a free port, which was so well explained by my co-patriot the honourable senator from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt), would be a good and serviceable project, of great benefit to all of Canada and one which could be used in connection with the seaway. That is a matter worth considering.

New Brunswick and Nova Scotia must have some advantage which they could bring to the attention of the authorities as being beneficial to their provinces. It is not for me to do so. I dare not. The provinces may combine for some common object, but let no one forget that each is master in his own house and each knows and can mind his own business.

One last point. What would be the effect in Quebec and Montreal if a curfew were ordained on the St. Lawrence Seaway, a curfew not of nights and a night, nor days and a day, but a curfew over its seaway of months and a month? What would the people of these cities say and what would we hear? There would be a wild crescendo of protest.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, with reference to the eloquent speech which has just been delivered by the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins), in which he paid high tribute to Newfoundland's war effort during World War I and World War II, I am sure we all give him full measure of applause for his eloquence and literary allusions. I am sure also that he will give me his willing permission to mention one historical episode he overlooked. I refer to the historic meeting of Sir—then Mr.—Winston Churchill and the late President Roosevelt in the waters of Placentia Bay when the foundation of the Atlantic Charter was laid and given to the world as a guide for Allied co-operation that came later, and which led to the adoption of lend-lease agreements for the pooling of basic resources on this continent in the prosecution of the war and the suggestion of a post-war policy in trade. If the honourable senator from St. John's East will permit, I should like to add that word of commendation to his speech.

Hon. C. G. Power: Honourable senators, I wish to say only a few words on this resolution and to make a suggestion to some of my honourable friends from the Maritimes. Like any section of the country which feels it has been neglected for the benefit of others, the Maritimes, I believe, require assistance in their efforts to have their case put before the entire country. The first part of the resolution urges a greater degree of use of the Atlantic ports. The second part commences:

> With this in mind it is urged that "open" and "closed" periods be agreed upon, and that the ports of the St. Lawrence be considered "closed" ports from November 15—

If the mover of the resolution, the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor), would change this to read:

> —and that the ports of the St. Lawrence upstream from the port of Quebec be considered "closed" ports—

I am sure he would obtain a certain element of support from those of us who are not entirely encompassed by the great financial, commercial, industrial and political power which seems to be centred in Montreal and in Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Does the honourable senator consider Toronto to be a port on the St. Lawrence?

Hon. Mr. Power: I am including Toronto with Montreal and I intend to come to a sort of merger of James Street and Bay Street, which will, I am sure, be detrimental to the whole of the rest of the country. Meanwhile, we in Quebec view with a certain equanimity the fact that, if the seaway carries out the hopes on which it was founded, Montreal may to some extent suffer the fate to which Quebec has been subjected for the last half century, by becoming only a sort of gasoline station on the seaway as vessels whistle in the darkness and proceed farther on into the interior of the country. We would perhaps be not altogether sorry for the great port of Montreal, with all its financial and prestige, if it were to suffer some of the neglect and frustrations which Quebec has suffered so long.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Is it a case of misery likes company?

Hon. Mr. Power: No, but misery would be glad that somebody else is getting it in the neck too. Like our friends from the Maritime provinces, we in Quebec City have suffered from the over-expansion of Montreal. It has taken away our banks. We had the Quebec Bank and the Maritimers had the Union Bank. Montreal has taken away our larger trust companies. It has taken away a large section of our lumber companies. My honourable friend from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) will tell you that in his young days the port of Rivière du Loup profited to a great extent from the shipment of millions of feet of lumber from the Fraser Companies which operated in the Temiscouata Valley. The control of the Fraser Companies has passed long since to the tycoons of Montreal. Perhaps I should not say this but, worst of all, our oldest and most respected paper and lumber company in Quebec, one with deep traditional attachment to the Old Country, has now passed into the hands of strangers and, above all, it has as chairman of its board an American-born ex-Liberal cabinet minister.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am enjoying this.

Hon. Mr. Power: I have no doubt that if some of the original owners of the corporation of which he is now chairman were aware of this there would be much turning in graves and much gnashing of teeth. But the point is—and there is something serious in what I propose to say this afternoon—that winter navigation in so far as the port of Quebec is concerned has been in active consideration for well over half a century. There are records to show that in every month of the year vessels have left Quebec and reached the open sea. I have not the facts with me, but I think that would apply to every week of every month of the year. Now, in order to make the navigation to Quebec City practical I do believe that there would have to be provided aids to navigation, aids to lighting. A northeast snow storm would certainly obliterate anything in the way of lighthouses we have all the way down the St. Lawrence. So perhaps in so far as winter navigation to Quebec City is concerned it may be, if not in the realm of speculation, at least something that requires a great deal of practical working out before one can say that Quebec is a winter port in the sense that Halifax, Saint John and St. John's are winter ports. However, I think I should draw to the attention of this honourable chamber the fact that in the lower St. Lawrence, the ports of Rivière du Loup, Murray Bay, Seven Islands, Rimouski and Matane are winter ports, and for the past 20 or 25 years there has been winter navigation across the St. Lawrence. Again, more help to navigation is required, perhaps, in the way of spotting by aircraft, better harbours, better breakwaters, in order to shelter vessels during the heavy winter storms, but the fact of the matter is that winter navigation on the lower St. Lawrence is a practicable thing.

I should like to point out to my honourable friends from the Maritimes that one of the great helps to Canada in having traffic through the Chignecto Canal would be that traffic coming from the iron ore country to Seven Islands and from the north shore of the St. Lawrence would find a way to its processing markets along the Atlantic coast, and, if ever we wanted to make it a practical proposition, would have to go through something like the Chignecto Canal. So that the development of the north shore of the St. Lawrence—the nethermost outpost of the province of Quebec, if you want to call it so, lying neglected—would be something in the interests of our friends from the Maritimes, just as much as in the interests of Quebec itself, and probably not too much in the interests of this colossus of which I spoke, Montreal.

If the sponsor of the resolution would agree that the ports of the St. Lawrence which normally can be kept open in winter should remain open, and would so specify in his resolution, I would have no objection to supporting it.

On motion of Honourable Mr. Pearson, debate adjourned.

REPRESENTATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Léon Méthot moved the second reading of Bill C-21, to amend the Representation Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is very simple and calls for a very short explanation.

According to paragraph 50 of that part of the schedule to the Representation Act dealing with the description of the electoral districts in the province of Quebec, the electoral district of Temiscouata consists of:

(a) the county of Temiscouata;
(b) the county of Rivière-du-Loup (except the parish municipalities of Notre-Dame-du-Portage and Sainte-Francoise and the municipalities of Saint-Jean-de-Dieu and Trois-Pistoles) and the city of Rivière-du-Loup.

The purpose of this bill is to change the name of the electoral district of Temiscouata to Rivière - du - Loup—Temiscouata. There would be no change in the limits of the constituency at all. The electoral district would simply have a compound name, as have many others in my neighbourhood, such as Saint-Maurice-Laflèche, Saint-Jean-Iberville-Napierville, and Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Honourable senators, I hope this bill will be accepted.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I believe most of you are familiar with Temiscouata County, which is on the highways from Toronto to Halifax and from Quebec City to Gaspé. It extends from the St. Lawrence River to the province of New Brunswick between the county of Rimouski on the east and the county of Kamouraska to the west. It is a large constituency, and it belongs to history, because Sir John A. Macdonald spent 23 summers at St. Patrick's, three miles west of Rivière-du-Loup, when he was Prime Minister of Canada; and the late Right Honourable Mr. Lapointe, former Minister of Justice, was born in the county, at St. Eloi, as also was Cardinal Rouleau, at Isle Verte. The former Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. St. Laurent, has his summer place at St. Partick's, two doors from the residence that was occupied by Sir John A. Macdonald. Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Henry Bate, a prominent merchant of Ottawa, who had a large family, engaged the services of a famous doctor, whom they asked to travel from Quebec City to Gaspé in order to find the healthiest spot. The doctor made the trip, and on his return put his finger on St. Patrick's. That is why Sir John A. Macdonald spent such a long time there, and if he lived to a ripe old age it was because he breathed such good air in the country in the summer. There is a commemorative tablet in front of Sir John A. Macdonald's summer home, and one was also placed in front of the house at St. Eloi where the late Mr. Lapointe was born. The late Mr. Taschereau, former Premier of Quebec, spent fifty summers at Rivière-du-Loup. I asked the Monuments Board to place a tablet in front of his house, but unfortunately my request was declined.

Temiscouata is the place from which the missionaries started their trips to Acadia. From Notre Dame du Portage, on the St. Lawrence River, they went across Lake Temiscouata and up the St. John River. This was the route that was followed by Monseigneur de St.-Vallier, the second Bishop of Quebec, and in fact by all the missionaries who went from Quebec to Acadia and the eastern part of Canada.

It is a most picturesque part of the country, and as you are coming from Ste. Rose du Dégelé on the New Brunswick-Quebec highway, from the summit of the hills you are able to see Lake Temiscouata, which is one of the finest lakes in the country—27 miles long—lying between very high mountains. On arriving near the St. Lawrence River, which is 20 miles wide at that point, you are reminded of the Strait of Juan de Fuca, across from Victoria, in British Columbia, with its background of the Olympic mountains. Both bodies of water are about the same width. In the background of the St. Lawrence valley are the beautiful Laurentians. From the point of view of picturesque beauty and scenery this section is practically unequalled anywhere.

But what is most remarkable in that part of the country are the people themselves. I have known them well. For thirty-one years they gave me their continuous support as member of Parliament, and they did so very generously, and I consider it a very great honour, coming as it did from them. They are a people of great distinction, they are well educated, they have deep religious convictions, they are broadminded and they are patriots. They are progressive. When I think of them and of the friendships that I made during my political career I am really moved, and I can never forget my friends who are alive, nor those who are gone.

At first Temiscouata was a Conservative county; it was part of Rimouski. At that time the county of Rimouski extended from Rivière-du-Loup to Cap-Chat, which is now in Gaspé county, and it included Temiscouata, Rimouski and Matane. I may tell you that at one time it was represented in the Legislative Assembly of United Canada by my great grandfather, Louis Bertrand, who gave his seat to Robert Baldwin after he was defeated in York. And afterwards my grandfather, Jean-Baptiste Pouliot, started to make propaganda for the Liberal party. He was defeated twice before Confederation. He was elected once by acclamation before Confederation. He was opposed to Confederation because he found that it meant a disguised legislative union. He was elected again by acclamation in 1874 and he sat until 1878. He did not run again. But in the federal election of 1887 my father ran as a Liberal candidate. He was defeated by a small number of votes. At the following federal general election he was the provincial member for Temiscouata; he sat in Quebec as a supporter of Honoré Mercier for two years. He was defeated in 1891. He did not run in the federal election of 1891, as he was the provincial member for the county. One of his brothers, my uncle, Alphonse Pouliot, ran as standard-bearer of the Liberal party against the Conservative candidate and he was again defeated by a small number of votes. In 1896 my father ran again as a supporter of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. He had been an intermediary between Sir Wilfrid, who was then Mr. Laurier, and the Quebec bishops to come to some kind of arrangement with regard to the Manitoba school question.

My father, Charles-Eugène Pouliot, was elected member for Temiscouata by approximately 600 votes against the Conservative machine. At that time the superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway was keeping in the railway shops men with so-called iron hands to break up Liberal meetings. There prevailed a system of terror. I have seen men who have had their ears bitten during meetings and some were wounded. It is incredible how high was the fanaticism at that time. My father, with the late Senator Fiset, who was then member for Rimouski, and the late Mr. Carroll, who was the member for Kamouraska, and who was later appointed a Judge of the King's Bench Court in the province of Quebec, and still later Lieutenant Governor of that province, and Mr. Charles Angers, barrister, of Murray Bay, who was the member for Charlevoix, and Mr. Henri Bourassa, who was then the new member for Labelle, and some others, prepared a memorandum, which was carried to Rome by Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, in order to bring about an end to the undue influence of the clergy against the Liberal party. They succeeded.

Those men were sincere. I have all the papers in connection with that on file. I showed them to Mr. Mackenzie King and Mr. Godbout and some others. Prevailing conditions were so bad that some people from Trois Pistoles ,located about thirty miles east of Rivière-du-Loup, in the county of Temiscouata, had to come to Rivière-du-Loup to fulfil their Easter duty.

The Hon. the Speaker: We are very far from the bill, although there has been no objection.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I do not want to speak outside the bill but I am telling about what was done to promote freedom of speech, a freedom that has been enjoyed by all parties up to recent years, thanks to the work of those members of Parliament whose names should never be forgotten.

I will come closer to the bill by speaking of the integrity of the county of Temiscouata. All I have said may explain the ties that bind me to that part of the land which honoured me so much by giving me its unqualified and continuous support for 31 years.

For 80 years the boundaries of Temiscouata did not change, they remained the same. The county dates back to 1853, and until 1933 nothing was changed. There were many redistributions, there were gerrymanders, but the county of Temiscouata remained the same.

In 1930 my average majority of 2,000 fell to 117, and my opponents thought that by removing from each side of the county some Liberal parishes where the majority was about 500, they could defeat me at the next election. I asked the Whip at the time to put me on the Redistribution Committee in order to defend the rights of Temiscouata and to prevent the carving of my county. I received no answer from the Whip. The gentleman who represented the province of Quebec in my stead was my desk-mate. He was a very delightful man. His great distinction was that he had played golf with the Prince of Wales. But he was so lazy that once he made a speech in which he first quoted four pages from the speech of Mr. Bennett, then said, "Now I will tell you what my right honourable leader has said in reply", and he read four pages from a speech by Mr. Mackenzie King, and sat down. We cannot expect a gentleman like that to fight for a county in a redistribution committee.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Well, what happened?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I am just coming to that.

One Sunday morning I was coming to the house to write an article for a paper, and I met Mr. Ernest Lapointe. He said, "Jean-François, you must write the history of redistribution in the province of Quebec." I said: "How can I do that? I was willing to do the work; I asked to be put on the committee, but you did not appoint me. It is for the committee to do that." He said, "You should do it". Then I wrote this book, which is unique: it contains the history of each redistribution—and there were eight—from 1853 to 1933.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You are not going to read that, are you?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: My honourable friend asked me to tell him what happened, and I am just starting. I may keep on, if you wish, but I do not want to take advantage of your goodness.

The book contains two parts, one the history of each redistribution, and the other the history of the redistribution of each county. With a weapon like that I could have held the House of Commons for months and months, but I was reasonable, and it lasted only a week.

The Hon. the Speaker: That was a retribution.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Afterwards I had a strange reward. In 1947 the county of Temiscouata nearly disappeared. I don't know if it was to punish me for having been against conscription. I attended a Liberal dinner at the Quebec parliamentary restaurant. Mr. Godbout was there, and there was only one member seated between him and me. The whole affair was very nice and I enjoyed it, as everyone did. When I returned to Ottawa I met a colleague of mine from the House of Commons, a good friend, who asked me, "What do the Liberals have against you in Quebec City?" I replied: "I don't know. I have just come back from that mecca of French Canadians and everything was fine." He said, "They have written to the redistribution committee for the purpose of carving the county of Temiscouata from Isle Verte to St. Fabien, both inclusive" —Ile Verte was the native parish of my mother—"and from the St. Lawrence River to New Brunswick." I could not conceive it. I said to my friend, "Come up to my office and I will tell you the whole story about it." He said, "I will support you."

That was in 1947. On May 19 there was a very long speech by the then member from Temiscouata, who protested against it in order to maintain the integrity of the county. Nothing was changed, and the county of Temiscouata today is the same as it was in 1853, with the exception of two carvings that were made in 1934—on the east, when Trois Pistoles, Ste. Francoise and St. Jean de Dieu were taken off; and on the west, Notre Dame du Portage, a very beautiful summer place.

At the time the Speaker of the House of Commons did not have your wisdom and experience, sir, and at pages 3184 and 3185 of the record of the debates of that house, there are several daily editorials, which show how strange were the rulings made in that house. Nevertheless, the county of Temiscouata still exists, and exists mostly as it was a hundred years ago. The reason for the change may be to show the union that exists between the southern and northern parts of the county, which might be a very good thing. There are means of communication between both parts of the county. There are very good roads and highways which have been built by the provincial Government, and there is also the Temiscouata railway, which could be improved, but which was put under C.N.R. management by the previous administration. All that is important.

I hope there will be union in the county in the future, as there was when I had the honour of representing it in the House of Commons. Just think, from 1896 to 1957 the county of Temiscouata stayed in the Liberal Party. It required a lot of work, but I never complained about it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. This speech has nothing whatever to do with the changing of the boundaries. I would like to know whether the honourable senator, who formerly represented Temiscouata, is against this bill or for it. Is he willing to have the hyphenated name substituted for the present name? I think he is going too far afield. The honourable senator should stick more closely to the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: I think he is just coming to the bill.

Hon. Mr. Croll: May I rise on the point of order raised by the honourable Leader? It is not enough for a member of the Senate to say simply, "We are proposing a change the name of this constituency from what it is to something else." We, as senators, are entitled to a little background and history in order that the reason for the proposed change may come out. There ought to be a good reason for it, and I intend to ask a few questions on that point. We are now getting some background, and we are in no great hurry. This is most interesting material, and I think we ought to be tolerant.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I understand the honourable senator, who was formerly the member for Temiscouata, is not against the change.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I do not believe he is, either.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion it is all right to give background material on the bill itself, but there must be some balance between the background and the remarks that lead to the subject-matter. I believe that the honourable senator is just coming to that. A lot of background has been given, and I was expecting an objection. I think the honourable senator will not stray too far from the subject-matter of the bill in his further remarks, and that he will tell us if he is for or against the bill.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I thank you, sir, and I am very grateful to the honourable Leader of the Government for the breathing spell he has given me. All that I have mentioned is directly connected with the bill that is before the house.

At first I opposed the division of Temiscouata county into two provincial counties. I thought that it was a great mistake, because the people who belong to a county are like a large family, and they should be treated fairly, without any discrimination. They have their traditions and their customs. They are so close together that when there is a division it is unfortunate. But it was done, and perhaps I was mistaken about it, for at the present time the county is in very good shape.

The proposal now is to change the present name to a hyphenated name. To that I have no objection, and for a very good reason. When I was a member for Temiscouata many people called me the member for Rivière du Loup, the name of the city where I lived, and my honourable colleagues will agree that Rivière du Loup, as well as Temiscouata, has been put on the map to a large extent. If I may say so—I do not know whether I am strictly in order or not—I cannot forget the friendships that I made in the House of Commons as a member of Parliament as well as those that I made in the same capacity in my county. It is a great privilege to be a member of Parliament, because it gives one the opportunity to meet great Canadians from all parts of the country, who belong to various political faiths. My friendship with some Liberals and some Conservatives, and even some members of the C.C.F. Party, is my pride and joy.

I will not delay this house any longer. I wanted to give these explanations, and I hope that I have not been too indiscreet in telling about some of my recollections. What I have said is strictly true, and I have said it to give the background of the affection and the gratitude that I have for the people of Temiscouata county, whether it is called that or Rivière du Loup-Temiscouata.

Hon. David A. Croll: Will the honourable senator tell us the reason behind the change?

Hon. Mr. Methot: I understand that it was asked for by the councils of the municipalities in the two provincial counties.

Hon. Mr. Croll: May I just say this, that early in my political life, in about 1924, I learned to pronounce "Temiscouata" because it was the name of the constituency represented in the other house by my honourable friend who is now the senator from De Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot). In this chamber we ought not to take lightly a proposed change in the name of such a constituency. Here is a colleague who stands in this house and tells us that his family has been associated with the riding since 1874. It was represented by his father, and by his grandfather. That is something that should fire the imagination of this chamber and the country. Historically, that is of great importance. Even though some may think it is not important that the constituency was represented continuously by Liberals, there are those of us who share the view of the last speaker and consider that too has some significance.

The question that struck me when I looked at the bill was, why could not the new name of the riding be Temiscouata-Rivière du Loup, so as to ensure that a name as significant as Temiscouata would retain its prominence on our statute books and in our records? The name Temiscouata has a picturesqueness about it. I have never seen the riding in its physical form, but its former member (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) was himself as picturesque as he has described the riding to be. I know that to people all across Canada the riding of Temiscouata had a picturesqueness of appeal that was for the good of the country.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I would draw to the honourable senator's attention that this is now a public bill, as it has been passed by the other house, but it is not a Government-sponsored bill.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I was not attaching blame to anyone. I thought it was a Government bill.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I just wanted to make it clear that I did not advocate the change.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It is not my intention to mix into the business of a local riding, but as one who has had a mental association with this riding for a great many years I regret what has been done. If our honourable colleague who formerly represented the riding had indicated opposition to the bill I certainly would have voted to support him, particularly in light of the fact that this is a private bill. I am not going to hold it up at all, but I wanted to indicate that these things should not be treated lightly. They are matters of some consequence. We are a young country, building an historic background, and we should not lightly discard or change the name of a constituency such as this just because it appears convenient to do so. The riding has meant something. Rivière du Loup means something too, but it will take a long, long time before it has the same significance as Temiscouata has throughout Canada.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: With leave of the Senate, I wish to thank my honourable colleague for his gracious speech, and to congratulate him upon the excellent manner in which he has pronounced "Temiscouata". I must tell him that it means "deep water"—and, as you know, still water runs deep.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Croll: As a private bill it must be referred to committee.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I understand it is a public bill now, having passed the other house. Therefore, it does not have to go to a committee of this house.

Hon. Mr. Méthot: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DIVORCE

BILLS—SECOND READINGS

Hon. Mr. Croll, for Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-234, an Act for the relief of Marcelle Flore Terreault Wright.

Bill SD-235, an Act for the relief of Daisy Naydia Pretula Link.

Bill SD-236, an Act for the relief of Alexander Hill Forbes.

Bill SD-237, an Act for the relief of Barbara Ann Mary Curran Albrechtson.

Bill SD-238, an Act for the relief of Dorothy Vera Doyle Trudel.

Bill SD-239, an Act for the relief of Mary May Helen McCormick Moran.

Bill SD-240, an Act for the relief of Ethel Marguerite Nimick Hemmings.

Bill SD-241, an Act for the relief of James Donald McAllister.

Bill SD-242, an Act for the relief of Heather Joan Maxwell Firth.

Bill SD-243, an Act for the relief of Suzanne Mary Florence Peyton Young.

Bill SD-244, an Act for the relief of Elizabeth Ann Nelson Bissett.

Bill SD-245, an Act for the relief of Moira Elizabeth Latham Bruce.

Bill SD-246, an Act for the relief of Audrey Edwardeen Scanlan Grayburn.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Next sitting.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 12, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 12, 1959

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

CUSTOMS TARIFF AND NEW ZEALAND TRADE AGREEMENT BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-44, to amend the Customs Tariff and The New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1932.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators will remember that a year ago, when we had before us a similar bill to amend the Customs Act, it was suggested that it would be helpful to the members of the Senate if a table were filed setting out the new rates and the rates in effect prior to the budget being brought down. I now have in my hand a table which sets out the rates of duties provided for in Bill C-44 and the corresponding rates in effect prior to the budget. Is it agreeable to honourable senators that it be printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings of this date?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators, speaking only for myself I welcome very heartily the suggestion made by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine). I studied this bill within the last few days, since it has been passed by the Commons. There are no explanatory notes, and one is lost without knowing the points from which the changes are taking place.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is the idea I had in mind.

Honourable senators, I therefore move that a table setting out the rates of duty provided for in Bill C-44, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff and The New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1932, and the corresponding rates in effect prior to the 1959 budget, be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

EXCISE BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-45, to amend the Excise Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

OLD AGE SECURITY BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-46, to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

LENGTH AND MASS UNITS BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Aseltine presented Bill S-20, to amend the Length and Mass Units Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: I wonder if the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) could give us some inkling of what this bill is all about.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Not expecting to make an explanation tonight I did not bring my file. However, I can say that the bill has to do with the relationship between the pound and the kilogramme. There is quite a complicated formula involved.

Hon. Mr. Euler: We need a blackboard here.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The act, which was passed in 1951, contains the figures, but there has been a slight change since the whole matter has been gone into between Canada, the United States and Australia.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Has that anything to do with inflation?

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Aseltine presented Bill S-21, to amend the Weights and Measures Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

DIVORCE

PETITION

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following petition:

Of Rose Celia Logette Werbitt, of Montreal, Quebec, praying for the passage of an act to dissolve her marriage with Saul Werbitt.

He said: Honourable senators, may I say by way of explanation that a petition in this name was filed in 1957 and the fees were paid. The parties are going to ask for a refund of a portion of the fees, as I understand they have become reconciled. Our financial advisor tells us the presentation of this new petition will facilitate the handing back of a portion of the money. This being a mere technicality, it is not affected by the fact that the time for the presenting of petitions has passed.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, presented the committee's reports Nos. 285 to 300, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

AUSTRIA

NOTICE OF RESOLUTION FOR APPROVAL OF STATE TREATY

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, May 14, I will move:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the state treaty for the re-establishment of an independent and democratic Austria, signed at Vienna, May 15, 1955, and that this house do approve the same.

Later:

Hon. W. D. Euler: May I ask my honourable friend why this agreement signed at Vienna takes four years to come to this House for ratification?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not think I can answer that question, but I am sure that when the honourable senator on this side of the house introduces the treaty for approval he will have the explanation.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: I was going to ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if it is possible to have a copy of the treaty distributed. Probably it was distributed some time ago—I do not know—but I think we should see the treaty before we are asked to approve of it.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: I received a copy in my box this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I understood it was distributed, but if it was not I will—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have just received a copy now.

Bill SD-250, an Act for the relief of Barbara Lucy Bain Forbes Logan.

Bill SD-251, an Act for the relief of Ghitta Caiserman Pinsky.

Bill SD-252, an Act for the relief of Florida Seyer Girard.

Bill SD-253, an Act for the relief of Maria Adriana Sluis Metcalfe.

Bill SD-254, an Act for the relief of Irene Kramer Segal.

Bill SD-255, an Act for the relief of Lois Genevieve Good Mulcahy.

Bill SD-256, an Act for the relief of Frances Lerner Rotman.

Bill SD-257, an Act for the relief of Mose Takacs.

Bill SD-258, an Act for the relief of Catherine Mary Rita Durning Dossett.

Bill SD-259, an Act for the relief of Dorothy Elizabeth Fremantle Fleming.

Bill SD-260, an Act for the relief of Donald Edward Cook.

Bill SD-261, an Act for the relief of Maria Carmella Gentile Hammill.

Bill SD-262, an Act for the relief of Ivy Mildred Patch MacDonald.

Bill SD-263, an Act for the relief of Mary Friend Bond.

Bill SD-264, an Act for the relief of Eleanor Patricia Henderson Cosh.

Bill SD-265, an Act for the relief of Patricia McDonald Bouthillette.

Bill SD-266, an Act for the relief of Louis Marcel Blondin.

Bill SD-267, an Act for the relief of Janet Marianne Louise Kippen Coulombe.

Bill SD-268, an Act for the relief of Demetra Paul Garini Liogas.

Bill SD-269, an Act for the relief of Paul Alexander Cross.

Bill SD-270, an Act for the relief of Elisabeth Marguerite Le Febvre Walker.

Bill SD-271, an Act for the relief of Joseph Roger Wilfrid Girard Frigon.

Bill SD-272, an Act for the relief of Jean Paul Frechette. (Annulment).

Bill SD-273, an Act for the relief of Ben Plotkin.

Bill SD-274, an Act for the relief of Tibor Matthias Miletics.

Bills read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, next sitting.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

State Treaty for the re-establishment of an independent and democratic Austria, signed at Vienna May 15, 1955, entered into force July 27, 1955. (English and French texts).

Statistical report of fire losses in Canada, 1957. (English and French texts).

Report of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1958. (French text).

Report on levels of Strontium-90 in Canadian Milk Powder Samples up to the end of December, 1958, prepared by the Radiation Division, Department of National Health and Welfare. (English and French texts).

Joint Communique issued on May 6, 1959, on the Food for Peace Conference, held at Washington, from May 4 to 6, 1959. (English text).

Later:

FOOD FOR PEACE CONFERENCE

JOINT COMMUNIQUE

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, if I may refer to the document the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) tabled earlier this evening in connection with the Food for Peace Conference, I would suggest that this document appear as an appendix to Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is not a lengthy document, and it is quite agreeable to the Government to have it printed in Hansard if that is the wish of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think it should be done.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

See Appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 595-6.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY

On the inquiry by Hon. Mrs. Wilson:

Pertaining to Order in Council P.C. 1959-310, dated March 19, 1959, which appeared in The Canada Gazette, Part II, Volume 93, of April 8, 1959:

1. (a) How many persons were admitted to Canada since May 24, 1956, to the latest available date, from each of the countries covered by the revoked paragraph (c) of section 20 of the Immigration Regulations?

(b) How many of these persons from each of these countries were:

(i) Married children, and the unmarried members of their respective families?

(ii) Brothers, and their wives and unmarried children?

(iii) Sisters, and their husbands and unmarried children?

2. On March 19, 1959, or at the nearest available date, how many applications were there from each of the countries covered by former paragraph (c) of section 20 of the Immigration Regulations, in the 3 categories listed in question 1(b)?

3. What are the definitions of the special skills of the persons who are to be substituted in immigration selection for the close relatives of families now living in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have the answer to the inquiry of the honourable senator from Rockcliffe (Hon. Mrs. Wilson). It is a very involved document, with two appendixes, the second of which contains seven pages in small type, and I would suggest that it be tabled. I will provide the honourable senator with a copy of the answer for her examination, and perhaps she could let me know tomorrow whether she wants it printed in our records. I hope this suggestion is satisfactory.

Hon. Mrs. Wilson: Thank you.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, May 6, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine for the second reading of Bill C-37, to provide for the appointment of Parliamentary Secretaries to Ministers.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, when I was Leader of the Government in the Senate I advanced the suggestion that, in regard to legislation and Government activities in general, the Senate should have more information than it was getting from me. Despairing the probability of there ever being more ministers of the Crown appointed from this house, I suggested it might be worth while to consider the idea of appointing parliamentary assistants from members within this chamber. I cannot say my suggestion met with any great support at that time, and I am quite sure if I advanced it again it would meet with no greater support. I therefore have no intention of advancing this idea seriously on the present occasion. I must say, however, that it is difficult for me to understand why in a Parliament made up of two houses, both of which must consider all legislation, the lower house should have a total of 38 ministers of the Crown and parliamentary secretaries and this house should have none. I suppose the best way to view this is to consider it as a subtle compliment to the Senate that the Government thinks the members of this house possess the intelligence and experience to appreciate quickly the import of legislation, whereas members of the other house are not so fortunate.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: We all agree with you on that.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Nevertheless, the facts are as I have stated. Now, I do not want to be misunderstood in what I say. While we have no ministers of the Crown here and I suppose it is not contemplated we shall have any parliamentary secretaries under this legislation, I do not wish to suggest we are without information, for the present Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) is a host in himself. He has the same advantage that I had when I occupied his position: he has some very capable men around him who make it their business to study legislation that is placed before the Senate and they make very creditable presentations. Nevertheless, the fact remains that in essence we are like what the late lamented Will Rogers used to say of himself, that all we know is what we read in the newspapers. I do not by any means disparage the presentation of legislation made by members of this house. Honourable senators who have been here for some time will remember that some years ago it was suggested we might get more legislation introduced in the Senate if we amended our rules to permit ministers from the other house to come into this chamber and present legislation. I believe that was done on two or three occasions. I was not particularly intrigued with the idea, but my colleagues thought it was a good one, and so we put it into force and amended our rules accordingly. As I say, on two or three occasions members of the Government came and presented their legislation in the Senate. I thought they did a good job, but I remember that shortly after that one of our very esteemed colleagues, the late Senator Nicol, from Sherbrooke, took violent objection to the practice, stating there was no minister who presented legislation half as well in this house as did our own members. He saw no reason for a continuation of this practice. Whether his observations had anything to do with it, no minister from the Commons has introduced legislation here since.

I am in no way reflecting on members of this Senate who present legislation as they did in my day. However, I feel grave concern that over the years—and I include the period when I was a member of the Government—consciously or unconsciously, though not at all intentionally, the Senate year by year is being down graded. That is not in keeping with practice in the Imperial Parliament, where members of the Crown sit in the upper house. Originally that was the case here, but that has been pretty well done away with. But I have an uncomfortable feeling that gradually, year after year, the position of the Senate and its esteem in a public way is not being upgraded as much as it should be. I do not suggest, as some people do, that the Government has anything to do with it. The Government had nothing to do with it in my day, when

Mr. King and Mr. St. Laurent led the Government, for I think both were favourably interested. I am quite prepared to believe that the present Prime Minister has the same frame of mind. Nevertheless, unconsciously these things happen. Governments are so harrassed with the duties and important responsibilities which face them from day to day that sometimes they do not give sufficient thought to what is going on. Then again other things take place with which Governments have nothing to do. We had a little flurry and comment in this house the other day when it was stated that there is a steady lessening of the representation of this house at international conferences. I think the specific instance given was that out of 20 parliamentarians who are going to the Atlantic Congress, only two are from the Senate. Well, the Government had nothing to do with that. If anyone is to blame it is ourselves. The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) pointed out that some years ago there were two senators out of seven representatives to the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. The Senate's representation on that body has dropped to one, and we might be lucky if indeed it does not drop out of existence entirely. The Government has had nothing to do with that; that is our fault, I suspect. I think it is the responsibility of the leaders of the Government and the Opposition in this chamber to keep themselves abreast of what is going on and what is likely to come up, and to see that their interests are looked after. As my honourable friend pointed out, it is no good to suggest that one or two more senators should attend the Atlantic Congress. As he said, quite rightly, the delegation has been named, and to protest now is like locking the stable door after the horse has been stolen. In that regard, I suggest that the Association might very well, if indeed it has not already done so, take the Speaker into their confidence, because it seems to me that in recent years the precedent that was established in connection with the delegation sent to Washington representing our Parliament is a very much fairer arrangement. I believe the proportion of representation was three from this house and six from the other house. Subsequently, I think one was added from the other house because of the problems in respect to parliamentary representation. The proportion of one-third from the Senate is not a bad basis.

I think we should keep abreast of what things are coming up and assert our rights. If for some reason no one will go as a representative of this house, that is an entirely different matter, but we should not be precluded from having a fair representation. I want to warn honourable senators that if this condition goes on year after year, circumstances may possibly give rise to the question whether we fill any place at all. Is it not so that our position in the whole structure of government or parliamentary operation is not being taken seriously? To me—and coming as I do from the Maritime provinces, I feel this intensely —it would be a calamity if for any reason the Senate of Canada should cease to exist. I know that various reasons are given for its existence, such as the giving of sober second thought to legislation, and so on; but in my view, and thinking back to the days of Confederation, the real purpose in the establishment of the Senate was the protection of minorities. A friend of mine once said to me, "If that is so, can you tell me of any instance since Confederation when the Senate was called upon to protect a minority?" With my limited knowledge of these matters I could not recall any. I said in defence that I thought the various governments that have existed in Canada since Confederation have had such good judgment that none has ever asked Parliament to pass legislation which would prejudicially affect a minority in Canada, and that if any one ever did, it would be furiously resisted by the Senate. My friend then said, "Do you believe that any government in the future would do differently?" I replied, "I don't know, but I would hate to see the institution drop out of existence through misuse, or a sort of indifference, and have that occasion arise."

Honourable senators, I think there probably is in Canada a very great difference of opinion on that very point. For instance, I would be prepared to believe that, broad and long, the people of Ontario would not be particularly interested. It must be remembered that the bringing into existence of the Senate came when Canada consisted of three geographical divisions: Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime provinces. The West then had not reached a stage of development that entitled it to representation. I have an idea that the creation of the Senate largely resulted by reason of the fact that the province of Quebec and the Maritime provinces insisted upon it, for different reasons, but very good reasons. Over the years there has been a curious friendship and common interest between Quebec and the Maritime provinces. I think that springs from the thought that one was a minority of racial origin and the other a minority based on economics. I would be quite prepared to believe that the West is not as interested in the Senate as are Quebec and the Maritime provinces. I would suspect that if ever a question arose respecting minorities the province of Quebec and the Maritime provinces would find a common ground, for entirely different reasons.

At one time I planned to introduce a motion that would open discussion on the Senate's role as a protector of minorities. I have never done so and perhaps I never shall. But I feel instinctively that the Senate has that role and that it should have greater public recognition. I am not opposing this legislation, and I am quite reconciled to the view that the number of ministers of the Crown and parliamentary assistants in the Commons as compared with the number in the Senate should be in the order of 38 to 0, but I would like to hear somebody present a reasoned argument to justify it.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I do not propose to detain the house for more than a few minutes, but in view of some of the things the honourable gentleman from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) has mentioned I would like to say a few words on this bill.

In the first place, this is not the first time that this chamber has debated the question of the appointment of parliamentary secretaries. In 1908 there was a motion made in this chamber by Senator Ross of Middlesex —I think he was a member of the Opposition at the time—urging the Government to consider the appointment of parliamentary secretaries in Canada. At that time there was a fairly lengthy debate—a practice somewhat like our present debates—which stretched out over three or four weeks, the motion making perhaps one appearance a week, and a good many of the senators took part. They referred at that time to an attempt made by Sir John Macdonald about fifteen years before to do something like appointing parliamentary secretaries when he established the Department of Trade and Commerce. Well, the opinion of the Senate was recorded, but it was quite a few years before action was taken.

Now, it is true that, strictly speaking, this bill does not affect us, and I am not too full of solicitude for the position of the people of the lower house—I think its members can look after themselves pretty well, at least they always have. But I am concerned about what might be happening to the position of this chamber and what the honourable gentleman from Shelburne has said perhaps points it up.

If we are in fact patterned on the British organization we certainly do not seem to follow it in the respect that he mentions. I find that in June of 1958—and I think this shows the position that has obtained in England for a good many years—of 19 members of the administration who are in the cabinet, four were in the House of Lords. They were not insignificant ministers—they were the Lord Chancellor, the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations, the Lord President of the Council and the Minister of Power. There were 18 other ministers in the British administration who were not of the cabinet, and of those, five were in the Lords. They were the First Lord of the Admiralty, a minister without portfolio, and three Ministers of State—one for Scottish Affairs, one for Colonial Affairs and one for Welsh Affairs. And of some 24 joint parliamentary secretaries or parliamentary secretaries or people who occupy offices of that order, two were in the Lords.

That is the position which obtains in the United Kingdom today and I think it has obtained for quite a few years. Perhaps Government representation in the upper house was even greater in other years.

In this chamber, so far as the records disclose, we have had at various times ministers occupying one or more of eleven portfolios.

We have had three members here who were Ministers of Justice: Sir Alexander Campbell, Sir Oliver Mowat and the Honourable David Mills.

We have had a Secretary of State, Sir Richard Scott.

We have had two Ministers of Trade and Commerce: Sir Mackenzie Bowell and Sir Richard Cartwright.

We have had a Minister of Milita and Defence, Sir Alexander Campbell.

We have had two Postmasters General: Sir Alexander Campbell and the Honourable P. E. Blondin.

We have had two Ministers of the Interior: Sir Alexander Campbell and Sir David Macpherson.

We have had four Ministers of Agriculture: Sir Thomas Chapais, Sir John Carling, the Honourable A. R. Angers and the Honourable C. A. M. Pelletier.

We have had a Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the Honourable Peter Mitchell.

We have had a Minister of Labour, the Honourable Gideon Robertson.

We have had a Minister of Soldiers Civil Re-establishment, Sir James Lougheed.

We have had a Solicitor General, the Honourable W. Ross Macdonald.

And we have had two Prime Ministers sit in this chamber, Sir John Abbott, and Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

I know that most of these ministers sat here many years ago. We have of course for a good many years always had a minister without portfolio leading the Government in this chamber, and I heartily agree with what the honourable gentlemen from Shelburne has said with respect to the present Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and the gentlemen who are supporting him and the kind of information they give us. But I think there was a case made in 1908, and it has been made a good many times since, that better, more extensive cabinet representation in this chamber would be an asset for this chamber. I would also point out that it might very well be an advantage in getting parliamentary business done more expeditiously. I know, and all of us know, that ministers like to introduce their own bills in Parliament. Of course you could say to me, "We did not have more ministers here under the old Government." That is true, but I think that as members of this chamber we want to look at the position within our own chamber.

I do not advocate that this bill be extended to include the Senate in the sense that we might get parliamentary secretaries here and not ministers. That would be a serious mistake.

Another point to which I think we should give consideration is this: there is a body of opinion in this chamber, and I think in the country, holding the view that this chamber would be better organized if it were fashioned somewhat along the lines of the Senate of the United States, where there is no member of the administration.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): This opinion has been expressed by responsible parliamentarians and by students of constitutional law in Canada. Perhaps we are getting to that point by default, and perhaps such a change might result in this chamber becoming more of a legislative court of appeal, being even more non-partisan and objective than it is at the present time.

Honourable senators, I do not attempt to offer a solution to either of these problems. I am much too junior a member of this chamber even to suggest what line should be taken. But it does occur to me that these are problems we should all think about, and the present administration—indeed, any administration—should give them consideration.

In earlier days when there were many ministers in this chamber, the parliamentary session lasted for three or four months. Today Parliament is assembled in this capital for five, six and even seven months. The British parliamentarians are constantly changing their rules to expedite the business Parliament does in that country. Perhaps we can take a leaf from their book in that respect, with a view to giving more serious attention to the use of the Senate to expedite the work of Parliament.

The other evening we had a vote in this chamber on the motion with respect to referring the matter of inflation to the Standing Committee on Finance. Someone said that in that vote the Government was defeated in the Senate. That is not so, because the honourable gentleman who is the Leader of the Government in this chamber, who opposed the motion, is not a member of the Privy Council. He is not bound by the rule that makes every Privy Councillor at least say the same thing, even if perhaps he thinks otherwise at times. The honourable leader was expressing a personal view by his vote, and I think that is the constitutional position we must all take.

While I am perhaps completely out of order, Mr. Speaker, in discussing the constitutional position of the Senate on the motion for second reading of this bill, I do think it presents an opportunity for consideration of the position of the Senate in the background of the appointment of parliamentary secretaries.

Hon. W. D. Euler: Honourable senators, my remarks will be brief. I had not intended to take any part in this discussion, because I am more or less in agreement with what was said by the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson), that this matter of the appointment of parliamentary secretaries or assistants is a matter for the House of Commons. In other words, to put it very bluntly, I think it is none of our business. But I am compelled to rise to disagree with my very good friend from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly).

To go into a bit of ancient parliamentary history, if I may, I was elected to the House of Commons in 1917, at the time of the great conscription election. I was a supporter of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. In their first session new members are supposed to say nothing and wait at least until their second session to speak. Many of us did not observe that tradition. I think probably one of those who did not was my good friend from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power). We are the only two survivors of that Parliament.

I had the temerity to say at that time, because I felt very strongly on this question, that members of the cabinet should be members of the House of Commons and not of the Senate. I moved a resolution to that effect because the Government had three cabinet ministers with portfolios who were members of the Senate. I thought democracy meant what it said. Now I do not feel quite so strongly about it, because in some respects we have democracy in name only. But I felt that when a minister was in charge of a portfolio and had the expenditure of millions of dollars—now it is billions of dollars—he should be in a position where he could be called to account for anything he did, and that was not possible when he was a member of this chamber; at least, he could not be readily questioned.

I do not know whether what I said had anything to do with the change, but the practice was discontinued and has not been followed since. There has been only one exception, and perhaps I should mention it: my honourable friend the Leader of the Opposition in this house (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) held the portfolio of Solicitor General while a member of this house. But his was not a spending portfolio. As a general practice, I believe that members of the cabinet should be members of the House of Commons, where they can be held to account for what they do.

The precedent of the House of Lords does not appeal to me. I know I am out of order in saying this—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You are not the first one.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Perhaps this is something I should not say, but I have never been able to understand why any person should be placed in a position of great authority, without the vote of the people, just because he happens to be born of a certain father and mother. That is perhaps putting it a little strongly, but that is my own view.

I repeat: I believe if persons are to have the supreme responsibility of being members of the cabinet they should be members of the House of Commons and not of the Senate. We can cite the Senate of the United States as an example, since there are no cabinet members in that house. As a matter of fact, there are no cabinet members in the House of Representatives. This, in my opinion, is most undemocratic. But, after all, the United States senators are elected, and we are not. The senators in Australia also are elected, as are the senators of the South African Republic. I think the Canadian Senate is the only house in the Commonwealth where the members are not elected, except perhaps the Senate of New Zealand.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There is no longer a New Zealand Senate.

Hon. Mr. Euler: New Zealand talked for some time of abolishing the non-elective feature of its Senate, and I am glad to hear my friend say it no longer has a non-elective Senate.

Mr. Speaker, I apologize for saying what I have, knowing that I am out of order. But, with due respect, I think the house has been out of order on many occasions in the past few weeks. Of course, that is no reflection on you, Mr. Speaker.

Honourable senators, I just wish to make my position entirely clear, that I disagree with the view of my honourable friend from Ottawa West that the Senate should have among its membership cabinet ministers holding portfolios.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

VETERANS REHABILITATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. George S. White moved the second reading of Bill C-31, to amend the Veterans Rehabilitation Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-31 amends the Veterans Rehabilitation Act. This act, which was passed shortly after the first war, provided important rehabilitation aids to veterans of World War II and those who served in Korea. The principal benefits under the act have been of an educational nature. Veterans have received vocational, technical, pre-matriculation, and both undergraduate and post-graduate university training under the provisions of this act. This training has been of great value to many veterans, of whom more than 100,000 have completed their courses.

As honourable senators know, the largest part of this training was given during the post-war years. At the present time there are some 60 veterans of World War II taking training, of whom 40 are at the universities. There are 25 of those veterans who served in Korea who are pursuing their studies, with two or three of them at the universities.

I would like to read to honourable senators a comment from the brief presented by the Canadian Legion to the Veterans Affairs Committee of the House of Commons with reference to the bill. It is to be found at page 198 of the report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs for Monday, March 23:

> Having carefully considered the terms of Bill C-31, we believe that none of the proposals contained therein tend in any way to reduce or abolish any benefits which are now or are likely to become available to veterans. The bill appears only to delete those sections of the Veterans Rehabilitation Act which are either no longer applicable or which are provided for in other legislation or regulations.

The record of the other house shows that the bill received the support of all parties in that house. It was then referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, where it was thoroughly examined and endorsed by all members of the committee. It had the unanimous support of the house on the third reading.

Many parts of the bill are purely of an administrative nature, whereby certain sections of the act are deleted because they apply to benefits which were payable shortly after the war, all of which benefits have been paid. There are no veterans at present who are eligible for those benefits.

If there are any questions that any honourable senator would like to have answered in regard to any particular section I may say that I have certain information which I would be very glad to give.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Would the honourable senator from Hastings-Frontenac (Hon. Mr. White) kindly tell me how many members of the military forces took advantage of the opportunity of the training offered them in colleges after World War II?

Hon. Mr. White: The only information I have is that the number is somewhere around 100,000.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I presume this bill will be sent to a committee?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes. I intend to move that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I hoped it would go to committee because there is considerable further information which I would like to obtain.

I point out that this act which is being amended is part of the Veterans' Charter. The members of the Senate have always taken a great interest in veterans' affairs. As was mentioned a short time ago, Sir James Lougheed was at one time Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, and honourable senators will recall that the late Senator Dr. King, when he was a member of the other house, was Minister of Health and Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. And of course we all recall the great interest that the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power) has taken in veterans' affairs. From the time he went into the house in 1917 he was on every committee which dealt with veterans' matters; in fact, he was chairman of most of those committees. If my memory serves me correctly, the honourable senator from Gulf was not only the Minister of Pensions, but while holding that office he acted as chairman of the special committees which were set up in that house to consider veterans' affairs.

There was one other senator, since deceased, who also had a great deal to do with the legislation which is now on the statute books in connection with matters relating to veterans. I refer to the late Right Honourable Ian Mackenzie. He became Minister of Pensions and National Health in 1939, and he served in that capacity throughout the war, until 1944, when the department was reconstituted and he became Minister of Veterans Affairs. It was under the late Right Honourable Ian Mackenzie that the Veterans' Charter was put into effect.

Honourable senators, the Veterans' Charter served the veterans of the Second World War and the veterans of the Korean War very well indeed. Since the present administration has been in power it has made very few amendments to any of the acts contained in the Veterans' Charter. There has been no substantial amendment, except a provision for increased allowances to so-called burnt-out veterans. As far as I can see, the main purpose of the bill is to shorten the present act. I think I am safe in saying that with one exception every clause in the bill repeals an existing section of the act. The explanatory notes on the right-hand side of page 1 of the bill, dealing with clause 1, read:

> The repeal of this paragraph is consequential upon the repeal of sections 4 and 5 by clause 3.

Then, at the bottom of this page, referring to sections 4 and 5, we see these words:

> There are no veterans to whom this allowance could now be paid.

Then, turning to the explanatory notes opposite page 2, in the last paragraph we read:

> There are no veterans who could now qualify for an allowance under either section 4 or 5.

And in the explanatory notes opposite page 3:

> There are no veterans now eligible to receive a rehabilitation grant.

Similar words are used in connection with each clause in the bill except clause 6, the explanatory notes on which read:

> Paragraph (c) of subsection (2) of this section permits a veteran who received an allowance under this act enabling him to take an under-graduate or post-graduate course of not more than nine months at a university to repay the amount of the allowance received by him together with any costs incurred by the minister in respect of the course and thereby qualify for benefits under the Veterans' Land Act. The purpose of this amendment is to allow the minister to pay to a veteran who repays this allowance and subsequently receives no benefits under the Veterans' Land Act the amount repaid by the veteran.

That is the only constructive clause I can see in the bill. I have no objection to it and I presume no one else has, and therefore the bill will probably receive the unanimous approval of this house. However, I still think the bill should be referred to committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. White, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

WAR SERVICE GRANTS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. George S. White moved the second reading of Bill C-32, to amend the War Service Grants Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill contains several amendments but before commenting on them I would like to say to the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) that, as he is probably aware, the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs of the other house is undertaking a review of all legislation dealing with veterans, including the Veterans Rehabilitation Act, the War Service Grants Act and the Veterans' Land Act. While it is quite true that many sections are being deleted from the Veterans Rehabilitation Act, I think the honourable senator will agree there is no further need for them and they are simply being taken out in the process of tidying up the legislation.

Several sections are being deleted from the War Service Grants Act for the same reason: they are no longer required. For example, clause 1 of the bill repeals paragraph (a) of section 2 of the act, which provides for a Board of Review. As honourable senators are aware, the Board of Review establishes the service record of a veteran who has been dishonourably discharged, and it has the right to review his case and decide whether or not it should recommend that the veteran receive any benefits under the act.

Section 2, paragraph (i) of the act defines a "home". The field men of the department have found that in many cases a single veteran resides with his parents who are either partially or fully dependent upon him for support, but the veteran is unable to qualify for benefits under the act because his parents are the owners of the home. Clause 1, subclause 2, of the bill extends the benefits to such veterans.

Clause 5 of the bill, which caused considerable debate and discussion in the Veterans Affairs Committee of the other house, has to do with benefits that accrue to a veteran who is mentally ill. The amendment extends these benefits to the veteran's wife and his wholly or substantially dependent children. Clause 5 also provides that an unmarried veteran who has been confined to hospital with a mental infirmity, as a result of which he has been unable to use up all his re-establishment credit, may apply within one year of the date of his discharge from hospital for the unused portion of his re-establishment credit.

The main amendment in the bill is to be found in clause 7, which extends the time in which a veteran may obtain his re-establishment credit. Under the present act the time was within 15 years from the 30th day of September 1947.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It was January 1, 1945, was it not, and has been changed to September 30, 1947?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes. The extension is 15 years from the 30th day of September 1947, or 15 years from the date of discharge of boys who served in Korea.

It is rather interesting to note that even at this late date there are approximately 100,000 veterans of World War II who have unused re-establishment credits amounting to $18 million. Two-thirds have credits of less than $100. These total $2½ million.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: What about the gratuities?

Hon. Mr. White: I am told that the gratuities are 99.9 per cent paid; in other words, they are all paid.

The remaining 40,000 veterans have amounts from $100 to over $1,000, which means a total liability of over $15 million. The officers of the department and the Government feel that every possible opportunity should be given to veterans to apply for these benefits. I am advised that the department is now going over the file of every veteran who still has a credit, and is making every effort to locate him to follow up the case so that they can close out his file.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I wonder if the honourable senator would enlarge on that credit balance and tell us just how it is taken care of?

Hon. Mr. White: This was a credit for the veteran. Mr. Parliament, an official of the department, explained to the committee that it was made up in this way: $7.50 a month for each 30 days' service in Canada. When a man went overseas he was paid 25 cents a day extra for service overseas, plus a supplementary gratuity, which was seven days' pay and allowance for six months' service. He said that it figured out roughly at approximately $15 a month for overseas service.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: You mentioned the total amount that is unpaid?

Hon. Mr. White: The total amount that is unpaid is $18 million, which covers approximately 100,000 veterans, and of that number two-thirds have about $100 each coming to them. The other 40,000 have amounts from $100 to over $1,000.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Is that $18 million a debt against the Government or the country at the present time?

Hon. Mr. White: I am advised that that money has already been provided and that there is no new money being spent under this bill.

Hon. Mr. Baird: In other words, these men receive this pay for only about six months' overseas service at $15 a month?

Hon. Mr. White: It works out at approximately $15 a month, yes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Of course, some of them receive part of it.

Hon. Mr. White: Yes. Many of the men who are entitled to $100 have received certain benefits and have that small credit.

A further amendment, under clause 8, has to do with veterans who came under the Veterans' Land Act. In many of these cases, as honourable senators know, a man goes for a ten year period under the Veterans' Land Act in order to qualify and obtain his title, and in many cases it has been found that the veteran, after being established under the Veterans' Land Act, owing to circumstances over which he had no control had to give up his holding under that act. In such cases the veteran, who perhaps in many cases had to start to take his education and used his credits, and then wanted to come under the Veterans' Land Act, and paid back to the department what he had already received, could not then complete his ten-year term and had to give it up. He would leave whatever he had. Now provision is made that he will be reimbursed for what he has paid back.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Have you any idea of the number that would qualify under this section?

Hon. Mr. White: I could not give the honourable Leader of the Opposition that information, but I think he can easily recall from his own practice a number of veterans who started to take their credits. Then they were helped to pay the credits back, and they have come under the Veterans' Land Act, and have got in trouble under that act, because of sickness or family difficulties. The purpose is to help the veterans who unfortunately get into that position.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I agree with the section, but I was interested in knowing how many across Canada find themselves in that position.

Hon. Mr. White: I will be glad to get the information for the honourable Leader of the Opposition. One of the officials told me this was a condition that was reported from practically all the districts across Canada; it is not something that applies to just one local district or one province.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: This would be new money, then, would it not?

Hon. Mr. White: No, I would not say that, because the veteran was entitled to these credits anyway, you see. Perhaps he had started to go to college and had received certain benefits. To qualify under the Veterans' Land Act he would have to pay back everything he was paid for his education. So he pays it back and starts under the Veterans' Land Act, and therefore I cannot see that it is new money.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It may be new money when he comes back under the grants for his credit.

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, but he really has earned those credits under the Veterans' Land Act.

Hon. Mr. MacDonald: Any addition would come out of the $18 million.

Hon. Mr. White: I would say so, yes.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Everybody is helpful tonight!

Hon. Mr. White: Honourable senators, those are the main amendments to this act. This bill also has the approval of the Canadian Legion. It was thoroughly examined in the Veterans Affairs Committee of the other house and received the support of all parties there. When this debate is concluded I shall propose that the bill be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. White, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

FOOD FOR PEACE CONFERENCE

JOINT COMMUNIQUE

Joint communique, issued in Washington on May 6, 1959, following the Conference of Major Wheat Exporting Nations, implementing President Dwight D. Eisenhower's instructions to explore means of utilizing food "in the interest of reinforcing peace", which took place in Washington from May 4-6. The Governments were represented by the following cabinet members or heads of delegations:

For Argentina:	Rafæl Garcia-Mata Under Secretary of Agriculture Buenos Aires, Argentina
For Australia:	Sir John Crawford, Secretary Department of Trade Canberra, Australia
For Canada:	Hon. Gordon Churchill Minister of Trade and Commerce Ottawa, Canada
	Hon. Douglas S. Harkness Minister of Agriculture Ottawa, Canada
For France:	His Excellency Herve Alphand Ambassador of France Washington, D.C.
For the United States:	Ezra Taft Benson Secretary of Agriculture Department of Agriculture Washington, D.C.
	C. Douglas Dillon Under Secretary of State Department of State Washington, D.C.
	Clarence L. Miller Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Department of Agriculture Washington, D.C.
	Laurence B. Robbins Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Department of the Treasury Washington, D.C.

The Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, Dr. B. R. Gen, participated in the discussion.

In addition to the delegates, senior officials of the five governments and F.A.O. were present.

In opening the Conference, Secretary Benson emphasized the need for the food surplus nations to increase their already considerable efforts to assist those peoples in need of additional food. He invited the participants, in the broad definition of President Eisenhower's statement, to join with the United States in studying possibilities for improving existing programs and engaging in new undertakings to increase the utilization of food.

Secretary Benson outlined plans of the United States to achieve more effective utilization of wheat to alleviate hunger, promote economic development, increase world consumption and expand commercial markets, which will be the subject of a separate U.S. release. He pointed out that there would be close consultation with the other wheat exporting countries to ensure adequate protection of their commercial marketings. At the same time, he emphasized that this did not in any way imply a change in the Administration's policy to seek ways to reduce incentives which result in overproduction and the accumulation of surpluses.

The Conference examined, in the light of principles established under FAO auspices, a wide range of subjects related to world trade and the use of food, particularly wheat, for humanitarian and development purposes in the less developed countries.

The Conference recognized the importance of adequate food supplies to all nations. These exporting countries share a feeling of responsibility to assist, within their capabilities, the efforts of other nations to achieve this goal.

In a review of food availability and world food needs it was recognized that the commercial export marketings of wheat by the countries represented, even though expanded somewhat, probably would be considerably below their combined capacity to supply for the next few years. In fact, unless there are striking changes in wheat production patterns and trends in the major exporting and importing countries, it will take larger movements of wheat than in recent years to prevent further accumulations of surplus supplies in exporting countries. The Conference also recognized that the real food needs of many underdeveloped countries exceed their ability to buy, and could only be satisfied commercially after a period of economic development. The wheat exporting countries do, therefore, have a very real interest in market development, in sound economic development, and in the possible use of surplus wheat in ways which will contribute to healthy economic growth and assist in emergencies.

All these wheat exporting nations, according to their individual capacities, have contributed wheat to assist other countries in past emergencies, or are doing so now.

The importance of commercial trade in wheat as a desirable force in world development was stressed. The Conference discussed means of promoting the growth of such trade to mutual advantage of exporting and importing countries. There was agreement on the necessity of safeguarding the interests of all wheat exporters in their existing commercial markets and of assuring the natural growth of the commercial world market.

In the review of existing and possible means of utilizing wheat supplies in excess of commercial marketings, it was recognized that many of the surplus disposal measures developed to date have had, as important objectives, the promotion of specific economic development projects in the recipient countries and the improvement of nutritional levels—objectives to which all major wheat exporting countries subscribe. It was agreed that these objectives are not always easily attained; that there is a need for considerably greater study of the manner in which efforts in this direction can be made most effective; and that studies and actions in this field should be directed toward:

1. Projects to raise consumption directly among specially deficient groups in the population, as, for example, through direct feeding programs, such as school lunch projects, refugee feeding and resettlements, and related economic and community development projects.

2. Projects to aid economic development, on a basis which will permit most effective use of national currency funds accruing from sales of surplus foods.

3. Projects to establish national food reserves utilizing existing idle storage facilities or newly-constructed ones.

The Conference took a realistic view of the situation. It recognized that the world wheat supply situation and levels of prices are disturbed by the stimulation of production, in most importing countries as well as in some exporting countries, by high price supports and other measures. In this connection, it was noted that some exporting countries have made, and are making, efforts to reduce incentives to over-production.

It was realized, also, that moderate increases in total distribution and utilization of wheat can be attained within the next few years with increased efforts by exporting and importing nations. There are physical and administrative limitations to the importation and distribution of wheat in many importing countries. Inadequate distribution facilities and lack of trained personnel can create bottlenecks which can prevent adequate food from reaching people who need it. Balance of payments problems may require consideration also. It will take time and effort, in addition to food and investment, to offset these limitations.

The Conference attached great importance to arrangements for ensuring the consultation required for attainment of the agreed objectives. It was decided therefore to establish immediately a Wheat Utilization Committee which will be a consultative body of governments represented at the Conference and which will be composed of officials having policy responsibilities.

The Committee will consult, as appropriate, with representatives of recipient and other countries. It will maintain a close working relationship with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

The Committee activities will include consideration of the following:

1. Possibilities of expanding the world's commercial trade in wheat, including the development of new markets.

2. Ways of increasing and making more effective the utilization of wheat surpluses for the promotion of economic development and the improvement of nutritional standards.

3. Co-ordination of disposal programs for economic development with other development activities in the recipient countries so as to ensure that such programs will contribute fully toward increasing consumption and commercial markets.

4. The establishment of guidelines for providing wheat to individual countries on concessional terms and the safeguarding of commercial marketings.

The Conference invited Secretary Benson to convene the first meeting of the Committee at an early date.

The Conference resulted in a better mutual understanding among the participants of their countries' policies, problems, and proposed actions. There was discussion of the advantages of holding similar consultations on other food commodities and with other nations.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 13, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS REQUESTED

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION REPORTS

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) arrange to have two reports, one dated August 18, 1956, and the other August 26, 1958, by the Advisory Committee of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, tabled in this house? They were tabled in the other house a few days ago.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will look into the matter.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

RESOLUTION WITHDRAWN

On the notice of motion by Hon. Mr. Robertson:

That in the opinion of the Senate of Canada:

(1) The Western world should eagerly accept the challenge of the recently launched economic offensive of the Soviet Union, and prepare accordingly.

(2) The Governments of the fifteen nations who signed the North Atlantic Treaty should take the initiative in seeking to provide for the progressive removal, over the next fourteen years, of all trade barriers between their five hundred million people and the peoples of all nations who may thereafter become associated.

(3) This action should in principle follow, as far as is feasible, the precedent already established by our six NATO partners, namely, Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, Luxembourg and the Netherlands.

(4) Since this association contemplates the inclusion of nations that are not signatories of the North Atlantic Treaty, the necessary machinery to accomplish the purpose should be entirely outside, and quite independent of, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, I am about to throw myself on the mercy of the court, and after a few brief words of explanation ask the Senate's permission to withdraw my motion. I am not prepared to go ahead today. I had thought of asking that the motion stand till next week, but I cannot disregard the fact that, while I have not lost interest in what I consider to be its importance, I shall be leaving to attend the Atlantic Congress on Friday for two weeks, and I would like to be present if the motion were discussed. At the same time, I must appreciate the fact that two inquiries which are going on here at the present time will have something to do with the subject-matter that I would have dealt with in moving the motion.

Under those circumstances, honourable senators, I would like to leave the matter to some more convenient season, until I have thought a little more about it and the time factor, before I let my enthusiasm run away with my better judgment. I therefore ask consent of the Senate to withdraw the motion.

Hon Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, may I direct a question to the honourable senator who has just spoken? In view of certain statements he made when discussing the motion proposing closed periods for St. Lawrence ports during the winter, I wonder if he would withdraw his objections, if any, to that motion.

Hon. Mr. Roberston: I might say to my honourable friend that the principles I am advocating are as undying as the ages, and a matter of a month's or two months' time makes no difference to my viewpoint.

The Hon. the Speaker: Resolution withdrawn.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY

Hon. Cairine R. Wilson: Honourable senators, yesterday the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) offered to have the reply to my queries on immigration printed in Hansard. After reading them I must say that I am far from satisfied with the answers. Considering it took several weeks to get them, I had expected to be given some information which has not been forthcoming at all.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, apropos of the answers to the questions that were posed by the honourable senator from Rockcliffe (Hon. Mrs. Wilson), I too had occasion to look at the answers and I was impressed by the fact that, in the first place, they missed the intent of the questions. And when it was stated that no statistics were available in relation to questions 1(b) and 2, I could not help feeling that the changes in the now unrevoked section of paragraph (c) of section 20 of the regulations were brought into force without basic knowledge of what the changes would mean. In other words, the changes were to be made without apparent knowledge of the effect they would have under that section.

I am very distressed that the answers were so unsatisfactory.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I did the best I could to get satisfactory answers. I worked on this inquiry for three weeks, and every day my office telephoned the Department involved. I am indeed sorry that the answers are not satisfactory. I am now told that the statistics which the honourable senator from Rockcliffe (Hon. Mrs. Wilson) thought were available are not even in existence.

I am not sure that I can do anything more in this matter at the present time, but I assure honourable senators that I shall make further inquiry and if it is possible to get additional information I will be glad to do so.

Hon. Mrs. Wilson: I have no doubt that the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has done his part.

ATLANTIC PORTS

RESOLUTION URGING GREATER DEGREE OF USE NEGATIVED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 7, the adjourned debate on the resolution of Hon. Mr. Isnor:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Government, through the Department of Transport, or any other agency or means, bring about a greater degree of use of the Atlantic ports.

With this in mind it is urged that "open" and "closed" periods be agreed upon, and that the ports of the St. Lawrence be considered "closed" ports from November 15 until April 15, and "open" ports as from April 16 to November 14 of each and every year until such times as this arrangement is revoked.

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson: Honourable senators, having heard the discussion so far on the resolution, may I say that I agree in part with the first portion of it which says it is expedient that the Government bring about greater use of the Atlantic ports. That follows along the lines of the original Articles of Confederation, and I agree that as much as possible should be done to help the development of the Atlantic ports.

The second portion of the resolution, which proposes the fixing of open and closed periods for the ports on the St. Lawrence, has provoked a great deal of thinking.

Honourable senators, I cannot see any businessman or farmer who uses, or may use, this seaway for shipping agreeing to these ports along the seaway being closed every year from November 15 to April 15. Apparently, the weather is not to be taken into account. The idea of closing down the gates of business just to increase the earning power of one section of the country as against the savings of the balance of the country looks to me very much like feather-bedding.

I have here a pamphlet called Human Events which is printed down in Washington. It describes feather-bedding in regard to many issues down in the United States, and it gives what you might say is an explanation of what the term means:

> Feather-bedding consists of practices by which workers manage to get paid for not working or for performing less work than can reasonably be expected of them; included are all sorts of work-restricting schemes, the most important of which is effective opposition to the introduction of labour-saving machinery.

Honourable senators, that seems to me to answer this problem completely. The seaway has been opened to expedite shipping, and yet one part of our dominion feels that rather than allow advantage to be taken of the seaway it should be closed for a certain time to the advantage of another part of the country. To me that looks very much like feather-bedding, and as a farmer in western Canada I am very much opposed to feather-bedding.

In my business we start working on the land in the spring as soon as the frost is out of the ground, and we keep on working until the season closes down because the land is too heavily frozen to be worked any more.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Excuse me, but I did not get your last few words. Did you say: "...until the land is frozen"?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Yes. I am sure the shipping industry would back the opening of the seaway from the earliest possible moment until the latest possible date in the autumn. In fact, they are talking, to some extent, of trying to hold the lakes open all winter.

Does the honourable senator think that by closing the seaway on November 15, or any other arbitrary date, he would stop the shipment of grain through the Pacific ports? I am sure he does not. Then, why put an additional burden on the Saskatchewan grain growers by closing the lake ports on an arbitrary date and forcing them to ship by the more expensive Halifax port? If that happened they would pay a higher rate than those in Alberta who can ship by the Pacific ports

I would like to place on record a few statistics dealing with the movement of grain in Canada for export in the last few years. These figures will be found at page 45 in the Annual Report of the Board of Grain Commissioners, 1958:

Figures for St. Lawrence and Atlantic ports—average shipments of grain (bushels):
For years 1952-53 to 1956-57, ...	126,427,000
For 1957-58	120,320,000
A decrease of	6,107,000
Figures for Port of Churchill:
Average shipments for the years 1952-53 and 1956-57	12,183,000
For 1957-58	18,359,000
An increase of	6,176,000

Figures for Pacific ports:
Average shipments for the years 1952-53 and 1956-57	100,080,000
For 1957-58	129,667,000
An increase of	29,587,000

Honourable senators, from these figures you will see that grain movement is gradually increasing to those ports where the rates are lower for the farmer in the west. I contend that these figures will show further increases as years go by. However, the St. Lawrence ports have gotten a reprieve or, in other words, a shot in the arm because of the opening of the seaway, for they can give a lower rate than formerly pertained. As a result they will be able to induce grain exporters to continue using the lake ports, probably to the same extent as before or even to a greater extent.

The honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) said, in effect, "Let us get a share of that grain and other freight shipments to enable our ports to stay open for a longer period." The honourable senator is himself a great businessman and merchant and he knows that today business must of necessity reach out for the avenues of least expense in order to function properly.

To make the Maritimes great, they must give something as well as receive something, and this must not be at the expense of the development of the central provinces. As I see it, Nova Scotia faces the seas and should depend on her great advantages, just as England has done for years in building up her country through having her ships travelling the Seven Seas. This province should not rely on the hinterland of Canada, but develop as a separate entity of the dominion.

Development of industry is the only thing that will make Halifax a great Nova Scotia port. For many years now Nova Scotia has been exporting her own men to other parts of Canada and the United States. I say to honourable senators from Nova Scotia, you have some great merchants in your province and it only requires these great men of business to develop their lumber and fishing industries and many others to induce these young people to stay there. Personally, I know of a certain young farmer from Saskatchewan who went there and built himself a fine motel and tourist business. He has been back to Saskatchewan two or three times to see his folks and has loudly acclaimed the wonders of Nova Scotia and its opportunities. Recently I have heard of young Saskatchewan farmers talking of moving down to Nova Scotia to start ranching. Apparently this province is very short of beef cattle for its own use. Why not develop a great cattle business for both your own use and export? With your softer climate than pertains in western Canada, your beef hides would make better leather than western hides, and I can visualize a time when you could develop a great boot and shoe industry. You have the potential for a tourist paradise with your beautiful scenery and fishing.

Optimism is one of the great things that carry a country forward, and rather than look in a negative manner at the great development taking place in the central provinces it would be far better to develop Nova Scotia as an entity. Your captains of industry should be selling your province, not only in words but in action, and I am sure that you can overcome what appear to be tremendous difficulties facing you at the present time.

Hon. W. D. Euler: Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for yielding his priority to me in order that I may make a few brief remarks, not entirely and not greatly on the merits of the question itself, nor to offer remedies such as have been offered by the last speaker. However, the debate has already taken such a wide range that perhaps I might participate in it to a small degree, although I come from an interior part of the country—the choicest part of Canada, of which Kitchener and Waterloo are the acknowledged centre—and in spite of the fact that there are no great ocean ports or even river harbours in that particular district. Yet we do have the Grand River, which empties into Lake Erie and thus necessarily contributes to the waters which form the great harbours of Montreal, Toronto, and even Quebec, and even perhaps, in an infinitesimal way, to the harbours of Halifax and Saint John.

During the course of the debate, since each one who spoke extolled the merits of his own city, of his own port, I rather expected my friend from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) to have something to say about the possibilities and potentialities of what I think will in time be known as the great white elephant of the Prairies, but is now known as the Saskatchewan dam.

The resolution before us is in two parts. The first part requires no argument at all, because in a general way everyone is in favour of assisting the existing ports of Halifax, St. John's, Saint John, and even Quebec, if it can be done legitimately.

The second part of the resolution, however, is more specific. It proposes, as we have heard so repeatedly, to close the ports of the St. Lawrence annually from November 15 until April 15, and with them, of course, to close the great waterway on which we have just spent some hundreds of millions of dollars. My friend who moved the resolution (Hon. Mr. Isnor) said he heard some gentleman call it a fantastic proposal. I am not going to offend my very good friend by repeating that, but I would say that the proposal is fanciful and unrealistic to a degree. Does anyone seriously suggest the closing of these great ports of Montreal and the waterway which has already cost us so much money? I would join with my honourable friend who has just spoken (Hon. Mr. Pearson) in saying that if we did carry out the terms of this resolution it is very doubtful whether it would do a great deal to assist the Atlantic ports. In fact, just before I came into the chamber I heard that the opinion has been expressed by people of the city of Halifax itself that the building of the great waterway and the keeping of it open is going to increase—I do not know in what tangible way—the prosperity of these ports down by the Atlantic. Now, even for the laudable purpose of assisting these ports it would be utterly inconsistent to close the great St. Lawrence waterway at any time during which it may be navigable. I wonder what our friend Mr. Duplessis would think of that sort of thing. He would probably be inclined to make an exception to his principle of destroying one industry in order to assist another—as he has done in connection with margarine, for he has destroyed the contemplated manufacture of that very useful and inexpensive commodity, in order, as he thinks, to preserve still another, the butter industry.

The debate has served a useful purpose: it has given an opportunity to the local patriots —I say that in all good will—to speak of the great merits, past, present and future, of the ports with which they are associated.

Comparisons are said to be odious, and I would not like to discriminate between the many excellent speeches that have been made, but I wish to single out two of the speakers, one of whom is absent today. I call them our Irish Canadian senators. I refer to Senator Connolly, from Halifax North, and the newly-appointed member from Newfoundland, Senator Higgins. Senator Connolly made a brilliant and eloquent speech which aroused both my admiration and my envy, and he concluded by quoting from the great Persian poet, Omar Khayyam, a quatrain which moved me very deeply, but still left me wondering a bit about its relevancy to the ports of the St. Lawrence and of the great Atlantic. Then, not to be outdone by his colleague, Senator Higgins also quoted from the same poet and titillated and excited the imagination and the emotions of the elderly senators that sit around me and on the other side by drawing a picture which I might paraphrase in more colloquial language as follows:

> To have a picnic beneath a tree in the wilderness, with a volume of Hansard in the hand, a bottle of wine, a supply of sandwiches and, last but not least, a beautiful woman, were happines enough for any man.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I want to thank the honourable senator for having interpreted the word "Thou" as used in the verse I quoted.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Honourable senators, I apologize for dealing with the subject in this more or less humorous vein, and I trust I have not offended the sensibilities of anyone. When this debate is concluded, the excellent speeches which have been made will, like so many others, go into the limbo of Hansard, there to remain, probably never to be read again except by those who made them.

May I respectfully suggest to the sponsors of this resolution that, since it has served its purpose, they might withdraw it and so save some of us, perhaps most of us, the duty of voting against it.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before I make a few remarks with respect to this motion of the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) I would like to make an announcement, with permission of the Senate.

I have just been advised that Herbert Anscombe, of Victoria; Archibald H. Balch, of Ottawa; René Gobeil, of Quebec; M. A. MacPherson, Sr., of Regina; Howard Mann, of Moncton; the Honourable Charles P. McTague, of Toronto and Arnold Platt, of Lethbridge, have been appointed commissioners under Part I of the Inquiries Act to inquire into and report upon the problems relating to railway transportation in Canada and the causes thereof, and to recommend solutions thereto.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Probably the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) could table the copy of the order in council?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am not sure if the document I have is a certified copy of it or not.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think a copy of the order in council appointing the commission should be tabled.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: We have a certified copy of the meeting of the Privy Council. Would that be satisfactory?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That would be satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Is it the will of the Senate that this should be tabled?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Then I will table it.

Honourable senators, coming as I do from Saskatchewan, which I consider to be the greatest grain-growing province of Canada, I feel that I should make a few remarks with respect to this motion by the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor), because for many years the construction and opening of this great waterway has been in the minds of the grain growers of western Canada almost continuously. They are of the opinion that it is going to be a great help to them, that it will increase the amount they receive for each bushel of grain grown, through a reduction in the carrying charges on that grain to the markets of the world.

The motion has no doubt been instrumental in bringing to the attention of the Government and the public generally the importance of the Maritime ports of Halifax, Saint John, New Brunswick, and St. John's, Newfoundland. We have been told how important they were during the war, and nobody will dispute that for a moment. We have also been told how important they are in peacetime and how advisable it is that they should be kept open and used to the limit of their capacity. I know every member of this house is anxious to have those ports used to as great an extent as possible, but in my opinion, honourable senators, there are at least two reasons why the St. Lawrence Seaway and any portion of it containing ports should not be closed as suggested by the honourable senator in his motion.

In the first place, in my opinion, the seaway is an international accomplishment. The seaway part of the Great Lakes, west of Ontario right through to the gulf of the St. Lawrence, has been constructed by Canada in conjunction with the United States. In other words, it is a joint venture, and without the consent and agreement of the United States I do not see how we could close any part of that seaway without getting into great difficulties. I feel sure that Canada would be making a big mistake if it made a regulation such as that which has been suggested by the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth.

Without going further into that part of the matter, I would like to state the second reason, which appeals to me more than the other, why these ports along this seaway which extends now from the head of Lake Superior right through to the Atlantic ocean, should not be closed.

I have here some figures in addition to those presented by the honourable senator from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson) in his remarks. Until I saw these figures I had no idea that so much grain was shipped from Fort William and Port Arthur through what is now the new seaway. The figures I have relate only to the period November 15 to December 15 for each of the past 10 years. For instance, I note that for that month in the year 1952 there were 84,960,581 bushels of grain shipped down the lakes from Port Arthur and Fort William, and that the average for that month in the 10-year period, 1949-58 is 50,192,073 bushels.

With permission of the house, I would place this short table on the record so that we will have before us the number of bushels shipped in that month over the past 10 years.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine:

LAKE SHIPMENTS FROM FORT WILLIAM/ PORT ARTHUR

All Grains

Period Nov. 15 to Dec. 15 (to closest date each year)	Bushels
1949	23,424,323
1950	39,743,718
1951	57,200,158
1952	84,960,581
1953	55,728,352
1954	42,059,576
1955	42,220,260
1956	54,207,960
1957	50,112,308
1958	52,263,479
10-year average 1949-58	50,192,073

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: Would the honourable senator say from what source his figures come?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I obtained them from the Department of Trade and Commerce, which in turn had received them from the Bureau of Statistics.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Can my honourable friend indicate what percentage, or number of bushels, of the quantity shipped from the lakehead down to the St. Lawrence was for winter storage in Montreal?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not have those figures for the honourable senator. The figures I have given do not include shipments from Port Colborne and other ports on the way down. I cannot say whether the grain to which this table refers went overseas or to Montreal for re-shipment, or what happened to it. I do not have that additional information.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I may say that the month and the time of the year which my honourable friend has used as an example of grain shipments represents a period of large grain movements. In anticipation of freeze-up, as many vessels as possible are put down the lakes to Montreal for winter storage, to await more favourable weather for shipment overseas.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I agree with that.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: That is a big factor in the movement of grain.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes. It is the time of the year when the shipment of grain is very intense.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Some of that grain might go to Halifax.

Hon. Mr. Emerson: Some of it goes to the elevators in Saint John and Halifax.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I do not wish to interrupt my honourable friend, but would he be good enough to put on the record the information covering the shipments for the following month?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not have the figures for the following month, nor any other figures than those already given by the honourable senator from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson).

Hon. Norman McL. Paterson: Honourable senators, if the honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) is through with his explanation, perhaps I might be permitted to throw a little light on this matter.

About 60 per cent of all grain shipments from Canada goes to liners. In summertime the liners come up as far as Montreal and in winter they are loaded at Halifax.

The St. Lawrence Seaway, as far as I can see, will not in any way interfere with the loading of grain in winter at Halifax. I have lived in Fort William, and frequently have seen as much as 10 million bushels a day loaded; one time I think we loaded 15 million bushels in one day. There are 32 elevators at the lakehead, and a ship is spotted at each elevator. In view of the fact that the insurance rate goes up on December 1, every ship operator is anxious to get his ship loaded and stowed away in Midland, Goderich, Owen Sound, Sarnia or one of the various ports. He is anxious to have it loaded with grain, because the rate for a winter storage cargo is eight cents a bushel, three cents above the regular rate. One man is placed on board as shipkeeper to look after the boat during the winter season. During the winter period the grain is unloaded in elevators as it is called for, and is shipped on to Halifax and Saint John. Practically all the grain that is stored in winter at the bay elevators goes on through for ocean shipment by liner during the winter.

May I say that the big rush we are now experiencing in the seaway indicates that it is being treated somewhat like a new toy. As you know, the ocean-shipping business is at the present time in the doldrums and cargoes are hard to get. Honourable senators have probably seen pictures in magazines of great fleets of ships tied up in various rivers and other places in England. Now many of these ships are coming over here hoping that the seaway is the answer to their lack of tonnage.

I happen to have in my office in Fort William the agency for the Greek ship Panagiotis L, a 16,000-ton ship. It got up through the canal at Welland. The unfortunate captain by this time had been aground, had damaged his wheel, hit the break-wall and damaged his bow, and he called his agency in New York and said, "Please, couldn't I go back home?" He did not want to go any further. That ship, as I have said, carries 16,000 tons and when fully loaded draws 32 feet; it can make 20 miles an hour if it has a straight run at it, but in this case it had no pilot. Every opportunity the captain got he sent a wire asking if he could not be permitted to go home. Finally, the captain got his ship up to the head of the lakes, the first ocean-going vessel of the season, and he received a silk hat or a cane and was tendered a banquet. But he found that his ship was 10 feet too high out of the water to use the elevator spout. In other words, the spout was too low and could not be raised high enough to reach his hold. Well, they filled his bow on one side and tilted him over, cut a piece off the spout, and finally, after about a week's work—he was supposed to be about two days up there—he got 7,000 tons of total cargo, drawing 22 feet.

Now we have 16 feet on the Canadian side coming down, 22 feet in the McArthur lock and the Poe lock on the other side. The captain took half a cargo out of there, and once he gets to Montreal he will fill out with enough to put him down to 32 feet.

A lot of things have been overlooked in this discussion of the seaway, and one is that at Detroit the St. Clair River bed for eleven miles is solid rock, the depth of which varies, and ships of over 23 feet draft have never been allowed to go through. If those eleven miles of solid rock are ever blasted and dredged it will lower the waters of Lake Huron because more water will be allowed through, and it will, I think, defeat its own purpose. However, that is in the cards for the years to come.

There is no place that I know of from Welland clear through to the head of the lakes where you could possibly have a ship of more than 22 feet draft, because the elevators are built on piles in such a way that if you dredge in front of those piles you will weaken the foundations. As far as I can see, it is almost impossible for deeper-draft ships to use the harbour of Fort William without building galleries to bring the grain out to deep water. Having regard to the length of time it takes a sea-going ship to come up to the lakehead, load, and go out again, unless it is finding great difficulty in getting business elsewhere it will not bother coming up and its owners would sooner take the load at Montreal.

We can carry grain in ships built for the purpose so very much more quickly and cheaply than can other ships. Over the years we have developed many different classes of cargoes. For instance, we take paper into Chicago and we bring back sulphur. We take paper into Detroit and bring back corn and soya beans to Montreal, Toronto and various other places. It is an interesting business and it is growing very fast. The peculiar thing is that up to this time last year 35 million bushels of grain had been shipped, but this year only 17 million bushels have been shipped. The reason is that one fleet—one of our competitors—is kept entirely busy hauling coal and ore into Hamilton. Canada Steamship Lines as well is very busy hauling coal and ore into the Steel Company at Hamilton. We, with our fleet, have been carrying some grain, but we are now very busy carrying iron ore from Steep Rock into Chicago and different places. The grain business is lagging, but there are very big stocks in the east. Montreal is blocked while waiting for more ocean boats to take it out of there.

This whole thing will straighten away, but from year to year everything changes. Much depends on foreign tonnage, and I would assure honourable senators from Halifax that I cannot see any damage being done to their harbour by this seaway. I think these ships will come back to Halifax for repairs, and I would say that if any port is seriously affected it will be New York, because of its very high port charges and stevedoring charges. While I cannot assure New York it will not be affected, I can assure Halifax that it has nothing to fear.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I thank the honourable senator from Thunder Bay (Hon. Mr. Paterson) for finishing my speech for me. What I was trying to point out was that during the month from November 15 to December 15 each year a great deal of grain has been loaded and brought down the lakes. I did not mean to say that that was all shipped and carried through the seaway to overseas ports, or anything like that, but the saving to the farmers in freight, even from the head of the lakes down through to Montreal, or wherever it might be stored over winter, is considerable. It is a considerable benefit to the farmers, and I would not for the moment want to do anything to close those ports and eliminate that benefit.

Honourable senators, I have stated my two reasons for opposing this motion. I am sure that we all want to help as much as we can. We want to have as much use as possible made of the Atlantic ports. I can vote for the first part of the motion, but I am afraid I shall have to vote against the second part.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words in connection with the motion of the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor). I do so for two reasons. One is that I represent the division of Alma in the Senate. As many of you may not know exactly where Alma is, I should say that it contains a very large part of the city of Montreal and, possibly, most of its harbour. The second reason I wish to say a few words on this motion is that I would like the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth to know that I look upon his motion with the very greatest sympathy. I have that sympathy because I lived for nearly two and a half years in his great city of Halifax, and during that time I was able to obtain a good deal of knowledge about its people, its problems, and certainly of its geography.

In the course of this debate the other Atlantic ports have perhaps been forgotten, but we must bear in mind that Saint John, Sydney and the Newfoundland ports all have some rights to be considered. I realize, of course, that we cannot expect the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth to feel for those ports as keenly as he does for Halifax.

As to the motion, may I point out that the course of the debate on it seems to have brought out a great deal of confusion as to the terms "St. Lawrence ports" and "the seaway". The St. Lawrence ports, generally, are not on the seaway. It is true that Montreal is at the beginning of the seaway. The St. Lawrence ports to which my honourable friend was referring would, I think, be rightly listed as Seven Islands, Port Alfred, Baie Comeau, Quebec, Three Rivers, Sorel and Montreal.

A great deal of the debate has dealt with the seaway. The seaway will be closed by nature, as has been pointed out, during a good part of the period suggested for closure by the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth. But quite apart from the seaway, I think the important thing to be borne in mind from the point of view of the St.

Lawrence ports is the fact that the St. Lawrence River is historically the great highway along which most of the commerce of the province of Quebec is carried.

I might mention too that the motion is singularly appropriate at this time, for it is just within three months of 150 years ago that the first steamboat in British North America—the Accommodation—was launched on the St. Lawrence River. The development of steamship operations on the St. Lawrence made some contribution to Halifax because a few years later the Royal William, launched at Quebec, made the first steamship crossing of the Atlantic, sailing from the port of Halifax.

The mover of the resolution mentioned the great waste and extravagance of ice-breaking activities on the St. Lawrence last winter. That has already been dealt with by more than one member of the house, but I think it should be said that some fourteen ships were held up last winter—

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Thirteen.

Hon. Mr. Molson: Perhaps it was thirteen ships. I don't think the figure was mentioned before. I am not a shipping man and I cannot give operating costs, but I would be most surprised if they were under $1,000 a day. As to the capital value of those ships, I am sure the honourable senator who just spoke (Hon. Mr. Paterson) would tell us it is many millions of dollars. I don't think the expenditure of $1¼ million for ice-breaking during those four months was excessive, in view of the fact it enabled those cargo ships to get back to their normal occupation. Furthermore, as has already been mentioned, ice-breaking is a normal function in the St. Lawrence River in order to prevent the flooding of many of our towns between Montreal and Cap Rouge.

I was very pleased to hear the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) say he was opposed to this motion in principle because of its protectionist trend. I also was grateful to him when he said that, owing to the long-standing friendship between the Maritimes and the province of Quebec, if something had to be taken away he would rather have it taken from Upper Canada than from us in Quebec. I wish to express our appreciation for that.

The other day the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power), who is not in the house at the moment, laid at the doorstep of Montreal vis-à-vis his city of Quebec the responsibility for a good deal of what sounded to me to be unfortunate acts. I dont know that we stole all their banks, trust companies, lumber companies and so on, but I only hope his prediction that Montreal may become just a whistle stop on the St. Lawrence Seaway will never be realized. I for one am quite convinced that the seaway will not cause such a thing. If the people of Montreal and the province of Quebec had felt that the principle of taking away from others in order to benefit yourself was a good thing, they might have opposed the seaway very strenuously. I would like to point this out to the honourable senator who moved this resolution, for I don't think at any time there was any real opposition from Montreal, and he might consider this fact when dealing with his resolution. In actual fact I think the development of the seaway will in the long term be beneficial not only to Montreal, but to the province of Quebec and even perhaps to the Maritime ports. At any rate, I would like to think so. The short-term view may mean we will lose some shipping tonnage in Montreal, but I think that what is good for the country as a whole must always be accepted as being good for each one of us.

Turning to the resolution itself, the second paragraph, which specifies dates for the closing of harbours on the St. Lawrence River, would, I am afraid, make me vote against it, as I am sure it would many others. The honourable senator from Halifax North (Hon. Mr. Connolly) suggested that a study should be made up of the effects of the seaway on the Maritime ports, but in view of what has been said in this debate, and the points I have made about the seaway and the St. Lawrence, it might be much better to ascertain whether the traffic now going through American ports in winter could not go through our own Atlantic winter ports. This would be more fruitful than suggesting that the closing up of the St. Lawrence ports would benefit the Atlantic ports.

Honourable senators, as I have said, I am in great sympathy with the motion, but for the reasons I have mentioned I will have to vote against it.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators,—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I wish to add a few words to what has been said in this debate. The resolution has arisen on account of the building of the St. Lawrence deep waterway, known as the St. Lawrence Seaway. The great historical event, the official opening of the seaway, will take place on June 26 in the presence of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth and Mr. Eisenhower, President of the great republic to our south. This is an event to which we all look forward with the utmost interest. The building of the seaway has been a gigantic undertaking, and I am sure you will all agree that much credit for the building of the seaway is due to the direction given to the work by the Honourable Lionel Chevrier. He has interested himself in the Seaway for many years, and in recent years he was the President of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. Perhaps honourable senators have read his recent book, The St. Lawrence Seaway, a history of the seaway to this time. It is not a book full of dry statistics. It contains a great deal of human interest and is well worth reading. I unhesitatingly recommend it to the members of this house.

I feel that the name of Lionel Chevrier should forever be associated with this waterway. I would like to suggest that a large lock or one of the great dams should be named for him, so that the interest which he took in this waterway, first as a young man living on the river, and subsequently as a leader while the seaway was being constructed, will be commemorated for all time to come.

Turning to the resolution, I agree most heartily with those who have already spoken this afternoon in favour of the first part of the resolution. That gives me no trouble whatsoever. However, the second part is rather difficult for me to accept, at least at the present time, with the information we now have before us. The honourable senator from Halifax North (Hon. Mr. Connolly) suggested that further study could be given to the question of assisting the Atlantic ports. That suggestion was ably supported this afternoon by the honourable senator from Alma (Hon. Mr. Molson). Alma, as we now know, is a most important part of the city of Montreal. I also approve that suggestion and trust something will come of it.

The honourable senator from Alma referred as well to the fact that ice-breaking on the St. Lawrence River is necessary not only on account of navigation but also to prevent flooding in certain areas along the river. From what has been said here during this debate, I understand that whether or not there is any shipping in the winter, ice-breaking in certain sections of the river is necessary every year, early and late. However, it shocked me when the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) himself told this house that an ice-breaker which plies between Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island was taken off that service to break ice along the St. Lawrence River and there was no ice-breaker in that portion of the Maritimes where it was needed. Honourable senators, it occurred to me that if ice-breaking is necessary along the St. Lawrence, it is just as necessary in a part of the Maritimes. Why deprive the Maritimes of the use of an ice-breaker in order to provide that service for the St. Lawrence River? I think that question could be considered now, long before a commission is set up to investigate the possibilities of improving the Atlantic ports.

The Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) referred to foreign shipping. It seems to me it would be very difficult to prevent foreign ships from coming into the St. Lawrence. How could we prevent a foreign ship from sailing up the St. Lawrence any time it wanted to? If we cannot, it would appear not to be feasible to close these ports to prevent shipping along the St. Lawrence at any season of the year. I plead, therefore, that in the light of the information now before us, closure of the ports as proposed is not conceivable. However, I agree with the first part of the resolution. Furthermore, I agree with all those who have said they do not fear that too much damage will result to the port of Halifax through use of the seaway.

In this debate we have heard some poetry quoted. I am not going to quote poetry, but from an article written in 1849 by William Kirby, author of The Golden Dog. In that period of Canada's development a great many canals were built: the Lachine canal was enlarged and opened in 1848; the old Beauharnois was completed in 1845; the upper entrance to the Cornwall canal was completed in 1849; the Iroquois canal was completed in 1847; the Welland canal was deepened and strengthened between 1843 and 1850; the Burlington Bay canal was widened and straightened between 1843 and 1850. Why do I mention those dates? I do so to bring to the attention of honourable senators the fact that the port of Montreal was then fearful of the effect those canals would have upon it, just as today the port of Halifax is fearful of the effect upon itself of increased use of the St. Lawrence ports.

I come now to my quotation, which I take from The Printed Word, published at Toronto. Under the heading "Seaway History" there is this:

> Halifax appears to be somewhat worried about Baie Comeau's being made a winter port for regular calls, and thus diverting some business from Halifax. There have been times when Montrealers worried about the St. Lawrence Seaway. Perhaps the citizens of both Halifax and Montreal may be soothed somewhat by the following quotation from the writings of Wiliam Kirby, author of "The Golden Dog".
> Away back on Oct. 29, 1849, Kirby (as related in Lorne Pierce's "William Kirby," the subject of the tale) wrote from Niagara-on-the-Lake:

"Montreal, until the last two or three years, was always the entrepot of Canadian trade, whether for imports or exports . . . The uninterrupted navigation of the St. Lawrence is giving her merely a passing view of the loads of freight which used to be landed on her wharves. The consequence is that Montreal is left nearly to her own "resources, and, instead of being the great port of the country, she is dwindling into the mere market town of a district." This was in 1849.

In referring to the foregoing quotation, the Brantford Expositor says—and these are my sentiments also:

Well, Montreal today is still a pretty large market town. Halifax, also, will probably remain a principal port for a long time to come.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, before dealing directly with the resolution and the remarks made by honourable senators on it, may I first say how pleased I was to hear the announcement made today by the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) of the appointment of the Royal Commission on Railways, and particularly that one of the commissioners is Howard Mann, Executive Manager of the Martimes Transportation Commission. He has for a long time been associated with transportation matters and is an outstanding authority, and I feel that his appointment is an exceptionally good one.

Honourable senators, I have a rather difficult task and, as I have stated on other occasions, I certainly realize my limitations, especially in view of the ability of those of my colleagues who have taken part in this debate. I was impressed with the remarks made by all. Naturally, I did not agree with those remarks which indicated that I was not likely to get the unanimous support of this chamber. I can quite understand that. While I did not feel that I would get the unanimous support, I did feel that I would get the wholehearted support of those senators from the Maritimes, whether they were for protection or for free trade. I felt that they would see the wisdom of supporting this motion with a view to bettering the conditions of which they also ought to complain.

Now, I am not complaining when I bring this resolution before you. As a rule I am not one of those who hang out the crepe. I have never been known for that. I am over-optimistic in regard to business matters in the Maritimes and have always shown an optimistic spirit. That is just because I want to do what the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) said should be done, just a little protecting, but along a different line of thought. I want to protect the interests of the Maritimes, particularly of the ports of Nova Scotia. That is why I took it on myself to bring this resolution before the Senate.

I want to thank the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for his very reasonable handling of the resolution, for his kind thoughts and words, and similarly the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald).

I would like to deal with the remarks of every individual senator who spoke in the debate, but if I did so I would feel somewhat like the pastor who preached longer than 20 minutes. I do not propose to make any lengthy speech, but I wish to make reference to the remarks of one or two honourable members.

I was interested in listening to the honourable senator from Thunder Bay (Hon. Mr. Paterson), who is well versed in this question through his business of shipping. He was talking shop. He gave us some reasonable and understandable facts in regard to shipping as it relates to his particular business, and it is only natural that he should bring out those points which he did.

But the western members dealt with the movement of grain in one direction. I was rather surprised to note the references made by the western senators to shipments of grain from the different ports. I had already given certain figures in connection with some ports. But for the life of me I cannot understand why the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) and the Saskatchewan senators would not give a little greater thought to the shipment of grain through the port of Churchill. Surely the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner), for instance, should have advocated to a far greater extent than he did the use of that port. To be sure, it can be operated for only a certain number of weeks during the year, but I think he should have advocated that it be made use of to its full capacity. A lot of money has been spent on building the port of Churchill.

I would like to mention the remarks of the senator who opened the debate today, the honourable senator from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson). He, like the others, dealt entirely with the shipment of grain from the lakes, and he dealt with it as though it was the only thing we were interested in from a shipping point of view.

Then he referred to what he thought we should be doing in the Maritimes, particularly in Nova Scotia, and paid us the compliment of having a very fine province, which we have —he told the truth there. Then he talked about industry and referred to the fact that I am a businessman. He is a farmer, but still I think he has business ability along with his farming experience, and he must know that the industry to which he refers exists to a very large extent in the two central provinces, because of the fact that the closer you are to the market the easier it is to market your goods. That is why there has been such a wonderful growth in the two central provinces of Quebec and Ontario, which, as I have stated on other occasions, contain about two-thirds of the entire population of the nation. I wanted to mention that in passing to show that in so far as industry is concerned we are a little bit handicapped in the Maritimes.

I said I was not going to refer to the remarks of all who took part in the debate, but I certainly do want to thank the honourable senator from Halifax North (Hon. Mr. Connolly), who seconded the motion. I am sorry he is not able to be with us this afternoon—he was called home—but he gave me permission to amend my motion, if I so desired, not to withdraw it. I have in mind, of course, that a number of honourable senators suggested the motion had served its purpose and I might withdraw it. Perhaps a good many thought I introduced the motion just to focus attention on the port of Halifax. I might have had that in mind to a certain extent, but that was not my main reason for presenting the motion.

May I say that if I have over-emphasized the port of Halifax in preference to Saint John, New Brunswick, Sydney, Nova Scotia, and St. John's, Newfoundland, it is only because, as I explained in my opening remarks, I come from Halifax, and naturally one talks about the port and the place he knows best. What I said applies equally well to any of the great ports in the Maritimes, and to the greatest of all, which is Halifax.

The honourable senator from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt) stated he was wholeheartedly in accord with the expression of opinion contained in the Turgeon Report. Then right on top of that he said he could not agree with this resolution as it was framed. Well, if he is in accord with the thoughts expressed in the Turgeon Report, I fail to understand why he cannot be wholeheartedly in favour of this resolution. I understand some of the other senators from Newfoundland are.

To my honourable friend from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson), I cannot but express my thanks for his kind reference to the days when he and I first entered public life, in 1928. I do not wish to be personal or to take up any time in that connection, except to say that we were very happy colleagues.

I have always maintained a close touch with the man on the street, and in this resolution I was expressing particularly the thinking of the man on the waterfront. I am expressing his view today to a great extent, rather than the thoughts expressed by the honourable senator from Shelburne on protection. I am as much a free trader as anyone is. We in the Maritimes know that our natural markets are in the eastern United States. Of course, there are different forms of protection. We are now well into Confederation, and we are dealing with the various provinces. I am reminded again of the story of the steel rails being laid and prosperity coming to the Maritimes through Confederation, when we would be trading with the east and west instead of north and south.

But I am at a loss to understand—and I say this in the most friendly way, because I have great respect for anyone who is a statesman, and who as a rule works along with us—why the senator from Shelburne was not wholeheartedly in favour of working out the problem as it affects our native province. It almost appears to me that he had in mind the words of Marc Antony, "I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him." Perhaps he had a little too much praise to offer, but he certainly attempted to bury my motion, if ever there was an attempt to do so.

I say to my honourable friend from Alma (Hon. Mr. Molson) that we will still remain good friends, even though we may approach this problem differently.

I also wish to thank the honourable senator from Bedford-Halifax (Hon. Mr. Quinn) for his support. The senator has not been too well of late, and I think he came to the house the other day largely to express his approval of this motion. He spoke in a most kindly way, and he showed his conviction in this respect. I wish to put on record that I appreciate his contribution.

I now come to perhaps the most reasonable suggestion that was made in the debate, that of the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power). He is always a fund of informaiton, and is always wise in the advice he offers. I regard his suggestion as a good one, although it does not carry out the spirit of my motion to its full extent. However, when you can't get a whole loaf it is perhaps better to take three-quarters of a loaf than get no bread at all. If I have the permission of honourable senators, as I have of my seconder, I would move an amendment to my motion along the lines suggested by the honourable senator from Gulf.

I hope I have not overlooked any of the honourable senators who have spoken in this debate. They will forgive me if I have done so. I could refer, as did the honourable senator from Shelburne, to the statement made on a C.B.C. television program by the Minister of Transport who frankly admitted that he did not see in the foreseeable future a practical method of keeping open the St. Lawrence River. As I explained on a former occasion, the St. Lawrence is frozen up, I feel, for the months of December, January, February and March. My proposal was to add 15 days at each end of the closed period; that is to say, 15 days in November and 15 days in April, making a full month, and bringing the closed period to five months.

In support of my proposal I do not think I could do better than show honourable senators a cartoon—I wish I had a copy for all—drawn by Robert Chambers, which appeared in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of Saturday, April 25, in which is depicted a certain senator advocating the closing of the St. Lawrence between certain dates. One he has marked "Jack Frost", and the other "Mother Nature". The heading is: "Don't worry, senator; just leave it to Mum and me." That, I think, tells a story in so far as the closing of the St. Lawrence on the specified dates is concerned.

Later on, in reference to a statement made by the Honourable George Hees in his telecast, Mr. Chambers has an exceptionally large figure of winter covering most of the St. Lawrence, and George is saying: "I personally will make no move to eject him"—that is, referring to the figure—and the heading is: "Come, now, George, don't be chicken."

Those two cartoons represent the thinking of the people in the eastern section of our country.

Honourable senators, I propose, under Rule 28—

Hon. Mr. Haig: Read it.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Rule 28 reads as follows:

> Any senator who has made a motion may withdraw or modify the same by leave of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Yes, by leave of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We would like to hear what the amendment is.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: The amendment is to the second paragraph, which would read:

> With this in mind it is urged that "open" and "closed" periods be agreed upon, and that the ports of the St. Lawrence upstream from the port of Quebec be considered "closed" ports from November 15 until April 15, and "open" ports as from April 16 to November 14 of each and every year until such times as this arrangement is revoked.

Mr. Speaker and honourable senators, you will note that the amendment consists of the insertion of six words suggested by honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power), namely, "upstream from the port of Quebec".

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I did not think he was serious when he made those remarks.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I felt he was very, very serious.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: If the honourable senator claims that the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power) was serious, I would move a sub-amendment changing the word "Quebec" to the word "Montreal".

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Honourable senators, I think I have placed my case before you. I have taken a little longer than I intended, but I could not have gone over the objections mentioned by some honourable senators in a shorter time. This motion is not made for the selfish motive alone of increasing the business of the port of Halifax, but rather because I felt it was in the interests of the whole country that we should have prosperity in each and every section instead of just spending $475 million and centering our efforts on the development of one section which is not adequate to meet the demands, with the prospect of spending an additional $100 million of the taxpayers' money on one side and $125 million on another. Remember, all sections of the country pay taxes. That would be $225 million added to the $475 million, so the motion was not made for the purpose of developing Halifax alone.

I rest my case, honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I would suggest, honourable senators, that this resolution be divided into two parts, and that we vote on each part separately. Suppose somebody came to me and said: "Have you respect for both Senator Pearson and Senator Emerson?" How should I answer that? I might have respect for one and no respect for the other, and I might say: "No", and then people would think I had no respect for either of them. I think I am helping the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) when I suggest he allows this resolution to be voted on in two parts.

I feel that most honourable senators have some sympathy for the Atlantic ports. I do not think it is right to put them in the position of voting as if they were against both sections of the resolution. It would be more charitable and more proper, and it would save face, perhaps, for the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth, if this were divided into two parts. Then he would probably win support for 50 per cent of the resolution.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion this resolution must go before the house as a whole. This motion is indivisible. It is not a question of pleasing some honourable senators and displeasing others. If there is a vote each member of this house will have to make up his mind and vote on the whole question as I will put it from the Chair.

The debate is concluded.

I understand that honourable senators have unanimously agreed that the Honourable Senator Isnor may amend his motion.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, no.

The Hon. the Speaker: In that case, having regard to Rule 28, which does not allow a senator, without leave of the Senate, to amend his own motion, the Chair decides that the motion will be put as it was originally presented to the house and debated.

The question is on the motion of the Honourable Senator Isnor, seconded by the Honourable Senator Connolly (Halifax North):

That it is expedient that the Government, through the Department of Transport, or any other agency or means, bring about a greater degree of use of the Atlantic ports.

With this in mind it is urged that "open" and "closed" periods be agreed upon, and that the ports of the St. Lawrence be considered "closed" ports from November 15 until April 15, and "open" ports as from April 16 to November 14 of each and every year until such times as this arrangement is revoked.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators who are in favour of the motion will please say: "Content".

Some Hon. Senators: Content.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators who are against the motion will please say: "Non-content".

Some Hon. Senators: Non-content.

The Hon. the Speaker: The non-contents have it. I declare the motion lost.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: Next sitting.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I notice the Order Paper for tomorrow contains two resolutions, one for approval of the Austrian Treaty and the other for approval of the convention concerning the abolition of forced labour. The Order Paper also contains five items for second readings of bills. Could the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) inform the house what items he proposes to proceed with tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I do not expect to be able to proceed with the treaty resolutions but I do expect to go ahead with item 2, the second reading of Bill C-45, to amend the Excise Act; item 3, the second reading of Bill C-46, to amend the Old Age Security Act; item 4, the second reading of Bill S-20, to amend the Length and Mass Units Act, and item 5, the second reading of Bill S-21, to amend the Weights and Measures Act. I think these will give us a full afternoon's work.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I would point out to the honourable Leader of the Government that I do not have copies of Bill S-20 and Bill S-21. Have copies of those bills been distributed?

Hon. Mr. Haig: They are in your mail box.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: These bills have not come to my attention either and I am not sure I shall be prepared to deal with them tomorrow if they are not available.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I am sure the bills are in your mail box. Copies were in my box, which is next to that of the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald).

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I understand copies of the bills have been distributed. I have mine.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am sure the honourable Leader of the Government will not insist on proceeding if we have not had an opportunity of perusing the bills.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Certainly not. There is no urgency about them and I will cooperate to the limit with the honourable Leader of the Opposition. I was merely anxious to have a considerable amount of work before the house tomorrow.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 14, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

EXCISE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the second reading of Bill C-45, to amend the Excise Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to amend three clauses in the present Excise Act. It seems most strange and rather unusual to me that a member of this honourable house who neither drinks nor smokes should be asked to explain this particular bill on second reading. I feel sure there are many honourable senators present in the house today who, because of their habits, are much more qualified than I am to sponsor this bill. However, because of this virtue which I possess by choice—if you can call it a virtue—the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has asked me to pilot the bill through the house. He has not done so for any other reason.

The Excise Act which is being amended is one which imposes, among other things, what are known as excise duties on liquor and spirits distilled and manufactured in Canada and on cigars manufactured in Canada. Honourable senators are aware that the act applies to many more classes of goods than the two I have just mentioned. However, the changes which this bill proposes have nothing whatsoever to do with any liquor or spirits distilled outside of Canada and imported or cigars manufactured outside of Canada and brought into this country. It simply relates to these products when they are made here.

By clause 1 of the bill you will note that the excise duty which is imposed under section 1, Part I, of the schedule of the Excise Act increases the excise duty from $12 a proof gallon to $13 a proof gallon. This increase, and in fact the entire excise duty which is imposed under this clause, relates to all liquors distilled or manufactured in Canada save and except one, namely, Canadian brandy, which is dealt with separately.

The next amendment to the Excise Act is set forth in clause 2 of the bill. In it the tax on Canadian brandy is increased from $10 a proof gallon to $11 a proof gallon. I quite realize that anyone reading clause 2 of this bill will not find Canadian brandy referred to as such in the bill. If honourable senators will look at the schedule to the original Excise Tax Act they will find Part II of the same relates solely to Canadian brandy, and this particular amendment relates to Part II. I might point out to honourable senators that Canadian brandy, which is manufactured from Canadian grapes, enjoys a $2 per gallon excise duty advantage, and this advantage has existed since 1942. No change has been made in the advantage which Canadian brandy enjoys under this particular amendment, and the differential in duty will remain at $2 a gallon.

The third change that this bill proposes is to increase the excise duty on cigars manufactured in Canada from $1 per thousand to $2 per thousand. This is a very simple change, and no explanation is necessary.

Finally, the bill proposes that this act shall be deemed to have come into force on the 10th day of April, 1959, being the day after the date on which the budget address was given in the other house. I understand that this has been the usual practice followed in connection with taxation changes such as these.

One further word, and I am finished. The proposed increases in duty as set out in clauses 1 and 2 of this bill are estimated to produce additional revenue in the amount of $7 million for the fiscal year of 1959-60, and approximately $8 million for a full fiscal year. The increase in the excise duty on cigars is estimated to produce additional revenue of $275,000 for the 1959-60 taxation year, and $300,000 for a full fiscal year.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, in the first place I should say that this bill is not presented to Parliament for the purpose of advocating the cause of temperance. Apparently the Government of the day has no more interest in that subject than the rest of us. That is not to say that we haven't a substantial interest in it. Certainly the Government hasn't a greater interest, because all that this bill proposes to do is to raise more money from those who drink alcoholic beverages.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And those who smoke cigars.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I might also remind honourable senators that this is a very short bill, with only four clauses. However, the commodities mentioned in this bill are not the only ones on which increased taxes are imposed. Another bill that is to come before us, a bill to amend the Excise Tax Act, is an all-inclusive bill affecting nearly everything we buy. Of course, some things are excepted. But this is just the first bill to increase taxes, so, make no mistake about it, honourable senators, there will be others.

The total sales of alcoholic beverages for the year ending March 31, 1957 amounted to $342,605,800. That total includes alcohol, brandy, gin, liqueurs, whisky, rum.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Does it include vodka?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My honourable friend asks if vodka is included. Not being an expert on alcoholic beverages, I do not know whether vodka is included or not.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It probably is.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I notice the list includes alcohol, which is separate from any of the other beverages I mentioned. Probably some other honourable senator can answer the question.

There were also consumed during the year ending March 31, 1957 wines, including sparkling wines, to the amount of $40,535,372.

The beer consumed during that same period amounted to $387,688,578.

Hon. Mr. Molson: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? Would he care to give the amount of tax contained in those sales figures?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I endeavoured to get that information, but unfortunately I did not have time to obtain it before the house met this afternoon. I would suggest that the bill be referred to committee, where that information could be obtained. It is important that we obtain the information, because it would be well to know just what revenue the Government derives from the sale of alcoholic beverages, and so far as I know the only way of obtaining that information is by referring the bill to committee. I thank the honourable gentleman for raising the question.

I did notice that the honourable senator who explained the bill (Hon. Mr. Brunt) stated that the amount of tax which it is expected will be raised, in addition to the amount which would have been raised had the tax not been increased, during the period from April 10, 1959 to March 31, 1960 is $7 million, and during a full fiscal year $8 million.

Honourable senators, naturally I am not going to oppose this bill, but I think it should be emphasized that it is a tax-raising measure. Honourable senators will recall that the Prime Minister criticized some of the provincial Governments for increasing the tax on liquor beyond the amount of increase in the federal tax. Well, I do not know how you can blame the provincial Governments. If the federal Government sees fit to impose a big increase, how can it complain if a provincial Government adds something to the tax in order to raise revenue?

Probably I know why the federal Government objected. I think it felt that the price of liquor was nearing a level where the law of diminishing returns will come into operation. Having raised the tax so high, it was a little fearful that the small amount which the provincial Governments added to the tax might bring that law into effect.

In any event, honourable senators, people who drink liquor are going to pay $8 million more next year for doing so.

Hon. Mr. Reid: They will pay it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Now, we come to the smokers, and I would emphasize that clause 3 of the bill refers to cigar smokers only. Cigarette smokers are not interested in this.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They get special treatment.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My honourable friend says they get special treatment. Well, when he brings down the Excise Tax Bill he will find it certainly provides special treatment for cigarette smokers.

As I say, this bill increases the tax on cigars. The sale of cigars, calculated at wholesale prices, during the 12-month period ending March 31, 1957 amounted to $20,442,300.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That includes imported cigars as well as those made in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That would be the total sale prices at the factories. I do not recall whether the honourable gentleman stated the amount of revenue which it is estimated the increased tax will produce.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: $275,000 this year and $300,000 in a full fiscal year.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: So as result of this bill there will be a total increase in taxation, for a whole year, of $8,300,000.

Well, honourable senators, the Government has to raise money somehow, and this is one method. I object to the expenditure of so much money, but I am not going to oppose this bill.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I think this is a good bill.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Croll: But it is brought in by the wrong people—they are not on my side. It is a good bill if money has to be raised—and money has to be raised in this instance.

However, there is one thing I object to, and rather seriously. I can understand that the ordinary, small entrepreneur who has a stock of goods on hand may increase his sale price of goods as a result of an announcement by the Government—in this instance it would be only on cigars—and profit to the extent of his inventory.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The price of cigars has not gone up yet.

Hon. Mr. Croll: But when Governments do that, it is another matter entirely. Within 24 hours after the announcement of the increase in the excise tax on liquor, the Liquor Control Board of Ontario announced an increase in the price of its liquor and profited to the extent of the inventory it had on hand. We hear a good deal of criticism of profiteering by big business, but it is no better when Governments do it. In my opinion that is unjustified profiteering by a Government. The Liquor Control Board could have sold the liquor it bought prior to the new tax at the old price, and applied the new tax on the new stock. The board did not have to pay the new tax until it bought new stock.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That would be pretty complicated, with new stock moving in.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It wouldn't be complicated if the board wanted to do it. In this instance it did not want to do it. I don't know what happened in other provinces, but to the extent of its inventory the Liquor Control Board of Ontario made an unjustifiable profit.

I think it is time a voice was raised in this house and in other places to let Governments know that such action on their part does not come any better from them than from private industry.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, I have like others an interest in this legislation. But before I make a few remarks on the bill, may I comment on the observations just made by my honourable friend from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll). I do not agree with his wholesale criticism of the Ontario Liquor Board, and perhaps other liquor boards.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: It may be true that the board increased its price, supposedly to the extent of the increase in the excise tax, and other liquor boards no doubt did the same thing. But if a year from now the Government in its wisdom—frankly, I have not much hope that this will come about—should reduce or remove the excise tax, and the Liquor Control Board of Ontario and other liquor boards have a large stock, they will have to reduce their prices to correspond with the tax reduction. So, I cannot really think there is much force to the observation of our colleague from Toronto-Spadina.

But I am bound to say that my heart was a little heavy when I first read this bill, because it clearly and unequivocally imposes an increase in taxes. I was one of those who in my innocence a few years ago believed that if we had a change in Government we would get a reduction in taxes. I recall the campaign speeches of the Prime Minister and other members of the present Government, also, I believe, by some of my honourable friends sitting opposite in this chamber. They said that economy was to be the watchword, that taxes could be reduced, that expenditures were extravagant, and that all this should be set right in the interests of the Canadian people. And the Canadian people, rightly or wrongly, believed it.

Now we find that not only are expenditures not decreasing, but the main estimates this year show several hundred million dollars in excess of the main estimates of a year ago. We have budgetary deficits, and of course the Government has to impose additional taxes.

I say—and in this particular observation I am most serious—the Government should have cut spending. When it brought its proposals to Parliament this year for its spending program, expenditures should have been cut. We can never balance the budget if we increase expenditures for ever.

On the basis of his fiscal proposals to Parliament the Minister of Finance expects that he will have an increase of 7 per cent in the gross national product this year. Very optimistic! If he reaches 3½ or 4 per cent without further inflation of prices he will do extraordinarily well. If he does not reach the 7 per cent his budgetary deficit is bound to increase, assuming expenditures will not be reduced.

I do very seriously wish to impress upon my colleagues in this house the importance of cutting down spending at this time. Every Government is over-spending. Those who were my associates a few years ago will recall that I was one of those in this house who very frequently criticized the spending of the late Liberal Government. We have been living beyond our means. As a result we had last year a great increase in money supply and a deterioration in the value of the purchasing power of the dollar, and I fear that is going to continue. That is a matter of grave concern to an increasing number of people across this whole country.

I would make this observation on the bill before us, that if the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and our colleague from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt), both of whom we all like, have any influence with the powers that be, for heaven's sake let them try to induce them to curtail Government spending.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I wish to say a word or two with regard to the remarks made by my honourable friend from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll). The purport of my remarks is to agree with him, and to say that I think, particularly with respect to the province of Ontario, that the rapidity with which this province increased the price of the commodity that we are talking about showed both callousness and indecent haste.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You are not referring to cigars?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I am talking about the liquid commodity. That is particularly so when that province saw fit not only to increase the price of that commodity to the extent of the tax that is being levied in this bill, but also to increase the price to a still greater extent.

However, I wish to inform honourable senators that there is one province which has not taken advantage of this bill as yet, namely, my province of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You should have made this speech yesterday. It is twenty-four hours late.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I do not know if the reason for the delay by the province of Manitoba in taking this step—which it will, no doubt, take in due course—is in part due to the election being held there today. Perhaps prices will go up in Manitoba tomorrow. But my main purpose in speaking in this debate was to mention to honourable senators that this is one of the great days in the democracy of my province, which will no doubt begin a new era tomorrow, whoever may be successful at the polls today.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, I want to say a word or two in this debate and mention another side of the issue. First of all, I am glad the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) has suggested that the bill go to committee, because great numbers of people in Canada are interested from another point of view than has been expressed here this afternoon. Personally, I would like to know just what effect the raising of prices has had on the consumption of spirituous liquors in Canada. Many of us are getting quite alarmed at the number of alcoholics in this country, and it is my guess—I am just hazarding it—that the raising of prices may very well increase the sales, not diminish them. Some people may think that the more you charge the less you sell, but it has not proven that way with whisky, brandy and beer.

As we all know, at one time the British Government controlled the opium trade, and it used the same argument that the provincial Governments now use. They say: "We all have liquor stores now, and we are making such vast profits out of the business that we must keep in it." I predicted that once the provincial Governments went into the selling of liquor they would never get out of it—at least, in my time.

I would like to see information brought down in committee showing the increases in the prices of liquor in past years. Also, I would like to know the number of alcoholics in Canada, which I fear is very large. I want to bring up this matter on behalf of the great temperance group, of which I am one, in an effort toward a solution of this serious problem.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I hope that in taking part in this discussion it is not necessary to declare at the outset whether I am a drinker or a smoker, although some speakers apparently made that a condition of entry into the debate.

There are a number of questions which I would like to ask the sponsor (Hon. Mr. Brunt), and perhaps he would be good enough to have some of this information made available at the committee.

The increases in these excise duties apply of course only in the domestic field, and I suppose this does lessen the competition in both the liquor business and the cigar business. In other words, it makes it easier for the foreign producer who sells in the Canadian market to overtake his Canadian competitor to the extent of the increases, and I wonder whether it places the foreign producer in any special position of advantage.

My second question has to do with a problem which has concerned members of this chamber in other years when this act has been amended. As the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) said, this bill is not an amendment to the Excise Tax Act, but to the Excise Act. The Excise Tax Act is the act under which the sales tax is levied, and that is the one with which most people are concerned. The Excise Act is a very special statute, which deals principally, I think, with alcoholic beverages of various kinds and tobacco products. For some reason or another the taxes imposed under this act are called "duties". Normally, when one talks about a duty one thinks of a customs duty, or a duty imposed at the time goods are brought into the country. I often thought in other years that the word "duty" as used in this act was an anomaly and somewhat confusing to people, even to people in Parliament.

A few years ago there was an inquiry by a royal commission or a special inquiry into the operation of the Excise Tax Act. I forget whether the Excise Act was included, but in the interests of trying to get uniformity, and, perhaps, clarity in our legislation, I wonder whether we could get some indication from the sponsor when the committee considers this bill as to whether or not that report is to be implemented, and also whether the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act are to be included in a comprehensive statute which will deal mainly with these domestic taxes which are varied almost every year by the budget.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: If the Hon. Senator Brunt speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I would like to raise one point. The honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) said something which I am not sure I heard correctly. He seemed to indicate that the tax was on domestic liquor only. It is not applicable to imported liquor?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is quite correct. It is on domestic liquor. There are two types. There is the Canadian brandy made from Canadian grapes, on which the increase in the excise duty is $1 per gallon, and on all other liquors there is a similar increase, namely, $1 per gallon, but the Canadian brandy still enjoys the same preferential treatment in that the excise duty is $2 per gallon below that which is imposed on any other kind of liquor distilled or manufactured in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask the honourable senator whether what he has just said applies only to the provisions of this bill? Is not imported liquor subject to an excise tax under the Excise Tax Act as well as to a duty under the Excise Act?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I have not the Excise Tax Bill before me. As a matter of fact, I don't think it has been introduced in the other house yet. Without looking at it I would be unable to answer my honourable friend's question.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Could I assist the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt)?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I have not the right to speak a second time in this debate.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Go right ahead.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Thank you.

When goods, including liquor, are imported into this country they are subject to sales tax as well as to customs duty. Imported liquors are subject to the provisions of the Excise Tax Act as well as to those of the Customs Tariff Act. However, domestic liquors are subject to the provisions of the Excise Act but not to the provisions of the Excise Tax Act. I say this subject to correction. This is why it seems to me there would be great sense in simplifying this tax legislation by having the provisions of the Excise Act and of the Excise Tax Act combined in one piece of legislation. I know this is something that has been engaging the attention of the authorities in the Department of National Revenue for some time, and I realize it is not an easy problem to solve. As I said before, an inquiry was made by a commission a few years ago. That commission, under the chairmanship of a Toronto gentleman—I think it was Mr. K. A. Carter, C.A.—visited Australia and some European countries to study the situation in those places. If all these special taxes which go onto commodities were set out in one piece of legislation it would be much more intelligible and much easier for business people to follow, to say nothing of the poor legislators and perhaps even the poor lawyers.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I would ask the mover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) to have departmental officials give us some definite information on the total amount of tax on, say, a 25-ounce bottle of whisky.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: Or on a gallon of whisky.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: You might suffer heart failure if you found out.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Well, I am going to ask the officials that question and perhaps this will serve as notice of it.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: In closing the debate, there is one additional piece of information I desire to give this honourable body, and that is the amount of the increase in the tax as applied to individual bottles. Under this legislation the increase amounts to 12 cents on a 25-ounce bottle of 70 per cent proof whisky.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: That is on whisky made in Canada, is it? Am I right in assuming that that is largely rye whisky?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It is 15 cents.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The 15-cent item comes in when you start to add the sales tax, which is not done under this particular act.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT

EARLIER MOTION RESCINDED

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before the next item on the Order Paper is called I should like to make a brief statement. I have just received from the Department of External Affairs a message advising that some fifty Austrians, together with the Austrian Ambassador to Canada, wish to be present in the Senate when we open the debate on the motion to approve the State Treaty for the re-establishment of an independent and democratic Austria. As this group will not be able to attend a sitting on Tuesday evening I would suggest that we have an afternoon sitting on Tuesday, at which time we could open the debate on the treaty. Then, for the benefit of those honourable senators who will not be returning to Ottawa until Tuesday evening, the debate could be adjourned until 8 o'clock, that night. It has also occurred to me that we could postpone the treaty discussions until Wednesday.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) will be explaining the treaty provisions to the house and I have not had an opportunity of asking him whether Wednesday would meet the convenience of the Austrian party.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, the circumstances are these. Trans-Canada Air Lines is inaugurating an air service to Vienna next Monday or Tuesday. The inaugural flight from Vienna to Canada will carry a group of fifty Austrians, who will arrive in Ottawa next Tuesday morning. Officials in the External Affairs Department have suggested, unfortunately only within the last hour, that it would be most appropriate if these Austrian visitors could attend the sitting of the Senate when the Austrian Treaty is being discussed here.

Plans have been made for the Austrian party to be present in the Parliament Buildings between 2.30 and 4 o'clock on Tuesday, and, as I said before, officials of the Department of External Affairs believe it would be most appropriate if the group could be present in this chamber at 3 o'clock in order to hear the opening of the discussion.

Hon. Mr. Reid: On Tuesday?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes. They cannot be here Tuesday night because the Austrian Ambassador has arranged a dinner for them at that time. Those are the circumstances as they have been related to me.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Under those circumstances it seems to me that the only avenue open is for me to move, with the consent of the seconder and with leave of the Senate, that the motion passed earlier this afternoon to adjourn until next Tuesday night be rescinded. If the motion to rescind is agreed to I will then move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock. As I have said, we could continue the discussion of the treaty Tuesday evening for the benefit of those honourable senators who have already left Ottawa and who will not be returning before then.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask if it is contemplated to refer this treaty to the Committee on External Relations, as has been the custom in the past? In that committee one gets more information in five minutes than during a plenary sitting of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: As usual with these treaties, we cannot change them at all, we have either to adopt or reject them. During the time I have been Leader of the Government in the Senate I cannot recollect any treaty having been referred to the committee, except NORAD.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: If my honourable friend will permit me, may I say that, as former chairman of the External Relations Committee, I can recall at least five different treaties—relating to trade with Japan, Italy, and other countries—that were referred to the Committee on External Relations. Departmental witnesses were heard, and I think that members of the committee and of the Senate as a whole were in that way able to obtain information they never would have had otherwise.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I was just referring to the time I have been in this position as leader. I accept the statement made by the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert), and I am sure there will be no objection to the treaty going to the committee for further consideration. With the leave of the Senate, I move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), that my earlier motion with respect to adjournment be rescinded.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I now move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition, that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday, May 19, at 3 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

OLD AGE SECURITY BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John G. Higgins moved the second reading of Bill C-46, to amend the Old Age Security Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I move second reading of this bill, seconded by the honourable Senator Buchanan—although I think the name Buchanan might more appropriately be connected with the previous bill.

This is an amendment to the Old Age Security Act, which was passed in 1952. The amendment is a very brief one, and I shall perforce be brief. It consists of only three paragraphs. The amendment provides for an increase in the amount of the tax by which the money to pay old age pensions and security is raised. This money is raised by a tax on the sale price of goods, on personal incomes and on corporation income, and so far as I understand the amount received has been insufficient every year. In every case the tax is increased from 2 per cent to 3 per cent.

The old age pension was $40 per month under the act of 1952; it was increased to $46 in 1957, and in the same year it was raised again to $55.

Section 10 of the act of 1952 provided for the levying of a sales tax of 2 per cent on the sale price of all goods in respect of which taxes are payable under the Excise Tax Act, and by a tax of 2 per cent on the taxpayer's taxable income for the year, and by a tax of 2 per cent on the taxable income of a corporation for a year. The amendment is a substitution of 3 per cent for 2 per cent in every case.

Clause 1 of the bill raises the tax from 2 per cent to 3 per cent on the sale price of goods, and makes the payment retroactive to April 10, 1959. As explained in the debate on the previous bill, that was the day after the budget was brought down.

Clause 2 of the bill raises the tax from 2 per cent to 3 per cent on taxable income, with a maximum tax of $90. It provides, however, that for the year 1959 the amount payable by a taxpayer is only 2½ per cent, with a maximum of $75; that is to say, the tax of 3 per cent is not paid on the whole year and the taxpayer really pays for ten months.

Clause 3 increases the amount of tax in the case of companies other than corporations liable to pay tax under section 70 of the Income Tax Act, the increase being from 2 per cent to 3 per cent on the taxable income for the year. Section 70 of the Income Tax Act deals with non-resident-owned investment corporations which pay 15 per cent tax, irrespective of whatever income they make. A non-resident-owned corporation is one of which at least 95 per cent of its aggregate value of issued shares, and all its bonds and securities are beneficially owned by non-residents, and of which not more than 10 per cent of its gross revenue is derived from rents, and whose principal business is not the making of loans or dealing in mortgages, bills, notes, etc. Such a company pays only 15 per cent, irrespective of its profits in a year.

Provision is made in this bill for a company which has a tax year that does not end on December 31 of any year. Thus a company whose taxation year ends on October 1 would pay a tax in respect of 1958 for one-quarter of the year at 2 per cent, and in respect of 1959 it would pay for nine months at 3 per cent, which would make up the whole year.

The amount that will be obtained under this bill in the case of any year—not taking into account 1959, because the increased taxes apply to only a portion of 1959—is, in the case of personal income tax, $75 million; in the case of corporation tax, $28 million; and in the case of sales tax, $93 million; making a total of $196 million. In 1959, in view of the fact that most of the amount will be collected only as from April 10, that is for a little over nine months of the year, personal income tax will yield $41 million; corporation tax, $20 million; and sales tax, $82 million, making a total of $143 million.

The estimated total tax under the act for the year 1959-60 is $536 million.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, on June 10, 1957, when the present Government was returned to office, it owed its victory in very large degree to the fact that it had promised to increase the old age pension. Up and down the country people supporting the Conservative party harangued the public on the fact that the administration of that day was overtaxing the people and could well afford to increase the old age pension without increasing taxation. That was their theme. And it paid big dividends as far as the present administration is concerned, for it was elected. Today it is in power with one of the largest majorities that any Government has ever had, largely, I repeat, due to the fact that it promised the people of this country that old age pensions could be increased without any increase in taxation. Taxes were far too high, according to the present administration, and it promised not only to reduce them but to return some of the money to the people by way of increased old age pensions. Well, it proceeded to give some of the money back by way of increased old age pensions. How? By reducing taxation? By leaving taxation at the level at which it was when it assumed office? No. It went the former administration one better and over-taxed beyond the over-taxation which it claimed had been put into effect by the former administration. The tax level was said to be too high then. Well, the Government has forgotten all about that now and taxes have risen to greater heights than ever. We now have a tax level higher than at any other time in the history of this country, despite the fact that the administration went into office on the promise that the tax level would be reduced.

If the Government did not know before the election it soon found out that it could not increase expenditures without increasing taxation. True, it increased the old age pension, but it is increasing taxation. Why? Because the deficit in the old age pension account was getting too great, and I would like the sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Higgins) to tell me whether now, even with the increase in the old age pension tax, the fund is being run on an actuarially sound basis. I think the house is entitled to that information. If the honourable senator has not got the information now he might ask the officials who come before the committee to have it for us.

What is the status of the old age pension account at the present time? Why is taxation for old age pensions being increased?

In 1955 the excess of payments over receipts was $63,300,000; in 1956 that excess was reduced to $50 million. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1957—and you will recall that the former administration was in power at that time—the excess of payments over receipts had been reduced to $7,500,000. But in the first year of the present Government's administration the excess of payments over receipts increased to $102,400,000.

Hon. Mr. Haig: In what year was that first increase?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have given the figures for the years ending March 31, 1955, 1956 and 1957.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Did you give the increases from 1957 on?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am now giving them.

For the year ending March 31, 1957 the deficit had been reduced to $7,500,000 but by March 31, 1958—and my honourable friend surely remembers that day, for that was the day of the great victory of the present administration—the excess had gone up to $102,400.000.

Hon. Mr. Haig: But there was no change in the tax rate until after the first of October 1957.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I don't think there has been any tax increase until the present time.

Hon. Mr. Haig: There was no increase in payments until the first of October 1957.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Well, that makes it all the worse.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The first increase was the one of $6 that the former Government gave, but the Conservative Government did not increase the amount until the first of October 1957.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think it was the first of October, 1957. The result was that on March 31, 1958, largely as a result of that increase, the excess of payments over receipts had gone up to $102 million.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: But the former Government had increased the pension by $6 and part of that would be in there.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes. The former Government had increased it on July 1, 1957.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: And that stood until October.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That stood just until October.

Hon. Mr. Haig: It was not paid in October, it was the first of November when it was paid.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Anyway, the present administration, if it wants any credit for it, has the credit for the fact that from March 31, 1957 to March 31, 1958 the deficit increased from $7,500,000 to $102,400,000.

Probably my friend will be interested in the next statement.

The deficit—this is estimated—on the 31st of March, 1959, was $184 million. So the account has continually been going into the red more and more.

Well, what did the present Government do? It can't pay out money it hasn't got. So it had to forget all about its promises and face the facts. Now it has come to us with an increase in taxation on account of old age pensions, and there is nothing we can do about it. However, we can always remember this lesson: the more money a government spends the more it must collect.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I wish to say a word or two in this debate.

In 1957 the Liberal Government brought down in its budget an increase of $6 in the monthly old age pension allowance. The present Government increased the benefits by $9 from December 1 of that year. So this administration is responsible for only about half of the total increase.

I fail to find anybody who will produce a statement as to what the present Government did. I happen to know of my own knowledge that there was no statement issued until after the election of that year was over. Old age pensions were not an issue in the 1958 election, because the legislation was passed in the fall of 1957. Honourable senators will remember that I had the honour to be Leader of the Government in this house, and I presented the legislation raising the monthly payments from $46 to $55.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Without increasing the taxes.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Yes. But part of the increase over the original pension, namely $6, was made by the former Government in the same year. So almost half of the increase came in under the former Government's legislation. It all turned on the fact that the revenues were not as great that year as they had been in some previous years, and no matter what Government had been in power at that time, it would have been faced with a decline in revenue. Now, all that this bill seeks to do is to bring income on old age pension account up to expenditures, which is as it should be.

I probably should not say this, but in my opinion the mistake is in the old age pension plan itself. I am not saying this as a member of any Government, but on my own responsibility. I am not trying to bind any Government. But I do ask: Why in the world should any Government present old age pension legislation giving benefits to men and women who have no need for the money at all? That is the criticism you ought to be making today. That is the criticism of the people who are paying the taxes on it now. I am glad the people who have benefited by this legislation, and who did not need the money, have to pay taxes to reimburse the Government. Under any system of welfare, the minute you throw the door wide open and say that everybody over 70 years of age, regardless of means, should have the same old age pension, you are on very dangerous ground. No welfare system in the world can stand that kind of attack without increasing taxation right through the piece. No matter how long we stay in this house it will come up year after year, because the system is wrong in itself.

We as Anglo-Saxons, as Canadians, have been very hostile to welfare schemes, but not because we do not wish to help the other fellow. I well remember when I was in the Manitoba Legislature, in 1934, a man broke a window in Eaton's store in my city and took two loaves of bread to feed his children. He was threatened with arrest, but the Attorney General of the province did not have him arrested. That man had six children, no job, and nothing to eat. A condition like that may exist in certain places from time to time and I do not want to see anyone suffer for lack of work or food. I entirely agree with the view of the present Prime Minister, that the unemployed must be taken care of. That is the whole substance: they must be taken care of.

Hon. Mr. Baird: Half of them won't work.

Hon. Mr. Haig: That isn't true. In my city there are a few who won't work, but the great majority will if they have a job to do. Some of them may not know how to do a certain job, or don't like to do it, and there may be some loafers. Even in my class at school there were some loafers, but finally we had to get to work.

I am glad we have the old age pension. I know people in my city who now have what I call a decent living by reason of the pension; without it, I don't know how they would get along. They have lived there for as long as 50 years, are now very old and need help. I have no criticism of taxation for that purpose. But from day to day I hear honourable senators on the other side saying we should do thus and so, all of which costs money, which has to be got by taxation, and they criticize the present Government when it raises taxes. I say that is pure hypocrisy.

We in Canada today have to realize that we are caught in a world struggle, and we must pay our share in that struggle. We are going to have a discussion in one of our committees about money matters, but it will all get back to the one fact, that we are in a world that is dangerously upset. We look back in history two or three hundred years, back to the days of old dictatorships that we thought were gone for ever. Now they are coming back on us again, and we Canadians have to stand up and fight.

I do not like to hear criticism of a Government which is carrying out a policy that was made by another Government. I am in favour of this legislation. At the same time, I am economical. I don't like to waste my money, I like to keep it rather than throw it away. I taught my children the philosophy—and I know you have taught yours the same—that their responsibility today is greater because they have the dollars to spend to look after the other fellow. I am glad to see the Government face the music and charge the cost of this pension system up to the people, because the people who are paying for it are able to pay for it. If I earn an income I am willing to pay my share of the taxation required to take care of the fellow who is out of a job or who needs money.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: My observations, honourable senators, will be brief.

I have never been an admirer of the present system of old age pensions. That does not mean that I am necessarily opposed to some system of pensions. My colleague from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) who has just addressed the chamber rather intimated that this legislation is necessary because the former Government instituted a system of old age pensions. It is true that the original legislation was passed by the Liberal Government. But if my honourable friend had reflected he would have recalled that this question was the subject of an exhaustive inquiry before a committee of the other house, or it may have been a joint committee, and the committee unanimously recommended the institution of an old age pension plan precisely as we have it today. The criticism in my own mind at that time was that the legislation was not as fully considered as it should have been. No party wanted to object to old age pensions. In fact, the parties were vying with each other in their approval of this principle.

A parliamentary committee is probably not the wisest body to consider a matter of this kind objectively. Ten years or so ago, when this committee brought in its report, an election was pending. No one was going to get up and say: "I am opposed to pensions", or: "I am opposed to this particular form of pension." Everyone was afraid that might have an adverse effect on the political fortunes of his party.

So there was evolved this theory that the pension was payable as a matter of right. That is a principle that I have never agreed with, and I do not agree with it today. If we have to pay pensions—and we have to—let us pay them on the basis of compassion, not as a matter of right. Why should a man, for instance, who has been successful in business and who has an income of $50,000 or $100,000 a year, or even $15,000 or $25,000 a year—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Or less.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: —who is wholly able to look after himself and his dependents, have a pension as a matter of right? I disagree with that completely.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Would you not have a very difficult administrative problem otherwise? Where would you stop? Would you say the man who has $3,500 a year should get a pension, but the man who has $3,600 a year should not?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: No. That opinion has been expressed in the past as being one of the insuperable difficulties in paying pensions where needed. But if you based pensions on need there would be no shame or discredit on anyone who applied and gave the facts of his circumstances, and it would be an easy matter to provide a basis or a code to cover all such cases.

What are our old age pensions costing today? The bills this year are running, I think, pretty close to $600 million, if my memory serves me correctly. The fund has been in deficit on the basis of the estimates made originally to cover it. This bill proposes to increase the revenue but I venture to say that the bill will not provide enough revenue to pay the full amount of the pensions. If we suffer a decline in our economic affairs it is going to be reflected unquestionably in the revenues of this fund. In the past large sums—I have forgotten at the moment how much—have been paid out of the treasury to bolster the fund, and those are taken, in another fashion, out of the pockets of the taxpayers.

I do not like dressing this thing up in a beautiful fashion and saying: "Well, we have a special formula, the 2.2.2 formula—2 per cent of the income tax, 2 per cent of the corporation tax, and 2 per cent of the excise tax—to provide the funds." Although dressed up in that way it is, nevertheless, a tax on the people as much as any other kind of a tax is.

I hope I have made it clear that I am in favour of a means test for the payment of old age pensions. It could be worked out without difficulty.

One other observation I wish to make is that this legislation imposes an additional tax of 1 per cent on individuals, up to a limit of $90, but on corporations without any limit. I know it is fashionable to knock the corporations. They are the big rich people; let them pay the taxes! But that does not make economic sense.

Only a short time ago I happened to fall into conversation with the president of one of the large pulp and paper companies in Canada. I asked him the rather banal question: "Well, how are you finding business?" He said: "We are having increasing trouble." Where is his trouble coming from? It is coming from Scandinavian countries and countries like Poland, and will come, honourable senators, within a few years from Russia. As we know, Russia operates under a wholly different economic system from ours, but in the Scandinavian countries the wage scale is very substantially below what it is in Canada.

The same is true of iron and steel products. As a matter of fact, I am told and, I believe, reliably, that iron and steel products coming from Belgium, Great Britain, Germany and France are being laid down in Toronto at a cost that makes it impossible for the Steel Company of Canada, which is less than 100 miles away, to compete.

The effect of this legislation is to increase the burden on every producing company. If a company has a profit of $10 million a year its increase in taxes will be 1 per cent of that, and it is easy to calculate the amount.

There was a noted economist who lived during the middle of the last century, if I recall correctly, who stated that the power to tax is the power to destroy. We have gone about imposing our taxes in a light-hearted fashion and without any thorough study of the incidence of the tax—that is, without regard to what effect the taxes will have.

I have spoken of a few corporations. Our lumber people are finding the same thing as the others, and the effect on our economy in the next few years may be very serious. Today our exports are decreasing. Why? Because we are pricing ourselves out of the markets where we used to sell our goods. Furthermore, our imports have been rising because goods can be produced more cheaply in other countries, goods which compete with the products of our own manufacturers. I am all for competition. I don't wish to see artificial restrictions of trade at all. They are not the means by which we are going to cure any economic ills we have. I simply wish to point out to the house that the effect of this legislation, which we seem to pass without a great deal of consideration or thought, will add to our costs in world competition and may be far-reaching in its ultimate consequences.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, I do not intend to detain the house long. Bill C-46 is simple and direct in its intent and I have no quarrel with it, because bills must be paid, and the days of reckoning or bookkeeping accounting are upon us. As the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) has said, we have to face the music. That is okay with him and it is okay with me.

This bill attempts to remedy a failure in the application of the important pay-as-you-go principle in the Old Age Security Act, which was agreed to, incidentally, by all parties in the Joint Committee on Old Age Security back in 1950. The committee simply recommended there should be a separate bookkeeping account for the Old Age Security Fund and that three tax sources should be earmarked for that fund. It was hoped that the moneys coming in would balance the disbursements. We started with a deficit, and slowly we decreased that deficit to $7½ million, as the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) pointed out. We were slowly coming closer to balancing off that relationship between the costs and the benefits. This relationship is variously described as self-sufficient, actuarially sound, bookkeepingly sound, integrity of fund, pay-as-you-go principle, and so on.

I should like to interpret this bill as a kind of commitment in practice that the views of the joint committee were essentially sound, that the fund should be on a sustaining or pay-as-you-go basis, and that these basic principles will be adhered to in the future, even though circumstances might oblige us to change the ground rules again with regard to the amount of pension or the age or what-have-you.

I think in this context the observations of the honourable Leader of the Opposition concerning former promises were pertinent, and

I should like to reiterate the importance of the question posed by him as to how long this statutory change will serve us.

The sponsor of the bill said that increased revenues during a total year are expected to amount to $536 million. I presume that is for the next total year. At any rate, for that next total year what in effect will be the disbursements out of that fund and what will be the deficit, and are we really coming close to that pay-as-you-go principle?

The fact remains that if we accept the premise on which everybody gets a pension of a certain size at 70 years of age, then we are faced with the problem that the life expectancy of those who reach 70 is gradually increasing. In other words, the number of people who reach 70 live longer. Secondly, the number of boys and girls who are born and then reach 70 is also increasing, so that in the past five years I believe the number of recipients increased by about 20 per cent, or 4 per cent a year. Now, what is the anticipated increase in the number of recipients in the next five years, and what will the fund look like with the revenues coming in on this new basis and the disbursements going out in the next one to five years, so that we would have some sort of idea of the effect of this legislation? Certainly there should be some projected figures for the revenues and the disbursements.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The life expectancy is also increasing.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Yes. There are two factors, two gimmicks, and we are pleased they exist. One is that more people are reaching 70 years of age, and secondly, those who reach 70 live longer. Therefore, the 4 per cent annual figure of increase in the number of recipients could conceivably grow, and I think it is important for us to know what the calculations are.

The honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) raised the problem with respect to no limit for corporation taxes as opposed to the $90 limit which is in the present statute for individuals. That is true, and there is an anomaly there that probably should be looked into. I am mischievous enough to suggest I just don't understand the principle behind the limitation of $90 for individuals. If there is such a principle, and if it is a very important one, probably it is geared to the benefits-received concept or something. I don't know, but if it is, then either it should apply to both or it should not apply to either one, and everybody should pay as much as he can by virtue of the amount of income he receives.

This afternoon I checked with the Annuities Branch to try to determine where this $90 maximum came from. I wanted to establish some sort of a relationship. Interestingly enough, I found that if I were 21 years of age I could buy an annuity at a cost of roughly $49 a year, which would bring me a monthly pension of $55 at age 70. Now, there may or may not be a relationship here, but if this bill goes to committee I will be very interested in knowing where that concept of limitation of $90, which was previously $60, came from.

Honourable senators, I brought with me two volumes of a report by Professor Robert M. Clark, entitled Economic Security for the Aged in the United States and Canada. I must confess I have read only the first volume and certain parts of the second, particularly those which I recently discovered dealing with inflation.

Hon. Mr. Reid: You have done well.

Hon. Mr. Wall: I think it is a propitious time today to bring to the attention of the Senate this report and to ask whether in the light of the simplicity and the directness of the intent of the bill now under discussion one might ask, "What about this interesting report with its fund of valuable analytical information, upon which suggested recommendations to the old age security program could be made?" I want to direct your attention to four problem areas which are discussed in this report, and pose the question: What is going to be the ultimate fate of these four problem areas and of the report as such.

For example, has the Government taken into account and into consideration the comments and the observations of Dr. Clark regarding the burden and the distribution incidence of the three tax sources we have been discussing as compared to their eventual utilization or distribution through old age security payment? I would refer honourable senators to pages 321 to 326 of this report.

Then the concept of the adequacy of old age security payments is raised and on what bases or principles benefit payment could be changed in the future in the light of events; and there we hit squarely the problem of inflation. At page 605 of the report Dr. Clark states flatly that unless vigorous and co-ordinated policies to fight inflation are put into effect, and soon, the price levels in Canada will double again within two and not more than three decades.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: This is not a debate on inflation.

Hon. Mr. Wall: I know that, but it is certainly pertinent to the problem.

Then on page 32 Dr. Clark states the effect of inflation upon old age security and other insurance payments, in these words:

> Both social and private insurance are undermined by inflation which in this report will be defined as a rise in the general price level.

And the whole of chapter 18 in the second volume discusses inflation and the effects of inflation upon pensions and other provisions which people make for their old age.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Can the honourable senator tell me the date of the report? I think he gave the date, but I did not hear it clearly.

Hon. Mr. Wall: I do not think I did. I do not know the exact date, but it was filed in 1959. I do not know the date of the filing, for that is not given. It is a very current report.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It was tabled in this house.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Yes, it was tabled in this house. It was presented to the honourable Minister of National Health and Welfare on February 15, 1959.

In that particular chapter there is a long discussion on the problem of protecting pensions and old age security payments from inflation, and it would be significant and important, I think, for us to know what the problems are.

Then further there is another problem area that he raises, which is also interesting and that is the whole problem of old age assistance, in which area, as honourable senators know, the federal Government contributes 50 per cent and the provincial Government 50 per cent. It is upon a means test basis, involving payments up to $55 a month under the old age assistance for people from ages 65 to 69.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask the honourable senator if he knows whether the payments under that act are made from the funds that are received under this act?

Hon. Mr. Wall: No, they are not. But there is a problem which Dr. Clark raises in this whole context of old age security, and that is the problem I would like to point out. On page 307 he says:

> It will be noticed that the provinces in which the largest proportions of persons aged 65 to 69 are on old age assistance are those in which the lower average personal incomes per capita are found.

He goes on to point out by charts and tables that the highest percentage of people who are not able to subsist after the age of 65 are found in the provinces of Newfoundland and in the other Atlantic provinces, plus Manitoba and Saskatchewan, interestingly enough; and raises the whole problem of adjusting the transfer payments from the dominion to the province, or something, so as to balance off this extra burden which does fall upon the provinces where they have the lowest per capita income, and also the highest number of people aged 65 to 69 who are not able to take care of themselves. He suggests that that problem area needs further study.

He also raises the whole problem of supplementary contributory pension scheme to be added to the universal coverage that we now have on more or less of an insurance basis.

I am raising these problems and bringing this report to the attention of the honourable senators simply with the request that perhaps this report should not be forgotten or overlooked, and that at some appropriate time, probably at the next parliamentary session, this report, plus other problems dealing with old age security, might receive study or attention, perhaps from our Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Reid, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 19, at 3 p.m.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-38, to make provision for the reduction of certain class and commodity rates on freight traffic.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I lay on the table the following document:

Report by the Chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Advisory Committee to the Minister of Labour, dated August 26, 1958. (English text).

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear. Better late than never.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I wish to say in reply to the request by the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) on May 13, that the report of July 8, 1958 on the state of the Unemployment Insurance Fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958 was tabled in the Senate on August 20, 1958.

I also table:

The Canada Gazette, Part II, Statutory Orders and Regulations, 1959, Wednesday, May 13, 1959, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, Chapter 235, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Exchange of notes between Canada and the U.S.A. concerning the establishment in Canada of Short Range Tactical Air Navigation Facilities at Nine Sites (Tacan). Signed at Ottawa, May 1, 1959. (English and French texts).

AUSTRIA

RESOLUTION OF APPROVAL OF STATE TREATY

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved, pursuant to notice:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the State Treaty for the re-establishment of an independent and democratic Austria signed at Vienna, May 15, 1955, and that this house do approve the same.

He said: Honourable senators, in speaking to this resolution this afternoon I am sure that we all take great satisfaction in knowing that we have as interested spectators in the visitors' gallery of this chamber a group of distinguished Austrian nationals who are on a visit to Canada. They are in this country as guests of Trans-Canada Air Lines to commemorate the beginning of a new passenger air service between Canada and Vienna, Austria. May I express on behalf of all honourable senators a cordial welcome to this group as guests in our country and as visitors in this chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Let me also say of their country that although the new Austria adheres scrupulously to its policy of military neutrality, it has constantly demonstrated its devotion to democratic and humanitarian values. A fine example of this was the way in which it gave refuge to 180,000 Hungarians during their recent tragic struggle for freedom.

I have some personal knowledge of this outstanding service to humanity, having had the honour of being joint chairman of the Canadian-Hungarian Relief Fund, which two and a half years ago raised in Canada well over a half-million dollars to aid in the relief of Hungarians who escaped their country during this critical period.

Honourable senators, the late Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Sidney Smith, announced in the House of Commons on February 26 the intention of the Government to request Parliament to adopt a resolution approving the accession by Canada to the State Treaty for the re-establishment of an independent and democratic Austria which was signed at Vienna on May 15, 1955.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Why has it taken four years to bring in this resolution?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I think perhaps the answer to that question will become apparent as I go on with my remarks.

The resolution which I have the honour to introduce gives the Senate an opportunity to express its views on this treaty, which terminated the Four-Power occupation of Austria and permitted its re-establishment as a sovereign state. The Austrian State Treaty was negotiated between Austria, the United States, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and France. Other countries were not consulted, but provision was made for the accession of those which had fought against Nazi Germany. Because of the importance of the treaty to her, Austria wishes that as many friendly countries as possible should accede, and has invited Canada to do so.

Prior to Mr. Smith's announcement, the countries which had exercised their rights to accede were Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Mexico, and Brazil.

I will not attempt to deal in detail with the negotiations which preceded the signing of the treaty. However, I might touch on the high points. In October 1943 the United Kingdom, the United States and the U.S.S.R. declared in the Moscow Declaration their resolve to establish a free and independent Austria at the conclusion of hostilities. France associated herself with this declaration in November of the same year. Following the capitulation of Germany in 1945 and the subsequent Potsdam Conference, the Allies, on the basis of the frontiers which had existed before Austria had been forcibly incorporated into the German Reich in 1938, divided Austria into four zones of occupation. Vienna was similarly split into four sectors and made the seat of the Allied Control Council. A council of the four Allied foreign ministers was formed and made responsible, inter alia, for the preparation of an Austrian treaty to restore Austria's sovereignty according to the principles of the Moscow Declaration. This task was passed on to a committee of the foreign ministers' deputies. By 1950 a draft State Treaty had been laboriously hammered out, leaving, however, four articles on which agreement had not yet been reached. As the post-war international division between East and West became more marked the prolonged negotiations suggested to the Western powers that the Soviet Union did not consider the conclusion of an Austrian State Treaty to be in its interest. In 1952 the West tried another approach to the problem with an abbrievated draft treaty. This was rejected by the representatives of the Soviet Union.

A United Nations resolution sponsored by Brazil in the General Assembly in 1952, and passed by an overwhelming majority, urged an early fulfilment of the Moscow Conference Declaration, but it did not affect the Soviet attitude.

Although the U.S.S.R. relaxed some of its occupation controls, no further progress was made until the calling of a conference at Berlin, in January 1954, revived Austria's hopes of the eventual signing of the State Treaty. In spite of the fact that the Western powers declared themselves ready to sign the Soviet version of the treaty, the Berlin conference failed to break the deadlock, because the Soviet Union made it obvious that it wished to maintain occupation troops in Austria after the signing of the Austrian treaty and until a German peace treaty had also been signed.

Note that this was as late as 1954.

A change of attitude by the U.S.S.R. became apparent, however, early in 1955, when the Soviet Government informed the Austrian authorities to send a delegation to Moscow to discuss the terms of a treaty. Events then moved rapidly and, after a few meetings between the representatives of the Four Powers and of Austria, an agreement was reached on the long-awaited treaty. It was signed by the five foreign ministers at Vienna on Sunday, May 15, 1955.

I think it is of considerable interest to read, for instance, article 8 of this treaty. It is very brief, but it may surprise many honourable senators that the U.S.S.R. would accede to an article in the terms of that one. I read:

> Austria shall have a democratic government based on elections by secret ballot and shall guarantee to all citizens free, equal and universal suffrage as well as the right to be elected to public office without discrimination as to race, sex, language, religion or political opinion.

I think the successful conclusion to the decade of wearisome negotiation on the Austrian State Treaty should offer some hope to those who despair that Russia will ever honour its commitment to allow the restoration of German unity. It suggests, too, that there might be considerable merit in the proposal of the West German Government of September of last year to set up a Four-Power continuing commission to seek a solution to the German problem. We must hope that a solution to this unjust and potentially dangerous situation will be found at the foreign ministers' meeting which started last week in Geneva or at the summit conference which may follow.

However, our experience with the Austrian State Treaty indicates that progress is perhaps more likely to be achieved during prolonged and relatively unpublicized negotiations at the expert level. Might I contrast that with the glare of publicity which accompanies the present foreign ministers' meeting in Geneva, and which will likely make a meeting of minds there so much more difficult than otherwise. It is partly for this reason that Canada has warmly supported the West German proposal for a new Four-Power continuing commission to tackle the German question.

To return to the Austrian State Treaty: Apart from the right to take part in any negotiations to alter the treaty, countries which accede do not acquire any particular privileges. On the other hand, accession by Canada would not increase our obligations to Austria. Under article 2, we would be required to respect the independence and territorial integrity of Austria, but this would entail no obligation other than those which already arise out of our common membership in the United Nations. Austria's neutrality was established by Austrian legislative action after the re-establishment of Austrian independence; it is not a provision of the treaty; and, consequently, accession does not create any special obligation in regard to the preservation of that neutrality.

Article 27(1) of the treaty states that the Allied and Associated Powers intend to return Austrian property and will be prepared to conclude agreements with the Austrian Government for this purpose. As of March 31, 1959, the balance of Austrian assets vested in the Custodian of Enemy Property amounted to $36,604.76. These are being returned to the former owners, or to their heirs, if and when they are located. Canada's accession to the State Treaty, therefore, would not require any change in existing Canadian legislation or policy concerning the return of Austrian property.

Several countries have delayed accession to the treaty until certain financial claims against Austria are settled. However, the situation concerning Canadian claims against Austria has been satisfactory for some time and does not warrant any delay in acceding to the treaty, or the expression of any reservation. Accession to the treaty would not create any new class of claim as between Austria and Canada or their respective nationals and would merely confirm benefits which, in practice, Canadians already receive.

The importance which the Austrians attach to Canadian accession has been a major consideration in the Government's decision to take this action. On the occasion of Mr. Smith's announcement in the House of Commons, Mr. Leopold Figl, Austrian Minister of Foreign Affairs, wrote:

> The Austrian Government has charged me to express to you its warmest gratitude for your Government's action concerning Canada's accession to the Austrian State Treaty.
> My Government welcomes this step as a further confirmation of the friendly and most cordial relations between our two countries.
> I need not assure you that the statement you kindly made on that occasion is highly appreciated throughout my country.

The Canadian Government are conscious of the significance of the treaty in the re-establishment of Austria's sovereignty, and are glad to associate Canada with it. The late Secretary of State for External Affairs, when he made his announcement in the House of Commons, said—and I ask the consent of this chamber to repeat his exact words:

> Canada's accession, when it takes place, will be at the request of the Austrian government and it is an action which we take willingly as a mark of friendship and sympathy for a country whose achievements we admire.

Canadian-Austrian relations have been established on a regular and friendly basis and Canada's accession to the Treaty should bring the two countries even closer together.

The same day that Mr. Smith spoke in the house Mr. Skinner, the acting Prime Minister of New Zealand in the absence of Mr. Nash, announced that his country had also decided to accede to the treaty. We welcome this step on the part of a fellow member of the commonwealth and hope that other countries will find it possible to take similar action before long.

In conclusion, let me say that there is no valid argument for withholding Canadian accession to the Austrian State Treaty, which is the foundation for Austria's existence as a state, which we have recognized and with which we have established normal diplomatic relations. I believe, therefore, that it would be useful and appropriate if Canada were to accede to this treaty.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would the honourable senator permit one question? Has Austria been admitted to the United Nations Organization? I notice that point is covered in the second last paragraph of the preamble, and I wondered if it had been carried out.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, Austria is a member of the United Nations Organization.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, it is with a feeling of great privilege and honour that I rise to associate myself with the resolution for the approval of the treaty which has been explained in such detail and in such an understandable way by my honourable friend the senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson). It is a particular privilege also to speak in connection with this treaty because of the presence here today of so distinguished a group of visitors from Austria, whose fortunes in recent years we have followed with deep sympathy and understanding.

I think it very much worth while to emphasize the title of this treaty, namely:

> State Treaty for the re-establishment of an independent and democratic Austria.

It is not a Peace Treaty, in the formal sense of that word, because Austria before and during the war was an enveloped part of Germany, as were Roumania, Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia, and no formal peace treaty has yet been made to end the war with Germany.

However, Hitler's Germany came to a violent and undiplomatic end by force of arms, and East and West Germany have taken the place of the old Reich.

Gradually, as the result of such recognition as is represented in this treaty which is before us today, invaded and captive nations are being re-established as independent countries with democratic systems of Government.

In Paris, in February 1947, treaties with Italy, Roumania, Hungary and Finland were approved by the Allied Powers, and in 1952 a similar treaty was made with Japan, thus ending the hostilities with that country. In the case of all these treaties approval has been recorded by the Parliament of Canada, and ratification given by the Governor General in Council.

I think it is important to emphasize the procedure involved in the ratification of treaties. As most of us know, I am sure, ratification of international treaties is still the prerogative of the Crown, and ratification is not complete until the Governor General in Council takes the necessary action to sign the treaties, to which is attached the Great Seal. The document is then deposited in the agreed place, which, in this particular case, will be Moscow, Russia. So far as Canada is concerned, this particular treaty will be deposited there. It is interesting to note that the procedure of ratification was introduced into the Parliament of Canada following the end of the First Great War. Sir Robert Borden, as head of the Government at that time, presented the Treaty of Versailles for approval to both houses of Parliament, and it was later ratified in the way I have indicated.

The significance of this procedure in which we are sharing today, it seems to me, is that we, as a Parliament, are in the process of approving this treaty on behalf of the people of this country—and the same action, we hope and expect, will be taken in a few days by the other house—and in doing so we are conveying to the people of Austria the good will and the feeling for peace of the people of Canada, regardless of the so-called formal sealing of the documents, or the parchments, that are involved in ratification.

I think it is only fair to say that this document was ratified by the United Kingdom, France, Russia and the United States in 1955, and was acceded to by some smaller nations in the same year, and also in 1956. Delay in Canada's accession since that time has been due mainly to diplomatic considerations in relation to certain smaller nations in Europe which have been involved in claims against the former Central European alliance. Otherwise what is being done here now would have been done four years ago. The action which is now being taken by this house in reality, as I have said, conveys to the people of Austria the recognition and good will of the people of Canada as between two peoples of independent status and dedicated to the cause of free and democratic Government.

The people of Canada were never at war in reality with the people of Austria. From the tragic days of Chancellor Dollfuss and through the years of Austria's enforced captivity the hopes and aspirations of Canadians have reached forward to the day of that country's emancipation.

Just after the formation of the United Nations, in 1945, the minister in charge of the delegation which visited San Francisco at the time of the formulation of the United Nations' Charter returned to us here and came before the Standing Committee on External Affairs of this house to explain what had happened in San Francisco. I remember very well his observation which was expressed at that time. He was then the Minister of Justice, the Honourable Louis St. Laurent, and what he said was recorded in the Senate Hansard later in the day when the report of that committee was made.

The Minister of Justice in his address before the committee that morning expressed the feeling that the charter was based on the conscience of mankind. He said it represented the aspiration of the common people of the world, and that if those who represent them at great international conferences today and in the future are always mindful of that fact we may well have hope for the days ahead.

I think it is very important that that thought, as he expressed it at that time, be emphasized now, because we have great happiness in knowing that Austria today is represented in the United Nations along with this country and the other countries which go to make up the membership of that great organization.

It is with this note of good will and best wishes from the people of Canada to the people of Austria that I should like to conclude these remarks. I hope for them that their course in the years ahead will lead to broader lands and brighter days.

(Translation):

Hon. J. A. Bradette: Honourable senators, at this time I would like to greet the distinguished delegation which we have the honour of welcoming to this chamber and to say a few words on the treaty which we are called upon to approve.

If I rise on this subject, it is because I have, on various occasions, had the pleasure and good fortune to visit that beautiful country, Austria.

To each and every member of the delegation I wish a happy stay in Canada. You will feel at home among us, because we have appreciated the magnificent efforts you have made in the past and are still making today, in order to safeguard the principles of liberty and Christianity.

Honourable senators, Austria, as you know, is a landlocked country located at the very centre of Europe. This state comprises very different and unevenly distributed kinds of terrain; more than two thirds of its territory are mountainous areas, overshadowed by the Alps, while the rest includes large stretches of plains. The people, as you know, are of German origin.

Austria is renowned for the artists it has produced as well as for arts in every form. It gave birth to such great musicians as Haydn, Mozart, Albrechtsberger, Czerny and Schubert, to name only a few. Its pleasant and varied climate attracts many tourists.

Austrian women are recognized as being among the most beautiful in the world. I say so because I found, during my trips, that it was true. They are gay, vivacious and full of joie de vivre, while Austrian men are known for their sterling qualities.

And I would like to pay a special tribute to Austria for what she did during the Hungarian insurrection, when she so generously welcomed the refugees seeking asylum. You accomplished heroic deeds at that time and won the admiration of the whole civilized world.

The preamble to the treaty provides as follows:

> Whereas the Allied and Associated Powers, and Austria, taking into account the importance of the efforts which the Austrian people themselves have made and will have to continue to make for the restoration and democratic reconstruction of their country, desire to conclude a treaty re-establishing Austria as a free, independent and democratic State, thus contributing to the restoration of peace in Europe;

And we understand all the efforts you have made to contribute to the restoration of peace in Europe. You have succeeded and will continue to succeed, because you are now independent. Like many other nations, you will see a new dawn rising beyond the horizon.

Another paragraph of the preamble reads:

> Whereas the Allied and Associated Powers desire by means of the present Treaty to settle in accordance with the principles of justice all questions which are still outstanding in connection with the events referred to above, including the annexation of Austria by Hilterite Germany and participation of Austria in the war as an integral part of Germany; and

There again, you did marvellous deeds and we know that you will continue along the same lines, to save democracy, liberty and Christianity. You have every reason to be proud of your nation.

Another paragraph goes on:

> Whereas the Allied and Associated Powers and Austria are desirous for these purposes of concluding the present Treaty to serve as the basis of friendly relations between them, thereby enabling the Allied and Associated Powers to support Austria's application for admission to the United Nations Organization . . .

As I said a moment ago, my dear friends, I know you will feel at home among us. Ours is a very large country, but our population is small. We have taken part in two world wars, not to enlarge our territory, but solely to fight for democracy, liberty and Christianity. I hope your stay in our country will be most happy and I know that everywhere in Canada you will find true friends.

I would like to wish you and your beautiful country happiness and prosperity.

(Text):

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I would like to join with previous speakers in extending a welcome to the distinguished citizens from Austria who are with us today. It is indeed an honour for us to have them in our chamber on this occasion when we are discussing the Austrian Treaty. I trust they will enjoy their visit in Canada and that they will take home with them a good report of our Parliament, our people and our country.

This motion that it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the State Treaty for the re-establishment of an independent and democratic Austria marks an important occasion. The two key words in the treaty, as others have said, are "independent" and "democratic". These words reflect the aspirations of humanity and are the very essence of the objectives for which free peoples have been striving throughout the whole period of our lives. By the Moscow Declaration of November 1, 1943, to which the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) referred, the United Kingdom, the United States and the Soviet Union agreed that Austria, as Hitler's first victim, should be liberated from German domination, and they announced in clear terms that they were anxious to see the re-establishment of a free and independent Austria. They were later joined by the Free French authorities at Algiers. And it is, it seems to me of significant importance, in contradistinction to the Treaty of Versailles, that the Potsdam Conference of 1945 agreed to the exceedingly important principle that reparations should not be exacted from Austria, and as honourable senators will have noticed, this principle is set forth in article 21 of the treaty.

Honourable senators may have observed that the treaty which we have before us is referred to, as the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) just mentioned, as a State Treaty, rather than as a Peace Treaty, and it is a matter of interest that no Peace Treaty is required between Austria and the four occupying powers. Diplomatic negotiations to bring about the State Treaty —I am again referring to the remarks of the honourable senator from Winnipeg South —extended over a long period of time. They commenced in 1946, running down to the actual signing of the Treaty at Vienna on May 15, 1955. Up to the spring of 1951 negotiators had held 258 meetings, and even then they were still far from reaching a conclusion to their efforts. Unquestionably, the principal difficulty has been the recalcitrance of the Soviet Union, which successfully prevented the treaty from being signed, in spite of substantial concessions made by the Western Allies, which are to be found embodied in article after article in the document itself. In spite, however, of all the trials and tribulations attendant upon the negotiations, a State Treaty has been signed and is now before us.

This indeed is a day of rejoicing. I know honourable senators will join with me in welcoming this document as yet another milestone along the long, difficult road to peace and international co-operation. Over the years, Austria's great contribution to the world, as the honourable senator from Cochrane (Hon. Mr. Bradette) just said, has been cultural, and has been, and will no doubt continue to be, based on the spirit, the intellect and the preservation of valuable and unique traditions. Like ourselves, Austria is anxious only to maintain a strong and healthy economy and to set an example of good world citizenship. Her leaders have felt since the war that her best hope for the future will be as part of some effective international order. The concept of the United Nations, as was stated here this afternoon, has received her great support. Austrians are one with Canadians in their view that the role of the individual is of paramount importance and that the object of a free society is to preserve the rights of the individual, so that the individual may make the most effective contribution to the welfare of his or her fellow citizens.

The honourable senator from Cochrane said that Austria has bestowed much on world culture. Austrians are friendly and courteous folk. One has only to recall the tremendous offerings to the arts, particularly in the field of music, made by Austria. Mozart, Schubert and Strauss have done much to inject beauty and gaiety into a sometimes sombre world.

On this occasion we welcome the opportunity to extend our good wishes to the citizens of Austria, who, like ourselves, are attempting to make a real contribution as a middle power to the solution of the difficulties which continue to confront the world.

In welcoming Austria to the new world order which we hope is surely, even if slowly, taking form, I do not think I can do better than end my remarks by reading a portion of a speech which was delivered by our great wartime Prime Minister, the Right Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King, at the Mansion House, in London, England, on September 4, 1941, when he said:

> Much is being said about a new world order to take the place of the old world order when the war is at an end. If that new order is not already on its way before the war is over, we may look for it in vain. A new world order cannot be worked out at some given moment and reduced to writing at a conference table. It is not a matter of parchments and of seals. That was one of the mistaken beliefs at the end of the last war.
> A new world order, to be worthy of the name, is something that is born, not made. It is something that lives and breathes; something that needs to be developed in the minds and hearts of men; something that touches the human soul. It expresses itself in good will and in mutual aid. It is the application, in all human relations, of the principle of helpfulness and service. It is based, not on fear, greed and hate, but on mutual trust and the noblest qualities of the human heart and mind. It seeks neither to divide nor to destroy. Its aim is brotherhood, its method co-operation.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, it was not intended that I should speak on this motion this afternoon, and yet, just off-hand, I would like to join in the very fine statements that have been made with regard to Austria, and the expressions of friendship which I have heard from my fellow members, as between the people of Canada and the people of Austria. I have admired Austrians in the past, as have other senators. I have read the life of Queen Maria Theresa, who reigned when Austria was in her prime and took a most important part in the public affairs of the continent of Europe. I know the wonders of Vienna, its contribution to culture, its music and its art, its gaiety, as the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) mentioned, and so on. However, honourable senators, I am wondering, exactly what we are doing in this house in approving the treaty which was hammered out at great length between the Soviet Union and Austrian powers. I would like to know from the sponsor of this resolution whether if we pass it we are approving the robbery of Austria by the Soviet Union, as I read it in this treaty. Article 22 has just been called to my attention by the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert), who spoke so wonderfully and nicely about Austria and its freedom, and Canada's friendship, and that sort of thing. He has passed over to me the White Paper produced by our Department of External Affairs, in which I find article 22 of this treaty set out, commencing as follows:

The Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, the United States of America and France have the right to dispose of all German assets in Austria in accordance with the Protocol of the Berlin Conference of 2nd August, 1945.

That is to say, the property in Austria that had previously belonged to Germany became disposable, it seems, by the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States of America. And following that, shall I say, pious declaration of the robbers, I find this statement:

1. The Soviet Union shall receive for a period of validity of thirty years concessions to oil fields equivalent to 60 per cent. of the extraction of oil in Austria for 1947, as well as property rights to all buildings, constructions, equipment, and other property belonging to these oil fields, in accordance with list No. 1 and map No. 1 annexed to the treaty.

So the Soviet Union is to carry off 60 per cent of the oil production of Austria in 1947.

Paragraph 2 of article 22 reads:

2. The Soviet Union shall receive concessions to 60 per cent. of all exploration areas located in Eastern Austria that are German assets to which the Soviet Union is entitled in conformity with the Potsdam Agreement and which are in its possession at the present time, in accordance with list No. 2 and map No. 2 annexed to the treaty.

The Soviet Union shall have the right to carry out explorations on the exploration areas mentioned in the present paragraph for eight years and to subsequent extraction of oil for a period of twenty-five years beginning from the moment of the discovery of oil.

That is to say, if they discover oil in the next eight years then they have the right to exploit it for the next 25 years.

And here are paragraphs 3 and 4 of article 22. Listen to this:

3. The Soviet Union shall receive oil refineries having a total annual production capacity of 420,000 tons of crude oil, in accordance with list No. 3.

4. The Soviet Union shall receive those undertakings concerned in the distribution of oil products which are at its disposal, in accordance with list No. 4.

What I would like to know now, ladies and gentlemen, is this—and it is no reflection, I assure you, on the friendly feeling that exists in this house toward the people of Austria, nor is there any significance in my statement with regard to my desire and hope for continuing friendly relationships and a development of trade as between our country and Austria. I am not referring to that at all. I would like to know, however, from the sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) whether in approving this treaty we approve that robbery of Austria by the Soviet Union because, if we are, I am voting against any such approval.

I would like it clearly understood that any approval which I give to this treaty is one of friendship and not of robbery, one of hope and admiration and not of exploitation.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask the honourable senator if Austria has approved this treaty?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The Austrian people, of course, would agree to that—anybody will pay for his freedom. A man who is drowning will give his last copper in order to be pulled out of the water and have his life saved; and the Austrian people, I have no doubt, would agree to the treaty rather than endure the occupation of the Allied forces, particularly those of Russia, as they did up to the time of the signing of this treaty.

I would like to know from the sponsor, if I may, whether by ratifying the treaty we express in any way approval of that pilfering from Austria by the Soviet Union.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I suggest that I will answer that when I close the debate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Very well.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, my comments in support of this motion are prompted by our mutual feelings of respect and recognition for the gallant people who have suffered much and who have laboured diligently and with courage to fulfil practically an injunction in the treaty, pleading for the establishment of an independent and democratic Austria.

The honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) and the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) have pointed out that this is not a Peace Treaty per se, but a State Treaty.

Perhaps our minds should go today to the post-war II era, to the 1945 Potsdam Agreement, which I believe formally recognizes Austria as the first victim of Nazism, hence not an enemy country but rather as a country to be liberated; and it was at the Potsdam Conference that Austria was promised independence and speedy freeing from occupation by foreign troops—but Article 4, paragraph 9, also provides for the transfer of German assets in the eastern zone to the Soviet Union, a feature we see vestiges of in this treaty and to which the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has just referred.

There is in the treaty, however, an Annex II, on page 56, which in a sense cancels out the provisions of article 23 dealing with the claims of the Allies, and especially of the U.S.S.R., to the German assets to which reference has just been made and to which an answer will be given.

I feel we should think of the nine years, the nine weary and frustrating years of occupation of this friendly nation while deliberations and discussions went on regarding the drafting of a treaty. The honourable Leader of the Opposition has referred to 258 meetings to 1951. It is significant to remember these fruitless hours spent in discussing ad nauseum the substance of possible treaties—academic discussions—over a long time, because one of the occupying powers was dragging its feet, for purposes of its own; and I believe that, despite its 1946 assurances of co-operation the U.S.S.R. did not normalize its diplomatic relationships with Austria until 1953.

About these fruitless and frustrating hours the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, in a speech in the House of Commons on April 19, 1955, had this to say:

> For many years we and our Allies have wanted to conclude a treaty with Austria which would restore her full freedom and independence. The house will recall that we offered at Berlin—

And I digress now, to say this was about 18 months before this time.

> —to sign the text with all the Soviet amendments. We earnestly hope that a treaty can now at last be concluded.

If I remember correctly, rightly or wrongly, the U.S.S.R. had regarded the treaty with Austria as bound up with other questions in Central Europe, especially the question of a possible German settlement.

It was some time around April 15, 1955, after a visit by an Austrian delegation—which I believe was by invitation—that the U.S.S.R. indicated its willingness to negotiate a treaty. This welcome announcement came in a joint U.S.S.R.-Austrian communique. Then followed the meetings in Vienna for the signing of the treaty we are at present considering.

We might remind ourselves of the interesting significance of the fact that the treaty was signed at all. Then it was hailed as an example of how agreements might be reached in delimited and perhaps more difficult problem areas. The treaty was regarded as a hopeful sign of better things to come in the future settling of controversial issues.

Certainly the treaty represented a fulfilment of very sincere wishes of free peoples: that the people of Austria should enjoy the national liberty which would enable them to guide their own affairs with a guaranteed maintenance of democratic rights, freedoms and institutions, to which they freely and willingly subscribed, and which they had courageously protected and passionately cultivated in very trying and difficult circumstances. In fact, one must remember with great respect the fortitude, the courage, the common sense and the integrity of the Austrian people in handling their post-war difficulties and frustrations, prior to 1955. I would refer honourable senators to a fascinating story written by Dr. Karl Gruber entitled Between Liberation and Liberty.

Knowing as we do something of these distressing problem areas, these words in the treaty take on very special meaning for us. I quote:

> Whereas the Allied and Associated Powers—

And we shall become one of them.

> —and Austria, taking into account the importance of the efforts which the Austrian people themselves have made and will have to continue to make for the restoration and democratic reconstruction of their country—

I would like to quote a tribute to the Austrian people during these difficult times, as voiced by a Mr. H. A. Marquand, a member of the British House of Commons:

> The Austrians have shown an equal political skill during this period. The way in which the coalition Governments have been sustained during these years of emergency; the forebearance, patience and courage with which they have confronted extraordinary difficulties, and, from time to time, grave human insults in one part of their country, deserve our praise.

Actually, long before treaty established the state so that it could be democratic, the political parties and people had demonstrated their belief and their willing choice of democracy as a way of national life. We must not overlook the significant contribution at this time of a free press, which assured the Austrian people the certain important and indispensable contact with the outside world.

How interesting it is that, so near to the frontier of the undemocratic part of Europe, so small a nation so successfully survived pressures made upon it. By acceding to this treaty we pay a sincere tribute to the Austrian people for this safeguarding of the torch of democracy far inside Central Europe.

The Austrian people have reason to be proud of their magnificient self-efforts in these difficult early years of the reconstruction of their national economy, although they have reason, too, to remember the support which they received from the Western Allies during these same difficult post-war years. This record of mutual co-operation is epitomized by paragraph 11 of article 22, where the three Western Allies exact no reparation obligation, and pass over to Austria free from any charges or claims:

> . . . all property, rights and interests held or claimed by or on behalf of any of them in Austria as former German assets or war booty.

In this connection, although one appreciates the cancellation intent of Annex II to which I have referred, one wonders, and I too wonder, why this treaty contains those reparation paragraphs in article 22. I refer to paragraphs 1 to 13, exclusive of paragraph 12, and to the lists. One wonders whether these reparations are now being paid, despite the intent of the annex.

How large are these reparations? I understand that a very large part of Austria's dollar exporting capacity is at present allocated to meet these obligations to the Soviet Union. I am given to understand that they are paying $25 million per year for six years, and one million tons of oil per year for 10 years.

Perhaps this bill will go to committee. If it does, we may be given a further explanation not only of the obligations that we are undertaking, but what is happening vis-à-vis this treaty and this particular section.

Honourable senators, there are at the same time in this treaty sovereignty-limiting provisions. I am wondering how they are working out, because by this treaty Austria is debarred from having the right to make political or economic agreements which may involve some kind of federation, or anything of that kind, with some other country.

An interesting problem is raised by article 9, which says that Austria shall dissolve any organization carrying on activities, hostile to any member of the United Nations. How do we interpret this particular paragraph? If it is to be interpreted literally, the commitments under it are very interesting.

In closing, honourable senators, whatever the limitations or difficulties involved in this treaty, it will, I believe, help to confirm, strengthen and extend further free relations between our respective countries. This afternoon's visit by our distinguished Austrian guests symbolizes this co-operative normalization. Austria's proximity to the so-called Iron Curtain makes her capital, Vienna, the centre for transit trade between western and eastern Europe. As a matter of fact, Vienna has become a kind of shop window for both parts of Europe, a fact which is very evident in the famous Vienna trade fairs. It is also a shop window in the ideological and political sense, and we wish the Austrian people well in strengthening all aspects of their national, democratic social order so that they may bear proudly aloft the ideals and practices which we all regard as essential to the maintenance and strengthening of man's inalienable freedoms and privileges upon which we predicate the safeguarding of the individual human dignity of all humble citizens, to whatever country they may owe their allegiance.

Hon. Thomas Reid: I wonder if I may ask the honourable senator a question, which came to my mind while I was listening to the two previous speakers. Just what has Russia taken from Austria? Did the Allies get nothing at all? If it had not been for Britain, Russia would not have got anything at all. You have the treaty before you, I presume?

Hon. Mr. Wall: Yes, I have the treaty before me, honourable senators, and the treaty per se has two sections dealing with the disposition of the German assets and also dealing with reparations. I do not know whether any tolls were exacted by the Allies previous to the signing of the treaty, but article 21 states flatly:

> No reparation shall be exacted from Austria arising out of the existence of a state of war in Europe after 1st September, 1939.

But, I would think that during the time of occupation Austria probably paid very heavily.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Article 21 is subject to article 22, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Wall: I was going to come to article 22. Article 22 discusses the disposal of former German assets in Austria. The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) referred to them at length, and there are many of them. I refer to those, too, together with paragraph 11, which is unique, because in paragraph 11 the three Western Allies say that they do not want to lay any claim upon any of the German assets in their zones of occupation. Then follow the lists of property on pages 22 to 36; but there is Annex II which, in effect, cancels out a lot of the provisions of article 22, as I understand it, except that there was a part of the arrangement—this is something that is not clear to me, but I do know from information that is available to us in the press and otherwise that Austria is apparently paying out $150 million in six payments, and also that Austria is to deliver to the U.S.S.R. one million tons of oil per year for ten years, beginning on a date I do not know and ending on a date I do not know, but which dates we may get in committee. I hope that is helpful.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators,—

The Hon. the Speaker: If the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) makes a speech now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Unless honourable senators desire this resolution to go to committee, I would move that this house do now approve of it.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I will take only a minute or two. I am glad to see so many people from Austria present.

Perhaps I am a dissenting voice, but I do not believe that we should raise any question in regard to the treaty.

We are going to face difficulties in the years to come. In the next ten, fifteen or twenty years, maybe, we are going to try to make treaties with Russia, and we are going to have to make treaties with Russia much on Russia's terms. As much as we dislike that, we are probably going to have to do it, and I think we ought to face that.

The Austrian people probably understood the situation better than we possibly can, and I am really sorry that any question should be raised in regard to the treaty itself by us. We were not there. We did not represent anybody. Undoubtedly the Americans and the British and French got the very best deal they could for the Austrians. I have no doubt about that. I have not the slightest doubt that this is the best treaty they could negotiate in order to achieve peace, obtain a separate treaty, and get the country back on its feet.

I can imagine that my friend the junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall), in regard to the country he looks upon as his fatherland, would like to get peace with Russia now. I do not know how far it might go in getting terms, but I think it is a mistake to raise a question about something which, in the first place, we did not have anything to do with, and, secondly, if we had had anything to do with it we are not sure we could have made a better deal. That is the point I want to make.

Many honourable senators have been occupied at some time in their lives in trying to settle a matter between two persons, and we all know how difficult it is. Sometimes it seems that both of them have lost their sense of reason, but then a suggestion is made and the air is cleared. I have no doubt that the Austrian people know better than we do what kind of a treaty they made. They know better than us the difficulties of that treaty, yet they made it because they wanted their homeland and were prepared to pay a price to hold it. Therefore I think it is a mistake for us to question it. I do not like to see this done, because it is stirring up something which we cannot remedy. We can do nothing about it, and we are only making the matter more difficult for our Austrian guests of this afternoon and the people back home whom they represent.

I think they made a good deal. If I had been an Austrian living in that country with my wife and children I would have been all for that deal. I would have been for any deal that got the Russians out of my country, as would all honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask one question? Did Canada declare war on Austria?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Then how can we make a Peace Treaty with that country?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: This is not a Peace Treaty. That is why it is called a State Treaty.

Hon. Mr. Euler: It is as a result of the war.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: We do not ratify it. We merely accede to it.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Technically we were never at war with Austria, because of the fact of Austria's having been, as we say, gobbled up by Germany in the anschluss of 1938.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Were we consulted in any way in regard to the making of these arrangements?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No.

Hon. Mr. Euler: And we were never at war with Austria?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No.

Honourable senators, I wish to say just a few words in closing this debate. In doing so, I want to express my deep satisfaction of the remarks that have been made by honourable senators in regard to Canada's accession to this treaty, and to express again our pleasure at having had these distinguished gentlemen from Austria as our guests here today.

There is only one matter I wish to deal with for the moment, and that is the following question asked by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck):

> If we pass this resolution are we approving the robbery of Austria by the Soviet Union?

Under the circumstances, I wonder whether that is a proper question to ask. Indeed, is it not merely dialectics to ask whether we approve or disapprove, condone or not condone transactions that have already taken place? Why, of course, Canada does not approve of these things. I do not suppose that technically Canada is in a position to either approve or disapprove, for we were not a party to this treaty which was entered into by five countries, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, the United States, France and Austria. I think it can be said that the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity replied to his own question when he suggested that it is obvious the Austrians paid for their freedom.

After all, is that not the answer: they paid for their freedom? As a matter of fact, that is one of the reasons I read to the house in my original statement paragraph 8 of the treaty, which is a most important paragraph indicating as it does that Austria becomes by this treaty a free and democratic nation among the other democratic nations of the world. As I said before, I hardly believe the honourable senator expected that his question would be answered in any other manner than he has done himself.

Honourable senators, may I close by urging that this chamber unanimously support the resolution.

Resolution adopted.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn during pleasure.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, the purpose for the Senate meeting this afternoon has now been concluded and I should like to move that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure, to resume at the call of the bell at approximately 8 o'clock this evening.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) what business he expects the house will proceed with this evening?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In reply to my honourable friend I may say that motion No. 2, for approval of the convention concerning the abolition of forced labour, will not be proceeded with. The honourable senator who is going to deal with that resolution will not be in the house this evening. Item No. 1 on the Order Paper, the second reading of Bill C-44, to amend the Customs Tariff and The New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1932, will not be proceeded with until tomorrow. The honourable senator from Ottawa East (Hon. Mr. Choquette) will be explaining that bill. I understand that the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) will not be ready to proceed with item No. 2, the adjourned debate on the second reading of Bill C-46, to amend the Old Age Security Act. However, I am ready to proceed with the explanations on second reading of Bill S-20, to amend the Length and Mass Units Act, and on Bill S-21, to amend the Weights and Measures Act.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Thank you.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

LENGTH AND MASS UNITS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the second reading of Bill S-20, to amend the Length and Mass Units Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I have found the subject-matter of this bill, and of Bill S-21, which also is on the Order Paper for second reading, somewhat technical, more or less confusing but nevertheless interesting. I hope I shall be able to explain them to your satisfaction, but if not, either or both bills can, of course, be referred to the appropriate committee, where the experts can go into matters involved very fully.

Previous to 1951 the reference standards for the Canadian yard and the Canadian pound were physical copies of the Imperial yard and the Imperial pound. In 1951 a number of circumstances made necessary the revision of the Weights and Measures Act under which the Standards Division of the Department of Trade and Commerce operated to supervise legal metrology in Canada. In undertaking this revision it was decided to have two acts: one, the Units of Length and Mass Act, to define the primary standards of length and mass; and the other, the Weights and Measures Act, to formulate all regulations necessary for legal metrology in these two fields. In preparing the former it was further decided to recognize modern developments in metrology which had led experts to the opinion, in all countries using the yard and the pound, that these units should not be based on physical prototypes, but should be related by ratios to the basic standards of the metric system, that is, the international metre and the international kilogramme. The reason for this opinion was the demonstrated stability and precision of the metric units over a period of approximately 70 years. The United States yard and pound were already tied to the metric system by the Mendenhall Executive Order of 1898, which defined their ratios with respect to the international metre and the international kilogramme. At that time, for conversion tables the same ratios related the physical Imperial yard and the physical Imperial pound to the metric system, but the United Kingdom retained these physical prototypes as its legal units of length and mass. In the succeeding 50 years it was found that the physical prototype of the Imperial yard and the Imperial pound changed slightly in physical size. It was necessary, therefore, in writing the Canadian act of 1951 to choose for the Canadian units an appropriate compromise between the several values of the pound and the yard that then existed in the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada.

The choice for the yard was relatively easy, since metrologists in the three countries were generally agreed that the value for the ratio of any of the yards to the international metre ought to be that ratio which was approximately midway between the American ratio and the current ratio between the Imperial and metric prototypes, and which also made the inch exactly 2.54 centimetres.

It was not clear, in 1951, just what would be the final decision for resolving the slight difference between the Imperial pound and the American pound. It was therefore decided that the ratio for the Canadian pound should stand as the original relationship between the pound and the kilogramme which obtained in 1898 and which was still the legal conversion ratio in Canada, but with the understanding that when agreement was reached between the United States and the United Kingdom on a common pound the Canadian legislation for the pound would be revised to bring it in line with the new value. The Canadian legislation of 1951 attracted considerable favourable comment in other countries and greatly contributed to bringing about the present agreement on common units for the yard and the pound in English-speaking countries.

During the last eight years, although the discrepancies between the units of the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada were extremely small they were becoming, in the case of the yard, an increasing source of trouble and confusion to manufacturers and others concerned with measurements of the very highest precision. To rectify this situation there have been consultations between the directors of national physical laboratories of the Commonwealth countries and the United States over this period, and agreement has now been reached on common values.

I might say at this point that the directors of the following standards laboratories, namely, Applied Physics Division, National Research Council, Ottawa, Canada; Dominion Physical Laboratory, Lower Hutt, New Zealand; National Bureau of Standards, Washington, United States; National Physical Laboratory, Teddington, United Kingdom; National Physical Research Laboratory, Pretoria, South Africa, and National Standards Laboratory, Sydney, Australia, have discussed the existing differences between the values assigned to the yard and to the pound in different countries. To secure identical values for each of these units in precise measurements for science and technology it has been agreed to adopt an international yard and an international pound having the following definitions:

The international yard equals 0.9144 metre, that is, 9144 ten-thousandths of a metre.

The international pound equals 0.45359237 kilogramme, which is that figure over one hundred million.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It sounds like the national debt.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: That is inflation.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The other countries will adopt the same value for their yards as that established by the Canadian Length and Mass Act of 1951 for the Canadian yard, and all have reached an agreement on a common ratio to relate the pound to the kilogramme. This ratio is half way between the ratio which had been the legally accepted one in the United States since 1898 and in Canada since 1951 and the current ratio which exists today between the physical Imperial pound and the international kilogramme.

The change involved is undetectable in all but measurements of very high precision in science, but the revision of the 1951 act is required, as was foreseen in 1951, to bring the basis of Canadian legal metrology completely up to date.

Perhaps honourable senators would not object if I read an article which appeared in the Newsweek magazine of May 4, headed "The Inch that Isn't". It reads:

Ever since the fourteenth century, when King Edward II of England officially proclaimed the inch as equal to "three barley corns, dry round, and laid end-to-end," the English-speaking peoples have been arguing about its exact length. In time, the British decided it was 2.5399956 centimetres; Canada chose a middle-size inch of 2.54 centimetres; and the U.S. chose the biggest inch of all, 2.5400508 centimetres.

After the Industrial Revolution, when minute differences in the inch began to stir up international mischief in fine precision manufacturing, scientists and industrial engineers began to urge their governments to get together. Finally, in 1938, the National Bureau of Standards asked Congress for permission to work out a standard English-speaking inch—and caused an uproar. The reason: American mapmakers said it would throw their elaborate map systems several feet out of kilter.

So the inconstant inch remained, plaguing industrialists, generals, and perfectionists alike. During World War II, when England turned to the U.S. for gauge blocks, the tiny, polished-steel measuring standards used in making planes and guns, each had to be custom-made; and war supplies were sometimes delayed for months.

Last week, the National Bureau of Standards confirmed that it had decided to bypass Congress, and, with Britain, New Zealand, Australia, and South Africa, to accept the Canadian, or middle-size inch. Dr. A. V. Astin, chief of the bureau, had discovered that the inch didn't have any legal status anyway; and he decided to make the change on his own. As a concession to map-makers, he excluded their measurements from the agreement.

By the way, a centimetre is one-hundredth of a metre, which is one ten-millionth of the distance from the equator to the pole.

Honourable senators will see from what I have said that the Canadian metric value of the yard, as set out in the Length and Mass Units Act and the Weights and Measures Act, remains unchanged. But the Length and Mass

Units Act is being amended by this bill by repealing subsection (3) of section 2 of the act and substituting a new subsection (3) reading as follows:

(3) The standard unit of mass for Canada is the pound, which is forty-five million, three hundred and fifty-nine thousand, two hundred and thirty-seven one-hundred-millionths of the international kilogramme.

That, honourable senators, is a brief explanation of the bill. You will see that the English-speaking countries have agreed that the standard unit of mass in those countries is the pound, and the pound has the relationship which I have just mentioned to the international kilogramme.

I have a question submitted by an honourable senator who wants to know if the Canadian Football Union adopted this yard for the Grey Cup. He says: "If not, I am against it".

I suggest it would be advisable to hear departmental officials in connection with this bill, so that they may explain in more detail just how the figures are arrived at. I do not know that I can answer any questions.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I have one simple question to ask. I notice the explanatory note to the bill amending the Length and Mass Units Act says:

The purpose of this bill is to change the value of the pound to conform with a recent international agreement.

Then the exploratory note to Bill 21 says:

The purpose of this bill is to change the value of the pound to conform with a recent international agreement between Canada, New Zealand, the United Kingdom, South Africa, Australia and the United States of America.

My question is: Why does the note to one bill name the countries that made the agreement, when the note to the other bill simply speaks of an international agreement?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The value of the yard is set out in both of the present acts, and, as I have said, there is no change in this value. But the value of the pound as set out in the Weights and Measures Act is changed, and it is necessary to amend that act to give effect to the change. I do not know if that answers the question my honourable friend has in mind.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Your explanation is so clear I will accept it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, we have had a very clear explanation of this bill. I must confess I had a little difficulty in following it at first, for I was always under the impression that a pound was made up of 20 shillings.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: This bill has to do with weight.

Hon. Mr. Power: You are thinking of the wrong kind of pounds.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Probably that was my difficulty. The honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has explained the English-speaking inch. I wonder if the honourable senator from Shawinigan (Hon. Mr. Méthot) could explain the French-speaking inch?

Hon. Mr. Méthot: I do not think I can answer that question off-hand.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I congratulate the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) upon his clear explanation of this bill. I understand it much better tonight than I did on Saturday night. At that time I discussed these problems with my son, who is a mathematician and a physicist. It seemed very clear to him but I found it most difficult to understand. I realize now why the act is being amended. At the present time the law is based on pounds and inches and the new legislation is based on the metric and kilogramme systems. It will give the electronics industry the advantage of being able to deal in more precise measurements, such as one-tenth of one-thousandth, and so on. May I tell the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) that I will be sending a copy of his speech on this bill to my son.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce for further consideration.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Why to that committee?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I understand there is no other committee to which we can send general legislation.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I wonder what bankers would know about this bill.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: It is a commercial bill.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the second reading of Bill S-21, to amend the Weights and Measures Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill S-21 is closely related to Bill S-20, which I have just attempted to explain. In view of the amendment to Bill S-20 it is quite necessary that the Weights and Measures Act be also amended so that the figures in both acts will agree one with the other. On that account I will give just a brief explanation of the amendments to the Weights and Measures Act.

Honourable senators will notice that the explanatory note to the bill says:

> The standard of mass for Canada is the pound. The purpose of this bill is to change the value of the pound to conform with a recent international agreement between Canada, New Zealand, the United Kingdom, South Africa, Australia and the United States of America.

It is not necessary to mention anything in this act with regard to the value of the yard or with respect to the metre, because the figures given in the act as it stands are correct.

The Weights and Measures Act, passed in 1951, replaced the former weights and measures legislation. One of the fundamental changes dealt with the primary standards of length and mass. With the enactment of the Length and Mass Units Act, while the standard unit of extension—that is, length—and the standard unit of weight remained the yard and the pound respectively, their values were henceforth to be determined in terms of the International Metre

$$\left(\frac{9{,}144}{10{,}000}\right)$$

and the International Kilogramme

The relationship of both has now been established by international agreement, which is to be implemented by legislation in the countries concerned: Canada, New Zealand, the United Kingdom, South Africa, Australia, and the United States of America.

The value for the yard established by the agreement is that incorporated at present in the Length and Mass Units Act. The value for the pound differs. The new relationship is

As the Weights and Measures Act incorporates the values in the Length and Mass Units Act, the amendment to the latter in the pound relationship must be carried forward to the Weights and Measures Act. Additionally, the Weights and Measures Act incorporates schedules for metric equivalents, and those relating to the pound require revision. Honourable senators will see the table of values on the back of page 2 of Bill S-21.

The physical reproductions of the yard and pound values, known as "Reference Standards", are calibrated and certified by the National Research Council. From these, "Local Standards" are calibrated and certified for the use of the Weights and Measures Laboratory and field inspection staff.

This amendement, like the amendment in Bill S-20, is a technical one. It does not affect the practical administration of the Weights and Measures Act in any respect whatsoever.

Honourable senators, that is all I have to say about the principle of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the honourable Senator Haig, that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce for further consideration.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am not going to object to the bill going to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, but it does seem to me that too many bills are sent to that committee. Indeed, when any bill is to be referred to a committee the Banking and Commerce Committee is usually mentioned. The present bill has nothing to do with finance and has no financial implications. I presume it was presented to the cabinet and that it reached us through the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It occurs to me that the bill might appropriately be referred to the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations, and I would suggest that this be done. Last session that committee did not sit very often, if at all, and it has not sat so far this session.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have no preference one way or the other. I gathered from the look on honourable senators' faces that they wished both bills to be referred to some standing committee. I am willing to fall in line with what the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) has suggested and move that both of these bills be sent to the Canadian Trade Relations Committee.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Has the committee ever sat at all?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Perhaps the bill could be referred to the Committee on Natural Resources. After all, Dominion Crown surveyors would be available for that committee, and I am sure they would come with their yardsticks and magnifying glasses to see what a three-yard gain at a football game means now.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Honourable senators, with due deference to the suggestion that has been made, I feel strongly that this bill should go to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, because that committee definitely deals with subjects of commerce.

The chairman of the Committee on Canadian Trade Relations is not here this evening. In any case, it is mainly concerned with subjects pertaining to trade relations. Meetings that have been held in the past have been on specially assigned subjects, not from this house, but as the result of voluntary effort to acquire information from visiting V.I.P's, and so on. With all due respect, I do not think that the personnel of the Committee on Canadian Trade Relations would be as competent to deal with this very complicated subject as would that of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, I am a member of both committees, so the question does not affect me. However, this bill has to do largely with a legal matter, a technical matter, and it is important that we have the right definition in our act in order to line up with what has been done in other places. I must say that to me the chairman of either of the committees that have been mentioned would be entirely satisfactory on that score. The Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Commerce is particularly well qualified, and those of us who sit on that committee are helped by him to a very great extent in ironing out the difficulties that arise between the lawyers acting for petitioners and members of the committee. He is very very helpful indeed. On a bill such as this, where we are dealing with a subject that affects other nations, I am anxious that we have a chairman who can keep us on the track, because, as I said before, the bill deals with a technical matter. The honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has got me so muddled up that I do not know whether we are dealing with the yard or the pound. As a matter of fact, when he was referring to the pound I thought all along that the bill had to do with money, but now I find out that it relates to the weight of iron and sugar and other commodities. I would like to see the chairman of the Banking and Commerce Committee preside over our consideration of this bill. He can keep us straight. Maybe I am a little selfish in this, but that is the way I would like it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Has the honourable Leader of the Government made up his mind?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am not going to embarrass the Leader of the Government. I must say that I have complete confidence in the ability of the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations to handle this bill, but, I will withdraw my suggestion.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have already moved that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 301 to 312, which were presented on Thursday, May 14.

Hon. Mr. Gershaw, for Hon. Mr. Roebuck, moved that the reports be adopted.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 20, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

EXCISE TAX BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-47, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Tuesday next.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Aseltine presented Bill S-22, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Tuesday next.

DIVORCE

BILLS—FIRST READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following bills:

Bill SD-275, an Act for the relief of Greta Libenstein Goldfeder.

Bill SD-276, an Act for the relief of Andre Maurice Petit.

Bill SD-277, an Act for the relief of Iris Marion Saunders Robbins.

Bill SD-278, an Act for the relief of Eleonora Dudarowa Shukoff.

Bill SD-279, an Act for the relief of Jeannette Belanger Ross.

Bill SD-280, an Act for the relief of Evelyn Isbitsky Goldenberg.

Bill SD-281, an Act for the relief of Salla Weisman Stopnicki, otherwise known as Sally Weisman Stopnicki.

Bill SD-282, an Act for the relief of Ovila Rivet.

Bill SD-283, an Act for the relief of Bella Valinsky Segal.

Bill SD-284, an Act for the relief of Alexander Pavlovich.

Bill SD-285, an Act for the relief of Catherine Anne Gillis Roper.

Bill SD-286, an Act for the relief of John Robertson Low.

Bill SD-287, an Act for the relief of Barbara Ann Foam Armstrong, otherwise known as Barbara Ann Foam Copan.

Bill SD-288, an Act for the relief of Ruth Mary Morgenstern Usher.

Bill SD-289, an Act for the relief of Eddie Ronald Joe Willard.

Bill SD-290, an Act for the relief of Michel Alphonse Dubois.

Bill SD-291, an Act for the relief of Jean Huard DeRoberval.

Bill SD-292, an Act for the relief of Phyllis Ann Applebaum Isenberg.

Bill SD-293, an Act for the relief of Zita May Pardoe McCall.

Bill SD-294, an Act for the relief of Monique Andree Seguin Tyson.

Bill SD-295, an Act for the relief of Bertha Sylvia Berman Maxwell.

Bill SD-296, an Act for the relief of Margery Fletcher Dennis Phillips.

Bill SD-297, an Act for the relief of Margaret Helen Dawson MacKenzie.

Bill SD-298, an Act for the relief of Eleanor Gwyneth Henley Norman.

Bill SD-299, an Act for the relief of Marie Pauline Primeau Landreville.

Bill SD-300, an Act for the relief of Ellen Wilk Tuke.

Bill SD-301, an Act for the relief of Rhoda Lillian Rabinovitch Katchan.

Bills read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, next sitting.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CHANGE IN MEMBERSHIP OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien moved, with leave of the Senate:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Inman be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Crerar on the list of senators appointed to serve on the Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament on Indian Affairs; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

TOURIST TRAFFIC COMMITTEE

INQUIRY

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators, I rise to inquire of the honourable senator from Blaine Lake, (Hon. Mr. Horner) who is Chairman of the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic, whether he plans to hold a meeting of that important committee this session.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, if the honourable senator from Murray Harbour (Hon. Mrs. Inman) is charging me with a neglect of duty I will have to plead guilty to the charge. Frankly, though, I will have to do something to get that committee organized and functioning or possibly ask the honourable senator from Murray Harbour to replace me as chairman.

The tourist season is fast approaching, and if the Tourist Traffic Committee is going to perform some useful function this session it ought to be under way at the present time. I will endeavour to arrange a meeting of the committee so that we may have officials of the Canadian Government Travel Bureau appear to tell us about their activities this season. That department is spending considerable money in advertising and the committee could find out whether that money is being used to the best advantage. Honourable senators or persons invited to appear before that committee may have suggestions to offer on how to improve our tourist traffic industry. It is perhaps one of the most important industries in Canada at the present time and a source of important revenue to this country. I may say that in recent years we are losing out tremendously in comparison with the United States. What I mean is that the per capita expenditure by Canadian tourists travelling in the United States far exceeds the per capita expenditure by American tourists travelling in Canada. It is therefore apparent that any advertising should be intensively directed to the important United States market. Suggestions will be welcome from anyone who wishes to appear before the committee.

I promise the honourable senator from Murray Harbour that I will endeavour to have the committee meet at the first opportunity.

Hon. Mrs. Inman: Thank you. That is what I had in mind when I made the inquiry.

CUSTOMS TARIFF AND NEW ZEALAND TRADE AGREEMENT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Lionel Choquette moved the second reading of Bill C-44, to amend the Customs Tariff and The New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1932.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill provides for a large number of amendments to the Customs Tariff. The more numerous changes, and also the most important, relate to fruits and vegetables. However, the bill contains a substantial number of other amendments which will be of interest to honourable senators.

All of the proposed amendments may be grouped for the purpose of convenience under four general headings:

1. A clarification of the interpretation to be given to the word "machinery" throughout the tariff. As I will explain later, this is to avoid misunderstanding and ambiguity as to the meaning of definition of "machines" and "machinery".

2. Changes in the tariff items relating to fruits and vegetables which, broadly speaking, arise from the report on fruits and vegetables which was made by the Tariff Board to the Minister of Finance. These changes necessitated some minor consequential amendments to the New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1952.

3. Changes being made as a result of renegotiating the Most-Favoured-Nation rates on woollens and worsteds.

4. A group of miscellaneous tariff changes.

For the time being I shall pass over clause 1 of the bill, and proceed with clause 2 dealing with the proposed amendments as to "machinery" and "machines". Clause 2 provides that the word "machinery" be given the meaning of "machines" wherever it appears in the English version of the Customs Tariff.

There are two items in the tariff under which most imports of machines are classified. Item 427 covers machinery which has been ruled by the Customs authorities to be "of a class or kind made in Canada" and carries relatively high duties; and item 427a covers machinery which is ruled by the Customs to be "of a class or kind not made in Canada", and carries relatively low rates of duty. Both these items refer to "machinery". Consequently, it might be argued that a group of machines whose operation is linked together in one way or another should all be classified under one item or the other as "machinery". In this case, if one of the machines in the group was "of a class or kind not made in Canada", then the whole group would carry the lower rate of duty, notwithstanding the fact that the other machines in the group were ruled to be "of a class or kind made in Canada". The amendment is proposed in order to make it clear that each machine must be classified on the basis of its own particular "made in Canada" status.

I should like to give honourable senators a sample of how this provision could be used to the detriment of Canadian manufacturers. I will take as an example what is known as a radial drill which, for example, might not be manufactured in Canada, and let us say that all other machinery in that particular group is manufactured in Canada. It could be argued that because one of the machines is not made in Canada then the whole composite group should be ruled to be "machinery" of a class not made in Canada.

There was a fear that in certain cases disputes might arise among importers. No one could be too sure that the present practices might not be upset to the disadvantage of Canadian manufacturers, hence this suggestion of stating that when the word "machinery" is found anywhere in the act it will be construed as "machine" or "machines".

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: May I ask my honourable friend a question? What is the present practice?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: The present practice is that there is only the word "machinery" in the English version, which might take in all sorts of machines.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I mean, what is the present practice where there is a group of machinery of that kind, where some is manufactured in Canada and some is not?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: The present practice is to separate the machines and to refuse to recognize them as only the one machine. But there have been so many discussions on the point that the department thought it was time to decide that wherever the word "machinery" is found in the act it should be construed as "machine".

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: This is just to regularize the present practice?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: That is quite correct. I might add that this change is to be made only in English version, because there is no such difficulty so far as the French version is concerned. In the French version the word used is "machines", so in that case no difficulty arises.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask my friend a question? Has there ever been any difficulty in regard to the administration of this?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I do not know, but it is thought that the time has now come to clarify the thing once and for all.

Hon. Mr. Euler: That cannot do any harm, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: That is right.

Clause 3 of the bill provides for changes in the tariff items dealing with fruits and vegetables, and those are found in Part I of the schedule. As I mentioned, these changes flow from the Tariff Board's report on fruits and vegetables.

The former rates of duty on the fruit and vegetable items in question were bound under trade agreements, and it was necessary, therefore, to negotiate with the countries concerned before increasing the rates.

Honourable senators will realize that to pay for these tariff increases Canada had either to offer compensation by way of reductions in the duty under other tariff items, or else face the probability of retaliatory action by means of increased tariffs against Canada in exports to these other countries. The United States, as we all know, is Canada's chief supplier of fruits and vegetables, and both the increases and decreases negotiated with the United States are contained in Part I of the schedule.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Is the final result of the changes that are being made to increase the tariff?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Well, I will come to that, and I will show there are very few increases through the renegotiation. Maybe other items have been added to the ones already admitted. I may say that clause 4 is the one that provides for all the changes by eliminating all the items mentioned in the old section, and when I come to clause 4 I will deal with that point.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask my friend another question? All the nations concerned are included, I think, in what is called GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and no changes in tariffs upwards can be made without the consent of the nations concerned?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: That is so. Consultation and consent and re-negotiations are being had from year to year.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Have these been concluded so far as the changes here are concerned?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yes. My instructions are that these negotiations go on for a period of a whole year. There were some going on as this budget was brought down. Other negotiations have been started and other suggestions made, but it is only when the budget is brought down that these become law.

Hon. Mr. Euler: These are all agreed upon by the nations concerned?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: They are all agreed upon.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is there any change in the period of time in which the duties on fruits and vegetables are in effect?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I will come to that. There are several changes which could be made, and all of them are taken care of in this amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: I believe that last session honourable senators approved of the principle of allowing an honourable senator to finish explaining a bill before asking him questions.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I enjoy this when I know the answers.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You have had a good time so far.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Altogether I would say there are 43—I have counted them—items or sub-items involved. There are 24 increases in duties and 11 decreases in duties. That is an answer to some of the questions that were put to me. There are eight items in which there are both increases and decreases.

To illustrate this I might just give one example. In the case of carrots, item 87(7), the one cent per pound seasonal duty will be applied for a maximum period of 40 weeks. That is an instance where the minister has decided to increase the number of weeks within which this duty is to be applied, as formerly this period was 26 weeks. Thus there is now provision for the increased duty to be applied during an additional 14 weeks. In the remainder of the year the rate formerly in effect was 10 per cent, whereas in future it will be free, so that for 12 weeks of the year there has been a reduction in duty. Consequently, in this one item we have both a tariff increase and a tariff decrease.

Some of the most important changes in the fruit and vegetable schedule are as follows:

The duty on potatoes, new and old, will be 37½ cents per hundredweight throughout the year. Thus, at last, substantial reciprocity is regained with the rates applied to Canadian potatoes by the United States—that is to say, reciprocity with the rates applied to the bulk of Canadian shipments to that country. The seasonal duty applying to imported peaches remains at 1½ cents a pound, but it will hereafter be in force for 14 instead of nine weeks each year. In respect of apples there will be complete reciprocity with the United States; the duty on imported apples will hereafter be a quarter-cent a pound all the year round instead of free for 10 weeks and three-eighths of a cent a pound for the rest of the year.

Another change is that an additional duty of 5 per cent will be charged on green beans, beets, Brussels sprouts, carrots, cauliflower, corn on the cob, lettuce, parsnips and peas if they are imported in consumer-type packages —for example, plastic bags—during the Canadian producing season.

In most cases the new rates are the ones recommended by the Tariff Board. While there are several exceptions, to go into detail regarding them would involve a description of the negotiations with other countries. I am informed, however, that all the changes being proposed in Part I of the schedule which do not conform precisely to the Tariff Board proposals fall into one or other of the following categories: (1) alterations which were found expedient in the course of negotiations; (2) alterations based on information or views put forward after the Tariff Board report was tabled; or (3) "compensation" that was found necessary in the course of negotiations to avoid possible increases in tariffs against Canadian exports. As I understand it, these are the three factors that are always taken into account when certain changes are to be made in tariffs.

Honourable senators may have wondered why in certain cases the British Preferential rates have been increased and in other cases they have not been changed. Under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, contracting parties are not permitted to increase their margins of preference. It follows, therefore, that where the Most-Favoured-Nation rates of duties are being increased, preferential rates should be increased by the same amount. This has been done in the case of every increase in the Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff except where the increase was in the seasonal specific duty or the length of the application of the seasonal duty. This seasonal duty applies only on fresh fruits and vegetables, and the United States is almost the exclusive supplier of these products to Canada in the cases where the increased rates are proposed. Consequently, the British Preferential rates are of little significance as far as trade is concerned. Furthermore, because some increases involve only the amount of the specific duty, and others involve only the length of the period, and still others involve changes in both these factors, it will be understood that it would be virtually impossible to translate all these complicated amendments into the terms of changes in margins of preference. Furthermore, for some of these products the logical suppliers under the British Preferential rates of duty are in the southern hemisphere and, consequently, their season does not correspond at all with the season in the northern hemisphere. This particular point was covered in the course of the tariff negotiations on these items and, we understand, to the satisfaction of the countries concerned.

Honourable senators will have noted that clause 1 of the bill relates to the New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, to which I have previously referred. The changes in the duties on the canned fruits listed in clause 1 correspond exactly with the changes which are proposed in the Most-Favoured-Nation rates of duty in Part I of the schedule. The items for canned pears, 106(4), and canned fruit, n.o.p. 106 (8), appear simply because they are being renumbered; there is no change in the rates of duty. I might mention that there appear to have been no imports of canned peaches, canned apricots, canned cherries or canned prunes from New Zealand into Canada since the New Zealand Trade Agreement was signed in 1932. So it is of little consequence, I would say. Nevertheless the Government has, of course consulted with the Government of New Zealand and has their agreement to the changes proposed.

Part II of the schedule consists entirely of amendments which are of a purely formal nature. There have been a great many changes made in the numbering of the tariff items throughout the fruit and vegetable section of the tariff, and the changes proposed in Part II arise out of this renumbering. In some cases there are also minor alterations in wording, but in no case is there any change in the rates of duty.

Dealing with woollens and worsteds, may I say that last year I had the pleasure of presenting amendments to this same act, at which time there was some little discussion as to woollens. We decided then that the changes were so negligible that the difference on the fabric going into a top coat would be about 25 cents, and about 15 cents on the fabric going into a man's suit of clothes. I understand that situation remains the same, but we had to renegotiate and establish a sort of equilibrium between Canada and Italy and the other countries affected.

It will be recalled that last year modest increases were made in the British Preferential rates on woollens and worsteds under tariff item 554b, as recommended by the Tariff Board. At the same time it was announced that the Most-Favoured-Nation rates on woollens and worsteds would be renegotiated with a view to restoring the margin of British Preference. The results of these renegotiations are shown in Part III of the schedule. Under the GATT procedures, it was necessary to renegotiate these changes with both France and Italy. Honourable senators will note that as compensation for the increase in the tariff on these fabrics, reductions have been granted in the duties on perfumes, certain wines, manufactures of marble and also on certain woollen fabrics for use in the manufacture of neckties, scarves and mufflers.

The increases on wool fabrics are not large, and, I repeat, they amount to about 25 cents on the fabric going into an overcoat and about 15 cents on the fabric going into a man's suit.

The miscellaneous group of tariff items appearing in Part IV of the schedule includes many changes of a technical nature, as well as certain changes of substance. I will comment briefly on those changes which would appear to appeal particularly to honourable senators.

First, I should point out that provision is being made for the assessment of additional charges on imports of alcoholic spirits and cigars consequential upon the increase in the excise duty on these products of domestic manufacture. Provision is also being made for separate tariff items to cover six special types of machines, namely, fork-lift trucks, power shovels, power cranes, paper machines, electricity generating sets and vending machines. These changes are of a technical nature and will not alter the rates of duties which have been assessed on such machines. They will, however, make statutory the classifications which are now in effect by virtue of "Made in Canada" rulings, and are being introduced for the purpose of clarification and to facilitate customs administration.

Duty-free entry is being provided for a wide range of products, including negatives and exposed film for use as news illustrations, highbush blueberry plants, certain articles used by the fishing industry, earth-moving scoops used on farms, certain lumber products, chiropody chairs, orthopaedic highchairs, and sound recordings used by educational institutions.

That, in a large nutshell, honourable senators, is the purport of this proposed amendment.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I think I should say, in the first place, we are greatly indebted to the honourable gentleman from Ottawa East (Hon. Mr. Choquette) for his very comprehensive and clear explanation of a most difficult and dry kind of subject. He has covered the main provisions of this bill very well indeed. I notice that his arithmetic is not quite the same as the minister's. Nor is mine quite the same. The minister said in the other place on May 11 that there were 142 tariff item changes, 32 being increases, 40 being reductions, and 9 of those fruit and vegetable items, some of which were increased, and others decreased, and that there were 61 items left unchanged.

Now, as shown by the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate for May 12, a table was filed in this chamber by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) setting out the tariff changes which are proposed by Bill C-44, and setting out also the tariff situation in respect of these items prior to the change. This is a very useful document to have in order to determine the extent of the tariff changes that have been made. If honourable senators refer to it they will see that in addition to the special provision covering the change in the New Zealand Trade Agreement Act of 1932—which I will not comment on, because my honourable friend has dealt with that adequately—there are four schedules to the tariff changes. The first one, according to my arithmetic, includes 12 items, and these are all fruit and vegetable items, with the exception of an item dealing with film, and another, item 505c, dealing with floor tiles made of wood. Part II deals with 13 items, and in these, as the honourable gentleman said, there is no change, except a renumbering and a few formal changes of that kind. Part III deals with six items, including perfumes, wines, marble and wool. These were items used in the GATT negotiations to get the concessions which were asked for by Canada in respect of fruit and vegetable items. Part IV, I presume is the basket part of the schedule that contains some 34 different items.

First of all, I think something should be said about the report of the Tariff Board which was made in November 1957, and which resulted from a request that was made by the Minister of Finance to review the fruit and vegetable items of the tariff. There was a time in this country when this number of changes in the Canadian tariff would have occasioned quite a political storm up and down the country. In respect of fruits and vegetables in the development of that industry, if I may so call it, there have been changes so significant that something certainly had to be done to meet modern conditions. First of all, there has of course been a tremendous increase in the quantities of fruits and vegetables that are grown for home consumption in this country. There have been great changes, too, in the varieties of the products that have been developed. I believe the growing seasons have been extended or shortened in certain cases. So, too, there has been a change in the manner of processing these articles in Canada. These things not only influence the producers, but also perhaps put the Canadian producer at the mercy of other producers and processors, particularly in the United States, who can sell these processed products, frozen, semi-frozen, in various ways, into the Canadian markets, sometimes to the detriment of the Canadian producer.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, but to the benefit of the Canadian consumer.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Well, perhaps to the benefit of the Canadian consumer. That depends, I suppose, on how the thing works out over a long period of time. But the point I make is this, honourable senators, that this is becoming, like so many other industries in this country, a highly specialized industry. Again it is a case where —and I do not cast any reflection upon parliamentarians when I say this—I think, the amateur in Parliament relatively speaking, cannot cope with the full extent of the problem and with the same facilities as the professional—in this case, the men on the Tariff Board. I think that the study that was made by that board as a result of the reference in 1957 was a fruitful kind of study. It was objective, it was judicial, and I think it was helpful to all concerned.

Perhaps in passing I could refer to the fact that one of the very estimable civil servants of our time, who recently retired from the Tariff Board, presided over those deliberations. I refer to Mr. Hector McKinnon. Honourable senators know the status he has achieved, not only in the work of the Tariff Board throughout the years but also in the work which was involved in some of the negotiations leading to the establishment of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Mr. McKinnon has had a long and an honourable service in this country, and the country owes much to his wisdom, his judgment and his patience.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Now, as the honourable gentleman has said, most of these changes which have resulted in the new fruit and vegetable sections of the tariff, as a result of the inquiry made by the Tariff Board, have had to be renegotiated under GATT.

We hear a great deal about GATT—the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade—and I think it is a very significant trade instrument. It is very significant for this country. I think it is going to be more significant as trade blocks develop and as they appear to be developing in different parts of the world.

I have often wondered, and I am sure honourable senators have found themselves in the same position, just what the effect of some of these negotiations has been in respect of the different articles covered by the sections of the tariff which are affected by GATT. I often wonder, for example, what effect the negotiations at Geneva and at Annecy and at Torquay, when GATT was coming into being, have had on our total volume of trade both incoming and outgoing. I think if the honourable gentleman who sponsored this measure (Hon. Mr. Choquette) could have some light thrown on that by some of the people who are familiar with the work that has been done with respect to GATT, it would be very useful information for members of this committee to have.

I do not propose, honourable senators, to deal with the individual items of the schedules. I think they have been dealt with in sufficient detail by the honourable gentleman from Ottawa East. There are a couple of points, however, in the schedule, Part IV, which I would like to draw to the attention of honourable senators, and perhaps if there are problems about them they could be cleared up at the committee stage, if this bill goes to committee. For example, in the schedule, Part IV, there are quite a number of items covering sugar. It does not appear to me that there is any actual change in the rates of duty under this measure. We have already had a bill—the Excise Bill—dealing with cigars and alcoholic beverages generally, and I understand, at least, that the present bill does the same thing to imported cigars and alcoholic beverages that the Excise Bill did to the domestic products.

Item 399a refers to certain types of rods and couplings and so on, to pipes or tubes. Apparently the reason for that change is that these are now held to be made in Canada. I wonder if at the time of the committee meeting we could be told where these products are now made in this country.

I see also in item 437b a new item covering motor rail cars. It is proposed that the Most-Favoured-Nation rate will go from 20 per cent to free for this item. Honourable senators know that these self-propelled diesel cars are used in various parts of the country by our railways and are a very efficient and relatively economic method of transportation. They are used not only for passengers but as well for mail and freight traffic. Apparently it was felt that these cars could be made in Canada and, in fact, they were made here—under licences, I presume, from American patentees. Apparently, however, the industry is not of sufficient importance to have it continue. I suppose the reason for reducing the rate from 20 per cent to free is to provide an opportunity for the railways to get these cars in the United States, and I think it is a useful reduction.

I see too that under the Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff racing shells are going to enjoy an advantage of 5 per cent in duty. I suppose those shells are now made in the United States and I think it is a good thing to encourage this sport. I know that there are several honourable senators who in their more youthful days were great oarsmen.

I have one further observation to make. In the other place there was a great deal of discussion about item 427 in the schedule, Part IV, which deals with certain types of machines used in the paper making industry and, machines used to lift articles on to trucks—I think they are called fork-lift trucks. It was questioned if this type of machine was made in Canada, and the debate at times became somewhat heated. I gather there is a body of opinion in the industry which feels that these machines are not of a class or kind made in Canada, and should enjoy a little lower tariff than is proposed in these sections. It may be there will be representations made from interested parties when this bill is considered in committee. For that additional reason I would hope that the bill might be referred to a committee so that the views of such people, if they desire to give them to us, could be heard.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I say a word or two before we approve this measure, as I presume we will.

It seems to me that a bill of this complexity, having such great detail, should be more fully explained. It would be a task involving weeks, perhaps, to study each of these items referred to, to find out what the situation is now and what is proposed to be done. All these blank pages one finds in the bill could be well used to explain the changes which the bill proposes. If for each item we were given the amount of import that is affected by the change, we would have some opportunity to really understand the proposals and have a basis for approving or disapproving them.

I am rather intrigued, shall I say, with the explanations of the bill that have been given. No reference was made by either the sponsor (Hon. Mr. Choquette) or the senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) to the position of the consumer. From my standpoint I think he is the most important person to be considered by this house. One must bear in mind that while production is exceedingly important, production is for the purpose of consumption. The producer is the servant of the consumer. The chief interest which should be considered in this house and elsewhere is that of the consumer. It might be argued at times that certain tariff items work out to the benefit of Canada. However, I have not been convinced by that argument so far. Generally speaking, tariff items of this kind are not in the interest of the consuming public, but are in the interest of producers and increase the cost of production.

Let us consider for a moment the matter of fruits and vegetables, which the honourable senator from Ottawa West discussed very clearly, and I compliment him on it.

The actual fact is that the increase in the length of time to which the adverse tariff is applied to imports from the United States is contrary to the health, welfare, comfort and pleasure of thousands of Canadian people. It is all very well to say we have an industry which produces goods of this kind. In the past—not the recent past—that industry stood on its own feet. Today the sunlight is just as good, the soil is just as fertile, and transportation facilities as efficient as in the past, and of course there is the advantage of the closer proximity of home-grown products to the domestic market. This industry, as I say, has in the past stood on its feet and has served the people of our great cities, such as the city from which I come.

So, I am not in favour of tariff items which check the flow of those useful and health-giving fruits and vegetables to thousands of people in our cities, even though tariffs do enable those who produce from the soil to charge higher prices for their products.

I hope my words will be heeded by the civil servants who draw this kind of bill, because it is not fair to members of Parliament to present a bill in this form without additional explanation. We should have the advantage of as much knowledge as possible as to what the tariff rates have been in the past and the effect of the proposed changes. All this information should be written out on the blank pages which appear in this bill. Only in that way can we give the bill the consideration it deserves.

Perhaps if we had taken the time expended by the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) we could have analyzed each item set out in the bill. The fact of the matter is that members of Parliament, including senators, are very busy people. We are not always credited with being busy, but the fact is we are. We have many subjects to consider. To throw at us this type of bill without detailed explanations is an outrage. To say that it has been done in the past does not make it any more proper today. I hope for the future that legislation affecting tariff items will come forward with as much information as is possible.

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Honourable senators, I would like to add a few words on this point raised by my distinguished colleague from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). I am under the impression that the majority of honourable senators would support him in asking those who are responsible for submitting this type of legislation to see to it that it comes forward with full explanation. If my memory serves me, this was done in the past. Why there are no explanatory notes to this bill, I do not know.

I was born on a farm, and I have always felt the farmer should have a reasonable amount of protection in the season of production, so that the country would not be flooded with vegetables grown outside its boundaries. After all, we must admit that manufacturers and industrialists have never failed to obtain from the Government sufficient protection for their goods. This policy allows them to pay reasonable salaries to their employees and also to enjoy a fair profit on their investment. The farmer, the man who produces from the soil, is equally entitled to a fair income. If we look back over the past twenty years, the statistics show there is something wrong, because a large number of children raised on farms move to industrial centres. There must be some reason for it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Mechanization of farms.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: It might be the lure of the city. The ease with which a young man from the farm can go to the city and earn a good living, compared with the hard work he would be bound to do on the farm, will inevitably attract him to the city. There are other reasons, honourable senators, and one of them, I believe, is that farmers do not get sufficient income from their work and production. The farmers of today are not producing blindly without regard to income at the end of the year. Today they keep accounts. Most of them have gone to our agricultural schools, or they have someone available to show them how to derive the maximum return from their efforts.

According to the schedule in this bill, most of the fruit and vegetable items are free under the British Preferential Tariff. I do not see anywhere in all these items where a tariff has been imposed during a certain season. Now, we all like fruits and vegetables, but they are not produced all the year round in Canada. We, as consumers, like to have them in winter. But, when the farmers of this country are producing them I wonder if it is just and equitable to allow foreign products to flood our markets.

I do not want to make any political allusion, but I recall the big fight we had in 1930 because of the butter from New Zealand.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Why bring that up?

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: I bring that up because it was a precedent. The one who brought it up originally was not your humble colleague who is now speaking, but a gentleman by the name of the Right Honourable R. B. Bennett. Under his political program he brought that up, and I do not know if he was so wrong, or if free butter from New Zealand was an invasion of our Canadian market and had the effect of annihilating the reasonable profit of our farm producers. I do not know if it had that result. I am informed that some ways and means had been taken in those days to flood the market, so that they might have a good case for making a successful fight during the coming election.

In principle, I believe that the farmers of this country have a right to be protected in due course and in due season.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The consumer should be protected, too.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: The consumer has to be protected, as my honourable colleague from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has said, but the consumer is content to let his fellow citizen live. We are all consumers. The farmers are consumers also. They have to pay the duties on many things they must buy. They have to pay a big price because today, as the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity said, agriculture is pretty well mechanized. The day of the horse and wagon has gone, and farmers have to pay a very high tariff rate for their agricultural implements. It is only just that they be able to sell their products at prices which enable them to cover the costs of production.

I am sure that when this bill goes to committee these questions will be raised. In my opinion, our farmers should be protected, if there are ways and means of doing so, as I believe this would be in the best interests of this country.

Hon. W. D. Euler: Honourable senators, I am not sure whether I ought to congratulate the senator from Rigaud (Hon. Mr. Dupuis) on his proving himself to be an out-and-out protectionist, especially in so far as the farmer is concerned. For my part he did not have to prove it, because in days past, as I remember, he was in favour of the entire prohibition of a commodity whose sale he felt would hurt the farmer.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: Are you referring to margarine?

Hon. Mr. Euler: My friend has guessed rightly.

I have always understood that the discussion on the second reading of a bill should be pretty well confined to the principle of the bill. I am not sure whether there is any very definite principle in this bill, unless it is that we still have as a policy the making of tariffs and the raising and lowering of tariffs. As to the request for fuller information in the explanatory notes to the bill, I think it might be a little difficult, in spite of what has been said, to give a full explanation of the changes in the multiplicity of items involved in this bill.

There may be another principle involved in the bill. I notice that the term during which certain commodities, such as fruits and vegetables, may not be imported except at increased rates of duty—chiefly from the United States, I believe—is now extended, I am not sure that that gives further protection, and I am not quite sure that it should. I recall an incident which occurred while, if I may say so, I was in charge of the Department of National Revenue. On a certain occasion I journeyed to a province where fruit and vegetables are produced in abundance. There was then a provision in the law that during a certain period when these commodities were being produced in Canada they could not be imported, except at a very high rate of duty. In fact, they may have been prohibited altogether, but I am not quite sure of that. When I was in that province I was waited upon by fruit growers and producers of vegetables who wanted the term applicable to berries, or some such product, extended beyond the period in which they were being produced in Canada. I asked: "Why do you want to prohibit goods coming into this country when they are not being produced here? Why deprive the people of Canada of something they want and can obtain only through importation?" They replied: "Well, if we allow those things to come in prior to our own season, our people will become sated with the taste and they won't buy ours when we do have them to sell". I said, "I am quite in favour of giving you consideration when you are actually producing them yourselves, but I think you are going a little too far when you want to shut out these things while you are not producing them".

I question whether the term should be extended as proposed in this instance, for I doubt very much whether it offers any protection. However, I do not think we could get very far by examining the bill item by item in this house. That should be done in committee.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, I completely agree with the point raised by my honourable friend from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler), for in perusing this bill and in following the presentation made by the honourable senator from Ottawa East (Hon. Mr. Choquette) I found it practically impossible to judge the changes that would be involved in relation to the imported articles and products that would be affected. I think it would have been very enlightening to honourable members if we could have had, in addition to the information contained in the schedules to the bill, a basis of comparison. The honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) pointed out that such a comparison was made available through the schedules of rates printed recently in our Minutes of Proceedings. However, in order to enable us to form an intelligent view at this time there should have been made available the present rates and, if possible, the volume of traffic in import trade that is being affected by the bill. I should like that information to be made available when this bill is being considered in committee. This would give us an idea of how far this legislation is affecting certain provisional tariff arrangements we have had with respect to imported fruits and vegetables at certain times of the year.

There is important information involved here. The extension of seasonal restrictions as referred to by the sponsor will tend to interfere with imports from vegetable producers in the United States, for example, at a time when there is a demand for them in this country. This is a problem which should be seriously considered in committee. A comparatively recent development in this country is the processing and deep freezing of fruits and vegetables so that these products may be available to our consumers at a time when our gardens are not producing the fresh products. It may be argued that this particular industry should be protected from imports of fresh fruits and vegetables during seasons of the year when Canada is not producing those products for market. Here again the interest of the whole wide body of the consuming public in Canada is at stake. The industrialization of this country is creating larger home markets all the time in urban centres, and these will be vitally affected by any tendency to curtail imports of such foods early in the season.

My basic approach to tariffs and trade is that the interest of the consumer is the only sound measuring rod for the economy of any country. The authorities have no classification of consumers. We are all consumers. You can't divide us into a labouring class, a manufacturing class, a financial or professional class or into any other classes. But you can certainly define as a basis of our economy the interest of our consuming public, and it is that factor I should like to see discussed further in committee, in the light of the information which I have suggested should be furnished.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, it is not often I disagree with the honourable gentleman from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), but this is one occasion when I am not able to go along with him all the way. My purpose in rising at this time is to ask a question, but before doing so I should like to give a little background to certain sections of this bill as it applies to fruits and vegetables.

For many years there has been in Canada an organization known as the Canadian Horticultural Council. There has also been a similar organization in the United States, the American Horticultural Council. Throughout the years these councils have worked in close co-operation with the tariffs boards and Governments of their respective countries in relation to tariffs on imports and tariffs on exports.

I happened to be a member of the Canadian Horticultural Council for a number of years, during which time I sat in various places both in Canada and in the United States when matters of tariffs on fruits and vegetables were considered. I remember distinctly that it was only after three conferences that we were able to find any grounds for agreement, but when we finally reached some semblance of agreement on one or two matters we were soon able to reach agreement on all. It is a fact that for many years the fruit and vegetable growers in Canada have been at a disadvantage in relation to American growers. I need give only one illustration to prove this point. Until recently we had to pay a duty of 37½ cents per 100 pounds on a certain quota of potatoes going into the United States. On any shipment over that quota the tariff went up to 60 cents, and even to 75 cents, per 100 pounds. At the same time the Americans were able to ship their potatoes free of duty into Canada throughout the year except for six weeks. It was only the period from June 15 to July 31 when a 37½-cent duty was imposed on American potatoes coming into this country. Our potato growers suffered during all those years as a result of this, and only recently has there been reciprocity; that is, the same duty in the United States applies now in Canada. In so far as fruits and vegetables are concerned, however, there has been agreement over the years that during certain periods of the year there shall be no duty on American fruits coming into Canada and, by the same token, that during certain periods of the year there shall be no duty on similar products going into the United States. That was arranged by agreement between the two countries. These recommendations were made to the tariff boards both in Canada and the United States, and up to three years ago, or four years at the outside, 99 per cent of those recommendations were accepted by the respective governments of the United States and Canada.

The reason for the exemption from duty during those certain periods of the year, whether it is six or ten weeks, or maybe fourteen or twenty weeks, as far as American produce coming into Canada is concerned, is that during those periods that produce cannot be grown here in Canada. The tariff applies during the flush season when the crop first comes in in this country, and it may not apply on a certain date, but it applies at a date agreed to by the American association and the Canadian association, with the support and approval of the Government of Canada or the Government of the United States, as the case may be. That undertaking has been in existence for years. The consumers of Canada have benefited as a result of this plan, because they have not had to pay any duty on fruits and vegetables coming into Canada when that produce was not grown in this country. However, honourable senators, I feel very strongly that that group of people comprising those who live on farms and are dependent on the farms for their livelihood are entitled to some consideration and some protection during periods when our markets are flooded by cheap products at the tail end of the season in other countries, just as any other industry is protected by tariffs, so that the farmers shall have at least some share of protection.

Now, the question I wish to ask the sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Choquette) is this: With regard to the agreement in relation to Part I of the schedule to the bill, has that been agreed to by the Canadian Horticultural Council and the American Horticultural Council, as approved by the Tariff Board?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I am afraid that question will have to be answered in committee.

Honourable senators, while I am on my feet, I wish it to be understood that I am attempting, not to close the debate, but to straighten out my good friend from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) on the question of arithmetic which he referred to. I have always been pretty poor in arithmetic, and am reminded constantly of it every day. I am sure my friend has seen me adding on my fingers from time to time, but I usually get the right answer. I think the difficulty here arises from the fact that my honourable friend was referring to the different results the minister and he and I obtained, but I suggest that all of us were correct, for the minister and my honourable friend were referring to the total number of tariff changes. On the other hand, I was referring to the number of changes affecting fruits and vegetables contained in Part I of the schedule, amounting to 43.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, this bill is a rather important one. I feel bound to say, however, that these schedules of changes have not, in the light of recent developments, so much significance after all, because a year ago we made amendments to the Customs Act which permitted the Minister of National Revenue, with the support of the Government, of course, to fix valuations for duty purposes on any class of goods imported into Canada that paid duties. I think that factor must be taken into consideration in any discussion of customs schedules.

If this bill goes to a committee, I should like to know—and I hope the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) will be able to get the information—to what extent these amendments to the Customs Act have been invoked over the past year or since they became effective. I think that is a pertinent question.

There has been a dumping principle in our tariff for nearly sixty years, but the operation of the dumping principle was very simple, and it was this, that no exporter in a foreign country could offer goods for sale in Canada at a price lower than the price he charged in his domestic market without subjecting himself to the application of the dumping principle. That is an understandable principle upon which to operate. However, we have departed largely from that in the administration of our customs laws. Now, I still believe there are certain basic principles that should govern in the administration of these matters. I was interested in the argument advanced a few moments ago by our good colleague from Westmorland (Hon. Mr. Taylor). He put forward a first-class protectionist kind of an argument, the kind of argument that perhaps forty years ago I used to combat day in and day out. There was not a point advanced by him in favour of potatoes or vegetables that could not be invoked in regard to almost every other product imported into Canada. If we are to base the fixation of our tariffs on expediency, on what will satisfy this, that, or any other group, well, let us frankly recognize it, and then tariff making will become a matter based not on any principle but on the pressure which individual groups can bring to bear upon the administration.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: It is now.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: It is now to far too great an extent. But I would like to ask honourable senators, on this point, what will that do in regard to our whole export trade? Canada is essentially an exporting country. If I were asked today what is the most important thing for the Canadian economy, I would unquestionably and without hesitation answer that it is markets. If we can find profitable markets abroad for the 25 per cent of our total production that we must sell abroad if we are to keep our people employed and our industries and agriculture going, then we will have relatively easy sailing.

Let me give an illustration that is very pertinent at the present time. One of the growing markets that Canada has abroad for many of its products is in the Far East, in Japan, Hong Kong and other Far Eastern countries. Our trade with Japan is tremendously out of balance. In other words, we sell to Japan probably three or four times, but certainly three times—I have not looked at the figures lately—what we buy from that country. Now, what do we sell to Japan? Today there is a vast problem of markets for cereals from western Canada, a problem that is affecting eastern Canada as well. Japan has become an importer of not only certain grades of wheat but, in quite a substantial way, of barley. Is that market worth while? Are we going to hold it? Can we hold it if our Canadian friends say, "Japanese cottons, Japanese textiles and Japanese boots and shoes are interfering with our domestic business", and come running to the Minister of National Revenue, asking "Please, sir, won't you revalue these imports for duty purposes with the object of keeping them out?" That applies in many other directions as well, because Japan is taking some of our timber, some of our coal from British Columbia, and Canada is building up a market for iron ore from that province, if the British Columbia Government does not succeed in shutting it off, which, at the moment, I understand it is trying to do.

Honourable senators, it has often been said that trade is not a one-way street, and there was never a greater truism than that statement. If we are going to sell abroad we must be prepared to buy from abroad somewhere, and this idea that seems to be gaining currency to an increasing degree today, that we can protect our home industry in every field and at the same time build up our export markets, is nothing but the sheerest nonsense. It cannot in the long run be done.

I still think that the consumer's interest is the main interest. A French economist of the last century, a noted man—I have forgotten his name at the moment—laid down the principle that the interest of the consumer is the interest of the human race. That is as true today as it was then. We have tried by devious shifts, this way and that way, to get around the basic principles that should apply to a question of this kind.

Coming to another point—and I shall not detain the house much longer—I did share with the honourable senior senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) and the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) their criticism of the lack of information in the bill. We have the schedules here showing what the tariff rates will be under these amendments. It would have been a very simple matter at the same time to have included in the schedules what the existing rates are on each of these items.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Was that not attended to last week when the information was printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: My honourable friend has anticipated what I was going to say. It is true that we have that information, but where? We have it in the Minutes of the Proceedings. If it had been supplied in the bill one could see at a glance what the difference is in each case. I would suggest to the honourable Leader of the Government in this honourable house (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) that he bring that to the attention of the administration when in future years we have further revisions of these schedules. It would not, I am convinced, involve very much labour on the part of departmental officials to inform members of Parliament, on the pages opposite the various items, as the honourable senior senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) suggested, what the volume of trade was in the particular items in the last year or the previous year.

I am sure that all honourable senators in this house and of the other house desire to discharge their responsibilities in the most effective manner possible and if we are to do so we must have knowledge on which to base our judgment. It is just impossible, as someone already has said, for anyone to master all the details of this bill if one has to search through other records for information. We have civil servants, many of them, and a great deal more information could be provided us, so that we would not need to call up the Library or the Bureau of Statistics or somewhere else to try to acquaint ourselves with the essential matters in relation to the problem under consideration.

Honourable senators, I just wish to say, in conclusion, that it is very important—at any rate, so it appears to me—that we consider the larger principles upon which our trade should be based. I know that at times someone is going to be hurt here or someone is going to be hurt there; but if we shape a tariff policy to try to help the person over there or the person over here, we are going to miss out in the whole larger problem which, I repeat, is the problem of finding markets for at least 25 per cent of our total production in Canada. And I simply assert once more that you cannot sell your products abroad unless you are prepared to buy from abroad in return.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, may I be allowed to add a brief statement? Last year on a bill like this one I raised the question which has been raised by the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar), namely, that in the schedule to the bill we should be shown not only the existing rates but the old rates. The Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) was good enough to take this up with me some time before this bill came to the Senate. It was explained to me that this cannot be done in the bill—that when we get a bill we are passing the legislation that is contained in it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: But it could be shown on the opposite pages.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am simply giving the explanation that was given by the department. They suggested that the old schedule should not be shown in the bill itself, and for that reason it was done in the way it has been done, namely, by a special table in the Minutes of the Proceedings. Whether the decision was right or not, at least this year we have both the old and the new schedules for comparison.

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I wish to say a few words in answer to what was said by the honourable senators from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) and Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). I cannot accept their argument on the principle that the consumers should be kings, so to speak, in this country. I would point out that before we can consume we must produce. If we kill the producer, by so doing we kill the consumer.

In my opinion the Government, when it presents changes in legislation of this kind, must study both sides of the picture, and maintain a balance between the producers and the consumers of this country. They should be given equal consideration; protection should not be extended to one at the expense of the other. I believe the position of the producer and the consumer can be related to our exports and imports. If we want to export, we must also import. If we are to have consumers, we must first have producers.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Honourable senators, may I ask one question? Could we not have printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings both the present rates and the proposed rates of tariff, so that we may make a comparison?

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Both rates are printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I discussed this matter fully with the senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) several weeks before the bill was brought down, and the matter was taken up with the department. As far as we could see, this was the only way in which we could give honourable senators all the information; it was not thought feasible to give a great number of explanatory notes on the right-hand pages of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I understand we will now be able to make a full comparison from the information contained in the Minutes of the Proceedings?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, I would like to rise on a question of privilege. I believe I was charged by the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) with being a protectionist. This I want to deny most emphatically. I do say that when the United States charges duty on agricultural products going into that country at certain periods of the year, and at reasonably high rates, I am not one who is prepared to admit products from that country into Canada twelve months of the year, free of duty.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Quid pro quo.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Quid pro quo.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Would you say those products should be prohibited from coming in here when we are not producing them?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): I did not say a word about that.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators, I do not think I called my friend a protectionist, but I did say he was using a good protectionist argument.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Hansard will show.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators there is perhaps very little I can contribute to this debate. However, I would like to point out that it is, to my mind, a salutary and healthy condition in Canadian public affairs that for the past twenty years or so there has been very little partisan debate on customs tariff matters.

There was a time in my youth when the members of my party from western Canada felt very strongly that we were in a difficult position from a tariff standpoint. It was generally conceived, rightly or wrongly—certainly it was argued by our opponents—that ours was a high-tariff party and our opposition was a low-tariff party. Whether or not that was true in those days—

Hon. Mr. Horner: It never was.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: —I wonder if anyone can suggest that it has been true over the years since say 1940. I must say that I have seen little sign of it.

With respect to the statements and discussion that have come from the other side of the house, there is very little on which I wish to disagree. I agree most heartily that the consumer is of tremendous importance. I also agree with the remarks made by the honourable senator from Kennebec (Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt), that the producer must not be overlooked; he too is of immense importance. After all, as was pointed out, we cannot have any consumption unless we first have production.

Honourable senators, I offer these observations to indicate how endless the debate on tariff questions can be and has been in the past. I say, thank goodness we no longer have partisan debates on tariff matters in this country.

I should, however, like to refer to two remarks made by the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar), not so much to disagree with him as to suggest that he perhaps went too far in what he said. He referred, for instance, to the dumping principle in this country, which is almost as old as the country itself. I think there has been no difference in the attitudes of the two main parties with regard to dumping principles, but the problems we have faced in the last few years, as I understand them, result from attempts by producers in other countries, by devious means and methods, to defeat the anti-dumping provisions in the Canadian tariff laws. Let me give an example with which I am sure you are all familiar.

We have, for instance, a tariff on certain qualities of textiles. The provisions of the law in this respect are defeated by there being shipped into this country textiles which are called "seconds", and perhaps "thirds", but which in reality are first-class goods. This has created a tremendous difficulty for the Customs Department to enforce the anti-dumping provisions in our law. It is difficult to prevent such producers in other countries from defeating the plain intention of our anti-dumping laws.

I want to make one or two remarks about something else that the honourable senator from Churchill said. He said: "You cannot sell your products abroad unless you buy from abroad." Generally speaking, I am in agreement with that, but I think it is only true in a general way. I give you, for instance, the example of the United States. Everyone knows that the United States has been surrounded by a tariff wall as high as Haman's gallows for the last hundred or more years. In fact, the economy and standard of living of that country have been built up behind this tremendous tariff wall.

The honourable senator from Westmorland (Hon. Mr. Taylor) referred a moment ago to a fact that we in western Canada have been aware of for a long time, namely, that in former years if we shipped our potatoes across the border into Minnesota or North Dakota we were faced with a tariff of 37½ cents per unit of measurement, whereas the American farmer was able to ship his potatoes into Canada free of duty. This is an example of one of the real problems in regard to this business of tariffs and tariff-making.

Many a manufacturer in Ontario has said to me: "If I could sell into the American market free of duty I would be perfectly happy to have the American manufacturer come into the Canadian market free and I will compete with him sucessfully. But my trouble is that because I am unable to get into the American market either free or at a reasonable rate of duty, I could not remain in business in Canada with our restricted market without reasonable tariff protection."

Hon. Mr. Euler: And there would be no permanency about such an arrangement, either.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No.

Those are the facts of life in regard to the industries of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. There is now in existence in regard to manufactured goods a tariff system which is approximately the same on both sides—that is, as between Canada and the United States. But I do think that in most cases the Canadian tariff on equivalent goods is lower than the American tariff.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: May I ask my honourable friend a question?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Is it not a fact that today there is not a tariff on automobiles imported into the United States? I know this year I saw a statement saying that the United States would probably import 600,000 automobiles from Europe.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, that is quite correct. There is no tariff on automobiles imported into the United States, and there is a very good reason for it, namely, that until the last two or three years the United States, through its mass production facilities, enjoyed a great advantage over every other part of the world in the manufacture of automobiles. But that advantage now seems to have gone, and I think you will find that the Americans very soon will be agitating for a tariff on automobiles against the importation of foreign cars.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Sure they will.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Yes, sure they will. There is nothing more certain.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I was dealing with the remark that the honourable senator from Churchill made, which I agree with, that "You cannot sell your products abroad unless you buy from abroad". But, of course, that is only true in a very general way, it seems to me. The United States for all the period of its history, having had a huge tariff wall surrounding it, has at all times been exporting more goods than it has been importing. I think the figures of exports and imports of that country will indicate that it is not correct to say you cannot export unless you import an equivalent amount. I repeat that United States exports, through the years, have far exceeded imports.

Of course, the problem is this, and everyone knows it, that the United States could not be paid for all those excess exports. I will admit that, and the honourable senator from Churchill is quite right in saying that if you export—that is, for long periods of years—more goods than you import, then something has got to suffer, and I think we all know what has happened in regard to the United States. I remember that when I was a young boy I heard about America making loans to every part of the world. What happened to those loans? They were not paid. That was a price the United States paid for these big exports.

Hon. Mr. Reid: It did not want to be paid for them.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Of course it did not. That is the very point I am making. Its economy would have greatly suffered if those countries had not defaulted on those loans. Consequently, the loans were never paid. Indeed they could not have been paid in any other way than with goods exported to the United States by the debtor countries.

Then, in the First World War the United States certainly lost tremendous amounts of money through defaults by other nations. That was the process. Of course, in the Second World War there was lend-lease, and then there was also the tremendous volume of exports which the United States made throughout the war years without getting paid for them.

Hon. Mr. Euler: We did some of it also.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is one of the facts of life, it seems to me, in regard to this world-wide tariff problem.

Let me give another reason why I suggest that the honourable senator from Churchill was rather sweeping in his remarks. Take the question of Canadian pulpwood. No matter whether Canada imports a dollar's worth of goods or exports a dollar's worth of goods, pulpwood will get into the markets of the world as long, and only as long, as it can compete with pulpwood from other countries. I think that is an example of the serious problem that we are facing today in regard to our trade. It is a question of cost of production in Canada, and that problem is going to be more dangerous than anything else to the economy of this country in the next few years. Mr. Ambridge, President of the Abitibi Power and Paper Company, stated in evidence before a committe of the House of Commons yesterday, as reported by the press, that our most serious problem in his industry is the cost of production, and that if we cannot keep that in line with the cost in other countries, then Canada is inevitably going to lose its present markets for pulpwood and pulpwood products throughout the world.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable senator, does he argue that we make ourselves prosperous by giving our products away and getting nothing in return?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I do not argue that for a moment. I am just suggesting that I do not think the whole economy of the world can be explained by slightly higher or slightly lower tariffs. I am suggesting that our great problem of the present day and of the next few years is to keep our costs of producing the goods we try to export in line with the costs in other countries.

Apart from that, as I said at the beginning, I cannot say I disagree in any important principle with anything that has been said by honourable gentlemen on the other side of the house.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Would the honourable senator answer a question? Would he subscribe to the idea that our overall costs in Canada are higher than those in any other country in the Western world?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I think they are very rapidly getting to be that.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, I have just a few words to contribute to this debate. The whole matter of tariffs and trade can be summed up in the philosophy expounded years ago by the late Right Honourable Mackenzie King, who said, "Each one of you is a free trader except for the goods produced in your own country or in the factories in your constituency." That applies to everyone, I believe.

I also want to point out to those who have been protesting against products coming here from China by way of truck transport, that we will hear a far different cry when China and Japan start exporting shirts and suits and cheaper goods to Canada. We will hear a different cry then about keeping those goods out. We almost had an international incident when they tried to transport shrimps by truck from Vancouver through the United States to Montreal. I just ask you whether it does not make quite a difference when the tariffs are affecting our own farmers, producers and manufacturers?

Hon. Senators: Question!

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the question is on the motion of the Honourable Senator Choquette, seconded by the Honourable Senator Pearson, for the second reading of Bill C-44, to amend the Customs Tariff and the New Zealand Tariff Agreement Act, 1932. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 21, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

INCOME TAX BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-48, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: With leave, next sitting.

EXCISE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill C-45.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-45) intituled: "An Act to amend the Excise Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 14, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

LENGTH AND MASS UNITS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill S-20.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (S-20) intituled: "An Act to amend the Length and Mass Units Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 19, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Next sitting.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill S-21.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (S-21) intituled: "An Act to amend the Weights and Measures Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 19, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Next sitting.

CUSTOMS TARIFF AND NEW ZEALAND TRADE AGREEMENT BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-44.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-44) intituled: "An Act to amend the Customs Tariff and The New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1932", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 20, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Next sitting.

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-37.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-37) intituled: "An Act to provide for the appointment of Parliamentary Secretaries to Ministers", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 12, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 1, lines 6, 7 and 8:—Strike out subclause (1) of clause 2 and substitute "2. (1) The Governor in Council may appoint one or more members of the House of Commons to be Parliamentary Secretary or Secretaries to a Minister."

2. Page 1, line 16:—After "Secretary" insert "or Secretaries".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be concurred in?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Next sitting.

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that the amendments be concurred in now.

With permission of the house I will explain the amendments, and it will then be open to honourable senators to concur in the amendments now or at a later time.

The bill which is before us provides for a maximum number of 16 parliamentary secretaries. In the form in which it reached this house, it permitted the appointment of one secretary to each minister. The feeling of the committee, after some very serious deliberation, was that there should be more flexibility in the legislation. One can quite easily conceive of a situation, having regard to the duties that some of the ministers are called upon to perform, in which there should be more than one parliamentary secretary to assist a minister. It may well be that other ministers feel capable of discharging their duties without any such assistance.

The amendment which the committee proposed provides that there may be one or more parliamentary secretaries appointed to serve a minister, but retains the maximum of 16 appointees. So, under the amendment we are not increasing the drain upon the treasury of the country.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Now.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I have no objection to the bill being read the third time now. This is a House of Commons measure, and no doubt members of that house are anxious to know whether or not there will be parliamentary secretaries. Why should we keep them in suspense any longer?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think we should relieve the suspense by passing the bill as soon as possible.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave, I move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), that the bill, as amended, be now read the third time.

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, May 26, 1959, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called and before some honourable senators who have appointments outside the house leave, would it be possible for the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) to indicate now what the business is likely to be on Tuesday evening?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think I can give a reasonably accurate statement of the business for Tuesday. I propose, with leave of the Senate, to proceed first with the second reading of the Income Tax Bill, and then with the second readings of the Excise Tax Bill, the Export Credits Insurance Bill, and the Freight Rates Reduction Bill. There is also the resolution for approval of the convention concerning the abolition of forced labour. I am not sure whether we shall be able to deal with the resolution for approval of the convention on the nationality of married women on Tuesday next or not.

OLD AGE SECURITY BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 14, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Higgins for the second reading of Bill C-46, to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, in rising to take part in this debate I want, for a few minutes, to outline the Old Age Security legislation since its inception and up to the present time because I have one or two things to say with regard to changes which have been made in the act since the beginning.

The Old Age Pensions Act was put into effect by the Liberal administration in 1927. The monthly allowance then was $20, and the contribution at that time was on a fifty-fifty basis, federally and provincially. During the Conservative régime the contribution was increased to 75 per cent by the federal Government, and the contribution of the provinces was reduced to 25 per cent. In 1943 the monthly alowance was increased to $25; in 1947, to $30; and in 1949, to $40. Up to that time the provincial Governments administered the act.

I am one of those who hold the view that the great agitations throughout the country for a change in the system resulted from the fact that some of the regulations in those days were being scandalously carried out by certain provinces. Male and female investigators were going around asking the most searching questions, and I recall aged people in my own constituency saying they would rather starve than answer them. For many years the Old Age Pensions Act had two specific requirements. The recipient had to be a British subject with a minimum of 20 years' residence in this country.

In 1950 a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons was set up to examine and study existing legislation in Canada and in other countries with respect to old age security. The committee's report was tabled in the Senate on June 28, 1950, and it provided the background of the social security planning which resulted in the enactment of two separate pieces of legislation in 1951, the Old Age Security Act and the Old Age Assistance Act.

It should be noted that the new legislation dropped the British or Canadian citizenship requirement clause but retained the 20 years' residence requirement. I want to read now from the report of the joint committee of 1950 the change in the regulation affecting residence, for I will have something particular to say about that later. I quote:

> In order to qualify for the universal pension at 70 years of age, an individual should have to reside for a reasonable period of time in Canada—

And, mark this:

> —during his earning years and be liable during these years to make his required contribution to the old age security program.

I was heartily in accord with that provision. I want to show the change that has taken place. During the last session of Parliament the present administration changed the residence requirement from 20 years to 10 years. I have spoken to many people who were unaware that one could obtain an old age security pension without being a citizen of this country or a British subject; many had not realized that all an immigrant had to do to secure a Canadian old age security pension was to come and reside in this country for 10 years. I warn the Government what may likely happen. I know of cases where people have emigrated to Canada from continental Europe and, while living here, have contributed to the support of their parents living abroad. Now they are telling their parents that when they reach 60, 61 or 62 they should take up residence in Canada because after 10 years they could draw a monthly pension of $55 each. As a matter of fact, from what I hear it may not be very long before this 10-year period is further reduced.

I view with concern the kind of agitation that is going on in the other place, where it is argued that once a person becomes eligible to receive old age security he or she should be allowed to move to any country of his or her choice and continue to receive the pension from Canada. At the present time a recipient can absent himself from Canada for a period of almost seven months and still draw his pension. The act provides for an absence of six months, but in the final result it can total almost seven. Apparently this is not good enough for some members of Parliament and, as I say, some of them are now advocating—and I claim it is just for political purposes—that an old age security pensioner should be allowed to go wherever he likes, for as long as he likes, and continue to draw his pension. What is going to happen? Is our great nation going to end up inviting aged people from other countries to come and reside here for 10 years and then start drawing a pension of $55 a month and be allowed to go back to their own country and continue to draw a pension of $55 from Canada? And don't forget the amount could very well be increased in the future.

I took the trouble to look up some statistics on Government annuities. I am not going to place on record all the figures I have before me. A single male person coming to this country at the age of 60 would have to pay $4,200 to buy a Government annuity which would provide him with a monthly income of $55.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: At what age would it commence?

Hon. Mr. Reid: At 70.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The payments would not start until he was 70?

Hon. Mr. Reid: That is right, but he would have to pay that amount in cash if he bought a Government annuity.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: How much?

Hon. Mr. Reid: It is $4,200 for a man and $4,786 for his wife. The effect of our legislation is that we are actually handing people who come here at 60 almost $9,000 as a free gift, and remember they come here when their earning power is practically gone. The original philosophy behind the Old Age Pensions Act was that the people who were to benefit later were to contribute to the fund during their earning years. I think most honourable senators will recall the tenor of speeches when the original legislation was enacted in 1927. It was that something should be done for the old pioneers who had laid the foundation of this country and those who had contributed to its economy for so long. Well, we enacted the Old Age Pensions Act in 1927, and now we have the Old Age Security Act and the Old Age Assistance Act. Personally, I think what we are doing now is wrong, but I doubt very much if anything will be done to change it. When I read the political speeches in the House of Commons I am really worried, for they are out to get a new no-residence clause which will enable people to return to their country of origin and continue to draw old age pension moneys from Canada. I am just warning the Government and the people of Canada where we seem to be drifting.

The method of financing old age security adopted by Parliament in 1951 was described as the pay-as-you-go system. It was a compromise between the insurance principle and financing through general taxation and consolidated revenue. It retained the contributory feature and provided for the creation of a special fund to be financed by three specific taxes according to the 2-2-2 formula. That is, 2 per cent from personal incomes, 2 per cent from corporate incomes, and 2 per cent from sales tax.

When the fund was created, in 1952, the specific taxes levied for the purpose of financing the fund—the 2-2-2 formula—was completely or partially offset by reductions in those taxes levied for ordinary budgetary purposes. The Canadian Tax Foundation, in its review entitled National Finances, had this to say:

> In general, these 2-2-2 rates represented the earmarking of a part of existing taxes rather than the establishing of new imposts.

I want to repeat that, because a new impost is now being placed on our old age security plan:

> In general, these 2-2-2 rates represented the earmarking of a part of the existing taxes rather than the establishing of new imposts: e.g., the general sales tax rate of 10 per cent was reduced to 8 per cent at the same time. No change in the 2-2-2 rates have been made since they were introduced. Any excess of pension payments over tax rates was to be financed by temporary loans from the Minister of Finance.

Therefore, the contributory principle is at the basis of our old age security system.

May I remind honourable senators what the Minister of Finance, Mr. Fleming, had to say about the sales tax which is now being increased 50 per cent, as appears in the House of Commons Hansard of November 1, 1951, at page 610:

> We must recognize as well that the sales tax is a costly tax to the consumer because it pyramids as the result of mark-ups as the goods pass from hand to hand, from manufacturer or producer, who pays the tax in the first instance, to the wholesaler, from the wholesaler to the retailer, from the retailer to the consumer, and that a 2 per cent sales tax in this way levied on the manufacturer or producer will probably cost the consumer not 2 per cent but closer to 4 per cent on the cost of goods that he has to buy.

I repeat that the last administration did not increase the sales tax; it took only 2 per cent from the 10 per cent already in effect, and I think that is acknowledged.

During the 1953 and 1957 election campaigns the present Government promised to increase old age pensions and at the same time reduce taxes by $500 million, and also balance the budget. Later on I will quote from the Prime Minister's statement in which he promised to do that very thing. At that time the Prime Minister said that this could be done quite easily. He repeated that assertion in the fall of 1957 on television, when he announced the $9 increase in old age pensions, rather than submitting it to Parliament, which was sitting at the time.

Honourable senators will also recall the pre-election session of 1957-58. At that time the Minister of Finance announced, soon after he had resumed his new responsibilities, that he would present a budget during the fall session, and so the House of Commons proceeded to consider Government legislation on that basis. The Right Honourable Mr. St. Laurent expressed the attitude of the official Opposition on the proposed increase in old age pensions, as reported in the House of Commons Hansard, October 16, 1957, at page 44, in the following terms:

> As for the measures forecast to increase old age security and other social benefits, naturally every true Liberal will welcome them in principle. Our sole concern will be to see how they fit into the whole financial picture and how far the Government will take effective measures to control the rise in the cost of living which, if unchecked, could easily take away all the advantages of the proposed increases.

The increase of $9 per month added to the $6 previously approved merely meant that a substantial deficit would appear in the fund unless the contributions to the fund were increased proportionately. Since the Minister of Finance had promised to produce a budget during that session, it was normal to assume that contributions to the fund would be adjusted upward on that occasion to maintain the principle unanimously approved by Parliament in 1951.

It would have been highly desirable and most appropriate in the fall of 1957 for the Minister of Finance to reaffirm the pay-as-you-go principle and to take action to bring the old age security fund in balance. It would have been quite easy then to make the change now proposed by the minister and to increase the contributions to 3-3-3 in order to show that the increased pensions had to be paid for by the taxpayers and to maintain the method of financing adopted in 1951. This should have been done by merely transferring existing taxes to the fund as had been partly done in 1952, because at that time it was desirable to reduce taxes for budgetary purposes in view of the then prevailing economic conditions.

This was not done, however, and we all know why: because of the political action shown by the Government then. There was another election coming up and the Prime Minister wanted the Canadian people to believe that it was quite possible, as he had said before the June 1957 elections, to increase benefits of all kinds and to reduce taxes and still to balance the budget. The Prime Minister, before the March elections, wanted to hide the facts and the real financial situation of the Government in order to give the impression that he could accomplish miracles.

The Prime Minister went through this act of what could be called political bribery, and with great success. It is only just recently, however, that he said to labour representatives and to municipalities, here in Ottawa, that he could not make miracles and that there was no recipe enabling the Government to increase expenditures and reduce taxes at the same time. Such an admission coming after the elections took, in my opinion, more nerve than courage.

It was only after the recent elections that the Minister of Finance rediscovered some of the Liberal principles that he had advocated in previous years. In 1951 he supported the pay-as-you-go principle, as I have mentioned. In his last budget speech, it is interesting now to note what he had to say about increased social security, including higher old age pensions. He declared, as appears in the Commons Hansard of April 9, 1959, at page 2415:

> They cost money and must be paid for.

He further declared, as reported on page 2416:

> Before the old age security legislation was first introduced the entire subject was carefully studied by a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. After considering various methods of financing, this committee recommended that the contributory principle be applied, and that the required funds be raised annually on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Why didn't he say that in the House of Commons in the fall of 1957, when he knew perfectly well that the increase in old age pensions he was proposing would create a substantial deficit in the fund?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: May I ask the honourable senator a question?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Are you, or were you, in favour of the increase in the old age pension from $46 to $55 a month?

Hon. Mr. Reid: What a foolish question! Of course I was. I am surprised at the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) asking such an inane question as that.

Well, I am going to warn the Government and warn the country to be on guard against the skulduggery that is taking place.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Oh, that is nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Utter nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Reid: If you desire, I will take you on one at a time, not half a dozen.

There is another aspect of this situation which should also be mentioned. The former Liberal administration provided old age pensions of $40 and $46 monthly without materially adding to the overall tax burden, since the 2-2-2 tax contributions were to a great extent merely transferred to the fund from already existing taxes. The present Government has increased the pensions by 20 per cent, but it is now increasing the contributions to the fund by 50 per cent. Moreover, those greater contributions will be added to the overall tax load instead of being transferred from existing budgetary levies, as was done by the Liberal administration. Therefore, the contribution of the present Government to our old age security system can be summarized as follows: a net increase in the real value of pensions of 17 per cent and a rise of 50 per cent in the taxes financing those pensions.

It should be noted that, with the proposed increase, the sales tax reaches the highest level in our history. Another record for the Government. Moreover, that increase will no doubt be used as a pretext by private industry to further enhance the price of their products. Some of us remember what the present Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance had to say about the sales tax in the past. This is what the Prime Minister said in 1951, during the second session, as reported at page 610 of Hansard:

> We must recognize as well that it is a costly tax to the consumer because it pyramids as the result of mark-ups as the goods pass from hand to hand, from manufacturer or producer, who pays the tax in the first instance, to the wholesaler, from the wholesaler to the retailer, from the retailer to the consumer, and that a 2 per cent sales tax in this way levied on the manufacturer or producer will probably cost the consumer not 2 per cent but closer to 4 per cent on the cost of the goods that he has to buy.

As far as I personally am concerned, I still believe that the pay-as-you-go principle should be maintained as the basis of financing old age security.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Is the honourable senator maintaining that when we had the 2-2-2 formula that always produced enough revenue to pay old age pensions?

Hon. Mr. Reid: By no means. I have all the figures here. But what the Government did in the past was to take it from the whole of Canada, and keep the fund going along without adding more taxes. That is the difference. Taxes have been added on, and before I am through I will show you just how some of these taxes have been added. That is my argument today against this proposed bill. I am in favour of increasing old age pensions if we can manage it, and I am in favour of the contributory system, but I am against handing these pensions out to people coming from Europe and elsewhere, who are not citizens of the country and have only been here ten years.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I take it you are not opposed to having the fund balanced with a 3-3-3 formula.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I am in favour of having the fund balanced.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Does that balance it?

Hon. Mr. Reid: We hope so.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: For the moment.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Honourable senators, in case someone brings me to order for the balance of my remarks, might I say that what I am going to deal with now has a bearing on the bill before us. I have something to say regarding the recent conversion loan and I desire to show where funds enough could have been saved there to pay for the increase in the old age security fund without having to impose an extra tax of 50 per cent or increase the income tax. I am going to place these figures before you, and working up to them I want to proceed with the balance of my argument.

Despite the oft-repeated assertion of the Minister of Finance that the conversion loan was an unqualified success, his assertion does not make it so.

Despite some slight improvement in economic conditions there has been no real improvement in the sentiment of investors regarding Government securities.

The major task of the Government is to restore public confidence in money. In the period from the end of June 1957, the approximate time at which the Conservative Government took office, to the end of March 1959, the Government increased the amount of its debt—represented by direct and guaranteed securities—by a sum of $1,664 million, while in the same period the money supply, that is the total currency and chartered bank deposits, was expanded by some $1,720 million.

No one can honestly deny that the deficit announced last June is both the cause of the conversion loan and of the unprecedented expansion of the money supply which has taken place since the present Government has been in office. The Government's need to borrow money is an explanation of both of these operations.

It is a fact, not too widely known, that the present Government has issued $3,700 million of new bonds, excluding the conversion loan, and of these issues $3,350 million were for a term of three years or less.

We can now count or estimate the immediate cost, and may I point out to honourable senators the picture is really staggering.

I find that, according to the Minister of Finance's figures, the following amounts have been paid out in connection with the conversion loan:

Premiums	$42,400,000
Commission	19,478,000
Issuing fees	7,300,000
Advertising	1,495,000
Administrative costs	1,265,000
	$71,938,000

The Minister of Finance has stated that the annual interest payable on the new bonds is $58 million per annum more than was paid on the Victory Loans which were converted, and he has also stated, in reply to questions asked, that the annual charge for amortization will amount to over $6 million per annum. These are the amounts I want to bring into my argument this afternoon that, were it not for such things as these, there would have been no necessity to raise contributions to the old age security fund by 50 per cent nor raise income taxes. The $64 million extra in one year is indeed a substantial addition to the cost of servicing the national debt, particularly when it must be added to the $40-odd million of additional debt service charges on the other borrowings of the Government.

The question not satisfactorily answered for many yet is: Why by the conversion loan did the Government commit itself long before the maturities of the retired issues and to paying substantially higher rates of interest than were payable on the bonds which were called in so far in advance of their maturities?

I have taken the trouble to find out the additional interest which will be payable for the remainder of the terms of the sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth Victory Loans, which mature respectively on June 1, 1960, February 1, 1962, October 1, 1963 and September 1, 1966. The additional interest for the remaining terms of the Victory Loans is estimated at a total of more than $314 million.

I wonder if the people of this country realize what has taken place, especially when they are now called upon to pay more income tax and increased sales tax of 50 per cent. I have the figures for the various years, but I shall not take up the time of the Senate to read them. I give only the total of more than $314 million. To this amount must be added $30 million by way of premiums paid for the conversion loan. That makes a total loss to the people of this country, by reason of the conversion loan, of about $345 million.

There is a further criticism I would like to express, namely, that the Government has committed the Canadian people to paying rates of 4¼ per cent and 4½ per cent for many years to come; as a matter of fact, in the case of the 4¼ per cent rate it is 17 years, and in respect of the 4½ per cent rate it is 25 years. This means, honourable senators, that even if interest rates fall to the much lower levels which we have known in recent years, the Canadian people will still be obligated to pay 4¼ per cent and 4½ per cent until the stated maturity of the securities. It seems to me and to many others that in agreeing to the highest rates payable on Dominion of Canada bonds, higher than any known by the present generation, the Government would have exercised only elementary prudence in insisting upon a right to redeem these bonds at a reasonable length of time before their stated maturity.

Many may recall the eloquence of the Prime Minister's appeal to the patriotism of the bondholders, the Minister of Finance's sledge-hammer arguments over television and radio, the high-pressure advertising to show that the conversion loan could provide female bondholders with new hats, and the less subtle and more sordid appeal of 4¼ per cent and 4½ per cent coupons as a substitute for the 3 per cent coupons which were attached to the Victory Loans.

Honourable senators, I would like to hear some expression of opinion on this matter, especially when we get into the Finance Committee and are dealing with the threat of inflation. This morning I telephoned the bank, and this is what I learned. The conversion loan bonds bearing 4¼ per cent, maturing in 1972, are priced at 91¾ to 92½, the 4½ per cent bonds, maturing in 1983, are priced at 91¾.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is bid price?

Hon. Mr. Reid: That is the price at which the bank tells me they will sell me bonds if I want to buy them. I happened to ask one banker if he was selling many, and he said it was not very encouraging.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Why don't you buy some now and make some money?

Hon. Mr. Reid: I don't expect to live until 1983.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: You look very healthy.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I know I do, but I also realize life's limitations.

This brings me to a statement made by Dr. Frank Underhill, which I would ask permission to place on the record. I quote from a news item headed "Politics is not for Politicians":

> "Just as war is too important to be left to the generals", Dr. Underhill emphasized, "so politics is too vital a matter to be left to the politicians."
> Canadians, like other mass democracies in Western countries, are escapists from politics. They are prone to hand over the burden of decision-making "to some charismatic leader,"—

That word "charismatic" was a new one to me, and it drove me to the dictionary. It has a very subtle meaning: a leader who believes he is inspired by God.

Dr. Underhill continues:

> —who may claim to be possessed of some kind of mystic charm to work miracles. They only reluctantly turn their attention to political issues at quadrennial elections when they are submerged in a bombardment of advertising propaganda.
>
> Canadians are too disposed to dream happily all the time of Stanley Cup and Grey Cup finals, of nerve-wracking weekends on crowded highways, and of split-level ranch houses.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It sounds pretty good to me.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I agree with him, and I am glad you do too.

Finally, I want to take a minute or two to point to some expenditures that I believe were not necessary, and which account for the increase of 50 per cent required by the bill now before us. Bear in mind that the estimates alone for this year show an increase of $300 million. It is estimated that old age security this year will cost $22,600,000 more than last year. Since the present administration took office the debt of the country has been increased by over $1 billion. I know we are living in a new age; I know there are tendencies today on the part of people to go into debt and buy something with nothing down, perhaps make the first payment in six months, and go on paying for the next twenty-five years. Well, when I look at the way the debt is increasing and the state of the finances of the Government, I doubt if the Government will ever reduce any debts from now on.

I would point out that the extra interest on the conversion loan amounted to $64 million, and the expenses in connection with the loan amounted to $71,500,000, or a total of $135 million that could easily have been avoided.

There is one particular expense which causes me some alarm. I refer to the item of estimates for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, a body which has been a hobby of mine for many years. How many are aware that the C.B.C.'s expenditures have increased from $25 million in 1957 to $70 million this year? I am one of those who believe no one can tell how much harm or doubtful good television is doing. I was pleased to read the other day a press item about what the honourable Senator Horner's son had to say in the House of Commons Committee on broadcasting. I agree entirely with him. The news item reads:

> Dr. Hugh Horner, Conservative, Jasper-Edson, in the Commons Broadcasting Committee, demanded to know if the C.B.C. utilized any outside mental health advisory council to guide its program policies.
> Television was a powerful medium capable of great good, said Dr. Horner. It was also a dangerous medium, capable of "terrific impact" on the minds of Canadian viewers.

I pose this question: Is there going to be no let-up in the ever-more millions that the C.B.C. is allowed to spend? I should have liked to tell the manager of the corporation, had I had an opportunity to be before the committee, that from my investigation the C.B.C. has five employees for every one in the television system in the United States. I went down to the United States and saw their T.V. operation. They were amazed at the numbers that are employed by the C.B.C., where there seems to be no check. I say that as yet we do not know whether television is a thing for evil or for good. I cannot say how it affects honourable senators, but I can tell you how it affects me. I do not seem to be able to remember for a day any programs I have seen. It is pleasant while you are watching, but I am of the opinion that it is taking away the mentality of our people.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Do you watch it?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Occasionally; I am not that old.

I emphasize what I have said. Increased expenditures have been made which have resulted in increased taxation, and the expenditure on old age security is an example. I want these statements to be placed before the people of Canada because I think they should be warned of where we are drifting in endeavouring to keep up with the Joneses. We are paying a terrific price.

I am also against—and I will frankly say so—paying $60 million into the Colombo Plan. I am one of those people who think it will not mean anything in good will elsewhere. It seems a nice gesture, but trying to keep up with the Joneses, or the United States, might very well bring about serious times in this country.

I know that the red-tie boys, so-called, with the fine cushy jobs will put up an argument that "The natives need this money," but if I were given a blue pencil and the authority I could, I believe, save the country not $500 million but $1 billion.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Copy of an agreement between Canada and the United States of America for co-operation on the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes, signed at Washington May 22, 1959. (English text).

Copy of a memorandum regarding pilotage on the Great Lakes, dated May 15, 1959, and delivered to Washington on May 16, 1959. (English and French texts).

Report on the activities of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations for 1958-59, pursuant to section 3 of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations Act, Chapter 122, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Honourable senators will recall that on May 6 the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) requested that copies of two reports be produced. One was the Engineering Report of the Boundary Commission on the Columbia River, which was placed before the House of Commons Committee on External Affairs on Thursday, April 23, when copies were distributed; the other was the report of the British Columbia Engineering Company. I have been able to obtain a copy of the first report referred to, that is, the report made to the International Joint Commission by the International Columbia River Engineering Board. I now table this report.

The second report referred to by the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid), that of the British Columbia Engineering Company, has been made available to the Canadian section of the International Joint Commission on a confidential basis. I am informed that this report is not being made public at the present time because it deals with matters at present under negotiation with United States authorities. If and when this report is made public I will endeavour to obtain a copy of it and table it in the Senate.

Hon. Thomas Reid: I thank the honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for the first report, but I am still going to protest at not receiving a copy of the second report and I will explain why I am putting my protest on the record. This report has not been denied to the British Columbia Electric Company—at least, my information is that they have a copy. The B.C. Engineering Company, which is part and parcel of the B.C. Electric Company, received $280,000 of the taxpayers' money for the purpose of making a study, and as the report has been made available to the B.C. Electric Company I think it is an affront to members of Parliament to deny it to them.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Perhaps the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) also could have a copy of it on a confidential basis?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That would not be of much use to him.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I would like to ask the honourable senator from New Westminster, are not the B.C. Engineering Company and the B.C. Electric Company one and the same company? At least, the engineering company is a subsidiary of the other, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Yes. There is a company called the B.C. Engineering Company, apart from the B.C. Electric Company, and that engineering firm made a report and transferred it to the B.C. Electric Company. Both are under the direction of Mr. Grauer.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Is not Mr. Grauer president of both?

Hon. Mr. Reid: I do not think he is. But my information is that he has a copy of the second report.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Maybe he would lend it to you.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I would like to know why this has been held up for two years. This is a hidden report. I got notice of it from British Columbia House in London, with an excerpt from the engineering report. I gave the Leader of the Government the information I got from London, right out of that report, and I am being denied a copy. The whole thing amounts to a scandal.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I assure the honourable senator from New Westminster that I have done my very best to get this report for him, and if and when it becomes available I will get it for him.

Hon. Mr. Reid: We will all be dead before that happens.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No. You are going to live a long time.

INFLATION

FINANCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO APPOINT ECONOMIC CONSULTANT

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, presented a report of the committee.

The report was read by the Clerk as follows:

The Standing Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the instruction to study the threat of inflation in Canada, report as follows:

Your committee recommend that they be authorized to retain the services of Professor John J. Deutsch as Economic Consultant, at a per diem rate of $100, and expenses.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move, seconded by the honourable Senator Haig, that this report be now adopted.

With permission of the house I would like to make a few remarks on the motion for adoption of the report.

First, honourable senators, I should like to express my regret, and I am sure your regret, that Senator Emerson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, is not with us this evening to present the report. Unfortunately, Senator Emerson's mother died a few days ago and he had to return to Saint John. I know that you join with me in expressing to him our regret and our sympathy.

The report recommends the appointment of Dr. John J. Deutsch as economic consultant to the committee. When the committee met to carry out the instructions given by this house to study the threat of inflation it was, I think, the unanimous feeling of the committee that the subject was so important, and also so complex, that it was desirable to have the assistance of some person well trained, experienced, and knowledgeable in the field of economics. We can consider ourselves very fortunate indeed that we are able to present this report recommending the appointment of Dr. Deutsch.

I might say that it was the senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) who brought forward Dr. Deutsch's name in committee, and as soon as it was mentioned it was enthusiastically received by all, especially those who have had the pleasure of knowing Dr. Deutsch. A good many honourable senators have had the experience of seeing him in action in committees of Parliament, and I think to all of us his name and reputation are very familiar.

Dr. Deutsch was born in Saskatchewan. He was a student at Queen's University and, incidentally, he was a student under Professor Knox, who was our first witness before the Finance Committee this morning. Professor Knox told me today that Dr. Deutsch was a brilliant student. He went on to a very distinguished career in the Civil Service, and I think we can say, having regard to his years and his experience, that he has an even more brilliant career ahead of him. He was in the Department of External Affairs, the Bank of Canada, the Department of Finance, and, latterly, he had been Secretary of the Treasury Board. He attended conferences in London, Washington and Bretton Woods, and he has had as well very great experience in parliamentary committee work here in Ottawa.

Honourable senators will probably have read in the news of the last few days that he has been appointed Vice-Principal of Queen's University. This follows upon the two years he spent as head of the Economics Department of the University of British Columbia, where he went when he left Ottawa.

He is a man of great capacity, with a desire to do public service. He has recently been a member of the Royal Commission dealing with the financial affairs of Newfoundland. He is coming to us because he thinks this is another opportunity to do work in the public service, notwithstanding the fact that because of his recent appointment to Queen's University his own affairs are in a rather difficult state at the present time. I think we are very fortunate indeed in being able to engage him, because of his knowledge and personal qualities, and also because of the fact that he commands the confidence of all those who know him.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, as seconder of the motion, I would like to add a word or two. I must say that it has been a most delightful experience to serve on the committee so far. The details have been very carefully worked out and the members of the steering committee have been unanimous in their decisions. We are indeed sorry that the chairman, the honourable senator from Saint John-Albert (Hon. Mr. Emerson), has been unavoidably absent recently, but all the ground work had already been carried out under his capable supervision. The manner in which the steering committee carried out its remaining work is a credit to the deputy chairman, the honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale (Hon. Mr. Leonard), and to the members themselves. Honourable senators who attended the meeting this morning will have observed the care with which the steering committee has selected the witnesses to be called by the main committee.

I am wholeheartedly behind the appointment of Dr. Deutsch as economic consultant to the committee. Indeed, as the deputy chairman stated, it was I who nominated him.

A few sessions ago the Finance Committee, under the chairmanship of the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar), carried out an inquiry into Government spending. At that time the committee benefited from the services of Dr. Deutsch, and his work was simply outstanding. It was superb. The best part of it to me—and perhaps this is because I am always thinking along political lines—was that he was able to get the consent of the Minister of Finance of the day to assist the committee. If you confide in Dr. Deutsch you can trust him not to give away any secrets. When those special hearings were concluded I came away with the idea that if the day ever came when I had the opportunity of nominating somebody for a position such as the one we are discussing this evening, that of economic adviser to the Finance Committee, Dr. Deutsch would be my man. Thanks to the acting chairman and the members of the steering committee, Dr. Deutsch's nomination was accepted unanimously. I am sure that of all the galaxy of capable men the Senate has appointed to special assignments, Dr. Deutsch will leave one of the greatest impressions on the members of this house. It is a great delight to me to see him climbing so high in the university life of this country.

Motion agreed to.

INDIANS AND ESKIMOS

REQUEST FOR COPY OF SPEECH BY SOUTH AFRICAN HIGH COMMISSIONER

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with I should like to make a request of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine). On Friday, May 22, a Canadian Press dispatch appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail, which read as follows:

> The South African High Commissioner to Canada today compared Canadian policy toward Eskimos and Indians with South African policy toward Negroes.
>
> Robert Kirsten said in a speech prepared for delivery to the Chelsea Women's Club here that apartheid, or segregation of races, is in essence a policy of differentiation of the races.
> He said this "is the policy successive Canadian Governments have applied in regard to your Indians and Eskimos".

As the person who made this speech is the South African High Commissioner to Canada, my request of the leader is that he obtain a copy of that speech for me.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will do the best I can to obtain a copy for my honourable friend.

CUSTOMS TARIFF AND NEW ZEALAND TRADE AGREEMENT BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Lionel Choquette moved the third reading of Bill C-44, to amend the Customs Tariff and The New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1932.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, I enjoyed, more than I can say, the discussion on this bill which took place on second reading, and had it not been for the lateness of the hour I would have ventured to participate in the discussion. Since it was not opportune at that time, I thought possibly the house might give me the privilege of making a few observations now.

This bill, as honourable senators know, was exceedingly well presented by the mover (Hon. Mr. Choquette). As to its details, I have no particular reference to make. However, I wish to refer to one feature to which the honourable senator drew our attention, which was not entirely new as far as this particular bill is concerned, but nevertheless was a significant feature that has been developing recently, and from my point of view a very hopeful one. It is this, that as matters stand—largely as a result of the influence and thinking the world over, following the action of a great many countries of the free world which subscribed to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade—any upward movement or any change in the tariff structure is undertaken only after very careful consideration of all its details and negotiations with the countries particularly affected, and in addition, generally some quid pro quo, as it were, or some other compensating benefits given to the party or parties concerned.

I think that is a very significant development of this age and generation, because it means this—and it may be even more significant to us in the future than at the present moment—that whenever, for one reason or another, the industries or businesses of a particular country find themselves affected seriously or otherwise by competition from without, it is far from easy to secure the relief which there had been in the past of an arbitrary increase in the tariff, or quotas, or anything of that kind. I think it comes out of the experience of the free world in general that this ridiculous and absurd idea of increasing tariffs and restricting the free movement of international trade should be minimized, or at least curtailed as much as is humanly possible, in this uncertain world. I say that because we have to bear in mind that if, as and when this country, or indeed any other country that has our kind of economy, experiences undue competition from without, generally speaking, those affected cannot look for any substantial relief by way of protection. It must come in some other way, and I submit that other way is by reducing costs of production down to a competitive basis. I will refer to that again in a moment.

I wish now to refer to some of the discussion which arose on second reading of this bill, bearing in mind, Mr. Speaker, that you are always very lenient with us, for what I wish to say may not particularly pertain to the bill, but nevertheless it has a very direct bearing. I say without any hesitation whatever that I believe the viewpoint expressed by the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar), the senior senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert), and the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) with respect to the primacy of the interest of the consumer in any economy, was absolutely right. The more I have read and thought about it, the more convinced I am. May I point out to them, however, that I doubt very much if we who think that way are not in the great minority, perhaps even in this house, and certainly in the country generally. I suggest that in Canada today there is practically no consumer consciousness whatever. The producer with brain or brawn is king. Governments at all levels are dedicated to their welfare. The treasuries of all governments at all levels, in the main, are open to them. Almost all, if not all, are subsidized directly or indirectly by the taxpayer or consumer. The consumer in Canada today is Canada's forgotten man.

As a result of a suggestion made to me recently, I have had the pleasure of reading a most interesting book. Perhaps I have not read it in as much detail as I should have done, but at least I browsed through it. This book was written by a very distinguished public man, Ludwig Erhard, Minister for Economic Affairs of Germany, who indeed is generally expected to succeed Dr. Konrad Adenauer as Chancellor of Germany.

Every page of the book reflects the faith of that very distinguished public man in the desirability and necessity of making the consumer's viewpoint the matter of primary national interest. Western Germany's great recovery of recent years is generally attributed in large measure to the constructive and courageous viewpoint and attitude which he has taken and the extent to which he has enlisted the overwhelming support of the German public.

I would say that in Western Germany today the consumer is king. Public opinion has dealt most rigorously with the producer and his employee alike, if the public thought there was an undue increase in prices. Any tendency toward monopolies or cartels, or anything to maintain or increase the price of articles that are being produced, or any tendency on the part of employees to aid or abet it have come under most drastic and rigorous condemnation.

Mr. Erhard has made it part and parcel of his whole program to keep the cost of living down and the costs of production down, and the cardinal principle of all is to maintain the value of the currency. He has felt that the interests of the individual, whether he lives on a fixed or variable income, are paramount.

I noticed another very definite attitude which he took in 1955, I think it was, when the Allies withdrew the restriction that they had made on the manufacture of armaments in Germany. He took a most definite stand that while he did not refuse to have armament manufactured—I am speaking now not from a political but from an economic point of view—he took the view that he did not want the corresponding inflationary increase to become part and parcel of the economy, and he advocated that financing of rearmament should be done exclusively by transferring purchasing power through taxes. That shows the extent to which he has rigorously maintained a quite different viewpoint from that which today exists in Canada.

I would say, honourable senators, that today the economy of Canada and that of Germany are diametrically opposed. The question arises, and will undoubtedly be answered as time goes on, Are we right or are they right? Personally I believe they are right and we are wrong, and when I say "we" I am referring to Canada and the United States because, broad and long, our economies, as honourable senators know, are meshed. I believe, honourable senators, that the time when we will realize that we are not right is not far away. I think there are already many evidences of it and more will be forthcoming before very long.

In his effort to keep costs down the Minister of Economics of Germany, as his book Prosperity Through Competition indicates, adopted other measures as well. One of the first steps was to bring in the benefit of competition from outside its own borders, and so you have a country of 50 million people overcoming the greatest obstacles that you can imagine in entering into an economic union with five other European countries, at least one of which, France, had been a traditional enemy and as far removed from Germany as it is possible to think of two countries being. Germany did not think that 50 million people was a large enough unit to manufacture economically and so it sought to increase the trading area to one of 170 million, which, honourable senators will notice, approximates the population of the United States of America.

Progressively, over a period of fourteen and a half years, all trade obstacles will be removed, and the benefits of mass production will come to all concerned, not only for the individual from a cost-of-living point of view, but of course tremendously increasing their ability to export.

I say that, honourable senators, because in this world of economic blocks that is developing—one of 170 million in Western Germany et al, another one with a likelihood of 130 million around Britain, the United States of America with 175 million—I personally believe that Canada with 17 million people is in a hopeless position. I do not think that our export industries, based largely on our resources, will for some time feel the severe competition that is likely to come from Soviet Russia, but I suggest to this house that our secondary industries, if they are not already feeling it, are going to feel it in a very serious way.

I come back to what was said by one of my honourable friends, that there is very little likelihood that you can easily secure protection by increasing the tariff.

I want to refer briefly to some remarks made during the debate on this bill, and then I will close.

The honourable senator from Westmorland (Hon. Mr. Taylor) very properly supported the theory that the agriculturist is entitled to his share of the protection extended to industry, in view of the fact that the United States, which is his chief market, has as high or a higher tariff against his products.

The honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) said:

> Many a manufacturer in Ontario has said to me: "If I could sell into the American market free of duty I would be perfectly happy to have the American manufacturer come into the Canadian market free and I will compete with him successfully. But my trouble is that because I am unable to get into the American market either free or at a reasonable rate of duty, I could not remain in business in Canada with our restricted market without reasonable tariff protection."

I do not know anything about the origin of that statement, but to me it sounds a very reasonable one.

I am going to make a prediction, honourable senators, which may or may not be borne out, that within the not-too-distant future Canada must inevitably take the initiative in trying to enter into a larger trading area. I do not think we can possibly meet the competition from outside unless our manufacturers enjoy the advantages of mass production. My prediction is that we will take the initiative in seeking a definite tie-up with some other territory—the one that comes first to mind is the United States—on the same basis as France and Germany are tied together, with the progressive removal of tariffs over a period of roughly fourteen and a half years. I believe the Canadian manufacturer will have to take the initiative in developing such an arrangement with the United States. It will not come, as it might have come a few years ago, from the agriculturist. The agriculturists—and I do not blame them—are pinning their faith on Government supports. But the manufacturers in our domestic secondary industries are in an impossible position unless they can get larger markets. I suggest that this is what will happen, and it will come before we are much older. As far as I personally am concerned, I would be happy to see such a development, but I repeat what I said earlier, I would rather see Canada tie up with all her NATO partners than with only one.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

INCOME TAX BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the second reading of Bill C-48, to amend the Income Tax Act.

He said: Honourable senators, after having been dealing with such interesting subjects as the customs tariff and divorce, I hope you recognize the reluctance with which I commence to deal with such a dull and mundane subject as our income tax laws.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Not very dull, rather sharp.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: As members of this house are well aware, there is presented to each session of Parliament a bill containing various amendments to the Income Tax Act. At times the bill is quite lengthy; sometimes it is not so extensive. This amending bill is not, at least in size, as bulky as some of its predecessors. I was wondering if any honourable senators would make snide remarks when I refer to the size of the bill by pages. I am happy to note that none have been made.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: We will do better as you go along.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Such amending bills frequently contain technical amendments to various sections, in the interest of more effective administration of the income tax laws, and not infrequently these changes result from decisions of the courts during the preceding year. Sometimes the proposed changes have the effect of plugging loopholes through which legitimate revenue is lost; in other cases they are ameliorative to the taxpayer. Frequently changes result from court decisions which create unintended hardships to the taxpayer. Many of the provisions of the bill now before us are helpful to the taxpayer.

This bill contains 28 clauses. I am sure honourable senators understand fully the problem faced each year by the sponsor of a bill of this nature in giving an explanation of the amendments on the motion for second reading. Most bills, and frequently amending bills, can be said to have some particular principle running through them, but that can hardly be said of a bill to amend the Income Tax Act where most of the sections deal with wholly different phases of the income tax law. Consequently, the sponsor of this bill has to go through a selective process of determining for himself how general or how specific he should be in his remarks in this house concerning the bill. However, for the reason that such a bill always goes to committee for detailed examination, I propose to deal with it in as general a way as possible, perhaps omitting any reference to some sections, particularly those of an administrative character. On the other hand, if any honourable senator would like to ask a question relative to an omitted section I will be glad to try to explain it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I hope you will not miss the sections which are helpful to the taxpayer.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I am going to dwell on them at great length.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That is when you will sing in a high key.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I will not be dealing with the sections seriatim, but rather with those phases of the bill generally where, in my opinion, the public interest is most affected.

I will begin with the bad news, namely, the tax rates, and I will deal first with those respecting individuals. The income tax rates for individuals are increased for the 1959 taxation year by one percentage point, and for the 1960 and subsequent taxation years by two percentage points, on taxable incomes in excess of $3,000. The estimated revenue increase from this change is $25 million in the 1959-60 fiscal year, and $45 million in a full year.

In respect of corporations, the corporation tax rates are increased from 45 per cent to 47 per cent on taxable incomes in excess of $25,000.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Would it be possible for the honourable senator to refer to the clauses of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, I will refer to the clauses as I go along, if you would like me to do so.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It might be helpful.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: There is no increase in the tax on corporation incomes under $25,000. There is, of course, in the bill amending the Old Age Security Act, but that is not this bill. This increase is applicable to the 1959 taxation year, and for corporations with a taxation year, part of which is before and part of which is after the commencement of 1959, namely, where the taxation year straddles January 1, 1959—

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Did you say before and after?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes; that is, when the taxation year of a corporation straddles—

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It either commences before or after. It cannot be both.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: If I may go on I will explain it. A special formula is provided in the amending act for the purpose of taking care of that situation. Under the formula the tax will be pro-rated. I think that is the point that the honourable senator was referring to. The tax will be pro-rated to the number of days falling into the 1958 and 1959 calendar years.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No, I was not referring to that.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Analogous changes in the rates are provided in section 85 of the Income Tax Act concerning electric, gas or steam utilities.

I have been referring there to clauses 13 and 22 of the bill.

The expected increase in revenue from these corporation tax increases is, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960, $32 million, and for a full year, $56 million.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Is the old age security tax increase figure included in that figure?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No, the old age security figures are not included in the Income Tax Act. As the honourable senator will recall, they are dealt with in another amending act which was before the house a few days ago.

The old age security tax is one per cent on incomes up to $3,000. Perhaps I might digress on that for just a moment to bring honourable senators up to date. The old age security tax was two per cent on the first $3,000 of taxable income, and in 1959 that is increased by one-half of one per cent. In other words, the tax rises in 1959 from $60 a year to $75 a year, but in 1960 the old age security tax increases from two per cent to three per cent on the first $3,000 of taxable income, and, therefore, it becomes $90 on $3,000, and that is the maximum.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is for a full year?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, and similarly with corporations the old age security portion of the corporation tax was dealt with a few days ago in the amending act.

I turn now to various other items affecting individuals. Medical expenses—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Which clause is that?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is clause 8 (1), on page 5 of the bill. Certain items referred to in clause 8 (1) of the bill are added to the items deductible as medical expenses. Honourable senators will recall that a year ago certain items were added to the list of deductible expenses, and the present bill increases again the number of such items. The items that are added are referred to in clause 8 (1), namely, an artificial limb, iron lung, rocking bed for poliomyelitis victims, wheelchair, crutches, spinal brace—

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No, they are just the underlined items.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, I am sorry—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You are reading the section as amended.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, I wish to retract that. The added items are those which are underlined, namely, rocking beds for poliomyelitis victims, crutches, iliostomy or colostomy pads, and trusses for hernia. There are four items which are added to the previous list.

Another amendment, clause 8, subclause 2, provides that medical expenses will not include amounts which the taxpayer does not have to pay because they are paid under a provincial hospital insurance plan. That clause evoked considerable discussion in the other place. Honourable senators may recall that heretofore even if a person was insured for hospitalization by a private agency and he subsequently had his hospital bills paid for him by such private agency, he was entiled to include as medical expenses the amount so paid. The present amendment provides, in effect, that there shall not be included in the deductible medical expenses any expenses for which the taxpayer has been reimbursed or is entitled to be reimbursed under a law of a province with which the federal Government has entered into an agreement providing for the payment by Canada of contributions under a provincial hospitalization plan.

Hon. Mr. Reid: How many provinces come under that plan?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Ontario, Alberta and Saskatchewan. Actually there are more provinces that come under the hospitalization scheme.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Do the citizens contribute to the scheme?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes. Three provinces finance their scheme by direct contributions from their citizens. These are akin to premium payments. The remaining provinces finance their share of the cost of the hospitalization plan through a sales tax.

Hon. Mr. Savoie: What about New Brunswick?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: There the individual has to pay a direct contribution. This is the case in Manitoba and Ontario also.

Hon. Mr. Wall: May I ask a question at this point?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wall: In Manitoba we had our own co-operative scheme under which all the citizens belonged and paid premiums to an organization like the Blue Cross. Their hospital expenses, which were paid by the Blue Cross, were deductible as medical expenses.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Wall: The situation in Manitoba now is, in essence, that the citizen pays half of the premium and the province pays the other half. Should not that citizen, in equity and justice, be entitled to deduct at least half of his medical expenses for income tax purposes?

Hon. Mr. Euler: That is the point.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is a matter of argument, and that is the change being made in this bill. In effect the amendment provides that there shall not be included in the deductible medical expenses any expenses for which the taxpayer has been reimbursed or is entitled to be reimbursed under a law of a province with which the federal Government has entered into an agreement providing for the payment by Canada of contributions under a provincial hospitalization plan.

It is deemed that it would be anomalous to allow taxpayers to deduct amounts as medical expenses which do not impose upon them any sudden or heavy burden because they have been paid for out of the Government insurance fund. I think honourable senators will recall that the theory behind this whole scheme of allowing hospital expenses as a deduction was that so often there were cases of sudden and real hardship where people were involved in the payment of very large hospitalization costs. However, it is something else when those costs are paid for them, even by an insurance company. I must say I always thought it was somewhat of an anomaly that the taxpayer was entitled to claim a deduction of, say, $500 or $1,000 as medical expenses when they were paid for him by an insurance company. Nevertheless, that practice was followed.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That was because the statute provided that the taxpayer or his legal representative could claim the deduction.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: And the insurance company could be his representative.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is right. The law provided for it and it was quite properly done, but now we are making this change and there is this to be said in favour of it. Since the proposed amendment will reduce the amount deducted as medical expenses, it is expected that personal income tax revenue will be increased by about $3 million in 1959-60, and by about $9 million in a full year. Against that, it should be recalled that in this year the federal Government will pay $160 million to assist provincial hospitalization schemes. As I say, there was some debate in the other place in regard to this proposed change, and perhaps there may be some discussion here as to whether it is good or bad.

I come now to another topic, which I refer to as death benefits. The present act provides that where a taxpayer dies and his employer pays to his widow or dependents a certain amount as a benefit or gratuity, any such amount is exempt from income taxation at the present time up to an amount equal to the employee's remuneration of the last 90 days in the office or employment.

Hon. Mr. Savoie: What clause is that?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Clause 28. The practice has often been for an employer to pay as a gratuity anything up to a full year's salary to the widow or dependents of a deceased employee. Take the case of an employee who was earning, say, $1,000 a month. If the employer paid his widow or dependents three months' salary as a gratuity, it would amount to $3,000, which would be tax exempt. By the proposed amendment that exemption is increased to an amount equal to the remuneration of the employee for the last 12 months in the office or employment, or the amount of $10,000, whichever is the lesser. The reason for the alternative figure of $10,000 is this. If a man was earning $40,000 a year, three months' salary would amount to exactly $10,000, and the two amounts would coincide. However, if a man was earning $100,000 a year, three months' salary would come to $25,000. That would be a pretty big exemption. But the clause is in general very beneficial, because instead of the exemption being limited to three months' salary it will now be twelve months' salary or $10,000, whichever is less.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Would it be subject to the estate tax?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, it would be subject to the estate tax, but not to income tax. Therefore I say this amendment is beneficial, or will be beneficial, to a great number of taxpayers.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Could the honourable senator give us any idea how much revenue the Government would lose on account of this amendment?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No, I have no estimate of that.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I would think none. It would have the effect of balancing out the two groups.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I think it would have the effect of balancing out the two groups under this amendment.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That would be helpful to the taxpayer.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The $25,000 would be reduced to $10,000?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: In the case of a person receiving a salary of $100,000, and whose employer paid the widow or other dependent $25,000, that would now be reduced to a tax exemption of $10,000, which is the maximum tax exemption under this amendment.

I come now to portable pension plans, under section 12, subsection 1. If an employee leaves his employment where he has been a member of a pension plan, or if the pension plan is wound up, he usually receives a lump sum representing a return of his contributions into the plan, and in some cases this will include part of the employer's contribution on his behalf as well. Under the present law this lump sum is liable for tax under a certain formula contained in section 36 of the act. The amending bill provides that amounts received from pension plans upon withdrawal from employment, or winding up of a plan will not be taxable if contributed to another pension plan or to a registered retirement plan, provided this is done within the year or within 60 days after the end of the year.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is for an individual?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, that is for an individual.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Can the honourable senator say whether or not what is now being given statutory effect has been observed as a matter of departmental practice for a while?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, this has been observed as departmental practice, but I doubt very much if it was proper to do so under the law as it has stood. However, I deem this to be a very useful, alleviating amendment, and to say the least it legalizes a practice that has been in effect.

I come now to section 2 of the bill, dealing with group insurance policies. It is well known that the proceeds of group life insurance plans, like the proceeds of other life insurance policies, are not subject to income tax. Consequently, the payment of premiums by an employer on behalf of his employees in a group plan provides a financial benefit that has an ascertainable market value. Hitherto that benefit has been free of tax. In this bill it is proposed that only that part of a premium paid by an employer that goes to provide life insurance coverage in excess of $25,000 will be brought into account for tax. Any benefit that an employee receives from an employer by payment of a premium into a group policy, where the policy for that employee has a face value not in excess of $25,000, will be exempt from tax, but any payment made by an employer above the face value of a policy of $25,000 will fall into tax.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Previously the premium paid on a policy in excess of $25,000 was exempt?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: There was no limit?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No.

This will leave untouched all those employees whose group life insurance coverage is less than $25,000. This change does not come into effect until 1960. Clause 2 of the bill, in which this amendment appears, seems to be quite complicated. However, the complication in the wording consists entirely of a description of the method of computation of the amount of the premium involved in various cases. There are various problems in computing the premium over a lifetime, because the premium for a person aged 25 is entirely different from the premium for a person aged 50 or 60 or over.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It looks as if one needs to be an honour graduate in mathematics.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Or in commerce and finance.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Some other amending sections appear in the bill regarding personal income tax matters, but these are of a comparatively routine nature and will no doubt be discussed in committee.

I turn now to some items concerning corporations.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask if there are any increases in the income group you have mentioned?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No, there are really no increases. There is no taxation involved in the sections I am not referring to. Most are administrative changes, and I do not refer to them here because they are matters of detail which I am sure we can discuss much better in committee. Some are of a technical nature, but none of them is of any great importance, except the ones I am now going to deal with.

I wish to deal now with some other items affecting corporations. I do not propose to deal in detail with many of the amendments affecting corporations. Honourable senators will remember that a year ago the income tax amending bill contained quite extensive provisions in regard to tax procedures relative to amalgamated corporations. These provisions are subject to a further slight amendment in the present bill.

Other amendments affecting corporations refer to matters involving share transfer and listing fees, these now becoming a deductible item of expense. The reason for this amendment is as follows. In a case before the courts a question arose as to whether share transfer expenses and expenses of the registrar, fees for listing shares, and so on, were a proper item of exemption for income tax purposes, and the courts held that in so far as the expense was not for the purpose of earning an income it was not a deductible expense. That has now been cured by this amendment, and the effect of it is simply to add a new subsection exempting such expenses from tax.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Has not the departmental practice up to now been to allow these expenses?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes. Probably ever since the beginning of corporation taxation the departmental practice had been to allow these fees, which certainly seems to be a common-sense practice. Nevertheless, the court held that they were not a proper expense to be exempted from tax, and this amendment is simply a correcting measure.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): May I ask who took the appeal?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I can tell you the case involved Distillers Corporation-Seagrams Limited, and I presume it was the objector in the original case, but who took the appeal I do not know.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It must have been the taxpayer.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: In fact, I do not even know which court heard the case.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It was heard in the Exchequer Court.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The only reason I ask who appealed is this, that if departmental practice for years on end has been to allow these as expenses, why should the taxpayer be appealing?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: It may have been one small item among a lot of others. I imagine the case involved more than the matter of transfer fees.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I think it was an obiter in a judgment that dealt with many other things.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I accept the honourable senator's statement; I think the judgment did deal with a number of other things.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I think the dispute between the department and the company was in regard to the method of computing these exemptions, and the resulting judgment cast doubt upon the whole business, and that is the reason for the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I have been earlier referring to some of the more minor items which are involved in this bill. It also involves the matter of undistributed income of subsidiary corporations—that is clause 25—and there are minor amending provisions regarding non-resident-owned investment companies, what we usually refer to as N.R.O. companies. That is clause 18 (1).

Also, in clause 9 (1) there is a reference to life insurance corporations. This applies to a case where a provincial life insurance corporation becomes a mutual, a case not covered in previous amendments which were made to the British and Canadian Insurance Companies Act some years ago in regard to the mutualization of insurance companies. Then there is an amendment in regard to taxation of Crown companies. But, as I say, these amendments are not of any great moment in respect to any principle being involved in them.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would the honourable senator deal with clause 19?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Now that my honourable friend has asked me to do so, I will try to deal with clause 19.

Clause 19 refers to what is known as foreign business corporations, and the section of the Income Tax Act concerned is section 71. This amendment, as some honourable senators are aware, occasioned considerable discussion in the other place, and consequently I think it would be appropriate for me to make some remarks in regard to it here.

Section 71 of the Income Tax Act authorizes a corporation which complies in its method of doing business with certain provisions set forth in that section to be designated as a foreign business corporation. Such a corporation is merely required to file a return for each year in prescribed form and pay an annual fee of $100. No other tax is payable under the act in respect of such a corporation.

A prime provision in regard to such a corporation is, of course, that it shall not carry on business in Canada, although it is authorized to locate an office here and engage in certain management and other functions designated in the act, namely, in section 71.

I am informed that this provision of the Income Tax Act, allowing a corporation to be classed as a foreign business corporation, dates from the time when there was no provision for a credit for foreign taxes paid, nor any provision for tax freedom on dividends from foreign subsidiaries. Canadian corporations may now obtain a credit for taxes imposed by foreign Governments on their operations abroad, or if they own or control subsidiaries abroad to the extent of owning at least 25 per cent of the shares they may bring dividends from those subsidiaries back to Canada free of Canadian tax. In view of these provisions it is apparently deemed that there is no longer any need for Canadian corporations to use the foreign business classification in order to carry on operations abroad.

Presumably any Canadian company which is now classified under the act as a foreign business corporation and carrying on business within the provisions of section 71 of the act no longer require such classification for the purpose of carrying on its business. It should be made clear, however, that no Canadian corporation presently enjoying this classification is affected by this amendment. The companies will carry on exactly as they did before.

I should explain that the whole purpose of the amendment is simply to discontinue the designation or classification of any Canadian corporation as a foreign business corporation.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Why?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Well, that is a matter of argument.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I do not want to argue, I just wanted the reason.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I am giving you the explanation.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My honourable friend is being as mysterious as they were in the other place.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I am giving you the explanation that I believe is appropriate.

A further explanation that was given in the other place in regard to this clause of the amending bill is that it is deemed that this section may be resulting in tax avoidance; or that it may result in Canada becoming subject to attack by other countries as a tax haven. Under either or both of those conditions it is thought desirable that there should be no further classification of Canadian companies as foreign business corporations until the tax position of all such companies can be thoroughly scrutinized. Honourable senators, that is the explanation I have been given in regard to clause 19.

In other more general provisions of the bill, the one which I believe is of sufficient importance to refer to is clause 14(1), whereby the time limit for the service of notice of objection against an assessment is extended from 60 to 90 days.

There are, further, a few other general provisions in this amending bill which I believe can best be examined in committee.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Not too long.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: —I will try to confine my remarks within a reasonable compass.

Having regard to some of the introductory remarks which my friend from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) made, I would like to make a comment or two on those, and then deal with several of the proposed amendments in the bill.

My friend of course showed a rare selection in his choice of phrases and expressions, particularly in talking about an income tax bill as being favourable to the taxpayer. I would think that a more appropriate statement might be that in some respects the provisions are less onerous.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Even that is helpful.

Hon. Mr. Power: That is tyrannical.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My friend was optimistic in some of his observations. I would like to have his assurance, if I could, in respect to one item with which he dealt. In his explanation he said that the tax rate was increased on the individual, and he gave the effect of it as being 1 per cent for 1959 and 2 per cent for 1960 and subsequent taxation years. I would like to feel that he was giving, even in a subtle way, an assurance that, as far as individuals are concerned, the rate was not going to increase beyond the 2 per cent for 1960 as provided by this amending bill.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I would hope you would not be so cruel as to pick that one out.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Probably it will be reduced.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I wish to deal with two main questions: one having to do with medical expenses, and the other with section 71, which my friend in his adept way explained to his own satisfaction, if not to mine or that of some other senators. To some extent he used the reasons given by the Minister of Finance, and I think in one or two particulars he added a few additional reasons which are quite obvious to any person who reads the Income Tax Act.

May I deal first with medical expenses. At the present time and before the hospitalization plan came into force, if I paid a premium and subscribed to a policy which would reimburse me for expenses laid out for a period in hospital I was entitled to deduct, if I satisfied the medical formula in the Income Tax Act, my hospital expenses within that prescribed range. In order to get the benefit from the insurance company I had to pay the premium. The only difference now is that the federal authority has intervened in relation to certain plans for hospitalization. This amendment to which my friend referred deals with the situation where the federal authority makes a contribution to the plan of hospitalization in a province, as a result of which, if a person is hospitalized his expenses within the limits of that plan are paid out of contributions, in some provinces at least, made by the federal authority and by the person himself. But my friend knows, and it must be appreciated generally, that the federal Government has not a gold mine in its backyard from which it scoops up money and makes contributions for such purposes. There is only one way in which the federal authority can get money, and that is by collecting it from the taxpayer. The provincial authority also collects from the taxpayer, but it has the additional advantage that it can turn to the federal authority for payments.

But to me the positions seem to be about the same. Whether I pay a premium for hospitalization insurance, or whether I pay taxes to enable the federal authority to make a contribution, to me it is exactly the same thing, and it is a refinement to suggest otherwise. Although the federal authority contributes some percentage of the hospitalization cost, under a plan to which the federal authority is a contributor, why should I not be entitled to take that into my medical expenses for income tax purposes?

Now, I say there is no principle of law involved in it, if you accept the theory that the taxpayer is providing the money for the hospitalization plan. In the first instance, if he takes out a policy he is providing the money to pay for it. In the second instance he is providing a portion of money to be paid directly to the plan, and to the extent that that is not enough, and to the extent that the federal authority agrees to contribute, he, as a taxpayer, is contributing some amount to the cost of that plan. I think it a perfectly reasonable statement to make, that one of the reasons why taxes are increased by this bill, as they have been in other bills—and they are increased in relation to the individual as well as to the corporation—is just for the purpose of providing funds required to permit the federal authority to contribute to this plan.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Is not the honourable senator overlooking a very important feature about hospital expenses, in that originally a deduction was granted to protect people from what might be called financial catastrophe? The taxpayers do not face that situation under the hospital scheme, and that is a very good reason for removing the deduction.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My friend has suggested an explanation which in my opinion, and with all due respect, limps very badly, because you have to get down to the basis of the thing. It is all very well to give a reason which actuated the federal authority in the first instance to allow a medical expenses exemption, which was to assist people who were faced with a medical emergency. But all people are not faced with such an emergency. This deduction was extended to taxpayers who qualified by having medical expenses, within a given period of time, in excess of a certain base percentage of income.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Three per cent.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Up to a certain amount they were entitled to deduct medical expenses for income tax purposes. Whatever the reasons were, those reasons have now been lost in the proposed enactment to amend the act.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I do not agree that the reasons have been lost sight of.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My friend will have an opportunity to disagree in reply. If in the meantime he wants to state a question, he may do so, but at the moment I am not the least bit interested in his voicing his disagreement. I would expect he would try to present as good an argument as he can in answer to what I am now saying. In the meantime I am trying to make as clear as I can to the Senate that, as a matter of principle, the right to deduct certain medical expenses exists in the law at the present time and will only cease to exist in certain applications when the amending bill becomes law, and the basis of that exemption is a certain formula. The taxpayer may not have insurance, he may pay his hospital expenses out of his own pocket. Whether he pays them fully out of his pocket or covers himself by the payment of a premium against the possibility that he will suffer hospitalization and therefore have that obligation to meet, in either case he is entitled to make a deduction under the medical expense heading within the limits provided in the present law.

What I am saying is that under the hospitalization plan the taxpayer is still financing the plan: first, through his personal contribution, and secondly, as a taxpayer to the federal authority. You have more direct evidence of it here with an increase in the personal income tax this year which, to some extent, can be attributed to the size of the contribution which the federal authority is making to the hospital plan. My suggestion is, if the federal authority felt that because of the contribution it has made it would have to remove some of the allowable deduction, then it should have trimmed its cloth accordingly and made a smaller direct contribution, rather than take away from the taxpayer a medical expense item which he has enjoyed for some time. Some honourable senators who were at one time members of the other place will know that these deductions did not come without a struggle. There was quite a battle before, finally, the deductions were grudgingly put in, and at a later date the percentage application was increased.

Honourable senators, that is all I have to say about medical expenses. I have heard my friend from Winnipeg South in his point of disagreement. That is the basis of argument.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I disagreed with a certain remark you made, that was all.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I am not objecting to your right to disagree.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Just to one remark.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I am commenting on the fact that you disagreed in the circumstance.

I now turn to what I regard as an important item in this bill, the proposed amendment to section 71, which in earlier legislation was known as section 4(k). For ages past, until we adopted a modified phraseology with the creation and enactment of the present Income Tax Act, the companies to which this section applied were referred to as "4(k) companies". You do not incorporate a company specifically as a 4(k) company. You incorporate a company in the same way as any company is incorporated, and if it carries on its business in a certain fashion in a full year it is then entitled to qualify as and to get the designation of a foreign business corporation. That means that if it carries on industrial operations, mining operations, commercial operations, public utility operations, or whatever they may be, entirely outside of Canada during the whole period if its taxation year, except for management and for the purchase of supplies which are going to be used outside of Canada in the operations that it is carrying on outside of Canada, then it is entitled to that qualification, and it may either directly carry on its operations outside of Canda or it may through a subsidiary company carry on those operations outside of Canada. I would say that for approximately forty years we have had this provision which is known as section 4(k), and the companies have been called 4(k) companies and, latterly, foreign business corporations.

In those circumstances a company makes an election. It files its return, and, if its qualifications are accepted, the only tax that the company pays is $100 in the year. But, that is not the whole story, because when one of these companies pays dividends it must withhold and remit to the Canadian treasury either 5 per cent or 15 per cent of the dividend, depending on the characteristics of the shareholders of the company and the relationship of the shares. It is either 5 per cent or 15 per cent, and when the minister made the statement that these companies provided no revenue it must be taken subject to the qualification which I have made, because I know from my own experience—and I am sure there are other lawyers here who have had the same experience—some of these companies over the years in disbursing dividends have paid very substantial sums of money in the year to the federal treasury.

It is now proposed to repeal the right of any company to secure the status of a foreign business corporation, and I say that in those circumstances we are entitled to the reasons. We are entitled to have the reasons stated in a way so that we may be able to examine them and to see whether they are sound or not.

Let us take the reasons that have been given. Like other honourable senators, I have read or heard the minister's statement of reasons. There were several reasons which he chose to give. One was that these companies might provide a tax haven to foreigners. Another reason was that there were loopholes in the law. But, having given those two reasons, the minister then stated that he must say that in the whole history of the operation of this section there had been no abuse, either by way of providing a tax haven or taking advantage of loopholes, so far as the companies which had qualified as foreign business corporations in Canada were concerned.

Then, the financial papers took up the inquiry as to why this section was being repealed, and they could evolve no reason. The minister was finally prevailed upon to elaborate on what he meant by "loopholes", and he gave two illustrations. The first one he gave was that you might have a foreign business corporation in Canada that would buy, say, ores in Canada, and then he became eloquent on the subject of one of our great natural resources, saying that those ores would be exported, and in the foreign country they might be sold at a substantial profit, no part of which would come back into Canada to be taxed. Well, the only thing wrong with that example is that it is completely wrong in law. It is not just a little bit wrong, but it is completely wrong, because in law a foreign business corporation cannot carry on any business in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I will agree with that.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes. The only exception is the designing, purchasing and transportation of goods, if the goods were not acquired for re-sales in the course of trading and were required for the operations so carried on out of Canada. The first example which the minister gave is an example which is completely against the provisions of section 71.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is the honourable senator referring to a debate that took place this session in the other place?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No, Mr. Speaker. I am talking about statements which the minister made and which I had the opportunity—

The Hon. the Speaker: They were not made in the other place?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No, I have not made any reference to the other place, Mr. Speaker. If some of my honourable friends conclude from anything I have said that I was referring to the other place I can assure them that there is nothing in what I have said that would indicate I had intended that, or that I had heard or read the debates in the other place.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: You are certainly skating on thin ice.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: There are sources of enlightenment as to the minister's statements other than the Hansard of the other place.

The second illustration that the minister gave was that we have a tax convention, for instance, with the United States, and in the example I have already given goods might be exported from Canada and a selling agent in the United States would sell them, and the profit would never come home. For this reason, because in our tax convention with the United States a Canadian company may do certain things in the United States without incurring any tax in the United States if it does not have a permanent establishment in the United States, it would avoid taxation in both countries.

Well, again, my statement to you is that that example is completely wrong as far as the law that exists today is concerned, because, under the tax convention, if a Canadian company maintains a selling agent in the United States who has authority to accept orders, the transactions are taxable in that the company is carrying on business in the United States. If the Canadian company maintains a warehouse in the United States from which it delivers goods to fill those orders, then that Canadian company is carrying on business in the United States and is subject to taxation in the United States.

Furthermore, I would say that a Canadian company which is maintaining a salesman in the United States and accepting orders in Canada so as to avoid United States tax, and is delivering the goods from Canada directly to the customer in the United States so as to avoid a permanent establishment in the United States, is doing business in Canada, and, therefore, it would not be a foreign business corporation.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: It could not be.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It could not be, as a matter of law.

We are left with those reasons for repealing this section. My honourable friend has suggested a reason this evening, and I am aware of the provisions of the law in relation to his example, but nowhere have I heard or read that this was a reason for justifying the repeal of the section. In effect, what my honourable friend says is: "Well, we really do not need section 71, the foreign business section, because there are other provisions in our law today. For instance, under our law today a Canadian company can have a local company in, say, New Guinea, or in any place in the world, a company that is incorporated under the local law, and under our income tax law the Canadian company can bring home its dividends from such a company without paying any tax."

That is perfectly correct, so long as the Canadian company holds at least 25 per cent of the issued shares of that foreign company, but the great difference between the corporation in that illustration and a foreign business corporation is that under section 71 the foreign business corporation itself may carry on business in those other countries without having to incorporate a subsidiary company to get the benefit of the tax position in Canada. So by repealing section 71 you are forcing any Canadian company that wishes to carry on foreign operations and bring home its dividends without paying tax in Canada on the receipt of the dividends to incorporate in all these different localities.

The second thing that my friend said was that nowadays, as opposed to a much earlier period in our taxation law, we have foreign tax credits. That is, if I am a Canadian company and I am carrying on business in the United States I pay my tax in the United States and I bring all my earnings home to Canada. I calculate my tax on all my earnings everywhere, and then I deduct the tax that I paid in the other jurisdiction up to the amount of the Canadian tax rate—

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Would the honourable senator allow a question at this stage? He suggested a moment ago that if this practice were discontinued foreign business corporations would be forced to incorporate in the various countries in which they did business. Of course, we recognize that if they do so their dividends come here tax free, but is it not correct to say also that where a foreign business corporation does business in, say, Trinidad, as a partnership—that is, without incorporating—it still gets the tax credit from Canada for the tax it pays in foreign countries on money it makes there? Is that not the case in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: As my honourable friend knows, nowadays I am entitled to get tax credit in relation to income earned abroad which, for tax accounting purposes, I must bring home to Canada. That would apply only to direct operations by a Canadian company if it is incorporated or, I assume, by an individual if he is not incorporated, or by an incorporated company if it seeks to carry on business abroad as a partnership. But that is beside the question. The history of these 4(k) companies has been a very interesting one. I think honourable senators know that the greatest illustration of a foreign business corporation is Brazilian Traction, and it is idle to say, for instance, that the operation of Brazilian Traction has not contributed substantially to the revenues and earnings of Canada itself.

I always understood that this amendment which was put into section 71 some years ago permitting a foreign business corporation to purchase supplies in Canada for use in its operations outside of Canada, might very well have got in there because of the representations which were made by companies like Brazilian Traction to the effect that they should not be debarred from buying Canadian supplies and taking them out of Canada to be used in their operations outside of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Would the honourable senator allow another question?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: My honourable friend may know more about Brazilian Traction than I do, but under present tax laws and conventions this company operates as a foreign business corporation through subsidiary companies in other countries. Has my honourable friend any reason to believe that Brazilian Traction would not operate in identically the same way if it were not a foreign business corporation?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I am not in a position to speak for Brazilian Traction except as an outsider who listens and talks. I have not acted for Brazilian Traction at any time and therefore I do not know anything about its internal setup. All I can tell you is that from my earliest association with this section 4(k), subsequently called the foreign business corporation section, somehow or other we kept talking about it as the Brazilian Traction section.

Since the war the typical application for making use of section 71 has been by foreign interests throughout the world who are desirous of undertaking industrial or mining or commercial operations in various parts of the world and are concerned in locating in one place where they can accumulate their money and feel it is in the safest place. The foreign business corporation section gave them an ideal setup, because they could operate in various portions of the world either directly through such a foreign business corporation or indirectly by the use of wholly-owned subsidiary corporations. The purpose they had in mind in choosing Canada was to enable them to accumulate their money, their earnings and their profits in the country which they regarded as the safest in the world. Many of the foreign business corporations that have come into operation since the war have been spurred on by a two-fold plan: to make use of this foreign business corporation section and, by so doing, to get their money into the safest place. So far as Canada is concerned, the money that these companies bring into Canada flows into the stream of currency and is available to be used by the banks until such time as the companies require funds for their own purposes. So, if they move in the direction of paying dividends, the revenues of Canada are enhanced by 5 to 15 per cent, depending on the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: In addition they provide a lot of employment, and most employees pay income tax.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes. Those are indirect benefits. I am bothered by the fact that we are moving in the direction of repealing this section and putting some limitations upon future operations of a foreign business corporation at a time when other countries seem to be moving in the opposite direction. For years and years there was a provision in England which was very embarrassing. A British company might be carrying on operations through a subsidiary in Canada, and if the British company gave any management or direction to those operations in Canada the profits of the Canadian operation were taxable in England whether they were brought home or not. There are leading cases on the subject which settle that as the law. To get away from the excess burden of tax quite a number of old-established English companies were moving their head offices, their management and direction, out of England. Because of this trend they recently established in the United Kingdom what is called an Overseas Trade Corporation. I am not saying that any of the companies under the Overseas Trade Corporation of the United Kingdom conform to a foreign business corporation in Canada, but considering the law which formerly existed in England, it does indicate that England is going in the direction in which we have been going for years. Now we are the ones who are withdrawing from this position. Even in the United States, where they blow hot and cold on some types of tax legislation, a bill has been introduced in Congress dealing with this. I cannot say whether it will ever pass or not, for I would not be so rash as to speculate on that. This measure is called the Boggs Bill. I don't know whether its name contains any clue as to its ultimate disposition. The purpose of the bill is to establish a special category of corporation called a foreign business corporation, which might operate abroad tax free so far as the operation is concerned; and its earnings abroad would only be taxable in the United States when they were brought home and incorporated into the revenues of the United States company.

We find that is the trend in other countries. Then why are we taking a step backward? I think it is very important to a country like Canada that we should attract as much money as we can, and have the use of it for all the different operations going on in this country, and clip on the way whatever revenues we can by way of taxes from these various sources.

So far as a tax haven is concerned, the only definition I can give of it is that it provides a place where you may carry on operations without being subject to tax. In other words, instead of a corporation hiding its money in a sock it can turn to Canada which affords a public asylum in which the corporation can openly receive its money and pay no taxes. But, that is not the situation with respect to foreign business corporations, because Canada gets direct and indirect benefits from the existence and the operation of foreign business corporations, and it is a broader field of operation than the second best which is operating through subsidiary companies abroad and bringing dividends back into Canada. I feel reasonably certain that there may be more revenue not taxed by virtue of the dividends that come from subsidiary companies abroad to Canadian corporations than any tax benefit that will develop through repeal of this section.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Would the honourable senator permit a question? I wonder if he has known or heard of any company doing business under section 71 now that claims that it could not do business in exactly the same way, from a tax viewpoint, without the section?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My friend is misunderstanding what I said. The repeal of this section preserves the status of those companies which at present are foreign business corporations.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: They are preserved anyway.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: They are preserved, so there is no question there. Their operations, as long as they are carried on in the form they have been, will go on in the same way. I am not making a point in the interests of the companies that at present are foreign business corporations.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They are protected under this act. It is the new ones that we are concerned with.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I am talking of the companies that in the ordinary way would come into being under the provisions of this act and would qualify by their operations. They are not to be given that opportunity. My friend knows very well through his practice, and I am sure any lawyer here knows, that foreign business corporations do not grow as fast as grass seed that is thrown in the soil. A definite and positive set of circumstances is required in order to achieve that status. You cannot just incorporate a company, put it up on the shelf, and say that is a foreign business company, and then if you need it some day reach up to the shelf and take it down. The foreign business corporation does not become such through incorporation, but only when it carries on a certain type of operation during the whole of a taxation period.

Now, I should point out something significant. A couple of days after the budget resolution and the proposed repeal of section 71 were announced in the newspapers—and it may or may not have been a coincidence—I received some literature from Bermuda inviting me to give my attention to the possibilities that Bermuda offered for this type of operation, since it appeared that Canada was going to repeal the section, and therefore the opportunity to make use of a foreign business corporation as a Canadian company was going to disappear. They were inviting not only our contemplation of the provisions of their law, but giving assurance that Bermuda is an excellent place where there is no income tax, where you can incorporate those companies, do your housekeeping, and conduct completely extramural activities all over the world, and in theory bring your moneys to Bermuda in dollars, where they will be yours to draw upon when you need them, and the only tax collector you will ever have to deal with is the man who administers the tax law where you happen to be living when you bring some of that money home. They painted a very nice picture. It shows that other countries are very alert to the opportunities for foreign business operations. I think Canada should continue to be alert, and should not be cancelling out a provision that has existed as long as this one has in our laws.

Honourable senators, I have been in various parts of the world, and whenever one talks to lawyers they know about what they still call 4(k) companies, which are to be found in the strangest places. The revenues of Canada benefit to some extent by them, and the moneys in circulation in Canada benefit also. Why we should see fit, on the minister's reasons which I have stated and on the supplemental reasons my friend has given, to take a course of action which means cutting off and repealing the section, when at the same time we are told, as my friend said, the whole subject is going to be scrutinized—and you know how fast the scrutiny will take place once the section is repealed—I do not know. Some time in the future it may be looked at, and if enough pressure in this form or some other form is brought to bear the section might be restored. But I say boldly that so far as anything that I have been able to ascertain through all my reading and listening—including listening to my friend tonight—I have found no reason which could be described as a reason for the repeal of this section at this time. If it is felt that there are some loopholes, I would like to sit down with those that suggest that there are any, because I have been practising law for some thirty to thirty-five years and looking at this section through all those years, and surely my friend is not suggesting that I have missed some of those things.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Not you.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It is a horrible thought. If the minister is suggesting there is a possibility inherent in the legislation of providing a tax haven, or that there is a loophole, then the proper course would be to inquire into and examine it.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Why do you not tell us about the benefits of the section? You have told us all there is against it, so why not give the positive side?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I did not know I had told you anything against the section. My friend has certainly not been listening at all; he has been tuned in on some other wavelength. I thought I was pointing out the reasons why section 71 should not be repealed. What I am saying is that no good reason has been given for its repeal. I have indicated many reasons why I think it has been of benefit to Canada, and I have suggested that if there is any reasonable doubt—I don't know of any, because what has been stated does not constitute, in my opinion, a reasonable doubt,—if such doubt exists, the proper course of action is to investigate.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Will the honourable gentleman allow a comment? I would like to hear a reason for the section under present circumstances. I would like to hear one reason why the section is a good thing now, when we have all these provisions which we did not have originally when the section came into being, but which we have now, for allowing companies to bring in money tax free, and so on, in certain circumstances. Can the honourable gentleman give one good reason why it is necessary to keep the section, and one benefit that is conferred on us by keeping it?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Oh, yes. My friend has indicated that he offered a reason tonight, which I said was the first time I had heard that reason. Let us take this illustration. If I incorporate a mining company in Canada and it carries on its mining operations entirely outside of Canada, that company would qualify as a foreign business corporation, and I might enjoy a tax holiday for a period of time in a foreign jurisdiction where they are freer with the length of their tax holidays than we are in Canada. A normal period of a tax holiday in some of the countries I can name would be a period of five years. Then I would have a tax holiday in the country where I was carrying on my mining operations for five years, on the theory I needed that length of time in order to build up operations in that country, but if I were able to qualify for a tax holiday in Canada—and I do not know that because I am not prepared to express an opinion on that now—the limitation would be three years. Now, I say so far as this operation is concerned, the effect of cancelling out the foreign business corporation classification would be to throw such a company into one of two courses of action. It could go to Bermuda or elsewhere and incorporate a company, which would carry on operations in a foreign country as a mining company, and in those circumstances no money would come to Canada and the Government would be enriched by no revenues at all. Certainly if this section is repealed my friend would not expect such a company, which could qualify for a five-year tax holiday in another country, would incorporate under Canadian law. Alternatively, the company would have to bring all its income home and pay tax at the higher Canadian rate—for there are countries where the tax rate is lower—and deduct only the tax paid abroad. That would not be attractive.

The simple answer is that if you want to attract an operation and its location in Canada for operations that are to be carried on abroad, then you have to make Canada an attractive place in which to set up that operation. I am sure that was part of the original theory of section 4 (k). I know from the time I began to be identified with a 4 (k) company—which would be back in 1926 or 1927 and continuously from there on—that was the whole basis of it.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I agree with what you say thoroughly, as regards that time.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes. Well, having done that, why should we now repeal this section 71, simply because we want to investigate the possibility of there being something inherent in the legislation which has not been discovered for all the years it has been operating that might provide a loop hole for tax avoidance? My suggestion is that we should not repeal it. We could hurry the consideration if we said its operation will be suspended until the next session of Parliament—I can understand that, and even that would be harsh treatment, but I could understand it.

If there were some reasons for what is proposed, that would be well and good, but what I am afraid of now is that the apparent reasons are ones that are being thrown out to us as some sort of explanation and that there is not any solid reason. However, I find it difficult to accept that statement, that the minister would attempt to seek the repeal of this section without having a solid and sound reason for so doing, and as the reasons given are not solid and sound, what are the real ones? We should be told what they are.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That can be brought out in committee.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, I have taken longer than I intended and you have been very patient.

My friend has dealt with other sections of the amending bill. Some of them are beneficial, some of them impose more taxes, but most of them are not complicated, except the formula for determining the premium on the excess of group insurance over $25,000, and I think they can more properly be dealt with in committee. They will not develop any surprises to us and therefore I feel there is no necessity at this time to discuss them.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Gershaw, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 27, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following document:

Report of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, concerning the distribution and sale of electrical construction materials and equipment in Ontario, pursuant to sections 18 and 19 of the Combines Investigation Act, Chapter 314, R.S. 1952. (English text).

PETITIONS FOR PRIVATE BILLS

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING

Hon. R. B. Horner, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders, presented the committee's second report.

The report was read by the Clerk as follows:

Your committee recommend that the time limited for filing petitions for private bills (other than petitions for bills of divorce), which expired on March 13, 1959, be further extended to Wednesday, May 27, 1959.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Horner: With leave of the Senate, I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

OLD AGE SECURITY BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, for Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill C-46.

The report was read by the Clerk as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-46) intituled: "An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 21, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. John G. Higgins: With leave, I move the third reading now.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, on every occasion when the Old Age Security Act is discussed, either publicly or privately, I have always taken the opportunity to praise the measure because it is uniquely Canadian. It provides social welfare payments for persons over 70 years of age, with 10 years' residence. The payment is universal, at a flat rate without a means test and without a record of contributions. No person is compelled to take it. One must apply in order to get it. If you don't apply, you don't get it. If after you apply you change your mind, you may cancel out, but I am told the departmental file on cancelouts is a very small one indeed.

I said the act was unique. It is unique in this respect, that it recognizes no "haves" and no "have-nots", and there is nobody outside looking in. Whether a person is a millionaire in a penthouse or a pauper in a poorhouse he is treated in the same way by his Government, and on one day a month he gets his cheque in the same way as all other recipients. It may not do much for the rich man, but it does a lot for the poor man. This act is a unifying force in that it provides Canadians with a common bond. Everyone in this country feels that he is being treated in the same way as anyone else and that he is a first-class citizen.

Since I had not heard anything of that nature in the course of the debate I thought it was worthy of mention.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JOINT COMMITTEE QUORUM

Hon. James Gladstone, Joint Chairman of the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian Affairs, presented the first report of the committee.

The report was read by the Clerk as follows:

Your committee recommend that 9 members of the committee constitute a quorum, provided that both houses are represented.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be considered?

Hon. Mr. Gladstone: With leave of the Senate, I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

TOURIST TRAFFIC

NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Mr. Horner: Honourable senators, I wish to give notice of a motion for Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Would the honourable gentleman from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) be kind enough to read the motion to the house now so that we may know what it is?

Hon. Mr. Horner: Certainly. It reads:

That the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic be empowered to inquire into and report upon the activities of the various agencies concerned with promoting tourist travel in Canada, and that the committee be authorized to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I think the house might be prepared to approve that motion now.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps the honourable gentleman from Blaine Lake wishes to make a speech.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: We are always pleased to listen to a speech by the honourable gentleman from Blaine Lake. It may be that he wishes to delay moving the motion until Tuesday evening in order to speak then. I will therefore withdraw my suggestion.

INCOME TAX BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson for the second reading of Bill C-48, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to discuss the clauses of this bill, but rather to make some general suggestions which might profitably be put into effect.

I feel there should be more district income tax offices throughout Canada. At the present time some cities of 20,000 to 30,000 people nave no income tax office within two to three hundred miles. I am not advocating that larger staffs be employed or that expensive rugs be placed on office floors or anything of that kind. I merely think that some of the present staff and existing files should be moved into offices across the country. This would be a big help to the citizens of Canada, particularly new Canadians who are not accustomed to carrying on correspondence in the English language. It would bring the tax collector and the taxpayer in closer contact. The taxpayer would be able to inquire more closely into his duties with regard to payment of tax, and at the same time the tax collector would be in a better position to determine just who should be paying taxes. It would result in increased tax collection. Furthermore, it would avoid long tedious delays in getting an answer from the district income tax offices, which are very busy. It is true that if you send a cheque with a registered letter to one of these offices you will get a mere receipt back. Sometimes, however, months and months pass by and there is no other reply. In the meantime, interest and penalties may accumulate, and as a result many taxpayers find themselves in a very bad situation.

The second matter I wish to speak about is pamphlets. This Government issues many pamphlets, and I think some pamphlets about income tax should be issued and widely distributed. Younger people are now earning, as well as new people from other countries, yet there is very little information given out about income tax. I think it would be well to make it known to as many people as possible that every dollar of every income must be reported in the income tax return. Let it be known also that it is of no use going to so-called tax experts for advice. There are some men who offer their services to show a taxpayer how very little tax he needs to pay. I will give an example of a man I know well who got into trouble about his income tax. He had a very good case, but the department did not agree with him, so he went to see a so-called tax expert. This fellow said, "Give me $500 and half of all I can save you, and I will get you out of this trouble." The $500 was paid, but my friend got no satisfaction.

It should also be known that the tax is a very fair one if there is proper co-operation. If you work for a corporation your income is known and the tax is deducted every month from your cheque. The sales the farmer or rancher makes are also on record. However, there is a large class of people who pretty well set their own fees. It is those people that I would like to see encouraged to keep careful records and to face up to their responsibilities. Then the load would not be so heavy upon those who are compelled to pay every month or very often.

The third point I wish to speak of is early settlement of the tax. The tax collector knows pretty well who should be paying tax, and if a taxpayer's return is not received by the department when it is due the taxpayer should be notified, and he should be notified month by month until some settlement is made. If these conditions continue without a clearance year after year the department loses money, for a settlement will have to be made for only a fraction of what it should have been. Also the taxpayer becomes very much discouraged.

Another point is that the income tax inspectors should be acquainted with business, and particularly with the business of the people they are assessing. Now, what happens? Sometimes two income tax inspectors will go to a distant point where a claim against a farmer or rancher has to be settled by personal contact and they may not have any knowledge at all of the business of farming and ranching. Indeed, one rancher told me that an inspector who called upon him did not know a heifer from a haystack. Many inspectors are not qualified to assess taxpayers in that class, and something should be done to correct this.

This brings me to my very last point, namely, that this onerous tax should be collected with kindness and helpfulness. Harsh words or accusations are often uttered, and letters written that are very threatening and harsh. I think the income tax people might well copy the pattern of the Department of Veterans Affairs. If a veteran writes to the department about some claim that he has, the answer of course is usually no, but he gets a nice letter. He is told that the department is sorry that his request does not come under the act but he can go into a veterans' adviser in his district and talk the matter over. He is also told that he can appeal within a certain time, and is assured that if more can be done to help, the help will be gladly offered.

On the other hand, a lot of letters sent out by the income tax department are rather threatening and harsh. I do feel that those letters arouse a lot of resentment, and certainly nothing is gained by them. If such a letter happens to be sent to a new Canadian he feels that all this talk about liberty, freedom and justice is just a hollow mockery and a delusion, especially if he is falsely accused. He becomes resentful of the department and determines to get even with it in some way.

I have been told that conditions in the department are gradually improving, but from the letters I receive I feel there is still something to be desired in the matter of the approach. There should be an improvement in the attitude of these tax collectors in order to foster better human relationships and develop citizenship.

Hon. W. D. Euler: Honourable senators, it had not been my intention to intervene in this debate, but I am impelled to do so by what my friend from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw) has just said.

I shall preface my remarks by saying that some years ago I had the honour to be head of the department which collects the income tax, the Department of National Revenue. At the outset we issued a circular from month to month just for the officials of the department, giving news pertaining to departmental affairs. I was asked to write a brief introduction to it, which I did, and the thing I emphasized was that the officials of the department were the servants and not the masters of the public and that they should exercise the saving grace of common sense. I think that made a bit of an impression because we went out of office at the next election. My successor issued virtually the same message to the employees.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Then your successor's party went out of office.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Nobody issues a message like that today.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I would like to give honourable senators a case in point illustrating an occurrence during the tenure of the old Government—the Liberal Government, if you like. I had paid my income tax promptly, as I always do, with what I thought was the correct amount, but which was not. Shortly afterward I left the country on a vacation of about six weeks. When I returned there was awaiting me a letter from the department making a revised assessment, which was quite in order. I did not contest it. As I always pay my debts promptly, if I have enough money to do so, I mailed at once a cheque for the amount demanded—and I may say the demand was not worded too politely. The very next day I received from the department another letter—it must have crossed mine in the mails—couched in the most offensive language. I had copies of it made, and I wish I had one with me. The department demanded the amount set out in the bill which had been sent to me a few weeks before, but which I did not receive until I returned home, and threatened me with all sorts of legal action if I did not pay within 30 days. Naturally I was a bit provoked and I went to the office and asked to see the man who sent that letter. He was pointed out to me and I went over to him and inquired, "Did you write that letter?" He said, "Yes". "Then," I said, "you ought to be fired".

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Euler: He replied, "Well, that was a form letter". I said, "It was not a form letter. It was typewritten, and though it may have been in the order of a form letter it was directed to me personally". Then I went to the head of the office there—I am not making any accusation against him at all—and he confirmed that it was the custom to send that kind of letter in that sort of language. "Well", I said, "I think it is wrong. A letter like that ought not to be sent to anyone, whether he be a senator or a former minister of the department or a citizen who has never held any public office. You should not write anyone in that offensive manner. When a tax payment is overdue you could send out a reminder, in strong but polite wording, and if payment is not received within a stated time you could proceed to collect in the usual way. You should be a little more courteous in dealing with the public."

Now, here is something that I add with a good deal of reluctance. I spoke to the then head of the department, but he did not exhibit very much interest in the matter. I sent him a copy of the letter and that is all I ever heard about it.

That incident occurred two or three years ago and I had hoped that in the meantime the department's attitude had changed and that a taxpayer would not now receive threatening and offensive letters when there had been a brief delay in forwarding a tax payment. In most cases of the kind the delay is probably easily explainable. I thought that by now the department would be aware of this and have instituted a policy of preceding a firm demand for payment by a considerate investigation. But, judging by what has been said by my friend from Medicine Hat, a good deal of the old practice persists. I trust that, under this new Conservative Government, the new minister, if he takes the trouble to read my remarks, will see that the matter is corrected.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, this is the annual occasion when we have an opportunity to consider the bill to amend the Income Tax Act. I recall that in past years, when the party now sitting to the left of Mr. Speaker was in office, we always had a most interesting and clear explanation of this bill from the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden), who spoke last night. He has been succeeded in that office by the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson), who explained this bill yesterday evening. I am sorry that he is not in his seat this afternoon. It is always a difficult bill to explain because, as he said, it does not engage any general principle but is confined to a number of diverse subjects dealing with various amendments to the existing Income Tax Act. I thought that my honourable friend from Winnipeg South dealt with the bill very adequately yesterday evening. I want to congratulate him on the way in which he introduced the bill and explained the various sections to us.

However, there is one important point that he forgot to mention. He said, what is technically true, that some sections are favourable to the taxpayer and other sections are unfavourable to the taxpayer, but what he failed to say was that in its essence this bill creates a substantial increase in the tax on every individual and on every corporation in Canada, and that the few little ameliorations which certain sections of the bill do bring into effect count for very little when compared with this substantial increase.

Now, I want to turn to the question that was discussed yesterday evening by the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) in connection with the proposal in section 19 of this bill to repeal the provisions in favour of foreign business corporations, and I want to support what the honourable senator said in that connection. This is a provision which in one form or another has existed in our income tax legislation for at least the last thirty years. It has to do with companies which, as he said, formerly were called "4(k) companies", because they were governed by the old section 4(k) of the former Income Tax Act. Since, I think, the year 1948 they have been governed by section 71 of the act, under the name of foreign business corporations.

Like the honourable senator from Toronto, I have in the course of my professional practice had a good deal to do with a number of the companies which have taken advantage of that provision. Briefly speaking, the provision was inserted for the purpose of enabling persons outside of Canada who wished to conduct their business in corporate form outside of Canada, to take advantage of incorporating within Canada by means of a company incorporated under the Canadian Companies Act and, since they were not going to carry on any business in Canada, to provide them with a very favourable base of income tax under which they would pay only a nominal sum of $100 a year. That, as I say, has been a feature of our income tax legislation for very many years, and has resulted in the incorporation of a great number of companies under the Canadian Companies Act, which otherwise would never have come to this country.

Hon. Mr. Haig: May I ask a question? Why should these companies not pay a tax on the business they do here?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They don't do any business here.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: They do no business. If my honourable friend will read section 71 he will see that a "foreign business corporation" is one which cannot carry on any business in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Then why do these companies want to come here at all?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: That is a point I am coming to. I hope to answer my honourable friend in a few minutes.

It is perfectly true, of course, that a company which incorporates in Canada under the Canadian Companies Act, and which is a foreign business corporation and pays only $100 income tax in each year, does not contribute very much to the revenues of the country. But that is not the only benefit which the country receives from these corporations. As my honourable friend from Toronto remarked, when a Canadian company with foreign shareholders—and the great majority of these companies have foreign shareholders—declares a dividend, it has to deduct and pay to our revenue authorities 15 per cent of any dividend so declared. I happen to know of one instance, in which I have been personally involved over a number of years past, of one of these companies which has the habit of declaring a dividend each year, payable entirely to non-resident shareholders, of something in excess of $100,000, and as a result I have the privilege of sending to the Department of National Revenue each year a cheque for some $17,000 or $18,000, which is completely found money as far as Canada is concerned. True, it does not amount to very much, but it is sufficient, or almost sufficient, to pay the salary of the Deputy Minister of National Revenue.

In addition to that, the province in which that company has its head office requires it to file a return, and to pay a certain amount, usually quite a limited amount, based on its capital, its profits and so on. Although I have no figures to support what I have to say, nevertheless I think I am quite correct in saying that the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, in which the head offices of the great majority of these companies are situated, do benefit to the extent of several hundred thousand dollars a year from the fact that these companies are here in Canada and do have to pay provincial taxes.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I think the province of British Columbia also obtains a very substantial revenue.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: My friend is right. I believe the province of British Columbia benefits to a large extent.

Quite apart from that—and here I come to a rather more personal consideration—the fact that these companies can incorporate in Canada means that the Canadian lawyers and chartered accountants who deal with these matters derive considerable revenue from that source. I freely admit that our Income Tax Act is deficient in that it does not exempt lawyers, as a class, from the payment of income tax.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Shame!

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Having regard to this lamentable deficiency, the fact nevertheless remains that lawyers who do incorporate and manage companies of this kind derive a not inconsiderable income therefrom, and they pay their income tax on the income so derived. In fact, under this bill, they will be required to pay an even higher income tax on these earnings than they have in the past. So, the benefit to this country is not solely confined to the nominal sum of $100 which each of these companies has to pay each year under the Income Tax Act.

I think honourable senators would like to know the sort of conditions under which it is found advisable to incorporate these companies. I want to answer the question asked by the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig), and I trust I can answer it to his satisfaction. I wish to give to the house examples of four foreign business corporations which have come within my personal experience, and to state the reason why they came to Canada in each case, so far as I know them.

The first case is that of a company financed partly by American, partly by British and partly by European funds, which built and operates a very large oil refinery in the Middle East. The reason why they came to Canada to incorporate that company was, I suppose, that Canada was a sort of half-way house between the various interests who were providing the capital, namely, the Americans, the British and the Europeans.

The next case I wish to cite to the house is that of a very large American corporation which holds interests in the form of sugar estates and lands in various of the Caribbean colonies. It organized two foreign investment corporations in Canada to hold these lands. The basic reason why it did so was that it was going to own property in the British dominions and felt it was proper to have the companies that hold these estates organized under the British flag.

The third example was one where a number of Canadians got together and raised the capital to construct a much needed cement plant in one of the countries of South America. There, again, of course, the reason why they organized in Canada was clear enough. They were Canadians and they wanted the benefit of incorporation under the Canadian Companies' Act.

The fourth example was one where citizens of two Western European countries wished to organize a fairly substantial investment company holding investments in various countries of Europe and in other parts of the world as well. That company was organized shortly before the last war, and it is my belief—although I cannot say so definitely—that the reason why these Europeans organized the company as a Canadian company was that they feared what actually happened, namely, that war would break out, that their country would be invaded, and that if they were organized in the form of a Western European company they would be subject to seizure by the German occupants of their country, whereas as a Canadian company they were freed from that risk. That, in fact, was what happened.

Those are four examples of the sort of situation in which a foreign business corporation organized in Canada is of some use.

My honourable friend from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) used the argument in favour of the abolition of this particular class of company—these foreign business corporations—that as a result of tax agreements which had been made over the last five or ten years between Canada and various other countries the necessity for these corporations had ceased to exist. He may well be right in certain respects. For instance, I think that as between this country and the United States there is now no reason for the formation of a foreign business corporation in this country, and the advantages that could have been derived in the past from that can now be quite properly obtained under the tax convention which exists between Canada and the United States with respect to allocation of profits as between the two countries. But there are two things I want to say to my honourable friend, and I wish he were here to hear this answer to his argument. The first is that in regard to every one of the four cases in my own experience that I mentioned a few minutes ago no tax agreement is of any assistance whatsoever. Canada has no tax agreement with the country in the Middle East in which the oil refinery is operated. Canada has no tax agreement with the countries in the Caribbean where the estates owned by the Canadian subsidiaries are located. Canada has no tax agreement with the country in South America where the cement industry is carried on; and with respect to the investment corporation that I mentioned in the fourth place, its investments are spread out in a number of countries and no tax agreement would help it anyway. So, as far as those four instances are concerned, my honourable friend's argument fails.

I would be more disposed to pay attention to his argument that these foreign business corporations are not required any longer, if he had supported that allegation with a statement to the effect that the demand for these companies is falling off, and that as tax agreements are made between Canada and various other countries fewer and fewer of these foreign business corporations are coming into existence.

Under the Income Tax Act, in order to become a foreign business corporation, a company has to file documents with the Department of National Revenue showing that it possesses the necessary qualifications. Then once a company has become a foreign business corporation it remains such unless and until it ceases to fulfil the requirements. I took the trouble to get from the Department of National Revenue this morning the figures as to the number of these companies at present in existence, and information as to how the number of them has changed over the last few years. I could get only the figures up to the end of 1956, and I was told that these are approximate, that they may not be correct down to the last numeral. As at the end of 1956 there were 160 of these companies, and of that number 80 were so qualified in the five years from 1952 to 1956. That means that of all the foreign business corporations in existence at the end of 1956, one-half has come into existence in the last five years. I think my honourable friend will see from those figures that the need for foreign business corporations has not in any way diminished—at least, up until the end of 1956.

My honourable friend did touch very briefly upon an argument that had been used in favour of this section of the bill to the effect that the Act in its present form is liable to lead to abuse and to tax evasion. Now, we are all against tax evasion—even we who are tax lawyers are against tax evasion—but I repeat to my honourable friends that this provision has been in the law for the last thirty years, and that the minister has stated that so far there has been no instance of which he knows of tax evasion by any of the foreign business corporations at present in existence. I think my honourable friends know enough about tax lawyers and tax accountants in this country to realize that if there had been any possibility of tax avoidance or tax evasion in the legislation as it has existed for the last thirty years it would have been found out by those tax lawyers and tax accountants long before now, and advantage would have been taken of it.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: You do mean legal tax evasion?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes.

The other thing I want to say about this question of tax evasion is to reinforce what the honourable senator from Toronto said yesterday evening. He said that when the minister was challenged to give examples of possible tax evasion under the present statute he gave two examples, both of which were completely inapplicable. In fact, anyone who had any elementary knowledge of section 71 of the Income Tax Act, on hearing those examples, would realize at once that the companies which he gave as examples could not, under any circumstance, have ever qualified as foreign business corporations under the definition of a foreign business corporation contained in that section. In fact, it was quite evident from the minister's statement in that connection that he didn't know what he was talking about. Mr. Speaker, I see you are looking at me with a rather prejudiced eye, and perhaps I should not have made so blunt a statement. Perhaps it is not quite in conformity with the normal amenities of parliamentary life, so I will withdraw the statement I made that the minister didn't know what he was talking about and I will replace it by the statement that the minister was badly advised.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not think my honourable friend has made it plain that this amendment does not apply to foreign business corporations now in business, but only to new corporations which might be formed after this bill has been passed.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: That is perfectly right. I hoped I had made that clear. What I am arguing is that this is valuable machinery which is still capable of being used for foreign business corporations in the future, and that this privilege which has been in existence for the last thirty years should not be abolished without very good reason. I was trying to discuss the reasons which have been given for amending the act in this way, and at the same time attempting in my humble way to suggest they are not valid reasons.

The minister made one other statement which rather surprised me. He said that if this amending section were passed and foreign business corporations were done away with, the question could be looked into in the future, and if it were found that there was no possibility of evasion, the section might be reinstated. Well, that seems to me to be a rather strange way of conducting the affairs of the country, to act first and to think afterwards. I suggest that the proper thing for the minister to do is to think first and to act afterwards. I say that no sufficient argument has been advanced for abolishing this privilege, if you wish to call it that, which has existed in our tax law for the last thirty years or more. I do suggest that when this bill goes to committee, as undoubtedly it will, unless the minister or his departmental officials can give us better reasons than they have given so far for amending this section 71, we should seriously consider whether we should pass it. I would point out to the house that it has no effect whatever upon the balance of ways and means and that it is perfectly within the rights of the Senate, under these circumstances, to refuse to adopt this amendment if we see fit to do so.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I just want to make one or two comments in connection with this bill. I don't know much about finances or business but I have always been able to pay my bills. My experience in life has taught me one or two things. One of them is that business people do not go to a law firm, such as the one to which the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) belongs, to establish a foreign corporation unless they are going to gain some special advantage from the country in which the corporation is to be located. I have been associated with small law firms and big law firms and I have never heard of any business organization incorporating a foreign company to do business in a country like Turkey, East Germany or Poland. They pick out a country which gives them something they cannot get any place else. They pick a country where their investment will be safe. That is why they pick Canada. It is not because they love Canadians, but because they feel Canada is the best place in which to trust their money.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: And we want to tax them because they do this.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Wait until I finish. My honourable friend from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) and I may sit on the same side of the house but we may not share the same views with respect to this legislation. I represent little people, not big people as my honourable friend does.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am only a country lawyer.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The fact that my friend represents big people is plenty of reason for saying he should be sitting on the other side of the house.

It is difficult to imagine any Canadian lawyer saying to a business client who wants to incorporate a foreign business company: "Don't incorporate in Canada, for you would be taking a terrible risk. We have serious inflation difficulties. We have a poor Government at Ottawa and poor Governments in most of the provinces. We used to have good provincial Governments, but now they are all going bad. Foreign business corporations are paying only $100 a year now for all the protection they get in Canada, but the laws are going to be changed and such companies will have to pay $1,000. So just keep out of Canada."

Honourable senators, companies do not incorporate here unless it pays them to do so rather than to incorporate somewhere else. That is the only reason. It doesn't matter what my honourable friend from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) has said this afternoon or what the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) said last night, these companies incorporate in Canada because they get here something which they cannot get in China, India, Egypt, Turkey or anywhere else. There are some of us who believe that corporations which enjoy this security should help pay for it. It costs us money to maintain law and order in this country, but these companies contribute just $100 a year.

Honourable senators, I might object to some sections of the bill which have not been mentioned, but I certainly do not object to this one. I don't blame big businessmen for what they do. I would do the same thing. If I wanted to invest $100,000 in a foreign business corporation I would certainly invest in a company operating in, say, Cuba, if I got a better return on my capital than I would from investing in a company operating in Turkey. We have money invested in some Brazilian companies and we wish we hadn't. The price of their stock indicates that a lot of other people are of the same opinion. Companies don't want to invest in Europe because of the constant unrest that exists there. Every time you pick up a newspaper, listen to the radio or watch television you see or hear disturbing news about that part of the world. For instance, today is the 27th of May, the day that the Russians said they would take certain action in Berlin. Well, they have not done it so far. I guess they were a little uneasy about it. It is a kind of thing we want to avoid in this country. Canada affords greater protection to investment of money than any other country in the world, and people who come here to invest should pay their share of the cost of governing the country.

I want to join with my honourable friend from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw) in what he said about income tax. I entirely agree with the reasons he has given, and I have a few others to add. I feel very flattered about something that occurred in Winnipeg some time ago. Probably one is easily flattered, and when you want people on your side it is a good idea to flatter them. About four years ago the minister in charge of income tax for the Government of Canada visited Winnipeg. The staff in Winnipeg decided to put on a little dinner for him, and the head man said to the minister, "We would like to invite a couple of guests to the dinner, some friends of yours."

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Were you there?

Hon. Mr. Haig: He said, "I would like to have Senator Crerar and Senator Haig at the meeting."

May I point out to my friend from Medicine Hat what happens in connection with people in Manitoba who do not understand income tax and come to Winnipeg to make inquiries about it. Perhaps a farmer, born in Czechoslovakia, comes into my office and inquires about his income tax. He may be a successful farmer, but he doesn't know how to make out his return or what deductions to claim. So I take him to the income tax department. They ask him if he made a return last year or the year before, and he says no. I take him over to the staff in charge of that work, turn him over to them, and walk out. He comes back in a day or two and says, "Mr. Haig, I want to thank you for the kindness you did me the other day." So I say, "I only introduced you to the fellow, I didn't do anything for you." He replies: "Yes, but I know something about the subject now, and I am satisfied to pay my share with the rest of you in Canada. I know what I have to do."

We in Winnipeg have been very fortunate in our income tax district office. In the past thirty years we have had just two men in charge of that office. I may say that some thirty years ago my honourable friend from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) was Minister of National Revenue. Well, if a lawyer wrote in to the Winnipeg office about a client who did not understand his income tax, he would receive a reply right back saying, "We will investigate that, and we will call on you further if we need you." The taxpayer would be called in and told all about it, and he would return to his home in Manitoba a supporter of income tax—believe it or not. He understood it because it was explained to him sympathetically by the man in charge.

Hon. Mr. Euler: The man in charge used the saving grace of common sense.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Yes, of course.

Some time ago a man from one of our good farming districts in Manitoba had three years of poor crops, one was hailed out and two were flooded out. He and his wife came 175 miles to see me in my office. I said: "The only thing you can do is to go over and see the minister himself. I will give you a letter of introduction so that he will know who you are and know that you are not just camping on him." Well, he went over to see the minister, who spent a couple of hours with him. The man came back to me, and said, "Mr. Haig, how much do I owe you?" I replied, "I only gave you a letter of introduction—just a dollar." He wanted to give me five dollars, so I told him it would cost him nothing. That man has paid $125 a year on his arrears, and last fall he owed only $49. He was glad to pay, because he understood what income tax was all about—it had been properly explained to him.

I repeat that we are very fortunate in our income tax department in Winnipeg. I think that is largely because of the men who have been in charge. Perhaps in Alberta, for instance, it would be difficult to give the same service, for the people are more scattered. I do not know. However, I suggest that the income tax department look to that. People would have a better feeling toward income tax if they understood it better. The fact is that large numbers of them don't understand it and are afraid of the income tax people.

Honourable senators, I am entirely with the honourable senator from Medicine Hat, and I hope some reform will be brought about. I have given an illustration of how things are done in Winnipeg. It is not a matter of politics, but of good management. I say again that the men in charge have made a great success of the administration of the income tax department in Winnipeg.

I do not want to talk about the parts of the act concerning deductions for medical expenses. I was pretty sick myself, and they allowed me only a very small deduction. Under this bill apparently there is to be another change, and if that will mean better handling of the matter I am quite willing to go along with it.

On the question of foreign business corporations, I say again that anyone who wishes to use Canada as a country in which to invest money safely should pay something toward the cost of government of this country.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I have listened with interest to all that has been said about income tax business. I understand very well that we are bound to meet the expenditures of the Government. But why has Canada made such large expenditures on silly gifts to other countries? One of the silliest of these gifts was to Belgium under NATO. Belgium is a rich country. Why is it that Canada has to be bled white to make gifts to Belgium and to other countries that are in a better condition financially than we are? If we are to bring about tax reform we must start at the root of it. Naturally, there is a feeling that everybody must put his hand on the dollar, which is called the altar of sacrifice; that is the feeling that prevails. But why not investigate the gifts that are made under the Colombo Plan at great expense to Canada? I have been informed by a reliable source that most of the money that goes to the Colombo Plan is wasted, that only one-third reaches its proper destination, that another one-third of it is spent on trips and advertisements of various kinds. That is where a lot of money goes, and we have to tax the people for it.

There is another thing that strikes me. Why do not the members of the Senate receive the same treatment as the members of the House of Commons? Why is it that members of the House of Commons are allowed a tax exemption for expenditures and we are not? Because some of our colleagues are more fortunate than others in the goods of the land it is supposed to be not proper to mention those things. But we must be equal with the members of the House of Commons. They have an exemption for payments made to their pension fund and I do not complain about that, but why is it there is the other difference between the treatment of members of the Senate and members of the House of Commons? I cannot understand it. The Government should consider the matter.

I want to tell my honourable colleagues what I think about the silly idea of giving all we have to outsiders. They never seem to get enough. We are supposed to give still more all the time to countries that are richer even than we are, and all that without any compensation. I complained about that during the war. The idea of giving free loans, or loans without a guarantee, was sheer nonsense. I had a supporter in the Senate, the honourable Senator McLean, who spoke and wrote against it. Some others supported me also. But we were told that if these gifts were not made the revenues of Canada would not be large enough to pay for family allowances, and other stories of that nature.

I am going to ask of you, my honourable colleague, to think over what I have said. I know that a reform will not take place this year, but it may come next year, and if it does not come next year it may come the year after. When it does come it will be a matter of fairness to all concerned.

Hon. John G. Higgins: Honourable senators, it is with great trepidation that I venture into the realms of high finance, and with much diffidence and humility that I join my name with those of the great nabobs of law. I am only a lawyer in a small town, what is commonly known as a small-town lawyer. Whereas they are experts or specialists in finance, I am only a general dealer in law, taking things as they come, no matter what they are. But I do have this advantage that, if one of my nabob friends got into serious trouble—for instance, involvement in a manslaughter charge—I could defend him with the same confidence as I would plead for him in a civil court. That is the advantage of being a general dealer in law in a small town. I am not boasting nor apologizing when I say that, but things are as they are.

Now, we are talking about investment companies, foreign investment companies. We had such companies in Newfoundland in former years, but we called them personal holding companies. Newfoundland was for many years the mecca for these. The Government got anywhere from $100 to $250 for allowing such companies to be incorporated there. Those companies could not carry on business in Newfoundland at all, in fact they did not have a business office there. Under the Companies Act every company was required to have a registered office, and the registered office was always that of the lawyer who incorporated the company. That was a great advantage, particularly for the lawyers, and we used to have a big list of companies that we represented posted on the walls of our offices. We could not place the names of the companies separately outside our doors, for there was not enough room, so we had to post them up inside on a list. Some lawyers represented forty, fifty, sixty or seventy such companies. I know of one firm of lawyers which had a list of two hundred such companies.

Now, that was a source of money for the country.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: And for the lawyers.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I am coming to that. We lawyers used to get anywhere from $25 to $50 a year for allowing our office to be used as the registered office of the company, and all we had to do was to file a share list and do certain things with the Income Tax department. We felt sure that the companies got some advantage out of this, but what it was, so far as Newfoundland was concerned, it was hard to understand, except that Newfoundland was happy to have them incorporate their companies there and get a fair amount of money for this. The lawyers who incorporated the companies got their fees, as well as annual payments for allowing the registered offices to be in their own offices. That was a lovely situation. In other words, as we say, "A good time was had by all."

But eventually the halcyon days came to an end. When Confederation arrived these companies had to go elsewhere, but where they went I do not know. If they are coming to Canada and opening up their offices here, I would advise the country to charge them $250 or more. I think you would be doing very well and they would be satisfied. Otherwise, let us get back to the old system we had in Newfoundland before Confederation. Please regard us in that respect as an independent country. We—particularly the lawyers—would be quite happy to have the companies again.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pearson, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Léon Méthod moved the second reading of Bill S-22, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

He said: Honourable senators, as mentioned in the title of this bill, its purpose is to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 105, as amended by 1953-54, chapter 15; 1957, chapter 8, and 1957-58, chapter 15.

These amendments can be divided into two groups: Firstly, to increase the power of the corporation; secondly, to make a change in its management.

In regard to the first group, if we look at the present law we can see that by section 13 the corporation may, for the purpose of facilitating and developing trade between Canada and any other country, enter into a contract of insurance with a person carrying on business in Canada, called the exporter, to insure him against any risk of loss in the carrying out of a transaction with a foreign importer.

By the amendments, the corporation will have the authority to provide direct and unconditional guarantees to banks or other financing organizations, and in addition will be authorized to buy, sell, or make loans on guaranteed export paper. These new facilities should make available broader sources of financing for exporters of capital goods.

The core, if I may say, of this first group of amendments can be found in clause 5 of the bill, being subsection 2 of section 21A, which provides as follows:

(2) When authorized by the Governor in Council, the corporation may,

(a) guarantee, by an appropriate endorsement or otherwise, the payment of an instrument given by an importer to an exporter or to the nominee of an exporter under or in respect of an export transaction entered into between the importer and the exporter;

(b) purchase a guaranteed instrument;

(c) lend money to the holder of a guaranteed instrument upon the security thereof; and

(d) sell a guaranteed instrument to any person.

At present the corporation can only insure the exporter against non-payment by the buyer. Under the proposed amendments, the corporation, by authority of the Governor in Council, will be able to give to any lender an unconditional guarantee of payment of the obligation of an importer to an exporter. In addition, as I explained previously, the corporation will be enabled to purchase a guaranteed instrument, to lend money on the instrument, and to sell the instrument to another person. This means that the corporation will be entitled to transfer this guarantee to a bank. As the Governor of the Bank of Canada, by reason of his office, has something to do with banks, there may be a conflict of interest between his two positions, and for this reason he has asked to be relieved of his responsibility in connection with the operation of this corporation, and we have the reason for the second group of amendments.

According to sections 3 and 5 of the Export Credits Insurance Act, a corporation known as the Export Credits Insurance Corporation was organized and placed under the management of a board of directors, composed of the members of the corporation and not more than four other directors appointed from time to time by the Governor in Council. The members of the corporation were the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada. The purpose of the present bill is to leave the management of this corporation under the control of the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Deputy Minister of Finance, and five other directors.

If we look at the bill we will see by section 1 that the words "and the Governor of the Bank of Canada" are deleted from section 3 of the act.

By section 2 of the bill, subsection 2 of section 4 of the act will no longer include the words "as a result of a contract of insurance", which words are deleted.

Section 3 of the bill would increase from four to five the number of directors to be appointed by the Governor in Council, in order that the board may be composed of the same number. The words "The Governor of the Bank of Canada" are deleted from subsection 4 of section 5 of the act.

I now come to section 5 of the bill. Under sections 13 and 21 of the act, the corporation can insure an exporter against any risk of loss, and the Governor in Council can authorize the corporation to enter into a contract of insurance in the national interest. This will remain as it is, because, as you will observe by section 4 of the bill, only subsections 3 and 4 are repealed, and these three sections are included in the new section 21B as subsections 1, 3 and 4.

By section 5 of the bill you have in subsection 1 of the new section 21A the interpretation of certain words which had to be included because this interpretation was in Part II of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, chapter 105, which has been of no effect since January 1, 1948.

By subsection 2 of section 21A you have the increase of powers to the corporation, which I have already mentioned.

By subsection 3 of section 21A you have a power given to the Minister of Finance which is necessary in order to pay to the corporation out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund the moneys it may require to discharge any obligation which it may have undertaken under its new powers.

Subsection 1 of the new section 21B incorporates subsection 3 of the present law and covers the liability of an importer under all outstanding guaranteed instruments, instead of insurance only.

Subsection 2 of section 21B places on the corporation an obligation to remit to the Receiver General of Canada all moneys recovered under a contract of insurance or from the sale of a guaranteed instrument, etc.

Subsections 3 and 4 of section 21B of the bill incorporates subsections 4 and 5 of section 21 of the present law, with the necessary concurrent amendments.

Honourable senators, I hope I have explained all the modifications proposed by the bill to the present law. I may add, if honourable senators wish to have this bill referred to a committee, the President and General Manager of the corporation organized under this act will be pleased to appear and give you all the additional information you may require.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, the honourable senator from Shawinigan (Hon. Mr. Methot) has given us an excellent explanation of this bill, and I compliment him for the clarity, brevity and completeness of his explanation.

The act which this bill would amend was put on the statute books to enable Canadian companies to do business with foreign corporations, more particularly corporations situated in that part of the world with which we have not in the immediate past had very favourable relations. As I do not know how these transactions have worked out, I am interested to learn whether the corporation in insuring foreign business people has lost or made money. The honourable senator who explained the bill said he would be in favour of having it referred to a committee. I agree with this proposal in order to get information with respect to activities under this act from the officers who will appear before the committee.

The bill in the first instance sets out a proposed change in the management. Previously the corporation was managed by the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Deputy Minister of Finance, the Governor of the Bank of Canada and four directors. It is now proposed that the Governor of the Bank of Canada be relieved of any responsibility in connection with administration of this act. I did not understand clearly from the explanation of the honourable senator from Shawinigan why the Governor of the Bank of Canada wanted to be relieved. Probably that can be explained more fully in committee. After passage of this bill the corporation will be composed of the members of the corporation and not more than five other directors. Just what will be the result of carrying on business under the new management, only the future will show.

Apparently the corporation is to have much wider powers in the future than it has had in the past. As I understand the act, at the present time all that the corporation can do is insure exporters by way of a straight insurance policy. I presume a premium is paid, and if there is a loss the corporation sustains it, and the exporter gets his money, provided he has paid the premium.

The corporation is to be empowered to carry on the business of a finance company, to take notes, mortgages, liens and other forms of securities, and to hold those securities against the money the corporation advances to the exporter. But, honourable senators, the corporation can go much further than that. It can sell the security, whether it be a lien, chattel mortgage, or other security. I suppose the corporation can sell at a discount. If it sells at a discount then, of course, there will be a loss on the transaction. Probably it would be a good thing to sell some securities if the corporation feels the risk of holding them is too great. Under its new powers the corporation can sell securities at a loss if it deems it advisable to take the loss. It may be a good thing. I am not saying it is not a good thing. I do feel, however, that the bill should go to committee, and we should have further information as to what the corporation expects will be the result of its receiving these wider powers.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, I have not had an opportunity of studying this bill or examining the implications of it, but I would just like to say that I am quite sure there is need for far more extensive services of an export credits insurance organization in Canada than have been available in the past.

I remember examining, some two or three years ago, the extent of the insurances applicable to Canadian exports and comparing the figures with those of similar services in the United Kingdom. I discovered we were insuring only an insignificant amount of our exports compared with the proportion which the exporting industries of the United Kingdom were in the habit of insuring.

This agency here was, I then thought, tied in too closely with official routine and was controlled by certain stipulated rules and regulations which denied the basic principles of insurance. After all, to say that an insurance organization must perform its services where there is an absolute minimum of risk of loss denies insurance. The rates should be fixed, as they are in other places, for the services having regard to the various classes of risks that are involved. I would very much like to see—and I think it is very important in the development of the export trade of Canada—wider scope given to an organization which carries out the function of insuring exports, and in my opinion the organization should not be under too close supervision or dictation from any Government department, and should be able to act as a broadly recognized insurance agency.

I think we have a great use for these services in the export trade of Canada, and I shall be very glad if the effect of this bill is to enlarge the corporation's scope and give it wider powers than it has had in the past.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Méthot, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 28, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, June 2, 1959, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

CONVENTION ON ABOLITION OF FORCED LABOUR

DISTRIBUTION OF COPIES

On the notice of motion by Hon. Mr. Aseltine:

That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the Convention No. 105, concerning the Abolition of Forced Labour, which was adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 40th session at Geneva on the 25th day of June, 1957, and that this house do approve the same.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Stand.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if copies of this convention have been distributed? I recall that it was tabled, but a number of senators have mentioned to me that they do not know what the convention says, and they have inquired if it is possible to obtain copies.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will see what I can do in that regard. I might say that we expect to go on with the debate on that motion on Tuesday. We will see if we can have copies of the treaty by that time for everyone.

EXCISE TAX BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the second reading of Bill C-47, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the Excise Tax Act is an act which, in the main, imposes indirect taxes rather than direct taxes, and for that reason the general public are not as well acquainted with it as they are with the Income Tax Act. Also for that reason I would say that this act is less unpopular—I will not say it is more popular—with the general public than the Income Tax Act is.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Do you say that excise taxes are hidden taxes?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Well, they may be.

In spite of the fact that the act deals generally with indirect taxes, Governments have for years raised tremendous sums of money under the Excise Tax Act. For years Governments have found that it has been necessary to amend this act practically every session in order to keep it in line with changes taking place in modern business conditions, and with the changes in the rates of tax imposed under it. Bill C-47, which has been passed by the House of Commons, will further amend the act, and I now have the privilege of presenting this bill to the house.

The proposed changes deal with the following subject-matters: cosmetics, pharmaceuticals, an export duty on electricity, a tax with respect to the packaging of certain goods, the taxing of licensed wholesalers under special circumstances, the cancellation of licences under certain circumstances and the cancellation of guarantee bonds that have been issued pursuant to the terms of the present act, and refunds of tax. There is a new provision dealing with false representations as to uses of certain chattels sold free of income tax. A very important change is an increase in the tax on cigarettes. Finally, the bill provides for a change in the tax imposed on stock conditioners and animal foods, and the sales tax imposed on tanks used exclusively for the collection of milk.

To deal with the bill more specifically: clause 1 copies from a schedule to the present act the definition of cosmetics and places it in the act itself, so that the administration of the act is made easier.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): How?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It enables a person to find the definition of a term in the act itself without referring to any of the schedules.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Is it of any real advantage?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes, I think it is. It is convenient if a person can find in the act itself the meaning of an important word used in the act. He is not put to the trouble of looking through some appendix to the act to find the meaning of the word. It is usual for acts to define the meaning of important words. I agree with the department that by taking the definition of "cosmetics" out of the schedule and putting it in the act itself you do simplify matters.

Clause 1 also extends the meaning of "manufacturer or producer" and was put in the bill in order to implement paragraph 5 of the Excise Tax resolution, which paragraph reads as follows:

That the definition of "manufacturer or producer" be extended to include any person who markets, except by sale at retail directly to consumers or users, toilet articles, preparations, cosmetics or pharmaceuticals manufactured under his own brand.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I understand you are reading from the resolution now?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right. I am reading from the budget resolution; I thought I should refer to it.

Finally, clause 1 sets out a definition of "pharmaceuticals". I think I should point out to honourable senators that this definition is modelled after a definition of the same word as used in the Food and Drugs Act.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Before the honourable senator continues, may I ask what is the purpose of the change in the meaning of the term "manufacturer or producer"?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The purpose is to bring it up to the present day definition of a manufacturer, to bring it in line with modern business practice.

Clause 2 of this bill, dealing with the matter of export duty on electricity as now in effect under the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act, is taken out of that particular act and placed in the Excise Tax Act. No change has been made in the rate of duty. However, I think it is important to point out that under the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act the rate of duty was fixed by the Governor in Council, while by clause 8 of Part II of this bill you will note that the rate of export duty on electric power is fixed by this bill. In other words, it will now be fixed by statute, and in the future it can only be changed by statute. I understand there is a possibility that some of the power companies are not too pleased with this and they intend to send representatives to appear before the committee when the bill is referred to committee. I think they prefer to have it fixed under the old method.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Does the honourable senator know why they prefer the old method?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes. Changes could be made more quickly. If you wanted to change the export duty of power you could only do it when Parliament was sitting, if you left it in its present form.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Previously it could be changed upward without the consent of Parliament?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Oh, yes, by order in council.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: In other words, the cabinet could raise a tax without consent of Parliament?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They could change the rate of duty.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Which one do you prefer?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am neutral on it.

Hon. Mr. Wall: How do the statutory rates compare with the actual rates now in effect?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I haven't a clue.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Does this take the place of the variable rates of tax in force before or is it just a straight uniform tax now?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It is just a transposition from the old act to this bill. No change is made in the rates of duty that are now in force.

Honourable senators, clause 3 was inserted in this bill for the purpose of simplifying the valuation of certain types of goods and their containers, for the purpose of imposing the special excise tax. Frankly, this is a rather complicated matter which I doubt I could satisfactorily explain, and for that reason I am going to leave the matter of a full explanation to the experts who will appear when this bill is being studied in the appropriate committee, where it will be discussed clause by clause. However, in order to give a very simple explanation with respect to this clause I would refer honourable senators to the explanatory note which simply states that packages in which imported goods are packed shall no longer be required to be subject to the same rate of customs duty as the contents of the packages.

Paragraph 2 of clause 4 does exactly the same thing with respect to sales tax as the previous clause does with respect to the special excise tax.

Paragraph 4 of the budget resolution dealing with the Excise Tax Act reads as follows:

That the definition of producer or manufacturer be extended to include any person who packages toilet articles, preparations, cosmetics, pharmaceuticals for sale except when they are packaged by a retailer in his retail premises for sale from there directly to consumers or users.

This particular clause is included in this bill in order to implement that paragraph.

The principle as set out in clause 4 of the bill has been applied in connection with the sale of candy, chocolates, chewing gum and confectionery for many years and it is now proposed to extend this same principle in connection with the sale of cosmetics and pharmaceuticals.

Clause 5 was inserted in the bill in order to implement paragraph 6 of the Excise Tax Act budget resolution, which reads:

That the sales tax be imposed, levied and collected on goods purchased or imported by a licensed wholesaler and retained for his own use or for rental to others.

This clause brings the statute up to date with modern business practices, since today many licensed wholesalers rent their equipment for use by others rather than selling it outright. This clause provides for the imposition of a sales tax in a case such as this.

The clause also provides for the imposition of sales tax in the case of a licensed wholesaler retaining certain equipment for his own use rather than renting it or selling it to some other person or corporation.

Clauses 6 and 8 are of some importance. Possibly some honourable senators do not realize that if a person or corporation holds what is known as a sales tax licence it is not necessary for such person or corporation to pay a sales tax at the time of purchase of goods and wares. Rather, the person or corporation simply quotes his or its sales tax licence number and then such goods are exempt at that time from payment of sales tax. Prior to last year these licences were renewed annually upon the payment of a fee of $2, and in this manner the minister was able to exercise a certain amount of control over the issuing and renewing of licences. However, under the amendments which were made last year such licences became permanent, and it is no longer necessary to renew them from year to year. This particular clause restores to the minister a certain amount of control over all persons or corporations holding what is known as a sales tax licence. It is purely an administrative clause to aid the department in the control of these licences.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Can the licences be transferred?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No. If you have no further use for your licence, you surrender it.

If honourable senators will look at clause 7 of the bill they will note that that particular clause deals with the cancellation of guarantee bonds. Previously when a guarantee bond was cancelled no further claim could be made under it. With this amendment, even though a guarantee bond is cancelled it remains in force and in effect with respect to the goods covered by it and still in the hands of the wholesaler.

Section 9 was put in the bill for the purpose of satisfying the demands of the provinces, who have many times requested the minister to make provision for the payment of refunds of sales tax direct to the provinces, rather than have the provinces collect such refunds from the wholesaler or seller of goods. In other words, the provinces prefer to pay the tax to their suppliers and then make a direct application to the minister for a refund of all taxes paid by them.

Clause 10 is something entirely new, and was inserted in this bill for the purpose of protecting innocent vendors from false statements of use furnished to vendors by purchasers. For example, let us suppose a contractor goes to an implement agent and buys from him a tractor which the contractor states will be used solely for work on his farm. The contractor completes a certificate to that effect, delivers it to the agent, and the agent sells the contractor a farm tractor free of sales tax. The contractor uses the tractor on his farm for six months. He then finds he needs the tractor on a road job, and he takes this piece of equipment off the farm and puts it to work on a road contract. In such a case the sales tax becomes applicable to that particular piece of equipment, and the vendor —that is the implement agent—is liable for the sales tax, and the department can collect it from him. This clause gives the implement agent the right to recover from the contractor any sales tax which he has been compelled to pay to the Government on that equipment.

Hon. Mr. Monette: May I put a question?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Monette: My question may appear childish, but it concerns the meaning of some words. It has been said that this section is provided to protect the manufacturer or seller when a purchaser has made a false declaration. The new section 68 set out in clause 10 of the bill reads in part:

—the wholesaler, producer, manufacturer or importer, as the case may be, is entitled to recover from the purchaser the taxes paid by him under this act in respect of those goods.

I don't know whether this is a foolish question, but does the word "him" have an equal application to the purchaser as well as to the person who makes the claim? The language of the section is that "the wholesaler, producer, manufacturer or importer, as the case may be, is entitled to recover from the purchaser the taxes paid by him". Surely that does not mean the taxes paid by the purchaser?

In view of the rule in matters of the burden of statutes, the subject should have the benefit of any doubt. Therefore I ask the question, is there a chance that the word "him" could apply to the purchaser rather than to the wholesaler who claims? Does it mean that the wholesaler shall be entitled to recover from the purchaser the taxes paid by the wholesaler, or the taxes paid by the purchaser? If there is that uncertainty, perhaps we should clarify the words "paid by him".

While I am on my feet, may I ask a second question? The honourable senator gave as an illustration a contractor who buys a tractor for work on his farm and two or three years later decides to utilize it in another operation. Would sales tax be applicable in such circumstances? Would not the purchaser have used the tractor for the purpose for which he declared it would be used at the time he made the declaration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: In answer to the first question, I may say I know it to be the intention of the department to have the word "him" refer to the actual vendor of the piece of equipment in the first instance. There may be some doubt as the clause is drawn, and it may have to be cleared up when the bill is considered in committee.

Hon. Mr. Monette: It is not a matter of much concern to myself or some other senators, but if it should come before the courts it might be troublesome.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I think I can answer the second question asked by the honourable senator by citing what happened in the province of Manitoba this past winter. During the months of January and February there was in that province a great deal of snow, and farmers took their farm tractors out and used them to plow the highways and keep them open for traffic. This was not done on just the odd day—I understand that in the circumstances of a sudden emergency the department will overlook such use of a piece of equipment—but these tractors were used off and on for a period of two months. This was brought to the attention of the department, and under the act it was deemed that sales tax had to be imposed because the tractors in question had originally been purchased without payment of sales tax on the representation that they would be used exclusively in farm work and now they were being used on the highway.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: May I ask my friend a question on that point? Does he think the wording of this section covers that particular case?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I was just trying to answer the honourable senator's question as to the period of time. What the department did in those circumstances was this: it estimated the life of the tractors to be five years, and the farmers, who had used them on highway work in January and February, were compelled to pay two-sixtieths of the sales tax.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Again, may I ask my friend if he is sure this amendment would cover the case he specifies? The section would come into effect only if the farmers had falsely represented that the tractors were intended for use on the farm.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Well, at the time they purchased the tractors they made no false representation. How would they know that some months later they would have to use them for road clearing?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The department construes the representation to be in effect for the lifetime of the vehicle.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: It seems to me that the representation is made at a certain point in time—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right, when the equipment is purchased.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: —namely, when each farmer buys a tractor from the agent. When he makes his representation he is perfectly correct in saying that the tractor is to be used only on his farm.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Would that be a false declaration under the act, since it was not false at that time?

Hon. Mr. Huggessen: It would not be false at that time.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: But the department construes it to be a false representation once the tractor in question is used for anything but farming work.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: But a false representation must have a point of time. It must be false at the time it was made.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It is not a question of construing it. It is a question of the wording of the clause. The clause says:

> Where a purchaser of goods from a wholesaler, producer, manufacturer or importer—

And these are the important words—

> —has falsely represented—

I do not see how anybody can construe something as being false if it was not false.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I can only give to honourable senators the explanations that were given to me. It is quite possible that this is another case where the Senate comes to the rescue of the people of Canada by clarifying, correcting and perfecting legislation that has originated in the other place.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: May I ask the honourable senator a question? I might say that there are some municipalities which have not a great deal of machinery for keeping the roads open in the wintertime. Now, because of the increased school areas today children have to be transported, and last winter many farmers in Manitoba used their tractors when the municipalities did not have the equipment to clear the roads.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Would those tractors be subject to sales tax?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The tax was imposed in that identical case, and what was collected was two-sixtieths.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: What do you mean by two-sixtieths?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The department estimated the life of the vehicles to be five years, which is 60 months. The farmer used them for plowing snow on the highways for two months, so they were charged two-sixtieths of the amount of the sales tax.

Hon. Mr. Golding: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Were the farmers paid by the Department of Highways for the use of the machines?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes, they were paid by the municipality.

Hon. Mr. Power: From the explanation given by my honourable friend I would think that the department acted, as it always does, under other sections already in the act. However, the point to which this new section refers is not the department's action, but the action of the wholesaler. It is an action at law as between the purchaser and the vendor, and it has nothing to do with the department. Under those circumstances I would be inclined to agree with the senators who have said that in a court of law the vendor would not likely be able to maintain an action on the basis of false representation. Notwithstanding that, the department, with all the powers it has conferred on it—extraordinary powers in other respects—would have been able to impose on the farmers and make them pay the sales tax, but that does not mean that as between two individuals this new section will be of any use.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: If that is the case, let us rectify the clause when the bill is in committee.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: They were not charged with false pretences.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: May I ask a question? It seems to me that a lot of difficulties could arise from this clause. I can see the case of a bona fide purchaser of a tractor living in the western part of Manitoba who moves into Saskatchewan, say over into Saskatoon, and after a year of farming in Saskatoon he says, "It is no good; I am going into the contracting business", or he sells out to a contractor. In that case the vendor would be in a very difficult position. He would have to find this man or the second or third or fourth purchaser of the vehicle before he could get his money back.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes. I raised that point myself, although I did it a little differently. I said, suppose a farmer bought a tractor, used it for three years, and then died. His executors, in winding up his estate, have an auction sale, and the tractor is sold to a second farmer, who may use it for half a year and then sell it to a contractor. I was assured that in such a case the sales tax would be forgotten about altogether, that the department did not attempt to go beyond the first purchaser from the wholesaler.

Hon. Mr. Davies: That is not quite fair, is it?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It is grossly unfair, in my opinion.

Hon. Mr. Monette: With leave of the Senate may I add a word, although I might not be in order? At first I did not expect so many people to express so strong an opinion, and I want to make it clear that I am not opposing the idea that is explained—

The Hon. the Speaker: Is this another question?

Hon. Mr. Monette: Yes, it is another question now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is the preamble.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Suppose a judge is asked to determine whether, when the declaration was made, the maker of the declaration falsely represented the intended use. If the judge decides there was no false representation, the case is lost.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Once again, honourable senators, I suggest we leave this until the bill is before the committee, where we can make whatever amendments are necessary to clear it up.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Suppose a farmer buys a tractor, on which he does not pay sales tax, and uses it on his farm, and later sells it. For what period would he be liable for sales tax? Is there a limited number of years?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am advised that the department estimates the life of a tractor to be five years, or sixty months.

I come now to clause 11, in which I would say nearly all honourable senators will be interested. I know that it is very unpopular with many honourable senators, but, still, I am assured that the minister felt that the proposed change was necessary. It is a very simple change and I do not intend to elaborate on it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I don't think we should necessarily have the minister's opinion at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I thought you might be interested in his opinion, and that is why I gave it. All that the clause does is to increase the excise tax on each five cigarettes or a fraction thereof as contained in any package from 2 cents to 2½ cents. On a package of 20 cigarettes the actual increase amounts to 2 cents, and on a package of 25 cigarettes the increase amounts to 2½ cents. This particular clause implements and carries out paragraph 1 of the Excise Tax Act portion of the budget resolution.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: And all the promises made during the election campaign.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: All right, it carries them out too.

The increase in the excise tax on cigarettes is estimated to produce an additional $30 million for the balance of the fiscal year 1959-60, and for a full fiscal year it is estimated to produce $34 million.

For the information of honourable senators I would like to point out that it is estimated the total revenue from this tax for the fiscal year 1959-60 will be $168 million. For each full fiscal year thereafter the total revenue which this tax will produce is estimated to be $172 million.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: And it will all go up in smoke.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: May I ask whether that is the tax on all tobacco—cigars, cigarettes and pipe tobacco?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, just on cigarettes.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: I believe the honourable senator said a moment ago that on a package of 20 cigarettes the increase in tax would be 2 cents?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: How is it that the retail merchants have increased the price of a package of 20 cigarettes by 4 cents?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I cannot answer my honourable friend's question.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You neither buy nor sell them.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Nor smoke them.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Well, I pay the penalty, but I don't mind.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The corporation tax has gone up and I suppose an allowance has to be made for that as well.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes.

Clause 12 of the bill makes certain amendments to schedule 3 to the act by striking out of that schedule certain words which are set out in detail in this clause. It provides that materials used exclusively in the manufacture of food supplements as an addition to breeder cattle and other stock feeds, and also materials used exclusively in the manufacture of tanks for collecting milk, are all exempt from the payment of sales tax. However, the exemption with respect to materials used exclusively in the manufacture of tanks for collecting milk is not broad enough to include chassis or cabs of automobiles or trucks used for that purpose.

Clause 13 is the usual clause inserted in all legislation such as this with respect to the date upon which it is to go into force.

Honourable senators will note that clauses 1, 3, 4, 11 and 12 are deemed to have gone into force on the 10th day of April last, being the day after the budget speech was given.

Clause 20 will come into force on a date to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council. Clauses 6 to 10, inclusive, will come into force when this bill receives royal assent.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: The honourable senator mentioned a figure of $168 million. Does that represent the entire tax on cigarettes or just the increase?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is the estimated entire tax on cigarettes for the fiscal year 1959-60. The increase this year is estimated to be $30 million.

Hon. Mr. Reid: In clause 12(1) of the bill I see the following words:

> Feed supplements for addition to poultry, cattle and other stock feeds and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof.

Does that mean that manufactured feed supplements such as turkey pellets for poultry will be taxed a little heavier now?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No. This is an exempting section.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I am thankful to hear that.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: This is put in the act for the purpose of removing the tax off certain things rather than imposing an additional tax.

Hon. W. D. Euler: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to discuss the various sections of the bill but rather to make a few observations with regard to the general increase in taxation, particularly with reference to the increase of 1 per cent in the sales tax.

So far as the general increase in taxation is concerned, I have said on previous occasions in this house that we are wasting a great deal of tax revenue. I have particular reference to what we call defence expenditures. I am not opposed to expenditures on legitimate defence, but from what one learns it would seem that a great deal of defence spending is wasted. We heard again in committee only this morning that millions of dollars are being wasted on so-called defence because we are not getting the protection for which we are paying. If we did not spend these millions of dollars—in fact, the expenditure runs into billions of dollars, according to an article I have here—it would not be necessary to increase taxes under this bill. My remarks would be just as applicable to the Income Tax Bill which we discussed yesterday.

Most honourable senators probably read in last evening's newspapers this headline:

Inventor's Warning: Billions Wasted on Radar Systems

The warning was made by Sir Robert Watson-Watt, whose invention of radar is generally credited with saving Great Britain from destruction by the German air force in World War II.

His warning is certainly sufficient reason for the Government to scrutinize our defence spending. If our money is not being well spent, let us stop wasting it. Let us ease the burden on the taxpayers and save the Government from having another deficit.

Honourable senators, those are my general comments. I have made them before in this house, and I have no delusion that the Government has paid any attention to them, but on one occasion last fall I did protest to the Prime Minister that he should not waste any further money on the Arrow. I do not flatter myself that it had anything to do with his decision, but he made it, anyway.

I want to make a brief reference to one particular commodity, and I hope I shall not tire my friends in the house by doing so. During World War I margarine was a legal commodity in this country. Later on both its manufacture and importation were prohibited. The importation is still prohibited. The manufacture is now legal, but manufacturers are not permitted to colour their product. As most honourable senators know, on three different occasions I brought in a bill to make margarine a legal commodity, and they were all defeated. Now, away back during World War I, when margarine was legal, there was no such thing as a sales tax. Later on, when margarine was banned, a sales tax was imposed, but butter and practically all other food commodities were placed on the list of exemptions. Naturally, margarine was not then placed on that list, because it could not be legally imported or manufactured. However, it has now been a legal article of food for some years, but it is still not included among the exemptions. Some senators will remember that I urged that margarine should be exempted from sales tax in accordance with the general principle of exempting food products from that tax. Now, once again, I say margarine is surely a food product, and for that reason it should be included in the list of exemptions. I had no success whatever with the former Government. I never did have very much, as a matter of fact.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Do you now?

Hon. Mr. Euler: Probably not. But I have the very remotest sort of hope that the present Government will be a little more realistic and a little fairer and place margarine on the exempted list. There is a 10 per cent sales tax on margarine, and has been for the past few years. To increase this tax is just adding insult to injury.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I have just a word or two to say in respect to this bill, and I do so now because I shall not be able to be here next Tuesday evening.

If I read section 5 of the bill correctly, the effect of the section is to give a certain exemption from sales tax. Now, this is a very mild form of criticism, and perhaps I am becoming a purist, but a sales tax is normally applied to a transaction of sale. What is contemplated here is a rental transaction. It is another instance of a tax designed for a specific type of thing originally and later broadened out and applied to something different. Here you are dealing with a tax on a rental transaction in a section of a bill which deals with sales tax.

In respect of section 10, it seems to me, after the discussion that has taken place, that the administration of this section will probably present a real problem to the department. Perhaps in the long run it will be determined that it is not worth while having this section simply to collect the small amount of money that apparently can be collected under it.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: But this section does not deal with the collection of tax by the department. It only allows the wholesaler to collect tax paid by him from the purchaser. That is the purpose of this section.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Surely the wholesaler in turn will send any collections he makes to the department?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The department just claims it and he has to pay it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is right; so it is an indirect way of the department getting a little more sales tax.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No. This allows wholesalers to recover what they pay. They have to pay it regardless of this section; they are paying it now.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am talking of section 10. When discussing this section my honorable friend mentioned the case of a farmer who buys a tractor for use on his land and pays no sales tax. Then after he has used it on the farm for a while he uses it for other purposes and has to pay a sales tax.

Hon. Mr. Power: The section does not refer to that. That is being done now anyway.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That has been done all along. This section gives the wholesaler the right to collect sales tax from the purchaser after having paid it to the Government. At the present time he has not that right.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Oh, I see.

Hon. Mr. Power: This section has to do with legal actions between private citizens.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In that case, I think it deserves very careful attention.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am afraid I misunderstood the purport of the section as it was being explained. As I see it now I think the section should be very carefully examined.

Hon. Mr. Power: I do not know why it is here at all. It just gives one private citizen a right of recourse against another, if the first citizen has to pay sales tax to the Government on account of false representations made to him. He would have that under the civil law of Canada, would he not?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The department claims not, and says it should be provided for in the act.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Beaubien, for Hon. Mr. Hayden, debate adjourned.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—
DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John Hnatyshyn moved the second reading of Bill C-38, to make provision for the reduction of certain class and commodity rates on freight traffic.

He said: Honourable senators, I think it is only fair to say that I am not an expert, and never pretended to be an expert, on freight rates. My hope is that this bill will go to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, where, if there are any technical points to be answered, officials of the Board of Transport Commissioners will be present and able to deal with those points much better than I can.

If I may I will give a little background to this bill. Honourable senators will recall that on November 26 last year the Minister of Public Works, who was then the Acting Prime Minister, stated that measures would be worked out to relieve inequities in the freight rates structure. This bill is designed to carry out that intention—to alleviate to some extent the burden of the general freight rate increase of 17 per cent that was authorized on November 17, 1958, by the Board of Transport Commissioners, by its Order No. 96300. It was subsequently stated in the Speech from the Throne that legislation would be introduced to alleviate the discriminatory effects of the recent horizontal increase in freight rates.

The increase that was granted by the board, as honourable senators will recall, was appealed by eight of the provinces to the Governor in Council, but the appeal was not allowed, as the Governor in Council felt that the railways were entitled to the additional revenues for which they asked at that time. However, it was stated that the Government would take steps to relieve shippers, and I think, ultimately, the consumers, from the full impact of this increase.

The legislation now proposed is only an interim measure designed to secure reductions in certain freight rates and to compensate the railway and water carriers subject to the board's order by means of a subsidy of $20 million over a one-year or 12-month period. It is not a subsidy for any other purpose than to alleviate the inequities brought on by the order of last November wherein freight rates were increased by 17 per cent. The Prime Minister recently announced the appointment of a royal commission to undertake a comprehensive inquiry into problems relating to railway transportation and alleviating of inequities in the freight rate structure. The proposed legislation accordingly limits the reduction in rates to a 12-month period, by which time the Government, I think, hopes a report will be available to it from the royal commission.

The freight rates that are to be reduced are the normal class and commodity rates that were increased by 17 per cent pursuant to the board's order and that are in effect on the date when this act comes into force. This is considered by the Government to be the most effective relief that could be given with the money available. Joint rail-water rates which bear a fixed relationship to rail class and commodity rates are also to be reduced. It is these all-rail and rail-water rates—generally referred to as "normal" rates—that are the ones that have borne the full percentage increases authorized by the board since the end of World War II.

Some other freight rates or charges will not be affected by this proposed legislation. These include agreed charges, rates on coal and coke, statutory rates on grain and grain products and grain rates related thereto, export and import rates to and from Canadian ports which are maintained on a parity with rates to or from United States ports, and joint international rates between the United States and Canada. Competitive rates are also excluded. Competitive rates are rates which are already lower than the normal rates.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Would the honourable gentleman explain what is meant by "competitive rates"?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: They are lower than the normal rates charged by the railways and are due to competition from truckers or other people who have set rates lower than the normal rates.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: And they will not be affected by this act?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, they will not be affected by this act.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Even if the reduction is very, very small?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: My understanding from the Board of Transport Commissioners is that they will not be affected if they were not normal rates on the date that this blil becomes law. Now, I may be wrong on that.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): I think you are right, but if you are not you should be.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: This bill was introduced in the other place and was referred to the Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines and received three days of hearing, at which various views were expressed and considered, but I am not going to deal with those.

Perhaps, for the information of this honourable body, it might not be out of place to mention a few matters which may be questioned.

As to the amount of the subsidy of $20 million, some inquiries may be made as to how this amount was arrived at and if it has any relation to any particular factor. The answer is that $20 million was simply the amount that the Government felt should be made available and could be appropriated out of the general revenues to relieve the effects of the last 17 per cent increase in freight rates. It is $20 million and no more. It has been indicated that this amount of $20 million would result initially in a reduction of 7 percentage points, which would reduce the 17 per cent increase to 10 per cent. But this again, honourable senators, is an estimate.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Wasn't the $20 million just a guess?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: No. The $20 million is going to be paid by the Government to the railways.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I know that, but wasn't the amount arrived at by guesswork? They had no figures on which they could arrive at a definite amount.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was merely decided that $20 million was what the Government was willing to pay to the railways to alleviate the inequity or unfairness in the increase. Now, whether that will effect a decrease in the 17 per cent figure to 10 per cent or 10.5 per cent is problematical.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Is there any agreement as to the amount of reduction in freight rates to be made by the railways by reason of their receiving this $20 million?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: No. This amount of $20 million is to be paid to the railways, and it is to be paid on the report of the Board of Transport Commissioners that a decrease in the rates has taken place.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: May I point out to the honourable senator that the bill provides that the amount shall not exceed $20 million. Section 4 (2) says:

> The aggregate of all payments under this section shall not exceed twenty million dollars.

The amount to be paid may be less.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: My information is it will be $20 million, and no more.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Is this not just a contribution?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is a temporary subsidy to alleviate the unfairness of the recent freight rate increase, which the Government felt had to be given to the railways, as those revenues were needed.

Now, the next question I may be asked is how the three main regions of Canada will benefit by the division of the subsidy amongst them. The Board of Transport Commissioners from its statistics has estimated that the western region would obtain 56.7 per cent of the subsidy; the central region, consisting mainly of Ontario and Quebec, 26.5 per cent; and the Maritime region, 16.8 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Reid: And nothing for British Columbia?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: In dollars, the western region will receive $11,340,000 of this subsidy, the central region $5,300,000, and the Maritime region, $3,360,00. That again is just an estimate that has been worked out by the Board of Transport Commissioners.

Hon. Mr. Reid: What is the figure for British Columbia?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is no figure for British Columbia. It has been worked out for the western region, which I understand is from Port Arthur west.

Hon. Mr. Reid: It will have to be paid out of the $20 million.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Is there any estimate from the Board of Transport Commissioners as to the relationship between these savings as they will benefit each of the respective regions and the total amount of freight charges that will be paid by the respective regions?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is an estimate by the commission, taking the present volume of traffic—we don't know what the volume will be in the future—that the reduction will be 7 per cent. Naturally, it will apply to hauls of five miles or more. Of course, a haul of 1,000 miles will not benefit as much as a haul of 4,000 miles. The intention of the bill is to relieve the long-haul shipper, and it is not intended that it should benefit any region or province over any other region or province. There are far-away places in the province of Ontario and Quebec, and so central Canada will benefit in exact proportion to the length of haul, as will any other region or province.

Hon. Mr. Reid: The central provinces always benefit.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is not intended to discriminate against the central region; it will receive the benefit of the subsidy in proportion to such of its traffic as has taken the full 17 per cent increase. As I pointed out, naturally if your freight rate is $1 you will not stand to gain as much as you would on a long haul where the freight rate is $100.

Hon. Mr. Reid: British Columbia will be lucky to gain anything.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: There was some question as to how the subsidy will be applied to the normal rates which were advanced 17 per cent and then slightly reduced. I think that question was asked by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). The answer that the Board of Transport Commissioners gave me is that this traffic will participate in the subsidy if the present rate is higher than 10 per cent over the old rate. I think perhaps I misled the honourable leader in the answer I made in the earlier part of my remarks. I have it in my notes at this point that the Board of Transport Commissioners told me that this traffic would benefit to the extent I have now indicated. They also pointed out to me that before the bill passes, the railways could have increased their rates by 17 per cent, and if it were done the railways would qualify.

It may also be asked why this bill does not provide for reductions in rates on coal and coke. There are two answers to this question: first, that coal on the average received only 7 or 8 per cent increase last December and, second, that a great portion of the coal carried by railways in Canada is already subsidized by the Government by subvention on freight rates through the Dominion Coal Board.

I think it advisable to go over the bill section by section.

Clause 1—on which I need not dwell long—is the title clause. As the name of the act indicates, its purpose is to reduce freight rates.

Clause 2 contains definitions. Paragraph (a) defines the word "company" as used in the bill and refers, as does paragraph (c), to the board's Order No. 96300 of November 17, 1958. That is the order which authorized a general freight rate increase of 17 per cent and an increase of 22 cents per ton on coal and coke. The companies comprised in the definition are of two kinds: first, railway companies and, secondly, carriers by water operating on the Great Lakes. The railway companies that were authorized by Order No. 96300 to increase freight rates are the Canadian National, the Canadian Pacific and certain smaller railways that were authorized by the board's order to increase their rates. If they are of interest to honourable senators, I have the names of all the smaller companies.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I suggest to the honourable senator that if Order No. 96300 has not been tabled, it might be helpful if it were tabled.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have tabled so many orders and reports that it is impossible for me to keep account of them. I could not tell at this moment whether that order has been tabled or not. I will look into the matter and find out.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order No. 96300 also contained a provision authorizing recognized differentials via rail-water-rail and water-rail joint routes to be preserved. An explanation may be required here, and the information which I shall give was that supplied to me by the Board of Transport Commissioners. The carriers by water on the Great Lakes are parties to joint rates with the railways on freight traffic carried partly by rail and partly by water over the joint routes mentioned. The difference in the amount between the all-rail rate and the joint water-rail rate over these routes is called a "differential", and Order No. 96300 authorized the differentials to be preserved. The carriers by water are consequently included within the definition of "company". Those carriers by water that come within the definition are Canada Steamship Lines, including a subsidiary company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Great Lakes Steamships Service, and the Northwest Steamship Company.

Clause 3 is perhaps the most important clause of the bill. It is the clause which makes provision for reductions in freight rates. The first word in the clause is "forthwith", which requires the Board to do promptly what the legislation requires it to do. What the board is required to do is to issue an order requiring the companies to "revise" their class rates and commodity rates, other than competitive rates. This, in its effect, means to "reduce" those freight rates.

I am also informed by the Board of Transport Commissioners, who may be questioned when the bill goes to committee, that there will be no difficulty in working out this procedure. I must confess that to me it looked like a very big problem, but the commissioners inform me that they will have absolutely no difficulty in working it out.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: To the satisfaction of some.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: To the satisfaction of everyone, I would say.

The extent of the reduction is also provided by clause 3. It is such reduction in the rates as will, in the opinion of the board, result in a reduction of $20 million in the estimated aggregate gross revenues of the companies during the one-year period specified. Of course, no one can forecast with certainty what amount of various kinds of traffic will be carried in a particular future period, and under this bill the rate reduction originally ordered by the board must of necessity be based on an estimate of traffic and revenue for the year ahead. It has, however, been estimated that the application of the $20 million subsidy on the basis of the current volume and pattern of traffic should enable a reduction of approximately seven percentage points to be made in the class, commodity and differential rates covered by the bill. This should reduce the 17 per cent authorized increase in rates to approximately 10 per cent.

Subclause (2) of clause 3 is essentially an administrative clause. It provides a measure of flexibility that is necessary when making rate reductions for a future period based on estimates of traffic and relating them to the $20 million subsidy.

Clause 4 provides for payments not exceeding $20 million in the aggregate to the companies to reimburse them for the reductions in their gross revenues resulting from an order of the board under this act. This clause should be read along with clauses 3 and 5.

Clause 5 is, I think, self-explanatory. It reads:

> The board may by order require any company to furnish to the board such information and material as the board deems necessary for the purposes of this act.

I will not say anything further on that.

Clause 6 is a short way of ensuring that an order made by the board under this act will be enforceable and binding, and that the board will have power to hold hearings and do other things appropriate to the carrying out of the purposes of the act.

All that clause 7 does is to preserve the advantages conferred by the Maritime Freight Rates Act which, I understand, has been in existence since 1927. I think the honourable senators from the Atlantic provinces know much more about that act than I do, so I am not going to deal with it. I believe it reduces the freight rates by 20 per cent in the Maritime provinces, and by 30 per cent up as far as Quebec. That has nothing to do with this proposed act, except that clause 7 of the bill does not interfere with any benefits that may arise out of the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

Hon. Mr. Wall: May I ask: Does that mean there will be no relative dilution of the benefits of the provisions of the Maritime Freight Rates Act?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: It means just what it says—I cannot make it clearer—that all the advantages of the Maritime Freight Rates Act are to be preserved and are not to be interfered with in any way. In the same way, this act in no way interferes with the Crowsnest Pass rates about which I personally and all the people in the west feel very strongly. As a matter of fact, according to the statements which have been made, the royal commission that was recently announced by the Prime Minister will have no jurisdiction or power in any way to alter the Crowsnest Pass rates, which have existed since 1897. They are statutory rates, agreed to between the railways, the western settlers and the Government, and they are still in existence.

Hon. Mr. Reid: They have never helped British Columbia. They were a political expedient, and British Columbia has not benefited from them at all.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Does the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) suggest that they should be altered?

Hon. Mr. Reid: I do. I have taken that stand.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Are those rates affected by the provisions of this proposed act?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Not the Crowsnest Pass rates. They are statutory rates. The rates mentioned in the statute are the rates that can be charged, and no—

Hon. Mr. Reid: Those rates are for exports.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not think it has anything to do with this act, if you will pardon me saying so. I think whatever gains may be obtained by the west through the Crowsnest Pass rates are offset by the high rates which we pay for other commodities we ship in.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But were the Crowsnest Pass rates increased by the 17 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: No.

Hon. Mr. Reid: That is one of the problems.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Further, as I pointed out, this is only an interim remedy for a twelve-month period. The royal commission has been set up to study the freight rate structure, but according to the statement made by the Prime Minister when he announced the appointment of the commission, it will have no jurisdiction to alter in any way the statutory Crowsnest Pass rates.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Some day I would like to debate the question with him.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is the situation, and the present Government has given a very definite indication that the Crowsnest Pass rates will not be altered. Actually, since they are not affected by this act we are getting into an academic discussion about the Crowsnest Pass rates.

Hon. Mr. Reid: You had better leave them alone.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: That explanation, honourable senators, is, I hope, of some help as to what the bill purports to be.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald, for Hon. Mr. Hugessen, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the motion to adjourn is carried, may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) a question as to the business to be taken up on Tuesday? Earlier this afternoon the honourable leader said he expected to proceed on that evening with the resolution for approval of the convention concerning the abolition of forced labour. My question is: Does he intend to go ahead also on Tuesday with the resolution for approval of the convention on the nationality of married women?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I hope to be able to do so. I took the matter up yesterday with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, who advised me that she hoped to open the debate on that treaty in the House of Commons on Monday. If so, we probably should be able to proceed with it on Tuesday. I am sorry I cannot give any more definite information than that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Thank you.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 2, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 2, 1959

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

PRIVATE BILL

ROMAN CATHOLIC EPISCOPAL CORPORATION OF PRINCE RUPERT—FIRST READING

Hon. Sydney J. Smith (Kamloops) presented Bill S-23, respecting the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Prince Rupert.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Smith (Kamloops): Thursday next.

HON. DONALD CAMERON

FELICITATIONS ON RECEIPT OF AWARD OF CANADIAN CONFERENCE OF THE ARTS

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before motions are proceeded with, may I be permitted to refer to an event which took place this morning? It was my privilege this morning to be at Rideau Hall when an honour was conferred upon one of our senators. I refer to the granting of the fifth annual award of the Canadian Conference of the Arts to the honourable senator from Banff (Hon. Mr. Cameron). The presentation of the award to Senator Cameron was made by His Excellency the Governor General. At the gathering the names of the previous recipients were mentioned, and I thought honourable senators would be interested to know that they were: His Excellency the Governor General; Thomas Paterson, of the Stratford Festival; Dr. Jean Bruchesi, of Quebec, who has written a number of historical books on early Canada, mostly in French; and Walter Herbert, who for ten years was Director of the Canada Foundation.

Honourable senators will also be interested to know that this annual award is given by the Canadian Conference of the Arts to the Canadian who, in the opinion of the conference, has made the most significant contribution to the arts in this country during the past year.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, this is a great honour which has been conferred upon the honourable senator from Banff, and I am sure that all members on this side of the Senate agree with what has been said by the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). We have known, of course, that Senator Cameron has taken a great interest in this subject, and we feel that he has been appropriately rewarded. We hope he will continue in this great work for many years to come.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, I am very grateful for the kind remarks that have been made. I think that probably as a pioneer in this field in this country—I refer now particularly to the west—I have been very fortunate. I think that any pioneer who has the opportunity of blazing a new trail has an advantage over those who come after him, because they have to correct all the mistakes he has made and he has had the fun of making them, laying out the pattern and the trail that must be followed by others.

May I just say that it has been a rare privilege to build an institution like the one

I have been associated with. I have often felt that I have enjoyed every minute of my work, and that is something for which any man can be very grateful.

CONVENTION ON ABOLITION OF FORCED LABOUR

RESOLUTION OF APPROVAL—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Joseph A. Sullivan moved, pursuant to notice by Hon. Mr. Aseltine:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the Convention No. 105 concerning the abolition of forced labour which was adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 40th session at Geneva on the 25th day of June, 1957, and that this house do approve the same.

He said: Honourable senators, I wish to thank my leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for having given me the privilege and the honour of submitting this resolution before this venerable chamber.

In this resolution we are asked to approve a convention adopted at the International Labour Conference in 1957. It is Convention 105, Convention concerning the abolition of forced labour.

The important words of this convention are in article I, which says that every member state which ratifies it undertakes to suppress and not to make use of any form of forced or compulsory labour—

First, as a means of political coercion or education or as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system;

Second, as a method of mobilizing and using labour for purposes of economic development;

Third, as a means of labour discipline;

Fourth, as a punishment for having participated in strikes; and Finally, as a means of racial, social, national or religious discrimination.

If the convention is approved by Parliament, the Government intends to proceed to ratify it immediately. There are no systems of forced labour in Canada to abolish; therefore the Government does not foresee that any legislation will be required within Canada to implement the convention. The significance of our approval of the convention and its subsequent ratification will be that we show our support for the universal abolition of forced labour, which is the objective of the convention.

The adoption of this convention on the abolition of forced labour by the International Labour Conference in 1957 was the outcome of inquiries and discussions in the United Nations and the International Labour Organization over the preceding ten years. In 1951 the Secretary General of the United Nations and the Director General of the International Labour Office appointed an ad hoc Committee on Forced Labour to examine and report on the existence of forced labour employed as a means of political coercion on any large-scale economic plane. The committee's report in 1953 showed that such systems existed, as they do today, and that they seriously threatened fundamental human rights.

A proposal to adopt a convention outlawing forced labour was placed on the agenda of the International Labour Conference for 1956 and 1957. At both conferences the Canadian delegation, representing government workers and employers, supported the adoption of the convention which would identify and outlaw the kinds of forced labour which the committee's report had revealed. It is an indication of the very general approval with which the convention was received by the conference that it was adopted by 240 votes to zero, with only one abstention. Both the representatives of management and organized labour who supported the adoption of the convention have urged upon the Government the importance of ratification. A convention which receives a large number of ratifications becomes a powerful force. The United Kingdom was the first country to ratify this convention, and Denmark was the second. It has now been ratified by 18 other countries. In the case of a convention which has wide acceptance, procedures authorized by the International Labour Organization constitution make it possible to maintain a constant moral pressure toward securing satisfactory compliance both in countries which have ratified the convention and in other countries.

Now in retrospect, there are some points which I think are pertinent to the introduction of this resolution. First, what do we mean by "labour"? Webster's Dictionary defines it in seven ways, three of which are important in this matter:

(1) Exertion of muscular strength, or bodily exertion which occasions weariness.
(2) Intellectual exertion, application of the mind which occasions weariness.
(3) Exertion of mental powers, united with bodily employment.

So, I believe we are all labourers. My friends in the legal profession particularly would, I think, come within the second meaning of "labour".

Prime Minister Diefenbaker, speaking a few weeks ago, stated that what was needed was an international "declaration of freedom's creed". He went on to say:

I believe that such a declaration of freedom's creed is demanded now if the peoples of the uncommitted world are to be given a clearer and appealing understanding of the meaning of freedom and democracy and of the superiority of freedom over the false claims of communism.

Now, how do the unions fare behind the Iron Curtain? On the occasion of the visit to this country of a Chinese worker, purporting to be a trade unionist and invited by the United Electrical Unions' leaders to the union's conference, it is revealing to see what genuine trade unionism thinks of "unionists" behind the Iron and Bamboo Curtains. The best way to see this is to let the trade unionists themselves do the talking. In a speech in Chicago, for instance, recorded in News from the AFL-CIO, on April 7, 1959, George Meany, AFL-CIO President, stated:

Under the Soviet system no citizen can question, let alone resist, Communist state domination and despotism. In the so-called Soviet Paradise, the workingman, like everyone else, is denied every democratic right. Free trade unions and all other democratic institutions are prohibited. The all-powerful Communist Party bosses rule and run everything, everybody, every institution. The so-called trade unions behind the Iron Curtain are pitiful and pliant tools of the Communist Party. Thus the central news organ of the Soviet Communist Party, Pravda, just two weeks ago declared on the opening day of the twelfth Congress of the so-called Soviet trade unions: "The entire work of the Soviet trade unions is being directed by the Communist party."

The Executive Council of the AFL-CIO issued a statement at San Juan, Puerto Rico on February 20, 1959, in which we read:

The Soviet leaders openly proclaim the domination of their own so-called trade unions by the Communist party. They rarely trouble to disguise the subservience of these so-called trade unions to the Soviet Government.

As for Red China, Free Labour World, the official journal of the International Federation of Free Trade Unions, reveals what genuine trade unionism thinks of Red "unions". In February, 1958, for instance, in an article entitled "Red China cracks down on the Workers", the title and the following statements are significant enough:

The official organ of the puppet trade union of China, the "Daily Worker"—

And again:

—this "trade union" paper then bitterly attacked the industrial workers of China because they dared to demand that, when they worked hard and increased production "there must be corresponding increases in wages and improvement in amenities"—

It is obvious from their own words that genuine trade unionists consider the trade unions in Soviet Russia and Red China to be a farce. Yet, communists brazenly maintain that it is communism alone that can bring salvation to the workers. It surely is high time for the workers of the free world to unite against communism.

The invasion of Tibet by Chinese communist troops and the crushing of a rebellion against communist domination have recalled to the world the brutal invasion of Hungary and the crushing of its revolution in October and November of 1956. It has been strongly condemned by the free nations as a "barbarous intervention" in one of the most peace-loving and inoffensive countries anywhere in the world.

Tibet is a mountainous plateau, lying between China and India. It is twice the size of Texas and has about 3 million people. In May 1951, Red China signed a pledge guaranteeing Tibet's political and religious autonomy. However, the communists felt that Tibet, essentially a barren and poverty-stricken country, was not making progress toward industrialization fast enough, and began putting on so much pressure that it aroused widespread opposition. Troops were hastily poured in and the country placed under military rule. The Dalai Lama, the spiritual and nominally political ruler of Tibet, managed to escape into India, after having been replaced by a puppet ruler set up by the communists.

The revolt has no chance of success, but it has served to show to the world that communism has no regard for its solemn pledges, for religion, or for the good opinion of mankind. It will serve also as a lesson to India and some of the other "uncommitted" countries that they can put no faith in communist assurances that their autonomy and independence will be respected if and when it appears to be in the interest of the Soviet and its satellites to take them over.

Heinrich Heine, the great philosopher, writing in 1842, stated:

Communism is the secret name of the dread antagonist setting proletariat rule with all its consequences against the present bourgeois régime. It will be a frightful duel. How will it end? No one knows but gods and goddesses acquainted with the future. We only know this much: Communism, though little discussed now and loitering in hidden garrets, is the dark hero destined for a great, if temporary role in the modern tragedy—

Will the religious doctrines of the past rise in all countries, in desperate resistance—and will perhaps this attempt constitute the third act? Will the old absolutist tradition re-enter the stage, though in a new costume and with new cues and slogan? How could that drama end?

Wild, gloomy times are roaring toward us, and a prophet wishing to write a new apocalypse would have to invent entirely new beasts—beasts so terrible that St. John's older animal symbols would be like gentle doves and cupids in comparison.

Is he referring to the intercontinental ballistic missile?

The gods are veiling their faces in pity on the children of man, their long-time charges, and perhaps over their own fate. The future smells of Russian leather, blood, godlessness, and many whippings. I should advise our grandchildren to be born with very thick skins on their backs.

What is involved is a conflict in the philosophic interpretation of man. The war against Russia has already assumed a universal character concerning every man, woman or child, be he Arab, Hindu, Chinese or Malay, because what is being attacked is not any social system but the philosophic value of man and the foundations of modern civilization itself. Every nation must make its choice for its future and for the good of its own people. What is involved is a conflict of two moral conceptions, two different and directly opposite interpretations of man.

Honourable senators, the Russian philosophy of man is most charmingly and effectively expressed by that intellectual trapeze artist, Bernard Shaw, in his radio speech to America in October, 1931, which Pravda took care to print with silent approval, without comment and without contradiction for the Russian people to read:

(Soviet Russia) has established a new correlation between the state and the individual from which the false and superstitious notion of the intrinsic value of the human life has been removed and replaced by the sober and utilitarian approach to human life . . . A considerable share of the secret of the success of Russian communism consists in the fact that every Russian knows that if he will not make his life a paying enterprise for his country then he will, most likely, lose it. An agent of the OGPU will take him by the shoulder and will conduct him to the cellar of this famous department and he will simply stop living. And his relatives will be politely informed that they need have no anxiety about him because he is not coming home any more.

The diametrically opposite interpretation of man is equally absolute. It is contained in the inexpressibly beautiful saying of Jesus:

Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

The "least" is a child, and it can be the poor and lowly, the underprivileged, the despised and downtrodden. It is the doctrine of the poor man, and it is also the doctrine of the free man and the universal man.

It is seen thus that, in the final analysis, the world conflict is simply a war between good and evil. One cannot but be sure that, however, the ebb and flow of fortunes of war and currents of power politics change, man will aspire toward the good and spurn evil in the long run. Therefore, it is inevitable that evil must pass and good must win. If we wish to make the future a world evolving toward making man "a paying enterprise for his country", reduced to a tool, we can. If we wish to make the future one in which the poor and lowly shall not be repressed, we can, too. The world must make its choice.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Honourable senators, can the honourable senator state, whether or not this convention of 1957 singled out any particular country?

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: Honourable senators, I have not that information before me here. The convention did not exactly single out any country, but only one communist nation adopted it, and that was Poland.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I have a question along the same line. I understood the honourable senator to say that the convention of the I.L.O. was endorsed by 240 votes, with no one voting against it.

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Croll: How many communist countries are members of the I.L.O? Of the 18 nations that endorsed the resolution the honourable senator from North York (Hon. Mr. Sullivan) gave us the names of two. I would like to know the names of the remaining 16, and I would also like to know how many communist nations endorsed the resolution by what they call their parliaments.

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: Honourable senators, the countries which endorsed the resolution are: Austria, Cuba, The Dominican Republic, Ghana, Haiti, Honduras, Ireland, Israel, Jordan, Malaya, The Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Salvador, Sweden, Switzerland, Tunisia and the United Arab Republic.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Are there any countries outside the Soviet Union and the so-called communist countries who are using forced labour today?

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: I do not believe so. There are 20 nations that did come out openly in support of it.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I cannot see any great good coming from this convention if it does not reach the Soviet Union. That nation is living apart from us and is not a party to this convention.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Wall, debate adjourned.

TOURIST TRAFFIC

COMMITTEE EMPOWERED TO MAKE INQUIRY

Hon. R. B. Horner moved, pursuant to notice:

That the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic be empowered to inquire into and report upon the activities of the various agencies concerned with promoting tourist travel in Canada, and that the committee be authorized to send for persons, papers and records.

He said: Honourable senators, Canada's tourist trade is very important to our economy and it seems to me that perhaps we have been too unconcerned about it. Our Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic held several meetings one or two sessions ago and received some valuable information on the development of tourist traffic in this country. Through the media of the Canadian Government Travel Bureau, headed by Mr. Alan Field, we are spending large sums of money to advertise the tourist attractions of Canada. It is my thought that in our deliberations some honourable senators might be able to express ideas that would prove beneficial to our tourist trade.

Let me relate a story that should encourage honourable members to speak out. It concerns what I might call "My road into the Chateau Laurier". Some of you may recall that as long as fifteen years ago I drew attention to the difficulty tourists encountered in trying to find their way around "Confusion Square" to the Chateau Laurier, and I advocated that the Canadian National Railways convert the large promenade on the west side of the hotel into a parking lot with a left-hand approach from Confederation Square. So it is a great pleasure to me, and I am sure it must be to many others, to see that the promenade has now been made into a parking area with a good approach from Confederation Square. I only regret that the C.N.R. officials did not adopt my other suggestion to add three or four hundred ordinary-sized guest rooms to the hotel to go with its fine banquet rooms. I think that would place us in a fair way to take care of any deficit in the railway operations of the C.N.R. The new parking lot will bring a great deal of revenue and will serve the local public as well as tourists.

If we are to continue maintaining a Government-owned transportation system I cannot see the wisdom of selling Minaki Lodge and the hotels at Port Arthur and Brandon, especially after a great deal of money had been spent on them. Minaki is a popular tourist attraction and the hotel property at Port Arthur is going to become very valuable real estate as a result of the building of the St. Lawrence Seaway. I have stayed at that hotel and I found it most commodious. I think it was a great mistake to sell these hotels at the prices they sold for.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Were they ever making any profit?

Hon. Mr. Horner: I don't think they lost very much. Minaki Lodge broke even some years, although some years it lost money. But it seems to me they were sold at the very time when property of that kind was going up by leaps and bounds. They have doubled in value since being sold.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Somebody else is operating those hotels at a profit now.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Yes, and the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian people are not getting the benefit of it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You are right.

Hon. Mr. Horner: On April 28 of this year a very fine article appeared on the editorial page of the Montreal Gazette. This article, which described our tourist traffic business much better than I could, reads in part as follows:

> As a business it is growing. Last year visitors to this country left behind them $352 million. But while the total is rising, Canada is claiming a smaller and smaller proportion of what citizens of the United States and other countries are spending on travel.
>
> Some of this loss is easily explained. The speed of travel to far places, as brought about by aviation, has drawn Europe nearer to North America. This has appealed strongly to American travellers. It may have more "prestige" in conversation for the American citizen to say that he has been to Italy or France, than to say that he spent his vacation just over the border in Canada.
> Canada used to benefit in former times by the very fact that it was so close to the United States, in comparison to European countries, which could only be reached by an ocean voyage of almost a week. Now these places in Europe are practically as close to the United States as Canada.
> Yet it would be the poorest policy to accept this as one of those inevitable trends, about which little may be done. As Mr. James M. McAvity, President of the Canadian Tourist Association, well says, salesmanship can make a great deal of difference in attracting the tourist. The Swiss have proved that. For generations they have made the tourist business the biggest of their national industries.

As in the case of Switzerland, I think that tourist traffic could be our greatest business, for we have many wonderful things to offer tourists. When the weather becomes unbearably hot in the south, our cool northern climate attracts them. Of course, when it becomes cold here it is only natural that many Canadians, in turn, go south to the United States.

Canadians are naturally a friendly people but sometimes I think they are very thoughtless. Possibly they are not very good salesmen. They often neglect to show appreciation and kindness to American and other tourists who come to our land. I should like to see it become the business of Canadians to adopt a more friendly and kindly attitude. For instance, I think we should regard it as a pleasure to direct our American friends to the places they wish to visit. We all know how we appreciate little actions of that kind on the part of Americans when we are travelling in the United States. I would like to see every Canadian join with the authorities in making it our business to welcome these people.

A special train leaves for the Port of Churchill, on, I believe, July 31. I have met a number of Americans who go up there every year. I was told by one of the railway officials that many Americans enjoy the trip so much that on their return they book passage for the next year, and also that they enjoy meeting Canadians on the way up.

Honourable senators, the committee cannot meet until next weeks, because a number of officials will be away until then. However, I thought it might be useful to interested senators to know what is being accomplished and what money is being spent on advertising, and so forth. Personally, I view it as a very important part of Canadian business to encourage and do everything possible to get tourists to come to our country.

On a recent trip which I took through Ontario I noticed a very great improvement, in one respect at least, compared to some years ago. Southern fried chicken was served, just a few miles out of London, which I believe would satisfy the taste of any American. I feel, though, that we might impress upon our hotel and restaurant operators that they should do all that is possible to assist us in securing a greater number of tourists in this country. It has been my experience, in Florida, California, and other places, that accommodation is less expensive than in the majority of our hotels in Canada, and that the people in charge extend friendship and hospitality in every possible way.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask my honourable friend a question? The motion standing in his name reads:

> That the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic be empowered to inquire into and report upon the activities of the various agencies concerned with promoting tourist travel in Canada,—

May I ask what agencies he has in mind? Is he referring to Government agencies or private agencies?

Hon. Mr. Horner: I was referring to Government agencies. Honourable senators will remember Leo Dolan, who was formerly director of the Canadian Government Travel Bureau. He was succeeded by Alan Field, the present director. The president of the Canadian Tourist Association is J. M. McAvity. Whether these gentlemen, or others, should be called to appear before our committee, I do not know. However, I had in mind our own federal officials. Honourable senators might be interested in hearing what they are doing and what they are spending.

Hon. Mr. Euler: That is all I wanted to know.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I wish to commend the chairman of the Tourist Traffic Committee (Hon. Mr. Horner) for reviving the work of the committee, even if it is being done in the month of June. The committee had splendid chairmen in the past. I recall that for the previous four or five years the committee was under the chairmanship of the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor), who gave it very effective leadership. Now I am glad to see that splendid leadership being assumed by the honourable senator from Blaine Lake. During his remarks, he referred to the large number of automobiles which must be accommodated at tourist resorts. That reminded me of the city of Ottawa, which is probably the No. 1 tourist attraction in Canada. I think the capital city of our country should be so regarded. Two weeks ago, on Sunday, 24,800 people were conducted through the Parliament building. It is almost unbelievable that so many people could pass through in one day. I presume that would not be a day of 24 hours, but from 9.30 in the morning until 5 in the afternoon. My point is, honourable senators, that most of these people probably came to Ottawa in motorcars. We do our best to attract and encourage them to come, but where is there a place to park their cars? On the particular Sunday afternoon to which I refer I walked to the west end of this building, and just beyond were parking places allotted to cabinet ministers for approximately 18 cars, and beyond that again a number of spaces for cars of deputy ministers. Yet there was not a cabinet minister or a deputy minister in these buildings, and I doubt if there was one within five miles. But could their parking spaces be used by the tourists for their cars? No. And how were tourists prevented from parking their cars in those places? One of our mounted policemen would go to a driver of a car who parked in that area and tell him he would have to move on. By that time another tourist would have appeared, and the mounted policeman would tell him he could not park there. Then another would move in, and the same thing would happen. I stood there for five minutes and saw that mounted policeman doing his duty, as he was ordered to do it. I have great respect and a high regard for the mounted police. They always do their duty. But here was a mounted policeman going up and down all afternoon asking motorists not to park but to move along.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Ridiculous!

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not think any of us would complain in any way at the manner in which the mounted police are enforcing the regulation which has been established by a committee of both houses, but surely it is time to review that regulation. It is my own opinion—others may not agree with me—that it is beyond the dignity of these fine constables to do nothing but tell people to move along in their automobiles. They have been trained for better jobs than that, they are qualified to do much better than that.

Let me refer to one other matter. Under our present rules, if a senator or a member of the House of Commons invites a guest for dinner and the guest drives to the Parliament grounds in his automobile he is not allowed to park his automobile near the building—he is required to take it somewhere beyond the west block. Well, that is all right, but he is only allowed to leave his automobile there for an hour and a half. So if your guest stays with you for longer than an hour and a half he will find that there is a ticket on his car when he returns to it.

Now, honourable senators, that is not practical at all. I feel that our parking regulations should be reviewed. This is important, not only in order that proper accommodation may be made for guests of senators and members of the other house, but also in order to provide accommodation for the thousands of people who will be coming to see the Parliament Buildings and grounds every weekend throughout the summer.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable leader on this side of the house (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) a question. He mentioned a regulation. Well, who authorized the regulation? This question has occurred to me on several occasions. I am not personally interested, for I have no motorcar here, but occasionally I walk around the hill, as we call it, before breakfast and I see signs, "Restricted for deputy ministers" or "Restricted for So-and-so", and I ask myself by what authority that is done.

One can understand that, in respect of the city itself the City Council, the elected representatives of the people, make the bylaws and establish rules for parking. But where is the basic authority for a policeman or some servant of the Government to put a sign on or near a sidewalk in the Parliament grounds saying "Parking prohibited except for So-and-so"? I think the matter is worth looking into. After all, there is involved in this the question of our personal freedoms, our personal rights, and I submit that if there is any authority for doing this, I cannot for the life of me understand where it is. I cannot recall any law or resolution passed by Parliament which might govern parking on the Parliament grounds. Perhaps the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), if his other duties are not too onerous to permit him to secure the information, might ascertain for the benefit of the membership of this house under what authority this is done. As a citizen of this country I think I have as much right as any other person to park a car at the back of this building where some deputy minister's sign is placed, and I would like to know by what authority I can be prevented from exercising that right. Perhaps my honourable friend the Leader of the Government will find out.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, with all that has been said regarding parking I am in happy agreement, but I am going to suggest to the chairman of the committee that the committee take up another matter.

As the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) pointed out, two weeks ago there was a very large crowd of people in and around the Parliament building. It was the largest crowd I have ever seen here—they were all over the building. Now, among the things that are lacking here, in my opinion, and which should be provided by the Government, are rest room facilities. In spite of all the beautiful spots surrounding Ottawa, to me the main attraction in Ottawa is the Parliament Building and its grounds. People came here in their thousands that day, and many of them looked for washrooms in the course of their tour of the building. The crowds actually got out of hand and the police could not handle them. In fact, you had to lock your door, because they were opening doors to ask where the washrooms were located.

If we are going to encourage tourist traffic we will have to do something for their comfort. I am placing this matter before the chairman of the committee. I urge that it be taken under consideration and that steps be taken to provide public conveniences for the crowds.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: If I might answer the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid), I would like to point out to him that we have just finished installing an extra washroom and restroom on the ground floor, so there is one extra room available for men and one for women. We have also put in extra washrooms on other floors, and now we have no more space on this side for any further restrooms.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I know that, but two restrooms could be installed at the main entrance. Washrooms are not needed in the Senate end of the building as visitors do not come in by the Senate door—they all come in by the main entrance.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Are you suggesting that we construct a couple of outhouses?

Hon. Mr. Reid: You have mentioned an appropriate name, and you are probably more used to that name than others.

Hon. Mr. Davies: Honourable senators, I do not think we need to be worried about parking in any Ontario city on a Sunday, because in most of our cities motorists can park anywhere at all that day and not be liable to a fine. But as to parking on Parliament hill, I would like to ask the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) if restricted parking in the Senate spaces was not agreed to last year at a meeting of all senators?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Even if the senators did agree to it, what legal sanction does that give to parking restrictions?

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien: Honourable senators, I have had something to do with the regulations that have been established for parking on Parliament Hill. In the first place, a meeting was held with the Minister of Justice, the Leader of the Government and the whips of all the parties.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: And the R.C.M.P.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Yes, and the R.C.M.P. It was held in order to decide on how to remove the chaotic conditions existing on Parliament Hill in regard to parking. We came to the conclusion that members of the Senate should be furnished a sticker to put on their cars, and that the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod would allot a parking space for senators' cars identified by the sticker. The same arrangement was made for members of the House of Commons.

The situation was so chaotic that something had to be done. After that decision the different parties held caucuses, at which the whips of the different parties put to the various meetings what we had decided, and this was adopted unanimously at the caucuses. That is how the parking situation came about.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: It was decided by whom?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: The members of the various parties, which includes all honourable senators and members of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Was the matter ever brought formally before the Senate and the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: It was brought before the caucuses of the different parties. Surely we don't have to bring the question of parking before the houses of Parliament, if we can settle it among ourselves in caucus.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, I think I can enlighten my honourable friend from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) about the authority concerning parking on Parliament Hill, and assure him of his full liberty and freedom in that connection. This discussion has wandered a good deal away from the intent of the resolution of my honourable friend from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner).

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Not the 25,000 tourists.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: The property rights in connection with the grounds known as Parliament Hill were well established by special legislation passed, I think, three years ago. About that time a test case had been heard in the courts of this city, which established the fact that anybody could come on the Parliament Hill, park his car here and leave it as long as he liked.

As a result of a recommendation of the Senate's Standing Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and a similar committee of the other house, legislation was passed establishing this area as being property of the Crown, and not as a public common where anybody could come and camp, or park his car, for an indefinite period. As I say, that principle was established, and is a matter of record.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask, does that principle apply to senators and members of the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: That is the next point. Regulations came as the next step.

After discussion over several years with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and, finally, a joint conference between the Speakers and members of the committees of both houses, regulations were made whereby the chaotic conditions, which had existed and had become the despair of officials, were rationalized. The regulations today, I think, are about as good as can be made, and in fact do bring some order out of the chaos which previously existed.

I do not think that the sensibilities or the liberties of any one can be said to be deeply offended by the negotiations that have been carried out and the work done under my friend the senator from Stadacona (Hon. Mr. Dessureault), who is chairman of the Senate's Standing Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I happen to be a member of that committee, and I pay full tribute to him for his patience and judgment in bringing about fairly decent parking conditions on Parliament Hill, as we now have them.

The congestion on Parliament Hill is really due to the inability of the municipality of the city of Ottawa and the Federal District Commission to establish a place where cars can be parked nearby, and from which people can walk to the Parliament building, thus preserving this area as a scenic and attractive feature of our capital city. If that were done visitors could better enjoy and appreciate what is to be seen here.

I think that is the answer at the present time from the point of view of the resolution of my honourable friend on the question of tourist traffic, and from every other point of view. In other words, to have this great public area in front of the Parliament Buildings look like a used car parking lot is hardly good enough for the capital city of Canada.

Hon. Stanley S. McKeen: Honourable senators, with respect to this parking question, I wonder if anyone has ever examined the possibility of excavating for parking space below ground in front of the Parliament Buildings. Some large American cities have built such parking areas, with room to accommodate as many as 5,000 cars underground, and have maintained a beautiful park on top of the ground.

It occurs to me that we could build parking facilities under ground in front of these buildings and maintain the present park-like area on top of the ground. Such an arrangement would accommodate from 5,000 to 10,000 cars, and would at the same time provide shelter for civilians from atomic bombs or any other form of attack. Furthermore, cars could be parked right next to the biggest tourist attraction in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Horner: It would be pretty hard digging through the rock there.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: That would eliminate any danger from cave-ins or slides. It would only be necessary to excavate, as is done for big buildings, and the natural walls would be there.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, may I speak briefly on this question?

First, I would compliment the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner), who has taken an active interest in tourist traffic for many years, for the action he has taken on behalf of this industry in Canada. It is our second-largest industry and, from a dollars-and-cents point of view, is an important one and should be promoted to the limit.

I very well recall that it was the late Senator W. H. Dennis from Halifax who moved a resolution in this Senate for the establishment of a Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic, and through the instrumentality of that committee the Canadian Travel Bureau was established. The tourist business has now grown, as the present chairman of the committee (Hon. Mr. Horner) has said, to an industry of some $350 million.

I have always advocated that the appropriate slogan for Canadians was "See Canada", not "See Canada First". We now have the Trans-Canada Highway system, better than it has ever been before, and Canadians may motor almost from coast to coast without having to go down into the United States and there spend money to a greater extent than do the Americans who visit Canada.

I would leave one other thought with the Chairman of the Tourist Traffic Committee, namely, that we should advocate that merchants and retailers throughout Canada accept the American dollar at par.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: The charging of from 3 to 5 per cent exchange during the past 10 years has, I think, been a handicap to our tourist industry.

I woud like to say a few words with respect to the suggestion made by the honourable chairman of the committee concerning the tie-up between hotels and transportation companies, and the high rates now being charged for meals. It is my feeling that if private enterprise concerns were to take over the hotels from the transportation companies, they would be better able to cater to the needs of tourists visiting Canada. I, of course, appreciate that a great deal has been done by both the large railway systems by way of linking together hotels and transportation. Honourable senators will have noted that quite recently the New York Central system did away with its hotels and is now devoting its full attention to its transportation facilities. Whether that change is good or not, I do not know. I am not a hotelman. I feel that there is perhaps some need for a link between hotels and transportation systems, but a very concerted effort should be made to keep the cost of food and services within the tourists' ability to pay. The honourable chairman of the committee has on more than one occasion expressed his view with respect to the high cost of lunches and dinners charged by the railway companies. I think there should be an inclusive rate for the whole meal in the C.N.R. and C.P.R. hotels, the same as there is in retail and large departmental stores which cater to the public. The hotels could use mass production methods, but in such a way that they would attract people to their dining rooms. If that were done there would not be the situation which exists today in which so few people make use of the dining rooms. I just pass that along as a thought to be considered at future meetings.

Of course, whenever tourist business is brought to the front it always gives me an opportunity to talk, not about Halifax, but about Nova Scotia. Honourable senators, the chairman of the committee has mentioned the port of Churchill. For the benefit of the honourable senators I would mention that the C.N.R. has arranged weekend excursions to the Maritimes, and I cannot think of any better thought to leave with you this evening than one to encourage you to take advantage, whenever possible, of those excursion rates and visit the Maritime provinces, particularly the province of Nova Scotia.

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators, since my honourable friend from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) has put the tourist business back on the highway again I would like to say a few words. I am very interested in the tourist business, and I would certainly like to see this house give it close attention. I think we should consider how we can best promote it.

It does not ask for deficiency payments. There is no ceiling price, nor is there any floor price on it. I think it is well worthy of our close attention, and I would like to thank the chairman for bringing this resolution forward.

Hon. John G. Higgins: Honourable senators, I do not think we should lose our sense of proportion. The Parliament Buildings were erected for the sole purpose of the carrying on of the deliberations of the Parliament of Canada. Here the fate of the nation is settled. In a sense, it is a showplace. It is a splendid building, in my estimation, and one of extraordinary beauty. It is well worth looking at, and is attractive enough to bring thousands of people to see it. It is only natural that they should come here not alone because it is the seat of Parliament but because it is a beautiful building as well. It is beautiful to look at at all hours of the day, whether in the morning or evening, or at night when it is lit up. But, if we are going to talk about putting restaurants here, and restrooms, and parking space for 23,000 people a day, then we are going to turn it into a summer resort, and it will be no longer the Parliament of Canada.

There is no doubt it would be nice if we could arrange to have all the people looked after, but, surely, it is not the part of Parliament to provide accommodation for 20,000 or 25,000 people. Where would we be amongst that crowd? We would be lost. We would be of no consequence. Honourable senators would disappear in the crowd in the Parliament Buildings; they would be no longer the lawmakers, but just part of the crowd.

I think it would be a pity to spoil these lovely grounds by putting up restaurants and outhouses in order to cater to the people who come up here. We welcome them. It is a good thing to have children come up here and see this beautiful spot. They get some idea of beauty, and they understand that the lawgivers, the legislators, or whatever you call them, are very kindly men. They begin to realize that members of the Senate are not as they are paraded and propagandized in the press and over the T.V. At the same time, the members of Parliament are the lawgivers, and they must sit here as lawgivers.

I think it would be an unfortunate thing if we turned this beautiful and wonderful place—beautiful because the buildings are beautiful, and wonderful because it is the seat of the Parliament of Canada—into a summer resort.

Motion agreed to.

EXCISE TAX BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 28, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt for the second reading of Bill C-47, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, I know I am going to find it difficult to bring you back from the wonderful places in which your minds were travelling just a few minutes ago to such a common, ordinary, and mundane thing as excise taxes, even though what I am going to say may have some relationship to the beautification of individuals in that a part of it deals with the matter of excise tax in relation to cosmetics.

There are three proposed amendments in the bill to which I want to refer. One is subsection (2) of section 1, extending the definition of "manufacturer or producer". The second one is section 4 of the bill, putting the packaging of cosmetics and pharmaceuticals in the category of the packaging of candy and chewing gum for the purpose of the application of tax. The third one is the matter of transferring the authority to tax from the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act and bringing it into Part II of the Excise Tax Act and providing a specific rate of duty.

May I point out, first of all, the present situation and the effect of the extension of the definition of "manufacturer"? In the Excise Tax Act, as it stands at present, we have a very extensive statutory definition of "manufacturer or producer" which covers a variety of situations in which a person who does not manufacture the product may be held, for the purposes of the Excise Tax Act, to be the manufacturer of the product.

At the present time, for instance, if I have a formula for a specific type of cosmetic or pharmaceutical and I engage a manufacturer to make that product for me, I am, for the purposes of sales tax, treated as the manufacturer, because that is my product made according to my formula and no person else can use that formula without my permission. But under the extension which is proposed in this bill "manufacturer", for the purposes of application of sales tax, shall include a person who sells a cosmetic or a pharmaceutical that has not been made by him but to which the person who makes it has added some trade or brand name, or some other mark, designated by the person who sells the goods.

That is a very considerable extension of the meaning of "manufacturer". It is suggested that one effect of it may be that people in Canada who at present have a product made by a custom manufacturer, and have their brand name or the name of their company, or both, pasted on the bottle or container, may see fit to manufacture the product themselves to avoid the incidence of this tax at that level. I suggest, alternatively, that many American manufacturers who are marketing their product in Canada, and who choose to have it made for them in this country rather than export it here, may find it desirable to go back home and have the product which they regularly make in the United States exported to Canada and, therefore, carry on no manufacturing operations at all in Canada. Bear in mind that any person is free to make and sell. Joe Doake's product and Bill Jones' product may have different names, but if you examined the two products you might find the ingredients used in them are exactly the same. I think that just as many marketing agencies who are today marketing a cosmetic or a pharmaceutical in Canada, and having it made by another manufacturer in Canada, may go back to their domestic market and secure it there and export it to Canada, as those who may engage in the manufacturing business in Canada.

So far as any principle behind it is concerned, it seems to me it is a highly artificial method of determining who a manufacturer is so that the base on which you apply sales tax may be made higher and therefore produce more tax. It is highly artificial, but surely if we are going to employ such highly artificial methods we should try to get down to some basis in principle. You may recall a few years ago a case that went to the Supreme Court of Canada to test the then definition of a manufacturer under the Excise Tax Act. It was by way of reference to the Tariff Board, which decided the position taken by the Department of National Revenue was a proper one, that the particular article was properly taxed, that the person who was selling it was not the manufacturer as a matter of law, and that he certainly was not the manufacturer as a matter of fact. The Exchequer Court upheld the decision of the Tariff Board. In a very learned judgment the President of the Exchequer Court held that on the facts as disclosed in this particular case the company which was selling this product, which I will tell you about in a moment, was not the manufacturer and did not meet all the requirements of the statutory definition, and therefore should not be taxed as a manufacturer. The Supreme Court of Canada undid everything that had been done, by deciding that the Tariff Board had no jurisdiction in the first instance to hear the reference. So you had a wasted effort extending over a year and a half.

In that case the product was an automobile tire, and the person selling it had several trade marks. That is all he had, except an agreement with a tire manufacturer to affix to the tire the trade marks and brands of this person, which marks and brands were actually wrought into the rubber in the course of the curing and manufacture of the tire. There you have an irrevocable act in the processing of the product. But under the definition it was held that in that particular case the person who had the trade marks wrought into that tire was not the actual manufacturer, and that the sales tax applied to the price at which he bought the tires from the actual manufacturer and not to the price at which he sold the tire to the public.

Now, if we are going to try to work any sense or logic into even such an artificial thing as this, surely we should try to settle on some basis such as I have suggested. In other words, where you are using brand names or trade marks they should become such a part of the manufactured article that they take on the identity of the person who owns the trade marks or brand name. But to pass that by and not to venture into that field of application and simply limit it to cosmetics and pharmaceuticals, where you have no private formula, where any person can dream up a method of making the cosmetic, or any person can go to the pharmacopoeia and pick out a method of putting together any ingredients or combination of ingredients—and there is nothing to stop him from doing it—in these circumstances and under these conditions to suggest that because the name of my company is placed on the sticker on the outside of the bottle by the actual manufacturer at my request I am the manufacturer, is the ultimate in the extension of the definition of a manufacturer. What I say is, if we are searching that far afield for an extension of the definition of a manufacturer, then there is a very fertile field much closer. Not only that, why limit this extension of the definition of a manufacturer to the field of cosmetics and pharmaceuticals when we have a very broad field of application in line with what I have described to you in the case of tires?

I can see some difficulties, for instance, if they attempted to apply this to shirts. You may have a shirt manufacturer who manufactures shirts of exactly the same size and from the same kind of material, and so on, who has possibly half a dozen different and unrelated outlets, the only difference between the shirts being that the shirt sold in one store may bear the brand name "Blue" on the collar and the shirt sold in another store may bear the brand name "Red".

They are not attempting to reach that far, but what I say is that when you have this definition it goes the full limit in relation to cosmetics and pharmaceuticals, and any logic or reason that you would apply in justifying this extension would apply equally to broadening the entire field. Why stop at these two products? Is it because some people who have enough pressure to exert have asked that this situation be covered and limited to these products, or is it because the Excise Tax Act is going to continue to grow? Is it to be like Topsy, who "just growed"?

This is a bits-and-pieces kind of legislation. It is not the first time I have complained about it. I have complained about it regularly. My complaining doesn't seem to do much good, because somebody gets an idea or makes a suggestion and another bit is added. And so we have this anomalous sort of thing that has no sense or logic or reason as to the way in which it is done. I do not think it will be very long before we are asked at some session of Parliament to provide amendments to this very section so as to cover things—and some of them, I suggest, are obvious—which have not been covered in the effort that is being made to introduce the application of this entirely artificial definition to these two types of products. For instance, a retailer can ask a manufacturer to make a product for him, and the manufacturer can make the product and put the retailer's brand name on it. The retailer puts the product in his store and sells it to the general consumer. The retailer is not regarded as the manufacturer if he does this. But if the buyer of those products sells them at any level other than in his retail store and not to a consumer, then he is a manufacturer, and the tax impost on him is greater, because the tax is on his selling price rather than on his buying price.

I have tried to give my point of view. My friend from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt), who sponsored the bill, gave an explanation which I thought was very ingenious, but which did not contribute anything to the situation.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Thank you for the first remark.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: You may thank me for the second remark before I am through. My friend said the purpose of this was to bring the definition of "manufacturer" up to the present day definition of "manufacturer", to bring it in line with modern business practice. Well, nobody can standardize modern business practice to the extent of limiting the field to cosmetics and pharmaceuticals. Many a person goes to a manufacturer and says: "Will you make this product for me and put my brand on it?" I want to tell my friend, and I am sure he knows it without my telling him, that that is done today with an infinite variety of products. A very substantial manufacturing business is being carried on today by people who have no original manufacture of their own, but who manufacture for other people products that these other people want. It may be shirts, cosmetics, pharmaceuticals, tires, or an infinite variety of things. It has worked out very well. I would think there is a centre line from which you could quite easily push to the right the circumstances under which a person who has that product manufactured should be called a manufacturer, and from which you could push to the left the circumstances under which he is not a manufacturer. When you start pushing to the left, which I suggest is the farthest away from the real and basic concept of a manufacturer, then you are going in the wrong direction first. If you want to cover the whole field, yes, cover it, but do not cover the more remote applications first and leave the ones standing right in front of you in large outline and do nothing about them.

The second point I wish to discuss is packaging. I do not know whether the ladies—the customers who enjoy cosmetics—will be happy about the fact that cosmetics have now joined the list of products which includes candy, chocolates, chewing gum, and other confectionery but cosmetics and pharmaceuticals have been included in that category of products. If you package a cosmetic or a pharmaceutical, then for purposes of application of the sales tax, if this section of the bill becomes law, you will be a manufacturer or a producer and will pay sales tax at a higher level than heretofore. If it is a case of revenue, I suppose there is nothing we can complain about, but to suggest that if I have a manufacturer make a product for me and he delivers it to me, and then I put it in a carton, therefore I am a manufacturer, certainly that is a wide extension of the definition of manufacturing to reach out to cover packaging in those circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: You can market it with your name on it.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: You may or may not. This covers the packaging, and packaging does not necessarily cover the marketing, although it may, but it is the packaging itself that makes you a manufacturer. I know what it is intended to do, namely, to cover the bulk purchase. That is, you may have a businessman in Canada who buys from some manufacturer in bulk and has the product delivered in bulk to his premises, and he packages it in small packages or bottles it in small bottles. This is intended to cover that kind of bulk purchase, whether the bulk purchase is by importation or by domestic purchase; and presumably the theory behind it is that the person able to buy in bulk achieves a lower cost, and he is able to sell and compete—the suggestion being, unfairly—against the small operator who has not the bulk purchasing power. Then we have this situation, that the statute is being used for the purpose of regulating trade, rather than for the purpose of raising revenue, which is the inherent purpose of the statute. The inherent purpose of an excise tax act is to raise revenue.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Is not the purpose of this section to raise revenue?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I suggest that the purpose of this section—and it has been explained as one of the reasons why it was introduced—is to get after the person who buys in bulk, and who by buying in bulk is able to sell ultimately to the consumer at a cheaper price on the smaller purchase cost. That is one of the reasons. The moment you get into that field you are getting into the regulation of trade.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is an incidental matter to raising revenue, which is the purpose of the section.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Well, I don't know which one is incidental. I would think both were very important purposes, and I would not say that either one could be said to be ancillary to the other. Raising revenue is an important purpose, and regulating trade is an important purpose, and you regulate trade with respect to the man with bulk purchasing power in the field of cosmetics and pharmaceuticals only. Then I say you have two distinct purposes here, and we should not have such a conflict in a statute that is obviously intended and designed to provide as much revenue as possible.

The other thing I wanted to say is in connection with the transfer of the taxing provision in relation to the export of electricity under the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act. This bill proposes to transfer the authority to tax from that statute to the Excise Tax Act. Now, it may seem, on first reading, to be an obvious and painless sort of operation, but there are just one or two things I would point out. I noticed that the sponsor of the bill in his explanation drew attention to the fact that under the present statute, that is, the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act, the Governor in Council is the one who has the authority to determine the amount of the tax on the export of power, and to impose it, which allows some flexibility; whereas, when you bring it into the Excise Tax Act you have a specific rate of tax with no flexibility whatsoever, and any changes could only be made by act of Parliament.

Now, I can see in the export of electricity a set of conditions that are unusual, and that could be more readily and much better served by having that discretionary power in the Governor in Council, rather than by having a fixed rate of duty set out in the Excise Tax Act. I can conceive of situations, where, for instance, owing to circumstances or emergencies as between Canada and the United States, you may find an extra demand for power on the American side at some time during the year because of emergency conditions, and yet at some other time of the year you may find the reverse situation existing in Canada, and the exports in each case would balance off and really amount to an interchange of power. In those circumstances, the Governor in Council by regulation could cover the situation. It is a flexible situation. But under this bill and the amendment which is proposed here, unless you write a very carefully thought-out definition of what shall constitute the export of power, you may very well create difficult operational situations in the field of the production of power. It is a situation that we should look at very carefully because there is no tax so far on the export of gas and oil, no suggestion of an export tax. Now, to my way of thinking, if a tax could be justified at all it could be justified on the export of gas and oil more readily than on the export of power, for the reason that water at least is useable again, whereas when gas and oil are exported that part of our assets is gone forever. I think honourable senators must know as well as I that in Norway they make use of the same flow of water coming down from the mountain top to generate power at three different levels on its descent to the fjord.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: We have that on the Ottawa River also.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, I know. So water is replenishable in a sense that gas and oil are not.

That is an argument as to whether or not there should be a tax, and possibly that is beside the point, because under existing law we have the provision for taxing. But I just point that out as another reason why I think we should look very carefully at this proposition. It is not as though we are going to affect the ways and means of the Government at all, it is not that we are going to do any harm or injustice to any Government policy in this connection; it is just a question of whether or not this provision to tax the export of power is or is not better off where it is at present than if it were moved into the Excise Tax Act. I suggest it is better off where it is.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I intended to move adjournment of the debate, but I understand there are a number of witnesses who would like to appear before the committee tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Under the circumstances,—and honourable senators know that I am always pleased to co-operate—I reserve any remarks that I had intended to make until the bill comes up for third reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 3, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SEEDS BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine presented Bill S-24, respecting the testing, inspection and sale of seeds.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall the bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Tuesday next.

EXCISE TAX BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the committee's report on Bill C-47, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 600 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move that the report be adopted now.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-48, to amend the Income Tax Act.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 600 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Motion agreed to.

INFLATION

ADDITION TO MEMBERSHIP OF FINANCE COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Power be added to the list of senators serving on the Standing Committee on Finance.

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CHANGE IN MEMBERSHIP OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Beaubien, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Smith (Kamloops) be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Turgeon on the list of senators appointed to serve on the Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament on Indian Affairs; and that a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

EDUCATION

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTIONS—INQUIRY AND ANSWER

Hon. William M. Wall inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. What has been the total contribution of the federal Government to all forms of education in Canada during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959? It is requested that these expenditures be listed under the following headings:

—University grants, on a per capita basis

—Veterans Assistance

(a) University
(b) Vocational

—Atomic Energy Research grants

—National Research Council

(a) Research grants
(b) Scholarships, bursaries, assistantships
(c) Special activities
(d) Travel assistance

—Fisheries Department—

(a) Research Board scholarships and grants
(b) Extension work on Co-operatives

—External Affairs:

fellowships and scholarships overseas

—Labour Department

(a) Vocational training
(b) Frontier College

—Mines and Technical Surveys

(a) Grants in aid of Geological research
(b) Grants—University of British Columbia—in aid of research in foreign geography

—National Health and Welfare Department

(a) Health facilities—Training grants
(b) Schools of social work
(c) Development of training facilities, bursaries and refresher courses

—Contributions to education by other Crown corporations

(a) Central Mortgage and Housing
(b) Others

—Transport Department

(a) Grants to schools of navigation and seamanship

(b) Contribution toward operation of marine engineering schools

—Contributions to education of Indians and Eskimos

(a) Indians

(b) Eskimos

—Additional contributions to education by federal Government departments or agencies not listed above

2. What are the estimated total contributions of the federal Government to all forms of education in Canada for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960, under categories given in Question 1?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have the answer to the honourable gentleman's inquiry.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government if the answer to the inquiry will be printed in Hansard?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The answer contains a great deal of valuable information, and even though it is comparatively long, the material having been supplied by some fifteen or sixteen different departments, I think it should be printed in Hansard.

For answer to inquiry see appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 732-8.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 28, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn for the second reading of Bill C-38, to make provision for the reduction of certain class and commodity rates on freight traffic.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, this bill was very fully and clearly explained the other afternoon by the honourable senator from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn), and I do not think I need traverse today the same ground which he covered so admirably.

In its essence, this is a bill to create partial relief of shippers in this country who are affected by the recent increase of 17 per cent in certain freight rates, resulting from the order of the Board of Transport Commissioners of November 17 last. In that respect, the measure is of the same order as legislation to which Parliament has been accustomed in various instances in the past, such as, for instance, the Maritime Freight Rates Act, which has been in force for quite a number of years, and which relieves to some extent shippers in the Maritimes from the incidence of freight rates by reason of the distance they are situated from the large centres of population of the country. It also follows the act which we passed three or four years ago, generally called the Bridge Act, which provides a subsidy to the two railway companies of, I think, $7 million a year to permit of their maintaining those parts of their respective main lines running through northern Ontario, which produce very little traffic themselves, but which are necessary in order that freight may move freely and at reasonable rates from one section of the country to the other. Although that act is not a direct relief to the shippers, in that no money is paid to the shippers under it, nevertheless the ultimate effect is that it enables the railways to charge lower rates to shippers who have to ship over that bridge or gap, as you may call it, than they would otherwise have to pay.

As I said, this bill purports to relieve to some extent shippers in this country who are now required to pay the 17 per cent increase in charges established by the Board of Transport Commissioners last November. As honourable senators will recall, the order directed that the rates which were to be subject to this 17 per cent increase were certain class rates and commodity rates. In fact, they covered, I think, all the class rates and the commodity rates except coal and coke, which were subject to a special rate and, therefore, do not benefit under this act.

Like the honourable senator from Saskatoon, I do not wish to go into a general dissertation on the subject of freight rates in this country. It is an extremely difficult and technical subject. But I do want to say this, that the relief given by this bill to those shippers who pay class rates and commodity rates applies only to those two kinds of rates. There are several other kinds of railroad rates in this country. There are what are called the competitive rates, which are rates that the railways are allowed to charge lower than the class rate or the commodity rate, in order to meet competition, largely from trucking services. Then there are the statutory rates, which are definitely fixed by acts of Parliament, of which, I suppose, the most outstanding are the Crowsnest Pass rates. Those are not affected. Of course, there are also what are called the agreed charges. The railways were authorized to make agreed charges by Parliament a few years ago. As honourable senators will recall, an agreed charge results from a contract between a railway company and a specific shipper of commodities under which the railway company gives a special rate to that shipper upon his undertaking to ship either the whole or a certain definite part of his entire freight by the railway for a certain period of years. The only qualification, the only limitation, upon the power of the railways with respect to agreed charges is that the rates which they make shall be compensatory to the railways.

The theory is that the class rates and commodity rates are the rates upon which the great majority of the traffic of this country is supposed to travel. In years past that was, in fact, the case. Only a few years ago more than 50 per cent of the freight traffic of this country travelled under class rates and commodity rates, but that situation has changed very rapidly in the last few years, partly as a result of the right that the railway companies now have to make agreed charges, and partly as a result of increasing competition from trucks on the highways. I understand that at the present time only about 32 per cent of the entire freight traffic of the country travels under class rates and commodity rates, the rest travelling under agreed charges or competitive rates or statutory rates.

The total freight traffic which moved last year under class rates and commodity rates amounted to about $280 million or $290 million. That figure explains the figure of $20 million provided in this bill for relief to the shippers. It explains it in this way. I gather that the intention of the Government was to relieve these shippers by class and commodity rates to the extent of about 7 per cent, so that instead of paying the whole increase of 17 per cent ordered by the Board of Transport Commissioners they should pay only approximately 10 per cent. The amount of $20 million is just about 7 per cent of the $280 million or $290 million of total traffic which moved under these rates last year. It is therefore anticipated that, assuming the same amount of traffic moves under these rates in the coming year, $20 million will provide about a 7 per cent reduction for the people who pay these rates.

The provisions of the bill are simple enough. There are only two that are really of the greater importance. The first one, in clause 3, orders the Board of Transport Commissioners, as soon as this bill becomes law, to reduce the class and commodity rates which it had increased by its order of November 17 last, for a period of one year in such a manner as to reduce them by approximately $20 million. In other words, the Board of Transport Commissioners has to reduce these rates to the extent of $20 million.

Clause 4 of the bill provides that the Government shall, upon the recommendation of the Board of Transport Commissioners, pay this $20 million to the railways which, but for the reduction, would have received this amount from the shippers.

It has been stated that this is only a temporary measure and that the Government, faced with this increase of 17 per cent, decided it would temper the wind to the shorn lamb to the extent of $20 million for a period of one year, but as a matter of permanent policy it would appoint a Royal Commission on Transportation to inquire into the whole question of freight rates and report in due course to Parliament, after which presumably the Government would introduce such legislation as it might consider necessary in order to implement the report of the royal commission. The appointment of this royal commission, and its terms of reference, were announced the other day. As I have said, this bill provides for this relief for a period of only one year. I think it would be very optimistic to suppose that the royal commission will produce its report in time for Parliament to take action one year from now. Honourable senators will recall that the last royal commission on transportation in this country, the Turgeon Commission, was appointed in 1949 and did not submit its report until more than two years later, and it was not until the following year that remedial legislation was introduced. So, honourable senators, I think we will have to anticipate that probably this time next year we shall be faced with another temporary measure pending the completion of the report of the new royal commission.

I have not got with me the terms of reference of this commission but, as far as I could read them, they seemed to be wide enough to cover all matters which should be covered in order to present an intelligent picture of the position of transportation in this country. One thing that the commission is to inquire into, or will have the right to inquire into, is the Crowsnest Pass rates. Although the terms of reference are worded in such a way as not to include the idea that there should be any change in the Crowsnest Pass rates, I think the terms of reference empower the commission to inquire into statutory rates which are imposed for reasons of public policy and which otherwise could not be justified. I must say that if any kind of railway rate falls within that classification, it is the Crowsnest Pass rates. As honourable senators know, those rates were established in the year 1897, and I think anybody would agree that it is completely unrealistic to expect our railway companies to transport freight at rates that were fixed 62 years ago.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask the honourable senator a question? I have heard it stated that the rates have been changed since they were first put into effect. Is that correct or not? Or is it a fact that these rates have never been changed?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I am not sure of that. I think that there was one short period in the early 1920's when they were changed, and then they were changed back again.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Suspended.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Suspended, that is the correct expression. Then the suspension was removed. So in fact, at the present time—and the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) can correct me if I am wrong—the Crowsnest Pass rates are today precisely what they were in 1897.

Hon. Mr. Horner: There was a land grant consideration given the railway in connection with the Crowsnest Pass rates.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Well, a land grant consideration was given to the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1897, but is that any reason why the Canadian National Railways, which received no such grant, has got to carry its freight at those rates?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Would the honourable senator permit a question? Is he aware that most of the wealth, the surplus, of the C.P.R. is from the land grants it received as a result of the concessions that were made in 1897?

Hon. Mr. Horner: And before.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: And before.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask the honourable senator, as a matter of information, if the Crowsnest Pass agreement originally did not also contain special rates on return shipments from the east to the west, particularly return shipments of hardware, at an agreed rate? And I think that this complementary rate to the railroad on grain at the head of the lakes was eliminated in 1925. To that extent I think possibly the Crowsnest Pass rates are the same as originally, with the exception of those commodity rates on shipments going back to the west from Ontario and the other provinces.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I am not an expert on freight rates, and I am not an expert on the Crowsnest Pass rates. Remember, honourable senators, I am not suggesting that those rates be changed. All I am saying is, and I think no one will disagree with me, that it does seem completely unrealistic to expect our railways to ship freight today at the rates that were established in 1897.

I noticed a few weeks ago that some agriculturists from the west came to Ottawa to try to persuade the Government to pay the western agriculturists, who benefit from these Crowsnest Pass rates, a sum of $300 million, was it not, by way of deficiency payments. I wonder what would have been the reaction of those gentlemen if it had been suggested to them that, if they insist upon the railways carrying their grain to Vancouver at rates that were charged in 1897, they should have no objection to receiving for their grain the prices that they received in 1897. I can imagine the answer that those gentlemen would have given.

Now, it may well be that it is a matter of national policy to keep these Crowsnest Pass rates at their present very low level in order to permit grain from the Prairies to travel to the Pacific Coast and to compete with grain from other countries in the markets of the world. That may be, and probably is, a question of national policy. But what has not, so far as I know, at any time yet been determined is whether today those rates recompense the railways for the expense of shipping those commodities. Apparently there are all sorts of difficult questions involved as to the allocation of expenses. Generally speaking, I think that in all probability you would find today that the railways are carrying those commodities under the Crowsnest Pass rates at a loss. The terms of reference of the Royal Commission on Transportation are such as to permit that commission to investigate that question with a view to determining what loss, if any, the railways are suffering as a result of these Crowsnest Pass rates, and to recommend to the Government that a payment be made to the railways equivalent to the amount that they are losing on that traffic today. That, I think, if the commission so finds, would be eminently fair, because I do not think we can expect our railways to carry freight traffic at a loss on grounds of national policy. The loss, if loss there should be, should be met by a grant from Parliament.

The other thing which it seems to me that this Royal Commission on Transportation will have to inquire into is the relationship between the railways and the trucking industry —the effect on the railways of truck competition and the relationship between the two. The legal position in that respect came before this house a few years ago. Honourable senators will remember that there had always been a question, a legal question, as to whether Parliament had authority over interprovincial road traffic, and that in 1952, or it may have been 1953, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in the Winner case, determined that Parliament does have authority over interprovincial road traffic. That matter came before Parliament, because at that time the Government of the day felt very reluctant to go into the field of regulation of road traffic. It was said, for instance, and I have no doubt quite correctly, that the Board of Transport Commissioners already had far more work than it could handle, and that to add to its labours the regulation of interprovincial road traffic would be to overburden it unconscionably. So in the session of 1953-54 Parliament passed a measure under which in effect we handed back to the provinces the regulation of interprovincial trucking. I have not looked up the statute, but I think it provided more or less to this effect, that so far as the federal authority had any jurisdiction over interprovincial trucking, the various provincial bodies which regulated trucking within our provinces should be the agents of the federal Governmnet. So by that means the regulation of interprovincial trucking was in effect handed back to the provinces. Some of us said at the time, and I think it is even truer today, that it is becoming time for us to reconsider that decision. Highway trucks are far more competitive with our railways than they ever were before, and in fact there has been an enormous change in that respect during the last 25 years.

I happened to read, in the proceedings of the House of Commons committee which considered this bill, a quotation from the report of the Duff Commission on Transportation made in 1932—that is 27 years ago. This is what the commission said about the relationship between the trucks and the railways:

> In the more thickly settled areas in Canada, relief may be found in establishing zones for truck operations. The truck has its place in the movement of goods, but its proper function is collective and dispersive and not that of a primary carrier. In a properly co-ordinated transport system, the railway would assume the main burden of the carriage of goods for distances exceeding 50 miles, and trucks would operate as collectors and distributors of freight.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: How many years ago was that?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: That was in 1932.

Honourable senators will realize how very far we have moved from that position in the intervening 27 years, and the reasons for it are quite obvious. Good roads are increasing all the time. The Trans-Canada Highway and other improved highways of that kind have been constructed and can be used for the conveyance of bulky commodities by way of trucking in a way which would have been considered impossible a few years ago.

Then again there is a very recent development under which railway freight traffic and truck traffic have become intermingled, as one might say. I refer of course to the piggyback services which have come into effect in the last year or two, under which truckers make agreements with railway companies whereby their trucks are transported by railway over considerable distances. I think it is a very admirable development, and for myself I would be glad to see it very largely increased, because from the point of view of general economics it seems to me far preferable that trucks should be carried by the railway over long distances. It is cheaper, for one thing; and for another thing, it is much better that these trucks should travel by rail than that they should make the night hideous for the people who happen to live along the highways.

Then, of course, there is this further consideration, that the railways themselves, by force of circumstances, have had to go into the trucking business. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company recently acquired the Smith Transport Company, one of the largest trucking companies in this country, and though the Canadian National Railway has not acquired any independent trucking system, nevertheless it has on its own gone into trucking in a rather big way. So I think we have the right to expect that the new royal commission will go thoroughly into this question of the relationship between the trucks and the railways, and that it will try to reach some conclusion as to the way in which interprovincial truck transport can be so integrated with railway transport that we shall have control over these two systems of transport instead of the rather peculiar system which exists at present, under which our railways, so far as their freight traffic is concerned, are regulated by the Board of Transport Commissioners, while our trucking systems are regulated by nine or ten provincial bodies throughout the country.

What we really should be aiming at and what this new royal commission should be aiming at is to try to devise some proper system, fair to all concerned, under which all of the long-distance freight traffic in this country, however it is carried, whether by train or truck or sea or air, shall be subject to one central authority.

Honourable senators, those were the ideas that came to me when considering this bill and the evidence that was given before the committee of the other place. So far as the bill itself is concerned, I do not think any of us could take any serious objection to it.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, when the honourable gentleman from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn) was introducing this measure last Thursday he stated that the Crowsnest freight rate structure ought not to be affected in any way, that that solemn agreement made in 1897—I thought it was 1899—was untouchable. When he said that I wondered if honourable senators realized that other solemn agreements on transportation were made when this country was constituted, but which have not been treated with the same sanctity as the honourable gentleman would have us believe that the Crowsnest Pass agreement should be treated. I refer of course to the undertakings given by the Fathers of Confederation when the provinces by the sea, which were then the Maritime provinces and today are three of Atlantic provinces, were induced to join Confederation. We are apt to forget such things in these hurrying days, and I am going to ask the indulgence of the house for a few minutes while I remind honourable senators of something that we learned in our school days about the genesis of Canada

I want to say, first of all, that if the Crowsnest Pass freight rates are sacred, then the same consideration should be given to the rates from the Maritime provinces.

Article 65 of the London Resolutions, adopted in 1866, upon which the British North America Act was based, reads as follows:

> The construction of the Intercolonial Railway being essential to the consolidation of the union of British North America, and to the assent of the Maritime provinces thereto, it is agreed that provision be made for its immediate construction by the General Government, and that the imperial guarantee for £3,000,000 sterling pledged for this work be applied thereto, so soon as the necessary authority has been obtained from the Imperial Parliament.

The Intercolonial Railway was completed in 1876, in compliance with section 145 of the British North America Act. This section of the act reads:

> Inasmuch as the province of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have joined in a declaration that the construction of the Intercolonial Railway is essential to the consolidation of the Union of British North America, and to the assent thereto of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and have consequently agreed that provision should be made for its immediate construction by the Government of Canada; Therefore, in order to give effect to that agreement, it shall be the duty of the Government and Parliament of Canada to provide for the commencement within six months after the Union, of a railway connecting the river St. Lawrence with the city of Halifax in Nova Scotia, and for the construction thereof without intermission, and the completion thereof with all practicable speed.

While no specific references are contained in either the London Resolutions or the British North America Act to freight rate structure on the railway, events and pronouncements of the leading statesmen leave no doubt of the understanding that the rate structure was to be so devised as "to afford Maritime merchants, traders and manufacturers a market of several millions of people instead of their being restricted to the small and scattered populations of the Maritimes themselves".

I will not attempt to quote in detail the declarations of some of the Fathers of Confederation with reference to the Intercolonial Railway as an inducement to the Maritime colonies to enter the political union, but I will make a few brief excerpts from addresses of Sir John A. Macdonald, the Honourable A. T. Galt, the Honourable George Brown and the Honourable George Etienne Cartier, to indicate their sincerity as to the purpose and intent of the railway.

In a speech delivered at Halifax in 1864 Sir John A. Macdonald said in part:

> I don't hesitate to say that with respect to the Intercolonial Railway, it is understood by the people of Canada that it can only be built as a means of political union for the colonies. It cannot be denied that the railway, as a commercial enterprise, would be of comparatively little commercial advantage to the people of Canada.

The Honourable Mr. Galt made this statement:

> The railway is not to be looked upon as a question of cost but as a bond of union that will unite us in peace and in time of need.

At Halifax on September 10, 1864, the Honourable George Brown had this to say:

> Union of all the provinces would break down all trade barriers between us, and throw open at once to all a combined market of four millions of people. You in the east would send us your fish and your coals and your West India produce, while we send you in return the flour and the grain and the meats you now buy in Boston and New York.

At the conclusion of an address made in Halifax, the Honourable George Etienne Cartier said:

> Let me assure you that the promises we make are made in all sincerity and good faith—in urging union upon you we believe we are doing that which will be for your happiness and prosperity.

I am not going to attempt to go into the long story of the struggle of Atlantic provinces interests against freight rates which have throttled Maritime industries. They have been the subject of continual dissatisfaction, irritation and frustration. They have licked many of our industries, placed a heavy burden on all, and have prevented, over the years, no end of industrial enterprise from locating in the Atlantic provinces. Many of our manufacturing companies have been obliged to move their plants to Quebec and Ontario and, indeed, the movement is still going on, for present day competition is so keen that even some of our oldest industries, continually faced with the problem of transportation costs, have always before them the threat that, sooner or later, high freight costs will force them to pull up their stakes and move to sites closer to their markets.

I do not think I am exaggerating when I say that since the First World War no single subject has been so much in the forefront of discussion in the councils of provincial governments, municipalities, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, agricultural associations, in fact, in all groups of citizens in every Atlantic community—for it affects everybody, all classes—as this frustrating problem of freight rates.

As the result of many representations, the Duncan Commission, appointed by the federal Government in 1926, made a recommendation that an immediate reduction of 20 per cent be made on all rates charged on traffic originating at stations in the Atlantic division. This was supplemented and put into effect by the passage of the Maritime Freight Rates Act in 1927. At that time Intercolonial Railway rates had suffered an estimated culminative increase of 92 per cent over the original rates. Since that time increases have been the order of the day, and particularly during the last ten years, for since April 1948 there have been seven horizontal rate increases amounting to 157 per cent. So it is not difficult to see that the effect of these increases has wiped out, to a large extent, the value of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, even though in 1957 the subsidy was increased to 30 per cent.

Let me give you an example of what has happened to one commodity. The rate on lumber from Newcastle, New Brunswick, to Montreal in 1947 was 23 cents per hundred pounds, while the present rate is 48 cents, an increase which amounts to approximately $5 per thousand.

There is another feature of the situation to which I wish to refer. There are competitive and non-competitive rates. Both by revenue and by tonnage we have the highest proportion of non-competitive rates in respect to inbound, outbound and intra-regional traffic. May I give some instances to illustrate the difference in effect between competitive and non-competitive rates? I am quoting now from the testimony of Mr. H. A. Mann, Executive Manager of the Maritimes Transportation Commission, given before the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, of Friday, April 17.

Rail distances from Dalhousie, New Brunswick and Val d'Or, Quebec to Montreal are within four miles of each other. Both those centres ship lumber to Montreal. Before the recent increase of 17 per cent the rates were identical—41 cents per 100 pounds. On December 1, 1958 these rates became 48 cents as a result of the increase. Then the increase was taken off the Val d'Or to Montreal rate but the 17 per cent stayed on the Dalhousie rate. As a result the Dalhousie shipper must pay $1.40 per thousand superficial feet to get his lumber into Montreal than the Val d'Or shipper.

Or, take our canning industry in Nova Scotia. The rates from Hamilton to Middletown, Nova Scotia are class rates, which take the full 17 per cent increase. Rates on tin cans from Hamilton to Montreal, however, are under an agreed charge, and they were not touched.

We compete in Montreal with Toronto producers in the sale of electric stoves. The Enterprise Foundry, in Sackville, manufactures some of the finest stoves in Canada, and markets them all across this country. It is one of our biggest manufacturing concerns in the Maritimes, and it is very adversely affected by this freight increase. It ships, as do other manufacturers in Sackville, to Montreal. Our rate into Montreal went up 17 per cent in December, but Toronto's competitive rate was not touched.

Now, honourable senators, contrast this with what has happened in the West. The Crowsnest Pass agreement was made in September, 1897—I understood it was 1899, but it was 1897—and the rates which were set in 1897 are still the rates in 1959. There has been no inflation there. Moreover, in 1927 the rates on grain to Vancouver for export were reduced to make them equal to the rates to Fort William. The rate was set at .49 cents per ton mile and it is still .49 cents per ton mile, while the national average is 2.01 cents per ton mile.

Western grain accounts for over one-quarter of the ton miles of freight hauled by the Canadian railways. When you add to this the amount of traffic which moves at competitive rates it is apparent that non-competitive commodity rates have to bear the burden of those horizontal increases, and, as I have indicated, in that case the Atlantic provinces have the doubtful distinction of leading the rest of Canada.

We welcome this bill. Of course, we welcome it as a crumb. We also welcome the action of the Government in appointing a royal commission, but from what I have said this afternoon I am sure you must agree with me that in the matter of freight rates, which is a life and death matter to the industrial life of our section of the country, Canada has dealt more generously with the West than it has with the East.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, it will not surprise the house if I rise to my feet to make a few observations on the famous Crowsnest Pass rates. Before doing that, however, I would like to make a general reference to the principle of this bill.

Everyone who has given any thought to the problem understands that freight rates have been a difficult and vexing problem almost since Confederation. That is due, of course, to the physical character of our country, and to the fact that the great centres of population in this country are in the central part of the dominion. If you take the population of the three Maritime provinces, and include Newfoundland, you will see that it is hardly less than half of the population of Quebec. If you take the combined populations of the four western provinces you have substantially less than the present population of Ontario.

That, of course, is bound to affect this problem. It cannot be otherwise. We in the West—and when I speak of the West I speak of the area west of Fort William—have suffered the same disadvantages as have the Maritime provinces down by the Atlantic. It is quite true, as the honourable senator from Northumberland-Miramichi (Hon. Mr. Burchill) stated a few moments ago, that part of the undertaking of Confederation was the building of the Intercolonial Railway, and he may have been reasonably correct in the assumption that when that agreement was made for the construction of the Intercolonial Railway it carried with it the implication that rates on it would be such as would enable commerce to move from the Atlantic provinces to the central provinces, and vice versa. While it is worth bearing in mind that that was not a stipulation in the contract whereby the Intercolonial Railway was built, it may be a reasonable assumption.

The problem of the railways arises from the same source as do many other problems affecting industrialization. The railways' costs of operation have advanced enormously. It is not only the wages paid to the operating men who run the trains; it is not only the wages paid to the maintenance men who keep the road in proper condition, but it goes much further. Railways are large users of iron and steel. They are large consumers of lumber, of railway ties, and of coal and oil. In every one of these things that are necessary for their operation their costs have advanced enormously. I am bound to say there is a very real problem here. I am not so optimistic as to believe that the recently announced McTague Commission, which will inquire into the whole subject of transportation, will come up with any really effective answer, but it is to be hoped its recommendations will contribute something worth while to the solution of this difficult problem.

Having said this I wish, in a gentle and good-humoured way, to set a couple of my colleagues right about their criticism of the Crowsnest Pass rates. It is well to review the history of all this.

When the Canadian Pacific Railway was first mooted, it was a magnificent conception of tying this country together, and I think the building of it probably meant the retention in our Canadian Confederation of the area we now call British Columbia. At any rate, it was, in the best sense of the term, a "political road" at that time, and it was justified. But I would remind honourable senators that its promoters secured very definite assistance. It might be worth recalling that the company received $25 million in cash and a completed section of road in British Columbia, the value of which I forget at the moment, but it was very substantial. In addition the company received 25 million acres of land. It may be argued that the cash payments came largely from eastern Canada, from Ontario and Quebec. I do not deny this, but I venture to say that the 25 million of acres of land did not cost New Brunswick, Ontario, Nova Scotia or Quebec one paltry red cent. Another factor that should be borne in mind is that the C.P.R. got this land grant without any strings attached. It had an agreement with the Government to issue title when the land was selected by the company.

A very interesting thing happened with the building of the road through the Prairies. When they reached the town of Medicine Hat they found natural gas in very substantial quantities. It had never occurred to the Canadian Government to reserve mineral rights on any lands in the Prairie provinces, but with this discovery of natural gas in 1885 or 1887—I have forgotten which year—the mineral rights were reserved on all land disposed of by the federal Government. Bear that fact in mind.

There is another fact worth remembering. The Prairie provinces did not get their natural resources until 1930, only 30 years ago. Until then the federal Government had derived all revenue that came from timber dues, hay leases and things of that kind. When all resources were transferred to the provinces, in 1930, the mineral rights on lands transferred became the right of the Crown in the provinces, which held them from that time on. However, mineral rights had already been alienated with respect to practically 25 million acres of land acquired by the C.P.R. To day one of the very important sources of revenue the C.P.R. has is derived from development of the potentials of gas and oil on its lands, and the provinces do not directly get a red cent from this. The railway company is the sole owner. A few farmers went and homesteaded in southwestern Manitoba before 1885 and got title and have the mineral rights on their land. The same thing happened in Saskatchewan and Alberta. But for this vast amount of land, some 25 million acres of land grants, the mineral rights repose in the Canadian Pacific Railway.

I should perhaps qualify this comment to the extent that before the C.P.R. reserved the mineral rights it had already transferred here and there land that had been sold to incoming settlers, and in the agreements of sale to the settlers nothing was said about the mineral rights, but after the discovery of gas in Medicine Hat these mineral rights were reserved. I suggest to the house that they would bring a very substantial amount of revenue to the Prairie provinces today and would enable them to reduce taxes for the benefit of their people. It is well known that the province of Alberta has reaped huge revenues from lands and a large area of British Columbia and Saskatchewan was still open when the resources were transferred. I think that is a factor of some consequence.

As to the Crowsnest Pass agreement, which was made in 1897 at the instance of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which approached the Government for assistance, I have no fault to find. I think it was perhaps a wise thing. But in return for a cash subsidy of several millions of dollars—again my memory may be at fault, because I did not expect to participate in this debate, and therefore did not bother to look up the figures—and for a substantial grant of land, the C.P.R. made concessions on grain rates and flour eastward and westward on a line of certain commodities, as the honourable senior senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) said earlier in the discussion. That continued, curiously enough, until 1918 or 1919. Prior to that, because of war, costs had advanced very greatly, and so by order in council under the War Measures Act at that time the Crowsnest Pass rates were temporarily suspended. Some may recall the tremendous advance in wages of railway workers in the United States at that time, under the famed McAdoo award. Therefore, in order to keep the railways functioning, these rates were suspended. In 1919 legislation was brought in which, because the War Measures Act powers expired with the signing of peace, continued the abrogation of the rates for a further period of three years. That came up again in 1922. And thereby hangs a tale. Efforts were made to make the suspension complete, that is, to abrogate the effect of the Crowsnest Pass rates for the future. There was quite a battle over that, in which, may I say to the house, I had some little part.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: The justice of our case from the West was argued before a committee—the argument and evidence lasting longer probably than any other hearing before a committee of the House of Commons, before or since—and it was demonstrated, I think to the satisfaction of every reasonable person, that the Crowsnest Pass rates were profitable rates. I venture to say that they are profitable rates today. And why is that so? Look at the capital outlay, the capital cost of constructing a railway across a level prairie. Look further at the fact that a trainload of grain can be put together at Medicine Hat, Moose Jaw or Weyburn and taken right through to Fort William without any change, except perhaps a stop at Winnipeg so that samples of grain can be taken for inspection.

Hon Mr. Macdonald: Does the railway say that the rates are profitable today?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: No. I have yet to find anywhere a railway which will admit that any particular rates are profitable, but in the discussion before that committee I think it was established beyond any reasonable doubt at all that these rates were profitable rates.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: At that time.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: At that time; and I venture to say that they are still profitable rates for the railway.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Does my friend suggest that when the Board of Transport Commissioners has granted an increase in rates it is based on some false premise?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: To what increase is my honourable friend alluding?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The increases that have been granted on a number of occasions over the past few years.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: No. There is no doubt that railway costs have gone up. I suggest to the house, however, that the potential long-term revenue of the C.P.R. is a proper factor to set against the increase in grain rates advocated by some of our colleagues here today. And make no mistake about it, oil and gas, for instance, are going to be great sources of revenue in the future. I am convinced of that. Grain has to be hauled great distances, and I would like to see this commission make a thorough inquiry into the matter of the profitability or otherwise of the present Crowsnest Pass rates. May I point out that this commission has as one of its members one of the best informed men on freight rates in western Canada, namely, M. A. MacPherson, of Regina.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask if the Canadian National Railways are bound by the Crowsnest Pass rates?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Of course they are bound by those rates, by competition, if by nothing else.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: By statute.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: The problem of the Canadian National Railways has been with us from the very beginning. One person said wittily some years ago that the Canadian National Railways were a combination of junk, but I entirely dissent from this. The creation of the Canadian National Railways in 1919 was the only practical solution, emerging as it did from the Grand Trunk Railway, which went bankrupt on account of its guarantees on the Grand Trunk Pacific. There was not a province from British Columbia to Nova Scotia, I believe, that had not guaranteed bonds for some branch railway of the old Canadian Northern system and taken a mortgage on the mileage within the province to secure them. Now, a national railway built or assembled in that fashion certainly differed from the Canadian Pacific, which was built as an operating unit to make money.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Then we should not complain too much when the railway loses money?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Are you referring to the Canadian National Railways?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I understood you to say that railway was not built to make money. My question is, should we complain when it loses money?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: If I conveyed that impression to the honourable leader on this side, I conveyed quite a wrong impression. These railways, branch lines and other lines, were built on occasion from political considerations, and at other times because there was a rosy optimism abroad, something like we have at the present time, that we were for ever going up and up and up, and our population was going to expand by leaps and bounds and would continue to do so.

Hon. Mr. Haig: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? I think he has left out one point. When the bill abrogating the Crowsnest Pass agreement came before the House of Commons, under the Borden Government, was it not passed and sent on to the Senate, and was it not rejected by this house? Please answer that question.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: My honourable friend is right. When the bill was passed by the Commons in 1919, after a lapse when the rates were suspended under the War Measures Act, it provided for an abrogation of the rates for all time. However, when it came to this house a Conservative senator, who happened to be leader of the Government in the Senate at that time, the late Senator Lougheed, and a very eminent Liberal senator from Manitoba, Senator Watson, both insisted there be a limitation; and they stood together on putting into the bill a three-year limit, a provision that the abrogation would continue for only three years. That had the effect of its being brought up again in 1922. That is the story of that interesting part of Senate history.

I hope that the new royal commission will make a thorough inquiry into the Crowsnest Pass rates. I might remind the house that only some seven years ago a very extensive inquiry was conducted into the railway problems of this country by Mr. Justice Turgeon, who was at one time Chief Justice of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal. Mr. Justice Turgeon was a very able man.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is he the brother of one of our senators?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: His brother is sitting across the aisle from us.

Mr. Justice Turgeon inquired into all phases of the Crowsnest Pass rates and their incidence in the whole rate structure, and if you read the report that he made you will find a recommendation that these rates should not be tampered with. Now, that was an impartial inquiry. I am simply saying again that I trust the present commission will make an inquiry into those rates.

Hon. Mr. Golding: Would the honourable senator permit a question? Is he aware that this commission cannot interfere with those rates at all?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I believe my honourable friend is right. The Crowsnest Pass rates are excluded from review by the commission. My own view is that it might have been a good thing to have the commission inquire into this matter. It is a vexing problem and it has been a vexing problem for many years, and I may say it will continue to be a vexing problem for many years to come. There is no question whatever that in the whole scheme of our transport system in Canada, the central provinces, by their population, by their being situated so closely together, have an advantage. If you have a very thickly settled community where the volume of freight is large over short hauls, you have a different situation altogether from what it is in the much wider field. In the light of all the circumstances, I am bound to say that I do not think the criticism of the Crowsnest Pass rates that we have heard this afternoon is justified criticism.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Honourable senators, I move adjournment of the debate.

Hon. John T. Haig: May I say a word before the motion is adopted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, I have only a word or two to say on the bill, but first I want to congratulate the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) upon the speech he has just made.

I call attention of honourable senators to the House of Commons debates in the first session of 1919 on the Crowsnest Pass agreement, and at the same time I would suggest that they read the Senate debates of the same session. By so doing they will find out that something happened at that time which never happened before in the history of the country and has never happened since. A Conservative Government was in power in the House of Commons and proposed legislation to repeal the Crowsnest Pass rates agreement. The Senate had a Conservative majority at that time. In 1917 there was a Conservative majority of one in this house, but by 1919 that majority had increased to 10 or 15. Senator Watson, from Portage La Prairie, and Senator Lougheed from Calgary, joined together, and I must say that it was the first time on record, to my knowledge, when the Senate, although having a majority of Government supporters, refused to pass a Government measure that had come over here from the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Golding: May I now ask the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) a question? Is it not a fact that at that time a Union Government was in office, not a Conservative Government?

Hon. Mr. Haig: I know, but it had switched a little. I apologize for calling it a Conservative Government, for it was in fact a Union Government. I stand corrected and I thank my honourable friend.

Honourable senators, I want to urge you again to look up the debates in Hansard. It is really gratifying to realize that the senators of those days could stand up and do that sort of thing. I myself did not think it was possible until I read about it. I did not think it was possible for this house, with a majority on the same political side as the majority in the House of Commons, to postpone a very important piece of legislation received from the Commons. The Senate did not kill it, it postponed it for three years. Then in 1925, when the late Right Honourable Mackenzie King was in power, the Crowsnest Pass agreement legislation was made permanent.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I might remind the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg that on a number of occasions when he was Leader of the Opposition and I was Leader of the Government the Senate amended Government legislation. That 1919 incident was not unique.

Hon. Mr. Haig: That is different. I am not talking about amending legislation, but about refusing to pass it.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: Would the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg permit a question? I would like to ask whether he thinks that action by the Senate was good or bad.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The Senate performed a perfect act by doing that.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Horner, debate adjourned.

BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I would remind members of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce that there will be a meeting of that committee immediately after the Senate adjourns.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

(See p. 722)

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTIONS TO EDUCATION

INQUIRY BY HON. MR. WALL:

1. What has been the total contribution of the Federal Government to all forms of education in Canada during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959? It is requested that these expenditures be listed under the following headings:

—University grants, on a per capita basis

—Veterans Assistance
(a) University
(b) Vocational

—Atomic Energy Research grants

—National Research Council
(a) Research grants
(b) Scholarships, bursaries, assistantships
(c) Special activities
(d) Travel assistance

—Fisheries Department
(a) Research Board scholarships and grants
(b) Extension work on Co-operatives

—External Affairs:
fellowships and scholarships overseas

—Labour Department
(a) Vocational training
(b) Frontier College

—Mines and Technical Surveys
(a) Grants in aid of Geological research
(b) Grants—University of British Columbia—in aid of research in foreign geography

—National Health and Welfare Department
(a) Health facilities—Training grants
(b) Schools of social work
(c) Development of training facilities, bursaries and refresher courses

—Contributions to education by other Crown corporations
(a) Central Mortgage and Housing
(b) Others

—Transport Department
(a) Grants to schools of navigation and seamanship
(b) Contribution toward operation of marine engineering schools

—Contributions to education of Indians and Eskimos
(a) Indians
(b) Eskimos

—Additional contributions to education by federal Government departments or agencies not listed above

2. What are the estimated total contributions of the federal Government to all forms of education in Canada for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960, under categories given in Question 1?

The following is the answer insofar as it concerns the

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

1. Contributions to education of Indians:—

	Expenditures 1958–59	Estimate 1959–60
	$21,980,183.14 *	$25,097,354.00

2. Additional contributions to education.

CITIZENSHIP BRANCH

(a) Grants to provinces in support of citizenship and language instruction costs for immigrants..	248,062.19 *
(b) Cost of language text purchased for free distribution	125,055.00 *
(c) Grants to universities
(i) National Conference of Canadian Universities (Hungarian program)	1,500.00
(ii) University of Toronto (Mr. W. J. Morris, research)	2,000.00
(iii) University of Alberta (Linguistics seminar)	1,777.90
(iv) University of Toronto (Linguistics seminar)	476.00

(* These figures are subject to change on final audit)

IMMIGRATION BRANCH

Contribution to the University of British Columbia on behalf of the Sopron Forestry Faculty	84,000.00

The following is the answer insofar as it concerns the

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

	Actual Expenditure 1959	Estimated Expenditure 1960
Department of Defence Production	Nil	Nil
Crown Assets Disposal Corporation	Nil	Nil
Canadian Arsenals Limited	Nil	Nil
Canadian Commercial Corporation	Nil	Nil
Defence Construction (1951) Limited	Nil	Nil
Polymer Corporation Limited	$9,750	$30,750

The following is the answer insofar as it concerns the

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

1. By February 28, 1959, $37,289.22 has been paid in stipends and travel expenses to complete the obligations initiated in the preceding fiscal year under the Canadian Government Overseas Awards program, which was not renewed for the 1958-59 fiscal year.

2. None.

NATIONAL LIBRARY

The answer to this question will vary, depending upon the way in which the word education is defined.

The National Library gathers books and other library materials that, with certain exceptions, are available for the use of scholars anywhere in Canada; it maintains a union catalogue that enables scholars and others to locate books that are in any one of 130 libraries in the ten provinces; it compiles and publishes a monthly catalogue of new publications that relate to Canada, and also publishes other bibliographies and check-lists. If these activities are deemed to be educational, virtually the whole of the appropriations made available to the Library may be considered to be an expenditure on education.

If, on the other hand, a more formal definition is intended, few of the activities of the National Library could be termed educational. It offers no courses of study or instruction, and has no direct relationship with any educational institutions.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES

The answer to this question will vary, depending upon the way in which the word education is defined.

The Public Archives furnishes historical information to many individuals, provides research facilities for historians and others, and gathers documents, pictures, maps, etc., relating to the history of Canada. If these activities are deemed to be educational, a substantial proportion of the appropriation of the department may be considered to be an expenditure on education.

If, on the other hand, a more formal definition is intended, very few of the activities of the Archives could be termed educational. It offers no courses of study or instruction, and has no affiliation or direct relationship with any educational institution. However, the department does furnish copies of documents, pictures, maps, etc., to teachers, and many of these are used for classroom exhibits and for other instructional purposes.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-49, to provide for the establishment of a National Energy Board.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Haig, that this bill be placed on the Order Paper for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-53, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1960.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I would move that this bill be read the second time now. In that connection I would like to say that we have done our best to have copies of the bill available for senators. The Clerk has about 24 copies for distribution for any senator who requires them. I have had a copy since yesterday and the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) also has had a copy.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I think we all should have a copy of the bill before we proceed to discuss it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: There are 24 copies ready for distribution.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: But where are they?

66972-1—47½

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask the honourable leader if he expects to have further copies shortly?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Let it stand over for half an hour.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I understand copies are on their way here now from the printing bureau.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Let it stand over until later.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Adopting the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, would it be in order if I moved second reading of this bill later this day, after the copies are received?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I ask a question of the Leader of the Government? Does he anticipate that if the interim supply bill is given third reading and is passed by this chamber today there will be a royal assent later this day?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The plan is to have a royal asssent possibly at 5.45 this afternoon, if the supply bill is passed.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators, I really do think this is a remarkable way to proceed. Here we have an interim supply bill which involves some $600 million. I suggest to the Leader of the Government that we should have a little more time to look into the items.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: This is the usual supply bill which provides for one-sixth of the main estimates, and different proportions of certain other items.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I understand that.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: But I think we should let that matter stand for the moment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Stand.

RESTAURANT OF PARLIAMENT

CHANGE IN MEMBERSHIP OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Beaubien, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Reid be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Howard on the list of senators appointed to serve on the Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament on the Restaurant; and that a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—
DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn for the second reading of Bill C-38, to make provision for the reduction of certain class and commodity rates on freight traffic.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I assure you I will not detain you at any great length. I am in a rather difficult position, because yesterday the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) made the speech I had intended to make this afternoon on freight rates, and on the possibility that the Crowsnest Pass rates may be profitable.

We heard a very fine address from the honourable senator from Northumberland-Miramichi (Hon. Mr. Burchill), but for the life of me I cannot see why he would wish to place a burden on Saskatchewan or other western provinces because he feels the Maritimes work under some difficulty, unless he believes in the old saying that misery likes company. I sympathize with him, but for as long as I can remember I have heard of the subsidy on the coal hauled from the Maritimes, which amounts to a great many millions of dollars, and also of the Maritimes Freight Rates Act, and that sort of thing.

The honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), in his very fine address, mentioned that the Crowsnest Pass rates might not be realistic in these modern days, having regard to the advance in the costs of operation. But, honourable senators, let us look at the other side of the picture. I do not think any honourable senator has paid for more freight miles on livestock than I have. I can remember when it took sixteen days for a carload of horses to travel from Pontiac to Blaine Lake. If it was done in fourteen days I thought I was doing really well, but it sometimes took sixteen days. Today, because of heavier steel and better roadbeds, the journey can be done in a much shorter time. In those days we were often delayed for hours. The trainmen would watch for a great light on the side of the train which indicated that the old-fashioned axle-boxes had gone on fire. There would be flames bursting forth, and the train crew would have to get off and pour on water.

Those box cars have been increased in size. They are fitted with Timken bearings. Huge diesel engines haul very long trains and, as the honourable senator from Churchill suggested, our flat plains in the West are ideally suited for the hauling of very long trains. That is the other side of the picture. While costs and wages have increased, modern equipment has made it possible for the railways to operate more cheaply.

Honourable senators, we have a committee which is studying inflation, which we are worried about. We are also worried about the threat that the cold war will not turn into a war with armaments but into an economic war. For the life of me I cannot imagine any other country suffering as much as Canada would from an economic war. Canada is in a very difficult position. There are great areas of the country over which grain, for instance, has to be hauled. The products of the Maritimes also have to be hauled over long distances. This is a vast country. We are faced with economic competition which may be greater than any we have had to face in the past. As far as our railways are concerned, I have always maintained that we should render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; in other words, that the railways should be allowed to handle all freight traffic that they are really entitled to handle. I well remember that a few years ago the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) warned we may have been passing here legislation that would remove from the federal Government the right to control interprovincial trade. I was certainly opposed to it if it had any such implication.

I am an advocate of safety on our highways. I have mentioned before in this chamber an experience I had in 1949 when I encountered seven or eight huge vans on what seemed to me to be a very narrow road between the Head of the Lakes and Winnipeg. Our two transcontinental railways operate fairly close together in this area but carry very little traffic, yet we find huge motor vans, almost the size of railway box cars, crossing the Ontario-Manitoba border. If all that freight business were given to the railways there would be no problem of loss of revenue to the railways. As far as the economic aspect is concerned, the truck drivers would be employed at doing something else.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: This is a form of planned economy, I take it.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Not particularly. It is just a matter of common sense. For one thing, it is a matter of public safety on our highways. The railway companies have built and maintained their roads, but our highways are becoming clogged with huge transports. Just recently we read in the press of difficulties encountered by Canadian truckers carrying cargo over American highways. Many honourable senators are familiar with the amazing story of the silk trains of years ago. Even in those days the speed at which they transported their goods from Vancouver to New York was amazing. I remember seeing one time a huge Canadian transport lying upset on the other side of Duluth and its cargo spilled all over the highway. It looked to me as though the driver had fallen asleep at the wheel and, naturally, without any rails to hold it, the truck had gone off the road in a great smash-up. Well, I suppose insurance would cover the loss, but all that adds to the costs and deprives the railways of business. Just recently we learned that the Trans-Canada Highway, before it is even completed, will have to be enlarged. Why? Because it will have to accommodate a lot of traffic that I maintain should be handled by the railways.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Why?

Hon. Mr. Horner: Because the railways are absolutely essential to our grain growing provinces of western Canada. It is essential that we have a freight rate that will enable us to compete with other countries in the export of grain. The railways are necessary to our economy and they should be given this freight business that rightfully belongs to them, and the highways should be left for the purpose for which they were designed, passenger car travel. The highways should not be allowed to become cluttered with trucks and transports that present a great danger to passenger vehicles.

Our railways now have a "piggy-back" service. In England there are what they call luggage vans, which are somewhat smaller than our box cars. I recall being in the marshalling yard in Liverpool when a huge crane moved several of these vans in a few minutes' time. It just picked them up and put them on trucks. I suppose they would be delivered around the town, brought back and set on the rails again. I know of no better way of possibly preventing inflation than by eliminating unnecessary duplication of transportation services. We have instances of such duplication in Saskatchewan. For example, the Canadian Government railway between Saskatchewan and Regina decided to run what is called a dayliner, a very fast train, one running in the morning and another at night. The Saskatchewan Government, which is in the bus transportation business as well as the railway business, put on buses to run at the identical times that the dayliner runs. So you have the people's bus line and the people's railroad operating side by side. I have been in a railway passenger car that was only half full, and at the same time a bus would be travelling in the same direction along the highway with only a few people in it. The same things occur in the northern part of the province. Now, cross-country service is absolutely necessary, even to the point of subsidizing freight or a bus system. Of course, under a system of free enterprise we are somewhat handicapped, but I cannot imagine that sort of thing happening in some other countries with which we are forced to compete.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Do you think it would be better if we had a socialized state?

Hon. Mr. Horner: I did not say so.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: No.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: Would you suggest that we use bus lines and close down the railroads?

Hon. Mr. Horner: You could only do that in a socialized state.

The honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) made a remark the other day to the effect that the road to Churchill is a white elephant.

Hon. Mr. Euler: No. Excuse me. I mentioned the Saskatchewan dam as a white elephant, not the road to Churchill.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Oh, I beg your pardon. However, I should mention that the road to Churchill was all paid for by lands set aside by the West. Other parts of Canada were not taxed for construction of that road.

So far as the Crowsnest Pass agreement is concerned, there were millions of dollars contributed to the C.P.R., as well as an additional grant of land, which I think extended some 25 miles on either side of the railway through the pass. Honourable senators, I sincerely hope we shall not hear any more of tampering in any way with the Crowsnest Pass agreement, unless of course the rates are lowered. That is the only proposition I would be in favour of, and I hope there will be no proposal to raise the rates.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, in rising to participate in this debate, may I say at the outset it is not my intention to discuss at this time the entire freight rate structure. As honourable senators who have spoken before me have stated, these are matters for discussion either before a commission or in committee. However, I did take the time to look up a splendid report, which I would advise honourable senators to look at. This report resulted from a discussion in a House of Commons committee in 1922, when the question of the Crowsnest Pass rates was fully discussed. It may interest honourable senators to know that among the members of that committee were the present honourable senators from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) and Churchill (Hon. Mr.

Crerar), and that the senior honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) appeared before the committee. I found the discussion extremely interesting indeed. The report contains nearly all the facts of the Crowsnest Pass agreement.

Honourable senators, I particularly rose to my feet on account of a statement made by the honourable member from Northumberland-Miramichi (Hon. Mr. Burchill), who told about the way his province of New Brunswick had been treated. After hearing him I felt that I should get up and speak of a worse situation, namely, the treatment of British Columbia as a result of the Crowsnest Pass rates.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: British Columbia is the most prosperous province in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Well, we can be thankful for the ingenuity of our people and the resources that God gave us for our prosperity, because we developed British Columbia despite the eastern provinces of Ontario and Quebec. As a matter of fact, I remember that at one time—and I quoted this before a commission—we were buying $50 million worth of goods from Ontario, whereas in the same year Ontario only bought something like $4½ million from British Columbia. We recognized in those days that we need not look to the central provinces for any help in the development of British Columbia. And we are somewhat proud we developed despite Ottawa.

Honourable senators, I do not want to digress—not but that I sometimes enjoy it, but I would prefer to keep to the points I wish to discuss.

It is not generally known that besides the $25 million, there were 25 million acres of land granted to the C.P.R. toward the building of a branch line, shall I say, into the Crowsnest Pass. There probably are many senators who think there is just the main line into British Columbia, but that is not so. One of the things that tempted the C.P.R. to build into the Crowsnest Pass was the supply of coal and minerals, and later, following the building of the railway, the coal mines started up, as did also the Trail smelter. I would not say the Trail smelter is under the jurisdiction of the C.P.R., but the C.P.R. has a large financial interest in it; it is looked upon as partly at least belonging to the C.P.R. May I point out to honourable senators that British Columbia is the only province in Canada that contributed beyond what the dominion Government contributed toward the building of the Crowsnest Pass railway. I want to make that clear. The province of British Columbia gave 12 million acres, plus 3½ million acres in the Peace River country. Actually British Columbia gave a grant of 3,755,733 acres in the Peace River country including 50,000 acres of coal lands. In that district the mountains were mineralized, and the C.P.R. obtained some wonderfully rich coal seams.

I was rather interested to find that there was a violation of the agreement with the dominion Government in regard to this coal, and it is a very interesting story. The agreement in connection with 50,000 acres of coal lands stated that coal had to be delivered at the pithead mouth for the general public at $2 per ton. That, I realize, was many years ago. But nowadays some people are so afraid of violating the Crowsnest Pass agreement that they seem to think the Crowsnest Pass rates are on the same level as acts of God and you dare not interfere with them lest disaster ensue.

Be reminded that the dominion Government overlooked that agreement on coal. I don't say they should now be held to it, but it was a definite agreement written into the laws of this country providing that coal had to be sold to the public of British Columbia at $2 per ton, and that agreement was allowed to disappear after a few years.

In British Columbia our great fight with the railways is based on the fact that after granting those gifts—and I repeat that no other province has contributed as much to the Canadian Pacific Railway—we later found and still do find ourselves paying an exorbitant rate on grain shipped to British Columbia for domestic use, compared with the rate charged on grain hauled to British Columbia for export to outside countries. On grain for use in British Columbia the present rate from Calgary or Edmonton to Vancouver is 78 cents per 100 pounds. If that is a fair rate, what can be said about the rate of 20 cents per 100 pounds which is charged on grain shipped in the next car on the same train going from Calgary to Vancouver for export? I remember appearing before the Board of Transport Commissioners—it is true it was in the tough days of 1930 to 1935—and there showing by the bills of lading that we were able to buy Canadian-grown wheat from Japan and bring it back into the Fraser Valley cheaper than we could buy it direct from Calgary or Edmonton.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But it was not as good as Canadian wheat?

Hon. Mr. Reid: It was Canadian wheat.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What grade of wheat was it?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Grade 4 or 5. But it costs the same to haul grade 1 as grade 5 or even grade 10. That question of grade has no bearing. We could have bought No. 1 or No. 2 wheat if it had been shipped out to those countries, but Japan and China at that time were buying wheat of a cheaper grade for their citizens.

We have long suffered that great injustice without any redress. British Columbia has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in appearances before the Board of Transport Commissioners. That board was set up with a view to protecting ordinary citizens from exploitation by the Canadian Pacific Railway, but over the past number of years I have come to the conclusion that the board seemed to be favouring the railways and paying little attention to appeals of ordinary citizens. And I may say that a similar course of action seems to be followed by many such commissions. They were set up under proposed good auspices and with good intent to protect the public, but after a while they come to preserve the vested interests and so the Canadian people seem to be entirely ignored.

I come back to this rate of 20 cents per 100 pounds. If the railways are making a profit out of carrying grain at this rate, or if the rate is enough to charge for transporting this grain from Calgary or Edmonton to the British Columbia coast, then we are being soaked to the limit when charged 78 cents per 100 pounds on wheat being transported the same distance on the same train and sometimes, mark you, in the same car. I repeat that the grain we buy for use in British Columbia is transported at a rate of 78 cents per 100 pounds, but if the grain is going to some overseas country the rate to Vancouver is 20 cents per 100 pounds. Do you wonder that we feel bitter at the great injustice that is being done to us?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Will the honourable senator permit a question? If there had been no Crowsnest Pass rates agreement would everybody have had to pay the rate of 78 cents per 100 pounds? That is the regular rate set by the commission, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Reid: I do not know the answer to that question and neither do you. The 78-cent rate is an arbitrary rate, based on what the traffic will bear. The railways are not able to tell you whether 78 cents is ample or not enough to pay the costs. You heard a senator suggest here yesterday that the railways could make it pay at a 20-cent rate. Well, we might have a rate of 40 cents or 50 cents per 100 pounds. What we want is equality with the rest of Canada, and after what we have given to the railways we think it is coming to us, but so far we have not got it.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Would the honourable senator say who set the rate of 78 cents, which he described as an arbitrary rate?

Hon. Mr. Reid: The railways set the rate, not the Board of Transport Commissioners. And may I say to the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins) we could not carry on today were it not for the fact that the Government gives us, as it gives every other province, a grant to help out on domestic freight charges. I think that so far the Government has paid out for assistance in the payment of freight charges on shipments of feed grain approximately $300 million.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is on feed grain?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Yes. We could not carry on were it not for those payments.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is on shipments of livestock feed, not of grain for human consumption.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Grain for livestock feed, yes. It is probably wheat from No. 4 grade down which receives that assistance.

I contend, but the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) might dispute it, that the three Prairie provinces have been long subsidized and are still being subsidized by receiving this 20-cent rate on their grain shipped abroad.

Hon. Mr. Horner: No.

Hon. Mr. Reid: You are from the Prairies and naturally you would champion that 20-cent rate, but if the railways are losing money and we are now contributing millions to them from the finances of the country as a whole, the country is certainly subsidizing a considerable portion of the cost of moving the wheat.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Have you ever heard of lower rates on quantity shipments? The little bit of grain that you need in British Columbia does not amount to anything, but we ship out enormous quantities to foreign markets.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I know. You are exporting about 200 million bushels through the port of Vancouver on which the rate from the Prairies to Vancouver is 20 cents per 100 pounds, against 78 cents per 100 pounds on grain on the same train and maybe in the same car consigned to British Columbia. Can you explain that to me?

Hon. Mr. Haig: The honourable senator has not answered my question yet.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I did answer it. I try to answer all questions. I have never yet refused to answer a question in all the time I have been in Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Haig: My question is this: If there were no Crowsnest Pass rates agreement everybody would be paying the rate of 78 cents per 100 pounds as fixed by the commission, is that not right?

Hon. Mr. Reid: I do not think so. That rate is fixed by the railways, subject to approval by the Board of Transport Commissioners. Anybody can appear before that board and appeal against the rate.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I would say that your province is the greatest appealer of all. What would the rate be if there were no Crowsnest Pass rates agreement?

Hon. Mr. Reid: I don't know. I may say this to the honourable senator, that the railways themselves, when they with their counsel and staff have been before the Board of Transport Commissioners, have repeatedly been asked how much it costs them to haul that grain, and they have come forward and said "We can't tell you." Now, for the honourable senator to ask me if a certain figure is adequate—

Hon. Mr. MacDonald: That is a compliment.

Hon. Mr. Reid: He cannot expect me to answer the question when the railways themselves can't tell us how they arrive at the rate of 78 cents which we now pay.

I hope the Prime Minister will make a definite statement regarding the commission that is now being set up to investigate the railways. Many people in this country believe that the commission will have no power to look into the question of freight rates on grain, and I am one of those who, in company with others, have said that an investigation of the railway situation will be a kind of farce unless the commission goes into the grain rates, especially the Crowsnest Pass rates.

I am on fairly sound ground on that statement. Let me support it by quoting an editorial from a recent copy of the Financial Post:

> Ottawa has intimated that it will exclude the Crowsnest Pass grain rates from the field to be investigated by the royal commission on railway transportation and freight rates.
>
> This seems to be an unrealistic limitation to the scope of the probe.
>
> Grain represents about one-fourth of all the railway freight traffic in Canada. To ignore it is about the same as telling a mechanic to make a complete overhaul of a car but not to touch the engine. As C.P.R. President Crump has said, "When so large a segment of rail traffic is exempt from any and every adjustment in the freight rate structure, distortion is inevitable."
> The Crowsnest Pass rates on grain came into force exactly 60 years ago. They have not been changed since. In the meantime railway costs have doubled, trebled and quadrupled. Railways wages in 1899 were only a fraction of what the railways must pay today.

As a matter of interest I looked up the wages that were paid on the railway in those days, and I noted that an engineer got $3.25 a day. That was the going rate in the days when the Crowsnest Pass rates came in.

I continue reading:

> A whole train could have been bought then for little more than a single freight car costs now. And 10 times as much grain must be carried today at these turn-of-the-century charges.
> What the railroads lose on carrying grain—and estimates run as high as $200 million a year—they must make up by charging other commodities more. And what has happened? The railways have been left to carry virtually all the grain, but competitors have cut in steadily on the other and profitable business.
>
> "It is impossible for any Royal Commission on railway problems, to ignore the fixed charges on grain and still carry out its assignment," says an Ottawa commentator. He is right. The railway inquiry should get a clear right of way. Half a loaf may be better than none, but half a probe is just about worthless.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: What is the date of the Financial Post from which my friend is reading?

Hon. Mr. Reid: May 30, 1959.

Hon. Mr. Davies: May I ask the honourable senator what is the rate from the Prairie provinces to Fort William?

Hon. Mr. Reid: I don't know what the rate is, but I can tell you that the dividing point on the hauling of grain by rail is a place called Kindersley. That means that grain moving from Kindersley to the Lakehead is carried 1,030 miles; and grain moving from Kindersley west, 1,070 miles. The cost of hauling that grain either east or west for export is 24 cents per 100 pounds.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The rate charged is 24 cents?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is not necessarily the cost?

Hon. Mr. Reid: No.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: May I ask my friend one question? He made a statement a few moments ago that the loss by the railways on the carrying of grain amounted to around $200 million.

Hon. Mr. Reid: That is the estimate, yes.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Who made that estimate, the railway companies?

Hon. Mr. Reid: All I can say is that that is the figure according to the article in the Financial Post. As I said at the beginning of the last few remarks, I was using their figures. Had I used my own figures, I would have had proof of their source. I quoted the Financial Post as a usually reliable source.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, I would like for a few moments to discuss this question of the Crowsnest Pass agreement, which was raised yesterday, without prejudice of any kind, regardless of my geographic position or any other factor.

First, may I say that, whatever the newly appointed commission may do, it should attempt to find some answer to the suggestion that the Crowsnest Pass agreement provides an unprofitable traffic for the railways of this country. I think it is a fair statement to make, and a true statement, that up to now no adequate evidence has been adduced at the innumerable investigations that have been held before the Board of Transport Commissioners and elsewhere that that traffic is not profitable to the railways of this country. That is the sixty-four-dollar-question that has to be answered.

I do not think that all the discussion that we may have here about the present condition of the railroads in relation to the application of the Crowsnest Pass agreement will throw very much light on that subject. But, yesterday, during the course of the debate the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen)—and I am sorry that he is not here just now to hear what I have to say—made some reference to the Crowsnest Pass agreement, and he was good enough to permit me to ask him a question about rates under that agreement applying to goods shipped westward from eastern Canada. My purpose in rising now is to supply some information; in other words, to answer my own question by supplying some information which neither he nor I had at hand yesterday.

The Crowsnest Pass agreement, in addition to providing special rates on grain and flour eastbound, also made a reduction in the general rates and tolls of the C.P.R., which was the only railway affected at that time, for carloads or otherwise, upon the following classes of merchandise "from and including Fort William and all points east of Fort William on the company's railway to all points west of Fort William on the company's main line, or on any line of railway throughout Canada owned or leased by or operated on account of the company, whether the shipment is by all rail line or by lake and rail". Those commodities included:

—all green and fresh fruits, 33⅓ per cent;
Coal oil, 20 per cent;
Cordage and binder twine, 10 per cent;
Agriculture implements of all kinds, set up or in parts, 10 per cent;
Iron, including bar, band, Canada plates, galvanized, sheet, pipe, pipe-fittings, nails, spikes and horse shoes, 10 per cent;
All kinds of wire, 10 per cent;
Window glass, 10 per cent;
Paper for building and roofing purposes, 10 per cent;
Roofing felt, box and packing, 10 per cent;
Paints of all kinds and oils, 10 per cent;
Livestock, 10 per cent;
Woodenware, 10 per cent;
Household furniture, 10 per cent;
Provided . . . that no higher rates than such reduced rates or tolls shall be hereafter charged by the company upon any such merchandise carried by the company between the points aforesaid; such reductions to take effect on or before the first of January, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight.

I think that that information is sufficient to show that there were two sides to the Crowsnest Pass agreement rates, the first applying especially to the grain and flour of western Canada, and the other to that list of commodities from places such as the one where my honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) resides, namely, Brantford, which must have derived a great deal of revenue from that new and developing market in western Canada. That condition—

Hon. Mr. Isnor: From which point?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: It is from:

—all points east of Fort William on the company's railway to all points west of Fort William on the company's main line—

That would include, I suppose, the area that the C.P.R. went through in the Maritime provinces.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: It is not likely.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: But it applied to the other roads as well, the Canadian National and others.

In 1935 Parliament made a readjustment, and there is a reference to that in Hansard of that time, I am not going to spend much time in dealing with it, but it was a readjustment. Perhaps I may quote from the report of the Turgeon Royal Commission on Transportation, issued in 1951, at page 241:

In 1925 Parliament made a readjustment of these Crowsnest Pass rates by legislation which altered the position of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in two respects. In the first place the legislation relieved the company definitely of its obligation to maintain reduced rates on certain westbound traffic, and since then the rates on this traffic have been and still are subject only to the authority of the Board of Transport Commissioners.

In the second place the legislation extended the company's obligation respecting eastbound rates on grain and flour by making it apply, not only to traffic moving from points on the company's lines in existence when the contract was made, as was provided in 1897, but to all the company's lines west of Fort William whenever constructed.

This applied to all of the other lines of railway, including the C.P.R. in western Canada, after 1925.

Before this legislation was passed by Parliament in 1925 the Government had given a direction to the Board of Railway Commissioners, through Order in Council P.C. 886, to investigate the rate structure of the railways of Canada in order to bring about equalization of rates between persons and localities "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions". This wide field of investigation and action opened up to the board under this Order in Council was limited only by the exclusion from it of the Crowsnest Pass rates on grain and flour, and that instruction, of course was reflected in the legislation which I have just mentioned when the amendment to the act finally came before Parliament.

A similar direction was expressed to the Board of Transport Commissioners in 1948, in Order in Council P.C. 1487, which was a directive to inquire into the same field as was indicated in the earlier Order in Council.

Therefore, it is not surprising that the same exception is made in connection with this legislation where the Crowsnest Pass rates on grain and flour, and also the Maritime Freight Rates Act, are exempted from the proposed adjustment of certain class and commodity rates.

Many arguments have been heard over the years before the Board of Transport Commissioners and in Parliament regarding this Crowsnest Pass agreement and, as I have already said, no adequate evidence has yet been presented to prove that the traffic carried by the railways under the agreement has not been profitable. As a matter of fact, a young gentleman named Mr. Hugh Horner, member of Parliament for Jasper-Edson, dealt effectively with this matter in a speech in the other place on May 18. It is to be found in Hansard at pages 2756-57.

Referring to the annual report of the Department of Transport for 1957, Mr. Horner found that the Hudson Bay Railway in that year produced a surplus of $34,000 before depreciation and interest on investments. It handled 660,000 tons of freight, 78 per cent of which was wheat for export—that is to say, wheat moving under Crowsnest rates—and 46,000 passengers making up the balance of the traffic for the Hudson Bay Railway that year. He stated:

> We are not being subsidized in western Canada because of the Crowsnest Pass rates at the present time. If the Hudson Bay Railway, with obsolete track and poor equipment, can make out-of-pocket expenses, then surely the Canadian Pacific Railway is making out-of-pocket expenses hauling our grain where they have a massive tonnage and where its equipment and lines are in much better condition.

Hon. Mr. MacDonald: What about the C.N.R.?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I will cover that point. Mr. Horner added that the same situation prevailed on the Northern Alberta Railway, which serves an agricultural area in northwestern Alberta and handles a great deal of grain traffic. That is an area where the C.N.R. is represented, as well as the C.P.R.

The Crowsnest rates represent, of course, one side of a bargain into which the C.P.R. entered voluntarily. The railway is anxious, according to the evidence that has been adduced at various hearings of the Board of Transport Commissioners, to keep the vast revenues which flow to it from the assets turned over to it by the Government of Canada as the other side of the bargain. To justify or support its claim that one part of the agreement should now be wiped out, while the validity of the other is preserved, it contends that the Crowsnest rates have become too burdensome to bear. But it has yet to establish a case that will stand the light of day.

The honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) emphasized that aspect of the problem yesterday when he referred to the vast resources of oil and gas that have been uncovered in western Canada, particularly Alberta and Saskatchewan. From those assets, if they are kept on one side of the ledger, revenues which are not brought into the case at all in relation to the cost of carrying freight, then you have a one-sided picture which, I am quite sure, no fair-minded member of this house or the other house would view with approval.

It is worth while mentioning that in the first place the Crowsnest Pass agreement was passed to enable the railway to build a line from Lethbridge through the Crowsnest Pass to Cranbrook and Nelson. That resulted ultimately in the development of the great mining industry at Trail known as the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, which has proven a valuable source of revenue to the railway company which still owns it. I think it is worth while remembering the fact that the Crowsnest Pass agreement rates not only resulted in the agreement which we have been referring to but also in that source of mineral wealth which the railway owns.

In conclusion, I would simply point out that to press a campaign against the Crowsnest Pass rates on grain and flour at this time, as an aftermath of granting a 17 per cent increase in general rates to enable the railways to ingratiate organized labour and prevent a strike, is hardly a fair or logical line of argument to advance in connection with this bill. If the railways of this country can continuously shift their labour problems to the lap of Government and thence to the shoulders of the Canadian taxpayers, we have indeed reached an era of special privilege in this country. To me this is the nub of the question, and not the Crowsnest Pass agreement.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Euler, debate adjourned.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4

SECOND READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved, with leave, the second reading of Bill C-53, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1960.

He said: Honourable senators, I understand that copies of this bill have been distributed for some time, and in view of what I stated earlier this afternoon I take it that I may proceed to explain the bill now.

This is the usual interim supply bill introduced from time to time. On some occasions a month's supply is voted and on other occasions the amount voted covers two months' supply. It is not usual to vote at any one time supply that will last longer than 60 days.

The purpose of this bill is to vote money for the public service for the financial year 1959-60, and in particular for the months of June and July. The total main estimates for the fiscal year 1959-60, as honourable senators know from the Blue Book, amount to $6,296,336,356.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Does that amount include the supplementaries?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No. On Monday last supplementary estimates were distributed, and I tabled a copy of them on Tuesday. All honourable senators have a copy. They amount to $120,529,834. It is usual to make up the estimates in October and November of each year but frequently it is found that when Parliament assembles and matters are gone into in more detail, certain supplementary estimates have to be provided for.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Has it ever happened that they were over-estimated in the first place?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am not aware of that, and I cannot very well give my honourable friend an answer. However, I will say this, that the total of the main estimates, plus the supplementary estimates, amounts to $6,416,866,190. Of that amount, $2,655,713,285 is statutory. The remainder, $3,761,152,905, requires to be voted.

The previous supply bill for April and May, which was Appropriation Act No. 2, 1959, provided for one-sixth generally of the main estimates, plus additional proportions of 12 special items to provide for expenditures during the months of April and May. These amounted to $616,654,878.69.

Bill C-53, known as Appropriation Act No. 4, provides for one-sixth generally of the main and supplementary estimates, plus additional proportions of 20 special items to provide for expenditures during the months of June and July. The total is $634,617,069.95. If the amounts of Appropriation Act No. 2 and Appropriation Act No. 4 are added together we obtain a total of $1,251,271,948.63.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask a question? I suppose the information I seek is in the estimates, but can the honourable leader tell us what is the total annual charge by way of interest on the national debt?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, I am afraid I cannot give that information. I was not expecting to be asked that question.

Honourable senators, I would like to deal with this bill in a little more detail. I have already said that it provides for the voting of one-sixth of the items in the main estimates, namely, $606,770,511.84. It also provides for the following: an additional seven-twelfths of Votes 66 and 102, referred to in Schedule A, on page 3 of the bill, amounting to $350,000; an additional one-third of Votes 136 and 263, referred to in Schedule B, on page 4 of the bill, amounting to $824,276.67; an additional one-sixth of Votes 25, 133 and 358, referred to in Schedule C, on page 5 of the bill, amounting to $1,492,983.34 and for an additional one-twelfth of Votes 6, 27, 161, 190, 191, 192, 194, 196, 200, 204, 205, 210 and 282, referred to in Schedule D on pages 6 and 7 of the bill amounting to $5,090,992.42. As I stated before in respect of supplementary estimates for 1959-60, the bill provides also for one-sixth of all the items to be voted in these estimates. That amount is $20,088,305.67, making the total voted by this bill $634,617,069.94.

Honourable senators, as I have already stated, the proportions requested in this bill are intended to provide for all necessary requirements of the public service up to July 31. I hope that does not mean that we shall be here until then. But if the Government had asked for supply for only one month some persons might have said that the Government was trying to hold a club over the head of Parliament in an attempt to bring about prorogation within that period. The fact that this bill provides for two months' supply has nothing to do with the date of prorogation.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I hope not.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In no instance is the total amount of an item being released by this bill.

Honourable senators will note that the form of this bill is the same as that of the one passed two months ago and of similar interim supply bills passed last year, which were drafted in that form, in accordance with a suggestion made by the honourable Leader of the Opposition in this house (Hon. Mr. Macdonald).

The passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of honourable senators to criticize any item in the estimates when they come up for consideration in the final supply bill. The usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

Honourable senators, that is a general explanation of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I should like to ask one question before the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) replies. The honourable leader mentioned 20 special items.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Are those new items?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No; they are in the main estimates.

A portion of the total amount is required ahead of time on account of the work that is being done, or that has to be done during June and July. For instance, if you refer to Schedule D you will find that much of the expenditure listed there is in connection with surveys of one kind or another which have to be made in different parts of the country in the summer months, but these are not new items at all.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Are they included in the various schedules mentioned by you, A, B, C and D?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: They are all included here.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Is the expense incurred by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for transferring troops from Moncton to St. John's, Newfoundland, shown?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not think there is any reference to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police at all. That probably would be in the supplementary estimates, if it is in at all.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, as stated by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), this is a type of bill which it is necessary to pass in order to give the Government supply which it needs for carrying on the business of the country until all the estimates have been approved by Parliament.

Did I understand the Leader of the Government to say, in reply to a question by the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor), that there was no provision at this time for any of the amounts which appear in the supplementary estimates?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The bill provides for one-sixth of the supplementary estimates.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, the bill provides for one-sixth of the supplementary estimates. So the supplementary estimates are definitely included in this bill and probably that is the reason why the Government brought down the supplementary estimates last Thursday or Friday and they were tabled in this house on Tuesday. The Government could have waited until next week to bring down the supplementary estimates, but if it had done that it would not have got the benefit of this bill. I have no doubt that the supplementary estimates were brought down last week in order that the Government might get the benefit of this bill.

The bill provides for the expenditure of a very large sum of money, something in excess of half a billion dollars. That is a lot of money.

The Leader of the Government has said, and quite correctly, that in most instances this bill provides for one-sixth of the amount set forth in the estimates. That is to say, after this bill is passed the Government will be able to carry on the business of the country until the end of July, and of course if Parliament does not prorogue by that time it will be necessary to bring down another interim supply bill.

This is a necessary bill and of course I would not object to it. I do not think anybody in this house would object to the bill in this form, although there might be objection to some items in it.

Honourable senators, the question has often been asked, to what extent are the expenditures of the country increasing? I have a table which sets forth the total estimates of budgetary expenditures from the fiscal year 1950-51 until this year, 1959-60. It shows that the total expenditures, including the supplementaries, for 1950-51, were $2,926,-800,000, and for the last fiscal year, that is up to March 31, 1959, the total expenditures amount of $5,508,500,000.

Now, honourable senators, I am going to make a few observations. The total budgetary expenditures for the fiscal year 1958-59, including supplementaries, amounted to $5,179,-000,000, and this year the main estimates amount to $5,595,000,000, which is an increase of $416 million up to the present. And to be added to that are the present supplementary estimates of $120 million. So honourable senators will see our expenditures for this year are going up considerably over those of last year.

There is no doubt in my mind that before the present fiscal year is over the total Government expenditures will be in excess of $6 billion, which will be the largest expenditure made by any Government at any time in our history, including the war years. I do not think there is any doubt but that figure will be reached.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: It will be more than that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Well, that is a conservative suggestion—not a progressive conservative suggestion, but just an ordinary conservative one.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: A liberal conservative one.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I will let it go for the time being at $6 billion. Honourable senators, I merely mention this so that we will realize we are in the spending business in a very large way.

I will close my remarks with the statement that I think it is necessary for us to pass this bill in order that the Government will get the money to pay its ordinary expenses, make progress payments on various works that are going on throughout the country, pay the wages and salaries of soldiers, sailors, airmen and civil servants. All these payments have to be provided for and this is the only way it can be done.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, the remarks that I shall make will be rather brief for the needs of the occasion. I would suggest to the house that when we are considering interim supply is really the occasion when we have an opportunity to examine into the proposals put forward by the Government for spending the taxpayer's money, because it has been my invariable experience that at the end of the session when the final supply bill comes to us there is very little time to discuss it. Consequently, if we wish to criticize the total volume of spending, if we wish to direct criticism to any particular aspect of spending, if we desire information on any of the items in the estimates, I submit that this is about the most effective opportunity we have to receive information.

That is why I protested a bit when the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) suggested we should proceed with this measure today. I have no objection to our giving the second and third readings to the bill today because, obviously, the Government must be put in funds to pay its wages and salaries and other expenditures at the middle of June. So we are under the necessity of considering the bill. I do repeat, however, that the occasions on which we consider interim supply, the provisional votes, are really the only occasions on which we have an effective opportunity to discuss the financial spending of the administration.

I think the leader on this side (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) was a little optimistic when he indicated that the spending this year might reach $6 billion. I would point out that in the main estimates Parliament is asked to provide, in round figures, $5,595 million and we are asked by way of supplementaries recently put before Parliament to provide another $120 million. I point out to the house that neither of those items includes the amount for old age security, which amount, according to the estimate in the Blue Book, is $577 million. So, if we approve the main estimates, the supplementary estimates already before Parliament, and of course the old age security, which is statutory, we reach a total of almost $6,200 million.

I should think it altogether probable that we may have further supplementary estimates, perhaps not before Parliament prorogues, but in the usual practice at the end of the fiscal year.

Honourable senators, I do think that this vast amount of spending should be of serious concern to Parliament. We have recently passed through a period of recession in our economy. Very fortunately, the evidence seems pretty clear that we are moving out of it. But I am not by any means so optimistic as to believe that we are going to move out of it continuously. We have had these periods in the past, and we shall have them in the future, notwithstanding all our efforts to control, direct and improve our economy. So the wise thing for Parliament to do in these circumstances, it appears to me, is to go cautiously on spending.

Not only have we an unbalanced federal budget, but we are finding that spending is increasing sharply in almost every provincial administration, irrespective of its political affiliation. The same may be said for all the larger municipalities, where the political factor does not enter in at all. I am convinced that we have generated throughout the whole public thinking a very great degree of optimism as far as the future is concerned. We look at our developments, we think of our vast spending in the north, our rich heritage of minerals, forests and water power, and we have somehow brought ourselves to the state of mind where we believe—at least, a great many do—that fortune is going to smile upon us for ever.

Well, fortune will not smile upon us unless we take care of our own affairs. Honestly, I shudder to think what might be our situation in some not-far-distant-future, if we keep on increasing our spending beyond our intake. That is what is happening with most governments today. I hope the Finance Committee in its study of inflation will be able to assemble the data showing what is the total spending by all governments in Canada in relation to their total revenue. Because, while we are concerned chiefly with federal affairs, the matter of real importance to the average citizen is not alone the amount of money that he pays to his federal authority, but the sum total of his payments to all governments.

I venture this suggestion, that if we get ourselves onto a plateau of high spending, with expansionist ideas, and then the cruel winds of adversity affect our economy, we shall be in danger of real political trouble in this country. We might then be in a situation where the Unemployment Insurance Fund would very quickly be deflated and unable to pay the benefits. What would happen then, with our economy in a slump, our tax receipts down and our obligations mounting?

I certainly don't wish to be regarded as a prophet preaching doom and gloom to Parliament. My nature is the very reverse of that. All the mistakes I have made in my personal affairs in life have arisen through too much optimism. But I do suggest very seriously to this house and to Parliament that we should today be giving some consideration to conditions which might arise and develop beyond our control.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Honourable senators, I have two questions to direct to the Leader of the Government (Hon. M. Aseltine). First, I am rather intrigued by Vote 210 in Schedule D, described as "Polar Continental Shelf Project". Does the leader have any information on that?

Secondly, I notice by the schedules that only nine departments are mentioned. If this bill is to cover one-sixth of the entire estimates, how is it that only nine departments out of a total of 18 or 19 are listed in these schedules?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Vote 210 has to do with the Polar Continental Shelf Project. Additional proportions are required under this and the preceding eight votes to finance field survey parties whose activities are concentrated in the summer months. These are the survey parties to which I referred in my earlier remarks. Most of the money will be spent in June and July, and that is why these additional amounts are being voted now.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I asked a second question. Only nine departments are mentioned in the four schedules, so how is it that this bill asks for one-sixth of the total estimates?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The votes set out in the four schedules are in addition to the vote of one-sixth of the main estimates, as provided for in clause 2 of the bill. These additional amounts specified in the schedules are required because the departments concerned will be making the expenditures in June and July.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, like the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar), I am concerned about the large amount of expenditures we are approving in a matter of minutes without any real explanation of the various items. In looking through the schedules I see an item that I would like to have explained. It is Vote 263 in Schedule B, Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What is the page?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Page 4. It reads:

> Contributions to the provinces, pursuant to agreements entered into with the approval of the Governor in Council, by Canada with the provinces, of amounts equal to one-half of the amounts confirmed by the provinces as having been spent by them for campground and picnic area developments.

I would like to know whether that agreement was entered into previously or is under consideration at the present time; also how many provinces are involved, and the amounts spent by each of them.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Vote 263 has to do with a part of the winter works program that has been carried over into the spring months with respect to campground and picnic area development in the different provinces. One-half of this vote is for the winter works portion of this program completed on May 31, and information from the provinces indicates that progress on the rest of the program will be more or less extensive during the early summer. I do not happen to have the names of the provinces which are concerned, but that, in a general way, answers the question which the honourable senator has just asked.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: In a way, yes. Honourable senators, that is the kind of thing I had in mind. We understand there was an agreement entered into last fall to overcome the unemployment situation existing in certain areas of Canada, and one of the projects was said to be the development of camping and picnic grounds in various national parks. That is as I recall it. Because of that we are now asked to approve of $1,500,000, and, naturally—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, not $1,500,000, but one-third of that amount. It is $500,000.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: On page 4 it says $1,500,000.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is the total estimate for the year. What is being voted is one-third of that amount.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That is the total amount, and you are asking for one-third of that?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Under Schedule B we are asking for $824,276.67.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That being one-third of the total?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is one-third of the total amount of the two votes in Schedule B.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Well, continuing, I was wondering what sections of Canada that money was spent in and I think we should know that. Perhaps if the honourable leader cannot give that information today he will give it later?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will be glad to get the information for the honourable senator and furnish it at the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I would like to have information about other items. For instance, there is a fairly large amount for the Forest Research Division, operation and maintenance, $1,470,657. That is in Schedule D, page 7, item 282.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: This, honourable senators, has to do with the Dominion Observatory, Ottawa and field stations. It is for administration, operation and maintenance, including the expenses of the National Committee for Canada of the International Astronomical Union, the fee for membership in the International Astronomical Union, and a grant of $3,500 to the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada. Just one-third of the amount of $896,030 is being voted.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That is not the item. I was referring to Item 282 under the heading "Northern Affairs and National Resources". That would hardly apply to Northern Affairs, would it?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I misunderstood my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I think the record will show that I said Item 282, and I gave the amount as $1,470,657. It is the last item on page 7.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Well, Vote 282 has to do with the Forest Research Division of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. It is for operation and maintenance, and the activities of the field parties whose work is at its height in the early summer months. That is all the information I have on that. If the honourable senator wishes more details I will get them for him.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: What percentage of that total is voted?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That vote is one-twelfth.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is, in addition?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We are asking for an additional one-twelfth of Vote 282.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is in addition to the one-sixth?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, I take it that is what it is. It is one-sixth of the total of this vote plus an additional one-twelfth.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker (Hon. Mr. White): Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: With leave of the Senate I move that this bill be now read the third time.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, when I estimated the total expenditures of the Government for the present fiscal year at slightly over $6 billion I did not take into account the amount which would be paid out for old age pensions. I did not do so because there is a special provision for getting this money. As honourable senators are aware, this revenue is derived from a 3 per cent tax on personal income, a 3 per cent tax on corporation income and a 3 per cent sales tax. According to the evidence we heard in committee the other day it is expected that the revenue from these three sources will be sufficient to pay old age pension claims during the present fiscal year. I do not feel this amount should be included in the ordinary expenditures of the Government, otherwise you would have to include amounts paid out for unemployment insurance benefits. As honourable senators know, payments into the Unemployment Insurance Fund come from special sources.

Here is the manner in which I arrived at $6 billion as the total expenditures of the Government for the present fiscal year. The estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960, amount to $5,595 million. The supplementary estimates for last year totalled $429 million. Assuming that the supplementary estimates for this fiscal year will be in the same amount, if you add them to the estimates already tabled in the house you will get a total of $6,024,000,000. Therefore, I stand by my first estimate of the expenditures of this Government during the present fiscal year as approximating $6 billion.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker (Hon. Mr. White): Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform you that the following communication has been received:

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

ROMAN CATHOLIC EPISCOPAL CORPORATION OF PRINCE RUPERT—SECOND READING

Hon. Sydney J. Smith (Kamloops) moved the second reading of Bill S-23, respecting the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Prince Rupert.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a rather simple bill consisting of three short sections. It has two major objectives. The first two sections reduce the size of the area originally authorized to be under the jurisdiction of this corporation. The purpose of the third section is to remove the restrictions on investment of the corporation.

I would like to give the house a brief outline of the reasons for the requests contained in this bill.

The area served by The Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Prince Rupert comprises 135,000 square miles between the 53rd and 58th parallels of latitude and from the Pacific to the Alberta border in British Columbia, including the Queen Charlotte Islands.

The total population of the area is between 85,000 and 90,000. The Catholic population of 12,500 includes about 4,000 Indians. There are seven schools and four more are in the process of building, together with 12 churches and 12 rectories. This compares with four churches, four rectories and one school at the time of incorporation in 1924. Most of the towns in the area have doubled their population in the last five years. This recent increase and the anticipated increases in population are the reasons for the removal of the restrictions on the value of real estate held by the corporation and the period during which it may be held.

As to subsection 3 of section 4 of the act in its present form, several recent statutes incorporating religious or eleemosynary bodies contain no limitation on the value of the real property which may be held by such bodies. Moreover, in several recent instances, private acts have contained provisions removing such limitations not only for the future but retroactively.

Provisions imposing a time limit on the holding of unused real estate, such as are contained in subsections 4 to 7, inclusive, of section 4 of the act in its present form, have been omitted in some recent incorporations of religious bodies. The most recent cases of this kind were An Act to incorporate Oblate Fathers of Assumption Province, in the Statutes of Canada, 1957, chapter 54; and also Bill S-18, which received third reading in the Senate on April 23 last, An Act to incorporate the Lutheran Church in Canada.

Honourable senators, that covers the brief summary which I wish to make. It is my intention, if need be, to move that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Smith (Kamloops), bill referred to Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 4

ANSWER TO QUESTION

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, when we were dealing with the interim supply bill last Thursday, the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) asked me a question which I was unable to answer at the time. He asked how many provinces have entered into agreements under Vote 263 which provides for "Contributions to the provinces... of amounts equal to one-half of the amounts confirmed by the provinces as having been spent by them for camp-ground and picnic area developments" and what amounts, by provinces, are involved?

I now have the answer which is rather long. Instead of reading it I will, with permission of the house, hand it to Hansard.

All provinces, except Quebec, have entered into agreements as contemplated by Vote 263. The total amount of this Vote released by interim supply bills to date is $1,000,000 ($\frac{1}{6}+\frac{1}{6}+\frac{1}{3}$ or $\frac{2}{3}$ of $1,500,000). The requirements under this Vote up to the end of July, by provinces, are as follows:

Newfoundland	50,000
Prince Edward Island ..	50,000
Nova Scotia	30,500
New Brunswick	24,250
Ontario	332,661
	(including carryover from 1958-59 of $33,000)
Manitoba	52,500
Saskatchewan	86,500
	(including carryover of $44,000
Alberta	187,500
British Columbia	175,000
	$988,911
	say $1,000,000

As a matter of interest, a similar vote was provided last year (1958-59) in the amount of $2,500,000. Expenditures thereunder were as follows:

Newfoundland	54,346
Prince Edward Island	2,120
Nova Scotia	24,014
New Brunswick	47,446
Ontario	924,282
Manitoba	118,707
Saskatchewan	50,725
Alberta	138,302
British Columbia	363,494
	$1,723,436

INFLATION

AUTHORITY TO PRINT ADDITIONAL COPIES OF COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Clarence V. Emerson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, presented a report from the committee.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the instruction to study the threat of inflation in Canada, report as follows:

Your committee recommend that they be authorized to increase the printing of their day-to-day proceedings from 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French, to 1,800 copies and 400 copies, respectively.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators when shall this report be considered?

Hon. Mr. Emerson: With leave of the Senate, I move that the report be adopted now.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I inquire of the chairman of the committee why so many copies are required? It seems to be an exceptionally large number. I am a member of the committee and perhaps I should have asked this question at the committee meeting.

Hon. Mr. Emerson: I was absent from the committee meeting when the motion to make this report was passed, but I understand that the witnesses appearing before the committee are asking for copies of the day-to-day proceedings. For instance, those who appeared this morning requested 20 copies, and the witness at the first meeting asked for several copies. It seems likely that the copies will go pretty fast.

Hon. Mr. Croll: If it is conceivable by any stretch of the imagination that 1,800 people in Canada will read the proceedings of a Senate committee, I am all in favour of printing the extra copies.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: We could print even more.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There must be a demand for these extra copies or the chairman would not be asking for them.

Report adopted.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 313 to 352.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these reports be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, as we are approaching the close of the session I would move, with the unanimous consent of the senate, that these reports be adopted now.

Motion agreed to.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 4, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn for the second reading of Bill C-38, to make provision for the reduction of certain class and commodity rates on freight traffic.

Hon. W. D. Euler: Honourable senators, during the debate on this bill I listened with a certain detached interest to the controversy that was waged between senators from the Atlantic provinces and those from the western provinces, vying with one another to show that their respective parts of the country were not receiving equal advantages—largely, I may say, out of the federal treasury.

Hon. Mr. Horner: And Ontario is getting the Seaway, and all that.

Hon. Mr. Euler: The reason I am speaking of this matter is that I am from Ontario. So far nothing has been said on behalf of Ontario. In fact, while I was listening to the more or less sectional debate I thought of the Irishman who noticed that a little distance down the block a fight was going on. He hastened to the scene immediately, and rather anxiously inquired whether it was a private fight or whether anybody could get into it. I was then reminded of the duty that rests upon those of us who come from the central provinces, Ontario and Quebec, since we supply, through our high taxes, most of the revenues from which come these subventions and other favours that are now benefiting the other provinces.

Hon. Mr. Horner: You are getting most of it from us in the West.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I believe it is quite appropriate, and good morals, that the strong should help the weak. I have no objection to that as a principle, although I think in the past it has quite frequently gone to extremes. I am not going to particularize on that, and I have no objection to its taking place within our own country.

What I am going to say now, Mr. Speaker, may not be entirely pertinent to the bill. I think charity begins at home, and that now, so far as our contributions to other countries are concerned, we can no longer afford them. I think these contributions, both by us and, in greater degree, by the United States, are made with the thought that by handing out hundreds of millions and billions of dollars we are going to direct the thoughts of people in the Eastern countries and the Middle East away from the communistic system. I want to say that we are never going to defeat an ideal or an idea either by preparing for war or by giving money or other gifts.

Now I will proceed with the bill itself. It stems directly from the threat—I do not like to use the term, but I suppose it is correct—made by the employees of the Canadian National Railways for an increase in their wages. I am not going to say that they are not deserving of an increase, for I do not know. I will say, however, that I think it should no longer be legally possible for any body of men, be they union men or otherwise—and I have nothing against the unions; I think they are doing good work—to disrupt entirely the whole of the national economy by striking in such a service as the railways or anything else within government control.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Euler: That applies to everything within the Government, whether it be the Civil Service or any other body. I do not suppose it could possibly apply to the army or navy or air force, but it does apply to the railways. It would just be a national calamity—and we have come close to it a number of times—if the railway people could strike and almost entirely destroy the national economy during the time of the strike.

I would urge upon the Government without any hesitation that where such a dispute arises and a strike is threatened it should be made illegal so to strike, entirely on the principle that the public interest is always paramount and any other interest must yield to it.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I think that becomes the duty of the Government. I also think that a law to give effect to that principle would receive the support of most reasonable people in this country. Where disputes arise over wages in the great public services and no agreement can be negotiated between the contesting parties, there should be arbitration, the award of which must be accepted.

Now, to come to the matter of the Crowsnest Pass rate agreement. My friend Senator Crerar gave a history of the Crowsnest Pass rates agreement and traced it down through the years since it came into being some 60 years ago. I might say, by the way, that I have never been able to understand why any corporation like the Canadian Pacific Railway should enter into a perpetual agreement, in view of the fact that times and costs change materially. However, the company did it. I have no particular sympathy for the Canadian Pacific Railway; they did it with their eyes open. I am more concerned because of the effect that the agreement has on the Canadian National Railways which, of necessity, must give the same rates because of competition.

Senator Crerar said he thought the rates were profitable. That was 60 years ago. Perhaps they were. I do not know. I do not know whether it is possible even to establish if they were profitable or not, but I am inclined to disagree with him when he says that they must still be profitable, considering that railway costs, like all other costs, have increased threefold and fourfold. I doubt very much that the rates are profitable at present; but, as I said, the Canadian Pacific Railway entered deliberately into the agreement and so one cannot have too great sympathy with it unless the public interest is sufficiently prejudiced that some change should be made.

Senator Crerar referred to the fact that the agreement was suspended for, I think, three years during the first war, and that then an attempt was made by the Union Government to abolish the agreement by means of a bill that was passed in the House of Commons. And Senator Haig rather gloried in the fact, as he was quite justified in doing, that the Senate itself through non-partisan co-operation defeated that bill and the rates remained. Later on, I think it was in 1922, the then Liberal Government made a similar attempt and it referred consideration of the whole question to a committee of the House of Commons. I am not sure whether that was a standing committee or a special committee. I was a member of that committee and a comparatively young member of the House of Commons. I had come here with certain high ideals and high principles which, I hope, have not been entirely destroyed, though perhaps they have been slightly blunted by reason of a parliamentary experience of something more than 40 years. That committee sat for many weeks and heard evidence from many quarters. The railway people were there, the workers were represented, the western provinces had their premiers there, and it was a really interesting and exhaustive examination. I can remember asking the question, "How are rail rates arrived at?" I finally extracted from the representatives of one of the railways an admission that the rates were based on what the traffic would bear. At any rate, I still had those ideals of which I spoke a moment ago, and I was one of a number of Liberal members of the House of Commons who defeated the proposed abolition of the Crowsnest Pass rates. They have remained in force ever since.

A few moments ago I spoke about the public good which must override every other consideration. Whether that time has arrived with regard to the Crowsnest Pass rates I do not know. But honest confession, they say, is good for the soul, and I sometimes have wondered whether we did the right thing at that time. I merely say in passing that if we had not done what we did then, but had amended the rates, perhaps the whole question would have been settled by this time and we would not have the further trouble that we are almost sure to have.

I might give a case in point as to when the public interest should override any other interest. I refer to a case that occurred some years ago in the province of Ontario. The Ferguson Government was in office at the time. Contracts had been made with a number of power-producing companies to buy power at a fixed rate for the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario. A change of government took place and Mr. Mitchell Hepburn came into office—and, by the way, I may say that two of his ministers are now members of the Senate. Shortly after the Hepburn Government came into office Mr. Hepburn made a speech in which he repudiated the contracts with the power companies. I happened to be in Toronto at that time and was in the office of a very well-known and highly respected member of the legal profession, a gentleman with whom I had gone to school and of whom I thought very highly. As the news came over that Mr. Hepburn had repudiated those contracts I was shocked, and I said so to my legal friend. He replied, to my amazement, "I was just about to call up Mitch and congratulate him on what he had done." I told him I was surprised that a lawyer who drafted contracts did not have a higher regard for the sanctity of a contract. "Well," he said, "there is a difference between contracts that are made between individuals or private corporations and contracts that are made between a corporation and a government." That was a rather surprising thing to me. He thought that whenever the public interest overrode the interest of any private concern, it was quite in order that the public authority should repudiate the contract. I am not going to say that I have changed the opinion that I had 40 years ago as to the sanctity of contracts, but the fact is that new contracts were made with these power companies at a substantially reduced rate and the power users in Ontario got the benefit at the expense of the shareholders of the power companies.

Now, it has been stated here that the Government has appointed a commission to look into the freight rates. That commission is to be headed by a gentleman whom I know and who is highly respected, Mr. McTague, a former Justice of the Court of Appeal of Ontario. I have the utmost confidence in him, although I do not know his colleagues. I am surprised and disappointed to learn that the Prime Minister is alleged to have said that the Crowsnest Pass agreement is not within the purview of this commission. I think the survey cannot be complete and valuable without an investigation of the Crowsnest Pass agreement. I hope the Prime Minister will revise that decision, if indeed he has made it.

The bill before us is intended to provide compensation of some $20 million to the railways for reduced rates. I presume it will have to pass, and I am not opposing it, although I do not believe in the principle underlying it.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, I wish to say a few words on this bill. My references will be with respect to the effect of freight rates as they apply to the Maritime provinces, more particularly to Newfoundland.

I do not think the position of the eastern provinces has been properly considered before the passage of enactments affecting freight charges. As you know, the nearer the end of the line you are and the farther away from production, the higher the rates and the greater their effect on the cost of living, and the more industry is retarded by the high distribution costs. That is our problem today in the province of Newfoundland, largely by reason of high freight rates. Another reason for the high cost of living is the application of the customs tariff by which our trade is now diverted to other provinces, particularly the central provinces, at the higher freight rates costs, rather than to countries abroad, as formerly. It is calculated that an article which costs on the average 75 cents in the central provinces will cost the consumer in Newfoundland $1. Indeed, the cost of living in Newfoundland is generally estimated at about 12 per cent higher than in the other Atlantic provinces.

So, honourable senators, as these recurring increases in freight rates take place year after year, I believe more consideration must be given to their effect on the cost of living, the opportunities for employment, and the economy generally of the eastern provinces, and in particular the province of Newfoundland, which is the one hardest hit.

I should like to repeat now what I said in this house a short time ago, that in the past 11 years the freight rates from central Canada to the Maritimes—including the 17 per cent which we assumed would be allowed —have increased by 154 per cent. Under this enactment, if that latest increase is reduced to 10 per cent for the Atlantic provinces, the increase applicable to us over the past 11 years is 147 per cent.

Reference has been made to the great benefit which the West has received through the Crowsnest Pass rates, which were fixed by agreement in 1897. True, that agreement involved the transfer of lands and other considerations. But let me point out that Newfoundland people were not outside the issue even at that time. As reference was being made to this question the other evening I recalled that as a boy living in the outports of Newfoundland I had heard a song being sung by families whose fathers and husbands had gone west to work on the building of that railway. I remember these words from a popular local song of the time:

A dollar a day,
With no sugar in your tay,
Working on the Crowsnest railway.

Well, years have passed, and today we find conditions so out of line that we still apply freight rates which were fixed in those days. Those rates are not and cannot be economic rates. They are only made economic for the railways by averaging the higher returns from traffic elsewhere in Canada.

Central Canada, which enjoys a competitive position, has not suffered the disadvantage by reason of freight rate increases that the Maritime provinces have. Therefore, I think the lack of freighting competition in the outlying areas should be taken into consideration when fixing transportation costs. The application of freight rates increases should be more uniform throughout Canada, and not bear so harshly on areas far removed from production and requiring long hauls, and particularly to areas where competition with the railway services is not strong.

In my province we suffer a further disadvantage in that the Trans-Canada Highway is not yet completed. Actually, it has barely commenced. It has been said that Newfoundland has more Trans-Canada Highway mileage yet to be completed than all the other provinces except Ontario. I am not sure of the accuracy of that statement, but I know the progress has been comparatively insignificant. Furthermore, apart from certain sections in British Columbia, the cost of highway building in Newfoundland is regarded as the highest in Canada. Surely, there should be some special provision whereby assistance to Newfoundland can be geared up. If we have to pay these high freight rates to the Canadian National Railways there should be some special provision whereby construction of the Trans-Canada Highway in Newfoundland could be proceeded with quickly. The percentage of cost applying to our province is altogether out of proportion with the provincial economy.

Honourable senators, with those few remarks I want to convey to you that we in Newfoundland have very special circumstances to consider. We are part of Canada. We are another province, but right down through the past ten years and up to the present day our special circumstances and needs have not received the consideration that should have been given them. The application of the freight rates—and in this connection I refer also to the Newfoundland freight rates of the C.N.R.—is one of the great disadvantages from which the province suffers.

Hon. Mr. Davies: May I ask the honourable senator from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt) a question? I understood him to say that as a result of Newfoundland's entering into union with Canada the freight rates of Newfoundland have been increased 147 per cent. Has the dominion Government provided any subsidy or assistance in that matter?

Hon. Mr. Pratt: In the matter of freight rates relief directly to Newfoundland?

Hon. Mr. Davies: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: No, not directly in the matter of freight rates concessions. There is a measure of relief in the application of freight rates on flour and other wheat products.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, bill referred to Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

CONVENTION ON ABOLITION OF FORCED LABOUR

RESOLUTION OF APPROVAL

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, June 2, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Sullivan:

Resolved: That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the Convention No. 105 concerning the abolition of forced labour, which was adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 40th session at Geneva on the 25th day of June, 1957, and that this house do approve the same.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, a week ago we were privileged to listen to the honourable senator from North York (Hon. Mr. Sullivan) when the resolution now under consideration was moved by him with such persuasive sincerity, and with an eloquence in which every word demonstrated a burning passion for justice, truth and charitable good will expressed, if I may so put it, in defence of the lot of the common man in whatever part of the globe and under whatever government he may now be living.

We have had now a further opportunity to read the address and to ponder the validity of the arguments which our distinguished colleague so skilfully presented, and I would like to digress at this time to point out that the final paragraph of his address was beautifully poetic and prophetic.

I venture to suggest that the ideal contained in this multilateral convention will receive the spontaneous, whole-hearted and unanimous support not only of all members in this chamber but, indeed, of all thoughtful Canadians. Our support of this ideal is predicated upon our common belief that systems or conditions of forced labour destroy man's democratic rights and hard-won privileges, undermine his sacrosanct freedoms, and transgress upon his inalienable rights to human dignity in his family and individual living. Hence, as stated by the Minister of Labour, forced labour conditions are repugnant to our social, economic and political institutions in Canada. We do not practice them. We can ratify this convention with a clear conscience.

By way of reference and perspective, perhaps I should bring to the attention of honourable senators our "batting average" on these international labour conventions. The convention now under consideration is numbered 105. Up to the present there are 111 such conventions. It may interest honourable senators to know that of the 111 we have thought fit for various reasons not to ratify 93 of them, most of them because they were considered to be wholly or partially within the legislative jurisdiction of the provinces. Others were superseded by newer conventions, and some we felt were not appropriate to be ratified by us because such conditions did not exist in Canada.

In moving his resolution the honourable senator from North York dealt briefly with this basic question: What deplorable forced labour conditions and in which areas of the world have led to the drafting of this particular convention? I should like to add to this historical survey of these deplorable and repugnant conditions, and to indicate at greater length what international action was attempted in order to try to eliminate and to suppress all forms of forced labour. I believe that this will place into sharper focus exactly what Convention 105 is about and what it could and might do.

I would like to consider first the problem of human bondage or servitude in the form of slavery. Slavery, honourable senators, is closely and directly related to forced labour, often in its severest form. Slavery problems have been dealt with in various international declarations and in peace treaties as far back as the Treaty of Vienna in 1814. Yet as late as 1926, after a two-year study by a Slavery Commission of the League of Nations, we found the need to draft an International Slavery Convention which was adopted by the Assembly of the League of Nations. This slavery convention of 1926, only 33 years ago, also dealt with aspects of compulsory or forced labour. This convention was finally ratified by 46 nations. Canada was one of the ratifying nations.

Then we might ponder on the significance of the fact that 30 years after this convention on slavery, that is in 1956, only three years ago, a supplementary convention on slavery was drafted and was signed in Geneva on September 7, 1956. Remembering that this is a 1956 convention, some of the provisions are most thought-provoking and morally challenging to the whole world. The articles, and there are 15 of them, deal with such problems as debt-bondage, serfdom, minimum ages of marriage, the problem of conveying slaves from one place to another, acts of mutilating, branding and otherwise marking slaves or a person of servile status, et cetera, et cetera.

This 1956 convention on slavery was ratified by 26 countries and, strangely, it has been signed but not ratified by Canada. I would be interested to know why we have not done so or why we might not be doing so concurrently with this particular convention.

The problem of the institution of forced labour as such was first taken up by the League of Nations in the early 1920's and it is of some interest to keep in mind that the obligations undertaken by the member states in the Covenant itself, and in the Mandate Agreements, really prohibited the use of forced or compulsory labour. Then we pause on the International Labour Organization report of 1929, 30 years ago. The report was concerned with forced labour mainly in colonial or dependent territories and it confirmed that there did exist two main forms of forced labour: (1) compulsory-type labour, ordered by public authorities for general or local public purposes, and (2) compulsory-type labour practices administered by private employers.

This report led to the convention numbered 29 adopted by the International Labour Organization in 1930. It is important enough that we might pause and examine its main aspects because of its relationship to the convention we are considering now.

This Forced Labour Convention of 1930, (No. 29) consists of 30 articles and these attempted to define and prohibit within a reasonable period of time all forms of forced labour. It came into effect in 1932, twelve months after it was formally ratified by two states, in this case Ireland and Liberia.

By 1956 forty-one states had ratified this 1930 convention on forced labour, and since June of 1956 the following nations have acceded to this Convention: the Byelorussian S.S.R., Hungary, the Ukrainian S.S.R., the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Portugal, the Dominican Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany and Honduras. But Canada, no. Again I ask the question, why?

A brief review of the League of Nations and the I.L.O. would be incomplete if we did not mention that there were three additional conventions, Nos. 50, 64 and 65, dated 1936 and 1937. Most of them dealt with the recruiting and labour contracts of indigenous work. The important thing about the conventions of 1930, 1936 and 1937 is, that although these four conventions were adopted slowly, indeed they did help to foster greater freedom and justice in employment legislation and in employment practices, especially as they affected the colonies or dependencies of the Western democracies.

We might now turn our attention to the work that was done in this problem area of forced labour by the United Nations and by the International Labour Organization after the termination of World War II, a war which had brought in its wake disappointing and indeed terrifying evidence of man's inhumanity to his fellowman, even in this field of newer forms or modern adaptations of servitude and labour bondage.

Furthermore, it appeared that human servitude and forced labour conditions continued in some countries despite their formal acceptance of the provisions of the United Nations Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in the latter of which article 4 prohibits slavery and servitude, and article 23 guarantees to every person his or her right to a free choice of employment and to just and favourable conditions of work. Suffice it to say that the United Nations, and especially the Economic and Social Council, together with the International Labour Organization, continued to be bombarded with complaints, memoranda and allegations from governmental and non-governmental sources, that there continued to exist in various parts of the world systems of forced or corrective labour of various degrees and of varying extensiveness, but all with their attendant injustices and inequities and transgressions or abrogation of human rights and essential freedoms. Accordingly, as was pointed out by the honourable senator from North York, only eight years ago, in March 1951 the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution to co-operate with the International Labour Organization in setting up a joint ad hoc committee on forced labour. This was done in June of 1951, and in 1953 there appeared this United Nations document which I hold in my hand, entitled Official Records of the Economic and Social Council, Sixteenth Session, Supplement No. 13, Report of the ad hoc Committee on Forced Labour.

This lengthy and revealing document contains a very comprehensive report on forced labor which was prepared by this ad hoc committee. And on the basis of evidence submitted about or by the 17 nations and their dependencies, what were the general findings of this ad hoc committee, of independent, impartial experts? Six years ago there did exist forced labour for political considerations; and I would refer you to summary paragraphs Nos. 549 and 550, on pages 124 and 125 of this report. Secondly, there did exist forced and compulsory type of labour for economic considerations; and I refer you to summary paragraphs 553 and 554, on page 125 of this report. It is interesting that the committee felt it did not have sufficient evidence to make any valid comments concerning the allegations and the multitudinous charges of forced labour and injustices arising from mass deportations and concentration or punitive type labour camps.

Nobody accused Canada, honourable senators, but she did reply to a questionnaire regarding punitive, educational or correctional labour or other cases of compulsion to work; and as recorded on page 160 of this report the Government of Canada stated with complete justification, and I trust with enviable pride, that Canadian legislation neither makes provision for nor tolerates any form of forced labour as defined by the ad hoc committee in the questionnaire.

Then consider, if you will, the significance of the next development. The I.L.O. undertook follow-up studies of these apparently continuing and deplorable forced labour conditions, and in 1955, that is four years ago, it set up an I.L.O. ad hoc committee which reported in 1957, that is only two years ago. This report is labelled Report of the I.L.O. Committee on Forced Labour, and was presented to the second session of the International Labour Board Organization in Geneva on March 6 to April 1957, just two years ago. Its basic finding, which we find on page 3, stated in these words:

> The investigation of the UN/I.L.O. ad hoc committee—

I digress to point out that this was the 1953 report.

> —and of this committee revealed the existence in certain countries of three main forms of forced labour . . . which are characterized by the fact that they are imposed by the State in virtue of its legislation or through the action of the Executive.

And what are the three main forms of forced labour that are said to exist in this 1957 report?

(1) Forced labour for political purposes aimed at the correction of those who are opposed to the ideology of the Government in power.

I could quote from the various examples given, but there is no time to do so.

(2) Forced labour for economic purposes, generally in the form of compulsory type work on extensive projects, often in previously uncultivated areas or in remote mining, lumbering or hydro-project areas. The projects are based both on legislative and administrative provisions which permit recruiting and mobilization of labour and the setting up of work norms and the direction and disciplining of workers—and all this in order to carry out the economic plans ordained by the state.

I must confess, honourable senators, that I have found horribly and tragically depressing the summary statements in this report dealing with the People's Republic of China, especially paragraphs 128-133, to be found on pages 38 and 39.

(3) Forced migrations or mass deportations of ethnic or social groups for political or socio-economic reasons which led to the establishment of concentration or corrective labour camps or colonies... with their own unique forms of forced labour.

I refer especially to paragraph 496, at page 118 of this report.

In this specific reference to mass deportations it is significant to remember that the 1953 report hesitated to make definite comments; but the 1957 report does so, especially in view of new information about mass deportations and their attendant concentration camps supplied by Nikita Khrushchev himself, supplied in his famous oration at a secret session of the 20th Party Congress of the Communist Party of the U.S.S.R. on February 25, 1956. I quote from paragraph 422 of this report, in which Mr. Khrushchev expresses himself as follows:

> All the more monstrous are the acts whose initiator was Stalin and which are rude violations of the basic Leninist principles of the nationality policy of the Soviet State. We refer to the mass deportations from their native places of whole nations, together with all Communists and Komsomols without any exception; this deportation action was not dictated by any military considerations.
> Thus, already at the end of 1943, when there occurred a permanent breakthrough at the fronts of the Great Patriotic War benefiting the Soviet Union, a decision was taken and executed concerning the deportation of all the Karachai from the lands on which they lived. In the same period, at the end of December 1943, the same lot befell the whole population of the Autonomous Kalmyk Republic. In March 1944 all the Chechen and Ingush peoples were deported and the Chechen-Ingush Autonomous Republic was liquidated. In April 1944 all Balkars were deported to faraway places from the territory of the Kabardyno-Balkar Autonomous Republic and the Republic itself was renamed the Autonomous Kabardynian Republic. The Ukrainians avoided meeting this fate only because there were too many of them and there was no place to which to deport them. Otherwise, he would have deported them also.

Merciful and Almighty God in the Heavens —to think that such inhumanity has been visited upon those created in Your image in the name of a new political philosophy, and during the twentieth century!

And there is much evidence, honourable senators, that the Ukraine has been a vale of terror and tears. Just on May 10, 1959 the U.S.S.R. issued its new census information and, interestingly, between 1939 and 1959, which is a period of 20 years, the population of the whole U.S.S.R. grew from 190.7 million to 208.8 million, or roughly a gain of 18.1 million or 9.5 per cent.

Pray tell me how and why this happened. The population of the Ukraine during this same 20-year period grew from 40.4 million to 41.8 million, a gain of only 3.5 per cent, the population of Byelorussia fell from 9.9 million to 9.06 million, and the population of Lithuania fell from 2.8 million to 2.7 million.

And then, at this stage, perhaps I may be forgiven if I remind honourable senators that there are population figures for the previous 13-year period, 1926 to 1939, during the height of the sovietization of the Ukraine. During this 13-year period the total population of the U.S.S.R. grew by 16 per cent. But strangely enough, and tragically, the number of the Ukrainians in the U.S.S.R. dropped from 31.2 million to 28.1 million, or roughly 10 per cent of them vanished. And this three million population loss must be assessed or added to a normal gain of about five million. In the Ukraine the birth rate was very high, the highest in eastern Europe, so all this indicates a population loss of about eight million Ukrainians.

There are many other things one could talk about.

The press of the world talks from time to time about the grandiose plans started in 1954 by the Soviet Union to settle the virgin lands in the Kazakstau, in Siberia, and in the Far East. It is intended to have 1.5 million new settlers, and quickly. So one wonders how much fear and coercion and elements of forced labour are in this so-called magnificent voluntary effort. And why is there so much criticism that this is all aimed at the young men and women, especially those who are non-Russian and non-communist?

Honourable senators will forgive me for being carried away by the memory of tragic events which have befallen those of my ethnic kith and kin simply for wanting to live as free children of God in their own and independent national homeland; and yet, these events we must remember too if we are to understand what it is that even this very simple declaratory Convention 105 dealing with forced labour is about.

Let us return to Convention 105.

The 1957 report of the I.L.O. Committee to which I had referred made this recommendation about this new convention which we are discussing, and I quote:

> The committee would naturally welcome action to prohibit all forms of forced labour which militates against the concept of human rights and the dignity and the worth of the human person but it must express its view that a primary consideration is that the new convention should be framed in such a manner as to ensure that it will be universally ratified with the least possible delay. It believes that such ratification would carry international effort for the complete abolition of forced labour a great step forward.

My comment is, perhaps so! Only time will tell.

Who can tell what normative and educational effects, the simple and generalized declarative statements will have upon governmental authorities operating upon one-party ideologies? Certainly the success and failure of this and other conventions concerning forced labour will depend primarily on full and willing co-operation of all states in the international community, and finally, upon the condemnation of this abuse of our fellow man by all men and women if they are permitted to know the truth, and if they are permitted to voice their innermost humane ideas.

One may well ask, "What good will this convention do?" For, although we do know something about the history of all labour conventions, and about their strengths and weaknesses, yet progress has been recorded in the problem area of forced labour, slow though it may be in some parts of the world. And the 1957 report validly points out that the question of forced labour has been successfully brought before the representative forum of international public opinion. It is true that Convention 105 has been simplified and diluted so that it may be acceptable to all; it is true that it has skirted the question of forced mass deportations; it is true that it contains no definitional or interpretative sections, which interpretations will be made by the responsible legal or other authorities of each signatory state; and it is true that some of the previous conventions we have mentioned were either not ratified or not observed, especially by those who would not subscribe to them.

However, we must find some moral solace in the progress that has been made, and in the fact that there was a discussion of the 1957 report by representatives of some 70 states, and that the Convention 105 was approved, I believe unanimously and with but one abstention.

And I believe further that Canadians generally will continue to hope that an international convention of this type may help to mobilize world public opinion against the evils of this form of human degradation and injustice, may prompt to legislative and administrative action the governments of countries wherever these forced labour conditions may still exist and thus may become a powerful force for human good, if, as the mover of the resolution stated, the convention instrument receives a large number of sincere and binding ratifications. This I also hope, and it is in this spirit of hope and idealism that I declare my wholehearted support for the Convention 105.

We recognize that ratification of any convention is a solemn declaration of intent to abide by its terms; and we know that a convention can be rendered sterile or nonfunctional even by the interpretations of the various terms in the convention instrument. As far as this convention is concerned, I believe that each nation reserves to itself a wide discretionary power of interpretation, adequate enough, perhaps, to deny the existence of forced labour conditions even if they do in fact exist. Despite wonderfully-sounding constitutions, forced labour systems were, and perhaps still are, practised in the very countries that speak most loudly and most often about the denial of freedoms, and the discriminations practised by the so-called imperialists and colonialists. We understand the significance of the queries and remarks of those who ask—even those who asked in this chamber—how many communist states have accepted this convention, and under what conditions, for many of them could hardly sincerely accept or carry out a convention of this kind without big changes in their social, economic, and perhaps political organizations.

Thus our idealism prompts us to support a convention which we hope might do some good, but our realism obliges us to remember not to place too great a burden of responsibility upon this latest in the long list of international conventions in the field of labour conditions.

I have some minor suggestions regarding our further action concerning Convention 105, once we have ratified it. I believe it is not good enough just to ratify it, file it away in a pigeon-hole and forget about it.

What are these suggestions? Let us—and I mean Canadian representatives everywhere —talk sincerely and effectively about the existing conditions which led up to this convention, about the reasons which prompted us to accede to it, even though Canadians have never experienced forced labour legislation or practices, and let us speak loudly about our hopes and expectations for this convention. Let us continue to press the responsible committees of the I.L.O. to take appropriate steps to see that the reports and comments relating to instruments or practices of forced labour or mass deportations are examined with special care and speed. Let us give effective informational emphasis to the fact that states acceding to the convention must make an annual report on its application to the I.L.O., and to the fact that governmental bodies or any employers' or workers' organizations are entitled to make representations to the I.L.O. governing body that the convention is not being effectively observed. Let us not be unduly hesitant about utilizing a member's privilege and right to file complaints concerning non-observance of the convention, on the premise that our greater duty is to humanity and to the human rights and freedoms of the common man. With truth on our side, what an interesting informational opportunity in a human problem area, where truth will and can do so much good!

Honourable senators, I have spoken at length, because the problem has engaged my very sincere attention. I apologize for speaking at length and plead for your indulgence in understanding why I have done so.

I shall conclude by bringing to your attention one of the most challenging statements in a fascinating book which I have read and re-read, thanks to its initial recommendation to me by the honourable mover of this motion. The title of the book is The Secret Name, and its author is Lin Yutang. I quote one paragraph:

> And here I must register a point; if there is a brotherhood of men, the condition of labour in Soviet Russia is as much our business as slave labour anywhere else. I do not understand what the diplomats are talking about when they, in a tired tone of appealing for peace, quite jauntily speak of peaceful co-existence, without a qualm of conscience. Are not the slaves in labour camps in Hungary, Rumania and Siberia our brothers? It should have been the subject of repeated diplomatic protests and demands, now that the heads of states are so much occupied in public exchange of long letters. To what avail, the diplomats would say? To what avail the United Nations inquiry into Russian intervention in the Hungary revolution? Acquiescence in evil is an evil itself. No one is going to be dragged into a war because of condemnation of slave labour. The Communist world of slave labour, the size of an empire and an integral part of Soviet economy (its gold, coal, iron and water power) is a world of which the twentieth-century man should be ashamed to be a contemporary. The pressure of world opinion can help to relieve it, it cannot make it worse.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, my honourable colleague who has just spoken (Hon. Mr. Wall) is a great humanitarian, and everybody admires his sincerity and eloquence. But let me point out that what is now before us is not a convention at all, but a draft convention, which originated in the United Nations. It is not the first time that such a document has come before us. On a similar occasion I called the attention of the then Minister of Justice, the Honourable Mr. Guthrie, to the fact that a similar so-called convention was not a convention, but was a draft convention, and only became a convention after it was accepted. It is a draft convention because it is unilateral. It may have been drafted not by two men of different groups, but by one man or a group of men who want to exalt noble sentiments which amount to pious wishes. All the speeches that were made on that so-called convention were purely academic. They were merely noble expressions of views about forced labour, about concentration camps, about deportation, which started in this country with the deportation of the Acadians a long time ago.

Canada is no better than any other country. Perhaps the other countries are worse than Canada in the manner in which different peoples have been treated, but I remember very well that during the war there were concentration camps in occupied France and there were concentration camps in the United Kingdom. The Government of England was so fed up with taking care of men who were guilty of being born in Italy that it sent them to Canada. We had to take care of them, and I remember that I asked many questions at the time about the number of carloads that were delivered every week to the people who ran the concentration camps. Those men had lost their liberty. It is true that they had as much beer as they wanted, which Canada was providing, but they were in a concentration camp. Everyone remembers that the mayor of a great metropolis of Canada was sent to a concentration camp because he did not agree with the Mobilization Act. He had to do some forced labour. I do not know to what extent he did it, but that happened in Canada.

All over Canada there were concentration camps. Some day I will ask how many concentration camps there were in Canada during the war. I am sure there were many. The war secrets are a thing of the past, and maybe it would be a good thing to have that sort of thing mentioned in the history of Canada which is taught in the universities and schools. Those are facts, and we who have been in politics know them, but how many teachers of history in Canada teach those facts to their students? None. The men who suffered deprivation of their liberty in Canada suffered as did the men who were similarly deprived in other countries. In a famous opera of Wagner there were the voices of good and the voices of evil and the voices of evil were not heard. So in Canada the only voices that were heard were the voices of good telling about generosity, freedom, liberty, and all that kind of thing. It was nice to hear them.

I could make a very long speech about this and remind the house of some questions that were asked and answers that were given not far from here, but the only thing I will tell you about, honourable senators, is something that occurred under this roof in the session of 1936. There were seven actors: the Speaker of the House of Commons, the Clerk of the House of Commons, the Minister of Finance, the Leader of the Opposition, a messenger, the Sergeant-at-Arms and the then member for Temiscouata. There was a discussion in the Committee of the Whole, and the chairman was a very dear friend of mine. He is dead now but he was a very able parliamentarian. I had to complain about one of the Deputy Ministers, and, naturally, when I was complaining about him I was called a coward because I was attacking one who was not present—as if that man could not run as a candidate in any constituency in Canada and then defend himself in the House of Commons. My complaining was considered the wrong thing to do. I was interrupted so much by the Minister of Finance and the Leader of the Opposition that I was provoked to say to them that all I could do with them was to put them in the same bag and drown them like cats. Having said that I gathered up my papers and I left with majesty.

On the second day after that the young messenger came to my office, and he sat next to my desk and started to cry. He had been appointed a messenger on my recommendation, and he came to confide in me. I asked: "What is the matter? Have you lost your father or your mother or any other relative?" He said: "No, sir. After your vehement speech of the night before last they put me to cutting the ice and to filling the buckets in all the coolers in the building." It was forced labour! I cannot vouch for the revised edition of Hansard because it was often changed, and even the draft of the index was sent to each one of the cabinet ministers to be checked. That was done for a long time afterwards, but I do not know for how long. On October 6 I went down to see the Sergeant-at-Arms, and I told him: "You are a bunch of S. If that young messenger is not sent back home to recuperate I will hire the largest hall in town and I will hire the radio station and I will denounce you as a bunch of S." He said: "Send me the messenger." I said: "I will send him to you on one condition, that he be returned to his job as messenger and will not have to work as a slave." The boy had told me that he suffered from rheumatism, and on the first day he had bought a pair of rubber gloves. He added: "That was not enough. I had to buy another pair, and I am broke, and I cannot continue." I said to the Sergeant-at-Arms: "Mark you, if that man is not fairly dealt with I will do what I have told you I will do". He said: "Send me the messenger," in the same way as the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod is directed at the appropriate time to summon the House of Commons to this chamber.

Do you realize, honourable colleagues, that they could not reach me, they could not corner me, so they attacked the poor little fellow and tried to crush him in their evil way. This is something that happened in the House of Commons. I do not know if at some time in the future the same kind of thing may happen again. This is a part of the history of Canada which is not taught to anyone. I could teach it, and I will in due course.

Resolution adopted.

SEEDS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the second reading of Bill S-24, respecting the testing, inspection and sale of seeds.

He said: Honourable senators, we have heard a great deal this evening about forced labour in the abstract and now I am afraid it will be forced labour in the concrete. If and when this bill becomes law it will revise the present Seeds Act, which is chapter 248 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952. The original act was passed in 1923 and it has been amended only four times since then. It is enforced and administered by the Minister of Agriculture, through the Plants Products Division of the Department of Agriculture and is the legislation which regulates the sale of seeds in Canada.

The Seeds Act establishes grades and minimum standards for seeds and the licensing of new varieties. It is associated closely with operations of the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, which makes recommendations from time to time. The act is the authority of the Department of Agriculture, Plant Products Division, to establish and maintain seed testing laboratories in various sections of the country. At the present time there are laboratories in eight centres: Vancouver, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa, and Sackville.

Honourable senators might be interested to know how these laboratories work. The Plant Products Division maintains an administrative staff at Ottawa and an inspection and laboratory staff in the field strategically located at the eight points throughout Canada I have just mentioned. There is an inspection staff of 80. In addition to enforcing the Seeds Act and performing crop and seed inspection for nearly 9,000 growers of registered and certified seed, the inspection staff is responsible for enforcing certain other statutes, such as the Feeding Stuffs Act, Fertilizers Act, Pest Control Products Act, and an act respecting inspection and sale of hay and straw.

The laboratory staff is composed of 110 seed analysts located at the same points as the inspection staff. It is responsible for testing seeds as a service to the public and for the analysis of official samples taken under the enforcement of the act.

During the fiscal year 1958-59, 181,117 tests were made on 73,871 samples received by the inspectors at these laboratories. The inspectors made 31,640 seed inspection visits and took 5,520 samples to check possible violations. Twenty-one lots of seed were detained during the year.

The Seeds Act is therefore the instrument which insures the reliability of seed grain sold to Canadian farmers. The purpose of this bill, as I said, is to revise the act to meet recent trends and development in the production, processing and merchandising of seeds. The bill contemplates no substantive changes in policy and is in a form similar to other agricultural statutes enacted in recent years. It provides for no basic change in the act, but the act contains certain provisions which need changing in order to conform with existing conditions. Representations have been made, as I have said, by the Canadian Seed Growers' Association and other crop improvement associations as to these changes.

Certain details of the present act are deleted, and provision is made to establish them by regulations, as has been done in other agricultural statutes passed in recent years. I might mention, for instance, the Fertilizer Act, chapter 27, 1957, which this bill follows very closely.

There are two examples which I should bring to your attention to show why changes are being made. First: under the present act pedigreed seed is classed as Registered and Certified. Registered seed is based on registration of crops by the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, and Certified seed is based on certification of crops by the Department of Agriculture. The Canadian Seed Growers' Association finds this a duplication, because both the association and the department serve the same purpose of guaranteeing pure seed to the purchaser. It has been urged by various associations that this duplication be done away with. The present act establishes classes and grades for seeds directly. This bill does not do that. It requires that seed must conform to prescribed standards, and provides that grades be established by regulations and for the use of the standards of the Canadian Seed Growers' Association. In this way grades and standards can be amended from time to time as conditions require.

The second example is this. The present act requires that new varieties of several kinds of crops be licensed before such seeds can be sold in Canada. This is still important but is becoming gradually unimportant, as farmers are now largely guided by recommendations made by agronomists as to the varieties: for example, seed wheat, which should be grown in local areas. In the area in which I live we grow Thatcher wheat, which is recommended by these agronomists. In other places, like Manitoba, where the rust epidemic occurs, they grow the new Selkirk wheat. I could give many examples of that kind. This bill does not specify the kinds of crops to which variety licensing should apply, but provides that they should be established by regulations.

Honourable senators, in summary, no change in substance takes place by this bill. It eliminates some items of detail which are now in need of revision and which may require to be revised from time to time, and provides that those details be prescribed by regulation.

I will now refer briefly to the sections of the bill: Section 1 is the title section. Section 2 is the definition section, and "seed" is defined in subsection (i). Section 3 deals with the sale, importation and exportation of seeds, except as provided by the regulations. Section 4 deals with regulations to be made by the Governor in Council, which, as I said before, will replace many of the details which are set out in the present act. Sections 5, 6, 7 and 8 have to do with administration, such as appointment of inspectors, their powers, seizure and detention. Sections 9 and 10 have to do with offences. Sections 11 and 12 have to do with evidence. Section 13 repeals the present act. Section 14 provides for the new act to come into force by proclamation.

Honourable senators, that is a brief explanation of the bill before us. If second reading is given to the bill I shall propose that it be sent to the Standing Committee on Natural Resources for further consideration, at which time officials of the Department of Agriculture will be present to give more detailed information.

I have before me a certain amount of information with respect to the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, which was organized in 1904 and incorporated by letters patent on June 9, 1921, but I do not intend to say anything about their work as the hour is now quite late.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Would the honourable senator put that information on Hansard? It would be valuable information for all senators.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I would prefer not to do so, but if it is the wish of honourable senators I will.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Then with the permission of the house, I will place this information on Hansard.

THE CANADIAN SEED GROWERS' ASSOCIATION

The association was organized in 1904 as a national organization operated by seed growers engaged in the production of Registered Seed. The association is responsible for:

(a) the maintenance of accurate records of crop pedigrees and issuing crop registration certificates,

(b) directing the continuous multiplication of Foundation and Elite stock seed of old and new varieties sufficient to serve as a basis for the production of Registered crops,

(c) the acceptance of varieties for registration and the preparation and distribution of descriptions thereof,

(d) holding of itinerant annual meetings.

The Board of Directors is composed of growers and officers of the provincial departments of agriculture. The membership of the association for the 1958-59 year was 7,014. The association receives at the present time an annual grant from the Department of Agriculture of $44,000 for administrative purposes. An assessment fee on an acreage basis is levied growers to supplement the annual grant bringing in additional revenue averaging about $50,000.

Honourable senators, I hope this bill will meet with the approval of the house. I know it is a very important piece of legislation in the district in which I come from. In fact, in most provinces there is a Seed Dealers Act. I know there is one in Saskatchewan. A year or so ago I had the honour of incorporating a local seed company called Rosetown Seeds Limited. The members of that corporation were all young farmers who, when they were unable to sell their crops, except by quota, decided to go into the business of growing seed grain, such as different kinds of seed wheat, seed flax, seed barley, rape seed, and so on, and they have made quite a business of it. They were incorporated under the Saskatchewan Seed Dealers Act, which was passed particularly for the protection of the public to whom these dealers sell their seed. Before they can do any business at all they are obliged to take out a permit and also to furnish a surety company bond in the sum of $10,000 to ensure that they do business in a proper way and do not take advantage of any of the farmers who are not so well acquainted with the different kinds of seed grain as the dealers. I presume that all provinces have legislation of the same nature. The act requires them to keep proper weights, and identification of seed—

The Hon. the Speaker: Is the honourable leader also proposing second reading of that provincial act?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Oh, no. The reason I mention this is to show that there is a connection between the federal act and the acts passed by the provinces. I thought it might be of interest to honourable senators to know something about the Saskatchewan act, just by way of illustration. It requires seed dealers to keep proper weights and identification on seed purchased from farmers, to furnish farmers from whom seed is purchased with a receipt or ticket showing the true weight and the terms of the transaction, and to retain a sample of the seed and of any screenings taken from it in the event of any subsequent dispute with respect to quality or dockage. I thought possibly honourable senators might want me to mention the fact that the provinces have these acts, and that the provincial departments of agriculture work closely with the federal department of agriculture in the administration of the federal act.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: May I ask the honourable senator a question in connection with the provisions of clause 3? Has he any idea of the volume of the trading in seed that is done between this country and other countries by specialized agencies, which I understand export selected seed of one kind or another to agencies in other countries which desire them? For example, I might mention what I think is an unusual transaction that takes place annually. From a certain area in Manitoba seventy cars of timothy seed are sent to Kentucky every year through a certain elevator firm that has an elevator there, and the grass seed that is shipped from that area is the basis of the blue grass of Kentucky that has become so famous.

We know too that there has been a good deal of traffic in seed potatoes between New Brunswick—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not think that they come under this bill.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I was just wondering to what extent this particular clause would apply to that trade between Canada and, say, the United States. I doubt very much whether after these provisions come into force if there will be much chance of importing them.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We import not only seed grain from the United States. The Thatcher wheat that we grow now in great quantities was imported in the first place from North Dakota. Among the exports, there is the grass seed from Manitoba just mentioned by the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert). And for many years northern Saskatchewan grew tons and tons of alfalfa seed which was exported all over North America.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Red Fife came from Russia first of all, did it not?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think possibly it did. I am unable at this stage to give the honourable senator any accurate estimate of what the export trade would amount to or how much seed we import, but perhaps I can get that information for honourable senators when the committee meets to consider the bill, and have it placed on the record.

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I have read this bill thoroughly and I really think it is a great improvement over the present act. It makes the legislation clearer and shorter, and those in charge will be able to apply the rules in a more practical manner. I would draw attention of honourable senators to that part of the bill which deals with penalties. In the act as it is at the present time the fine amounts to only $5 minimum with a maximum of $25. It was an easy matter for growers, and I might say not only growers but wholesale stores, to gain much more out of infractions than the $5 they were fined. But under the provisions of this bill the minimum fine will be $50 in addition to one month in jail. That is salutary. I venture to say that many laws that are in force are inadequate in that they impose no important sanctions or penalties, and therefore cannot really be enforced. In the case of this legislation, however, those responsible for enforcing it will be enabled to apply the law rigorously. I will describe a condition that applies not only to growers of seed in Saskatchewan and Ontario but in many villages throughout the land. When I was an agronomist for the provincial Government of Quebec we frequently discovered that merchants would alter the labels on bags of seed to show a superior grade, or would take two or three pounds out of a bag of superior seed and replace them with seed of poorer quality. As a result the farmers would harvest a very poor crop.

This bill, as the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) says, is an important one. It is a basic factor in our agriculture, and especially now, when the cost of labour is so high that it is necessary to harvest good crops. By the use of good seed we increase the food content of the crops.

I am very glad this bill will be referred to the Standing Committee on Natural Resources.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Of which you are the chairman.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Yes, I am afraid of that. However, in committee we will be able to get more information, especially on the point raised by the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert).

Honourable senators, I approve of the bill.

Hon. Thomas Vien: Honourable senators, before the bill is given second reading I would like to say a few words. I am not going to make a speech especially after the reference to forced labour made by the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), and to which all honourable senators have submitted.

I would like, however, to register my protest against the growing tendency to govern the country by order in council. If I have correctly grasped the explanation of the bill as given by the honourable Leader of the Government, it is proposed to eliminate from existing legislation certain sections that govern particular points and leave them to be regulated by order in council.

There are a number of laws on the statute books of Canada which give the Governor in Council power to pass regulations. That procedure is necessary in many statutes, I will admit, to render their application flexible. It would be quite impossible in the legislation itself to provide for all particular conditions or particular applications of the act.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It cannot be done.

Hon. Mr. Vien: It would be quite impossible to do that but it is preferable, to the full extent of its being practicable, that legislation should state what the citizens of Canada are obliged to do or not to do, and we should hold to a minimum what is to be dealt with by regulation under order in council.

I see in this particular bill another step in a direction that has been followed to a great extent in the past. It is a step that I deeply deplore.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, bill referred to Standing Committee on Natural Resources.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 10, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine, presented Bill S-26, to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Tuesday next.

PRIVATE BILL

FREE METHODIST CHURCH IN CANADA— FIRST READING

Hon. Norman P. Lambert presented Bill S-27, to incorporate The Free Methodist Church in Canada.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: With leave of the Senate, I would ask that the bill be placed on the Order Paper for second reading tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS FOR PRIVATE BILLS

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING

Hon. John J. Kinley, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders, presented the committee's third report.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Standing Orders make their third report, as follows:

Your committee recommend that the time limited for filing petitions for private bills (other than petitions for bills of divorce), which expired on May 27, 1959, be further extended to Wednesday, June 10, 1959.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be considered?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: With leave of the Senate, I move that it be adopted now.

Report adopted.

66972-1—49

EXCISE TAX BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill C-47.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

That the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to whom was referred the Bill (C-47) intituled: "An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 2, 1959, examined the said bill and report the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 2, lines 12 to 32 both inclusive: Strike out clause 2.

2. Page 6: Strike out line 1 and substitute therefor: "13. Sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 10 and 11 of this Act shall be".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, I would move that these amendments be taken into consideration at this time. It might be desirable to have an explanation of the amendments now and we could deal with their disposition afterwards.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, in order to consider the amendments today, according to the Rules of the Senate—

The Hon. the Speaker: There would have to be unanimous leave of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes. However, I think there is merit in the suggestion of the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) that he explain the amendments now. We could then have a debate, which could be adjourned, if necessary. I understand that one honourable senator would like to speak to the amendments today because he will be absent tomorrow, and I think we should accommodate him.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: We could deal with the adoption of the report tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Oh, no, I am opposed to that. I cannot be here tomorrow, because a very important event is taking place in Ontario at which I want to be present. I am prepared to go on now, or I can postpone my remarks until Tuesday evening, provided the debate will be completed in one day, and not in piecemeal fashion. If the debate is to take place today, then let it be completed today, so that the entire debate will be on the record to be read.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: If I may be permitted to speak again, Mr. Speaker, may I say that it will be impossible for me to be here tomorrow for the very same important reason that was given by the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll).

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Every vote counts!

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: For that reason I would hope that the main debate on the motion will not take place tomorrow. However, I am not expressing that as a request. Whether or not the final disposition of this motion is to be decided tomorrow, I feel, and probably the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina will agree, that an explanation of the bill should be given today. I understand it would be inconvenient for the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) to be here on Tuesday, and therefore the two honourable senators I have mentioned could speak on the debate at a later date.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Tuesday next?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Not necessarily Tuesday, but at some later date.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Honourable senators, as far as I am concerned, I intended to return here next week. I expected to take part in this debate, but found that I had an engagement in Vancouver on Tuesday that I simply must keep. I shall be here today and tomorrow. This is a matter that my colleagues from British Columbia and I regard as of great importance to British Columbia, and before I leave for Vancouver I should like to speak on it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the amendments could not be concurred in today without unanimous consent of the Senate, which so far has not been given. It is for honourable senators to decide whether or not the chairman of the committee (Hon. Mr. Hayden) may explain the committee's amendments this afternoon. If honourable senators are agreeable this could be done without his making a formal motion for concurrence in the amendments. On the other hand, he could, with unanimous consent, make the motion and explain the amendments. Then any other honourable senator who desires to speak today could do so, after which the debate could be adjourned, if desired.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Honourable senators, in view of what has been said by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), I would be interested to hear him, for he always makes a great contribution to any debate in which he participates. I would be pleased to accommodate him, but as for the rest of the flock—nothing doing!

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Honourable senators, I want to know what the bill is all about, and I wonder if we could be given time to obtain a copy of it, so that at least we may be able to listen intelligently to an explanation of the proposed amendments.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The bill was distributed several weeks ago, and it was debated in this house and given second reading at least a week ago.

Honourable senators, if I may say so, I think it is important that the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) should be permitted to move concurrence in the amendments today, and that then the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), should speak. After that the debate could be adjourned until some later date.

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN AMENDMENTS —DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is there unanimous consent that the motion for concurrence in the amendments may be made now?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Then I move that the amendments be concurred in.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Explain.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, the substantial amendment which was made to the Excise Tax Bill is in relation to section 2, which deals with the matter of an export tax upon the export of power from Canada to any other country.

Now, this same section 2 also repeals section 4 of an existing statute of Canada, called the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act. Under section 4 of that statute there is authority for the imposition of an export tax on the export of power. The section provides that the Governor in Council is authorized to levy an export tax not exceeding $10 per horsepower per annum upon the export of electricity.

For years that tax, at an amount under $10 per horsepower per annum, has been levied by the Governor in Council and has been paid by the various power companies in Canada which are exporting electricity.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That has been done since 1925, has it not?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Oh, yes, for a great many years. So that at the present time, quite apart from this provision being incorporated in the Excise Tax Act, the Government had the authority to impose the tax.

The only effect of transferring the authority to the Excise Tax Act and repealing the authority to tax in the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act is that under the Excise Tax Act the moment you levy the tax it is in a specific amount per horsepower and there is no opportunity for the exercise of discretion as to the amount. The only way in which it could be changed would be by a subsequent act of Parliament.

In recommending that this section be struck out the committee is not disturbing the ways and means of Parliament, because the tax which has actually been levied and collected up to this date amounts to the same as the tax which it is sought to incorporate by virtue of section 2 of the Excise Tax Act.

We heard a great many witnesses, chiefly from British Columbia, who asked, among other things, that this authority to tax be left for the present in the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act rather than be transferred to the Excise Tax Act, and the reason they gave was a reason which influenced some members, at any rate, of the committee. They desire a flexibility at this stage because great power developments are in process in western Canada at the present time.

Representatives of the Peace River Power Development Company indicated to us their plans for the development of tremendous quantities of power in the west. I think their initial financing, which they must complete by the end of this year, would be of the order of $400 million or $500 million, and that ultimately when the whole power project is completed they will have invested something of the order of $1 billion. The market upon which the financing must rest, if that financing is to be secured, is chiefly and almost entirely at the present moment an export market.

They are in the middle of their negotiations for satisfying those who are to provide the finances that this thing is feasible and economic. This, of course, involves an examination of every element of cost, including even the matter of this export duty on power, as a factor in whether they can satisfy the financing authorities on the basis of the tax as it has actually been imposed under the present law. If the tax remains constant it is a question whether the financing authorities will insist on some readjustment or will go into the deal. Those are matters which have to be resolved between now and the end of the year.

Very frankly, these representatives said to us they would like to see the situation remain somewhat flexible for at least this year, because if they are unable to get financing on the basis of the export tax in the amount in which it is now levied they at least want to be in a position where they can come to the Governor in Council and present their case with the possibility that if he looks favourably on it he can, by virtue of his statutory authority, do something for them. But if this tax were transferred to the Excise Tax Act the amount would be fixed and nothing could be done about it before next session at the earliest.

Enough of the senators in the committee were influenced by the presentation which was made to carry the report, which recommends that we strike out section 2. I have already explained that this would not strike out any of the tax that Canada at present imposes. That tax exists by virtue of the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act. So by this action we are not in any sense depriving Canada of any revenue. If the report is adopted here, and if it is accepted ultimately in the other house, we shall be maintaining for the time being a situation in which there is at least an air of flexibility and elbow room for bargaining. That, I think, is what impelled the majority of the members of the committee to do what they did.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Did you say "lobby"?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I would not want the honourable senator to leave a wrong impression by his use of the word "bargaining".

Hon. Mr. Golding: With a majority of one.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Possibly I should clarify both those points.

To me, a majority means any number over and above what the opposition has. I don't mind telling the house that the vote was 13 to 12. But suppose it had been 14 to 12, or 20 to 12, the result would still have been the same. This is a report which is being presented by the committee to this house, and the house is free to accept it or not as it pleases. No one is being deprived of an opportunity to vote. When a vote is called, any one is free to vote for or against the recommendation contained in the report.

As far as "bargaining" is concerned—that word seems to have disturbed at least one honourable senator—I was using it in the sense that if a tax is fixed in a statute there is no opportunity to talk to any person about it. No matter how intelligent you might be, or how intelligent any person to whom you were talking about it might be, or how strong your case might be, you would be going through an exercise in a vacuum, because that person would have no authority to give you the kind of relief you want. If relief is wanted for this financing, it is wanted right away: the parties concerned cannot wait until another session of Parliament is called.

These are not my conclusions, honourable senators; I am trying to say in my own language what was said before the committee. When I used the word "bargaining" I meant that the opportunity for bargaining exists under the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act. If the authority to tax remains in that statute there will be at least an opportunity to talk to the Governor in Council who, if he is persuaded, can grant relief.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Would my honourable friend like to extend the expression "elbow room for bargaining" to income tax as well?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I am not sure that my friend expects an answer to that question. I thought I detected in it a subtle undertone of sarcasm. But my friend and I have been good friends over such a long period of time that, had the question come from another quarter, I might have been more sure of such a conclusion.

To answer my friend directly, I would say "yes", without any hesitation. I would like to see in the taxing statutes the greatest opportunity for flexibility and discussion, leading, within reasonable limits, to a proper assessment. It is when you get into a strait-jacket that difficulties develop and you have so much dissatisfaction with the law.

Hon. Mr. Croll: "Bargaining" was the word, not "flexibility".

Hon. Mr. Golding: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Is it correct that the financing of the Peace River project has to be completed this year?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: In answering my friend I would say this: my friend was at the committee meeting and had the same opportunity to hear the witnesses that I had. Perhaps I heard them a little better than he did, because I was sitting right beside them. My understanding of the evidence, the printed report of which is not available at the moment, was that definite representation was made to us that the negotiations had to be completed by the end of this year so that the parties concerned could be able to say, "Yes, we are going ahead" or "No, we are not going ahead."

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Was the evidence taken in shorthand?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Is it not printed yet?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It has not been printed yet.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May we expect to have the evidence before we discuss this matter another day?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I made inquiries during the past two or three days, and yesterday I was informed that it was quite possible the evidence would be distributed this morning. However, up to the moment it has not arrived. No doubt it will arrive between now and next Tuesday.

Hon. J. W. deB. Farris: Honourable senators, I am a little embarrassed at the position in which I find myself in this matter. I always like to discuss a question when I know what the opposition is. From what I had heard and from inquiries I have made, I rather assumed that there might be a motion to have this question discussed in Committee of the Whole; and if that motion had been moved, whoever was taking the position of opposition would have stated the grounds as to why there is opposition to this report. I did not attend the committee meeting.

I may say honourable senators, that I had expected to come here next week in connection with other matters in the Senate, but I found that I had an engagement at Vancouver which had been made for some time next Tuesday, and which I just cannot miss. Then this matter came up. I got through court at 4.30 in the afternoon after a long case which had kept me busy for nearly two weeks, and I took the plane that night and got here yesterday after not sleeping. I am a little regretful at having to speak under these conditions. However, I very much appreciate the courtesy of the honourable senators in giving me this opportunity.

I think I should also say that for about 30 years I have been counsel for the British Columbia Electric Railway Company. I suppose any man who has acted for a big company for as long a period as that might be influenced by the interests of that company, but in this case my position is based not on any selfish interest that I have in the company but on my firm belief that what is in the interest of the British Columbia Electric Railway Company is, in this case, equally in the interest of the province of British Columbia, and anything that is in the interest of the province of British Columbia as a whole is mighty well in the interest of Canada as a whole.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: "What is good for the General Motors is good for the United States."

Hon. Mr. Farris: Well, that may be so. I feel sure my honourable friend will agree with me. He and I have been friends for a great many years. We formed our first acquaintance when we were fighting a common cause before the Privy Council, when he was Attorney General of Ontario and I, who had at one time been Attorney General of British Columbia, was representing the then Attorney General of that province. Our relationships and confidence in each other have continued up to the present time. I will be disappointed if in the end my honourable friend does not support my views in this case.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You are optimistic.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Honourable senators, the interests of the British Columbia Electric Railway Company and the British Columbia Power Commission, because it also has great power developments at this time, are the same. The B.C. Electric has some shares in the northern company. I have forgotten for the moment its name.

An Hon. Senator: The Peace River Company.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Yes, the Peace River Company. I have no shares in either company. Any shares which the British Columbia Electric Railway Company has in that company are not for investment purposes but are to encourage this company to go ahead with its power development in order to meet the requirements of those who are interested in securing power through the British Columbia Electric Company.

To anticipate what I shall come to in a moment, may I just say this, that the problem is one resting with two great companies in British Columbia having to do with the development of electric power in British Columbia. One is the British Columbia Electric Company and the other is the British Columbia Power Commission, which is a government-established and government-owned operation. Mr. Dal Grauer, the President of the British Columbia Electric Company, stated some months ago, and long before this question came up, that he and his company were concerned with the fact that they had reached the end of power development in the sites that were available to that company. They have power sites in the general vicinity of the Fraser River, and he said that they had to look in the future to power from the Columbia River, or from the Peace River, or the development of power by artificial means, and unless they could get some assurance that power could be secured from one of these sources they would have to go ahead now in order to develop nuclear power—"nuclear" is the word that was used—and spend many millions of dollars, and that would be a far more costly way of producing power for the citizens of British Columbia than taking advantage of either of these present great sources of power.

We all know, honourable senators, that as far as the Columbia River is concerned the friction, the controversies and the disputes between the United States and British Columbia on that question are delaying production of power from the Columbia, and nobody knows how long that is going to be held up. So neither the British Columbia Electric Company nor the British Columbia Power Commission can at this time wait for the development of the Columbia.

The alternative is the Peace River power, and the information which I have and which I believe—and those who were on that committee and who heard the evidence can be justified in believing the same thing—is that it is essential in order that the financing can take place, which involves millions of dollars, that some assurance be given to that company that it will be able to function.

I am going to follow my notes now, as far as I can, because of the short time I have had to study this question, and come back to that question in a moment.

It seems to me honourable senators, that the immediate problem is not one of Government financing at all, because, as the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) has just said, the tax involved as an export tax is now in existence, and whether it stays in existence under the order in council or is transferred to this taxing statute, in either case the tax will be the same amount, and the revenue to the Government will be the same in each case.

Now, is it advisable at this particular time to convert a tax existing by order in council into one imposed by statute? Honourable senators, in my short time here, during which I have discussed this with some of my friends, I found that the question of imposing taxes by order in council is, to their minds, a matter of grave concern. If that were the only issue in this case I would be 100 per cent with them, but what I want to impress on honourable senators, and particularly on my honourable friend over here who is nodding his head, is this, that that is not the primary issue at this time, because this tax by order in council was in effect under a Liberal Government for many years. It is not going to change the principle very much whether it is changed this year or next year. The real issue is: Are there reasons why it would be advisable to let the status quo remain for another year? If there are reasons why that would be in the public interest I do not think any abstract consideration of orders in council as against a statute should override immediate problems of public interest.

What would be the effect if that section were put into the statute? It would not show that we are opposed to orders in council, but rather that the tax is a good one and should be perpetuated. I could understand the logic if honourable senators suggested that the tax be done away with because it is administered under orders in council, but if Parliament approves and passes it then Parliament has to take the responsibility for the proposition that the tax is a good one and ought to be perpetuated. So while the discussion will not end up with any argument that the tax should be abolished at this time, it is inevitable that the house must consider whether it is prepared at this time to put its blessing on this tax as something that ought to be passed by Parliament.

Once you are passing a statute you have to ask yourself, "Is the tax a sound one?" If it is not, you have no business to pass it, orders in council or no orders in council. Is it one which at this time should be approved by Parliament and given the permanence that necessarily goes in changing it from an order in council into a statute? The Liberals may well say that it must be a good tax because they supported it for a great many years, and the Conservatives are entitled to say that it must be a good tax because they are supporting it now. But in my respectful submission one neutralizes the other, and I think honourable senators should rely on their own independent thinking as to whether or not it is a good tax. It is the duty of the Senate to make its own decision not only on the question of whether it should be taxation by order in council or by statute, but also on the immediate question of whether this tax is good enough to justify our endorsation, notwithstanding the fact that the Liberal Government supported it in the past and apparently the Conservative Government is prepared to support it now.

Honourable senators, I am not leading to a suggestion that we should kill the tax altogether, but I am suggesting we should consider the merits of the tax before we pass it. My information is that it is a very unusual tax, and that the statute is not needed in order to preserve the national revenue for this year. My honourable friend from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) has made it clear that, whether this section is in or out, the tax remains unless the Government of Canada, for reasons considered to be in the public interest, decides it should be reduced or wiped out. However, if we put this amendment through, the flexibility will be gone and if problems arise next year which justify elimination or reduction of this tax for the purposes of providing power, particularly to the citizens of British Columbia, this could not be done until the next session of Parliament at the very earliest. Honourable senators will know how much more difficult it will be to do this, if this year we put our blessing on the section. Do not make any mistake about that. Let us assume that, as sometimes happens, there is a divided opinion in the present Government. I would expect there might be and that those from the west would have more consideration for the welfare of British Columbia than those from, say, Toronto. I do not know this, for I have never discussed it with any members. But if that is the case, then would not those who want to perpetuate this tax be in a lot stronger position with their own associates if they could say, "Only a few months ago the Parliament of Canada passed this legislation and declared it to be the policy of Canada"? It would be a lot tougher to get it changed for the welfare of British Columbia under those conditions than if the legislation were left as it is and we gave the Government a free hand and trusted in its fair-mindedness, so that if necessity arose it could change things overnight by an order in council.

If there are any here who would not trust the Government they might say, "Let us nail this down solidly and keep it there." But if you feel that this Government can be trusted to give fair-minded treatment, without having its hands tied by Parliament, I can see no reason in the world why the status quo should not be maintained.

Why is this tax here at the present time? It is not a question of why it was imposed some twenty-five years ago. A lot of water has gone under the bridge and over the dam since that time.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Thirty-five years ago.

Hon. Mr. Farris: My position is getting stronger all the time.

Honourable senators, we must deal with the problem that confronts us now. It is a most unusual tax. My information is that there is no other natural product, certainly in British Columbia, on which there is an export tax. We must keep this in mind. There are great developments of natural gas and oil in Alberta, Saskatchewan and the Peace River country. Those resources are subject to depletion and one could understand the logic of protecting those resources from depletion by Americans by imposing an export tax, but no such tax has ever been imposed. In Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia, and to some extent in the mid-west, we have vast areas of timber that are subject only to forestry provisions for reclamation, and they are being depleted. There is a strong argument to have an export tax by the dominion to prevent the depletion of timber, fisheries, minerals, gas and oil, but there are no export taxes to protect those great resources.

As to electricity, how is it produced? It is produced by the damming of our water supplies and getting power from the water that falls over the dams. You cannot protect that natural resource. The water that goes over the dam and is not converted into electricity goes out to the sea and is gone forever. Do not overlook that fact, honourable senators. An export tax cannot protect water power that is gone. "The mill cannot grind with water that's past." I believe there is a song to that effect. You will never be able to protect the natural resource of water that every day flows out into the ocean.

In the next place, this export tax is not necessary to protect the domestic consumer. A customs duty will protect the domestic consumer, but an export tax will not, except in a case where you have such a shortage of something in Canada that it is necessary to stop it from going out. Does that condition exist in this case? I can say it does not exist in British Columbia. The problem in that province is the very reverse of that. If in the next very few years we are going to be short of a supply of electricity, it will not be because of any extravagance in sending it to the United States, but rather because we do not develop those great natural resources of ours for our own country, and in addition for the United States market. Let there be no mistake about that, honourable senators. I am sure that my honourable friend who sponsored this bill in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Brunt), as well as those members who were in attendance in committee, will confirm the fact, from the evidence heard, that the export duty, in the amount involved, is not a protection to the local needs for electricity, but is a menace to it. We were told, and I think it is without question, that you cannot have this power developed in northern British Columbia and brought down to the coast except at very great expense. If on top of that expense this tax is imposed, we shall not have the United States market to supplement our own market. The same was true in connection with our oil and gas. We would never have had a supply of oil and gas for consumers in Vancouver and the mainland of British Columbia, where our great population is, unless it had been supplemented by a market on the other side of the line, which made possible the big type of financing that was necessary. And the big type of financing which was necessary in regard to gas and oil is far more necessary in the highly speculative proposition of bringing in electricity.

Now, my friends are opposing this. They say it is true that it may not be practical to bring electricity for five or six hundred miles from the north to the coast and over into the United States. But, honourable senators, present indications are that it is practical, and these hard-headed businessmen who are putting up their own money on this undertaking believe it to the extent that they are today spending several millions of dollars in experiments to make sure that is so. If it turns out that they are wrong they will lose their money, but it will not have done British Columbia or Canada any harm. If they are right, as we believe they are, it is going to be a great thing for British Columbia and the dominion of Canada.

Honourable senators, I repeat that, on analysing the tax in principle, it is clear that an export duty would not protect our natural resources. At the present time it is not possible that it would be for the benefit of the domestic consumer. On the contrary, as you who were here in the Senate have heard and as I was privately instructed, this tax, which is not tax on net income but is practically a six per cent tax on the gross returns and is imposed whether the company is making a profit or a loss, might easily be prohibitive to the financing of an undertaking of this kind. As I have said, the tax is not necessary in order to protect natural resources. The water goes over the dam, tax or no tax. It is not necessary in order to protect the consumer; its effect is contrary. It is not necessary in order to protect the revenue, because the Government in its wisdom—and I may say that although I do not support this Government I have a lot of respect for it—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Farris: No man has ever heard me, either in this house or on the platform, challenge the good faith of this Government. I have an idea that the St. Laurent Government might have done better, but that is neither here nor there. We have this Government, and if we are good Canadians we must respect it and have confidence that if we leave the matter with it for the time being—not indefinitely, my honourable friend, but for the time being—while this problem of financing is being worked out, the Government will play the game in the interests of Canada and in the interests of British Columbia, and if it believes that relief can be given here to bring about the harnessing of this water that is today flowing away and being lost, then why in the name of heaven should we not leave things as they are for the time being until that problem is settled? Why should this question of orders in council, which has never been settled in the years that I have been associated with politics, be a stumbling block for, say, a year to a principle involving the welfare of the citizens of this country?

I want to point out in the next place, honourable senators, that this export tax has two very different features. As it has been applied, and I presume it is lawfully being carried out, the tax is imposed not only on bona fide exports but also on what I would term non-real exports.

This situation has developed in British Columbia: The British Columbia Electric Company has an agreement with the Bonneville Company located on the American side—I think it is in the state of Washington. That is a big electric power company in the United States. Now, it has happened and will happen in the future, in the generation of electricity, which depends entirely on water storage, that at one time there may be ample water in storage in the state of Washington and a shortage in British Columbia. At another time the water situation may have changed and the reservoirs in British Columbia may be more than sufficiently full for its immediate needs while there is a shortage in the state of Washington.

Now, there is an arrangement for the common benefit of the two countries, that if there is a shortage of water power in British Columbia which results in a curtailment in the production of electricity, the British Columbia Electric Company can borrow electricity for the time being from Washington, and when the conditions are reversed and they have an adequate supply of water in British Columbia, they can pay back in electricity what they owe to the power company at Bonneville.

Now, why in the world has there to be an export duty on that power that goes from Canada to be returned at a later date or vice versa? Even if a Liberal Government or a Conservative Government has done it, or both, what sense is there in penalizing an arrangement for a reciprocal standard interchange of power in that sense? I do not know. I am not initiating anybody to retain me, but if I had been retained I think I would be inclined to argue that that is not legal, that it does not make sense at all that this should be considered an export in the sense of the act. But we have to take the facts as they are, and certainly as long as this particular problem exists we are never going to get any change in that, and even if it is taken to the courts it will be a year or two before it can be cleared there.

May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if that situation was brought to the attention of the Senate before second reading was given to the bill? Was it drawn to the attention of the House of Commons when the bill was before it?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The power companies from British Columbia have made representations to the House of Commons and the Government for at least 25 years on this same point.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Maybe they have.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: They admitted it in the evidence given before the committee.

Hon. Mr. Farris: They never made these representations under the critical conditions that exist at the present time, though. And why is my honourable friend so concerned about this? Has he become at last a convert to the theory that you must not do anything by order in council? If I thought that he was really converted, and that the whole Government was really converted to that, and that it was not going to stop with this bill but would bring down legislation to repeal every provision in every statute empowering it to act by order in council, I would say let us go ahead and pass this bill. But why is it being done in this one isolated case? The present arrangement is giving the country revenue. The tax is levied by the Government, in which the honourable Leader has the utmost confidence, and even Parliament have confidence that once this problem has got over its acute stage the Government of Canada, headed by the Prime Minister and his colleagues, will do justice on this occasion as the exigencies of the case may demand and will not be tied up by a hidebound piece of legislation that makes it impossible to do anything until the next session; and even to change it at the next session would bring on criticism because the public would likely ask why a tax enacted only a few months ago was being repealed.

Hon. Mr. Davies: Will the tax not be just the same whether it is gathered by order in council or under the Excise Tax Act?

Hon. Mr. Farris: Of course it will, with this difference, that if the tax is put on by Parliament it could not be changed except by another act of Parliament, but if you leave it to the Government and in the meantime the problem justifies some relief, then the power is there to give it overnight. It is a question of practical administration of this problem. After all, we are not concerned with theories in these matters. These are practical matters and they have to be dealt with as practical concerns in the administration of the public affairs in the interests of the people of Canada.

I may say just at this point that, as far as I know, our British Columbia senators are a unit on this question. The honourable senator from Victoria (Hon. Mrs. Hodges) is not here, but I am sure she has the same view as the rest of us.

Now there is a peculiar—I am not certain whether "paradox" is the right word, but you will understand what I mean. In British Columbia we have, I believe, the greatest power potential on the North American continent—the Columbia River and the Peace River power possibilities—and while we have that on the one hand, we are simultaneously threatened with a power shortage on the other. Nobody needs to be told that this is an undesirable condition, to have at our door this power potential at a time when we are threatened with a power shortage. Mr. Dal Grauer said long before this issue came up that we are threatened with a power shortage in the immediate future in British Columbia. The first and foremost consideration of every senator in Canada should be to ask, "Is there any way to break that deadlock and to secure that power as speedily as possible for the citizens of Canada?"

As I have said, Mr. Grauer has intimated that in the development of his company they expect to spend in the next five years several hundred millions of dollars. I am not very good at figures and I am not sure whether it is 3.5 hundred million or five hundred million. As we all remember, somebody once said, "What's a million dollars?" In any event, whatever the amount, it is a tremendous sum, and it is part of the development inspired by the imagination of these men who are in charge of the development of our resources in British Columbia, of whom Mr. Grauer is one. He says that he must look to one of two sources, the Peace River and the Columbia. In the case of the Columbia, there is no immediate prospect; he cannot wait for it. There is, however, an immediate prospect in the Peace River, if the company is prepared to continue spending money as it is spending it to prove the feasibility of what it wants and is able to find it. But the biggest stumbling block would be the unresponsive action of Parliament to the company's request, and to have that merely because someone wants to do away with orders in council and picks on this instance regardless of the interest that may be involved.

Mr. Grauer has said that if he cannot get within the reasonable future an assurance that this development is going ahead, he will have to start spending his company's money on thermo power processes, which will cost infinitely more. That expense would ultimately fall on the consumers of Canada, particularly on those in British Columbia.

Honourable senators, as I have said, this applies not only to the British Columbia Electric Company, but also to the British Columbia Power Commission. I received a telegram from Mr. Bennett, Premier of British Columbia. Copies were sent to my honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), and I believe also to the honourable Leader of the Government. My leader has been good enough to hand me his copy. Let me say that if this were a purely political matter, I would not be recommending for your consideration anything Mr. Bennett said. But Mr. Bennett enjoys the support of a very large majority in the province. Whatever else we may say about him, he is a practical businessman; he has made a success of his own business, and he is greatly concerned because the British Columbia Power Commission, a creature of the provincial Government, is running neck and neck as a rival to the British Columbia Electric in regard to the development of power.

As I say, Mr. Bennett sent a copy of this telegram to the two leaders in this house and to myself. Let me read it to you:

> Several aspects Columbia River negotiation seriously prejudiced by placing electrical energy export tax inflexibly in Excise Act. Its retention under cabinet control by regulation preferable if tax cannot be eliminated at this time. Canadian considerations of recapturable export of electrical energy cannot be objectively entertained when an approximate six per cent cost item is inflexibly built into the Canadian sale price. Suggest that this item be dealt with only on presently provided basis (not as proposed by amendments) until Columbia decisions are complete as to necessity or desirability of temporary export of electricity and integration of systems. This argument most pertinent when consideration of system interchange is involved as this tax is in effect paid only by British Columbia consumers. Moreover surplus electricity which energy board might approve for export cannot in any event be stored. Three-tenths mill impost simply makes Canadian power non-competitive if American sale were desired.
> W. A. C. Bennett, Premier of British Columbia.

It may be that no honourable senator is a supporter of Mr. Bennett. Certainly I am not one of his supporters. The fact remains, though, that he is Premier of British Columbia, and if any man is authorized to speak for the welfare of that province, he is. There is no reason in the world why he should make these representations to the Senate except in his honest belief that it is in the interest of the country that this tax should not be made inflexible at this time.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Is he not the chap who gave away an empire of public resources to private enterprise?

Hon. Mr. Farris: I am not aware that he did. I have heard a lot of socialists make that statement, but I am not aware that that is so. It is illustrative of his policy with regard to a rather grand adventure, but nothing has yet been given away. As I understand it, all that has been done so far is to give an opportunity to certain men to spend their money in British Columbia to see if there is a possibility of development there. If there is, I presume the opportunity for giving away something may arise. But so far it has not happened.

I say to my honourable friend that I don't think it is quite fair to interject that comment into the situation here, because we are entitled to assume that when a man who holds the responsibile position of Prime Minister of a province makes representations of this kind they are at least entitled to respectful consideration. I point out that I am no more a supporter of Mr. Bennett than is my honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck).

I have here a memorandum which was signed by Mr. Bruce Robertson, one of the Vice-Presidents of the B.C. Electric Railway Company, and by Mr. Mainwaring, President of the Peace River Power Development Company, in which they point out certain things. I understand copies of this memorandum have been sent to some honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It was before us in the committee.

Hon. Mr. Farris: The memorandum says that not less than 500,000 kilowatts must be promised if the consumption at the beginning of the organization is going to pay, and if the financing is to be feasible. They say that the company will be ready for operation about 1966, and that at that time there will not be enough consumers in British Columbia through the B.C. Electric and the B.C. Power Commission to consume that quantity of electricity. Unless there is an opportunity to export a small amount also to the United States, corresponding with the sale in British Columbia, this scheme will not be feasible, and they made the unqualified statement that the tax which will amount to 6 per cent of the price per kilowatt hour will make it an impossible venture.

So there is not going to be this development, if these men are telling the truth, and there is no reason why they should not be telling the truth, unless there is some prospect of, to use my honourable friend's word, bargaining in a respectable sense—"negotiations" is a better word—unless there is some prospect of negotiations between this company and the Government of Canada to discover some way in which this development can be encouraged to the extent that it will be able to go ahead. It seems to me it all narrows down to that.

Honourable senators, I wish I could be here when my honourable friend the Leader of the Government explains his position on behalf of the Government. What is all the haste about this? How is the Government policy affected unless, as I say, it has been completely converted to the idea that orders in council are so bad that they are now a curse and cannot be tolerated at all? Why is there any Government objection to allowing the status quo, to which they have been a party as well as the Liberals, remain for another year? By that time Parliament will know if the enterprise is feasible. If it is going to collapse, we will know. If by that time Parliament has lost confidence in the good sense and judgment of the Government, the opportunity will be left to deal with that.

I want to call the attention of honourable senators to another very important factor in this, namely, that there is now before this house a bill to provide for the establishment of a National Energy Board, Bill C-49. I understand it had the unanimous support in its present form of the Liberals and Conservatives in the House of Commons. I do not know what the two or three Socialists did about it. I presume they opposed it, but it had the unanimous support of the Liberals and the Conservatives, who alone are represented in this house. I presume there is no question that this bill will be passed in the Senate, and I want to call attention to what section 44 of the bill provides. Section 44 reads:

> The Board may, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, issue a certificate in respect of a pipe line or an international power line if the Board is satisfied that the line is and will be required by the present and future public convenience and necessity, and, in considering an application for a certificate, the Board shall take into account all such matters as to it appear to be relevant, and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the Board may have regard to the following:
> (a) the availability of oil or gas to the pipe line, or power to the international power line, as the case may be;
> (b) the existence of markets, actual or potential;
>
> (c) the economic feasibility of the pipe line or international power line;
>
> (d) the financial responsibility and financial structure of the applicant, the methods of financing the line and the extent to which Canadians will have an opportunity of participating in the financing, engineering and construction of the line; and
> (e) any public interest that in the Board's opinion may be affected by the granting or the refusing of the application.

Honourable senators, I think that my friend the Leader of the Government has no doubt that the Senate will support this bill. It was the subject of a prolonged discussion in the other place. It is the result of recommendations made by the Borden Commission. If my memory serves me correctly, the Borden Commission was set up before the last election.

An Hon. Senator: No.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It was set up between the two elections.

Hon. Mr. Farris: With that kind of legislation any argument there might be as to the necessity of this tax to control the export of electricity is gone. If Bill C-49 is sound and if this principle is going to be adopted by Parliament, as it will be, why all this hurry to pass the present bill in anticipation of that?

Another section of Bill C-49, namely, section 50, reads:

> The Board may make orders with respect to all matters relating to traffic, tolls or tariffs.

The words are "traffic, tolls or tariffs". I suppose that includes "exporting", but that will be subject to this bill if it is passed. If it is not passed then this board which, no doubt, will be one of great competence, will have the right to deal with those matters.

I think honourable senators—and I include my honourable friend who has not smiled on me very much—should recognize the importance of this measure and its material effect on the present bill.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I want to say that so far as the question of orders in council is concerned it is a pretty far-fetched argument to say in regard to legislation that has existed for years, and that has been countenanced by the members of the House of Commons and by every senator who is now in this house as well as by many who are dead and gone, that the question in balance between the principles of an order in council and of a statute must be decided now. That can be left until there is a new utility commission which will deal with these matters under Bill C-49. It seems to me that you are worrying about a harmless order in council. You are raising an unnecessary problem that really does not arise at this time. I have pointed out my reasons why this bill should not have the approval of this house without at least another year's consideration. The mere fact that the tax has been passed by one Government and endorsed by another is a good enough ground for saying that the present discussion is not directed towards wiping out this tax. The present discussion is directed only to the problem of keeping the status quo until there has been a reasonable time for British Columbia and other provinces to have an opportunity to solve their problems. Why not leave it alone? Why not let us try to work this out? Why not let us have confidence in the Government that it will be co-operative in this matter. Why not leave this matter to fair discussion and maintain the status quo at least until next session?

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, debate adjourned until Tuesday next.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the second reading of Bill C-49, to provide for the establishment of a National Energy Board.

He said: Honourable senators, I am sure you will agree that this bill is one of the most important measures to come before Parliament this year. Briefly, the purpose of the bill is to ensure to the Canadian people the best use of the energy resources of this country. As a background to a review of the bill which I propose to make, I wish to refer to the Royal Commission on Energy which was appointed by order in council on October 15, 1957. I would like to mention the membership of that commission, which was comprised of a distinguished group of Canadians. The chairman, as is well known by honourable senators, was Henry Borden, C.M.G., Q.C., Toronto, and the members were J. Louis Levesque, Montreal, George Edwin Britnell, Saskatoon, Gordon G. Cushing, Ottawa, Robert D. Howland, Halifax, and Leon J. Ladner, Q.C., Vancouver. Shortly after the commencement of the sittings of the commission Mr. Cushing was appointed Assistant Deputy Minister of Labour. Consequently he resigned his post on the commission and was replaced by Professor R. Macdonald Hardy of Edmonton, Alberta.

I would like to recite part of the preamble of the order in council which appointed this commission:

> That, inasmuch as Canada has within its boundaries large sources of energy in the form of gas, oil, coal, water and uranium, the increasing need of energy for the growing industrial requirements of Canada renders it of the greatest importance to assure the most effective use of those resources in the public interest;
> That it is desirable that an investigation be made now into a number of questions relating to sources of energy in order to assist in determining the principles and procedures to be applied in the administration of certain aspects of energy policy which fall within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada; and
> That it is desirable that a suitable form of organization be devised to ensure that present and future Canadian requirements for energy are taken fully and systematically into account in granting licences for the export of energy or sources of energy.

Then the commission was requested to inquire into and make representations concerning certain matters, and I would like to recite two or three of the paragraphs in that regard:

> (a) the policies which will best serve the national interest in relation to the export of energy and sources of energy from Canada;
> (b) the problems involved in, and the policies which ought to be applied to, the regulation of the transmission of oil and natural gas between provinces or from Canada to another country, including, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the regulation of prices of rates to be charged or paid, the financial structure and control of pipeline corporations in relation to the setting of proper prices or charges, and all such other matters as it is necessary to enquire into and report upon, in order to ensure the efficient and economical operation of pipelines in the national interest;

(c) the extent of authority that might best be conferred on a National Energy Board to administer, subject to the control and authority of Parliament, such aspects of energy policy coming within the jurisdiction of Parliament as it may be desirable to entrust to such a Board, together with the character of administration and procedure that might best be established for such a Board;

In pursuance of the provisions of the order in council the commission proceeded to hold public hearings in various cities in Canada, namely, Victoria, Calgary, Regina, Winnipeg, Toronto and Montreal. During those sessions there were 8,500 pages of evidence taken before the commission.

The first report of the commission was presented to the Government in October, 1958, and a second report is presently in process of completion and will, I understand, be presented to the Government in due course.

The second report will deal with certain problems in respect of crude oil, which are not dealt with in the first report. As a further background to the review of the bill which I propose to give, I would like to present a few figures in regard to the tremendous developments of energy resources of Canada, particularly natural gas and oil, that have taken place since the discovery of Leduc No. 1 in Alberta in February, 1947. When I mention Leduc No. 1 I refer to the first oil well which was discovered in that area of Alberta by Imperial Oil Limited. Within two years of the discovery of Leduc the estimate of crude oil production in Alberta was 100,000 barrels per day. The total Canadian consumption at that time was estimated at 290,000 barrels per day. By 1959, however, one decade later, western Canada crude oil production runs at a rate of about 500,000 barrels per day, which is now equivalent to roughly two-thirds of total Canadian oil requirements. In 1959 crude oil was Canada's leading mineral in value of production, exceeding $400 million. In 1958 exports of crude oil were over $73 million, and now by virtue of the removal of certain barriers to the export of oil to the United States it is confidently expected that this figure will be considerably increased.

There have also been parallel developments in the natural gas industry. In 1949 the proven reserves in Canada were 5 trillion cubic feet. By 1958 the proven reserves had increased to 25 trillion cubic feet. In 1949 net production of natural gas in Canada was 60 billion cubic feet. In 1958 the net production of natural gas was 336 billion cubic feet. Further large increases can be expected to follow the recent construction of major pipe lines and the opening of markets on the west coast and also in Ontario and the Montreal area. Besides that, applications to export large quantities of gas to the western United States have recently been approved by the Alberta Government, and related applications are now pending, awaiting action by the Government of Canada and by the United States Federal Power Commission.

One of the urgent reasons for the passage of this measure is that it provides administrative machinery for making appropriate disposition of these pending applications for gas export licences. Also, in regard to natural gas, it should be noted that the production and transmission of gas have been accompanied by a remarkable development in by-product industries in Canada, such as sulphur, gasoline, propane, butane and other products. There are now 22 plants in Canada processing natural gas and recovering its by-products.

Further, in regard to investments in the oil and gas industry, these, of course, as we all know, have been quite enormous in recent years. In the decade ending in 1958 the cumulative investment total in the oil and gas industry in Canada was $4.4 billion, and that was excluding land acquisition costs. These figures cover only direct investments and do not take into account the secondary investments which result from them, such as those in new industries supplying the oil industry, the manufacturing of pipes for pipe lines and other purposes in connection with the oil and natural gas industry. This development has only begun, and will be much greater in the future, hence requiring the attraction of still larger sums of capital. Therefore, it is so necessary to have a favourable investment climate in Canada so that capital may have a prospect of reasonable and fair returns within the framework of a stable and realistic Government policy.

In general it should be said, honourable senators, that in most important respects the bill adopts the recommendations made in the first report of the Borden Royal Commission on Energy. On the other hand, some of the recommendations of the report are not translated into this bill, and in other cases they are accepted in part and rejected in part. The first point to be mentioned in regard to the bill is that it attempts to provide simpler machinery for dealing with matters relating to oil and gas and pipe lines to transport them, than existed in the past. The Board of Transport Commissioners has had certain responsibilities in respect of the construction and operation of pipe lines under the Pipe Lines Act, while the Minister of Trade and Commerce has also had certain responsibilities under the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act. So in the case of gas exports involving pipe line construction, applicants have been required in the past to satisfy two different agencies, namely, the Board of Transport Commissioners and the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

The bill will replace the Pipe Lines Act and the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act. It will concentrate within a single agency of the National Energy Board the functions formerly carried out by the Board of Transport Commissioners and the Minister of Trade and Commerce in respect to export and import licences for gas and export licences for electric power.

Also, certain sections of the Railway Act are incorporated in this bill by reference.

In respect to securing information, the board will be entitled to exercise the powers of commissioners under Part I of the Inquiries Act. That is, the board will have the power to summon witnesses and require them to give evidence on oath or affirmation, and to produce such documents as the commissioners deem requisite.

I come now to the part respecting control over the construction and operation of pipe lines and international power lines. A broad function of the board will be the exercise of control over the construction and operation of pipe lines for the transmission of hydro carbons and the issuance of certificates of convenience and necessity to authorize the construction and operation of such pipe lines. This function applies in a similar manner to international power lines. This part of the bill, as it relates to pipe lines, is drawn very substantially from the present Pipe Lines Act, and the National Energy Board will replace the Board of Transport Commissioners as the responsible agency in regard thereto. In the same way, the National Energy Board will replace the Board of Transport Commissioners in its former function of regulating the transmission charges of both oil and gas pipe lines.

All certificates of convenience and necessity issued by the National Energy Board to build and construct pipe lines are, in this bill, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. It is deemed that new major pipe line projects appear likely to raise problems of national policy so important that decision on them should be reviewed by the Government of the day.

Now, in regard to licences. Recommendation 16 of the Borden report suggested that the National Energy Board be authorized to require any company engaged in the transmission across provincial boundaries of hydro carbons to obtain a licence from the board. These licensing recommendations are not being implemented in the bill, as it was deemed that the hearing upon and the issue of certificates of public convenience and necessity was sufficient for all purposes, namely, that after such a certificate being issued to a pipe line a licence would be superfluous. All this applies to operations of a pipe line within Canada. There is a provision in the bill to ensure that a certificate may be suspended or revoked if its terms are violated or if the operation of the pipe line is conducted not in compliance with the act or the regulations.

In addition to the certificate procedure for pipe lines the bill provides a parallel set of arrangements for international electric power lines. As is well known, licences for power have in the past been issued under the authority of the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act. Under the present bill, however, the certificate procedure is applied in respect of the construction of the physical facilities to export power in the same way as respects the export of gas. The export of power will require a licence as before, but it is to be issued through the same agency as will govern pipe lines. namely, the National Energy Board established under this act.

It is not intended to impose any regulations upon the construction of interprovincial power lines, since most large systems are either provincially owned or under close provincial control, and are merely interconnected one with the other.

I would now like to deal very briefly with the criteria which the bill will require the board to apply in dealing with applications for certificates of public convenience and necessity for pipe lines and international power lines.

The problem here was to see that the criteria were not too restricted and, on the other hand, that they were not so general that the board had insufficient guidance on which to act. In these matters regard was had to section 12 (3) of the Pipe Lines Act, recommendation 21 of the Borden report, section 15 (3) of the Aeronautics Act, and the set of 24 points which the Board of Transport Commissioners had embodied in a memorandum for its own guidance and the guidance of applicants.

Now I come to traffic, tolls and tariffs, in Part IV of the bill. This is perhaps the most important single new feature of the law in respect to these matters.

The Pipe Lines Act provides for control of the traffic, tolls and tariffs of oil pipe line companies once such companies have been declared by the Board of Transport Commissioners to be common carriers. However, although the major oil pipe lines have, in fact, acted as common carriers, they were never declared by the board to be such, and accordingly their traffic, tolls and tariffs have never been controlled. Also the charges of gas transmission pipe lines have not been subject to any control.

Gas prices at the point of production are regarded by the province of origin as being under their jurisdiction, and gas prices to the ultimate consumer are controlled by the province in which consumption takes place. The Government of Canada has had the power to exercise control over the price of gas being exported, under the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act, but it has long been felt by many people that the gap in regulation of the price of gas between the point of first sale and the point of sale to distributors in the area of consumption was a gap which in the public interest should be closed.

The case for regulation of gas transmission charges is straightforward. The commodity which gas transmission companies provide is in competition with other energy sources, so that they are not so clearly in the position of a monopolistic public utility as are, for example, water services. However, few if any of their customers can turn to another source of gas, and if they do turn to another energy source they incur the expense of installing different equipment. The gas transmission companies are therefore in a partial monopoly position, and the public interest requires that they should demonstrate that their rates are not such as to constitute exploitation of that quasi-monopoly position.

At the same time, since they must compete at the point of origin for supplies of gas, and compete at the point of sale with other fuels and energy sources, there is a substantial element of risk for gas transmission companies. For this reason they must not be prevented by regulatory action from earning a return sufficient to attract capital, nor must management be deprived of the normal incentive to improve efficiency.

Now, what about oil pipe line operations? Here, there is the added factor that it is more feasible for the pipe line's customers to obtain their oil from other sources. Also, the competition between oil and other fuels is perhaps more intense than the competition faced by gas, and the results of oil pipe line operations are accordingly more subject to fluctuation. Some oil producers can find an outlet to a market through only one pipe line, and some refineries are similarly dependent on one pipe line. Oil pipe lines therefore have some of the characteristics of monopoly, and the argument for some regulation in the public interest therefore applies. As is well known, the problem of regulating prices of monopolies or semi-monopolies is a difficult one. The objective should be to find the means and level of regulation that will adequately protect the public interest and particularly the interest of the consumer, while maintaining healthy conditions for the pipe line industry and the oil and gas-producing industries, as well as the industries distributing oil products and gas for consumption.

Consequently the bill does not specify a formula which the board might be required to apply in setting tolls and tariffs. On the contrary the board will be expected to do this on the basis of tried and tested principles of public utility rate making.

In this respect the bill differs in a fundamental way from the formula proposed in recommendation 12 of the Borden Commission, which recommended that rates should be based upon reasonable return on the shareholders' equity instead of being based upon the total amount of capital invested in the project concerned.

I would now like to refer briefly to a problem that arises in rate making in respect of gas pipe line companies as distinct from oil pipe line companies. This arises by virtue of the fact that gas companies buy gas outright at the point of production and sell it outright to their consumers, whereas oil pipeline companies merely carry oil owned by producers or purchasers for a toll. Consequently, in regard to a gas pipe line company, the bill provides for treating as a toll certain portions of the difference between the price paid by the transmission company for the gas and the price charged by the company to its customers.

The fixing of this proportion is to be left to the board. However, an oil pipe line company is a well recognized common carrier charging a rate or toll for its services.

I come now to the provisions in regard to the exportation and importation of energy and energy resources. These provisions in the bill replace corresponding provisions of the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act, but the bill differs from that act in many important respects.

Export and import licensing will be done by the National Energy Board and not by the Minister of Trade and Commerce as at present. Import and export of oil is not to be subject to licensing, but the Governor in Council by proclamation to that effect may consider oil to come within the ambit of the act. If it should be necessary to make such a proclamation it must be laid before Parliament at its next session—indeed, forthwith after the next Parliament assembles.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Would the honourable senator permit a question? Is it not a fact that the bill provides for getting approval for the construction of a pipe line before it is undertaken?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Then, do I understand my friend to say that while that exists in the statute it is not necessary at the present time to apply for a permit or a licence to export what might go through that pipe line?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is right in respect of export of oil. But an export licence is required for the export of natural gas.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Until such time as a proclamation is made, is it a fact that pipe lines that are engaged in export may continue as such without being subject to the direction of the board?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is right, in respect only of oil. I might add this: at the present time an exporter of oil by pipe line is required to obtain an annual licence, but that necessity is removed under this bill. That is, there will be necessity for neither export licence nor import licence for the carriage of oil across the international boundary.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Does the bill place any compulsion on companies already in operation to take out a licence? I have read the bill and I find no such provision.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: There are in the bill various sections which are called transitional features, and which provide for the transition as between this legislation and other acts. I think it will be found that companies that required licences under former acts will require similar licences under this proposed act, with the exception of exporters of crude oil by pipe line, which companies will not be required to be licensed under this legislation. However, as I said, that may be changed by a proclamation, but the proclamation must be submitted to Parliament as soon as possible.

To return to my explanation of the bill, I was dealing with export and import licences and the fact that in future such licences can be issued only after a public hearing. Such public hearings were not necessary under the other act, and this omission was a just cause of public complaint. Furthermore, under the former law the Minister of Trade and Commerce was under no obligation to state why he approved or denied a licence.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: May I ask my friend where in the bill is the provision for public hearing on the application for export licence?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I do not have the section in my mind at the moment, but the bill does contain provision for public hearing in regard to both applications for licensing and for certificates of public convenience and necessity.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I fail to find the provision.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I am sure you will find it in the bill.

The term of export licences for the exportation of gas is not to exceed 25 years, although it is intended to continue the policy of limiting electric power export licences to one year, unless exceptional circumstances justify a longer term.

Before issuing export licences for gas or electric power, the board is to be satisfied with the reasonableness of the price to be obtained in each case.

As I have already said, although exports of gas are to be subject to licence, that is not the case in respect to the export of oil. It is deemed that there are considerations as between these two commodities which put them on a different basis from the point of view of licensing requirements. Oil, unlike electric power and gas, is a commodity which moves freely in world trade from a variety of sources to a given market, or from a given source to a variety of markets, and moves by a variety of means of transport. In other words, a great flexibility is contained in this trade itself. On the other hand, gas export services, once established, must continue for a substantial period to enable the enterprise to attract capital and to permit amortization of the necessary investment.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Would my friend permit a question? Perhaps I should have asked him this one a while ago. He is using the word "energy" a good deal. I notice the word "power" occurs frequently and is defined in the bill, as is the word "oil". I do not see a definition of "energy" and I am wondering in what connotation he is using it.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Well, the name of the proposed act is the National Energy Board Act, and the term "energy" is used to describe various forms of energy, including electric power, gas and oil. In any event, by the term "energy" I simply refer to the sources of energy which are dealt with in this bill.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I just wanted to get your definition.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I suggest it might conceivably be of use to have a definition of "energy" in the bill. I was looking at section 2 which talks about energy and sources of energy.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That might, indeed, be a very useful suggestion.

I was talking about the reasons why exports of gas and oil were dealt with differently in regard to licensing provisions, and I was referring to the fact that there was a considerable flexibility in the business of oil itself which did not exist in regard to gas.

Before closing, honourable senators, I want to refer to some limitations that there are in the bill, namely, limitations on the authority of the National Energy Board. There is, for instance, no power to regulate coal or atomic energy or uranium, or matters having to do with electric power except the export of such power.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Is not coal a source of energy?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Coal, of course, is a source of energy, and a very, very important source of energy. I am just saying that although that is so there is no power to regulate coal.

Also there is no alteration in present arrangements in regard to the development of the Columbia River basin. In other words, existing agencies in this field are not to be disturbed.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I did not mean to interrupt my honourable friend, but what I was pointing out was that there would appear to be a necessity of having a definition of "energy", because where there is authority given to the board to make continuing studies of energy and sources of energy there are not those limitations as to what may be encompassed within the terms "energy" and "sources of energy". It might be atomic power and it might be coal, and it might be a number of other things on which they can inquire and report on.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is right. That is something that should be considered.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Coal is specifically excluded.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Not in section 22.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I have tried to review in as general a way as I could the purposes of the National Energy Board Bill. I just want to repeat what I said earlier in my remarks, namely, that the development in the petroleum industry over the past decade, although remarkable in extent, is nevertheless only the beginning of what it will be in the future in this country. Those who are closest to the industry assure us that we can look forward with confidence to continuing growth in natural gas and petroleum reserves, in production, in employment and export, and, of course, in the required investment of capital. But these prospects involve the sound utilization of our energy resources, which are such a very important part of the resources of this country. It is for the purpose of protecting the national interest in the wise exploitation and use of these resources that the present measure has been prepared and is before you.

Honourable senators, I suggest that this bill, if it receives second reading, should be referred to the Standing Committee on Natural Resources.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, this bill has been very thoroughly explained by the last speaker and it has been before Parliament for quite a long time. There are 101 sections in the bill. Most of them are restrictions, requirements, regulations and rather rigid controls, and it is to be hoped that these controls will not so strait-jacket the industry that it will be discouraged.

I want to make a few remarks and to point out four things that I hope the administration will take into account.

In the first place, I hope that Alberta and Canada will get the first consideration. This gas is found in tremendous quantities in Alberta. That province is carrying the peak load of freight charges at the present time, it being about half way between the east and west for exporting purposes, and its imports travel the maximum distance. It is to be hoped that in the carrying out of these principles the consumers of Alberta will not pay extra for the gas which they consume and which is found in their own province to such a great extent.

A Prime Minister of Canada of not long ago, the late Lord Bennett, who was a very successful businessman, often said: "Capital is very timid". I do hope that the regulations will not discourage capital, because capital is needed for the economic prosperity of Alberta and the western provinces. During the past 12 years the province of Alberta has received $885 million from rights, leases, and things of that kind, and during most of that period $1 million a day of outside capital has poured into the province—$360 million a year.

We have heard, when the companies were set up, of officers of companies having options on large blocks of stock. We all hope that that kind of thing will be discontinued. Nothing causes more resentment than the news of somebody getting off with several millions of dollars on an option where there was not very much risk.

The last thing I wish to say—and this is the main reason why I am speaking at all—is that I hope there will be no undue delay by the board in dealing with the problems which require its attention. Today in Alberta 870 really good gas wells are capped, and have been capped for a long time, because there is no market for the gas. That means that $170 million is absolutely immobile. It is not being made use of. It is just resting there in the hope that something will be done. I am hoping that these problems will be dealt with speedily.

The province of Alberta, after very thorough investigation, concluded that a lot of gas could be exported from the province. It approved the export of 3.1 trillion cubic feet by the Alberta Southern Gas Company and the West Coast Transmission Company. And, as we all know, the Trans-Canada Pipe Line Company wishes to export gas from Emerson. But none of these activities can be carried on until approved by the Government of Canada and, of course, by the Government of the United States.

One honourable member said today that gas, oil and coal are depletion products. And of course they are; they are wasting products. There is just so much of each, and when the supply is used up that is the end of it, so far as our age is concerned. Geologists tell us that the formation of the earth changes every few million years and that at one time the area now known as our western provinces had a mild climate, with a lush forest growth and abundant vegetation. Tremendous reptiles and monstrous marine creatures roamed the area. Then the rains descended and floods submerged the whole country and these prehistoric creatures perished with the vegetation and settled at the bottom of the ocean. The heaving and buckling of the earth's crust created tremendous pressures and chemical changes, resulting in formations of coal, oil and gas. Beneath the earth's surface in Alberta there are 340,000 cubic miles of sedimentary rock. Each cubic mile possesses from 30,000 to 50,000 barrels of oil, each barrel carrying some 6,000 cubic feet of gas, so there are tremendous quantities there. The Borden Commission determined that Canada's pipe lines will use up about 7 trillion cubic feet within the next 30 years. Local consumption will amount to approximately 8 trillion cubic feet and Alberta will be allowed to export 3 trillion, so that about a total of 18 trillion cubic feet will be used up in the next 25 to 30 years. The Gas Conservation Commission, which has made very thorough studies, claims there are at least 23 trillion cubic feet in reserve and, with about 2½ trillion cubic feet being discovered each year over the next 30 years there will be from 70 to 80 trillion cubic feet in reserve in 25 to 30 years. Others estimate the reserve will be as high as 100 trillion cubic feet. It is clear that there is a great deal of gas there which can be used for the people of our generation.

I should like to make some comment about coal. There are a lot of coal deposits beneath the Prairies and mountains and foothills in Alberta. There are thick seams of coal. It has been determined there are 48 billion tons of coal lying there, which amounts to about half the mined coal in the dominion of Canada today.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is this coal very far beneath the earth's surface?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: It is from 1,000 to 2,000 feet under, which is a relatively short distance when you consider some of the deep, dark and dangerous mines in the country which go miles underground. It has occurred to me that we might well develop some of these coal deposits in Alberta which exist in such tremendous quantities, instead of operating some of the risky mines to be found elsewhere in Canada. The mines now operating in Alberta are well equipped and produce as much coal per man power as any mine in Canada. It is a market which I hope the National Energy Board will not lose track of.

Honourable senators, the National Energy Board have a very important function. They must search for the truth and they must be true custodians of these great resources. We hope they will not be misers or wasteful spenders, also that they will not be subjected to stupor or stampede, and that they will deal with their problems in the light of the best knowledge that is available.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Cameron, debate adjourned.

BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce was unable to complete its work on certain bills this morning and it adjourned until 8 o'clock this evening. I join with the chairman of the committee (Hon. Mr. Hayden) in the hope that there will be a good attendance of members of the committee and other interested senators at tonight's meeting.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 11, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PRIVATE BILL

ROMAN CATHOLIC EPISCOPAL CORPORATION OF PRINCE RUPERT—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, presented the report of the committee on Bill S-23.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, to whom was referred the Bill (S-23) intituled: "An Act respecting The Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Prince Rupert", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 4, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Sydney J. Smith: With the leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DIVORCE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following bills:

Bill SD-302, an Act for the relief of Roger Myre.

Bill SD-303, an Act for the relief of Lee Dacks Moscovitch.

Bill SD-304, an Act for the relief of Lillian Goldbloom Howard.

Bill SD-305, an Act for the relief of Giovanni Cavallero.

Bill SD-306, an Act for the relief of Lorna Frances Hutchinson Kerr.

Bill SD-307, an Act for the relief of Jessie Balfour Maines McCartney Manson.

Bill SD-308, an Act for the relief of Guy Charbonneau.

Bill SD-309, an Act for the relief of Meade Alexander Morgan.

Bill SD-310, an Act for the relief of Carol May Campbell Williams.

Bill SD-311, an Act for the relief of Adela Hawthorne Pattison.

Bill SD-312, an Act for the relief of Samuel Currie Millar.

Bill SD-313, an Act for the relief of Helen Mary Margeson Ransome Scudamore.

Bill SD-314, an Act for the relief of Claire Anna Theresa Verdon Monette.

Bill SD-315, an Act for the relief of Constance Edna Medcalfe Blood.

Bill SD-316, an Act for the relief of Norma Margaret Martin Raymo.

Bill SD-317, an Act for the relief of Audrey Barrasford Milburn.

Bill SD-318, an Act for the relief of Sandra Stoll Goldenberg.

Bill SD-319, an Act for the relief of Edith May Driscoll Jeffrey.

Bill SD-320, an Act for the relief of Joyce Ethel Commerford Brewster.

Bill SD-321, an Act for the relief of Hirsch Glaser.

Bill SD-322, an Act for the relief of Maria Gagne Cote.

Bill SD-323, an Act for the relief of Gail Patricia Northrup Brazauckas.

Bill SD-324, an Act for the relief of Gilbert Forest.

Mill SD-325, an Act for the relief of Yvon Poulin.

Bill SD-326, an Act for the relief of Karl Wilhelm Oskar Bartels.

Bill SD-327, an Act for the relief of Joseph Aime Paul Guy Genest.

Bill SD-328, an Act for the relief of Allan Ray Wright.

Bill SD-329, an Act for the relief of Michael Kalabiha.

Bill SD-330, an Act for the relief of Joyce Ann Breaker Lee.

Bill SD-331, an Act for the relief of Zina Goffman Filler.

Bill SD-332, an Act for the relief of Omula Karnitis Rakauskas.

Bill SD-333, an Act for the relief of Joseph Bernard Alberia Gustave Lahaise.

Bill SD-334, an Act for the relief of Michael Palangio.

Bill SD-335, an Act for the relief of Grace Evelyn Heggveit Richter.

Bill SD-336, an Act for the relief of Ross Kevin Ladd.

Bill SD-337, an Act for the relief of Georgina Horne Parsons.

Bill SD-338, an Act for the relief of Esther Paula Beernaert Martindale.

Bill SD-339, an Act for the relief of Audrey Bruce Laborgne.

Bills read first time.

SECOND READINGS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, under the present circumstances I would ask for the consent of the house to move the second readings of these bills now.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

THIRD READINGS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave of the Senate, I move the third readings also at this time.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, June 16, 1959, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson for the second reading of Bill C-49, to provide for the establishment of a National Energy Board.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, my esteemed seatmate (Hon. Mr. Woodrow) said a few moments ago, when he saw me moving down nearer to the centre of the chamber, "I suppose you are going to indulge in your usual guerrilla tactics and get out of town after this speech." As a matter of fact, I am planning to leave town, but not for the reason he imputed.

In any contemplation of a bill of 101 sections by a layman it must be with some timidity that he approaches it, and I can assure honourable senators that it is not my intention to get involved in a legalistic discussion of many of the numerous clauses, because there are many here much more competent to do that than I. I intend to confine my remarks to a review of a number of general matters of concern in connection with resource development and controls.

In any contemplation of the development of Canada we must consider, of course, the development of our energy resources. Fortunately, in this country we have been richly endowed, and as yet we have scarcely begun to develop, utilize and harness the vast storehouse of resources which are at our disposal.

The tremendous increase in Canada's industrialization during and particularly since World War II has been spectacular and has brought about a complete reversal of the normal population ratio between the urban community and the rural. This is going to have far-reaching implications in the future, as the agricultural revolution which we are witnessing today indicates.

Since 1945 Canada's economic expansion has been greater than that of the United States, or in fact of any other country for which records are kept. For example, between 1945 and 1959, a period of 14 years, our population grew from 12 million at the end of 1945 to 17.5 million last year, an overall increase of 45 per cent, with an annual average increase of 2.7. The gross national product rose from $11.8 billion at the end of 1945 to an estimated $34.5 billion this year, and I am sure that we all sincerely hope that this $34.5 billion will be a reality. The increase in volume of the gross national product in this period was 63 per cent.

In this same period the United States had an annual increase in population of 1.7 per cent or a total increase of 26.5 per cent in the 14 years. The annual increase in the gross national product in the United States was 2.1 per cent, the increase in value was 119 per cent and the increase in volume was 33 per cent, or just half what ours was.

Without in any way diminishing its importance to the national economy, the rural population now constitutes a small percentage of our total population, and the trend toward urban living will continue to increase. Now, people cannot live in urban communities unless they are gainfully employed in productive industry, even though the percentage of the total population which has found its livelihood in service occupations is increasing phenomenally. If you make a study of the percentage of the population which has found its livelihood in the service occupations in the last ten years you will find it a remarkable development. However, gainful employment in service industries will not long survive unless the industrial base of the community is sound, healthy and vigorous.

We can only maintain a healthy and growing industrial economy if we carefully mobilize, develop and control our energy resources as they are needed.

It is a strong probability that one of the most serious topics of discussion in public debate in Canada in the next few years will be the subject of natural resources control, and this National Energy Board may mark the beginning of what we hope will be a new approach by the people of Canada to their own resources development and control.

The necessity for establishing a National Energy Board has been recognized for some considerable time. If one were inclined to take political campaign speeches at their face value we might have expected to have an Energy Board at a somewhat earlier date. But that is just by the way.

In October 1957 the Government of the day established a royal commission of competent Canadian citizens to inquire into and make specific recommendations with respect to the development of Canadian energy resources, particularly oil, gas, electricity and atomic resources, and to make recommendations as to how they might be transported from their source to the ultimate consumer. One year later, in October 1958, this royal commission brought out its first report, in which it proceeded to make specific recommendations particularly as they might apply to the export of natural gas and crude oil.

The reaction of the petroleum and some segments of the financial industry to this first report was something less than enthusiastic. Woeful predictions were made, particularly among some of my friends in Calgary, that the burgeoning petroleum industry in Canada was being placed in a strait-jacket, and that it would not be possible to finance future developments of this important phase of the Canadian economy.

In some quarters, and I must confess they were the less responsible ones, some of the controls suggested by the first report of the Borden Commission were taken as a deliberate affront. In listening to these arguments I have been concerned that certain individuals seemed to resent any suggestion of interference or control in any form. I think that is not consistent with our way of life in this country, although no one wants control for control's sake. I suspect that these people who do not wish any controls are doomed to disappointment, but they have only themselves to blame.

I am a Canadian who wants to see the fullest and most rapid development of our resources, consistent with sound business and national policies. I do not want to see legitimate enterprise and initiative stifled in a maze of regulation, control and red tape. At the same time, one of the reasons why there is a climate of public opinion abroad today which favours a measure of control is that, rightly or wrongly, the public has the impression that, because of a lack of adequate controls heretofore, some irresponsible promoters were able, with practically no, or at least very little, risk to themselves, to make fantastic profits.

I say this is a common view today, and there is just enough basis for it that the industry has no one to blame but itself if it now finds a demand that similar practices be not permitted in the future. This does not mean that people want to deny the legitimate entrepreneur a fair, reasonable and even generous return on his equity capital and for his risk. In fact, I think one of the great questions of our time is going to be, where do we draw the line on the controls that are necessary, and which will not have the effect of stultifying and strangling legitimate business developments?

I suspect there is another factor at work in creating this climate of opinion today. Canadians are just becoming aware of the tremendous proportion of Canadian industry that is foreign- or at least American-owned. I never like the use of the word "foreign" in connection with our friends to the south, although technically that is the term we must use. For example, 85 per cent of the petroleum industry in this country is American-owned or controlled, as is about 65 per cent of the mining and smelting industry and 50 per cent of the manufacturing industry.

Now, I think we should welcome American capital, and capital from any other part of the world, and I hope that more of it will come. At the same time, if increasing amounts of American capital are to be invested in the development of Canadian resources I think we, as responsible citizens, have a right to ask that that capital be used at all times in the Canadian interest.

The total long-term investment of foreign capital in Canada in the last 13 years increased from $7 billion in 1945 to $18.5 billion at the end of 1958, an increase of 160 per cent. Of this amount the actual American investment was $5 billion at the end of 1945 and $14 billion at the end of last year, an increase of 180 per cent.

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics' definition of "foreign capital" includes the money brought in from outside, retained earnings and borrowings in Canada. This is interesting, because a survey recently put out by the United States Department of Commerce indicates that in 1957 only 31 per cent of the capital required by United States controlled companies came from the United States. In other words, the balance came from earned profits and Canadian institutions and individuals investing in these industries. In one industry, the mining and smelting industry, 65 per cent controlled by the United States companies or their subsidiaries, only 2 per cent of the capital invested in it came from the United States, 1 per cent came from other countries, and the rest, or 97 per cent, came from Canadian sources.

I want to quote from a recent address given by a very able and competent member of the Civil Service of Canada, Dr. O. J. Firestone, who recently spoke at a gathering in New York. I might take this oportunity to say that Canada is fortunate in the quality of most of its civil servants, and I think it has been especially fortunate in the men who have been advising in the economic field in this country, among whom I include Dr. Firestone, who has made a most unusual and valuable contribution to the Canadian public service. It is interesting that the speech from which I am about to quote and in which he used some of the figures I have mentioned, was made to Americans. He said:

> What these figures suggest is that a comparatively small amount of capital will suffice to establish control of an enterprise in its early stage. Then through good management, the retaining of earnings, and borrowing, the enterprise is expanded. Canadians contribute to the expansion of the enterprise first by buying its products, thus making the accumulation of large profits possible, or in the case of resources industries by making these resources available for development. Secondly, by lending they assist in the expansion of these enterprises without in many instances being able to participate in an equity position.

I said earlier that Canadians are just becoming aware of the extent to which Canadian industry and resources development is in the hands of American companies and their Canadian subsidiaries, and I suggested that this was having an effect on the demand for more controls over the manner in which these resources should be developed. I am sure that this is true. At the same time this does not mean anti-Americanism, anti-capitalism or even anti-free enterprise. It does mean, however, that Canadians want a larger voice and share in developing their own country. That is not an unreasonable demand.

I am going to quote again from the address that Dr. Firestone gave in New York. Dealing with increasing public participation and public reporting, he said:

> If American investment is to continue to thrive in Canada it will mean, if you want to be practical, the encouragement of greater Canadian financial and managerial participation in United States subsidiaries operating in Canada.
> Public demand is also likely to grow for foreign firms operating in Canada, particularly publicly owned companies, to report about the success of their operations in Canada.

Of course, they have to report to the S.E.C. in the United States.

Further on, he said:

> To put it in a nutshell, what Canadians expect is that Americans, when they operate in Canada, behave like Canadians do and acccept the responsibilities as well as enjoy the benefits of doing business in an expanding economy. Canadians do not expect American firms to do any more than they would do at home. They would like to see those companies be as good Canadians in their operations in Canada as they are Americans in the conduct of their business at home.
>
> Now, you may ask why should American firms make what some of you may consider concessions. After all it is your money that you are investing. And since you are putting up the capital it is up to you to decide how you manage your affairs and how you get the best returns. Now, all this is perfectly true. But the thing to remember is that Americans are not just doing Canadians a favour by investing in Canada. They are doing it for good business reasons, because it is profitable, and for many other sound commercial reasons. To mention just one of these; the United States is becoming increasingly short of natural resources. By developing these resources in Canada our American friends are obtaining a dependable long-term source of supply which will keep their economy going for decades, if not centuries, to come.
> What Canadians are after is not just good neighbourliness, important as happy relations between the two countries are. What Canadians wish to see is the pursuit of sensible policies by American parent companies which will benefit Canada as well as the United States business community participating in our economic development. Is this too much to ask for a country which offers the largest and most profitable opportunities for foreign investment in the world?

This discussion may seem to be somewhat off the track from Bill C-49. Actually, it is very intimately related to it, because we cannot realistically contemplate development of the great resources of this country without considering very carefully how it is to be done, how it is to be financed, who is going to do the financing and who is going to get the most benefit. I have deliberately not gone into the details of the bill nor the amendments made to it. The bill received a very thorough going-over in the House of Commons, and a total of some 26 amendments were offered, of which 13 were accepted by the Government. To that extent I would hope that the bill has been improved and strengthened.

There are people who are disappointed in the bill—some because it does not go far enough in spelling out the details how things will be done; others because it goes too far, as in the case of Part IV on traffic, tolls and tariffs. If one were to characterize this bill, it could be described as a flexible bill, and I think that this is not a bad idea at this time. It was said here yesterday that we needed "elbow room" in connection with another bill. Maybe this is another case where we need some elbow room—room to manoeuvre.

The Borden Commission has not yet turned in its final report, and until it does it may be wise to have a measure of flexibility which might otherwise not have been so desirable. In the final analysis, how this bill works will depend on the calibre and the competence of the board appointed to administer it. I have every confidence that the Government will find the kind of people who can do this job with a sense of responsibility. I must say that there is no other board in Canada on which we are placing a greater measure of responsibility and which we are launching on a more unchartered course than will be the case with the new National Energy Board. We can only hope that the Government will give it every co-operation.

There is one question in the minds of many people about the bill as it now stands. It purports to take over the work of a number of other acts and departments of Government. The honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) referred to this yesterday. I am thinking of some of the duties of the National Coal Board and the Board of Transport Commissioners and certain provisions of a number of federal acts, but nowhere in the bill before us are the actual jurisdictional matters spelt out in detail. Perhaps this again is part of the flexibility of the bill, but only time will tell.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I wonder if the honourable senator would allow a correction for the purposes of the record? He referred to the functions of the National Coal Board being taken over by the National Energy Board. It is just the reverse. The functions of the National Coal Board are not being taken over.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: That is quite correct. I thought I said a portion of the functions. In the last 12 years, since 1947, as a westerner I have had an opportunity of watching the spectacular development of the petroleum industry in a country that previously was basically dependent on agriculture. It was my good fortune as a member of the faculty of the University of Alberta, particularly of the Extension Department, which dealt with many ramifications of the development, to come into early contact with the petroleum industry. I remember being at a banquet the night Leduc No. 1 came in. As part of our program we were putting on a short course for employees of the Imperial Oil Company, and there was indeed a spirit of levity, to say the least, at that banquet because of the high hopes which seemed to be well-founded with the coming in of that well. But by 1950 people began to ask, "Is Alberta a second Texas?" and the answer would be: "Well, maybe. We don't know." By about 1955 people were beginning to say, "There is no question that this is a second Texas." Today there is more assurance that not only is this true, but that western Canada may be even much greater than Texas in so far as the resources of the petroleum industry are concerned. Just two weeks ago today I had a conversation with two of the leading pipe line men on this continent, one of whom was from Houston, Texas, and the other from New York. Again I asked this question, and the answer was, "This could be greater than Texas."

In order to evaluate the comparative stage of our industrial development in the west with that of Texas we can use this yardstick. In Alberta today there are some 200 drilling rigs in operation every week. In Texas, after 20 years, there are 2,000 drilling rigs in operation every week. That is one measure of comparison. In making another comparison with Texas you may recall that about 25 years ago Texas was mainly dependent on two industries, the cattle industry, which goes back many years, and the lumber industry, with their exports being shipped out of San Antonio. Today Texas is one of the largest industrial states in the United States. It has been suggested that Texas is the second largest industrial state, but I don't think that is true. Nevertheless, it has become a tremendously rich industrial state. In making this comparison between the development in western Canada and that in Texas I think we arrive at some picture of what might be contemplated in the expansion of our west in the next few years. If this comparison is anywhere nearly accurate as a forecast—and some allowance must be made for our disparity in population—you can see the exciting days ahead. That is one reason why it is important that we should give consideration to the creation of a National Energy Board at this time.

Just to spell out what the addition of one or two drilling rigs means to the economy of Canada I am going to quote a paragraph from the Canadian Petroleum Association Bulletin, wherein is set out the requirements for a do-it-yourself kit for well drilling. This is the world's biggest understatement:

> A do-it-yourself kit for well drilling should include:
> 726 tons of steel; about 32 trucks ranging from the very largest, down to half-ton pickup; 3 cranes; one bulldozer; one road grader; about 6 house trailers; approximately 132 men—specialists from lawyer to truck driver to surveyor to mud engineer; about 5,000 sacks of cement; 1,000 feet of manila rope; 12,000 feet of steel cable; 800 tons of drilling mud; 250 tons of mud conditioners; about 20 assorted drilling bits; 150 drums of emulsified oil; 48,000 barrels of water; and a good measure of luck. The well will cost between $200,000 and $1 million to drill, and you have only about 1 chance in 7 of finding oil or gas.

This is what is required to operate one drilling outfit. Multiply this by 200, or project it to the day when we have 2,000 drilling rigs, you can see what a tremendous effect this will have on the economy of our whole country.

Honourable senators, in conclusion, I believe it is inevitable that Canada in the next 25 years will make prodigious strides forward. This will be particularly true in western Canada. We are really only at the beginning and laying the foundations of a great Canadian industry. It is important that we lay these foundations well.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Bouffard, debate adjourned.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the second reading of Bill C-41, to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

He said: Honourable senators, in introducing this bill in the Senate I feel that I should give a short history relating to the original Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

The original act was passed during July of 1956 and in the act it was provided that it should come into force and be effective on the first day of April 1957. This act replaced what was known as the old Tax Rental Agreements Act originally passed during the year 1952. The latter act replaced the Dominion-Provincial Tax Agreement Act of 1942.

The original Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act provided for the following: a tax rental payment to each province equal to 10 per cent of the federal personal income tax revenue in such province; further, a payment to each province of 9 per cent of the corporation profits earned in such province and, finally, 50 per cent of the federal succession duties attributable to such province.

In connection with the above-mentioned three tax rental payments, I think it should be pointed out that if any province did not wish to rent its taxing powers to the dominion Government on the above basis, then the original act provided for a tax credit or abatement equivalent to the rental amount, and this, in turn, allowed the provinces to impose their own personal income tax, corporation tax, and succession duties, without a penalty being imposed on the individual taxpayers of such province.

The original act also provided for what was known as equalization payments. These payments were intended to bring the per capita return from the above-mentioned three taxes, namely, 10 per cent of the personal income tax, 9 per cent of the corporation profits, and 50 per cent of the federal succession duties, in line with the average revenue for the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia from these particular taxes.

Finally, the act provided for what was known, and still is known, as stabilization payments. I do not propose even to attempt to explain stabilization payments in detail. I will only mention that they are worked out by three or four different and rather complicated formulae. However, such payments were to be made for the sole purpose of preventing the revenues which the provinces would receive under the original act from falling below a rather high level. If any honourable senator desires to know just how the various formulae work, I am sure that he will be able to get a full explanation from an expert of the Department of Finance, who will appear before the appropriate committee of the Senate when this bill is being considered.

With this short explanation, I think I should point out to honourable senators that this act was originally amended in 1958 in order to provide for the payment of 13 per cent of the personal income tax revenues to each province, instead of 10 per cent as set out in the original act. When this amendment was made in 1958 it was provided that the payment of 13 per cent should apply for a period of one year only, namely, from April 1, 1958 to March 31, 1959.

The Government is now desirous of extending the payment of 13 per cent of the personal tax revenue to the various provinces for a further period of one year and this particular bill makes provision for this. It provides that the 13 per cent applicable to income tax revenues shall apply to the period from April 1, 1959 to March 31, 1960.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, I would like to take this opportunity of referring to the need for adjustments in the financial relations between the Government of Canada and the Province of Newfoundland.

It is a fact, and should be fully realized, that union of Newfoundland with Canada is only partly completed. The terms have been signed, it is true, but written into those terms is an obligation for a review of the financial arrangements and necessary adjustments into the future. Complementary to a formal revision, there is a legal and a moral obligation to take into account the new circumstances which have to be met to provide for a properly developed province. That obligation requires much greater mutual understanding than has been evidenced by the Canadian Government and people up to this time. I can honestly say that from the point of view of understanding the local circumstances, dissimilar in many respects from those of other provinces, and in view of the required appreciation of the special needs for the development of common citizenship, Newfoundland is a foreign country to Canadians almost as much as it was prior to ten years ago; and let me say that prior to that time it was indeed a foreign country from the point of view of officialdom in Canada. Naturally, there was a close friendliness between the peoples of the two countries.

It is not my intention to dwell on the circumstances relating to the adoption of Union in 1949, except as they may be applicable to the legal and moral obligation of the Dominion of Canada in consideration of the revision of the terms of Union.

I have mentioned on previous occasions in this chamber that Newfoundland voted on the issue without negotiated terms, which fact was the chief cause of the majority in favour of Union being as low as 52 per cent. I can speak personally as one who was critical of the nature of the approach to the issue, but also as one who always recognized that Union should provide a logical setting for a progressive material and social development in Newfoundland. Needless to say, neither I nor any of my fellow citizens, whether confederate or anti-confederate, ever for one moment questioned the views that were constantly repeated by leading Canadian authorities that Union would be of inestimable value to Canada. The natural resources of Newfoundland and Labrador held, as they do now, tremendous potential wealth for Canada. Newfoundland was there at the outlet of the St. Lawrence River and was required to round out Canada's logical geographical boundary in the east. Canada already had such a boundary in the west. To use the words of the late Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Honourable Mackenzie King, "Newfoundland was essential to the nationhood of Canada."

With the entry of Newfoundland into the Union, I can say that the people of the province, no matter how they voted, or whether they did not vote at all, met their responsibilities as Canadians loyally and properly. The people quite naturally reveal a practical and realistic outlook on things. One of the most outstanding reasons for the softening of the hard feeling which was prevalent toward the approach to the unnegotiated relationship was the fact that a revision clause was written into the agreement of Union. By that clause there was to be a review of the financial position of Newfoundland by a royal commission within eight years and, most important of all, there was a clear implication that such a review was to be of a continuing nature. Any other interpretation in the circumstances, of course, would be absurd. The declared purpose of the clause to which I refer was that the province of Newfoundland should be able to continue public services at appropriate levels and standards, and the services were not to be retarded by a relative incapacity to pay for them. It was never intended nor was it implied that the revision as and when recommended by the royal commission was to be final and complete, and that all consideration of Newfoundland's special circumstances and changing situations would be cut off on a certain date.

In order to give an appropriate background to what I have to say, I shall quote Term 29 of the Union Agreement:

> In view of the difficulty of predicting with sufficient accuracy the financial consequences to Newfoundland of becoming a province of Canada, the Government of Canada will appoint a royal commission within eight years of the date of Union to review the financial position of the province of Newfoundland and to recommend the form and scale of additional financial assistance, if any, that may be required by the Government of the province of Newfoundland to enable it to continue public services at the levels and standards reached subsequent to the date of Union, without resorting to taxation more burdensome, having regard to capacity to pay, than that obtaining generally in the region comprising the Maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island.

The keyword of the Term is to "continue" —to continue public services.

During the intervening years since Union, Term 29 has been in the minds of Newfoundland people, whether at work on the sea, in the woods, in the shops or in the schools.

Personally, I would like to have seen the words of the clause, in fact the whole agreement, more specific, to give the new province the protection it needs. Term 29 was accepted by Newfoundland people as evidence of good faith in the continuing adjustment of the future relationships between the federal Government of Canada and the province.

I would further say if there is not an out-and-out effort to implement good faith by a thorough understanding, then Union can be written off as a failure.

Because of the nature of the Terms of Union, and in the circumstances, the statement of the Prime Minister in the House of Commons on March 25 last caused widespread alarm throughout the province. In the first place, I might say the recommendations of the royal commission had been publicly regarded as very inadequate. They provided for an annual amount of only $8 million, whereas a very carefully prepared and fully substantiated case was presented to the commission recommending $15 million. The $8 million was to have deducted from it that portion of the original transitional grants which were shortly to expire, leaving a net payment under this special allowance of an average of $7,300,000, totalling $36½ million for the five financial years from 1957-58 to 1961-62.

As I mentioned, the Prime Minister's statement has caused great concern throughout Newfoundland. His words on March 25, 1959, were:

> It is proposed to ask Parliament to authorize payments as recommended by the royal commission, but in our view the duration of payments should be limited to five years.
> The proposed payments will be unconditional and will be in final and irrevocable settlement of the provisions of Article 29, and the contractural obligation of the Union consummated in 1949.

I quote also from the same speech:

> On conclusion of the payments as of March 31, 1962, which corresponds with the present five-year fiscal arrangement between Canada and the provinces, Newfoundland's position can be considered in the light of the general methods of providing financial assistance to the provinces which may be in effect at that time.

He also said in the speech:

> Each of the provinces has its own problems, and Newfoundland is no exception.

By the Prime Minister's statement the impression was definitely created that the Government of Canada will not regard itself as having any special obligations to Newfoundland arising out of the circumstances of Union in 1949. Such an implication would carry with it a complete disregard of the fact that Newfoundland will then have been a province for only 13 years, while many of the other provinces have had nearly a hundred years to even out their relationships and problems. If that is to be an official attitude by the Government of Canada, we in Newfoundland must take it for granted that after 13 years we may have to face up to a condition that we are not wanted any longer as a province. One thing is absolutely certain, that if the special and unique circumstances of our province are not an essential factor in our federal relations, then union with Canada will have completely failed. Further than that, Newfoundland people generally and rightly will feel that a legal and moral obligation on the part of the Dominion of Canada has been completely disregarded.

For a moment I would like to refer again to the McNair Royal Commission recommendations for financial payments. The amount of the proposed payments is far below what is realistic and proper. The finding of the commission follows altogether too closely the literal interpretation of its terms of reference and were not broad enough in the review of the general circumstances to give Newfoundland adequate protection for the future. It must be remembered that the basic issue involved was that our province must be able to continue into the future the developed public services without resorting to taxation more burdensome than was generally prevailing throughout the other Atlantic provinces. The continuing capacity of Newfoundland's citizens to pay for the maintenance of such services was an outstanding consideration which called for examinations of the conditions right on into the future. In effect, the per capita earnings, the cost of living, and innumerable changing circumstances are involved in this matter.

As the attitude of Government stands now, the province of Newfoundland after three more years will be expected to have grown up in 13 years to become a senior member of a federal family living together for over 90 years.

Some years ago a minister of the Canadian Government made a visit to Newfoundland, which was as unusual for a minister to do then as it has been since, except, of course, for those ministers who represent ridings there. He made some statements then which in effect were not dissimilar to the attitude towards the future of the province which has been demonstrated lately. Of course, in making this comment one must make due allowance for the fact that the honourable minister at that time had his mind momentarily rushed from the Pacific to the Atlantic.

I had an opportunity of speaking on the occasion when he gave his most ill-considered remarks, which hit the sensitive minds of our people very hard. I told him before that audience that he had completely forgotten that Newfoundland was a child in a grown-up family, and if his interprovincial approach to the island's needs for social and economic development and for Government services prevailed in official circles of Canada Newfoundland would remain just an orphan on the doorstep. I repeat that phrase as applicable to the present time in the light of the absence of a much needed and close understanding of Newfoundland. It cannot be expected that in such a short time the province could swing into the same form of financial relationship with the federal Government as the other provinces have grown into.

What I recommend is that more senior members of the Government should visit Newfoundland, get to understand its conditions, learn more of the nature of its public services and follow the various phases of its social and economic development. Surely, a new province deserves that.

I have been referring to the special circumstances of a new province. Now, I would like to place before you some of these which have a particular bearing on the implementation of Term 29. The Term has a definite relation to necessary improvements of public services, and it is provided that financial aid would be given and continued without the application of taxation more burdensome than that obtaining generally in the three Maritime provinces. The relative capacity to pay has by agreement to be taken into account in fixing the measure of federal assistance. In 1956, the latest year for which figures are available to me the per capita income of the people of Newfoundland was 31 per cent less than the average of that in the three provinces in question. I might say this is an improvement over the year of Union, 1949, when the difference was 40 per cent.

In applying the per capita income to such a situation, a very vital factor is related to the cost of living. By reason of the geographical location and many other circumstances, living costs in Newfoundland, taking 1956 as the year of comparison, was at least 12 per cent higher than in the other three provinces. This means that in Newfoundland it took $112 to buy the same goods as $100 would buy in the Maritimes.

The level of education is comparatively low, because of many factors, one being the difficulty of providing suitable school accommodation in small places and the inadequacy of transportation connections with schools in the larger populated areas. The average enrolment per classroom is about 15 per cent higher than in the three Maritime provinces. The provincial Government has embarked upon a progressive program for higher educational facilities which is very costly but absolutely essential. It is most unfortunate that in recent months construction and improvements of school buildings have been held back by lack of funds, because the expected assistance under Term 29 from the federal Government was not forthcoming. The health services also are very inadequate. The supplying of medical care and preventive measures to the population widely scattered along the 6,000 miles of coast is very costly. Very considerable improvements have been made in recent years, however. Only by personal experience with Newfoundland life can one realize what it costs to keep the necessary contacts between doctors, nurses and medical health centres by small boat and inadequate local road communications.

In the report to the royal commission it was stated that a Canadian Sickness Survey in 1950-51 showed that the average family in the Maritime region spent $72 on health services of all types, while the average family in Newfoundland spent only $28. This was due not only to lower family income but to inaccessibility of medical services.

In the matter of old age assistance, it is significant that 52 per cent of the people in the age group of 65 to 69 qualified for payments as compared with 30.7 per cent in the three Maritime provinces as a group. The situation was, of course, caused by the lower per capita earnings and the higher cost of living which prevented so many from building up reserves for their old age. Generally speaking, the cost of public welfare, as administered in Newfoundland, is much higher in relation to the sum total earnings in Newfoundland than elsewhere in Canada. Many of these services are distinctive in their character by reason of the prevailing conditions. Year by year these take a large share of provincial revenue.

The province has a Public Welfare Department of Government which before Union was a division of Public Health and Welfare. That department cost in 1957 about $9 million of provincial funds. Municipal governments in other parts of Canada take up considerable portions of such services, but that is not practical to any great degree in our province. Among the many services rendered by that department is that of welfare in Northern Labrador, the cost of which runs into several hundred thousand dollars.

One of the most crucial needs and one of the most costly is road construction and servicing. It is difficult to make a comparison of true value as between Newfoundland and the Maritime provinces. On the basis of mileage of roads to population, Newfoundland has only about two-thirds as much as the Maritimes. The number of vehicles in proportion to the road mileage in each area is also one-third less in Newfoundland, and the general quality of the roads on the island is much below the usual standards. That deficiency constitutes a tremendous difficulty in economic and social development and must be tackled with energy and without delay.

What I have said may seem like a gloomy story. It is not intended as such. In fact, gloom will only gather if there is not a knowledgeable attempt—I repeat the word knowledgeable—by the federal Government to underwrite the success of the partnership. It was to bind the Government of Canada to a continuing policy of working toward success of the partnership that Term 29 was in the signed agreement.

While I have been talking about what should be coming Newfoundland's way for a proper partnership arrangement, I want to say that such proposed benefits are by no means one-sided. Too many people write and talk as if charity were behind the idea of help to Newfoundland. We have frequently seen too much of this in the press though I must say there has not been so much lately. Nothing could be further from the truth. I would like to get down for a few minutes, if I may, to the brass tacks of some of the economics of the situation. I am sorry, honourable senators, for going on so long, and will hold back some of my points for a later occasion.

Nothing can lead us more completely astray than arguments based solely on Bureau of Statistics reports. For instance, we have heard at various times down through the years—and, indeed, very recently—that the federal Government pays Newfoundland so much, and the province's contributions to federal revenue are so much. I cannot understand why it is that such figures continue to be fired around without at least some qualifying statements so that the public might properly appraise the facts. Without proper explanations such figures are completely misleading. No province gets as little credit for its proportion of contribution to the federal revenue as does Newfoundland. There is a very clear reason for that, and I will explain it to some extent.

Excise and other federal taxes on goods brought into the province are shown as collections made in other provinces for federal account. Whenever that matter is referred to the answer is that the prevailing system is applicable to all other provinces. Here is the difference as far as Newfoundland is concerned; Newfoundland is not a distributor of manufactured goods to other parts of Canada. No other province has such an unbalanced trade within Canada. We even produce less of our own food and other products of use. We are an export province. Our paper, fish and all our products, except a little unprocessed minerals, go abroad. Under the protection of the Canadian tariffs nearly all our purchases were, immediately after Union, shifted from foreign countries to the other provinces. Those Canadian purchases have increased by about 200 million dollars annually since Union. If our province were classified as an export market it would be, in value of purchases, the third largest market for Canadian goods, following the United States and Great Britain.

I say, honourable senators, surely this calls for consideration in appraising what is a fair financial arrangement with the federal Government, which represents all of Canada.

As I have said, there have been frequent statements of federal contributions to the revenue of the province of Newfoundland as against what the province pays to the federal Government. These create an impression entirely out of relation to the facts. I know it is impossible to get accurate figures of the indirect payments by a province into the federal treasury. Because of these repeated statements, however, I would like to give a couple of illustrations of some indirect and unidentified payments into the national revenue. These payments are made through excise and sales taxes collected by the federal Government. I took the total sales of alcoholic liquor and beer in Newfoundland, and after making due allowance for the more moderate drinking habits of our people than those of some of our neighbours, I arrived at what I am sure is a conservative figure of $4½ million paid indirectly into the federal treasury. There is no official record of that, but I have been able to deduce it from the facts obtainable.

Assuming that the use of tobacco in my province is about the same as that in other provinces, a per capita calculation shows a contribution of $8 million. As we know, most of the cost of tobacco to consumers is made up of taxes.

Motor vehicle purchases in Newfoundland contribute, at least, $1 million a year.

These items alone can be safely estimated to make up an annual contribution to the federal treasury of anywhere from $13 million to $15 million, and there is no record of that. That figure, I would guess, might well be equalled by similar payments made on other purchases covering hundreds of lines of goods brought into Newfoundland from the other provinces where these commodity taxes are paid. To be realistic in this matter, these factors should be taken into account.

Then, of course, there is the contribution to the economy of Canada of the one-way trade of Newfoundland, to which I have referred. How many people are employed on the mainland of Canada producing and servicing upward of $200 million worth of goods which go to Newfoundland chiefly because of tariffs?

To meet the emergency in Newfoundland at this time, our people are being provincially taxed in manners or to a degree not prevailing generally in Canada. For instance, there is a provincial sales tax at the consumer level of 3 per cent applicable to most purchases, including even food, which amounts to $7 million a year. There is a tax of 17 cents a gallon on gasoline, and an extra 3 per cent tax on cars and vehicles, and so forth. These are only examples.

There is immediate as well as future urgency for creating and financing essential public services in Newfoundland. This can be only met by a realistic and, I say again, a knowledgeable federal approach. I am not for a moment disparaging the continuing contribution to Newfoundland from federal sources toward public works, and particularly marine works, which come under national policy from coast to coast. There is a tremendous deficiency to be caught up with, however, but progress has definitely been made.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: May I remind the honourable senator that income tax and corporation tax amounting to $28 million a year, and approximately half a million dollars in succession duties, have to be added to the contribution by Newfoundland to the federal authorities?

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Yes, indeed. The time when I should have finished speaking has passed, but I would like to follow up that theme of yours. I suggest you get going on that yourself as soon as you can. Actually I have only been able to touch the fringe of what I would like to deal with at this time.

Honourable senators, you will regard it very reasonable, I am sure, for me to say in this connection, that when Newfoundland entered Union the per capita debt of Canada was about seven times greater than Newfoundland's per capita debt, which Canada absorbed. It is of interest to recall that none of that great debt of Canada, which has a bearing on federal taxation through all ten provinces, had resulted in the creation of any federal Government-owned assets in Newfoundland. It is reasonable for our people to expect a catching-up on those arrears.

In closing, I want to emphasize that my greatest concern in presenting these facts to you is for a fuller understanding of Newfoundland and of Newfoundland's distinctive problems. I do hope that there will be a meeting of minds and wills to work out a practical and fair solution to the outstanding problems involved. This has to be tackled on a sound, ethical and non-partisan basis, for it must be remembered that when personalities of today are gone from the scene, the livelihood and welfare of the people will continue to be the one great consideration.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North), debate adjourned.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gustave Monette moved the second reading of Bill C-52, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I am not insensitive to the welcome you give honourable members when they rise to speak, particularly new members. It is impressive for one to speak on a matter so important as this to an assembly of this size and prominence.

The purpose of this bill is to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act by increasing the subscription of Canada to the International Monetary Fund and to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. As some honourable senators may remember, these two international institutions were organized by the United Nations Monetary and Financial Conference held at Bretton Woods on July 19, 1944, which prepared the articles of agreements set out in the two principal schedules that are reproduced in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, together with chapter 19 therein, being an Act for carrying into effect the agreements for an International Monetary Fund and an International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. Under this act Canada approved those agreements, and the Governor in Council was authorized to accept them on behalf of Canada, and they were in fact accepted. As honourable senators may verify from the table which I will refer to in a moment, it appears that some 68 nations actually agreed to become members of these two organizations.

Sections 5 and 6 of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act authorize the Minister of Finance to provide for the payment of subscriptions required from Canada to the International Monetary Fund and to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. Incidentally, in referring to these two institutions from now on I will, with leave of the Senate, refer to them as the Fund and the Bank, respectively.

As I have said, the Minister of Finance was authorized to provide for the payment of subscriptions required from Canada to the Fund and to the Bank, such payments to be made out of the unappropriated moneys in the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and to an amount not exceeding $700 million.

I am sure honourable senators are aware of the important achievements of these two international institutions. The International Monetary Fund was set up to provide member countries with facilities for short-term foreign currency loans required to meet the balance of payments difficulties. Its main purpose is the expansion of international trade through the promotion of exchange stability, the elimination of exchange restrictions, and the establishment of a multilateral system of current payments.

When the resolution dealing with this bill was first introduced in the House of Commons, the Prime Minister emphasized that an increase in International Monetary Fund quotas would expand substantially the liquid assets supporting world trade, and that an increase in the Bank's subscriptions would give less developed countries greater prospects of the financial aid needed for developing and diversifying their economies. In fact, last August President Eisenhower proposed that consideration should be given to an increase in the resources of those two organizations, and at the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development at New Delhi last autumn the United States Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Anderson, proposed that specific recommendations for increases in national contributions be prepared promptly for consideration by all governments interested. Our Minister of Finance, who was present, strongly supported those proposals.

Following those resolutions, the executive boards of the two institutions investigated this problem and recommended a general increase of 50 per cent in the Fund quotas, and of 100 per cent in the subscriptions to the Bank. In addition, they recommended special increases exceeding those percentages for certain countries, including Canada. Our Minister of Finance, who is the governor for Canada of those institutions, voted in favour of submitting these proposals for consideration by member governments. The recommendations received virtually unanimous support. As a consequence, governments of the nations concerned are now proceeding to obtain the legislative authority for the proposed increases in their national contributions. The United Kingdom has already passed the necessary legislation. The United States and a number of other countries are now in process of doing so.

With leave of the Senate, I will now file a table showing the present and future national contributions to both the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

NOTES: [1] The table does not reflect the increases which countries having quotas in the I.M.F. of less than $20 million may request in addition to the general 50 per cent increase in quotas. The 19 countries who have this option may also request corresponding increases in their subscriptions to the I.B.R.D.

[2] The table includes, for these 17 countries, the special additional increases approved by the Boards of Governors of the I.M.F. and the I.B.R.D.

As honourable senators will see from this table, the actual contribution quota for Canada is $300 million to the Fund and $325 million to the Bank, making a total of $625 million. At the same time, it will be seen that this actual quota is to be increased by the present bill to a new quota of $550 million for the Fund and $750 million for the Bank. It represents an increase of 100 per cent for the Bank and a little less than 100 per cent for the Fund.

It will be easily noticed from the table that as far as almost all important nations are concerned, the increases in quotas are, with some variations, in similar proportions.

In December 1958, at Washington, the Executive Directors to the Board of Governors of the International Monetary Fund, having studied the question of enlarging the resources of the fund through increases in quotas, following a resolution to that effect of the Board of Governors of the institution, had this to say in their report:

The need for an increase in the Fund's resources arises from the tasks which, under its articles of agreement, the Fund has to perform in an expanding world economy. The role that the Fund is likely to play in the future and the resources it will need for this purpose can best be assessed in the light of the experience it has accumulated and the policies it has pursued in the twelve years of its existence.

The Fund has two main tasks which are clearly intertwined. It promotes international monetary co-operation and exchange stability as a basis for the balanced growth of world trade. It also provides financial assistance to members to help them stabilize their currencies, maintain or move toward convertibility, and overcome temporary balance of payments problems without resort to policies that would be harmful to national or international prosperity. While the first task is a continuing one, experience has shown that the granting of financial assistance tends to be concentrated in certain periods characterized by exceptional strains in the world's monetary system. Major economic and financial developments will often affect several countries more or less at the same time, so that the calls on the Fund's resources may be of substantial proportions in a relatively short period. There was one such period in the early years of the Fund's existence, namely, in 1947-49, when certain European countries suffered from extreme foreign exchange shortages; and another, leading to even larger drawings, which started late in 1956.

That is not the Canadian situation concerning inflation; that is the universal situation, as exlained in the report from which I am now quoting.

Although the extreme tensions that gripped the major exchange markets in 1956 and 1957 have now abated, requests for financial assistance from members continue to be received almost every month. Countries whose economies are subject to wide seasonal swings have called on the Fund for short-term assistance to bridge the seasonal troughs in their reserves, and many other countries have also come to the Fund for assistance when, for particular reasons affecting their own economies, they have experienced difficulties in their balance of payments.

Since the beginning of its operations, the Fund has made available about $4.1 billion to 36 countries. Of this sum $3.2 billion was drawn in some 150 transactions; over $800 million is still available for drawing under open stand-by facilities;—

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: May I ask the honourable gentleman if only occidental countries are joined together in this brotherhood plan, or are other countries included?

Hon. Mr. Monette: That is not stated in the report from which I am quoting. I assume they are occidental countries only, but I am not sure. That may come out in committee.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: I am sure that Russia would not join in the plan.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I fancy not.

I continue to quote from the report:

—and stand-by credits of over $100 million were allowed to expire as the members concerned no longer felt the need for them. About two-thirds of the total of $4.1 billion has been arranged in the last two years. The needs for assistance in this recent period have arisen from a wide variety of causes which have revealed the many-sided nature of the Fund's financial activities.

Concurrently with that report in relation with the Fund, the executive directors of the Board of Governors of the International Bank made their own report in Washington, on December 22, 1958, and they said the following about the needs of the Bank for an increase in capital:

THE NEED FOR AN INCREASE IN CAPITAL

16. It is the opinion of the Executive Directors that in today's conditions the present capital structure does not give the Bank the borrowing capacity needed to enable it to meet the reasonable requirements of its lending operations in the near future.

17. The level of Bank lending has been rising rapidly. The $711 million of new loans made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958 represented an increase of more than 75 per cent above the average of the three preceding years. During the first five months of the current fiscal year, the rate of lending has been higher still: by the date of this report, loans had totalled over $430 million.

18. The Executive Directors believe it prudent to assume that Bank lending will continue at or above recent levels in the foreseeable future. There is every reason to think that the demands of member countries for foreign capital will grow, and that the Bank, without lowering its standards, will be able to find increasing opportunities for sound lending. Even at current rates of lending, the Bank will have to borrow in the future on a greater scale than ever before.

Drawings of $15 million have been made from the International Monetary Fund in Canadian currency. In the case of the International Bank, authorization has been given to lend, without restriction, the 18 per cent of the Canadian subscription usable only with our concurrence. In addition, the Bank has been able to place in the Canadian money market three bond issues totalling $50 million. Total disbursements in Canadian funds on International Bank loans now amount to about $110 million. These outlays have, of course, assisted Canadian business in that they have enabled countries receiving loans from the fund and bank to finance purchases in Canada.

It will no doubt appear to honourable senators that the successful functioning of these organizations is vital to Canada's economic and political interests. From a commercial point of view Canada, as a nation dependent for its economic welfare on the balanced growth of international trade, is as interested as any other country in the continued success of these agencies. The International Monetary Fund, by providing a second line of foreign exchange reserves, has contributed to a higher level of international trade than would otherwise have been possible. Member countries have, with the help of the International Monetary Fund, been able to overcome temporary payment difficulties without sharply reducing the level of their imports. Through the process of annual consultations the International Monetary Fund has been able to encourage countries to reduce substantially the maze of exchange and trade restrictions inherited from the war and the period of reconstruction. The International Bank has also played its part in the development of trade through its program of loans and technical advice to underdeveloped countries. These activities contribute to a rising level of economic activity in these countries and in this way enable them to play an increasing role in the expansion of world trade.

While the Bank and the Fund are, of course, world institutions, the benefits derived by the commonwealth have been particularly impressive. The importance which commonwealth countries attach to the Bank and Fund was clearly reflected in the unanimous endorsation given at the Montreal conference last September to an expanded role for these two organizations. Since the inception of the Fund until the end of February, 1959, member countries have obtained loans of foreign currency to a total amount of $3,238 million. Of this total $1,258 million has been made available to commonwealth countries.

Of the total loans authorized by the International Bank from 1946 until February of this year, amounting to $4,238 million, an amount of $1,386 million has been provided to members of the commonwealth.

Our interests in these institutions go beyond economic considerations. The I.M.F. —International Fund—and the I.B.R.D.—International Bank—have made a marked contribution toward the attainment of our central objective of world peace and security. By helping to stabilize the economies of the free nations of the world, by promoting a balanced expansion of world trade, and by channelling vast quantities of financial aid without political strings, the Fund and Bank have helped to remove potential sources of economic dislocation, social unrest and political instability in those countries which constitute the more exposed bastions of the free world.

For all these reasons, it is important that the resources of these two institutions should be adequate for the continuation of their work. This is not the case at present. The original Fund quotas were calculated in 1944 at the Bretton Woods conference in the light of conditions prevailing at that time. Since then there has been an enormous increase in the volume and value of international trade. Moreover, the circumstances of the past few years have led to very heavy commitments on the existing resources of the fund. As a consequence the uncommitted resources available to the Fund are insufficient to meet potential future demands.

A similar situation exists with respect to the Bank. The main source of funds for the Bank's lending activities is the sale of debentures to private investors. It is primarily the guarantee provided by the 80 per cent uncalled subscriptions of the United States, Canada and other economically strong member countries which enables the ready sale of international bank debentures in the private sector of the world economy. With total outstanding loans of $3,763 million at March 31, 1959, and current lending in excess of $700 million per year, the time may soon be approaching when additional guarantee would be necessary to ensure the marketability of International Bank bonds.

Honourable senators will notice from the table that Germany, Japan and several other countries together with Canada will be increasing their quotas by more than the general percentage appearing in the table. It has been so decided and it is to be approved by the interested countries.

It appears to be quite plain that the particularly rapid economic growth of Canada in recent years is ample reason for a special increase in the Canadian subscription in the two agencies over and above the general increase. This special increase will enable Canada to continue to play a role in the work of the Bank and Fund in keeping with our growing economic stature in the world.

In specific terms, it is proposed that Canada's quota in the International Monetary Fund be increased from $300 million to $550 million—not quite double. This increase would involve outlays to the Fund of gold to the value of $62.5 million and non-interest-bearing Government notes in an amount of $187.5 million. For the International Bank the proposal is to increase our subscription to $750 million from the existing figure of $325 million.

The United States increase is set out in the table which I have presented. The United States subscription to the Bank will be raised from $3,175 million to $6,350 million; in other words, it will be doubled. This increase on the part of Canada from $325 million to $750 million in its subcription to the International Bank would call for payments of $1 million in United States dollars and $9 million in non-interest-bearing Government notes, usable only with Canadian concurrence. The remaining $415 million will be in the form of a guarantee only. To clarify the financial implications of the increases in our contributions I wish now, with the permission of the Senate, to submit a table showing these implications in detail.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is this table to be incorporated in Hansard?

Hon. Mr. Monette: I am not proposing that at the moment, but I am at honourable senators' disposal.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Put it in Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Put it in the record.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: It should be in the record.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Very well.

FINANCIAL IMPLICATIONS OF CANADA'S INCREASED CONTRIBUTION TO THE I.M.F. AND THE I.B.R.D.

	Canada's quota and subscription	Payment in gold or U.S. dollars	Payment in Canadian currency or non-interest-bearing notes	Guarantee
	(Millions of U.S. dollars)
I.M.F.
Present quota	300.0	75.0	225.0
Proposed increase	250.0	62.5	187.5
I.B.R.D.
Present subscription	325.0	6.5	58.5	260.0
Proposed increase	425.0	1.0	9.0	415.0
	1,300.0	145.0	480.0	675.0

As to the Fund, the present quota obtaining up to now is $300 million. The proposed increase is $250 million, making a total quota of $550 million. The payment in gold for the proposed increase would be $62.5 million. The payment in Canadian currency under the present quota is $225 million and the proposed increase is $187.5 million.

As to the Bank, the present subscription of Canada is $325 million, and the proposed increase is $425 million. The payment in gold under the present subscription is $6.5 million, and the increase would add $1 million.

As to the payment in Canadian currency or non-interest-bearing notes, the present quota under the Fund is $225 million, and the proposed increase is $187 million. The present subscription in Canadian currency is $58.5 million, and the proposed increase is $9 million.

The payments in gold or United States dollars in respect of the Fund and the Bank will be made from existing holdings in the Exchange Stabilization Fund. No other cash payments will be required. The increases in Canada's quota in the Fund and in our subscription to the Bank will appear as loans and investments in the public accounts and, accordingly, do not affect the level of the net national debt.

This amendment, as it appears in the bill, involves not only an appropriate increase in the ceiling on funds to be provided for our subscriptions to these two international institutions, but also a change in the form of the ceiling. This is really a technical matter, but a word of explanation may perhaps be helpful.

As honourable senators will see from the first table which I submitted, all subscriptions under the Bretton Woods Agreements are denominated in terms of United States dollars. In other words, the United States dollar is the yardstick used. The ceiling is expressed in Canadian funds, to be appropriated in terms of United States dollars. The actual sum is 1,300 million United States dollars. In this we are following the practice of the United Kingdom and other countries.

Honourable senators, at this very moment when we are considering this bill the atmosphere of the world is heavily loaded and feelings are tense. What lies in the future is most serious and unpredictable. The contemplated sacrifices of our country for the preservation of civilization may affect the balance of our economy. There is no doubt, however, that we all wish to show a united soul and a determined will to reach and maintain our noble humanitarian designs and at the same time to serve civilization.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Reid, debate adjourned.

JUDGES BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the second reading of Bill C-56, to amend the Judges Act.

He said: Honourable senators, in rising to explain this bill I feel a bit embarrassed, because I am a very junior senator in this chamber.

Hon. Mr. Reid: That is something for the record.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: And I do not think I should speak twice at one sitting of the Senate. However, it happened that last session I explained a similar bill, and for that reason my leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) asked me to explain this one. In addition, I suddenly found that the Judges Bill and the bill to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act were placed on the Order Paper for consideration today. So my hands were tied, and you will have to listen to me twice at one sitting.

Honourable senators, this is a bill to amend the Judges Act. The legislators of the provinces of Quebec, British Columbia and Alberta have passed and proclaimed legislation which provides for certain judicial appointments, and the amendments now proposed to the Judges Act are required in order to give effect to these new appointments.

Honourable senators are aware that by section 92, subsection 14, of the British North America Act the provinces have jurisdiction over the courts within the province. Section 96 of that act makes provision for appointment of judges of the Superior Court and/or Supreme Court in each province by the federal Government. Further, section 100 of the act charges the federal Government with the payment of salary, allowances and pensions of such judges.

The present bill consists of three short clauses.

Clause 1 specifies that there shall be 51 puisne judges of the Superior Court of Quebec. Under the present act there are 48. The appointment of three additional judges as provided for by this bill will greatly facilitate the work of the Superior Court in that province. Furthermore, the judges are each to be paid an annual remuneration of $16,900.

Clause 2 of the bill provides that there shall be 13 judges of the Supreme Court of British Columbia. Under the present act there are 11 judges. Again, the appointment of two additional judges will greatly facilitate the work of the Supreme Court of that province. This clause also provides for an annual remuneration of $16,900 to be paid to each judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia.

Finally, clause 3 deals with the province of Alberta and provides for eight judges of the Supreme Court of Alberta, at an annual salary of $16,900 each. This clause increases by two the number of judges of the Supreme Court of Alberta, and again the appointment of the two additional judges is being made to assist and facilitate the work of the Supreme Court in the province.

Hon. J. W. deB. Farris: Honourable senators, I am very glad to support this bill. I can speak as the senior senator from British Columbia, and by protocol the senior lawyer in that province next to the Attorney General.

Some months ago I wrote to the Minister of Justice urging that additional judges be appointed in British Columbia. Of course, I am not qualified to speak with any authority concerning the two other provinces for which the bill makes provision, but I have no doubt that the situation there is similar to that in British Columbia. Conditions in British Columbia are such that I would say we probably could not get a case even set down for trial before next February. Last week there was one judge of the Supreme Court available in the city of Vancouver, and the rest were tied up with work or on circuit.

I think everyone agrees that one of the essentials for proper administration of justice is reasonably prompt disposal of cases. The present situation is intolerable, and I highly commend the Government for introducing a bill of this kind. May I add that I hope the appointments will follow very quickly after this bill is passed.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: We will try to see that that is done.

Hon. Mr. Farris: The honourable minister and his associates have had ample time to arrange for prompt appointments, because this matter has been under consideration for some months. I have no doubt they have made up their minds as to who the appointees will be. I am a great believer in keeping the ship on a more or less even keel among judges, and for that reason I can see no reason why the Minister of Justice should not select the appointees in British Columbia from his own party. I am sure there are very many excellent men in that party available for appointment, and I heartily endorse this bill.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Reid, for Hon. Mr. Bouffard, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

FREE METHODIST CHURCH IN CANADA— SECOND READING

Hon. Norman P. Lambert moved the second reading of Bill S-27, to incorporate The Free Methodist Church in Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill S-27 has to do with a proposed merger of the Free Methodist Church and The Holiness Movement Church in Canada. Many of us who have lived in this country for a long time are, I am sure, not unfamiliar with the names of these two institutions, but it may not be amiss if, for a moment or two, I make reference to the historic background of these two denominational institutions.

The Free Methodist Church had its beginning in Canada in the early years of the 1870's, when Bishop B. T. Roberts of the Free Methodist Church of North America accepted an invitation to conduct some services in the area of Agincourt, Ontario, which is now a suburban district fairly close to the city of Toronto. From that beginning interest spread until, within a few years, churches were organized in various sections of Ontario, and it continued until each of the Prairie provinces were reached and some points in the province of Quebec. The outcome of this was the organizing of four conferences, with headquarters in the United States, contributing to their funds for evangelism, missions, superannuation and other various overall expenses of the church. This continued until 1923, when an agreement was reached between the general church and representatives of the Canadian conferences whereby the Canadian conferences would retain in Canada all moneys raised for evangelism and the superannuation fund, and thus assume the responsibility for these causes.

The Canadian conferences also agreed to share in the operating costs of the general church. While no definite agreement was made relative to missionary activities, the Canadian conferences have voluntarily and generously supported the missionary endeavours of the general church.

In 1927 a Canadian act of incorporation was secured, thus establishing The Free Methodist Church in Canada. Immediately following this a Canadian Executive Board of the Canadian church was formed and has since been appointed in accordance with the provisions of the act. It might be interesting to note that the present President of this board is the Reverend J. A. Robb, who for many years was a pastor and superintendent of the West Ontario Conference. The Vice-President is the Reverend C. W. Reynolds, who has had several years of experience as pastor and superintendent of the East Ontario Conference. The Secretary is the Reverend R. L. Casement, who has been a pastor for 28 years, a superintendent for 8 years, and is now completing 9 years as secretary of this board. The Treasurer is Mr. L. A. Freeman, a school teacher for many years, and now principal of a large school in Hamilton, Ontario. These four persons have been designated the Board of Directors. In addition, there are members of the Executive Board in Alberta, and Western Ontario, whose names will be made known in committee in the presentation of the church officials.

That briefly states the background of one party to this merger, The Free Methodist Church.

The other party to the agreement concerned, The Holiness Movement Church, was organized at about the beginning of the present century and is, therefore, approximately 60 years old. It obtained a charter in Canada. The founder was Bishop R. C. Horner, who had the reputation of being a man with evangelistic fervour and a great capacity for organization. Whether any of his descendants have gone to Saskatchewan I do not know, but, at any rate, the name is the same as that of the honourable senator from Blaine Lake. Several churches were built in central and eastern Ontario, and a few in Quebec and the United States. Interest spread later to the Prairie provinces, and in time an eastern and a western conference were organized. A strong missionary emphasis developed, until the work in foreign fields surpassed, in members and churches, that in the homeland of Canada. A conference was organized in Egypt with 70 churches and 7,000 to 8,000 members. There was also active mission work in China until it became necessary, under the present régime in that country, for missionaries to leave there. Since then, however, their work has been revived in Hong Kong. The work of this church has been established also in South America.

Through the years that the Free Methodist and the Holiness Movement churches have operated in Canada, friendly relations have existed between them and, while there was never any written agreement, there seems to have been a mutual understanding that they would not infringe on each other's territory in connection with the promotion of their beliefs. It was no uncommon thing for the pastors to exchange pulpits and, in several instances, the Holiness Movement pastors have transferred to the Free Methodist Church and have served acceptably for many years.

During recent years a growing feeling developed on the part of the leaders and many laymen in the Holiness Movement Church that, owing to their heavy missionary program, and realizing that the doctrines of the two churches compared favourably, it would be the reasonable thing to do, and it would strengthen the forces for greater progress, if the Holiness Movement Church were to merge with the Free Methodist Church in Canada.

With these facts as the motivating principles, the officials of the two bodies had several friendly discussions that resulted in all the necessary requirements being met. More than the required majority, both of ministers and laymen, voted in favour of the merger. The leaders of both groups have endeavoured to have the Agreement of Merger in harmony with both the church and civil laws. Legal advice was obtained to accomplish this end, and it is the sincere desire of all who have laboured so conscientiously for this bill that it may prove a great blessing to their combined religious cause.

Hon. Mr. Farris: What is the significance of the word "free"?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: The Free Methodist Church is the established name and the one adopted from the very beginning. I think it came to Canada from the Old Country.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I would assume that all churches in this country are free.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I am sure my honourable friend is familiar with the term Wee Frees in the Presbyterian Church. I might say that this bill has been scrutinized very thoroughly by the legal representatives of both parties to the proposed merger.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I was not questioning anything. I was merely seeking information.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: The bill has been examined also by the Law Clerk of the Senate. I believe it is patterned after the 1924 bill to incorporate the United Church of Canada. Some honourable senators may recall the debate that took place in this chamber at that time as to the various legal provisions relating to distribution of property, and so on. I think they will agree there is every justification for the present bill following pretty closely the pattern of the United Church of Canada Bill.

Honourable senators, the bill before the house consists of 14 clauses, together with two schedules. The first schedule is an extract from the Agreement of Merger relating to the organization and government of the church, and the second is an extract from the Agreement of Merger relating to the trustees who are involved in the transfer of property.

If this bill is given second reading I will move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills for our further enlightenment. I am sure that officials of both churches will be present to answer questions.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Lambert, bill referred to Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 16, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 16, 1959

The Senate met at 8 p.m., Hon. Lionel Choquette, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

CANADA-FINLAND INCOME TAX CONVENTION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-54, to implement a convention between Canada and the Republic of Finland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-64, to amend the Prime Minister's Residence Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Report on the administration of allowances for blind persons in Canada, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1958, pursuant to section 12 of the Blind Persons Act, Chapter 17, R.S. 1952, and amending Statutes. (French text).

Report by the Tariff Board, dated March 10, 1959, relative to the investigation ordered by the Minister of Finance respecting silk and man-made fibres and products (so-called synthetics)—being Reference No. 125 (Textiles) (English and French texts); together with a copy of the transcript of the evidence presented at public hearings (English text), pursuant to section 6 of the Tariff Board, Act, Chapter 261, R.S. 1952.

Report of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, concerning the sale and distribution of surgical rubber gloves and certain other surgical supplies, pursuant to sections 18 and 19 of the Combines Investigation Act, Chapter 314, R.S. 1952. (English text).

The Canada Gazette, Part II, Statutory Orders and Regulations, 1959, Wednesday, June 10, 1959, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, Chapter 235, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

EDUCATION

SUPPLEMENTARY ANSWER TO INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, on June 3 I presented the answer to an inquiry of the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) concerning federal Government contributions to education in which he inquired, first, what were the contributions during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959, and, second, the estimated contributions for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960.

It has been brought to my attention that under the heading of the National Research Council the estimated contributions for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960 were omitted. With leave of the Senate I should now like to present a supplementary answer covering this omission, and recommend that in the revised copy of Hansard this part of the answer be inserted under the appropriate heading of the answer to the inquiry tabled June 3.

For supplementary answer, see p. 737.

PRIVATE BILL

STANDARD TRUST COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. William R. Brunt presented Bill S-22, to incorporate Standard Trust Company.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: With leave of the Senate, I move that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Why the haste?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am afraid that otherwise Parliament might prorogue before we could get the bill to the House of Commons. If that should occur the sponsors would lose the money that they have deposited with Parliament to cover the fees payable on this bill, and all I want to do is to prevent this.

Hon. Mr. Croll: What is wrong with that?

Hon. Mr. Power: If the honourable senator would guarantee that Parliament will prorogue as soon as that I would be glad to facilitate passage of this bill. Otherwise, I do not see why we should.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Unless the bill is given second reading tomorrow I am afraid that Parliament will have prorogued before it could be passed there. Once fees of this nature have been paid they are irrecoverable.

Hon. Mr. Power: What time would be gained if we passed the motion made by the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt)?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: If the bill were given second reading tomorrow it could go to committee on Thursday; otherwise, it will not go to committee until next week.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: It could not go to committee on Thursday.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, has the honourable Senator Brunt leave to move that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Power: No.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Then I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday.

Motion agreed to.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented a report of the committee on Bill S-22.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (S-22) intituled: "An Act to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act", report as follows:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 600 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented a further report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill S-22.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (S-22) intituled: "An Act to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 27, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Acting Chairman: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Méthot: Next sitting.

INCOME TAX BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-48.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-48), intituled: "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 27, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 11, line 16: After "or" insert "charter-party".
2. Page 11: Strike out clause 19.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Next sitting.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 353 to 361, and moved that the said reports be considered now.

He said: Honourable senators, perhaps these reports stand in a little different position from those which have just been presented and on which consideration has been set over until next sitting. If the divorce bills concerned in these reports are not considered before the end of the present session we would not have to remit the fees paid, but we would have to hear the cases again next session.

Motion agreed to.

EXCISE TAX BILL

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, on Wednesday last when the honourable Senator Farris was permitted to speak on the motion of the honourable Senator Hayden for concurrence in the committee amendments to the Excise Tax Bill it was understood that the resumed debate would be the first order for today—at least, that was my understanding—but now I find that it is No. 6 on today's Order Paper.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Would it be satisfactory to the honourable senator and other honourable senators if I moved that item No. 6 be the first order for consideration tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Then I move that Order No. 6 on today's Orders of the Day be placed on tomorrow's Orders of the Day as the first order.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, June 10, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson for the second reading of Bill C-49, to provide for the establishment of a National Energy Board.

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard: Honourable senators, I do not intend to be long in discussing this bill, for it is going to go to committee where it will be fully examined. I feel the bill in general is a good one because it implements the recommendations of the Borden Commission dealing with gas and oil and pipe lines generally. There are some remarks I want to make at this time in order to have my thoughts on record when the bill is at the committee stage.

The first point I wish to raise is in connection with section 15 of the bill, which reads:

> (1) Any decision or order made by the board may, for the purpose of enforcement thereof, be made a rule, order or decree of the Exchequer Court or of any superior court of any province of Canada and shall be enforced in like manner as any rule, order or decree of such court.

The suggestion I am going to make about this section is for the purpose of enabling the board to have its orders properly executed. In the course of its existence the board will have to issue various orders and decrees. For example, in some cases it may require an owner to do something for the safety of the public, or it may order the extension of a system to a municipality or a county or somewhere else. If the board's decision in connection with any of these matters is not carried out, then the order or decree of the board will be made a rule of the Exchequer Court by the production of such order or decree to the Exchequer Court, after which it can be executed as in the case of a judgment.

To my knowledge there is nothing that the Exchequer Court can do to force a person or a company to do anything manu militaire; that is to say, if something is ordered to be done by the court and the owner defaults, then damages can be claimed against the owner. I know that in the province of Quebec no judgment can be executed otherwise. That has been the practice in Quebec. If an owner does not carry out an order, the commission or board is empowered to have the order carried out at the expense of the owner. I would like to see this statute authorize the National Energy Board, if its decision or order is not followed, to carry out the work itself at the expense of the owner. Such a provision exists in Quebec statutes dealing with similar commissions or boards, and I think it would provide a safety precaution against any such difficulty that may arise in the operations of the National Energy Board.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Is it not possible for the court to make such an order, if it may issue decrees? That is what the bill says. Can the court not order the work to be done, and, in default of its being done by the owner, can it not be done by the board at the expense of the owner?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Even if the Exchequer Court could do that, I do not believe this legislation gives the board the right to do it at the expense of the owner. If the Exchequer Court could authorize the board to do the work at the expense of the owner, then this legislation should give the National Energy Board a similar right in accordance with its functions. I do not believe there is any such power given to the board at the present time. There would be no possibility of executing a judgment of that kind in Quebec unless the board were authorized to execute at the expense of the owner. Proceedings may be different in other provinces and it might be possible to have an order executed manu militaire by the board at the expense of the owner, but not in Quebec, unless properly authorized under the act. I would suggest that the legislation authorize the board to do the thing that it orders be done at the expense of the owner. It would serve as a precaution. Of course, if it is not necessary, let us not put it in, but I do think it would be a precautionary measure.

The second point I wish to deal with concerns section 19 of the bill, dealing with a writ of certiorari, prohibition or mandamus and writs of that kind. The section reads:

> (1) Except as provided in this act, every decision or order of the board is final and conclusive.

(2) The Exchequer Court of Canada has exclusive original jurisdiction to hear and determine every aplication for a writ of certiorari, prohibition or mandamus or for an injunction in relation to any decision or order of the board or any proceedings before the board.

(3) A decision or order of the board is not subject to review or to be restrained, removed or set aside by certiorari, prohibition, mandamus or injunction or any other process or proceeding in the Exchequer Court on the ground

(a) that a question of law or fact was erroneously decided by the board; or

(b) that the board had no jurisdiction to entertain the proceedings in which the decision or order was made or to make the decision or order.

That is something which I find unfair in this legislation. If there is no possibility for the court to assure certiorari or prohibition against the board for lack of jurisdiction, I do not know what is to be gained by the issue of a writ of certiorari or especially of prohibition. I fail to see why the board should not be subject to the ordinary writs which have been given to the people of Canada for such a long time.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, it is a most unusual procedure.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I do not see why we have it. It is the habit of Government today to remove such writs to prevent proceedings being taken before the courts because of lack of jurisdiction. It seems to me that this new board, which is just going to start its work, will not act without jurisdiction, but I would strongly urge that we do not remove such writs at the present time for lack of jurisdiction.

The third point I wish to deal with concerns international power lines. As we all know, in most provinces of Canada, especially in Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, there are hydro-electric commissions. If there is not one in Saskatchewan there will be one there very soon. Their activities consist of developing power in the province, and in many cases distributing electricity. Some of these lines are interprovincial, which would not be affected, but others are international, to which this bill would apply. For instance, the Hydro Commission in Quebec has built up a power line to the border of the United States, and supplies power to a utility company in the United States, which comes to get it at the border. I am sure that other provinces that happen to export power have the same arrangement. According to the bill before us, I think power lines which have actually been considered as provincial lines might be considered as international power lines and be taken over and come within the jurisdiction of the board. The definition of an international power line is given in section 2(h):

"International power line" means facilities for the transmission of power from any place in Canada to any place outside Canada.

In such a case, my contention is that when a power line is completely situated within a province and delivers power for export purposes to a utility company which comes and takes it at the border, it is not an international power line. No doubt honourable senators recall a decision of the Board of Transport Commissioners given last year in a case of that kind. The case in question was that of a pipe line construction in the Yukon, the purpose of which was to transport oil into Alaska. Another company was formed in Alaska. One company was completely situated in the Yukon, that is, in Canada, and the other, an American company, was completely situated in Alaska. The conclusion of the Board of Transport Commissioners was that this was one line and was to be considered as an international pipe line. Well, I am afraid that, under this bill, electric power lines which for many years have been built up right to the border of the United States and connected there might be considered as international power lines, and if so they would come under the complete jurisdiction of the new board and the provinces would completely lose control over these lines which they have built up for many years.

What would be the consequences of these lines being considered as international power lines? First of all, the Government of the province which had possession of these lines, having built them up, would, if they submitted them to the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board, have to apply for a licence for an extension of a line, even if the line were completely inside the province. For instance, if one of these lines existing at the present time which extended to the border of the United States was required by a province to be extended to serve a municipality inside the province, even if it were a branch of that line, both the main line and the branch line would come under the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board. The rates would be decided by that board, the way in which it was to be constructed would be decided by the board, and the licence granted could be suspended or completely cancelled by the board. Well, it seems to me that since the provinces built up these lines, paid for them, operated and managed them for many years, the provinces should not lose complete control over the lines they have built up.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Can the honourable senator tell us if there is anything in the bill to protect vested rights, or if the bill has any retroactive effect?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The only thing that protects these lines is that the line or lines are licensed until the commission decides otherwise. There is no doubt that the board will have jurisdiction to give orders as to where the lines shall go, and as to the toll rates. It would be as though a commission held control, without the existing utility losing power to operate the lines. The board would be in a position to give orders and to exercise complete jurisdiction over these lines in the future.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: To what section does the honourable senator refer?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: About the power of the board?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Section 44. Section 43 says:

(1) No person shall operate an international power line unless there is a certificate in force with respect to that international power line.
(2) No person shall operate an international power line otherwise than in accordance with the terms and conditions of the certificate issued with respect thereto.

Then section 44 says:

The board may, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, issue a certificate in respect of a pipe line or an international power line if the board is satisfied that the line is and will be required by the present and future public convenience and necessity, and, in considering an application for a certificate, the board shall take into account all such matters as to it appear to be relevant, and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the board may have regard to the following:
(a) the availability of oil or gas to the pipe line, or power to the international power line, as the case may be;
(b) the existence of markets, actual or potential;
(c) the economic feasibility of the pipe line or international power line;
(d) the financial responsibility and financial structure of the applicant, the methods of financing the line and the extent to which Canadians will have an opportunity of participating in the financing, engineering and construction of the line; and
(e) any public interest that in the board's opinion may be affected by the granting or the refusing of the application.

Section 45, 46 and 47 give full control to the board over these power lines.

It seems to me that the bill goes a little too far as regards any provincial Government line. Since the provincial Government built the line, financed its construction, operated it up to the present time, fixed the rates, found a market in the United States and is delivering power there, I do not think the line should be placed under the jurisdiction of the dominion Government.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Will the honourable gentleman permit a question? Would he draw any distinction between a provincial power commission and a private company?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Yes. A private company is subject to control by a provincial board. However, in the case of a provincial Government-operated utility no such control exists. No control is exercisable as to the route to be followed, financial arrangements and construction, and no requirement exists for a Government-owned utility to obtain a certificate of public convenience. My contention is that where such a power line exists as an exclusive provincial right it should continue to remain so and not, under the pretext that it is a line that runs to the United States, be termed an international power line and become subject to control by a federal board.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Has it not always been the case under the British North America Act that power lines which connect provinces or a province with a foreign country are under dominion jurisdiction?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Mind you, at the present time it is not proposed to have the board exercise control over a line that operates in two or more provinces. Control is proposed to be exercised only if the line transmits power from any place in Canada to any place outside Canada.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Is that not covered by the British North America Act?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Undoubtedly it is. I think it is quite in order in the case of a power line extending from any place in Canada to any place in the United States that it should be controlled, because it is what we would call an international power line. But my contention is that if the line terminates within the province, at the border, and the power is there delivered to the line of a power company in the United States, the line is completely within the province. It is quite in order that the federal Government have the decision as to whether such power should be exported, but once the question of exporting power has been decided on I do not think there should be federal control exercised over the line itself.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask another question? Is that not a matter for the courts to decide, not in accordance with this act but in accordance with the British North America Act? If the power line does not go beyond the border the courts may hold that it is not an international power line, in which case this act will not apply to it—it cannot apply, because the line will be under provincial jurisdiction irrespective of what legislation we pass. Is that not a matter for the courts to decide?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: You are quite right, but in my opinion the less we leave the courts to decide, the better it will be. If we do as I suggest it will clarify the matter by putting this type of utility outside of what is defined as an international power line. Such a course would leave that much less for the courts to decide.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: We have not the power to do that.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: We have that power. As I read it, the definition says that a line that originates in Canada and goes into a foreign country is an international power line. Consider the situation with regard to the oil pipe line which extends from the Yukon to Alaska: it is operated in the Yukon by a Canadian company and in Alaska by an American company. Well, the Board of Transport Commissioners concluded—I do not think unanimously—that it was what we propose to call an international pipe line.

I would like to avoid the possibility of creating a situation that would give rise to litigation. Why not define an international power line as being a line belonging to an owner and which runs into the United States from Canada. That could very well be. But, honourable senators, it seems to me that if ownership of the line terminates at the border it should not be classed as an international power line; it should be left in the control of those who built it and who have operated the line up to now, especially in the case of a line belonging to a provincial hydro system. It seems to me that in the bill we should clarify this situation. That is my suggestion. Let us clarify the situation, let us define an international power line as a line extending from Canada to a foreign country, but making the exception that if a line goes to the border only and is there joined to a public utility line operating in the United States it is not to be classed as an international power line. Such a provision in this bill would not affect the federal Government's jurisdiction as to whether the power is to be exported or not.

Honourable senators, I am bringing these points to the attention of the Senate now so that when the matter is discussed in committee we shall be in a better position to decide whether or not to clarify the definition of international power lines in relation to power lines constructed and operated solely within one province.

The third item I want to draw to the attention of the Senate is section 76 of the bill.

Article 76 provides that when a power line or a pipe line is going to cross another utility, the power line or pipe line company must do two things: First of all it must consult with the appropriate authority. Then, after having obtained consent of the appropriate authority it must come before the Energy Board and find out under what conditions the crossing of such a utility will be permitted. Mind you, these utilities are quite numerous. In each province there are local telephone systems, local railways, local power lines, roads—this applies to all utilities under the exclusive control of the provinces. Well, what is the definition of "appropriate authority" in the bill before us? It is defined by section 76, subsection 1, as follows:

> (i) with respect to a navigable water other than a canal, the Minister of Public Works,
>
> (ii) with respect to a canal, the Minister of Transport,
> (iii) with respect to a railway, the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada—

What about the local railroads, which are not subject to the Board of Transport Commissioners' jurisdiction?

> and (iv) with respect to any other utility, the National Energy Board.

I say that when local utilities are crossed by a pipe line or an international power line as defined in this bill, the appropriate authority having jurisdiction is the province. If it happens to be a power line situated in the province of Quebec, the jurisdiction is in the electricity board that looks after the power line in that province. If it is a local railroad, most of which belongs to the province, the appropriate authority is the Government of that province. If it is a local telephone line, it is the public utility board in the province concerned.

My view is that if there is no possibility of the questions at issue being resolved between the local authority and the pipe line concerned, then it can be submitted to the National Energy Board. I say that the Minister of Transport, who has jurisdiction over a canal, or the Minister of Public Works, who has jurisdiction over navigable water other than a canal, has no jurisdiction over the land at all. The federal minister concerned has jurisdiction over the harbour in question, but the land continues to belong to the province. If a pipe line is to be constructed across a navigable river it has to pass over the bed of the river or under the bed, and because the land belongs to the province I say the province should not be completely ignored.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: May I ask my friend a question? Does not the section which he is criticizing follow the example of the federal Railway Act? If the federal Parliament gives authority for building a railway, the railway company does not have to go to all these provincial authorities to get permission to cross a highway or a provincial telephone line.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: When a provincial railway is crossed by a federal railway—which is about the case my friend is citing—there are two boards concerned, the local board and the Board of Transport Commissioners. They consult in the matter and reach an agreement.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I am talking about the case of a federal railway crossing a provincial highway or a provincial public utility.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Of course, the proceedings are the same, but the federal Railway Act does not obligate the railway company to get the permission of the appropriate local authorities. Permission to cross the utility is right in the act. As to the conditions under which the crossing will be made, they are determined by the Board of Transport Commissioners. In that case there is no need to ask permission from the appropriate authority. Under this bill there is permission to ask the appropriate authority.

My criticism of the bill is that the appropriate authority should not be defined as a federal authority when it should be a local authority. If we are going to respect the rights of everyone we should see to it that the one who has to get consent should address himself to the appropriate authority having jurisdiction over the utility to be crossed. If these parties cannot reach a satisfactory conclusion, the matter can then be referred to the National Energy Board.

I refer again to section 76, subsection 1, which says:

(a) "appropriate authority" means
(i) with respect to a navigable water other than a canal, the Minister of Public Works,
(ii) with respect to a canal, the Minister of Transport,
(iii) with respect to a railway, the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, and
(iv) with respect to any other utility, the National Energy Board; and
(b) "utility" means a navigable water, canal, railway, highway or irrigation ditch or an underground telegraph or telephone line or a line for the transmission of hydrocarbons, power or any other substance.

My point is that if somebody has to be consulted it should be the provincial authority which has jurisdiction over the utility line to be crossed.

The fourth point which I wish to put forward is that the bill seems to lack deference to Her Majesty the Queen, in that it provides that Her Majesty is subject to all the clauses of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What section makes that provision?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I think it is section 90.

Hon. Mr. Power: That is usual, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: It is not usual. No legislation is applicable to Her Majesty, unless it is specifically provided for.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Something new has been introduced by this bill.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Such a provision is contained in some legislation, but one does not see it often. It is a recognized principle that if the legislation does not so provide, it does not bind Her Majesty. That means no government is bound, unless it is specifically stated in the law, and there is no doubt about it. Section 90 reads:

Her Majesty is bound by this Act

Hon. Mr. Vien: Does the honourable senator believe that that provision would apply to Her Majesty in the right of the province?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The section is very definite.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Does it not apply to Her Majesty in the right of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: It does not say so. If my honourable friend will read the remainder of the bill, he will see that Her Majesty is bound in every way. That is one of my criticisms of the bill. It gives a pipe line the right to occupy and take possession of any property that may belong to Her Majesty or to the Government of a province, without any doubt whatsoever. I refer to section 66, which reads:

(1) No company shall take possession of, use or occupy lands vested in Her Majesty without the consent of the Governor in Council.
(2) A company may, with the consent of the Governor in Council and upon such terms as the Governor in Council may prescribe, take and appropriate, for the use of its pipe line and works, so much of the lands of Her Majesty lying on the route of the line that have not been granted or sold, as is necessary for the pipe line, and also so much of the public beach, or bed of a lake, river or stream, or of the lands so vested covered with the waters of such lake, river or stream as is necessary for making, completing and using its pipe line and works.

On reading this section, coupled with section 90, I do not think there is any doubt that it is intended to subject Her Majesty to the terms of the act, and that not only federal but provincial lands of Her Majesty may be occupied and used.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Surely the British North America Act would operate there? If we legislate to bring provincially controlled lands under the jurisdiction of this act, would not our act be simply ultra vires of Parliament?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I think my honourable colleague will agree with me that when section 66 is read it will be seen that it covers not only the property of Her Majesty in the right of the dominion but also the property of Her Majesty in the right of the provinces, having regard to the enumeration of the property that can be taken, namely, the beds of lakes and the beds of rivers and streams.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Does not the honourable senator agree that we can only legislate within the powers of Parliament? I submit that what is proposed in this bill could not be construed otherwise than as legislation within the powers of Parliament, and, therefore, when it speaks of Crown lands it means Crown lands in the right of Canada. At least, that is my humble opinion.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I do not believe there is a single doubt that the bill is intended to affect both the land of the federal Government and of the provincial Governments. Otherwise section 66 would have no meaning at all. If my learned confrère is right, then let us clarify the bill to make it say what he states. If the provincial lands are not affected I have no criticism at all to make, but if the provincial lands are affected I have lots of criticism. I do not think the Governor in Council is the authority which should decide the terms and conditions upon which the provincial Governments should hold their lands, or have them occupied. But I say if provincial lands are not meant to be taken or to be affected by this bill then I have nothing to say. However, I am afraid that they will be affected, and the least we can do, if we want to clarify the bill, is to say definitely in the bill that only the lands of Her Majesty in the right of the dominion are affected by it and that the lands of Her Majesty in the right of the provinces will not be affected, that the beds of lakes, rivers and streams will not be affected.

As a matter of fact, all beds of lakes, rivers and streams, whether they are navigable or not, belong to the provincial Governments, and if lands of Her Majesty in the right of the provinces are not to be affected then why does section 66 specially mention the beds of lakes, rivers and streams? The least I can say is that the meaning of this section is vague and it should be clarified.

Those are the remarks I wanted to make, and it is my opinion that this bill should be carefully looked into. The principle of the bill is all right. I do not have any objections to control, but I do not think the Government of Canada should, as an ancillary power, take control of anything that is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. I think that each one should stay behind its own line and within its own right, and there should be no overlapping one upon the other. It is for the purpose of clarification that I have pointed out these matters to the Senate, and I would like to have them clarified when the bill goes before the committee.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, there are a few remarks I would like to make in connection with this bill. First of all, I think the time has certainly come for the appointment of such a board. Possibly it should have been appointed a little sooner. The gas and oil industries in Canada have both reached a stage of development where they are entitled to a board which will deal specifically with the needs, purposes and functions of those industries. Under the Pipe Lines Act, which was passed a few years ago, the authority for dealing with pipe lines for conveying gas and oil was entrusted to the Board of Transport Commissioners. That may have been quite satisfactory at that time, when only a preliminary stage of development in the construction of pipe lines had been reached. When one looks at the Railway Act he sees that the Board of Transport Commissioners exercises control over matters that are almost infinite in their range, including, for instance, construction of telephones, telegraphs, ferries, railways and international bridges, and the rates that may be charged by the companies operating these utilities. The appointment of a separate board to deal with the needs, the operations and functions—domestic, interprovincial and international—of the gas and oil industries is a very wise step at this time.

The scheme of the bill which we have before us is, I think, very simple. Most of the pertinent provisions of the Pipe Lines Act are transferred to this bill, and so it has clauses which deal with the financing of pipe lines, their construction, tolls, tariffs and such things as that, in relation to gas and to oil. Oil may be brought into the ambit of this bill by order of the Governor in Council at any time.

The powers which are given in the bill relate chiefly to pipe lines and the acquisition of property, the construction of pipe lines, the export of gas, the fixing of rates, and such things as that. There is very little I propose to say on that. I want to deal with a matter raised by the honourable senator from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) and point out that there is no question in my mind when I read section 66 of this bill—especially when I consider that almost the same language is used in the Railway Act—that the power given for the expropriation of land with the consent of the Governor in Council means exactly what it says. In other words, a company may, with the consent of the Governor in Council, expropriate lands of Her Majesty in the right of the dominion and also in the right of a province. There is a case in point which went to the Privy Council as early as 1926. I refer to Attorney General for Quebec v. Nipissing Central Railway Company and Attorney General for Canada as reported in (1926) Appeal Cases and in Cameron's Privy Council Decisions (1916-1929) Volume 2, at 411 and following pages. That was a case on appeal from the Supreme Court of Canada, and the following reference appears:

Section 189 of the Railway Act, 1919, of Canada, —and the language parallels the language in the present bill—

—which empowers any railway company, with the consent of the Governor General, to take Crown lands for the use of the railway, applies to provincial Crown lands as well as to dominion Crown lands.

The Supreme Court of Canada came to that conclusion, and it was confirmed by the Privy Council in 1926. So, no matter how we may feel, it is understandable to find this type of clause engrafted in this bill, for the courts have said the federal authority has the power. Obviously, it must be felt that in order to function properly a board that is dealing with these matters must have power to expropriate whatever lands are required for the construction of facilities, no matter who may be the owner of those lands.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: May I interrupt to ask a question? I would like to know if there is anything in this bill to show that the Railway Act as it was interpreted by the Privy Council should apply in the case of this bill? If not, does the honourable member suggest it should be mentioned in this bill?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I am certainly not attempting to interpret the judgment of any court, but I would point out that a Privy Council decision used language which enabled a company, with the consent of the Governor in Council, to enter upon and take possession of lands of Her Majesty, and the Privy Council's interpretation has become part of the law. But the fact that I accept this interpretation of the law does not make it any more forceful. I have always considered that if you have a judicial interpretation of language you may assume that the same interpretation will be given to the same words when they are used again. That is the authority for the statement I have made tonight. But I am not arguing whether this provision should be in the bill. That is a question of policy. I can see good reason for taking into a general statute of this kind a broad power for dealing with the acquisition of property and other matters extending the whole way through to the setting of rates, the determination of licences and the fixing of quantities for export. Perhaps I do not get as upset as I should at the suggested encroachment on provincial jurisdiction or, shall I say, on the right of Her Majesty in a province by the right of Her Majesty in the dominion, but my feeling is that legal authority for this power has been recognized to exist for a long time, and so far as I am concerned I accept that interpretation of the law. Some honourable senators may have different views.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Can the honourable senator tell us whether this power is reciprocal? For instance, has Her Majesty in the right of a province the power to grant rights of expropriation to individuals or others over Crown lands of Her Majesty in the right of the dominion?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I would be very rash indeed if I pretended to be an authority on all questions of constitutional law, and so I would like to be excused from answering that inquiry. I would tell my honourable friend, though, that there is another source from which he might get the answer he is seeking. After the enactment of the Pipe Lines Act I understand that part of a certain line being constructed was to run through the province of Quebec. There was some suggestion that, having regard to the well-known views of the dominant authority in the province, there might be some real difficulty if a headlong collision occurred between the pipe line company and that dominant authority. Fortunately a method was worked out whereby the company acquired the property and built its line without any major constitutional question arising. As I could not give my honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) any first-hand information just now, I would suggest he might get it from those involved in that very peaceful settlement of a matter that might otherwise have resulted in a full-fledged constitutional row.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: What is the difference between a dominant authority and an appropriate authority?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I would say that certainly the dominant authority is always an appropriate authority.

Moving on to my next point in this discussion, I would point out that the bill deals with international power lines, and it does so in a slightly different way. International power lines are defined in the bill as facilities for the transmission of power from any place in Canada to any place outside of Canada. There is a saving clause so far as existing international power lines are concerned, in that they are assumed to hold a certificate until such times as they automatically receive one when the board is set up.

Thereafter, of course, any international power line seeking a certificate will first have to satisfy the board on a number of points. For instance, it will have to satisfy the board that the line is required by the present and future public convenience and necessity, and so on.

One or two things have been said here to which I want to direct the attention of the Senate. My friend who spoke on the bill this evening (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) referred to the provision in section 19 with respect to certiorari. I agree with him in relation to that section, but for a different reason. I do not think section 19 has any place in the bill at all. I think that in the course of collecting sections from the Pipe Lines Act, the Railway Act, and the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act this section sort of crept in, or shall I say snuck in. It seems to be completely unrealed. Section 18 provides for an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada from a decision on order of the board—the board is a court of record—on a question of law or on a question of jurisdiction. In section 19 there is a declaration that writs of certiorari, prohibition or mandamus for an injunction are available in the Exchequer Court. In the next subsection, however it is stated that a decision of the board cannot be challenged on the ground that a question of law or fact was erroneously decided, or that there was a lack of jurisdiction. As far as certiorari is concerned, that is a remedy where there is no other remedy, where at some level of the judiciary a decision was made, or some person exercising ministerial functions gave some decision, which affects you, and you think there was no authority, but there is no remedy, no appeal. In those circumstances, you can apply to the court for a writ of certiorari, the object being to lift the proceedings into a court where they can be reviewed as to whether or not there is an authority. But here the writ of certiorari is completely meaningless, because there is an appeal on the question of jurisdiction to the Supreme Court of Canada. This bill would be 100 per cent effective, so far as the purposes which are sought are concerned, without section 19 at all, and therefore, in my opinion, section 19 adds nothing to the functions, purposes or scope of the bill.

With regard to the other question my friend spoke about, in relation to enforcing an order of the Exchequer Court, we have that procedure in a number of other statutes at the present time. For instance, under the Income Tax Act if an assessment is made against a taxpayer and he does not pay as promptly as the Income Tax Division thinks he should, they can make an affidavit and file it in the Exchequer Court, get a judgment by order of that court and issue execution and seize his assets. Here the provision is that an order of the board, which is a court in itself, may be entered in the appropriate offices of the Exchequer Court and it becomes an order of that court. I do not pretend to know anything about the law of Quebec, but it would appear to me that, as far as Ontario is concerned, if the court ordered you to do something and you did not do it, you might very well be in contempt of court; and we all know that there are remedies for punishment where you are in contempt of court. As to what those remedies are, I would assume that since the court orders something to be done, machinery would be provided for the carrying out of what has been ordered to be done, but I think the real penalty or threat is that you are in contempt if you fail to carry out an order of this court.

Honourable senators, I have one or two other matters to mention. The first is that there is no provision in this bill for expropriation of property for purposes of construction of an international power line. You will find that the powers of expropriation given in the bill relate to pipe lines, and by checking into the matter a little bit I think that in dealing with power lines the historical practice over the years has been that when a company comes to Parliament for its incorporation as a power company the provisions with respect to expropriation are written into the statute itself. If you will read bill after bill relating to companies now operating power companies you will find the power of expropriation is given by Parliament specifically in relation to each company which comes before Parliament and is incorporated, whereas our attitude in relation to pipe lines was exactly the opposite. In the particular pipe line bills that came before Parliament we did not include any such power, and indeed there were many other powers we did not include, because we were seeking to create a general Pipe Lines Act, and the authority of a company, once it was incorporated, would proceed from the Pipe Lines Act itself. It is a difference in method, and I assume that is why we have this difference in the present bill.

One of the other things I want to mention is that there are advisory functions provided for in Part II of the bill, and they very generally use the words "energy and sources of energy", whereas the bill specifically relates to gas and oil and to the export of power. Now, energy and sources of energy can spring from many things other than oil and gas and electricity, and while the limiting words may appear to be all right, I should point out that subsection 1 of section 22 reads as follows:

> The board shall study and keep under review matters over which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction relating to the exploration for, production, recovery, manufacture, processing, transmission, transportation, distribution, sale, purchase, exchange and disposal of energy and sources of energy—

I think that would be an excellent place to limit the scope of the words "energy and sources of energy" by excluding therefrom the things that are not intended to be covered. The board has as well an advisory capacity under which it may function at the request of the minister. I think the duties which it may initiate on its own accord should have some exclusions, so that there may be specific indication of what is the field in which it is intended to keep this constant day-to-day watch and study.

There are many other things that one might say in the course of discussing this bill and the various parts of it, but basically it is a good bill. If anything, it is a little bit overdue, and I think the industry has been very disturbed by all the comment and discussion, and even the report which followed the study and examination of this whole question about a year and a half ago. I think something is needed in as specific and definite terms as we can possibly make it, so that the industry and those financially interested and required to supply the financing in connection with these developments and operations can feel some security or some certainty as to the law, the authority and the pattern of administration that lies ahead for this kind of industry in Canada.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Wall, debate adjourned.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 11, the adjourned debate on motion of Hon. Mr. Monette for the second reading of Bill C-52, an act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, Bill C-52, an act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, is one of the few important bills of a non-controversial or non-partisan nature introduced into Parliament. When it was first introduced, back in 1945, although there was a long-drawn-out discussion on the bill, the speeches were mostly by members of the Social Credit party, none of whom are members now, who endeavoured to keep their doctrine alive and immortal by keeping their so-called doctrine incomprehensible. The Bretton Woods Agreements Act was therefore supported by all other parties in both Houses of Parliament with the exception of the twelve disciples of Mr. Aberhart.

One thing can fairly be said about the Bretton Woods Act itself, namely, that although we listened with interest to the very informative speech made by the honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr Monette), who introduced the bill, in my opinion, and I think in the minds of many other honourable senators, the Bretton Woods Agreements are somewhat difficult to understand without some careful and diligent study, as the monetary matters dealt with are of a fairly complicated nature.

The measure was first conceived under the auspices of the United Nations Organization in 1944 and following the end of the war. The purpose of the Bretton Woods Agreement, when set up in 1945 was, in so far as the International Monetary Fund is primarily concerned, the securing of orderly exchange rates, while the purpose of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development was to assist in the restoration of economics principally in countries which had been destroyed or disrupted during the war. Briefly, it was one part of the United Nations' efforts to create and maintain, following the war, a peaceful and prosperous world. Personally, I am wondering after fifteen years, when looking at world affairs today, just what progress, if any, has been made toward bringing about a peaceful world.

It should be noted that in 1945 some 45 countries signified their willingness to become members of the Bretton Woods Agreement. At present the membership of countries has increased to 68. While the number of countries has increased, it should also be noted that since 1945 certain countries have pulled out and ceased to be members, namely: the U.S.S.R., Czechoslovakia, Poland, New Zealand, Liberia and Egypt. It is rather interesting that the Soviet Union, which talks so much and so often at international meetings about its desire to help under-developed and enslaved nations, is taking no part in this great international work of extending economic assistance to these smaller and poorer countries. Maybe it is more realistic as regards the human race than we are, and therefore sees no reason for being idealistic.

There are certain questions I feel sure some honourable senators may be interested in when the bill goes to committee, such as: When did the Soviet withdraw her membership and what were the reasons given for the withdrawal? A second question would be: Why did New Zealand pull out? A third question I have in mind is regarding China. China was one of the original members in 1945. It is noted that China is still on the present list of members and one of the countries which have agreed to increase their financial obligations. The question naturally arises: How is Taiwan—the Chinese name of Formosa—able to increase her subscriptions to the two funds by $125 million more than Canada, or is the United States contributing this amount for her?

Another question I have in mind is: Why is the Canadian increase higher than the general increase? So far as I know, no reason has so far been advanced for Canada's higher increase.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Is that in dollars or percentagewise?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Dollars. When the Bretton Woods Agreements Act was first introduced into Parliament, it was pointed out that the important thing to bear in mind was that the Canadian dollars put into the fund would be spent in purchasing goods and services in Canada. It would be interesting indeed to learn now if trade matters have worked out to Canada's advantage and along the lines of the assurance given Parliament in 1945, as contained in the Minister of Finance's statement to Parliament.

Canada depends on her export trade more so, I believe, than most countries do. It is interesting, therefore, to take a quick look at Canada's export trade to the principal countries that buy our goods and products. The latest figures I have are for 1958. First of all, it should be pointed out that the total trading countries or states of the world number some 129 in all. Last year the export of all Canadian products amounted to $4,830 million. Of that total amount the United States and Britain purchased some $3,890 million worth of Canadian produce. British Commonwealth countries numbering 33 took a little over 4 per cent, amounting to $282 million. The United States alone accounted for $2,832 million and British purchases in the neighbourhood of $800 million. The great importance to us of U. S. trade by these figures is fairly evident. In effect, the picture of Canada's exports briefly is, that in 1958 the U. S. purchased from Canada approximately 60 per cent; Great Britain 20 per cent, British Commonwealth countries (33) roughly 4 per cent, and the remaining nine countries $939 million—equal, roughly, to only 15½ or 16 per cent.

As already mentioned, I am somewhat curious regarding China. Red China is not a party to the Bretton Woods Agreements, but nevertheless she bought from us nearly $8 million worth of goods, whereas Taiwan, or Formosa, bought only slightly over $1 million of Canadian products.

While not actually opposing the bill, I nevertheless have some doubts that the Bretton Woods Agreements have done much in the past fifteen years to reduce the gap between underdeveloped countries, as was intended when it was set up. In fact, the gap may be widening.

Another matter I feel should be mentioned. It has not been made clear why Canada's obligations to the fund are now to be in United States dollars. Is there any assurance, may I ask, that the Canadian dollar will always be at a premium? Let us not overlook the fact that there was a time when our dollar was at a discount of 23 per cent, say in the year 1933. Nor is there any guarantee that the United States will not enhance the price of gold. The way its debt is piling up, and Canada's too, may compel or make it necessary for the United States to enhance or raise the price of gold. Such a change in the price of gold, and an increase in the United States dollar, would mean the loss to Canada of perhaps many millions of dollars through holding short-term securities instead of gold.

I do not expect the mover of this bill to answer many of the questions I have asked. I am seriously suggesting, however, that the time has come for a complete review of the Bretton Woods Agreement, either by Parliament or a special committee of the Senate. It is now high time, especially after fifteen years in operation, to take a close look into all the ramifications of the agreement, and to find out if it is really doing the job it was set up to do. So far as I know, that has not been done since its inception in 1945.

I think all honourable senators will agree with me that the bill is too complicated to be thoroughly understood from a mere cursory glance at its proposals. I am more convinced than ever that the entire Bretton Woods Agreement should be examined, especially when one realizes the increasing number of organizations which are now operative, and in effect are doing what I believe to be the same or a similar operation—in effect, a duplication of what is now being done under the Bretton Woods Agreement. Let me elaborate.

There is, first of all, a United Nations extended program of technical assistance. There is also the United Nations International Development Fund. Then there is the Colombo Plan, which in a very limited way is precisely the same field as the two I have just mentioned. Added to these are two agencies of the Bretton Woods Agreement, namely: the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. In addition to all these may I point out that a further corporation was set up, called the International Finance Corporation, in which Canada purchased 3,600 shares. It is most interesting to note that Canada became a member of this organization without the sanction of Parliament. This came about simply by placing a vote in the estimates and, as mentioned, thereby we became a member of this international organization without sanction of Parliament.

In regard to the International Bank, some loans are given to help some countries build up industrially. Many of these countries have a low wage scale and, in turn, become competitive in our markets. As already stated, this seems to me a duplication of legislation.

In the Bretton Woods International Bank, Canada's share in the funds of the bank goes up from $325 million to $650 million and, because of a special increase of $100 million, it goes up to $750 million. One question should therefore be answered, namely, will Canada ever share in the profits of the bank? I mention this because, according to statements made, the bank has a profit of between $40 million and $50 million a year. We are entitled, I believe, to have a statement regarding these profits, and, if Canada is entitled to receive any share of the same, what amount.

In closing, may I repeat what was said at the beginning of my remarks. The Bretton Woods Agreement is somewhat complicated and difficult to fully understand, and so I have endeavoured in my remarks to keep out of deep waters until at least I have had more time to study the entire agreement. In making the statements I have made, and in asking certain pertinent questions, I have done so with the sole intention of drawing to the attention of honourable senators and of Parliament certain phases of the bill to which it is believed attention should be drawn, and not with any intention of opposing the bill before us. Nevertheless, I have a fear that Canada is trying to do too much along these lines, and I suggest we put on the brake before the burden of taxation becomes too onerous. Before closing, I point out that with municipal, provincial and federal taxation the Canadian people are carrying quite a load.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Monette: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by Senator Méthot, that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, where at least some of the questions asked can be answered.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I suggest to my honourable friend that perhaps the more appropriate committee to which this bill should be referred is the Standing Committee on External Relations. The Bretton Woods development in connection with the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank of Reconstruction and Development was, I think, a very definite feature of the relations that existed between Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom prior to the establishment of the United Nations. Therefore, I think evidence from the officials of the Department of External Affairs would be most valuable, especially against the background which some honourable senators have as to the beginning of the whole plan. I put that forward as a suggestion.

Hon. Mr. Monette: If it is the consensus of opinion among honourable senators that this measure involves more the international than the financial aspect, I would move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on External Realtions.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Monette, bill referred to Standing Committee on External Relations.

JUDGES BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 11, the adjourned debate on the motion of honourable Mr. Brunt for the second reading of Bill C-56, to amend the Judges Act.

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard: Honourable senators, what I am going to say concerns Quebec, and particularly the district of Quebec. Firstly, I want to compliment the Government upon its action in increasing the number of judges in the district of Quebec by three. It was becoming very necessary, and the only thing I regret is that this measure comes this late.

The district of appeal of Quebec is composed of seventeen districts where justice has to be administered all year round. Some of these districts are a considerable distance from Quebec city, as for instance the Abitibi district, the Chicoutimi district, the Roberval district, the Temiscamingue district, and the Gaspé district. The judges have to live in Quebec and have to travel all the way to sit in these different districts. As a result it has often been difficult to have two judges sitting in the city of Quebec, where cases are very numerous. It was becoming very difficult to have justice administered in the city of Quebec on account of the fact that there were no judges to administer it.

Many districts, such as Rimouski, Gaspé and Chicoutimi, are sometimes two years in arrears in their cases. When a man takes an action against another he does not want to wait two or three years before he obtains a judgment, but that is what has been happening. So the Government is to be complimented on the possible appointment of three new judges.

That number will make in the whole district of Quebec 16 judges for 17 districts, and I think it will permit justice to be dispensed with expediency. Those who go before the courts for redress will be able to obtain it as quickly as possible.

Some people ask why we should have more judges in the province of Quebec. I want to say just a word about that. We have not the same system as obtains in the English provinces, and the number of our judges who sit in court is much fewer than in the other provinces. For instance, we have no county court judges. In think that in Ontario there are approximately 63 judges who have jurisdiction up to $800, and who with the consent of the parties may deal with any amount whatsoever.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: In certain cases they have jurisdiction up to $2,000.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: In Quebec we have no county court judges. The only ones who have original jurisdiction are judges of the Superior Court, and in the whole district of appeal of Quebec, which contains 17 districts, we have only 16 judges. The number of cases has increased, and that is what has made it so difficult to have justice administered with expediency. I think these appointments are very necessary. The sooner this bill goes through and the appointments are made, the better it will be.

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, I want to say a word following what has been said by the honourable senator from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard). It is true that we have a different system in Quebec from that of the other provinces, and to cope with the number of cases we need a greater number of judges of the Superior Court because, as the honourable senator pointed out, we have no county courts.

In Quebec there are two appeal districts, Montreal and Quebec. I am not sure whether the honourable senator was proposing something particular for the Quebec district as distinct from the Montreal district, and I do not know if there has been a demand by the organized bar of the province of Quebec for the appointment of more judges to the district of Quebec than to the other district. I need not say that in the appeal district of Montreal there are many more cases to be heard, though I am not going to estimate the proportion in each. The bar of the province of Quebec—of which the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) is a prominent member, and will shortly be a more prominent member—is organized by law, and its members are all the barristers of the province. The barristers are grouped into judicial districts, each of which has its own council and is represented on the general bar of the province. Generally, the question of the need for more judges is considered in the light of the number of cases to be heard. The bar of the province, after consulting with judges and officers of the courts, determines the number of cases waiting to be heard, and after giving the matter consideration may suggest that in a particular district more judges of the Superior Court, or of the Court of Appeal, or of the Court of Queen's Bench are needed. Therefore, the provincial bar could petition for an amendment to the Judges Act. I am not aware that there has been a decision to ask for an increase in the number of judges other than that proposed in this bill, and my only purpose in rising at this time was to explain the situation, which has generally been dealt with satisfactorily through the intervention of the bar.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Did anyone request that the bill be referred to committee?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power), who is absent from the chamber, asked that the bill be referred to committee and I assured him that I would have it referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 17, 1959

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following document:

Report on the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, for the year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 5, Chapter 45 of the Statutes of 1953-54, (English text).

SEEDS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Natural Resources, presented the report of the committee on Bill S-24.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Natural Resources, to whom was referred the bill S-24 intituled: "An Act respecting the testing, inspection and sale of seeds", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 9, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Next sitting.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented a report of the committee on Bill C-38.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (C-38) intituled: "An Act to make provision for the reduction of certain class and commodity rates on freight traffic", report as follows:—

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hugessen presented a further report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on Bill C-38.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (C-38) intituled: "An Act to make provision for the reduction of certain class and commodity rates on freight traffic", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 9, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The sponsor of the bill is not here. I would move that it be placed on the order paper for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

FREE METHODIST CHURCH IN CANADA— REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, presented the report of the committee on Bill S-27.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, to whom was referred the Bill (S-27) intituled: "An Act to incorporate The Free Methodist Church in Canada", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 11, 1959, examined the said bill and now report the same without any amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

THIRD READING

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, with permission of the Senate, I would move that the bill be read the third time now. If there is no serious objection on the part of this house to that being done, it would be a matter of some convenience to the principals who sponsored the bill. A full discussion was held in committee this morning and, the bill being of the kind it is, honourable senators might be disposed to give it third reading now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I have no objection to the bill receiving third reading now. As I recall, a number of questions were asked on second reading of the bill. Perhaps the honourable senator who explained the bill on second reading (Hon. Mr. Lambert) could answer those questions now for the benefit of those of us who were not in committee this morning.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Honourable senators, I may say that the points raised in committee were adequately answered to the satisfaction of the committee. The main question asked on second reading was by my honourable colleague from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), as to what was meant by the word "Free" in the name of the church. Some light was thrown on that question in committee, and although my colleague is not present I will answer the question.

The word "Free" was applied to this section of the Methodist Church largely as an indication of its willingness to have all pews in the church free and to invite an assembly that was voluntary and free from any levy for seating accommodation. In contrast, the original church which, historically, was an offshoot of the Anglican Church, carried some of the opposite and undemocratic practices into the system.

That is the explanation that was given me this morning by one of the prominent members of the Free Methodist Church. I think it answers the question which was asked on second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CITIZENSHIP

NOTICE OF INQUIRIES

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I have two series of questions to ask, mostly with reference to the motion which has been on the Order Paper since March 16 for approval of the convention on the nationality of married women:

1. What is the total population of Canada?
2. By virtue of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration Act, and according to the most recent figures, how many persons in Canada:
(a) are British subjects, Canadian citizens, and citizens of the Commonwealth?
(b) are British subjects but are not Canadian citizens nor citizens of the Commonwealth?
(c) are citizens of the Commonwealth but are not British subjects nor Canadian citizens?
(d) are Canadian citizens but who are not British subjects nor citizens of the Commonwealth?
(e) are neither British subjects nor Canadian citizens nor citizens of the Commonwealth?

I have another question, which is about married women:

(1) In Canada, how many married women have not been divorced and not separated from their husbands?
(2) How many of those married women living in Canada have a citizenship distinct and different from that of their husbands?
(3) Has the Canadian Government received from married women living in Canada and women's associations in Canada requests for amendment to the laws to permit married women to have a citizenship distinct from that of their husbands?
(4) If so, from what persons and what associations, with the address of each one?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What about telephone numbers?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: It is the Divorce Committee that discloses the telephone numbers of co-respondents.

DIVORCE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following bills:

Bill SD-340, an Act for the relief of Timothy Allan Moran.

Bill SD-341, an Act for the relief of Antonio Choma.

Bill SD-342, an Act for the relief of Helen Ruby Riley Onions.

Bill SD-343, an Act for the relief of Simone Alberta Chretien Welsh.

Bill SD-344, an Act for the relief of Edward John Mendelsohn.

Bill SD-345, an Act for the relief of Marcus Gilmour.

Bill SD-346, an Act for the relief of Joyce Rosemary Hudson Plam.

Bill SD-347, an Act for the relief of Bernard Lawrence Boire.

Bill SD-348, an Act for the relief of Marie Madeleine Marielle Faust Morin.

Bills read first time.

SECOND READINGS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I would ask for the consent of the house to move the second readings of these bills now. I do not think I need to explain why.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

THIRD READINGS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave of the Senate, I move the third readings also at this time.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

CHATEAU LAURIER HOTEL PARKING LOT

INQUIRY AND ANSWER

Hon. R. B. Horner inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

That he will inquire of the Government how the parking lot at the Chateau Laurier Hotel is being operated.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have the following answer to the honourable gentleman's question:

The management of the Canadian National Railways advise that the parking area at the Chateau Laurier is operated as a concession by City Parking Limited. Tenders were called and the concession was awarded on the basis of the highest return to the railway.

CONVENTION ON NATIONALITY OF MARRIED WOMEN

On the notice of motion by Hon. Mr. Aseltine:

Resolved, That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament approve the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women, done at New York on February 20, 1957, and that this House do approve the same.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Stand.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) when we may expect this motion to be proceeded with? I see that notice of the motion was given on March 16, so that three months have intervened since then. A number of members have informed me they have been prepared to speak on this motion for at least two months, and I should like to have some idea if the motion is likely to be proceeded with this session.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I admit having made a mistake in giving notice of this motion before it was proceeded with in the other house, for as soon as I had it put on our Order Paper I was informed by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration that she wished to speak on the matter first. I have a sponsor ready to proceed with the motion in this house just as soon as action is taken in the House of Commons. I have been told from time to time that the motion will be dealt with there at any time but other business and legislation seems to have taken precedence. We will proceed with the motion here just as soon as possible.

Notice stands.

REPRESENTATIVES OF SOVIET UNION

GUESTS IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to draw your attention to the fact that we have in my section of the gallery some friends from Soviet Russia. They are the guests of His Excellency the Ambassador, Dr. Amasasp A. Aroutunian. I wish to congratulate the ambassador on his initiative in bringing to Canada five deputies of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R., who came to this country as his personal guests. His Excellency is sitting on the left of the group in the gallery.

Next to him is Mr. Aleksandr P. Volkov, a member of the Supreme Soviet, and leader of the delegation. He is Deputy Chairman of the Soviet parliamentary group and Chairman of the State Committee on Labour and Wages of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R.

Next to him is Mr. Jan V. Peive, Chairman of the Soviet of Nationalities of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. and President of the Academy of Sciences of Latvia.

Next to Mr. Peive is Mr. Ivan G. Kabanov, Deputy of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R., Minister of the U.S.S.R. and former Minister of Foreign Trade.

Next to him is Madame Zinaida A. Lebedeva, Deputy of the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet and member of the Commission on Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union. Madame Lebedeva, who is also a doctor, specializes in lung diseases. I had occasion to consult her on my own case and I received very good advice. She told me I did well to accept the office of Speaker of the Senate and a senatorship, because the serenity and the calm of the Senate were very good for me indeed; she advised me to carry on and not to resign.

Next is Mr. G. P. Butenko, Deputy of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. and Deputy Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Ukraine Soviet Socialist Republic.

I would like also to introduce Mrs. L. A. Nikiforova, who is an interpreter. She is married and has two children. I understand that she speaks five or six languages, among which are French, English and Russian. She is a perfect interpreter, and if you were to make a speech she could translate it immediately without notes exactly as it was said.

In the name of all honourable senators I welcome these distinguished visitors to the Senate. I again congratulate His Excellency the Ambassador upon bringing his friends here, and hope they will come back again to enjoy Canadian hospitality.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

EXCISE TAX BILL

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS NEGATIVED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, June 10, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hayden for concurrence in the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to Bill C-47, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators will remember that Bill C-47, to amend the Excise Tax Act, was introduced in the Senate some little time ago and given second reading, after which it was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce for consideration. That committee met and considered the bill and made its report, striking out section 2 of the bill and amending the bill in that respect. The honourable chairman of the committee (Hon. Mr. Hayden) presented the report, and moved that it be concurred in. My purpose today is to try to convince honourable senators that the report should not be concurred in, and I hope I shall be successful, because I believe that if we accepted the report of the committee it would be a retrograde step and something that the Senate should not be taking a part in.

In the year 1925 the export of electricity from Canada to the United States of America was made subject to tax under and by virtue of the Export of Power and Fluids and the Importation of Gas Act. That tax was made by regulation of the Governor in Council—in other words, by the cabinet—and the tax was fixed at that time and has remained at the same level ever since.

Hon. Mr. Euler: What year was that?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: 1925. In spite of the fact that representations against the tax have been made by different corporations from time to time to the Government, the tax has never been done away with. It is still in full force and effect and has never been changed in amount.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if the clause as it reads at the present time was put into effect in 1925?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is what I understand, yes. As I just said, honourable senators, representations have been made from time to time to the Government to remove this tax, but nothing has been done about it, and no representations have been made to the Government for some years past to have the tax withdrawn.

It may be that the tax on electricity was never intended in its inception to be a permanent tax. It may have been intended to be a temporary tax only but, as I have said, it has remained in force ever since 1925 and there is no apparent intention on the part of the Government to remove it.

In my opinion, a tax to raise revenue by order in council or by regulation of the cabinet, such as was done in this case, is not a proper way in which to raise revenue, and it should have been made under the Excise Tax Act long ago. Therefore, the object of inserting section 2 in the Excise Tax Act is to rectify the situation which has existed since 1925. No representations were made to the House of Commons when this bill was before that house a short time ago, but when the bill came to this chamber for consideration certain corporations desired to be heard, namely the British Columbia Electric Company, the Peace River Development Corporation, the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Corporation, and the Ontario and Quebec Hydro-Electric Commissions. Representatives appeared before the Senate committee and raised certain objections. However, their objections were not so much to the transfer of this tax to the Excise Tax Act from the other act which I have mentioned, but were wholly and entirely against the tax itself. The greater part of their representations had to do with the tax, and their contention that there should be no tax at all on the export of electricity, that it should be done away with. And that was the burden of the speech made in this chamber by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) when he spoke on the motion for concurrence in the amendments made by the committee.

These witnesses stated to the committee that this tax might have some effect upon the Peace River power project which has been under investigation by certain engineers and others for some time. They recommended that the tax be done away with, and that if the Government had no intention of doing away with the tax it should remain under the control of the cabinet rather than be given statutory form in the Excise Tax Act. In other words, they wanted to be able to set up a lobby or something of that sort in an effort to prevail on the cabinet to do away with the tax altogether. They thought they had a better chance to do so if section 2 were removed from the bill. That, honourable senators, in my opinion, would amount to the by-passing of Parliament altogether, which is not a good thing, and I for one do not want the Senate to become a party to that kind of thing.

It was stated that some $5 million was being spent on investigating the possibilities of the Peace River project. Well, it strikes me if they are spending that amount on investigating the feasibility of this project, knowing all the time that this export tax on electricity was in force and was not likely to be removed, the fact that the tax is to remain would not, in my opinion, cause them to give up their whole project and lose their $5 million.

Honourable senators, the removal of this tax from cabinet control and making it a part of the Excise Tax Act is, in my opinion, most desirable, because all taxes should, if possible, be fixed by Parliament and should not be left to the cabinet to be imposed as it sees fit. Parliament should be consulted in all cases of this kind, and that, honourable senators, is why section 2 has now been inserted in the Excise Tax Act. It is one step in the direction of doing away with tax legislation by order in council. I would ask the Senate not to accept the report of the committee striking out section 2 from the bill. As I said before, I believe it would be a retrograde step for the Senate to strike out that section.

The honourable chairman of the committee stated that the vote on this matter in committee was a non-partisan vote and a very close one, the final count being 13 to 12.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask my friend a question? Can he give us any other examples where the cabinet has the power to impose taxes?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not know of any other.

Honourable senators, after I prepared the foregoing remarks I happened to read the Financial Administration Act and I was very much intrigued by section 22. Subsections 1 and 2 of that section read as follows:

22. (1) The Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, whenever he considers it in the public interest, may remit any tax, fee or penalty.

(2) A remission pursuant to this section may be total or partial, conditional or unconditional, and may be granted

(a) before, after or pending any suit or proceeding for the recovery of the tax, fee or penalty in respect of which it is granted.

(b) before or after any payment thereof has been made or enforced by process or execution, and

(c) in the case of a tax or fee, in any particular case or class of case and before the liability therefor arises.

The definition of "tax" is found in subsection 10 of the same section:

22. (10) In this section "tax" includes any tax, impost, duty or toll payable to Her Majesty, imposed or authorized to be imposed by any Act of Parliament...

And subsection 8 provides:

22. (8) A statement of each remission of one thousand dollars or more granted under this section shall be reported to the House of Commons in the Public Accounts.

The provisions of section 22 of the Financial Administration Act seems to me to answer entirely the objections which were made by the representatives of those companies when they appeared before the Senate committee. It would seem to me to meet any emergency that might arise. In other words, no emergency could arise which could not be taken care of by this section 22.

I suggest therefore, honourable senators, that the report of the committee be not adopted and that we now give third reading to the bill without any amendment.

Hon. William H. Golding: Honourable senators, while I am not anxious to do so, I do feel that I should speak very briefly on the amendment suggested to Bill C-47, as this problem does seem to be receiving considerable attention, particularly in the province of British Columbia.

With reference to the export tax on power in part 2 of this bill, I may say that in the 17 years I spent as a member of the Commons, during the ten years I have been in the Senate and during the 15 years that I was a member of our local public utility commission in my home town of Seaforth, I do not recall hearing any serious discussion of this tax on the export of electric power. I do remember very well when the late Sir Adam Beck, who was described as the father of Ontario's Hydro-Electric Power Commission, was doing his best to have hydro contracts at Niagara Falls cancelled, as power was being sent across the river at a lower cost than our own people were paying for it. As a matter of fact, the export of power was not considered in the best interest of the country at that time. However, I do not wish to discuss this tax, as it is conceded by all that this bill does not change the tax in any way. So whether this tax is a fair one or an unjust one is not now under consideration.

Clause 2 of the bill, which the amendment would wipe out, simply makes provision that in the future this problem will be dealt with by Parliament rather than by order in council as under the present legislation, and this is a change which is important to some of us.

I would point out, that although it is contended that this and other matters have been dealt with by order in council for so many years, the problem that is now before us is not of our making, but it is on our doorstep, and it is for us to decide what we are going to do about it. We have to decide whether in the future so important a problem as this will be dealt with by Parliament or by order in council.

I may say that while I sat in the House of Commons as an opposition member, under the Right Honourable R. B. Bennett as Prime Minister, I heard the Liberals during all those years denounce government by order in council in very strong terms, and later I heard the Conservatives and other opposition members denounce orders in council. So, I came to the conclusion, naturally, that all parties were against government by order in council.

Now, with reference to orders in council, I have seen returns tabled listing the orders in council and what they dealt with, and I am satisfied that no Government will ever entirely do away with orders in council. Many of the things dealt with are so small that Parliament could never deal with them all. However, I do believe that the more important things should be dealt with by Parliament.

The representations we have had, and the speeches we have listened to, have surely convinced us that this export tax on electric power is a very important matter. Therefore, I believe the Government is right in making it possible for this problem to be dealt with by Parliament rather than by order in council. Believing as I do that this is the proper procedure, it comes to me as a real shock to see so much opposition to the Government, when it is surely taking a step in the right direction.

In dealing with this measure, let me say at once that I am not at all impressed by some of the representations made to us in an effort to convince us that this problem should be dealt with by order in council rather than by Parliament. One reason given was that of urgency. Honourable senators, if you turn to page 33 of the report of the committee proceedings you will find there a statement from the President of the Peace River organization to the effect that during 1956, 1957, 1958 and 1959 they have had a large number of engineers and economists looking into the feasibility of this vast project. So for nearly four years now a study of this problem has been under consideration.

Someone has said that this tax on the export of electric energy has been in existence for 35 years. So these experts must have known all about this tax, and yet, as far as I know, no representation has been made to the Government requesting a modification of this tax by this organization. I think it is safe to say that at no time have they approached members of Parliament from British Columbia asking them to make representations to the Government on their behalf. In fact, they assured us that they knew nothing about this bill until after it had passed the House of Commons. It would look as though, as far as this tax is concerned, they were asleep at the switch and suddenly, after four years of peaceful slumber, they woke up to realize that there is some urgency in having this matter dealt with to suit their convenience.

Honourable senators, I do not know how others feel, but I do resent any suggestion that by trying to uphold the rights, the privileges and the prestige of Parliament, we are thereby jeopardizing any project, especially when this suggestion comes from those who have completely ignored Parliament and are evidently hoping we will do likewise.

It was contended that it is essential that some definite decision be given regarding this tax in order for them to complete the report on the feasibility of this whole project this fall, which they are supposed to file with the Government of British Columbia before the end of the year.

Now, honourable senators, let us examine the argument that there must be some flexibility, meaning, of course, that if left so that the executive could deal with it prompt consideration could be given their representations if and when they make such representations. Honourable senators, this argument is not worthy of those who have had much parliamentary experience. If this bill is passed as it is, what will happen?

This Peace River organization will not be in a position to export power for years, and the Government is well aware of this. In view of this, will this organization expect the Government to drop this tax completely at the present time? If they do, they are surely much more optimistic than I could ever be. In my opinion, the best they could hope for would be to receive some assurance that if and when they are in a position to export power, favourable consideration will be given to their proposals.

However, if this bill passes as it is, and the Government should decide to drop this tax or to modify it in any way, it could, with the majority it has in the house, give the assurance that legislation will be introduced at the next session to carry out its commitment. Surely this should be satisfactory. If it is done in this way, Parliament would be recognized as it should be and everyone would be satisfied. In my opinion, the whole problem is just as simple as that. There is no need to belittle or ignore Parliament in this or any other case, for I am satisfied that no one need have any fear of bringing his case before Parliament if it is a good case.

An effort was also made to lead us to believe that the whole Peace River project may hinge entirely on whether some modification will be made of this export tax. Honourable senators will note at page 33 of the report of our committee's proceedings that $5,300,000 will have been spent by the end of the year in securing data which must be filed with the Government of British Columbia by the end of the year. Now, having spent $5½ million, knowing all the time that this tax was on the export of power, and if it is of such great concern to them, surely it would have been prudent of them to have discussed this question before they spent their $5½ million, instead of making a great noise about it now.

There is another reason why I am not seriously impressed with their argument of urgency, and it is this, that before any power can be exported a licence must be obtained, and I am advised that such licence can only be granted by the approval of Parliament.

In 1929 Bill 15 was passed in the House of Commons with no opposition. This bill provided that in future no licence to export power would be granted without approval of Parliament. We who were in the House of Commons at that time remember very well the discussion that took place when Ontario wished to secure a licence to export power in 1937. The Right Honourable Mackenzie King would not agree to issuing a licence until Parliament met. When Parliament met for its next session Mr. Arthur Slaght, M.P., was all set to sponsor the bill to give this licence. However, just the day before the bill was to be introduced President Roosevelt issued a statement to the effect that no power would be allowed to be imported into the United States, so that was that.

I have made some inquiries and I found out that this Peace River organization have made no application for a licence to export power, and, of course, that is understandable. They may not need such a licence for some time. But I am of the opinion that they have no assurance from the United States that their power will be allowed as an import into that country.

In listening to this discussion in committee, it struck me as being peculiar how these promoters could talk so big and so loud about the hundreds of millions of dollars, even up to a billion dollars, they were proposing to spend, but their voices dropped almost to a whisper when mentioning the tax they may be called upon to pay.

I really do not know anything about the profits the companies presently in operation who appeared before us are making. Our Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission is a public utility which is supposed to give power at cost, so any tax paid by it is, of course, paid by the consumer. However, the Government will be well aware of the financial position of these companies and will know if they are seriously affected as a result of the present tax.

When this organization does come to the Government asking for tax concessions I hope the Government will insist on having some information on this sum of $5½ million that has been spent. For instance, it should ask how many engineers and economists have actually been employed and the amount paid to each. It should also insist on knowing if this project is depending on water power alone for its success; if not, then what other rights and concessions it is getting from British Columbia to start this development, such as oil, mineral and timber rights. I believe the Government will be entitled to this information if tax concessions are to be made. Personally, I am not much impressed with a story about a huge reservoir being available which will take some years to fill. I would be more concerned with knowing the volume of water that will be constantly flowing over this dam.

As far as deleting clause 2 of this bill is concerned, the situation as I see it is this, that there are 265 members of the House of Commons, and with 23 of them being in the cabinet there are left 242 members who, up to now, have had no say at all about the tax on the export of electric power. This bill, as it is, does give them some say in dealing with this tax. If we, as the Senate, delete this clause, then we are denying Parliament the right to have any say on the question at all. We will put the Prime Minister and his cabinet in a position where they can say to private members: "Well, you are a fine-looking intelligent group who have been sent here by your constituents to have some voice in the legislation being dealt with. Now, with reference to the tax on the export of electric energy we did try to make it possible for you to be in a position to express your opinions on what we believe is an important problem, but we are sorry to have to tell you that the Senate has indicated that in their opinion as parliamentarians you should not have an opportunity to discuss this question at all." The same thing could be said to the official Opposition and to all Opposition members.

Is that, honourable senators, the position we wish to put the Senate in? I hope every honourable senator will consider carefully his or her answer to this question, and decide if it is going to add anything to the prestige of the Senate by doing what a group of promoters are anxious we should do, namely, delete clause 2 of this bill.

We should remember also that Parliament consists of the Queen, the Senate and the House of Commons, and that any action taken by the Senate which will in any way belittle or interfere with the rights and privileges of the members of the House of Commons will have similar reaction on the Senate, because we are an important branch of Parliament.

Let me now refer to what I consider the proper diplomatic approach to matters of this kind. Some people have said that they have great respect for this Government. Well, honourable senators, this is a Government bill. In this bill the Government evidently desires two things. First, it wishes to have the matter dealt with by Parliament. Second, it wishes to have the tax remain as it is for the present. The companies affected by this bill must go to the Government if they wish to have any change in this tax, whether it is dealt with by order in council or by Parliament. That being so, I wonder if these companies, by trying to block this Government bill, really expect a more cordial and considerate reception than if they had gone along with the Government and, by doing so, shown some respect for the wishes of the Government. In my opinion, the companies have been badly advised in this case, although I still believe that any Government would deal with matters of this kind on their merits.

Honourable senators, in passing this bill as it is we are doing no injustice to anyone nor are we doing any injustice to Parliament. If I did not honestly believe this I would not be appealing to you now to defeat this proposed amendment.

I wish to refer briefly to a statement made by Mr. W. C. Mainwaring, President of the Peace River Power Development Company Limited, when he appeared before our Banking and Commerce Committee when it dealt with this bill. He was describing the investigation the company was making into the vast power resources of the Peace River, and he said:

> If the result of our studies satisfies us that it is feasible, then we intend to proceed with the immediate development of that river.

Then he went on to deal with what I have referred to before. He continued:

> During the fall and winter of 1956, through all of 1957 and 1958, and now through 1959, we have had an army of engineers and economists who, compiling this report which, by agreement with the provincial Government of British Columbia, we must file with them on or before December 31 of this year. It will surprise you when I tell you that this feasibility and engineering report, when we complete it by the end of this year, will cost us $5,300,000. We are well advanced with our studies and we will make a report on time. If the report is satisfactory, and we have every reason to believe at the present time that it will be, we will be able to show that this is an economical project. We will have to proceed with our initial financing in the early part of next year, 1960. Our initial financing will be an amount between $400 million and $500 million. Our first development will be approximately 500,000 kilowatts.

Honourable senators, I believe it is in the best interests of the Senate to defeat this amendment.

Hon. C. G. Power: Honourable senators, as I shall be obliged to absent myself from the Senate in a few minutes and I may not be here to express my views through a vote on this matter, I would like simply to say, as concisely as possible, that in my view there is only one issue in this matter. I say this notwithstanding the very able and eloquent speeches which have been made in this house and elsewhere on this subject.

The issue is an age-old one, best expressed, from the point of view to which I adhere, in a resolution presented to the British House of Commons as long ago as 1780, in these few words:

> The power of the Crown has increased, is increasing and should be diminished.

Expressing the same view with respect to the power of the executive, that is to say, government by order in council instead of by the processes of a democratic institutional Parliament, that power of the executive through order in council has increased—and, I say to my sorrow, sometimes through Governments whch I supported, and is increasing. It should be diminished.

Honourable senators, if in this piece of legislation presented by the Government we see the first indication of a tendency to check the rule of order in council rather than the rule of Parliament, I for one strongly support it and will vote against the amendment.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I am opposed to the amendment and consequently the recommendation brought in by the committee. I support the bill. Let me give you my reasons. In so far as the tax is concerned it has been preserved in the National Energy Board Bill. In that bill the Government proposes to tax export by statute, which can only be changed by Parliament. If we accept the recommendation of the committee, which the honourable Leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has indicated was passed by a vote of 13 to 12, the tax will remain but it can be varied downward by order in council. That is the crux of the whole problem. Is it to be government by Parliament or by order in council?

Let me fill in a little background which may be useful. The three private power corporations which appeared before our Banking and Commerce Committee were, I thought, primarily concerned with the tax. They urged the order in council method because it appeared to them to have more possibilities of producing the kind of result they wanted. The eloquent speech delivered by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) last Wednesday emphasized that aspect and confirmed my view that it was the tax they were trying to eliminate. It appeared that their prospects were better if Parliament was told about the elimination and was not consulted about it. Now, what is this tax all about? It is a tax on the export of power which has been in existence since 1925. Who is paying it? In 1958 the Government collected $1,400,000. The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario paid $980,000 of that, and the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Quebec paid $140,000, making a total of $1,120,000 paid by these two public power commissions. The representatives of the B.C. Power Company, one of the private corporations, said in their evidence that they had done no substantial exporting since 1953. The two other corporations had no licence to export power and did not do so.

We are told that there appeared before the committee three power corporations. Let me tell you something about them. The B.C. Power Corporation blankets the province of British Columbia with electric service, transportation service, gas service and power service; but, as I have already indicated, that corporation does very little, if any exporting of power. It is a holding company servicing Vancouver and Victoria, and serves a population of about 950,000. It was incorporated in May, 1928. The B.C. Electric is one of its subsidiaries. The West Kootenay Power and Light Company was incorporated in 1897; it is controlled by the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company of Canada, which in turn is controlled by the Canadian Pacific Railway. The West Kootenay Light, Heat and Power Company has never had a licence to export, has never paid a nickel in tax, and has not even an application pending for an export licence. Why these people came here, I haven't the slightest idea. I do not think any one can get bored in British Columbia at this time of the year, but if they wanted to come to Ottawa to make a trip, that was their business. In my opinion, they came strictly as a front in order to impress the committee and show a common cause. I think they came in order to put on a show and to give the representation a sense of importance that it did not deserve.

The Peace River Power Development Company is an interesting story. The honourable senator from Vancouver South referred to its undertaking as a grand adventure. A very apt term! What it has in mind is colossal in its implications. I have a press report here dated November 24, 1958, headed: "Recently formed Peace River Power Development Company isues 8,115,084 shares for Wenner-Gren plans and rights—B.C. Electric has 500,000-share interest." This is a subsidiary of the B.C. Power Corporation.

The item reads as follows:

> The huge 4,500,00-h.p. Peace River power project, capital costs of which have been estimated as high as $600 million, has been advanced another step with distribution of shares of the recently-formed Peace River Power Development Company, Ltd. The new company issued to Wenner-Gren Development (B.C.) Ltd. 6,884,424 shares of $1 par value and to Bernard Gore of London, Managing Director of the Wenner-Gren company and Deputy Chairman of Peace River Power Development, 1,230,660 shares —a total of 8,115,084 shares—for the Wenner-Gren plans and rights of the project. Western Development and Power Limited, a wholly-owned development subsidiary of British Columbia Power Corporation, Limited, purchased 500,000 shares for cash. Also issued for cash were 250,000 shares to Power Securties Corporation, London, 250,000 shares to National City Bank, London, and 250,000 shares to Associated Electric Industries, London. A total of 9,615,086 shares is presently outstanding.

The reason I read this was to indicate that these are the barefoot billionaires—power barons—who are coming to this country asking us to do away with the tax on power.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Are there any Canadians among those shareholders?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Oh, yes. The British Columbia Western Development Power is owned by the British Columbia Power Corporation. They are Canadians. Their interest is tiny.

Obviously, this is a Wenner-Gren project, and here they are crying about the tax they haven't ever paid, and which up till now has been paid entirely by the public power corporations of this country.

An interesting telegram was read by the honourable senator from Vancouver South. This telegram, from the Premier of British Columbia, appears at page 777 of the Senate Hansard of June 10. It reads in part as follows:

> Several aspects Columbia River negotiation seriously prejudiced by placing electrical energy export tax inflexibly in excise act.

We heard a great deal in the evidence about flexibility and inflexibility. My friend the senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) likes the term "elbow room for bargaining" —a sort of "Give us concessions or we won't play." I would like to say to him, perhaps expressing the view of many, that every corporation and every individual has the right to negotiate with Government, but no corporation, no individual, no matter how powerful, has a right to bargain with Government. Here we have the Premier of British Columbia, the same man who gave an empire to Axel Wenner-Gren, a name that should bring a shudder to all members of a free parliament, saying to us that there is no flexibility. He too wants the matter to be dealt with not by Parliament but by order in council. I would like to remind him, and this gives me an opportunity to say, that one of his ministers exercised what he calls flexibility by order in council: he mixed up natural resources with material resources and his own personal resources, and came to a bad end as a result. He is not the man from whom we should take advice in dealing with natural resources.

I think I should also remind the house about a statement made by the honourable senator from Vancouver South in reply to a question asked by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). Referring to Premier Bennett, the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity asked, as reported on page 777 of Hansard:

> Is he not the chap who gave away an empire of public resources to private enterprise?

Hon. Mr. Farris: I am not aware that he did. I have heard a lot of socialists make that statement,—

The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity was of course referring to Axel Wenner-Gren.

Well, I think I should tell this house that Arthur Lang, who was the leader of the Liberal party for many years in the province of British Columbia, denounced this Wenner-Gren project as a "give-away" and declared the party in favour of public ownership; and Ray Perrault, the new leader, spoke up for public ownership, but not for taking over the utilities that are now in existence. There is the distinction between what the socialists want and what the Liberal party stands for. We Liberals are not hobbled by dogmatism.

I cannot put it any stronger than it was put by the senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power) a few minutes ago, except to repeat that there is a great principle at stake in this bill—it is either government by order in council or government by Parliament.

I believe orders in council are necessary. They are necessary for administrative purposes, for the day-to-day business of the country, for housekeeping. They are necessary in case of an emergency when Parliament is not in session. One illustration that comes readily to mind is that at times some immigrant who is desirable but does not meet the regulations has an order in council passed allowing him or her to make entry. That is the normal practice. In other words, orders in council have their place in government. It is their abuse we are opposed to.

My main objection to the amendment is that it permits special pleading by great and powerful interests. If a matter is dealt with in Parliament many minds are brought to bear on the subject. Everything is done in the daylight of publicity. There are questions, there are reasons asked, there are debates and there are explanations. Decisions, be they good or bad, are openly arrived at, not as a result of bargaining but in the light of what is good for the country. Where Axel Wenner-Gren is involved we should not relax our guard but we should double lock the door and stuff the keyholes.

Canadians have always been suspicious of orders in council. They do not like them, and the present Government has made violent and telling attacks on the Liberals for using orders in council—it said unnecessarily. Mind you, it is as guilty now as we were then, but that is another story. The Government took the case to the people and obtained a mandate, in my opinion a clear and unquestionable mandate, in two elections.

The Prime Minister went up and down the country condemning, excoriating and haranguing against the use of orders in council. He advocated that we return the power of decision to Parliament, and in this instance it is proposed to be done.

Now, for a moment think of our position. Should the Senate say no, can the Senate afford to say no, in order to give the Government an opportunity to turn to the people and say, "The Senate won't let us carry out the mandate"? That would be an impossible position for us to be put in, flying in the face of public opinion. When and if the public realized what is at stake it would be deeply disturbed.

In doing what I think is wrong we arm the enemies of the Senate—and there are some, I am told. The demagogues will go up and down the country and skin the Senate alive, the press will only add salt to the wounds, if we turn down the Government's request to let Parliament deal with so important a problem as this.

This is a matter of national importance in substance and in form. It is not good enough to say we have done it this way since 1925, so why not continue to do it? That cuts no ice. We could have been wrong in 1925. We are certainly wrong in the present circumstances. In the past the export of power, as the tax would indicate, has been done by public bodies. I have indicated that the tax, almost in its entirety, was paid by the Ontario and Quebec hydro systems.

Now we are entering into an era of private export of power and we have got to be on our guard. This is no hit-and-miss business. This matter involves long-term plans, years before they will be brought to fruition. It cannot possibly be argued, as my friend has already stated, that the problems are so urgent and there are such unusual circumstances of expediency and haste that there is no time to consult Parliament. The evidence before the committee indicated that it will be 1966 before these corporations are ready to export power.

The export of power is the hottest chestnut on the griddle, because it involves Canadian-United States relations. We are once again back where we started, facing up to promoters, exploiters and—to use a term which was used by the Prime Minister of this country before the last election—buccaneers who are building a great and powerful power empire in Canada. We have had a bellyful of Trans-Canada and Northern Ontario gas exploits.

If we accept this amendment we are asking for trouble. I repeat: If we permit Axel Wenner-Gren, to whom all the terms that I have used are applicable and interchangeable, to by-pass Parliament, we will have committed a blunder of the first dimension.

This is the sort of matter that cries out to be dealt with by Parliament. To take away from Parliament under the present circumstances the right to deal with the power tax and to control the export of power is to take some sovereignty from Parliament.

I am opposed to unnecessary controls, and the best and most effective control that I know is the floor of Parliament. This above all is not a matter for order in council. In a matter such as this there should be no room for private representations, no facilities for special pleadings, no tolerance of a lobby, and, I repeat, no elbow room for bargaining. This is important enough for public debate on the floor of Parliament before action is taken. It is too important in the scheme of things to be left to the side door or the back door where manipulations and special pleadings can be carried on.

So I come back to where I started. For purposes of emphasis I repeat I think this Government has a mandate, a clear and undoubted mandate, to turn government back to Parliament. The Senate will find itself in an impossible position which it cannot defend if it refuses the Government the right to turn this matter over to Parliament; and, what is more important, we shall be doing what is wrong if we accept the recommendation of the committee. We are entering into an era in this country where the great debate will be on public ownership and public control of natural resources. That is the next great problem that is facing us, to prevent exploitation for private profit.

There are the renewable natural resources, such as forests, fisheries and water, but they need protection and wise management; and there are the non-renewable natural resources, like oil and minerals, which need conservation and wise utilization. We have got to stop wasting our natural resources. If we accept this recommendation to take the power of decision away from Parliament, in my opinion, I repeat, we will have committed a colossal blunder, bad in principle and worse in practice, and subject to abuses.

I don't think any speaker has yet approached this aspect of the problem: this is an inspired appeal to the Senate. These corporations have by-passed the Government, ignored the House of Commons and have come to the Senate. Everyone has a chance to appear before the House of Commons to present his problem. These corporations said they did not know anything about this bill. It is difficult for me to understand how an eminent counsel like Mr. Robertson, who has a representative here in Ottawa, with three members of the cabinet from his province, would say that he does not know what is contained in a bill that affects his corporations so seriously. These people never went near the ministry or the House of Commons. They went over their heads and came to the Senate. That is the best example I can give you of special pleading. They did not want to face the House of Commons, but they were ready to face the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Probably they know that more attention is paid to legislation here than in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Normally the House of Commons likes to be consulted in matters of this importance, and the people expect it will be.

The Liberals in the House of Commons fought hard and long to get the house to give Parliament the right to restrict or limit the import of oil under the National Energy Board Bill, and they accused the Government of riding roughshod over Parliament, after claiming to be its champion. The Government, on its part, said it had to have the power in order to avert the dumping of cheap American oil and had to apply the power suddenly. I believe the Government made use of the occasion to demonstrate it must have that power in order to meet an emergency.

I would remind this house that our national defence policies today are being decided by the Congress of the United States. They are making decisions that Parliament should make. Our main and important task in this Senate, and wherever we can be heard, is to return government to Parliament—that is to the Senate and the House of Commons—where the people want it.

Under the circumstances, honourable senators, I cannot support this amendment.

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Honourable senators, I cannot allow this occasion to pass without adding my humble views to the discussion on the proposed amendment.

Before doing so, I should like to congratulate first the Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for at least on this occasion seeing the light and trying to practise the principles expressed by the distinguished Prime Minister during the recent election campaign. I would like also to congratulate my good friend from Huron-Perth (Hon. Mr. Golding) and my learned colleague from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll).

I intend to confine my remarks to certain principles embodied in the bill, and shall not go into details which have been well covered by previous speakers, particularly the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina.

I should like to say why I am in favour of the practice of keeping government in the hands of Parliament, the great principle for which our forefathers fought, not only in the Old Country, but here in Canada. They gave their lives for responsible government, that is government by the representatives of the people.

I am going to touch on a subject which most speakers approach with great hesitation, the Rebellion of 1837-38. This was a serious matter. May I say it was very serious for my forebears, for I am a descendant of a patriot who in 1839 was hanged for having fought for responsible government. Since then there has been held a generally wrong impression that this rebellion, this struggle of our people for responsible government, was a fight over race and religion between the English and the French people of this country. That impression is absolutely wrong. Rather, it was a struggle for responsible government. The common people were anxious to obtain assurance from Queen Victoria, then the Queen of England, that the Government would be administered by the representatives of the people instead of by a small clique known as the Family Compact. So it was in the Rebellion of 1837 that the majority of the Liberal party stood in favour of responsible Government.

In the debate on this proposed amendment we have had an opportunity to hear the distinguished Leader of the Government in this house speak out in favour of maintaining government in the hands of Parliament rather than allowing the Government to make decisions by order in council. During the many years I was a member of the House of Commons I was never shy about challenging any legislation that involved governing by order in council rather than by the peoples' representatives in that house.

We have before us now an amendment. I respect the views of those who sponsor the amendment in this chamber. I know very well that the mover of the amendment in this chamber is a very learned and distinguished lawyer of Ontario, and I raise my hat to him. But, if I am allowed to say so, lawyers with as great talent as my honourable friend make mistakes sometimes. That is why there are judges and that is why there are court of appeal. We are here to see that the majority of this chamber does not make the mistake of adopting this amendment, which the distinguished Leader of the Government in the Senate is so strongly opposing.

By passing this bill without amendment we will be helping to maintain responsible Government in this country, and to maintain throughout the world the reputation of Canada as being a country which is respectful of the views of the people as expressed through their representatives.

Hon. John J. Kinley: Honourable senators, the motion before the house is for concurrence in the amendments made by the Banking and Commerce Committee to this bill. This animated discussion has come about because of a decision of the committee, which was carried by a majority of one, that the section dealing with power be deleted from the bill. So far every one of the five honourable senators who have spoken this afternoon was in favour of reporting the bill without amendment. It seems to me that in a debate of this kind there should be alternate speaking, so if any senator wishes to speak on the other side of the question I am willing to defer and give him the opportunity now.

Hon. Mr. Horner: That is a good challenge.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: The bill before us seeks to impose a duty on the export of electric power. It says this, in section 2:

> Every person who exports electric power from Canada by a line of wire or other conductor shall pay an export duty of three one-hundredths of one cent per kilowatt hour on all electric power so exported by him.

On the other hand the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act, Statutes of Canada, 1955, Chapter 14 reads:

> The Governor in Council may make regulations imposing export duties, not exceeding ten dollars per horse power per annum, upon power exported from Canada and respecting the manner in which such duties shall be calculated and paid.

It seems to me in regard to the two pieces of legislation and the merits of the question whether the tax should be imposed by order in council or by statute, that section 2 which was in the Excise Tax Bill when it came over to the Senate was much better than the amendment proposed. The section which it is proposed to substitute by amendment says that upon power exported from Canada a duty may be imposed by the Governor in Council not exceeding $10 per horse power per annum. But, honourable senators, the tax that is to be imposed by Parliament figures out at only $2 a horse power.

A duty of $10 a horse power would be disastrous. It would destroy any effort toward the production of electricity for export, and it seems to me that on that question alone, when the bill fixes the duty at the equivalent of $2 a horse power—and, mind you, that is the rate of duty now paid, because the Governor in Council has fixed the tax for the time being at that rate—it seems to me the promoters in their own interests would favour the law as originally proposed in this bill rather than the law which is in the Statute of 1955, which gives the Governor in Council power to impose a tax not exceeding $10 per horse power.

Let us look at the source of this legislation, honourable senators. Mr. Irwin, an official of the Department of Finance, read into the evidence taken before the committee a statement by the Minister of Finance. This is what he said:

> Section 4 of this act of 1955 which will now be repealed if this clause is adopted by the committee gave the Governor in Council the power to make regulations imposing export duties. This is the language of the clause:
> "4. The Governor in Council may make regulations imposing export duties, not exceeding ten dollars per horse power per annum, upon power exported from Canada and respecting the manner in which such duties shall be calculated and paid."
>
> The Minister of Finance then went on to say: "The feature of that existing law, which I must say I could not approve, is that it gives power to the Governor in Council subject to a ceiling to establish the rate of the tax."

Senator Macdonald then asked Mr. Irwin to read the next two paragraphs, and Mr. Irwin continued:

> It happens that the rate of tax on the export of power is 3/100 of one cent per kilowatt hour. What we are doing is to make that a statutory tax and to remove any power to establish a tax by order in council.—

Let me say the issue is clear. It is whether there should be tax by order in council or tax by statute. Mind you, we Liberals are not "without sin" as far as the passing of orders in council is concerned, and, of course, this statute was passed when the Liberals were in power. We might take refuge in the thought that during this century Canada has gone through two world wars which necessitated discipline and extreme legislation, notwithstanding the rights of the individual, in an effort to succeed. For that reason perhaps we got on the wrong road sometimes, but it seems to me that this bill affords us an opportunity of accentuating the fact that we believe in government by Parliament whenever possible. Some interests who appeared before the committee are interested in keeping this out of Parliament. They attack it on two fronts. They say if the tax is to remain it should be applied by order in council, but at the same time they say it is an unsound tax and that it is better to have it administered by order in council than by Parliament. Government by order in council is carried on behind the closed doors of the Privy Council, so it would seem to me that so far as the Opposition parties are concerned they would favour keeping what they could under the influence of Parliament, where they could have some part in the discussions and conclusions. If this legislation is to be under order in council, then the Opposition in the House of Commons will have no future say in the matter, and neither will the Senate.

So far as the Opposition parties are concerned, they should have regard for the liberty of the subject, and I think the liberty of the subject has indicated that law should be enacted by Parliament whenever possible.

Sometimes our Canadian Parliament follows what may appear to be rather useless traditional procedures, mere pageantry, but we accentuate whenever possible the theory that the Commons control the purse. This is considered to be one of the fundamentals of our democratic system of government. Whenever Royal Assent is given to money bills the Speaker of the House of Commons, with members of that house, comes to the Senate chamber and stands behind the bar. The Speaker addresses the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

> May it please Your Honour:
> The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray certain expenses of the public service.
>
> In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:
>
> An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year—
>
> To which bill I humbly request your Honour's assent.

Then the honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General assents to the bills and the members of the House of Commons withdraw.

That is the ceremony performed whenever royal assent is given to an appropriation bill. It symbolizes the power of Parliament over the purse, which includes the collection of taxes and the spending of tax revenue. This is very important, for down through the years taxation has played a vital role in the history of the Mother of Parliaments, the British Parliament. Long ago King James got into trouble with his advisers and had to promise that he would not pass laws by royal proclamation, but he did not carry out his promise. Then Charles I came along, and you know what happened to him. He lost his head and Cromwell came into power. That preceded the period of the Restoration.

With the complexity of business nowadays and the speed with which things must be done, it is easy to get on the wrong road. While some people like to take the easy way, I think the right way is the best way and that is to maintain the independence of Parliament. Legislation by Parliament is not only salutary from a democratic point of view, but it gives stability to business to know what the law is and that a statute can only be changed by Parliament. Do not forget that Parliament meets once a year, so it is never long before legislation can be amended if necessary.

The witnesses who appeared in committee were eminent men with technical knowledge and they provided us with important information.

Company representatives claimed that this legislation would hinder them from getting the necessary funds to proceed with certain work, but what would these businessmen put in their prospectus if this legislation were left under order in council? They might go to some broker in the United States and say, "We have an order in council providing a tax ceiling of $10 per horse power". The broker would likely reply: "That is ruinous. You can't operate under that kind of legislation." But if you had a statute to work under, the broker would appreciate there was some permanency about it. It would seem to me that these people would be much better off under the legislation as it is.

The committee meetings were largely attended, and witnesses included officials from federal Government departments, the Ontario Hydro Commission, the Quebec Hydro Commission and hydro-electric interests in British Columbia. Hydro officials from Ontario and Quebec said they did not wish to make any representations but were standing by to give the committee any assistance they could.

Let us not forget that Ontario and Quebec are paying over 98 per cent of this tax. It was disclosed in committee that Quebec is exporting power to the United States via Ontario at the lowest rate in Canada. On the other hand, Ontario has been exporting and paying tax for many years. One Toronto lawyer said his only concern was the $10 ceiling and he cleverly proposed that we amend the bill to delete this provision which appears in the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act.

I say it is clear that on its merits parliamentary legislation is the best. From the tax angle we are told that it is a duty on exports, and this is regarded as rather serious by some. Well, it just depends. All other expenses of doing business have the same effect. In other words, whatever expenses a company may have will affect its export business, and the fact that this is an excise tax on exports has no more significance than have other taxes which people have to pay.

The excise tax is an internal tax, usually applied in the form of a licence, and it may be that these people who are dealing with primary resources of the country should pay a licence fee. We have heard talk about an unsound tax. Well, what is a sound tax? I suppose we might feel that any tax we pay ourselves is unsound. Take the tax on tobacco, for instance. What excuse is there for imposing a high duty on tobacco, except there is money in the business and it is an easy place to get revenue? The people pay it. There is an old saying that when you want money you have to go where the money is. Well, there is evidently money in the tobacco business.

The reason for taxes is need, and the problem is where can these taxes be obtained most easily? If I were a temperance lecturer I would gather together all the people who are excessive drinkers and say to them: "I would like to alert you on how much you are paying in taxes. I think you are very imprudent to pay so much of the country's taxes." There is an opinion in the country that if you raise the taxes on spirits the people will drink less, but experience shows that people do not object strongly to these taxes.

There is also a provision in this bill for an excise tax affecting cosmetics. Women are willing to pay for adornment, as we know. There was opposition in the committee to a tax on pharmaceuticals and cosmetics, but these appear to be good sources of taxation.

These people who are developing our resources—and they are not poor, but rich people, for they talk in millions—gave us a story in committee like a symphony in industry, a wonderful story which impressed one with the potential of British Columbia. They are close to the United States, which opens up a big export market. Do not forget, however, that they can only export the surplus. That has been the policy of this country for years. First of all, export was not permitted but later export of the surplus was allowed.

Now, in industry you must have business to pay your expenses, and a person who can export a surplus across the border is in an enviable position to make profits. The surplus of power will go to the United States. There is an international co-ordinated program whereby, as one man told the committee, power can be dumped. Canadian companies can buy it sometimes and sell it at other times. The condition is such that one company might have a lot of water back of the dam, while another company has none. There is an arrangement whereby if one power company is short of water and another has a good supply, as often happens, they can export or import as may be necessary. Is there any better arrangement than working together like this in mutual interest? Because of this, these companies are enabled to do this business without extra capital, to carry on and have a bigger turnover with their equipment and staff. It seems to me that they are in a splendid position. I think British Columbia is on the road to great progress. It is a big province with wonderful natural resources. Its west coast faces the Pacific; there are no rivers running through the country like those we have in the east. Trade is carried by water as far as the head of the lakes. It seems that British Columbia will some day be up to the standard of the two large provinces of Canada, which we all envy but admire. I am sure we would all like to see British Columbia obtain the utmost possible benefit from all its resources.

So far as the future is concerned, the National Energy Board will arrange and advise about energy within and without Canada. Section 2 of the bill clears the way for the National Energy Board, without giving it powers of taxation.

Honourable senators, I am in favour of passing the bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I wish to announce that His Honour the Speaker will be attending a reception for the visitors from Russia at 5.30 this evening. As there are several more items on the Order Paper to deal with, I am wondering if I should move that the house adjourn during pleasure, to resume at the call of the bell at 8 o'clock this evening. If necessary, the debate might be adjourned during pleasure, but I look to honourable senators for advice on how to proceed.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: We should not adjourn the debate, because that would put the debate over to the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Could we not continue until 6 o'clock?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In that case we would have to come back at 7.30, and I do not know if we would be able to return by then.

Some Hon. Senators: 8 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think it might be best to adjourn during pleasure, to reassemble at the call of the bell, at approximately 8 o'clock.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I do not suppose anybody in this chamber will be surprised when I tell them that I am opposed to this amendment.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: There has been some slight evidence of that.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: A little evidence has already been given and I am sure that anybody who knows my past would place me in this category. I have been a commissioner of the great hydro-electric system of Ontario, and I know something about power and its advantages, and so on. One could not contemplate the situation today with regard to power and people, from my point of view as an intense Liberal and democrat, without knowing that I would be on the side opposing the amendment.

Now, honourable senators, this bill is exceedingly simple, but so far we have travelled far afield in the debate, so I claim your indulgence if I too make some general comments and observations which are pertinent and which I think are called for under the circumstances.

Along those lines let me recall to your memory that the high standard of living which the people of Canada, and particularly the people of Ontario, have enjoyed in recent years is the result of the possession of cheap and abundant hydro-electric power. Natural resources, be they ever so abundant, contribute not at all to the well-being of people unless those natural resources are used. Of course, natural resources are the basis of all human industry, and in Canada that basis of industry has been made potent by the presence of millions upon millions of turning wheels, turned by hydro-electric and other electric power.

The part that electric power has played in the production of wealth is not generally realized, because electricity is silent and invisible, but these millions upon millions of tireless helpers of ours have played their part in every industrial operation. They raise our minerals to the surface, they grind our wheat, they turn our lathes, and they perform an infinite variety of industrial and personal services on our farms, in our factories and in our homes. If the Canadian people have enjoyed the possession of the good things of this world in greater abundance than most other peoples on this earth, it is in large part, if not wholly, because of the plentitude and availability of electric power. And honourable senators, let me observe this, that if we are to lead in the future as we have led in the past in this regard it will be because we have been increasingly inventive in finding an ever-expanding variety of means by which our silent slaves can assist us towards gracious living.

Now, the care with which we should husband our power resources was borne in on me as a commissioner of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario when I could forecast the time when all our falls and rapids would be harnessed, and notwithstanding that fact our demand would still exceed our supply. Recently that time has of course been pushed very considerably in advance by the million horsepower which the province of Ontario secures from the development of the St. Lawrence River. Yet even today with that million horsepower added we are still in sight of D-day in electric power; we can still forecast the time when our demand will far exceed the capacity of our rivers and falls to give us the supply.

I think that people realized the advantage we possess in electric resources and, great as they may be, the limitations I have mentioned of our supply; I think they realized that more fully and vividly when I was a Hydro commissioner than they do today. It may be that familiarity with blessings of this kind breeds contempt, or maybe it is forgetfulness, and we come to take things as they are, and we fail to visualize what would happen if we did not have them or we were prodigal in their use.

Twenty-five years ago we were very firm in our refusal to allow our neighbours to the south to carry off the power resources of the dominion of Canada. We realized then, and I hope we realize it today, that licences to export power are irrevocable and that, irrespective of the terms in which they are written, when a community grows up around a source of power it becomes politically impossible to cut that community off. Yet in spite of our realization of the seriousness of this matter in the export of our power, our power exports continue to grow.

In 1926, when the export duty was first applied, we exported 1,322 million kilowatt hours. In 1958 we exported 4,809 million kilowatt hours. That is to say, our exports in that period have more than multiplied by three.

Notwithstanding our experience that temporary expediency in this matter of giving away our power resources has ripened into a wedlock irrevocable and irrecallable—not recapturable, to use the words I have heard expressed here—we continue to receive and consider propositions of that kind, such as the one now before us.

Our experience at Massena is a typical example of what we run into in this matter of export of our power. Massena is a town on the other side of the St Lawrence River from Cornwall. Quite a number of years ago, as a matter of a temporary arrangement, we agreed to the export of power from Ontario to Massena, and have been exporting power there ever since. When I became a commissioner of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, in 1934, we already realized that that temporary arrangement had become a permanent obligation. Like Sinbad the Sailor, when the old man of the hills climbed on his shoulders it was impossible to shake him off. So it is with the export of power; once it is allowed, and a community grows up in consequence of it and industry is established on that basis, it is politically impossible for us to cut it off

We are now exporting to Massena some 75,000 kilowatt hours of firm power from Cedar Rapids in the province of Quebec. To go with that firm power we export very much more but in varying amounts, of interruptible power, so called, from Ontario Hydro. A community has grown up in Massena around that source of power, and irrespective of what the licences say, it is now impossible to withdraw that power without projecting a political international incident between Canada and the United States.

The Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission now has a licence to export firm power at Niagara Falls, Queenston, Fort Erie and Cornwall. In the licences there is no reservation as to discontinuance, although technically the licences are issued from year to year.

The Ontario Hydro also has licences to export interruptible power at Sarnia, Windsor, Iroquois Control Dam and Barnhart Island. This is so-called surplus power, or interruptible power, and the licences are endorsed with these words:

> Subject to reduction in whole or in part at any time as Canadian demand requires.

Yes, that is interruptible power, and that is so reserved in the licences. But, honourable senators, just try to interrupt it and see how soon it would be that our American cousins and customers would urge their prescriptive rights in the use of that power, and how difficult it would be, if not quite impossible, for us to disregard their plea and do it as a friendly act to a friendly neighbour.

The honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) mentioned our experience with the Carillon Falls on the Ottawa River. For many years promoters have been asking for the right to develop the Carillon Falls for exporting power to the United States. They argued that the water that goes over the falls is lost and gone for ever. That is, of course, a truism, and sounds very much like the arguments we have heard with respect to the Peace River and the Columbia River. But licence to export power from the Carillon Falls was persistently, continually and emphatically refused by the dominion Government under Mackenzie King, and I rather fancy under Conservative Prime Ministers as well. But certainly Mr. King set his face against it, and over the years it was refused.

Originally, the Carillon Falls belonged equally to the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario. About twenty years ago, or thereabouts, we in the province of Ontario exchanged our interest in the potential development of the Carillon Falls with the province of Quebec for its 50 per cent interest in certain power on the Upper Ottawa. Now, as a result of what the dominion Government did in those years, and of our own wisdom in Ontario in connection with this matter, Ontario has great power on the Upper Ottawa within 100 miles due north from the city of Toronto, most advantageously placed, and of almost inestimable value to that province, and the province of Quebec has the great Carillon Falls within 20 miles of the city of Montreal. Just recently Mr. Duplessis, Prime Minister of the province of Quebec, is reported to have stated that that province will proceed in the near future with the development of the Carillon Falls.

So, honourable senators, let me suggest to you that it has paid us well not to be in any hurry to give away our national patrimony, and to resist the plausible arguments of promoters who, of course, then as now, were always in a very great hurry.

The promoters are in another great hurry, and this time it is not a normal hurry. It is a hurry so great that it is an emergency, or to express it in the words of the street, "They are in a hell of a hurry." The stakes are very much greater today than they were with respect to the Carillon Falls, big as those stakes were and now are. The stakes today include the Peace and Columbia Rivers, both of which have millions of dollars at stake, or perhaps billions, if we are able to look far enough into the future. The drive is for permission to send this Canadian power across the border to our neighbours to the south. Good neighbours that they are, the drive is to send the potential of these great Canadian resources almost in toto to the United States. I say "almost in toto", because we have been told that the first development is 500,000 kilowatt hours, and that the province of British Columbia could not absorb so great an amount. So, that province is to get less than 500,000 kilowatt hours.

How small that is when one considers the overall picture will perhaps be clear to you when I tell you that the power resources at Queenston, for instance, run something like 750,000 horsepower. That is not very far from 500,000 kilowatt hours, although it is not exactly similar. That will give you a basis of comparison. That is to say, these promoters tell us that the amount of power which they propose to give locally to the province of British Columbia is less than we produce in a single plant at Queenston.

So, I think I am justified in saying that their proposal is that they will export almost in toto, not only the first 500,000 kilowatt development, but the future developments which they have in mind, holus-bolus to the United States.

Now the argument so far as this is concerned, is that they should be allowed to hand over that power to our neighbours tax free. These promoters begrudge even the $2 per horsepower which our other power companies and public companies have been paying for the past 30 years. Of course they protest it and would like to get out of paying it, as I protest paying my income tax. I can understand the hydro-electric power systems of the provinces, and the companies, trying to get out of paying their taxes.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Hydro does not object to the tax.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, Hydro never objected to paying the tax in my time, and not now, as the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina says. But, these particular promoters insist on being allowed to transfer the electric potential in the river to the people of the United States without so much as a dandelion boutonniere for the present owners, the people of Canada.

Of course, I can understand the position taken by the honourable senator from Vancouver-South (Hon. Mr. Farris). He told us that he was the solicitor for the B.C. Electric Railway Company, and the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina told us this afternoon of a large block of stock held by the B.C. Electric Railway Company and the B.C. Electric Company. I have great admiration for my honourable friend from Vancouver-South, and I can say that I understand his position, although I do not agree with him. He has said that he has been solicitor for that company for 30 years, and he has now come to believe that what is good for the B.C. Electric Company is good for British Columbia, and, therefore, good for the dominion of Canada. When he mentioned that, I suggested something that must have been familiar to all of you. When President Eisenhower formed a cabinet of big shots he included Mr. Wilson, who at that time was President of General Motors Corporation. You will, perhaps, remember the outcry that was made by our cousins to the south of us when Mr. Wilson announced that what was good for General Motors was good for the United States. Well, the people down there did not agree with him. In the press, at least, they blew their tops. Yet, that is the proposition that has been laid before us in the course of this debate, that what is good for this private corporation, which has got its hands on some stock by which it hopes to make a killing out of a Canadian resource, is good for the dominion of Canada as a whole.

I can only say that the American corporations which would carry off Canadian resources freely will no doubt be surprised when they learn that their Canadian friends hold a somewhat different opinion. I suggest they will be grieved when they learn that we are in no particular hurry to give our resources away for the benefit of private power companies. Of course, they are in a hurry—a heck of a hurry. They are in such a hurry, honourable senators, that they cannot wait for Parliament to make the gift tax free. Parliament, as you know, sits at least six months of every year. Nevertheless, they cannot wait for Parliament. They do not like Parliament, and I do not blame them for that. They admit quite freely that their chance of getting away with a plum of this kind is much better behind closed doors than it is in Parliament. It is intimated, though not exactly stated, that members of Parliament are much too stupid to understand the intricacies of big business. We were told that to give the taxing power to Parliament was to put their case in a strait-jacket, while to allow these transactions to go on behind green baize doors would give elbow room for bargaining. It was my friend from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) who used that phrase; I do not think it came from the power companies themselves. It occurred to him at that moment, and I grabbed it as being an appropriate phrase to explain the situation as it stands today. Let me say that I have the greatest admiration for the honourable senator from Toronto. His thinking is clear. His presentations have been lucid on many an occasion. He and I are the very best of warm personal friends. But, honourable senators, friendship, I hope, does not require that both of the friends shall agree with each other on all occasions.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I hope not.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I hope not, too. I hope that we can still be friends, quite irrespective of the views we hold on passing problems of this kind.

I am not in any position to charge these promoters with any sinister intentions, nor have I any intention of doing so. I have had some knowledge, honourable senators, of secret deals involving hydro power, by reason of which my opinion is reinforced, and I am not in favour of elbow room for power promoters. Generally speaking, our Canadian natural resources and our revenues are safer when that type of business is transacted in public, and not in secret or in private.

The Government's proposition in this bill is simply to transfer from the Governor in Council to Parliament the authority to determine the amount of the tax which Canada levies on power exports. Just why the Government wishes to divest itself of that power, of course, is anybody's guess. It is my guess as well as anybody else's.

No doubt the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) will convince us of his theory. I have two explanations, and, honourable senators, I am not one of those who rules out of speculations of this kind the possibility of good motives.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That is a negative approach.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, it is a negative approach, but it is a positive approach in this matter, in that I am ready to consider the possibility of good motives for a good action. Certainly the members of this administration denounced in no measured terms government by order in council both when they were in opposition and during the course of the two recent political campaigns. It may be that the members of the present Government would like to carry out at least one of their many promises. It is just possible that is the explanation for carrying out a policy which they denounced in no uncertain terms on many occasions.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You are too generous.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Well, if there is a little generosity there, please give me credit for it.

It may be that the Minister of Finance wisely enough wishes to escape the kind of pressure which those promoters plainly intimated to us they would apply on the Government if we agreed to this amendment and it went into force. It is just possible he wants to get out of that by having the tax fixed openly in Parliament, where the representatives of the public can have something to say.

Since the subject of this power has been called into question, let me give you some knowledge of official statistics with regard to our export of power. I have here a statement showing the kilowatt hours exported and the duty paid since the imposition of the export tax in 1926, when the figure was, as I have already stated, 1,322 million kilowatt hours. At that time the tax collected amounted to $288,000. I am leaving out the odd figures. These statistics disclose that except for fluctuations and variations there has been an overall steady increase in the export of power, until in 1958 we exported 4,809 million kilowatt hours. The revenue in that year amounted to $1,442,000. With the consent of honourable senators I would like to put this statement on Hansard.

STATEMENT SHOWING KILOWATT HOURS EXPORTED AND DUTY PAID SINCE IMPOSITION OF EXPORT DUTY

Note: For the fiscal years ended March 31, 1926 to March 31, 1950 inclusive no export duty was collected on the electrical energy exported under Ontario Hydro's "firm" licence to export.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Has the honourable senator any information regarding imports of electric power?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, I have not got that information, because we do not charge for that.

Hon. Mr. Reid: In British Columbia we import as much electricity as we export.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I will take the honourable senator's word for that.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Just to keep the record straight.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I have here a summary of electric power exported by various companies in recent years. For instance, in 1958 the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario exported 394 million firm kilowatt hours on which it paid $118,000 in taxes. This commission also exported what is called surplus power to the extent of 3,416 million kilowatt hours for which they paid $1,025,000 in taxes. In addition there was exported from Ontario by the Canadian Niagara Power Company Limited firm power, on which it paid $91,000 in taxes, and surplus power on which it paid $14,000 in taxes. In Quebec the Southern Canada Power Company Limited exported 5,000,000 kilowatt hours, firm, on which it paid $1,504 in taxes, and exported in surplus power 38,176,000 kilowatt hours, on which it paid $11,453 in taxes.

The province of Quebec exported directly a very small amount compared to the province of Ontario, so that the latter has paid, as has been stated here, the major portion of these taxes.

Honourable senators, may I have your permission to place additional statements on Hansard?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: They are summaries of electricity exportation for each of the fiscal years 1956, 1957, 1958 and 1959. As they are rather long, perhaps they could appear as an appendix to this debate.

For statements see appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 850-1.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I wonder if the honourable senator has a table showing the revenue derived by power companies with respect to power coming into Canada?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I am sorry but I have not got that information. I have not got access to their books. I don't think the Government has either, although it might be able to obtain that information for us.

Honourable senators, I am not at all sure that these promoters desire to abolish the whole tax on the export of power. It is likely they would be satisfied with a slight discrimination in their own favour and be willing that Ontario, Quebec and other provinces go on paying. That might be quite reasonable, although Ontario and these other provinces might not like it too much if they should have to pay while promoters in British Columbia are specially exempted. I do not know what the promoters are going to ask the Government to do if we allow them to go behind closed doors.

This whole argument, in my good judgment, boils down to a simple question of whether Parliament should possess and control the taxing power of the nation. Honourable senators who have read history will recall how control of the purse strings curbed the arbitrary power of the monarch and made of England and of Canada a parliamentary democracy. It was control of the purse strings that did it. It has been a settled principle of British people almost as long as Parliaments have existed that taxes must be levied by Parliament.

Big business has never liked doing big business in public. Publicity deprives them of that elbow room which they would like at the present moment for secret bargains. Secrecy in the past has always enabled some people to get away with something big in a hurry.

Honourable Senators, I am a Parliament man, as I think all members of this house are. I believe in open debate where the public interests, public finance, and public resources are concerned. I give the Government credit for proposing to trust Parliament in this matter and to restore to Parliament its traditionally proper rights and responsibilities. In this instance it is moving away from hole-in-the-corner deals and reversing a trend which you and I have observed over the years—and we have not been without sin ourselves in this matter—of transferring the powers and responsibilities of Parliament to be conducted behind closed doors by the executive. It is a trend which we in this chamber have opposed on numbers of occasions, and I thought opposition to it had become a settled principle among us. Are we now to reverse the position we have held so firmly and for so long in this house? Are we to overrule a Government move to deal in public, and ourselves actually force it to deal in private? Is that the principle which we in this chamber wish to establish? Shall governments in the future hide behind the Senate when called to account for government by order in council, and say, "Yes, we would have trusted Parliament, but the Senate would not let us do so"? Let it not be said that we of the Senate of Canada, who believe that parliamentary government is the best form of government that has yet been devised among men, refused to allow this Government to restore to Parliament its traditional responsibility with regard to the taxes levied upon our people, and that we insisted that it deal in secret. Whether we pass this amendment or do not pass it, the taxes for the moment will remain the same; but the great general principle for which the Senate has stood so long will be in jeopardy if we switch our principles at this stage and, even in this one isolated instance, stand for government by order in council instead of parliamentary democracy, of which we are so proud. I am sure that we are not going to do that in this house.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I wish to take up just a very short time of this house in explaining my personal position. Let me say, in the first instance, that I do not agree wholly with any of the speeches that have been made today, with the exception possibly of the speech made by the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power). May I also say that the reason I voted as I did in committee, and took rather a strong stand there, was that I expected the National Energy bill would come to this house in the form in which it was introduced in the House of Commons. If honourable senators read the bill as it was first drafted they must have noticed that the Government claimed for itself wide powers which could be put into effect by order in council. However, after that bill had been discussed in the House of Commons for some considerable time it was amended in many respects, so that now the Government has not the power that it had under the original bill.

Honourable senators, having taken that stand, or at least prepared myself to take that stand, against government by order in council, I thought that this bill which took some power away from the Government should be supported, and I therefore supported the original bill in committee. I did not support the amendment.

I would like honourable senators who were not in committee to know that the amendment was not proposed by a senator on the Opposition side of this house, but by one who supports the Government. The amendment, which one might call a Government amendment, as recorded in the proceedings of the committee, reads as follows:

> I want to move an amendment. I move that section 2 be struck out and deleted from the bill so that the matter of export duty will go back under section 4 of the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act the way it is at the present time.

Honourable senators, I opposed that motion, and I expressed my view on it before the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) expressed his view on the amendment in this house.

May I say that when this motion was presented to the committee it was supported by a number of Liberal senators and also a number of Conservative senators.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: If my memory serves me correctly, four Conservative senators voted in favour of the motion and two against it. Therefore, my position in this matter has nothing to do with any influence that might have been exerted upon me by speeches from the other side of the house.

I do not agree altogether with what the Leader of the Government said today. He suggested that this was a Government bill, and therefore the Senate should approve it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, I did not say or even suggest that at all.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I understood my honourable friend to say that. Well, I am sure that in committee the former Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Haig) definitely suggested that because it was a Government measure we should support it in this house.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I did not take that stand at all.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Then I withdraw my remarks regarding the position of the Leader of the Government, but I do not withdraw them with respect to the statement made by the former Leader of the Government, the senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig), which appears in the reported proceedings of the committee. Certainly this is a Government measure, but we review every Government measure that comes to this house. Just because the Government wants it is no reason, so far as I am concerned, why I should approve of it.

Now, honourable senators, I do not know whether the statement has ever been made that it is proper to have this amendment, clause 2, appear in the bill to amend the Excise Tax Act. I do not know why the clause should not be left in the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act. This bill is going to affect not only the province of British Columbia, but all provinces in Canada, and no doubt other companies than those mentioned will want to export power to the United States. We have a great potential in so far as water power is concerned in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. When this bill comes into force its provisions will affect the whole of Canada.

So far as I am concerned, I am not opposed to the development of our power resources by private companies. I have great respect for the company which appeared before our committee, and I think we should encourage it and similar companies to go forward with their developments. I have great admiration for its initiative, and I think it should be praised for its enterprise instead of being criticized so severely. Of course the company might make money, but on the other hand it could lose money. Large sums of risk capital are being put into the development of the power resources, and I have no objection to the representatives of the company coming to Parliament and trying to have this tax repealed. In fact, honourable senators, I am not at all sure that it is a just tax.

Honourable senators, how many times have we heard in this house that the prosperity of Canada is dependent on our exports? If we export power to another country it will bring dollars back into this country. Therefore, I believe that these companies should be put in a position to export this power at a profit so that dollars will come back into this country. But the tax in effect at the present time may be such that it will prevent or make impossible exportation of power at a profit. I hope the Government will review very carefully the provisions of the bill as to the very considerable tax proposed on exportation of power from this country.

Honourable senators, there is only one issue at stake so far as I am concerned. Let me make myself perfectly clear. I think the company should receive praise and assistance for what it is doing. It is just a question of the appropriate method of assistance. Should we approve of taxation by order in council or should we insist that taxation measures be approved or disapproved by Parliament? That, in my opinion, is the whole issue here.

Honourable senators, we have been considering this matter today wholly from the viewpoint of one power company that wants a reduction in the rate of tax. At the present time the Government has power not only to reduce the tax but to increase it. Would any honourable senator agree that the Government should be allowed to increase this tax by order in council? This clause does not work only in one way. To illustrate my meaning I refer to section 4 of the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act, which reads as follows:

> The Governor in Council may make regulations imposing export duties not exceeding ten dollars per horsepower per annum, upon power exported from Canada and respecting the manner in which such duties shall be calculated and paid.

So, honourable senators, if we do not amend this bill the cabinet has the power to increase the present rate of $2 to $10, and Parliament would not have a word to say about it.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Did the honourable senator say $10 per horsepower? Surely you must mean per 100 or more horsepower?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The figure is $10 per horsepower per annum.

That is what bothers me about this bill. I would not mind so much if the Government had reduced the tax. In fact, the Government can reduce customs tariffs without reference to Parliament but it has to report its action to Parliament at the following session. I know of no act authorizing the Governor in council to increase custom or other duties. But if we allow section 2 to stand, then we shall be in effect saying to the Government, "You can increase the tax on the export of power without coming to Parliament." Well, honourable senators, so far as I am concerned I won't approve of it.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators,—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) speaks, he will not necessarily close the debate. As a matter of fact, he has no right to speak twice in the same debate, except with unanimous consent of the house. However, may I remind honourable senators that he could speak once again on the motion for third reading of the bill. Considering this, does the honourable senator have the unanimous consent of the house to speak at this time?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Unanimous consent.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: We are in the mood.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: By order in council.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Thank you very much for permission to speak. I should point out that in the years in which I have been in this chamber the practice has developed almost to the stage of a rule of law that when a report containing amendments is presented, and those amendments are explained, the senator who presents the report and gives the explanation has, as a matter of course, been permitted to answer.

There is another ground, quite apart from the report, which I am concerned about. Somehow or other in the course of the debate that has taken place today I was injected into it as a sort of whipping boy, in that some of the more vehement expressions that were used by some of my friends from Toronto were related to a remark which I had made. So even on a question of privilege I feel I could justify begging the indulgence of the Senate at this time.

I am not going to detain the house long, but there are a few things that should be said at this stage. As you know by now, if you did not know before, I was chairman of the committee that considered the bill. When the vote was taken, the clerk started counting those who supported the section in the bill, and they numbered 12. He then counted those who opposed the inclusion of the section in the bill, and they numbered 12. As yet I had not been reached to say whether I was going to vote or not. Of course, at that stage the section of the bill was lost, because a tie vote means the question is resolved in the negative. But feeling as I did in relation to this section, I as chairman courageously voted so as to indicate that there was a majority viewpoint and not just a tie vote.

I realized, too, the power of the Senate. This was a committee of the Senate, acting on instructions of the Senate, and when we report what we have done you can take it or you can reject it. That is the function and duty of the Senate. But some of the things that have been said here today, and have been laboured very strenuously, bear no relation to the subject-matter before us at all.

The honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll), who spent some time talking about the question of attempting to remove a tax on power, was talking completely beside the question. The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), who was talking about denying the right to export power, or if it was going to be done Canadians should do it, was talking completely beside the question. He at least discovered later in his remarks what the question was, when he stated, as it appears very simply to be, are we going to transfer an authority to tax, which is contained in the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act and under which the Governor in Council is authorized to impose the tax, from that statute and put it into the Excise Tax Act at a fixed rate?

At the present time as it exists in the statute the range of tax is anything from $10 per horsepower per annum down. The actual rate over the years has been $2 per horsepower per annum. The section which we are discussing in the Excise Tax Bill proposes a fixed rate of $2. That is the sole issue.

As I pointed out when I explained the amendments, representations were made to the committee. I made very clear in my explanation of the amendment that when I used the expression "elbow room for bargaining" that was my expression. What I was attempting to do was explain by paraphrasing, or in my own language, what appeared to be the thing the witnesses were asking, namely, that they did not want to be locked into a fixed rate. Therefore, they said, don't shift this section at the moment until we see where we are heading in the arrangements we have.

Now in that respect it may be that my sense of detection and sniffing out very subtle conspiracies that sometimes exist, and very often do not exist, is not as acutely trained as is that of some others. There seemed to be some evidence in the discussion here today that there was a very subtle and nefarious scheme in the minds of these people who came before us to have this section remain in the present statute so they could go to the Governor in Council, close the door behind them, and make a secret deal.

I saw nothing of that, and I suggest there is nothing in the evidence from which that can be concluded. But let us get down to the word "bargaining" for a moment.

Both my honourable friends from Toronto seem to think that there was some sinister meaning in the word "bargaining". If there was, I did not intend it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I attributed no such sinister meaning.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I accept what my friend says. I thought he did attribute such a meaning.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I thought you did when I made my explanation the other day.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: In my interruption I may have suggested something in a sarcastic way, but certainly in my speech today I did not attribute anything sinister to you. As a matter of fact, I explained when I picked up the sentence which was yours, that I did so because it seemed to express so clearly the situation before us.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I accept my friend's explanation, and I add this observation. Knowing my friend for as long and as favourably as I have, I felt that anything he said was meant to be taken seriously.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I consulted the Shorter Oxford Dictionary to learn what was the meaning of the word "bargain", and I noted it has many meanings. One meaning given is "to negotiate". That is a quite obvious meaning, and the one which I attribute to it. It also means "to arrange details", or "to agree to buy or sell". It has the secondary meaning of "to contend". It has another meaning, "to haggle over terms".

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Which one did you mean?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My friend was not listening when I opened my sentence. I am sorry, but I don't expect he is going to listen to everything I shall say tonight. However, I thought in the beginning he might be listening. I said I intended the word to mean "to negotiate". I think that is the normal and ordinary meaning of "bargain". It does have a secondary meaning, a colloquial meaning and a slang meaning. For instance, if you said you bought something at a bargain, that would be using the word in the colloquial sense.

I am wondering whether my friends felt that because I used the word "bargaining" there was some suggestion that if these power company representatives went behind closed doors with the Governor in Council they might be able to come out with a good bargain. Well, I don't know anybody who has been able to do that with this Government yet, and I doubt very much if these power people from the west coast could do any better than others have done so far.

Moving on from that, I will try to analyse the position which was expressed here today. Of course, honourable senators are permitted to change their views and develop new ones in relation to the various subject-matters which come before them, but I heard today in this debate such an astounding change in viewpoint from what was said not so long ago that I could scarcely believe it. I wonder if my honourable friends will recall that in 1955 we had before us in the Senate a bill which had first passed the House of Commons and which repealed the then existing Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act, and enacted a new statute which perpetuated the same section 4 and taxation by the Governor in Council.

I remember it well because I was chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce at that time. When I presented the committee's report to this house there was an amendment by way of clarification which the committee had suggested. I proposed that the amendment might be considered at that moment, but my friend the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) objected. He said:

> Why now? Is there any hurry to read this bill the third time? I think it is far better to observe the usual rule which requires a day's notice of a motion for third reading. I have no objection to the bill, and I am not likely to take any objection when it comes before the house for third reading, but somebody might wish to object. I am more inclined to follow our usual rules, unless there is some good reason for doing otherwise.

That deals with an attitude in relation to this same subject-matter. We had then an opportunity to correct this in 1955. Let us go down the line. Let us consider the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine). He was in the Senate at that time, and I notice he did not take part in the debate at all. I notice that the honourable Senator Golding was in the Senate at that time, and while I appreciated very much the speech he made today, and was very happy to have in such a clear-cut fashion his statement of principle without any embellishment, the record of 1955 is silent so far as any discussion from him is concerned.

The honourable Senator Kinley, who spoke today, and who thought that the liberty of the subject was being endangered if we dealt with this legislation at this time, had no such views to express on that earlier occasion.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I suggest that the older we get the more sense we get.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I hope that is true.

My honourable friend the senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) did not come into the Senate until July of 1955, so he would still be a member of the House of Commons when this bill was before that house. There is the great sounding board; there is the great crossroads of public opinion which is expressed by those elected and returned to Parliament by the people of Canada for the purpose of making known their views. There parliamentary institutions and rights are preserved.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Thank God for Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power), who spoke so firmly this afternoon, came into the Senate after this bill had been assented to and, therefore, was a member of the House of Commons at the time it was dealt with there. What I have said with respect to the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina would apply equally to the honourable senator from Gulf.

I only refer to that historical record because it is not so long ago that we were dealing with a new piece of legislation which was proposed by the then Government, and there was an opportunity then, at least, to raise the issue of amendment, or to object to government by order in council and the perpetuation of government by order in council, but nothing was said.

Let us come down to some of the things that have been said here today. I have regarded it as the function and, indeed, the duty of the Senate to be a place where, even when the doors of the House of Commons may be closed to minorities who want to present their views, those views can be heard, whether we agree with them or not. Many times during the period that I have been in this house we have heard representations from organizations to which we knew in advance we were not going to pay any attention because we did not share their extreme views. Yet, we said even though they are a minority, if they want to come before us and present their views we are going to hear them. Therefore, I see nothing objectionable in having minorities representing the power interests in the west going to the Governor in Council, if they so wish, or coming to the Senate, and I get very much upset and disturbed and shocked when I find it suggested that we should close the doors against their coming, lock the doors and throw away the key, and even stuff the keyhole.

Hon. Mr. Horner: No one suggested that.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I think that is going to an extreme in dealing with a question of this kind. Surely we can deal with this on the basis of the issue that is before us without getting into personalities to the extent of what was said here today.

The debate has proceeded along a line that is not relevant to the issue at all. If the honourable senators who spoke today can see something relevant that my radar does not permit me to see, I would be happy to know of it. Their radar, of course, may cover a broader and wider range. It is true that difficulties develop with radar from time to time. I understand that objects are not too distinguishable at times on radar and, therefore, one may misread what is on the radar screen. I hear that distortions develop in radar from time to time.

Hon. Mr. Horner: You are sure yours is working all right?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Well, I am not only very sure—

Hon. Mr. Reid: He has a good antenna.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: —but I am also sure that if my friend was asked to explain what was the point in issue in this bill he would give the explanation which is the only explanation, and that is what I stated in the beginning. My friend has too much good commonsense, and he has been in Parliament too long, not to be able to discern what is the point of the question, and when he wishes to he stays right on it.

So far as some of the other things that have been said here today are concerned, my own view is a very simple one. I was prepared in committee, and I am prepared now, to support the report of the committee, and I am explaining my position. I am not attempting any oratory to influence you to follow me. I am simply explaining, and I am trying to take away from your view of the picture all the foreign matter which has been piled on top of the real issue, so that there may be no smothering or shutting-out of a proper consideration of the real issue.

I had no idea that our consideration of this section could boil up to such a major issue that we have had hinted to us here today. Many years ago King Charles literally lost his head because of an attitude which he took, and it was, I think, suggested that what we are attempting to do would be in line with that. I think the suggestion was that what we were doing in striking out this section was turning back the hands of progress, turning back the development of democracy, destroying and hamstringing Parliamentary institutions. That viewpoint, to my way of thinking, in relation to what we have to consider in this bill, is just so much nonsense.

There is no liberty of the subject involved. Let me tell you why. Under the Electricity Act, under which this tax is levied now, the minister is required to report to Parliament each year the whole operation of the act. The honourable Leader of the Government suggested today there was no emergency because section 22 of the Financial Administration Act permits one to apply to the Governor in Council for a remission of duty. What I would point out to the honourable leader is that there must be consistency and consideration. Under the Financial Administration Act the Governor in Council, with the consent of the Treasury Board, may remit a tax, and once the tax has been remitted the Governor in Council is obliged to report to Parliament. So you have a report to Parliament in either case, and therefore it is equal so far as the elected representatives of the public getting to know what is done is concerned. But in either case, whether you proceed under the Electricity Act or the Financial Administration Act, you have government by order in council.

I would point out that in an infinite number of cases it has been thought by Parliament and even the Senate, both in committee and in the house, that giving some of these powers to a minister and to the Governor in Council has been a good thing to do. Not very long ago we gave consideration to the Customs Tariff Act and we approved a schedule of rates in relation to fruits and vegetables. There were two sets of rates involved and we gave authority to the minister to determine the period in which the higher rate would apply and, inferentially, when the lower rate would apply. Now, what difference is there? A number of sections in the Customs Tariff Act give authority to the Governor in Council to lower rates of duty, to forgo rates of duty on certain classes of material, and to change rates of duty for bargaining purposes by order in council when a desire is expressed by a foreign country to make some kind of trade agreement with us. It has happened that over the years the Governor in Council has been given many important powers, including that of determining what the rate of duty will be on goods coming in. It has been said that even though this practice has been going on since the first statute was introduced in 1907, if we carry it on for another instance, parliamentary institutions are going to fall down around us and the liberty of the subject will disappear from the land. I just cannot get agitated to the extent of the unrestrained language that was used in describing the consequence that would follow if the Senate did not restore section 2 to the bill. It was a gross exaggeration of the situation.

The Senate itself has an historical position, and in passing this amendment to the bill we would be proceeding by legal methods and in a parliamentary fashion, for it was Parliament that incorporated this section originally and it would be Parliament that determined the administration could best be done by the Governor in Council having authority. Parliament today, as represented by the Commons, says it wants to transfer that authority to the Excise Tax Act at a fixed rate. Because some of us share the view that we should move gradually, having regard to the position of certain interests in Canada, I suggest it is completely without foundation to jump to the conclusion that parliamentary institutions are being wrecked by such a course of conduct. It is a complete non sequitur. The fact that these organizations are willing to risk their own money in the development of our natural resources is neither here nor there, although we should be thankful they are doing this, because it is the only way great development can take place in Canada. We have to have people with the pioneering spirit who are prepared to risk capital and who look upon money as a commodity rather than something they should count, treasure and admire from time to time but never put to such a useful purpose as the development of natural resources.

There is another statement which my honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity made that rather shocked me. I refer to what he had to say about the business of exporting power. Well, we export metals and pulp.

Hon. Mr. Reid: And gas.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, gas and uranium.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: And iron ore.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, iron ore. I have not heard any complaints about exporting those products. Our revenues have been substantially increased because of their exportation. Even during the war, thank goodness, we exported gold. It was the only way we could balance our monetary position in relation to U.S. dollars.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: And there was no export tax on that gold.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No. On all those exports which represent a depletion of our resources there is no tax. Here we have a tax on the power that is going out. There is a market price for the power in the United States, and if that market price will not permit the addition of the tax, then the tax has to be absorbed in the Canadian operation. I am not arguing the merits of whether there should or should not be a tax. This is not the time to argue that matter, but what I am seriously endeavouring to do tonight is to reduce this problem to normal proportions so that honourable senators may examine it fairly and sincerely. It is not the inflated, swollen picture that you might get from some of the presentations that have been made in support of refusing to accept the report of the committee. The matter is within a simple compass and can be easily understood.

Honourable senators, in view of what has been said about how seriously parliamentary institutions have been endangered by what has been done, and since there may be some oblique, derogatory reference to the conduct of the majority of the committee in daring so to endanger our parliamentary institutions, I hasten to assure honourable senators that I do not think any person in the Senate or in Parliament or elsewhere in Canada has a monopoly in love for this country or respect for or devotion to the continuance and extension of responsible Government and the preservation of parliamentary institutions. In relation to the striking out of this clause, I think I should say on behalf of the members of the committee, and myself as chairman, that we are all good Canadians. I think you will let me give them a certificate of character. They are not undemocratic, or hiding under the Parliament buildings with a bomb, threatening that if we go for this everything will be blown up and our parliamentary institutions will be lost in no time.

If I have succeeded only in bringing this thing back to reality, getting all the garnishings off the picture, and eliminating all the unrestrained and intemperate language that has been used to describe what this committee by its majority had done, then I shall have accomplished all I am seeking to accomplish here. I have not asked one of you here this evening to vote to support the report of the committee. That is for you to decide in your own way, exercising your own intelligence. All I ask you to do is to consider the report of the committee on its merits and within the scope and framework that you need to operate for a proper consideration of the report. As for all the rest, the fanfare, the colouring and all the romancing that has been added, please dismiss all that from your minds.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it has been moved by the honourable senator Hayden, seconded by the honourable senator Beaubien, that the amendments made to Bill C-47 by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce be concurred in. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those in favour, will say "content".

Some Hon. Senators: Content.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those opposed will say "Non-content".

Some Hon. Senators: Non-content.

The Hon. the Speaker: Evidently the non-contents have it. I declare the motion lost.

Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Next sitting.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Léon Méthot moved the third reading of Bill S-22, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before this bill is read the third time, I think I should point out that the risk which the Government will assume if this bill is passed will be considerably greater than the risk it assumed prior to the introduction of this bill.

Under the act as it stands at the present time the corporation can insure the value of the exports to the extent of 85 per cent. There is a joint liability. The exporter has to look to his customer for 15 per cent of the cost, and then he can look to the Government for 85 per cent of the cost. Under the amendment the corporation can accept any security to the full extent of the value of the export.

Suppose a Canadian company exports goods to a corporation in Central Europe in the amount of $100,000. The exporter can accept a note for $100,000, take the note to the corporation, which can accept it and give the company $100,000. Honourable senators will see, therefore, that the risk which the Government would assume under the bill is much greater than the risk it assumes at the present time. Whether or not it is advisable to assume such risk, I am not prepared to say. I do not want to discourage companies from exporting, but it seems to me to be an unusually good deal for these exporters. Previously, for a $100,000 sale they were insured to the extent of $85,000, and they had to wait for that amount until the time for payment expired. Under the bill they not only get $85,000 on $100,000 orders, but they get the $100,000 as soon as they present the note to the corporation.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INCOME TAX BILL

COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to Bill C-48, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, I move that these amendments be concurred in.

The first amendment is to section 18 of the bill, in which appears the expression "charterparty fees or remunerations". The majority in committee felt that "remunerations" was not sufficiently clarified, and that the expression should read "charterparty fees or charterparty remunerations", so as to make it absolutely clear, since that was the intention of the legislation.

The second amendment is to strike out clause 19 of the bill, which provides for doing away with foreign business corporations in the future. Honourable senators will recall that on second reading of the bill in this house there was quite a lengthy debate on the question of foreign business corporations. The vote in committee in favour of striking out the section was a very substantial one.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion for concurrence in the amendments?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson for the second reading of Bill C-49, to provide for the establishment of a National Energy Board.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, my observations will be mainly directed to focussing attention upon a few additional but I believe pertinent general aspects of Bill C-49.

No one can quarrel with the generalized verbalization that the purpose of this legislation is to assure to the Canadian people the most effective use of our energy resources, a truism which we sincerely hope is descriptive of every piece of legislation to whatever sector of our socio-economic and political sector it may have specific reference. All legislation attempts to safeguard the public interest and to deny injustice by regularizing and stabilizing or extending governmental assistance, control, regulation and supervision.

In this sense Bill C-49 is a significant, developmental step in the unfolding drama of governmental intervention to safeguard the more equitable distribution of benefits which are to flow from the accelerated utilization of energy resources, which resources are the heritage of all Canadians. Those who are concerned with the location, production, transmission and distribution of these energy resources must have a fair share of these benefits; so must those who finally make use of this usable energy and pay for it; and so must Canadians as a whole.

In the context of these general purposes which we hope will be achieved by this legislation, I welcome the introduction of this very important piece of legislation, and my observations should be construed as an honest attempt to seek further clarification of its intent and of its probable consequences in actual practice.

In moving the second reading of the National Energy Board bill, the sponsor paid a well-deserved tribute to the first report of the Borden Commission and indicated that some of the recommendations had been incorporated into the legislation under consideration.

I believe that it is proper that some mention be made of the work of the outstanding and responsible Canadians who had been connected with another and earlier royal commission which had been charged with the responsibility for an impartial study of Canada's economic prospects during the coming quarter century.

This reference should be made in order to keep in proper and fair historical perspective the motivating public forces which were instrumental in giving additional validity to the general proposition that the national and public interest appeared to demand the extension of governmental control in the field of energy development and utilization.

May I refer to the findings of a comprehensive study prepared for the Gordon Commission under the direction of Mr. John Davis. This particular study called, "Canadian Energy Prospects", is especially interesting because it attempted to treat comprehensively all forms of energy and attempted to assess the interrelations among the various energy industries. I believe that this was the first such major study effort in Canada.

Basing itself upon this study the Gordon Commission made significant and highly pertinent analytical observations concerning the broad developmental patterns in our various energy industries to date. It attempted to furnish an interrelated forecast of probable future developments and discussed the problem areas becoming increasingly apparent and demanding not only further study and organized research, but additional governmental intervention in the form of regulation and control.

Among these problem areas was the taxation of the oil and gas industry which is discussed in Appendix H of the Gordon Commission report.

Then the Gordon Commission sequentially recommended the establishment of a national energy authority. I refer you to page 146 of the final report, which reads:

> In order that a sound and comprehensive policy may be worked out with regard to development, exports, imports and consumption of all forms of energy in Canada, we propose that a national energy authority be established which would be responsible for—

Then the report goes on to indicate two functions that this national authority should have:

> (a) Advising the federal Government and, upon request, any provincial Government on all matters connected with the long-term requirements for energy in its various forms and in different parts of Canada; methods of promoting the best uses of energy sources from a long-term point of view; export policy, including such questions as the further refining of oil and gas in Canada and the disposal of by-products; coal subsidies, etc.

That was to be the advisory function.

The second function of this national energy authority as recommended by the Gordon Commission was:

> (b) Approving, or recommending for approval, all contracts or proposals respecting the export of oil, gas and electric power by pipe line or transmission wire—

And so on.

Significantly as part of this recommendation there was a recommendation that the organization of the Dominion Coal Board should be merged with that of the proposed national energy authority.

While I am on the topic of the Gordon Commission I think it is fair to point out that there were other observations and recommendations in this energy chapter of the Gordon Commission.

One dealt with the export of electric power. Actually, the report suggested that we should look very carefully at the advisabilty and desirability of providing for the export of electric power. The report said it was almost heresy to mention it at that time. It goes on to discuss the merits—and this is rather significant in the light of what was said today—in permitting some part of the power from new and very expensive projects to be exported at economic rates for stated periods of years under export arrangements foreseeing the replacement or repatriation of this power by the importing country by power generated from conventional fuels or from nuclear fission. I refer honourable senators to pages 142 and 143 of the Gordon Commission Report.

Then there was a fairly interesting discussion of anomalies in the export gas price, and the commission stressed the need for a national energy authority as a counterweight to the bargaining advantage held by the American companies wanting to purchase our gas, because in the United States a pivotal role in setting prices was played by the United States Federal Power Commission.

Thirdly—and I would underscore this point too—on the generally accepted premise that industry and energy are inseparable, the Gordon Commission justified and recommended special assistance to the Maritime provinces from the federal Government to help these Atlantic provinces obtain assured energy resources at low cost, because in the long term it appeared that there seemed to be little hope that the energy resources could be developed in these regions at what we might term a continental or Canadian price average.

Now to return to Bill C-49 itself. I believe that I am correct in saying that this legislation has a dual function.

Frst, it not only tidies up or co-ordinates functions previously performed by the Board of Transport Commissioners and by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but it also extends governmental control and supervisory regulation over gas, oil and electric power.

Parliament is formulating or agreeing to statutory criteria or ground rules which are to govern this extension of public control; and within this framework, Parliament is, as it were, balancing off this additional control between the new National Energy Board and the Governor in Council, with the latter in a residual or controlling position. Actually, Bill C-49 gives to the cabinet wide discretionary powers to regulate oil and gas pipe lines and international power lines, some of which have been tempered by amendments in the other place.

In considering this extension of public control function, the average Canadian who is in agreement with the basic proposition that an extension of control regulation is desirable might ask the following questions:

Has Parliament provided adequately extensive and specific governing criteria, and do these statutory criteria provide sufficient clarification of national policy intent? Are we still leaving too much discretionary authority in the hands of the executive? In this respect I refer specifically to section 87. I personally would prefer to have Part VI of the bill, dealing with exports and imports of oil, left to the final discussion and adjudication of Parliament itself. In fact, many of the arguments we have heard today are perhaps equally applicable to section 87.

The second main function of Bill C-49 concerns the advisory functions of the National Energy Board, which are spelled out in Part II.

I listened with great interest to the remarks of the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon Mr. Hayden), and I recognize the validity of his contention that further clarification is needed of the intent of section 22(1), perhaps in the form of a delimitation of the energy fields in which the board can on its own authority initiate and continue the study and review of the many problem areas connected with energy and sources of energy within and outside Canada. Hence, his concern about the definition of the terms "energy" and "sources of energy".
