PREFACE.

My object in obtruding thefe fheets on the Public will be fully auffwered, if they Thould be the means of attracting the at, tention of our governors and reformers to Ariftote's incomparable Treatife on Politics; which will enable the one to proceed on feady principles of policy; and, perhaps, reftrain the Democratical fanaticifm of the others.
Though the Stagirite is an object of univerfal praife with every writer who has had cccafion to mention him, yet I am fully of opinion there are but few, who have perufed his works with due attention. However, wwhat Mr. Selden faysof him who was oue of the moft learned and judicious men that England ever produced, is fo very remarkable, markable, that I thall lay it before the reader. In his Table Talk, article Truth, he affirms, that there never breatbed that perfon to whom mankindrwas more bebolden. It would be impertinent in me to add any thing after fuch an eulogium from fuch a character. Though I cannot help remarking that in this work, Mr. Selden feems frequently to glance at the Democratical Reveries of -Harrington, Milton, &c.

[ iv ]

I have avoided all metaphyfical difquifitions as being of little utility, frequently impertinent, and only bewildering perfons unaccuftomed to them; it being my view to lay the pure utile before the reader; convinced that in this ftate it will make its deepeft impreffion.

I have inferted a few political reveries of my own, for which I muft claim the reader's indulgence. Not expecting to have any readers who have not perufed Mr. Burke's Reflections, I thought it unneceffary to fwell this effay with a repetition of his arguments, when coinciding in opinion with him.

REFLECTIONS

REVOLUTION IN FRANCE,

CONSIDERED:

Having been engaged for fome time paft in a literary enquiry concerning the faith of the Chriftians during the firf ages of the Church; and though naturally far more inclined to political than ecclefiaftical fubjects, yet I was fo circumftanced, that, had I paid any particular atteation to the former, I would have loft the fruits of what I had collected regarding the latter; my mind unfortunately not being of that pliable nature, as that of fome celebrated Moderns, who can vary their ftudies ad libitum, and I prefume without any of them fuffering by it. In comparifon of fuch geniufes, I can be fcarcely deemed an ideot, being fenfible of an immediate confufion of ideas, when any new fubject forces itfelf upon my attention. However, Arifotle reconciles me fomewhat to myfelf for this limitednefs of intellect, as he obferves that a man cannot cafily pay attention to many things at the fame time; by jame time meaning days, months, or years, if the fubject thould be found to demand the entire attention for fuch a fpace. As this philofopher attained to a more folid and comprehenfive knowledge than ever it has fallen to the lot of any other man to arrive at; it may be prefumed, that that method which he recommends to others, was the fame which he himfelf purfued.

The many difagreeable feelings I was frequently confcious of, during this ftate, by finding myfelf debarred from making myfelf mafter of thofe caufes which led to the French revolution, and of the proceedings of the National Affembly, can only be conceived by thofe perfons commonly called Democratifs, and who befides can fay with Terence, Homo fum, bumani nil a me alienum puto.

However I fubmitted to what I deemed my duty: and having at length brought the enquiry to a period which enabled me to difcontinue it for a while, I have feized the intermediate time, time, before I recommence my ecclefiaftical ftudies, to confider what has been advanced concerningthis revolution. Though it appears to be wonderful to others, yet I confers it does not appear to be fo to me; for, when in France about ten years ago, I found the middle clafs of people almoft univerfally of one fentiment, namely, alienated from the eftablifhed government in church and ftate, and wifhing in their ftead that of England. Nay, happening to be at Strafburgh when the news of Rodney's vietory arrived there, I was prefent when a young officer, in the prefence of at leaft twenty others, held forth upon the advantages of a free political conftitution, in comparifon of that of France, with great ability for perhaps an hour. So that, upon the arrival of the news in July, 1789, of the oppofition to the King's will, manifefted by the National Affembly, I made up my mind concerning its final iffue, namely, that the government of that country would become a pure Democracy; which every circumftance that has fince taken place, ftrongly points out will be the cataftrophe.

[ 3 ]

While in this ftate of mind Mr. Burke's Reflections on the Revolution in France were announced, and fhortly after a hoft of anfwerers. Before I proceeded to a careful perufal of either the one or the other, it occurred to me that a previous examination of Ariftotle's Treatife on Politics might enable me to form a rue judgement upon the queftion. For, from my knowledge of feveral of the Democratifts, I could entertain no doubt of the praife-worthinefs of their motives : and I fhould have made the fame conclufion in regard of Mr. Burke, though I had no knowledge whatever of his character, except from fame, which has proclaimed him a perfect philanthropift, and as fuch mult, in the main, agree with his opponents, in having the welfare of man for his object, though he might differ from them with regard to the means, namely, the mode of government upon which it in a great meafure depends. I therefore furpected that there might be fomething wrong in the principles upon which each of them had founded very different conclufions with refpect to the French revolution.

Before I proceed farther, I donot think it irrelevant to obferve here, that until within thefe two years, I have been among the foremoft of the Democratifts: nor did I begin to fufpect the political foundnefs of the principles of this party, till the bufinefs of the wool bill had been fettled about two years ago in Parliament, fo much againft the true intereft of Great Britain : But during the difcuffion of which, though a bill of the moft jerious confequences, there could fearcely be got a fufficient fufficient number of Members to form a Houfe upon the days on which it was to be agitated; for the very obvious reafon, that had they attended and vored, agreably to their conviction, againft the bill, they would have thereby endangered their being returned reprefentatives in the following parliament.-For, not like the feattered country gentlemen, who never act upon fyftem, or as one body, had the manufacturing promoters of that bill been difappointed in their object, the manufacturers throughout the kingdom, in every branch, would have entered into a private, nay, perhaps into a public combination, to vote againft thofe Members, who were inimical to it. I am inclined to think that the Minifter himfelf might have got a hint, that if the bill. did not pafs, the manufacturing intereft would declare itfelf againft him, for, from the difficulty of making up a Houfe at times I weakly imagined that the bill would fall to the ground, for th:s reafon only, being the mildeft death it could receive.--But fuch a hint, if there was a hint given, quickly procured a fufficient number of Members to attend. This affair fatisfied me, that there was fomething wrong in the principles I had adopted. For I at once faw, that, were there eftablifhed fuch a reprefentation of the People as I had hitherto hitherto contended for, it would be impoffible, without bloodihed, ever to rectify fuch deviations from univerfal benefit to the peculiar advantage of one clafs of the people, in whofe power the electing the P.eprefentatives would neceffarily ever hereafter be. I thence concluded, that in every well ordered State all perfons depending on others, (as manufacturers upon the Mafter-manufacturers) for their daily bread, ought not to be entrufted with any political privileges, eitber in regard of choofing Members of Parliaments, or electing Magiftrates. For, depending on their employers, their extreme ignorance might render them dangerous inftruments in the hands of a faction. Such mechanics Ariftotle calls flaves, Souror, 1. 3. ch. 5 .

It is with difficulty men correct their own erroneous notions : yer, by the current of my thoughts concerning the exclufion of thofe perfons from having a fhare in the government who depended upon others for their daily bread; I was, I may fay, neceffarily led to difcover that there was another clafs of people, which, in like manner, in every well-ordered government, ought to be equally excluded from interfering folitically in what concerned government; namely, all thofe who bought to fell again, or who lived by traffick. For fuch perfons, being neceffarily

[ 7 ]

Gible, leviaar adwhofe vould conerfons $n$ the ought either $t s$, or their rends of aves, farily taken up eight or ten hours in the day with their bufinefs, have not time fufficiently to reflect upon political queftions, or regulations, to enable them to form a proper judgment of their own, with regard to the probable confequences of them. As this cannot be difputed, it neceffarily follows, that, unlefs we choofe to follow a very different practice in regard of government, from what we do in the other concerns of life, all perfons, who are fo taken up with their refpective trades or bufinefs, as neceffarily to preclude their attending to other concerns, fhould not, in a well-ordered fate, be allowed any political privileges, no more than thofe perfons who maintain themfelves by their daily labour. Farther, perfons of this defcripcion in general (though I acknowledge there are many exceptions) are fo given up to pelf, or the making of money, that the profperity of the country is a very fecondary object with them.

Having come to thefe conclufions, which appeared to me to be fo well founded, and obvious, that I thought no ingenuous, candid, or difpaffionate perfon could object to them, whatever might be the fentiments of this jufly celebrated ancient, I took up Ariftotle's is reatife upon Politics, and was not a little furprifed to find that thefe two claffes of men are particularly objected to by him ; againft their having any political privileges vefted in them, and for thofe very obvious reafons which had occurred to myfelf. Fortified by fuch an authority, I entertain nodoubt of the folidity of them. Nay, I know that they are fo by my own experience: and though the experience of an individual will by no means juftify a general conclufion, I believe few perfons who have canvaffed counties, cities, &c. but have had ample experience of it. The fact being indifputable, it will bring Mr. Burke and his antagonifts much nearer to one another than could be expected, unlefs indeed that the Democratifts, in the phrenzy of their zeal, fhould boldly run counter to all experience. The aiathority of this celebrated antient fhould have the more weight upon this queftion, as having flourifhed juft before, I may fay, the extinction of the Grecian republics, it is obvious, that he mult have had greater advantages in perceiving and confidering the defects of this mode of government than what moderns can poffers.

[ 8 ]

Some, perhaps, may imagine that this treatife of Ariftotle's, inftead of flowing from thofe principles implanted by the All-wife Creator in the breaft of every human creature, is only a fyftem, or rather a fcheme adapted, after the event, to explain the caufes of the deftruction y pothole myrtain that ough reans per$& x$. fact : and than mooldly ority nore thed the huit and ernof thefe republics. But in this they would do him great injuftice. For, fo far from his treatife being regulated by what ought to be deemed only cafual events, it in fact unfolds the caufes of profperity and misfortune, even of thofe Republics which perifhed after him : what he has advanced on this head, concerning Carthage, whofe fate he pronounced a century before the firt Punic War, is very remarkable, and the more fo as he fpeaks very highly of its political conflitution. But his fagacious mind was not fo dazzled by fome of the beauties of it, as to make him infenfible of its peculiar defects. His principles farther explain how it has happened, that the Swifs governments, notwithftanding their very defective political conflitutions, have been fo little, if at all, fubject to feditions: and why the more extenfive kingiy governments of Europe, notwithflanding their fill more defective forms of government, are fo free of the fame defect. In a word, I will venture to affirm, that there are more juft notions concerning government in this fingle treatife, which does not even exift entire, than in all the books which have been written on the fame fubject for two thoufand years. I have read Machiavel, whom one of our hiftorians, I think, calls the Prince of Politicians, and Harrington, Syaney, Locke, B &c.

[ 10 ]

&cc. yet I frruple not to affirm, that if compared with Ariftotle, they merit not the appellation of children.
We have an Englifh expofition of this treatife by a Mr. Ellis, but whether judicioufly executed or not, I can fay nothing, having never feen it. If it be not well expounded by this gentleman, whoever would give a good tranflation of it, would be entitled to the appellation of a Benefaltor of bis Country.

Every writer whom I have met with, who mentions Ariftotlc, fpeaks of him as by far the firft of philofophers. I have only read his Treatife upon Politics, which, though a part is loft, contains every thing that is well advanced upon government, in all the other treatifes I have met with upon that fubject: befides its being far more clearly developped. It is evident from feveral paffages in this treatife, that it depended or connected with his Treatife on Etbics or Morals; and of courfe was founded upon his accurate and extenfive knowledge of the human heart, which enabled him to forefee confequences, not only which were to come to pafs fhortly after his own time, but even it may be faid, to all eternity; or while man preferves his prefent affections.

[ ii ]

Notwithftanding the univerfal praife which is beftowed upon this eminent philofopher, yet that his writings are very much unknown, nay, perhaps even by thofe who praife him, is very evident, from no notice having been at all taken of what he had advanced concerning government in his Treatife on Politics; during the American war, or the late commotions in France.

It is not my intention to offer a complete analyfis of this treatife of Ariftotle's. My object is only to point out thofe perfons in whom this writer would veft the government, which are precifely thofe, whom I have already mentioned : namely, thofe who bave a fufficiency to enable then to live idle lives; and excluding from any fhare in it thole otbers who depend on their labour for their daily bread; as alfo all thofe webo buy to fell again, or that live by trafic. As the determining in what perfons the government ought to be vefted is the foundation upon which the entire fabric of civil polity fhould be erected, the being agreed upon this head is indifpenfably neceffary, ere any thing fhould be farther advanced. I fhall therefore take it as a thing proved, that perfons neceffarily dependent, and thofe others whofe object is fordid pelf, ougbt to be excluded from all concern in the government of a flate; which I think fhould not be allowed to be an extraordinary conceffion from the Democrates, till they are able to adduce one fingle inftance of a government, in which perfons of cither of thefe deferiptions were a conflituent part, which deferved the name of a well-arranged government, in which the fecurity of the perfon and property of the individual was chiefly, or at ali confulted, when fuppofed to interfere with their interefts, and in which an individual might employ his intellectual faculties', as was moft agreeable to him without perfonal danger. For thefe circumftances, and thefe circumftances only, entitle a political conftitution to the appellation of a happy, iafe, and equal government.

It may perhaps be anked, who are thofe perfons, which may be faid to have a fufficiency to enable them to live without having recourfe to bodily labour for their fupport. Here I profefs that Ariftotle affords no clue to direet me. Perhaps in that part of his Treatife upon Politics which is loft, this very neceffary queftion had been refolved. If fo, as the lofs is irreparable, it depends on the moderns to fill up the chafm.

Having little dependance upon my own fagagacity, what I fhall offer upon this head, howcver conclufive and folid it may appear to myfelf, I thall entertain great furpicion of, when unfupported by, I wight almoft fay, my infallible guide.

It is obvious, that the fame annual revenue, or cenfus, differs in value according to the fituation of the place where the valuation is made. For inflance 1000 . is of far lefs value at London than at John a Groat's Houfe, that is, it has far lefs power; which is what I here mean by value. It is evident that a man of $500 \%$ a year in Middlefex is a man of little political influence in confequence of his fortune: but in the north of Scotland a perfon of fuch an eftate would be a perfon of fome confequence: therefore, if the cenfus was to be determined diecetly as the jncome there would be great injuftice : for in this cafc perfons of much greater political confequence and independence would be excluded all fhare in the government, in confequence of their property lying at a diftance from the capital, which rendered it of lefs nominal value, though of more real influence, than another nearer the capital of a greater annual income. The proprietor would jufly deem this injuftice, which would give rife to heart-burnings, diffatisfactions, &c. the forerunners of feditions, &c.

The defideratum then is, to find out fome object which will for ever determine the relative confequence of the conftituent Members of the State, and this I apprehend may, in a great meafure, be effected by the price of labour. For inftance, a labouring man in fiddlefex, with his family, will be able to earn three times more money in a year, than a labouring man and family will do in the north of Scotland. As this cannot be difputed, it follows, that 5001 . a year in the north of Scotland is equal in influence to $1500 \%$ a year in Middlefex : becaufe it commands an equal portion of labour. Though little acquainted with the inhabitants of thofe two countries, $I$ am inclined to think, that a gentleman of 5001 . a year in the north of Scotland, is at leaft equal in perional confequence and refpectability with a gentleman of thrice that income in Middlefex.

Having, as I apprehend, difcovered the proper medium for regulating the cenfus, it may be fecondly demanded, what I deem to be a proper cenfus, or annual income, to entitle its poffeffor to be a citizen, or have a thare in the government, either directly or i iarectly? This I apprehend is alfo in a great meafure anfwered. For, as the earnings of the labourer are in general held to be balf of the amount of the earnings or income of himfelf and family, it follows, that that perfon who enjoys a certain annuity for his own life of fuch amount as to double the earnings or income of the labource wherever he happens to refide, ought to be deemed to be a perfon who may fupport himfelf without manual labour, or lead an idle life. So that if the earnings of a labourer and his family in Middlefex amount to 50l. a year, fo much fould his annual life-income amount to who refides in Middlefex, to entitle him to the privilege of voting for Reprefentatives in Parliament. But in the north of Scotland, where the earnings of a labouring man and his family perhaps exceed not the third part of $50 l$. or 16 l . 13 s .4 d . a cenfus or annual life-income of $16 \%$. $3^{s .} 4 d$. ought to be deemed there, as having equal power, to be equivalent to an annual income of $50 \%$ in Middlefex, and fufficient to entitle its pofleffor to the fame privileges as the inhabitant of Middlefex of a triple greater annual income. So that, as the labourer's wages would be throughout the kingdom, $f o$ in like manner thould be the income, throughout the feveral parts of the kingdom, required to entitle its poffeffor to the privileges of citizenihip, that is, of voting for Reprefentatives, or of being elceted a Reprefentative, or of acting as a Juryman : or, as Ariftotle concifely fays, a perfon rapable of pafing judgment and of

 Lib. 3. c. 1.

What Ariftotle has advanced concerning government is fo fimple, fo clear, and fo convincing, when compared to the indiftinet muddy writings of the moderns, that it alone evinces that thefe in general have prefumptuouly written from their own imaginations, unfupported by any experience, fince they muft have known of the exiftence of this inimitable, though imperfect, treatife on government, which could not be locked up from them on account of their general proficiency in the dead languages. A treatife alfo compofed by the ableft head that ever exifted; and upon a more general experience than will ever again perhaps offer itfelf to man.

This incomparable philofopher obferves, that there are three diftinct forts of direet, ftraight, or legitimate governments; i. c. governments in which the governors and governed are in unifon, each approving of the eftablifhed political conftitution of the State : mamely, the Kingly, which firft of all takes place in infant focieties, the Members of which, after agreeing to fome laws and regulations concerning the general government, appoint one of themfelves to be King (Ba $\alpha, \lambda \varepsilon \omega_{s}$ ) to enforce them; and when any thing unprovided

vided for occurs, he was commiffioned to act according to his judgment. The reafin why this power was vefted in one man, Ariftotle affigns to be, the difficulty of finding many perfons, in the firft ftages of fociety, capable of executing the powers of government. This appears to me to be not only folid; but alfo a juft delineation of the governments which exift among the North Americans and other newly difcovered favages.

The fecond fort of direet government is, where the powers of government are vefted in the beft of the inhabitants; elected or chofen to their refpeetive offices by the other Members of the Community. This fort of government he calls an Ariftocracy. Election being that which conftituted it to be fuch : it being effential to it.

The third fort of direct government, and to which, in preference to every other form, t.e. gives a decided preference, as being the moft conducive towards promoting the temporal profperity and the mental improvement of its Members, is what he calls a Politeia or Commonwealth. To form fuch a political conflitution it is neceffary, that the fupreme council of the nation, be it called Senate, Great Council, or Parliament, hould be compofed of a certain number of citizens elecied VIVA NOCE, who of courfe would be cbiffy the richef and mof powerful citizens : and a proportionate or equal number of other citizens cbofen BY SUFFRAGE who of confequence would be the moft virtuous part of the cilizens. Were thefe chofen by election, he obferves, that only fuch would in general be elected as were agreeable to the rich, and therefore in this cafe might be difpenfed with as of no ufe.

Thofe of our modern reformers, who infift ufon our Members of the Commons Houfe of Parliament being viva voce elected, would be guilty of an abfurdity, or a felo de fe, according to Ariftotle : for fuch Members, inftead of being $D_{\ell}-$ mocrates, or defenders of the rights of the lower claffes of the citizens, would be Arifocrates. I cannot help recommending to them, in their future exertions for the public good, to be guided by this great philofopher, who feems to have profited from his obfervations.

How greatly muft the liberal reader of this treatife conceive of Philip and Alexander of Macedon, who countenanced and cherifhed the man who fo clearly, and philofophically afferted the happinefs and welfare of the human fpecies, to be the ultimate object, and primum mobile of every lawful government. Great fouls have no fear. They feel their own fuperiority. Their object is to cherifh the fublime and virtuous cha-characters wherever they are likely to be met with.

Ariftotle, having fet forth thefe three forts of dirett government, obferves, that there are corruptions of each of them : of the firf, when the King, inftead of acting upon principles of general good, acts from felff/b motives, preferring his own intereft to that of the citizens at large. This mode of governing he calls a Tyranny. Secondly, when the Ariftocracy, or the beft and richeft Members of a ftate, manage the public affairs with the view of benefiting themfelves, regardlefs of the general intereft of the citizens: this he calls an Oligarchy. Tbirally, when the powers of government being vefted in the general body of the citizens, the public affairs are carried on in fuch a manner as to favour the Poor only, who are neceffarily the majority of every fociety, regardlefs of the rights of the Rich : This fort of government he calls a Democracy. According to this philofopher then there are three forts of direct or lawful governments, ramely, Monarcby, Arifocracy, and a Politeia, or a Commonwealth compofed of an Ariftocracy and a Democracy combined in one Council: and three corruptions of thefe: Tyranny, Oligarchy, and Democracy. All other forms of

\mathrm{C}_{2} \text { govern. }

government he fhews to be deviations, more or lefs, from one or other of thefe.

Ariftotle further thews, that the natural progrefs of government is firt Monarchy-fecondly Ariftocracy-thirdly Oligárchy-fourthly Ty-ranny-fifthly a Democracy. Alfo that wealth is the polar ftar of Oligarchies : honour of Ariftocracies - and liberty of Democracies: the truth of which both ancient and modern hiftory have evinced. Our modern reformers would think their caufe was lof, were they to admit that Kingly government was the firft lawful gavernment, as founded upon confent: and ftill more, that Ariftocracy was the next in fucceffion. But this was no fumbling block in the way of Ariftotle: For he placed the foundation of government upon the affent of the citizens, that is, of thofe perfons who had entered upan their fftietb year, and who were able to fupport themfelves without labour : and who muit in every government be a very different fet of people from a bafe populace, or fordid thopkeepers, manufacturers, and tallow-chandlers, as they are in general : In fhort he lays it down, that an equal Commonwealth can be only conftituted among a highly improved people, in which the citizens fhould receive a public education, cation, that they might hereafter be uleful citizens.

We modern reformers, it feems, are always above or below the mark. If a public education is to be the adoptes mode, oui notions become fublime; and all the people are to be publicly educated. The Grecian commonwealths are quoted as examples of its feafibility. But no Greek ever entertained fuch a romantic idea. The ordinary education of the middle claffes in life does not fecure them frem falling victims to every fpecies of vice : and yet he would be a hardy adventurer, who would declare, that the education intended for the children of the poor by Sunday fchools, approaches, in sia, effential refpect, to that which the children of the decent claffes of life actually do réceive.

Ariftotle, having difcriminated the above-mentioned fix forts of government, obferves, that all the evils which have fprung up in focieties, have arifen from two caufes : firt, by thofe perfons, who being fenitle that they were equal to other perfons in one refpect, thought they were equal to them in every refpect : for thefe having fhewn, that by nature, all men are equal, they therefore claimed equal rights : but he obferves, that this mode of a:guing is fophiftical, being from the

the particular to the univerfal : befides, though it be granted, that by nature all men are equal, yet fociety having had for its object the prefervation and fecurity of the already acquired property in the individuals, in whom it was at that time vefted; its firft members, therefore, muft have been proprietors. Hence it is evident, that if other individuals, zuitbout property, joined themfelves to this fociety, they would not be intitled to a portion of the properties of the firf, or conftituent members of the fociety. It is even obvious, that they might think themfelves fortunate in being entertained as fervants or flaves.

The fecond caure of the misfortunes which fpring up in focieties, is, that thofe individuals, who, in fome refpects, as the advantages of fortune, birth, &c. being fuperior to other men, conclude that they are therefore fuperior to them in every refpect: this being alfo obvioufly arguing from the particular to the univerfal : for perfons of this difpofition, proud of their accidental adivantages, by claiming the folid ones of governing their inferiors, gave'rife to feditions, which terminated either in victory or defeat, in an Oligarchy or a Democracy. Few, I apprehend, are fo unverfed in human affairs as not to have been frequently fenfible of thefe fophiftical phiftical modes of arguing in the advocates of Oligarchy and Democracy.

The great object of every legiflator, according to this profound philofopher, fhould be to difcover what mode of government would moft conduce to the happinels of thofe individuals, who can live according to their fancies, that is, idle lives, without following any calling or profeffion. This I apprehend is contrary to every political idea actually received among mankind, be them advocates of tyranny-of Oligarchy-of Arifto-cracy-or of Democracy-I truft, however, I Thall evince its juftnefs.

Such a mode of government he lays down so be this : the magiftrates to be ELECTED by the people; for thefe fhould always be the principal perfons of the State.-Secondly, a Council, Senate, or Parliament, partly chofen by election, and partly by fuffrage, and of courfe compofed of the firft and richeft citizens, and of the beft and moft virtuous : each thus tempering the oth : The ultimate judgment, or of giving verdicts, to be in the citizens, that is, of thofe who had a wherewithal to fupport themfelves without labour:

Ariftotle farther obferves, that no perfon fhould be capable of acting as a citizen, or as we would fay, of having the privilege of voting for a Reprefentative in Parliament, or acting as

[ 24 ]

2 Juryman, before he had compleated his forlyninth year: neither fhould he be capable of being returned as a Reprefentative for Parliament, nor of aeting as a Juryman after his feventieth year. In what light would our beardlefs legiflators hold fuch a regulation. It was not advanced upon the authority of Vandalic or Gotbic wifdom, or rather abfurdity. It is the refutt of the combined and matured wifdom fortified by experience of the wifert people hitherto known.

Before men have arrived at the perfection of their rational faculties, which Ariftotle fixes at their $j i f f i e t h$ year, they ought not to be entrufted with the management of the public concerns of a great nation, where an error may entail fo many evils upon pofterity. At the age of feventy, men begin to be too cautious, and have not fufficient enterprize to feize the fortunate incidents perpetually offering themfelves, which would tend to the benefit of the community.

Ariftotle obferves that the feafible only fhould be attempted, when a reform in government is in contemplation. Might not then a partial reform take place immediately among ourfelves : but with regard to this laft particular concerning the legiflative age, the evil day, "when " children would ceafe to rule over us," might be,

Perhaps it may be thought, that Ariftotle having chiefly in view the fmall Grecian republics, his obfervations concerning the beft form of goverament relate only to very circumferibed ftates: but he will greaiiy deceive himfelf who makes fuch a conclufion. For this philofopher's wifh was that all Grecce fhould be reduced into a fingle republic, in order that it might be enabled thereby to conquer the world, and effectually promote the happinefs of all its inhabitants, by the eftablifhment of good governments : and doubtlefs intended that his maxims thould be applicable to a commonwealth, compofed of all the republics in Greece, which would have been, with regard to extent and population, the moft extenfive and populous hitherto known : and evinces, contrary to what has been advanced by Lord Kaimes and others, that a republican form of government is not folely adapted to ftates of fmall extent; at leaft that they are not fupported in their notion by the greateft, without comparifon, of the antients.
Perhaps the following fketch for an improvcment of our political conftitution will not be found very repugnant to what Ariftotle teaches concerning fuch modifications. The kingly D power power to remain as it is: one Council confifting of fix hundred Members, of which three hundred to be chofen by election, who of courfe would be Lords, or Commoners of great confequence from money or landed wealth : the other three hundred by fuffrage, who we may fuppofe would be the moft virtuous characters of the nation. The three kingdoms to be united, which ought to be effected, coute qui coute ; it might coft a million of money to influence the Irifh to embrace a meafure which would tend more to her happinefs and profperity than her fettered Parliament will be able, or rather allowed, to effect for centuries : the three kingdoms to be divided into certain divifions, as nearly equal in population, with refpect to citizens, as might be : each divifion to return to the Great Council three Members by election, and three Members by fufrage, to continue Members of it, quamdiu fe bene gefferint, or until the majority of the citizens fignified their defire to the proper officer of choofing a new or other delegates: all the citizens to be entered in the Sheriff's or other returning officer's book; who fhould appoint an annual regular meeting upon a certain day, for regiftering and examining the pretenfions of thofe, who would offer themfelves for that purpofe. As every perfon fhould be obliged obliged to ferve his country who was elected, did it happen that any of thofe who were chofen by fuffrage were perfons not poffeffing 1000\%. a year, freehold property; the deficiency in this refpect ought to be made up to them for their attendance out of the Treafury. Befides this great council, there ought to be another of one hundred Members, which fhould enjoy the judicial power as at prefent exercifed by the Houfe of Lords: one to be chofen by each of the hundred divifions: to be perfons above fifty years of age : and each of them to be entitled to $1000 \%$. a year from the Treafury, while they acted in this capacity. The auditing the public accounts, of whatever nature : the punifhing culprits, whom the exifting laws would not affect, even capitally : that is, when they found it neceffary they fhould apply to the Great Council for an act of attainder, which, upon examining the cafe fhould act according to its difcretion : &c. &c.

It frikes me, that a judicature of this nature would be much moie unobjectionable than our Houfe of Lords. Legiflators fhould not be their own Expofitors. I apprehend the judicature appointed by the Houfes of Commons and Lords, from amongft their Members, to try Eaft Indian culprits, labours under this defect. Ariftotle was for having the Magiftracy in the rich but elected: and the judicature, or that which paffed fentence, in the citizens. However, as our conflitution actually exifts, perhaps the prefent mode is in a great meafure unexceptionable.

I am farther to obferve, that vefting the powers of the community, or the right of citizenfhip, or of voting for Reprefentatives, or of paffing fentence as Jurors, in perfons who enjoy a fufficiency to enable them to live idle lives, and the having only one (reat Eouncil, or Houfe of Parliament, is not fo great an alteration from the feudal fyftem of government, as our prefent form. Originally there was only one Houre of Parliament, compofed of the tenants in capite : the chief of whom acquired the appellation of Barons, and whofe voices were generally decifive concerning the bufinefs in hand: this, independently of the expences which neceffarily followed upon attending in Parliament, was the reafon, why the poorer tenants in capite avoided attending: which was the lefs neceffary, as what the greater tenants or Barons had determined in regard of themfelves proportionably took place with regard to them : fo that the leffer tenants in capite, were certain of having their rights defended; for, except the greater tenants in capitt, or the Barons were firft oppreffed, they could not be oppreffed.

oppreffed. In like manner it is declared in the great charter, that no man fhould be condemned and punifhed except in the jucgment of his peers, or due procefs of law. But who were peers or pares in thofe lays? doubtlefs neither defpifed fhopkeepers, mechanics, nor manufacturers: they were tenants in capite, to whom this appellation could at all apply: therefore the vefting the judicial power in thofe who can pafs idle lives, or live upon their income, would be not only acting agreeably to the judgment of Ariftotle, but alfo in a great meafure to that of our anceftors; for tenants in capite muft be allowed to have enjoyed fuch a fhare of this world's goods, as to have enabled them to live idle lives.

That none but tenants in capite had originally a right of being prefent, or of being reprefented in Parliament, I apprehend, is proved by Doctor Henry, in his Hiftory of England, and by Mr. Miller in his incomparable, one might almoft fay, divinely-infpired Effay on the Britifh Conftitution. Thofe who infinuate the contary, without attempting a confutation of thefe learned and ingenious writers, are methinks much to blame, as minleading the people.

I thall now proceed to confider the juftnefs of Mr. Burke's charge againft the National Affembly, namely, " that the Members of it are utterly " incompetent to the work upon which they bave " engaged: to wit, of forming a new political con" Aitution for France." This he fhews by examining their regulations concerning the conftituting the future National Afemblies-concerning the future Magifracy-and concerning the fudi-cature-I fhall not repeat his invincible arguments, proving beyond doubt their abfolute fatuity in what they have determined concerning each of thefe fubjects; and in each, as has been feen, he is fupported by Ariftotle. But, according to Ariftotle, thefe three heads are the moft important of thofe which fhould engage the attention of the Legiflator : therefore their having failed upon each of them evinces their utter incompetency as Legiflators.

Secondly, Mr. Burke has farther proved their incompetency, beyond the power of contradiction, from their regulations concerning the army and finance. Their abfurdities refpecting the former are fcarcely credible. Mr. Burke's account on this head is not contradicted by Monfieur Depont.-Their financial regulations are, equally exceptionable. Farther, Mr. Burke has evinced, that in regard of the clergy they have acted unjufly; and towards their King uilgeneroufy: thus poifoning the fources of virtuous energy. Yet.there is an anonymous publication in which the writer, modefly becoming his own judge, taxes thofe incomparable refeetions, doubtlefs the offspring of honeft indignation, which I doubt not will reflect more honour upon England, than any political tract of the age, with being intemperate. Let him evince his thefis by the authority of an Ariftotle-of a Po-lybius-or even of a Machiavel; and then, but not before, he may be liftened to. The weaknefs and folly of this Affembly is beyond belief. They expect to be a powerful nation, and yet they have deftroyed all military difciplineThey expect to be a powerful nation, yet have deprived themfelves of the fources of finance. In future the army will pay only what obedience it chufes. The citizens what taxes they think fit. Their Monarch is dethroned, and will never acquire any future authority-Their Monarch has been abafed, and will be more fo.

It may be afked, is there no remedy for all this evil? I anfwer, I believe not. No future authority can exift in the nation itfelf, unlefs a long civil, or foreign war, fhould take place, either of which I think very unlikely to happen; during which, a party, or an individual, might acquire fo much authority as to enable it, or him, to enforce, by means of an obedient, well.-

paid army, a fyftem of taxation equivalent to fupport the expences of a powerful ftate.

With regard to the individuals who compofe the National Affembly, I entertain no doubt of their integrity and patriotifm in general. What Mr. Burke objects to them is their incompetency: and yet they had an outline before them fo obvious, that they are fearcely to be excufed for deviating from it: I mean the Britifh Conftitution, which ten years ago I know to have been the ultimate wifh of every rational Frenchman that I had converfed with : and furely the Britifh Conftitution, without its obvious defects, I mean our imperfect reprefentation in the Lower Houfe, might fatisfy, even an ardent patriot: nay, it was far preferable even to a better political conflitution, becaufe, in cafe of any difputes arifing between the French King and his fubjects, arguments adduced from the Britifh Contitution and its practice in like cafes, would be conclufive againft royalty, fo that whilft England preferved her freedom, a counter-revolution would have been hopelefs in France. The patriots fhould farther have known, that Slaves are not at once capable of acting the part of freemen : that men in general to be fuch muft be educated for this flate: therefore, till this took place, it was a glorious circumflance to fecure fecure fo capital a political conflitution until (fubject fcarcely to any ftorm) the fucceffion of the next generation, which might be educated for a more perfect ftare of freedom: though I profefs that I think the Finglifh Conftitution, modified agreeably to reafon and good fenfe ; or being made more confonant to Ariftotle's idea, might fatisfy the moft ardent wifh of the moft violent Democrate: I mean, by making the Members of Parliament the Reprefentatives of thofe perfons who, having the wherecuithal to fupport themfelves and families, purfued none of the fordid trades, and who had entered into their fffitith year, to be elected by ballot-and continue Reprefentatives quamdiu fe bene geferint.

But, as the Members of the National Affembly have quitted this obvious line of conduct, it may be afked, what they fhould now do. I fincerely confefs my incompetency to anfwer this queftion. Mr. Burke, in the continuation of his Reflections; will perhaps point out their proper line of conduct. But as perhaps he may not do it, and as often an ill-judged idea has given birth to better founded ones, I fhall not fcruple offering my notion, in hopes that it will induce others to do the fame; and thus perhaps fomething ufeful on this fide the water may be produced: for with regard to the other fide I utterly defpair of it.

[ 34 ]

The frlt thing I would recommend would be the returning upon their fteps, and eftablifhing the Eritifh Conftitution agreeably to what has been juft advanced. But there is an evil which is overwhelming the flate, and which, unlefs intantly oppofed, will render every fcheme abortive for introducing happinefs into that diftracted and unfortunate kingdom ; namely, the want of unployment of the poor: for the wealth of the entire world would not feed the Poor of France; whereas induftry will at once effect it ; and when effected, it would then be a flourifhing, happy, and powerful kingdom, under a proper government: but until then, NEVER.

The object then is to find employment, productive employment, for the Poor. Coute qui coute, this muft be deemed the fine qua non. It can be only effected, even gradually, by means of great premiums to the manufaciurers of goods of the flaple of France: I fay, to the manufacturers, and not according to modern practice, to mer-chant-exporters : if the goods be manufactured exporters will always be found ; befides, that it is far more cligible, that premiums to the amount of from one to ten thoufand pounds fhoule be diftributed among many, than fwallowed up by one. Agriculture fhould likewife be encouraged :

raged : in a word every thing fhould be done to induce thofe perfons who can command a capital to employ it in manufactures of one fort or other.

To bring this about with a $f_{1}$ eedy effect would doubtlefs require four or five millions annually. But where, it will be afket, is fuch a fum to he procured? I have already faid coute qui coute, be the money where it will, it muft be got, and for this purpofe only. For till this is effected nothing can be done. Whether the fale of the crown lands-whether the reducing the fleet to twenty or thirty frigates, and other naval expences proportio::ably-whether the reducing the army to one hundred thoufand well-difciplined and well-paid men, or half that number, would admit of an application of fuch a fum from the public fervice, is moe than I can determine : but if it would not, the deficiency Chould be made up from the fale of clerical property, and the needful deduction from the public annuities, or creditors. It is obvious, that this evil would leffien annually, for the taxes, in confequence of the encreafing wealth of the people, whom I fhall not decorate with the appellation of citizens, would become daiiy more productive. It is alfo needlefs to obferve, that it would be abfolutely neceffary to engage a certain fum for a feries of years, perhaps twenty, from the public income, towards the encouragement of each kind of manufacture, ro induce wealthy capitalifts to rifk their property.

Secondly, there is a preferable fcheme, namely , a deputation of a felect number of the Na tional Aftembly, with a letter to Mr. Burke from the King of the French, requefting that he would take upon himfelf the new-modelling the French conftitution. This may be thought a Feu d'efprit, but I profefs I never was more ferious, The antient republics had recourfe to expedients of this nature, and that not feldony. Nay, even the republics in Italy, during the middle ages, had frequently recourfe to it, if I recollect rightly, To poffefs magnanimity may be thought now-a-days a quaint idea. If the National Affembly poffefs any, it fhould furely adopt this meafure, unieis a better one would offer itfelf. As to their own infufficiency it is needlefs, after what has been faid upon it, to dwell on it farther. Mr. Burke has approved himfelf the ableft politician of the age; and doubtlefs the magnanimity of fuch a proceeding in the National Affembly would roufe every latent faculty of his foul to realize their expectations. But notwithftanding the brilliancy, and I may add, the policy of fuch a meafure ${ }_{x}$ $\ddagger$ think it would not now anfwer. The want of difcipline

lragenduce namee Na Burke hat he ng the ight a more arfe to eldom. ig the it, if I ty may If the furely would $y$ it is it, to proved ; and roceede every expeclliancy, eafure ${ }_{x}$ want of ripline difcipline in the army-the inability of the people to pay taxes-the Democratic principles pervading every part of this unfortunate country, would render abortive the efforts of any individual, though invefted with the greateft civil power, unaccompanied with a well-difciplined army to enforce obedience. I fay then, that Mr ; Burke, forefeeing thefe obftructions, and the confequences of them, would, in my apprehenfion, refufe accepting the office of legiflator. I would then recommend to the French nation, though thirdly and lafly, what would be moft advantageous to themfelves, and to the world at large, namely, of Becoming a Member of the Britifh empire, as.I $\mathrm{E}-$ land is. It is needlefs to obferve, that fhe might make almoft her own terms, conditionally that the engaged herfelf to have the fame friends and foes as Britain. In this cafe her fleet might be reduced with fafety to the number of frigates I have mentioned. Their troops to fifty or fixty thoufand men. The favings to be applied towards giving energy and life to national induftry. The Englifh conflitution was the viifh of France. Such an union would be better to her than the Englifh conflitution; for it would be acquiring the real $p s$ iver of Britain for an empty name, for fuch it muft ever be with regard to the governed, governed. The intereft of the empire would infpire all its citizens and inhabitants. Abilities, whether French or Englifh, Scotch or Irifh, might direct our councils, or lead our cummon troops to victory. I proteft that the advantages to France from fuch an union are fo obvious, and fo important, that her not propofing an union of this nature, (for it folely depends on her), can only be imputed to her being nade fubfervient to the views or ambitious defig. - factious citizens.

The defire of the Patriots in France, of forming a perpetual league of amity with this country, and which our Democrates fo ftrongly infift upon, evinces one of two things : firt, that by means of fuch a league of amity, it was the intention of the National Affembly to cultivate a fincere friendhip with this country; and by means of this union to impofe peace upon the difturbers of Europe : or the offer was intended with the infidious intent to fupport the Democratic faction of this kingdom, and thereby enable it to overturn the government. If the latter was not their real, though concealed motive, nothing ought to prevent them from propofing fuch an union. In fact, their not doing fo, will evince beyond the power of cavil, that ambitious motives influence the leaders of the French revolution, would in. Abilities, or Irifh, pur cumthe adon are fo not proolely deher bembitious tion, and not the profperity of France. For no one can be fo abfurd as to affirm, that the union would be more fincere and intimate, were each ftare governed by different Kings, as they would be under one King.

It will be eafily perceived from what I have faid, that I efteem his Moft Chriftian Majefty to be in fegt detbroned. To fuppofe the contrary, would beyond doubt evince idiotifm. For, though I hould admit that he actually enjoys a million fterling annually, yet how long will he continue fo to enjoy it? Precifely fo long as it fhall pleafe the French mob. Let us fuppofe that the prefent government fubfifts fome time : in this cafe, the preffing diftrefles of the mechanics, manufacturers, and artifts, there being little or no demand in the fe diftrefsful times for the productions of their kkill and ingenuity, will neceffarily compel them to extremities. Some factious demagogue will perhaps obferve, that in thofe diftreffing times, when the poor are farving, that a fingle Family has an income fufficient to make happy two bundred thoufand families, or a million of individuals. Arguments of this nature, though in fact ruinous to the lower claffes in the end, will, for the prefent, fo ftrike upon their imagination, as to deprive them of the ability of forefeeing the confequence. The

The National Affembly being only the creatures of the mob, as dependant on the populace, and being little better than a mob itfelf, will, nay, muft, take the watch-word from their creators. The income of majefty is reduced to a tenth of what it was, and fhortly after to a tenth of a tenth. Nay perhaps, after voting the kingly office ufelefs, and burthenfome, they may take the provident care of enabling the Dauphin to earn his fub. fiftance, by binding him an apprentice to a tay* lor; as the Long Parliament, I think, acted with refpect to the Princefs Elizabeth, whom they bound to a mantua-maker, after cutting her father's head off. So that in fact, I think an union of the kingroms equally defirable by the King of the Fre. ..., as by his fubjects. He and his brothers may be very well allowed three, four, or five hundred thoufand pounds fterling a year, which will enable them to live more happy lives than they have ever done.

I know there are fome who think, that France, in its prefent debilitated ftate, will be attacked by fome of the neighbouring powers; but in my apprehenfion fuch an idea is very ill-founded. For though I thall admit the debilitated ftate of France, yet were the attacked, every nerve would te exerted againft the common enemy. In fact I make no doubt but the would drive Germany before

In a word, an attack on the fide of Germany, might fhake to its very center the Germanic body. France has nothing to fear but from Britain ; whofe policy it certainly is not to embarrafs herfelf with French poiitics, otherwife than as intimated. France will be weakened more in three years by her abfurd meafures, than the would be by a twenty years unfuccefsful war with Britain.

I think it will not be imputed to prefumption, the giving my opinion of there Reflections of $M r$. Burke's, as though I thought myfelf competent to the tafk: I hereby acknowledge my felf utterly unequal to it : neverthclefs I camot avoid making ufe of my privilege in declaring the fatiffaction which I felt in the careful perufal of this incomparable production, after I had read Ariftotle's Treatife on Politics, for fuch it appeared to me. Nothing that I have met with in the Englifh language at all approaching to it, either in depth or folidity of thought: and with regard to language, leaving all other treatifes of a like nature, far, very far behind indecd. Some condemn the language as being too flowery; in my apprehenfion the language varies with the na-

Writings I apprchend hhould be eftimated proportionally to the novelties which they containthe importance of thofe noveltics-and the vehicle or language by which they are conveyed. I have been directed by thefe views in paffing my judgment of this juftly celebrated work.

Though a very incompetent judge of its perfections, yet I am not fuch an enthufiaftic admirer, as not to think that I perceive fome errors in it; befides fome notions which experience has cvinced to be unfounded. In what I fhall advance upon the former head, I truft that Mr. Burke will find that $I$ am fupported by the firf of all authorities, Ariftotle; which I am confident will acquit me in his eyes of petulance, or an over-weaning conceit, as prefuming myfelf cxtraordinary clever in venturing to criticife the ableft, beyod difpute, of our modern politicians : the fact is, it is Ariftotle verfus Burke.

Page 287, Mr. Burke fays, "Your all-fuffi" cient legiflators, in their hurry to do every " thing at once, have forgot one thing that " feems cffential, and which, I believe, never " has been in the theory or the practice omitted " by any projector of a republic. They have "f forgot to conflitute a Senate, or fomething of

[ 43 ]

" that nature and character. Never before this " time, was heard of a body politic compofed " of one legillative and active affembly, and " its executive officers, without fuch a council; " without fomething to which foreign flates " might connect themfelves; fomething to " which, in the ordinary detail of bufinefs the " people could look up; fomething which " might give a bias, a fteadinefs, and preferve "fomething like confiftency in the proceedings " of the ftate. Such a body Kings generally " have as a council. A monarchy may exift " without it; but it feems to be in the very ef" fence of a republican government. " It holds " 2 fort of middle place between the fupreme " power exercifed by the people, or imme" diately delegated from them, and the mere " executive. Of this there are no traces in " your conftitution ; and, in providing nothing " of this kind, your Solons and Numas have, " as much as any thing elfe, difcovered a fo" vereign incapacity." This paragragh apappears to me to be abfolutely unfounded. In Ariftotle's model of a republic there was only to have been one affembly.-In the Cretan republic there was only one alfo.-In the Carthaginian republic one only.-In the Lacedemonian one council only.-In the Athenian, one affembly only.-

In the Roman republic one affembly only, where foreign affairs were agitated; till towards the latter end of the republic, the people affembled in the Conitia Tribula, alfo determined fuch matters; which ended in the ruin of the republic. It is true, that in the Oligarchies of modern Europe, vulgarly and erroneoufly called Ariflocratic republics, there are I believe univerlaily two councals of this nature; but the abfurdity of fuch political conllitutions has been evinced, as appeared to me, long fince by Rouffeau, in his Letters from the Mountains, in which he examines the conflitution of the republic of Geneva : and fo far from fuch councils being of the sery effence of republican government, he has further fhewn from experience, that they mult neceffarily terminate in Oligarcbies. So that on this head the foverrign incapacity of the National Alfembly does not appear, but the contrary.

It is very evident from various paffages in thefe reflections, that Mr. Burke apprehends, that in every well-conftituted govenment, there fhould be two deliberative councils, of the nature of our Houfe of Lords and Commons. [Sce Reflexions, page 75.] Yet Ariftotle feems not to have been aware of the neceffity of two councils. I don't recollect that he even hints at them. He was for defending wealth,

For without unduc influence it cannot be fuppofed, that the wealthy would agree to the propofitions of the lefs opulent citizens, and vice verfa. It is farther evident, that which ever firft yielded to the other, would in every fubfequent trial of ftrength, be lefs abie to refift its rival. The Roman republic has evinced this to be well founded. Perhaps that of England alfo.

Page 274, Mr. Burke fays, "It is for this " very reafo.., that Montefquieu obferved very " juftly, that in their clafification of the citizens, " the great legilators of antiquity made the great" eft difplay of their powers, and even foared " above themfelves, &c." Concerning the regulation of the legiflators of antiquity, I cannot fay much, having only perufed one of them; but, he without comparifon, the very greatef. This philofopher, though he has divided the inbabitants into, I think, ten claffes, has made no fuch arrangement with regard to the citizens, making making every citizen equally eligible to every office. Though he was for putting the magiftracy, at leaft of the higher order, in the hands of the moft opulent citizens; yet he would not have this brought about by means of invidious laws; as in Britain, with regard to burgeffes and knights of the fhire : no! he depenced upon human nature in this refpect, well knowing that the rich would be almoft always elected to fuch offices, whon the election was to be determined by votes taken viva voce : and being further fenfible that fuch diftinctions create heart-burnings, &c. and do more mifchicf than the apprehended evils tenfold. His forefight in this refpect is evinced by the Roman government. For the fenate, by oppofing a participation of equal rights, enabled the Demagogues to form the people into a compact well-difciplined body, and by means of Plebifita, or decrees of the people, to overthrow the paramount authority of the fenate, and thereby, doubtlefs, caufed all the difturbances at Rome which terminated in the lofs of its liberties. Methinks alfo that fuch claffifications have a tendency towards introducing Oligarcbical forms of government, which Ariftutle has ftigmatized with the epithet of illegitimate.

For Ariftotle has obferved that farmers are the beft citizens-that graziers are the next beft-but buyers and fellers, &c. the very worff. Now too much power cannot be vefted in farmers, for, as he obferves, they are always for keeping things as they are. Tis chis obfervation applied properly to Greece, its force will be encreafed ten-fold in regard of the French.

Page 285 , Mr. Burke fays, " No man was " ever attached by a fenfe of pride, partiality, " or real affection to a defcription of fquare 6s admeafurement. He never will glory in be" longing to the Checquer No. 71 , or to any " other badge ticket." Has Mr. Burke forgotten Cefar's tentb legion?

That Mr. Burke is no $\mathrm{To}_{i} ;$, as fome perhaps may infinuate, is clearly evinced from his faying in the outfet of his Reflections "I do " moft beartily wifh that France niay be ani" mated by a ppirit of notional liberty, and that " I think you bound, in all boneft policy, to pro" vide a permament body, in which that fpirit " may refide, and an effectual organ by which it " may act." p. I. Again, " a permanent affembly,
" in which the Commons had their fare of powet, "c would foon abolifh whatever was too invidious and infulting in thefe diftinctions." p. 204. The unbiaffed reader may from hence fee with what truth fuch imputations can be advanced. A permanent affembly would, nay, muft have made the government of France far more popuiar than that of England. But the object of modern Democratifm is not national liberty: no, it is a liberty founded upon the moft extravagant reveries of the moft excentrical of the human fpecies. But that they are in general actuated by the pureft motives, it would be doing them a great injufice even to doubr.

Mr. Burke throughout his Refections makes ufe of the term Oligarchy with fingular propriety : not fo the term Ariftocracy: I mean, he does not we it in the fame ferife in which Ariftotle would appy it ; and it being a Greek term indicative of a certain kind of government, and introduced into our hanguage for the fame ufe, it frikes me, that nut only it, but thofe orher Greek or Latin terms diftinguifhing the other kinds of governments, fhould be ufed precifely in the fame fenfe as by the Greeks or Latins. If the meanings of fuch important terms be not accurately defined, and conftantly made ufe of in the fame fenfe, it will be fometimes in vain to fu ' $k$ the atithor's meaning ${ }^{*}$.

But to return to Mr. Burke ; in page 204, he fuppofes there are two forts of Ariftocracy; one by defcent, the other the confequence of wealtb. The firft Ariftotle would call, were it known in his time, an Oligarchy : election being the effence of Ariftocracy; which proves that the Englifh Houfe of Lords is not an Ariftocracy, as Mr. Burke fays, p. 242, with almoft all other writers, but an Oligarsby.

Page ${ }_{57}$ Mr. Burke fays, "s a tyrannous Arif-

* The term Arifocracy is in gener. 1 made ufe of by our Englifh writers in the fenfe which the antients affixed to the term Cligarcby. Except Mr. Mitford, in his Hiflory of Creece, and Sir William Young, in his Hiftory of Athens, 1 know of no other of our rriters who ufes the term Arifocracy is the fame fenfe as the antiensts. It furpifed me that fo accurate and elegant a writer as Doctor Symonds (See Young's Annals of Agriculture, vol. 13.) Mould call the political conflitutions of Venice and Genoa Ariffocracies, feeing that they are obviounly Oligarchies: for though the governing souncils in thefe flates are elective, yat fill they are ele\{ted from a certain defcription of the inbabitants, who hold the other inhabitants, though fometimes richer than themfelves, far beneath thein: and from whick clafs thefe are for ever debarred, unlef admitted by Co-optation.

" tocracy," it fhould be Oligarchy agreeably to his own ufe of this term.

Confidering the important confequences which may refult from our not having accurate and juft definitions of the various terms indicative of the different modes of government, I hope I fhall be excufed for attempting to define them agreeably to what ftruck me during a careful perufal of Ariftotle. The terms, Monarchy or Kingly Government, and Tyranny or Defpotifm, I have already defined p. 16, 19, fo unnecerfary to repeat; as alfo Ariftocracy and Oligarchy, p. 17, 19. But fince the time of this philofopher two forts of Oligarchy have made their appearance ; or, if mentioned in his Treatife on Politics, have efcaped me. The firft fort is when the Members of the Ariftocracy become bereditary governors, as in the cafe of our Peers. The fecond fort is when the Members of the legiflative council are not chofen out of all the citizens of the fame degree of wealth, but from among a certain clafs. Thofe included under the appellation of patricians in the Roman Commonwealth were always aiming at this ufurpation. It has been effected in the modern fates of Venice, Genoa, and the Swifs Repultics, as they are vulgarly, though improperly denominated; they are in fact ftrict Oligarchies, at leaft thofe of them of any confequence.

[ 51 ]

Ariftotle's favourite form of government, which he calls a peciteia, is with great propriety rendered republic, being that form of government whofe object was to preferve and defend the $j u / f$ rights of all its citizens : of the rich as well as the poor. As this is the object of every juft government, then for a man to declare himfelf a Republican is only faying, that he is a favourer of that fort of government in which the rights and priviieges of ail are equally fupported and defended. Yet this appellation, by being confounded with, or rather being held to be fynonymous with that of Democratift, is become a term of reproach. But, now that its true genuine meaning is evinced, I hope that his Majefty will acknowledge himfelf, as every honeft man fhould do, to be a Republican, according to its true genuine meaning. As fuch he will defend his own rights, the rights and privileges of the Peers, and alfo of the (mmons-as fuch the Lords will defend their own rights, the rights and prerogatives of Majefty, and the rights and privileges of the peopie-as fuch the virtuous Commoner fhould defend his own rights and privileges, the rights and prerogatives of Majefty, and the rights and privileges of the Peers: and for this good reafon, that the fub, fifing government muft be always fuppofed to G 2 be be the choice of the People. Neither will this opinion put a bar to improvements in our mode of government; it will only render it cautious and more difficult towards the reception of improvements, too often merely fpecious. In my apprehenfion his Majefty and the Houfe of Lords, as having the greateff fhare in our government, are the moft interefted in bringing it to its utmoft perfection. For, as Ariftotle obferves, the people being the foundation of all legitimate governments, if they become fenfible that obvious improvements in our form of gevernment are not adopted, becaufe, forfooth, of the apprehenfions, whether well or ill founded, of any individual or clafs of men, they would no doubt be juftified in taking the bufinefs into their own hands. But it can not be fuppofed, that thofe individuals who will gain mof by improvements in our political form of government will ever be the ftiff oppofers of them, which might endanger their exalted fate. Neither fhould our reformers be too fanguine. From what I have obferved from Ariftotle, the greateft man that ever exifted without comparifon, it is evident, that our reformers are fundamentally wrong: and that our prefent government with all its defects, is, without comparifon, fuperior to what they wifh to fubftitute in its ftead.

[ 53 ]

If what I have juft obferved be admitted, it. follows, that the proper appel' .tion by which the Englifh government fhould be defignated is republic; as being a form of government conflituted for the defence and fupport of the juft rights and privileges of all its citizens. This evinces the good fenfe of our antient writers, who always defignate it by this title: and the ignorance of our antiquaries and lawyers who deny the propriety of it: and alfo of our Democratifts, who, by this title, would gladly diftinguilh their own favourite form of government, which fo far from having for its object the defence of the juft rigbts of each clafs of citizens, has only that of the poor: for in every ftate the majority of the people muft be poor ; and in this form of government the majority becomes the ruling power. In fact, a Dernocracy, as Ariftotle juflly obferves, is no other than a [many-headed] Defpotifm. For a Defpot means, that the government is fo vefted in one perfon, as that he can manage the flate, and act towards the individuals that compofe it ad libitum; in like manner, as the mafter [Defpotes] may act in regard of his chattels and flaves, there being nothing to controul him: if then the fupreme power be vefted in the people, there can be no check to prevent them from acting agrecably to the prefent impulfe: for a check in fuch cafes to be effectual mult needs be a paramount power; fo that the government would ceafe to be a Democracy.

That the lower claffes of people fhould ever attain a fufficient fhare of wifdom or philofophy to entitle them to a fhare in the government, cither directly or indirectly, is a notion perfectly romantic. To acquire either wifdom or philofophy requires leifure and reflection. But what will feed the p:or man during his reveries? I fay this independently of the prior education which he fhould have received to enable him to generalize his ideas. So that the author of Ecclefiafticus was well founded in depriving the poor of all interference in the government, whether he was a Jew, or a Greek, as I believe him to have been. But whoever he was, he is fupported in his idea by the wifeft of the an, tients; Ariftotle.

Ariftotle obferves, that it fhould be a chief object with government to take care that the cenfus fhould be always fufficiently low, fo as that thofe entitled to the rank and privileges of citizens fhould exceed in wealth thofe who would be excluded by it: for when they did not, feditions would inevitably arife in the flate: for to feparate wealth and power muft neceffarily neceffarily be attended with this confequence: in like manner, that the cenfus fhould be fufficiently high only to effect this: for were it much lower the Politecia or Republic would be changed into a Democracy: thus the perfect form of government lay between an Ariftocracy and a Democracy, but nearer the former than the latter. Ariftotle obferves, that a breach in the cenfus may happen by two ways: firft by an influx of wealth, as happened at Athens in confequence of her victories over the Perfians; infomuch that money had loft its former value : fecondly, during the decline of a Commonwealth, for in this cafe money becomes of greater value. This I apprehend is a leffon for our Englifh rulers; and evinces, that the difcontents which have prevailed among its moft virtuous citizens for feveral years, are not the offfpring of factious principles, but neceflarily fpring from property not having its due weight in 'our government. For, however refpectable the Reprefentatives of what are called rotten boroughs may be, yet their not being the Reprefentatives of property has undoubtedly given rife to there difcontents. Farther, when we hear of an Afiatic fquad in the Houfe, to what caufe can it be imputed? doubtlefs to the omnipotence of money in returning R.eprcfentatives for parliament, and to the poverty or want of principle in the electors. But, were each Reprefentative elected in the manner pointed out, this evil, if it exifts, would be fpeedily rectified. For the conftituents, men of proper age and reflection, and eafy circumftances, would quickly recal the traytor. In like manner an unprincipled oppofition, whofe object was power, and to attain which fcrupled not to throw every obftacle in the way of government, might perhaps, fhould ever fuch a cafe arrive, be difgracefully recalled, and replaced by others who would act more agreeably to the general interefts of the nation.

I profefs I am not fufficiently clear-fighted as to be fenfible of the great advantages refulting from the unexampled publicity of our public tranfactions with other nations. It is a too common error in arguing to afcribe to wrong caufes whatever happens in the moral world as well as in the phyfical: thus fome impute to this our flourifhing fituation : as if there had never exifted a flourifhing ftate in which a ftrict fecrecy was obferved. Our flourifhing fituation is obvioufly the confequence of our enjoying a better political conftitution than our neighbours, and the local circumftances of fertility of foil, and advantage of fituation, &c.

Mr. Burke, p. 187, fays with Lord Bolingbroke, broke, " that he prefers a Monarchy to other " governments; becaufe you can better ingraft " any defcription of republic on a monarchy, " than any thing of monarchy upon the repub" lican forms. I think him perfectly in the "right. The fact is fo biforically: and it " agrees well with the fpeculation." I profefs that my knowledge of hiftory would induce me to make the oppofite inference : as I do not recollect a fingle inftance of the republican form being ingrafted upon the monarchical; but on the contrary, many of the latter upon the former. It was fo in the Cretan-it was fo in the Lacedemonian-it was fo in the Carthaginian Commonwealths, as we are affured by Ariftotle. Farther, the Athenian Archons and the Roman Confuls were in fubftance temporary kings. Even in the Englifh conftitution kings were originally grafted or appoinied by the National Affembly of the Chiefs, to enforce the general ordinances, or to lead the people forth in time of war. It is true, that fince the introduction of burgeffes into our Houfe of Commons with the privilege of determining points concerning legiflation and general policy, inftead of confining their functions folely to affeffing themfelves, as was the firf object of their introduction* there has been grafting upon our old monarchical Goverument a Democracy, which, unlefs guarded againft by due provifions, but efpecially that moft neceffary one, the giving property its juft influence, will in the end overturn not only the monarchical branch of it, but alfo the oligarchical, and eftablifh in their ftead a pure Democracy, which mode of government Ariftotle of holds to be the next worft after a tyranny, and an Oligarchy. So that our reformers are aiming at a pretty fort of reform according to the wifeft of the antients. This is reforming backwards as my countrymen would fay. A bleffed reform forfooth! by which the populace and their demagogues, or thofe haranguers, who by humouring the propenfities of the people to their ruin, as court-flatterers do with tyrants, would be enabled to tyrannize over, not the better class of people, as Mr . Burke renders the paflige, but over the better men $b_{i \lambda} \lambda 100$ wn or the moft virtuous citizens ${ }_{+}^{+}$.

I entirely agree with Mr. Burke in regard

of the foverecign incapacity of the National ASemuly to conffitute a political Conflitution for France: which is evinced from their regulations refpecting the mode adopted by them for conftituting national affemblies in future, which lays the rich at the mercy of the poor-from their regulations refpecting the magiftracy-from their regulations refpecting the judicature-and in each of thefe they are likewife condemned by Ariftotle, as has been feen.-Alfo, the folly of their conduct in regard of the army-and on finance, are perhaps without example. That they acted unjuftly towards the clergy I think Mr. Burke has demonftrated-and that they have acted, and are acting infidiounly towards their King, I mean the leaders of the Democrates, I entertain no doubt. ${ }^{*}$ That he is to be dethroned; or what is tantamount, reduced to a mere cypher, when tiie leaders of the Democrates will be able to take off the mafk, :equires little fagaciry to perceive : and though I entertain no furpicion of the purity of the views of this party, that is, that their object is the happinefs and profperity of France; yet, as they have fhewn their utter incompetency in the means, and as it ca.anot be expected, that they fhould be capable at once of altering their meafures, nay, perhaps, that the people would not now confent to it, it is my opinion, that his French Majefty, together with thofe of his friends, and thofe attached to regular government, fhould be ready and prepared to take advantage of every opportunity which may offer, of inducing the National affembly to accede to, or embrace the meafure of propofing to our King and Parliament the becoming a Member of the Britijb Empire. The difficulties which will fhortly prefs on the French patriots, and which the fale of the King's domains and clerical property, though it fhould amount even to a fum equivalent to difcharge the national debt, will not diffipate, muft alarm a large portion of its Members, unaccuftomed to face popular florms, and perhaps intimidate them, infomuch as to prepare them to go half way towards embracing the meafure. Slaves have not that fteady perfeverance or virtue to inable them to controul or direct the ftorm. That there may be a few of the oppofite character in this affembly, I will not difpute, though I much fufpect it. But, admitting it, a great majority muft undoubtedly be political cowards; and thefe will fetter the others, and prevent them from taking thofe decided fteps neceffary to victory. So that, if thefe leading characters have the wifdom of the men of this generation, they ought to prepare matters for fuch a wonderful, but beneficial revolution for mankind.

Mr. Burke appears to me to be materially wrong in fimply recommending the Englifh confitution, without any qualification, to the French revorutionifts for their adoption. What! a political conftitution, founded neither upon the folid bafis of property, nor the fantaftical one of population! Though, as already admitted, had the National Affembly done fo, they would have acted more prudently than they have; nay, even that it would be their truepolicy : neverthelefs, to adopt a conflitution founded upon neither property nor population, without any argument to evince the policy of fuch a meafure, was not to be expected from Frenchmen; who, as juft efcaped from flatery, it might be forefeen, would be endowed with little forefight of its neceffary confequence. As to the Permanent Council, of which Mr. Burke fpeaks, not having mentioned in what noanner it was to be conftituted, it is difficult to ciffer an opinion concerning it. But, if it was to tee a permanent organ of-Liberty, it is obvious that it would fhortly reduce the kingly power to a mere cypher.

With regard to thofe who oppofe Mr. Burke on the principles of the rights of mankind, by giving the rights of elistion to all perfors, which, though no better than beggars and vagrants, upon thofe principles cannot be dunied to them, however convinced they thernfelves may be, I will take upon me to fay, they will make few profelytes to their faith, among Jober-tbinking perfons. This doctrine fhould be particularly grateful to matter-manufacturers, for were our Reprefentatives elected agreeably to this notion, they would be MASTERS in fact of the government of this kingdom and its dependencies: and even, as it is, their influence is inmeafurably too great. They were the caufe of the lofs of America, and the fciffion of Ireland from this kingdom. Thofe gentlemen fhould further confider, that the authority of the greateft genius that ever exifted, has in the moft exprefs language, not once, but frequently, declared himfelf againft their theory; who befides had far greater experience: in matters of this nature, than what they can at all pretend to. The truth is, that all true patricis, and well-wifhers of mankind fhould unite in placing our government upon the folid foundation of property, vefting far greater powers in his Majefty and government than what they actuaily poffers; they would thereby conflitute a vigorous government, and by this means induce gavernment itfelf to give its affiftance towards fo defirable a change in both refpects. Country gentlemen, who are generally farmers, though inimical to manifeft injuftice, are not fond of changes: thefe are only the object of agitated fanatical mobs, which can only exift in great cities, and be foftered by their employers, who fhould therefore be attended to, and deprived of political power. Neither could they complain with any juftice; for in this cafe it might be anfwered, that from the limited faculties of man, it was impoffible he could carefully attend to two objects at the fame time; each of which demanded his whole attention; and there-. fore the complainant might right himfelf, did he think himfelf aggrieved, by giving up his trade, and commencing citizen, for that the conftitution permitted no one to be, at the fame cime, a trader and a citizen.

I fhall now proceed to a few obfervations upon Mr. Payne's pamphlet, intituled the Rigbts of Men; firft premifing, that in my apprehenGion, he has treated Mr. Burke in a manner that does not meet my idea of that refpect and decorum, which his almoft univerfally refpected character-his private virtues-his acknowleged learning-and his age* demand. His being

[ 66 ]

"eaten up" with prejudices, fhould excite compaffion, and not give rife to expreffions, no doubt intended, to wound his too fufceptible mind, fuch as "flagrant mifreprefentations," "an im" pofition;" is it feemly to begin a work by engaging the paffions before the judgment is convinced : again, " real falfehoods," " lt fuits bis "purpofe to exhibit the confequences without " their caufes. It is one of the arts of the drama "t to do fo." "Where even probability is fet at "d defiance for the purpose of defaming, &c." Are fuch imputations decent, unlefs evinced in the cleareft manner ? If Mr. Payne has attempted to fubftantiate one of them, it has efcaped me. Mr. Burke's French correfpondent, who it may be reafonably fuppofed, was tolerably well informed upon the bufinefs, unlefs it alfo has efcaped me, denies none of Mr. Burke's facts. Can it be fuppofed, that if fuch epithets truly applied to Mr. Burke's Reflections, that Mr. Depont would think of revifiting him on his return to this kingdom. Were he capable of fuch meannefs, it would not be fafe for him to be on civil terms, with the Libeller of his countrymen, upon his return to France. Perhaps it will be faid, that Mr. Burke was unfounded in what he mentions of the mob exclaiming the Bilhops to the Lantern on the 6th of October. Perhaps there were no fuch words made ufe of ; neverthelefs, I cannot help thinking but that Mr. Burke was fufficiently juftified in fuppofing that there were, upon the authority of Monf. Lally Tolendal : indeed Monf. Depont, wifhing to draw a curtain over the proceedings of that day, feems to me to juftify every thing that Mr. Burke has advanced about it: as to the bon jour of the Mayor of Paris, I underftood it in its obvious fenfe, the 6th of October, the day on which their Majefties' perfons were fecured, and the day on which they were fpoken; and I think it fhould be efteemed a good day by every Democratift.

That Mr. Burke fhould pay more attention to Mr. Lally Tolendal's letter from Paris, than to Mr. Payne's, is not furprifing. We generally pay more regard to what thofe affirm, who think as we do, than to what thofe affirm who differ from us. For which reafon, however unimpeachable the veracity of Mr . Payne may be, Mr. Burke's being guided in what he faid, by the authority of Monf. Lally Tolendall, ought not to offend him.

Mr. Payne charges Mr. Burke with having changed his former fentiments, and it may be on account of this unknown penfion, which it is faid, Mr . Burke receives from the Irifh eftablifhment. Is a perfon to be condemned for a change of fentiment? Is truth lefs fo when advanced by a penfionur ?---In fact, infinuations of this nature, when invationed in controverfy, evince that he, who makes uie of them, feels that, howeverdefirous, he cannot confute his adverfary upon folid grounds. I would alfo wifh to know, whether it be agreeable to Mr. Payne's fyftem of Chriftianity, to caft a blot, or to repeat a malicious fact, to injure an unimpeached character. The view is obvious. Is it doing by others as we would be done by?

Mr. Payne informs his readers that the French guards were not 3000; I underfood that they were 4000 *-that there were only two or three perfons killed at Verfailles on the morning of the 6 th of October; I underftood there were $\mathcal{f e}^{(-}$ venteen 中. He alfo informs us that William the Conqueror, and his defcendants, bribed with. Charters one part of England, to hold the other parts of it the better in fubjection to his will: I did not know before this fact of William the Conqueror : alfo that the county Rutland contains not the one hundredth part of the inhabitants of Yorkfhire, or ten thoufanc perfons: it may be fo, but they appear to me tu be very few. If thefe two laft affiertions be unfounded, they ought not to have been introduced, as tending, more than the exact truth will jultify, to promote the obvious tendency of the Rights of Men, namely, of making the inhabitants of this country diffatisfied with their political conflitution. -In every cafe the precife truth fhould be told, but above all, in cafes of this nature: for though unfounded affertions will have their weight for a time, yet in the end, when the people have difcovered them to be fo, it detracts very much from what future affertors will advance, even though they fhould keep within the truth.

What Mr. Payne has faid againft Mr. Burke refpecting England's being an hereditary crown for ever-and of governments arifing out of a people to be lareful goveruments, and not over a people : appears to me unanfwerable, and the latter ingenioufly advanced. Bur I muft deny the exifting government of England to be of that fort. The barons in agreeing to accept of Magna Cbarta from King John had fufficient authority to bind the nation at the time: and fuch engagements are fuppofed to continue for ever: not but that the next or any future gencration have it in their power to change it : yet, until this is done the original fettlement is fuppofed to fublift.

Mr. Payne has made a comparifon between France and England with regard to wealth, and though, fince Mr. Sinyth's celebrated work of the Wealth of Nations, I thought that this fubject could never be again mifapprehended, yet from his giving to France the advantage in this refpect can only be afcribed to this caufe. However, let us examine what he has advanced. He admits that there are 20 millions of hard cafh in England; and afferts that there are 90 and a half millions fterling in France, but for the fake of round numbers I fhall make him a prefent of 8 millions and a half more : that is, I will allow that there are 100 millions ferling in France, or five times as much as there is in England. Admitting alfo, according to my computation, which fome perhaps may think againft my argument, that there are 16 millions of inhabitans in England, 20 millions fterling will be $25^{5}$. a head, full enough in all confcience to manage our internal commerce, the real ufe of money. Admitting alfo the inhabitants of France to be 30 millions, 100 millions fterling will be $3 l .6 \mathrm{~s} .8 \mathrm{~d}$. or almoft three times as much money per head there as in England:

and yet inftead of France being richer, $I$ affirm that fle is without comparifon poorer.

Doctor Smyth has informed us that money'sworth or manufacturers arc equivalent to money. Now, when the wonderful magazines of every fort of commodity: the ufeful and fuperb furnicure every where vifible, our navy, &c. &cc. &c. $& c .8 c$. are confidered. Surely all thefe may be laid down at 1000 millions. French articles in the fame line may be eftimated, and perhaps highly too, at a fifth of this, or 200 millions, which, with the former 100 , makes $10 l$. a head: whereas, by including manufacturers, &c. there is 681 . per head in England.

Mr. Payne alfo affures us that there was no national bankruptcy in France, but that the people had determined that they would not pay taxes. I do not chufe to doubt the word of a gentleman, yet I think it fingular enough that Monfieur Depont acknowledges, that the fale of clerical property was that only which could prevent it.-It feems alfo that it was a fecret to Mr . Neckar.-How comes it then that fince the French Monarch has been dethroned, and has been re-inflalled by the pompous title of the King of the French, but in whofe perfon it feems that this title is to commence and termi-mate *,-I fay, how comes it that the taxes are even yet fo defective, notwithftanding all the reforms? Is there a combination againtt paying taxes under the aufpices of the National Affembly? Bad as our finances in England are I will venture to affirm, that the can bear taxes to the amount of 40 millions better than France can 20 millions, with all the clerical fpoil and king's demefnes.

To prevent heedlefs perfons being impofed on by founds I thall here obferve, that vealth with refpect to nations is to be confidered in three different refpects: firlt, as the income of Government, this may be very great, and yet the people and nation very poor; thes let us fuppofe that Spain received annually from America 20 millions fterling. This vaft fum would be quickly difperfed over the more induftrious nations of Europe to purchafe what the Spaniards want, little remaining in Spain : fecondly, a nation may be rich and the inhabitants and government poor, as forinftance, if there were 1000 millions fterling locked up in 1000 boxes in France, the nation would be rich but the government and people posi, nor would it long continue to be otherwife were it even in circulation : thirdly, the people may be rich and yet the nation and goverument poor; this happens when the people are exceeding induftrious and are well.paid for their labour. A nation like this is almoft omnipotent; for unlefs you cut off their heads or hands, they will, like the Hydra, be ever reproducing the means of power. Whereas, if you get poffeffion of the French boxes, or divide Spain from America, thefe two nations would be palfied, or rendered utterly impotent. This evinces the neceffity and policy of giving every fpur to induftry, if a nation intends to be powerful; indeed as the French Democrates fay, they will be content with drinking their wine under their own fig trees, which I will affure them will be the cafe, whether they were ferious or not, it little matters what meafures they take. I would defpife myfelf were 1 capable of fuch a felfigh thought. But for a nation of legiflators, whofe object fhould be to promote univerfal happinefs, to harbour even for a moment fuch a bafe felfifh idea fhould excite univerfal contempt and horror.

I would fain know from Mr. Payne wherher he thinks it agreeable to common fenfe, that the 1 government of a great nation fhould be put K , into into the hands of ignorant, illiterate people, who kn w nothing of the matter? or whether he thinks it agreeable to the fame principle, that by putting the government in the hands of the people at large, the majority of whom are in fact no better than the flaves of mafter manufacturers, that mafter manufacturers fhould be the governors or rulers of a mighty kingdom, who are ever inimical to every thing generous, and friendly only to monopolies, and what may ferve their own fhort-fighted views? If Mr . Payne cannot anfwer thefe queftions directly in the affirmative, he c ght to give up his political creed. No argument from analogy, from America is admiffible. There the people are almoft all farmers or graziers: in France they are manufacturers or beggars. I therefore abide by my paradox, that the true intereft of France, and I have the true intereft of France as much at heart as Mr. Payne, is to become a dependant portion of the Britijb empire.

As it appears that Mr. Payne is in confiderable intimacy with many of the leaders of the French Revolution, it may be prefumed that he is well founded in faying, p. 138, that "In France " it [the Monarchy] has fo far declined; that " the goodnefs of the man [the King of France] " and the refpect for his perional character are

[ 75 ]

" the only things that preferve the appearance " of its exiftence." Hence it is obvious that the Monarchical branch of the French conflitution is to be anmihilated. Were not this their intention, and now acknowledged by Mr . Payne, I had propofed fhewing, that when the National Affembly fevered the Magifratical from the Executive or Monarchical power, and had refolved, that the National Affembly fhould be a permanent body, that the annihilation of the Monarchical branch of the political conflitution muft neceffarily be the confequence, which would be a farther proof of their fovereign incapacity, by making one branch of their conflitution deftructive of another.
To recapitulate then the errors of the Na tional Affembly, according to Mr. Burke, they confift, Firft, in their mode of conflituting their future National Affemblies, by which it will be only a mere ochlocracy, both from the fhortnefs of its duration, and from almoft all the people being conftituents.
Secondly, in their regulations refpecting the electing their magiftrates, which will farther ftrengthen the Ochlocracy.

Thirdy, by fevering the judges from the executive branch, by whom as being only exeK 2 cutive officers, they fhould be appointed and be dependant upon: and in thefe three he is fupported by Ariftotle, who has laid it down, that they are what a wife legiflator fhould chiefly attend to.

Fourthly, in regard of their financial arrangements.

Fifthly, in regard of their conduct towards the army.

Sixthly, of injutice towards the clergy *.
Seventhly, of a want of generofity towards their virtuous and deferving King, who in fact proffered to them a better conftitution than that which they have ftumbled upon $\psi$.

With regard to the two laft I apprehend that, in confequence of the Democratical principles univerfally prevalent throughout France, it was not in the power of the National Affembly after the 14th of July to have aeted materially differ-
> - By this I would not have it underftood that I am not inimical to the prefent mode of provifion for the clergy: on the contrary nothing I can deem more abfurd, not only as defeating that good will and friendhip which fhould fubfift between paftors and their flocks; but alfo as directly militating againft great agricultural exertions, which fhould be peculiarly favoured by every wife governmento

ent from what it did. Powers, vefted in kings and bifhops, depending on opinion, when this is deftroyed, muft neceffarily fall with it. But the French King offered his conttitution of government the 23 d of June : the National Affembly is therefore inexcufable.

From what $I$ have heard or read it does not appear to me that any one of Mr. Burke's anfiverers has attempted to repel any of the above feven charges : and until the five firft are entirely done away, and that by arguments founded on experience, or on the affertions or writings of thofe who had experience, namely, the antients, thofe perfons who pronounce themfelves anfwerers of Mr. Burke fhould be only deemed foi-difans anfwerers.

I flall here add a few obfervations upon the turn of the debate which took place in both Houfes of Parliament upon the delivery of his Majefty's meffage refpecting our fituation with other foreign powers, which will further evince the neceffity of placing our conftitution upon its true bafis, the affections of the people, and of reftoring the executive powe: to its conflitutional vigour:

The twoSecretaries of Statc, afterdelivering the King's meffage, required the fupport and confidence of their refpective Houfes of Parliament,

in iegard of thofe meafures intended to be purfucd, in cafe matters fhould not be accommodated with the Empreîs of Ruffia : but to their motions for this end an amendment in each Houfe was propofed, intimating, "that until the ho" nour and interefis of his Majefty's crown Jall " appear to be threatened, that they can only "exprefs their dutiful and loyal affurances of " fupport." if thefe amendments had been carried, it is evident, that his Majefty would have been deprived of the executive power; for, till thefe two points had appeared to the fatisfaction of each Houfe, and of which each Houfe would have been its own judge, his Majefty could have taken no fteps whatever; and thus we fhould have loft the advantages which ought to refult from the energy of the monarciical branch of the conftitution, and for which the nation pays a million annually. Befides, had the oppofition fucceeded, what foreign flaie wouid ever after venture to enter into any engagement with the exccutive branch, when there exifted even a poffibility of its not being able to effectuate its engagements, did either Houfe of Parliament refufe its fupport to the meafure? Suppofe that Parliament was as venal as fome will have it, would not half a million, properly applied in either Houfe, have fecured a majority againt the meafure? And, though it required ten times the fum, who will deny, that the Czarina could have fo well applied an equal fum. This ftrongly evinces the danger of giving either Houfe of Parliament any precext towards interfering with the executive branch of government. It is moreover a novelty in our conflitution. The bufinefs and duty of the two Houfes of Parliament, are tc zedrefs grievances, and make wholefome laws for their prevention, and arraigning Minifters for mal-practices, either with regard to fquandering the public money, or cenfuring them for impolitic engagements with other ftates; but which, when once entered into, muft be fupporied.

Mr. Fox is made to fay by the reporters of thefe debates, that, upon the Czarina's ufurpation of the Crimea, and the country between the Don and the Dnieper in the year 1782 , the Miniftry of that time, of which he formed a part, were applied to by the Count de Vergennes, to join with France and Spain, in obliging her to rececie from fo barefaced an ufurpation, which was refifted. Independently of the want of political forefight, the firlt virtue of a Statefman according to Ariftotle and all mankind, evinced by their refifting the propoftion, and which would certainily not have been made by the French Minifter, did he not think it obviounly for the advantage of England; this acknowledgement fhould not only exculpate the prefent Miniftry from any unpopuiarity which may refult from the expences of this war, but they hould be placed to the account of Mr. Fox's Miniftry. For, had that Miniftry joined with France and Spain, in pre enting Ruffia from enforcing her ambitious fchemes, fhe would not have dared to bring down upon her our united forces: and thus would have been nipped in its bud che caufe which has produced a very bloody war, and which is now likely to involve us in very expenfive meafures.

That it is the intereft of Europe to prevent Ruflian conquefts, efpecially on the fide of Turkey, will be obvious to any one, who will look at the map of Europe. He will there fee, if the Emprefs fhould effect her prefent ambitious defigns againft Turkey, that her territories on three fides would command Poland, for the Duchy of Courland may be faid tu be her's. Upon the demife then of the King of Poland, her protege, perhaps the may appoint another nominal King, it may be fome very old man, upon whofe death fhe might take immediate poffeflion of Poland. The late Emperor of Germany would have fupported her*, his object being to poffefs himfelf of the weftern pari of Turkey in Europe, whilft the conquered the eaftern; which effected, what could prevent his afterwards fubduing the German Princes, who dare not interrupt his progrefs againlt the Turk, well knowing that he would be fupported by a Ruffian army in poffeffion of Poland, of 500,000 men. In this cafe, the northern kingdoms of Sweden and Demmark muft fubmit to Ruffia without a blow, and become provinces of that empire, whilft the Emperor would be conqueriag the remaining part of the weft of Europe, not excepting England herfelf. I entertain no doubt, but that the meeting of thefe two ambitious potentates fome years ago at Cherfon, was to devife fome fcheme of this nature, which, if fuccefsful, mult have terminated in the fubiection of Europe, and the management of which could not be entrufted to Minifters, left happening to be in the pay of other powers, they might have divulged the fecret, or imprudently entrufted it to a miftrefs. Effeets muft always have proportionate caufes. It cannot be faid that to be crowned Queen of Tauriaa could have been an object of any moment with fo fenfible a woman as the Czarina. And the fame may be affirmed of the late Emperor.

Moreover, where there are two preponderating powers, it is the intereft of the weaker, particularly in the naval department, to feek an alliance with the ftronger; but not contrarywife : left that, when the weaker, by means of the alliance, had been raifed to a more formidable ftate, the fhould turn upon her $0^{i} \frac{1}{3}$ ally, and by forming other connections become the principal: This is precifely the fituation between Ruffia and England, the actual preponderating Eurof pean powers: and dictates to us, if we will fuffer ourfelves to be inftructed by hiftory, not to form any connection whatever with that power. Our avowed object fhould br to keep Ruffia down.

But what I would particularly ce!! the attention of Englifhmen to is, the famenefs of complexion, which the arguments of the oppofition bear to thofe advanced by the Barchine faction as Carthage, whilf Hannibal was ravaging Italy, and which, being followed, caufed the ruin of that moft flourifhing republic. Some of our Senators dwell upon the weight of our taxes-Others wifhing, or almoft wifhing fuccefs to our enemies-others depicting them as logs and as batteries, and whikered Coffacks, as if Britons were to be terrified with fuch fuff. What the opinion of the King of Pruffia was, concerning thefe dreadful Ruffians, is very clear from what he fays, fpeaking of their vietories over the Turks, that they refembled a man with one eye, fighting againft another who had none. Mr. Burke, who has emphatically pronounced France to be a Great Cba/m, is for introducing thefe Ruffians into the Black Sea, to affift us in our future wars againft this chafin or vacuum and the Spaniards. When the abilities and experience of the gentlemen who make ufe of fuch arguments are confidered, it evinces, what indeed is allowed by all, that an oppofition or faction muft always fubfift in this government, and therefore that government muft always be oppofed with the beft arguments, $\ldots$ subt, that the nature of the cafe will adr $\therefore 0$, and that the perfection of our conftitution confifts in the oppofite interefts of the component parts. I have ever thought, that the more the works of men refembled thofe of the Deity, which are harmony itfelf, the more perfect they were. Ariftotle would have held a government of this fort as a proof of the extraordinary ftupidity of its Members. His object was the harmoniz-ing all the parts of his political conftitution, by connecting with the other the intereft of each clafs of the inhabitants.

[ 83 ]

There is another feature which peculiarly diftin. guifhes our conftitution fromevery other, mamely, that our Senators fcruple not to fligmatize with the fouleft epithets, meafures fupported by government; nay, which have even been approved of by the Houfe of Commons: for inftance, the Indian war; both the policy and juftice of which do not admit a doubt; and which even a refpect for government fhould prevent every Senator, whatever he may think, from pronouncing unjuft. Can it be fuppofed that the people will refpect a government, or Houfes of Parliament, whofe meafures are cenfured in fo extraordinary a manner? Will not fuch language neceffarily introduce a Democratical contempt of government? Can government fubfift without the people's being impreffed with a decent refpect for its chief Members? But if the people are told, that government, his Majefty, and his Minifters, and the majority of both Houfes of Parliament countenauce unjuft meafures, how long will this de-. cent refpeet fubfift? Is not fuch language neceffarily introductive of that French Democratical anarchy, which flould be the dread of every enlighened mind? That Rufia, in the prefent war between her and the Porte, is the aggreffor, is moft evident. In the jear 1782 fle poffeffes herfelf of the Cuban and the Crimea, and by the terror of hoftilities, in conjunction with the Emperor, obliges the Porte to cede thofe provinces by treaty, the year after. 'This manifent injuftice is the true caufe of the war which was begun by the Turk, to repoffefs himfelf of thefe provinces unjufly wrefted from him. The conduct of the Porte is fully juftified by that of Carthage. Being in a very debilitated fate after the war againft her revolted mercenary troops, whom fhe had fublued, the Romans took poffeffion of the illand of Sardinia, and obliged her to yield it up from the dread of hoftilities. This act of injuftice, in the opinion of Mr . Hooke, juftified the Carthaginians in recommencing hoftilities againft Rome ; and of courfe equally juftifies the Porte in recommencing hoftilitics againft Ruffia for the recovery of the provinces unjuftly wrefted from her.

As thofe of our Senators, to whofe opinions I have alluded, are feveral of them very refpeetable characters, it is obvious, that a time may come, when, by means of Demagogues, and factious and feditious principles being propagated among the people, others, without principle, may be able to bridle the executive power, and even force themfelves into government ; in which cafe they would be obliged to govern this powerful kingdom, agreeably to the prejudices of their creators, the mob: and be compelled to facrifice its true interefts to their fhortfightednefs and felfifhnefs. The power of the King to make peace or war would be wrefted from him, under fpecious pretexts; and vefted in the people or their reprefentatives. Then our leading men in either Houfe, being in the pay of ambibitious foreign ftates, and the people's mind kept in a flame by feditious paragraphs, would prevent, as in the cafe of Athens, with regard to Philip, our putting an effectual bar to their progrefs. The eloquence of Demofthenes was unequal to the flattering demagogues who were gained by Philip. At laft his eloquence prevailed, but it was too late. The fatal battle of Chaeronea determined the fate of Greece. This period of hiftory is an exact prototype of the prefent. Athens and Philip, as England and the Czarina-Pitt and the oppofition, as Demofthenes and the demagogues *.

[ 87 ]

Ariftotle has laid it down that when the poiwer of peace and war is vefted in a popular affembly, it neceffarily leads to a dynatty or tyranny, who, independently of his fagacity, perhaps from his intimacy with Philip, had that of experience alfo, to direct him in condemning this power being lodged with the people, againft whom it was turned by the enflaver of Greece. However, notwithftanding what Ariftotle has laid down upon this head, which hiftory alfo confirms, Mr. Payne, without even noticing it, with other Democrates, contends for vefting this power in the people or their creatures.

To put an end to faction, and to reftore the executive branch to its confitutional energy, government fhould take the moft effectual and fpeedy meafures, in order to veft the elective power in the hands of thofe, whofe wifdom is matured-whofe ambitious projects are nearly extinguifhed-and who cannot be biaffed by private views; that is, in thofe perfons who fupany man in Britain, was a firm opponent of Demofthenes. I alfo confider her, Mr. Pitt, and Demofthenes only as Statefmen. As an Orator no man having ever approached the latter. Mr. Pitt muft however be allowed to be the ableft and clofeft reafoner that ever fpoke in the Houfe of Com. mons.

port themfelves without following fordid trades or illiberal profeffions; and who have ar tived at their fiftieth year. Our Members of Parliament being clected by fuch men, and being dependent on them, would not dare to enter into factious confpiracies; but on the contrary our Reprefentatives would be obliged diligently to attend to their duty, by enacting wholefome laws, and redreffing thofe grievances which muft neceflarily fyring up in every government. The one half of our reprefentatives to be elected viva voce, the other by fuffage; and a Cenforial Council of one hundred for the regulation of manuers, but chofen by the citizens. This effected, his Majefty, independently of the honeft fatisfaction of being handed down to pofterity with the Numas, Solons, Lycurgufes, Alfreds, and other benefactors of mankind, might almoft fay, that he left to his pofterity an everlafting kingdom.

Nothing can be more curtain than that there $m u / f$ be a change in the form of our government, for in its original conftitution, there was no provifion made againft thofe confequences which muft ever refult from the alterations and changes of property in its conflituent branches. For inflance, the revenue of the crown is fixed at a million annually : let us fuppofe that of the Lords at two millions : and both thefe to have been fo at the revolution, when perhaps the annual income of all the citizens and people amounted not to more than 50 millions: but whatever the amount of it might be then, it is undoubtedly five times greater noze: but as property follows wealth, their Reprefentatives fhould have now five times more weight in the conftitution than they had then, when compared to the income of the King, if this has not proportionably encreafed, and alfo the fame with regard to the Lords, if their income has not alfo proportionably encreafed. Now that the King's income and that of the Lords have not proportionably encreafed with that of the people, is an obvious and incontrovertible truth, which evinces, that the balance in our conftitution is deftroyed: and that therefore it behoves government, according to Ariftotle, and not the people, according to the demagogues, to reftore the original balance, which is impoffible, as this would require the creation of five hundred Lords, which the people would not bear, or to devife another form of government; for otherwife it is clear, that the people will take the bufinefs into their own hands, and follow the example of the French revolutionits, than which a greater misfortune could not happen to he nation. As his Majefty and the Lords, and wealthy Commoners, would in this cafe be the greateft fufferers, fo they fhould be moft urgent in the bufinefs, as in a little time it will be too late. For, independently of the democratical principles, which have been propagating thefe thirty years in Britain, and which have taken fuch poffeffion of the minds of the people, as not to admit a doubt but that the majority lean ftrongly to democracy, the fuccefs of the American colonies, and the late French revolution, muft fo increafe their rumbers and courage, as to preclude every doubt of their final fuccefs. As men of this caft, from theirinexperience, and goodnefs of heart, are geaerally prefumptuous, and entertain no doubt of efcaping or avoiding thofe rocks upon which their prototypes have ftruck.

Ariftotle's excluding from the rights of citizenfhip, fo many of the inhabitants as would come under the defrription of buyers and fellers, befides thofe who fupport themfelves by their labour, will in this age of the Rights of Men, appear very extraordinary, unjuftifiable, and impolitic. However, a little reflection will fhew the propriety of their exclufion. For, concerning the poorer clafs, who know nothing of government. nor ever can have any idea of it, to veft in them the rights of citizenfhip, would be only making them

them the tools of artful, defigning, felfifh men, either mafter-manufactururs, other employers, or demagogues; by whofe means laws would have only temporary objects in view.' Such governments, befides, have ever been inimical to truly virtuous and good men, whom the populace, inftigated by defigning individuals, and prompted by momentary paffions, have frequently moft miferably put to death, which they afterwards forely rupented of; when they had difcovered that thofe endeavours which had made them obnoxious, were folely directed for their benefit, by expofing the arts of their mafters, employers, and demagogues. Secondly, with regard to buyers and fellers, or manufacturers, befides their not having the neceffary leifure, for reflection, and for confidering the effect which may refult from ordinances relating to government, they would be ever guided by felfifh motives, eftablifhing monopolies, and regulating trade, the price of provifions, &c. &c. which have never produced any good to the community at large : but on the contrary much evil. But by vefting the right of citizenfhip in thofe who live upon their income, or follow liberal profeffions, their intereft being that their incomes thould go as far as poffible, it would be always a fpur to them for M 2 devifing fchemes for promoting manufaecuies and the arts, in order to have them cheaper.

Secondly, by raifing the value of the products of their eftates, which would be moft effectually done by raifing fuch a fpirit of competition among thofe engaged in trade, manufactures, agriculture, and commerce, as to enable them tu afford to the great body of the poor, the confumers, the greateft poffible daily wages confiftent with honeft profit, and this could only be done by equally protecting the rights of all; but efpecially by permitting every perfon to difpofe of the products of his induftry when and to whom he pleafed, and fupplying his wants in like manner. By this fimple arrangement, or sather doing of nothing, the value of labour would be encreafed, which would enable the poor to give greater prices for the products of the foil, and each clafs would take care not to lofe the home market. Thus, the intereft of all would be in unifon, which was doubtlefs intended by our all-wife and benevolent CREATOR.

FINANCE.

Aristotle obferves*, that in eftimating the greatnefs of a State, the number of its inhabitants fhould not be fo much confidered, as its power (dvvauts) or wealth, which would enable it to annoy its enemies with effect, by affording an ample revenue from taxation. As in thofe days the fame takes place in ours. That country which, cateris paribus, has the greateft revenue, or the greateft refources, is reckoned the moft powerful. It therefore behoves every ftate to confider thofe means by which, without oppreffing its fubjects, the greateft revenue can be levied from them. Neither fhould fubjects repine at the greatnefs of the annual public income : for, independently of the greater protection and fecurity which they would thereby enjoy, it might be fo employed as to infure a peculiar energy and force of character throughout the whole nation.

[ 94 ]

It is an obvious truth, that the farther any tax is laid from the confumcr, or the perfon who in fact pays it, the heavier it falls upon him: for inflance, a tax upon malt of five fhillings a bufhel, will be paid by the maltfter to the revenue officer: when the brewer or diftiller buys this malt, he will not only pay for the malt the price it would be at were there no tax at all upon it, but alfo the five fhillings advanced by the maltfer to the revenuc officer; and alfo a premium to the maltfter for having advanced it, which we may fuppofe to be ten per cent. on thefe five fhillings : this adds fixpence to the five fhillings : the brewer in felling his beer to the retailer will likewife expect a premium or intereft for the five fhillings and fixpence which he has advanced to the maltter above the value of the malr, which will make the tax fix fhillings on the bufhel of malt; in like manner the retailer when felling it to his cuftomers, the real confumers, will likewife have his premium of ten per cent. for having advanced to the brewer fix fhillings beyond the value of the price of the product of a bufhel of malt, had there been no tax on it; thus the tax which government receives, though only five fhillings, is fix fhillings and feven-pence halfpenny upon the confumer, or upwards of thirty per cent. above what he would pay, did he make his own malt, and brew his own beer.

There are two obvious evils attending this mode of taxation; firft by making the people pay more than government receives, it impoverifines them, and even thus leffens the revenue by difabling the fubject from expending upon excifeable commodities, that money which he now pays to thofe perfons who have advanced the taxes for him ; narrely, the maltfer, brewer, and retailer: and fecondly, thofe perfons, who are accuftomed to advance the taxes, are ever engaged in contriving means by which they may avoid paying the tax; in which they frequently fucceed, even to flich a degree as to defraud the revenue to the amount of millions : neverthelefs, they will not fell their beer or fpirits a farthing the cheaper in confequence of their fraud: fo that the confumer is obliged to buy his beer and fpirits at the fame price, that he would have done, had they paid the regular duty. But, moreover, he muft make up, by means of other taxes, for the defrauded millions, which further difables him from purchafing excifeable commodities; and thus the public income is further confiderably leflened. However, this mode of taxation, though in many cafes the confumer fumer pays fifty per cent. more than what government receives, is perfevered in by it, as the people pay the taxes, feemingly without being fenfible that they pay any: whereas, were they fenfible that the fugar which they buy at eightpence a pound, might be purchafed at fourpence were there no taxes, and feveral other articles in the fame proportion, it is not improbable, but that petitions might be laid before Parliament from the Poor, demanding an alteration in the mode of taxation, by which not only themfelves, but even the whole community, are fo materially injured.

However, as it needs mufl be, that taxes muft be paid, it perhaps may not be improper to confider, whether any new ones can be devifed, which may be fubftituted in the fiead of fome of thofe actually fubfifting; for, till this be done, little attention will, or fhould be giver to the prayer of fuch petition. I have already given a fcheme for fubftituting other taxes in the ftead of thofe which actually exift, and though I am fatisfied, that what I have already propofed, is preferable to thofe which actually do exift, yet I am not oue of thofe perfons who is fo eager with his fchemes, as to think that government fhould materially alter her fyftem of taxation, even in the fmalleft particular, ticular, except upon very plaufible grounds indeed. Yet this fhould not deter the patriotic citizen from offering his fentiments upon a fubject, which if rightly hit upon, would fo materially contribute to the profperity and happinefs of his country.

In the tract alluded to*, I propofed grain and butcher's meat, as fitter objects for taxation than thofe upon which our taxes are now levied. In propofing a tax ongrain, in preference to the meal produced from it, which might be more eafily collected at the mills, my view chiefly was, indirectly to tax horfes: however, by farther reflection on the fubject, I think I can lay a tax on the horfes directly, which if properly attended to, will net be eafily evaded. I am far from thinking that taxes on grain, or the meal of grain, and on butcher's meat, are ineligible; yet ftill, as they would in fome degree embarrafs trade, which, except in pernicious commodities ought to be as free as the winds of heaven, for this reafon I think fuch taxes ought, if poffible, to be avoided. In Holland there are taxes on buth thefe commodities, fo that there is no impoffibility in levying them : and certainly government would be lefs liable to be defrauded by butchers and millers, than by fmugglers, brewers and diftillers.

Intead of thofe taxes I would propofe firft, an annual tax on horfes, to the amount of the medium value of two loads of hay in the city or town where they ftood, or to the next market town. By this means the tax would be pretty nearly proportioned to the earnings of the horfe throughout the kindgdom; for, as fubjects of taxation, all horfes fhould be deemed labouring ones. In London fuch a tax would amount to about fix pounds fix fhillings; in the north of Scotland, perhaps not to more than a fourth of this fum, ur one pound eleven fhillings and fix-pence. However, I think there flould be a diftinction madebetween horfes employed in hufbandry, and horfes keptin great cities for luxury, and thofe kept folely with a view to productive labour. I would therefore farther propofe, that thofe perfons who kept five times as much land in their hands aj was neceffary to fuppot the horfes they kept, fhould be only charged at the rate of one load of hay. Befides favouring the farmers by fuch a regulation, my object would alfo be to induce country gentlemen to continue fuch. For there can be no doubt but that this clafs of citizens are the moft ufeful of all others. Farther, as there are many poor people, who cannot do without one horfe, particularly in Ireland, for bringing home their fuel andother purpofes; and as perhaps the fame is the cafe in Wales and Scotland, and the mountainous parts of England, I would reduce the tax to fuch occupiers of land, who held in their poffeffion five times more land than was requifite to fupport a horfe, to the price of balf a load of hay.

What would be the amount of a tax of this nature, were it fairly collected, is very difficult to fay. England, Wales, Scotland, and their dependent inlands contain about feventy millions of acres : that there is a horfe to every thirtyfive acres, cannot be difputed. Let the reader only confider the numbers of horfes which are kept in London, and all the great towns, nay, I may fay, all the little towns alfo, throughout England, and he may be able to form an idea of their number; when he at the fame time confiders, that perhaps there is not a farm of thirtyfive acres in England which has not one horfe on it; nor a farm of feventy acres which has not two: to fay then that there are two millions of horfes in Great Britain and its dependent iflands, will moft certainly be under the mark. I fhall however take it at this. For many reafons, which are only founded upon probability; and therefore would prove nothing, I am inclined to think that the medium tax upon hories would be about 4l. or the total amount of fuch a tax cight millions.

While our prefent prejudices fubfift a tax on horfes ought to be popular, when it is confidered, that they are very generally objects of luxury ; and befides, that a middle-fized horfe requires as much land for his fupport, as, if well cultivated, would yield not a fcanty fubfiftence for one poor family; fo that our two millions of horfes, if thoroughly fed, would require as much land for their maintenance as would perhaps fupport ten millions of inhabi= tants. I fay, that all taxes laid on with a view of particula:ly bearing upon any defcription of men, but particularly the rich, are founded upon prejudice; and that thofe legiflators, who give into notions of this nature, aet as wifely as the man who killed the hen which laid the gol, den eggs; and unjuftly too! For, when men entered into fociety, or formed the focial compact, it was certainly underfood by all the parties, that each of them fhould be anfwerable towards the expences confequent thereto, proportionably with the reft. Let us now fuppofe, that the focial compact was entered into at firft by ten perfons, and that the expences amounted annually to the value of ten bullocks, or a bullack each perfon, Let us alfo fuppofe that in confequence of war, or a purfuit of plunderers, that there is an extraordinary expence incurred to the amount of ten bullocks, how is it to be liv quidated? one of them might fay, we munt each of us give a bullock extraordinary. Let us fuppofe that this perfon was a fmoaker of tobacco, and that he cultivated this plant to a large extent, and fupported himfelf chiefly by the fale of the produce : fhould the other nive perfons fay no, to his propofal, and at the fame time infift upon laying a tax of 3 d. a pound upon his tobacco, he muft needs yield; but that he had been dealt unjuflly with is very obvious. The fame argument will apply when taxes are laid upon manufacturers, fhop-keepers, &c. for to fay that confumers pay the tax docs not do away the objection, as it is obvious, that the cheaper any commodity can be fold at, the more of it will be purchafed, and of courfe the greater will be the boneft profits of the perfons who deal in it, and thus the craft or calling of fuch perfons is indirectly and unjuftly taxed. As this is clear with regard to manufacturers, fhop-keepers, &c. it is equally obvious, that, by laying taxes upon thofe who live upon their income, you lay a bar upon their confumption, upon which the riches riches and nower of the flate are founded. But what is fill worfe, you thereby induce them to quit their native land, and remove to other countries, where their incomes will enable them to maintain themfelves genteelly. So that by this means not only the induftry of the community is leffened, but alfo the public revenue.

That there exifts an inclination in government for taxing horfes pretty finartly, cannot, from fome late regulations, be at all doubted; but the difficulty is to difoover the means to prevent the proprietors of horfes evading the tax. To effect this, I would propofe that every horfe in the kingdom (except perhaps thofe belonging to the royal family) fhould, under the penalty of forfeiture, be marked on the hind quarter with a circle of a colour the moft oppofite to that of the horfe, to be worn from the firf of Auguft, 1791, to the thirty-firft of July of the year 1792. The owner of each horfe, upon its being marked fhould be obliged to pay the tax; and at the fame time receive a flamped feet of paper containing a receipt for the tax; in which paper the future annual taxes fhould be only entered. Farther, this paper fhould contain an accurate defrription of the horfe; and in cafe he fhould change mafters, this paper fhould be given to his new mafter, mafter, under the penalty of a fum equal to every annual tax fince the commencement of the act to be levied upon the perfon in vihofe poffeffion he was found. Farther, that all horfes; &c. under the age of four. years old fhould be in like manner annually marked and regiftered, but to pay no tax, except the value of the paper or a fixpence, till they had entered upon their fifth year. A copy of the deed to be entered in the collector's book of each diftrict. Farther, any horfe appearing with a forged mark, fhould, upon proof, be forfeited. Though perhaps fome horfes might evade the tax, yet in a few years there can be no doubt, but that the number of thefe aximals would be pretty accurately known; for the breeders of them would not rifk their propetty by not having them annually regiftered, wher it would coft them fo little. .

The fecond tax which I would propofe is a capitation tax, to the amount of the value of twelve days work of a labouring man where the perfon taxed refided, upon every perfon, except labourers, (who fhould not be obliged to pay this tax for more than three children, under the age of fifteen. This is the only tax which the poor would have to pay; and though in Middlefex, and the parts adjacent to London, it would amount annually to about $5 l$. 5 . per family of five five perfons, and in the north of Scotland to perhaps $33^{5}$. or 34 s. yet I will venture to affirm, that in neither place would it be an oppreffive tax, but on the contrary much lefs burdenfome than thofe complex taxes which they actually pay without it feems being fenfi. ble of them. A poor man and his fanily in the vicinage of Londorn earn about 50 l . a year. Let us fuppofe that the half of this income is expended in purchafing articles excifed, or which have paid the cuftoms to the amount of $6 l$. This $6 l$. having been advanced for them by feveral becomes $g l$. upon the confumer, as has been thewn, and generally a great deal more: but $9 l$. wants but little of the double the propofed tax; independently of the confiderable advance of price, our excifes and cuftoms muft caufe upon our own manufactures, which fhould alfo be reckoned, and which, when added to the former, muft undoubtedly more than double the propofed tax.

- Farther, it is a well-known fact that mechanics pretty much throughout England, lofe one day in the week in confequence of their exceffes, upon receiving theamount of their week's labour. Now if inftead of lofing, in fo beaflly a manner, fifty-two days in a year, they applied themfelves to their trades, the amount of thefe fifty-two days

days labour would pay the capitation tax, both for themfelves and for their families, when not exceeding five perfons: for in every trade the labour of a mechanic is higher than that of a labourer in the fame place.

In the north of Scotland and thofe parts of the kingdom in which wages are low, and where the demand for labour is uncertain, and where . of courfe the labourer might be diftreffed for money to anfwer the tax, in fuch places the labourer thould have his option of paying either in cafh or in kind. In this cafe he fhould be billettid upon fome farmer, or other fubftantial perfon, who fhould be refponfible for his and family's capitation tax.

From what Mr. Bufhe has laid before the public, who is one of the moft accurate and beft informed men in Ireland upon financial fubjects, as I have heard, for I do not know the gentleman, it appears, that there are at the leaft four millions and a half of inhabitants in Ireland; which is my own opinion and that of every fenfible perfon of my acquaintance, who has turned his thoughts upon this fubject and is at all acquainted with the kingdom. Now, being at leaft as well acquainted with England, in this refpect, as I am with Ireland; and having made many enquiries upon the fubject,

I hefitate not to affirm, that if Mr. Bufhe is accurate in his flatement of the inhabitants of Ireland, that this ifland and its dependencies, which are confiderably more than three times as large as Ireland, contains eighteen, or at the leaft fixteen millions of inhabitants; my reafons for which the reader may fee in the tract alluded to, p. 97. Though I am confident, that there are actually eighteen millions of inhabitants in this ifland and its dependencies'; yet on the prefent occafion I fhall only ftate them as at fixteen millions. If then we take the daily wages of a labourer at onc fhilling a day as the medium, the capitation tax at 125 . a head will amount to the fum of $9,600,000 \%$. To thefe add the land tax $2,000,000$. and an equal fum by means of duties on fpirits and incidents, we have a fum total of $19,600,000$. annually; deduct for collection 600,000 . there will remain nineteen millions, or three millions more than our prefent multifatious fyftem of taxation produces. To prevent evafions in the capitation tax, it would be neceffary to enter the name and age of each perfun in a regiftry : and that each perfon fhould have a deed of his regiftry ready to produce, or if children, their parents; and in other refpects as obferved in regard of the four-legged animals *.

I would alfo propofe a tax of ten fhillings a quarter on all wheat imported into this kingdom, and five fhillings a quarter upon all other grain. This would yield, communibus annis, upwards of 200,000 . if we may be allowed to form an inference from the account of the quantity of corn and grain, exported from, and imported into, England and Scotland, for eigbteen years, from the 5th of Fanuary, 1770, to the 5th of fanuary, 1789, &c. figned John James Catherwood, Reciver-general

* This argument concerning population can be reduced to a fmail compafs. Ireland, omitting fractions, is fuppofed to contain nixieteen millions of acres, Englifh meafure, and, according to Mr. Buthe, four millious and a half of inhabitants, or fomething lower than one to every four acres and a half. England is fuppofed to contain fortyone millions of acres, and if equally populous as Ireland, Thould of courfe contain $9,666,666$ inhabitants: but that it. is half again as populous as Ireland I have flewn I think in the tract alluded to: to the $9,666,666$ then we are to add $4,833,333$ which makes the population of England $14,499,999$; add two millions and a half for Scotland and Wales, we have then feventeen millions for the population of Great Britain and its dependencies. But England is more that one half again more populous than Ireland.

which amounts to an annual lofs to the public, had fuch a tax exifted during this time of 205,330l. And though many will think, that the great import during this fpace was owing to a failure of crop', yet I make no doubt, but that it was owing to the encreafing population of the people, and to the fuperior profits which refult from applying land to the dairy and fattening cattle, in a thriving country in which the people are daily becoming richer, and are of courfe better able every year to purchafe meat for their families confumption, which muft neceffarily raife the price of butcher's meat, and which will continue fo to do, if the nation continues in its prefent ftate of profperity: Farther, a tax of this nature would only put the Englifh farmer upon a par with the French and American farmers in our owı. market : for the former being exempted from tythe, and the latter from tythe and rent, will otherwife be able to underfell Englifh farmers in their own markets : which muft greatly difcourage the raifing of grain in this kingdom, and make it too dependant for its fubfiftence upon foreign countries, the climates of which are not fo much to be depended on for the ufual returns at harveft as England : and whofe cultivators have not the ability, equal to that of our own farmers, of counteracting by their ikill the effects of unufual feafons. Befides a fixed tax of this amount would keep our markets more upon a level, than our prefent corn laws; which is a circumftance always very defirable, and I am inclined to think would not even raife them. It is needlefs to obferve that the bounty upon the exportation of corn fhould be entirely difcontinued.

Employment of the Poor.

RISTOTLE* obferves that the employment of the poor ought to be a principal concern with every ftate; and there can remain no doubt concerning this, if it be the object of the flate to be great and powerful: for thefe depend, or rather are the confequence of the income of the fate; which depends on the income of the individuals which compofe it; and if a great number of thefe have no employment, the produce of their induftry being nothing, will materially affect the fum total of the income of the individuals belonging to the ftate, and of courfe its power. This may be readily exemplified by confidering the actual fate of France, which is faid, and I believe, with very good reafon, to contain thirty millions of inhabitants : of thefe thirty millions, I will undertake to fay that there are ten millions of idlers, or two $r$ lions of families. Thofe perfons who have travelled through France, muft have perceived, almoft every where the people employed in playing at bowls, or fome other annufement, without any apparent tie upon them for regular labour. Now, if the fum totai of the earnings of a poor man and his family ought to amount to twenty pounds annually, it will follow that this idlenefs caufes a lofs to that ftate of forty millions annually; if we place it at thirty pounds, the lofs will then be 60 millions. Many will think that this fum is impoffible, and far above the truth; but the fact is, that it is far below the truth. For independently of the univerfal idlenefs perceptible throughout France, it follows from their very poverty that they are incapable of purchafing the proper tools, or good tools to carry on their trades. So that if a man, in confequence of the badnefs of the inftruments he works with, can only accomplifh the balf of what he could otherwife' do, fuch a perfon may be faid to be only balf employed. Perhaps it may be objected, that admitting their induftry to be as great as I would have it, where is the fpecie to be found, capable of purchafing thirty millions worth of manufacture? Doubtlefs no where. But the cafe is this; were the agriculture and manufactures, &cc. of France, which are at prefent carried on by thirty millions, equally well done by twenty millions, millions, which is my hypothefis, ten millions of its inhabitants might apply themfelves to other new branches of manufactures, 8 cc . Thefe would exchange their manufactures with the others, either directly by means of barter, or indirectly by means of coin. Here then would be two new. markets, we may fay created; one of ten millions for the old manufactures, the other of twenty millions for the new manufactures; befides what would be neceffary for their own confumption. In this cafe it is obvious that each party would exert every nerve to fupply the others with what they wanted; this would lead to improvements in their modes of manufacturing, and thus enable them to fell cheaper, and at the fame time to have greater profit; hence both parties would be enriched; the confequence of this would be, that they would like to be fed better, and of better things too. The butcher inftead of having half a dozen cuftomers, would have ten times as many, who would therefore raife the price of his meat: the farmer upon this would raife the price of his cattle, and at the fame time would be contriving fchemes to enable him to fupport more of them; thus agriculture would be rendered more flourilhing. The government perceiving the increafing wealth and profperity of the people, would be devifing means means of fecuring part of the overplus to itfelf, in order that the people which it ruled migit be refpectable in the eyes of other nations. This overplus, either in kind, or in money, would be employed in paying fleets and armies, and in liquidating national debts. Hence it is obvious that the induftry of all is the benefit of all; and that the firtt object in every fociety, after conftituting a political conftitution, fhould be, to encourage induftry, nay to enforce it, as immediately tending to the proferity of all its members, and in regard of its governors adding materially to their political confequence, with refpect to other communities.

[ 111 ]

[ 112 ]

To propofe any thing on this head, as likely to turn out advantageous to England, might be deemed prefumptuous, efpecially in a flranger, who profefles that whatever juft ideas he may entertain on this fubject are entirely owing to thofe obfervations which obtruded themfelves upoa him in his frequent peregrinations through it. And, however applicable fome of them may be in his opinion to England, he apprehends that this notion will be found to be grounded upon his imperfect idea of $\mathfrak{i t}$. But with regard to Ireland he will feak more pofitively.

In the firft place he thinks, that it is evidently the intereft of Great Britain, that the inhabitants of thefo three kingdoms thould, with regard to thofe advantages which refult from a wifely conStituted civil community, be put, as foon as poffible, upon an cqual footing: that 18 , that all their inhabitants hould participate, as foon as might well be, of thofe advantages which fome of them now enjoy. Until this is done, even though the political conftitution fhould be founded upon property, the ftate would not be free from fedition, and heartburnings. That a well-informed government could object to any meafures neceflary to facilitate this object, which would materially tend to its own power, is not to be imagined. That fhort-fighted felfifh manufacturers might raife a clamour is very natural. However, the true intereft of the empire, firmly and pertinaciounly adhered to by an intelligent Miniftry, would quickly put an end to fuch murmurings. The moft effectual means of attaining this very defirable end, I apprehend would be the fecuring, the home market for her manufactures, to each of the appendant-kingdoms, at leaft for thofe manufactures, which it would be found advifeable peculiarly to encourage; either becaufe of the ftaple being the natural growth of the country, or

that they could be carried on in them at all times upon equal terms, as in any other countries. This I think might be effected by means of premiums, or bountics of twelve per cent. upon all piece manufactures fold in public market, and at the fame time fo marked, that they could not be without detcetion, (which fhould be attended with a forfeiture of the goods) a feecnd time propofed, as being entitled to the premium. The premium of courfe would be paid to the manufacturers. So confiderable a premium, and enfured for a number of years (fuppofe twenty) would caufe many of thofe individuals, who poffefs one, two, or three hundred pounds, and who lend it at fix per cent. intereft, to fome neighbouring gentleman, fhopkeeper, or attorney, to reflect and confider how much more their capital would produce, were it applied to manufactures, independently of its greater fecurity: befides that fuch application of it would require little of their attention, nay, might be almoft entirely directed by their wives and daughters. Thut fuch was the origin of the great increafe of the cotton manufactures at Manchefter, I know from the manufacturers thernfelves; and that fome who began with one and two hundred pounds capital, carry on the bufinefs now with ten and twenty thoufand pounds capital. However, according to our modern leginators, the mode fhould be to pay premiums to the merchants on exportation, which no doubt would have its effect ; but not the tythe of that which would refult from premiums to the manufacturers themfelves. For thefe having only in $v^{\cdot}$ ew production, are ever devifing modes by which the greatef quantity of goods can be produced with the leaft labour, which when effected in any degree, is of univerfal advantage. But this is no object. with the exporter. His object is the quantity of goods exported, no matter to him the quantity of labour beflowed upon them : for his gains are the fame. Add to this the diffufing wealth throughout a country, by encouraging the manufacturer: whereas by encouraging the merchant, you give rife to fome overgrown upftart, who is incapable of fupporting with dignity, a fituation which nature feemed to have denied to him.

Agriculture, which though upon every account, fhould be the firft object of fociety to encourage, as producing the beft and moft ufeful citizens, yet in confequence of our illfounded prejudices on the fide of manufactures and commerce, and a correfponding conduct, can only be noze looked upon in a fecondary light, at leaft till communities recover their natural tone, ought, in regard of Ireland to be encouraged in the following manner. One object fhould only engage the attention of the Dublin Society at the fame time. As I thould give my vote for turnips, I Thall fuppofe that the one fixed on. The premium on this fpecies of production fhould be as follows. Firft the kingdom fhould be divided into fifty divifions, nearly equal as to fuperficies ; in each divifion there fhould be one perfon appointed for conducting the experiment and receiving the premium. This perfon to be appointed by the citizens, or thofe poffeffing independent life efates within the diftrict ; the premium fhould be 200\%. a year for ten years- upon his engaging every year, during that cerm, to have twenty-five Irifh plantation acres, properly hoed, according to the moft approved Englifh manner : two years premium to be advanced to him upon his appointment, that it might not difarrange his private affairs ; and to enable him, without inconveniesce, to carcy it on with effect. Perhaps the importing two or three Englih hoers from Norfolk or Suffolk might be neceffary; to do which, with the neceffary implements, would require money. It is needlefs to obferve, that ample fecurity ought to be infifted on for the due performance. By this means there would diftributed throughout the kingdom fifty turnip farms, and of courfe convenient for the infpection of all perfons who chofe to adopt this fpecies of cultivation. The fum requifite would be 10,000 l. for ten years;' or 100,000 . Though this mull be allowed to be a great fum, yet, when it is confidered, that an equal fum has been annually given in bounties, I believe for thirty years paft, without producing any effect, in confequence of the Dublin Society's embracing too many objects, which from their triflingnefs could never be attended to; a fum of this magnitude fhould not be regarded, when the manifect object of it was to increafe the quantity, and fo diminifh the price of a neceiliaty article of life. Were it alfo obferved in the inftructions given to each of the perfons appointed, that perhaps the moft certain beneficial mode of applying land after turnips, upon burn baiting, would be, fecond, potatoes; third, wheat; fourth, clover; fifth, wheat ; fixth, turnips: feventh, potatoes, wheat, clover, wheat, da capo; a good fy.ftem of hufbandry might be introduced. Every man in Ireland knows the value of an acre of wheat and potatoes; and though there might be other rotations of crops more beneficial, perhaps few would be more eafily introduced. By: this means a general opulence would take place among the people, who would thereby be enabled to purchafe, what many of them feldom do more than three or four times in the year, good beef and mutton; thefe articles of courfe would proportionably rife in value, and eftates with them. The people being employed, and feeling the advantages of induftry, would change their character, and inftead of defacing the country by ftealing timber, would become protectors of that property which contributed fo much to the beauty and neatnefs of their little holdings. So that, though the taxes might at firft be pretty high upon gentlemen, yet in the end they would be infinitely the greateft gainers; befides the unfpeakable fatisfaction of immediately contributing to the comfort of fo many poor wretches, with which the country abounds.

[ 118 ]

To obviate many inconveniences which refult from profpects of war, I would propofe that thirty regiments of a thoufand men each fho $d$ be immediately raifed in Ireland. Thefe thirty thoufand men, inftead of being employed in acquiring the military difcipline, fhould on the contrary be employed on the public works. The firft of which fhould be a general draining of the kingdom, by deepening the beds of rivers; and removing other obftructions in them. I will take upon me to fay, that fuch a body of men employed on this work for five fummers, or twenty months, would add to the annual rental of land two millions fterling, without any farther improvement. But when this was effetted the millions of acres which might be watered, and were fo, would be encreafed in value threefold; which improvement they will never be fufceptible of till the firft is effefted. Neither can the firf be effected without its being undertaken by government, for it is not to be fuppofed that there is a fingle river or ftream in the kingdom which does not touch the property of fome foolifh, or mulifh; or felfjh fellow, who would defeat the entire fcheme with regard to it. Perhaps it would be neceffary to pull down fome eel wires, but this fhould be little regarded, as the erecting them was an encroachment upon public righe: and no man fhould be a gainer by his wrong. The fame may be faid with regard to mills. Neither rould the Jors be very confiderable in regard of thefe : for, by the finking of the rivers, thure mills ereeted upon them, by a fmall alteration in their fituation, with a fmall duct of water might be changed from underflot to overfbot mills which would be a material improvement in them. But though the nation were to purchafe all the wares and mills, fo needful a work fhould not be put a flop to upon that account. It is needlefs toobferve how much it would conduce towards the facilitating the improvements of its bogs, and would certainly render the climate lefs humid.

During the other cight months thefe men might be employed in repsing the public roads, particularly about the towns, upon which turnpikes fhould be eiected. Superannuated ferjeants and old foldiers might be fet over thefe; and the rates to be the fame as in England. The money to be paid to the account of government: neither would thefe receipts be trifling. By thofe means; independently of the favings thereby in the public ceffes, the roads near towns, inftead of being almoft impaffabie by means of carrutts from the continual drawing of fuel, when formed of fmall or broken ftones, as they fhould always be in moift climates, would be in excellent order, to the great fatisfaction of their inhabitants.
Hence it is evident, that thefe 30,000 men are not intended to pals idle lives. On the contrary, for the feven years, for which term they were to be engaged, (officers, ferjeants, and corporals, as in the regulars) they fhould bealways employed. After cleanfing, and paying their devotions every Sunday, they might be engaged in learning the manual exercife.' Our half-pay officers, whather of the army or navy, to be promoted to full pay in this militia, the remaining commiffions to be fold. Upon the profpect of war, we then fhould have 30,000 ftout fellows, inured to labour, ready to draft into either the land or fea fervice. Men, moreover, acquainted and perfonally known to their officers: a circumflance always much to be defired.

As it would be my object to have the beft and moft decent of the lower clafs of people in this militia, their pay fhould be 55. a week, is. $6 d$. of which fhould be regularly placed in a tontine fcheme under government fecurity, 6d. a day would be fufficient for cloathing and maintenance. This 1s. $6 d$. a week, with the accumulating intereft, would, at the expiration of their feven years fervice, perhaps amount to 301 . For the payments of thofe who died, or were expelled for mifbehaviour, fhould be divided among the others, which would be a good tie upon all for their good behaviour.

Perhaps a militia of this nature of 60,000 men for Great Britain would not be ineligible: In this cafe the common men fhould be fought for in Ireland and Scotlan?, where man's labour is of the lefs value, and of courfe the lefs productive and beneficial to the community. This would alfo put a ftop to emigrations to America, by raifing the value of the labour of the re-maining. So great a body of half civilized men, after a feven years apprenticefhip to a laborious, induftrious, and regular life, would be an invaluable acquifition to their native countries. Their little funds would enable them to take farms, marry, fettle and rear up their offspring, in a ftile much fuperior to what they can at all afpire to at prefent. In fact, in thirty years it would be the means of civilizing thofe two nations, and bringing them nearly to a par with England.

How greatly would the proprietors of land in Ireland and Scotland be benefited by it! inftead of letting their lands to poor creatures, who perhaps may have value to the amount of 86 . or $10 l$. thefe new tenants, with the advantageous marriages they would be enabled to make, might be well fet down as having property to the amount of $50 l$. Independently of this confideration, I truft that making fo many of the human fpecies happy', would be a motive fufficiently powerful with Irifhmen to fupport their portion of the expences of fuch an eftablifhment. That it would tend more to the amelioration of the morals of the poor than 10,000 Sunday fchools, will be acknowleged by thofe, who form their opinions of mankind from experience, and not Q2. the the cobweb fyftems of clofet-writers. . To think of impreffing the Poor with juft notions of moral rectitude, founded upon metaphyfical abflraction, is an idea worthy of fean facques Rouffeau. 'Thofe who have not leifure for reflection cannot attain to that excellence which confifts in regulating the moral affections from virtuous motives. The virtues of the Poor are temperance, frugality and 'nduftry. Action being happinefs, whether of the mind or body: if poffeffed of the former virtues, their greateft poffible happinefs in this life depends on themfelves.

But the objection is the expence. Having already, as I apprehend, provided funds for raifing an additional revenue of upwards of three millions fterling upon Great Britain only, which is a million and a half more than the expence that her proportion would amountto, at the rate of $25^{\circ}$. a man, including officers, without even deducting any thing on account of the receipts at the turnpikes, or on account of the half-pay of the officers and ferjeants, \&cc. which would be faved by their being put upon full-pay. That the amount of all thefe would be very confiderable, cannot be doubted. Methinks alfo that thofe miferable wretches, immured at Greenwich, might be well employed as gate-keepers; and thus cheaply made happy by having fomething to do. The founders of hofpitals muft have had moft erroneous notions of human happinefs, to fuppofe that it was at all compatible with a lifc of idlencfs. To think of making the veteran happy, by immuring him in a cold, comfortlefs palace, and placing him amongft individuals, little known or attached to him, was 3 moft prepofterous idea. The foldier's happinefs confifts in relating to the youth of his native village his actions and adventures: "I was with the " gallant Rodney, when De Graffe in the Ville " de Paris, after a brave defence, fruck to our " noble Admiral." "I fought under Mea"c dows, when we repulfed D'Eftaing at St . "s Lucie." "I faw Wafhington." "I faw Tip"s po Sultaun." The greateft happinefs which a veteran is capable of enjoying confifts in relations of this nature.

Et bac olim meminife juvabit.

THE PRESS.

IT is a well knowa truth that there is no good without its alloy, and this may be truly afferted of the Liberty of the Prefs. The liceatioufnefs of our prints, in regard even of individuals, who are of no political confequence, is frequently of fo very atrocious a nature, as to merit very fevere chaftifement : for private peace fhould be as much the object of every well-regulated government as the fecurity of property. But what individual, howfoever obfcure, can now be certain, that his, or fome of his family's feelings may not be wounded in the moft fenfible manner in the morrow's paper? This is doubtlefs an evil of a very ferious and alarming nature. Its tendency is evidently to deprive us of the Liberty of the Prefs, without which, conftituted as our government actually is, our liberties could not long fubfift. To difcover the remedy which will fecure the one without endangering the other is the difficulty, and it muft be acknowledged to be no fmall one. Were our conflitution modelled agreeably to the fketch which I have have ventured to offer, founded upon the ideas of Ariftotle, an eafy and effectual remedy at once prefents itfelf : namely, by lodging in the Council of one hundred a cenforial power. The Members of this Council being elected by the citizens, the judgment of it, or a quorum of them, might be held equivalent to that of the citizens themfelves. For, as Ariftotle has obferved in regard of Athens, were not the judgment vefted in the citizens, its liberties would be quickly deftroyed by a tyrannous Ariftocracy: how much more furely, in a government conftituted as ours. The Members of this Council being elected for a certain term of years, and being all men of fifty years of age, and of indepeident circumftances, and if thought advifeable, itremoveable, and, incapable of holding any other employment, muft be uninfluenced by government. Its power over the prefs might extend to a fummary punifhment of the proprietor, or even fupprefling the paper for its breach of public decorum, without however debarring the injured perfon from feeking fatisfaction by procefs of law. Its power ought likewife to be extended to licentious publications of every defreription.

PUBLIC LIBRARY。

A S we know from the experience of ages, that that nation which excells in literary accomplifhments, poffeffes, ceteris paribus, great advantages over other mations, when neceffary to make war upon them, if inferior in fuch acquirements. It therefore becomes the wifdom of every wellconftituted government to provide the means for facilitating the acquifition of knowledge among its people. The benefit being national, fhould be borne by the nation, even though it amounted to the expence of fome regiments: yet, inftead of being a burthen to the nation, it might be brought, I apprehend, to yield a fmall revenue ! perhaps as much as would be neceffary to pay the intereft of the firft expence, and to fupport the inftitution afterwards.

With regard to all plans for lioraries, which I have either read or heard of, whether founded by the fubscription of individuals; or at the expence of government, I never met with any that hit my idea of one, which would completely anfwer a fcholar, who frequently wants a great number of volumes, and for an indefinite length of time. Without wafting the reader's time with pointing out the defects of other plans, I flall offer my own.

Firft, I would have a large building erected, the upper part of it difpofed in fuch a manner as to contain the greateft number of books poffible. Here libtarians fhould remain during the flatea hours. No other perfons fhould have the privilege of reading or examining any books in the library, nor even to be admitted into it, unlefs accompanied by a fubferiber, and then only with the view of feeing it. Each fubfrriber to pay annually $2 l$. 2 s. Befides which, when he wanted a book, he was to depofit its value, to be returned when the book was returned : if he wanted 1000 volumes, upon depofing their value, they were to be furnifhed to him, with thic provifo that he was anfwerable for extra-damage. Were a library founded upon this plan, fcholars who lived at a diftance might have whatever books they wanted: and had they learned and expenfive works in view, they would not be deterred from profecuting them, from the neceffity of advancing 500 l . or 1000 l . in the purchafe of books; and which, independently of prefent inconvenience, might be of little value to their families at their deceafe, which muft have prevented many ingenious men from profecuting works of this nature. In fome cafes it might not be improper to give out books upon getting undoubted fecurity for their yalue, and the regular payment of the intereft.

Upon the ground floor there fhould be two fpacious rooms, with a librarian in each, one for holding Encyclopedias, Lexicons, Dictionaries, Atlaffes, and other articles that would not be advifeable to lend out. The other for books of natural hiftory, and other curious and expenfive works. The remaining part of the ground-floor to be divided into fpacious apartments for literary focieties: the freedom of each to be a guinea additional to each fubicriber. By this means every perfon, who chofe to be of one of thefe focieties, might be certain of meeting that fort of entersainment beft fuiced to his tafte or fludies. Subferibers always to have the privilege of introducing foreigners into the fociety or focieties of which they were members.

That an effablifhment of this fort is a defideratum in this great city, which would add to its attractions, and befides tend greatly to the acquifition of found learning, particularly were our government taken out of the hands of boys, and put into the hands of men, cannot be difputed. For then, inftead of thofe eppemeride whip-fillaoub productions with which the prefs fwarms, and which, with fluency of fyle, are fufficiently attractive and convincing to perfons of little experience or knowledge, it. would be found neceffary to compofe works with that care and attention, as to arreft the attention of judicious men, our goverr:sis, if it was expected by their authors that they fhouid be attended to. For, let the tafte of the governors be what it may, hif tory evinces, that the productions of the human mind take their complexion from it.

The editor of the Morning Chronicle has inferied in that prini fome paffages from Sir Fobn Dalrymple, from which it appears that this ingenious writer is ftrongly againft a Ruffian war. The argument adduced is, that if the American war ought not to be profecuted from the fear of lcing 3 millions of cuftomers, much lefs ought a Ruffian war, which may occafion the lors of 24 millions of cultomers. This argument is, I apprehend infolid: for, though the Americans have eftablifhed their independency, yet England poffefles the gieateft part of her commerce : and fhould Ruffia abiolutely profcribe our commerce, fhe would thereby only lay a heavy, tax upon her fubjects without effecting it; as her fubjects, being accuftomed to them wouid have them by one means or other; perhaps under the defcription of French or Dutch manufactures. Thus an axe which the Englifh merchant might fell for 2s. a French or Dutch merchant might weil charge $2 s .6 \mathrm{~d}$. for, as he muft be paid for his trouble and hazard, befides the double freight, infurance, \&c. A ftep of this nature would therefore greatly impóverifh her own fubjects, and their improvement in civilization, her primary object.

Secondiv, the proportion between the commerce of England and Ruffia is, in regard of the population of the two countries, by no means proportionably fo great as that between England and America, for then it ought to be eight times greater; which is by no means the cafe: nay, it is not even equal to that of America, and for this very fubftantial reafon, that an Ameitican, by his daily labour, will earn thrice as much as a Ruffian peafant or flave; and a man's expences in general are always in proportion to his income. If then the income of 3 millions of Americans equals that of 9 millions of Ruffians, and that we had an abfolute command of both markets, the 3 millions of Americans would want manufactures to an equal amount as the 9 millions of Kuffians. But they would even require a great deal more; for, befides what was neceffary for the American's fupport, and which his lands would produce, equally cheap, at the leaft, as the Ruffian's, all the remainder of his earnings would be expended in manufactures and artificial wauts; but with the daily earnings of a Ruffian, perhaps $3^{d .}$ a day, it would be ridiculous in him to think of purchafing the manufactures of Britain. The Irifh labourer, with double the wages buys none of them. Farther, though a market,' in the opinion of a manufacturer, might be deemed a fit fubject for going to war, yet it fhould be deemed only a fecondary motive in that of a flatefman, as he muft kno:v that that nation which is poffeffed of power, may always command a market. Vut power is only relative, fo that though a counif be growing more powerful, the ought to take care that another flate fhould not increafe her power ten times fafter than herfelf: for then notwithftanding her growing pofitively more powful, yet relatively fhe worild be otherwife, and in procefs of time would become an infignificant flate.

ftate. The ancient republic of Rhodes, and the modern ones of Genoa, Venice, and Holland, evince the truth of it.

The great objection to Democratical republics is the want of vigour, even though they were free of every other defect. This want of vigour arifes folely from the impoffibility of their governors being able to raife a large public revenue. This has never been effected, nor ever will be effecte. "ter this form of government. Therefore fuen fates mult becoine eafy conquefts when attacked by other flates, when of nearly equal force, and better conftituted for active exertions. Oligarchical republics, being timorous, felfifh, and covetous, are fill lefs capable of refiftance.
This accounts for Macedon acquiring a fu* periority over the Grecian republics. Had not Athens, after the expulfion of the 30 tyrants, become a perfect democracy, it might, under another Pericles, have fuccefffully refifted Philip. And, notwithftanding the moderns are unanimous refpecting the fecurity of Switzerland, I fcruple not to affirm, that it would not fland a fingle campaign; notwithftanding its numerous militia, and the courage of its inhabitants, againt the forces of the Emperor or King of Pruffia; and that no country in Europe, of equal refources, would make lefs refiftance to an enterprifing enemy : and, notwithftanding democratical boaftings, that the American ftates are alfo incapable of refifting a powerful enemy, as perhaps they may $h: v e$ f fhortly an opportunity of trying: and that, if the affairs of this country be conducted with ability, thefe flates may once more become a portion of the Britifh empire, but upon liberal terms, and that without firing a gun. In this cafe however, neither merchants ner manufacturers fhould be: at all attended to.

Democratical governments are befides inimical to true philofophy, which folely regards ethics. This was a fubject, which till after the humiliation of Athens by Philip, was not allowed, even there, to be freely difcuffed. The fate of Socrates is well known. Anaxagoras, though befriended by Pericles, was obliged to flee his country, to avoid a fimilar fate, which was pronounced againft him by the Athenians: the dread of which was alfo the caufe of the ableft and moft enterprifing citizen, that the ever produced, Alcibiades, becoming her fevereft foe. Nor in fpeculations of this nature, do I find that modern democracies furpafs other other European ftates. The Swifs Cantons, under this form of government, with regard to religious tenets, are Catholics: and if I may be permitted to form a judgment of the others, froin one of them which I travelled through, their mental accomplifhiments are of the very loweft order. There are fome learned men among the Swifs, but very few philofophers : for phyfiolow gifts by no means merit this title *!

I am fenfible there will be many objections, or prejudices againft fome things which I have propofed. Firft, concerning the direct tax on the Poor: yet, no tax can be more: "cious, where there is a conftant demand fo Labour. The mechanic and manufacturer will then be obliged, in fome degree, to work every day, inftead of facrificing two or three days in the week in excefs and idlenefs, each of which will render him a worfe workman. I fay this, even though the propofed poll-tax would be heavier on the poor than the prefent taxes. However, a tax of this fort fhould not be attempted before the organization of the ninety thoufand militia.

With

[ 137 ]

With regard to the advanced age before the attainment of the right of citizenhhip, it will be objected: What! is the nation to lofe the fplendid abilities of future Foxes and Pitts for fuch a period? Yes, truly. Meteors appearing in any fate evince a defect in its conftitution according to Arifotle. The profperity of ftates fhould be gradually progreffive, and not by fits and ftarts. Moreover, notwithftanding the acknowledged capacity of thefe two gentlemen, and of which few perfons bear a ftronger teftimony, or more frequently than myfelf, yet as legillators, they have fhewn but little. Mr. Fox's India bill, which would have conftituted an imperium in imperi, and his obfervations on the Canada bill, determine his pretenfions to the character of a legiflator. An imperium in imperio is univerfally condemned by every writer on politics, as defeating the end of government. With refpect to Canada, Mr. Fox is for having the legiflative affembly annually or triennially elected, with an univerfal right of fuffrage. Such a conftitution muft neceffarily terminate in an Ochlocracy, or a many-headed defpotifm. Mr. Pitt is for firt fecuring the Oligarchical branch of the conftitution, which though bereditary, he is pleafed to decorate with the title of Arifocracy,

[ ${ }^{138}$ ]

whic': : :ceffarily infers election : but an Oligarchy is an illegitimate, or corrupt form of government : it is the corruption of an Ariftocracy: fo that Mr. Pitt's firt object is to eftablifh a corrupt principle! The appeals in the bill will be for ever creating heart-burnings; and though the Minifter's view is obvious, mult tend more to fever that colony from Britain, than to ftrengthen the connection. The final appeal fhould be always to the citizens, or thofe Judges appointed by them *. Retaining a tenth part of the foil for the clergy is a matter of little moment, as in a country, where land in fee may be had for a fong, no one will accept land which is to go to his fucceffor, except merely for a commonage. And ere thefe commonages are of any account, the fate of the clergy, throughout the world, will be determined.' The clergy fhould yield gradually to the temper of the times: by doing fo, they will be able to preferve fomething : but fhould they perfevere in an obitinate refiftance, it does not require the firit of prophecy to foretell that they will become the victims of the fanatical exceffes of the Dempocratifts, as in a neighbouring kingdom. In my apprehenfion we fhould not be fond of legiflating for our colonies: we are too imperfectly acquainted with their local circumflances, not to fall into errors, which will always give a handle to the enemies of government to eftrange the affictions of the colony from the parent flate. A chief governor appointed by his Majefty, from whom all the executive officers were to derive their powers, methinks is as much as England fhould claim. A poll-tax, regulated by the fame principle as laid down with regard to England, fhould be the price of protection, and of acquiring the privileges of being a member of the Britifh empire. Were the colonies independent, the neceffary taxes for this end would not be much lefs. But the advantages refulting from their being members of the empire, would alone outbalance this tax; for then they would have the liberty of importing into Britain, or any of her dependencies, the natural products of their foil, and of carrying away in return the products of Britain and its dependencies; whereas the latter fhould be abfolutely interdicted to the United States: and the importation of the natural products of other countries, and efpecially of the United States, fhould be fubjected to very heavy duties. By this means a fpur would be given to the induftry of our own colonies, which would be conducive to their wealth and happinefs, and would always be a tie upon their loyalty : and at the fame time reprefs the increafing profperity of the United States, the implacable enemies of this government; but it would alfo render them far more pliable in regard of a re-union with the mother country.

Throughout thefe fheets I have made ufe of the term Demagogue, according to its original genuine fignification, as C Scriptive of a perfon, who, by giving into the humours and propenfities of the people, mifleads them from their true intereft. Thofe who aeted in this manner were by the antients always fuppofed to be governed by finifter views. The ignorance of nịneteen in twenty of the moderns, concerning the true principles of government, exempts them in a great meafure from this charge.

In the debate upon Mr. Grey's motion, it was laid down by Mr. Sheridan* that the conftitution of this country confifts in a wife blending and cooperation of the executive and legiflative branches.

[ 141 ]

This pofition I affirm to be unfounded, either in regard to theory or practice. No one will pretend that, before the acceffion of the Houfe of Stuart, the Lords or Commons claimed any confitutional right of interfering with the executive branch, in what concerned peace or war; of courfe this mult be a novel claim, and without any conflitutional foundation. It is true, that fince the revolution, cowardly and ignorant Minifters have permitted, nay, have invited the Lotds and Commons to interfere in the executive branch of government. But now that the theory of our conflitution is better underftood, thofe encroachments upon the King's prerogative fhould be yielded up; and the government itfelf adjufted agreeably to its acknowledged theory. That fuch a $b 1$ nding is contrary to the theory of our conftitution, is evident from Ariftotle's vefting in fuch a political conftitution as ours, the entire executive power in the perfon of the King-the legifative in the General Counciland the judicial in the Citizens. By this means the three branches are accurately diftinguifhed, and their feveral functions marked by a broad line. Whereas a woife blending could never be fettled, for no two would ever be able to agree about it. It was alfo denied, and given up by the friends of the Miniftry, that implicit conf-

$[142]$

Rence ought not to be given to government in what regards our connections with foreign ftates. This I alfo affirm to be uncontitutional. For the functions of the Legiflative Councils being confined to the enacting and repealing of laws, redreffing grievances, and feeing that the public money was honeftly expended; it follows, that the declaring war or making peace, or entering into treaties, not coriang under any of the above heads, that the power adequate to thefe purpofes, is confitutionally and jolely vefted in the executive branch. Befides a limited confidence is an abfurdity ; and were it not fo, is impolitic; for the greater the confidence repofed, the more refponfible the perfon in whom it is vefted.

Mr. Burke muft have been doubtlefs amazed at Mr. Fox's eulogium of the French conflitution at the conclufion of the debate on Mr. Baker's motion. It only evinces that no capacity will enable a perfon to be a legiflator without extenfive reading and deep reflection. Men of bufinefs, befides, are not capable of this office. They have not the leifure requifte to form the comprehenfive mind, or true philofopher. Ariftotle has obferved, that all the great legiflators of antiquity were private individuals, even Ly curgus himflf.

[ 143 ]

Though I think it highly improper, during a debate, to declare, that one fet of men would conduct the national bufinefs better than thofe in poffeffion of the reins of government; for this can not be known until we have had experience of it, which, unlefs the Democratifts fhould overturn the government, is not likely fhortly to happen. Yet, upon this point, I profefs that I have entirely, altered my opinion, being firmly convinced the lnns far exceed the Outs in political capacity. The patriotifin and political capacity of the Outs may be fairly gathered from their conduct in regard to the wool-bill-the Indian war-the floating balancesand the Ruffian negotiation.-With refpect to the firft, the wool bill was a beneficial meafure, or it was not: if the former, the oppofition Members fhould have attended their duty, and urged forward the bufinefs: if it was a hurtful meafure they fhould have attended, and openly oppofed its paffing. And though it did pafs, their eloquence and abilities might have been the means of opening the eyes of their countrymen ; whereas, by their blinking the queftion, individuals, who take up their little knowledge from the reporters of the debates, think it a meafure of little or no importance. Government being under thraldom to the manufacturers, dared not, unfupported by the country gentemen, and oppoied by a vizulent oppofition, withhold ite fupport to a meafure, though elearly inimical to the general weal.

Mr. Pitt founds his claim, it feems, to honeft fame, from the iffive of the Ruffian negotiation. I doubt not it will be conducted with great ability. But Mr. Pitt's fame, in my opinion, will be more truly eftimated, from his conduct with refpect to the floating balances; lying in the hands of the Directors of the Bank. I am fure the oppofition would never, for fucb a trifle, the nation's right, have rifked their popularity with the monied intereft. Mr. Fitt's perftwering in this bufinefs, fhould fatisfy every honeft man, that his object is boneft fame; anci whilf it continues tio be fo, that he ought to meet their firm fupport.
I truf the perfecting the conftitution will next engage his attention. The times demani it. Our conflitution is fo wretchedly bad, that were it not for the extent of the ftate, we fhould be in continua! convulfions. But, fortunately while in a fever in London, the extremities are quite cool; and by the time that the fever has reached the extremities, the head has returned to its cuftomary indifference; which would be quite otherwife, were the fate confined to a few fquare leagues as the antient republics. This eviaces the fuperior intellect of the legiflators who der vifed fuch regulations as controuled the actions of freemen, who were the flanding army of the flate.

In a word, I deem it to be a truifm, that before men have arrived at the ufual acme of the human intellect, they fhould have no concern with the government upon which the happinefs and prof perity of fo many milliens depends.

Alfo, that all perfons engaged in illiberal employments or profeffions, and who were not poffeffed of an independency, ought likewife to be excluded from any thare in it
