This is what used to be before the invasion of England by the Persian hordes.

No one can prophesy the future, for even a Shah is influenced by Western civilization.

CHARLES WATTS, PROPRIETOR.

The Subscriber begs to announce to his first informed of his coming. "It will be very amusing." She was quite right, but on the whole, would n't a monkey from the "Zoo" be more so?

Two of us drove to Paddington station, where a parliamentary train was to convey the Lords and Commons to Windson. Crowds? Nobody knows the meaning of a crowd who has not lived in London. Let one person stand still five minutes gazing at nothing, and he will be surrounded by a gaping multitude, risen apparently from trap-doors in the ground. A fine lady going to and from her carriage will arrest the attention of a Falstant army, and even a wretched cab will fascinate the universal eye, if the occupant be not native and to the manner born. On this occasion there were crowds within crowds. There was the crowd in the will be revized by a gaping multitude, risen apparently from trap-doors in the ground. A fine lady going to and from her carriage will arrest the att

We scrambled into a saloon carriage and secured seats, which was better fortune than befell a noble lord who sat upon a table until it suddenly broke down, when he precipitately retired, leaving his coat and umbrella to pay the damages. Our companions were very "swell," and talked of nothing but the Shah. "I wish to see the retired to the Arab horse "said one:

the red tail of the Arab horse," said one; "a horse with a red tail must be rather odd, you know." He's better looking than I expected," remarked another. "Orientals are generally very fat, and he is not as greasy as most of them." The speaker was herself quite fat, but did not eem to realize that criticisms, like curses, come home to roost.

Awaiting the coming of the Shah were peace-abiding Windsorites, nursery-maids and children, and the small army maids and children, and the small army of peddlers always anxious to dispose of what nobody ever needs. An agile youth found a poor market for the photograph of the King of Kings. "Ah, now do buy the poor Shah before he gets worn off his legs," was his dolorous refrain. "What a blessing it is Nasr-ed-deen does not understand English," I thought, as two independent Britons, performing upon a melancholy accordeon, burst forth in a duet all about the illustrious visitor.

"O, come and lister to my lay,
"O come my ladies dear,
It's about the Shah of Per si-a You're certain for to hear."

"He's fell in love and run away
With a pretty English gal.
And where's he's gone I hope he'll stay.
This darkey of a pal."
The poetry was touching, yet we were obliged to tear ourselves away in blissfull ignorance of ninety-nine equally complimentary verses. Turning to the right of the walk we pushed through policemen, spectators, ginger-beer, wagons and carriages to the stand, from which we were to witness the review. Ah, it was a pretty sight! On three sides a charmingly green field closely mown, large enough to deploy 7,000 troops, hedged in by beautiful elms; on the fourth side, banners unfurled, pavilions overflowing with gaily dressed women, overflowing with gaily dressed women, drags top-heavy with England's aristocracy, officers in effective uniforms, sauntering up and down, everybody talking about the Shah, and wondering how ing about the Shah, and wondering how much longer the show would be postponed. "He asks a great many questions," said one, "and hates music." We all know what he who hath not music in his soul is fit for, and because of this hatred, I suppose, he has been bullied into attending operas and concerts. It must have delighted Patti Faure, and the other artists of Covent Garden, to sing to a man who would not listen to them, to a man who would not listen to them, who paid no attention whatever to

In the center of the pavilions were congregated the royal spectators, Victoria's open carriage, drawn by four white horses, being most conspicuous, while, in advance, was the Shah, mounted on a dirty white Arab steed, not much bigger than a mule, looking, in spite of his pink tail, silver stirrups, and wonderful holsters, like a discouraged hack. But this is a way Arab horses have. Appearances are deceitful. What they don't know about getting over the ground in the shortest space of time is not worth knowing. Still, the Shah was the most insignificant man on the ground. He is thin, not tall, sharp-visaged, and antipathetic. There was nothing striking about him. He wore a black coat, plaited round the waist, and anything more horrid than him. He wore a black coat, plaited round the waist, and anything more horrid than a plaited coat is not conceivable—except one that is gathered. On the breast of this ungraceful garment were fastened diamond-shaped emeralds sufrounded with pearls, looking, at a distance, like a disconnected checkerboard. On the imperial head was such a cap as the French soldiers wear in undress uniform, saving that the color was black instead of red. On the imperial nose rested a pair of gold On the imperial nose rested a pair of gold spectacles that would slip down, and, in Do you know why the Duke Alexis was sent to America and is still kept traveling all over the world? absurd enough to fall in love with a charming young woman below him in station, because he was yet more absurd to marry her, because his father became very much enraged at this outrage, and because the parental order went forth to separate the pair, in the hope of killing love by separation. Nice, is it not? The more I think of it, the more I see reasons for sympathy between a despotism and a for sympathy between a despotism and a republic like our own. But to return to Windsor. Side by side sat the Princess of Wales and her sister, the Czarevna, of Wales and her sister, the Czarevna, both dressed alike, both womanly and pretty. The Czarevna is fresher, and they do say that she was sent to England because the Shah admired her, and thus to counteract any effect produced upon him by the Princess of Wales. I don't believe it, but what difference does that make? The average Englishman thinks Russia is the root of all evil. If cholera, or a financial panic, or rinderpest, or

THE above PILLS having stood the test over forty years, and being prepared with great care and study, nothing cheap or impure being tolerated in their composition, are perfectly safe to administer to the most delicate constitution. They never reduce the patient; no cessation from bu iness or any unusual change is ever necessary. They never render anyone more liable to take cold. Containing no danserous drug, they act as kindly on the tender infant, the must, delicate female, and infirm old age, as upon the most vigorous and athletic system, exercising the most healthful influence on the whole system, invigorating the debilitated organs, huilding up the flagging nervous energies, imparting vigor to body and mind, and bringing every faculty into healthy play.

To females, from the peculiar affections that attend them when, hey are striving at maturity, and also, at the decline, or "change of life" they are the best remedy and assistant that can be used.
