MISS PETTICOATS AT OPERA HOUSE

Halifax Paper Speaks Highly of Performance of
This Company.

HERE TO-NIGHT

MISS Petticoats' dramatic play, 'The Play', was the attraction at the Academy of Music last night, and attracted a good house notwithstanding the very hot weather.
Everybody probably has read and enjoyed the charming book, 'Miss Petticoats', written by two Boston editors under the name of Dwight Titton, but probably no one has read the play, which is a play, first produced about five years ago at the Boston Theatre and which met with instant success, being pronounced one of the most charming New England life plays ever written. 'Miss Petticoats' the heroine, is a real American girl, who lives in the town of an old whaler, the home of her grandfather Captain Joel Stewart, a part admirably played by Frank Allen, who gave a realistic portrayal of a genuine old salt. Florence Farr (Miss Petticoats) which was the nearest her humble friends could get to 'Mon Petit Oeuvre', the name given her by her dying mother, was the leading role and Miss Farr's rendition brought forth much well deserved applause.

'Guy Hamilton' a part well played by Edwin Clayton is a most unimpeachable villain, who meets his just reward by being dismembered and losing his riches for his villainy. 'Sister Brent' played by Miss Charlotte Wilson was neat and pleasant and Mr. Wadsworth as 'Hiring Skyles' was really original and provided much laughter. 'Miss Petticoats' is a strictly moral play with a strong vein of wit and witily satire running through it, and gives just the required amount of offense to the pathetic scenes and makes a happy balance.

The costumes were beautiful and the scenery in keeping with both time and place. 'Miss Petticoats' will be repeated tonight and tomorrow night and will doubtless draw good houses.
