

CUPID ON THE CAR.

The story of an unexpected female's journey. "You are not afraid to go alone?"

"No, not a bit," she replied, "I have been out on the platform at the railway station, and he addressed a young girl beside him whom I had never seen before."

"You will have to ride all night," he said. "Never mind! No objection over an untried journey. I must get into the car."

Mr. Ralph Howell very unwillingly gave his arm to his sister, led her to a seat, bade her good-bye and sprang off just as the train started.

"After all," thought Miss Nettie, as she arranged her shawl on the back of the seat, "it is not so bad."

All the seats were filled, except the one beside Nettie; yet there was only one person standing in the car. It was a gentleman who had just entered the door and looked out over Nettie's head and out of Nettie's window.

"I have the magazines of the month, which my brother handed me as I started. I can offer you a copy, if you have a spare."

"Thank you," she said. "I have a spare." "The darkness gathered, and Nettie put up her hand for her shawl. In an instant it was taken from her."

"Stand up and let me put it on for you," said the gentleman beside her. "I will go to the window to see if I can find a seat for you."

LOSING AND FINDING.

A friend of mine, the talker told us, sleeping for one night at a hotel, struck his diamond bracelet into the bed cushion, rose hastily to catch an early train and left it there, says Cassell's Magazine.

Here is a story of how a man was led, by a woman's wiles, to a very bad end. A man named Jones, who had been married for some time, was one day walking in the park.

"I am going to see you," she said. "I have a letter from your mother." "Thank you," he said. "I will see you later."

"I have the magazines of the month, which my brother handed me as I started. I can offer you a copy, if you have a spare."

"Thank you," she said. "I have a spare." "The darkness gathered, and Nettie put up her hand for her shawl. In an instant it was taken from her."

"Stand up and let me put it on for you," said the gentleman beside her. "I will go to the window to see if I can find a seat for you."
