Dr. Ryerson's Address Again.

SIR.—Since writing you last week on Dr Ryerson's address, from the extract which appeared in the Advertiser, I have seen the pamphlet entire, and am led to form a still lower estimate of the author's abilities than I did before.

His whole theme is the evils of parties, party spirit, party dissensions, etc., and the brings four examples from history of the beneficial results that have followed from "burying all past animosities, and all party distinctions," but I find on looking at these cases that they have no reference whatever to party government, as they only refer to the leniency with which the conquered party have been treated after the suppression of a rebellion, or the termination of a civil war, and the beneficial results which followed such leniency—of which I have not the least doubt, and only think it is a pity the Dr has not directed this part of his address to the Norsten constance of any enlightened country having been governed for any length of time without parties.

Now, I feel disposed to differ from the Dr. entirely in his opinion of parties, for I think without them there would be no progress. What has been the history of that constitution which we are all proud to take as our copy? Has there not, from the days of King John to the present time, been a constant party warfare carried on?—a warfare that has often threatened, and sometimes has resulted, in bloodshed; and yet it is from such culminating points in British history that our dearest hierties are dated. Has there not been a constant struggle on the part of the lower and middle classes of our mother country to wrest from the hands of the aristocratic and governing class some share in that government of which they themselves are the main support, to have a voice in the spending of those taxes of which they contribute the lion's share? And will the Dr. tell us how such reforms are to be obtained without parties and party organization?

A great deal is said both in this address and elsewhere about bringing the party disputes and disminons and so the government, or to be allowed to repeat the Grand Trunk round of jobbery and corruption in the building of the Intercolonial Raliroad.

The Dr. quotes a maxim of the great Napoleon, "Tell me not what a man was, but what he is now." A very excellent sentiment, but he does not tell us that Mr. Galt is now anything different from what he was; and I would ask the Dr. how are we to know what a man is unless we are guided by the experience of what he was? How can we predicate what a man's actions will be unless we have past experience to show what they have been? We know that in matters of principle a man is now very much what he was years ago. He may be wealthier, he may be wiser, he may have more governmental ability in proportion as he-has had more experience, but he has no more the power of making his principles better if he had the will, when the surrounding circumstances have been worse, than an Ethiopian has of changing his skin, or a leopard his spots. It is argued that if a coalition was good in 1864 it is equally good now, and the Dr. claims that under that coalition there has been an impartiality and economy in the administration not equalled for many years past. Very true, but all this economy arose from the fact that Geo. Brown claimed as a condition of entering that government that no new public enterprises should be commenced, no party legislation proceeded with; it was not a coalition for carrying on government because it was agreed that part of the ordinary work of government should be suspended—the whole machinery being merely allowed to run as it was till the new was ready. It was a coalition formed to change the constitution according to a plan before determined on, so whatever merit there might be in the work of that coalition was of a very secondary character; and so dangerous was it considered for leaders of opposing parties to unite that in was found necessary to stipulate that no legislation should take place during its existence but what was absolutely necessary; and yet the result ence but what was absolutely necessary; and yet the result of this very exceptional case is held up to us as a reason why this exception should be made a

COUNTING TOO FAST.

The Toronto Leader, never very erupulous, is out this morning making asty demonstrations of joy. In fact nasty demonstrations of joy. In fact it is doubtful if it is not slightly insane in its gladness. For instance we have a list of members elected for both the House of Commons and the House of Assembly. It pretends to give the political character of the members elected in three columns, headed severally "Union," "Independent" and "Brownite." Would it be believed that out of the twentyone members who have secured their seats every man is put down as a Union man (whatever distinction that may confer) except one, and he is independent. Alas for the Brownite column, it is completely vacant. According to the Leader, all have been as unsucessful as the man over whose defeat the ministerial papers gloat with savage joy. It is superlative impudence for that paper to claim as its friends men who have belonged to the Reform party while they have known anything of politics, and who have never faltered in their attachment to their principles. Such are D. A. Macdonald, Glengarry; Chas. Magill, Hamilton; J. R. Benson, Lincoln ; T. Oliver, North Oxford ; E. V. Bodwell, South Oxford; Alex. Fraser, W. Northumberland ; D. Galbraith, W. Northumberland; D. Galbraith, North Lanark. Yet these men whose names are synonyms for pure and true Reform, are impudently claimed by the Leader as members of the phalanx of corruption. Its claiming, them, however, will not make them so; and if claiming them pleases the childish fancy of that absorbing journal, we do not know but the whim might be indulged, since it will not do the slightest harm to either the men as individuals, nor to the party to which they really belong.

Mr. Linehan on his Defence Mr. William B. Linehan, whom Thom as D'Arcy McGee in his late Memoirs stig had evidence to show that Mr. the law than would otherwise occur. matized as one of the active promoters of the Fenian dinner in Montreal, a corre pondent of Murphy's paper, and the Montreal Herald, has addressed the Hon. gentleman through the columns of the Gazette. His style is proudly defiant. He says he has no "errors of youth" to repent of, and is willing that every line that he ever wrote for any of the City newspapers should be produced. He denies emphati cally that he had anything to do with the Fenian dinner, and calls on Mr. McGee to retract the charges or produce proof, under threat of retaliation in kind. He hints that some of that gentleman's "treason able is made to him he shall feel at liber ty to make a clean breast of it. Proof, recrimination, accusation and denial seem to form the sole business of many of the individuals, and all the newspapers of Montreal at the present time, and thus dullness is prevented, and a spirit of liveliness nurtured. Poor D'Arcy is only now learning lesson, which his extensive reading might long ago have taught him, that no man can be for a lifetime the revered idol of an illiterate rabble. His Fenian disaffected so little, had been far better left in darkness under lock and key; but those they were intended to injure, they hur nobody but the writer, and they went further to prove his tendency towards imbe-cility than they did towards the implica-

If its construction be managed like that of the Grand Trunk and the Ottawa Building, it will take a good deal to grease the wheels, as the extras will be very large and paid for at very high rate, leaving the public to guess the reasons for such lavish kindness to favorite and confidental contractors.

HAUNTED CASTLE.

'Mary Kendal,' he gasped,' do you proclaim in your father's ear: your own disgrace? What frightful tale am I doomed to hear? Speak it out girl; let me know the worst at once.'

'Father,' replied Mary, 'it is no shame, no disgrace, to love a good and honourable man.'

able man:

'I want no excuse, no defence,' roared the Squire. 'I want the truth. Who is it that has inveigled you into an acquamitance so vile and unworthy.'

'I can enlighten you on that point,' interposed Malvrin; 'the fellow is a wandering artist, called Hargreave, who rendered some amail service to Miss Kendal, when she was frightened by a bull, and learning no doubt, the lady's position, he presumed on such an introduction to use his advantage for the basest purpose.'

est purpose.'

'A painter, gasped the squire, whose horror was indiscribable, 'a wandering, beggarly adventurer. Oh, I shall go mad.'

'He saved my life,' cried Mary, casting flashing glances of indignation towards Malvrin. 'But for him I should have perished, and he is not the low, unworthy being which a slanderer (here another withering glance) has represenad.'

'Silence!' thundered her father.—
When you told me he had saved your life, you did not let me know that he sought to entrapyou.'

'I now beg to take my leave,' said Malvrin, as he moved towards the door.' I shall consider the negotiations still pending, for I cannot doubt that your authority, sir, and the exercise of judicious reason, will bring Miss Kendal to a proper state of mind.'

'Certainly, certainly,' answered Mr. Kendal. 'You are generous and forbearing, but doubt not things will come all right. You have my promise, and that, you may depend on it, shall not be broken.'

The Squire accompanied Malvrin into the hall.

'Of course you'll take means to prevent them meeting again,' whispered the latter. 'I know they have made an assignation for to-morrow night, but you'll not allow Mary to go.'

'I'll lock her up, and keep watch over her myself, said the Squire, with great energy. 'By all the bones of my ancestors, I'll take care that this disgraceful affair is stopped.'

energy 'By all the bones of my ancestors, I'll take care that this disgraceful affair is stopped.'

'As for the fellow himself,' added Malvrin, 'I will find means of having him removed from the veighbourhood until his presence can do no harm, I mean till the marriage is over.'

'Good! that is a lucky idea, and trust me that everything shall be done on my side to hasten a union which is, if possible, more than ever desirable.'

They shook hands, and Malvrin, mounting his horse, went away, while Mir. Kendal returned to the parlour, where Mary still remained.

Never had she seen such an expression in her father's face. His sternindignation, and fixed, atony resolution had completely changed a countenance which had never been directed to hers but with kind good humour and affection. A terrible master-feeling had been roused in his heart crushing down in a moment the softer parental emotions. Family pride was the idol of his worship; for that he was ready to sacrifice all else; and now that the honour of the house of Kendal was seriously menaced by his daughter's conduct, all the iron composition of his nature and will came into undisputed exercise.

Mary's quick mind understood all, and ition of his nature and will came into undisputed exercise.

Mary's quick mind understood all, and as she thoroughly despised those sentiments which were her father's creed, aer soul revolted at it, and she resolved to be as firm in the defence of her views of truth.

'This is indeed an unexpected revelation,' said the Squire, after silently regarding her for some moments.

'You have learned it, sir, in the very worst way, from the very worst source, and in a form of gross misrepresentation and untruth,' returned Mary, in a tone that neither shook nor faltered; for love and conciousness of right made her strong and valiant.

'What, is it not true, then,' said her father, 'and yet you confessed to the horrible charge.'
'I confessed only to the facts of loving Mr. Hargreave, and of having promised to marry him,' replied Mary.

'And isn't that everything?' he exclaimed.

'No. The man that was here but now claimed.

'No. The man that was here but now slandered Mr. Hargreave's character—vilified him as a low, sche ning adventurer, and imputed to him views and mctives of which he is utterly incapable.—A nobler mind or truer heart does not live,'

'Answer-me this,' said the Squire, setting his teeth hard. 'Is he, or is he not a nampless wanderer—a—a—painter?'

THE RUSSELL WATCH!

A FEW REASONS THAT MAKE IT SUPERIOR TO ALL COMERS.

211d - The RUSSELL WATCH being made on correct and scientific principles, it must follow as a tural consequence that it will keep time. 3rd - Each part of which the RUSSELL WATCH is composed is a reflex of the perfect machine by hich, under skiful direction, it is produced.

4th - Truth is the essential of each part 5th—Uniformity and conformity must therefore characterize the several parts in fulfilling the pure see for which they are made and brought together.

6th.—Reproduction, as regards watch work, is simply an application of the principle that "twhich are equal to the same things are equal to one another," and if there is any merit, the RUSS WATCH possesses that merit to a demonstration.

7th—The greatest variety of price, quality and size, that confide afforded by the RUSSELL WATCH. and Machine Joiners' Work, Executed with despatch and kept always on hand. Cash paid for all kinds of Lumber at the Boult thanks the public for eleven years kind favors, and hopes for a continuance of the same.

To Robert Cuthbert, Watchmaker, Wyndham Street, Guelph. If Society was as perfect in its organization, and was as obedient to the dictates of truth as the RUSSELL WATCH I bought from you is in indicating time, evil would be swallowed up in good, and happiness would become monotoneus. G. RENNIE, Guelph.

IMPORTANT!

CAPITAL, -- 8400,000. ROBERT CUTHBERT,
