There are various forms in which that amendment may be made. The form I followed was taken from this book, and is to be found in general at pages 337 and following.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) said that the amendment introduced a new subject. My submission is that it introduces no new subject. Section 27 provides that Canadian citizens shall be entitled to certain rights, powers and privileges. The amendment is to define what those rights, powers and privileges are. I submit that section 713 of Beauchesne, to which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre referred, has no relevance whatever to the case before us. Section 713 states that an amendment was ruled out on the ground that it was irrelevant in that it affected the sovereignty of parliament. I submit that this amendment is relevant because it refers to the question of rights, duties, obligations and privileges, and in no way interferes with the sovereignty of parliament.

For these reasons I ask Your Honour to uphold my right to move the amendment.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I think it goes without saying that any member of the house has the right to move that a bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee. We are all agreed that that is in order; any hon. member has the right to do that. If the resolution carries, and it is subject to the vote of the house—and unless the majority of the members want it referred back to the committee it will not go to the committee—third reading will be given the bill and it will be passed. This is a motion not to give third reading but to refer it back to the committee of the whole, with instructions, not to do certain things, but that they have power to amend it as follows. They may not choose to follow those instructions at all; this only gives them the power to do so, and it would be entirely optional with them whether they did so or not. It seems to me that the only question before the house is whether this resolution is in order, that the bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I, on the point of order, with the permission of the house, quote a former Speaker of the house, the Hon. George Black, member for Yukon—Beauchesne, page 497:

> On the motion for third reading, an amendment cannot be moved that the bill be referred back to the committee of the whole with the request that certain matters be considered by the government.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): With all due deference, what the minister has quoted is not in point at all. That was an amendment to refer back with the request that certain matters be dealt with or considered by the government. That has no relevancy to this motion.

Mr. TUCKER: I submit, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. TUCKER: I am entitled to give my views on this matter. Surely the day has not come when only certain people approved by the opposition may rise to speak in this parliament.

I submit that any amendment must be relevant to the purpose of the bill, and certainly the purpose of this bill being to set up the status of citizenship and so on, an amendment which says that somebody unnamed shall lay before the house the question of adopting a bill of rights has nothing to do with establishing citizenship. It is irrelevant. An amendment to the bill on third reading must be relevant to the purposes of the bill. I would just like to show what would be the effect of this section if it were passed. It would read that, when it comes into force, as soon as it receives royal assent, and parliament, I assume, being in session, ". . . the question of adopting a bill of rights, so as to assure the maintenance and preservation of democratic and traditional processes of liberty and of equality under the law of all Canadian citizens without regard to race, creed or colour, shall be submitted to the House of Commons in a resolution to be considered in a select committee properly representative of the entire population of Canada." Shall be submitted by whom? What does it mean? Is it to be submitted by the government, by some private member, by some body in Canada? Surely if this parliament is to speak, it should speak with certainty, so that we may know what we are doing. Surely if we adopt an amendment such as this, we shall make ourselves ridiculous. If we passed it, it would not mean anything.

To summarize, in the first place an amendment should be certain as to its effect. It should be relevant. In the next place I submit to Your Honour for your further consideration that Beauchesne, paragraph 357, lays this down:

> Mr. Speaker Sproule on the thirteenth February, 1913, decided that a proposed amendment which was substantially the same motion as the member had moved on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, was not in order because "a motion must not raise a question substantially identical with one on which the house has given a decision in the same session."

I submit that this amendment of the hon. member for Lake Centre is in substantially the same terms as have already been moved in debate on this bill and negatived by the house. The rule against repetitious amendments is applicable to this amendment, which I submit is out of order on that ground also.

Mr. SPEAKER: After listening to hon. members on both sides of the house my humble opinion is that the amendment is out of order. We have before us a motion for the third reading of bill No. 7, an act respecting citizenship, nationality, naturalization and status of aliens, and an amendment to that motion that the bill be referred back to committee of the whole "to assure the maintenance and preservation of democratic and traditional processes of liberty and of equality under the law of all Canadian citizens without regard to race, creed or colour," and that for that purpose a resolution shall be submitted to the House of Commons with a view to adopting a bill of rights. It is my opinion that the bill of rights is so important, as has been expressed by many members of the house, that it should be dealt with in a bill by itself. It is not relevant to the bill now before us for third reading, which is an act respecting citizenship, nationality, naturalization and the status of aliens, to determine what parliament should do on another occasion, and therefore I rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Speaker, may I respectfully appeal from your decision?

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the chair was sustained on the following division:

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I was paired with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank). Had I voted, I would have voted against your ruling.

Mr. BEAUDOIN: I was paired with the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming). Hal I voted I would have voted to sustain the ruling.

Mr. McCUBBIN: I was paired with the hon. member for Middlesex East (Mr. White). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain the ruling.

Mr. MacNAUGHT: I was paired with the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Coyle). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain the ruling.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I was paired with the hon. member for Queens (Mr. McLure). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain the ruling.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I was paired with the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Bridges). Had I voted I would have voted against the ruling.

Mr. HAZEN: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Cote). Had I voted I would have voted to support your ruling.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): I was paired with the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Macdonald). Had I voted I would have voted against the ruling.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I was paired with the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Cleaver). Had I voted I would have voted against the ruling.

Mr. PICARD: I was paired with the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mr. Casselman). Had I voted I would have voted for the ruling.

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, the other evening I endeavoured without success to put forward an objection to one of the sections of the bill. The chairman came to the conclusion, and I have no quarrel with his decision, that it would be better to defer discussion until a more appropriate time.

This bill, which has occupied the attention of the house for some weeks, contains in reality two provisions. It enables a British subject possessed of all rights in Canada to call himself a Canadian citizen. But apart from that, if I fully understand the measure, it indicates that two classes of people shall be shorn of certain rights. The first class is the British subject born outside Canada who comes to Canada; his case has been fully debated and decided. The other class, whose lot has not been discussed, is that of the alien woman who becomes a wife of a Canadian citizen. I suppose ninety-five per cent of those who will be affected by this measure live in the border constituencies. If I am correctly informed, the minister who has guided this bill through the house represents such a constituency. It is also my privilege to represent a border constituency. In my constituency, and I dare say in the constituency of the minister, cupid is frequently a trespasser. He frequently wanders beyond the confines of our native land, and he brings home rich treasure trove.

Why should the girl from Vermont who comes to a farm in Stanstead be denied the right of becoming by marriage a Canadian citizen? I asked the minister if there was any demand for this legislation. I asked also the reason for departing from a rule which is clear, well known, and embodied in the statutory law of all British countries for more than a hundred years.

Mr. MARTIN: No one is denied that right under this bill.

Mr. HACKETT: My hon. friend says that no woman is denied that right. Does the United States woman marrying a Canadian citizen become a Canadian citizen?

Mr. MARTIN: She can if she wants to. She has full control of her own status.

Mr. HACKETT: She can if she waits for five years, and if she is able to go to a court possibly a hundred miles from her home and there await the delays of justice in order that she may ultimately become naturalized. To-day, if the same girl marries the boy she may marry after this bill becomes law she becomes as of right and immediately a Canadian citizen.

Mr. MARTIN: Where does my hon. friend find anything in the bill that states that such a woman has to wait for five years?

Mr. HACKETT: Will the minister be good enough to tell me if an alien woman marrying a Canadian citizen to-day does not become a British subject? I do not ask the question as a partisan; I do not think anything is to be gained by considering it in that way. The bill is of importance to the people whom I represent. I desire that the legislation which results from our deliberations be useful to everyone and curtail the rights of no one. In that spirit I should be grateful if the minister will answer the question.

Mr. MARTIN: Section 10(1) provides that a minister may grant a certificate of Canadian citizenship to any person who is not a Canadian citizen, and who makes application for that purpose and satisfies the court that he has resided continuously in Canada for a period of one year immediately preceding the date of the application, and, in addition, except where the applicant has served outside Canada in the armed forces of Canada during the time of war or where the applicant is the wife of and resides in Canada with a Canadian citizen, has also resided in Canada for a further period of not less than four years during the six years immediately preceding the date of the application.

Mr. HACKETT: I have no desire to be amusing, and probably I could not be if I wished to be. One added to four makes five. I shall be glad if the minister will correct me if I am wrong. Would it take five years for a United States girl who marries a Canadian man to become a citizen?

Mr. MARTIN: I do not think I can state it any more clearly than by reading the section. My hon. friend is a good lawyer, and it is because he is a good lawyer that I thought I would read the section rather than confine myself to my own language.

Mrs. STRUM: A great many girls who were members of the armed forces will marry men in Holland, Germany and France, or perhaps men of Polish origin. Would the hon. member like to have those men come in as husbands of Canadian girls and immediately attain the status of Canadian citizenship?

Mr. HACKETT: As I understand her question, the hon. member is anxious to know whether a Canadian girl who has married an alien would be able to bring home her husband and give him the status of a Canadian. I submit that the prerogative of determining the nationality of the family must be given either to the man or to the woman. If it be given to the man, the question does not arise; if it be given to the woman, my answer is yes. In other days relationship was established through the woman. The mother's name went to the child. An old adage was, "Maternitas factum est; paternitas supposito"—maternity is a fact; paternity a supposition. For that reason, throughout the centuries the child took the name of his mother and relationship was established through the blood-stream of the mother only.

I tell the hon. member that it makes very little difference whether nationality be conferred as a result of the husband's nationality or of the wife's. The fact is that as a result of marriage a family has been founded, and I submit that that family should now be one and united. In the past—it might be said it was the benighted past—it was the man who gave his nationality to the family.

Mrs. STRUM: The minister will correct me if I am wrong, but I understand that children born in this country, regardless of the nationality of their parents or even though the parents have not been nationalized are considered Canadian citizens.

Mr. MARTIN: That is right.

Mrs. STRUM: We are not depriving the offspring of those children of citizenship.

Mr. HACKETT: I think the answer to the question is not quite as simple or as concise as that given by the minister.

Mr. MARTIN: It is precisely that, as the hon. gentleman will see if he looks at section 4.

Mr. HACKETT: The question of double nationality comes in there. The children preserve their right to optate; the child of a United States citizen born in this country preserves his right to United States nationality by registration at the appropriate office of his country, provided that when he attains majority he may optate for United States citizenship if he has not committed certain acts, denying him the right, such as voting.

Mrs. STRUM: I am much concerned about this and I should like to know the law.

Mr. MARTIN: The law is exactly as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has stated it. Anyone born in this country is a citizen of Canada.

Mrs. STRUM: There is the case raised by the hon. member for Stanstead of the child of a man who has not attained citizenship. If that child is a minor and still has the right to choose, does not the act of voting in this country make him a Canadian citizen?

And hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. MARTIN: Perhaps this cross-firing is disillusioning, and it is certainly not in accordance with the rules of the house. I think we ought to wait until the hon. member has finished speaking, because we are really not in order in carrying on like this.

Mr. HACKETT: If we accept the statement of the minister that an alien woman marrying a Canadian citizen can become a citizen in a shorter period than five years she is still deprived of a right which she enjoys at the present time. I have no desire to diminish the status of any person, be he a male or be she a female, but why should we place a barrier in the way of these people? Why should we say to the young alien woman who is marrying a Canadian that she cannot enjoy immediately the right of becoming a Canadian citizen if she so optates? The minister said in answer to a query which I directed to him some days ago that this matter had come up in 1930. It appears to have been discussed at some length at that time but nothing ever came of the discussion.

Mr. MARTIN: I did not say that.

Mr. HACKETT: No; I am saying it. It was discovered that more than forty nations adhered to the rule set forth in section 13 of our Naturalization Act as amended in 1931, in consequence of the Hague conference, and that only five countries, the most signal and outstanding of which was, of course, the United States of America, had departed from it. The other countries were Paraguay, Uruguay, Russia, and Guatemala. So the whole world, with the exception of these five countries—and with great respect to them all, I suppose we are more interested in what was done in the United States than in what was done elsewhere—follows the rule which we are abandoning.

The United States abandoned the rule for an economic reason. A number of her citizens were leaving the United States, taking up their domicile in some sunny isle of the Pacific, or even coming to Canada, where, in those days, taxes were lower than they were in the United States. In this way they were escaping some of the burdens of citizenship while at the same time enjoying all the benefits thereof. That was the reason for the change in the United States legislation.

I am going to read into the record our present law, as enacted in 1931. This amendment to the Naturalization Act was enacted to meet a very difficult situation which came about after the United States had abandoned the rule of domicile and accepted that of nationality. It happened that in the course of the last war some Canadian women married citizens of the United States. The result was that these women were not citizens of the United States because by the legislation of that country they were denied citizenship. They ceased to be British subjects in Canada, because, according to our law, they had forsworn their allegiance, or had lost their nationality by marrying citizens of the United States. One very painful case, with which a number of members in 1931 were fully familiar, came to the attention of the house. A young Canadian woman married a citizen of the United States, and a child was born. He was not in enjoyment of perfect health. The woman could not get a Canadian passport because she was not a British subject in Canada. She could not get a United States passport because she was not a citizen of that country. She could not cross the boundary line because she had this child, who was infirm, and who was not wanted here or there.

This hardship occasioned the amendment of 1931. That amendment to section 13 of the Naturalization Act is as follows:

13. (1) The wife of a British subject shall be deemed to be a British subject, and the wife of an alien shall be deemed to be an alien, except as in this section otherwise provided.

(2) Where a woman who is a British subject marries an alien she shall not by reason only of her marriage cease to be a British subject unless by reason of her marriage she acquires the nationality of her husband.

(3) Where a man, during the continuance of his marriage, ceases to be a British subject, his wife shall not cease to be a British subject unless by reason of the acquisition by her husband of a new nationality she also acquires that nationality.

(4) Where notwithstanding the provisions of the last foregoing subsection a married woman would cease to be a British subject, it shall nevertheless be lawful for her within six months after the date at which she would cease to be a British subject, or in special circumstances with the consent of the minister within any longer period than six months, to make a declaration that she desires to retain British nationality, and thereupon she shall be deemed to have remained a British subject.

(5) Where a certificate of naturalization is granted to an alien his wife, if not already a British subject, shall not be deemed to be a British subject unless within six months after the date of that certificate, or in special circumstances with the consent of the minister within any longer period than six months, she makes a declaration that she desires to acquire British nationality and upon the making of such declaration she shall be deemed to be a British subject.

(6) Where an alien is a subject of a state at war with His Majesty it shall be lawful for his wife, if she was at birth a British subject, to make a declaration that she desires to resume British nationality, and thereupon the minister, if he is satisfied that it is desirable that she be permitted to do so, may grant her a certificate of naturalization.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle cited a case. She did not say whether it was a specific case, but she did mention a woman who had married an alien who later was deported because it was discovered that he had committed some crime in the land of his origin. It was suggested that he was not properly or legally landed in Canada.

Mrs. STRUM: I just cited an example which illustrated the point made by the women's institutes when offering their petition to have the law changed. An alien resident in this country was being deported; the crime was committed here, and for that reason he was being deported back to the country from which he came.

Mr. HACKETT: That is an exceptional case. I am not certain that the law can meet all cases which arise. But it seems to me that a short paragraph added to section 13, which I have read, would meet the case mentioned by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

However, we are only talking about marriage between a citizen and an alien. No one suggests that marriage is always what we are pleased to call successful. Even between natural-born citizens, marriages fail. I assume that so long as humanity is what it is, there will be people united in marriage who are not happy and do not agree. But I submit that we should endeavour to eliminate as many of the causes of disagreement as possible, and I suggest that dual nationality in the home is not getting the young people off to as good a start as they are entitled to. If it be objected that the young woman should not be obliged to accept the nationality of her husband, I would say that if she elected to maintain her own nationality, she should have the privilege of doing so; the act could be amended in consequence. What seems to me wrong is that the alien wife should be denied that right at the present time and forced to remain an alien for a period, even for one year. Marriage brings about changes. It changes the status of the woman, it changes the name of the woman, it changes the domicile of the woman, and it changes likewise frequently the domicile and responsibilities of the man. It is a new status, and it requires a surrender of certain rights and prerogatives which pertain to what is called single blessedness.

I come to another aspect of the case which seemed to arouse a little scorn the other day; I refer to the financial or the economical aspect of it. If the woman retains her nationality of origin, she remains subject to the laws of her own country. In the United States the rule of domicile has been abandoned for the rule of nationality, and a person pays income tax, and his estate or succession pays inheritance tax, or succession duty, if he be a national, regardless of where he is domiciled. So if a lady from the United States marries a Canadian and retains her nationality, her property at death is subject to inheritance tax in the United States regardless of where it is situated, and is likewise taxable in Canada because she was domiciled here. If she is domiciled in Canada the succession duty acts of the dominion and of the several provinces will apply to her estate. It may be possible to revamp our legislation to meet this change in the citizenship bill, but the whole British scheme of polity and international policy accepts domicile as the determining factor for taxation. This act is a departure from the rule which has obtained and still obtains in British countries, and is bringing in a new rule which, I submit, will cause confusion, and in some cases hardship, and possibly loss of property. I do not consider that there has been any sufficient reason set forth to depart from the age-old rule that obtains in the dominion and in the different provinces, that obtains in Canada in its relations with the British isles and other entities in the British commonwealth of nations. I do not think that any reason has been advanced sufficient to warrant the scrapping of that age-old and equitable rule.

If a woman feels that her rights have been invaded by the fact that she has by law become a British subject by reason of her marriage to a British subject, or ceased to be one by reason of her marriage to an alien, I should not be greatly opposed to a measure which would enable her to elect at the time of marriage whether she desired to retain her nationality or accept that of her husband. I think it is the very rare case where the woman deciding to marry is not desirous, is not hopeful, that utmost unity will prevail in the family and in the home about to be established. She knows that her children will be normally endowed with the nationality of her husband, it is difficult for me to believe that a young woman entering upon that estate after mature consideration should wish to go only half way, and without very special reason elect to set up a cleavage, and an unnecessary cleavage, in the home which she and her husband are about to establish.

I am not going to move an amendment, because it would probably be futile at this time. But I ask the minister to weigh carefully what I have said, and to consider if there is not some reason to respect the tradition from which he appears to be departing, with rather—in so far as the debate goes—scant consideration.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I do not wish entirely to follow the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett), and, not being a lawyer, perhaps I should not attempt to interpret the law. But a few minutes ago, I am glad to say, the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Jaenicke) was able to come and sit down beside me for a few minutes, and he pointed this out to me, for he is a good lawyer—

An hon. MEMBER: Is that a plug?

Mr. COLDWELL: No plug, no. It is too far away from home to do him any good. I think his interpretation is sound and, if so, the argument of the hon. member for Stanstead is unsound. Section 10 (1) (c) reads—I am substituting "she" for "he":

> The minister may grant a certificate of Canadian citizenship to any person who is not a Canadian citizen, and who makes application for that purpose and satisfies the court that:
> (c) she has resided continuously in Canada for a period of one year immediately preceding the date of the application and, in addition, except where the applicant . . . is the wife of and resides in Canada with a Canadian citizen.

Mr. MARTIN: That is the section I read.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, and it is as clear as crystal to me that this means that if she has resided continuously in Canada for one year immediately preceding the date of her application, if she is the wife of a man who resides in Canada and who is a Canadian citizen, she is entitled to Canadian nationality.

Mr. MARTIN: If she wants it.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, upon application. That would seem to cover the point.

As to the other point, the nationality of our people who cross the line into the United States, I imagine that they would have to fulfil residential and other qualifications before they would be entitled to citizenship in the United States.

But what I rose to speak about was a bill of rights. First let me say that while on the first reading of the amendment of the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) I was of the opinion that it was in order, having listened to the argument I was compelled to change my mind.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Did the hon. member not argue before that it was in order?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, but I say that after listening to the argument on the point after I had spoken I came to the conclusion that I was wrong and that the others were right, and when convinced of that I usually act accordingly, although it may make one feel a little awkward, but I do not mind feeling a little awkward when I know I am doing the right thing.

Mr. BROOKS: It must keep you shifting quite a lot.

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not often shift.

Mr. BROOKS: You can shift quickly.

Mr. COLDWELL: When I am proved to be wrong I will shift just as quickly as anyone, but when proved to be right I will shift for no one.

What I rose to say was this. We are most anxious to have a bill of rights. As a matter of fact, my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Stewart) and a committee of our party spent a great deal of time before Easter considering what might be done about a bill of rights in this bill, and a preamble had been drafted which I have now before me. We are most anxious to see in this bill something which would indicate that certain rights are inherent in Canadian citizenship. The bill has had a long discussion already, and I do not wish to prolong it and would rather not move this preamble as an amendment because, if the bill were referred back to committee of the whole to add the words we have drafted as a preamble, it would be in order for other hon. members to propose additions or deletions. I do not wish to prolong the discussion by moving this if I can have the assurance that the minister will between now and next session consider introducing a bill of citizenship rights or doing what the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) suggested, setting up a committee of this house to consider the drafting of a bill of rights. If I can have that assurance it will cover the point. We are most anxious that the bill shall not pass without such an understanding being reached, because on all sides of the house—this is not a party question—there is the desire to have something written into our Canadian law in the nature of a bill of rights, either by a preamble to this bill or otherwise. I ask the minister if he will give that assurance.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I can only renew the assurance I gave the other evening when this point was being discussed. Unfortunately there has been no opportunity since for a full council consideration of the matter, but I assure my hon. friend that at the earliest opportunity the question will be considered carefully by council in the light of the representations that have come from various quarters of the house and also in the light, may I say to my hon. friend who knows this as well as I, of the great difficulties involved with reference to certain provincial and other rights within Canada. But I can assure him that the matter will be definitely considered.

Mr. COLDWELL: The hon. gentleman means that the earliest possible consideration will be given to it by council?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes, except that I doubt very much that it would be possible to give the question the consideration it deserves while the house is sitting. It might be, but in any event at the very first opportunity I shall bring the representations that have been made from various quarters of the house on this question to the attention of council.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am not suggesting that it be done immediately, but that before next session or at the next session we should either have before us a bill of rights or a committee set up which would go into the whole question and consider the constitutional difficulties and so on with a view to drafting a bill of rights which would be within the powers of this parliament. So long as we have that assurance I shall not move this preamble.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I would not wish to restrict myself to the term "bill of rights," because it might be a declaration of principles along the lines indicated by my hon. friend and by the hon. member for Lake Centre and others, but I can assure my hon. friend that the general representations which have been made along this line in this debate will be considered by council as soon as possible.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am not particularly concerned about the term used. I simply used the term "bill of rights" because that has been frequently used in the debate by other hon. members. But I want something in the nature of a bill of rights as we have termed it in this debate, setting forth the rights of Canadian citizenship, particularly the right of a Canadian citizen, regardless of race, creed or colour, to enjoy the full privileges and protection of Canadian citizenship. That is what I have in mind, and with the minister's assurance I am prepared to let the matter stand.

Mr. MAXIME RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, on the motion for the second reading of this bill I voiced some objections to its being passed as drawn up. I notice that discussion in committee brought about no improvement and I want to state again my opposition.

As a subject of a nation which is said to be sovereign since the enactment of the statute of Westminster, I cannot agree to a measure which bears the stamp of utter colonialism, which implies a renunciation of our sovereignty. I shall merely mention two sections of the bill in order to show that through this legislation we relinquish our sovereignty. I refer to sections 22 and 26.

Under section 22, we have no right to revoke a certificate of naturalization granted in another country of the British commonwealth, without requesting the concurrence of the latter country. Such is the purport of section 22—

Mr. MARTIN (Translation): The hon. member is mistaken.

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): I am going to quote that section:

The governor in council may, with the concurrence of a government of a country of the British commonwealth other than Canada, revoke a certificate of naturalization granted in the said country to a person who resides in Canada.

It means, therefore, that we cannot revoke that certificate of naturalization without having obtained the consent of the other government by which it was granted. I say that this is a renunciation of our sovereignty.

Mr. MARTIN (Translation): That is not correct.

Mr. MARIER (Translation): That is not the purport of the section.

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): Every one is free to construe that provision as he sees fit.

Mr. MARIER (Translation): That is not what is meant.

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): I should like to know if that is not a renunciation of our sovereignty, since we have to request the concurrence of another nation in order to revoke a certificate of naturalization. That is my interpretation of that section.

Mr. MARIER: (Translation): It refers to a certificate of naturalization granted in another country.

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): We already had an act, known as the Canadian Nationals Act, which conferred the Canadian citizenship as well as the British nationality. It is being replaced by another act, having another title, which has the same purport.

Indeed, what difference is there between a Canadian national, as defined in the Canadian Nationals Act of 1921 and a Canadian citizen, as defined in this bill? According to the Canadian Nationals Act of 1921, a Canadian national is a Canadian citizen, and a Canadian citizen is a person born in Canada or naturalized in Canada, or a British subject. Under this bill, a Canadian citizen is a British subject; in either case a Canadian citizen is a British subject. Where is the difference? If there is any difference, we stand to lose, because, during the discussion on the 1921 act, Mr. Doherty, the then minister of justice, said that he had used the word "ressortissant" instead of the word "citizen" for the following reason, as recorded on page 645 of Hansard for 1921:

[Mr. Martin.]

You may have to talk of the "subject" of one country and of the "citizen" of another country, but in "ressortissant" you get one word for them all.

So that the word "national" had a wider meaning than the word "citizen". We had dual nationality under the Canadian Nationals Act of 1921, we still have it under this bill but the situation is even worse now because our international status has changed since 1921. While we were then a dependency of Great Britain, we have ceased to be one since 1931.

I believe that, in this debate, the Secretary of State said that ours was not a dual nationality.

Mr. MARTIN (Translation): That is just what I said.

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): In that case what are we to understand by the words "British subject"?

Mr. MARTIN (Translation): I explained them at the time.

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): Words either mean something or they don't. If they don't, they ought to be struck out. If they do, they mean that being a country's subject implies obligations towards that country? Besides, when the Canadian Nationals Act of 1921 was being debated, the hon. Minister of Justice then said about the words "British subject":

The purpose of the bill is to define a particular class of British subjects who, in addition to having all the rights and all the obligations of British subjects . . .

Which means that the fact of being a British subject implies obligations, and that the Canadian national had the obligations of a British subject just as the Canadian citizen will have them under this bill.

Mr. MARTIN (Translation): No!

Mr. BEAUDOIN (Translation): If the hon. member will be so kind as to say from what page he is quoting—

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): Page 645 of Hansard.

Mr. BEAUDOIN (Translation): Of what year?

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): 1921.

Mr. LAFONTAINE (Translation): 1921?

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): Yes.

Mr. LAFONTAINE (Translation): You mean the English version?

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): Yes, the English version. And on page 776, he says the following—for it will be noted that the drafters of this bill refused to define the words "British subject".

Mr. MARTIN (Translation): In what year, 1821?

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): 1921. It says here on page 776 that the hon. Minister of Justice stated the following:

A British subject is a man who owes allegiance to, and who is entitled to protection as a subject of the British crown.

So that the status of British subject implies certain duties and obligations to the British crown.

Mr. MARIER (Translation): To the Canadian crown.

Mr. MARTIN (Translation): That was said in 1938.

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): I beg your pardon?

Mr. MARTIN (Translation): That statement was made at the imperial conference of 1938, in London.

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): I did not know a statement had been made at the imperial conference of 1938 in London, to the effect that a British subject has no obligation to the British crown.

Mr. BEAUDOIN (Vaudreuil-Soulanges) (Translation): May I ask a question? Is the position of a British subject in 1946 the same as in 1921?

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): Yes, because if it is different, I fail to see why the bill does not give a definition of the term "British subject". Nowhere is such a definition to be found in the bill, while the word "British" was defined in the previous act.

Besides, the British nationality is to be found all through this bill. Canadian citizenship is drowned in the British nationality to which it is subordinated. To be a Canadian subject, one has to be a British subject. That is clearly expressed in section 26 of the bill.

How different this bill is from the nationality act passed by Ireland in 1935. They do not use the term "British subject". They even went further and abrogated the British Nationality Act of 1914, in so far as it might apply. May I be permitted to quote a statement made at Waterford, on the 28th of January, 1946, by the Prime Minister of Ireland, Mr. de Valera:

Our country is a sovereign and independent state. We have our own constitution and our own citizenship laws and none of our citizens owes any allegiance to Great Britain or to the British crown. We are not British subjects and it is impertinent to say that we are.

The present bill offered an opportunity clearly to define the situation; instead I believe that it is now more muddled than ever. We should have followed Ireland's example in asserting our sovereignty and our independence. We should have passed an act similar to the Irish Nationality Act—which would have given to Canadians a Canadian nationality, distinct from that of other countries.

As the present bill does not give us a Canadian nationality distinct from British nationality, I am opposed to it.

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Davenport): I have had so many representations from people in my riding who were born in the old country, as I presume other hon. members have had, that I am impelled to make a few more observations in reference to the bill. The people to whom I refer have been encouraging their relations in the old country to move out to Canada. They are now afraid that if the bill passes their relations will move to Australia instead.

Mr. MARTIN: They need have no fear of that.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister shakes his head. Presumably he thoroughly understands the bill but I cannot understand it. I do not understand the English language, apparently, although I taught it for several years, if I read correctly the meaning of the bill.

I am going to tell the house why the old countryman would prefer going to Australia or New Zealand to coming to Canada. Personally I would much rather see him come to Canada. What is the situation with reference to Australia? The minister shook his head a moment ago, and on a previous occasion argued against what I said. I shall begin my remarks by saying a word or two about the Australian act because, when I spoke last, I asked the minister two specific questions. One of these questions had to do with a soldier of Europe who was of non-British origin, but who had fled to Great Britain for refuge when war broke out and later on joined the Canadian forces. In due course he returned to fight on the continent of Europe. I asked the minister whether if that soldier came to Canada and remained here for one year, he would be admitted to full citizenship, and the answer was yes. I then asked about the old country soldier who fought in an adjacent regiment under the same general, General Sir Bernard Montgomery, who commanded a large number of British and Canadian regiments. I asked whether a British soldier who marched alongside the soldier of non-British origin in an adjacent Canadian regiment would obtain complete citizenship in Canada if he remained here for one year, and the answer was no.

Mr. MARTIN: I did not say that at all.

Mr. MacNICOL: I shall quote the minister so that there will be no mistake about the matter. The answer was no, that he would not obtain full Canadian citizenship in Canada until he was here for five years. I shall now quote what the minister said. Perhaps he has forgotten what he said. After rehearsing what I have just said, I asked the minister a question, as reported at page 1139 of Hansard and he replied, referring to the soldier of non-British origin.

> The soldier in that case is identified with the country. The point is that he served in the armed forces of Canada and fought with the Canadian forces overseas, and that gives him citizenship.

Now take the other soldier, British, who fought in the regiment alongside the Canadian regiment:

> Mr. MacNicol: The non-British soldier would get citizenship in one year, but the British soldier fighting alongside him would not get it under five years?
> Mr. Martin: If he came in he would, of course, have the right to vote and do everything as a British subject. He is a British subject. He could come to Canada and have the privileges of Canadian citizenship.
> Mr. MacNicol: But he would not get his full citizenship until five years had expired?
> Mr. Martin: He would not get his certificate.

Mr. MARTIN: That is not the question the hon. gentleman just put.

Mr. MacNICOL: Yes, it is. That is not the situation in Australia; and as a Canadian I am afraid that multitudes of Britishers whom we shall want to come here when times are normal again, to help build up and develop this country as many of their relations have done and as my relations have done, will not come here under those circumstances. Nothing I can say now can alter the bill, I know, and I am not going to move an amendment.

Mr. MARTIN: Would my hon. friend permit a remark?

Mr. MacNICOL: No; I would rather finish what I have to say, because the minister has interrupted me every time I have been on my feet. I can read plain English as well as he can, and I have just quoted his words.

[Mr. MacNicol.]

Mr. MARTIN: My hon. friend and I are very understanding friends. We both have the same objective, and I am sure he would not want any of his words to be misconstrued and have the effect of suggesting that people should not come to this country, because our provisions are much more generous in relation to British subjects than are the provisions in Australia.

Mr. MacNICOL: Perhaps when I get through reading the Australian act the minister will be convinced otherwise. Just for the sake of clarification I wish to put on record a few definitions from the Australian act. I am referring to the Commonwealth Acts, 1901-1935, which is the latest I could obtain. I went to the Australian office here to get a later volume, but they had nothing later pertaining to this. I turn to page 99, where I find the act relating to nationality and aliens. There I find this definition:

> "Alien" means a person who is not a British subject.

That is the same as with us. That is clear enough. The next question is, what is a British subject? The answer is given on page 100:

> "British subject" means a person who is a natural-born British subject, or a person to whom a certificate of naturalization has been granted . . .

The next one is the definition of a natural-born British subject. Section 6, on page 100, gives this definition:

The next question is, what is a naturalized British subject in Australia? At page 102 I find this definition, under the heading "Naturalization of Aliens":

> (1) The governor general may grant a certificate of naturalization to an alien—

That is a non-British subject.

> —who makes an application for the purpose, and satisfies the governor general—
> (a) that he has either resided in His Majesty's dominions for a period of not less than five years in the manner required by this section, or been in the service of the crown for not less than five years within the last eight years before the application . . .

Then subsection 2 states:

> The residence required by this section is residence in the commonwealth or a territory for not less than one year immediately preceding the application, and previous residence, either in the commonwealth or a territory or in some other part of His Majesty's dominions, for a period of four years within the last eight years before the application.

Mr. MARTIN: That is exactly the same as our provision.

Mr. MacNICOL: Let us take the case of a Britisher, who is not an alien, living in England and going to Australia. He does not have to be there for five years before he gets naturalization.

Mr. MARTIN: Oh, yes, he does.

Mr. MacNICOL: Not only that; he votes within six months of going there.

Mr. MARTIN: In some of the states.

Mr. MacNICOL: He does not even have to wait for a year, as he does here.

Mr. MARTIN: In some of the states of Australia he votes; not in Australia itself.

Mr. MacNICOL: Well, I am going to quote from the Australian election act, at page 850 of the same volume:

Subject to the disqualification set out in this part, all persons not under twenty-one years of age, whether male or female, married or unmarried—

(a) who have lived in Australia for six months continuously and

(b) who are natural-born or naturalized subjects of the king . . .

That is as clear as a-b-c to me; that if I move to Australia I have to be there only for one year until I am an Australian citizen, with all privileges. I so inquired, and that is the answer I was given.

Mr. MARTIN: Only in regard to the right to vote. You would be liable to deportation within five years in Australia.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister keeps saying that, but I am not talking about deportation. An immigrant may be deported if he commits some crime, but I am talking about full citizenship, which I would have in Australia within a year.

Mr. MARTIN: There is not a bit of difference in the situation between Australia and Canada.

Mr. MacNICOL: Well, I hope I am wrong but I am sorry to say that as this bill now reads, compelling a Briton to remain here for five years before he obtains full citizenship, I believe it will have a serious effect on immigration into this country. I personally would not move to any commonwealth if I had to remain there for five years before I got full citizenship. I have only a word or two more to say.

Mr. MARTIN: If the hon. gentleman would put a simple question to the Australian government: if he would ask them if with regard to voting privileges, and with regard to the period during which a person may be deported, their act differs in any way from our act, I should be interested to hear the answer. There is no difference whatever.

Mr. MacNICOL: I notice that at page 1000 of Hansard, after having previously said that the Australian act was the same as ours, the minister went on to say:

The Prime Minister of Australia has said that the Canadian citizenship bill now before this house makes such an appeal to that country that they are going to take similar action.

Well, from that I would judge that they have not taken action, in spite of what the minister says.

Mr. MARTIN: The Prime Minister of Australia announced that he was so pleased with this bill that they proposed to adopt exactly the same principles.

Mr. MacNICOL: I do not want to see this bill held up for long, but I should be glad if on another occasion the minister would quote and give the date of the quotation, the statement he says was made by the Australian Prime Minister; because before the Prime Minister of Australia left for England, where he is now, it was announced that part of the programme to be considered in London was an empire citizenship.

Mr. MARTIN: Oh, no.

Mr. MacNICOL: Oh, yes; I quoted that when I spoke previously. The minister has a happy faculty of simply shaking his head and saying. "no," but I can read English as well as he can.

I wish to point out one other anomaly. The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) quoted the election act of one of the Canadian provinces which stated that in order to vote in that province a person had to be a Canadian citizen. Well, I picture two brothers coming to Canada from, say, Liverpool or Manchester or Edinburgh or Belfast, or any other part of the British commonwealth. The one comes to Toronto; the other goes to Montreal. Some time after this measure is passed a provincial election comes along in the province of Quebec. The brother who goes to Montreal, not being a full citizen, will not have the right to vote for five years.

Mr. MARTIN: That is not correct.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am glad to hear the minister say I am wrong, but the hon. member for Vancouver South says I am right, and with all due respect to my good friend the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) I will take the legal advice of the hon. member for Vancouver South first.

Mr. MARTIN: Has the hon. member read the case I cited?

Mr. MacNICOL: I shall be through in a moment and then the minister may reply to what I have just said. I had not finished saying that the brother going to Toronto would be able to vote in that city if a provincial election came along after he had been there for one year. He would not have to be a Canadian citizen, except that in the eyes of the law he would be so interpreted in Ontario, which would give him the right to vote.

Apart from that anomaly, let me say in conclusion that I see a trend going on here and there. I do not say this legislation is part of that trend, but it is one of the things that are having or may have a serious effect on the strength of this great commonwealth of nations of which Canada forms a part. According to the Ottawa Citizen of May 7 a distinguished and able man gave an address which was reported under this heading:

Best Security for Peace Said Commonwealth

By this whoever wrote the heading meant that the best security for peace is the British commonwealth, and with that statement I am in entire agreement. I do not like to see these various things going on which will loosen the bonds of this empire. The newspaper report went on to say:

"The best security we yet have for peace in the world is the British commonwealth of nations," said Doctor R. C. Wallace, principal, Queens university, in an address at the Ottawa Rotary club luncheon meeting in the Chateau yesterday.

The remarks were made here in Ottawa; I thought perhaps they had been made in Kingston.

"When Britain stood with her back to the wall and on the day when we feared that the BBC voice over the air might be the last from a free Britain, we realized how deep were our relationships and felt that if she went down everything we thought worth while would go down, too."

That is the feeling I have. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am alarmed at one thing and another which are taking place here in Canada, which to me seem to be breaking up the ties that bind. Others may not have that opinion, but no one can blame me for feeling that way. That is my opinion, and it is the opinion of multitudes. I feel that if this bill in any way interferes with the migration of British men to this country by not giving them full citizenship until after five years, they will not come here. As British I would not go to Australia or New Zealand or any other part of the empire where I was barred from full citizenship for a period of five years.

[Mr. MacNicol.]

Mrs. GLADYS STRUM (Qu'Appelle): I wish to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I will take just a few minutes, but I thought I should answer the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) and assure him that to give women the privileges of citizenship in their own right, rather than through their husbands, will not threaten the homes of this country. I personally was put to considerable inconvenience a few years ago when I attempted to obtain a passport. Much to my amazement I found that, although I had been born of British parents who had been in this country for several generations, I was now the wife of the son of a British subject by naturalization, because my husband's father had come from the United States and taken out citizenship here. I was delayed for weeks and weeks while my husband procured a certificate; but had he not gone to this trouble, and had his father not taken out his citizenship I might have found myself in the position in which thousands of other Canadian women have found themselves, of having inadvertently lost citizenship and become aliens.

Having been a candidate for office on three occasions; having done poll work several times and helped to make up voters' lists, I know of dozens and dozens of girls who have come of age and have found that without their knowledge—because they knew nothing of law; they only got married—they were suddenly no longer Canadian citizens but aliens, and unable to vote. I am sure the hon. member for Stanstead would not wish to perpetuate that condition. Undoubtedly all hon. members who believe in the rights of human beings—not the rights of men and women as opposing factions, or as two groups which have nothing to gain or lose, but as human beings—will want to see people have certain inalienable rights. Citizenship should be one of those rights.

In the long process of history, in the long march of civilization, we have gradually struck from women those shackles. We started out with woman as the property of man. It is not many years since a man could will his unborn child away from the mother. It is not many years since a woman did not have the right to own property in her own name, after marriage. Automatically it went to the husband.

These are forward steps we have taken, writing into the statutes of our country the rights of human beings, regardless of their being men or women. I should like to congratulate the minister—and I should have done it much earlier—upon the stand he has taken.

Mr. HLYNKA: Is the Secretary of State ready to reply to the question I asked in connection with the acquisition of naturalization by Sam Carr?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: While there is no reply on third reading, the minister has the privilege of speaking in the same way as any other member.

Mr. W. A. McMASTER (High Park): Mr. Speaker I rise to speak particularly respecting section 10 (1) (c) of the bill. I noticed this afternoon that the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett), misinterpreted the language.

Mr. MACKENZIE: With all deference to the hon. member, I think we should have some semblance of order in respect of debate on specific sections of the bill. It must be remembered that it was considered in detail in committee of the whole. I do not rise with any desire to be objectionable, but simply to follow the rules of the house.

Mr. McMASTER: If the Secretary of State (Mr. Martin) does not want any assistance in clarifying this section, then I am quite satisfied. I speak only for the purpose of making it clear. I suggest it has been read by two people this afternoon, each of whom had a different interpretation of what it meant. When we were in committee I said I did not understand it, but perhaps I was the only one who did not understand it. If it is that bad, I should think the minister would want to have some assistance to make it clear, because it certainly is not clear. However, I leave it entirely to the Secretary of State.

Mr. MARTIN: Go ahead.

Mr. McMASTER: I suggest that if there were brackets before the word "except" in the third line of paragraph (c), and if those brackets were closed after the word "citizen" in the seventh line thereof, the paragraph would be clear.

The minister is trying to give rights to a wife or to a member of the armed forces by way of exception. I submit that is bad draftsmanship, because he has always maintained that nothing is being taken away from any citizen. On the other hand, I have maintained that a man became a citizen as soon as he came here. The Secretary of State has always argued differently, namely that they did not get full citizenship for five years The only manner in which he now gives the right to a member of the armed forces or to a wife is by way of exception. Therefore I submit that it is bad draftsmanship to try to give to these people rights by way of exception rather than by positive enactment.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask a question with reference to the assurance asked by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell). I wanted to be sure whether the leader of the house gave the assurance merely that the government in due course would consider the hon. member's request, or whether he was actually acceding to that request which, as I understood it, was an assurance that at some stage a committee would be appointed to deal with the whole subject. My understanding was that all the minister said was that the matter would be taken into consideration by the cabinet.

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is correct.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. MARTIN: May I repeat on third reading what I said the other day. I thank hon. members on all sides of the house for their cooperation and valuable suggestions—and in this I should like to include the lady member—in respect of what I think is one of the great bills of this parliament, and which will give this great nation the recognition it deserves.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Science service—

5. Science service administration, $32,487.

Item stands.

Marketing service—

26. Dairy products, $438,652.

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): I wanted to call item 26 for the purpose of answering a question which was asked yesterday and putting in order any discussion with regard to it. This explains my absence from the chamber for the last hour or so. It concerns subsidies for dairy products. The position which has been taken by the government in relation to the matter results in an announcement of policy which concerns milk products over a period of time. I am not in a position at the moment to cover all the milk products, but those which have been most under discussion in recent days I am in a position to deal with.

In the first place, it has been decided that the consumer subsidy on fluid milk will be removed as of June 1, and control over prices will be returned from that date to the provincial milk boards. That is, in so far as control of prices is concerned the position will revert to where it was prior to the coming into effect of the prices board so far as fluid milk prices are concerned. In order to allow provincial boards an adequate period in which to make necessary price adjustments, a subsidy of fifty-five cents per 100 pounds will be paid to producers of fluid milk from May 1 to September 30, 1946, it being understood that this subsidy will be removed completely at the later date. It is provided that the subsidy be limited to thirty-five cents in areas where the agricultural food board considers this adequate. That is replacing the provision which was there before, that in those certain areas the limit was twenty-five cents. In view of recent adjustments in the price ceiling on butter, no further action in respect of the present subsidy on butter fat for creamery butter is considered to be required. It is necessary for certain reasons to give further consideration to the subsidies on milk entering into cheese, and into processed milk. The result of these discussions will be announced shortly, that is within the next few days. It is definitely understood that if any adjustments are made they will be upward as compared with the present summer subsidy. That is, if any adjustments are made on the cheese and the processed milk those adjustments will be upward as compared with the subsidies provided for the summer.

I have called the item "dairy products" under "marketing" in order to make it possible for hon. members, without being out of order, to ask any questions they desire to ask or to carry on any discussion in relation to it.

Mr. HACKETT: Availing myself of that suggestion, I will ask the minister if he will state whether there is any intention on the part of his department to increase the ceiling price of creamery butter.

Mr. GARDINER: I just made the announcement in connection with butter, that action with regard to butter has already been taken. It is proportioned to the action which is being taken in connection with other milk products.

Mr. HACKETT: But the minister stated the other day that, in spite of the action taken, there is still a discrepancy in the return to the producer who makes butter instead of cheese; he does not get as much money.

Mr. GARDINER: I was really arguing that if there was a change over from cheese to butter, as apparently there had been in the province of Quebec, where it was easier for them to do it, where they have gone up very much in butter production, the indications were that there was something in favour of butter production. That is simply because of the taking off of the small subsidy which had been paid by the Quebec government, they switch over from cheese to butter, which would indicate that if there is any difference anywhere else it is a very small one.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Does that mean that there is no further subsidy for consumers of whole milk anywhere in Canada, that that is entirely eliminated?

Mr. GARDINER: As of the 30th September next.

Mr. ILSLEY: The consumer milk subsidy comes off from the first of June.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, from the first of June. It is the producers' subsidy which comes off as of the 30th of September.

Mr. WRIGHT: Some days ago the minister in answer to questions asked by various hon. members stated that when the subsidies on agricultural products were removed the Farm Prices Support Act would be brought into action and that the floor prices under the various agricultural products would be announced. Already there have been several removals of subsidies on agricultural products, on canning vegetables, canning fruit, and now on milk. I would ask the minister when it is intended to bring into operation the Farm Prices Support Act and place floor prices on these particular products. We are having shortages to-day of most agricultural products, and in my opinion one of the reasons for those shortages is the present uncertainty with regard to prices. I am quite sure that is one of the main reasons for the drop in production in quite a few lines. As regards dairy products, we find that figures were placed before the house showing a great increase in the export of dairy cattle at the present time, and one of the main reasons is that there is no certainty as to what prices for dairy products will be in the near future. I would like the minister, if he can, to inform us when floor prices will be placed under these products under the authority of the Farm Prices Support Act, which was passed by this house just before the last election.

Mr. GARDINER: The Farm Prices "Floor" Act, as it has been described—and that is as good a term to describe it as any, I think—was put on the statute books at the last session prior to the election, and when that bill was before the house the statement made was to the effect that the bill would be brought into operation at any time it was necessary to bring it in for the purpose of maintaining returns to farmers. Returns include both price and subsidy. Under the discussions we had at that time I think both terms were included. It would be brought into effect at any time it was necessary to retain the returns to farmers in a position which would be comparable with that of the last three years prior to that time. What was had in mind at the time was this, that farmers had been receiving for their products certain returns which were considered to be fairly reasonable in relation to the prices they had to pay for what they had to buy.

Quite an effort was made to have us say that those prices would be based on parity. We did not say that in those terms, because there are so many different interpretations of the word "parity" that it would be most difficult to justify ourselves one way or the other. But we did say that the relationship between what the farmers were getting and what they were paying would be taken into consideration when a decision was being reached as to when we would put the bill into effect.

The present position is that the bill has already been declared operative, and there is an item of $50,000 in these estimates for its administration. The new membership has not yet been appointed. At the time the bill was going through I stated that we would appoint a permanent chairman and that two officials of the Department of Agriculture would act as temporary members of the commission to function until such time as it might become necessary for the board to operate to control any downward trend in the prices of farm products. I do not think it would be correct to say that there has been any downward trend in the returns received by the farmers up to the moment, when you take into consideration both prices and subsidy, so that there has been no reason up to the moment for taking any action beyond what has been taken, as a result of anything that was said at the time the bill was going through.

The present position is not exactly as stated by the hon. member for Melfort. There is not a shortage in Canada in the production of farm products. There is, of course, a shortage in satisfying all the markets of the world, because there is a greater demand from other countries for Canadian farm products than we are able to supply. But the shortage is not in Canada. There is no shortage of food for Canadian consumption except in butter, and every year since I have had to do with public affairs, there has been a shortage of butter to supply the needs of the Canadian people. But so far as all other farm products are concerned there is a surplus supply, as I recall at the moment, with the possible exception of feed grain, and that is because everything else is so high. We have not the feed grains at present to make absolutely certain that we can feed all the live stock we have through until we have a new crop, and unless the promise of crop conditions changes materially within the next month we are not going to be concerned so much about finding markets for our farm products as we shall be concerned about feeding the live stock we have. I have been suggesting for over a year that what we need to be most concerned about in this country is getting feed. We have never been in such danger of not having enough feed as we are right now. One of the reasons for that is that we have met in greater degree I think than any other country all the demands that are being made upon us for grain to feed the different peoples of the world to keep them alive. We have been going far beyond anything we are justified in doing in order to provide for them. That is the only shortage we are likely to have in the immediate future in the production of farm products. Any other shortages we may have will depend upon the feed supply.

The position then is that we have been maintaining prices at the levels at least at which they were before, and we have been increasing them from time to time.

So far as this particular product is concerned, we are now simply saying that we are turning the control over prices and distribution back to where it was before, to the provincial boards which were handling it until it was taken over by the prices board, and we shall not be in a position to say whether the floor prices bill should be applied in connection with the products until we see the results of the action that will be taken between now and September. During that period we are going to be paying higher subsidies than we ever paid before, and so far as we know the producer is going to be receiving higher prices than he received during the three years of which I spoke. We shall not be in a position to take any action under legislation or under anything that was said until we see the results of the action taken between now and September.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Is the minister going to press for the passing of this item to-day?

Mr. GARDINER: I will ask to have it stand after we get through with this discussion.

Mr. COLDWELL: Can we continue with its discussion after eight o'clock.

Mr. GARDINER: As long as this item is before the committee.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: And then it will stand so that we can revert to it? I should like to read the minister's remarks in Hansard.

Mr. GARDINER: I should like to have all the discussion we are going to have on this item to-day. Then the item can stand and we can take up item 5. These estimates will be on to-morrow and we can come back to this item before my estimates are through.

Mr. COLDWELL: Would it not be better to have all the discussion on this item before we leave it?

Mr. GARDINER: That is exactly what I am proposing, that we complete the discussion on this item before we leave it.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to read a letter that I received to-day from a farmer in my constituency dealing directly with the statement just made by the minister with respect to feed and the reason for the reduction in production. This man's letter has to do with bacon.

Mr. GARDINER: Probably I have the same letter.

Mr. WRIGHT: This man's letter is dated May 11, 1946. He says:

Dear Sir:

Some time ago I saw in the Star-Phoenix an article giving Mr. Gardiner great praise for giving the farmers two dollars more for their hogs. Well, ten days ago I took out my first load of winter hogs, and what did I get? Six B1's and one C—something I never got in all the hogs I have sold before, and I have sold in the last six years an average of from 160 to 200 hogs per year.

The packers cannot tell me that I do not know an A hog when I see one. We have the best boar that money can buy and we have nine sows farrowed at the present time. We have 100 living pigs out of 114. We don't always have that luck.

Mr. Gardiner makes us farmers laugh when he says that it is the shortage of feed that has made the farmer quit raising hogs. There is plenty of feed. Give the farmer the price and he will give you the hogs and plenty of them. We have 22 brood sows that we intended to breed, to come in in November, but unless we are guaranteed $32 a hog we are out for good and my neighbours likewise. I am sending you my returns and I want you to let Mr. Gardiner and Mr. King see them for themselves, if you can make out this scribbling and read "little Jimmie" this letter, as he has fooled us long enough. Please excuse mistakes as I have a crippled hand.

That is the attitude of the farmers, certainly in the northern part of Saskatchewan.

Mr. GARDINER: But that does not say that it is correct.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. WRIGHT: That certainly is the opinion in that part of the country, which is one of the biggest hig producing areas in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not know whether it is the same letter that was written to me, but very much the same facts were set out in a letter that was sent to me and which started out by asking me if I had had any better luck than this farmer had. I told him my own luck in connection with a shipment at that very time. I sent ten hogs to market and I just got the returns in the mail the day before this man's letter came. Of my ten hogs, I got all A and B except two, and I was sorry that I got A and B hogs, for the other two were heavy and I got more for them than I did for the A's and B's. There has been a lot of complaining about people not being allowed to produce heavy hogs. The change that has been made in the premium permits one to do without the premium of $2 on A hogs or $1 on B hogs and to receive $32 apiece for the heavy hogs. That is what I got. I got an average of $29 for A's and B's. I got the average, which this gentleman wants on heavies, of $32. So that sometimes these chaps who do all this figuring do not figure far enough. My hogs were all of one litter, all fed in the same pen, all having the same feed and the same care, and the heavy hogs brought me $32, while the A's and B's did not bring that much. All sorts of considerations have to be taken cognizance of in the individual selling of hogs.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CHARLTON: I understood the minister to say this afternoon that the consumer subsidy of two cents a quart would be taken off milk on June 1.

Mr. GARDINER: That is correct.

Mr. CHARLTON: And that the subsidy of fifty-five cents on whole milk would be continued until September 30.

Mr. GARDINER: That is correct.

Mr. CHARLTON: Does that include all milk or just whole milk?

Mr. GARDINER: That is all milk delivered as fluid milk.

Mr. CHARLTON: And there is no further action to be taken on butter?

Mr. GARDINER: I should say that the fifty-five cents is in most of the areas as it is now under the present subsidy provisions; but there is a provision at present which says that there are certain areas in which it will not be above twenty-five cents. We are saying here that there are certain areas in which it will not be above thirty-five cents.

Mr. CHARLTON: I understand there is no further action to be taken on butter but that so far as cheese and processed milk are concerned there is to be a further statement.

Mr. GARDINER: That is correct.

Mr. CHARLTON: The minister said this afternoon that there has been no decrease in the production of any article except butter.

Mr. GARDINER: No, I did not say that. I said there was no shortage. The hon. member said there was a shortage of all these porducts in Canada. I said there was not a shortage.

Mr. CHARLTON: There has been a decrease in the production of several articles?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; that is correct.

Mr. CHARLTON: The minister did say that so far as our domestic requirements are concerned there was no scarcity except in butter. Is that true?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON: It may be true that there is no scarcity so far as our domestic requirements are concerned, but surely this country has to live up to the commitments we made last spring to the United Kingdom. Surely this government is not considering only our domestic requirements at a time when there is the greatest food shortage the world has ever known. Surely we are planning to feed the United Kingdom and the world in general during a period of near famine. The minister said this afternoon that he had made more on his two heavy hogs than he had made on his grades A and B.

Mr. GARDINER: I have the statement in my pocket to-night.

Mr. CHARLTON: That was the statement the minister made this afternoon. Was that per 100 pounds or per hog?

Mr. GARDINER: Per hog.

Mr. CHARLTON: If that be true, I suggest that the whole balance of our hog grading system that we have worked for twenty-five years to get can be upset in three months. We have worked to try to keep the Untied Kingdom market for hogs. If the minister's statement be true, I suggest that some change should be made, either the dollar bonus that was taken off be put back on or—

Mr. GARDINER: May I suggest that I should not have made the reply I did this afternoon on this item at all. We are not on the item dealing with hogs. I called this item for the purpose of discussing the subsidies on milk. We shall have ample opportunity at a later date to discuss hogs. We got off the track for a moment, and I hope others will not follow that practice.

Mr. CHARLTON: The minister made the statement.

Mr. GARDINER: Do not make me make another one.

Mr. CHARLTON: We shall forget about hogs for the moment. The Agricultural Prices Support Act was passed in 1944. Is it the intention of this government to put that act into force this fall when the subsidies are taken off milk? I should like the minister to make a statement regarding that.

Mr. GARDINER: I made a statement with regard to that before recess. The statement is that it will not be put into effect, and there is no reason for putting it into effect in connection with any farm product until that farm product threatens to drop below the returns which farmers were receiving in the three years preceding the session during which the act was passed.

Mr. CHARLTON: Are the farmers to be placed in the same position as they were in 1941 when ceiling prices were frozen at a lower standard? Are prices to be allowed to drop below present prices and then a price floor put on at that lower price?

Mr. GARDINER: Three years prior to 1945 do not bring you back to 1941.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): With regard to these subsidies coming off on June 1 or September 30, does the price ceiling on whole milk still apply, or is the ceiling eliminated too? Do producers sell on the open market then?

Mr. GARDINER: The ceiling is then set as it was before. The price at which milk is marketed is set by the milk boards in the provinces.

Mr. BRYCE: I wish to touch on the statement made by the minister this afternoon. Has the wartime prices and trade board washed its hands of the milk business?

Mr. GARDINER: The wartime prices and trade board will be through setting prices of milk immediately the provincial milk boards take over.

Mr. BRYCE: That is September 30.

Mr. GARDINER: That is on June 1.

Mr. BRYCE: The minister said that the subsidy of fifty-five cents per 100 pounds would remain until September 30.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; the reason for that is that the prices board had the intention, ever since they took over, of eventually turning control over the marketing of milk back to the provincial milk boards that were set up for that purpose. In any discussions that have taken place they have always given the undertaking that they would try to turn it back as they took it over; that is, they would not leave the boards in the position where in twenty-four hours they hand them back the problems that have been created and ask them to take over from there and try to fix things up. What they are doing is saying to the boards: "You start to operate on June 1. We are taking off the consumer subsidy, but we are going to continue the producer subsidy until September 30." We are saying this through the Department of Agriculture, but the two have been working in cooperation all the time. We said, "We are going to continue the producer subsidy until September 30." That gives four months from June 1 to September 30, with the producer subsidy being paid, for the milk boards, producers and consumers in the provinces to adjust themselves to the new condition and control.

Mr. REID: What will that subsidy be?

Mr. GARDINER: It will be fifty-five cents, the same as it has been throughout the winter. It dates back to May 1 and continues right through; payments are made right through on the basis of fifty-five cents.

Mr. BRYCE: I am annoyed about this two cent consumer subsidy coming off, because when you take that away you immediately strike at the women and children. There are many other subsidies we would be far better able to remove than the consumer subsidy on milk. Milk is the cheapest balanced food in the world to-day, and by doing this you are going to deprive a great many needy families of milk.

Mr. REID: They can drink less pop.

Mr. BRYCE: I may tell the hon. member for New Westminster, who says they should drink less milk, that we want them to drink more milk than ever.

Mr. REID: I said they should drink less pop, less Coca-Cola and things like that.

Mr. BRYCE: Well, I don't know; I never drink pop myself. I was never more serious in my life than I am about this milk situation as it affects the children of Canada to-day. The government knows what resulted from our children being undernourished in the thirties; when we needed those boys to fight a war for us we found they were not physically fit, largely because they had not had sufficient milk to drink. We have had girls going to school in the larger cities of Canada and fainting, and doctors have said that if they had plenty of milk to drink that would not happen. In my opinion the government is making a mistake in taking the consumer subsidy off milk to-day. The consumer should be the last person to be interferred with where milk is concerned. I do not know what influence the Minister of Agriculture has with this cabinet, but I believe this matter should be reconsidered before June 1. The minister will remember I used to tell him how to go about grading hogs, that it should be done gradually, and that is the way this thing should have been done. Instead of that the government takes away the whole thing at one time and does not let people become accustomed to paying one cent a quart more. All at once they will have to pay two cents more, and I do not think that is right.

Mr. GARDINER: We are all equally concerned in regard to children getting milk, but the position is hardly as it has been described. The first request for the removal of the subsidy came from the dairy branch of the Canadian federation of agriculture. That was two years ago, I think, or a year ago at the very least.

Mr. BRYCE: Was that the consumer subsidy?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. The suggestion was made this spring by similar sources that we have been too long in doing this, that the only time you can take off a consumer subsidy is in the flush season of milk production. It was suggested, in the discussions which have taken place with regard to this matter, that we should have taken it off earlier, the reason being that it should not be necessary in the flush season to charge the whole two cents up to the consumer. Of course in increasing the producer subsidy on milk it is a fact that this subsidy does take care of the returns of the producers, which will make it possible for milk boards in the provinces to consider whether or not, at any time within the next five or six months, they should consider in any event putting the whole cost of the removal of the consumer subsidy on the consumers of milk. Those are all facts which were in the minds of persons who had to consider when this ought to be done, if it ever should be done, whether it should be done in the fall of the year or in the spring. On balance it was finally agreed that the best time to do it, if it were to be done, was in the flush season of milk production, the season we are going through now. So from that point of view the decision was made to announce the removal of the consumer subsidy at the same time as we announced the increased producer subsidy being allowed on whole milk, giving four months in which to adjust the situation to meet whatever conditions prevail next fall.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am sorry it has been found necessary to remove the subsidy on milk supplied to consumers. I agree with the hon. member for Selkirk that the more milk we can encourage our people to use, the healthier they are likely to be. Of course if this were being done in order to restrict the use of milk so that we might assist those in the areas of starvation the matter might be looked at a little differently.

What I really rose to say was that I was a little surprised at a statement made by the minister this afternoon, which I wrote down as he said it, in connection with the supplies that we are sending overseas and what we are doing in connection with the feeding of the starving world. He said: "We are going far beyond anything we were justified in doing."

Mr. GARDINER: I meant with regard to grain only.

Mr. COLDWELL: That was not clear in my mind, and I thought it would be a pity if that were interpreted elsewhere as I interpreted it—

Mr. GARDINER: Feed stuffs particularly for live stock.

Mr. COLDWELL: —because, while I would like to commend the government for what the government and the country have done in regard to meeting the needs of the starving people of the world, my opinion is that we could do more than we are doing to give that relief at the present time. I do not want to say anything that seems a bit invidious, though it may be; but in comparison with the disappointing record of our great neighbour to the south I think we have done well, though I do not believe we have done nearly all we might. I notice that in the newspapers to-day, as I noticed a few days ago, we were told that Great Britain out of her meagre supplies is going to allot some 200,000 tons of food more to the starvation zones of Europe and in order to assist as far as possible in the relief of a threatened famine of huge dimensions in India.

Mr. GARDINER: Most of which will be wheat she got from Canada.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is quite true. But I have been greatly surprised to read a suggestion in the newspapers by a prominent United States citizen who has been across the world that Great Britain should relinquish her supplies in order to assist, the inference being that these small reserves will be useful in order to meet the needs of the world. While I do not know just what the position is regarding reserves in Canada, I would say this immediately: that having been twice overseas during the war, and receiving frequent letters from friends and relatives across the seas, I believe the condition over there is worse now than it was at any time during the war, and I can well understand why a few reserves should be kept on that island. We must realize that every ounce of food that is imported has to be brought in by ship, and that in the event of a drastic coal strike in the United States, or anything else that would interfere with the shipping of food from this side of the Atlantic, with no reserves they, too, would be faced with starvation in a very short while. I think we should do everything we can to send every available ounce of food to the starving people of the world. We should say nothing and do nothing that would lend any colour to the idea that has gone abroad in some quarters that the United States is doing a very great deal, that we are doing a very great deal and that there are reserves across the seas which might be used to assist in the needs of the world.

Mr. REID: Are not some of the difficulties confronting the people of Great Britain to-day, so far as food supplies are concerned, on account of the fact that a great proportion of their food is going to Germany?

Mr. COLDWELL: That is right.

Mr. REID: It is not actually on account of a lack of food.

Mr. COLDWELL: I was saying that, that she is supplying starving countries. Undoubtedly one of those starving countries is Germany. We defeated Germany, and we have very little sympathy for those who brought a terrible holocaust upon the world. Yet, starvation in Germany would breed further difficulties, and ultimate revolt in Europe would react upon the rest of the world. Even if we had no other reason for doing all we can to feed the starving people of Germany, self-preservation demands that we shall do so. While during the war we may have been pretty bitter against Germany, and might have suggested that she be made to suffer as she made the rest of the world suffer, nevertheless to-day we have to view the situation in a more realistic light, and realize that if certain events happen in Germany, and particularly in that area of Germany which the British control, we are going to suffer for it.

I do not want to be out of order when discussing this item. But since the matter was raised by the minister in his statement this afternoon, at least in one part of it, I felt that one was entitled to say a few words on this point. After all, in our own country we are enjoying more than double the calories most of the people even in the fairly well fed parts of Europe are getting at the present time.

I believe the government could well urge the people to cut down a little more on what we are using, and to cut out some of our luxuries. I think we could do with a little less ice-cream, if necessary. And those who drink liquor could do with a little less malting barley than is going into liquor.

Mr. GARDINER: On a point of order, I do not wish to have to answer all these things.

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not expect the minister to.

Mr. GARDINER: If I do we shall be discussing this question all night. I understood we were discussing an announcement made with respect to milk. It has been suggested that I raised these questions but I did not. They were raised by the hon. member for Melfort. I simply answered some of the things he said. If we are going into all those discussions, the whole of my estimates will be covered under this one item. I do not want to have to answer these things three or four times.

We are discussing milk subsidies, and I shall give all the information I can with regard to them. When that is finished we can go on to other agricultural estimates.

Mr. COLDWELL: I shall be very glad to fall in line with the minister's suggestion. But I wish to say that I understood the minister—and I think if he will look at Hansard he will realize it was a pretty bald statement—

Mr. GARDINER: The statement has entirely to do with feed grains.

Mr. COLDWELL: It was not I thought confined in that way.

Mr. GARDINER: If the hon. member will read Hansard he will find it is.

Mr. COLDWELL: We will both read Hansard.

Mr. CHARLTON: Do we understand by the minister's statement regarding consumer subsidies on milk that the farmers will be expected to reduce the price in order to take up those two cents, which will mean approximately eighty cents less for their milk this summer, after getting the 20-cent rise in subsidy, with the increased cost of production? I think all farmers in Canada realize that the consumer is an important person. We, of all persons, remember that fact. At the same time, with the increase of twenty cents in subsidy, and then asking them to take part of that two cents, it would mean sixty cents less for their milk.

Mr. GARDINER: What I am suggesting is that that decision will be made by another authority, and that is an authority which is much closer to my hon. friend's own home. In other words, it is the central authority in Toronto, which is set up to deal with milk. I am not going to anticipate what decision they will make. They have complete authority to make a decision, just as the prices board has had authority in the past. I presume they are going to pass upon the facts as they find them.

Mr. CHARLTON: But the minister will agree that it will put the farmer in a very poor light with the consumer.

Mr. GARDINER: Not if you have a good board in Ontario—and I think you have.

Mr. TUSTIN: Do I understand from the minister that he now says that the Ontario milk board—and I take it that that is what he is referring to—will have the right to set the consumer price on milk? They never have had that right before, have they?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. TUSTIN: No, they never have had that right before. They have acted more or less as referees when distributors in certain centres have petitioned to set a price. They have acted in that capacity.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. TUSTIN: But they have never had the right to set the consumer price for milk, and I doubt very much whether they have that right to-day.

Mr. GARDINER: They can be given it.

Mr. TUSTIN: I am told they have not. I should like to ask a question, following up what has been said by my colleague the hon. member for Brant. Is the farmer to be expected to reduce the price of milk to the distributor, or is the general public or the consumer to pay the same price per quart for milk as he is paying to-day.

Mr. GARDINER: If I remember correctly, the set-up we are talking about was put into effect by the government of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett. Most people in Canada thought he did a very good job in making possible the milk boards that they have in the provinces. This was done as a result of discussions which took place at that time, and the decision arrived at was that the authority rested with the provinces.

There was no authority with the federal government at all, in ordinary times. The authority was with the provinces, in dealing with matters of that kind. So they have set up boards in every province of Canada, with the exception, I believe, of British Columbia. In its last session British Columbia passed legislation setting up its board. The result is that every province in Canada has a board which has the right to exercise any authority given it by the provincial legislature with regard to the marketing of milk within the province. They have control over the marketing of milk, and they will make the decision on the question now raised. I shall have no authority to make it, and I am not going to say what will be done.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I think the minister is entirely wrong about the board set up by the Bennett government. If I remember correctly, the board then set up was the dominion marketing board, and I understand the court in England threw out that legislation. Does the minister say that the provincial commissioner has power to set prices for milk or dairy products interprovincially?

Mr. GARDINER: There are nine departments, and I should not like to state to the committee, without any of the facts in front of me, just what authority each one has. But they have whatever authority was given them by the respective provincial governments.

I am speaking from memory—and the hon. member for Haldimand will correct me if I am wrong—but I still think what was done was done by the Bennett government. I remember the hon. member for Haldimand stating at the last session, during a discussion with respect to setting up another board, that it was determined at that time that in dealing with commodities such as milk, which are produced to a great extent in the same province in which they are consumed, the authority is with the provincial governments. As a result of that, you have nine different boards handling the marketing of milk, with any authority they have given to them by the provincial legislatures. All the regulating from June 1, on, will be turned back to those boards, from which much of the authority was taken by the prices board when it was set up in 1941.

Mr. HANSELL: I am sorry if I was not in the chamber when the minister made his announcement, but I cannot be in two places at once. I was attending a committee meeting and I am not twins. I may be speaking out of turn, not knowing exactly what the minister's announcement was, but it seems to me that there are one or two things we have to determine. I have listened to the discussion and I have yet to understand why this subsidy is now being done away with.

I should like to ask three questions. Is it because the minister wants the people of Canada to have more milk? Is it because he wants the producers to get more for their milk? Is it because he wants the consumer to be able to buy more cheaply and consume more milk?

I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Selkirk and I believe he is on the right track. What are we considering in connection with this matter? Are we considering the good of the people of Canada with respect to these subsidies? The minister followed the hon. member for Selkirk and said that they were very much concerned about the consumption of milk by the people. The minister, speaking for the government, said, "We are worrying about that." I am going to suggest that there is something else the government is concerned about, that is their treasury. I do not think I am wrong when I say that this announcement has as its background the financial policy into which the government have let their feet slip over the past years.

They struck out with a policy of family allowances, and that cost a lot of money. They have done other things along similar lines which also cost a lot of money. I am not arguing against family allowances, but there is a little suspicion in the back of my mind that they did that as a political move. What I am saying now is that they have to cut expenses somewhere and this looks to me like one of the first announcements in an expense cutting programme.

Another thing the government has to do is reduce taxation. You cannot continue to spend and reduce taxation and balance your budgets. It just does not add up. I think it was rather unique, even though it was not clever, for the Minister of Agriculture to rise this afternoon and call for a certain item in order that he might make this announcement. As a matter of fact, although we may appear to be discussing milk, what we are actually discussing is something that comes under the Department of Finance because it is a subsidy. The Department of Finance has found itself in a box, and

I would add that the whole financial policy under which the government has been working for years is beginning to crack down. If the minister does not change that policy the government is going to crack down with it, or crack up.

An hon. MEMBER: Blow up.

Mr. HANSELL: Perhaps blow up. I am saying something now that I believe to be true. Are we considering the people of Canada in this matter, or are we considering the interests of the treasury in order that the government may meet the demands of the people for a reduction in taxation and still carry on some of their huge expenditures? I should like that answered and perhaps I shall have to wait until the budget before it is answered. While it is the Minister of Agriculture who is taking on this matter, rightly the Minister of Finance should be doing it. I notice the Minister of Finance is in his seat taking note of all that is being said.

I shall close my remarks by saying that the only way a country can be prosperous, the only way the people of a country can be happy and contented is to have an expanding economy. You cannot have an expanding economy without spending lots of money. Personally I am in favour of subsidies because they mean an expanding economy. I am in favour of anything that will put money into the pockets of the people. But there is juggling being done in these days. That was the trouble with the dominion-provincial conference. That conference was a matter of juggling with taxation, seeking to pull this piece over here and push that piece out over there. It was a case of saying, "You take this and I will take that." We might as well face the facts. There is no use in trying to put money into people's pockets with one hand and trying to pull out the same amount with the other.

Mr. FAIR: Take the pocket with you.

Mr. HANSELL: The hon. member for Battle River says, "Take the pocket with you."

An hon. MEMBER: And the pants too.

Mr. HANSELL: Yes, and the pants too.

Mr. MacNICOL: Draw the line somewhere.

Mr. HANSELL: We have to draw the line somewhere. We can talk about the people of Europe; we can talk about other things, but I suggest that we are missing the mark when we talk about them. Those are incidental big problems, but I am suggesting that this is a problem which comes from the treasury and is being put to us in this way.

[Mr. Hansell.]

Mr. GARDINER: In answering what has just been said I would recall that only two days ago, I believe, the hon. member for Macleod added his voice to that of a number of other hon. members who were complaining because too many announcements were made on the orders of the day and on motions and could not be discussed. It was said that the ministers were getting into the habit of making statements on important matters at a time when no one could say anything about them. The only reason this announcement was made in this way was to give every one an opportunity to say something about it.

We were considering whether it should be made by two ministers or one, but then the proposal was made that the announcement should be made on a certain item in my estimates so that everyone could discuss the matter. If we are to be criticized one day for putting out statements on motions in order to get them out to the country and then criticized when we make a statement before the house in committee of supply in order that the subject matter may be fully discussed, then I should like to ask the hon. member for Macleod when we can bring them in. When are these announcements to be made? I think they have been made in the proper way. We have even given the hon. member for Macleod an opportunity to make his speech and show that he thinks differently to-day from what he did a few days ago.

As to the other matter, the ceiling price of milk across Canada is set at different levels at different places, depending on the district. That ceiling still remains. What has been done is to take off the two cents subsidy, which was paid in this way. In a city like Ottawa, for instance, if the ceiling price on milk is twelve cents the consumer pays ten cents, and the distributor of the milk collects two cents by way of subsidy, called consumers' subsidy, which makes it possible for him to deliver the milk at two cents less than the ceiling price in this community. When the distribution of the milk is handled by some other authority, they may or may not charge the consumer more. If they do not charge the consumer more, then on the principle that people will drink more milk when they can get it more cheaply, there will be just as much milk consumed under the new plan as under the old. If, on the other hand, they increase the price of milk to people living in a particular area, the authority to which they appeal is much closer to the situation than any authority which operates in Ottawa alone.

It is a further fact that conditions are not the same in the different provinces or in different parts of the same province. There are areas where milk is sold at seven, eight or nine cents a quart, and other areas where it is sold at twelve or thirteen cents a quart, depending upon the community. All the facts in relation to these communities are best known to the boards appointed by the provinces to deal with these matters. While control has been put back under these boards, we are simply following out the policy which was announced at the very beginning, namely, that these controls were put on under the War Measures Act without which we had no authority by any other statute or under the constitution to go into a province or into homes and do the things in war time which in ordinary times we could not constitutionally do.

We were told very politely in the meetings that were held and which were referred to a few moments ago that there are some people in the dominion who do not intend that we should continue exercising that authority. If that is the case, we had better turn back the authority as peacefully as we can to where it belonged in the first place, and do so as soon as possible. That is one very good reason for doing what we are doing. It is not intended that the mere doing of this shall determine any one of the three questions that were asked by the hon. member for Macleod at the beginning of his remarks. We are simply trying to restore the peace-time relationship as between the federal government and the provinces. This is one of the matters that must be dealt with at some time, and it has been suggested that this is the proper time to do it. There has been no question in anyone's mind that it would have to be done eventually, and the only question that remains is whether now is the time to do it or whether we should wait for another six or twelve months. I presume that my hon. friends of the Progressive Conservative party, judging by their speeches, would say that we have waited six months too long.

Mr. SENN: I am one of those who think we have waited too long. A little while ago the Minister of Agriculture brought my name into the discussion when speaking of the milk boards in the different provinces. I happened to be chairman of the committee on agriculture during the Bennett administration. That committee made an investigation into the whole milk question and recommended that boards be set up in the provinces because the provinces had the right to set prices. I think those milk boards did a good job.

I was sorry to learn from the minister's remarks that there is still a ceiling on the price of milk delivered to the consumer. If that ceiling remains I do not see that the milk boards in the provinces can do much good by setting a price on milk, because it will be governed entirely by the present ceiling price of milk. I hope that that restriction will be removed very shortly.

It is all very well to say that we are not going to pay a two-cent bonus on milk delivered to the consumer; but if the milk board is to be stymied, if the board is to be put in the position where it must govern the price it sets by the ceiling price on milk at the present time, it will not get very far. It seems to me that that upsets the whole argument advanced by the minister in regard to removing the subsidy on milk at the present time. Since the minister has gone at least part of the way in accepting the policy laid down by our party I think the time has come for him to go the whole way and remove the price ceiling. I have a good deal of sympathy for the minister, because I do not think he is altogether in sympathy with the policies of the wartime prices and trade board at this time. Perhaps he is, but I do not think so. He is enough of a farmer to know that farm prices should not be governed as they are now by price ceilings set by the wartime prices and trade board. I hope that he will be successful in his fight with the wartime prices and trade board and will succeed in having the price ceilings changed, or at least that they will not be set as they are to-day by the prices board.

Mr. GARDINER: Before there is any further discussion I think I should reply to the last remarks of the hon. member. The wartime prices and trade board was set up to do a job in connection with the control of prices. I am candid enough to say that any farmer, as has just been suggested by the hon. member for Haldimand, would look with some misgivings at the suggestion that there be ceilings put on prices.

Mr. SENN: They still do.

Mr. GARDINER: But if you look back over history, you will find, and you have only to take a drive through rural Ontario to prove it, that the better farm buildings were all built during war periods, as you can see by the dates on them. Some were built in the Crimean war, some in the South African war, some in the first great war; and the only reason we did not build more during the last war is that we could not get the materials.

Mr. SENN: There was one built in my riding.

Mr. GARDINER: An occasional one may have been built but we have not built as many as we would have liked to build. That proves that the only time that farmers were able to get better than the ordinary revenue out of farming was during a war period.

Mr. SENN: Not in this war.

Mr. GARDINER: That is just what I am coming to. The difficulties the farmers went through before this war were caused by the preparation for war in other parts of the world, which resulted in no markets for our products. Then we came into the war, and the reason why the farmer had misgivings and why I had misgivings was that the farmer was denied the right to get very much more for his eggs than he got, very much more for his hogs than he got, very much more for his beef than he got and, more recently, more for his wheat than he got. That was all done under a control policy in order to prevent inflation. What I said, what many others said, what the majority of the government said—or it would not have been done—and what the whole government agreed to finally after discussion was that, in view of the fact that the farmer's price was held down during the war for at least three years, for a number of years after the war, provision should be made that the return to the farmer—call it price or subsidy plus price or whatever you like—was not to be allowed to go down unreasonably. If you maintain that policy long enough, then you will balance the fact that prices otherwise would have gone down against the fact that you did not allow them to go up.

I was asked a few moments ago, "When are you going to bring the price floor bill into operation in connection with these dairy products?" I answer, just so soon as prices of dairy products begin to go down to the level or approaching the level at which those who are working on statistics every day, as they have been now ever since that bill was passed, indicate that we are approaching the point where the farmer is being asked to take less for his product than he should have taken. That, by the way, is the answer to the suggestion made a few moments ago by the hon. member for Macleod.

It is not purely a financial question, as the hon. gentleman suggested. The financial side of it, in relation to the farmer's problems, is taken care of by the floor prices act which was passed in the last session before the election. This committee can rely upon it that, when it becomes necessary to apply the terms of that act, they will be applied, and it will cost just as much to apply them as it would to continue subsidies or anything else in order to give protection to the farmers.

The act provides $200 million with which to do that job, and we have not spent that much on this kind of thing in any of the years we are talking about. Therefore it is not a matter of the treasury trying to protect themselves. But when one hears an hon. member say that all we are concerned about is the treasury, the question presents itself: What is the treasury? The treasury in that sense means the money we are taking out of the pockets of the Canadian people; and when an hon. member says that we are thinking in terms of taxes, of course we are. But they are taxes paid by every person in the country in some form or another, and anyone who tries to run away from that resonsibility should not be in this house. That is the main job the government has: in the first place, trying to determine to what extent the people can pay for the cost of running the government; at the same time trying to collect more heavily from those who are in a position to pay most, and then, by such measures as the family allowance, to redistribute those funds back, in some part at least, to the people who did the work in order to make the production of wealth possible. That in a few words is the policy in relation to the whole matter. It has been put into effect throughout the war; it is still being put into effect, and that is one of the reasons why we are still here—to put it into effect.

Mr. SENN: I do not think the farmers of Canada found fault with price controls during the time of the war. They were willing to do their share and they did it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): And a great deal more than their share.

Mr. SENN: They produced to the limit. They feel now, however, when the war is over—and the minister will agree with me in this—that the time has come when they should have some reward. They bore their fair share of the burdens of price controls during the war—perhaps more than their share—and now that the war is over, they feel, quite rightly, that they should get their fair reward for what has happened in the meantime.

Mr. ILSLEY: I am sorry if we are to get into a discussion, on this item, of the merits of price control. I hope we shall not do so, because there is another debate in the house in which that question can be discussed. I find it hard to sit here and listen to the doctrine I hear propounded, that is to say, that at such a time as this, when the inflationary pressures are so great as they are now, this is the time of all times to take the lid off. I find it impossible to sit here and listen to that sort of thing with composure.

I simply want to make clear one thing with regard to the consumer milk subsidy. The situation on June 1, will be that the maximum, the price ceiling, will be established; that is, two cents higher than the consumer is paying at the present time. That will be established by the wartime prices and trade board, but thereafter the matter of adjustment in prices will be in the hands of milk boards.

Mr. SENN: Prices to the producer?

Mr. ILSLEY: The prices charged for milk, yes.

Mr. SENN: Paid for milk.

Mr. ILSLEY: Paid for milk; it is the same thing. I do not think there is anything more I can say.

The CHAIRMAN: Following what the Minister of Finance has said, may I remind the committe of the rules which are in effect in committee, according to which all discussion should be relevant to the item under consideration. There has been considerable latitude so far this evening, but I suggest to the committee that future discussion be confined strictly to the item under consideration.

Mr. REID: The criticism that has arisen since the announcement has been made by the Minister of Agriculture is something about which a few members on this side of the house have been warning the government for at least the past one or two years. I think I can speak with the support of the member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) in this assertion, that the subsidy of two cents to the consumer does not meet the views of the farmer in the Fraser Valley. That is a definite statement. The hon. member for Selkirk brought up the question of milk consumption. The hon. member for Fraser Valley and I are members of the Fraser valley milk producers' association and we found that when the price of milk went up one cent the consumption of milk fell. It did not fall because the people had no money with which to buy milk. Consumption did not fall because the price had been raised. There was a psychological factor operating in the minds of many people against paying extra money to farmers for a good product. To-night when the hon. member for Selkirk was speaking I mentioned Coca-Cola. There is something strange that I have observed. You can raise the price of soft drinks, cigarettes, candy bars and there is no attack from the public, no criticism. But try to raise the price of milk one cent and the whole country is up in arms. One thing that is bothering me is this: What will happen when the subsidy comes off? I am not advocating that the ceiling price be taken off the price of milk at the present time, but I am wondering what the farmer is going to do when the subsidy comes off at the end of September, because it is well known that he cannot produce milk at the price he is receiving if the subsidy comes off.

One reason why our people are not going on the land is that it is far easier to work in the city than it is to milk cows. I speak as one of the few members of the committee who can milk cows.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. REID: I know whereof I speak. I should like to take on any hon. member if he is talking about a competition.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Go and get the cow.

Mr. REID: I certainly am speaking with more authority as a farmer than many of the lawyers and others who speak on the subject. I know whereof I speak. When the subsidy is lifted we are wondering what is going to take place on the farms where farmers are endeavouring to produce milk under present conditions, and will have to accept less when that time comes.

Some mention has been made about our people drinking more milk. We shall have to educate the people and their children to drink more milk. What do we find with regard to the drinking of milk? If you go into a restaurant or cafeteria and look around you will find it is the grown-ups who are drinking more milk, not the children. The children are drinking soft drinks. I have been told that in the canteens of the three services more milk was drunk by the members of the services during the war than any other kind of liquid, and that is all to their credit. What we need is to educate the parents and their children to drink the finest food that God has given us.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I am not entirely clear yet on this price control situation. I asked the Minister of Agriculture a pointed question a few moments ago. I understood him to say that after the subsidies came off the wartime prices and trade board were entirely through with the control of milk prices. From that time on it was a matter for the provincial boards. What the Minister of Agriculture said since, and what the Minister of Finance said a few moments ago have confused me again. I wish this point cleared up. In the section of the country from which I come many dairymen are supplying towns of one or two thousand population. When the order setting the ceiling price came into effect the prices that they were charging the inhabitants in the towns or cities were not all the same. The prices at which they were selling were the prices that existed when the freeze was put on. I want to know whether there is any further price control on the small dairy producers when the subsidies come off. Hitherto in my province they have received no direction whatever from the provincial dairy boards. Are they entirely clear of price ceilings so far as the wartime prices and trade board is concerned? From that date on can they set their own prices for their whole milk?

Mr. REID: May I say one word regarding boards? I know something of the power of boards because I have had a good deal to do with them. I am now speaking of British Columbia and I suppose this applies to all the provinces. The provincial boards were given the power to control all matters absolutely so long as the articles for sale were sold within their provinces; but if the article, whether it be milk, fruit or potatoes, were exported to another country or province, then the regulations and power of the dominion applied. But so far as the provinces are concerned, these provincial boards have all the power they need. That is the information I have received.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Might I have an answer to my question? So far as the federal order is concerned, is it completely eliminated on that date?

Mr. ILSLEY: I tried to make it clear before that on June 1, that is beginning with midnight on May 31, the consumer subsidy will be withdrawn, and the ceiling price, as it was before the consumer subsidy was paid, will be restored. That will be the situation on June 1. Now, then, that will be the way the period after June 1 starts off.

Mr. SENN: The price will be twelve cents?

Mr. ILSLEY: In many markets, I think in Ottawa, the price to the consumer is now ten cents, and with the withdrawal of the subsidy the ceiling will be twelve cents.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It varies in different districts?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes; it is different all over Canada.

Mr. TUSTIN: Two cents above what the consumer is paying to-day?

Mr. ILSLEY: Well—

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: No.

[Mr. J. A. Ross.]

Mr. TUSTIN: The subsidy is paid directly to the distributor. Will the ceiling be placed at two cents above what the consumer is paying?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is substantially correct, yes. I do not know whether it is 100 per cent correct, but it is substantially correct. The ceiling that was in existence before the consumer subsidy was instituted, which was in December, 1942, if I remember correctly, becomes the ceiling. There may have been some adjustments in some districts in the meantime. Substantially that old ceiling comes back.

I wish to point out, while I am on this subject, that this subsidy is the only one in existence that has had the effect of depressing the price of a product to the consumer below the price that he was paying in the basic period, the fall of 1941, with the result that milk prices in Canada are remarkably low by any comparison that can be made, especially with milk prices in the United States. On leading markets there the prices are very much higher than they are in Canada. I say that in answer to the hon. member for Selkirk who is worrying about the fact that with the elimination of the subsidy the consumer will be obliged to pay more. That is so, but he will not be paying more than he was paying during the basic period, namely, the fall of 1941. That is substantially true from coast to coast. There may be a few exceptional communities where adjustments have been made, but that is substantially the case.

I wish to make this point clear: If the control of the price of milk is to be restored to the provincial authorities pursuant to a policy of gradual decontrol, then it follows that we cannot continue to pay a federal subsidy, because it would be sheer irresponsibility for the government to leave the fixing of the price to provincial authorities with freedom to them to put it up or down, and at the same time be pouring in federal money. If the federal government is to continue to pay a consumer subsidy on milk it must continue to control the prices, it must continue to be the authority which fixes the price.

Mr. McMASTER: That is Drew's argument in reverse.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not want to get drawn into a cross-current like that.

Therefore, if we are right in decontrol, then we have to withdraw this consumer milk subsidy. I think we are right because, as time goes on, it becomes increasingly difficult for the federal authority to be fair in the adjustments which it makes. For example, a situation might arise in Saskatchewan which called for an upward adjustment of the ceiling price. If the federal authority is the body that is fixing the price at which milk is sold that action is cited as a precedent in other provinces, and accusations are likely to be made that there is discrimination by the federal authority between one part of the country and another; whereas in a country such as this, conditions vary greatly, and in such a matter as the fixing of milk prices—I do not say everything, I may say to my hon. friend—surely it is more appropriate for the local boards to be fixing them than the federal authority. We should get to that position as soon as possible.

I also wish to say that this is a remarkably difficult subsidy to administer. I suppose hon. members realize that every month from twenty to twenty-five thousand cheques have to be sent to dealers and distributors in all parts of Canada; and without a large and competent staff, which the board finds it difficult to maintain, it is difficult to apply fully and satisfactorily the safeguards that ought to be applied to the expenditure of public money. There is no doubt about that; and the board is finding it increasingly difficult to keep a competent staff. Members of their staff are going back to their businesses and to the employment from which they came. This highly involved and complex consumer milk subsidy is the sort of thing that it is increasingly difficult to administer.

Those, I think, are the main points I wanted to cover. The hon. member for Souris asked me a question which I find it a little difficult to answer.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I find it difficult to understand.

Mr. ILSLEY: No, it is not difficult to understand, but the part of the question I am finding it difficult to answer is this. The hon. member says there was no control whatever exercised by the provincial milk boards in some parts of some provinces, and he wants to know whether this policy involves removing some sales completely from control. I cannot answer that.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): As far as your authority is concerned.

Mr. ILSLEY: I cannot answer that.

Mr. HATFIELD: You are keeping the ceiling on milk.

Mr. ILSLEY: We are restoring the 1941 ceiling on June 1, and then we propose to permit the price to be fixed and controlled by the local boards.

Mr. SENN: That is the producer price?

Mr. ILSLEY: I want to go ahead with this and get to the bottom of it. If I can answer it I will say so, but I do not think I can. The hon. member for Souris says there are some sales of milk in some parts of some provinces which were never subject to the control of milk boards. I did not know that.

Mr. HATFIELD: That is the case all over Canada.

Mr. ILSLEY: I did not know that, and I do not pretend to know everything about this question. I was given to understand that the milk boards in the provinces had authority to control the prices of all sales of milk, with the exception of British Columbia, which was setting up a board. I thought that was the practice that would be resumed.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Then in that case you would not interfere if the producers in those areas went out and increased their prices; that is, there would be no interference as far as your board is concerned?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is a situation I would have to look into.

Mr. SENN: The milk boards will set those prices, surely.

Mr. ILSLEY: I thought they would; I thought it was a matter which the milk boards in the provinces could and did control. If there is a situation, a real problem there of some sales not being under the control of anybody, then it is a matter I shall have to look into.

Mr. GARDINER: I think I can explain what the hon. member for Souris has in mind; at least I want to find out if it is what he has in mind. In the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan there is no milk control except in the cities.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is it.

Mr. GARDINER: In Saskatchewan there is control in Regina, Saskatoon, Moose Jaw and Prince Albert, and there may be a little control in places like Battleford; but there is no control at all outside those cities. There has never been any control there; the board never attempted to go out and say what I should pay another farmer for milk, or even what the people in the smaller communities should pay.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Yes, they did.

Mr. GARDINER: They did within limits, but no one ever tried to enforce it seriously.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): They did enforce it right in my constituency.

Mr. GARDINER: When you get it back under the provincial boards you will not have much difficulty in that regard.

Mr. SENN: I should like to ask a simple question there. Did not the prices board set the price at which milk should be distributed in the cities? If they did not I am very much mistaken.

Mr. ILSLEY: Oh, yes.

Mr. BRYCE: I do not know whether the Minister of Finance really heard what I said. I stated I was very much annoyed because this consumer subsidy was being removed all at once. I thought that was too drastic, and I do not see even yet why the two cents should be taken off all at once. The hon. member for New Westminster spoke about the subsidy decreasing the demand for fluid milk, but that has not been the experience in Manitoba. We are selling more milk in Winnipeg to-day than ever before. If I am not mistaken, one month's production was up about two and a half million pounds. Hon. members will find the exact figures at page 1387 of Hansard, when I spoke in the house previously. We do not want the children to drink pop if they will drink milk. I cannot seem to get hon. members to realize that. Now that we have created a market for milk, let us not lose that market because of the removal of this subsidy. The more the people have to spend, the more they will buy; and if you take off the subsidy you are destroying the farmers' sale for milk; you are endangering the health of the people, and there are other disadvantages. I hope the Minister of Finance will reconsider this matter. Do not take off the two cents at once. If you must reduce taxation, do it gradually, but do not pick on the workingman first. Let him come later on. You have given in to the pressure of big business and taken off the subsidies and ceilings on different things the workingman has to buy. Now you are attacking the food he has to purchase. Please do not do that.

Mr. FAIR: On many occasions I have tried to point out to the house that the foundation on which our farm price structure has been erected in the past was entirely faulty. When the government brings into operation the good things that are supposed to be provided for us in the Agricultural Prices Support Act I hope some consideration will be given to the hours that are worked by farmers and their wives and families, and the prices they have to pay for the things they buy, before those prices are fixed. Perhaps hon. members will be surprised to learn that in July, 1942, we were receiving for our wheat an initial price of 17½ cents a bushel less than we were receiving when this government came into office in 1935, just when we were beginning to get out of the depression. Many people do not realize this and many other things in connection with agriculture. I should like to see the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce get busy and employ some real statisticians. I believe they now have such people in the government service, but under the policies adopted they are not allowed to do the work they should be doing in the interests of the farmers and, therefore, in the interests of all the people of Canada. So once again I am pleading that the price structure, as far as farm products are concerned, should be upon a sound foundation. Give the farmer the forty or forty-four hour week that you are giving to organized labour and all the rest of the people in the country, and when you have a prosperous agriculture you can look with confidence to a prosperous and united Canada; but you cannot have it otherwise.

Mr. GARDINER: May I suggest that we have had sufficient discussion on this item to provide all the information necessary in connection with it. We can come back to it and discuss it further when we take up dairy products, or if any further information is required now it might be asked for, and then this item might be allowed to stand so that we might go on to a consideration of the estimates.

Mr. HATFIELD: If prices of dairy products go below the cost of production, who will set the floor prices; will it be the provincial milk board, or the federal board?

Mr. GARDINER: The intention expressed at the time the bill was brought down is that if the marketing of farm products under the system that prevails brings a price which is satisfactory, as related to the actions taken during the three years referred to, there will be no necessity for doing anything under the floor prices bill.

Just by way of illustration, let us take the product which to a certain extent will control milk, one which has been considered in the past, namely cheese. Seventy per cent of our cheese is marketed in Great Britain. I would presume that the policy followed would be something like this: We will continue to market 70 per cent of our cheese in Great Britain. Under our agreement we now have we will market more than 70 per cent. The agreement provides for a return which is just as high as we got during the last three years of which we spoke. The only adjustment that is necessary is as related to the subsidy. The price in the new agreement is the price we got for those three years. So that the floor is provided under cheese.

The position that has been dealt with through subsidies may also be provided for in certain agreements which are made. There is no necessity whatsoever for doing anything to put cheese under the floor prices measure.

One can apply the same principle to butter and to canned milk. When you have it applied to all those products it will have an influence upon fluid milk, and it is just possible that there will be no necessity for doing anything under the floor prices measure if we can maintain our contract and our supplies to Great Britain and to other countries. But if we are not able to maintain those floors, then we have the floor prices measure to utilize for the purpose, and it would be put into effect by the federal government.

It may require that we do like the prices board did. The prices board in making their operations effective utilized the services of the provincial milk boards. In dealing with some of these matters we may have to utilize the services of provincial organizations, too. I find that no one makes very much fuss about it, if you pay the money.

Mr. HATFIELD: I understand that if the price is maintained for three years after the war, and was maintained for three years during the war, floor prices do not apply. Is that right?

Mr. GARDINER: So long as the prices remain up at satisfactory levels you do not need to apply any compulsion or even persuasion—so long as they remain up there. It may be for a longer period than three years.

Mr. SENN: One thing is certain, that if the two-cent subsidy on consumer milk is removed, somebody has to pay for it. Is it to be the consumer or the producer?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: It will be the poor farmer.

Mr. SENN: That is the thing I should like to know. If it is to be the producer it will be too bad for him. On the other hand, if it is the consumer—

Mr. GARDINER: It will be too bad for him.

Mr. SENN: Yes. Who will bear it? That is an important question, and the minister should answer it.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to compliment the minister upon having brought this matter before the committee so that it can be discussed. There is one thing about the Minister of Agriculture: He is never afraid to come to the house and to try to justify any action he takes. He is to be complimented upon that—even though I do not agree with him at this time. I think it is, indeed, a clever political move to turn back to the provinces the fight between the producer and the consumer, so far as prices are concerned.

An hon. MEMBER: They asked for it.

Mr. WRIGHT: Some of them; not all of them. That is what this amounts to. The Minister of Finance did not say what would happen when the producer subsidy on milk is withdrawn this fall. I understand that the producer subsidy will be taken off entirely on September 30. Then, are price ceilings, so far as milk is concerned, also to be lifted on September 30 when producer subsidies are taken off? Is the ceiling on whole milk to be taken off at that time too, and leave supply and demand to determine the price? Or are ceilings to be still kept on, and the farmer take the rap?

Mr. ILSLEY: The matter of price will then be in the hands of the local boards.

Mr. WRIGHT: Then the dominion government's price ceiling policy in regard to milk will be entirely taken off. There will be no ceilings at all, and on September 30 the matter will be entirely in the hands of provincial boards.

Mr. GARDINER: I explained that when I brought the question before the committee this afternoon. The announcement was made that we are taking off the consumer subsidy. That is the first part of it. The further announcement is made that the control over the price of milk, and the control of quotas and other things, is handed over to the provincial milk boards. Then we say—

Mr. WRIGHT: Well, can I—

Mr. GARDINER: Just let me finish. Listen, and talk afterwards; and we shall probably understand one another when we are through.

Then, also, in order to give them four months to adjust the position as between the control of the prices board, and control by provincial boards, we are going to pay the highest subsidy on milk that we have ever paid, twenty cents higher than we ever paid before at any time in the summer. It is being raised from thirty-five to fifty-five cents. We will continue to pay that until September 30. In the meantime all this material in the minds of hon. members this evening will be discussed back and forth between the authorities here and the provincial authorities, and some method will be found to deal with the situation. We hope that will be accomplished by October 1, and the whole control, from there on, will then pass over to the provincial authority.

Mr. CHARLTON: I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. There have been some misleading statements concerning this consumer subsidy on milk. The present price ceiling in Ottawa is ten cents. What will be the price ceiling in Ottawa as of June 1 this year?

Mr. ILSLEY: It will be 12 cents.

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie): What is the total amount of subsidy paid on farm products in the last five years?

Mr. GARDINER: I could answer that better when we are discussing subsidies generally. I have the information in this pile of material in front of me. I shall deal with it systematically when we go through the items one at a time. But it will take some time to dig it up.

Mrs. STRUM: I am probably out of order in anticipating—

Mr. COLDWELL: Everybody is.

Mrs. STRUM: But, in considering this increase in the price of milk, I have been sitting here trying to anticipate what will happen to the incomes of old pensioners, persons living on annuities and on invested capital—small incomes. If we have the same thing in the field of milling, and make the consumer bear the cost of the subsidy on bread; and if we do the same thing with meat I am wondering what will happen. For instance, if we withdraw the freight subsidy and make the man who buys meat in Ontario bear the cost of freight, we shall have increased prices on milk, bread and meat, with the result that the person on a fixed income who is buying those necessities of life will be seriously handicapped in setting a table. I should like to know where we stand on this matter of subsidies.

Mr. GARDINER: That is all part and parcel of the discussions which have been going on for some years and which the Minister of Finance has had to answer every time his estimates have been up. I suppose he will be prepared to discuss it again when they are up this year. It all concerns the question of inflation and whether we have come to the time when we should let this whole thing go back and have it a matter of bargaining between producer and consumer. If that is the way it is going to be, we shall have the results that have been suggested sooner or later. We have said that it must be taken up in slow stages, that we must not go too fast with it, that we must try to make adjustments as we go along. In this case we have given four months in which we can try to make adjustments in a way that will not lower the returns to the producers or unduly increase the cost to the consumer.

The CHAIRMAN: I understood the committee to agree that there would not be a general discussion on price control.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN: I thought it was agreed the discussion would be only on price control in connection with dairy products. The item before the committee is 26, dairy products, $438,652. I would suggest that the discussion be relevant to that item. I understood that there was not to be a complete discussion to-night on this item, but that after there had been some discussion the item would stand and we would revert to item 5.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): In view of the statements that have been made, could the Minister of Finance tell us approximately what the milk subsidy, both to the consumer and to the producer has cost annually?

Mr. ILSLEY: The consumer subsidy cost from $20 million to $22 million this year, while the producer subsidy cost has been about $14 million. It will be understood that the producer subsidy is on the old basis that prevailed for the twelve months ended April 30, 1946.

Mr. HANSELL: Anything that I said a while ago was not in criticism of the government's price policy and I do not want to be misunderstood in that connection. I have said in my own constituency that I have not a great deal of criticism to make of the government's price policy. I realize they have had a tough problem and they have done a good job. I was merely suggesting that it was time they changed their policy in order to solve the problems that exist.

What effect will this announcement have upon the present price structure of the manufacture of cheese? I have had a number of letters from cheese manufacturers who say that since the subsidy was reduced some weeks ago they find it difficult to manufacture cheese and sell it at a profit.

Mr. GARDINER: There has been no reduction in the cheese subsidy.

Mr. HANSELL: In connection with the milk they have to buy.

Mr. GARDINER: Not for cheese.

Mr. HANSELL: Has the government had any correspondence with the provinces with respect to this matter? In making this announcement are they taking it for granted that the provinces will accept it?

Mr. GARDINER: There has been no direct discussion with the provincial governments in connection with the policy announced to-day, but there have been discussions with producers' and other organizations interested in the other side of the matter, that is, those who have been buying milk. There is another matter that I referred to when I made the announcement. I said that a decision had not been reached with regard to the subsidy to be paid on milk going into the production of cheese and that a decision has not been reached with regard to the subsidy to be paid on milk going into the production of canned milk. I stated that those decisions would be made within a few days.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: After all this discussion the minister has cleared up one point that was not clear. I come from a dairy district and I own a dairy farm. I understood the minister to say that subsidies were off at a given date, September 30.

Mr. GARDINER: That is correct.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I understand that they are not off definitely as yet in so far as manufactured products are concerned.

Mr. GARDINER: We have been discussing fluid milk. They are all off in so far as fluid milk is concerned, but the question as to what is to be done in relation to cheese and canned milk is not yet determined.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I cannot understand how the provinces can set the price to be paid to the producer when they have absolutely no control over the selling price. The hon. member for Macleod brought up the point about the provincial governments being consulted. The money that is made, if any, on a dairy farm is made in the fluid milk market. Approximately sixty-five per cent of the milk has to go into the manufacturing market. As I understand it, we are now playing into the hands of a few independent shippers who sell fluid milk. We are saying to the provinces that they shall decide what the producers are to be paid and then we as a federal government say what it shall be sold at. As I understand the situation, that is not what was done when we were dealing with the struggling Massey-Harris Company; they were called in and asked what they could afford to produce at. I should like to know whether the dairy council of Canada or the Canadian federation of agriculture were consulted before this policy was decided upon.

Mr. GARDINER: The Canadian federation of agriculture made their representations and the matter was discussed with them, I think just about the time the house met. It has been discussed with officials of the organization since that time. I am not suggesting that they have agreed to what has been done, the question has been discussed with them and their point of view obtained, as well as the point of view of many others.

Probably I did not make myself entirely clear, judging from one of the remarks made, with regard to the position in relation to cheese and canned products. The suggestion is made 65 per cent of the milk is marketed in that way in the Fraser river valley. Those are the two products in connection with which I said we have not yet determined what the subsidies will be, but any adjustments that are made will be upward. I made that statement this afternoon as part of my announcement. That is some indication of what it may be necessary to pay in connection with fluid milk if the fluid milk is to be obtained.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: The minister said that if any adjustments were made they would be upward. Can I take it from that that they will not be downward?

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member certainly can. That is what that means.

Mr. BOUCHER: The thought that occurred to me as I listened to the statements of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance was, where does the government think it is going by this change except it be to save the $20,000,000 consumer subsidy and temporarily to continue the $14,000,000 producers subsidy. I do not see how consumers can derive any benefit from this change. They are to pay the price they paid in 1941, without the reduction that the subsidy represented. Consequently the people with large families who benefited from the consumers subsidy during the war years will be at a disadvantage by this change. One of the arguments used by the government in favour of the children's allowance was that it would assist the heads of large families in buying necessities for the children. The government must have entirely forgotten their arguments of that time when they adopted the policy announced to-day.

There are three primary classes involved in this policy, namely the consumer, the distributor and the producer of milk. Let us forget the distributor for the moment because he is to be allowed to charge to the public the 1941 ceiling price, instead of charging two cents of that to the government. There will have to be an adjustment between the distributor and the producer through the provincial milk control boards of the price paid by the distributor to the producer. The producer gets nothing from this change unless it be the extra twenty cents subsidy on the whole milk that is granted to him as of May 1. If he were to absorb the whole shock of the loss of the consumer subsidy he would lose about eighty cents per hundredweight on his milk. Thus he would have a net loss of sixty cents a hundredweight.

So we see that the dominion government have forgotten about the consumer. They are not caring about how cheaply the consumer can buy his milk. They are not caring very much about what the producer will be paid. They are throwing the squabble between the producer and the distributor to the milk boards and keeping on the ceiling price for some possible protection to the consumer. Is this facing the real situation that confronts Canada in connection with whole milk production?

How is this policy going to affect the diverting of whole milk into the production of cheese and other dairy products? Possibly it may enable the distributor to cut down the price to the producer so that the producer will sell his milk to the cheese factory or the butter creamery or for the manufacture of other by-products of whole milk. That may boost the production of butter and the production of cheese, but it certainly will not put the farmer in a better position to persuade his son or the returned soldier to come back and settle on the farm, nor will it relieve the farmer from sending his milch cows across to the United States for the better prices he gets there. It is certainly not going to have any effect on the production of beef unless it be by making the sale of whole milk less remunerative. To-day in this locality you do not need to go out into the country; all you need to do is to look in the daily papers, to see how many farms, farm stock and machinery are being sold by auction. There is only one explanation. The farmer would not be selling his stock and machinery and his farm if it were profitable for him to stay on his farm. The hon. member for New Westminster said that he knows something about farming because he has milked a cow, but it is the farmer who is selling off his stock and machinery and sending his milch cows across the border who knows whether he is getting a fair share of the national income.

[Mr. Boucher.]

I do not see how this change is going to help things. The Minister of Agriculture a few moments ago, to illustrate a point he was making, said that we should drive through the country and look at the dates on the buildings on the farms. I do not know what buildings he was talking of, because the farmer, in the first place, could not get the paint, even if he could afford it, to paint the date on a new building, let alone the labour or materials required to build. The Minister of Agriculture must admit that for fifteen years now, not just the last five years, farm buildings have not been improved to any degree. There was a shortage of farm improvements even before the war, in the depression days. When the price ceiling was set on the 1941 basis of prices, agriculture particularly was in an unfavourable position because agricultural prices had not risen to the same degree as manufactured goods, or as labour. The price of whole milk varied in different areas, even within the province. The mechanic who was good at repairing farm machinery is not now available to the farmers because he can get much higher wages and shorter hours in the city. The result of all this is that only a very small percentage of our returned men are going into agriculture.

Mr. GARDINER: Does my hon. friend want the controls taken off or kept on?

Mr. BOUCHER: I would certainly say that the dominion government to-day is keeping the control on the ceiling price and not on the equitable adjustment of prices to the producer. In arranging the price as between producer and distributor and consumer, nobody can now control the situation properly. I am one of those who believe that if price ceilings on agricultural products were removed it would be only a short time before these inequities would be eliminated. Then a proper price, instead of an artificial, unfair and unjust price would prevail, and our rural areas would not be denuded of labour for the farm. Let prices seek their own level, as they always have done. We have lived in a world where agriculture has carried on since the day the world began. We did not have control until very recently, and we did not run into any panic that ever showed an unfair advantage to the agricultural producer as a result of accelerated prices. Consequently, as I look upon the announcement, I am at a loss to find out where there will be a benefit either to the consumer or to the primary producer. I cannot help concluding that the aim is entirely to benefit the coffers of the federal treasury at the expense of both the consumer and the primary producer.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I think it ought to be pointed out to all hon. members that the sum total of the result of all this discussion has pretty well established the idea that the subsidy ought to stay and that if it is removed at this time it will injure both the producer and the consumer. I believe the only reason why some of the Progressive Conservatives have not advocated the retention of the subsidy is that they recognize that they would not be able to continue to pay it themselves if they were in power and consequently they are afraid to make a commitment.

With regard to the remarks of the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Boucher), it might be interesting for him to contemplate this question. Was the adjustment between consumer and producer prices fair and equitable in 1935 or 1936 or 1937 or 1938 or 1939 when none of these controls existed? I think he will find that it was not, that the adjustment was not satisfactory to anybody. People were not getting the milk; the milk was not being produced, and neither consumers nor producers were prosperous; all of which ought to indicate that the time has come in the history of the world and of this country when a far-reaching adjustment must be made in the whole financial system as it affects prices. The day has come when subsidies are here to stay, and they must stay if we are to be prosperous and happy and have adequate production.

I suggest that there must be an adjustment in the financial system which will enable us to get money without taking it out of the taxpayer's pockets. That money we can obtain as a result of the production of the country, and it can be used to finance subsidies, so that we shall be able to give a fair price to the consumer, such as he can pay, and a fair price to the producer, such as will enable him to carry on and produce buoyantly and with confidence.

Mr. PEARKES: I rise with great diffidence because I have not the good fortune to have spent the greater part of my life in agricultural pursuits, but I do have the privilege of representing an agricultural constituency and I am alarmed at receiving a copy of the local newspaper to-day telling me that the creamery at Nanaimo has ceased operation after it has been operating ever since 1906.

There is, in an editorial in the Nanaimo Free Press, an analysis of the difficulties under which one of the dairy farmers in that immediate vicinity had to operate, and if the minister has no objection I should like to read it to him. I think it shows the great difficulties of the dairy farmer on Vancouver island:

> In no better way could the story of what has happened be told than through the medium of one dairyman's set of books, properly authenticated and vouched for. He has a place near East Wellington, is thoroughly experienced and a most careful and methodical operator. His figures cover statistics on five milking cows, two calves fed for seven weeks and two heifers fed and kept for a year's period. Total poundage produced include 200 pounds of milk for household, or home consumption was 46,300 pounds. Here is a segregation of his return, and also his operating expenses. He sold 41,100 pounds of milk at $1.80 per hundredweight. At seven weeks he sold his two calves for $55. He kept his two heifers and estimated their worth at $60 and he estimated the value of milk used in the household at $3.60. Thus his gross return for the year was $869.40.
> Now come his operating expenses. He had to buy 15 tons of hay at $15 a ton, a total of $225; 20 tons of roots, mangels, carrots, turnips at $9 per ton, $180; a half-ton of milk feeds per month at $30 a ton, $180; his depreciation on the herd of five cows per year was marked off at $60; and three per cent interest on his investment of $5,000 was $150 . . . therefore his operating expenses were $785.
> Deduct operating costs from cash returns and we find he was $84.40 ahead . . . providing of course he took nothing for the great amount of labour he had expended all year.

I suggest that it is not a very profitable or even a very exciting business for an older man, and for a younger man returning from the war it is not very attractive. The question I should like to ask is this. It may not be a sound question and if it is not I apologise. I believe there is some sort of subsidy paid on feed grains shipped from the prairie provinces to Vancouver island to assist dairy men in that part of the province.

Mr. GARDINER: We pay the freight.

Mr. PEARKES: Will that be removed?

Mr. GARDINER: We pay the freight from Calgary and Edmonton into British Columbia. It has no connection with this.

Item stands.

5. Science service administration, $32,487.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I think it would be more logical if we took item 1 last and hon. members discussed on the various items the points in which they are interested. I am pleased to see in the items appearing under "science service" an increase of over $900,000. That is a step in the right direction, providing as it does for an increase in technical staff and some increase in salaries, which also is a step in the right direction.

I wish to bring to the attention of the minister a problem which is of serious concern to the fruit growers of my constituency. I refer to the little cherry disease. This is a matter of concern to the people who grow, and who without doubt have grown for years, the best cherries in Canada, people who have cleared forests and in many cases make a large portion of their living by the production of this fruit. I am glad to know from the science service officials that they are now going to pay specific and effective attention to the problem in the near future. I wish to make a few suggestions to the minister in this respect. This disease is giving us great concern in British Columbia. The science service, in cooperation with the provincial departments of agriculture and other bodies, have effected remedies for diseases over the years, but in each case the officials concerned have been greatly assisted by close cooperation with the growers. I would suggest to the minister that in this case he must get success at the earliest possible date. I realize it is a problem to discover the root cause of this virus disease which is threatening the cherry industry, and which is causing a great deal of concern to the province of British Columbia. Planting of new orchards is not taking place because the young trees are affected in the first year of growth. There must be close cooperation between the science service and the growers concerned.

We have a large number of men growing cherries in the district, and they have been doing so for many years. They have a great deal of experience and are capable of close observation of the growth and growing conditions. I would suggest to the minister that there should be periodical publicity in the districts concerned and reports made concerning the progress made from month to month. To solve this problem we must have the growers and the officials of the department working together in all parts of the district.

I would also suggest that the officials of the department should take advantage of every opportunity they can to attend growers' meetings and explain in person to the growers what their plans, progress and problems are.

I have one other suggestion to make in this connection. This is a social problem in our district. The inspiration for rural education in rural schools should spring from the farm. There should be cooperation with the agricultural organizations of the district concerned, and there should be the cooperation of the high-school children, that is those who are of age to understand the investigation into this disease. In the past we have not related the daily education of the children directly enough to the problems that they will be expected to face if they are to remain on the farms. I throw out the suggestion to the officials of the department, that they try, in cooperation with the agricultural organizations in the district, to have the senior pupils of the rural schools throughout the district interested in and playing a part in the solution of this problem.

I should like to ask the minister this question. What arrangements are being made for cooperation with the provincial department of agriculture in connection with investigation of this problem?

Mr. GARDINER: In the Kootenay valley the little cherry virus disease is spreading rapidly, having reached twenty miles north, fifteen miles west and forty-five miles south of where it was first observed in 1939. In 1941 its virus nature was demonstrated and investigations have been conducted under the directions of this department to try and determine what the origin is. I understand that there are some limited areas in the United States where they have had outbreaks of little cherry, but that there is little known about the disease, as to how it gets into a district or what is the cause of it; whether it is an insect, whether it is something in the air, or what it may be, has not been determined. We have three men who are working continuously in the Kootenay valley. Most of the work having to do with virus of different kinds is carried on at Summerland, but there is some hesitation to take the cherries that are affected into that district. It is a fruit-growing district that is not troubled with this fruit virus up to the present; and until the cause is known, some method of treating it, it is not being taken outside the valley for any purposes whatsoever. But we have three men in there who are working continuously on it, and it is hoped that we shall discover the causes and then be able to find some way of dealing with it. Up to the present we have not been able to discover any successful method of dealing with it.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to make a few observations on a question which is closely associated with the production of food, namely, the conservation of food or the avoidance of waste. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar made some remarks on the same subject early in the evening, but I deferred mine because I desired to get through with item 26.

This matter was greatly emphasized in my mind just the other day by observing the shocking waste of food that one can see in a great many public places in this country at the present time. I was in a restaurant, not in this city, the other day, and I was so shocked by what I saw that I made up my mind I would try to bring it to the attention of this house. I am glad to be able to bring it to the attention of the minister, because in answer to a question of mine the other day he said that he was the head of a committee, which I understand is called the cabinet food committee, which has to do with the conservation of food. He also told us that some publicity was being given to it. I myself may have missed whatever publicity there was, but I cannot believe that it has been extremely effective.

I wish to make one or two observations. I believe that we are as humane a people as there are anywhere in the world. I believe that not a fraction of one per cent of the citizens of this country, if they had brought to their attention day by day the conditions that are existing in the world, would tolerate waste either in public or in private places.

I should like to read one or two short extracts, upon which I wish to say a word. The first extract is from the New Statesman and Nation of April 20. It is as follows:

> A high military authority in Germany said the other day: "We have either got to keep a decent standard of living here—or clear out. And clearing out is unthinkable."

That is the quotation from the military authorities. Then the writer goes on to say:

> If that is the situation (and we agree it is), the immediate need is at least to restore the food ration of Germans to 1,500 calories. The sacrifice ought not to be only British, but if no one else helps, it must be.

I now wish to read an extract from Life, which is not usually regarded as a sentimentalist paper. It contains a few facts which are not new but I think are desirable for us to have before us. This copy of Life is dated May 6, and the quotation reads as follows:

> An estimated 500 million persons in such countries as Italy and Greece, France and Germany, India, China and Japan were subsisting on 700 to 1,500 calories a day—not quite enough to die on but not enough to live on. Four million Chinese were already dead. The Poles were eating their seed grain—which is agricultural suicide. The Chinese were eating clay.

I have one point to make. I think this needs to be dramatized to the people of Canada. With regard to the answer the minister gave me the other day in which he said, as I recall it, that he had O.K.'d an advertisement which is to be produced, I suggest that the government is not giving us a sufficient lead. I hope I am not putting this in a controversial way, because my desire is to persuade, not to criticize.

I have one further observation to make, and I shall point it up by reading a short extract from the New York Times of May 8. This is an editorial entitled "Hunger will not wait," and I should like to read the last paragraph because it has something to do not merely with humanity but with common sense:

> Some world issues can be discussed at leisure. This one cannot. Hunger does not wait. This crisis is our opportunity to prove that we are not talking platitudes when we say we believe in world peace and world neighbourliness. These are our neighbours. They are hungry. A wave of good will and hope will sweep the world if now we share with them. It is time for leadership in this city and in the nation to turn from lesser things and show us how to do it.

I wish to make one final comment. A year ago to-day the Prime Minister, the hon. member for Peel and others were in San Francisco, and our hopes were high. Now I rub my eyes and ask myself if we are still living in the same world, when our hopes have shrivelled as they have. As I read this item in the New York Times, it suggests that at the present time we may create here and there sparks of good will which will kindle a generous flame which in turn may do something to melt, as it were, the freezing from which the whole world is suffering at the present time, and which seems to have destroyed the good will which existed a year ago.

So I suggest that whatever can be done by the government to give us a lead to that end will be worth while, and I believe the people of this country are the kind of people who will respond to such a lead.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I add just one word by way of information, strangely enough relating to the subject of milk, about which we have heard so much to-night. We have heard of conditions in continental Europe and elsewhere, and I should like to try to arouse some interest and perhaps do away with some of the complacency which sometimes exists with respect to the needs of these parts of the world. I am not dealing with Britain at the moment, because I intend to do so at a later time. In December of last year we were in Amiens, France, and were told by a high official of that city—and let the committee take note of this—that no adult civilian in the whole of that area, which has a huge population, had tasted a drink of milk for the past six years. With this observation I thought perhaps I might do something to arouse public interest and perhaps banish complacency in regard to what people in some parts of the world, allies of ours, are going through in this critical period of peace.

Item agreed to.

Science service—

6. Animal and poultry pathology, $177,560.

Mr. MOORE: I should like to say a few words in connection with the science of agriculture. I want to join with other hon. members who have congratulated the minister upon the increase of $900,000 in the amount to be expended for the development of science in agriculture.

Mr. FRASER: Not $900,000.

Mr. MOORE: The increase in $913,591. I believe the application of science to Canadian agriculture might possibly solve one of the greatest problems confronting us. Up to the outbreak of the first world war it is fair to say the chief reason for producing agricultural commodities was to supply food for human consumption. There was a very good reason why that object should have kept people busy producing a livelihood. At the turn of the century one family working on the farm could produce sufficient food to supply one family living in the city; but owing to the application of mechanical methods to farming we have now reached the point, according to the United States department of agriculture, where one farm family can supply agricultural commodities sufficient for five families in the city.

At the present time there is no problem in regard to finding markets for agricultural commodities, but I think it fair to say that at some time in the near future we shall again reach the point where we shall have to look abroad for markets for our agricultural production; and it would appear that the development of science or more properly the application of science to Canadian agriculture can do a great deal in solving that problem. That problem can be solved in this manner. Canadian agriculture can be made the basis for supplying raw materials to Canadian industry. Already that is being done to some extent in the United States. During the war years 275,000,000 bushels of United States wheat were converted into alcohol for industrial purposes. The same developments could be applied at the present time to Canadian agriculture. Only recently the national farm chemurgy council held a conference at St. Louis, Missouri. That conference expressed interest in the chemurgic plant of the Canadian government at Saskatoon. It was also interested in this federal government's scientific research on our experimental farms. That conference went on record as stating that it would be the duty of United States scientists in the future to apply American agriculture to the production of the needs of American industry. In other words, they are going to try to make American agriculture the source of raw materials for American industry.

I should like to give some figures in that connection. The United States department of agriculture have told us that during the war years they lost five million people from the middle western states. Those people have gone to the eastern manufacturing centres, and to all intents and purposes will be lost to American agriculture. The American people are concerned with what is to be done to find a market for agricultural goods in that country; and I venture to say that people in Canada should be concerned too, because we are more dependent upon foreign markets for agricultural commodities, under ordinary peace-time conditions, than are the United States. In the late 1930's eighty-five per cent of American agricultural production was consumed in the home market. In Canada we do not consume anything like that percentage of our agricultural production.

There are a number of things which could be done from a scientific point of view to pave the way for the creation in this country of a market for agricultural commodities. First let us take the production of nylon in the United States. I hear some hon. member say, "Oh, oh." I admit that we do not produce any nylon in Canada, but we supply the materials from which it is produced. Fifty per cent of the cellulose used in the production of United States nylon comes from Canada in the form of wood pulp, and our pulpwood is running very, very short. Practically all products of the farm can be used to produce certain kinds of cellulose, and it would be a good thing for our scientific research department to go forward and see if it would not be possible to produce from the various forms of agricultural commodities sufficient cellulose to take care of the United States demand for our wood pulp used for this purpose.

There is something else we can consider doing. For instance, take the supply of fuel for internal combustion engines. There can be no question at all that the supply of fuel will become a serious matter in the not distant future. The United States supply of oil was used to a very large extent during the war years, and the American petroleum institute have told us that at the present time there is available in the United States 17 billion barrels of gasoline. At the present rate of consumption that will be consumed within fifteen years time. What are we going to do to supply some means of operating our internal combustion engines?

The best possible development would be to use ethyl alcohol produced from Canadian grain. The United States have told us that if we use a 10 per cent mixture of gasoline with ethyl alcohol, taking 1935 as a base, it would require the total production of the 1935 wheat crop in the United States to produce the required amount of ethyl alcohol.

So if we care to put our scientists to work, and treat this problem as a national one, there is no reason why we cannot solve the problem confronting agriculture in Canada under peace-time conditions. It is well to speak of ordinary peace-time conditions, because the day will come in this country when we shall have to look elsewhere for more markets. The best place to look for agricultural markets in future will be to our own secondary industries, by supplying them with the raw materials they need to produce manufactured goods.

I should like to mention something else from the United States picture which could be done in Canada as well. During the year just ended the United States produced $100 million worth of goods out of agricultural products used for non-food purposes. That is the application of science to American agriculture. Plastics could be developed as well. Starches can be manufactured from agricultural goods. So also can anti-freeze and even edible syrups. The United States now have a plan to produce syrup from wheat, and in the production of that syrup they intend to use wheat which is not of the highest quality.

Mr. MacNICOL: You have one plant at Moose Jaw.

Mr. MOORE: I was not familiar with that.

Mr. MacNICOL: It is doing very fine work.

Mr. MARSHALL: Before we enter into a discussion of these votes, could the minister give us the actual amounts the department has spent of the appropriation voted last year. I note that for last year the appropriation on item 5 was $30,349. A comparison of one year's estimates with another is unfair. It would be better to compare the amount expended in one year with the amount we hope to expend in the year lying ahead. If the minister would give us that figure at the commencement of the discussion, we would have it before us. Perhaps he would give us the figures for item 5.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand the final figures as to actual expenditures for the year ended March 31 last are not yet available. As is known, the accounts are not closed until about thirty days later. We are not far enough away from the end of the financial year to have the exact figure. I have sent out for an interim report which will give those figures.

However, if one will take the total figure for the department, he will have some idea of the percentage which is spent, right through the department. The following is a comparative statement of appropriations and expenditures between the years 1934-35 and 1944-45:

	Appropriation	Expenditure
1944-45	$119,142,943 35	$104,647,117 00
1943-44	120,774,131 50	110,327,725 69
1942-43	65,199,979 50	58,438,895 98
1941-42	91,866,680 80	82,810,172 55
1940-41	23,165,369 81	21,502,998 27
1939-40	28,633,064 66	26,201,907 36
1938-39	23,640,912 09	22,367,180 58
1937-38	37,360,444 95	33,204,291 74
1936-37	15,566,319 48	13,397,140 49
1935-36	11,159,940 79	9,637,810 72
1934-35	7,920,451 50	7,106,534 99

It will be noted that 1941-42 to 1944-45 were years in which our expenditures were very high in connection with war activities. If we take the war activities, as well as the usual expenditures on agriculture, the proportions unexpended will seem very small.

There is one further comment I might make in connection with the table. It will be noted that the figure for 1938-39 shows an appropriation of $23,640,912.09. The figure given the other night was only $9 million.

I have put this table on record because it gives the figures right through the years in respect of the matter we discussed the other night. All the proportions are well indicated in the table.

I now have before me the interim report to which I referred. The science service allotment for twelve months last year was $1,901,000. The total expenditure for eleven months —I have not the figure for the last month— was $1,687,492. It will be noted that the expenditure will be practically all used up by the time the accounts which come in in the last month are paid up.

Mr. MARSHALL: It might be more than that amount, then.

Mr. GARDINER: It cannot be more, because we are not allowed to spend money unless it has been voted. It might be less, but it cannot be more.

7. Bacteriology and dairy research, $64,775.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: Some years ago when prices of live stock sank to such low levels our farmers found that when an animal was injured or became ill it was more economical to allow it to die than to pay the cost of bringing in a veterinary surgeon. The result of this situation has been that we now find that few students in the universities are sufficiently interested in the live stock end of their studies to take up the study of veterinary science. The result is we are very short of veterinary surgeons. Dentists and medical doctors, even in the west, are quite thick on the ground when compared with veterinaries. Has the minister considered assisting students who are taking up animal pathology? There are many students attending universities who could be encouraged to take up this study by means of scholarships, or a guarantee of work after they have graduated.

Mr. GARDINER: May I suggest to the hon. member that this matter could be discussed to better advantage under item 18, health of animals. At the moment I can only say that there has been an adjustment, upward of course, in the salaries of those engaged in veterinary work in the department. We feel that some encouragement will have to be given to men to go into this profession. There are too few of them and our farmers have to go great distances in order to get their services.

Science service—
8. Botany and plant pathology, $534,121.

Mr. HATFIELD: Could the minister give the reason for the increase of $85,000 in this item?

Mr. GARDINER: The increases are as follows:

Salaries, permanent	$27,090
Salaries, temporary	29,007
Wages	10,933
Plants and buildings	7,700
Equipment	13,500
Express and freight	185
Printing and stationery	2,000
Rents	80
Telegraph, telephone and postage	160
Travel	23

That gives a total of $90,678, but there are decreases in other sections amounting to $5,184, which leaves a difference of approximately $85,000.

Mr. KNIGHT: I should like to inquire about the salaries of plant pathologists, but first let me say that I appreciate that some increases have been given. What proportion of these increases is made up of statutory raises, and what proportion is actually an increase in the basic rate? I do not think I need to point out the value of plant pathology in the economy of this country. When the hon. member for Kootenay West was speaking I was thinking of the tremendous service rendered by the agricultural scientists in British Columbia by their discovery in regard to the cherry disease. Then our agricultural scientists have produced various kinds of wheat which have had a tremendous economic value. These men have been tremendously underpaid in the past, and I think the salaries paid should be sufficient to encourage men in the agricultural colleges at Saskatoon and other places to go into plant pathology. These salaries should be sufficient to counteract the drift of such scientists to the United States.

Mr. GARDINER: There have been fifty men reclassified at an immediate cost of $12,840 and an ultimate cost of $29,340.

Mr. BENTLEY: Does that apply to the experimental farms as well?

Mr. GARDINER: This is just the botany division.

Mr. BENTLEY: Could the minister give us a sort of running report of the development in connection with Rescue wheat?

Mr. GARDINER: That would come under the item dealing with experimental farms.

Mr. SENN: I understand that some experiments have been conducted in the use of milkweed in connection with synthetic rubber.

Mr. GARDINER: That again would come under experimental farms and research council, item 37.

Mr. SENN: It is mentioned in the report of the minister under botany and plant pathology.

Mr. GARDINER: This branch did collect some floss and ship it to the United States.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Under what item would we discuss Bang's disease?

Mr. GARDINER: We passed the item in connection with research, but it might be discussed under item 18, health of animals.

9. Agricultural chemistry, $171,910.

Mr. HATFIELD: There is an item covering a mill operator. What kind of mill is that?

Mr. GARDINER: It is a small mill in the chemical division which grinds feed for analysis.

Item agreed to.

Science service—
10. Entomology — agricultural entomology, $680,375.

Mr. FRASER: What is to be done this year in regard to the budworm?

Mr. GARDINER: That would really come under item 11.

Mr. FRASER: What about the peach worm? Have they discovered how to get rid of it?

Mr. GARDINER: We are working on the oriental peach worm at Vineland in the Niagara peninsula to find means of eradicating the worm, largely through the use of sprays.

Mr. FRASER: Are you going to do anything to stop the sale of peaches with these worms in them? Last year carloads of them were sold to the people of Canada and they were a total loss.

Mr. GARDINER: The best grade of peaches with worms in them are not supposed to be sold, but they are very difficult to detect, and sometimes peaches that are infested with them get out. Work is being done on this problem, but the worm is the most difficult to detect.

Mr. FRASER: Peaches sold as No. 1 grade are the ones in which they found the worms. There seem to be more worms in the larger peaches than in the smaller ones.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): There is an increase of over $203,000 in this item. Would the minister explain that? I also understand that there is a shortage of trained personnel in the different branches of entomology. What are the prospects of supplying this shortage through students from the universities and agricultural colleges?

Mr. GARDINER: The increases are as follows: permanent, $16,890; temporary, $94,295; total salary increases, $111,185; wages increase, $22,751; cost of living bonus, $8,850; buildings and land, $5,260; equipment, $30,136 —that is mostly for cars and scientific equipment; express, freight and cartage, $1,078; printing and stationery, $6,500, rents, $4,145; supplies, $2,095; telephone, telegraph and postage, $922; travelling, $12,951; making a total of $203,235.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I understand that in some parts of Canada there is a shortage of trained personnel for laboratory and research work in the different branches of entomology. Are young men who are now coming out of universities and agricultural colleges being taken on to overcome this shortage?

Mr. GARDINER: We have taken on about sixty men, a large proportion of them returned men formerly employed and returned men who are now students.

Mr. SENN: Temporary assistants?

Mr. GARDINER: The students will be temporary while training. A number are being trained for this work.

Mr. HENDERSON: Up in Lambton county, on the shores of lake Erie, we grow corn for our silos, for husking and feeding purposes. A few years ago we had a rigid corn-borer inspection. A new inspector was appointed and he started out as new brooms always do, the result being that five or six years ago we had a rigid inspection. But when the war came on we slipped a little, and for the last year or two we have not had a corn-borer inspection. The result is that the corn-borer is increasing quite rapidly. What is being done to restore the corn-borer inspection and to control this pest, if possible?

Mr. GARDINER: There has been some difficulty in getting staff in connection with the work that is being done to control the corn-borer. I think it would be interesting if I read this statement on the European corn-borer:

> The European corn-borer continues to be a serious pest of corn in Ontario and southern Quebec. During the season of 1945 this insect also made one of its periodic invasions into New Brunswick, causing serious losses to corn, particularly in Carleton county. The development of a two-generation strain of the corn-borer in southwestern Ontario is threatening not only to complicate the control measures but increase the seriousness of the pest.
> The normal single generation life-history of the insect is well known. The adult moths emerge from corn and other host plant refuse, begin flying and laying eggs in July. The larvae hatching from these eggs bore into the stalks and cobs of corn, feeding there until mature. They spend the winter in the host plant and weed refuse, pupate in the spring and emerge as adults early in July. The two-generation strain is not so well known. The first generation adults emerge in June and infest young corn plants, the larvae mature and pupate the same season. The second generation adults emerge late in the summer and infest the ripening corn.

In other words, a new variety of pest has appeared recently and is causing some difficulty in handling the situation. I am sorry I have no information as to why the inspector has not been on the job in Lambton county, other than that we have had difficulty in maintaining a competent staff.

Mr. FRASER: In Kansas and other states where they were bothered with the corn-borer they maintained a patrol of the highways and stopped and searched all cars to make sure that they were not carrying corn from the infested areas into free areas, and I understand that this helped greatly in eliminating the corn-borer. Something along that line will have to be done here.

11. Forest entomology, $721,916.

Mr. MARSHALL: What is the distinction made between temporary assistants and wage earners?

Mr. GARDINER: The temporary assistants are persons taken on through the civil service commission to fill certain positions which have not yet been made permanent. The wage-earners are taken on by the day.

Mr. CHARLTON: There is an increase in the expenditure for buildings and land. Are new forestry stations being established, and is this increase for buildings and equipment?

Mr. GARDINER: The increase arises from the necessity to build a laboratory at a cost of $150,000 at Sault Ste. Marie near the headquarters of the research centre for the study of forest insects in which to study the importance of insect diseases in the control of forest insects, with a view to the importation of foreign diseases or the exploitation of local diseases in the control of forest insect pests in general, in Canada, and also at the moment, in the possible control of the spruce budworm. It is absolutely impossible to use the forest insect laboratory at Sault Ste. Marie for these studies because the whole building might become infected with forest insect disease germs and the entire basic studies ruined and the building even abandoned for biological work.

Mr. CHARLTON: There is another item under miscellaneous, $10,000, in which there is an increase. Will the minister explain that?

Mr. GARDINER: This increase arises from the necessity to provide for unforeseen expenditures in an expanding service in scientific investigational work in nine forest insect laboraties throughout Canada where, at any time, the whole investigation may take an unexpected turn requiring unanticipated outlays of material consequence. Unfortunately, estimating for a research programme is vastly different from estimating for a factory production programme, and funds to meet emergencies are crucial, upon occasion, to exploiting the advantage of the moment, evanescent as they are so often in scientific research work. The point here is that every season is somewhat different and biologically important incidents may occur in one season which may not be encountered again for years; hence the importance of having available an item to make possible taking advantage of the favourable opportunity. This explains the remark I made a few moments ago in answer to an hon. member. The fact is that we must have money voted if we are to be able to spend it. Disease may break out somewhere and there must be a fund on which to draw for emergency work.

Mr. CARDIFF: There is an increase in salaries. Is that due to an increase in staff, or are salaries being raised?

[Mr. Marshall.]

Mr. GARDINER: This is entirely an increase in staff.

Mr. WRIGHT: What has been the experience in spraying from aeroplanes for the spruce budworm? Is the dominion carrying on this work, or the provinces?

Mr. GARDINER: It is carried on by the province, but we have information on it.

Mr. STEPHENSON: With regard to travelling expenses, are these mostly car expenses, and what is the mileage paid? How is that worked?

Mr. GARDINER: It is railroad and car expenses, but the greater part is car, and the rate is nine cents a mile.

In answer to a question that was asked with regard to control of forest insects by spraying from aircraft, I may say this. The application of concentrated sprays containing DDT from aircraft was first attempted in Canada in 1944. In that year, in cooperation with the Ontario department of lands and forests, several acres of balsam and spruce forest in Algonquin park, Ontario, were sprayed, plane owned and operated by the United States department of agriculture being employed. The results were sufficiently satisfactory to justify further experiments in 1945. Three separate spraying projects were conducted, all directed against the spruce budworm. At Algonquin park, ten experimental plots of ten acres each were sprayed in early May to determine the relative effectivness of various dosages of DDT. In the Kakabonga region, Gatineau valley, Quebec, several experimental plots were sprayed between May 16 and June 14; the results from each series of sprays, employing varying dosages of DDT and solvent, were carefully checked by means of population studies taken in the sprayed plots and in adjacent unsprayed areas. The studies suggest that the most effective time to apply the spray is during the period in which the larvae are feeding on the foliage of the new growth. In the case of large-scale operations, however, when time is an important factor, spraying may be conducted in the needle-mining and bud-feeding stages but with increased dosages.

Mr. STEPHENSON: I asked the minister a question a moment ago with regard to travelling expenses and he stated that a rate of nine cents a mile was paid. Do these men own their own cars?

Mr. GARDINER: Most of the cars that are driven by our employees are government-owned, and only when a man drives his own car is the 9-cent rate paid, the actual expense of operating the car.

Mr. BURTON: With reference to spraying for spruce budworms, has the department considered testing the use of chemicals?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. I do not know whether the hon. member for Humboldt at any time last year drove by the Indian Head farm, but if he did he would have seen, north of that farm, a field in which that test was carried out. I saw it on a number of occasions and was greatly surprised at the effectiveness of the use of chemicals. It can be successfully done.

Mr. BURTON: Are you continuing with that experimentation?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

FOOD AND AGRICULTURE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CANADIAN DELEGATES TO WASHINGTON CONFERENCE

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Acting Prime Minister): I wish to announce that a Canadian delegation will be attending a special food and agriculture organization conference scheduled to open in Washington, May 20, in order to discuss urgent world food problems. Invitations have been extended by the director-general of the food and agriculture organization to fourteen nations, members of the food and agriculture organization, of which Canada is one.

The Hon. J. G. Gardiner, Minister of Agriculture, will lead the Canadian delegation, the other members of which are as follows: The Hon. H. F. G. Bridges, Minister of Fisheries; Mr. L. B. Pearson, Canadian Ambassador to the United States; Mr. G. Paterson, Canadian executive officer on the combined food board; Doctor G. S. H. Barton, Deputy Minister of Agriculture; Doctor D. B. Finn, Deputy Minister of Fisheries; Doctor J. G. Bouchard, Assistant Deputy Minister of Agriculture; Doctor J. F. Booth, of the Department of Agriculture; Mr. I. S. McArthur, of the Department of Fisheries; Doctor L. B. Pett, of the Department of National Health and Welfaire; Doctor F. C. Wilson, of the Department of Trade and Commerce; Mr. J. B. Rutherford of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics; Mr. M. G. Glassco, of the Privy Council office.

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

REPEAL OF PROVISIONS NOW SUPERSEDED BY CONSOLIDATED REVENUE AND AUDIT ACT

Hon. PAUL MARTIN (Secretary of State) moved for leave to introduce bill No. 125, to amend the House of Commons Act.

He said: The purpose of the bill is to remove from the existing statutes certain sections which are obsolete and which are now superseded by subsequent revisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

ENLARGEMENT OF PURPOSES FOR WHICH CREDITS MAY BE USED

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved for leave to introduce bill No. 126, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. MacKINNON: This bill is being presented in order to amplify and clarify the clauses of the act, under part I, of which the Export Credits Insurance Corporation was set up. The necessary changes to part I are being requested as a result of the experience which the corporation has gained during the first six months of its active operation.

The amendments being made to part II of the act, which is under the administration of my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley), are mainly to enlarge the purposes for which the credits granted to foreign governments or agencies may be used. The amendments will permit a credit to be (a) made available to private importers in the borrowing countries; (b) used to purchase Canadian services; and (c) used to purchase goods from crown companies.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ATOMIC ENERGY

PUBLIC CONTROL AND SUPERVISION OF DEVELOPMENT, APPLICATION AND USE

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to bring in a measure to make provision for public control and supervision of the development, application and use of atomic energy, and in connection therewith to provide for the incorporation of the atomic energy control board; the creation of corporations to carry out certain powers of the board which may be more conveniently performed by separate corporations; to provide for the appointment of members of the board and its officers and employees, their tenure of office, remuneration and expenses; to provide for the organization, administration and financing of the corporations; also to provide for the superannuation, pension and other rights of the employees of the board and of the corporations; and also that the board may, with the approval of the governor in council acquire or cause to be acquired by purchase, lease, requisition or expropriation, prescribed substances and any mines, deposits or claims of prescribed substances and any works or property for production or preparation for production of, or for research or investigation with respect to atomic energy.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

RESEARCH COUNCIL

APPOINTMENT OF VICE-PRESIDENTS AND EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, ETC.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Research Council Act to provide for the continuance of the Committee of the Privy Council on Industrial and Scientific Research; for the appointment of two vice-presidents to the Research Council, their tenure of office and salaries; for the appointment of an executive committee of the council; for the creation of corporations to carry out certain powers of the council which may be more conveniently performed by a separate corporation, and also to provide for the organization, administration and financing of such corporations; and to provide further for the superannuation, pension and other rights of the employees of the said corporations.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. MacKinnon.]

UNITED NATIONS

DENIAL OF ACCESS TO RECORDS OF PRIVATE MEETINGS OF SECURITY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I wish to direct a question to the acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, notice of which I sent him this morning. Will the government on behalf of Canada, a member of the united nations, protest the decision of the security council to deny, at its pleasure, access to the record of any private meeting of the security council?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): I take it that the hon. member's question refers to a report which has appeared in the press to this general effect. We have not yet received the official record of the security council meeting at which this question seems to have been discussed, and pending receipt of the official documents it would seem to be premature to make any public comment. I may add that we are following very closely the proceedings of the committee of experts which is drawing up rules of procedure for the council.

Mr. COLDWELL: When the record is received, with the rules of procedure, will the government make a statement?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The government will give the report of the security council meeting and the recommendations of the committee of experts very careful consideration, and if they appear to require some action on the part of the government there will be an appropriate declaration in the house before that action is taken.

FISH AND FISHERIES

CLOSING OF CERTAIN TRIBUTARIES OF SAINT JOHN RIVER TO GILL-NET FISHING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. BROOKS (Royal): I should like to direct a question to whoever is acting Minister of Fisheries in the absence of that minister. The question is based on a report that the department has closed certain tributaries of the Saint John river to net fishing. This is the season of the year when people along the river fish for different kinds of fish, and I would ask the minister this question: Has the Department of Fisheries closed the Jemseg river and Raft channel to the Grand lake to all kinds of net fishing? If so, why has this been done? Will the department consider cancelling this order at once?

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (for the Minister of Fisheries): In the absence of the Minister of Fisheries I received notice of the question which the hon. gentleman has asked. The answer to the first question is in the affirmative. As regards the second part of the question the answer is: As the Jemseg river is quite narrow, gill-nets, ostensibly set for the taking of shad, have been taking striped bass. At the request of the provincial authorities and of the New Brunswick fish and game protective association, as well as on the recommendation of the officers of the department, the use of gill-nets was prohibited in the Jemseg river, in order to facilitate the ascent of fish in the river, thereby providing better angling from which the province and the people along the river will derive greater benefit from tourists and anglers.

As to the third question—will the department consider cancelling the order at once—the answer is: no; not before further investigation.

MOTOR VEHICLES

WAR ASSETS—PRIORITIES IN PURCHASE OF TRUCKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILLIAM BRYCE (Selkirk): May I direct a question to the Minister of Reconstruction or his parliamentary assistant? I have already given them notice of the question. What is the reason the town of Gimli cannot buy a three-ton truck after having complied with all government regulations and obtained the necessary priority?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction): The difficulty is that the controller of motor vehicles, in issuing priority orders, depended on estimates of production which were too optimistic. The situation to-day is that more priority orders are out than can be filled. Action was taken some ten days ago to see that no more priority orders were issued until outstanding orders were filled, but the difficulty to which my hon. friend refers can be solved only as new trucks come from the production line.

Mr. BRYCE: I refer to war assets.

Mr. HOWE: I have no information with regard to second-hand trucks, but I shall be glad to look into the question and see whether any trucks are available in Manitoba. If so, I shall do my best to see what can be done for Gimli through War Assets Corporation.

Mr. HACKETT: The province of Quebec also could use a few if the minister has them.

Mr. COLDWELL: And so can the province of Saskatchewan.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Science service—

12. Plant protection, $431,540.

Mr. WRIGHT: Has the department done any investigational work recently respecting root rot in wheat?

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Investigations are being carried on continuously, but I have not heard of any new development.

Mr. McIVOR: Those of us who were born on the farm and received our early education there have never lost our interest in the experimental aspect of farm work. We have found that some of the greatest wonders of the world are on the farm. Last fall I witnessed gardeners planting brown bulbs in black earth. The bulbs have been frozen and thawed, and frozen and thawed again. It would do any expert in agriculture good to observe the floral beauty displayed to-day in front of these parliament buildings. It is magnificent. If hon. members taking part in the debate would see those flowers, which are more gorgeously clothed than Solomon in all his glory, they would be a little more appreciative of the work done, not only by the gardeners around this building, but by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. SENN: Now that the war is over I understand there is likely to be a much greater importation of bulbs and plants of all kinds into Canada. What measures are being taken to see that they are free from disease? I understand that in certain sections of Canada the production of bulbs and plants has become an important industry. I am told that in British Columbia the industry has been developed to a considerable extent. Are the products from that province being inspected so that there will be no danger of any plant diseases being spread to other provinces?

Mr. GARDINER: All regulations which applied prior to the war, and any which were added during the war, are being enforced. We are increasing inspection staffs to see that regulations in connection with the importation of bulbs and other plants into Canada are enforced. During the war the production not only of bulbs but of different kinds of seeds and plant life was developed to a considerable extent in British Columbia. Up to the present time new importations coming into Canada since the war have not affected that industry, but attention is being given to the fact that the industry has been developed, and that care should be taken to maintain it.

Mr. SENN: Do I understand that before importations are made they must have a certificate of health? Or are they not inspected until they enter the country, with the result that they may have to be returned or destroyed?

Mr. GARDINER: It is not always possible to obtain certificates of health. On entering the country they are inspected carefully. Hon. members might be interested if I were to place on record the following regulations with regard to the importation of nursery stock:

Nursery stock includes all plants, or parts thereof, for ornamental purposes, propagation, or cropping.

1. (a) A permit must be procured by the importer from the secretary, destructive insect and pest act advisory board.

(b) The importer is required to advise the exporter of the permit number. This number must be marked upon the containers and shipping papers. (In the case of importations by parcel post, a special label is issued.)

(c) The permit must be presented to the customs by the importer when clearing the shipment. The invoice must conform with the permit as to kinds and quantity of plants.

2. (a) Shipments must be accompanied by a certificate of inspection listing the kind and quantity of plants contained in the shipment and certifying them as apparently free from insect pests or plant diseases.

(b) Importations are subject to re-inspection on arrival in Canada.

3. (a) Importations may only enter through one of the following ports: Halifax, N.S.; Saint John, N.B.; Montreal, P.Q.; (Quebec, P.Q., sub-port); Ottawa, Ont.; Toronto, Ont. (parcel post only); Niagara Falls, Ont.; Windsor, Ont.; London, Ont.; Winnipeg, Man.; Estevan, Sask.; Vancouver, B.C. (Victoria, B.C. sub-port).

(b) On arrival at a port, a shipment is either inspected immediately or permitted to proceed to destination for inspection on the premises of the importer. It may not be moved from the port unless either a "Certificate of inspection" or a "certificate of clearance" has been issued to the customs.

Mr. SENN: Some of the countries from which these importations come were overrun by the enemy, and perhaps the same care has not been taken to see that the plants are in healthy condition, or that plants which are infected are culled out. I do not think the minister answered my question whether bulbs and nursery stock from British Columbia require a certificate of health before shipment from that province.

Mr. GARDINER: The answer to the last question is yes; they must be inspected out there before shipment.

Mr. HATFIELD: I understand that small parcels of potatoes are coming here from countries against which there is an embargo. They are being brought in by people returning from Europe. What is being done to stop this procedure?

Mr. GARDINER: Anything of that nature brought in by immigrants is subject to inspection. All motorcars crossing the boundary line are treated in the same way. Seeds of any kind which are brought in, whether of potatoes or of anything else, are inspected. Aeroplanes, too, are subject to inspection. Of course I presume some people make an effort to avoid the inspection, but every effort is made to see that they do not.

Mr. PROBE: I notice an increase of about 400 per cent in the equipment required by the division this year, and an increase in travelling expenses of about 60 per cent. In looking over the public accounts for last year covering this particular division I notice that a number of new cars and used motorcycles were purchased, after deducting an allowance of $300 for one used car. The public accounts show that last year two used cars were turned back at $565. Perhaps the minister could explain these two items, and at the same time indicate what travelling allowances are permitted to members of this and other divisions. I do not think the minister was quite right when he said last night that the car mileage allowance for employees who used their own cars was at the rate of nine cents per mile. I looked up the order in council which was passed last year just before the election, and I found that except for British Columbia the amount allowed for car mileage is nine cents per mile for 4,000 miles. I assume that is what the minister meant last night. After 4,000 miles has been travelled by a car, the rate is eight cents per mile. It seems to me that that is an adequate mileage allowance. Could the minister indicate what equipment is being purchased, particularly cars, and the nature of the discounts allowed? I think we are not getting a sufficient allowance on our used cars, unless they are actually in very bad shape.

Mr. GARDINER: The provision for paying for the operation of a car is on the basis of nine cents per mile. The rate was seven cents until the beginning of the war and for some time into the war, but it was found impossible to get men to drive their own cars because of the difficulty of getting cars and the extra cost of maintenance; therefore the basic rate was raised to nine cents per mile for the first 4,000 miles, and when a car covered a greater mileage than that, the rate was lowered.

With regard to looking up the records having to do with car purchases and finding why more was allowed on one car than on another, I may say that our cars are all rather old and badly worn at the moment, because we could not buy any new ones after 1942; at least it was not easy to buy them. Incidentally I might mention that this was one of the most difficult votes to get past the treasury board. The amount to be paid is established in this manner: We call for tenders, usually from three different dealers.

Mr. PROBE: Do you call in the dealers?

Mr. GARDINER: Suppose it is in Yorkton; they would ask two dealers in Yorkton and one dealer outside of that community to bid, and the best bid would be accepted. A dealer may say, "I will allow you $300 for your old car and charge you so much in addition for the new car." Another dealer may look the car over and say that he will allow a little more. Three bids are required under normal circumstances. During the war period it was not always possible to carry on in that way, and it is not yet, because often a dealer has no cars, or if he has cars, they are covered by permits already in his hands. The practice has not been established definitely for the whole area of transactions, but that is the practice followed to establish the value of the car.

Mr. PROBE: How much equipment is being purchased under this $28,000?

Mr. GARDINER: There are about twelve cars, and then equipment of other type which will be used in the plants associated with this work.

Mr. PROBE: The department bought four new cars last year and twelve new ones during the current year.

Mr. GARDINER: We have not got them yet, although we have the money to buy them.

Mr. SENN: The hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) is not here, but he spoke to me about a matter which I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. It concerns a disease which is affecting the sugar beets in that hon. member's constituency. Speaking on this matter last year he explained that certain of the streams running into lake Huron were filling up at their mouths, causing a flooding of certain areas used for the production of sugar beets. The suggestion was made that something should be done by cooperation between the dominion and provincial governments and the municipalities. Has the minister any report to make on this matter?

Mr. GARDINER: The sugar beet nematode has been present in the sugar beet area of south western Ontario for several years, but the infestation is still confined to a restricted area centering on Blackwell in Lambton county. The crop losses, however, have increased within this area. In 1945 cabbages and cauliflower grown in infested fields were severely damaged by this nematode.

Experiments in soil fumigation to control the sugar beet nematode were repeated in 1945. The results of these experiments indicated that some of the commercial fumigants greatly reduced but did not eliminate the nematodes. However, the results indicated a sufficient control to treble the yield. No satisfactory method of control is known at present and as a result every possible field sanitary precaution is taken to prevent the spread of the nematode. It is also advised that farmers use a rotation which keeps sugar beets or other host plants out of known infested fields for at least five years. Experiments with soil fumigants will be repeated in 1946, using better methods of applying the fumigants over larger acreages.

I understand that a drastic method is adopted to deal with this disease—sugar beets are not marketable off a field affected by nematode. The cooperation with the province is continuing.

Mr. SENN: Is there any suggestion that the provinces and the municipalities are going to share with the dominion the cost of opening up the mouths of these streams so that they will not flood and carry the fungus into the beet fields?

Mr. GARDINER: I remember there was some discussion about that last year but I am told that there has been no arrangement made to that end. I assume that means they are not convinced that that is the difficulty. I would imagine if they were convinced that that was the real cause of the spread of this disease, some action of the kind would be taken.

Mr. SENN: I understand that the municipalities are willing to go ahead and that the provincial government would do their share if they could get the consent and cooperation of the federal department.

Mr. GARDINER: I will look into that. I would imagine that if our people through their experimental work are convinced that that is a solution or at all events a help the matter would be considered; but possibly in carrying on their investigations they do not agree with those who contend that this would be a cure or assist in the cure.

Mr. QUELCH: What has been the experience of the department in using sprays to kill weeds in standing crops? What effect have the sprays had in killing the weeds, and what effect have they had on the standing crops? We have all seen display advertisements that these sprays can be used to kill weeds in standing crops without effects detrimental to the crop.

Mr. GARDINER: I can give more information on that when we reach the item for experimental farms and Doctor Archibald is here.

Mr. CHARLTON: Reference has been made to cars. In view of the scarcity of cars has the department bought any used cars from War Assets Corporation?

Mr. GARDINER: We have bought very few. As a matter of fact we prefer to buy new cars, for obvious reasons.

Mr. MARSHALL: On page 85 of the details there is an item, insignificant in amount, $1,500, for rent and taxes, but a principle is involved which prompts me to ask, what taxes does the dominion government pay?

Mr. GARDINER: We pay taxes on only one plant, and that is a fumigation plant in the city of Vancouver which belongs to the railway. The court has ruled that we must pay taxes on it. I cannot go into the details, but the court ruled that we had to pay the taxes, and the estimates provide for that.

Item agreed to.

Experimental farms service—

13. Experimental farms service administration, $70,755.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am glad to see an increase in the vote for the experimental farms service. The vote was cut during the war, and while there might be some justification for reducing it in war time, I think now is the time to increase it. What I am going to say bears generally on the experimental farms service.

If we look over the salary schedules as shown in the details we are struck by the fact that the salaries still remain at a very modest level. Under "Administration" I notice that there are only four salaries over $3,000 a year, and if you look through the entire list of positions in services which I regard as very important, such as prairie reclamation, you will find that the same thing holds good. While we must do all we can to prevent any extravagances in the government service, I feel that generally speaking the salary schedules of our civil service are too low to attract into the service the people we should attract. I am not derogating in the slightest from the qualifications of those already in the service, because I know from personal experience that some of them have remained in the service in spite of attractive offers to better themselves in private employ.

In the period we are entering a scientific approach to all our problems, including those of agriculture, is essential, and we should do everything we can to encourage young men to come into and remain in the public service and devote their lives to improving, for instance, our agricultural products. When we look back over the years we begin to realize how great a contribution has been made by science to agriculture. Think of the contribution that one scientist made to western Canada, Doctor Saunders. In some material the other day I discovered that while he was actually working on marquis wheat he was getting a salary of $100 a month. We have improved a little on that; nevertheless we should encourage the minister to do all he can to make these services—experimental farms, prairie reclamation, branch farms and so forth—sufficiently attractive to induce the best qualified people to enter the service.

The schedules reveal that the salaries are still comparatively low. Seven or eight years ago they may have appeared to be moderately attractive, but many hon. members know the high salaries that are being offered to-day by private industry to attract well-qualified young scientists.

The minister has said on one or two occasions that after all, these men are serving agriculture, that the returns to the man actually working on the land have never been very high, and that the salaries paid to those in the agriculture service must not be very far out of line with the returns the farmer is getting. While there is some merit in that, I do not think it is really a sound argument. I would say rather that we must so stabilize the prices of agricultural products as to give the farmer reasonable returns upon which much higher salary schedules for agricultural scientists can be based.

I should like to say a word now, if I may, on item 16, as I may be called out of the chamber in a few minutes. This item, like many others, contains the phrase "notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act." I do not know just what that means, but again may I say to the minister that he or somebody else has been keeping many of our younger scientists on the temporary staff when in my opinion they should have been made permanent. I do not know just how far that practice has gone. I have not been in close touch with Saskatoon lately, but I do know that a group of young men who were engaged there a year or two ago on the scientific soil surveys were still on the temporary staff at exceedingly low salaries, although it is admitted that they have done magnificent work for our provinces. The very fact that the new assessment has been largely based on the soil surveys and has proven so satisfactory to the people of the province is a tribute to the value of the work that these young men have done. I am very anxious indeed to see that the civil service is a real civil service, and I should like to see temporary positions occupied by qualified men on a temporary basis made permanent and brought under the Civil Service Act, with appointments, so far as possible, made in the usual way by the civil serivce commission.

But I rose to suggest that we should endeavour to support the minister in any attempt he may make to attract to our public service, particularly our agricultural service, the very best qualified young agricultural scientists who are coming out of the faculties of agriculture in our Canadian universities.

Mr. GARDINER: If I might clear up one point just made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, I have never compared the salaries paid to scientists with the wages or returns in the farming communities.

Mr. COLDWELL: I did not quite mean that.

Mr. GARDINER: No, but I just wanted that made clear. Every time we discuss the experimental farms service the question of labour on the farms comes up. Take for example the one that we both know best—Indian Head. There are people who live in Indian Head and labour on the farm whenever they can get work, some of them all year round, some of them a number of months out of the year.

Mr. COLDWELL: I intended to mention that.

Mr. GARDINER: These men are paid on a basis which has some relationship to farm labour in the surrounding community, because they really do farm work in the fields which is the same as is done by others who are working around, I think the pay is usually higher than that for other farm labour, but not sufficiently high to make everyone want to work there.

Mr. COLDWELL: What is the hourly rate there now? It used to be 25 cents.

Mr. GARDINER: It was around 35 cents, but I understand it has been put up 13 cents, which increases it to around 48 cents.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is better.

Mr. GARDINER: I think that will tend to draw labour to the farm. At the present time, I imagine, wages just about as high are being paid on farms round about for certain types of work.

On the other question, relating to scientists, a number of considerations enter into the matter of the pay. One, of course, is the ability of the individual, which in a service such as the civil service cannot be given the same consideration as an industrialist would give to it. We are governed by the rulings of the civil service commission, which must be more or less standardized. Industry is not affected by that kind of thing. I have not looked into the subject sufficiently to know whether the United States system of hiring persons is governed as closely by civil service regulations as ours is, but they do not seem to have more leeway in bidding for the services of highly qualified scientists.

This year, as I have said, on one or two occasions we have insisted that, under regulations last year which came into effect on April 1st of last year, these payments should be reviewed throughout the departments. As I said the other night, we are getting along with the job more rapidly than most departments, but we are not satisfied that all the increases which ought to be made have yet been made. We agree that we should pay these men just as much as we can pay them in relation to the costs which are being put against the people generally in order to meet their obligations. Having said that, I think I should add that there are many people who would rather work for the government than for anybody else.

An hon. MEMBER: No, no.

Mr. GARDINER: Somebody says, "no, no". I do not happen to be one of these myself.

Mr. COLDWELL: You have been doing it a long time.

Mr. GARDINER: But I find that every time we ask that a position be filled a great many people want the opportunity to fill it. I can understand that. They come under the civil service; they are guaranteed employment, provided they apply themselves to their work, until they are sixty-five, and then they have superannuation. In industry one is very fortunate, in certain lines, if one can stay beyond forty or forty-five. Superannuation allowances or similar compensation may be provided, but after all, people like to work as well as to get money for working. A scientist does. He likes to work, and he would like to be sure that he will work until sixty-five.

He does not want to stop at forty-five and hang around the rest of his life. I can understand that type of individual wanting to work for the government and being prepared to work, having these guarantees, for a little lower return. Whether we should ask them to accept these salaries or not, there are so many of them ready to do this work and trying to do it that there is more difficulty than one might imagine in raising the salary level when dealing with public funds.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Regarding this matter of agricultural scientists, when the minister's estimates were up last year I put on the record a chart showing what scientists in similar employments in industry and other services received in Canada, the United States and Great Britain. I am sorry to say that what our men received was considerably less than the pay for analogous positions in the United States and Great Britain. It may have some relation to what has also been stated here, namely that agricultural producers in Canada receive considerably less than the producers in either the United States or Great Britain. However, as I said then, and has been said by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, our farmers can scarcely estimate in dollars and cents what some scientists have done for them in the production of rust-resistant wheats and other things of the kind; and I just want to put in a plug for the minister in getting better remuneration for these agricultural scientists whenever the opportunity presents itself, because occasionally, I am sorry to say, we lose good scientists to these other countries. While they like the work, they are human enough to want to be paid for it, and sometimes they cannot resist the offers of high remuneration which come from other countries. Now and then we lose an outstanding man because we do not pay him sufficient money. I believe anyone who studies this situation at all will be quite satisfied to see this class of civil servants paid the worth of their hire.

Will the minister state what has been done recently in the matter of developing newer types of rust-resistant wheat, both the hard variety and the durum varieties? What are the newest types of wheat and their possibilities, so for as the department can say now?

Mr. GARDINER: There are only two new varieties of wheat which have been developed recently and are ready for release. One is hard spring Renown, which is a rust-resistant wheat, and the other is the Rescue wheat, which is sawfly resistant. Experiments are being carried on in the developing of Durum, and of other hard wheats which are rust-resistant, but they are not ready for release —and on the soft wheats, too.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What about the Carlton? Is it sufficiently recognized as rust-resistant?

Mr. GARDINER: No, it is not ready for release. It is being experimented with.

Mr. BRADETTE: I know I shall be forgiven if I bring to the attention of the committee a question which has been agitating our section of the country for quite a while. I do not feel very diffident about it, because the minister will realize that ever since I have been in the house this is the first time I have asked a question on his estimates.

I want to mention a position which is now open, the superintendency of the experimental farm at Kapuskasing. Before proceeding any further I want to pay a tribute, and in doing so I believe I am voicing the opinions of every section of our population, to the retiring superintendent, Mr. Smith Ballantyne, that fine, big, Nova Scotian who, after living for forty years in our section, has become a real northern Ontarian. He has done real work in his position and he will be greatly missed. Everyone concerned must compliment the Ontario government upon having caught Smith Ballantine on the rebound and given him a fine position in northern Ontario in connection with agricultural and colonization operations, for which he is well qualified.

I think that the deputy-minister knows our position well; in fact, that he realizes the situation as well as I do, because he has done us the honour of visiting our section of the country and that particular farm on many occasions. When the La Ferme experimental farm in Quebec, which is adjacent to our own section in northern Ontario was closed around 1934, more work was put on the shoulders of the experimental farm in Kapuskasing. That is why in replacing the man who had carried on that work there for many years in a satisfactory manner, certain regional and racial considerations had to be taken into account.

The experimental farm at Kapuskasing is serving an agricultural population of almost three quarters of a million people. In my own section, the Cochrane district, we have had the greatest development in colonization and agriculture in Canada in the last two decades. If you visited northern Quebec in the Abitibi, Pontiac and Chapleau districts you would also see one of the greatest agricultural movements, second only to the one that was experienced in the three western provinces. On its own initiative, and without any help from the outside, Quebec is building a great agricultural district that will one day reach as far as the Hudson and James bays. We have also the same thing, but on a smaller scale, in northern Ontario.

For many years the experimental farm at Kapuskasing has rendered excellent service to our colonization and farming populations. If I remember correctly it was in 1916 that the ground began to be cleared, mostly by German prisoners of world war I. It is a marvellous site; it has good soil, but because of climatic conditions they are carrying on a type of work which cannot be carried on even at the experimental farm at Ottawa.

This is a regional question. I am giving a personal viewpoint. The person who replaces Mr. Smith Ballantyne must be bilingual, as I said a few moments ago. I made that statement deliberately because I stand foursquare for fair play to every section of our population. My record as a parliamentarian and in my own district will bear out that statement. May I repeat that at least three-fifths of our farming population covered by the activities of this experimental farm are French speaking only. Because of that the superintendent of the farm must be bilingual if his work would be really effective. We have found the man who is fully qualified, a man who has worked under the leadership and guidance of Smith Ballantyne for a number of years. He graduated to a higher position in Quebec under the federal Department of Agriculture. At some personal sacrifices he is now ready and willing to return to Ontario, which he always loved. He loves our section of the country and its population. I believe he has been in the service in a high official capacity for nearly thirty years. All he wants from the department is to be raised to a higher grade. I believe he now occupies the position of grade 3 or 4. He wants to have one higher grade, which will mean an increase of $500 a year in his salary. I agree with what the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar and the hon. member for Souris so well said a few moments ago, in the matter of increased salaries for our expert men. I am not acquainted with the inner workings of the department; I have never tried to interfere—I never will; and I know they will bear me out in this. I do not know what their decision should be, but as an outside man of the service who knows something of ability, intelligence, integrity and the necessity of maintaining high standards in the work of experimental farms I believe that the increase should be given to this well-qualified man and men of his qualifications whose appointment will give satisfaction to the English and French-speaking sections of our population.

I want the committee fully to realize our situation. It is true that the experimental farm at Kapuskasing is located in Ontario and serves a large section of the population there; but it is also true that a larger section of the agriculturists who receive benefit from the activities of that farm live in Quebec. Because of that I know the committee will realize the logic of my request. That is all I want to say on this subject. I must say here that I leave it entirely in the hands of the department, which has been fair to the agricultural population of my district so far as departmental activities are concerned. However, I do make a serious request, namely, that the man to whom I have just referred and who is well known to the deputy minister and the minister himself, a man who is well qualified, a man who will be a loss to Quebec if he leaves that position to come to our province, should be given consideration. He would be an acquisition to us. His request is a logical one. I am not giving his name, because I do not think it would be fair to him or to the department. I hope that our population will receive that appointment which they are eagerly looking for in the very near future, as there is much work that should be continued in an accelerated way on that farm.

Mr. GARDINER: Just to avoid any misunderstanding with regard to one remark made by the hon. member, may I say that I wondered whether this man who is spoken of had left us and gone over to Quebec. I know that was not what the hon. member wished to say. To be perfectly plain, he is still with us, and as has been suggested, he is one of the best men who could be secured for that position, but he is the best man who could be secured for the position he is in at the present time. There is the question whether he could serve the department any better in one place than another. I am sure it is recognized by the people where he is that he is serving them particularly well, as he would serve the Kapuskasing area. The question that comes up in the department is whether changing a man from one place to another to do a similar job at increased pay is going to have any effect on the staff itself, as those moves can do at times; in other words, the question whether it would help to move a man from one place where he is doing good work to another place where he would do equally good work—and he has always done good work. He is one of the best men we have. That is the only question that is now being considered, whether he can be moved and given what he desires. He probably would prefer to stay where he is without an increase in pay, and of course we would not insist on his moving and remaining in his present classification. These are matters of internal administration that I do not interfere with. The question has to be left more or less to the persons who are responsible for making the greatest possible success of the administration of the experimental farms.

Mr. BRADETTE: May I make one reference to what the minister has said? I do not know whether I should say this, but I believe I have the right to say it. By doing so I am not hurting the man himself, and this will not be held against him. He is willing and will be ready to come to our section of the country. That is all I want to say at the moment.

Mr. GARDINER: With increased pay.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Would the minister tell us what proportion of the total allotment for experimental work the Lethbridge farm is receiving? What is the nature of the work being carried on?

The hon. member for Acadia raised the question of weed control. The idea I have in mind is a little different from his. I should like to know what the experimental farm at Lethbridge is doing in connection with weed control. A serious situation is developing in my constituency. Within the last few years four exceedingly serious weeds have come into that area—They are: the leafy spurge, the field bindweed, the hoary cress and the Russian knapweed. They could be a menace to the whole of western Canada if they ever got completely out of control. If work on the control of these weeds is being carried on, would the minister tell us about it? Would he tell us whether in the judgment of the men responsible there is adequate machinery available to the Lethbridge experimental farm for the carrying on of a study of the control of these weeds? Have they sufficient staff? Is there enough money to give the staff the hired help which they need in order to accomplish the desired results? What is being done in this connection at the Dalroy substation of the Lethbridge experimental farm?

Mr. GARDINER: Weed control work is done at the substation in question. The amount spent at Lethbridge, out of the votes which are being discussed, is $78,790. There is, I understand, about another $80,000 which comes under item 16, which has some relationship to the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, but the total amount here is $78,790. Weed control also comes under item 16, and I do not know that there is any reason why I should not say, under administration, in connection with all these votes, that weed control by the methods indicated a few moments ago is being carried out on the different experimental farms. As I have said, work is being done at the substation just mentioned, under the control of Lethbridge, and there is also work at Indian Head and other experimental stations. The treatment is a very successful one. I said yesterday that I had had the privilege of noting the work which is being done at Indian Head. The road from my farm to Regina leads past that station and I drive by it continuously. I did so last summer and was more than surprised to find how successfully you could spray a field. They sprayed one strip and left another strip unsprayed. A field that was infested with mustard was sprayed and the mustard was entirely killed, while in the field which was not sprayed the mustard was there as before. The peculiar thing about it was that the ground seemed to be better after it had been sprayed than the ground which had not been sprayed.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Is it expensive?

Mr. GARDINER: About $2.50 an acre. It is apparently a successful mothod of dealing with mustard at least and, I assume, with other weeds such as the stinkweed, what we call the French weed.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The point of greatest importance to us is that these four weeds are deep-rooted perennials which have peculiar habits of growth that make it next to impossible to kill them with the devices that kill ordinary weeds such as stinkweed and mustard. The men in my constituency used to think that they had real trouble when they were faced with the Canada thistle and with the perennial sow thistle. They thought they had reached the climax when they had to cope with those weeds, but they decided that, in comparison with their experience with these four new weeds, they did not know what weeds were. I am wondering if any kind of chemical control has been discovered which is effective against these four weeds. If a chemical remedy has not been found, has some method of culture or of crop rotation, been discovered, which has a chance of being successfully applied against these weeds?

Mr. GARDINER: Experimental work is being done to obtain a chemical which can be used against these four weeds, but it has not progressed sufficiently far for the department to recommend or to guarantee it. They are still working on it, with a view to obtaining a chemical which will accomplish the same thing as the chemical now produced does accomplish in connection with mustard, and the hope is that they will be successful. There are cultural methods of dealing with all kinds of weeds, and they have cultural methods for dealing with these particular varieties. How successful they will be is a matter that depends upon those who are applying the cultural methods, but the farm at Lethbridge can give those in that community the best information that can be had with regard to the matter. Unfortunately I do not know whether the experimental farm at Lethbridge is treated by the neighbours in the same manner as some other farms I know of. It seems that those who live closest to a farm pay the least attention to it in many cases. People will drive many miles to go to a farm to look it over, to see what can be done, but those who live in proximity to that farm think it the natural thing to drive by without stopping to investigate. That is what they usually do. However, if people go and make inquiries at Lethbridge with regard to the experimental work being done there they will get the latest information available with respect to the handling of these weeds.

Mr. BLACKMORE: My chief concern in bringing this matter to the minister's attention is this. We may not realize how serious the situation is and for that reason we may not be giving the Lethbridge farm the amount of money which they require to conduct their experiments against these weeds and to push them to a successful conclusion. Let me indicate how serious the situation is. The leafy spurge has tap roots which often reach from ten to fifteen feet under the ground. Any man who has any agricultural experience will realize that it is impossible to reach the roots of a weed that goes so deep down. The roots run horizontally at from four to eight inches under the ground, and from these creeping roots come up new plants. Anyone knows that if these roots run eight inches under ground they are entirely below the reach of ordinary cultivation. It starts growing so early that smother crops are not effective against it. I am sure that all hon. members from Saskatchewan and Manitoba realize how serious is the threat to their own provinces if such weeds get thoroughly going in Alberta, with west winds blowing over that province.

Then consider the field bindweed. It has a root system which is quite extensive and which may penetrate to a depth of twenty feet. Roots of bindweed plants have been known to spread six feet outward and five feet deep in fourteen weeks after the seed germinates. Before we saw this weed in action in my constituency we would not have believed that any such plant existed, but we know now that it does. Then there is the hoary cress. The roots have been found thirty feet deep. Mature plants send running roots out at different depths beneath the surface, some of which are far below the depth of cultivation. It is exceedingly difficult to eradicate them in slightly alkali lands. Thus it is a menace to our whole area. We have four irrigation projects in our constituency, and wherever there is irrigation there tends to be some alkali development. It is proposed in that region to have a conservation project which will bring under water 350,000 more acres. Hon. members can see therefore how serious the situation is with weeds like these spreading into those areas. They cannot be eradicated by any method which the farmers so far have discovered.

The Russian knapweed is a perennial, propagated by seeds and by running root stalks, and it is almost impossible for the smother crops to cope with it. One of the reasons why these weeds are so difficult for the smother crops is that they start growing so early in the spring that they fill the ground completely with roots.

I think I have said enough to impress upon the committee the gravity of the problem. It is not a fly by night affair; it is a potential menace to the whole nation. I urge the committee to support the minister in expending whatever money is necessary to cope effectively with this weed problem while it is still in the infant stages. It is only scattered here and there in small patches at the present time. I am told that in some places in the United States this weed has really got a thorough hold on the ground, that in those areas the cost of eradication is as great as the total value of the land, and that it has become impossible to get loans on land infested with it. Certainly no hon. member wants to see anything like that established in Canada.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I support what the hon. member for Lethbridge has said. We already have this weed in Manitoba. The dominion experimental farm, in cooperation with the provincial departments of agriculture, is doing good work in experimentation. In fact they have a chemical they have been using for some years which leads us to the belief that the development of the weed can be controlled. We have not experimented long enough to have direct proof, but good work is being done, and certainly I can substantiate everything the hon. member has said about the seriousness of leafy spurge. When I served on a municipal council we found that the cost of keeping it down and preventing its spread was greater than the original value of the land.

Mr. HATFIELD: For a number of years at the experimental farm at Fredericton experiments have been carried on in connection with a blight-resistant potato. Have any of these potatoes been released for planting? If not, why not? I understand some good varieties have been developed.

Mr. GARDINER: We have been experimenting with about twenty varieties, but they are not yet ready for release. This means that we are not ready to say that we are certain we have accomplished what we set out to accomplish. However, the experiments do give promise.

Mr. SENN: Recently in Ontario, and I expect in other provinces as well, there has been a revival of what are known as permanent grass mixtures. Experiments are being carried on by the federal experimental farm, by provincial experimental farms and by individuals. Recently Mr. Fraleigh of Lambton, a pioneer in this work, died. He did good work in the development of grass mixtures of different kinds for permanent pastures. What is being done by the central experimental farm and by other federal farms in this connection?

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: Would the minister tell us the present situation in connection with Rescue wheat? This wheat was developed comparatively recently, and has proved more or less resistant to damage from sawfly. Entomologists and plant breeders have done excellent work in originating and giving to us this new wheat. We learn with some dismay however that it will grade no better than grade 3. That is as high as it can go, owing to some weakness or lack of quality in the wheat itself. We appreciate deeply what these men have done, and we wonder if the minister could tell us why the wheat cannot be developed to a better grade. So far as I can learn, it is saving the western provinces from $15 million to $20 million a year, which they previously suffered from sawfly damage. We should be glad to know more about this wheat.

Mr. McIVOR: We have in the Thunder Bay district an experimental substation second to none. It is developing rapidly, and is helping development in the community. People who pass cannot help stopping to see what is taking place. They are carrying on experiments in connection with fruits, vegetables, grains, grasses and pasture lands. The exhibition of spraying and killing weeds put on last fall at our field day surely told its own story to those who saw it. At that substation we have an expert equal in ability to the one referred to a few moments ago. He does his own work, and assists in connection with farm improvement throughout the community. He is also giving direction to young men returning from the war. The latest event was when two of those young men, one of whom had been a pilot, purchased two farms and have shown that they can get along well on them.

Last year I referred to our potatoes with a yield of 500 bushels to the acre, and on that occasion the hon. member for Haldimand was able to tell me the average yield. I am sure, however, he cannot equal the yield of one farmer who entered the competition and who, without question, raised 619 bushels to the acre. Some of the farmers in the house who think they know how to grow potatoes will be glad to seek the advice from this expert.

Mr. GARDINER: May I speak first about the mixed grasses for pasture purposes. As the hon. member for Haldimand knows, the mixtures are not the same in all communities. We are carrying on experimental work, based on the work formerly done by Mr. Fraleigh. That work is being carried on successfully at different experimental farms across the country.

Western members will know that sawfly did not do a great deal of damage for some years in western Canada. Gradually the damage has increased to the point where in some areas it is almost impossible to grow wheat. One might say that that has been the history of growing wheat. Wheat growing, as I recall its history in this country, started down on the little island at the mouth of the St. Croix river. They could grow wheat there, and the growing of it extended across Canada. I can remember that when I was a boy on a farm in Ontario the only kind of spring wheat grown there was Goose wheat. My grandfather and my father used to tell me that they grew nothing but spring wheat when they went there first. There came a time when they could not grow it, because of certain things that had happened in connection with the growing of it. Wheat growing on this continent has moved gradually westward and northward. Wheat, like another plant we mentioned a few minutes ago, is subject to certain diseases and insect attacks. If the growing of it is overdone, if we crop wheat year after year with very little rotation, we eventually build up the pests which attack the plant. If this is continued, we may be driven out of wheat in some areas.

Without the experimental work that has been done in connection with rust, probably by this time we would have been almost out of wheat production on the prairies. Our crops were wiped out so many years in succession that we simply had to stop trying to grow wheat at all. Had it not been for the finding of rust-resistant varieties, our corps would have been greatly reduced. We find that when wheat such as Thatcher is grown continuously in one area, the rust-resistant qualities decrease. We thought it was one hundred per cent rust-resistant over great areas when we began growing it, but I think to-day it is rated at about sixty-five per cent. It is just possible that, by being grown over and over again, varieties may get back to a position where they are not resistant to some attacks. Therefore the experimental farms keep working at their job all the time, and continue to develop new varieties which will resist different kinds of rust.

The sawfly is another thing which is being dealt with. This is the insect that cuts off your wheat, and by the time you are ready to harvest it, it has harvested it for you and there is nothing you can do about it. The department has been working on the production of a sawfly resistant wheat and has produced one variety which is able to resist the sawfly fairly successfully. This has been distributed earlier than it otherwise would have been because of the great damage that has been done by the sawfly. It is not a variety which will stand up against grading to produce the top grades. I am not in position to indicate all that it lacks, but baking and other tests which have been made show that it is not capable of being placed in the top grades, and it would not be fair to the consuming public to have it placed in those grades. It must be graded down because it does not produce the results that the higher grades of wheat will produce. This does not mean that we cannot get a wheat which will be sawfly resistant as well as being a top grade variety. The work being done is in an effort to obtain wheat which will be sawfly resistant and rust resistant, give a good yield and grade good quality all the time. When such a wheat is obtained it will be classified along with the others. In the meantime we are carrying on with the investigation and experimentation.

Mr. McKAY: Are there any means by which the public could obtain the reports submitted to the parent units by the substations?

Mr. GARDINER: Substation reports are furnished annually. When anything of value is accomplished or discovered as a result of work carried on at a substation, it is carefully compiled and every five years a publication is put out containing all the information regarding that work. While I have not anything before me at the moment which would substantiate this, I imagine that if anything of outstanding importance were discovered as a result of experiments carried on at a substation, it would be given publicity immediately.

Mr. McKAY: Has that been the practice in the past?

Mr. GARDINER: The practice in the past has been to compile it as it comes along and publish it every five years.

Mr. MacNICOL: As a city representative I rise mainly to make a few observations about the experimental farms, a number of which I have visited. I have come to the conclusion that every dollar that this house can vote for experimental farms should be voted in order that the benefit of the work carried on there may be extended, not only to the particular communities but to Canada as a whole. This is one of the best branches of the whole department, and in this connection I should like to say a word or two about four of the experimental farms that I have seen in the last two or three years.

The Indian Head farm is carrying on a wonderful work in the production of shade and other trees for distribution throughout the west. The head of that farm gave me the figures of this distribution, but I have forgotten them. If they were put on Hansard I am sure they would be found to be quite formidable.

I should like to refer to the work being carried on at the Swift Current farm in the development of new machinery. One man there who apparently has a mechanical turn of mind showed me many machines which had been developed at that station and which had demonstrated great value.

Mr. GARDINER: That would be Mr. Denike.

Mr. MacNICOL: I understand that the large agricultural machinery companies in Brantford, Toronto and Hamilton have sent men out there to investigate the possibilities of many of these new machines, and then have proceeded to manufacture the equipment. The department should have credit for this work.

Splendid work is being carried on at the Lethbridge farm, particularly in connection with the irrigation of areas such as those in the constituency of the hon. member for Lethbridge. While the hon. member for Peace River does not represent a similar area, he has considerable knowledge of irrigation. I was glad to hear from the hon. member for Lethbridge that this experimental farm is developing a method to overcome the increase of weeds.

The last farm to which I would refer and about which I should like to have the minister say a word or two is the one at Beaver Lodge, which was organized under the supervision of Mr. Albright. I did not meet Mr. Albright when I was there, but I did learn that they had developed a type of apple tree which would grow in that part of the country —I was going to say, in that northern climate, but it is not really so far north. I have learned from the hon. member for Peace River that apple trees are being grown on the north side of that river, notably by Mr. Early, who, I believe, obtained his tree stock from the Beaver Lodge farm. I should like to have the minister tell us something about the development of apple trees at this farm and, if the figures are available, something about the distribution of trees by the Indian Head farm.

Mr. GARDINER: The distribution of trees by Indian Head has been going on for many years. There are two forestry farms in Saskatchewan, one at Indian Head and one at Sutherland, near Saskatoon. I have not separate figures for the two farms, but we did distribute from six to ten million trees from the two farms. These trees have been distributed free of cost but they must be planted under regulations set by the farms. The farmers who got those trees have taken great care to follow the instructions. I happen to have a farm where the tree planting was done by the farmer who had the farm before I had it; I bought the farm with this work already done. The former owner had no special knowledge about growing trees but he took instructions from Indian Head and planted the trees as they told him to plant them. The trees now make a very fine windbreak around the buildings. Many of them have been there since near the beginning of the century. Trees have been distributed from that time on, and earlier than that, now all over the western country. The nurseries themselves have brought up the question occasionally and have insisted that the work be carried on. One might think that the nurseries might object to it, but when the matter was fully discussed they have always agreed that this distribution of trees induced so many people to want to have shrubs and trees around that it helped the business of the nurseries, because once people had learned to grow a certain type of tree, it led to them purchasing other kinds.

The work carried on in the west with regard to apples started at Morden, which is the centre from which it all radiates. When I first went west in 1901 I was living sixty miles from Morden. Everyone talked about the place. When you went by Morden on the train you would always see a case of apples on the station platform during the apple harvest season. They were a very nice appearing variety of apple, and most people got off the train to look at them. The idea of growing apples in the west has spread from there all across the prairies.

On the map, Beaver Lodge seems to be quite a distance north of Morden, but when I first went up into the area represented by the hon. member for Peace River I was astounded to find them growing there the type of grass crops grown in Ontario. They actually were seeding timothy and clover, which we did not seed in Saskatchewan or in southern Manitoba. If one is familiar with the growth around Morden and then goes up to Beaver Lodge and takes a look at the growth there, one finds much the same crops growing there as at Morden. In other words, the climate of the western country runs along a line which parallels the Rocky mountains almost all the way across the prairies. If you draw one line down the height of the mountains and then go fifty miles inland and draw another line paralleling the first, generally speaking the climate follows that line. But there is this variation; the height of the mountains in the north is lower than to the south and the warmer winds get farther in from the Pacific. This warmer climate brings about a growth in the north to the west such as you find in Ontario. For that reason the plants first developed at Morden have been transplanted to Beaver Lodge farm. It was first operated by the late Mr. Albright himself on his own farm before we took it over. He had an illustration station and worked on it and developed it himself with the assistance and help of the officials who would call in to advise and help him. Throughout his life he did a great work for agriculture in that area. The farm is now operated by the department; the trees have been transplanted from Morden to Beaver Lodge and sent out to illustration stations over the whole area, and many people are now growing fruit trees, particularly apple trees, in that area.

That, generally speaking, is the work that is being done. I think the hon. member for Melfort will agree that much the same conditions obtain in the northern part of his constituency. There are men there who have made a real effort to grow fruit, apples, plums and cherries, and you would be surprised at the results they have achieved. Their orchard is the first thing they take you to see, whether they are growing wheat or raising hogs, of which my hon. friend speaks so often in the house. They are very proud of their orchards, and proud of the results they are getting.

Mr. MacNICOL: Would the minister say a word about machinery?

Mr. GARDINER: I had intended to do so. I am quite sure that if the farmers of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta would write to the experimental farm at Swift Current before they bought farm implements, they would save far more money than they would lose by the 12½ per cent increase in the price of implements. There are many implements purchased in western Canada which the farmer is better off without. An agent persuades him to buy some implement on which very little experimental work has been done. The farmer buys it and uses it one season and then throws it into a fence corner, if he has a fence. That expense could be saved if they would only write to the experimental station when they think of buying any new implement. I have always worked on the principle myself on my own farm that as long as an implement is doing a job all right I do not buy another kind of implement. I was out at the experimental farm at Swift Current two or three years ago and I took a walk down along the end of the plots where they are experimenting with different kinds of equipment. They had all the newest equipment that is put out—combine seeders, combine harvesters, and the rest. But what I was most interested in was the plots which demonstrated that you got the best results with the old-fashioned plough and the old-fashioned harrow and cultivator and the old-fashioned seed drill. I looked at the plots as I walked along the end, and I saw that it was these old-fashioned implements which produced the best results, I went home quite satisfied that I had not bought many of these new-fangled implements which are put out to save a great deal of money and do so many things for us.

On a number of occasions I have discussed with the director, as he will remember, the advisablity of our putting out publications saying what we think. There is some danger in that too. We find that when we put out statements saying what we think, the farmers sometimes do just the opposite—even if it has to do with summer-fallowing. You get the best results when the farmers go to the experimental farm and see the results for themselves. Some take advice a little more readily because they feel they had something to do with discovering the truth of it. But if you try to drive them into doing a thing, not only do you meet with opposition from the man who has bought one of these new implements and thinks it is doing a good job, but there are also the implement companies who can send out more agents to tell the opposite story to the one we can tell with the money that is voted to us. So we hesitate to start any controversy. I say again that if every farmer will go to these experimental farms and look at the experiments which are being carried on, he will be able to judge for himself and save himself a great deal of money on his farm.

Mr. FAIR: We have to have a certain kind of implement suited to a certain kind of soil. Using the old implements on certain kinds of soil did not succeed very well in western Canada. Try using a disc and harrow on sandy soil, and you will get into plenty of trouble. Many farmers in the west had to discard those implements and use some of the new-fangled ones. The tiller to use in spring time brings the best results in my part of the country. You have to pick certain implements to suit your type of soil, in just the same way that you choose certain varieties of wheat and other grains to suit the soil and locality in which you are farming.

Mr. WRIGHT: The minister touched on an important point just now when he said that probably the best way to spread this information is by people going and seeing for themselves. Before the war, experimental farms held field days to which they invited groups from different parts of the country adjacent to the locations of the farms, to go to the farms and see what was being done there. Now that the war is over and cars and gas are available, these field days should be reinstituted as soon as possible. Business organizations, farm organizations, in fact any organization within fifty miles or so of experimental farms should be invited to spend a day at these farms where the work which is being done may be observed at first hand. It is valuable work, work which will save the farmers a lot of money if they will see and observe it, and if they personally see it they are more likely to follow what is being done than by reading about it in a pamphlet or a paper. So I recommend that the experimental farms revive the field days which they had in the past.

One question: is anything being done at Melfort experimental farm in the way of experimentation with permanent grass mixtures for pasture? I am sure that in that northern area—and I speak after some twenty-five years of observation—we must have rotation of crops if we are to maintain our soil fertility, and I suggest that if the experimental farm is not doing something along that line the work should be started at once.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, that experimental work is being carried on at the Melfort farm, particularly with grasses which may be used to prevent erosion.

With regard to the other question, we are organizing this year over three hundred field days. During the war, because of regulations against the use of tires, shortage of gas, and that sort of thing, the organization of these field days was dropped, or discouraged for the time being. They are now being encouraged again, and we hope to get back pretty well to the same level in this respect as we did prior to the war.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am looking for a little information. Recently I had a conversation with one of the old country millers, and the story he told me caused me a good deal of worry. He said that the old country small bakers are pretty well passing out of the picture, and that the large mills are building huge bakeries to produce bread on a mass production basis. His claim was that our western wheat, while the very best for the small baker, rises too fast and is a little too hard to control in these modern bakeries, and they are now asking Canada to produce wheat which is not as fast, wheat which has more gluten and less protein. Has the minister any information on that?

Mr. GARDINER: I do not know whether it is the same miller or not, but a miller of the Scottish Cooperative was in this country during last winter. I had discussed the matter with him in Glasgow in January, before he came to Canada, and I also discussed it with him later here in Ottawa. The idea which has been mentioned by the hon. member is much as he stated it to me, and I assume that what he says is correct, because he is one of the leading millers of Great Britain. Throughout the years the Scottish Cooperative has used a larger percentage of our wheat in their milling than any other mills in Great Britain. As a matter of fact, prior to the world war they were using 100 per cent of our wheat in all their best bread. They used other wheats for other purposes, but for bread-making flours they used 100 per cent of our wheat. They were doing that in 1936 when I was over there, and other mills at that time in England were using 30 to 40 per cent. When a miller of that kind, a man who has been associated with a milling organization which prefers to use all our wheat, and advocates doing so even now, calls our attention to the fact that a change is probably taking place in methods of baking in Britain which will require a little different type of wheat, I think we should pay some attention to it, and I am quite sure that the officials of the department will be paying attention to it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: What information has the department regarding the progress of studies of bacterial wilt in alfalfa? My information is that so rapidly has this pest progressed in the alfalfa fields in my area that numbers of fields are almost completely out of production. I am told that the Lethbridge experimental farm is devoting a good deal of attention to this problem and that if it is not making all the progress which is desired this is probably because it is not receiving enough financial support. Could the minister tell the committee what is being done at the Lethbridge experimental farm to meet this condition, who are the men who are particularly working on the investigation of bacterial wilt in alfalfa, and whether he feels they are adequately paid and equipped?

Mr. GARDINER: The men who are investigating bacterial wilt in alfalfa are really engaged in a branch that we have just passed, that is the science branch. The work which is being done on experimental farms is associated with trying to evade the results by selecting seed carefully and then by not planting on the same ground too soon after the wilt has appeared there in any year. In other words, it is being done through rotation of crop and seed selection in so far as the farmers are concerned, and I am informed that in so far as it is necessary to do that work in connection with experimental farms the men are there and the money is available too.

I might say that in a number of these matters hon. members have raised questions about, we have no difficulty in getting the funds which we have in these estimates for those particular purposes. The question which arises each time we come along is, "Well, how much can you efficiently spend during the year on that particular work?" That depends upon the help we can get, just as often as it depends upon the money we can get. That, again, comes back to the question we were discussing here earlier. You would probably say in answer to that that if we pay enough salary we will get the men. Maybe we would. I would not be too sure about that. At the moment our main difficulty with all these matters is getting a type of technical staff which can deal with the problems that are there, and as far as we are able to get the men to put on the work we have been able to get the funds to deal with it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: May I say, in addition to what the minister has said, that while this problem of bacterial wilt in alfalfa does not of course assume anything like the proportions of the problem I raised a few moments ago with regard to those four kinds of weeds, nevertheless this problem is a serious one in that area, because alfalfa is commonly raised at present as one of the series of crop rotation plants which are used in connection with sugar beet culture. Therefore everything that can possibly be done to discover an effective way of controlling bacterial wilt should be done as soon as possible. I am told that one of the projects they are following is to develop a new type. I understand that Grimm alfalfa is the type commonly used in the area, but that it is believed by certain alfalfa scientists that an entirely new kind should be developed in a manner similar to that in which have been developed new kinds of wheat, namely, rust-resistant and sawfly resistant wheat.

15. Branch farms and stations and illustration stations, $1,960,886.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I understand that the only stations being operated in Manitoba are at Winnipeg, Morden and Brandon. If that is so, would the minister consider the possibility of establishing one farther north in the province. A little while ago the minister said that wheat growing had gradually moved westward and northward in the prairie provinces. That is true of Manitoba as it is of the other provinces. In the northwestern part of Manitoba where my constituency is situated there is good farming country, but there is no experimental or illustration station at Dauphin, which is a good farming centre. I should like to bring to the attention of the minister the possibilities that we have there. Last year the question of the disposition of the airports at Dauphin came up. The No. 7 bombing and gunnery school is located in a good place for a farming station. It is close to the river and contains fairly good farming soil. The buildings, equipment and facilities there are as good as will be found anywhere. Has the minister or any of his officials given consideration to the possibilities of taking over this No. 7 airport, which I understand has been declared surplus, and establishing an illustration station there? It is a project that would meet with wide approval in the area.

Mr. GARDINER: There are the three larger experimental activities at Morden, Winnipeg and Brandon. Then there is quite a large sub-station at Melita. We have six other smaller sub-stations and seven illustration stations. Most of the seven illustration stations are in the northern part of Manitoba. There has been some discussion of the possibility of utilizing the airfield at Dauphin. I cannot say that the discussion has gone far enough for one to be warranted in suggesting that consideration is being given to purchasing it and using it for the purpose. The question as to whether that should be done has been brought to my attention through correspondence and I have brought it to the attention of the directorate. Beyond that it has not been considered up to the moment. I will agree that Dauphin is a fine agricultural area, and there are reasons for doing work in that district.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I should like to direct a question to the minister in connection with illustration stations. As the minister knows, my riding grows possibly fifty per cent of the strawberries and raspberries produced in Canada. I had a letter to-day from the largest organization of berry growers in Canada complaining about the illustration station that we have in British Columbia in connection with small fruits. As I understand it, the man who has been in charge of it has been away for three weeks. This is the season when berries are coming on. I understand that he is to be away for three months. I took this matter up with the minister before. I have every confidence in the experimental farm at Agassiz which has been in operation for over sixty years. I presume it is the best one since it is in the Fraser valley. The only attention given to small fruits is that which is given in the small illustration stations and I do not think much attention is given to small fruits in it at the present time.

The berry growers in the Fraser valley are endeavouring to make arrangements with the provincial department of agriculture to establish an illustration station, although it is a federal responsibility. This is of great importance to the Fraser valley because we produce some ten million pounds of small fruits. At Agassiz practically no provision is made for the cure or prevention of diseases of various kinds of small fruits, particularly raspberries and strawberries. We are dependent on the small station. The minister's department would be well advised to spend some money on these small fruits, having regard to the fact that they produce so much wealth for the whole of Canada. I am in no way criticizing the Agassiz experimental farm, except that practically no provision is made to prevent the diseases of raspberries and strawberries. I should like the department to give consideration to establishing a small fruit illustration station in the centre of the valley. It was suggested that at least ninety per cent of the strawberries and raspberries grown in British Columbia are grown in the middle part of the Fraser valley. I think it would be foolish to establish an illustration station in a part of the valley where the soil and the climate are not at all similar to that where the berries are grown.

Serious consideration should also be given to establishing a station to do work in connection with bulbs. I read in the paper the other day that hundreds of thousands of bulbs were being imported from Holland. We have 700 small farms in the Fraser valley which were taken over from the Japs. Perhaps some of these could be used by soldiers to produce bulbs. We have been particularly successful in growing daffodils and tulips, but like any other plants, they got into difficulties because of disease. The department is spending no money on experimental work to find the cause and cure of these diseases in the Fraser valley.

I read in the paper about devastated Holland. If hon. members read in the papers that the bulb-producing area of Holland is flooded out I would ask them not to take this too seriously. I am not objecting to sending food to Holland or anywhere else, but I ask hon. members not to be misled by the propaganda about the bulb country of Holland being flooded out. The talk that they were eating bulbs there during the war is so much nonsense. It was not the bulb-growing country that was flooded. Two weeks after the armistice they were shipping bulbs.

I have a constructive suggestion to make. I would ask the department to establish two illustration stations somewhere in the Fraser valley, one for small fruits and the other for the bulb industry. We know from past experience that the small cost would be offset by the returns that would come to these two branches of agriculture in one year.

[Mr. Cruickshank.]

Mr. GARDINER: The layout in British Columbia is that most of the work which is done by us in relation to fruit is done at Summerland which, of course, is not in the Fraser valley. In the valley itself we have the Agassiz farm which is one of the oldest farms in the dominion and which was established in the first instance, as many others were, to promote the production of live stock and grains of one kind or another. We have a station at Mission which is given up to horticultural work. The suggested station in the lower part of the valley is one to deal largely with potatoes. There is a station up in the north near Prince Rupert and one on the island, which the hon. member for Nanaimo knows a great deal about. It is, as he knows, almost entirely horticultural. We do a considerable amount of work there in connection with diseases in bulbs. The suggestion that we should have two other substations to deal with raspberries, strawberries and fruits of that kind is perhaps a good one and we will give consideration to the representations made. It would be necessary to discuss the whole matter carefully, and have those substations so placed, if we were to establish them, that they would serve the greatest number of people in that area. There is also the one at Kamloops.

Mr. IRVINE: I wish to remind the minister of a matter I had an opportunity of mentioning briefly some time ago along the same line. In the Lillooet valley they are beginning to grow fruit and vegetables, but they have difficulty getting in touch with the experimental station, which I believe is down in the southern part, in Summerland, I think, which carries out experiments in fruit growing, the raising of vegetables and the like. The climatic conditions and the soil are both different in the Lillooet valley from those that obtain in the section where the experimental station is. It is true there is a visiting director—I do not know what his title is—who occasionally calls there and no doubt renders good service. The people in that section have recently begun to engage in the production of fruit to a greater degree than heretofore. The growth of fruit has been stimulated by the building of a canning factory there, and the people are anxious to obtain information which will enable them to do the very best possible. The board of trade has interested itself in the matter and is asking that a man of experience be stationed there, if possible. They are not asking for an experimental farm, but they would like to have an illustration station where information can be given and experiments carried out in the growth of fruit and vegetables in that section. I hope that when the minister is considering the question raised by the hon. member for Fraser Valley he will keep Lillooet in mind, because I believe there are possibilities in that district.

Mr. LOW: May I say just a word about Beaver Lodge? During the war the work there was limited owing to the difficulty of getting help. I understand that their activities have been confined to maintenance, seed distribution and some advisory work. I should like, if possible, to get from the minister figures indicating the actual expenditure last year and the proposed expenditure for the coming year so that I may have some idea as to whether or not it is proposed to bring the staff up to strength and to restore activities at the station to the pre-war level. While the minister is getting those figures, I may make this observation. Horticultural work at Beaver Lodge station has been important and fruitful—I do not intend that as a pun—and it should be continued, but it requires assistance and money to do the work. That area is one where small fruits and even apples could be grown to advantage. It has all the advantages of some of the areas in Ontario and I should like to see sufficient money provided for proper work there.

Mr. GARDINER: The farm at Beaver Lodge did belong to Mr. Albright until 1939 when we took it over. The war came along in the fall of that year. Some of the staff we had engaged prior to that time were younger men and they went into the service and have been away. They are almost all coming back, and that staff is now being reestablished so that the work will be carried on on the same level as we had contemplated before. A great deal of it is experimental work.

Mr. LOW: Can the minister give me the figures with regard to expenditures?

Mr. GARDINER: The amount spent last year was $23,000 and the appropriation this year is $30,000.

Mr. IRVINE: The minister was interrupted before he could give me some information about the station at Lillooet. I would like him to have an opportunity to give me some assurance about that.

Mr. GARDINER: I was remarking to the director here, as the hon. gentleman was speaking, that the last time I was in Lillooet I thought they had one of the finest experimental stations I had seen anywhere operated by an individual. I have forgotten his name; I believe it was MacMillan or some such name. He had lived in the area when it was something of a mining district and had made money, and he had come back and was developing a plot which in the old days produced all the wheat consumed in that area. In the days when the gold rush was on they had their own wheat crops produced through irrigation, and their own mill, which milled the wheat so that they were enabled to provide themselves with the necessities. It was all done with the water from the placer mining. The water that was used to wash the gold, after the washing was used for irrigation.

When I was there a few years ago part of this land was operated under a system of irrigation that had been installed, and some of the finest work was being done in the production of melons, vegetables of different kinds and smaller fruits. It was some of the finest work I have seen carried on by an individual, and I hope it is still going on. I do not know whether we could do any more in there directly than to take advantage of the effort that is being put forward by individuals to select one of them and give him some encouragement, much in the same way as in connection with illustration stations on different farms throughout the country. It might be worth while considering the renting of a few acres from an individual and seeing that he gets returns which will make experimental work possible. There are great opportunities for something of that kind.

Mr. STIRLING: I listened with considerable interest to the minister's remarks with regard to apple growing in the prairies under the previous vote, and I believe those remarks would have been more pertinent to this item. About twenty-five or perhaps twenty years ago I had several times seen the progress being made with these apple trees grown in the shelter belts at Brooks. There were also some trees at a place to the east of Brooks, the name of which I do not remember. The minister now speaks of their now being far more widely grown than they were at that time. Have they attained commercial production at any point?

Mr. GARDINER: I think I could answer that by saying no. I doubt very much if they have, although I was astonished the last time I was at Morden to see the production of crabapples, for example. I doubt very much if one could get a better yield of crabapples anywhere than they have there. Some of the other varieties give very fine yields.

But the difficulties in connection with growing fruit trees on the prairies—or indeed any kind of trees—are so great that I doubt very much if it could be made a commercial venture. This is something which adds to the variety of farm life. People who enjoy that sort of thing take great pleasure out of growing these trees, and from producing fruits and eating their own production. However, it would never become an industry in competition with the Okanagan valley.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: Since hon. members from British Columbia started this epidemic of asking for experimental farms, for the purpose of testing out fruits, I would ask the same for Saskatchewan. While it is true that the experimental farms already established in that province are testing out a certain number of trees, that work is only incidental to their general work. I feel the principal reason so much fruit is now being grown in Saskatchewan is that hardy and early varieties have been discovered. I believe there is room for a great deal of experimental work in connection with trees which ought to be grown in that province.

Therefore I repeat my suggestion to the minister that if arrangements could be made for an experimental farm in the northern part of Saskatchewan on which tests could be made of fruit trees, including apple, crabapple, plum, apricot and small bush fruits, a great deal of valuable work could be done, especially if the station went to the extent of distributing them. Skilled horticulturists could be put on the farm. They could do the budding and grafting on hardy stocks and roots, thereby making it possible for the farmers in the province to secure these trees either free of cost or at a very low cost. If this were done, I believe we would see a tremendous improvement in farming conditions and home life, because it is extraordinary when one sees how fruits in a garden or an orchard improve the pleasure of living on Saskatchewan farms.

Mr. GARDINER: The experimental work done at Morden is utilized by the farmers throughout Saskatchewan. I think it is correct to say that there is very little difficulty in areas from the Qu'Appelle valley north, and down the east side of the province, in growing some fruits. If one is attempting to grow fruit for the purpose of utilizing it I believe he would be well advised to grow raspberries, gooseberries, currants, and things of that kind, because they can be grown easily. In fact, they grow wild in those areas. Under cultivation they produce in abundance. My experience has been that I produce enough in my own garden, and with very little labour, to supply my own requirements and those of my immediate neighbours.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

I was surprised by the growth of raspberries. From what I had read my thought had always been that there was some difficulty in growing raspberries in a garden. However, my great difficulty has been to keep them from covering the whole garden, and taking up the whole room. They produce abundantly, and I have sometimes wondered why more farmers do not grow them.

What has been said by the hon. member for North Battleford is true. One does get a great deal of pleasure from going out into the garden and picking fresh fruits for use. There is no difficulty in growing berries in that area, but most of us do not take the trouble to grow them.

Mr. CHARLTON: I notice an increase of $2,800 in expenditures on telelphones, telegrams and postage for branch farms. This would seem a substantial increase. What is it for?

Mr. GARDINER: It covers thirty-two stations. The amount last year was $8,965, and the expectation is that we shall be doing more this year, requiring a greater amount. It is not too high when one considers the number of stations involved.

Mr. JAENICKE: Is it the intention of the government to extend the experimental farms service? The minister will probably remember that last winter he received a brief from one part of my constituency asking for the establishment of an experimental station in the heavy wheat land district around Eston and Snipe Lake. I have, of course, the minister's reply. Bt since other hon. members have asked for experimental stations in their constituencies I would ask the minister to give a statement as to whether it is to be the government's policy to extend that service.

It is a good service and one which should be greatly extended, so that the farmers can see for themselves the developments which take place. At present the farms are too far apart, so that only the farmers in the immediate vicinity can take advantage of the wonderful developments made at those stations. In the future money should be appropriated to extend this service and to establish more experimental stations throughout the country, not only in the west, but in the east.

Mr. GARDINER: The experimental farms have been established in locations which are supposed to take care of activities in a broad way. We do work in connection with cereals in some places, fruits in another and probably livestock in another. When we go out to deal with soil conditions we establish substations or illustration stations. These we do extend in number. We are now investigating the possibility of establishing one at Eston, or in that area. The plan that we follow wherever it becomes necessary to test out the possibilities of certain soil areas is to put in either a substation or an illustration station to do whatever work is thought necessary. When we feel we have accomplished all that can be accomplished in a particular area we close up the station and move on somewhere else. Our desire is to extend this plan as far as the money that is voted will permit. Of course we are limited by the amount of money which is allotted.

Mr. BLACKMORE: May I on behalf of my constituency express the appreciation of our people for the Lethbridge experimental farm. The minister has indicated that in some instances the people who live around an experimental farm do not appreciate its efforts, but that is not the case with respect to the Lethbridge farm. This farm has taken a leading position for many years in the advancement of agriculture. One important problem with which it had to deal was that of soil drifting, and the device of strip farming, with which the minister is familiar, was developed and introduced by the Lethbridge experimental farm. That has proved to be of great value to the district.

Ever since I can remember, this farm has been under capable management, and it still is. I think it is only fair to the earnest civil servants who have devoted their lives so unselfishly to the welfare of the people that something should be said about their efforts and I take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation.

I urge that this experimental farm be given more and more support as the days go by. As I stated in my previous remarks, this farm is located in an area which offers many problems. It must be prepared to deal with problems arising from the great irrigation projects. There are two sugar beet factories and three outstanding canning factories located in the district. It must deal with such problems as coordinating the activities of the man who raises cattle in what is known as the short-grass cattle country with the activities of the feeders in the beet growing areas and those of the stock raisers up on the Milk river ridge. Men there are raising stock under entirely different conditions from those faced in other parts of the country.

The officials of the Lethbridge experimental farm have never needed to be told about any particular problem; my experience has been that they are always ready to reach out and take a lead.

There are some problems that will still require a good deal of investigation. One is the clutivation of sugar beets. As the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Agriculture both know, it is becoming increasingly difficult to get men to work in the sugar beet areas. Machinery will have to be developed to do this work, and the Lethbridge experimental farm is taking a lead in this connection. I shall not go into detail, but they are developing machinery to handle such operations as loading, planting and cultivating. These machines have been carefully tested and developed and information given out to the farmers, and the farmers have received this gratefully. The Lethbridge experimental farm has cooperated in every way with the officials of the sugar beet factories in the development of this machinery.

There is another problem that exists in the southern part of my riding. It has been found quite feasible to raise certain small fruits and the Lethbridge farm has taken the lead in this connection. They have taken different strains of small fruits and have sought to develop strains that would be suitable for the area.

I have no wish to multiply words by going into too many details, but I want to close by saying that the work of this farm has been deeply appreciated. I commend the minister for the manner in which he has supported this farm. If he will increase the amount of money for this purpose he will have our support.

Mr. BENTLEY: I agree with what the hon. member for Lethbridge has said, only I would apply his remarks to the Swift Current experimental farm with which I am more familiar. If every department of government could show the energy and initiative displayed by the staffs of the experimental farms, we would be very well served. This farm has developed a wonderful spirit of cooperation among the farmers of the area. I was sorry I was not in the chamber when the minister dealt with Rescue wheat, but suffice it to say that this wheat has proved to be an extremely important factor in the country between the constituency of the hon. member for Lethbridge and my own.

Like the hon. member for Lethbridge I should like to mention the neeed for expanding and developing new branches of work in this particular field. When we come to deal with prairie farm assistance we may find it more appropriate to bring up some of these matters, but I should like to refer to soil surveys which I understand would come under this item. I believe the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and also the provincial people, would find it beneficial if there were an extension in the soil-testing facilities so that there could be a speeding up for the benefit of veteran settlers. Quite a few people have not been able to get settled this year, and if this service was speeded up it would prove of great benefit to our soldier settlers.

Mr. LOW: I have learned that the founder of the Beaver Lodge station, Mr. Albright, died just recently, and I should like to have on the record my expression of appreciation of the work that he did in founding and developing that station. He will be remembered particularly for the splendid work he did in horticultural fields as well as for other advisory work he carried on. I understand that in recognition of his great services a scholarship fund has been set up to perpetuate his name.

Mr. McKAY: Would the minister care to indicate the nature of this prairie farm reclamation work?

Mr. GARDINER: Prairie farm rehabilitation work does not come under this item but under item 31. This is work which was done during war time at the experimental farms with funds supplied out of the P.F.R.A. vote. I should explain that a considerable amount has been transferred from the P.F.R.A. vote back into this department; all told it amounts to $400,000 odd. Most of it is in this vote, which results in a direct increase in the P.F.R.A. vote. The old vote was $2,000,000, and the new one is $3,000,000. In addition to the vote being increased by $1,000,000, there is $400,000 odd which was charged up to cultural work before and which is back now under this experimental farms vote.

Mr. McKAY: I presume this vote has to do with the draining of swamps. Is that included?

Mr. GARDINER: No; this is cultural work, the sowing of grasses to prevent the blowing of soil and so forth.

Mr. McKAY: There are stations in southern Saskatchewan doing that work and that is why I wanted a report on the substation in that area. Has this vote anything to do with that work?

Mr. GARDINER: This vote has to do with cultural work, for which $27,000 is asked; district experimental farm, horticultural substations and reclamation surveys, $152,000; grass investigations and coverage and rain surveys, $45,000; tree planting, $45,000; soil research and soil surveys of water erosion, $81,000; agricultural improvement associations and soil-drifting control, $56,000; cultural work on irrigation projects, $31,000; live stock surveys and sheep development, $12,000.

Mr. LOW: I would ask the minister if some studies are being carried forward in the Peace River area, particularly of those lighter soils which were cleared years ago and which through continual cropping have since become subject to erosion, water and wind and other forms of erosion. If these studies are being carried forward now, is the department receiving proper cooperation from the provincial department? We find that erosion is becoming a serious problem in certain areas of the Peace River country.

Mr. GARDINER: We have started some work at Beaver Lodge and two smaller stations we have up there. The work will be carried on and money will be spent there out of this vote for that purpose. As has been suggested, there are certain types of land that are subject to erosion. From what I remember of Beaver Lodge farm, one part is located on the higher land and the other part is down in the flats. Both types of land were secured so that we could experiment with both.

Mr. LOW: Are you getting good cooperation from the provincial officials in carrying forward this work?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): I understand from the explanation given by the minister of this vote, which is a large vote of almost half a million dollars, that it is exclusively for expenditure on the prairies. I would ask the minister if there is any comparable vote applicable to eastern Canada and the maritime provinces. I should like confirmation from the minister that this vote is exclusively for expenditure in the prairies and the west.

Mr. GARDINER: There is considerable experimental work being done in connection with erosion at the four experimental farms in the maritimes, but there is no definite sum for the east such as is set out here for doing work in a fairly large way. I am sure that the hon. member has seen the work that is being done by the farm near his home, which has been very successful in giving information to the people in that area, but probably not as much will be done as under this vote.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Yes, I understand that, but that work comes under the regular vote for the experimental farms in the east and in the west. However, the item before us is a special appropriation of $451,340 applicable to special work on the prairies, and I was asking if there was any analogous appropriation for work of this kind or along this line for eastern Canada?

Mr. GARDINER: Of course the main problem in that area is the dykeland problem, which in a sense is somewhat similar to this. I can discuss the present position in relation to that problem more effectively under the prairie farm rehabilitation vote. I had hopes up until very recently of being able to report to the house that we were hoping to have something done in connection with this problem but I am not so hopeful now. I shall be glad to discuss that when we come to the prairie farm rehabilitation vote.

The particular vote before us is of this size largely because it was work carried on under P.F.R.A. We spent some $400,000 in doing that work, but it had to be done by the staffs of the experimental farm. There was no other way of having it done successfully without building up a second organization which would have overlapped the farm organization itself, so that we decided that it would be best to put this vote in here where the staffs that were utilized partly to carry out the ordinary work associated with the experimental farm vote would be all in the one item. It is work that will have to be carried on separate from irrigation work, which is more properly carried on under P.F.R.A., and everything else associated with water conservation. We have separated the two and put the one in here. If there is to be an act for western Canada similar to the one providing for prairie farm rehabilitation I think we should give consideration to one providing for matters like erosion and that kind of thing for eastern Canada. But I would rather discuss that when we come to the item, because there are some points which I should like to make known to the committee which would give us a better idea of how to proceed.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): I approve the suggestion of the minister, but I would point out that last year there was a vote of $2,000,000 for prairie farm rehabilitation applicable exclusively to the west, and this year there is a vote of $3,000,000, plus $451,340, or a total of $3,451,340 applicable exclusively to the west, subject to any explanation the minister may give us later when dealing with the larger vote. But there is no comparable appropriation to assist agriculture in eastern Canada in any form or for the reclamation of the marshlands. I shall not discuss this further now but wait until the minister is able to give us detailed information on the further vote.

Item agreed to.

Production service—

17. Production service administration, $38,865.

Mr. HATFIELD: I wish to ask if anything is to be done as regards the production of corn and sugar beets in Canada. I understand that we are now importing corn from South America and the United States, and sugar from the West Indies, and that there are large subsidies on these imports. I should like to know why the government does not pass the bonus on to our own farmers and have this corn and sugar beet grown in Canada.

Mr. GARDINER: The Canadian variety of hybrid developed at Harrow was, of course, developed through the experimental farm branch, who are not doing any considerable amount of experimental work in connection with sugar beets. Any work, or the greater part of it, which has been done in connection with sugar beets has been done in the provinces. We have not been promoting sugar beet production to the same extent as the provinces have.

Mr. HATFIELD: Why have we not?

Mr. BRYCE: I want to ask the minister if these veterinary surgeons that are referred to on pages 88 and 89 of the main estimates are what we call hog graders.

Mr. GARDINER: Which item is the hon. member speaking of?

Mr. BRYCE: They are referred to on page 89. The department is going to employ 143 more for the coming year.

Mr. GARDINER: We have not reached that item. Item 17 deals only with production service administration. If the hon. member will refer to the matter when we reach it I shall have all the necessary information.

Mr. BRYCE: What item does it come under?

Mr. GARDINER: I take it that it would come under item 18, health of animals.

Mr. BRYCE: If you go to item 18 you go past it.

Mr. GARDINER: Wait till I understand what the hon. member is talking about. Which part of the vote is it?

Mr. BRYCE: I am asking where the hog graders come in.

Mr. GARDINER: The hog graders come in under marketing service.

Mr. McCUAIG: I have a few remarks to make on item 17, Mr. Chairman. Will you call it six o'clock?

Mr. GARDINER: We still have five minutes to go.

Mr. McCUAIG: Because I am very much concerned about production services now and in the years ahead. I directed a question to the Minister of Agriculture, reported in Hansard, May 14, at page 1497, inquiring if the government had given consideration to retaining feed and seed in country elevators in the west until the present drought spell has let up and the 1946 crop is reasonably assured. The minister's reply in part was:

We shall have plenty of time to deal with that after July.

I do not think the minister gave sufficient consideration to this matter.

Mr. GARDINER: As a matter of fact, I may say that when I myself read it in Hansard I thought I had not given it sufficient consideration. I did not really understand what was being asked. I thought the hon. member was referring to this year's situation.

Mr. McCUAIG: Yes, I understand that. The minister's remarks yesterday were very much closer to the matter. He said, as reported in Hansard, at page 1593:

. . . unless the promise of crop conditions changes materially within the next month we are not going to be concerned so much about finding markets for our farm products as we shall be concerned about feeding the live stock we have.

These remarks are becoming truer every day, especially in the district I live in. This matter is of urgent importance right now, taking into account all things in connection with it. For instance, telegraphic crop reports of the dominion bureau of statistics dated May 14 show precipitation since April 1 below normal, Manitoba 38 per cent, Saskatchewan 41 per cent, Alberta 61 per cent. The same crop reports from Swift Current areas indicate that conditions have deteriorated owing to the dry, windy weather. Soil drifting has reduced the stand on isolated fields throughout that area. Many areas report that recent heavy frosts, in some districts as low as twenty-six degrees, have damaged early-sown grain, particularly barley. The full extent of damage cannot be determined owing to the early spring. Pastures showed good growth but are now turning brown in some districts.

My experience is that a week after the grass starts to turn brown it is bad for grain. This is the 17th of May; the season is getting pretty well on; and I think we should not leave it further to chance. Conditions could be much worse this year than they were, even in 1937. In that event we should be sure that enough seed and feed are kept in the west to take care of requirements for 1947 in the different districts affected. It would be the height of folly to have to ship grain back to those areas that are affected.

The wheat pool summary for the week ended May 10 states that the heavy frosts which were experienced throughout Saskatchewan have resulted in injury to all crops which were appearing above ground and that, because of the continued high winds, which in some areas reached a velocity of fifty miles an hour, damage by soil drifting has, of course, steadily increased, the condition has grown worse, and a period of calmer weather is urgently needed.

Because of the foregoing, seeding has stopped and the acreage is nine per cent, or 1,186,000 acres, lower than the "intentions to plant estimate as at April 30, 1947" issued by the dominion bureau of statistics.

A further report from the Canadian grain statistics, week ended May 2, 1946, shows 12,250,000 bushels of wheat in country elevators in Saskatchewan. Divide this between the 3,500 elevators and it works out to about 3,500 bushels to each elevator, which is very low indeed. And, now that there is a speed-up in shipments in Europe, this amount may be less. I note that the amount of wheat purchased by the farmers in 1937 through the government was over six million bushels. This is more than half the amount of wheat that is in the elevators of Saskatchewan to-day. Again I would urge the government to give this important matter its earliest possible consideration. If wheat has to be held because of crop failure, the government should see to it that prices will not be higher to the farmer than they are now for other domestic needs.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

COMMISSIONS TO AGENTS IN CONNECTION WITH SALES OF WHEAT

The house resumed from Friday, May 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fair for the second reading of bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935.

Mr. BENTLEY: In rising to discuss this bill—

Mr. MACKENZIE: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) was speaking when the debate was adjourned.

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Last Friday evening, Mr. Speaker, I had time to make only a comment or two on the bill introduced by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair). I mentioned that I considered it would be unwise to pass this bill in its present form, and that I thought the bill should receive considerably more discussion and attention before being further dealt with. I also stated that in my opinion the bill went farther than the hon. member actually intended it should go.

I do not wish to take up much of the time of the house this evening, but I should like to review briefly the operations of the Canadian wheat board in relation to the bill now before the house.

In discussing this bill, it may perhaps be advisable if I begin by recalling the circumstances under which the Canadian Wheat Board Act was established in 1935. Canada faced an acute wheat problem in 1935 and the Canadian wheat board act was passed by the Conservative government of that year. The subsection which the hon. member for Battle River now desires to have removed from the wheat board act has been retained without change since the act first was established. In other words, this subsection has been the policy of both the Liberal and Conservative parties.

The subsection of the wheat board act of which the hon. member for Battle River is critical reads as follows:

> In selling and disposing of wheat as by this act provided, to utilize and employ without discrimination such marketing agencies, including commission merchants, brokers, elevator-men, exporters and other persons engaged in or operating facilities for the selling and handling of wheat as the board in its discretion may determine.

Instead, the hon. member for Battle River proposes that the board should:

> In selling and disposing of wheat as by this act provided, to employ such methods, consistent with the provisions of paragraph (b) of this section, as will not involve the payment, directly or indirectly, of any commission or other remuneration to commission merchants, brokers and other marketing agencies.

May I point out one or two of the basic differences between the new clause and the original provisions contained in the wheat board act. The existing section of the act authorizes the Canadian wheat board to employ the usual marketing agencies, notably the elevator companies and the grain exporting firms. The effect of the new regulation, should it be carried into force, would be to prevent any of these agencies from being employed by the board since it no longer would be possible to have any commission or any other remuneration paid to them.

It should be remembered that the Canadian wheat board has already dispensed with futures brokers under the War Measures Act by P.C. 7942 of October 12, 1943, which closed the wheat futures market.

This suggested new bill would go even further as a matter of permanent policy and do away with the services of the elevator companies and the grain exporters.

Passage of this bill would prevent the Canadian wheat board from having the power to pay any handling charge to the elevator companies, including the three western pool organizations which, I imagine, would be put out of business.

I am quite satisfied that the hon. member for Battle River, in introducing this bill, did not anticipate or did not support any such move. But, actually, the bill as before the house would mean just that.

I would like to suggest that careful consideration should be given to any measure which would have these results.

When the Canadian wheat board, as at present constituted, was being debated in this house in 1935, the importance of wheat to the prosperity of the Canadian people was stressed in all parts of the house. Perhaps I may be allowed at this point to sum up some of the main arguments used in that important debate so that we can have this material as a necessary background to our deliberations.

It was pointed out that Canada is the largest exporter of wheat in the world. In 1935 production was greater in both the United States and Russia. Russia has produced as much as one billion bushels of wheat per year. As a matter of fact, I think that figure is very conservative. I believe Russia has produced up to 1,600 million bushels of wheat in a single year. The United States has produced many average crops in excess of 800 million bushels. Both these figures are, of course, larger than the annual yield of the Canadian wheat crop. But all the same the fact cannot be denied that Canada is the largest exporter of wheat, and we are, therefore, primarily concerned in suitable markets and the orderly sale of our wheat on the world market. I may point out that these objectives are included among the primary duties of the Canadian wheat board.

During the disturbed economic conditions which prevailed in the 1930's the marketing of Canadian wheat faced many difficult problems. Many European countries which had formerly been good customers of Canada at that time, embarked upon a policy of economic nationalism. They built tariff walls to shut out our wheat and other products, and bonused their agriculture in the vain attempt to grow self-sufficient in foodstuffs, though clear-minded students of the problem were aware that this policy could not be realized except at a heavy cost. Surpluses of wheat were accumulated in Canada during these disturbed years and it was at last clearly apparent that a new departure in policy had to be made.

May I remind the house for a moment that our experience in wheat in the 1920's had been very different from our experience in the 1930's. World conditions were much more satisfactory from Canada's view point in that period as a great exporting nation than they were in the latter period. The 1920's had witnessed the growth of the three western wheat pool organizations which were destined to play such a notable part in the wheat economy of Canada.

The pools had a clearly defined marketing policy in Canada. This policy consisted in paying their patrons an initial advance at the time of delivery and a subsequent payment when the wheat was finally marketed.

An hon. MEMBER: Not "patrons"—members.

Mr. MacKINNON: Well, call them patrons or members. I will not quarrel with the hon. member on that.

When the period in which the pools made their initial advances came to an end, the Conservative government from 1930 to 1935 embarked on a policy of buying wheat and holding it in order to support the market. No useful purpose would now be served by trying to measure the success or failure which attended this controversial policy. All of us can recall the arguments which were used on both sides during this troubled period. But, in retrospect, this judgment can surely be pronounced, in all fairness, because it is based simply on the record of those times. Despite whatever motives may have inspired the policy of the government, prices for Canadian wheat continued to remain at low levels and the government accumulated wheat stocks which were much larger than it was the normal practice for this country to carry.

The situation became so disturbed that farmer organizations pressed their demands very strongly to have the Canadian government issue a guaranteed minimum advance to wheat producers, and the Canadian wheat board was created in 1935 for this as well as other reasons.

I would like to emphasize that as constituted in 1935, the wheat board was a voluntary organization as far as producers were concerned. Growers had a choice of delivering their wheat to the board and taking the initial advance from the government or of selling their wheat outright on the open market.

On October 12, 1943, the government passed an order in council, P.C. 7942, whereby the Canadian wheat board was changed from a voluntary board to a compulsory board in so far as producers' deliveries were concerned. Consequently, so long as the futures market remains closed, the Canadian wheat board necessarily remains the sole marketing agency for Canadian wheat. The wheat policy, with respect to the fixed initial price as announced by the government on September 27, 1943, and set forth in detail in this order in council, had five main points. First, it involved the discontinuance of trading in wheat futures in the Winnipeg grain exchange. Second, the Canadian wheat board acquired, on behalf of the dominion government, all stocks of unsold cash wheat in Canada on the basis of the closing prices which prevailed on September 27, 1943. Third, the fixed initial price was raised from 90 cents per bushel to $1.25 per bushel No. 1 northern wheat, basis in store Fort William-Port Arthur or Vancouver. Fourth, it involved the closing out of the 1940-41, 1941-42, and 1942-43 wheat board crop accounts, also on the basis of closing market prices as they existed on September 27, 1943. Fifth, it involved the use of government-owned wheat to meet requirements under mutual aid and to provide wheat for subsidized domestic purchasers. It will be evident to the house that the powers vested in the board under this order in council were far-reaching. The Canadian wheat board not only took over all unsold commercial wheat in Canada, but it also became the sole marketing agency to receive wheat from producers.

It will be seen at once that the activities of the board have been greatly enlarged by this extension of its duties and responsibilities. A very great strain has been placed upon the whole organization in these war years. This strain has been particularly heavy upon its accounting staff.

I would like at this time to pay tribute to the work of the Canadian wheat board, to its commissioners and to its entire staff, with special reference to the advisory committee of the wheat board. I am in daily touch with the commissioners of the Canadian wheat board and I can testify to the abnormally heavy responsibilities which the board has been called upon to discharge, and I believe it has met these responsibilities with credit to itself and with satisfaction to the wheat producers and the people of Canada.

I am sure what I have said in this respect will receive the hearty endorsation of every hon. member who is at all familiar with the operations of the Canadian wheat board.

During the discussion in this house that followed my statement of September 19, in the last session, when I outlined the government's wheat policy in its main esentials for the next five years, I took occasion to explain that this statement of government policy made no reference to the continuation or non-continuation of the wheat board. I anticipate and the government anticipates that the Canadian wheat board will continue indefinitely.

It will not have escaped the attention of the members of this house that at different periods the Canadian wheat board, in the interests of wheat producers, has followed different policies with respect to marketing. This flexibility is one of the great assets of the system by which the Canadian wheat board conducts its extensive business. It might be a disservice to wheat producers to require the wheat board at the present time to cling to some arbitrary and inflexible method which would not take into account changing circumstances of the world market together with changing conditions of world supply.

May I emphasize that prior to the war, countries which bought wheat from Canada almost exclusively obtained their wheat supplies through private importers who dealt with the grain exporting firms in Canada. Many believe that it would have been a mistake in policy at that time to confront these importers with a Canadian government monopoly selling agency.

I would like to emphasize once again that it is by no means clear at the present time whether the governments of other countries, which are now employing government purchasing agencies, are pursuing this policy merely as an immediate aftermath of war conditions, or whether they hope to continue their monopoly import agencies. Until the policies of the import countries become more clearly defined, it may be that it would be a mistake on Canada's part to destroy the private trade in Canada. There are people who believe that a government agency can perform all the required services more cheaply than can private firms.

I know that the people who hold this view hold it very strongly, and that they are able to argue strongly in its favour. I would be the last person to deny the sincerity with which these views are maintained.

May I make it quite clear that I do not now propose to enter into a general debate on the virtues of a government agency versus a private firm. My whole argument has been directed toward the fact that this particular moment provides a very bad time in which to define our future policy with rigidity, without taking into account the buying methods to be followed in the future by importing countries, together with changing world conditions in wheat policy and wheat prices. If we have a free hand, we can then take advantage of changing circumstances and not be tied to a rigid policy which, if defined to-day, would mean that it has been defined in advance of more normal world conditions. I think that in suggesting that this house take this action and not run the risk of any premature decision on a matter of such fundamental policy, I will be urging the house to accept a policy which will commend itself to its good judgment.

Throughout the history of the Canadian wheat board the board has employed the facilities of the country elevator companies as agents for the board in taking delivery of producers' wheat. The board has also employed the grain exporting companies in making export sales of wheat under board authorization and in looking after all the details of getting the grain moved from the terminal elevators at the lake-head to eastern seaport positions for export. I would like to stress the fact that an alternative to the use of the country elevator companies and the grain exporting firms would be the expropriation or purchase of the physical facilities of these companies or the setting up of an expensive alternative service. The cost of their administration would have to be set against any savings in the commissions and handling charges that are now paid. It is, therefore, very difficult to ascertain what actual savings could be effected by this means for the benefit of producers.

I have spoken at this length in order to inform the house of some of the main purposes which the Canadian wheat board has sought to fulfil since it was created to deal with the difficult emergency problem in 1935. The wheat board has shown its ability to cope with our wheat problems in peace as in war. It has now built up a vast and valuable body of actual experience which will serve it in good stead in the years that lie ahead. I believe that the wheat policies of the government are well conceived and will advance the best interests of Canadian wheat producers. We enter a period of reconstruction in a sound position. We are free to shape our policy so that changing conditions in the world market can be quickly met. This freedom is a great asset and it should not be lost by any premature decision now on the use of marketing agencies, such as must be involved in the bill now before the house.

The main point which I have tried to make in these remarks is that this motion does not relate exclusively to the operation of the futures market, but in reality concerns many questions affecting the welfare of Canadian farmers. These more general questions are very complicated and very important, and can most appropriately be considered by a committee which will be appointed to examine this whole matter in detail.

I move:

That this bill be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the select standing committee on agriculture for consideration and report.

Mr. BRYCE: I admit that the wheat board is an efficient organization, but I should like to know if it is intended to take over rye and make as good a job of that as has been done with the rest of the grains?

Mr. MacKINNON: I appreciate the reference the hon. member has made to the wheat board and its activities. The hon. member and I have had some brief discussions about rye marketing. I have taken the trouble to go into the matter to a considerable extent and I find that it is not just as simple as possibly the hon. member and I thought it was at one time. The matter of dominion and provincial control enters into the question. I have an open mind in connection with the marketing of rye as far as any connection the Department of Trade and Commerce may have with that matter.

Mr. D. S. HARKNESS (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, the minister has given us an interesting history of the more recent operations of the wheat board, and I find myself in general agreement with what he has said. The preamble to this bill reads:

. . . and to free the board to conduct its sale operations without engaging and paying for such unnecessary service.

[Mr. MacKinnon.]

As the minister has pointed out, rather than freeing the board I think this amendment would have the effect of completely tying the board's hands. The board would have no option as to the procedure it could follow in disposing of wheat. No matter what it might care to do in the way of engaging agents or anything else, it would be prohibited from doing so, and that is why I am against the amendment.

As I understand it, the bill is aimed at doing away with the Winnipeg grain exchange. The Winnipeg grain exchange method of selling grain has been investigated by several commissions. There was the Turgeon commission, and Sir Josiah Stamp was brought over here to investigate the matter. So far as I know, all these commissions recommended that the Winnipeg grain exchange and the method of selling grain through the exchange served a useful purpose at the time the report in each case was made. Nevertheless I do not feel qualified to vote intelligently on this bill as it stands; I feel I do not know enough about the subject to be able to give an intelligent vote. A considerable number of farmers to whom I have talked have attacked the Winnipeg grain exchange vigorously. A considerable number of others, including the most successful and prosperous farmer I know, are all in favour of having the grain exchange continued. I think my position is similar to that of a large number of other members. We do not know enough about the matter to make a good judgment upon it, and therefore I am strongly in favour of the suggestion of the minister—I had jotted down the same suggestion to make myself—that the bill be referred to a committee or some body for further study and recommendations to the house. The situation may have changed since the last reports were made, and we may receive recommendations favouring the abolition of the Winnipeg grain exchange and the sale of grain by that method. On the other hand, recommendations may be the same as we have had from other inquiries in the past.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favour of what the sponsor of this bill (Mr. Fair) intends, and that is to close the Winnipeg grain exchange, but I have some doubt whether the bill will achieve that purpose. My judgment, which is not very good in matters of law, says that the bill would not achieve that purpose, and so I am rising in the hope that when the sponsor speaks he will defend that point. I think it would assist some of us in coming to a conclusion whether or not to send this bill to a committee. Personally I believe it would be wise to let the bill go to a committee, where it could be more thoroughly debated. If the bill would achieve the purpose he has in mind—and I should like him to deal with that point—then I certainly would vote for the bill.

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have followed closely the arguments that have been made in this debate. I know the sponsor of the bill very well indeed, and I should like to say that no member of the house has done more on behalf of agriculture than the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair). Yet in my opinion I do not believe that the bill as drafted conveys his real intentions. As has been pointed out in the house by other speakers, in law it does not matter how good your intentions might be, and with that thought in mind I am pleased that the minister has moved that the bill be referred to the agriculture committee. I am doubly pleased because it will be the means of calling the agriculture committee of the House of Commons together. That committee has not sat in this parliament, despite that this is the second session of this parliament.

In view of other debates that we have had in this house, I should like to have seen the agriculture committee called together so that we could have before it the heads of farm implement companies and officials of the wartime prices and trade board, who, I think, should have been brought before the committee before decisions were made by the government, for instance, with regard to dropping the subsidy on milk and increasing the price of farm implements.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Any member of the committee on agriculture can convene it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I am glad that it is to be convened anyway.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: May I ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to the bill before the house.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I wish to compliment the minister upon the tribute he paid to the wheat board officials. They had a great task to perform, and any grievance that I may have had with the wheat board was not concerned with its officials because I know they had to carry out government policy.

The minister has just spoken of the order in council that was passed in 1943. It is strange to recall in that connection that in March of the very same year the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and I moved a resolution similar to the order in council made six months later, asking that the wheat board handle wheat, oats and barley and have that responsibility during the war years. Despite what my colleague has said, the Turgeon commission in its findings did say that the grain exchange could not render a useful purpose during the war period. It is strange, I say, that the order in council which the government put into effect on September 28, 1943, was the very proposal which the government had voted down in March of that year when it was moved in a resolution by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and myself.

The wheat board has, as I say, done good work. But I have one little grievance with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon). I asked a question last fall, in 1945, about the payment of participation certificates for the 1943 crop year, and the minister's answer then was that the payments would be made in June or July, 1946, but he could not say how much the payments would be per grade because the returns had not yet come in from the milling companies. Yesterday, I again asked a similar question of the minister, and he said he was convinced that the payments would still be made in June but that it was a matter of bookkeeping and that a great deal of statistical work was involved. While that is true, surely if the wheat board had a free hand they could announce to the producers how much the payments per grade would be when made. It is no mere idle curiosity that prompts this question, because I know a great many people in my constituency who borrow money every year to carry on their agricultural operations. They have to pay interest to the bank and meet other obligations; and to enable them to make their financial arrangements for the next few months they desire to know how much these payments will be per bushel on each grade. If that announcement could be made it would be helpful. The farmers know how many bushels they marketed and could then calculate how much they would receive in payment from the wheat board. I ask the minister to make such an announcement.

I support him in his motion to have the bill sent to the committee on agriculture. As I have said, I am in sympathy with the sponsor of the bill and I think in committee we could iron out the difficulties.

Mr. McIVOR: Mr. Speaker, the McIvor clan is noted for its honesty and efficiency, and the wheat board is headed by another son of the clan.

Mr. G. H. CASTLEDEN (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, the motion which has been made by the minister is probably the first announcement of the funeral of the bill. It is going to the limbo of the lost, to a committee where I expect it will die for the rest of the session. I hope, however, that the committee will be called and that what I anticipate will not happen. I hope the bill will come back here. If the bill should die in committee, I trust that the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair) will introduce a similar bill at the first opportunity.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Mr. Speaker, I must object to any hon. member construing in advance the actions of any committee of the house.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I was merely saying that I hoped this bill would escape the fate which had befallen other bills sent to committees. If the hon. member introduces another bill I hope that it will permit the grain board to use the pools of western Canada in handling and selling all grain. If that happens, any profits which result or any excess charges which the pools make out of such operations, or commissions, will be distributed to the thousands and hundreds of thousands of farmers who form part of these pools and whose efforts produce the grain, instead of the money going into the hands of wealthy commission merchants and gamblers on the grain exchange.

I suppose this motion will pass the house. I will just say that I should like to see it pass with this amendment, that pools shall have that power and that it can be used by the wheat board; and I would express the hope that the hon. member for Battle River, if he brings in a bill to that effect, will get a great deal of support. I shall be interested to see how hon. members on the other side of the house will vote.

Mr. SENN: I want to ask the minister one question: is it intended that if this motion is carried and the bill goes to a committee, that committee will have the power to call witnesses?

Mr. MacKINNON: That is certainly my understanding.

Mr. ROBERT FAIR (Battle River): I wish to make it clear to-night, as I believe I made it definitely clear on other occasions, that I do not want to be a party to the weakening of the wheat pools of western Canada, that I am not a supporter of the grain exchange, and that I want the wheat board to operate and handle all kinds of grain, not only wheat. On April 30 and May 7, when this bill was under discussion, I began to wonder whether I was some sort of criminal in view of the way the discussion ran on the other side of the house. I wish to point out that I was in favour of a wheat board for Canada at the end of the first great war, even then realizing that the board was created to hold the price of wheat down rather than to send it up to inflated levels. I was one of those who supported the move to have the wheat board continued, and when we failed to persuade the government of the day to continue the board I was one of those who began organizing the Alberta wheat pool and helping in the best way I could similar organizations in the other provinces. I was one of the first farmers in my district to sign a wheat pool contract; I signed the first and second series; and since that time I have delivered practically 100 per cent of the grain I have grown to the wheat pool organization. I am still doing that. Perhaps that may clear up any misunderstanding which may exist at the present time as to where I stand in connection with the wheat pools and the wheat board organization. I believe the staff of the wheat board to-day is a very good one. I did not say that the other night; I did not think it was necessary because I felt that my stand was well known and did not require a Philadelphia lawyer to figure it out, as would be necessary to find out just what some other hon. members have been driving at in their speeches since the bill was introduced.

The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) spoke in support of the wheat board, and I was very glad to hear him speak as he did, even though he ridiculed to a certain extent the stand I have taken in the framing of the wheat board amendment. Let me say that I am a farmer and proud of it, and that I did not myself try to frame that amendment; I went to a member of the legal profession to have it framed. Let me again make it clear that I have no objection whatever to any amendment of the bill which will bring about the results which I desire to have brought about, namely to put the Winnipeg grain exchange permanently out of operation. In his concluding remarks the hon. member for Provencher had this to say: Hansard, page 1292—I believe it places him definitely against the operation of the grain exchange:

> All of which reminds us of the story of the buyer working for a group of millers who came west to watch the wheat markets. After a few days he wired his principals to this effect:
> "Some think wheat will go down and some think it will go up. I think so, too. Whatever you do will be wrong. Act at once."

That describes accurately, I believe, the operations of the Winnipeg grain exchange as they affect the farmers of Canada. The little fellows who were and still are compelled to sell their grain during the first three or four months of the new crop year are the ones who suffer and pay the penalty of our keeping in operation the Winnipeg grain exchange.

Later in the debate, on May 7 we had an oration from the hon. member for Rosthern

(Mr. Tucker). He discussed this question with much more heat than light, and unless I interpret his remarks incorrectly, his speech was a conglomeration of contradictions. Here we have him getting things mixed up a little bit. First of all he had this to say: Hansard, page 1296:

Before dealing with the terms of the bill I should like to make it clear that as far as I am concerned I am now, and have been ever since I have been in public life, favourable to the policy of the wheat board handling wheat and coarse grains, and doing so exclusively.

A little later on he said:

I would much rather see this grain handled by the cooperative organizations which have been set up to take it from the farmer, to ship it to the east, to handle it in the terminal elevators and to ship it abroad than by any agency of government, no matter how well it is handled. Therefore I have no hesitation in saying that, whenever it is a choice between cooperation and state socialism, I will take cooperation every time.

Some people might interpret that as political. I am not suggesting whether it is or not.

A little further on he had this to say, at page 1298:

The watchword of every man representing a grain farming constituency in this house should be, in the light of the grand record of the wheat board, "Hands off the wheat board; do not interfere with them; give them a chance to carry out the work they have been doing so well in the past and, if they require it, give them even more power to deal with grain that they have no right to deal with exclusively to-day." In other words, add to their rights; do not interfere with them.

That, in my opinion, is a contradiction.

An hon. MEMBER: A straw man.

Mr. FAIR: Somebody here says, "a straw man." Well, the hon. member for Rosthern seems to be an expert at setting them up and then knocking them down.

Mr. TUCKER: Will the hon. gentleman answer a question?

Mr. FAIR: The hon. gentleman did not extend to me the courtesy of answering a question I put to him the other day.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. TUCKER: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. FAIR: The hon. member would not permit me to ask him a question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. TUCKER: I permitted the hon. gentleman to ask me a question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair) may not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. TUCKER: I permitted the hon. member to ask me a question.

Mr. FAIR: Mr. Speaker, the other night when the hon. gentleman was saying things he perhaps should not have said I asked for the privilege of asking a question. He refused, and I have no hesitation whatever in extending the same courtesy to the hon. member for Rosthern that he extended to me.

Mr. TUCKER: Did the hon. member know when he introduced this bill that the effect would be to prohibit the grain and wheat pools from handling grain under the direction of the wheat board? Did he not know this when he introduced the bill?

Mr. FAIR: Mr. Speaker, I am not taking any notice whatever of the hon. gentleman. He is not knocking me off my track, and he is not for any purpose whatever going to prevent me from introducing this bill year after year, so long as the people send me here, until it is adopted.

Mr. TUCKER: Why do you not answer the question?

Mr. FAIR: Here is some more that he had to say:

Among the great marketing agencies operating in western Canada are the grain marketing pools. They are the ones which are handling to a great extent the grain of western Canada. I take it from the bill presented by the hon. member that he would deprive these great cooperative marketing agencies of the right to handle the grain of the farmers for the wheat board.

In my opinion the bill deals with commissions and the grain exchange and not as suggested by the hon. member for Rosthern.

Mr. JOHNSTON: He knew it too.

Mr. FAIR: Farther on the hon. member said:

I would say that if this bill passes it will not eliminate the grain exchange at all. They can still go on dealing in futures and so on. The only thing it would do would be to prevent the various cooperative agencies, such as the wheat pool and other agencies, from handling the grain of the farmer at the behest and under the direction of the wheat board.

I have made my stand clear in this respect. If you do not pay the commission merchants or brokers on the grain exchange any wages, or salaries, or commissions, as we are doing to-day, then I think the grain exchange will fold up very soon; therefore, what I wanted to accomplish by this bill will soon be done indirectly if not directly. I am concerned with results, not methods.

The hon. member then went on to say:

If he wants to do away with the grain exchange let him bring in a bill that would do away with it. Let him be outright and straightforward . . .

I wonder whether anybody in this house has been more fair and straightforward and outright than I have been since I came here ten years ago. I was born Fair and I intend to live up to the name until the end of my days.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Fair and warm.

An hon. MEMBER: Fair and cool.

Mr. FAIR: I continue:

Let him be outright and straightforward in his methods instead of striking at the great co-operative marketing agencies . . .

This is said about somebody who has actually helped to organize the great cooperative agency, somebody who has poured practically all the grain he has grown from 1923 up to the present time into the handling facilities of the Alberta wheat pool. He is now accused here by somebody for purposes best known to himself, of trying to destroy these agencies. It is about time that people who sent him here found out just what their member means by an attitude of this kind.

Mr. TUCKER: Actions speak louder than words.

Mr. FAIR: I continue:

Let him be outright and straightforward in his methods instead of striking at the great co-operative marketing agencies, which we in the west, including myself, are so proud of, and which I was one of the first to join when they started to get going.

Then farther along the hon. member said:

We are being asked to vote for a bill the purpose of which is to deprive the wheat board of the right to employ the marketing agencies which now exist throughout western Canada and other parts of Canada as well.

Mr. TUCKER: Is that not right?

Mr. FAIR: No, and the hon. member knows it too.

Mr. TUCKER: That is the effect of the bill, and the hon. member cannot deny it.

Mr. FAIR: Then, again, the hon. member said:

This government in introducing and having passed by this house the Agricultural Prices Support Act has gvien its approval to such a policy. I should like to put on the record section 9, subsection 2 of that act which was passed in 1944 and which, I take it, is still the policy of the government as enacted by this parliament.

I wish to put another section on record. Perhaps the hon. gentleman conveniently forgot about it when he quoted section 9, subsection 2. Paragraph (a) of subsection 2 of chapter 29 of the statutes of 1944 has this to say:

"Agricultural product" means any natural product of agriculture except wheat—

And I repeat that I was dealing particularly with wheat. The paragraph continues:

—designated by the governor in council, and includes processed meat, dairy and poultry products if so designated.

I return to the hon. member's address where he said:

There is a definite pronouncement of a fair deal for the farmers of this country. As far as I am concerned I hope and believe the government will never waver from its policy of a fair and just deal for the farmer.

Mr. TUCKER: Is it not a fair and just deal?

Mr. FAIR: That is exactly what I am trying to get. I am trying to put the speculators, gamblers and everything connected with them out of business, regardless of whether they hate me for it. Then the hon. member went on to say:

The farm leaders of western Canada have upheld the policy of price stabilization and loyally supported it.

The farm organizations and most individual farmers of Canada have also upheld the wheat board and have condemned the operations of the Winnipeg Grain exchange.

Rather than be accused of talking out the bill I shall take my seat.

Amendment (Mr. MacKinnon) agreed to and bill referred to the committee on agriculture.

WHEAT

PAYMENT ON 1943 PARTICIPATION CERTIFICATES

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): If I may be permitted, the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) asked me a question on Thursday regarding the wheat participation payments on the 1943 crop. With the consent of the house I should like to give an answer. The government through the Minister of Trade and Commerce, under whose department the Canadian wheat board comes, has been urging for a long time for the amount of the payments that will be made under these participation certificates for 1943. We are advised that it is a physical impossibility for the staff to get these cheques out any earlier than they have advised us they could do it. The earliest day they tell us they can get them out is June. We are anxious to get the information the hon. gentleman asks for to the producers of Canada at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is not my question; my question had to do with the amounts.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I rise to a question of order on procedure.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): The delay—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. There is nothing before the house. The amendment has carried.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Revert to the ordinary business of the house, sir.

SUPPLY

The house resumed in committee of supply, Mr. Golding in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Production service—

17. Production service administration, $38,865.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I should like to ask a few questions regarding the production of hogs in Canada. A few years ago the government introduced a policy of paying the freight on all feed from western Canada to eastern Canada, and I believe the milling companies took advantage of this. We also paid the freight charges on the brans and shorts which they obtained in the milling of the grain into flour and mill feed. At that time it was of tremendous importance to have as much production as possible. The people working on the farms in the east required some assistance, I presume, in getting feeds down where they could be used to feed hogs. Is the Canadian taxpayer going to continue to be put in the position where he shall have to pay the freight on feed from the west where it is grown to eastern Canada where it is fed, or will the grain be left in the west to be fed where it is grown? It is surely in the interest of economy to feed that grain in the west where it is grown. Does the minister intend to continue the policy that is already in force, or what are the plans with regard to it?

Mr. GARDINER: The suggestion was made that the millers took advantage of the policy to do certain things. The policy itself was drafted in such a way that the part of the wheat which enters into the feeding of live stock was provided for along with other feed grain; and whoever may be shipping the feed east from western Canada, if that feed is to be paid for as part of the policy of maintaining prices, then the bran and shorts which are fed to live stock have to be paid for just the same as oats, barley or any other grain.

The policy was based in the first place on the idea that men in eastern Canada, as far east as the maritime provinces, did not get sufficient returns from the production of hogs at prices then obtaining even to pay the cost of production. I think every hon. member from the maritimes will agree that this contention on the part of the maritime farmers was true. I do not know whether every hon. member from the west thinks as I do in regard to these matters, but I think it is just as important that the farmer in the maritime provinces, in Quebec or in Ontario should be able to get his cost of production as it is that a farmer anywhere else should do so. For a long period the farmers of the maritime provinces have not been able to produce enough hogs or beef to feed themselves. Their production does not enter directly, though it may indirectly, into the trade which results in our sending very considerable quantities of beef and pork to Britain; but on balance there is always an importation of our meat products into the maritime provinces to help feed their population. So what we are really doing, and what we were at least asked to do before the war, was to assist in covering the enormous freight charges which must be paid on feed grain going from the western prairies to eastern Canada, particularly to the maritimes.

There is another way of accomplishing the same end, and I must say it was the other way that was advocated for a long period of years; that is, controlling freight rates downward to the point where it would be possible for grain to be shipped east. The position is that we have a lower freight rate on grain going directly through to Britain than on grain going to the maritime provinces. That is a part of our freight structure which is very well understood in this house. It was always contended that we should lower the freight rate to the level imposed on grain going directly overseas. That position I think was placed once or twice before what was then called the railway board, now the board of transport commissioners, and the question was argued out as to whether the freight rates should be reduced in that way. After war broke out, however, we undertook to do it in another way, by paying the freight on the grain from Fort William east, and paying the freight on the grain from Calgary and Edmonton west to British Columbia, in order to make it possible for the prices board to maintain the price ceiling, at the same time making it possible for those on the farms to produce under the price ceiling. That is why the policy was established; and I suggest that the whole principle of controls is involved in what is proposed here. To take the freight payments off grain, including bran and shorts, coming to eastern Canada would compel an increase in the prices of the products produced through the feeding of live stock, which in turn would involve increases in wages and everything involved in the price control set-up.

As to what we should do in western Canada, I have not figured it out exactly, but it is often said that we produce enough wheat to feed thirty million people, and we produce enough coarse grains to feed far more live stock than we can ever persuade western farmers to feed for any purposes. Unless we produce far more grain than we can ever persuade western farmers to feed, we can never get the total production of live stock in this country up to where it otherwise would be. After all, I think it is more essential that farmers, whether they live in the east or the west, should cooperate with one another than that we should talk a great deal about others not cooperating with us. If we are to expect cooperation from other sections of the population, then at least we must expect to cooperate among ourselves. I would not join in any criticism of the western farmer for growing feed grain which cannot possibly be grown in eastern Canada, in order to make it possible for eastern farmers to feed more hogs and produce more beef and dairy products. That is one way we are asked to cooperate in order to keep up production and make possible higher returns to the eastern farmers; it is not done to benefit the millers or any others, and I believe the taxpayers of Canada would agree that something should be done along this line. If we cannot persuade the farmers to do something of that kind in order to bring about cooperation and make this possible then I am afraid we are going to lose much of the cash return farmers right across Canada have been obtaining as a result of the policies that have been followed; and I would hope that representatives of rural seats in any part of Canada would not begin to advocate a policy of insisting that in the first place we grow only as much coarse grain as can be fed upon our farms, and in the second place that we should not cooperate fully in making it possible for farmers in other parts of Canada to produce to at least as good advantage as we can produce in the west.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I do not want the minister to put into my mouth words I did not say. I asked whether it was the intention of the government to continue the policy.

Mr. GARDINER: If you had just asked me that you would have been given a different answer.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I was also giving some facts; and the fact is that the farmer of the west will raise more hogs if it pays him to do so. It is a further fact that the production of hogs in western Canada has gone down to a far greater extent than the production of coarse grains has gone down. To-day the farmers of the west are dropping out of hog production to a tremendous extent, but you would get a very heavy production of hogs in the west if you would make it profitable for the farmer to raise them.

Mr. ARGUE: I have not found the farmers of western Canada opposed to the government paying freight on feed coming east in order that the farmers of eastern Canada may have a chance to feed some live stock. But the farmers of the west feel that if the eastern farmer is allowed the benefit of free freight on grains to be fed to his live stock, the farmer in the west should have the freight paid on his live stock when they are sent east, in order that the price on the Moose Jaw market, for instance, will be exactly the same as the price on the Toronto market. They think that would make it fair for the eastern farmer and make it possible for the western farmer to also produce some live stock. I think the farmer who grows feed grain in western Canada, and who wishes to feed it to his own hogs, should have an additional price paid to him to take care of the difference in the cost of his feed grain, as compared with the cost of a man in western Canada who is a feeder, and who can obtain grain in western Canada at from ten cents to twenty cents a bushel cheaper than can the farmer who has to consider the cost of his grain at the same figure as the elevator price.

A resolution was passed last January by the Saskatchewan agricultural society asking that the price of hogs be increased to the farmer who feeds his own grain to his hogs, to the extent of $3 per hog. If these things were done, then I think the farmer in western Canada would have an equal opportunity to raise hogs and live stock, and get the same kind of benefit from the government's policy as to-day the eastern farmers are obtaining.

Mr. GARDINER: This question has been under discussion a number of times, and probably this is a good time to say something which may result in our thinking a little more clearly with regard to it than sometimes we appear to do.

I believe if hon. members will examine the record they will find that the western farmer does do better than the eastern farmer. This suggestion so often made that the western farmer does not do as well as the eastern farmer is not borne out by the facts. There are more farmers in eastern Canada than there are in western Canada; but if one takes the cash income of the farmers who live in the two sections of Canada he will find that, even in some of the most difficult years we had in western Canada, our returns per farmer were higher than were the returns per farmer in eastern Canada.

They have expenses, the same as we have. I have been operating a family-sized farm in Ontario for some years. I have also been operating one in Saskatchewan. They were both family-sized farms, the one in Saskatchewan being a half-section at that time, and the one in Ontario 150 acres. I took more off the Saskatchewan farm every year than I did off the Ontario farm. I interchanged the stock between the two farms in order to prove to my own satisfaction that it was not just the breed of hogs that I had out west that gave me more money. I produced the same type of hog out there that I did on the farm down east, and made just as much per hog in western Canada throughout the war-time period as I could make in eastern Canada.

I even went through the experience of shipping a carload of grain from western Canada, under these arrangements now being discussed. That carload of grain I grew on the farm out west, shipped it to the farm down east and fed it to live stock. Perhaps I should say I saw it fed, or that sometimes I saw it fed. However, I did see some of it fed. I know, too, that the arrangements made by the government—and I know this from experience—put the farmer in the eastern part of Canada in the same position as if he had grown the grain in western Canada.

The arrangements were supposed to figure out in that way, and they actually worked out in that way, when the actual transaction is carried on of growing the grain on a farm in the west, shipping it to a farm in the east and feeding it to live stock in the east.

It is true that under our arrangement of paying the freight and giving other assistance, as we were doing at the time, one can lay grain down on the eastern farm and feed it there at just about the same cost as though he fed it back on the farm in Saskatchewan. That is what I tried to do, and that is the way it works out.

It was as a result of that that we got the production of live stock in Canada which we did get. The suggestion is made that if you pay a higher price for hogs you should produce more of them. I would ask hon. members to go around and take a look into farmers' bins in Saskatchewan. You will find that some of them are carrying wheat—and that includes some persons who have been discussing wheat to-night. But you will find, too, that right on those same farms there is not much left in the way of oats and barley. Oats and barley are still being fed to hogs.

I am quite sure the leader of the C.C.F. party would not agree with some of the things said along these lines within the past few minutes, because he was most outspoken in his opinion that we ought to be sending more food to Europe. The only kind of food Europe is asking for at the present time is grain—and grain in greater quantities, particularly wheat.

No one will suggest that at this time, as we did two years ago, we ought to be feeding 90 million bushels of our wheat each year, and that we ought to be sending 150 million or 160 million more bushels of it to the United States to be fed. That was when they wanted meat in Europe.

But to-day they want wheat in Europe. As everyone knows, it takes about five pounds of wheat to produce a pound of pork. A pound of pork will not keep a man alive any longer than a pound of wheat. The result is that we are being asked not to fed wheat to hogs. Rather, we are being asked to send that wheat to Great Britain or to Europe.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: We all agree with that.

Mr. GARDINER: If you agree with that, then agree with this, that with no wheat to feed, and with very little oats and barley to feed, you cannot have more hogs than before, no matter what the price is.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: They are feeding more in the east.

Mr. GARDINER: Some of them. But would you suggest that we should have kept our feed out of the east?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: No.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, then, the fact is that we are just feeding the same number of hogs in the east as we fed on an average before the war. In other words, we are just supplying the market we have always supplied, and we think we shall always be able to supply. We are growing feed grains in western Canada to sell them just as they are grown. If we can produce these goods to sell them, I do not think anyone out west wants to advocate a policy of feeding all coarse grains we grow in western Canada on our own farms. In the first place, we would not do it, so why advocate that policy?

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: May I say a few words to demonstrate how this policy works out? I hope it will be considered straight thinking. When I grow barley on my farm in Saskatchewan and sell it to an elevator I get in the neighbourhood of fifty cents for the barley and fifteen cents for the bonus, making a total of sixty-five cents a bushel. Obviously, if I feed that barley to pigs on the farm I am feeding 65-cent barley. If, however, I have too much barley and I sell a carload of it to my farm friends in the east, they buy that barley for fifty cents a bushel, not sixty-five cents, because they have the freight paid, and because the bonus is paid to me as the grower, at the elevator, when my carload of barley is shipped.

Mr. GARDINER: They do not buy it at fifty cents.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: I am trying to feed pigs on 65-cent barley on my western farm, and I am 2,000 miles away from tidewater. My hog price on the Winnipeg market is about sixteen cents, and I enter into direct competition with my eastern friends who are right on tide-water and who are feeding their pigs on 50-cent barley.

Mr. GARDINER: No, that is not correct. The ceiling price is 64¾ cents at Fort William.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: How does it work out?

Mr. GARDINER: It is only the freight from Fort William east that is paid. But he pays 64¾ cents for barley. That is within one quarter of a cent of the figure you gave.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: Does that sixty-four cents not include freight?

Mr. GARDINER: No. No freight is paid west of Fort William; the freight is paid to Fort William; they get barley at 64¾ cents at Fort William, and then we pay the freight from there on.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: With that rate and with barley costing sixty-four cents you are still ahead of the game.

Mr. GARDINER: A quarter cent ahead of your figure.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: The market in which he sells his hogs is a 19-cent market. Someone will correct me if I am wrong, but there is at least a two-cent spread between the price of his hogs and the price of mine, and there is a significant spread between the price of his feed and the price of my feed.

Mr. WRIGHT: I agree with the hon. member who says that there should be some adjustment in the freight rates on feed which existed before the war. It was an anomaly that we should have a freight rate structure in Canada that forced the farmers of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to pay more for western oats and barley than was paid by feeders in Sweden and Denmark. That freight rate structure certainly created a hardship for feeders in Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces. I cannot quite agree with the present policy of paying all the freight east of Fort William. The whole freight rate structure of Canada should be gone into thoroughly so that feeders in eastern Canada can obtain feed grown in western Canada at prices which will permit them to meet the competition of other countries which will be in the market in the very near future.

Three-quarters of Alberta, most of Manitoba and probably one-quarter of Saskatchewan have been trying to diversify their agriculture. The people in these areas felt that growing grain was not good enough. But this diversification is being killed by the present policy of the government. Statistics will show that hog production in Alberta, at least in the part of Saskatchewan that I represent, and in Manitoba has decreased in a much greater proportion than it has in Ontario, Quebec or the maritimes.

Mr. GARDINER: It went up more.

Mr. WRIGHT: We wanted it to go up more and it should have stayed up. The minister has defended that policy in this house for years and yet now he has turned around and is killing it.

Mr. GARDINER: I am still doing it on my farm and I am making money.

Mr. WRIGHT: The general consensus in western Canada is that what the minister states is incorrect. He has had letters; I have had letters and other members from western Canada have had letters to that effect. I ask the minister to consider seriously putting into effect a policy which will maintain diversification in western Canada. It is absolutely necessary that we have a stabilized agriculture in eastern Canada. At the present time the eastern farmer is in a precarious position because the feed he is using is being obtained on a subsidized market. If the government continues to follow the policy which was outlined yesterday of cutting off these subsidies just as quickly as possible, the eastern farmer will find himself in a worse position than we are in in western Canada.

Mr. GARDINER: Since we are on this item I should like to put on the record the very letter which came to me from the same individual.

Mr. WRIGHT: It is not from the same individual.

Mr. GARDINER: It is the same kind of thing in any event.

Mr. WRIGHT: It sets out what I maintain is in the minds of seventy-five per cent of the farmers in the area.

Mr. GARDINER: We will read it and see if we cannot learn something about it. This letter comes from a gentleman in Codette in the constituency of the hon. member for Melfort, and he sent it forward to me. It reads:

I am enclosing statement for hogs shipped and would you mind showing same to James Gardiner and ask him if he is shipping any from his farm and if he gets the same kind of a deal. All these hogs were pure bred and from the same sow.

Mine were all pure bred and from the same sow, as I mentioned last night.

I had been getting at least fifty per cent grade A before the price went up. I have sow and eleven young pigs about three weeks old and I have a notion to knock them all on the head and sell the sow.

That is just about what the other fellow said; they must have got together.

I am feeding them seventy cent barley—

He is getting five cents more than my friend.

—those that I am getting ready for market and if a farmer came to get barley from me he gets a rebate of fifteen or twenty cents.

Which he does not.

Why in heck don't those who feed their own barley get the same deal? No more hogs for me, to heck with them.

Fortunately he sent along his statement.

Mr. COLDWELL: How does he spell "heck"?

Mr. GARDINER: H-e-c-k. He had six hogs. There were no A's; there was one B1, and five C's, or lights. He got $26 for the B1, which shows it was not a very good one. It was really lighter than he needed to feed as a B1.

Mr. WRIGHT: It was about the weight they are asking for.

Mr. GARDINER: Not what they are asking for, or he would have got more money. He received $114 for the other five, or about $23 each. As I said last night, I sent ten down and I got my statement just about the same time as this one came in. Eight of mine were A's and B's and I averaged $29. Two of them were heavies, and I averaged $32 on those. That is the answer to his question as to whether I sent any down and whether I got the same kind of treatment. Why did I get different treatment from what he got?

An hon. MEMBER: That is the question.

Mr. GARDINER: That is the question and it is easily answered. He had six hogs and, if the statement made by the hon. member for Melfort is correct, he is not short of feed grain.

Mr. WRIGHT: It is not the same man.

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member said that the farmers in his section of the country were not short of feed grain.

Mr. WRIGHT: That is correct.

Mr. GARDINER: This is one of them. He is not short of feed grain, but he did not feed these hogs enough grain.

Mr. WRIGHT: Because he was losing money.

Mr. GARDINER: He lost money because of the manner in which he fed them and sold them. The other man said that if he could get $32 for his hogs he could make money even at the prices which this man says barley is worth, which it is not. Barley is not worth anything like seventy cents a bushel; it is more nearly worth the amount the hon. member was speaking about a few moments ago.

Mr. WRIGHT: It is worth seventy-one cents at the elevator.

Mr. GARDINER: On his farm it is not worth seventy cents. It is worth what he would have to pay for it if he went to buy feed.

Mr. WRIGHT: It is worth what he can get for it.

Mr. GARDINER: You can take it that way to serve your purpose. I know one or two men who were feeding hogs around Melfort. They were buying their feed, and you will find that they are paying just about the price that I am indicating for barley. If the man did not have the barley he could buy it for the price I am indicating and feed the hogs. The fellow who sold the barley got fifteen cents from the government, and the purchaser got the barley at fifteen cents less than the market price. In other words, he could have bought the barley and fed it to these hogs to what they should have been fed before putting them on the market. That kind of farmer in my part of the country is called one of two things. Either he is lazy, or he does not know how to take care of the feeding of hogs. I say that without fear of contradiction.

There are people who get out of the feeding of hogs for other reasons. I was talking to a good dairyman in this district in the last three days and he mentioned why he was getting out of feeding hogs. He said something like this: "I had thirty hogs last year and I have none this year." As a matter of fact, he had just come in off a tractor at nine o'clock in the evening and he said, "I had the choice of coming in about five and milking the cows and feeding the pigs and then going back to the tractor, or I could stay out with the tractor until nine and then come in and feed the pigs after nine o'clock." He told me that he was making money when he was feeding hogs, but he said, "I just cannot stand that long a day." In other words, you have a combination of two things: first there is a shortage of feed; next there is a shortage of labour, and farmers cannot, no matter what the price is, feed any more hogs than they have been feeding in Canada during the past year. There are two problems in front of us. One is to get more feed grown and the other is to make more labour available to farmers. If we can solve those two problems I am quite sure that we can have more hogs produced even at present prices. But I do not think you can get it in any other way. Even raising the price, and leaving the labour and feed grain situation as it is, would not get you any more hogs.

Mr. LOW: Would the minister clarify one point, because there seems to be some misapprehension about this thing in certain districts in Alberta. A feeder who obtained a feeder permit book to buy feeds last fall arranged with a producer for his supply over the winter and agreed to pay three cents premium on oats when oats were selling at about fifty cents; that was the market price. When the oats were finally delivered and the price paid to the producer, fifty-three cents, representing a premium of three cents over the market price, who should have to make application for the subsidy?

Mr. GARDINER: The only man entitled to make application for the payment of ten cents a bushel on oats and fifteen cents on barley is the man who sells it. The man who sells the barley gets that extra ten or fifteen cents a bushel because he sold it. If one farmer sells it to another, it is the man who sells that gets the subsidy, not the man that bought it. The fellow who sells his oats or sells his barley instead of feeding it to hogs, and then delivers his hogs light, gets the extra fifteen cents on barley, but he has to balance that extra fifteen cents against the lighter hogs.

Mr. LOW: In this case the producer was paid three cents over the market price.

Mr. GARDINER: Where did he get it from?

Mr. LOW: The feeder paid him directly. The grain was not sold through the elevator.

Mr. GARDINER: The farmer can sell his grain to his neighbour, and if he is prepared to pay another three cents he can.

Mr. LOW: In this particular case that I mention, is the producer entitled to make application for and to receive the subsidy of ten cents?

Mr. GARDINER: If he sold it over an elevator scale or over a scale that had been recommended to the wheat board and they had designated it as a scale on which it could be weighed and had given a certificate, even if the scale was out in the country on a man's farm, he could draw ten cents on oats and fifteen cents on barley.

Mr. SENN: Some suggestion was made a little while ago that the western hog producer would not get as much for his hogs because he is farther from the seaboard. But is it not a fact that the meat board when shipping to Britain took measures to equalize freight rates as between east and west to the seaboard.

Mr. GARDINER: There is a lower rate on through freight, whether it be hogs or anything else, intended for export, and whether going east or west. That was the old controversy that was raised every session by the hon. member for New Westminster who used to point out that grain went to China at a cheaper freight rate than the fellow paid who fed chickens on Vancouver island. Through freight for export always carries a lower rate.

Mr. SENN: But I was under the impression that some special measures were taken by the meat board to equalize the freight as between east and west on hog products.

Mr. GARDINER: When there was a shortage of meat in Toronto, meat was shipped from Calgary to Toronto and the government paid part of the freight.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Does the producer get that difference?

Mr. GARDINER: The producer has got it if all the things which are said to be true are true; for instance, that people are paying more on the market for cattle than the ceiling price of beef permits them to pay, and they call it a black market. If a man went out and bought cattle to be killed under those conditions he would pay higher for the cattle than if the freight was not going to be paid and the producer to that extent would get the benefit.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): The Live Stock Review of April 11 quotes hogs in Toronto at $19.35 and in Calgary at $17.95. That was for grade B hogs, and there is practically the same difference in prices all the way through.

Mr. GARDINER: I have forgotten the date on which the trade agreement with Britain was announced in the house, and that has something to do with the discussion now going on with regard to beef, namely, that prior to the announcement of the new agreement what they call a black market was operating in eastern Canada. I have never agreed that there was a black market operating, but those who were advocating a certain policy called it a black market. Hogs were selling at a considerably higher level on the Toronto market as compared with Winnipeg, in relation to the price we were obtaining for bacon and ham from Britain. It was said that there was a black market to the extent of one cent a pound in some areas and one and a half cents a pound on other markets. When we made the agreement with Britain, it made provision for an increase in the price of bacon representing about $2 a hog, and the fellow here who was already paying $1 per hog over the legitimate market price could only raise his price by $1 a hog, whereas back on the other market they went up $2, and we immediately had a controversy about that. The Winnipeg market was never out of line with the ceiling prices on pork. The Toronto market was; the Montreal market was; the market in Nova Scotia was; and the day after the change was made I got letters from all these areas to this effect, "You said hogs were going up $2; they did not go up $2"; and you will find that the markets at a certain date in the east levelled out with the other and there was not the margin which existed for a few days.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Is the Ontario feeder who buys grain at Fort William allowed the freight down to his feeding point from Fort William?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Following that up, I have given the figure at Toronto, $19.35. The Calgary producer gets $17.95. That relates to the case of the barley which you have been discussing. I have just got some returns in this morning's mail from barley sold this week from my farm: 71½ cents at Melita. The minister said it was 64½ cents at Fort William, so that there is a difference of seven cents a bushel for barley which the Ontario feeder has; he gets his feed seven cents a bushel cheaped than we do on the prairies. Added to that you have the expense of the man-power and all that is involved in transportation east. The minister spoke a while ago about the efficient feeder. I do not care how efficient your feeder is, it will take at least five pounds of grain to make a pound of pork. Therefore the thing does not, to my mind, make sound economics. You can produce meat much cheaper on the same farm where you grow your feed. I am not advocating that there should not be some basis set up to transoprt feed to Ontario, but as a matter of sound economics I repeat it is cheaper to feed beef or pork on the same farm on which the grain is produced. I might put some letters on Hansard, like the minister and the hon. member for Melfort, but I do not suppose that parliamentary procedure would allow me to insert in Hansard some of the terms used in some of these letters. A man who is a very good live stock producer in my constituency wrote me a lengthy letter on this subject the other day, and I am bound to say that he finds more fault with the Minister of Finance than with the Minister of Agriculture. He gives the quantity of cattle and hogs that he produced year by year throughout the war, and the number of cows that he and his family have milked; but then he says, "We have quit milking the cows; we have quit producing the hogs, and if there is not a radical change in income tax deductions and all of the books we have to keep and the records we have to produce to the inspectors I am going to quit entirely producing live stock on my farm under this set-up."

An hon. MEMBER: Is that all he said?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): No; I said that parliamentary procedure would not allow me, because of the terms he uses, to put the letter on Hansard. He was terribly vexed about this matter. That is only one of several letters which I have received and which indicate that our policy is just a bit out of line. By 1944 Alberta had increased from a very small hog producing area to the largest in Canada. Great strides were made in that province, as were indicated by the figures which I put on Hansard for all the provinces of Canada. But they showed a great decrease in Alberta in 1445, and this year there is a much greater decrease. In Manitoba, to speak particularly of my own constituency, one may go for many miles and, I am sorry to say, on many of these farms you will not find one brood sow alive where farmers were producing from one to two hundred pigs during the war. I think we should endeavour in some way to correct that.

Mr. GARDINER: I think we should get the correct figures on the record and not reason from something which is not official.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What figures is the minister referring to?

Mr. GARDINER: Hog prices in different places. Here are the weekly hog prices for the week ended May 9: Toronto, $19.60; Montreal, $19.85; Winnipeg, $18.35; Calgary, $18.20; Edmonton, $17.85. The difference between Toronto and Calgary is $1.25. That is for slaughtered hogs. For live hogs that is just about the freight between these points; and that is what it usually is, unless there is some special circumstances for the day which you happen to be quoting. The difference between hogs in Toronto and hogs in Winnipeg is usually the freight, and the difference between hogs in Calgary and hogs in Toronto is the freight on live hogs. Hogs are put alive into cars in Calgary, shipped to Toronto and slaughtered there, and live weight is paid from Winnipeg to Toronto; I think it is around seventy-five cents or eighty-five cents in Toronto.

Mr. HARKNESS: That is what we have been saying, that the farmer has the freight differential against him.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I am quoting from the Live Stock Market Review of April 11, 1946, issued by the minister's own department. The figures I gave were, for B hogs, $19.35 in Toronto and $17.95 in Calgary; for A hogs, $19.75 in Toronto and $18 at Calgary. I point out that those are figures in a pamphlet put out by the minister's own department.

Mr. GARDINER: For what week?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): April 11. That is what I happen to have before me.

Mr. GARDINER: For April 11 the figures are: Toronto, $19.35, Montreal, $19.25; Winnipeg, $18.35; Calgary, $18.15; Edmonton, $17.85. The figures on a particular day might vary from that, but that is the average for the week. A suggestion was made a moment ago by the hon. member for Calgary East, who said in a speech which he delivered this evening that he did not know much about wheat—and I shall have to assume that he does not know much more about hogs—that the only thing you need to consider when you look at the differential between western hogs and Ontario hogs is the freight. Anyone who has fed hogs in both eastern and western Canada is, I think, acquainted with this fact, that when you grow grain on an eastern farm which has been farmed much longer than western farms, and which did not have the same ingredients in the soil when they started to farm, and feed grain from an eastern farm to-day, you must have all these supplements which are provided and which come at high cost; those must be fed if you are to produce your hogs in six months. On western farms one scarcely ever thinks of feeding supplements.

Mr. WRIGHT: Oh, oh.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, if you do you are wasting your time and money, because there are a great many people who are finishing hogs in six months without any supplements at all. It can be done. It is done right along. More than that; any farmer in eastern Canada who feeds grain will tell you, "Give me a carload of western Canadian grain and I can do much better with it than I can with any other grains." That is only because it is better quality grain, and feeds the hogs to better advantage; and the western farmer has other differentials besides the differential in freight. As a matter of fact, I am proud of the section of Canada that I live in; rather than knock it all the time, and say the farmers are all broke, and everybody is having a hard time, and everywhere else in the wrold they are having a good time, I would say that I do not know any place in the world where they are having a better time than in western Canada; and that is where I would rather live.

Mr. WRIGHT: The Minister of Agriculture certainly demonstrated in the statement which he made just now that he has not fed hogs on his own farm in western Canada recently.

Mr. GARDINER: I am feeding seventy-five right now.

Mr. WRIGHT: I will guarantee that if you are going to market them in six months' time and if you have not got milk, you are feeding supplements.

Mr. GARDINER: I am feeding mine the supplement which you call peas, and that is a pretty good protein.

Mr. WRIGHT: It is protein.

Mr. GARDINER: They cannot grow peas in eastern Canada any more.

Mr. WRIGHT: It is as good as any feed in any part of Canada; I do not care whether they are feeding western or eastern grain—

Mr. GARDINER: We may as well finish it right now because this question comes up so often. Every eastern farmer knows that thirty, forty and fifty years ago he was growing and feeding peas on his farm, and every eastern farmer knows that he cannot grow peas to-day. The weevil has put an end to that. We are growing peas in western Canada and feeding them to hogs. We do not have the weevil yet, but we may have him some day. In the days when the eastern farmer had peas to feed he did not have to buy a supplement to the extent that he has to-day. We have them and we are feeding them. They are grown in considerable quantities up in the area which the hon. member for Melfort represents.

Mr. QUELCH: I should like to say a word in reference to the part of the country which I represent. The fall in the production of hogs has been caused not so much by the shortage of grain or even the price, but rather by the difficulty in getting labour. Most of the farmers have been carrying on the work themselves. They found it almost impossible to carry on a full day's work in the field and then at night do the chores, milk the cows and so on. In the days when they had a hired man they could do that, but they have found now that when they are able to get labour they have to pay $100 a month. If they had to pay $100 a month the year round there was not very much profit left for them, and therefore they thought it was better to cut down on their hogs and sell the grain. As I have said, the reason for the drop in production was not the shortage of grain. In my part of the country the chief grain grown is wheat. To feed hogs they sell the wheat and buy coarse grains and get the bonus. We found it was more profitable to do that than to try to grow the coarse grains. We did not have any difficulty this fall in shipping in whatever barley we wanted.

There is one point I should like to bring to the minister's attention. It seems to me that we place the veteran under a handicap in regard to the question of feed grain. I ran into quite a few complaints last winter of veterans coming back, taking up land and desiring to raise hogs. When they made application for a feeder permit they could not get it if the former owner or operator of the farm had sold any oats or barley. They were refused that feeder permit on the ground that the man who owned or operated that farm had already sold oats and barley from it. I cannot see why veterans returning to this country should be penalized in that way. I suggest that, if possible, in the future the veterans should be allowed the bonus on the coarse grains in spite of the fact that the former owner may have sold coarse grains.

Mr. BURTON: Sitting here listening to this discussion, I could not help wondering why there were so many farmers who are always wrong and the Minister of Agriculture always right when he speaks. When I think of the farmers whom I know and have met during the past year and heard their complaints I am satisfied that they know as much about feeding hogs and have done more of the actual feeding than the Minister of Agriculture has ever done for a good many years. I cannot imagine that these men are always wrong. There is something wrong. What the minister has said here this evening gives us a partial indication of what is wrong. When he sets out on a course of action he follows it through thick or thin. That may be a good quality for a person to have, but I suggest to the minister for the sake of agriculture in this country, for the sake of those men whose cause he professes to have at heart, that there are times when he must admit that he is sometimes in the wrong. That is what the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar did so nobly yesterday.

So far as I am concerned, and I believe I speak for all the members of this group, I do not want anyone in this chamber to get the impression that we are opposed to the farmers of Ontario receiving assistance in the way of feed grain coming to this province. I do not want to be insulting to the Ontario farmers, but I would not want to feed hogs or cattle in Ontario; I would rather do it in Saskatchewan. If we can be of any assistance in the matter of co-operation we must try to give it. It is absolutely unfair to these family farms, where the majority of the live stock is produced in the west, to penalize the man who is feeding his own feed. That is one of our big troubles; that is one of the things that has caused a lot of the farmers to question the desirability of feeding hogs and cattle instead of putting the grain in elevators.

What was mentioned earlier this evening, and what has been mentioned many times previously, was the policy of this government. Whether the minister is responsible or not, he must accept a share of the responsibility. I refer to the policy of this government in so far as income tax is concerned. They do not and will not give the farmer's family credit for producing that live stock on the farms.

Mr. HARKNESS: It seems to me that we have tied ourselves up into this horrible endless argument which always arises when one talks about subsidies, to whom they should be paid, what for, how much and so forth. The argument can go on for days. One of my hon. friends to the left, I think it was the hon. member for Wood Mountain, advocated a few moments ago that we should pay a subsidy which would offset all the effects of geography and make the price to the western hog producer the same as to the eastern. I think the whole thing comes down to the basic question, so long as you have these subsidies you are going to have all this terrific argument about it.

Apart altogether from the subsidies, there is one factor that stands out in spite of all that the Minister of Agriculture has had to say on the matter of there not being enough coarse grains to feed the number of hogs we had a couple of years ago, and therefore we had to cut down the numbers and so on. One thing remains in spite of the subsidies and the quality of grain in eastern Canada as compared with the west—and by the way I could not see the point of introducing it into the argument —namely, that so far as Alberta at any rate is concerned, the number of hogs produced has declined considerably, and it has declined chiefly, almost entirely, because it pays the farmer better to sell his coarse grain than to feed it to hogs. If this government thinks that is a good policy, that it is better to ship the coarse grain to Ontario and have them feed it here rather than have it fed on the farm in Alberta, that is all right. As an Albertan I would be very happy to have them adopt that policy. I hope they adopt it and I hope they broadcast it. Certainly so far as Alberta is concerned we think that it is an advantage to us, we think it is an advantage to Canada as a whole, that as much of the grain as possible should be fed right on the farm where it is produced. You get away from all these extra shipping charges, handling charges and everything else in connection with it. No matter what the minister may say in connection with the shortage of coarse grains, as far as Alberta is concerned we produce far more than we can feed; and the only reason we have quit producing hogs to the extent we have is that, as I have said, it pays better to sell the coarse grains, which I think is bad agriculture and bad political economy.

Mr. COLDWELL: I know the minister is to head the Canadian delegation to the food and agriculture conference soon, and I am glad that is so. I am also pleased we are sending the strong delegation that was announced this afternoon; I thought those who are going were able people, and I believe the minister will be surrounded by a competent group of advisers. I want to say, however, that I think the minister must consider—and I imagine he will be able to give us some indication of this when he comes back—what is to be the policy of Canada in regard to food production for the next year or two. I am inclined to agree with the minister that we must ship more food to Europe, India and other places, because the famine which is so apparent in those regions will not be ended this year but, I think, will continue for a time. I believe most people agree that a year from now the problem may be even more acute than it is at the present time, so that when the minister comes back after having discussed the entire world situation with the food and agriculture organization I hope he will be able to give the house an indication of what should be the policy of the Canadian farmer, whether he should concentrate on the raising of grain or on the raising of live stock, or just what will be required of this country for the next year or two. Then our farmers will know better what to do, and if that can be done I think it will be of great benefit.

There has been a great deal of discussion this evening about the raising of hogs. It is perfectly true that in the constituencies many of us represent in western Canada there has been a tremendous diminution in the number of hogs raised. That I think is known. While it may have been regrettable some time ago, it may work out better than we anticipated because, as the minister has said and as, I believe, we all recognize, at the moment what is important is the amount of food we can get to the people who need it rather than the kind of food we can send them, and cereals will feed more people more economically than meat. If our farmers can get the advice that is required they can lay their plans for the next year or two accordingly.

Of course the question of price enters into the matter. We have been talking about stabilized prices. I have always been strong for at least an attempt to be made to achieve something we have called parity. I quite agree that this has been difficult to define. I have my own definition of parity, which is that prices should bear some relation to each other; that a farmer's selling prices should bear proper relation to the prices of the things he has to buy. I know there are different views in regard to what parity should be; but if we can get leadership from the government of Canada indicating what the policy of the farmers should be, perhaps one policy for the west, another policy for eastern Canada, another for the maritimes and another for British Columbia, if necessary, then I think the minister's visit to this conference will have been well worth while.

Perhaps because of the letters I get from my own relatives and friends across the seas I feel the impact of the food shortage keenly, but it appears to me that the situation is simply desperate. To-night when I heard over the radio that the Right Hon. Herbert Morrison had agreed in Washington to send a further supply of food from the meagre reserves of Great Britain I felt that with the danger to shipping which may arise from the coal strike in the United States, they are treading on very thin ice, if I may mix my metaphors, and that the people across the seas are making a greater contribution than we should expect at the present time. I say I feel this keenly myself, and I believe a number of other people feel the same way. I get letters from people in Canada saying, "Why can't we be guided as to how we may help a little more?" I was glad to see that the other evening in a broadcast address the Minister of Justice suggested that we should each do without one slice of bread a day. Well, that would be a help; but, after all, it seems to me that if the people of Canada were apprised of the needs of the world they would support more rationing, as a matter of fact, and would be glad to do what they could.

What I am asking the minister, however, is to consider placing before the house, before the end of this session, some policy that will guide and at the same time assure the producers—as he has done to some extent in connection with grain—that for the next one or two or three years they will have prices for their products which will give them reasonable and proper returns. Given that assurance, then we can expect this country to do even better than it has done in the relief of the near and, indeed, in some respects the actual starvation that is being faced in so many parts of the world.

Mr. CARDIFF: I have listened with a great deal of interest to the arguments put forward to-night by the minister and by western farmers. I could not but agree with many points in the minister's argument as to the difference between the east and the west. We in eastern Canada could not begin to produce hogs but for the fact that the freight is paid on the grain coming here. Eastern Canada, or I should say Ontario, because I do not know anything about the maritimes, is geared to produce hogs if we can get the feed with which to do so at a price which will permit us to make a reasonable profit. The west is geared to produce grain. Any western farmer to whom I have spoken, including those who come to visit us, will walk around our farm, for instance, and say, "I would not farm here for the world, because you have too much work to do." I think we are just as intelligent as the farmers of the west; but, after all, when your home is in a certain place and you are earning a livelihood there you have to make the best of it. We are used to working for twelve months in the year but the western farmer does not want to do that. He wants to make a living by working for six months a year and resting the other six months.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): There are some exceptions.

Mr. CARDIFF: The exceptions are very few. The average western farmer does not want to work for twelve months a year; he wants to make his living in six months. The Ontario farmer must work for twelve months a year and every day of every month in order to make a livelihood. If the Minister of Agriculture makes it possible for us to get grain, and fixes the price of hogs at a reasonable level so that we can make a profit, we will produce more hogs in Ontario than were ever produced before. But it must be at a profit; we cannot afford to lose money. We have to make our livelihood at it. Ontario produces more hogs and beef than any other province I know of, and it will continue to do so, as long as we can get the assistance we require to do the work and to make a living. Our backs are strong—and no doubt our minds are just a little weak in that respect. But we will do the job, if we can get the material.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I trust nothing further will be said which will tend to cause any unhappiness between the east and the west. I believe the rank and file of people in the west are happy about the arrangement to allow eastern farmers to feed grains from the west so that they may produce live stock. I think it is important that we keep at least that much unhappiness out of our situation in Canada.

Just a word with regard to hog production. I am not prepared to pronounce on the cause, but I will say that the condition in my constituency is almost identical with that described by the hon. member for Souris. Whereas two or three years ago there were numbers of hogs on farms all along the road, it is an exception to-day to see a hog.

Mr. GARDINER: There is no argument about that. The numbers are down—away down.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Yes. I find considerable disagreement as to the cause, and I am not going to enter into a discussion of that matter.

Rather I should like to speak about another matter which vitally concerns cattle producers in the west. Certainly it concerns those in my constituency. I refer to Bangs disease or contagious abortion. Would the minister give us a statement on the policy of his department concerning contagious abortion as it applies in Alberta?

Mr. GARDINER: I wonder if we might carry item 17, and then proceed to a discussion of item 18.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I thought we had completed item 17.

Mr. STEPHENSON: The minister said a minute ago that one of the great troubles to-day was a shortage of labour on the farms. I believe that is true in my constituency, because farmers are complaining that they cannot get help. The minister said that hog production had dropped off because farmers could not get help on the farms. Is the government doing anything to make farm labour available in order that farmers may continue the production of hogs, and other agricultural food shortages? Surely that is one of the most pressing questions in agriculture to-day.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not wish to enter into a detailed discussion of that subject, because it will be discussed when the estimates of the Minister of Labour are before the committee. However, I think it will be found, when those estimates are considered, that everything we can conceive of is being done. There may be some other things hon. members could suggest when the items are being discussed, but I know we are attempting in every possible way to get labourers for farmers.

Mr. BLACKMORE: After what I said a minute ago, it is only fair to say that the falling off of hog production in my constituency is not due to a shortage of labour. The same men are there who were producing hogs in abundance only two or three years ago. They are equipped and ready to produce them again. But for some reason or another they have made up their minds that it does not pay to produce hogs—and I fancy they are the best judge of that. Whether they have failed to discover some technique the Minister of Agriculture has discovered, I cannot say. But I do not think we should lay too much stress upon the shortage of labour. While I admit that there is a shortage of labour, yet nearly every farmer in my constituency realizes that there are times during the year when he could take a number of hogs through. But he is not taking those hogs through, although two or three years ago he did.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Health of animals—

18. Administration of Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Canned Foods Act, $2,103,508.

Mr. GLADSTONE: Ontario is a typical mixed farming province, and in that province agriculture is an all-year-round operation. The picture on any farm in Ontario is one of costly buildings for the winter housing of all live stock.

Summer operations during the working season on a 100-acre farm would consist, probably, of a ten-acre field of wheat, a ten-acre field of oats or barley, a few acres of ensilage corn, perhaps two acres of roots of some kind, perhaps mangolds. In addition to the normal farm housing, the farmer must have a silo.

There is much work throughout the season taking care of the ensilage corn. There is the operation of cutting it, shredding it, and placing it in the silo, and a great amount of work throughout the winter in the feeding of it.

Then there is the use of wheat straw and oat straw in the bedding down of cattle, whether they be in open sheds or in stables. Taking it all in all, the Ontario farm offers an all-year-round occupation. That is what the farmer in Ontario expects to do. As a result of feeding operations, fertilizer is provided to go back on the land. This is an extremely necessary operation, and the only way in which the productivity of the farm can be maintained.

I have made this brief statement in order that hon. members may have a better understanding of the situation on a typical Ontario farm. It is quite different from that in western Canada where, in common practice, there is no labour in connection with keeping up the fertility of the soil. The land in the west is highly productive in its natural form.

I emphasize these factors as elements requiring the application of a great amount of labour, and involving a high cost of production. On these grounds it is only reasonable that the Ontario farmer should be given some little consideration by way of special rates on the additional quantities of grain he requires to finish his stock, and carry it through the winter.

Mr. GARDINER: I should like to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Lethbridge.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Before answering, would the minister permit me to ask further questions, so that he may answer them at one time? When a stockman finds disease in his herd, what serum is available to him? What serum is available for treating cattle? Whom should he go to in order to get the serum? Under what conditions could he obtain the serum? Is there any limit to the number of cattle for which he can get serum? Where does the serum come from; what factory, laboratory or other source? What assistance does the provincial government give the stockman? What assistance is the federal government giving and prepared to give the stockman? Do the federal and Alberta provincial governments cooperate in aiding the stockman in, first, cleaning up his herd and, second, keeping his herd clean? What responsibilities must the stockman assume, first, to get the serum, second, to get provincial assistance, third, to get federal assistance and, fourth, to have continued assistance over a period of years?

If the minister would make a statement on the subject of Bang's disease and answer these questions, as well as adding any other information he may care to add which he thinks will enable the stockman in my constituency to know just what to do in clearing up this disease, he will confer a great benefit on the people of southern Alberta.

Mr. GARDINER: When herds are placed under the government's Bang's disease policy the owners must employ veterinary practitioners to collect blood specimens. The first thing they must do is to employ a veterinarian to go out and take blood samples from the animals that may be afflicted with the disease. The blood tests are conducted free of charge at federal laboratories, of which there is one located at Lethbridge. When a herd passes three tests over a period of a year the department collects blood and conducts check tests. If it is negative the herd is listed for one year. That is, if they show that there is no disease for one year they are given certificates.

Licences for the manufacture of brucella abortus vaccine strain 19 are issued to approved Canadian laboratories. Hon. members will probably remember this as calfhood vaccine rather than under the official name. Import permits are issued to Canadian agents of responsible United States manufacturers and permits to purchase and use vaccine are issued to registered veterinarians.

Adult cattle must not be vaccinated. They would probably remain positive to the agglutination test; consequently their export would be prohibited and they could not enter any clean herd. The use of vaccine during the calf age is supposed to prevent the disease later on, but the vaccine is not to be used on adult animals. When it is injected it causes the animal to be positive under test, and it would not be permitted to enter the United States nor would any person purchase the animal for breeding purposes.

In the carrying out of export tests the blood is collected by veterinary inspectors and accredited veterinarians only. These tests are conducted at federal laboratories and co-operating laboratories. The co-operating laboratories are as follows:

Dr. Cunningham's laboratory, Summerside, P.E.I.
Provincial laboratory, Charlottetown, P.E.I.
Agricultural college, Truro, N.S.
Department of Agriculture, Fredericton, N.B.
Oka veterinary laboratory, Oka, Quebec.
Macdonald college laboratory, Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Quebec.
Provincial laboratory, Quebec, Quebec.
Ontario veterinary college, Guelph, Ontario.
Queen's university, Kingston, Ontario.
Manitoba agricultural college, Winnipeg, Manitoba.
Saskatchewan university, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan.
Alberta university, Edmonton, Alberta.

The department pays the co-operating laboratories ten cents per sample tested.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is, the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa pays that?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, and I understand that some of the provinces distribute the vaccine free of charge. I believe Alberta does this. In any event, whether it is free or not, it is always available through druggists; veterinarians can purchase it and use it for this purpose.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It must be purchased by a veterinarian?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; it can be used properly only by a veterinarian.

Mr. BLACKMORE: He can purchase it any time he wishes?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand there is a supply on hand all the time. It is manufactured in the United States and it is made also at the laboratory at Guelph. We also make it in the laboratory over in Hull but not in sufficient quantities to be sent out.

Under the Bang's disease policy the owners pay their own veterinarian to take blood specimens. Sterile bottles and laboratory service are provided by the department. Veterinary inspectors collect blood samples for check tests for listing and, after listing, all subsequent retests and tests and retests of additions. Listed herds must contain ten or more animals. In the case of export tests, exporters may employ accredited veterinarians at their own expense when salaried veterinary inspectors cannot give prompt service because of other departmental duties. When a veterinary inspector is on premises conducting tuberculin tests of additions to herds under any of the tuberculosis policies, he may take blood samples if the herd is also under the Bang's disease policy. When negative on first tests there shall be a retest in ninety days and then annually. When reactors are found there shall be retests at six-week intervals until negative. After a negative test is found there shall be two retests at ninety-day intervals. If still negative, there shall be a retest in six months and, if negative then, yearly. When there are questionable tests, retests shall be at six-week intervals.

I think that pretty well covers the questions which have been asked. This information can be had in printed form from the department at any time, and I think the best thing for anyone who is interested to do would be to write in and get this information.

Mr. BLACKMORE: What is the name of the veterinarian at Lethbridge?

Mr. GARDINER: Doctor Duffy is at the Lethbridge laboratory and Doctor Allan is at Cardston.

Mr. BRYCE: Is it the intention of the government to pursue the same policy regarding tuberculosis free areas as was pursued prior to the war, or are they going to pursue a more vigorous policy?

Mr. GARDINER: It will be the same as before the war, and we hope to get off to at least the same vigorous policy we were following prior to the war. We have not been able to get the men to do the work, although I have in my pocket a letter from an hon. member who says he has a veterinarian they are not using.

Mr. BRYCE: Will the conditions be the same as before?

Mr. GARDINER: Exactly the same.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I was going to pursue the matter of personnel for that sort of programme. I am glad to notice that there has been some improvement in the salaries being paid. Since coming here in 1940, I recall hearing that there were two or three veterinarians who were receiving less than $2,000 a year. Is any veteriniarian receiving less than $2,000 at the present time?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand not.

Mr. NICHOLSON: What guarantee has the purchaser of canned goods that he will get the same quality of goods according to the grade marked on the can in Ontario as he would in British Columbia? What supervision is there with regard to quality?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: Can we leave that until we reach the marketing item?

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: The other day, under the heading of "animal pathologists", I drew the attention of the minister to the fact that we are very short of veterinary surgeons, and he suggested that the subject be left over until we reached this item. I would repeat my question now. Will the minister not consider giving more encouragement to students in universities to take up veterinary science by way of offering scholarships and offering veterinary students work after they have graduated?

Mr. GARDINER: We have been giving consideration to this question but no policy has yet been worked out.

Mr. MacNAUGHT: I am in emphatic agreement with what the hon. member for North Battleford has said, and in that connection may I read a paragraph from Maclean's Magazine from its "Cross Country" section. It says:

> Prince Edward Island's 100,000 head of cattle have to share one doctor. So the province is scouting all Canada, to induce veterinarians to settle there. Premier J. Walter Jones, himself a farmer, estimated there is room for at least 10 veterinarians on the island.
> The situation was forcibly brought to official notice when the milk and meat inspector of the city of Charlottetown died this spring. No veterinarian could be found to take his place. The situation might have been serious had not the provincial veterinarian, whose office and laboratory are in Charlottetown, offered to take the work.

I believe that statement to be essentially correct and, if it is, a serious situation exists. I would urge upon the minister to do everything in his power to alleviate that situation by following the suggestions made by the hon. member for North Battleford to accelerate courses and offer scholarships and inducements to students of veterinary science.

Mr. NICHOLSON: What are the annual requirements of the department through the retirement or death of veterinarians?

Mr. GARDINER: The normal wastage is between twenty-five and thirty a year, and we are not getting that number at present.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I wish to support what other hon. members have urged in this matter. The total number of graduate veterinarians from our colleges last year was at its lowest point, between twenty and twenty-five. It is important that the federal government in cooperation with the provincial government should face up to this problem. The Saskatchewan department of agriculture is offering a few scholarships. Since this is a matter in which the federal government are also directly interested, I think they should go along with the provincial government and match its payments dollar for dollar to see that this gap between the demand and supply is bridged.

Mr. BLAIR: At the last session of the house I drew the attention of the committee to the widespread prevalence of Bang's disease across Canada and to the fact that many people were becoming affected with undulant fever. The minister said at that time that when the estimates came up this year he would try to do something about the matter.

I again point out that the medical profession have still no cure for undulant fever. We have nothing whatever that will cure it. There is still no cure for Bang's disease, but we have prevention for Bang's disease, and that is calfhood vaccination. There is a list of casualties from undulant fever every year throughout this country, and the only means we have of controlling undulant fever is by calfhood vaccination. Our farmers are experiencing a great many losses of cattle through Bang's disease, and undulant fever is causing many casualties among human beings. The only measure of relief we have, and the only way of controlling undulant fever is by calfhood vaccination. There is no doubt that calfhood vaccination is really an effective remedy, but the trouble in Canada is that there is no unified effort because the regulations vary in each province. I will list the conditions in each province so far as Bang's disease is concerned.

In Ontario the work of controlling the disease has been placed directly under the Ontario agricultural college. An extensive programme of calf vaccination is under way, with strain 19, in an attempt to eradicate the disease from the province.

In Manitoba some funds are provided for vaccination of calves in pure bred herds by qualified veterinarians.

In Saskatchewan there is calfhood vaccination, with Cotton's strain 19, for herds supplying milk to villages and towns without protection by pasteurization.

Alberta has also had calfhood vaccination since 1944, following a request from the western stock growers' association.

British Columbia has no special legislation.

In Quebec Bang's disease is controlled by the live stock sanitary law, and there are 5,000 listed herds, with 551 herds badly contaminated. For a small fee owners of herds can have their herds tested under an agreement. The vaccination plan is used for contaminated herds.

Nova Scotia has no protective legislation. Many herd owners are doing their own vaccination.

Prince Edward Island has no legislation.

In New Brunswick there are restricted control areas, but there is a shortage of qualified veterinaries and inspectors to carry out the programme.

In regard to the efficacy of Cotton's strain 19 vaccine, I quote from the report of Doctor Welsh, director of the animal research division of Lederle Laboratories, Pearl River, New York, which is one of the largest laboratories in the United States. This article appeared in the Holstein-Friesian Journal of February of this year:

> The recent report by Winter of New York state confirms the findings of others in that some vaccinated animals continue to show a positive blood reaction for many months after being vaccinated.

This should not be taken as a reason why calfhood vaccination should not be carried on, as he shows later. I continue the quotation:

> His findings and others indicate that, on the average, calves vaccinated at the age of six months, give the best results. Calves vaccinated at four months of age or under usually do not establish a very high degree of resistance. Calves vaccinated at eight months or above retain their positive blood reaction for a prolonged time. The New York records, reported by Winter, on calfhood vaccination was in herds having 15 to 47 per cent infection. Of the animals vaccinated at six months of age, about 60 per cent were negative on blood tests six months later. At the twelfth month following vaccination, or when the animals were about eighteen months of age, at least 80 per cent of those vaccinated were negative and in some herds as many os 90 per cent were negative. When these animals reached breeding age, they were bred, regardless of whether they showed a vaccination titer or were negative. Approximately 3½ per cent of these animals vaccinated as calves were showing a positive blood reaction at two years of age but they found that the reaction receded during the first lactation period and that less than one per cent still remained positive at the time of the second freshening.

That would indicate that calfhood vaccination is effective. We should use any means at hand to control this disease.

As a physician I am concerned about undulant fever, and I as especially concerned over the apathy and listlessness with which this subject is approached by the department. This is the only cure we have. Something must be done. Therefore I say that calfhood vaccination should be compulsory on the strength of the records of the herds using it and on the strength of the records of the states where calfhood vaccination has been in vogue for some time. I think we can accept these records and particularly the record of the Ontario agricultural college, where Ontario is undertaking a mass programme. But if the different provinces have no set regulation, and it is done in a haphazard way in one province, contamination will be carried from one province to the other by animals shipped from one province to the other. So that the whole affair, to be effective, must be dominion-wide, and I suggest to the minister, and repeat, that I am much concerned about the undulant fever, let alone the tremendous loss to the live stock owner, and feel that we must do something about the matter and make calfhood vaccination compulsory.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I greatly appreciate the contribution which the hon. member who has just taken his seat has made. My suggestion would be that the Minister of Agriculture for the dominion should call together in council the provincial ministers of agriculture; that this matter should be discussed and a definite policy arrived at which would be accepted by all the provinces, and that then there should be an immediate drive, which would produce results. In my opinion this disease has gone altogether too far to be reassuring.

Mr. CHARLTON: Is the minister going to make a statement on this?

Mr. GARDINER: I should just like to join with the hon. member for Lethbridge in saying that the statement is a valuable one. A similar statement was made a year ago by the hon. member for Lanark, and I expressed my appreciation of it at the time. I quite agree with him that there is only one way by which we shall be able to attack the problem successfully, and that is by a policy somewhat similar to the one we have with regard to tuberculosis. We are not ready to proceed with it this year but it is being given consideration.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Has the minister given thought to the possibility of publicizing this matter by radio broadcasts over the dominion, or has something of this sort been done? I doubt whether people in general understand sufficiently the seriousness of this problem.

Mr. GARDINER: I really think it is understood by those who are raising live stock, or the great majority of them; but, as has been emphasized this evening, it is just three years ago since we accepted the calfhood vaccine. It has been used in the United States for some time, but our experts here did not officially accept it as a preventive until just three years ago. Since that time information with regard to it has been widely circulated. As a matter of fact, one of the reasons why it was officially accepted was that a great many people in Canada were writing in daily or weekly insisting on its being accepted, indicating that they knew something about it. Medical men, such as the hon. member who has just spoken to us, have been urging that something more be done about it than is being done, because, after all, as I understand it, this disease can be transferred to human beings—which is much more serious than the animal itself having the disease.

The same thing was true of tuberculosis. That is why we took such an active part in fighting tuberculosis; but there is an additional feature of it, that when I came here first, the first delegation I had in the department was a group of breeders from Ontario who were objecting strenuously to the extent to which we were trying to regulate Bang's disease. As a matter of fact, they succeeded in having us undo some of what we had been doing. We were compelling any man who had undulant fever in his herd to stamp a big B on the cheek of the animal; but we were compelled by pressure to put the B in the ear, where it was harder to see. That was the attitude of persons who themselves were interested. We refused to make the B off altogether. The situation to-day is a little different. People have been educated up to the seriousness of the disease, just as a few years ago they were educated up to the seriousness of tuberculosis in cattle. I think we are getting nearer to the time when we can do something similar to what has been done with tuberculosis; but, again, it involves these larger staffs of veterinarians in order to put the policy in effect. Just as soon as we can see our way through it, some policy will be developed.

Mr. CHARLTON: I have enjoyed very much the discussion which took place earlier this evening in which western members took part. I can only assure hon. members from the west that I personally was having a good laugh over it and I think most of the eastern farmers are good-natured enough not to have any ill-feeling as a result of some of the remarks which have been made.

Regarding the health of animals branch, I said certain things last fall which included some observations with regard to salaries in the civil service, mainly the health of animals branch, which branch I mentioned specifically. I am glad to see there have been some changes in this department, not only in respect of salaries but in the reclassification of some of the inspectors. But I am doubtful whether sufficient has yet been done to get men to come into the service, and I am quite worried about the situation. After I talked to several of these boys, some of whom are in grades which have been reclassified, they wonder whether it is worth while for them to remain in the minister's department. If they decide that it is not, and we lose more of the veterinarians now working in that branch, the situation will become that much more serious than it is. As matters stand to-day, I understand, according to the estimates, that there are still some men getting less than $2,400 who are working in this service. Is that so?

Mr. GARDINER: All the men who are now coming in are starting at $2,400.

Mr. CHARLTON: I realize that is so, but I am asking the question, are there any in the service who are still getting less than $2,400?

Mr. GARDINER: I believe they are all getting not less than $2,400.

Mr. CHARLTON: According to the estimates, there are a few who are still below $2,400. That is why I asked the question. It so happens that a man who joins the service now, starting at $2,400, could easily in four years rise to the same salary as a man who has been in the service for twelve or fourteen years. It would appear unfortunate that that is the case. I realize that ability must count. It is difficult for the civil service commission to get a true picture of what this whole salary schedule should be. But one thing definite in my mind is that men in the field, in charge of districts, who are doing as much and probably have as much responsibility as men in charge of packing plants, are not getting the salary that the man in charge of a packing plant is receiving. Personally I do not see any reason why there could not be some overlapping of the salary set-up which would give a stimulus to the man in the field who is performing this important service, so that he would have something to look forward to. As it is now, I believe the maximum for that particular grade would be $3,300.

Mr. GARDINER: Just to put the record straight, may I say that I understand the men in the field now do get as much as the men in the packing plants if they are in charge of a district. That is under the new arrangement. What is being stated was true up until recently.

Mr. CHARLTON: It has been quite recent?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON: I am glad to hear it. It gives the man in the field an opportunity of going to $3,600.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON: I am sure the men will appreciate that. I do not know for certain, but I have heard that the number who are likely to come here from the veterinary college will not be over three or four. If that be the case, we cannot expect much increase in the work done by the health of animals branch for at least another year. In the meantime there are three counties in Ontario which have dropped back from the status of accredited areas. I hope hon. members will not criticize me for using Ontario figures and not the figures of other provinces. It is not that I am trying to differentiate, because I know the same will be true all across Canada. Three counties have lost the accredited area status, and one more county will lose it this year. The counties that have lost it are: Prince Edward, my own county of Brant, and the township of Pittsburg in Frontenac county; and Waterloo county will be out on August 1. The townships of Huntley, Fitzroy and Torbolton in Carleton county will be out on October 1. This is a serious situation. It is in tuberculosis alone. The work of the past fifteen or twenty-five years will be put back a great many years if these counties are to be untested for just how long I am not sure. The infected animals will be left there to infect other animals, and this disease spreads quite rapidly. It spreads not only to cattle but also to other live stock, specifically hogs. Quite recently there have been several cases of hogs having to go to the tank because they were infected with T.B. But it is also transmissible to humans. That was mentioned by the hon. member for Lanark.

Bang's disease is probably just as serious as T.B., if not more so. Bang's disease is definitely transmissible to humans as the hon. member for Lanark said. So far the medical profession have found no cure for it. Neither have we a cure for Bang's disease in cattle. But as I mentioned in the house last fall, there is a good block or control for the disease in the form of brucella abortus vaccine, strain 19. Strain 19 is being used in Ontario to good advantage. A moment ago the minister made a statement that vaccine must not be used in adult animals. I ask him why that is so. I believe I proved to the house last fall that there were no ill effects from the vaccination of adult animals as found by the United States authorities with strain 19. It has been proven that even a cow that is near freshening can be vaccinated with strain 19. Probably she would abort, but that fœtus can be exposed to any other animal in the herd, and, according to the United States report, those animals will not contract abortion. Therefore I ask the minister why—

Mr. GARDINER: The only reason I can give is that I must take my officials' advice because I am not a veterinarian. My hon. friend is and he probably would disagree with them, but I must agree with my officials or—

Mr. CHARLTON: I understand that perfectly. Probably some of the officials are still back in the horse-and-buggy days. Surely we can take the results of the experiments in the United States as true. Surely we are not expected to carry on experiments of our own here and spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to do the same work they have done. The minister said that there is very little we can do without more help. I made another suggestion last fall with regard to the vaccination of calves to be raised in listed herds. I still make that suggestion. It is very important. I may say that it would take probably only fifteen minutes of the veterinarian's time when he is there testing the herd to try to tell the owner how important it was that he have these calves to be raised vaccinated. It would just be a matter of time; it would not be any extra labour. I venture to say that he would spend fifteen minutes talking to the farmer anyway, and it would be time spent to good advantage in explaining the situation to him.

I also said last fall that the listed herd is probably the most vulnerable of any herd in the country. Personally I would prefer to have the average herd on the back concession than I would the listed herd in so far as Bang's disease is concerned, because there is neither acquired nor natural immunity in the listed herd, and the disease can spread rapidly in that herd, much more so than in the average herd on the back concession. I have made two suggestions: first, that all calves to be raised in listed herds could quite easily be vaccinated. The vaccine is free; it does not take very long to inject it, and, as the hon. member for Lanark said, in only one and a half per cent of the cases were they still positive after the second lactation. Even though an animal is positive it affects it only for export. As a matter of fact, you might be a great deal safer to have an all-positive herd than an all-negative herd, if it was negative from the fact that it had not received the vaccine and was not infected. Personally I believe there are two things that could be done. The departmental officials should make themselves more fully acquainted with the system or draw in men from the United States who do know. I would suggest that they either communicate with the inspectors in the field who are doing the work or bring them in to a central point and give them a short course, explain the situation to them. There is one difficulty which should be cleared up in the minds of those who are vaccinating cattle.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Vaccine is not a cure; it was never supposed to be a cure, and the very thing that is probably worrying most veterinarians to-day more than anything else is that in many of these herds that have been vaccinated since 1936 or 1937—I will not say "many," but a few—abortions are occurring.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am sorry to interrupt my hon. friend, but it is eleven o'clock.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, May 20, 1946.

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

PRIVATE RADIO STATIONS AND WAVE LENGTHS

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. It is incidental only to myself, but I think it affects the rights and privileges of every hon. member of this house. On Thursday last I asked the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) if the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation were buying three large broadcasting outfits, and if it were the intention that the wave lengths of from one to three stations were to be taken away from the people who at present own them. At that time the minister replied that this was a matter of government policy, and in short refused to answer. That was on Thursday. On Saturday I read in the newspapers the answers to the questions I had asked. My view is that hon. members of this house do not deserve to be treated with that kind of contempt.

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): I am sorry the hon. member insinuates that I treated him or anybody else with contempt. I had no such idea; I gave him the answer as I knew it. So far as the report in the newspapers is concerned, I am not in a position either to confirm or to deny it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): It came from you, according to the newspapers.

Mr. McCANN: My dear friend, if you believe all you see in the newspapers then you will be able to eat all you see there.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Then deny it, if you wish.

Mr. McCANN: It did not come from me.

REPLY OF MINISTER OF RECONSTRUCTION TO QUESTION CONCERNING COAL

Mr. L. W. SKEY (Trinity): A few days ago I addressed a question to the Minister of Reconstruction (Mr. Howe) on the subject of coal. Within the hour a statement was given to the press banning the use of soft coal in public buildings, and so on. At that time the minister did not take the opportunity to elaborate in answer to my question, though he must have been aware that this announcement would be made within a few moments of the time the question was put to him here in the house. I feel that this is another case in which the house has been overlooked as a medium for public information.

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Acting Prime Minister): I want to call the attention of the house to the fact that the Minister of Reconstruction is not in his place. If he were here, no doubt he would be in a position to answer the statement just made.

FOOD

WORLD SHORTAGE—CANADIAN PLANS FOR INCREASED SUPPLIES

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, discussions of the world food situation have taken place over the week-end between members of the Canadian government and Mr. Herbert Morrison, M.P., Lord President of the Council, of the United Kingdom, who came to Ottawa for this purpose following similar discussions with United States representatives in Washington at which the Canadian ambassador was present.

The Canadian government has taken note of the joint statement issued by the United Kingdom and the United States on May 17, following Mr. Morrison's discussions in Washington and has expressed general agreement with the proposals it contains for continuing consultation and collaboration to meet the world food crisis.

During the discussions in Ottawa the steps already taken by Canada and the United Kingdom to alleviate the disastrous effects of world food shortages were reviewed and broad lines of future policy were discussed.

The maximum supplies of bread grains that are at present likely to be available from May through to September, 1946 have been assessed at some ten million tons, of which Canada expects to supply 2·3 million tons. Screened requirements for the same period were expected to total 13·4 million tons leaving a deficiency of 3·4 million tons or about 25 per cent. A further intensive review and scaling down of these requirements to the barest minimum needs are likely to reduce the gap over this five-months period to something under one million tons. Inevitably severe hardship will result and great danger of famine will continue. The Canadian government has agreed to associate itself with the United Kingdom and the United States governments in maintaining constant review of the situation, and to put forth its best efforts to secure and make available additional supplies of grain.

The Canadian ministers described the comprehensive programme of agricultural production and of conservation of food which their government is carrying out to meet this situation. In anticipation of the urgent world need for food that would arise immediately following the conclusion of the war, Canadian food production had been expanded during the war years. This high rate of expanded production has been maintained and in some cases even increased. Wheat acreage has been raised to a very high level. Rationing and restrictions on sales of certain foods to help provide more for export were continued and even extended; meat rationing was reimposed. Complete control of agricultural products, in particular grains, has been retained in order to ensure that as much food as possible may be made available to the hungry of other nations.

When, some months ago, it became apparent that the expected serious food situation in the world would be greatly aggravated by drought in large areas, and by other difficulties, the Canadian government took still further steps to meet the threat of famine. On March 17 the Prime Minister announced a nine-point programme upon which the Canadian government had decided in order to increase supplies of foodstuffs for export. This programme included:

1. Reduction by 10 per cent below 1945 of wheat released for human consumption in Canada.

2. Reduction by 50 per cent of wheat released for distilleries.

3. Special income tax arrangements to encourage immediate marketing of wheat stored on farms.

4. Measures to release increased quantities of oats and No. 4 wheat for export.

5. Special priorities for rail transport of wheat for export.

6. Modification of regulations affecting bulk shipment of flour and feed.

7. A campaign to urge Canadian farmers to plan their production to obtain the maximum yield of foodstuffs over the next four years.

8. A campaign for the reduction of inventories of wheat and wheat products.

9. A campaign to encourage consumer savings, avoidance of waste, and development of home gardens.

This programme has been put into effect and is already producing encouraging results. Other special action has also been taken by the government. For example, further wheat is being diverted from producers of both potable and industrial alcohol to the extent that substitutes become available; additional efforts to reduce use of wheat for animal feeds are being made.

The United Kingdom representatives described the efforts being put forth in the United Kingdom. Consumer rationing has been continued and over a wide field rations are now below low wartime levels. The rations of home-based United Kingdom forces have been reduced. The extraction rate of flour has been raised several times and will be maintained at 90 per cent during the critical May to September period. Supplies of grain for distilling have been cut from 300,000 tons to 130,000 tons. The size of loaves has been reduced, while production of biscuits, cakes and pastry has been substantially curtailed. Beer production has been set at 90 per cent of prewar production. Cereal production is being encouraged and a number of special directions and inducements have recently been introduced to this end. Feeding of millable wheat to live stock remains prohibited and rations for livestock have been cut down. Consumers are being encouraged to conserve food and to reduce waste.

Further, the United Kingdom has recently agreed to forego another 200,000 tons of imports which will thus be released for use elsewhere. This has been done with full awareness of the dangers to the United Kingdom in the way of still further interruptions of distribution or restrictions on the austere diet obtaining in the United Kingdom for the six years since the beginning of the war.

The Canadian and United Kingdom governments agree that every effort must be put forth to remove completely the threat of world famine, a threat which will continue at least until the harvests of 1947 become available. The two governments agree that they will continue to collaborate through the combined food board or other appropriate agencies to this end. They will continue to consult on measures of major importance which may be found necessary to meet the present world food shortage.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the statement which the Acting Prime Minister has just made is not supposed to be debatable, but perhaps the house would permit me to make one or two observations.

I want to commend the government for this announcement, and for its plan for further consultation and cooperation in this crisis with the governments of the United Kingdom and the United States. I can see no harm in the minister's restatement of the government's policy with respect to increasing the supply of food under these circumstances. I might just point out in passing, however, that when the minister says the Canadian people have put in a higher acreage of wheat in recent years, that has not been done because of, but rather in spite of, government policy.

Mr. ILSLEY: On a point of order, is this debatable?

Mr. SPEAKER: The statement made by the Acting Prime Minister is not debatable. It has been the practice, however, to permit the leader of the opposition to ask certain questions. I have always been generous in that respect, but I cannot permit any debate.

Mr. BRACKEN: Mr. Speaker, you did permit the Acting Prime Minister to make a very important statement. I now ask Your Honour: Are you going to deny me the opportunity of commenting upon it? If you are, I take my seat.

Mr. SPEAKER: As I have already said, it is well known practice in the house that statements made by ministers at this stage of the proceedings are not debatable. I thought it was my duty to permit the leader of the opposition to ask certain questions, or to ask for information, but I cannot permit debate.

Mr. BRACKEN: I was not proposing to debate the subject at all. I had simply intended to make some comments. The only comment I have made thus far is to deny what the minister has said, namely that as a result of government policy the acreage of wheat in this country has been increased. The only other thing I wish to say is this: The leader of the house has referred to the fact that a member of the United Kingdom government is in Canada to-day to discuss this very important matter of food for a hungry world. The minister stated that he had met certain members of the government. My question is this: Would the government be good enough to arrange that that representative from the United Kingdom government meet representatives of other parties, as well as those supporting the government? We would all like to see him and to have his story and, so far as possible, we would like to support his request. The minister has already intimated that this food crisis will not be overcome by this year's harvest. My suggestion is that plans should be made now in this as well as in other countries to see that short of the limitations placed upon it by climatic conditions, next year's harvest will be the biggest this nation has ever produced.

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Morrison intended to be here on Saturday and to leave to-day. I believe he was held up because of flying conditions and did not get here until yesterday noon. I am informed that his intention was to leave Ottawa at noon to-day, and I have every reason to think that he has left. I shall check and find out, but I know he had intended to leave at noon to-day.

PRINTING AND STATIONERY

REPEAL OF PROVISION OF ACT RESPECTING DUTIES OF CLERK OF PRINTING COMMITTEE

Hon. PAUL MARTIN (Secretary of State) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 127, to amend the Public Printing and Stationery Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. MARTIN: The purpose of this bill is to amend section 3 of the Public Printing and Stationery Act to bring the practice with regard to the operations of the printing committee into consistency with the law of the land as it now stands.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—CONSTRUCTION IN SOUTHERN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. McKAY:

1. What charters for railway construction are at present held by the Canadian Pacific Railway in southern Saskatchewan?
2. Have any commitments been made by the railway company for the early completion of the branch lines involved in these charters?
3. When do the charters for the construction of each of these railway lines terminate?
4. Have any applications been made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to have these charters (1) extended; (2) cancelled?

Mr. CHEVRIER:

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company advise as follows:

1. None, other than the general branch line powers contained in section 14 of the agreement dated 21st October, 1880, which is a schedule to the company's act of incorporation, 44 Victoria (1881), chapter 1.

2. No.

3. Charters for the construction of railway lines in southern Saskatchewan, other than those given to the company by its original charter, have now expired.

4. No.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES IN DAUPHIN CONSTITUENCY

Mr. ZAPLITNY:

1. How many persons residing within the electoral district of Dauphin are on the regular payroll of the federal government?
2. What are their names and addresses?
3. What are, in each case, their, (a) duties; (b) salaries; (c) date of appointment?

Mr. MARTIN: I think perhaps this question could be dropped, in view of the fact that the hon. gentleman and I have had a chat and he has written me a letter for certain information.

Question dropped.

BANK OF CANADA—MANAGEMENT OF PUBLIC DEBT

Mr. HAZEN:

1. What did it cost the dominion government to have the Bank of Canada manage the public debt of the dominion in the year 1945?
2. Did the Bank of Canada render any other services in 1945 to the dominion government beside managing the public debt of the dominion?
3. If so, what other services were rendered and what did these services cost the dominion government?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. Nil.

2. Yes.

3. The Bank of Canada acts as fiscal agent of the dominion government without charge in accordance with the provisions of section 23 (1) of the Bank of Canada Act. These fiscal agency duties include, in addition to management of the public debt, the distribution of subsidiary coin; shipment of gold to world markets for sale; purchasing, selling and safekeeping of securities for government departments and agencies; and maintenance of government deposit accounts. The Bank of Canada also performs the normal functions of a central bank which include the tendering of advice on financial and monetary matters to the government of the country in which it is located.

Certain out-of-pocket expenses incurred by the bank for the account of the government are reimbursed by the government to the bank. These expenses are mainly express and telegraphic charges.

WORLD SUGAR POOL

Mr. LOW:

1. Are Canada and the United States members of a world sugar pool?
2. Are they both subject to the same quota allowance?
3. Upon what basis is this quota decided?
4. Are the per capita quantities of sugar available in various forms to the people of the United States greater than those allowed to Canadians, and if so, what is the comparison?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. Canada, United States and United Kingdom are all members of the combined food board.

2. Yes.

3. By agreement between representatives of the United States, United Kingdom and Canada.

4. No. The total per capita quantities of sugar allocated are the same in both countries, but each country makes its own decisions governing internal distribution. In other words each country makes its own decisions regarding the relative quantities to be allocated to householders, to public eating places and to sugar using industries.

SUGAR

Mr. BARRETT:

1. Has consideration been given to increasing the quantity of sugar available to householders for canning purposes over the quantity allowed last year?
2. If so, what is expected will be the increase in the ration for the above purpose?
3. Is there a likelihood of an increased quantity of sugar to Canadian consumers during the last half of the present year?
4. Has the government canvassed the possibility of purchasing sugar from Java or other sources where it is reported available, and, if so, when may these increased quanties of sugar be expected to be made available to consumers?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. Consideration has been given to this matter but there is no prospect that there will be an increase in sugar available for canning purposes.

2. Answered by above.

3. No.

4. The representatives of the British, United States and Canadian governments through the medium of the combined food board are in constant touch with all available sugar markets. No amount of sugar reported to be held in Java has so far been made available for export therefrom. If and when Java sugar becomes available it will be allocated through the combined food board of which Canada is a member.

WARTIME HOUSING—VANCOUVER

Mr. MERRITT:

1. Of the 1,200 houses contracted to be built by Wartime Housing Limited, in the city of Vancouver in the month of July or August, 1945, how many have been completed, up to April 30, 1946?

2. How many were occupied by tenants at that date?

3. Who are the contractors for this project?

4. Has the completion of any of the 1,200 houses been delayed for lack or scarcity of materials?

5. What is the total amount of building materials subject to priorities allotted to the contractors between the date of the contract and the 30th April, 1946?

6. What is the total amount of building materials subject to priorities used in the construction of said houses between said dates?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. The agreement referred to was entered into with the city of Vancouver whereby Wartime Housing Limited undertook to erect 1100 houses and the city agreed to provide improved lots for the construction of these houses. However, the city of Vancouver was able to provide only 1006 improved lots and as these became available to Wartime Housing, contracts were awarded on August 3, September 6 and October 2, 1945. Of these 1006 houses, 191 had been completed by April 30, 1946.

2. 191.

3. Smith Bros. & Wilson, 446 houses; Dawson Wade Co. Ltd. and C. Gostick, 229 houses; Commonwealth Construction Co. Ltd., 331 houses.

4. Yes.

5. $803,824.54 allotted to the above contractors on the above job.

6. $803,824.54.

AMERICAN MILITARY HOSPITAL, CHURCHILL

Mr. MOORE:

1. Has the federal government taken over the American military hospital at Churchill, Manitoba?

2. If so, what disposition is being made of this hospital?

Mr. McILRAITH: In so far as the Department of Transport is concerned:

1. Yes.

2. As it is surplus to the requirements of the Department of transport, it is in process of being reported to crown assets allocation committee for disposition.

LOANS UNDER FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

Mr. MENARY:

What is the total amount of the loans made by the dominion government, under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, in each province?

Mr. MAYHEW: The dominion government does not make loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Loans are made by chartered banks and the repayment thereof is guaranteed by the dominion government up to 10 per cent of aggregate amount of loans made by each bank.

Loans made by chartered banks by provinces to March 31, 1946, under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, are as follows:

British Columbia	$ 133,063 36
Alberta	1,687,205 43
Saskatchewan	1,177,462 85
Manitoba	684,094 97
Ontario	819,768 96
Quebec	160,734 75
Nova Scotia	26,548 40
New Brunswick	29,904 20
Prince Edward Island	7,360 50
Total	$4,726,153 42

GOVERNMENT MOTION PICTURE BUREAU

Mr. FULTON:

1. What is the government motion picture bureau?

2. Under what authority is it constituted?

3. Who are (a) the director; (b) the members of the bureau?

4. What are the duties of the bureau?

5. What salaries are paid to (a) the director; (b) the members of the bureau?

Mr. CLAXTON:

The information asked for is as follows:

1. The government motion picture bureau no longer exists. Formerly a section of the Department of Trade and Commerce its functions are now performed by the national film board. In accordance with the terms of the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act C.165, RSC. 1927, the control and supervision of the Government motion picture bureau were vested in the national film board by orders in council P.C. 3549 of June 11, 1941 and P.C. 6047 of August 8, 1941, which were tabled on June 12, 1941 and November 3, 1941, respectively.

2, 3, 4 and 5. See Answer to No. 1.

CONSTRUCTION OF ROADS INTO MINING AREAS

Mr. MOORE:

What amount of money was made available to the provincial governments Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and Alberta, by the federal government for the construction of roads into mining areas in 1942, 1943, 1944 and 1945?

Mr. GLEN:

Fiscal year	Alberta	Manitoba	Ontario	Quebec
1942–43	$1,276 10	nil	$26,272 27	$32,632 36
1943–44	nil	nil	75,322 06	46,463 77
1944–45	nil	nil	466 97	11,525 20
1945–46	nil	nil	nil	nil

LEVEL RAILWAY CROSSINGS—NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. STANFIELD:

1. How many level railway crossings are there in the provinces of Nova Scotia?

2. How many of these level railway crossings are protected by wig-wags or automatic gates?

Mr. CHEVRIER:

The Board of Transport Commissioners advise as follows:

1. Approximate number of level crossings in Nova Scotia, 971.

2. Approximate number protected by automatic signals or gates, 80; approximate number protected by electric bell and danger sign, 25; approximate number protected by watchman, 9; approximate number of unprotected crossings, 857.

POLYMER CORPORATION LIMITED

Mr. MURPHY:

1. Who are the officers and directors of the Polymer Corporation Limited?

2. What is the salary of each director and/or other official?

Mr. McILRAITH: I would point out that the information being asked for in this question was given to the house in a return tabled on March 15, 1946.

Mr. MURPHY: In view of the resolution sponsored last Wednesday by the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe) with regard to the operation and financing of government companies, and the fact that there are some questions affecting the Polymer corporation and I do not know when that resolution will be up again for debate, I would ask that the questions involving Polymer be answered as soon as possible, or at least before that debate comes up again.

Mr. McILRAITH: I would point out that this was answered on March 15 of this year.

Mr. MURPHY: I am thinking about the others that were not answered, and others that will come up to-morrow.

Mr. MACKENZIE: They will be answered when it is convenient to answer them.

Mr. HOMUTH: Who is running this country?

Mr. McILRAITH: The question is answered.

RUSSIAN EMBASSY—SECOND SECRETARY AND CONSUL

Mr. TUSTIN:

1. Have any steps been taken to request the recall of one Pavlov, second secretary and consul of the Russian embassy at Ottawa?

2. If so, when and with what results?

Mr. ST. LAURENT:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

OFFICERS ON STRENGTH OF INTERIM ARMY

Mr. KIDD:

2. How many of these officers have only had service in Canada and Great Britain?

3. How many officers are serving on the strength of the interim army with the rank of lieutenant?

4. How many of these officers have only had service in Canada and Great Britain?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. 445.

2. 44.

3. 372.

4. 78.

Above figures as of 30th April, 1946.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

WAR ASSETS—BOUCHARD PLANT—GAMES AND SPORTING EQUIPMENT

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne):

1. Have all games and sporting equipment used at Bouchard D.I.L. during the production period, been declared war surplus assets?

2. If so, on what date were they transferred to the War Assets Corporation?

3. Have they been disposed of?

4. If so, what equipment was disposed of, to whom, and at what price?

Mr. McILRAITH: Return tabled.

SUGAR FOR APIARISTS

Mr. HANSELL:

1. How much sugar per colony of bees is being allowed this spring to apiarists for feeding purposes?
2. How does this compare with the amount allowed in 1945?
3. Has there been a decline in the number of colonies of bees shipped into Canada from California, and other places compared to 1945? If so, to what extent?

HOUSING—VETERANS—ONSLOW, N.S.

Mr. STANFIELD:

1. On whose authority was the site chosen by the dominion government for the building of veterans houses at Onslow, Colchester county, Nova Scotia?
2. How much was paid for the land?

3. (a) How many claims have been paid for damages arising out of the operation of these proving grounds prior to the passing of P.C. 80/4133 on May 31, 1944; (b) from which proving ground did these claims arise?
4. (a) How many claims have been paid since the passing of P.C. 80/4133; (b) from which proving ground did these claims arise?
5. How many claims have been refused to date, stating the location of the proving ground from which these claims arose?

6. How many are still under consideration, and in what location?

7. (a) On whose recommendation was P.C. 80/4133 passed; (b) for what reason?

SERVICE IN PACIFIC WAR THEATRE—RATES OF PAY

Mr. LENNARD:

1. How many of all ranks of the (a) Royal Canadian Navy; (b) Canadian Army (c) Royal Canadian Air Force, served in the Pacific war theatre before V-J day?

2. Did all of the above receive Pacific rates of pay? If not, why not?

AGREEMENTS RESPECTING UNITED STATES PROJECTS IN CANADA

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

1. Was an agreement made between the government of Canada and the government of the United States of America whereby Canadian employees of contractors, where American or Canadian, engaged by the United States on projects, including the Alaska highway, in Yukon, were or are covered by the Longshoremen's and Harbour Workers' Compensation Act of the United States, and that no Canadian provincial or federal workmen's compensation laws would apply to such employees in Yukon?

2. Was an agreement made between the government of Canada and the government of the United States of America whereby Canadian or other civilians suffering injury and incurring damages due to negligence on the part of a member or members of the army of the United States of America in Yukon, Canada, are deprived of their rights to sue the United States of America or the army of the United States of America for damages in the territorial court of Yukon territory, and, if so, what rights, if any, have been given to or conferred on such Canadians in lieu of the rights of which they have been so deprived?

2. How many of these are (a) Japanese nationals; (b) Canadian citizens by naturalization; (c) Canadian citizens by birth?

3. How many have been released from internment since V-J day?

4. Do the review boards appointed under the Defence of Canada Regulations investigate Canadian internees of Japanese origin with a view to making recommendations to the Minister of Justice?

[Mr. Lockhart.]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

POLYMER CORPORATION LIMITED

Mr. MURPHY:

For a copy of financial statement of the Polymer Corporation, Limited (a) as of March 31, 1945; (b) as of March 31, 1946 showing (1) balance sheet; (2) operating statement for the year; (3) power plant expenses; (4) plant overhead expenses; (5) capital assets held in trust for the crown.

Mr. McILRAITH: Mr. Speaker, I would like the opportunity of looking further into this motion. It will be noted that it asks not only for the financial statements of the company, but that they show the operating statement for the year and power plant expenses. I am not sure whether the financial statements give the information in that form.

Mr. HOMUTH: If it is a proper statement, it has to.

Mr. McILRAITH: I do not propose at the moment to argue the propriety or impropriety of the financial statements of crown companies. I would ask that the motion stand unless the mover is satisfied to take the financial statements without the limitations he has attached to them.

Mr. MURPHY: I will accept what the minister can give me now, and if that is not enough I can ask for more later.

Mr. SPEAKER: Carried, on that understanding.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRY INTO ADMINISTRATION OF CANADIAN ARMY IN HOLLAND

On the motion—Mr. Cockeram:

For copy of report of the court of inquiry held by Lieutenant-General Price Montague, C.B., D.S.O., M.C., into the administration of the Canadian Army in Holland.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Mr. Speaker, I ask that this motion stand in the absence of the minister.

Mr. HOMUTH: When is the minister expected back?

Mr. MACKENZIE: To-night or to-morrow.

Motion stands.

AUXILIARY SERVICES

PROVISION FOR FINANCIAL AND OTHER BENEFITS

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to provide financial and other benefits for certain persons who were attached to and served with the naval, military or air forces of Canada, outside the western hemisphere, during World War II, as supervisors in the auxiliary services.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN CORPS OF FIRE FIGHTERS

PROVISION FOR FINANCIAL AND OTHER BENEFITS

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to provide financial and other benefits for certain fire fighters who served outside the western hemisphere, during world war II, as members of the Corps of (Civilian) Canadian Fire Fighters.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

REDISTRIBUTION

INQUIRY AS TO PROCEEDING WITH MEASURE DURING PRESENT SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would direct a question to the acting leader of the house. It has to do with redistribution. It was indicated in the speech from the throne that we would be expected to proceed with a redistribution of the seats of the house at this session. In recent days common report has it that the government does not intend to proceed with the measure this session. I do not accept those reports, but under the circumstances the acting leader of the house should indicate whether the government does intend to proceed with that measure this session, and if so, when the bill is likely to be introduced.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Justice has been requested to draft appropriate measures in that regard and I hope that they will be ready to be placed on the order paper within the next two or three days.

DAIRY PRODUCTS

INQUIRY AS TO PRICE CEILING ON MILK AFTER JUNE 1

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. RUSSELL BOUCHER (Carleton): I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Finance, of which I am sorry I was unable to give him notice. In view of the statement of government policy announced on Thursday last, will the dominion government exercise any jurisdiction over the price ceiling of fluid milk after June 1 next?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): The statement that was made on Thursday last was carefully expressed, and I do not think I can add anything to it in reply to my hon. friend's question. I received no notice of it, and I would not like to add anything to what was said by the Minister of Agriculture the other day. On looking at the question in Hansard, if I think anything should be added to what I said the other day, I shall have to make a statement later.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PERMITS FOR RETURNED MEN TO GO INTO BUSINESS—SLAUGHTERING OF CATTLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. FERGUSON (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister how much longer is this government going to continue refusing permits to returned men to go into business for themselves and make a livelihood?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman will place his question, or one more appropriately worded, on the order paper, he will receive a full and careful answer.

Mr. FERGUSON: My question may not be appropriately worded, but the minister knows exactly what I mean.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. FERGUSON (Simcoe North): I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister when veterans who are now engaged in butcher businesses in Canada are to be permitted to slaughter their own cattle, in order that they will not have to go out of business through lack of meat.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. gentleman to put his question on the order paper.

Mr. FERGUSON: The matter is urgent. These men are losing their businesses.

SUNNYBROOK HOSPITAL

INQUIRY AS TO TRADESMEN'S STRIKE—COMPLETION OF BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Public Works. What steps has the government taken or does it propose to take with a view to settlement of the strike at Sunnybrook military hospital called by the operative plasterers and cement finishers, A. F. of L., local 48, and when may completion of the hospital be expected?

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me advance notice of his two questions. His first question relates to a strike of plasterers and cement finishers at Sunnybrook hospital. The facts are as follows:

On Wednesday, the 8th of May, the regional war labour board awarded to the union plasterers of Toronto an amount of $1.30 per hour, which was 5 cents per hour less than had been requested. This award represented an increase of 9 cents per hour and it was effective from May 1, 1946. On Friday, the 17th, the plasterers in the Toronto area laid off work and held a meeting, the results of which were that they requested from the different contractors in the Toronto area, in addition to the raise already granted by the regional war labour board on the 8th instant, holidays with pay for each of the eight statutory holidays observed throughout the year.

At noon to-day, the plasterers' union, which represents 600 plasterers, notified the plastering contractors that they were on strike asking for these holidays with pay. At a meeting of the plastering contractors held at 12 o'clock to-day, the four major contractors refused the demands but five minor contractors accepted them and their men may be at work. The results of this will not be known until to-morrow.

The regional war labour board have to-day granted increases, effective May 1, to the following trades: bricklayers, to $1.35 per hour; lathers, same as increased rate for plasterers, $1.30 per hour; plumbers and steamfitters, to $1.27 per hour; sheet metal workers, to $1.28 per hour.

Just before coming into the house, Mr. MacNamara, the deputy minister of labour, advised me that he had received a telephone call from the Toronto labour exchange to the effect that they expected this strike would be settled during the week.

[Mr. Ferguson.]

My hon. friend's second question related to the completion of the work at Sunnybrook hospital. I would not dare to fix a date, right in the midst of the strike, when the hospital will be completed, but I am ready to give a progress report on that project, as follows:

Boiler House. Completed and in operation.

Neuro-psychiatric Building. Practically completed. Expect occupation by June 15.

Up-patients Building. Expect occupation by October 15.

Active treatment building. About 95 per cent of all the concrete in floors and roof slabs has been placed. Exterior wall work is about 65 per cent completed. Plumbing, heating and ventilating pipes and electric conduits are being installed, and some tile partition work has been done in basement and on ground floor.

Out-patient building. Concrete in all floors will be placed by May 4—

This report is dated April 30.

—leaving only the roof and penthouse slabs to be done. Exterior stonework at ground floor is about 40 per cent completed.

O. & S.A. and maintenance building. All walls, columns and concrete work on ground floor are finished, and structural steel framework is about 20 per cent erected.

Laundry. All footings and walls, necessary for erection of structural steel framework, have been finished; and forms for main floor concrete slab are ready for placing of concrete.

Emergency water and coal storage. This structure is completed.

Services. As previously reported, power, water and sewer lines are all finished, and generally in use. No road work has been done since last fall.

Red Cross lodge. This building should be completed about May 31.

Mr. FLEMING: I note that the report which has just been read was made some time ago. Will the minister give us a further report on progress at some early date?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I will ask that our architects in Toronto send me a further report.

Mr. L. W. SKEY (Trinity): In this connection, Mr. Speaker, may I call your attention to the fact that I asked the Minister of Veterans Affairs much the same question on April 5, 1946, which is over six weeks ago—as reported in Hansard, page 586—and this is the first reply we have had.

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege: the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Skey) said that he asked a question of the Minister of Veterans Affairs on April 5. I find that the question was answered immediately, the same day.

Mr. SKEY: In reply to the Minister for Veterans Affairs, may I say that he did not answer the question, because no date for the completion of Sunnybrook hospital was given.

Mr. SPEAKER: During this period before the orders of the day are called, questions should not be turned into a debate. We should proceed with the business of the house.

RADIO BROADCASTING

PRIVATE RADIO STATIONS AND WAVE LENGTHS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): I am anxious to direct two questions to the Minister of National Revenue. The first one is this: Is it true that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has purchased three large broadcasting outfits? The second is this: Has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation taken any steps to take over three private stations, one of which is located in Toronto, another in Calgary, and the third, I believe, although I do not know, is located in Winnipeg?

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): I am informed that orders have been given for some transmitters; I cannot say whether it is two or three. In reference to taking over some stations, it is not done just in that way. The way it is handled is that certain private commercial stations have the right to use a frequency and it is held upon a yearly basis; the permit is renewed from year to year; and in conformity with the Canadian Broadcasting Act the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation can notify the holders of those frequencies that they may be required for the purposes of the broadcasting corporation itself at some date. I cannot say whether or not any notification has been given to that effect.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Well, is it going to be given?

Mr. McCANN: I cannot answer that at the present time. I shall have to find out from the broadcasting corporation, who make and put into operation their own policy, what they expect to do in that regard.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Then, Mr. Speaker, you will perhaps permit a supplementary question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I allowed the hon. gentleman to put his questions, although I did not think they were very urgent, but I wanted to be generous. I found that the question was pretty lengthy, and this was another reason why it should be put on the order paper. Now it seems to have turned into a debate. I ask the hon. member, if he has any further question to put, to put it on the order paper.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I submit a very simple question? It is about six words, and I am not asking that it be answered, Mr. Speaker, until you rule on it. Why have these transmitters been bought?

Mr. SPEAKER: I must again inform the hon. member that I do not see any urgency in his questions on this matter. I would ask him to put the question on the order paper.

NATIONAL PARKS

ADJUSTMENT OF BOUNDARIES IN RESPECT OF CERTAIN SMALL AREAS

The house resumed from Tuesday, May 14, consideration in committee of bill No. 63, respecting the boundaries of certain national parks—Mr. Glen—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Hon. J. A. GLEN (Minister of Mines and Resources): When the discussion ended on Tuesday last I had not an opportunity to explain to the member for Davenport the situation with regard to the 200 foot strip along the foreshore of Point Pelee. He wanted to know why that was not included in the description of the park. The reason is that it was already in the title of the crown and therefore does not form a part of the description of the new piece now being taken over.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Certain additions are being made to straighten out boundaries. What type of land is being taken over, and how much, if anything, is being paid for it?

Mr. GLEN: Banff park is already described in the National Parks Act. The boundaries of the park were not surveyed until 1940 when, on instructions of the surveyor general, a survey was carried out and an official map prepared. This map was approved and signed on behalf of the dominion government by the then minister of mines and resources, under the authority of the governor in council, and on behalf of the province of Alberta by Mr. Tanner. A copy is filed in the land titles office of the land registration district of Calgary, being 345, folio 109. Two small parcels of land not formerly in the park are included in the boundaries of the park as set out in schedule A, one parcel containing approximately 210 acres being required as a site for the eastern gateway. That was acquired. The other parcel, comprising one-sixth of a square mile, owing to the adjustment of the boundary made on the survey of the park is added with the approval of the province. That did not cost anything. The total area added is approximately one half square mile. The total area of the park as described in the schedule is 2,585 square miles more or less.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister, at page 1540 of Hansard, on May 14, made this statement:

Mr. Speaker, as this bill, if enacted, will divest the crown of certain areas of land in certain national parks, title to which is at present in the crown, the governor general has been informed in respect thereto, and has given his consent to consideration of the bill.

Can the minister tell us which parks are being divested of certain areas? The parks mentioned in the bill are Banff, Kootenay, Riding Mountain, Point Pelee, Georgian Bay and Mallorytown. Is land being added to any of the parks, and what is being divested?

Mr. GLEN: All that is being divested is two small sites in the Riding Mountain park. They were outside the boundaries of the park and were used for houses for the park wardens. The administration has been carried to within the park now. These sites were unnecessary, being very small portions, and therefore we are divesting ourselves of them and turning them back to the province.

Mr. MacNICOL: We do not get anything for it?

Mr. GLEN: No.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Will the minister make a statement regarding the policy of the department in respect of National Highland park in Nova Scotia?—which should have been called, I believe, the Cabot park, seeing that the Cabot tourist highway trail serves that park. I understand the province of Nova Scotia and large public bodies as well as individuals in the island of Cape Breton have made representations to the government to make extensive additions to that park in the northern part of the island. The land involved is largely crown land of the province of Nova Scotia. The matter has been before the public and the department for some time and I would like to know why it is not covered by the bill.

Mr. GLEN: I suggest that it might be more proper for the hon. member to ask that question on the parks estimates. We shall then be dealing with that particular matter. This is simply a bill with respect to the boundaries of certain parks. When the estimates on parks are before the house I shall endeavour to reply to the hon. gentleman's question, which has been noted.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Can the minister make a general statement as to what measures are being taken to encourage the greatest possible tourist traffic this year from the United States? By the time his estimates come up it may be rather late, and if ever there was a time when it was most necessary to encourage that tourist traffic with a view to securing United States dollars in Canada, it is now. I am sure the minister is in full possession of the necessary facts to enable him to make a statement on the subject.

Mr. GLEN: I would not wish to enter into a discussion of the point raised by the hon. member, which of course will come up under the estimates. All I would say now is that there is an increased grant being asked of the house for the very purpose he has mentioned. I hope to deal with the matter when the estimates are under consideration. This is something that should have been done years ago, because the boundaries of the park have to be correct and surveys have been made and plans registered in order that we may know what is contained within the boundaries of the park. This bill deals only with boundaries without reference to administration. When the estimates are before the house the questions that are now asked will be properly replied to.

Mr. REID: In taking over an area for a park is there some minimum extent of territory fixed before that area can be declared a park?

Mr. GLEN: There is no limit with regard to the area. The province may obtain land and give it to the dominion, who may then if necessary form a park.

Mr. REID: I remember on one occasion we were told by Ottawa that a certain area was too small to be considered a national park.

Section agreed to.

On Section 2—Park areas described.

Mr. STIRLING: I find it quite impossible to form any opinion on this bill, as to its merits or otherwise, by reading the schedules without reference to the maps and plans. As I understand it, this is an adjustment in the boundaries of certain parks, entailing the giving up of land in one place and the acquisition of land in another. Is it the provincial government which is at the other end of the deal in each case, or do private owners come into the picture? If private owners do come into the picture, are they sometimes sellers of land and sometimes purchasers?

Mr. GLEN: In the case of the Kootenay park, in which the hon. gentleman is interested, the provincial government is on the other side of the deal; and in the Riding Mountain park the same thing applies.

Mr. STIRLING: Banff?

Mr. GLEN: There is no divesting from the park there; that is a case of adding to the park. We are adding two small parcels, one of which was bought and the other given, to be added to the crown lands within the park. In the other cases, however—that is in connection with Kootenay park and the Riding Mountain park—there is a divesting of two small portions only, which will belong to the province.

Mr. STIRLING: Who sold the land, in the case of the purchase by the crown for an addition to the Banff park?

Mr. GLEN: I have not the name of the individual. It was a purchase under the direction of the surveyor general, after a survey made at the entrance to the gate of the park. Perhaps I might send my hon. friend a plan of Kootenay park, so that he may see what is proposed.

Mr. WEBB: How much land was taken over in connection with the Mallorytown Landing park? I understand some arrangement or some adjustment was made as a result of the highway going through there. I should be interested to learn just what amount of land this boundary will take in. This park is accessible from the highway as well as from the St. Lawrence river, and I think eventually it will become very important. It is stated that the parcel of land being added amounts to 3·38 acres. I take it that is in addition to the land already within that park?

Mr. GLEN: Yes. As my hon. friend knows, the new scenic highway being constructed by the provincial government between Brockville and Gananoque runs through the Mallorytown Landing park, one of the St. Lawrence islands parks. The provincial government secured and transferred to the dominion a small area adjoining the park, in compensation for the area taken up by the right of way of the highway; and the area added amounts to 3·38 acres.

Mr. HAZEN: What was the date of the transfer from the provincial to the dominion government?

Mr. GLEN: About 1938.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I notice that under schedule B something less than two sections are being added to the Riding Mountain park. Would the minister explain for what purpose this area is being added, from whom it was purchased, and what amount was paid for it?

Mr. GLEN: The portion mentioned by the hon. member was purchased in order to protect the entrance to the park. It is outside the south gate. Some people were wishing to build right up to the gate, and the officers of the department of that date thought it was necessary to protect the entrance, so they arranged the purchase of the land outside the park as it then was. I have not the amount paid, but I can give the hon. gentleman that information.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: And from whom it was purchased.

Mr. GLEN: Yes, I will get that information and give it to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MacNICOL: There is just one other question. The minister gave some explanation when the matter was last before the committee, but I am not quite clear on it. Perhaps I should be; I know the area very well. I am referring to Flowerpot island. The bill provides to place it under the control of the Georgian Bay Islands park. Under whose control has it been up to now?

Mr. GLEN: The parks department has always had control. Flowerpot island, which it is desired to include in the Georgian Bay Islands park, is located at the head of the Bruce peninsula. The island was surrendered by the Chippewa Indians on June 5, 1856, and was acquired for park purposes from the Department of Indian Affairs on December 6, 1930. With the addition of Flowerpot island, Georgian Bay Islands park will consist of Beausoleil island, containing 2,712 acres, Flowerpot island, containing 475 acres, and some 28 smaller islands totalling 251 acres, giving a total area of approximately 3,438 acres.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Were the Indians reimbursed for the surrender of that land, and if so what amount was paid?

Mr. GLEN: I have no information on that. It was surrendered a long time ago, but I have not the least doubt that it was properly surrendered and any compensation would be paid then. It was surrendered by the Chippewa Indians away back in 1856, and was acquired for park purposes in 1930.

Mr. FRASER: Has the navy department full control of Beausoleil Island, or what arrangements have been made in that regard?

Mr. GLEN: It is under our control, and just what arrangements will be made with the navy department I do not know. I understand they have been working around there and have set up some sort of camp for sea cadets, I believe.

Mr. FRASER: They have an excellent camp there.

Mr. GLEN: I believe that is so, but I have no idea as to the extent of their activities. I can get the information if the hon. gentleman desires it.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to have it.

Mr. GLEN: The hon. member wishes to know what arrangement was made with the navy department in regard to occupancy of that island?

Mr. FRASER: Yes; and can the minister also say whether tourists are allowed to camp on the other parts of that parcel of land in Georgian Bay?

Mr. GLEN: I will have to get that information and give it to the hon. gentleman.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Lands withdrawn from Riding Mountain park.

Mr. MacNICOL: Why is schedule F on page 14, and not immediately after schedule B on page 11?

Mr. GLEN: Schedule F deals with the land we are withdrawing. Schedule B deals with the lands we are adding to the different parks.

Mr. MacNICOL: I understood we were not adding anything to Riding Mountain.

Mr. GLEN: The hon. member for Dauphin was asking about that. We purchased a piece of land outside the entrance to Riding Mountain park, and that is being added to it. But we are also withdrawing two portions that were used for park wardens' houses, outside the park.

Mr. MacNICOL: How much are we adding to it?

Mr. GLEN: The area added amounts to 962·3 acres.

Mr. MacNICOL: Did we have to buy that from somebody?

Mr. GLEN: Yes, it was purchased, and I have promised to give the hon. member for Dauphin the purchase price and the names of the persons from whom it was purchased. As I explained, it was purchased in order to protect the entrance to the park. Many citizens were desirous of building warehouses and stores right at the park gate, and the officers felt they had to acquire this land in order to protect that entrance. So that land was purchased and the other portion is withdrawn, as I say, just for the two park wardens' houses.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is quite a large area, 900 acres. Is it now being farmed? If so, are there barns and houses on it, and is it all ready for cropping? If that is so, we may have to pay quite a price for it.

Mr. GLEN: I do not know the price, but it was not being farmed. It was intended to bring the approach to the park right through that area, and in that way protect all the amenities of the park.

Mr. FRASER: Are the 320 acres being withdrawn from Riding Mountain park timber land? I believe last year we had a bill before us dealing with this park, and the minister said there was a timber company cutting in there. Are they cutting on the 320 acres?

Mr. GLEN: No, not on this portion. This is land which can be used for agricultural purposes.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Who will own these 320 acres after they are taken out? Under whose control will that land come?

Mr. GLEN: It goes to the province, so it will be under provincial control.

Section 5 agreed to.

On schedule A.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Does the minister say he will let us know from whom this half section was obtained, and at what price?

Mr. GLEN: I shall be glad to get that information.

Schedule A agreed to.

Schedules B to F inclusive agreed to.

On the title.

Mr. FRASER: When may we have the answers to our questions?

Mr. GLEN: Either on the estimates, or by letter.

Mr. FRASER: Can we not have those answers before the bill is passed?

Mr. GLEN: I expect the bill will pass today. I can give the information by letter.

Mr. FRASER: I am not the only member interested.

Mr. GLEN: I can give the answers when my estimates are before the committee.

Mr. MacNICOL: I do not intend to delay passage of the bill, but it seems to me peculiar that the deputy sitting in front of the minister is not able to state immediately what is to be paid for that land added to the Riding Mountain park. We are not offering any opposition; in fact, we are for it, but it seems to me we should have that information at once.

Mr. GLEN: It was bought many years ago.

Mr. MacNICOL: Then it belongs to the government now.

Mr. GLEN: Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: We did not know even that.

Mr. GLEN: It was purchased years ago and is now being taken over by the government. In this bill we are bringing it legally within the boundaries of the park.

Mr. NICHOLSON: When did these transactions take place? I gather some of them took place at least fifteen years ago.

Mr. GLEN: I have undertaken to secure for the hon. member for Dauphin information respecting purchase price and the party from whom the purchases were made. The information can be given either by letter or when my estimates are before the committee. The purchase in respect of Riding Mountain park was made years ago. All we are asking in this bill is that the area be included within the park boundaries.

Mr. MacNICOL: Has the 900 acres been under cultivation?

Mr. GLEN: No.

Mr. MacNICOL: Then we do not have to pay anything because of our dispossessing anyone now carrying on operations on the land?

Mr. GLEN: No.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I believe the minister will agree that we are with him. But surely our responsibility in the examination of park boundaries and the purchases of lands for park purposes is such that we should know from whom those purchases have been made, when they were made, and how much was paid. That simple bit of information could be given to us before final disposition of the bill. There would not be much object in our getting it later.

Mr. GLEN: If the committee will agree, I shall be glad to give it before third reading.

Mr. SMITH: (Calgary West): That is satisfactory.

Mr. GLEN: At that time I shall answer the questions which have been asked by hon. members.

Mr. CASE: I note that schedule D provides for the addition of some small islands in Georgian bay. Is it the department's policy to lease islands of that type for long terms—let us say, ninety-nine years?

Mr. GLEN: I am informed that it is not.

Mr. STIRLING: We should have an understanding as to when we may have this information.

Mr. MACKENZIE: On third reading.

Mr. STIRLING: On third reading there can be no such thing as question and answer.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The minister will make a statement.

Mr. STIRLING: Another of those statements from a minister, with which we are becoming too much accustomed.

Mr. FRASER: It is "not debatable".

The CHAIRMAN: On third reading remarks could be made, but questions could not be asked. However any hon. member would be entitled to speak on third reading, if he wished.

Mr. STIRLING: The minister has brought down a bill having to do with the disposal of certain lands, the purchase of other lands, and the adjustment of boundaries of parks. It struck me as most extraordinary that we did not have more detailed information respecting the parties from whom the land was bought, to whom certain lands were sold, and all points having to do with conditions of purchase. If we now agree to the passing of the title, then the bill will have reached the stage of third reading and out of the committee, in which event we cannot ask further questions. I suggest the bill remain in committee, that the title be not carried, so that we may have in committee stage the information required. If necessary questions could be asked, and if hon. members were satisfied, the bill could pass on quickly to third reading.

Mr. GLEN: What the hon. member says is entirely correct. I would therefore ask that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Title stands.

Progress reported.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPOINTMENT OF GEORGE A. TOUCHE AND COMPANY AS AUDITORS

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of bill No. 10, respecting the appointment of auditors for national railways.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Appointment of auditors.

Mr. MacNICOL: Would the minister explain this section

Mr. CHEVRIER: Prior to the passing of The Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act the auditors of the Canadian National Railways were appointed by the directors of that railway system. However, there was provision made in section 13 of the act I have mentioned that the auditors be appointed by joint resolution of the Senate and the House of Commons. Since 1932 it has been found that the practice was cumbersome and the appointment of auditors is now carried out by passing a bill which sets out that notwithstanding the provisions of section 13, which contains the provisions I have referred to, the appointment of auditors shall be made. It is sought by this bill to appoint George A. Touche and Company—whose offices are in Montreal and Toronto, with head office in Toronto—for the year 1946. The bill is the same as it has been in past years, certainly as it was in 1945.

Mr. NICHOLSON: How many years has this firm audited the accounts, and for how many years have the accounts been audited by other firms?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The accounts of the Canadian National Railways have been audited by the firm of George A. Touche and Company since 1924, with but one exception, the year 1935, when the firm of Clarkson, Gordon and Company were appointed auditors.

Mr. MacNICOL: What is the meaning of the reference to the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act? We do not name auditors for the Canadian Pacific, do we?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No, we do not. That is the act which was passed in 1932, and one of its sections took away from the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways the power which they had to appoint auditors and gave it to parliament.

Mr. NICHOLSON: What is the annual remuneration?

Mr. CHEVRIER: A total of $51,800. Of this amount, $50,000 is for auditing the books of Canadian National Railways and $1,800 for auditing the books of Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

EXPLOSIVES ACT

AMENDMENTS TO MEET PRESENT-DAY REQUIREMENTS

Hon. J. A. GLEN (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved the second reading of bill No. 16, respecting the manufacture, testing, sale, storage and importation of explosives.

He said: The Explosives Act of Canada, 1914, chapter 31, was introduced in 1911 and passed by parliament on June 12, 1914, under the Honourable Mr. Coderre, but its proclamation was deferred until after the war of 1914-18. The act is based upon the British act of 1875, which is the general basis of the explosives acts of South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, Belgium and other countries. It has not been changed in any respect since 1920, the year in which it was proclamed, save for the general revision of Canadian statutes in 1927.

Revision of the Explosives Act has been under consideration for some time and a revision has now been prepared by the Department of Justice in consultation with officers of the mines and geology branch. The amendments proposed are largely minor in nature, and are the results of, first, experience in the administration of the act, and second, administrative changes in the department.

Five important changes have been made. First, the governor in council will have authority to make regulations respecting the sale of explosives; second, provision is made for forfeiture to the crown of any unauthorized explosive in respect of which a conviction has been obtained; third, an inspector may seize and detain an explosive which he believes is not authorized; fourth, the minister will have authority to seize and destroy abandoned or deteriorated explosives which have become a public danger; fifth, servants of the crown, excepting the Department of National Defence, are to be brought within the application of the act.

During the twenty-five years of operation the act has proved its value and demonstrated the desirability of having control over explosives which may be put on the market and of regulating the conditions with regard to safety under which explosives are manufactured and stored. Regulations for the more effective application of the act were made. These deal with such matters as the classification of explosives and the testing and examination before being declared an authorized explosive. The effect has been beneficial, and in their administration manufacturers of explosives have given excellent cooperation, with the result that quality and uniformity of explosives have undoubtedly improved to the advantage of the user.

The quantity of explosives manufactured yearly has increased steadily. Production of commercial explosives in 1919, the year preceding the proclamation of the act, was slightly over twenty-one million pounds; the greatest production was in 1940 when it totalled over eighty-four million pounds, a four-fold increase. Despite the great increase in production the number of accidents has shown a steady decline. Entire freedom from accident can scarcely be looked for in any industry; still less so in the one which involves the risks which are ever present to those engaged in work of explosives, but much can and is being done to reduce the known hazards.

Rules for factories and magazines and regulations for the packing and transportation of explosives, otherwise than by railway, were made under authority of the act. Rules, of necessity, are of a general nature intended to apply to explosives plants of various kinds manufacturing different types of explosives, but their object is primarily intended to express what is recognized to be good practice in the manufacture, storage and handling of explosives.

By order in council P.C. 191/1365 of fourteenth June, 1932, all officers, non-commissioned officers and constables of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, while serving on that force, are appointed deputy inspectors of explosives without pay. Members of the force have rendered valuable assistance in the administration of the Explosives Act in many sections of Canada, particularly in the inaccessible areas such as the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Soon after the outbreak of war it was deemed advisable in the public interest to control the possession, sale and use of explosives. There was no authority under the Explosives Act to regulate these; consequently recourse was had to the War Measures Act under which order in council P.C. 2903, July 4, 1940, was passed. This order in council, during the years it has been in force, has proved satisfactory and has been well received by both vendors and purchasers of explosives. It has proved a useful measure to peace officers through keeping them fully informed of all purchases of explosives, with the result that sabotage by the use of commercial explosives was practically unknown in Canada during the war years.

Experience gained in administering P.C. 2903 indicates that in the interest of public safety some measure of control—not provided in the present Explosives Act—over the operations of retail dealers who store for sale small quantities of explosives should be continued in the post-war period. For this purpose the bill now being considered will restrict the sale of blasting explosives to the owner or operator of a licensed factory, licensed magazine or registered premises. The advantages of this provision from the viewpoint of public safety and administration will be:

1. All vendors will be obliged to make known their dealings in explosives.
2. Premises, other than licensed magazines, in which explosives are stored for sale will be subject to periodic inspection to ensure that the terms of the licence or certificate are being fully observed.
3. Records of sale of explosives which vendors are obliged to maintain would, as in the past, assist peace officers in the enforcement of law.

Order in council P.C. 2903 requires purchasers of explosives to obtain an explosives purchase permit. This restriction is not provided for in the revision of the act and will be discontinued when the new act is passed.

The present Explosives Act does not provide adequately for the disposal of unauthorized, abandoned, and deteriorated explosives. The bill seeks to correct this omission by providing authority, when warranted, to seize, forfeit, and dispose of unauthorized explosives and explosives which have been abandoned or have become deteriorated and a danger to the public.

To summarize, the new act continues the controls of the old act over the manufacture, testing, storage, and importation of explosives, and in addition requires that all who sell explosives shall register their premises. This bill has been before the other chamber and was passed almost without alteration. It was drawn in conjunction with the Justice department in the light of the experience gained during the war, and it is thought that in its present form it will be adequate to take care of the dangers of explosives and give added powers for the protection of the public. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I move the second reading of the bill.

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, if the bill will achieve all that the minister has just set out, it ought to be worth while, but I understood from what he said that an act containing much of what is in this bill has been on the statute books for some time.

I rise to support any legislation or any programme at all which will strengthen the hands of whoever is charged with the control of the sale of explosives and prevent any such disaster as occurred in Toronto a week ago Sunday night. It passes my comprehension how four young lads could go into a store—I presume on College street, Toronto, because the accident happened on College street near Clinton street—purchase powerful explosives and take them out on the street-car tracks and set them off, with the result that a young man of nineteen years of age was struck on the head with a rocket and his skull pierced, resulting in his death a few hours afterwards. I should like to read for the benefit of the members what the Toronto police said about these rockets, one of which killed this young man. I have not the date of the clipping, but it must have been about May 13 or 14 last:

Police say that the rockets, which were purchased by the boys at a nearby store, were of a powerful variety.

I should like to know how any young lads could buy such a powerful rocket. What control was there over the store in which these rockets were purchased? What control was there over the sale of these rockets to the merchant? I presume the bill will cover all that, and if it does, it will be a step in the right direction. Continuing with the clipping:

The boys laid them lengthwise on the street-car tracks, and when they were fired they shot along the groove in the rail. Some of the rockets were reported to have travelled as far as Bathurst street in this manner, a distance of five blocks.

One can picture what would have happened had anyone been in the line of fire five blocks away from where the rockets were set off. I hope that the new act will prevent the recurrence of such accidents. The article continues:

Announcing steps to prevent recurrence of such fatalities, Inspector Frank Crowe said that police officials would confer with Crown Attorney J. W. McFadden, to-day to discuss a Toronto by-law which forbids the setting off of fireworks in the city.

"A by-law regarding the exploding of fireworks is still on the books," he said. "Rockets of the type used Sunday are not playthings, but are dangerous weapons in the hands of grown-ups, let alone juveniles."

I hope that the provisions of this bill will prevent the recurrence of such a disaster. I hope that it will control the sale of powerful rockets by the manufacturer to the wholesaler, and by the wholesaler to the street merchant, and that it will prevent the street corner merchant from selling rockets to juveniles who go out and set them off on the street in this manner.

I might mention another incident which occurred near where I live. A young lad went into a store to buy some small ammunition for an air gun. The storekeeper refused to sell it to him on account of his age, and so the boy got an older person in the store to buy it for him. I hope this bill will prevent that kind of thing. Too many people are being injured through these small, supposedly harmless firearms. Certainly the firing of rockets on streets should be prevented by every means. Steps should be taken to prevent their sale to juveniles and to control their sale to merchants.

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the matter just dealt with by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) was one which I had intended to bring to the attention of the house. So far as I can see, the bill, as was stated by the minister, is merely a restatement of the British Explosives Act, together with a revision of the Canadian Explosives Act, bringing it up to date and applying statutory form to the orders in council which were passed during the war.

So far as the general purport is concerned, there can be no argument. It is really a photographic copy of the original Explosives Act brought up to date in order to remedy any defects which have been revealed in practical experience. But consideration should be given to including in this bill sky-rockets and fire-crackers of the type referred to by the hon. member for Davenport. I have read over the bill and I can find in it no section which in any way would be applicable to what was mentioned by my hon. friend.

If I might be permitted, Mr. Speaker, to refer to just one section of the bill, section 2(c), which defines "explosive", it includes "fireworks, fuses, rockets, percussion caps, detonators, cartridges, ammunition of all descriptions." But in view of the use of the words and the order in which they appear I should think that fireworks, fuses, rockets, would have to do in general with fireworks, fuses and rockets similar in action to percussion caps, detonators, cartridges, railway track torpedoes, fuses and other signals. In other words, there is established in that section a type or a genus, which would make the section inapplicable under the circumstances detailed by the hon. member for Davenport, and I am sure it would be the wish of the house and of the minister that there should be the fullest possible control of explosives. This bill will not cover a control which is vitally necessary to-day; I refer to firearms, which are all too frequently used. It is intended to go part way, and I am sure it would be the wish of the house that it go as far as possible to prevent the recurrence of such an event as has been described and to remove from the hands of young men, too large a percentage of whom are launching on a career of crime, opportunities of securing firearms, which are not only required in ordinary business pursuits but are part of the stock in trade of persons engaged in nefarious practices.

I have read the bill carefully and compared it with the British act and with the orders in council to which the minister made reference. I am happy to say that it gives evidence of unusual care in preparation and draftsmanship, and the other house in which it was introduced, deserves a measure of credit for the attention it has paid to the bill. May I add that this is a challenge to the commons—to the government—in any event in that much legislation of this kind which is introduced in the commons might well be initiated in the other house, where they have a great deal more leisure and more opportunities of examination. The bill as it stands shows what can be done when there is proper cooperation between the two houses of parliament. There is a care and directness in draftsmanship in the bill which is too often lacking, and it indicates the desirability of using to the limit the experience and the facilities which the other house offers for considered legislation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 2—Definitions.

Mr. MacNICOL: I know that the minister listened to what I had to say a moment ago as to what section of the bill would control and prevent such an occurrence as that to which I have referred—the purchase and firing by juveniles of high explosive rockets.

Mr. GLEN: The hon. member for Davenport was referring to an accident which recently took place; and I have also in mind the remarks of the hon. member for Lake Centre. In section 2,

(c) "explosive" means gunpowder, blasting powder, nitroglycerine, gun-cotton, dynamite, blasting gelatine, gelignite, fulminates of mercury or of other metals, coloured fires, and every other substance made, manufactured or used with a view to produce a violent effect by explosion, or pyrotechnic effect, and includes fireworks, fuses, rockets, percussion caps, detonators, cartridges, ammunition of all descriptions, railway track torpedoes, fusees and other signals, and every other adaptation or preparation of any such substance;

I would imagine that that definition of "explosive" would cover what the hon. member for Davenport has spoken of. In the report he read I think the word "rockets" was used, and that word is included in this interpretation of "explosive". Section 4 provides that regulations shall be made "respecting the sale of explosives". Subsection 1 reads that "The Governor in Council may make regulations....(n) respecting the sale of explosives." That clause was inserted for the purpose of having some record by those who sell explosives of whom they sell to. During the war provision was made that those purchasing explosives should go to a magistrate or justice of the peace or mayor of a town in order to obtain ammunition. Exception to this was taken by a good many people throughout the country, who complained of the inconvenience they had to undergo. Sometimes it involved a journey of twenty or thirty miles. It is thought that by regulations made under this clause, which was not in the former act, provision could be made whereby those who are selling explosives will keep a record of those to whom they are selling, and of the amount sold, and thus there will be some check on the sale of explosives. I do not know whether that fully answers the question of the hon. member for Davenport, but I take it that it covers to some extent the inquiry of the hon. member for Lake Centre with regard to the sale of rockets, or of ammunition as referred to by the hon. member.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Is it the opinion of the law officers of the crown that section 2, subparagraph (c), and the one to which the minister just had reference, would cover a case such as was referred to by the hon. member for Davenport? If he has that assurance, then the responsibility has been discharged.

Mr. GLEN: This accident occurred so recently that I had no occasion to inquire of the law officers with regard to it, but this section was drafted for the very purpose, and contains the power to accomplish exactly what the hon. member for Davenport desires. It would cover any explosive which would create an accident, including such an accident as that to which the hon. member has referred.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The minister says that the clause as at present constituted was drafted to cover just such cases, among others, as mentioned by the hon. member. As a matter of fact the old section read exactly the same, and in the explanatory notes, paragraph (c), as set out, "explosive" includes fireworks, fuses, rockets, percussion caps, detonators, cartridges, and ammunition of all descriptions. The old section as it stood—and I think I am correct in this—did not cover the condition of affairs referred to by the hon. member for Davenport, and if it did not, then certainly the amendments now suggested would not cover it since those amendments merely substitute, for "fog and other signals", railway track torpedoes, fusees and other signals. That is the only alteration in that section. I would suggest that if it is the minister's wish, as apparently it is, that this measure should cover the sale and disposal of rockets and also firecrackers of a dangerous type, a submission should be made to the law officers to ascertain whether or not, as at present constituted, the section would cover that type of thing; if not, then the committee could suggest an amendment to the section. That would not hold up the bill. An opinion could be secured very soon and I would suggest that paragraph (c) be held over until that opinion has been secured.

Mr. GLEN: There has never been any question of the department's power under the act to deal with rockets and firecrackers. No one has ever questioned the jurisdiction of the act and I would imagine it would cover exactly what the hon. member has in mind. However, as he says, I am anxious, as I am sure the committee is, to make the act as ironclad as possible, and therefore I have no objection to allowing paragraph (c) to stand until such time as I have an opportunity of discussing the point with the officers.

Mr. HAZEN: What are "fusees" in line 16? When I first read this I thought it was intended for the word "fuses", but evidently it has a meaning of its own.

Mr. GLEN: I am informed that fusees are the flares used on the railways for stopping trains.

Mr. HAZEN: The hon. member for Lake Centre referred to the words "fireworks, fuses and rockets". He suggested that they might be all of the same genus and that the word "fuses" might be limited to fuses used in connection with fireworks. Does the word "fuses" in paragraph (c) include surplus mine fuses? There are land mines and there are fuzes that have to be attached to them. Is the word "fuses" in this paragraph limited to such fuzes as are used with fireworks, or does it include fuses such as land mine fuses, or fuses used to detonate shells?

Mr. GLEN: I am informed that fuses are military explosives which are under the control of the department of defence, not the type considered in the definition of fuses here, or in the interpretation of the word "fuses".

Mr. HAZEN: Do I understand that the word is intended to include military fuses?

Mr. GLEN: No. Those are under the department of defence.

Mr. HAZEN: Under what section?

Mr. GLEN: Those are under the control of the department of defence, not under this act. Ordinary fuses that might be used on the railway would come under this act, but those that my hon. friend speaks of are under the control of the department of defence.

Mr. HAZEN: But they may not be under the control of the defence department. They might be under the control of the Department of Munitions and Supply. Section 3 states:

> This act shall apply to the possession, storing, sale or offering for sale, making, manufacture or importation of explosives by or on behalf of His Majesty in right of Canada or any province except explosives under the direction or control of the Minister of National Defence.

There may be explosives that belong to the dominion government but are not under the direction or control of the Minister of National Defence. For example, explosives may be under the control of the Department of Munitions and Supply. In that case, does the word "fuses" in line 14 of 2 (c) apply, or is that word limited to fireworks?

Mr. GLEN: I am informed that fuzes, from the military point of view, are not spelt in the same way. These fuses would cover in the last sentence what calls for "every other adaptation or preparation of any such substance". Does that meet the hon. member's point?

Mr. HAZEN: I must confess that I am a little puzzled about the matter. It might be given a little more consideration. The minister said he was going to refer this section back to the law officers and perhaps he might consider this point.

Mr. GLEN: I must say that I thought, when I read over this provision, "railway track torpedoes, fusees and other signals, and every other adaptation or preparation of any such substance", it would be wide enough to cover all that the hon. gentleman has in mind. However, we are allowing this to stand over and I will consider what he says.

Mr. HAZEN: The minister says it does not include fuzes under the control of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. GLEN: It does not apply to explosives of any kind under the charge of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. HAZEN: Then does it include explosives under the control of the Department of Munitions and Supply?

Mr. GLEN: Certainly I would say it would apply to those, unquestionably.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should like to pursue a little farther the case I mentioned a few moments ago. I understood the hon. member for Lake Centre to say he had thoroughly read this bill. I have read it casually, but not thoroughly. He also said he had carefully read the British act, and could not find in it any clause that would cover the case I brought up. What I want to suggest to the minister is that in the preparation of the regulations, they should prevent the sort of thing that took place in Toronto a week or ten days ago, when four young lads were able to purchase very powerful explosives in the form of rockets. I believe the regulations should prevent the sale of such rockets by any wholesaler for resale to corner stores, hardware stores or anyone else, where boys or juveniles might purchase them. To the extent humanly possible will the regulations under this act prevent the producer of such high explosives from selling them to, let us say, a wholesaler, and will they prevent the wholesaler from selling them to the small corner stores which in turn will sell them to juveniles? In this case a young man, nineteen or twenty years old, with all his life before him, was killed. He was minding his own business when from down the street, some distance away, a rocket came and punctured his skull, so that he died a day or two later. If that racket had been fired by an adult I presume it would be a case of manslaughter. I do not know whether these boys should be punished, particularly, but I believe there should be some control over the sale of such powerful explosives to young lads. Will this act prevent that sort of thing?

Mr. GLEN: The hon. gentleman is referring to a newspaper report concerning an accident which apparently involved a rocket. That is covered by the interpretation clause, which includes rockets. Then the hon. member asks if there is power under the act to prevent the sale of such explosives. When we come to section 4 he will find that regulations can be made under paragraph (n) with respect to the sale of explosives, and in the making of these regulations account will be taken of what the hon. gentleman has said, in order that the sale of explosives may be as closely guarded as possible. No one, of course, can provide entirely against the possibility of accident, but there is power in the act to make rules and regulations respecting the sale of explosives. That is one of the new features of this bill as compared with previous legislation.

Mr. STIRLING: Would the minister explain exactly the position we shall be in after the passage of the bill with respect to Canadian Arsenals Limited? I do not think it can be said that Canadian Arsenals Limited will be under the direction and control of the Minister of National Defence. It will be a crown company which will produce almost all, if not all, the explosives required by the services, and I am quite doubtful whether under this act the inspectors charged with enforcing the act will have the opportunity or will be required to inspect the operations of Canadian Arsenals Limited.

Mr. GLEN: We are not dealing with that now, but still from the general point of view section 6 provides that the minister may issue licences for factories and magazines. Crown companies will have to have their licences, the same as any other institutions. Then power is given under sections 17 and following with regard to the powers of the inspectors to enter into any factory, magazine or premises where explosives may be manufactured or stored. So that I think the point raised by the hon. gentleman has been pretty well covered in these three sections, and perhaps we might deal with them when we reach them.

Mr. FRASER: Does the minister know whether the rocket which was involved in the accident in Toronto was of Canadian or Chinese manufacture? The reason I am asking is that in a store on Sparks street they have fireworks which have been manufactured in China, and I wondered if the rockets in question had been of Chinese or Canadian manufacture. Another reason I asked is that one of the largest manufacturers of fireworks on this continent, if not the largest, generally sell fireworks or rockets for large displays direct to fairs or municipalities, and they generally send out to look after those displays men who understand these fireworks and can look after them properly. I do not think our Canadian firms would sell to the general public rockets which would cause such damage.

Mr. GLEN: The information we have with regard to the rockets involved in this accident is that they were made in Canada.

Mr. FRASER: I suppose the minister does not know what size they were, whether they were half-pound, one pound or two-pound. There is another type of fireworks which is equally dangerous; what they call mortars. These fire shells weighing a pound or two, and if they are not handled by an expert the person firing them is likely to have his head blown off, because they fire instantly.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): As I understand the act, the minister has complete control over all explosives used in connection with mining operations. This is an important matter in Nova Scotia, since explosives are used in coal and other mining. Recently in one of the coal mines there was a complaint that the explosives were defective, and that owing to delayed explosions the workmen were subjected to additional hazards, to such an extent that they refused to continue to work in this mine until an investigation had been made. As I follow the discussion to-day, the minister has full responsibility for the quality and handling of such explosives. Could he tell the committee the result of that investigation; whether these explosives were defective and, if not, whether reassurance was given the men working in this mine in Nova Scotia that they could return to their work in safety? We realize that coal miners and other miners are subject to great hazards in the carrying out of their work, and they ought not to be subjected to hazards arising through defective explosives or defective machinery.

Mr. GLEN: I understand the hon. member to say that an accident took place in one of the Nova Scotia mines.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Owing to what was described as delayed explosives, thereby creating a hazard for coal miners which prompted them to refuse to continue operations until a thorough investigation had been made. Has the minister a report respecting such investigations, and will the men be given some reassurance?

Mr. GLEN: I am informed that the accident was never brought to the attention of the department. It will be noted that section 2 (h) describes "magazine" as:

> . . . any building, storehouse, structure or place in which any explosive is kept or stored, but does not include
> (i) a place at or in and for the use of a mine or quarry in a province in which provision is made by the law of such province for the efficient inspection of mines and quarries and explosives used in connection therewith.

The use of the explosives will be subject to inspection by provincial departments. In this instance I suggest it was the use of the explosives which caused the accident, a matter which would be within the jurisdiction of the province. We provide only the places in which it can be used, subject always, of course, to the jurisdiction of the provinces in that connection.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): I understand the minister's department assumes no responsibility for defective explosives in the hands of coal miners. The explosion to which I referred in Nova Scotia resulted in the shutting down of a mine for I do not know how many days at a time when the production of coal is required to as great an extent as has ever obtained in the history of our country

Mr. GLEN: When we reach it I shall direct the hon. member's attention particularly to section 26 in the bill which provides:

> Nothing in this act shall relieve any person of the obligation to comply with the requirements of any licence law, or other law or by-law of any province or municipality, lawfully enacted, with regard to the storage, handling, sale or other dealing with explosives, nor of any liability or penalty imposed by such law or by-law for any violation thereof.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): That may be all right, but I want to know if the minister and his department are responsible for defective explosives in the hands of coal miners. If the explosives were not defective, then all I ask is some reassurance of that fact. But if they were, I want to know if the minister's department is responsible for their use in this instance.

Mr. GLEN: The manufacture of explosives, under this measure, is a procedure for which the department would be responsible. The use of the explosives in a province, or in the mines of a province, would be subject to its jurisdiction, and to its laws in that connection. This department is responsible for the making or manufacture, but not for the use.

Mr. LOCKHART: Do I gather from what the minister has said that the use of explosives is entirely within the jurisdiction of provincial governments? I have in mind the use of dynamite, which is mentioned in section 2 (c) of the bill? I have in mind particularly the careless way in which dynamite is handed out by certain quarry operators to people who are using explosives for different purposes. Is there anything in the bill to restrict the handling of explosives, and dynamite in particular? I know it is handed out carelessly by some irresponsible rock-quarry operators. I brought this matter to the attention of the government during the winter. Are there any general restrictions in the bill? I am not a lawyer, and perhaps I am not qualified to interpret the bill fully, but does it contain any restrictive provisions which would bring pressure to bear upon the provinces, in the event of the use of explosives being under their jurisdiction? This is a matter which will have to be watched carefully, especially in rock quarries.

Mr. GLEN: Section 4 (1) (c) states that regulations can be made for regulating the sale, importation, packing and handling of explosives, and the transportation of explosives. But there should be concurrent legislation in the provinces dealing with the utilization of explosives, especially in mines, or in respect of anyone wishing to use them for logging or blasting purposes. They would have to have a licence under this measure, when it becomes law.

Mr. LOCKHART: What happens if a province does not pass legislation?

Mr. GLEN: I do not think there will be any doubt as to their passing it. All the provinces will have legislation concurrent with ours, because they are seized of the duty of protecting operations of this kind.

Mr. FRASER: At the present time if one wants to obtain fifteen or twenty sticks of dynamite, complete with fuses and caps, he must have a permit. Is that under dominion or provincial jurisdiction? If it is under the dominion, does the minister intend to keep it up? I hope he does. I bought dynamite only a month ago, but before doing so I had to get permission from the police, and to tell them what I wanted it for.

Mr. GLEN: Does the hon. member suggest that there should be a permit?

Mr. FRASER: There is one at the present time. When I wanted to buy the dynamite before I had to go to the Department of Munitions and Supply. Now I need only go to the local chief of police?

Mr. GLEN: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: And is that under dominion or provincial jurisdiction?

Mr. GLEN: Dominion.

Mr. FRASER: Does the government intend to continue this procedure?

Mr. GLEN: We have the right to do it.

Mr. FRASER: Do you not think you should?

Mr. GLEN: You suggest that we should exercise that right?

Mr. FRASER: I suggest to keep it on.

Mr. GLEN: As I mentioned before, exception was taken, especially by farmers who would be going to a country store and who would have to get a permit signed by the magistrate or justice of the peace or mayor of the town. They complained bitterly about that inconvenience. We have the power to do it by regulation, and it is a matter that will receive most serious consideration when the regulations are being set up.

Mr. FRASER: Before the war there used to be twenty, thirty or perhaps forty stores in my district which sold dynamite, caps and fuses at any time to those who wanted them. At the present time there are only about two places, the quarry at Marmora and the board of works in Peterborough. Stores do not carry dynamite because they must keep it away from the store building and that costs money.

Mr. LOCKHART: The minister has laid his finger upon the exact situation. The federal government has the power to restrict this thing, but from what he said I gathered that he was not inclined to take any steps in that direction. There may have been some complaints from farmers who wanted to blow up some stumps or something, but I would point out that in certain sections of this country there are men who are dangerous and who should be dealt with by the federal authorities. The damage that might be created by these men more than outweighs any inconvenience that might be caused to some farmers. I join with the hon. member for Peterborough West who states that this is most important. There are men of a type who are hardly safe to have in our communities and they should not be allowed to get explosives, particularly dynamite, with ease. Improper use might be made of it. There are sections of the country where the subversive element is certainly not growing any weaker. I think some hon. members have seen the development of certain activities and I plead with the minister to keep a close watch over this situation. If there is federal jurisdiction, I urge him to use it and not consider just the complaints of a farmer or two, even though they are bitter. With all due respect for what the minister says, I submit that this is flirting with something that might prove very damaging.

Mr. FRASER: Flirting with dynamite.

Mr. LOCKHART: It is flirting with dynamite, as the hon. member says. I urge the minister to retain the restrictions and not allow this to become the free and easy matter that it was before the war.

Mr. GLEN: I was discussing that very point this morning and, as the hon. member has said, I am aware of the dangers that might be incurred. I assure him that I will give the matter the consideration it deserves.

Mr. BLACKMORE: While the minister is giving this matter consideration, I should like to raise something else for his consideration and the consideration of the hon. gentlemen who have just spoken. Do they suppose for one minute that there are not in the city of Toronto and in the government of Ontario men who are just as desirous of seeing public safety cared for as anyone in Ottawa?

Mr. FRASER: Perhaps more so at the present time.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Do they imagine that the city of Toronto is not as able to pass by-laws governing the sale of these dangerous explosives as is Ottawa? Do they imagine that the city of Toronto officials are not capable of doing this? There is a tendency, altogether too strong, to centralize power. That is not good. When the hon. member for Davenport read the account of this serious accident in Toronto it was well that he read also the statement that the city officials had taken action. Those officials do not need Ottawa to pass laws. They are just as much interested in the welfare of humanity as ever we can be. The fathers of confederation placed power in their hands and responsibilities on their shoulders for doing that very thing. I just wish to raise that for the consideration of the hon. member.

I consider the minister very wise to have been circumspect in connection with this matter and for having wondered whether or not it was necessary for Ottawa to do all the governing in Canada with respect to explosives. Let us not forget that the farther you get your government away from the people, the more you destroy democracy. The hon. member pointed out that matters were free and easy before the war. Did he hear of any serious accidents like that one in Toronto?

Mr. FRASER: Yes, I have heard of them.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am just wondering if we shall not hear of serious accidents after this legislation has been made as iron-clad as it is possible to make it. That accident was not caused by the fact that there was no iron-clad act in Ottawa; it was simply due to the human elements that enter into all relations. It has been my experience that where an accident of that sort takes place the local authorities are quite capable of adopting measures to deal with all such occurrences and to make provision against their recurrence.

Let us be careful about centralization. It is an easy matter to centralize power but it is very difficult to decentralize it and get it back into the hands of the people. All through the thousand years or more of our history we have been struggling to keep our power decentralized. Let us not in a period of hysteria brought on by a terrible war and rumours of communism and other dire threats forget the poise, balance and judgment which we inherited from our fathers who have gone before us.

Mr. FRASER: I am not going to talk for a thousand years or anything of that kind; I simply want to point out that the provinces have not the right to deal with this problem. Even if they had, anyone living on the border between two provinces could simply go into the other province. A man in Ontario could cross over into Quebec, purchase dynamite, and bring it back into Ontario. There is nothing to stop that. The dominion government have the right, and they are using that right, to regulate this matter. I am simply asking that there be some system of permits. If the dominion government is not going to do it, the provinces should. Perhaps the hon. member has tried to spank me, but I do not stay spanked very long.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If I were going to spank the hon. member I would spank him so that he would stay spanked. I was not criticizing particularly what the hon. member had to say; I was merely pointing out the danger of the tendency to centralization that is evident in the world to-day. There is not only centralization of power in Ottawa; it is going on to centralization in Geneva or Timbuktu where the people cannot possibly get at it.

This is an important point. I am not pronouncing whether the province has authority to deal with explosives or not, but obviously from what the hon. member for Davenport read, the city of Toronto considered that it had power to deal with the matter.

Mr. FRASER: That was fireworks.

Mr. BLACKMORE: They are a form of explosives.

Mr. FRASER: They have not been dealt with.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Then let them be dealt with. I am sure that they will be dealt with in Toronto and in other cities of Ontario and in other parts of Canada. But this parliament need not undertake to do everything for all the governments in Canada, for there are intelligent men in other government bodies.

Mr. FRASER: We acknowledge that.

Mr. BRACKEN: I was not in the chamber when the minister made his statement on the bill. I understand that it comes from the other house and that, therefore, there will not be a disposition to take as much time on it here as we otherwise would. Did the minister explain to the house the work which was put in on this bill in the other place? Did it receive mature consideration there? If the minister has already covered that point, perhaps he would restate it.

Mr. GLEN: The bill was introduced in the other chamber, with a short explanation on the first reading and a discussion on the second reading, and then almost a whole afternoon was spent in considering the different sections of the bill. The result of this study is the bill now before us.

Mr. BRACKEN: Where was the bill prepared? Is it a government measure?

Mr. GLEN: Yes; it was prepared by the Department of Justice.

Mr. HAZEN: How many inspectors are employed under the act at the present time, and what does it cost in the course of a year to administer the act? I have the estimates for 1947 but I cannot find any item covering inspectors.

Mr. GLEN: It is under Mines and Geology.

Mr. HAZEN: Yes, I see now that there is an item of $29,500. How many inspectors and sub-inspectors are working under the act at the present time?

Mr. GLEN: We have a chief inspector, two inspectors and one chemist in the permanent establishment; and the clerical permanent staff includes one grade IV clerk, one grade II clerk, one stenographer grade II and one typist grade II. The temporary establishment includes three inspectors and a clerical staff consisting of two grade III clerks, three grade II clerks, three grade II stenographers, four grade II typists and one grade I-A typist. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police also serves voluntarily in connection with this work extensively throughout the dominion.

Mr. HAZEN: I see by the details that there is one chief inspector, and two inspectors of explosives.

Mr. GLEN: We have a chief inspector, two inspectors and one chemist in the permanent establishment.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Explosives to which act applies.

Mr. STIRLING: May we take up on this section the question I raised as to whether it is quite clear that the crown company, Canadian Arsenals Limited, will by this measure be under the inspection, indeed the jurisdiction, of the Minister of Mines and Resources?

Mr. GLEN: The bill when it comes into force will apply to all crown companies not under the control of the Department of National Defence, which will be subject to inspection under this measure.

Mr. STIRLING: So that the situation will be entirely altered in the future. In the past, before the war, the dominion arsenal was under the control of the Minister of National Defence, and inspection took place within it only by his authority. Canadian Arsenals Limited, which will be very much larger in scope than the dominion arsenal, will by this measure be under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Mines and Resources, so far as the inspection of the arsenal is concerned?

Mr. GLEN: Section 3 says:

> This act shall apply to the possession, storing, sale or offering for sale, making, manufacture or importation of explosives by or on behalf of His Majesty in right of Canada or any province except explosives under the direction or control of the Minister of National Defence.

The exception there is "explosives under the direction of the Minister of National Defence." I presume, therefore, that inspection of the arsenal would be under the direction of the Minister of National Defence if it is under his control.

Mr. HAZEN: This section applies to the possession, storing, sale or offering for sale, making, manufacture or importation of explosives. But there is another factor, and that is the disposal of explosives. Why should this measure not apply also to the disposal of explosives? There are at the present time, I believe, a good many surplus explosives in this country. Should not control over them be in the minister's hands just as much as control over the possession, storing, sale or offering for sale, making or manufacturing of explosives?

I do not want at the present time to go into details of the case I have in mind, but the disposal of explosives should be very carefully handled in order to prevent injury to civilians. Although I have not had an opportunity of giving this bill any particular study, it seems to me that the disposal of surplus explosives might very well be included in the measure. Is there any reason why the disposal of surplus explosives should not come under this bill? Why should not that be inserted in section 3?

Mr. GLEN: I would take it that "possession, storing, sale or offering for sale" would cover the point the hon. gentleman raises, because that is the only way in which explosives can be disposed of except by destruction. If it were deteriorating and a danger to the community, there is power taken later in the bill to deal with such conditions. That, it seems to me, would cover the point raised by the hon. member—"sale or offering for sale".

Mr. HAZEN: I am not referring to explosives which are sold or offered for sale; I refer to explosives which are being disposed of as surplus by the government. There are in this country to-day explosives which will be disposed of as surplus; there are explosives which have been disposed of as surplus, and in some instances, through negligence on somebody's part, they have caused injury to Canadian citizens for which the government does not want to assume responsibility. As I say, I am not as familiar as the minister is with this bill, but it might be well if the "disposal" of these surplus munitions and explosives were included in this bill, in the interests of the citizens of this country.

Mr. GLEN: Of course the hon. member will realize that under this bill there is power taken to make regulations which will cover anything dealing with the disposal of surplus such as the hon. member speaks of. What he is referring to is equipment and surplus munitions, and explosives which are unused and not likely to be used and therefore might be declared surplus. These go to the War Assets Corporation, which as a corporation would be subject to the provisions of this bill in the same way as anybody else would be. However, we might come to this later when we are dealing with the appropriate section.

Mr. HAZEN: I thought it would come under section 3, although I may be wrong; as I say, I do not profess to be familiar with this bill. The minister said that he would further consider section 2, paragraph (c). I wonder if it might not be advisable to give some consideration to the point I have raised concerning section 3, as to the disposal of surplus explosives. The question is this: should the word "disposal" be included in that section?

Mr. MacNICOL: Would the minister be disposed, if to do so would not infringe upon provincial authority, to have someone in his department inquire into the matter which I brought up, namely as to how that merchant obtained possession for sale of high explosive rockets to children?

Mr. GLEN: Power is taken under this bill to cause inquiry to be made into any accident of the nature spoken of.

Mr. HAZEN: Does the minister think this measure should not apply to the disposal of surplus munitions and surplus explosives? I think I am entitled to an answer to that question.

Mr. GLEN: The reason this section was put into the bill was in the light of the case of King versus LeBlanc, of which the hon. member may have a more intimate knowledge than I, a case decided by Chief Justice Hazen in the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. The defendant was charged with negligence in the operation of explosives, and on appeal before the chief justice it was held that he was not within the purview of the provisions of the Explosives Act as it then stood. To correct that omission we have placed this section in the bill, making all parties, even the crown and its employees, liable for any act of negligence under this measure. That is the whole reason why it was put in the bill. The sale, disposal and deterioration of surpluses are covered in subsequent sections.

On section 4—Regulations.

The CHAIRMAN: Section carried.

Mr. MacNICOL: Before this section 4 is carried I have a question to ask. I wish to compliment you, Mr. Chairman, on the able way you are putting the sections through; it shows great ability. I used to do the same thing myself when, in the old days, I was sitting where you are now. I did not allow anything to hang before the committee any longer than I could avoid. But now that I am in the opposition I have another duty to perform. As regards subsection 1, paragraph (d), "for holding inquiries into any accident caused by explosives," I would ask if the department would feel disposed to make an inquiry into the sale of rockets in Toronto, some ten days or two weeks ago, as the case may be, through which, a week ago last Sunday, a young man was killed on or near College and Clinton streets, Toronto, through the explosion of a rocket.

Mr. GLEN: My officer informs me that the matter at the moment is in the hands of the municipal police, but he will take such steps as the hon. gentleman suggests, in conjunction with the municipal police, for the holding of an inquiry such as the hon. member suggests, to find out exactly what took place.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is quite satisfactory. The matter would, I think, come under paragraph (h), enabling regulations to be made "for the safety of the public."

Mr. HAZEN: May I ask the minister if he held any inquiry into an accidental explosion at Lorneville, New Brunswick, in January of this year?

Mr. GLEN: No; no inquiry was made.

Section agreed to.

Sections 5 and 6 agreed to.

On section 7—Certificate to store.

Mr. MacNICOL: Under this section would the department or someone authorized by the department be enabled to inquire whether such a store as must have sold these high explosive rockets was a fit place to store them?

Mr. GLEN: Under this section a certificate will only be issued to any person permitting the storing for sale of explosives on such premises and in such quantity as the minister may determine.

Mr. MacNICOL: That would apply to a retail store, would it not?

Mr. GLEN: These would be what we call registered premises, and the certificate would have to be issued by the minister, who would have to be satisfied as to the suitability of the premises and also as to the quantity which might be allowed to be stored in that store.

Section agreed to.

Sections 8 to 18 inclusive agreed to.

On section 19—Minister may direct inquiry.

Mr. MacNICOL: In the event of an accident such as that which caused the recent lamentable death of a young man in Toronto, this section could be put into operation?

Mr. GLEN: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Sections 20 to 28 inclusive agreed to.

On section 29—Repeal.

Mr. HAZEN: Will the minister tell me the sections of the bill that have to do with the disposal of explosives? He said that as we went through the bill we would come to those sections.

Mr. GLEN: The hon. member will find that the regulations under section 4 are extensive. I cannot imagine anything that has not been included in them. I have gone over them carefully with the officers, and they assure me that the regulations provide all the power necessary for governing the sale of explosives, the taking of them, the procedure to be followed, the construction and management of premises, the safety of the public, and so forth. The sale and disposal of explosives would be covered by the regulations. The bill provides for forfeiture, where officers have the power of inspection and can enter premises. Under section 18 the officers can go into premises and take samples of explosives, open and examine them and may require the owners to give evidence with respect to such samples, and later, on conviction, the explosives can be forfeited by the crown and destroyed or sold in the discretion of the crown. The hon. gentleman is worried about the word "disposal" and the word "sale".

Mr. HAZEN: Not so much "sale" as "disposal".

Mr. GLEN: I think the word "sale" will cover exactly what he has in mind. Sale will include disposal, and the word "disposal" will not add to the strength of it.

Mr. HAZEN: If a department of government decides to dispose of surplus explosives, I do not think that by any stretch of the imagination that can be called a sale. It should come under this measure.

Mr. GLEN: By giving it away or destroying it?

Mr. HAZEN: Not by giving it away but by destroying it—disposing of it in the sense of destroying it so that it will not cause injury to anyone.

Mr. GLEN: Under section 27, where a conviction is obtained, the explosives are forfeit to the crown and may be destroyed or otherwise disposed of, as may be thought fit. I think it covers handling from first to last; the officers assure me that the matter has been fully considered and they are quite satisfied.

Mr. HAZEN: Section 27 does not cover the case I have in mind. I do not want to labour the matter but I submit that it is not covered in the bill.

Mr. IRVINE: What would happen to surplus bombs in the hands of War Assets Corporation?

Mr. GLEN: They are subject to the jurisdiction of this measure if there is any danger to the public in storage or handling.

Mr. MacINNIS: This matter was discussed briefly in the house either on a question or in some other way during the last session, or perhaps during this session. Certain explosives were disposed of by the Royal Canadian Air Force by being dumped into the ocean, but they were not dumped far enough out, so that when the tide went out some youngsters went out and picked up some of the explosives. Some of the children were injured.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 2—Definitions.

Mr. GLEN: The hon. member for Lake Centre asked: Is it the opinion of the law officers of the crown that section 2 (c) and section 4 would cover a case such as that referred to by the hon. member for Davenport? During the recess this point was discussed with the officers of the justice department, as well as the deputy minister, who expressed the opinion that the bill as drafted would include and cover the kind of explosive used in the instance referred to by the hon. member for Davenport. The technical officers of the department were also consulted, and they are satisfied that this provision fully covers the case mentioned by the hon. gentleman. The hon. member for Lake Centre stated that if the Department of Justice approved it, he was satisfied.

NATIONAL PARKS

ADJUSTMENT OF BOUNDARIES IN RESPECT OF CERTAIN SMALL AREAS

The house resumed consideration in committee of bill No. 63, respecting the boundaries of certain national parks—Mr. Glen—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When this bill was before the committee of the whole previously all the sections were carried, and the committee was considering the title.

On the title.

Mr. GLEN: The hon. member for Dauphin, the hon. member for Calgary West and I think the hon. member for Mackenzie asked questions with regard to the purchase of additional land for the Banff national park. The small parcels of land being added comprise (a) approximately 210 acres at the eastern gateway. This was transferred to the dominion by the province by P.C. 714-333 dated September 12, 1933. The original order in council was registered in the south Alberta land titles office at Calgary. Duplicate certificates of title Nos. 47X181 and 47X182 were received covering the parcels of land in question. These were dated October 31, 1933. I might say that one duplicate certificate of title covered those parts of the north half of section 13 and the northeast quarter of section 14, township 25, range 11, west of the 5th meridian, lying southeast of the then park boundary. The other covered the portion of the Banff-Calgary road lying within the above area.

(b) The second area in question comprises one-sixth of a square mile in the Spray river valley. A plan of this area and an explanation of the necessity for a change in the boundary at this point was prepared by Mr. Cautley, the department's representative, who in co-operation with the provincial representative decided upon the final park boundaries as revised in 1930. The province has formally approved of the plan of survey which included the area in the park. This means that the land was transferred to the dominion by the province at no cost.

The other question asked by the hon. member for Dauphin dealt with the portions of land added to the Riding Mountain national park in Manitoba. There were four different parcels of land added to the park immediately to the south of the present townsite of Wasagaming. Two of these areas were expropriated, namely, the northeast quarter of section 24, township 19, range 19, west of the principal meridian, the owner of which was Walter E. Dean. The other was the northwest quarter of section 19, township 19, range 18, west of the principal meridian, the owner of which was R. J. Pollen. The purchase price of the northeast quarter of section 24 was $2,400 plus $232.77 interest on this amount, making a total cost of $2,632.77 for that quarter section. For the northwest quarter of section 19 the purchase price was fixed at $2,200.

The following areas were transferred to the dominion by the province: the south half and south half of the north half of section 29, township 19, range 18, west of the principal meridian, comprising 480 acres, and the southeast quarter of section 30, township 19, range 18, west of the principal meridian. These were transferred by the province to the dominion without cost. These make up the total of the 960 acres which have been added to the park; and, in addition, the province transferred the official road allowances lying between the above-mentioned sections.

I think that completes the answers to the questions asked by hon. members.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I understand that there was an interest charge of $232.77 in the case of one of the purchases. Would the minister tell us how this interest came to accumulate?

Mr. GLEN: The land was expropriated; the price was fixed by the court and interest of $232.77 was allowed. That is the information I have. That makes up the 960 acres, and there are three acres more, which probably would be the road allowances which were given over by the provinces.

Then the hon. member for Peterborough West asked a question with regard to Beausoleil island. The Navy League of Canada, dominion council, have a licence of occupation of 3·25 acres. The period runs for twenty-one years from April 1, 1942. They pay $1 a year, and the licence is renewable at the end of that period.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I am not clear about this $232, which I understand is for interest. Just how did that accumulate? It is interest on what, for what period of time?

Mr. GLEN: I have not complete information. All I have is that the expropriation award fixed the purchase price at $2,400 plus interest of $232.77 on that amount, making the total cost of that northwest quarter $2,632.77. That was in 1934, when the award was made.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: What was the date of the expropriation of the land.

Mr. GLEN: For the northeast quarter of section 24 it was May 8, 1934, and for the northwest quarter of section 19 it was March 29.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: And the date of payment was also 1934?

Mr. GLEN: Yes, I presume it was.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I note that there is $232 in interest. How did it accumulate?

Mr. GLEN: I have no information, other than that we might have been in possession under expropriation proceedings, and that may be interest on the purchase money to the date when it was paid.

Mr. WEBB: I note that the explanatory note to schedule E reads:

> Mallorytown landing park
> One of St. Lawrence islands parks
> . . . The provincial government secured and transferred to the dominion a small area adjoining the park in compensation for the area taken up by the right of way for the highway.

I take it that this roadway went through part of the old park, and that in lieu of that the provincial government bought land by way of compensation. I should like to have that confirmed, and also the date of the transaction.

Mr. GLEN: It was made in 1938. Mallorytown landing park was transferred to the dominion by the Mallory estate, with the proviso that the area was to be used for national park purposes only. It comprises a small area facing on the St. Lawrence river directly south of the town of Mallorytown. The new four-lane highway passed through there and took up a considerable portion of the area. To compensate for this the provincial government acquired an additional area on the river front and transferred it to the dominion government as an addition to this park. It is this small area secured from the province that we now wish added to the park.

Mr. WEBB: It did not cost the federal government anything?

Mr. GLEN: No.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

OPIUM AND NARCOTIC DRUG ACT

PROVISION FOR MORE EFFECTIVE CONTROL—STRINGENT REGULATION IN SUPPLY OF MORPHINE AND OPIUM

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the second reading of bill No. 29, to amend the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, 1929.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—"Department."

Mr. STIRLING: Would the minister be good enough to make a general statement respecting this bill?

Mr. CLAXTON: Mr. Chairman, this bill comes from the senate. When it was in the other place it was referred to the standing committee on health and welfare, where it received consideration.

Sections 1, 2 and 7 of the bill make a simple change in the name of the department, to conform to the creation of the Department of Health and Welfare, which took place as of October 13, 1944.

Section 3 replaces the word "distributes" by the word "administers", and I believe the explanatory note covers the point sufficiently.

Sections 4, 5, 6, 8 and 9 carry into the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act of 1929 provisions which were made effective by P.C. 4769 of June 10, 1943, P.C. 6227 of August 8, 1944, and P.C. 7096 of November 27, 1945. The effect of these is to make the control of narcotics more effective in Canada and also to carry into our peace-time legislation provisions found necessary and desirable during the war. We explain these by saying that during the war the supply situation in connection with narcotics presented many difficulties and, in order to conserve our supplies, which were short, and to secure more effective control, it became desirable to make changes in the laws by orders in council under the War Measures Act.

The changes which were made were to make the supply of drugs as defined in the act subject to prescription, and the other controls exercised under section 5 of the act effective without the same exceptions there had been been under section 8. Under section 8 of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, 1929, there was an exception under which it was possible for retail druggists to distribute small quantities of drugs, including morphine and opium, without prescription. During the war that exception was eliminated. The only relaxation to that exception since the war is that the only quantities of drugs which can be distributed without prescription are drugs containing small quantities of codeine.

That exception has been carried into effect in the bill. Consequently the bill substantially carries into effect the war-time provisions so as to effect a more stringent regulation in the supply of drugs such as morphine and opium. The changes are largely technical. They were made after consultation with the Dominion Council of Health and the advisory committee of the Canadian Medical association, both of which recommended them to the department. The only suggestion that we went too far came from one provincial medical association. We answered them, and since then we have received no word that anyone thought we were not doing the right thing.

Mr. HACKETT: I must confess that I have not had an opportunity of examining the bill very carefully, but there is one type of offence which is becoming too numerous, cases in which possession alone—without any proof of criminal intent—constitutes the offence. Are there any such in this bill?

Mr. CLAXTON: This bill does not make any change whatever in the situation regarding possible crimes, except for the amendment proposed to section 4 where the word "distributes" is to be replaced by the word "administers" in the case of administration or distribution of drugs to minors.

Mr. REID: Has any consideration been given to limiting the quantity of drugs which may be held by a druggist? During the past three, four and five years it seems to have been quite an easy thing for those who wanted drugs to break into a drug store or the office of a chemist and obtain them. Where do these druggists get the drugs? One could not avoid noting the many burglaries that have taken place during the past few years since opium and other drugs have been harder to obtain. It seems to have been easy for many of these people to break in the back door of some chemist's store and get away with a quantity of these drugs.

Mr. CLAXTON: The wholesalers who may have drugs are licensed under the act, and at the present time there are 123 wholesalers licensed in Canada. A careful audit is made of the drugs they hold and they take precautions themselves in order to preserve their licensed position. The type of offence described by the hon. member for New Westminster decreased in number in 1945 as compared with 1944. I can assure the hon. member and the committee that the utmost care is taken to see that drugs are not made available in greater quantities than are likely to be required by the wholesalers. Another factor in ensuring close control is the very short supply position with regard to these drugs.

Mr. REID: Are there any restrictions as to the quantity of drugs that a druggist can obtain? We know that a strict watch is kept on what he does with them, but I should like to know if there is any restriction on the quantity that he can obtain from the wholesaler.

Mr. CLAXTON: The quantity which the wholesaler is allowed to have in his possession which is based upon the past experience as to the quantity he needs to meet his requirements. The department is exercising strict control to prevent any large accumulation of drugs.

Mr. BLAIR: How much marihuana is produced in Canada and what quantity can be carried by a druggist?

Mr. CLAXTON: None is manufactured and none can be carried by a druggist. Some, but not very much, is used. The quantity of all drugs used by addicts, if that is what the hon. member has in mind, has gone down considerably, and the number of addicts has also gone down considerably. We do not produce any drugs in Canada, except possibly a small quantity synthetically.

Mr. BLAIR: Section 6 of the bill refers to section 15 of the act.

Mr. CLAXTON: Section 6 of the bill does not refer to heroin.

Mr. BLAIR: It is marihuana, not heroin. The explanatory note reads:

Involves the addition of paragraph (g) of section 4, relative to the cultivation or production of the opium popper or cannabis (marihuana) to the subsections in relation to which the burden of proof of possession of a licence is placed upon the accused.

Mr. CLAXTON: I would prefer to deal with that when we come to section 6.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Preparations excepted.

Mr. BLAIR: What is the object in making the restriction apply to one-eighth of a grain of codeine? That does not amount to very much; it does not do very much good, nor does it do very much harm.

Mr. CLAXTON: The effect of this is that a druggist or physician can supply a drug as defined in the act only under a prescription, except that—and this is the only exception:

4. (a) any retail druggist may have in possession or may sell or distribute preparations containing one-eighth grain or less of codeine per tablet or other solid form—

And so on. This permits a druggist to sell tablets containing one-eighth of a grain or less of codeine without a prescription.

Section agreed to.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6—Onus of proof on charge of importing, exporting, manufacturing, selling, etc., without licence.

Mr. HACKETT: This is one of the offences of the type to which I made reference when I asked the minister if the ordinary rules of criminal procedure were being modified by the bill. I notice that section 6 introduces a change by imposing on the accused the obligation of proving that he has a licence. Is there some good reason for departing from the ordinary rules that obtain in criminal courts? There are some cases, as I have indicated to the minister, the number of which is increasing too rapidly, in which mere possession is taken as proof of guilt. In those cases the accused must disinculpate himself or be found guilty. The ordinary rule is reversed. Is there any reason for its reversal in this case?

Mr. CLAXTON: In my explanation I should have mentioned this as being a change in the law relative to the proof of offences. We can see no reason why anyone should have opium poppy, cannabis sativa or marihuana in his possession legally unless he can show that he has a licence for it. We believe that the mere possession of these articles indicates that the person has them illegally unless he can show that he has them legally. This undoubtedly does, as the hon. member for Stanstead suggests, shift the burden of proof, but it is believed that in matters relating to the drug traffic these drugs are in the same position as morphine and opium, which have already been dealt with in this way, and for the best protection of the public and for the suppression of the traffic in these drugs, we believe the law should be changed by including these two drugs with the others.

Mr. BLAIR: Will the minister read paragraph (g) of section 4 of the act?

Mr. CLAXTON: Section 4, paragraph (g) reads:

Every person who

(g) cultivates, gathers or produces any opium poppy (papaver somniferum) or cannabis sativa, except under the authority of a licence from the minister first had and obtained shall be guilty of an offence——and shall be liable to the punishment provided for by this section.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I have said so often in times gone by that I believe the rules of proof should not be altered, but in connection with narcotics I am absolutely in favour of what the minister suggests, and that is the only exception I make. I say that after a long experience and knowing what this sort of thing does. So far as I am concerned I shall support the minister and the government in every way I can, even throwing aside all our rules, to try to kill this traffic. I do not know how many members of this house know people who are addicted to the use of drugs. We hear of this institution and that institution which have made cures. Frankly I do not know of one who ever became an addict and has been cured. I make this exception to my broad rule, because I consider that this is in defence of weak people. You can study addiction to drugs all you like. But what happens is just this, and let us not blame doctors and hospitals, for I have taken it myself four times a day during a period of several months. It is escapism. That is the only reason why anyone takes it. Once you have got into the picture you are through. We know that when it was easier to get cocaine you put a little on your fingernail and snuffed it through your nose. There are many kinds of drugs but they are all taken for the same reason, and I will go with this government or any other government and break all the rules on account of the wrecks that I have personally seen—and, Mr. Chairman, they do not come back. So that I am heartily with the minister, breaking all my broad rules in the administration of justice for this one thing and this one thing only. People who are addicted to narcotics are entitled to our pity; there is no other word to use for them. To avoid their becoming addicts I go all the way with the minister in this or any other measure he cares to introduce into the house for this purpose.

Mr. BLAIR: Heroin is the most dangerous of all the drugs and I notice that the minister is still permitting its use.

Mr. CLAXTON: We have retained it because of the advice of leading maternity hospitals and obstetricians as to its use in connection with childbirth. That is the only reason why it has been kept in use in Canada. The supply of these drugs to Canada has had to come from outside, and it might be necessary to maintain some drugs which are less desirable than others in order to ensure that the volume necessary for legitimate use is maintained.

Section agreed to.

On section 7—Judge to grant writ of assistance.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): What does this mean? What is a writ of assistance?

Mr. CLAXTON: The only change made by this clause is in section 22 of the act to substitute for the words "Pensions and National Health" the words "National Health and Welfare." It simply changes the names of the departments in accordance with the creation of the new department.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): What does it mean by that? You have your narcotics squad. Such an officer has a general authority which permits him to do something, and you are merely making a change in the nomenclature of the department; is that all?

Mr. CLAXTON: That is so.

Section agreed to.

Section 8 agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 9, "schedule amended", agreed to.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Now, "gently, brother; gently, pray."

The CHAIRMAN: I hope that no hon. member thinks the Chairman is trying to rush the bill through.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN: As I read the section I asked if it was carried. If there are any questions, then I expect hon. members to speak. I assure all hon. gentlemen that I shall not endeavour to rush this bill or any other bill through this committee.

[Mr. A. L. Smith.]

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I did not think you were trying to rush the bill through, but may I also assure you that you were going a lot faster than I was able to keep up with you. That is my only difficulty.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 9—Schedule amended.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the minister say what paragraph 7 of the schedule is?

Mr. CLAXTON: If desired, I will read it all!

Mr. HACKETT: Will the minister read paragraph 7 of the schedule?

Mr. CLAXTON: It would not improve the information of the committee or increase my reputation for being almost a doctor practising without a licence. The only change, I understand, which is made in the schedule is that paragraph 9 of the schedule, as it was, which reads—

> Any plant of any description whatsoever, whether dried or otherwise, which contains morphine, or any part of any such plant, excepting the seed of the poppy plant.

—has been omitted from the schedule to the act, also, from part II of the schedule, apomorphine, codeine, and its salts; and dihydrocodeinone and paracodeine have been included in the schedule; and the schedule is no longer divided into parts I and II.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Would the minister mind looking at the tenth line from the bottom of the page, and then will he read it to the committee and explain what it means?

Mr. HACKETT: Why does he not begin at paragraph 7? My difficulty begins a little earlier; the hon. member for Calgary West is more erudite than I.

Mr. CLAXTON: The word to which the hon. member for Calgary West refers is acetyldihydrocodeinone. Acedicone is the shorter name for it. The next one, which goes on for almost a line, is acetyldemethylodihydrothebaine, which I understand is a derivative of the first; it has the same short name.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CLAXTON: The short name for both is acedicone. It might be a great help to all of us if our professional people would translate these words, but apparently they are accustomed to their jargon, and I suppose it is a good thing.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I thought it was a law of England prohibiting marriage between first cousins.

Mr. BRACKEN: I do not think we should pass any sections the words of which the minister cannot pronounce.

Mr. CLAXTON: Oh, he has done his best.

Section agreed to.

On the title.

Mr. FLEMING: I wonder if there is not an oversight in the bill. Under section 3 we have dealt with an amendment of section 4 of the act, but actually the amendment which the committee has approved is an amendment of section 4, subsection 1, paragraph (e) of the act of 1929. Now it happens that section 4, paragraph (f) also contains this same word "distributes"; the language is almost the same as that of paragraph (e). I wonder if it was by intent that section 4, paragraph (f) is not to be amended in like manner as section 4, paragraph (e). Section 4, paragraph (e) reads:

Every person who

(e) unlawfully sells, gives away or distributes any drug to any minor . . .

Paragraph (f) reads:

(f) manufactures, sells, gives away or distributes any drug . . .

And so on. We have the word "distributes" in (f) as well as in (e). We have amended it in (e) only to substitute the word "administers" for "distributes". Would the minister indicate why we are not contemplating a similar amendment of section 4, subsection 1, paragraph (f).

Mr. CLAXTON: The two clauses are designedly different. In the present act, section 4, subsection 1, paragraph (e) reads:

Every person who

(e) unlawfully sells, gives away or distributes any drug to any minor;

In the case of Rex versus Marino and Yipp, 56 Canadian Criminal Cases, page 139, the supreme court, speaking through Chief Justice Anglin, held that in order to constitute a "distribution" within the meaning of paragraph (f) it was necessary for more than one act to take place. There could not be a distribution within the meaning of the act unless there had been more than one delivery of a drug to the person who received it. When we considered the act in the light of war-time experience and in the light of that decision we considered it desirable to change the provision with regard to selling, giving away or distributing any drug to any minor so to make the offence one of "administering" drugs to any minor, because it was almost inconceivable that there should be a repeated delivery of drugs to a minor. We thought the one administration of a drug to a minor was sufficient to constitute an offence, and a very serious offence too. This, therefore, led us to propose in this bill the substitution of the word "administers" for the word "distributes" in paragraph (e), but to leave the provision in paragraph (f) as it was.

Mr. FLEMING: I follow the minister's explanation as to the change in section 4, subsection 1 (e); I think it is quite in line with the decision he refers to in Rex versus Marino and Yipp. I understand that decision was based on section 4, subsection 1 (e) not on section 4 subsection 1 (f). I am not quite clear yet, if I may say so, as to the reason why we are not making a corresponding change in section 4, subsection 1 (f). The language is the same in the two clauses. In paragraph (e) it is "sells, gives away or distributes"; in paragraph (f) it is "manufactures, sells, gives away or distributes" any drug.

Mr. HACKETT: To a minor.

Mr. CLAXTON: The offence which was involved in the case of Rex versus Marino and Yipp was an offence charged under paragraph (f) of subsection 1 of section 4, and the language of (f) is quite suitable for an offence charged in connection with the distribution of drugs to someone other than a minor. Section 4, subsection 1 (f) reads:

Every person who manufactures, sells, gives away, delivers or distributes or makes any offer in respect of any drug or any substance . . .

And so on. That seems to be quite suitable language with respect to an offence in connection with delivery and so on to an adult, but in order to strengthen the law governing delivery of any drug to a minor we propose to substitute the word "administers" for the word "distributes" in (e).

Mr. FLEMING: Does not the minister consider it proper to insert the word "administers" in section 4, 1 (f)? Then we should have it both ways, covering the manufacture, sale, giving away, administration or distribution, and we should strengthen the section greatly. Would it not be wise to insert the word "administers" after the words "gives away"?

Mr. CLAXTON: The officer of the department charged with the administration of the act says that there has never been a case in which the necessity for such a change has arisen, and we, I understand, have had cases in which we found it difficult, if not impossible, to prove an offence under section 4, (1) (e) with regard to a minor because of lack of the language I suggest should be adopted. We have not had any such case under 4, (1) (f).

Mr. BLAIR: When the minister refers to drugs he means narcotics?

Mr. CLAXTON: Yes. The Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, 1929, as amended in 1932, defines "drugs" as follows, in Section 2 (d):

"Drug" means and includes any substance, mentioned in the schedule to this act whether or not the same be produced in whole or in part by a synthetic process, and whether it be alone or in conjunction with any other substance mentioned in the schedule to this act, or which may be added to such schedule under the authority of this act.

Then we have the schedule which is revised under this bill and which is tied in to the act, and it defines drugs as narcotics, opium, coca leaf, and so on.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE ACT

PROVISION FOR AIR CADET SQUADRONS

Hon. COLIN GIBSON (Minister of National Defence for Air) moved the second reading of bill No. 57, to amend the Royal Canadian Air Force Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. STIRLING: Will the minister give a general statement?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): The purpose of the bill is to make provision under the Royal Canadian Air Force Act for the continuation of the Royal Canadian Air Force cadet squadrons which were first formed during the war in 1940 by order in council under the War Measures Act. It now becomes necessary, if they are to be continued, to make provision for them under the act.

In this connection the committee will be interested to know that in the short space of six years during which they have been operating the air cadets have built up an excellent reputation for themselves. The air cadet squadrons are operated under the control and jurisdiction of the air cadet league, and a great deal of credit is owing to the members of the air cadet league, the provincial committees, and the members in the various municipalities throughout Canada who have sponsored the air cadet squadrons. They have raised funds provincially and locally to provide for these squadrons, and the success of the air cadet movement is due largely to the tremendous amount of work done by members of the air cadet league in sponsoring and supporting the various air cadet squadrons.

During the war we had 400 squadrons in operation in Canada. At present there are 289 squadrons active with an enrolment of something over 23,000 air cadets. It is now proposed to provide for them so that we shall continue to have the air cadets as part of the cadet system of the country, very much as the army cadets have been provided for heretofore under the terms of the Militia Act.

Mr. STIRLING: Do I understand from the minister that the air cadet corps operates directly under the Royal Canadian Air Force and that, while the air cadet league is a useful help and auxiliary to it, it is not necessary for the league to exist in order that the cause should succeed?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): No; it is almost the opposite. The air cadet league is responsible for these cadet squadrons, but the bill before the committee permits the Royal Canadian Air Force to make provision for training and a certain amount of financial assistance is required to operate these squadrons. The air cadet league itself also raises money from the public to provide for some of the expenses of maintaining these squadrons. No squadrons can become air cadet squadrons unless they have been approved by the Minister of National Defence for Air. Also a syllabus of training is drawn up by the Department of National Defence for Air. There is the closest liaison between the air department and the air cadet league, and when any matters arise that need adjustment they are settled by consultation between the department and the league.

Mr. SKEY: Mr. Chairman, as one who has had something to do with the air cadet movement in Canada I should like to say that I am heartily in support of this bill which carries into the peace a movement which was efficient, which gave young men good training and which imbued them with the ideals of the service. In my opinion there are many who should be thanked for their splendid services in building up this great corps. There are the directors of the air cadet league and the provincial committees, with particular reference to the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia, and I am sure the government will be glad to know that the government of Ontario have made provision for the continuation of this splendid service through the appointment of Air Commodore O'Brien, an ex-R.C.A.F. auxiliary officer, who gave service overseas in this war and who now continues to serve the air force through his connection with the Ontario government. In addition, there are many schools, many schoolteachers, many air cadet officers and the sponsors, whom the minister has already mentioned in connection with the local committees. Then there are so many others of the general public who gave generously of their finances, their time and their personal efforts to this corps. I would not like to overlook at this time the many men in the permanent establishment of the R.C.A.F., and those who served with it in war time, who have been unsparing in their time and trouble. I have in mind one particular case; that is, the men in the training branch of the Royal Canadian Air Force, who have done a splendid job in preparing a completely new syllabus of instruction for the air cadets.

Last year at this time I had the honour of inspecting three air cadet squadrons in the city of Toronto. That took place during the election, from which I was glad to take a little time, and I was indeed impressed with the efficiency and discipline of these young men. At this time I should like to say I feel that the grants of money which will be given by the country to these air cadet squadrons will be repaid tenfold in citizenship in the years to come. I hope there will never be any argument or quibbling in this house over these grants, particularly at a time like this when we all see the danger of juvenile delinquency which was exemplified in an unfortunate case only the other day, when four young men were condemned to prison for the shooting of a man in the city of Toronto. I feel that any money we can put into such things as the air cadet movement will be for the good of the country and to our own advantage in time to come.

Mr. KNIGHT: If I understood the minister aright, there is to be a diminution in the number of squadrons from 400 to something like 289. Would the minister give us the reason for this reduction? My experience in an institution with which I had something to do was that when the chance of becoming airmen disappeared, a good deal of enthusiasm for the air cadet corps also disappeared. When the war was practically won and the air force gave notice that no more of these boys would be accepted into the regular force, we noticed a tremendous lessening of enthusiasm. I was wondering to what extent that lack of enthusiasm exists in the squadrons remaining, and to what extent air cadet training may be in a sense compulsory in certain of the schools or institutions which still carry it on.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): During the war it was considered advisable to start air cadet squadrons in many centres throughout Canada. Experience has shown, however, that while many squadrons have done well, others have not flourished, and to keep up the standard that the air force wishes to maintain throughout the country it is considered better to have fewer and better squadrons rather than to try to have a large number of squadrons, many of which would be inefficient. At the same time, as hon. members know, the air force has been cut down from a peak of over 200,000 to something over 16,000. Too many air cadets would mean that only a very small percentage could be absorbed into the permanent and auxiliary air force. We look forward to having many boys who have trained in the air cadet squadrons come into the permanent and auxiliary forces and I am glad to say that, of the new recruits who have enlisted recently, I am informed that approximately one-third received their early training in the air cadet squadrons. So that we prefer to have a smaller number of squadrons, and have them all good. As hon. members will see in the bill, the age limit is from fifteen to eighteen, which provides for boys taking a fairly advanced course which has been laid out for them. When they have finished that course they will then be in line to go into either the regular air force or one of the auxiliary squadrons.

Mr. SKEY: Does the service contemplate assisting the air cadets with actual air instruction at summer camps, or anything of that kind?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): I do not want to make any definite commitment on that yet, because the matter is still receiving consideration by the air force and the air cadet league. It is hoped, however, that a certain number of the top-notch cadets, as a sort of prize, will be permitted to obtain some instruction in actual flying. But while cadets at summer camps are given familiarization flights—that is, they are taken up in the air—that does not mean they are all taught to handle a plane. It is hoped, however, that a few of them will be able to secure that instruction.

Mr. SKEY: Do the minister's remarks include gliding instruction as well?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): It is a little too early to say what steps will be taken in regard to gliding. I know that subject has been receiving careful consideration by the air cadet league, and quite a long report has been put in by the subcommittee which has been looking into the matter.

Mr. McIVOR: I believe the minister is to be commended for putting these air cadets on a solid footing. I well remember that after the last war anything pertaining to military training was tabooed by schoolboards, students in universities and so on, as teaching war. I do not know how a group of boys could be better trained than in an air cadet squadron. We have one at the head of the lakes, and we are extremely proud of it. If you keep a boy busy with good things the police will not even know that he exists. Putting this force on a permanent basis, is, I think, a good thing; and while they are not liable to service in an emergency that does not mean they are barred. As I look at it, that just means they are not compelled to serve. I heartily commend the minister for having taken this step.

Mr. McKAY: Would the minister care to indicate whether any preference is given at the present time to air cadets who would like to enlist in the Royal Canadian Air Force? According to a recent newspaper item, I believe there is some little difficulty in getting men for groundcrews. I do not know how accurate that statement is, but the minister might indicate whether or not the boys who graduate from the courses in our high schools along air cadet lines receive preference over other boys who had no such training.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): I can say that the training they received has made them more valuable than those who have not had the training. As I said, approximately a third of those who have already enlisted are boys who have had senior air cadet training in air cadet squadrons.

Mr. STEPHENSON: In the smaller towns of around 6,000 population, such as the one from which I come, air cadet corps were sponsored during the war. Also in those towns are found sea cadet and army cadet corps. They were operating at sixes, there not being enough to make one good corps in any one of them.

To-day the situation is the same. We have the air cadet corps and the army cadet corps, and it is now being decided whether the air cadet corps will carry on. Does the minister offer any solution of that problem, or will they be formed only in the larger centres?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): The plan of the air cadets league is to allocate squadrons, having a certain quota for each province. I am glad that the question in connection with the multiplicity of squadrons has been mentioned. That is a condition which grew up out of the war. We have a joint interdepartmental committee on cadets, including army, navy and air. I am anxious to have that committee work out many details which will arise, such as the pay which should be given to the various units, the regulations concerning uniforms, instructors and the like, so that the support which the government provides for the various cadet corps will be as uniform as possible throughout the three services. When that committee meets questions such as those respecting three squadrons in one small community could be ironed out, with a view to having only one squadron instead of three allocated to that community.

Mr. McKAY: Does the minister not believe some inducement should be held out to the boys who are taking air cadet training? That is one of the reasons I asked whether they received preference over other boys who might wish to join the regular Royal Canadian Air Force. I believe this is an important point. I was air cadet liaison officer for some time in the air force. The boys asked time and again whether or not they would get preference, but I could not hold out any hope. If some inducement were given them they would go after the training much more wholeheartedly.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Toward the end of the war the air force stopped recruiting, and it was most discouraging for air cadets who had joined the cadet squadrons, hoping thereby to get into the air force, to find that all entry into that force was closed off because of a cessation of recruiting.

That condition, of course, does not exist to-day. Any air cadet who is fit and efficient —certainly at the present time, while recruiting is going on—can count upon his being accepted. I am sure he would be accepted, so long as he is physically and mentally fit for enlistment.

Mr. LENNARD: I assure the minister I am in favour of his bill, but there is one point I should like to draw to his attention. I feel that air cadet training officers are being penalized. I know of one air cadet training officer who during 1945 attended a two weeks' course in the month of March, and then in the summer attended twelve days at camp with the boys. On both occasions he received pay and allowances but, as hon. members know, those payments do not compensate one for out-of-pocket expenses. Any cadet training officer has his hand continually in his pocket for this, that and the other thing. However, this officer, after having attended the course and camp, and having received pay and allowances, found, when he went to pay his income tax, that the pay and allowances received placed him in a higher category, with the result that he had to pay a penalty of $50. This was all the thanks he got for having performed that very fine work in the cadet corps. Surely this is a matter which should be considered carefully.

Mr. FERGUSON: The work accomplished for the youth of our country by the army, naval and air cadet corps is vital. In one of the towns of my constituency we have a naval cadet corps. The boys in that corps are definitely being kept off the streets. The reduction in our juvenile delinquency is marked, owing to the activity of the navy league in that community. But they are trying to carry on in an old Y.M.C.A. building.

In the past, governments have been prone to neglect the erection of armouries for army personnel in communities. In our community the volunteers meet once a week, and the officers meet three times in their mess, possibly enjoying a drink. But the building in which they meet looks like a gaol. It is an eyesore, and quite unfit for the purpose to which it is being put. It contains no swimming pool, no gymnasium, or anything of the kind.

I suggest that the Minister of National Defence for Air, in conjunction with the minister for the army and naval services, consider seriously aiding communities in the erection of armouries, or buildings adequate to house these military units. There should be gymnasiums and swimming pools where both boys and girls in the community could assemble on different nights. Let them develop their bodies and they will develop their minds. Never has a greater development of youth been more necessary in Canada, after the trials and tribulations of the war, after watching the suffering of the older people and watching the struggles through which they have gone.

I suggest that the minister and his colleague should get into communication with the various communities. I can assure him that the town in my community would be willing to contribute any reasonable amount, in conjunction with the government, for the erection of such a building, where youth could assemble and keep off the streets.

The improvement brought about by the activities of the navy league in our community is striking. I saw the boys who had been carrying out their training. Last week, when a presentation of the bell from the corvette Collingwood was made, I saw the boys who have been carrying out this training. Their discipline was perfect, every movement the movement of veterans. But those chaps had learned those drills in a room only twenty feet by thirty-five feet.

There is no accommodation in the town for the young girls. If the minister were to train a cadet corps in our community, I am wondering where they would assemble. They are barred from the collegiate and the schools. The playgrounds are quite inadequate and not fit for the children to play on.

It behooves the government to go into the matter carefully with all communities across the country so as to arrive at something which will benefit our boys and girls, and give them what they need.

Mr. McKAY: I do not know to what minister I should direct the suggestion I have in mind in connection with Boy Scout work and its association with the air cadets. As I pointed out a moment ago, we find that Boy Scouts make the most apt air cadets of all. They have had good training in citizenship and physical culture, and I think some cognizance should be taken by the government of the activities of this organization. I understand that at the present time it receives an appropriation of $5,000 for the whole dominion.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Is my hon. friend referring to the National Physical Fitness Act?

Mr. McKAY: That is right.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The total grant is $250,000 by the dominion government, on a fifty-fifty basis with the provinces. Up to the present time seven out of nine provinces are taking part.

Mr. McKAY: Is that the appropriation for Boy Scout work?

Mr. MACKENZIE: For youth organizations of all kinds throughout Canada.

Mr. McKAY: Is that one of the organizations you have referred to? I understood the appropriation was $5,000 and I do not think it is enough.

Mr. ILSLEY: The grant to the Boy Scouts is $9,000.

Mr. WEBB: I am fully in accord with the principles of this bill, but I should like to clear up the matter which was brought up by the hon. member for Durham. We have the army cadets, the navy cadets and the air cadets, and in smaller communities there is a possibility of friction, of one organization taking members from the other. Whose responsibility is it to settle a matter of this kind when there are not enough boys to carry on the three services?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): It would come under the air cadet league itself, and also the navy league. What happens in a great many centres is that some organization such as the Lions club, the Rotary club or some other club sponsors a squadron. If they should be sucessful in raising a good squadron of approximately fifty boys it would be continued. If there were two or three cadet units in a community, all of which were under strength and competing with each other, I think the authorities would get together and decide which would be continued. Neither the navy league nor the air cadet league nor the army want to have inefficient squadrons that are under strength and not pulling their own weight.

Mr. LENNARD: As I understand it, a branch of the sea cadets cannot be set up in a small community until it has the sanction of the navy league headquarters in Ottawa.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am in support of the bill, but for different reasons from those of most people. I am heartily in favour of it because of the discipline upon our youth which measures such as this impose. Many people blame the delinquency of our youth upon conditions of home life, and many other excuses are made. I have an idea that there are some bad boys, and this was exemplified in Toronto the other day when four boys ranging from fifteen to twenty-one years of age went out and murdered an old chap who had built himself a little business. They were found guilty of manslaughter and two of them were sentenced to gaol for fifteen years, the other two receiving a sentence of twenty years each. The excuse for this was bad home conditions and no opportunity for employment. Everybody knows that since the war started six years ago there has been a shortage of man-power and there is no reason why anyone should not find employment. An old fellow by the name of Tobias is dead and his murderers are jitterbugging in Toronto gaol and laughing at the administration of justice because the sob-sisters have finally accomplished their purposes.

Mr. SKEY: Is the number of corps and the number of personnel that can be enlisted limited?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): We have had discussions with the air cadet league and they have come to the conclusion that they should endeavour to maintain approximately 200 squadrons with a personnel of 15,000 all told. This would mean the squadrons would range from fifty up.

Mr. FERGUSON: May I ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs if I am correct in understanding that we are spending $9,000 on the Boy Scouts this year?

[Mr. C. W. G. Gibson.]

Mr. ILSLEY: It was the Minister of Finance who said that. The grant for the Boy Scouts for many years has been $9,000, and it is $9,000 this year.

Mr. FERGUSON: When I was advocating the erection of a building to accommodate the youth of our country I had in mind the burden that might be imposed upon our taxpayers. I am now told that we grant $9,000 to the Boy Scouts organization to build up our youth. I find that this government is spending $25,000 to distribute a French and English dictionary to the members of parliament of this country. I think the government had better stop that and do a little more for the Boy Scouts.

(Translation):

Mr. LESAGE: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to contradict my hon. friend, but I claim that the federal government's responsibility is much more involved in the field of education of our people for the purpose of ensuring a better comprehension of the rights of the minority, by some, and the rights of the majority, by others, than in a field which is the exclusive responsibility of the provincial governments.

(Text):

If my hon. friend does not understand me it proves that we need to spend $25,000 for dictionaries, and perhaps that is not enough.

Mr. FERGUSON: Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The committee is considering bill No. 57, to amend the Royal Canadian Air Force Act. I would remind hon. members of the committee that when the house is in committee, according to standing order 58, subsection 2, all discussion must be strictly relevant to the matter under discussion.

Mr. FERGUSON: No person could learn English or French from the dictionary to which I referred. It is a political dictionary.

Mr. FRASER: Has the minister been able to secure from War Assets Corporation or from his department any equipment for the air cadets that would help to keep them interested in their work?

Mr. GIBSON: The Royal Canadian Air Force supplies the air cadet squadrons with a great deal of, if not with all the equipment that they use in their instructional work, as well as the arms with which they are trained.

Mr. FRASER: I am thinking of the aeroplane instruments, engines and one thing and another like that which they should have so that they can see what they will have to work with later on.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): These are not provided from War Assets but direct from the air force. Equipment required by the air cadets is supplied, if available, by the air force, which turns it over rather than declaring it surplus to War Assets.

Mr. LOCKHART: What provision is being made to assist in air force training in the schools? There is a lot of equipment available that would be acceptable to the schools. What is the government's policy as to assisting in that work?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): The provision of equipment to technical schools is an entirely different matter. This bill is dealing only with the formation of air cadet corps, and it does not cover the supplying of equipment to educational institutions.

Mr. LOCKHART: Some of the schools have in mind that their educational courses will lead to air cadet work, hoping that the boys will eventually become air-minded. They will at least have the fundamentals, and it is expected that many of the boys will want to go into the air cadets. I have heard that thought expressed several times.

Mr. SKEY: The minister has said that at present the government envisage a maximum of 15,000 air cadets. Will they be evenly distributed across the country? The province of Quebec had some most efficient corps in the war, ably trained, and there were also some in the maritimes, Ontario, the prairie provinces and British Columbia. I believe there are now more than 12,000 air cadets in Ontario alone, so that Ontario and British Columbia would absorb the whole quota which the minister mentioned.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): The air cadet squadrons will be distributed on the same basis as now through all the provinces. Prince Edward Island may have more squadrons. I think they have one now, and that number will probably be increased. That is a matter which is being worked out with the air cadet league, but no definite decision has been reached.

Mr. SKEY: The departments of education of the various provinces have to know how many corps they can put into the various schools. Every provincial department of education requires to know how many air cadets it can have and how many schools it can put them into, if the minister intends to have squadrons in the public schools.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): A great many squadrons will carry on as they have in the past. Some squadrons which have not been functioning up to the proper degree of efficiency may be disbanded. We had 400 squadrons at the peak during the war. A great many of them have folded up for one reason or another. We have only 289 at the present time. Many of these squadrons had both senior and junior cadets. When you eliminate the juniors it does not leave enough seniors in some squadrons to make it worth while to carry on the squadrons with the few seniors available.

Mr. KNIGHT: Is it necessary that these be designated as air force squadrons or air force cadets? I was interested in the suggestion made by several members that these various squadrons should be grouped together. There is no particular need, as far as I can see, to give specialized training to boys of that age either in air force, army or navy work. One solution of the problem suggested in the town I come from was that the only way a cadet force could be carried on was to put the three divisions together. We could have a cadet corps in connection with high school work and we need not give them particularly specialized training. In the event of war these boys would have had some military training and they could then join special branches. But for the purpose of that discipline which has been mentioned by hon. gentlemen to my right and for the purpose of promoting citizenship, or merely for the negative purpose of keeping the boys off the street, a combined corps is just as good, and it has not some of the objections which a military organization has in the minds of a good many people.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I wish to commend the minister for the idea of having a cadet corps, but I believe that this plan is not nearly comprehensive enough. I do not really see why it should be necessary to cut down the number of squadrons in order to improve their quality. I gathered from what the minister said that he would rather have a few squadrons and have them exceptionally good. I am not able to see why we should not have a large number of squadrons and have them all good. I believe the motivation must be at fault.

The idea which seems to be in the minds of those who are organizing this cadet movement is that the boys shall be prepared to go into the permanent force. I do not believe that is the basis upon which we should proceed. There should be the ideal of being prepared. I do not wish to say any harsh thing, but it looks to me almost as though the minister's was a policy of defeatism. All we need to do is to get the hints that are dropped of the colossal and systematic preparations which are being made in a certain country to realize that if we should ever become involved with a nation like that one, no small air force will be in any way adequate to the situation. I believe that we should start right now to teach our boys and girls and our people throughout the country that we are living in the most dangerous time that has ever existed in the history of this nation or this race. All our boys and girls throughout our schools everywhere ought to be taught definitely that we have never yet acknowledged publicly in this country what are the causes of war. No one in this government since I have been here has ever breathed a word concerning the real causes of war, and no member of the opposition since I have been here has ever said a word concerning the real causes of war. The result is that people are being deluded into thinking that all we need to remove war is a sufficiently powerful united nations organization.

So long as the causes of war are not publicly acknowledged and so long as nothing is done to remove those causes of war, we are in danger of an outbreak of war any week from now on, and the people ought to know that. Every person in public life with responsibility ought to tell them that. If the boys and girls were told that in the schools and were given to understand that it is their duty to prepare for war if it comes, it seems to me that we would have a motivation which would encourage a very large percentage of our boys to enter training for the services. It ought to be made perfectly clear to them that the next war will be a war of instants, a war of minutes. There will not be any possibility of holding the foe back of any Maginot line or any other line or behind any ocean while we commence three or four years of preparation to make up for what we have lost. If we are not thoroughly prepared when the enemy strikes the next time, the first battle will be the last. Our boys ought to be taught that: they are the ones who are going to suffer; why should they not be told the truth? They ought to know also that the next war will be a global war; it will be global war from the very first move. Canada will be in the front line; Canada will be a theatre of actual conflict. That is the most certain conclusion that the ablest thinkers in military matters are able to arrive at to-day.

Why not tell the boys and girls about this? Why not say to them, "Boys, you cannot afford to be unprepared when the time of decision comes." Everyone in this country ought to be ready for immediate action until such time as the causes of war, the great, fundamental, economic, inevitable causes of war are discovered and provision is made for removing them.

So I think that for the minister to speak as modestly as he is doing, about an air force of only 16,000, is for him to undershoot the mark a great deal. I am convinced that the minister feels that way himself, and I would not be surprised if he had wondered whether the house would accept favourably his offering even at this rate. Perhaps he is happily surprised to find that we are all with him. But what we are looking for is bold, aggressive, determined, adequate leadership to make this country ready to perform its part in whatever conflict may arise. That, I would say, is the main motivation which should be used for the boys, not the idea that when they are finished with the cadet training they should be able to go into the permanent force. That is not what they are going into it for, not by any manner of means. I believe that every school from coast to coast in this country should be making provision for the training of boys for the services into which they may have to go any day.

There is another basis of motivation about which I should like to have heard something but, as far as I know, the minister did not mention it. I wonder whether provision has been made for summer camps in the various provinces, so that cadet groups can go to those camps and spend a month or six weeks there.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Yes; it is planned that they will go to summer camps for two weeks.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is a proper motivation, and the provision of proficiency cups and shields will give another incentive for the boys to go in and do their best. So that we ought to have no difficulty at all, I would suppose, in getting all the boys we can use, and we certainly ought not to have any difficulty in using all the boys that come forward. All the boys in the country should be welcomed and encouraged to be trained.

I was thinking, just before I commenced to speak, along these lines: if we are to have only 16,000 air cadets, or 16,000 in the permanent air force, is that somewhere near all we shall have in the naval force, and is that somewhere near all we are to have in the army? If that is so, obviously our permanent force is going to be far too small. I am not a specialist in this subject, but these are considerations which are passing through my mind. I wonder whether the minister is entirely wise in saying that he is thinking about cutting down the number of cadet groups, in order to raise the efficiency.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): There is no figure in the legislation. That is the basis we are working on with the air cadet league. They are prepared to sponsor that number of cadets at the present time, but there is no limitation on the number of air cadets that may be taken on by agreement between the league and the department. But of course the air cadet league itself must sponsor the various squadrons, and the Minister of National Defence for Air must authorize the squadrons before they are formed. The suggestion that all cadets that are taken in are expected to go into the permanent force is, of course, not sound, in view of the fact that the cadets will only be in the air cadet corps for approximately three years each. That would be, with 15,000, five thousand coming out each year, and obviously the regular force could not absorb that number if they all wanted to enlist. But it is hoped that a large number will go into the auxiliary squadrons.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is why I think that the more general approach as regards the air cadets in order to qualify for the air force is fallacious, that the boys should never be enrolled in the cadet corps with the idea that they are to qualify for the permanent air force.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): I did not say they were enrolled for that purpose; I said it would give them perference for the air force if they wished to enlist.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I wonder if I have gathered this right. The impression I have is that the department is remaining more or less passive and in the background and is waiting for the air cadet league to take the initiative. That is, the air cadet league decides that it wants to have another cadet group; it asks the department for permission to have one, and the department gives its consent. Is that the general procedure?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): No; they are far more closely integrated than that, because, after all, the major expenditures on this whole air cadet movement are defrayed by the Department of National Defence for Air. Consequently the control is in the department, for it has to supply a considerable portion of the funds, a great part of the arms and equipment, and, to some extent, the clothing. So that there is close cooperation between the two. But certainly the matter of finance must always be considered in connection with authorizing unlimited numbers of squadrons.

Mr. BLACKMORE: There is no question that the matter of finance must be considered. I grant that; we are not doubting that for a minute. But if we were to plunge into war in six weeks' time we would forget finance immediately. That must impress on every hon. member the fact that in the last analysis finance has to be the servant and not the master. What I would like the minister to make quite clear is, just what is the relation between the department and the air cadet league? Does the department organize the air cadet league? Does it motivate it? Does it initiate its action? How does the air cadet league come to take its part?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): I thought I had pointed that out at the opening of my remarks to-night. The air cadet league is an organization with a charter established for the purpose of forming and operating air cadet squadrons.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Who formed it? And who keeps it going?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): It is a chartered organization. It has a national charter to form and operate air cadet squadrons.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Is it a civilian organization?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): It is a civilian organization, yes.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Well, that is just the point I cannot get the logic out of. Is the air cadet movement in Canada to depend entirely on the air cadet league? I do not see who originates the air cadet league and what keeps it going and what connection there is between the department and the league.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): The air cadet league forms these squadrons. There are also civilian organizations in the various centres with civilian boards in centres such as Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Winnipeg and other places, and these civilian organizations get behind the groups of boys who are formed into squadrons. They assist the squadrons, and in addition to the local sponsors there are provincial air cadet organizations that operate under the air cadet league. The league executive is at the top. They have provincial organizations and local organizations, and the local organizations have arranged for sponsors for various squadrons in these localities. These are all provided by civilian effort and they raise funds from civilian sources to assist the squadrons for which they are responsible. The Royal Canadian Air Force also assists in providing pay for instructors as well as grants and capitation fees to the boys according to the numbers in the squadrons. Various other grants are also given for clothing, bands and so forth, and funds are provided for summer camps. In addition, the officers attached to the squadrons are paid by the Royal Canadian Air Force. But the organization that sponsors these squadrons is entirely civilian.

Mr. BOUCHER: The same question is likely to arise in the discussion of the army and navy cadets. It seems to me that it is a privilege for any boy to be able to join any of these cadet corps. Many of the boys will want to join, and I believe that the opinion of the country has changed considerably in comparison with the pre-war antagonism to cadet training. To-day people realize that such training can do a great deal of good for the youth of Canada, whether it be in promoting physical fitness, in distilling discipline, or in making these boys potential members of the armed forces. This being the case, many of us in the house would like to have from the government an enunciation of policy generally so far as youth training is concerned whether in connection with air cadets or army cadets or sea cadets. I do not think it should be left entirely to a voluntary organization to solicit the minister's permission to form a squadron here or a unit there. The smaller schools in the urban and rural areas, as well as those in the big cities, should have the privilege of establishing cadet classes. In some towns there are cadets in connection with all three forces, but no doubt there are many towns that are without cadet training for any of the forces.

I can remember when I was going to school we had an army cadet class and I was proud to belong to it, but it developed just before the war that public opinion was to a great extent opposed to cadet training in schools. I believe, however, that public opinion has changed vastly, and the government can give some leadership by announcing its policy as to whether it feels that, in the interests of peace and for the sake of the health and welfare of our youth, as well as for the benefit of the whole country at large, these cadet classes should be encouraged throughout the country generally and not be left merely to promotion by voluntary organizations. I would ask the minister to give us some insight into the government's position in this matter with regard to cadet training in his department as well as in the other two departments of national defence. Can he not go farther than he has indicated to-night in assisting this important movement?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): I would not wish to say that the Royal Canadian Air Force or any of the defence departments are responsible for youth training in a general way or from the point of view of what might be considered part of the health and welfare of the nation. We are defence departments, and it is the responsibility of these departments to provide some preliminary training to the youth of the country in defence matters so that they will be qualified to join the defence forces when they become of age to enlist. Better results have been secured, not in having every boy put into the defence force, but by having units with a waiting list of boys who are keen to get in. Far better results are obtained in that way than by having a unit into which every boy automatically enters, where he parades on the day of inspection and perhaps not again throughout the entire season. In that case morale is low and so is efficiency. Consequently, we find it preferable to keep the numbers limited to boys who are keen to stay in. That has produced and is producing the best results.

Mr. BOUCHER: Is the minister interested only in getting boys to join the force in so far as they may be potential members of a permanent force? Is there not a broader outlook than that?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): As I have pointed out, we could not take them all into the permanent force if we wanted to. We are responsible for giving preliminary defence training to those boys who come into these cadet squadrons, and they are available to go into some of the forces, permanent or auxiliary; or if they are called upon later, they will have had valuable preliminary training.

Mr. BOUCHER: Why not have a sufficient number so that you can pick what you require.

Mr. MACKENZIE: If I may interrupt for a moment, we had thought that this bill was disposed of some time ago, seeing that every hon. gentleman in the house was in favour of it, and we were anxious to get into supply. If, however, there is a disposition to debate the bill for any length of time we shall have to move the committee out of the present stage.

Mr. BENTLEY: I wanted to say a word or two on this subject because I think the bill is a good one. The boys that join these corps can learn a good deal apart from academic training. It is a voluntary organization, and I think the minister's idea is a good one, of making it something that boys who are keen to join will want to get into, instead of having everyone automatically in it. I believe in the idea of affording these boys scope for personal ambition.

I would not have risen to speak had we not listened to what, in my opinion, was a most unfortunate speech. I am sorry that the hon.

member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) is not in his seat at the moment. He said that since he has been a member of this house—and he has been here longer than I have—he has never heard anyone give a clear explanation of the fundamental causes of war. The implication there was that he knows what the fundamental causes are. Well, he should have told us instead of leaving it in the air. I do not want to see these boys trained for some war that may be inevitable as a result of fundamental causes, but the hon. gentleman said that we were pinning our hopes on the united nations organization. Frankly, I am; I am also with the minister in what he is doing, though I hope he will never have to make use of it, but I hope and trust that the efforts of the united nations organization will be successful.

This is something which is very close to me. Then the hon. member left that up in the air and tried to sow a little seed of doubt as to whether we can be successful in the united nations organization. Goodness knows, I am not blind to the pitfalls with which we are faced. I know the possibilities of failure, but I am looking to the possibilities of success, and I think we should direct our efforts along that line and not sow any of these other seeds. That was another unfortunate statement the hon. member made. Then he mentioned a nation we might be called upon to fight, and said the name of that nation could be in anyone's mind. Well, when he said that I had two nations in mind, because I have heard him on different occasions. I am not going to quote the pages of Hansard; I do not know them, and he will correct me if I am wrong, but I heard him mention Russia as a possible enemy.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Do not give wrong impressions, now.

Mr. BENTLEY: I am just asking the hon. member to straighten out the impression he left with me.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Do not twist things up.

Mr. BENTLEY: That was one of the nations I had in mind when I heard the hon. gentleman speak. The only other nation with which we might wage war would be the nation to the south. Unquestionably those are the only nations which might or might not go to war with us. I hope neither one does; I hope we are going to have peace all round, but those things should not be left up in the air, and I did not believe this debate was the proper time to sow these particular seeds of doubt, or to leave these bits of conjecture up in the air as to the causes of war and the nations we might have to fight, which implied the failure of the united nations organization. War is one of the most explosive things we know.

The hon. member for Lethbridge said he hoped that the minister was going to have some measure of control over the air cadet corps; yet this afternoon he was the first to claim that ordinary dynamite and other explosive instruments should be left entirely in the hands of—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member must not refer to a previous debate during the present session.

Mr. BENTLEY: I am sorry; I should have known that.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If the hon. gentleman will permit me, I did not say one word about control on the part of the government.

Mr. BENTLEY: We shall leave that matter for Hansard to settle to-morrow. I shall not prolong the debate on this point, but I did not want the hon. member's observations to pass unnoticed and unchallenged.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY

PRICE CEILING POLICIES WITH RESPECT TO FARM PRODUCTS

The house resumed from Wednesday, May 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mackenzie that the house go into committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mrs. Strum.

Mr. R. H. WINTERS (Queens-Lunenburg): In this house, Mr. Speaker, we hear a great variety of subjects discussed, and when a subject is up for debate there is no telling what it will lead to, as we have seen to-night. But there is no doubt in the mind of anyone in this house that the cause of the farmer is well and ably championed. To-night we are speaking on an amendment and a subamendment, both of which deal with farmers' problems. Both the amendment and the subamendment focus attention on farm products as the salient feature of this country's economy. Probably this is truer of the Progressive Conservative amendment than of the C.C.F. subamendment, but both overlook the fact that there are in this country food producers other than farmers. Both the amendment and the subamendment point out that the farmer suffers disproportionately. Without even an analysis of statistics it is very difficult to see how that could be the case, in view of the attention the problems of the farmer are given in this chamber.

While we in the maritimes are sympathetic toward the western farmer, because we feel that any benefit accruing to him will automatically be extended to us, I wish to point out that we have problems of our own which are not associated with those of the western farmer. We want to make it clear that we fully appreciate his importance in our over-all economy. I am pleased to see the problems of our farmers being given such full consideration, because I know of no class of people more deserving of support. However, at times it is necessary to apply our thinking on a broader basis. The amendment moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) appears at page 1244 of Hansard, and states:

> That this house is of the opinion that the government's price ceiling policies with respect to farm products are discouraging production of needed food and imposing on the food producers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

The C.C.F. subamendment, which I think might well be read at this time to give a good picture of what we are discussing, will be found at page 1551 of Hansard, and reads:

> This house is of the opinion that the government's policies permitting recent unjustifiable increases in the prices of farm machinery and of steel have resulted in imposing on food producers and workers in Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

Both the amendment and the subamendment set out to prove that the government's price policies are working contrary to the best interests of the farmer and discouraging needed food production. Based on what has been said previously in this debate and on my own observations, I would seriously doubt that the farmer has been suffering too disproportionately. It is true that the prices of his products have been fixed, but that is the case with prices of other commodities used by many classes of people throughout the country. The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) pointed out in an interesting talk some of the difficulties facing the maritime provinces, in particular Nova Scotia and still more in particular his own constituency. I feel that his speech did Nova Scotia some good, because it served to bring before this house the particular problems with which we are faced, Being at the extremity of the country, as I have said before in this house, we have problems of transportation, freight rates and so on that are not encountered in some other parts of Canada. I feel, however, that the hon. member for Cape Breton South was inconsistent when he continued to advocate that wages be increased but that price ceilings otherwise be maintained. Both the hon. member for Cape Breton South and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum) deplored the fact that the leader of the opposition restricted the discussion to agriculture. I entirely agree in that respect. I feel that it is a great mistake to select any group in the national economy and attempt to give them preferred treatment.

Mr. IRVINE: Why select the manufacturers?

Mr. WINTERS: Did I?

Mr. IRVINE: Your government did.

Mr. ILSLEY: It did not.

Mr. WINTERS: The constituency I represent is not generally considered to be a farming one. It is widely and justly known as a fishing centre. But there is much more farming carried out there than most people would imagine. There are many fine apple orchards, for example, as there are in Nova Scotia generally. I do not feel I need spend time on the apple orchards, or attempt to advertise a product which is already well known. Last year, however, the apple crop was a failure. The production of this farm product was down. I have heard some strong arguments advanced in the house blaming the government for discouraging production, but I think the arguments would need to be much more convincing to persuade the farmers that government policies were responsible for the apple failure last year.

The same may be said of the potato crop in Nova Scotia last year. By the same token farmers generally all across Canada do not blame government policy when circumstances in the hands of nature result in decreased crops. This year in Nova Scotia we are hopeful that our apple crop will be better. Indications are now that it will be. We feel, too, that our farm production generally will be better. But if it is not we know it will not be for lack of trying on the part of the farmers. They are showing no tendency whatsoever to hold back because of the government's policy. In support of that statement I would read an extract from the Halifax Herald, dated Thursday, May 16, under the heading "Acreage is increased":

> Ten per cent increase in Nova Scotia potato acreage is in prospect this year according to reports from government farm correspondents. Latest estimates fix the intended 1946 seeding at 24,600 acres, 2,200 acres higher than last year. Four per cent increase in seeding of oats and spring wheat are expected.

Granting that there may be some restiveness under price control, I do not see that it is in the best interests of the country to focus attention on any one group and make the people in that group feel that they are suffering disproportionately. It is well to consider what would happen to the rest of the country if preferred treatment were given to any one group. For instance, if prices of farm products were allowed to increase, they would reflect themselves into the over-all economy of the country, and would increase the burden on all classes of people, including farmers, fishermen, merchants, tradesmen and so on. They would all be obliged to pay more for bread, cereals, cheese, butter and all farm products.

With particular reference to the C.C.F. subamendment which claims that there is discrimination against the worker, that, too, is not accepted as such in my constituency. I hold in my hand a clipping from one of our local papers which states:

> Wage price control policy is helpful
> The war-instituted policy of wage and price control, as now practised in Canada, has benefited and will continue to benefit the Canadian worker by protecting his living standards and avoiding an inflationary rise in prices, which would cancel the advantage gained by an increase in his real wages during the war years and since.

That is found in a paper which has never been inclined to lean over backwards—to use the expression of the hon. member for Cape Breton South—in support of the government.

In my constituency there is a high percentage of people engaged in seafaring. This is a hazardous occupation, and the loss of life is accordingly high. Years in which there are no drownings at sea are very few indeed, as hon. members well know. In fact, to the best of my knowledge, last year was the first in this generation in which there were no losses at sea among crews of schooners in our deep-sea fleet. As a result of the cumulative high loss of life there are many widows. I wish those who advocate the immediate removal of price ceilings would tell the house how those widows, on their small incomes, are going to adjust their method of living to compensate for increased prices. They have no means whatsoever of gearing their incomes to an inflationary spiral. The same thing applies, of course, to people on fixed incomes and pensions all across the board. They have no opportunity to keep pace with increasing prices.

It is idle to say that prices would not increase if ceilings were removed. The very fact that there is such a great pressure against these ceilings is a clear indication of what we could expect if they were removed. If we were sure that the ceilings would not be lifted there would not be such great stress to have them lifted. That the two things go hand in hand goes without saying. There is no doubt in my mind that prices would skyrocket at once if ceilings were lifted, and we would find ourselves in the midst of a violent period of inflation. For example, in the United States where controls have not been maintained as rigidly as in Canada, they are experiencing this condition right now, and are envious of this country's well-controlled economy.

Referring once again to the amendment offered by the leader of the opposition, we find it states that the government's policies are discouraging the production of food. The C.C.F. subamendment states that the government policy has imposed on food producers and workers an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government price stabilization policy.

I say emphatically that both the amendment and subamendment are wrong. Speakers in support of these amendments have attempted to show that because of the government policies farmers are deliberately not producing up to their full potential capacity. I say again that this applies more particularly to the amendment offered by the Progressive Conservative party than to the C.C.F. subamendment. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Mayhew) and the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Cleaver), speaking on behalf of the government, have shown clearly that what the amendments say about farm production is not the case at all.

But if one were to suppose, for the purpose of argument, that the government's policies do discourage production of farm products—which they do not—the amendments would still be wrong. Both amendments refer to food products, not farm products alone. The word "food" is not used in a restrictive sense. I presume it is intended to include all food products. The C.C.F. subamendment does not state directly that food production is discouraged, but it does imply that by stating that the government's policies impose unfair hardships on food producers.

There is the greatest tendency on the part of farmers, and those speaking on behalf of farmers in the house, to consider food to be limited to farm products only. The definition of "food" must surely embrace fish, which is an important food, as all must agree. The inclusion of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Bridges) in the Canadian delegation to the meetings of the food and agricultural organization in Washington is official recognition by the government of the fact that fish is included in the long-term food programme. Surely that is becoming more important all the time.

We can no longer make the mistake of talking about food and excluding fish. There are many in the house who are not fully familiar with the extent of the fishing activities on the west and east coasts. However, I am sure the house realizes the important part fishing is playing in Canada's economy. While we are anxious to see that the farmer gets the best possible deal, I am sure we can assume that the farmer is just as anxious that the fisherman is given due recognition for the part he is playing. To say, then, that the government's policy is discouraging the production of needed food is hardly correct when one interprets the word "food" in the proper way and reads such statements as have been contained in the press recently, and I quote:

Nova Scotia's fish catch increased by 6,034,000 pounds in March over the corresponding month last year. Value of the landed catch to the fishermen was $376,000 more than in 1945. Altogether 26,957,000 pounds of fish were caught with a total landed value of $1,672,000. Lobsters, which gained in quantity by 52,900 pounds, and in value by $134,900, were a big factor in the general increase. Catches of cod, halibut, scallops and pollock all were larger than last year.

I would remind the house that fishermen everywhere do not take kindly to statements alleging that the government's policy is discouraging the production of food when they are doing their utmost to produce in unprecedented quantities and are delivering the goods. They are producing all the year round under the most trying and hazardous conditions. Rather than criticizing the government's policies, these people are grateful to the government for what it has done to assist them to earn a good living wage after so many lean years. As hon. members know, assistance has come in the form of subsidies on ships, veterans benefits, floor prices, trade agreements and so on.

I wonder how serious people are who say they want controls removed entirely and at once. It is reported that in a recent speech at Sherbrooke the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) advocated that price controls be removed immediately and completely. I understand from remarks made in this house that many of those on the opposition benches feel the same way, but I think we should have a clear statement from them as to how far they want to go, on what commodities they want ceilings removed and when they want them removed. Many people criticize, but I think most of them realize what would happen if ceilings were removed. A good example of how the public reacts to this problem and registers complaints while at the same time playing safe is a statement made recently by a well-known Canadian newspaper, the Toronto Daily Star. The heading is, "Wartime restrictions should go." The article is quite emphatic in that, but it ends up by saying:

[Mr. Winters.]

Except for whatever price controls may be necessary, war-time restrictions should go

I think in private most opposition members who complain about price controls feel just that way. They have some local complaints, but at the same time they are reluctant to see controls go completely. The recent strenuous objections from the opposition to the increase in the price of farm machinery and the removal of the subsidy on milk serve to illustrate this point. In my opinion it is doing harm to the country to make the people restive under controls which are known to be in their best interests. Focusing the problem before the public and leading manufacturers and merchants to believe that controls will be removed in the near future serves to retard the availability of consumer goods, since there is every reason to believe that, in the light of the publicity resulting from amendments such as these, goods are being held off the market.

Every reaction that I have received from my constituency has been favourable to the government's policy of adjusting controls and removing them where possible on a gradual basis in order to return to a normal peacetime economy without violent inflation. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) said in a previous speech on this subject, as reported on page 472 of Hansard, this policy is adopted in the confidence that price control and the maintenance of ceiling prices have the full support of Canadian people, and the government does not intend to flout their opinion. If these circumstances are appreciated on all sides and actions are governed accordingly, we shall be assured of a quicker return to normalcy, with fewer irregularities.

Mr. E. B. McKAY (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to state that I am unequivocally in accord with the principle of price stabilization. During the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne last session I stated, and I reiterate it again, that a more satisfactory approach to price control in so far as agricultural products are concerned would be to establish basic parity prices for all farm products. These prices should bear direct relationship to the cost of production; they would not be floor prices nor yet would they be ceiling prices; they would be prices that would vary with the changed costs of production as related to the cost of the goods which the farmer buys and uses. Obviously the government is not following such a policy.

By this policy of permitting the ceiling on prices of farm machinery to be raised, the cost of producing foodstuffs has been increased for the farmer. The increase allowed in the price of gasoline is another example of the same thing. At the same time the floor has been lowered under the selling price of wheat. It is apparent that such actions on the part of the government is placing an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the price stabilization policy upon the shoulders of the people who obtain their livelihood by tilling the soil.

I can see absolutely no justification for the increase in the price of farm implements. There are many serious objections that could be taken to the raising by 12½ per cent of the ceiling on the selling price of farm machinery manufactured here in the Dominion of Canada. First, farmers to-day are in grave need of machinery replacements for their worn-out equipment. This, added to the increase in price, adds most substantially to the burden the farmer is forced to bear. He must purchase large quantities of new implements to replace his old machinery and must pay higher prices.

Second, higher machinery prices will increase the cost of production. In the face of a lowered floor price of $1 a bushel for wheat at Fort William, I cannot see any justification for raising the ceiling on the goods the farmer has to buy.

Third, I question the reliability of the figures which apparently were submitted to the government by the farm machinery companies and which were quoted by the Minister of Finance to indicate increased costs for the implement manufacturers. I question that data unless it was procured directly from the records of the companies concerned and by investigators of the government. Machinery prices have been unjustifiably high for years, according to the report of the special committee on farm implements which sat in 1937.

According to evidence which was submitted to that committee of parliament, and which appears on page 13 of the report of proceedings:

> It appears that a small cream separator (under 500 lbs. capacity) can be manufactured in Sweden by a company allied with the De Laval Company, doing business in Canada, and after payment of freight (ocean and rail), duty, excise tax, can be laid down at Peterborough, Ontario, for $17.65. These particular cream separators are sold at Winnipeg for an average price of $44.58. When it is remembered that the freight from Peterborough to Winnipeg is only $1.30, this committee is of the opinion that the above facts speak for themselves, and that the retail price to the Canadian farmer is completely out of line with manufacturing and distribution costs.

I particularly wish to emphasize that last statement:

> The retail price to the Canadian farmer is completely out of line with manufacturing and distribution costs.

May I now refer to repeated statements which have emanated from industrial and financial leaders, and may I add that these men are not of the C.C.F. Certainly none with whom I have conversed are sympathetic with our policies in this corner of the house. As a matter of fact, they largely support the Progressive Conservative point of view, which appears to be to take off the lid so that prices on every commodity may go sky-high.

These leaders of industry and finance, directors, in other words, of big business, maintain that increased labour costs are largely responsible for the high prices of manufactured goods. Certainly labour costs have risen to some extent, but no more than the increased costs of living would justify. Labour, despite these increases, is still not receiving its fair share of the national income. The labouring man, and that includes the fishermen who have just been referred to by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Winters), who comprises such a large part of this country's population has always been in the lower income brackets. Too often industrialists have had too much regard for profits and have failed to respect the old biblical counsel: the labourer is worthy of his hire. The small share that labour received from the price realized from farm machinery is revealed on page 435 of the proceedings of the special committee, 1937, on farm implement prices. I think this house and the country should carefully examine that report. On page 435 of the proceedings of the special committee on farm implement prices it is stated that in 1913—quite a long time ago—the selling price of an eight-foot binder sold in the city of Regina was $165. The price itself would indicate that that was a long time ago. Labour costs amounted to $10.21—I repeat, only $10.21—not a very large sum as everyone must admit. In 1932 the same binder sold in Regina for $276 and the labour cost amounted to only $13.40, still a very small percentage of the selling price, actually just 4·8 per cent.

In every case, the selling commission, freight from the factory to Regina, factory overhead, and material costs, each exceeded the cost of labour. Later figures are not available from a reliable source in Canada. But in the United States, where labour in most industries is on a higher wage level than in this country, the report of the federal trade commission, issued from Washington, D.C., last year, stated that the cost of labour in the manufacture of farm implements in the United States has not altered materially in relation to other costs of manufacturing. The report reveals that a combine retailing in Minneapolis for $638 had as labour costs $46.43, or just 7·3 per cent of the selling price. Had labour costs increased 50 per cent, labour would still be obtaining only slightly over ten per cent of the selling price of that particular type of farm machinery. But labour costs have not increased 50 per cent. The minister quoted figures to show that labour costs here in the dominion in the implement industry had increased only 28½ per cent; I think I am correct in that figure.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is correct.

Mr. McKAY: Referring again to the 1937 special committee on farm implement prices, page 435 of the proceedings, reveals that the highest selling price for an eight-foot binder was in 1921, when labour costs were $20.66. That binder sold for $329 in Regina. Had labour increased 28½ per cent at that time, labour costs would still be only $5.88 more, or a total of $26.54, representing just 8 per cent of the selling price, not 80 per cent.

Therefore I submit that labour costs in Canada, in the implement industry in particular, cannot be the reason for the demand for an increase in the price ceiling on farm machinery. Certainly they are not a legitimate reason for a 12½ per cent increase, and until there is placed before this house evidence that can be relied upon to justify a rise in the price of farm machinery, I am unalterably opposed to breaking the price ceiling, the effect of which can only be a demand by other industries for similar treatment. Under the pressure of such a demand the whole structure of price stabilization will be shaken to its foundations and inflation will be upon us with all its attendant evils.

Mr. D. F. BROWN (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I think it is the privilege, duty and obligation of every member of this house to do everything we humanly can to protect those people who most need protection, the common people of this country who are very much in need of our attention and services. If we get into an inflationary period it is the common people who will suffer the most. For that reason I think it is the duty of controllers, cabinet ministers and the like, and the duty of everyone of us who sits in this house and every citizen of this dominion to do everything possible to prevent any inflationary period from getting started.

As I see it, the constituents of good government are not only the qualities of intelligence, stability, order, vitality and compassion, but ordinary common honesty and sincerity. Instead of going around the country making wild and reckless statements, we should consider what we are talking about. We should reflect that the people of Canada are aware of what is being said and that they expect us to do our duty. In the constituency I represent there are many people, the backbone of our country, who work in the factories, the offices and the shops; there are many widows and orphans, many old age pensioners, returned soldiers, retired public servants and business men on fixed incomes. These are the people who will suffer from inflationary methods, and who, indeed, are suffering from the mere talk of such inflation.

The loyal opposition—I say, the "loyal" opposition—goes about the country and preaches the removal of price controls; that is, they do so outside the house. The United States has gone somewhat upon that line; I do not say that controls have been entirely released, but they have been relaxed to a great extent. Recently the Windsor Daily Star—

Mr. MacNICOL: A very fine paper.

Mr. BROWN: "A very fine paper." I thank the hon. gentleman, and I might say that it is quoted in this house more than any other newspaper in Canada. The Windsor Daily Star took upon itself to make a survey of conditions as they exist in Windsor and in Detroit, which is on the opposite side of the river. Here are some comparative prices as found by them: soft drinks, Windsor, 7 cents; Detroit, 10 to 15 cents; hamburgers and hot-dogs, Windsor, 10 cents; Detroit, 21 cents; shortening, Windsor, 19 cents; Detroit, 27 cents. The average good meal costs 75 cents in Windsor and $1.75 in Detroit; for a downtown movie one pays 48 cents in Windsor, 85 cents in Detroit. Let me remind hon. members that if we have inflation, the industrialists, high-salaried people, and professional people will be able to charge correspondingly; it is the smaller people, the workers in the factories, who will suffer. I come from an industrial town, not from a farming area, so that I come in contact with these working people; they are my friends, some of them are my relatives, and I believe it is the duty of everyone of us to do everything in our power to protect from inflationary policies the factory workers, the widows and orphans dependent on small pensions, the retired business men with a little money laid by, for these are the people who need protection. After the last war there was no such control as we have to-day, and prices sky-rocketed. To give the house some idea, let me quote a few typical figures:

	1919 cents	1920 cents	March 1946 cents
Butter, per pound ..	58	74·8	44·7
Eggs, per dozen....	54	88	43
Sugar, per pound ...	11·9	25	8·6
Bread, per pound ...	7·8	9·7	6·7
Milk, per quart	13·7	15·6	10·5

This is why I am opposed to the amendment submitted by the loyal opposition. Now, as to the un-loyal opposition—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BROWN: Is there some question about that?

An hon. MEMBER: Certainly there is.

Mr. BROWN: Very well, I will pass that by and classify the C.C.F. with the Conservatives. If they want to be associated I will call them also the loyal opposition, or we can have the C.C.F. branch of the loyal opposition.

Mrs. STRUM: On a point of order, the speaker is classifying two kinds of opposition or two kinds of "loyal" opposition. Am I correct in assuming we have an official opposition and then we have other hon. members in opposition?

Mr. BROWN: Bless your little heart, I would not do anything—

Mrs. STRUM: Well, see that you don't then.

Mr. BROWN: Far be it from me to contradict a woman. I am married too.

Mrs. STRUM: Well, you are not at home now.

Mr. BROWN: I did not hear that. However, I have been called un-Christian by the hon. member who has interrupted me. She did so on Monday, April 15. As quoted in the Windsor Daily Star, "Mrs. Strum says that the King government is un-Christian". It may be so. But I do not think the people of Canada are particularly concerned about what any hon. member, including myself, is saying; what they want is action. Instead of going around the country, as some hon. members are doing, making inflammatory speeches, I think we should get down to business. Men and women earnestly desire more humane conditions of living, better jobs, comfort for their griefs, healing for their wounds, life in a decent society, proper dwellings, education for their children, sane and clean government.

Now, as to this amendment brought in by the official opposition—

Mrs. STRUM: That is better.

Mr. MacNICOL: You have it right this time.

Mr. BROWN: Thank you.

Mr. MacNICOL: Next time it will be the government.

Mr. BROWN: That is wishful thinking. The people of Canada are not particularly interested in gibes across the floor. Our job is to do the best we can where we are.

The subamendment would lead one to believe that the worker has not been fairly treated by this government—this Liberal government. However, strange as it may seem, I come from an industrial area and I was elected. I think the people of Canada are quite well aware of the benefits that have accrued to them from this government—this Liberal government.

Mr. CASE: So-called.

Mr. MACKENZIE: By a former Liberal.

Mr. BROWN: Will the hon. gentleman rise in his place and say what he has to say, or is he ashamed of it? After all, it was Sir Wilfrid Laurier who formed the dominion Department of Labour in 1900, and no one will say he was not a Liberal.

Mr. MacNICOL: He was a great Canadian.

Mr. BROWN: The Postmaster General of the day administered the department, and the gentleman who is now the head of the government, Mr. Mackenzie King, was deputy minister.

Mr. MacINNIS: It started out very badly.

Mr. BROWN: It started very well, and I will depend on the judgment of the people of Canada rather than that of any political party.

Mr. CASE: Take Prince Albert, for instance.

Mr. BROWN: In 1908 the interests of labour were given fuller recognition by the appointment of a Minister of Labour holding no other portfolio, and the present Prime Minister became minister. To-day we have as minister one who has devoted his life to the labour movement. I refer to the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Mitchell). We also have an efficient department under the supervision of Mr. Arthur MacNamara, who has rendered a noble service to the dominion in the more recent strikes we have had. Between 1896 and 1911 labour legislation enacted by the dominion parliament included the Conciliation Act, establishing the department and providing for conciliation work by the officers of the department in case of industrial disputes; the Railway Labour Disputes Act, designed to promote the settlement of disputes between railway companies and their employees; the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, providing further machinery for the prevention and settlement of labour disputes, particularly those in mines and public utilities; the Alien Labour Act, to protect Canadian workmen from the competition of alien workmen brought to Canada under contract; and the Lord's Day Act, ensuring rest on Sunday to the great majority of workers.

The statute prohibiting the manufacture and sale of matches made from white phosphorus, enacted in 1914, was drawn up and passed by the House of Commons first in 1911 but was not finally disposed of before the general election of 1911. The fair wages resolution of the House of Commons in 1900 is the basis of the government's policy by which contractors for dominion government works and supplies are required to pay the rates of wages prevailing in the district in which the work is done. In 1908, the Government Annuities Act was passed. The provision made for the sale of annuities by the government was designed for the advantage of persons of small and moderate incomes who wished to ensure for their old age a certain income.

Mr. JOHNSTON: What has that to do with the amendment?

Mr. BROWN: I am talking about the amendment as submitted by the C.C.F. as follows:

> This house is of the opinion that the government's policies of permitting recent unjustifiable increases in the prices of farm machinery and of steel have resulted in imposing on food producers and workers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

That is the amendment, and I am telling the house what the Liberal government has done for the workers of the country.

Mr. BURTON: You have not told us whether you are in favour of an increase in the price of machinery.

Mr. BROWN: The hon. member will have an opportunity of making a speech if he wants to, but it will not be to-night, I assure him. Since the government came into office in December, 1922, legislative and other action has been taken to promote the welfare of the workers. The trainmen formerly employed on the Grand Trunk railway lines who had been deprived of their pension and seniority rights were restored to their former status in 1922 through the efforts of the government. That was in 1922, and the people of Canada know what benefits have accrued to them.

Mrs. STRUM: What about 1946 and this amendment?

Mr. BROWN: We will get to that. Do not be impatient. The Winnipeg postal employees who were required after the strike of 1919 to accept the minimum rates of wages for new men were by a statute of 1929, granted the rates payable for work done. The amendment of 1919 to the Immigration Act, whereby the minister was empowered to deport any persons who were deemed to be advocating violence or sedition except those who were British subjects by reason of birth in Canada or naturalization in Canada, was repealed in 1928 and the section made to apply to those who are not Canadian citizens. By an order in council of August, 1929, issued under the authority of the Immigration Act, employers were prohibited from importing labour under contract. In 1922, an act was passed restricting Chinese immigration.

The 1924 amendment to the Militia Act provided that the militia could be called out by local authorities only with the approval of the provincial attorney general. The use of militia in labour disputes was thus made dependent on the approval of the attorney general of the province concerned. Labour was given representation on the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. It is eleven o'clock.

Mr. BROWN: In that event, Mr. Speaker, I would move the adjournment of the debate, and if offence has been taken by my hon. friends—I say "friends" advisedly—I hereby apologize.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, May 21, 1946.

The house met at three o'clock.

DAIRY PRODUCTS

INCREASES IN SUBSIDIES ON MILK ENTERING INTO MILK PRODUCTS

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) a few days ago announced the changes in the subsidy policy concerning fluid milk, he said that it was necessary to give further consideration to the subsidies on milk entering into cheese and into processed milk.

I am now in a position to state that the subsidy on milk entering into the production of cheese will be increased by ten cents per hundred pounds, that is from 20 cents to 30 cents per hundred pounds, and that the subsidy on milk entering into the production of concentrated milk products and the production of milk sugar will be increased by eight cents per hundred pounds, that is from 15 cents to 23 cents.

These increases are effective as from May 1, 1946. The subsidy on milk entering into the production of cheese will continue for the full year, that is until April 30, 1947, unless in the meantime it is absorbed in the price. The subsidy on milk entering into processed milk will continue until September 30, 1946. With regard to what is done about milk entering into processed milk for the period after that, further consideration will have to be given to the matter.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the minister say whether the expression "absorbed in the price" means absorbed into the ceiling price?

Mr. ILSLEY: What I meant was added to the price.

Mr. HACKETT: The minister means it would be added to the price.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes; if before the end of the full year the subsidy is withdrawn, it would be added to the price.

Mr. HACKETT: Does that mean to the fixed price?

Mr. ILSLEY: The ceiling price.

Mr. HACKETT: Is that all within the control price?

Mr. ILSLEY: Most of the cheese goes to the United Kingdom, and it would have to be added to that. Presumably it would have to be added at the same time to the price in Canada.

Mr. SENN: The minister mentioned processed milk. Did he include powdered milk?

Mr. ILSLEY: I am sorry, but I cannot answer all these questions, because they are within the knowledge of the Minister of Agriculture to a much greater extent than they are within mine. But the term used in the order in council is "milk entering into the production of concentrated milk products and the production of milk sugar."

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps the Acting Prime Minister cannot answer this question either, but it appeared to me that the removal of the subsidy on fluid milk and the provision of a subsidy on milk used for other purposes will have the effect of discouraging the production of milk for fluid purposes and increasing the production for milk-manufactured products to be sent overseas. I gather that that is the effect of it.

Mr. ILSLEY: I feel incompetent to answer that question. The returns on fluid milk are considerably higher than the returns on milk for other purposes.

Mr. BRACKEN: May I have a copy of that statement.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, but it was partly oral.

COST OF ASSISTANCE IN CONNECTION WITH FLUID MILK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. McMASTER (High Park): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. According to a statement in this morning's papers Donald Gordon is reported to have said that the cost of assistance given in connection with fluid milk is $20,000,000. whereas a return made a few days ago by the Minister of Agriculture gives this amount as $12,671,000. Would the Minister of Finance find out whether something is being withheld by the department?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): There is no discrepancy in fact. The reference in the newspaper article was to the consumer milk subsidy while the reference in the return made by the Minister of Agriculture was to the producer milk subsidy.

REDISTRIBUTION

STATISTICS OF POPULATION AND OTHER DATA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In order to facilitate the consideration of redistribution would the minister make available to each member of the house a copy of bulletin No. A-10, published under his authority, which contains essential statistics of population, constituency by constituency and municipality by municipality, as well as other data essential for the discussion of redistribution? We have found it difficult to get copies of this bulletin and perhaps the minister can assure us that it will be made available.

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am grateful to the leader of the opposition for giving me notice of this question. I got in touch immediately with this branch and was advised that bulletin No. A-10 is a 1941 publication and that only a limited number of copies are available, not sufficient to supply all members of the house. As is evidenced by the question asked by the leader of the opposition, I felt that this publication was of sufficient importance to warrant my asking that additional copies be printed for members of the house, and I expect that these will be available within four or five days.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LUMBER INDUSTRY—STRIKE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he has any information he can give the house regarding the strike in the lumber industry in British Columbia which has reached serious proportions.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I have directed the reappointment of Chief Justice Sloan in an endeavour to bring the parties together, that is, on the question of working conditions and wages. It should be clearly understood that the final decision will have to be approved by the regional war labour board of British Columbia. I am hopeful that good sense will prevail and that the dispute will be brought to a speedy conclusion.

USE OF PRISONERS OF WAR IN SUGAR BEET PRODUCING AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. DESMOND (Kent, Ont.): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour in connection with the prisoner of war situation in the sugar beet producing areas of western Ontario. In view of the fact that there has been a substantial increase in production amounting to 26,500 acres—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member is not supposed to make a statement or give information to the house. He should simply state his question.

Mr. DESMOND: Are prisoners of war to be made available in sufficient numbers to justify the increased acreage?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): We have heard a great deal in this day and age about the unemployment situation in Canada, and now a request is being made that prisoners of war be retained in Canada to harvest an important crop.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Others will not take on the job.

[Mr. Mackinnon.]

Mr. MITCHELL: If I had the power of direction that I had twelve months ago perhaps the hon. member for Lake Centre would be harvesting beets to-day.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: There is no danger of that in any of these regulations.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend is quite anxious about a bill of rights; he is anxious about the lifting of price ceilings and the freedom of the individual. If he were as definite about those as I am, probably conditions would be a little different in Canada to-day.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That is true enough.

Mr. MITCHELL: My good Conservative friends are anxious to push the working people around.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MITCHELL: It is all right when the boot is on the other foot. It does not matter whose ox is being gored so long as it is not yours.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MITCHELL: A similar question was to be asked by the hon. member for Lake Centre. I should like to say that it is not correct that the number of prisoners of war to be available this year for the sugar beet industry in Ontario is to be reduced as compared with last year. Actually we are increasing the number. Last year we had 861 employed in the fields in the sugar beet area of western Ontario; this year we will place 872 in this work. We are also trying to increase the number by another 200 and to make a similar increase in the number alloted to the Manitoba sugar beet industry.

Another point which I think will impress hon. members is that we are arranging to place prisoners of war individually with sugar beet farmers. By so doing we think we will increase the labour productivity, because instead of being moved to and from the hostels each day the men will be living at the homes of the farmers and be able to start work earlier. There will also be a personal interest on the part of the farmer, which will lead to more work being done. The matter of increasing the number both in Ontario and in Manitoba is under consideration.

DAY NURSERIES

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO MAINTENANCE AND OPERATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if the government has received a request that it resume the payment of fifty per cent of the cost of operating day nurseries and, if so, what action it proposes to take.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): We have received a request from the city of Toronto that the fifty per cent assistance to the maintenance of day nurseries be continued, but no decision has been reached at the moment. The contribution by the dominion government toward the cost of operating day nurseries was undertaken as a war measure. Due notice was given to the local authorities some months ago that the contributions would be discontinued, and I doubt very much whether that decision will be reversed.

BARBED WIRE

SHORTAGE FOR FENCING PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Cariboo): I should like to direct a question to the appropriate member of the government, which I presume would be the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. As he is absent, perhaps my question may stand as notice for tomorrow. Have the government any information as to the great shortage of barbed wire for fencing and, if so, what are they doing about it?

COAL

USE OF BIENFAIT MINES TO ASSIST IN MEETING SHORTAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, to whom I have already sent notice. In view of the desperate fuel shortage and consequent danger of industrial tie-ups, would the minister consider plans to make full use of the Bienfait coal mines in a coordinated plan with other Canadian mines to meet this emergency?

Mr. G. J. McILRAITH (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): It is expected that the minister will be making a further statement in the next few days on the coal shortage, and I would prefer that the question asked be allowed to stand so that it may be dealt with in that statement.

RADIO BROADCASTING

APPLICATION OF C.B.C. FOR WAVE LENGTH OF CFRB

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier). I observe that he is not here, but I am sure that in his absence the Minister of National Revenue will be glad to answer. Has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation applied to the Minister of Transport to take over the wave length of CFRB operating in Toronto?

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): I do not know.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Perhaps the minister can get somebody to assist him in finding out.

Mr. McCANN: I would say to the hon. member for Calgary West that that is a question which might properly be directed to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe).

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Why not pick out some one who is here? He is not here either.

CANADIAN ARMY

DISCHARGE OF JUNIOR PERMANENT FORCE OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. A. KIDD (Kingston City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Could the discharge of the junior permanent force officers in the army be deferred or held up until such time as appointments in the service can be assured in their branch or some other branch of the service? This question is urgent, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that several junior permanent force officers in the army are being asked this week to relinquish their appointments, and—

Mr. SPEAKER: I am pleased to learn from the hon. member that his question is urgent, but I must call his attention to the fact that he is not supposed to make any statement when asking a question on the orders of the day. I would ask him to observe the rule.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of National Defence): My hon. friend did not have an opportunity, I presume, to send me notice of his question. I will take it as a notice and give him an answer at some future day.

SPECIAL DECORATION FOR HONG KONG EXPEDITIONARY FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. On September 11, 1945, the minister was asked whether he would consider granting the Pacific Star or having some special decoration struck for the Hong Kong expeditionary force. The minister replied that he would give the question consideration. Has the minister arrived at a decision, and if so may I ask what it is?

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. member to put his question on the order paper.

STANDARDIZATION OF EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. C. I. MERRITT (Vancouver-Burrard): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of press reports in the last two days with reference to the standardization of equipment in the Canadian and United States armies, would the minister make a statement to the house on the question?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I have seen all the press reports to which my hon. friend refers, but there will be an opportunity for me to give him any information he requires when my estimates are under consideration.

Mr. MERRITT: If I may ask a supplementary question, when is it proposed to move the resolution on the order paper with regard to the Canadian Army?

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): That depends upon the arrangement of government business.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PRIORITIES IN PURCHASE OF FARM MACHINERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. CHESTER S. McLURE (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Are veterans who own or purchase their own farms entitled to priority in purchasing farm machinery, and do they receive the ten per cent special discount?

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I was given no notice of the question, and I have pleasure in taking it as a notice.

Mr. McLURE: Mr. Speaker, I have another question. This is just a simple one.

Mr. MACKENZIE: A refreshing change.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask hon. members to look at the rules of the house, by which they will see that they have every opportunity within the rules to get all the information they desire. If they want a question to be answered orally, it is a simple matter to have it marked with an asterisk on the order paper. But until the rules of the house are changed the Speaker has no choice but to ask hon. members to refrain from asking questions on the orders of the day that are not urgent; and further, no statement should be made in putting a question on the orders of the day. It is the duty of the Speaker to see that the rules of the house are observed.

Mr. McLURE: Mr. Speaker, I wish—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but it is not the practice to question a ruling or the advice of the Speaker. It is the well-established practice of the house that questions which are not urgent should be put on the order paper instead of being asked on the orders of the day.

Mr. McLURE: Mr. Speaker, I have received a telegram—

Mr. SPEAKER: I have asked the hon. member to put his question on the order paper.

JOINT DEFENCE BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. W. SKEY (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence? Will he tell the house whether the joint defence proposals now under discussion by Canada and the United States include—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask the hon. member to put his question on the order paper.

Mr. SKEY: May I put my question, Mr. Speaker, before you rule on its urgency? The reason I ask for this indulgence—

An hon. MEMBER: Put the question.

Mr. SKEY: Will the Minister of National Defence tell the house whether the joint defence proposals now under discussion—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman but I see no urgency in the question. It must be put on the order paper.

Mr. SKEY: I would respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that the defence proposals under discussion at the present time are urgent.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Hon. members who insist in asking on the orders of the day questions which are not urgent are not helping the Speaker to uphold the dignity and decorum of the house. The hon. member knows the rules, or should know them, and I would ask for the cooperation of all hon. members in upholding the dignity and decorum of our proceedings.

SUPPLY

PRICE CEILING POLICIES WITH RESPECT TO FARM PRODUCTS

The house resumed from Monday, May 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mackenzie that the house go into committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mrs. Strum.

Mr. D. F. BROWN (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, when this debate was adjourned last night I was discussing the amendment and the subamendment, particularly the subamendment which suggests that the workers would not benefit by legislation of this government. I had shown in part what this Liberal government has done in the past for the workers, who may confidently expect similar treatment in the future.

Since the accession of the Liberal party to office in December 1922, labour has been given representation on the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways, Mr. Tom Moore having been appointed a member of the board in that year. The order issued by Mr. D. B. Hanna in 1920 prohibiting employees of the Canadian National Railways from standing as political candidates was withdrawn by Sir Henry Thornton in 1923.

The Civil Service Superannuation Act was passed in 1924. Dominion government policemen and firemen were accorded a weekly rest day in 1924 and 1925 respectively. Persons working for the dominion government on hourly rates were brought within the Public Service Retirement Act in 1922. The Government Employees Workmen's Compensation Act was amended in 1925 to require the payment of the cost of medical aid and hospital expenses to government employees to whom compensation for accident or disease was payable. A further amendment in 1927 provided for dominion government railway employees in Prince Edward Island.

Fishing boats were declared exempt from pilotage dues in 1922. In 1924 children under fourteen were prohibited from being employed, and boys under eighteen forbidden to be employed as trimmers or stokers, on seagoing ships. Provision was made for a compulsory examination of young persons on ships and for unemployment indemnity in case of loss of ships. These amendments to the Canada Shipping Act were based on draft conventions of the international labour conference.

On motion of the Prime Minister in 1924, a standing committee of the House of Commons was appointed to consider the subject of industrial and international relations.

The protection of trade union labels has long been desired by organized labour, since the presence of a union label on articles is considered as a guarantee that the article was manufactured under working conditions governed by an agreement between the employer and the trade union concerned. A bill to give to union labels the same protection as is accorded by the Trade Mark and Design Act to other trade marks was introduced in parliament by the minister of labour and enacted in 1927.

The fair wages policy, adopted in 1900, was made more effective by orders in council passed in 1907, 1922 and 1924. The terms of the labour provisions to be incorporated in government contracts were laid down, making the purpose of the fair wages policy clearer and more definite. Contractors for all government works and supplies are required to pay the rates of wages prevailing in the district in which the work is performed, to post the wages schedule in a conspicuous place, and to keep a record of wage payments available for inspection by the fair wage officers of the Department of Labour. Government departments are required to furnish monthly to the Department of Labour reports giving information as to contracts entered into during the preceding month. This information is published in the Labour Gazette. The fair wages policy of the dominion government for the protection of workers engaged in the execution of federal contracts has been copied in most of the provinces, and by many municipal authorities and other public bodies in Canada. Experience shows that this policy has been of great value to labour in ensuring standard conditions of wages and hours on public works and supplies. In 1929, an order in council required the application of the fair wages order to works in connection with waterpower development in the prairie provinces.

This policy was given statutory effect and extended to provide for an eight-hour day on May 30, 1930, in the Fair Wages and Eight-Hour Day Act. This statute provided that all persons employed by a contractor on government construction works should be paid such wages as are generally accepted as current for competent workmen in the district, provided they are fair and reasonable, and daily hours of work shall not exceed eight except in special cases provided for by the government or in cases of emergency approved by the minister. Persons employed directly by the government on such work and who are not under the Civil Service Act are to have similar conditions to those laid down for persons employed by contractors. The 1930 act was repealed in 1935 by the Bennett government but was reenacted with the additional restriction of hours to forty-four a week and an extension of its application to works to which the government gives financial assistance.

On March 27, 1930, an order in council stipulated that, except where work is intermittent or the application of the order in council is not practicable, the hours of work of any dominion government employee who at that date was working more than eight hours a day should be reduced to eight with a half holiday on Saturday. In October, 1941, the administration of the fair wages policy was transferred to the national war labour board, but in December, 1943, it was again made the responsibility of the Department of Labour.

The Technical Education Act was enacted in 1919 under the Conservative regime. Its provisions were based on the recommendations of the royal commission on technical education appointed in 1910 by the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The act provided for financial assistance to the provinces in promoting technical education for a period of ten years in order to enable them to lay the foundations of a system of technical education.

In 1924, a special committee of the House of Commons was appointed, on the motion of the Prime Minister, to make an inquiry into the need for old age pensions in Canada. At the legislative session of 1925, after correspondence with the provinces, the committee recommended the adoption of a system of old age pensions, the cost of which should be borne equally by the dominion and the provinces entering into agreements for that purpose.

A piece of legislation which for years was bitterly opposed by labour organizations was section 98 of the criminal code, which was enacted in 1919 following the hysteria of the Winnipeg strike. Its major purpose was to define and deal with "unlawful associations", but labour generally regarded it "as a threat to the civil liberty which Canadians have inherited as their birthright", and also looked upon it as "a curtailment of freedom of speech and assembly". Following representations made by labour bodies, the Liberal government, during the session of 1936, repealed this obnoxious legislation.

In 1937 the Old Age Pensions Act was amended to permit pensions to be paid to blind persons over forty years of age. The act makes provision for pensions not to exceed $240 a year to British subjects, or widows who were British subjects before their marriage, who are at least seventy years of age, who have resided in Canada for the twenty years immediately preceding, and in the province concerned for five years preceding, the date on which it is proposed to commence the pension payments, and who are not in receipt of annual income of as much as $365. This legislation has contributed considerably to the lessening of the fear of persons who were blind of becoming destitute, and so helps to assure their future well-being.

The Government Annuities Act enacted in 1908 is administered by the Minister of Labour. An annuity may be purchased by any person resident in Canada. The amount of yearly income may be as low as $10 or as high as $1,200. The cost of the annuity varies with the age of the applicant at the time of purchase and at the time the annuity is to begin, the amount of annuity desired, and whether it is to be payable for a fixed number of years or for life. These government annuities have been purchased by people who are thrifty, hard-working and conscientious. I wonder what the effect would be if we in Canada evolved some inflationary method whereby the value of these annuities, earned with so much hard work, would be reduced—how far these yearly incomes would go.

Mr. BURTON: That is why we do not want the price of machinery increased.

Mr. BROWN: Well, my hon. friend got that in last night. I think if he is as conscientious about the price of machinery as he is about interrupting, he can readily find the answer to that difficulty.

The Home Improvement Loans Guarantee Act, 1927, permitted the government to guarantee against loss, lending institutions which are approved by the government and which make loans up to a maximum of $2,000 on a single property or $1,000 for each family where more than one family lives on the property, plus $1,000. The government's liability is limited to fifteen per cent of the total amount of loans made by the institution, and may not exceed in all $7,500,000. The Home Improvement Loans Guarantee Act has contributed in my own constituency to the assistance of labour, by providing work and income for a large number of tradesmen.

In 1938 the Shop Cards Registration Act was passed to protect union "shop cards" as union labels were protected by the Trade Mark and Design Act of 1927.

Another enactment of 1938 was the National Housing Act.

In 1939 the criminal code was amended by the insertion of section 502A, which makes it a criminal offence for an employer to dismiss or refuse to employ a worker for the sole reason he is a member of a trade union or to seek by intimidation or otherwise to prevent an employee from belonging to a trade union. Another enactment of 1939 was the Youth Training Act, which was in effect until March 31, 1943, and under which the dominion government assisted the provinces in carrying out approved schemes for the training of unemployed young persons. The war emergency training programme grew out of the youth training programme.

The Unemployment Insurance Act was passed in 1940, after the British North America Act had been amended to give the dominion parliament jurisdiction in this field. In 1943 the act was amended, the most important change being the removal of the income limit or insurability for persons paid by the piece, hour, day or week, and its extension from $2,000 to $2,400 per year in the case of other employed persons. The possibility of extending the act to various excepted employments is at present under consideration.

In 1942 the Reinstatement in Civil Employment Act was passed, replacing an order in council of June, 1941. The Vocational Training Coordination Act was also passed in 1942, to provide for the continuance and development of training already being carried on under the war emergency training and youth training programmes, and also for the training of persons discharged from the armed forces and persons whom the unemployment insurance commission has directed to attend a course of training as provided by the Unemployment Insurance Act.

In 1943, in addition to the amendments I have mentioned in the Unemployment Insurance Act, the National Physical Fitness Act was passed, and an order in council was passed providing a special war supplement for old age and blind pensioners.

In addition to the foregoing, there were statutes for the relief of unemployment, the National Employment Commission Act, 1936, the Youth Training Act, 1939, the National Housing Act, 1938, and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940.

An act of 1939 to amend the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act, 1933, provided for compensation to employees deprived of employment or required to take lower-paid employment by reason of cooperative measures by the two railways to effect economy. In 1942 were passed the Vocational Training Coordination Act and the Reinstatement in Civil Employment Act.

The first action by the government to provide for as little interruption as possible in war industries as a result of labour disputes was to extend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, November 7, 1939, to war industries, including industries producing goods essential to the community. A formal declaration of principles for the avoidance of industrial unrest was made by order in council in June, 1940. This "government labour policy" declared the right to freedom of association and urged the making of collective agreements by employers and employed as well as the observance of reasonable wages and hours.

To speed up the settlement of disputes, which were unusually numerous owing to the particular stage which labour organization had reached in Canada, an order in council of June 6, 1941 (P.C. 4020) provided that before a board was appointed under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, an industrial disputes inquiry commission could be appointed to try to settle the difference and, if not successful, to report whether it was desirable to set up a board.

On September 16, 1941, by P.C. 7307, a strike which would hinder the efficient prosecution of the war was made illegal after a board, under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, had reported, until a vote by the employees concerned was taken under the supervision of the Department of Labour and a majority had voted in favour of a strike. Special provision was made to permit the employees of crown companies to join trade unions and to enter into collective agreements with their employers. These orders in council will be suspended, so far as they are inconsistent with the new war-time labour relations regulations, by those regulations.

When the Ontario high court upheld the conviction of a picket under the defence of Canada regulations prohibiting loitering near protected premises, an amendment was made in the regulations to safeguard the right to picket. Labour-management committees, formed to increase production by joint effort, have been encouraged, first by an interdepartmental committee set up a year ago, and now by the industrial production cooperation board, established in January, 1944.

Wages control policy is administered by the national and regional war labour boards, on which employers and labour are represented equally. The cost of living bonus was payable from the time the policy was introduced —October 1941—until the end of 1943, and was designed to protect the basic standard of living. Under the wages control order, 1943, the bonus is to be incorporated in the wage rates but: (a) the Prime Minister has given an undertaking that if the index rises by more than three per cent and remains at that level for more than two consecutive months, the entire stabilization programme will be reconsidered; (b) what was formerly a bonus subject to decrease with a fall in the cost of living is now a ten cent increase in basic rates; (c) the increase in basic rates will be reflected in an increase in overtime rates. As a result of awards of the board, 600,000 workers now receive holidays with pay who did not receive them before the stabilization policy was introduced. Average earnings in the eight leading Canadian industries increased from $26.37 in October, 1941, the month in which the wage control was introduced, to $31.59 in December, 1943—an increase of $5.22 or almost twenty per cent, as compared with an increase of slightly more than three per cent in the cost of living during the same period.

In May, 1941, the minimum rates payable for work on government contracts for the manufacture of supplies were raised from 20 cents per hour for women and 30 cents for men to 25 cents and 35 cents.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but he has already spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. G. S. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): In rising to support the amendment of my leader I wish to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, certain matters and conditions which affect the farmer in the part of Ontario in which I reside. The county of Hastings and the county of Peterborough are two very fine agricultural districts. They are ideally suited for mixed farming. Hastings county not only produces more cheese than any other county in the province, but also produces the finest cheese. These factories are located at many points throughout the county, and in addition there are many creameries, a large number of cattle and hogs are produced, as well as a fair number of sheep, poultry and large quantities of honey and maple syrup, small fruits and vegetables being also produced and sold.

During the war years the farmers in these two counties made a wonderful contribution to our war effort. The farm supplied a very large number of young men for the armed forces of Canada, and this immediately created a shortage of farm labour. In these counties, as in all other rural counties, many young men and women left the farm to work in industry, which further complicated the labour situation. Yet, despite this great shortage of labour on the farm, the farmers of these counties, in many instances with the assistance of only their wives and children of school age, were able to increase greatly the production of farm products which were so essential during the war years. These farmers carried on without the proper help. In many cases they were unable to replace worn-out machinery. Often it was almost impossible to obtain the necessary farm machinery repairs. Such aids as tractors, milking machines and other mechanized machinery used on the farm, which would greatly assist where there was a shortage of labour, were not available.

It is true that during the war years there were some slight increases in the price of farm products. This was due largely to the payment of subsidies, just as the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Ilsley) announced a few moments ago that there will be a further subsidy on certain classes of milk. Yet while farm products increased slightly, everything that the farmer had to buy in order to operate his farm or live has increased enormously in price. No one can deny to-day that the cost of living has increased from fifty to a hundred per cent, in spite of what the bureau of statistics may say. All one has to do is to ask any mother who had to feed and clothe a family during the war years; none of them will agree that the increase in the cost of living is as shown by the bureau of statistics.

The farmer was obliged to pay greatly increased labour costs. The price of gasoline was higher. The feed which practically every farmer has to buy at some time or other costs him much more, and any material he bought, such as lumber, shingles or hardware, to take care of the necessary repairs or additions, was much higher in price. The cost of skilled labour was at least double. If he had to hire a tractor, a threshing outfit or anything of that nature he had to pay the increased price. Yet, as I said before, despite all the hardships and handicaps the farmer and his wife—and in many cases she was his only help—did a splendid job in producing the required food for the men in the armed forces and the civilian population.

We find that to-day conditions have not changed or improved very much. Skilled labour is still scarce, and the wages are still high. It is quite true that it is now easier to purchase farm machinery. For the first time farmers are able to take delivery of farm machinery; yet the increase of 12½ per cent does not help the farmer much. If, as pointed out by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance, the farm machinery companies were entitled to this increase, surely he should have gone a little farther and made out a case to show that the farmer was entitled to an increase in the return for his products.

It appears to me that one of the real causes of the low price of farm products to-day is that when the price ceiling was set in 1941 during the so-called basic period, the price of all farm products was very low, which was most unfair to the farmer.

In my county and district the production of cheese in 1945 and 1946 will be away down from previous years. The production of butter is also much less. The hog population has been most seriously reduced. One of the reasons for this is that the farmer is simply reducing his herd of live stock to the point where he can operate the farm alone; for he is no longer able to pay the high wages demanded by farm labourers, if the farm labour were available.

In the matter of income tax we find that in the rural districts the farmer is hounded and worried by the district income tax inspector. During the war in industry a wife who was employed in war work was allowed an extra $660, thereby making a total exemption of $1,860 for a married man. This did not apply to the farmer, whose wife and children were often the only help that he had available. I submit that the time is long past when some change should have been made in the income tax allowances to the end that the individual farmer might be given some extra allowances for the work performed on the farm by his wife and children.

I should like to point out that on the return filed by the farmer there is a heading under the list of receipts which reads:

> Miscellaneous sales: . . . cordwood and pulpwood; posts and lumber; trees, saplings, et cetera; sand, gravel and stone; soil . . .

I cannot understand how anyone, even an income tax official, could take the view that the sale of cordwood, pulpwood, posts, lumber, trees, saplings, sand, gravel, stone and soil can be regarded as income. Surely the sale of these articles from the farm should be regarded as capital. Surely in the lifetime of the average farmer he is not going to get a second crop. If he sells his cordwood and his lumber he is depreciating the value of his farm property or the woodlot by the amount he receives for it. If he sells the soil, the sand, the gravel and the stone, he will never have another crop. I believe that even an income tax official would have to admit that any gravel or sandpit will become exhausted in time.

Another item which appears on the farmers income tax return is: "Produce raised on farm and consumed in the farm home." This item has always been a contentious one with the farmer, because, as everyone will realize, the amount of produce raised and consumed on the farm to-day is much less than it was in years gone by. Yet when they come to deal with the district income tax inspector they find that following his usual autocratic procedure he places this figure at an arbitrary amount for each member of the family, and the farmers pay accordingly. I would point out further that so far as the income tax return of the farmer is concerned he is not allowed any depreciation whatever at the present time for breeding stock.

The small number of returned veterans who are taking advantage of the Veterans Land Act shows that to-day farming has small attraction for them. The number taking up farms is small when compared with the number of veterans who are taking small holdings. While we are on this subject I should like to say to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) that many veterans complain most bitterly about the long delay and the endless red tape in the district offices in regard to applications under the Veterans Land Act. I have some personal knowledge of that, because I have a number of them in my office, and it certainly takes a very long time to get anywhere with them.

In Ontario the provincial hydro electric system is being extended into many new rural areas, so that for the first time the farmer and his wife will have the benefits of cheap hydro electric power. While the farmer has his buildings, including his house, wired for electricity, he finds that he has to pay the most excessive costs for every type of electrical equipment. Let us, for example, look at the price of an electric stove, which is undoubtedly a necessity, not a luxury. After all, an electric stove is only a few pieces of cheap metal covered with enamel and equipped with elements. Yet when the farmer buys one of those stoves he finds that at the very minimum the price is from $250 to $350. The same ratio applies in respect of practically every other type of electrical equipment the farmer has to purchase.

There is one further point I should like to bring out. It seems to me that the activities of the wartime prices and trade board, which operates through its inspectors a type of gestapo throughout the country, checking up on the activities of every small butcher, and producers of every kind, are not doing anything to increase the production of food. In my section of the country we have inspectors from local offices, inspectors from the head office at Brockville, and on very special occasions we are favoured by the presence of inspectors from Ottawa. Not only do they check the stores, but they check the coupons when they go to the banks. Many people have told me recently that they have received letters from the head office at Brockville asking for information about the sale of a gallon of syrup, a pail of honey, or perhaps a small quantity of butter. I say in all frankness that the activities of these men, whom I can describe only as gestapo agents, are not relished by the people in the rural districts. They serve only to drive the people into the black market. Certainly they are not such as to encourage the people to cooperate, or to accept willingly these idiotic regulations.

For a number of months in the village of Madoc, in which I reside, we had only one slaughtering permit, owing to the fact that the wartime prices and trade board permit had to be sent to the Belleville office. For a period of more than two months there was no slaughtering permit in that village, with the result that with the exception of some small amounts of pork in the form of bacon and tenderloin received from the packing plants, there was no pork for sale. Despite the fact that the local butcher every second or third day was in touch with the wartime prices and trade board by telephone, or even held interviews with them, nothing could be done.

One unfortunate farmer who sold a pig to the local butcher was dragged down by the gestapo and, with the butcher, landed in court. Only yesterday in that same village the wartime prices and trade board conducted five prosecutions. One of them was against a man who conducts a butcher and grocery business. During the war that man and his wife struggled in every way to hold the business together for their two sons who were serving in the armed forces. But yesterday that man appeared in the police court, charged by the gestapo agents of the wartime prices and trade board because his coupons did not balance. I doubt if anyone conducting a retail business can make his meat, butter, or sugar coupons balance. And it is of special interest that the solicitor who appeared in court yesterday as special prosecutor for the wartime prices and trade board was one of those gutless individuals who obtained exemption from military service in the first great war because of his being a conscientious objector. The sooner the officials who operate the wartime prices and trade board realize they are only antagonizing the public and driving people into the black market, the better it will be for everyone concerned.

[Mr. G. S. White.]

It is interesting to note how these officials operate when they descend upon a small village. Generally they move in groups of two or three, depending upon the kind of business they are about to investigate. Then, as in the army, before they descend upon the victim they synchronize their watches and, at a given moment, inspectors walk into each of the butcher shops, or whatever they are investigating, treating the people as they would treat criminals.

These inspectors are running all over the country at the public expense. Unfortunately their activities generally end in the laying of charges. Returns made in this chamber will show the cost of legal fees in connection with the prosecutions, and it is clear that those fees eat up practically the whole of the fines imposed.

It seems unreasonable that the farmer should be asked to continue to bear more than his fair share of the government's stabilization policy. He did so cheerfully during the war, but to-day he simply refuses to continue. After all, the average farmer who spends a lifetime on his farm leaves very little at the time of his death. After practising law for about twenty-five years in the country I have first-hand knowledge as to what the average farmer leaves. In many instances, where farmers and their families have struggled throughout their lives, it is pitiful to see the small amounts in their estates left for their widows.

In conclusion may I say that I intend to support the amendment moved by my leader

Mr. W. D. WYLIE (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, such a variety of subjects has been discussed in the debate that one would think there might be nothing left to discuss, and that therefore one must necessarily cover the same ground. However, coming from an agricultural constituency, I find I must say a few words.

There is general dissatisfaction among most of the farmers out west—at least that is the way I find it in my own constituency. They want stabilized prices to compare favourably with the prices of the articles they must buy. The greatest trouble to-day is that the prices of the commodities the farmers have to sell are almost stationary, while those of commodities they must buy are advancing almost every day. We had a good illustration of that recently in the increase of 12½ per cent in the price of farm machinery, coming at a time when most of the farmers are in the market for new machinery. During the war they were unable to buy the machinery they required, and had the old ones patched up.

Quantities of hay-wire the farmers had accumulated in the bad years were used for that purpose.

Along with the increased machinery prices went an increase in the price of gasoline. I think I am right when I say that the price of everything the farmers have to buy is going up, including machinery, fuel oil, and lumber. Besides, the lumber is of inferior quality; it is wet and hardly fit for use. The farmer must pay increased prices for his clothing and most of the groceries he has to buy. Naturally in view of these conditions there are many complaints.

We have heard a good deal about the production of grains and live stock going down. This is true of my area. In 1942 we had an average yield of fourteen bushels to the acre, which is a good average for the drought areas of southern Alberta. If they had that yield in the northern part of the province they would consider it more or less of a failure, but we are not used to high yields in the south. The fall of 1942 was quite wet and a considerable amount of grain spoiled. It was combined when it was damp; the farmers, not being able to dispose of the grain under the wheat quota system, had to put it in bins, and some of it was partly heated. Of course that could be used only to feed live stock, and therefore the farmers went into the production of hogs. Many farmers in my area who had never had a hog on their farms went quite heavily into hog raising, many of them having as many as two hundred hogs. As soon as the 1942 crop had been fed or disposed of, they entered again into the dry years. 1943 and 1944 were poor years, but 1945 was poorer still, and the farmers found themselves with no feed. I think this accounts largely for the reduction in the production of hogs in my area. We know that in other areas where feed was available the farmers have gone out of the production of hogs because of the increased prices brought about by the subsidies on barley and oats, there being very little wheat fed to hogs. The 1945 production of grains and all live stock, both hogs and cattle, was down. I should like to read a newspaper clipping under date of November 1, 1945, in which the Minister of Agriculture is reported as follows:

> Agriculture minister Gardiner announced yesterday that under provisions of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act the 1945 crop year has been declared an emergency year and assistance will be given farmers whose crops have suffered from drouth and other causes.
> He said more than 3,000 townships in the eastern half of Alberta and the western half of Saskatchewan had suffered from the severest drouth since 1937. Without aid under the P.F.A. "thousands of farmers otherwise would be unable to carry on" until the next crop was harvested.
> Since the act was passed in 1939 the only crop year which has not been declared an emergency year was that of 1942-43.
> Assistance payments under this act derived from a fund to which each farmer contributes one per cent of the amount he receives on grain sales each year. These contributions to date have constituted more than one-third of the assistance payments made since the act came into force and the remainder was provided by funds from the treasury of Canada.

This shows that production was down over a very wide area. In those 3,000 or more townships the average yield of wheat was less than four bushels per acre. When the yield is below four bushels there is not much to cut, but the farmers go out with their combines to save what they can. Many farmers got only enough for seed.

What I have said makes it clear that we should press for irrigation in this area. In comparison with the low production in these areas during the last three years I would refer hon. members to what happened on a tract of land 250 acres in extent along the South Saskatchewan river which has been under the control of the dominion government for about three years. A press report reads:

> The dominion government will profit this year by about $39,000 through the Golden Valley farm, a 250-acre tract near Medicine Hat, operated by the Medicine Hat internment camp. German prisoners of war interned at the camp provide all the labour for the farm. Products from the vegetable farm—the largest in Alberta—go to military establishments in the province through the district supply office of military district No. 13.

This shows what can be done when water is pumped on the land or there is an irrigation system. That farm was operated with the help of German prisoners of war, and it is really worth seeing. The same applies to the Lethbridge area, where sugar beets and other crops are raised. I often think that the farmers around Medicine Hat have more courage than anyone else, because they will continue to put in a crop year after year and pray for rain which never comes. It is a "next year" country. Every spring they go out and put in a crop which usually comes up nice and green. But quite often, as occurred this spring, we have dust storms almost every other day and thousands of acres of grain are ruined. But the farmers always hope that they will have a crop, until along about the first part of July the hot chinook winds come along and the temperature will run to about one hundred in the shade for a number of weeks without cooling off at nights. Then the farmers must sit back and watch their crops wither and dry up.

When you get into the irrigated areas it is entirely different. Last year in the Taber-Lethbridge area they harvested 362,000 tons of sugar beets from which the farmers received a good income. I should like to read another press report published in Lethbridge on April 10, 1946, as follows:

A second subsequent sugar beet payment, amounting to nearly $100,000 now is in the mails for more than 1,300 farmers who raised sugar beets in southern Alberta last year. The payment represents 25 cents a ton on the 1945 production of 362,000 tons, and brings returns to growers on their 1945 beets to $8.80 so far. The growers received an initial payment of $8 and a first subsequent payment of 55 cents a ton late last year.

The farmers in that area are prosperous. When they sow a crop they have something to harvest.

The cattle producers in my area are more or less dissatisfied. There is a price ceiling, of course, in the butcher shops, but the farmer who takes in his stock may receive 12 dollars one day and 11 dollars the next day. These fluctuations are bad for the farmers. I want to read a letter that I received from a large rancher in my district. He runs about 1,500 head of cattle. He grows very little grain—only enough for feed. This is what he says in his letter:

It is hard to convince those fellows down there that there is anything important west of the great lakes.

There is no doubt we are headed for real trouble in the cattle business. I can never understand the big fluctuations in the price of live cattle when there is a definite ceiling and floor on the beef. The consumer never gets it any cheaper, whatever the price of live cattle might be.

Another very interesting sidelight on the markets this year, at least to me, was the prices paid for ranch cattle. Most of the ranch steers I know of sold from 11·50 to 12 dollars weighed at the ranch. This means 50 to 75 cents a hundred more than on the market as it costs about that to put them on the market. My own steers sold for 11·75 at home. At that time choice steers in Winnipeg were quoted at 11 dollars. While I was very pleased to get $1.50 over the market I couldn't see any reason for it, unless the packers wanted to keep us quiet as we are the only organized producers that seem to object very strongly to the way the market is handled.

He belongs to the Western Stockgrowers association and to the Short Grass association, so in that way they are organized. The ranchers, of course, received a better price for their cattle. That may be due to the fact that they raise larger numbers, and on the average they may have a better class of cattle. The writer of this letter has 1,500 head of well-bred Hereford cattle; every one of them is white-faced. We have other large ranchers in that country, one running 3,500 head of cattle and another about 4,000. These cattlemen will tell you that they have made money during the war, but they suffered plenty in the bad years before the war from low prices.

It was amusing to me the other night to hear the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott) discussing the prices paid under different governments. He quoted the prices paid in 1929 when the Liberal government was in power and the prices paid in the nineteen thirties when the Conservative government was in power, but he failed to mention what the present government paid for cattle in the fall of 1937 in their dominion cattle-buying scheme. One cent a pound is what was paid for cattle at that time, when the present government was in power. The price of hogs was down too; everything was down. I was out on that scheme along with dominion buyers, and I know what it was. I spent about a month with them going from one town to another organizing the buying days and taking applications from farmers to sell cattle. So, after all, the present government's record in the matter of prices is not good. I know it is the habit for a member to praise or condemn the government according to which side he supports, and he does not present the whole case.

I also heard the hon. member for Maple Creek (Mr. McCuaig) mention the price of wheat in the spring of 1938. He was speaking of the price of seed wheat supplied by the wheat board to the farmers in the drought area. I had a large part in that work as provincial inspector in the area from which I come. I issued 52,000 bushels of seed wheat on relief at $1.48 a bushel to farmers in that area. That fall, when the farmers went to sell their wheat, it was down to 50 cents a bushel. That is why farmers want stabilized prices. They have had all they want of a speculative market. The farmers have paid back these seed grain accounts, and that says a lot for the farmers. I had the pleasure of collecting most of that money, and the farmers had the pleasure of being able to pay it back. It is true that many objections were made to having to pay back at the rate of three bushels for every one bushel they received, but that is the nature of the farmers in that drought area.

We hear a lot of complaints from farmers about the income tax. While it is true that a large number of farmers in that area have not a large enough income to pay income tax, there are many others who do pay income tax, and they feel that the exemptions are not high enough, and rightly so; I agree with them on that. We should do what we can to raise the income tax exemptions not only for the farmers but for the workers as well. The man who has been really hard hit by the income tax is the man on straight salary, as I was myself when I was working for the provincial government. We had no opportunity of chiselling, if I might use the word. We received our cheques every month with ninety per cent of the tax deducted, and if the tax had not been deducted at the source I am sure it would have been impossible for many of us to pay the income tax at the end of the year. The farmers are in exactly the same plight. They want the income tax exemptions raised, and they should be raised.

Prairie farm assistance has been a big help to many of those farmers. It has been their main means of livelihood in the last three years. If it had not been for that, many of them would have been forced on relief. So when they come out and fight for stabilized prices I feel they are fighting for something they should have. Stabilized prices must bear some relation to what the farmer has to pay for the things he buys.

Mr. LIGUORI LACOMBE (Laval-Two Mountains): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words concerning the question now under debate. In recompense for the period of sacrifice through which they lived during the war, the farmers are entitled to enjoy all possible protection and assistance from the government. Prices of agricultural products must be maintained at a reasonable level, and the cost of farm implements must not be increased in the most difficult times which are experienced by the farming community and, indeed, by every class of the Canadian people. If you increase the price of farm implements you necessarily raise the cost of production, and the fullest agricultural production is essential to the salvation of the world at this decisive moment. By every possible means, and particularly by expanding production and extending markets, the government must help the farmer. I wish to point out that it is quite impossible for the average farmer to make out income tax reports, and at the last session I asked the government to appoint accountants to help him. This would be in the public interest, as well as in the interest of the government.

(Translation): Mr. Chairman, I know my people's needs and am against the maintenance, in peace-time, of a dictatorship established during the war. The duly elected representatives of the people have been supplanted, in Canada, by a bureaucracy. Such a dictatorship paralyses activities in every sphere of our national life.

We are resorting to the very totalitarian methods which Canada has fought to the limit of her resources. A parliament elected to serve rather than enslave the people has had to yield its supremacy to commissions enjoying unrestricted power, although not responsible to the people. State paternalism is being established permanently and forever within the intricate machinery of government. Canada, with its planned economy, is progressing towards socialism. Our government is continually resorting to controls. Free enterprise and trade are being jeopardized by the anti-social attitude of a powerful clique of bureaucrats, while our civilian population greatly lacks life's very essentials. Farmers cannot secure agricultural implements without which they are unable to cultivate their land. The government has just abolished the consumers' milk subsidy, and yet milk is surely not considered a luxury. It is indispensable to every child's growth and health. The very shortage of food and other goods would seem to justify controls. And yet controls are the best means of increasing the scarcity of foodstuffs and industrial products. Due to a controlled and misdirected economy almost four hundred thousand persons are now unemployed in Canada. And in this upheaval of this country's social and economic security, the government seems to ignore the prerogatives and the jurisdiction of the provinces.

I alluded a moment ago to the increase in the prices of farm machinery. It would be interesting to recall the words uttered in this House on May 2, 1938, by the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), which are found on page 2429 of Hansard:

> Agriculture, which is the greatest primary industry in Canada, refuses to be bled any longer by half a dozen manufacturing plants which give as their only real reason the fact that they are employing 4,159 men.
> We as a farming population have thousands upon thousands from Halifax to Vancouver and Victoria, and those thousands upon thousands should not be called upon to pay enhanced prices for farm machinery.

Why this sudden about-face, at a time when agricultural production should be intensified everywhere? European and Asiatic countries are in the throes of famine. They beg America to come to their assistance. The increase in farming implement prices will intensify the severe food shortage affecting the whole universe. This crisis, attributable to a policy lacking in foresight, will not be abated by discussions in conference. Canada and the world are dying of conferences and inaction. The producing countries, whether of America, Europe or Asia, should stop deliberating and start acting and launching a complete programme of agricultural production. Controls work to the advantage of black market racketeers. Consider what has happened in Canada and abroad. The people are shamefully exploited by a band of crooks, who are the shady agents of business and industry. Our countrymen must pay the highest prices for the necessities of life. One might claim that there are no farming implements. I say that is untrue. Ask those who have them how they endeavoured to secure them. Is increasing the price of implements of production a reasonable method of solving the food problem? We know that the most powerful nations are waging a tremendous battle for securing the agricultural and industrial markets of the world. There is much more petty interest than international charity in the background of the discussions of those sociology, trade, industry and diplomacy experts. Canada also has her experts. There was a time when she had famous ones. Not long ago, those agricultural geniuses prevailed upon the government to pay to the western farmers four dollars per acre provided they did not produce wheat. We need a comprehensive programme of agricultural and industrial production. The controls which bear heavily on the farmers and workers should be abolished. The time has come when normal life should be resumed and the administration of this country should be taken away from bureaucracy. Foreign countries which waste their energies in civil wars should at last think of tilling the soil in order to feed themselves. Is it reasonable that peace-loving countries should continue to be providers of food for those who spend their time killing one another immediately after the most frightful war the world has ever seen? The time has come for the united nations to put a stop to a situation that is both tragic and ridiculous. They have the necessary authority to deal once for all with such a situation, which the advocates of false doctrines and subversive ideas are interested in perpetuating. In conclusion, I wish to sum up my opinion as follows: Let us proclaim peace; let us resume a normal life and set in motion the machinery of Canada's agricultural, industrial and economic life.

(Text):

Mr. J. O. PROBE (Regina City): I believe that to most hon. members in this house the subject in debate this afternoon is a good deal more important than whether some machinery cartel is to get an extra 12½ per cent from its customers as a result of the government's action of some five or six weeks ago. There is no question that, as far as the Liberal side of the house is concerned, the defeat of the amendment and the subamendment is an acceptance of the government's action in the whole field of price structure and is, in other words, a motion of confidence in the track along which the government is now guiding the people of Canada.

To the Conservatives to my right, if we accept the amendment of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) it will mean that we are prepared to extend the high-priced patches that have developed here and there in the Canadian economic structure. Finally, of course, within a very short time we shall let the flood-gates of inflation open wide, and we shall in the economic field return to the law of the jungle which, after the last war, proved so successful for the people who had the materials to take advantage of the power given them.

To the members in this group, Mr. Speaker, the acceptance of the subamendment as proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle means that the government is prepared to withstand firmly all attacks on our domestic price structure and that, while it is withstanding the attempts of interested groups to inflate prices, it will at the same time do something to repair, more or less scientifically, I hope, the haphazard weaknesses that have already developed in that price structure.

I simply wish to remind the house of the subamendment as it stands:

> This house is of the opinion that the government's policies of permitting recent unjustifiable increases in the prices of farm machinery and of steel have resulted in imposing on food producers and workers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

The effect of the Tory amendment, as I said, was to demand the removal of all price ceilings, whether on lumber, farm products, labour, milk, machinery and through the whole list and this is in keeping with their concept of free enterprise and the theory that economic might is right. I do not think there is any equivocation about that position.

The leader of the opposition did argue, and he advocated, that this amendment would for the moment give a price benefit to the farmer who still has some produce to sell; but in the race that would take place, of rising prices for the manufacturer, the farmer would lag behind, as he did under the Tory spiral following the first world war, and the organized worker and the professional groups would come along a miserable third in any race of that sort, while the pensioners and those who have small fixed incomes would, as always, be carried along on a stretcher.

Under free enterprise unfettered, the economic spoils always go to the man who has the strength to take advantage and to be ruthless in exploiting the advantage that he has. The

C.C.F. group reaffirm a consistent belief—and I think it is shared by other corners of the house, though rarely expressed, unfortunately—that the lion's share of the national income under capitalism can go only to those in the strongly entrenched positions, and that price controls must be retained, strengthened and readjusted scientifically from time to time so that the primary producer, the secondary producer, the worker, whether in office, field or factory, the pensioner and the helpless may all share on more equal terms the fruit of the national effort.

The duty of a civilized government, as I see it, is so to legislate by majority decision that the acts of its parliament serve the best interests of all its citizens and protect those members of the state who are unable to protect themselves. Any act of government is fundamentally wrong if it puts any individual or group in a position less fortunate than that of any other individual or group. For a short time, and only by pressure of war needs and in a few imperfect aspects, the government of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) caught this moral value that I speak of, of planning in accord with the social philosophy of the C.C.F. It did institute a system of war-time price and wage controls, but because the Liberals do not believe sincerely in the fundamental or lasting value of such a system the policy was only a partial approach to the problem.

To the Liberal government the price control system is good only in the crisis of war when national survival is at stake, but it is useless in every-day crises where the existence of a decent livelihood for the Canadian family is at stake. The profit-first idea is clearly exemplified in the statement made by the Minister of Finance on April 15, as reported in Hansard at page 853, when he told this house why he had to agree with the 12½ per cent price rise on farm machinery. Apparently he consulted only with the machine companies. He accepted their figures and arguments. I could not imagine the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) accepting without additional check such a submission on the part of the workingman in whose interests he says he acts so impartially.

The Minister of Finance accepted the machine companies' statement that the labour cost of making machinery has risen by 28½ per cent since 1941, that materials have risen by 20 per cent and general overhead by 23 per cent. The parliamentary assistant did make what I think is a superficial report to the house on the increased costs on May 15. At any rate it is reported at page 1552 of Hansard. In the main the parliamentary assistant's declaration to this house is based on the interested company's evidence before the wartime prices and trade board. In the words of the Minister of Finance the increase was not given on the score that it would keep the poor companies from bankruptcy. No; in their present strong financial position they would have had a job to argue to a government who first thought the proper way to aid production last fall was to throw off the 20 per cent excess profits tax burden that crushed that initiative which private enterprise was credited with having. No such argument was needed. The argument, in the words of the minister, was that the machine companies deemed it desirable to regain their 1941 profit percentage margin, and that a mere 12½ per cent price rise meant a serious profit squeeze for industry.

History has a habit of repeating itself. In April, 1937, the agriculture committee, appointed by the Liberal government to report on high machine prices, found that the machine companies had too high a mark-up on their wares, and that their pressure for price increases was unwarranted, and that since the profits on replacement parts were excessive the price of these to the consumer should be reduced. At about the same time the Saskatchewan government, also Liberal, made substantially the same report as did the committee at Ottawa. Yet despite these public recommendations the machine cartel in recent years has kept jacking up its sales price until the following figures now apply. In 1936 there was a price increase of 4·4 per cent on machinery. In 1937 there was a further increase of 7·8 per cent. Some time between 1937 and 1941 there must apparently have been an additional increase if the figures stated in this house by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance on May 15 were correct.

I wish to put on Hansard a list of prices for four or five of the implements mentioned by the hon. member for Victoria, British Columbia (Mr. Mayhew) the other day, with the figures for 1936. The retail prices in the southern part of my province, and the prices without the freight added for 1941 and 1946, according to the hon. member for Victoria, British Columbia, are as follows: On an eight-foot binder the Assiniboia price in 1936 was $290. This figure is taken from a little volume which was compiled in 1937 by the agricultural farm implement prices committee. In 1941, according to the parliamentary assistant to the minister, the same binder, or approximately the same binder, without freight from the factory to the prairies had risen to $340.50.

The machine companies have now received the blessing of the wartime prices and trade board to jack that price up to $383.05. I shall now give the comparable figures in all three of these columns. First of all the twenty double disc drill: in 1936 the price at Assiniboia was $261; in 1941 it was $320.75, and in 1946, $360.85. The five-foot mower was $121 in 1936, and $118 in 1941. There is a drop there, by the way, between 1936 and 1941. I do not know just how to explain that. They are making plenty of hay now. In 1946 the price was $132.75. I now come to the eight and a half one-way disc. In 1936 the price was $326; in 1941, $358.75, and in 1946, $403.60. The manure spreader was $200 in 1936, $221 in 1941, and $248.65 in 1946.

In the last ten years there has been, as there has been throughout the duration of the business lifetime of all these companies, a consistent set of prices, generally in an upward direction, with no relationship whatever to the economic conditions that prevailed at the time. I enjoyed reading the remarks of the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny), particularly where he said that the Minister of Finance was taking great pains to push down the price of machinery upwards, or something to that effect, which is an anomaly that we are getting used to here. That is the experience in this house. The machine companies have literally snapped their fingers at the Liberal government, not only in 1937 but in 1938 and 1941, and they will do so again at will. Why should they not?

The figures produced before the 1937 committee showed that when an eight-foot Massey-Harris binder was selling at Regina at $280, the total factory cost was $128.29, made up as follows: labour $13.50; materials $89.52, and overhead, $25.27. Then they allowed $40 commission to the dealer. That is about three times the amount that the men in the factory who worked on the job of production received. The freight to Regina was $38.22. As a result of all this, the profit to the Massey-Harris company, using their own figures, was a meagre 57 per cent on the factory cost of the binder. If we use the figures provided by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance, some time between 1937 and 1941 the price was raised to $340.50 without the freight. At this stage the wartime prices and trade board stepped in and called a halt. Prices were frozen in 1941. They froze the price on the poor companies, but in April of this year, with the farmers frantic to buy anything they could get hold of, with selling costs cut—on the admission of the parliamentary assistant to the minister the other night, the selling costs to the company were cut forty per cent—the Minister of Finance is gullible enough to accept the companies' hard-luck tale—if he does accept it—that since labour costs are up 28½ per cent, since material costs are up 20 per cent, and since general overhead, whatever that is, is up 23 per cent, they must have a price increase so that they may regain their 1941 profit percentage.

Mr. ILSLEY: No. I made it clear that the board did not let them regain anything like their 1941 percentage. I made it clear that the board did not accept the application of the companies. They were cut away down.

Mr. PROBE: As I remember the minister's statement, he told the house at that time that the companies wanted an increase of 30 per cent in their price structure in order that they might break even on a 1941 profit level. Then the minister proceeded to explain that he had sternly held them down to a mere 12½ per cent, so that they are not quite going to make their 1941 profit margin.

Mr. ILSLEY: They are going to fall far short of it.

Mr. PROBE: I will try to indicate what I think they are getting. Of course I may be all wet in what I am about to say, but at least I am using statistics furnished in the house and out of it by official groups. However, I shall come to that point a little later.

Last session when I heard the minister argue that the government could not allow farmers' wives to be considered as employees, for income tax purposes, and when he rejected the plea from this group to use $1,000 and $2,000 as the exempted amount for salaried income tax payers, I was sure—and I still think it privately—that the minister was a hard-hearted gatherer of revenue.

When the government rejected the plea of the Saskatchewan farmers to have the seed grain advance from Ottawa in 1938 written down as a partial gift from Canada to tide those of us in the prairie provinces over a series of catastrophes that only the prairie breed can take—drought, grasshoppers, low prices, hail and rust—

An hon. MEMBER: And Liberals.

Mr. PROBE: Yes, and Liberals, for years.

Mr. JOHNSTON: The hon. member is naming the pests.

Mr. PROBE:—and when almost three years after the war began the cabinet rejected the prairie plea for dollar wheat made by a delegation of 400 farmers on parliament hill; when now federal funds are so low that the Minister of Finance is prepared to take the milk bottles out of the mouths of workmen's and veterans' babies rather than maintain the two-cent per quart subsidy; when labour pressure to get a greater share of the national income is grudgingly accepted by the war labour boards after strategic delays running into months and years, for we are told that inflation always comes when industry must pay the man who toils a few miserable cents more, but never to be blamed on less production; when the government cannot match provincial grants toward old age pensions; when the Liberals are happy to let the grain farmer carry the whole load of selling cheap wheat to starving millions and to the Canadian public as well—when I see all these evidences of an iron will in the Department of Finance, if I were not a socialist and, by virtue of that fact, too expert in the ways of capitalistic economics, I should rest assured that the Minister of Finance would put up a pretty stiff fight against any inroads upon price ceilings. I should be naive enough to believe that the minister would not accept as gospel any representations of a capitalist group whose interests lie in wrecking a controlled price structure by any means.

But even though the Liberals behind the Minister of Finance must have felt uncomfortable when he accepted the price increase on what I consider flimsy data at this time, to capitalists, including my hon. friends to the right, his actions would appear much more logical. The Tories must have shouted with glee, because it made their amendment for complete price control removal a natural sequence, which even the Liberals, if they wish to be consistent, must support.

The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Cleaver) delivered a most excellent speech the other evening dealing with the subject matter of price control.

Mr. ILSLEY: Does the hon. member take the position that from now on and for a considerable period there should never be any lifting of price ceilings whatsoever?

Mr. PROBE: Those of us in this group believe in a stabilized price structure, and we believe that when changes are made they should be made after some scientific perusal of the entire economic structure of the country.

Mr. ILSLEY: So they are.

Mr. PROBE: So that if that is so, there must be something wrong with—

Mr. MACKENZIE: Your thinking.

Mr. PROBE: —the statistics on which the Minister of Finance operates.

I was going to state that the other evening the hon. member for Halton referred to certain figures with which I cannot agree. He remarked that the incomes of farmers had increased to a relatively high point in the period 1939-46, and made the further statement that there were 1,717,000 employees receiving an average weekly wage of $29.85. The hon. member implied, in a sense, that these workers were receiving fairly generous treatment, as were the farmers. But then the hon. member stopped in his argument, right where he should have started, because right in this country we have more than farmers and more than labourers. We find in Canada all the economic groups which must be considered in any discussion of price structure. That is the quarrel I have with the stand taken by the Liberal government.

I wrote a letter to the bureau of statistics asking for the number of people gainfully employed in mining, forestry, fishing, agriculture, manufacturing, construction and so on, running through the list of industrial activities in the country. I also tried to get the value of the production under each of these various headings, so that I might have some way of satisfying myself with respect to the relative incomes of the various groups, according to numerical relationships. If the Minister of Finance did something like that, and then proceeded to examine these figures and rearrange the price structure so as to give some increase to the group which is obviously suffering from economic deficiency, then I could agree wholeheartedly with him in that scientific approach.

But, to begin with, the bureau of statistics could not give me relative figures because, as they pointed out, they had not yet been able to break down the national income series into industrial groups. To be scientific in this matter, I believe the minister should have that information. Let it be understood that I wish to give him credit for sincerity. But if this statement is correct, he has not sufficient statistical information at his command; or, if he has it, certainly we cannot get it when we wish to make comparisons with respect to the job he is doing.

Mr. ILSLEY: What is the scientific principle the hon. member is advocating. Is it the equalization of income of all Canadians?

Mr. PROBE: No. I would not suggest that the Minister of Finance for his enormous efforts should receive the same salary that I, a humble C.C.F. member on the opposition benches, should receive. I did not mean that.

I mean that if there is a group in a preferred position so far as income is concerned—from the dividend statements I am sure the machine companies are—and that group comes to the Minister of Finance and asks him so to regulate the wartime prices and trade board that they can jack up their prices another 12½ per cent, the minister should be in a position by the use of those figures to say, 'No, in the national interest we cannot accede to your request." If a group of laundresses present a plea that there be some relaxation in their prices the minister, by an examination of the facts, should be able to decide whether they are entitled to some price adjustment.

Mr. ILSLEY: Is the economic standing of the applicant material if the question arises as to whether he has to produce at a loss or not? Does the hon. gentleman take the position that the board should require people to produce at a loss if they are wealthy enough?

Mr. PROBE: If I were the Minister of Finance the first thing I would say to Massey-Harris and the Case company is, "Get those factories producing first, and then we will take up the question of your price structure and the allowances to which you claim you are entitled."

Mr. ILSLEY: I am not entitled to answers to my questions, so I shall not press them.

Mr. PROBE: Before the Minister of Finance got me sidetracked temporarily I was going to say that the hon. member for Halton had given a partial analysis of the improved position of the farmer and labour, but I think he fell short by not giving the improved positions of other industrial and occupational groups in this country. I do not think he could have done that because of the manner in which our statistical information is set up. Some change should be made in the statistical summaries so that we can get that readily. I should like to quote what the hon. member said as reported at page 1564 of Hansard:

> I concede . . . it is possible that considerations were extended to some small groups of labour which were too generous . . .

In other words, they are being too well paid. Further down on the same page he said:

> I think that, compared with the total national income and with the taxes of all the groups in Canada to-day, agriculture is getting a proper proportionate share of the total as far as it is possible for any human being to bring this about.

[Mr. Probe.]

That is the way in which one sincere member on the other side of the house talks about price control—it is not possible. As I said, the Minister of Finance should give the house some figures of the net incomes of various groups in this country. He should also give the numbers in each group that are gainfully occupied, so that we could see if there is any justification for the suspicion in the minds of hon. members on this side that the machine companies are getting more than fair treatment. We would then have an opportunity to revise our estimate of their place in the economic picture or be publicly castigated by the government for the position we have taken.

It is time that there was brought out into the open the net income of labour and professional men. Fishermen were mentioned yesterday by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Winters), who suggested that the C.C.F. amendment did not refer specifically to fishermen as food producers. I take exception to that. There is no suggestion that fishermen are producing anything but food, except those fishermen in the house who are producing red herrings. We should have more information as to the income of distributors as well as the returns on invested money as compared with the returns received by others. While I do not believe in the omnipotence of money, we still must use money as a yardstick. I realize that the Tories have been sick so long that they are like the lion who has come to full maturity, who is old and mangy but who still roars every once in a while, believing that by virtue of that roar he still has mastery over all other creatures.

Before I conclude I should like to give the minister one small set of figures. Based upon the 1936 cost of farm machinery, which is the only official figure I can get, the labour cost of a binder selling in Saskatchewan for $280 was $13.50. Accepting the plea of the machine companies to the minister that they have had to increase wages by 28½ per cent and allowing that increase in full, the labour cost would be only $17.28.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is just the direct labour cost. The other materials are filled with labour costs and factory overhead is filled with labour costs.

Mr. PROBE: I have those figures. The material cost of that binder was given as $89.52, and if this cost is increased by 20 per cent, which was suggested by the machine companies as the increase required, the present 1946 cost would be $107.42. The overhead cost was given as $25.27, and allowing a 20 per cent increase there would make it $31.03. In other words, the factory cost in 1936 was $128.29, but on the basis of the figures I have given it would now be $155.73.

Mr. ILSLEY: Surely the hon. member should not compare the 1936 figures with those for 1946. The increases that I gave were from 1941 to 1946.

Mr. PROBE: That is hedging on the part of the government, because in 1937 those prices were considered to be too high. They were raised 4½ per cent; they were raised 7½ per cent; then there was another increase which I could not determine exactly because I had only the figures given by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance. At any rate, the western price had gone up from $280 with freight to Regina, to $383.05 without freight. That is an increase of $100 plus whatever the freight is from the factory to the prairie in those ten years.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to have to inform the hon. gentleman that he has spoken for more than forty minutes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Time.

Mr. PROBE: I thought I would take only five minutes more but the Minister of Finance has taken about fifteen minutes of my time.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member has unanimous consent.

Mr. PROBE: I will try to be brief.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. PROBE: The Minister of Finance agrees with us that there was no great increase in the wage structure between 1936 and 1941. From then on there was an upward adjustment of 28 per cent in the price of labour and an increase in overhead of 23 per cent, which should be offset against a reduction in selling costs of 40 per cent, which was admitted by the parliamentary assistant; and there should be a further offset of 20 per cent because of the excess profits tax allowed to these companies. A bogey is being made of increased labour costs, and I am trying to show by the statistics of the government itself that the labour costs on this $383 machine are $17 odd. Any figures that you can produce—and I have gathered a lot of them—never show labour costs on farm machinery at any stage as amounting to more than 8 per cent of the ultimate cost. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum) gave to this house the other day the highest figure I have heard of labour costs in the manufacture of a binder, as compared with the official figures in the United States and Canada, which are roughly five per cent. When wages go up we have inflation. But when machine prices go up we have a price adjustment. That is the philosophy on the other side of the house, and that is the philosophy to which I take violent exception.

Mr. R. N. JUTRAS (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively to what the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Probe) had to say. I was pleased to hear his first statement, that the question before the house to-day is a very broad one indeed and takes in a lot more than just the motion before the house and the amendment. He stated specifically that anybody who voted against the motion or against the amendment voted against the principle of controls as they are applied to-day. So that the motion before the house is distinctly a motion of non-confidence in the present administration. It is in that aspect that I view the amendment moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken).

As I said, this question is a very broad one. It did not start last week. It is a storm that has been growing over a long time. There has been constant pressure on the government to remove the controls. There came to my mind, when considering this question, a speech that I had read some time ago by Mr. Burton, president of the Robert Simpson Company Limited, who I think was the first responsible man to start the ball rolling. In a famous speech which attracted a great deal of attention in this country he specifically and clearly stated:

> Now that the war is over, controls over wages and prices are no longer needed nor are they in the public interest.

The ball started from there more or less. Later on, many of the larger companies in this country followed suit. I have here a circular letter of the Searle Grain Company Limited on price regulation in which it is clearly stated:

> When commodities become scarce, prices rise, and so curtail consumption and tend to induce greater production, which is what is needed to restore the balance or equilibrium. When commodities become too plentiful or in excess of demand, then prices fall and so tend to induce greater consumption, which in turn automatically tends to clear away surpluses, and to reduce production, all of which helps to restore a better balance between supply and demand. Freely moving prices, therefore, as registered on open commodity markets, tend to regulate the economic activities of man in quite a successful way on the average, and in a manner that tends to ensure the proper quantity of production of any commodity needed by the people, and that amount of consumption required to clear away surpluses. No governmental method of planning, or of "fixed" price, has ever been able for long to accomplish these important functions.

I have given these quotations to show the pressure that has been put on the government lately to remove controls. Later on, the Progressive Conservative party in convention ratified that principle. Shortly afterwards the leader of the opposition made a speech in which he announced that he was fully behind the removal of price control and now finally we have this motion of non-confidence in the government, which is the first shot fired to blow away the ceiling in this country. The position, therefore, of the government and of the official opposition in this house is quite clear, and cannot be mistaken. I know that hon. gentlemen opposite are sincere in their belief. They do not believe in controls.

I must admit that the removal of controls frightens me dreadfully, because I still have in mind the dreadful consequences of the period of inflation that followed the first great war. If we were to remove the ceilings on all farm products it would not be long before we would have no controls at all in Canada. I think everybody realizes that if we were to remove controls on the primary products of agriculture, the major industry of this country, all ceilings and all controls would go sooner or later. So that if the decision has to be made, it must be made now. Coming from Manitoba as I do, I am quite satisfied that if the controls were removed to-day the small progress which our farmers have been able to make in the last decade would certainly be lost, and they would slide back to where they were in the inflationary period after the last war. Surely we have not forgotten the experience of the past. I have here an editorial from the Winnipeg Free Press, by Grant Dexter, dated April 19, 1941, which reviews the picture so far as prices after the first great war are concerned. I quote:

> Cash wheat prices on May 11 and 12, 1917 (No. 1 northern) stood at $3 a bushel. Control came Sept. 12, and $2.12 was paid for the 1917 crop, $2.29½ on 1918 crop, and $2.63 on 1919 crop. After control was lifted, cash wheat went to $2.85 before the crash in prices began. Barley reached $1.68; oats, 93 cents, flax seed, $4.80 (It had been $6), hay, $40 per ton, cattle, 16 cents on the hoof, hogs, $23.74 per hundredweight. Butter was selling at 75 cents per pound; eggs topped $1.25 per dozen; sugar, 30 cents per pound; potatoes, $2.60 per bag; fresh ham, 46 cents per pound; fresh bacon, 47½ cents; cured ham, 50½ cents; cured bacon, 58½ cents.
> Returned soldiers found that the bonus paid on their discharge from the army did little more than buy them a civilian outfit.
> Food prices might seem good for the farmers. But on the contrary, the farmers declared that the prices they were receiving were ruinously low. Middlemen, they said, were reaping fortunes. Their costs of production had risen enormously.
> The wave of industrial unrest reached heights never equalled before or since . . . The One Big Union movement flared up rapidly. The Winnipeg strike made many people think the country was ripe for revolution. The inflation ran its course to the inevitable and equally disastrous collapse.

This is the story as it stood after the last war; and surely we cannot close our eyes to the realities of the present time. There is nothing that can lead us to believe that the situation is any different this time. The worst of the inflation after the last war did not come, nor did the necessity for control come actually during the period of the war, but in the period immediately following the war. So I maintain that it is definitely the responsibility of this government to face the storm and put up a fight to maintain stability in this country.

As far as I am concerned, there is no question of doubt as to where I stand on this issue, and I think I am right in assuming that it is pretty well the position of all western members, at least on this side of the house. This attitude of the west is quite clearly defined, at least in my province, in the newspapers. I think I may quote again from the Winnipeg Free Press, because there is an editorial here which puts the picture of controls quite well. I quote from the issue of that newspaper of May 17 an editorial entitled, "The need for controls":

> If there is one thing very clear, it is that the government is moving as well as it can toward the abolition of controls. It is also clear that certainly the particular set of bureaucrats involved in this problem are all very eager to wind up their jobs. Meanwhile, however, they have to hang on. . .
> Too great haste in taking off the controls would inevitably result in the defeat of the major objective sought by the price and wage policy of the government. We have emerged from the war stronger and more stable in our economic structure than any other major belligerent. We have kept so well on balance that, if we can but exercise continued skill and patience, we will be able to escape many of the ills and dangers that beset us on all sides.
> The wartime prices and trade board is effecting what might be called a fighting retreat, holding each line up to the point where the rising flood of supplies makes further control unnecessary. In attempting this difficult manoeuvre it is obvious that mistakes will be made and that injustices will arise. This is inevitable.
> But the over-all gain to Canada of maintaining the controls is far greater than any of the vexatious mishaps which take place from time to time. The pressure to remove the controls is very great. It comes, to too great an extent, from politiciains who seek an easy platform success, by wanton utterance. They appeal to the narrow interests of the group they happen to be addressing and thereby neglect the national interest. In war time, greatly to the nation's credit, such appeals were ignored. They are far more dangerous to-day when the inspiration and discipline of war have vanished or grown stale. A further effort is needed.

Some might say that this is the opinion of a newspaper which, is on the whole, considered favourable to the government. But I have here another clipping, from the editorial page of the Winnipeg Tribune, and the stand of that newspaper on this issue is also quite clear. I quote from the Tribune of May 7, 1946:

Perhaps Canadian efforts toward holding down living costs are best appreciated when compared with those made in the United States. Price control was introduced in that country later than in the dominion. Moreover, the office of price administration, the United States equivalent of the wartime prices and trade board, has not met with the same measure of government or public support accorded the wartime prices and trade board in Canada. In fact, O.P.A's very existence was threatened recently in congress.

The following table compiled by the Windsor Star and quoted in an editorial by the Edmonton Journal is indicative. Windsor and Detroit, just across the river from each other, offer an excellent opportunity for comparison of the two countries' successes or failures in battling rising living costs. Here is the table of comparisons of current costs of every-day items in the two centres:

Soft drinks: Windsor, 7 cents; Detroit, 10-15 cents.

Hamburgers, hot dogs: Windsor, 10 cents; Detroit, 21 cents.

Telephone, two-party full service: Windsor, $2.85 per month; Detroit, $5-$6 per month.

Electricity, average for family of four: Windsor, $5-$6 for two months; Detroit, $16-$24 for two months.

Haircuts: Windsor, 50 cents; Detroit, 75 cents to $1.

Shave: Windsor, 25 cents; Detroit, 50-60 cents.

Downtown movie: Windsor, 45-85 cents; Detroit, 85 cents.

Two persons on evening out (one drink each, dinner, movie, coffee, doughnuts, bus fare): Windsor, $3.47; Detroit, $9.10.

Butter: Windsor, 42 cents to 44 cents; Detroit, 56 cents to 60 cents.

And so on.

The difference in prices in the two cities should not lead to complacency on the part of Canadians. Greater pressures than ever before are threatening to break our price ceilings. Indeed, the greatest threat lies in the fact that the Canadian economy is bound up with that of the United States. It will be only with the greatest difficulty that our price structure is kept from going hog wild if American prices advance much more.

Price control is still a full-time job for Canadians.

To complete the record I will read from the Winnipeg News, which reflects, I believe, the labour side of the story, because this release is entitled "Winnipeg News on labour view of prices board policy." It reports resolutions adopted by 1,600 labour liaison representatives, representing approximately 600,000 trade unionists across Canada. Here is the report:

General approval of wartime prices and trade board policies and suggestions that the board should only remove controls from articles in good supply and that the present standards division of the board be continued as a permanent part of government organization was voiced in a five-point resolution passed by over thirty labour liaison officers to the board's consumer branch, at a conference held Wednesday night in the board offices.

Included in the five-point resolution are these statements:

1. The wartime prices and trade board has done a creditable job in controlling prices, rationing and other phases of its work.
2. The W.P.T.B. has been the medium which has saved citizens of Canada, particularly labour men and women, millions of dollars by preventing inflation.

I will not take the time of the house to read the other items of the resolution, but I may say that they are along the same line, and prove that these liaison officers of the labour movement certainly recognize the great benefits of the wartime prices and trade board to this country, and more specifically, I would say, in its application to western Canada, because I hold that we are much more vulnerable from this point of view.

I do not think there is any question as to the stand of the western people at the present time. Everyone remembers quite well the heavy burden left on the shoulders of the people of the prairies by the inflation that took place after the last war, and such inflation is probably more damaging in connection with farm land in the prairies. I am thinking now of all the young people and middle-aged persons as well who left the prairies during the war to go and work in the factories in the east as well as on the coast. Statistics prove that there was an exodus from the prairie provinces during the war, and it is my contention that those people will come back to the prairies. Surely, therefore, if any more inflation is allowed at the present time, they will not have a ghost of a chance of settling in the prairies, and even if they did try to buy land at any higher prices than those charged at the present time they would have no chance of succeeding. Therefore, in the interests of the economy of the west, it is absolutely essential, I would say, that controls remain clamped on.

Another factor to be considered is the Veterans Land Act. No doubt a large number of young veterans will settle on land in the prairies. Statistics reveal that so far there have not been very many, but we must remember that the war ended not long ago, and as a matter of fact I know that the applications have been far too many for what the department has been able to cope with. I am quite satisfied that there are a good many veterans who are getting an education which they could not afford in the thirties, and as soon as their knowledge has improved and they have obtained education they will try to settle on the land in greater numbers. We should not do anything to make it impossible for them to settle on the land; we should at least leave the opportunity open.

When we mention the land settlement act, I perforce am compelled to think of the success or otherwise of the soldier settlement board—because it is wise to look back. Of course the two cannot be compared, since one is a great improvement on the other; but though that act may not have been all that it should have been, the main reason why the Soldier Settlement Act did fail—and certainly it failed in my constituency and province—was that prices were inflated when those veterans tried to settle on the land. The picture of this enterprise is certainly far from being a bright one. In fact, it is very gloomy, more particularly, for one reason, or another, in Manitoba.

Even to-day, however, in spite of the fact that prosperity in the west is quite relative, there is a marked tendency for land to go up in price. I am not going to quote figures, although I have them for the various provinces, comparing 1939 with 1944 and 1945. They are most conservative, and they show an increase in Canada, from 1939 to 1945, of 20 per cent. In its interpretation of the figures, however, the bureau of statistics say that they are very conservative and that it seems likely that these estimates understate the gains that have actually occurred in Canada.

I remember an article which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press and in the Tribune putting the rise in the cost of land up to 50 per cent. So that if we take the middle course between the two, there is no question that there has been an increase in price in farm land in the west; and that if controls were removed, land would undoubtedly soar in price, and this would not be to the advantage of the people living in the west or of those who wish to become reestablished in the prairies.

At this stage I wish to commend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) and I also wish to give all the encouragement I can to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) to hold the line down, whatever the cost. I commend the Minister of Agriculture for embarking a few years ago on the policy of giving, not exceedingly high prices but stabilized prices, even to the point of sacrificing high prices for stability. The farmers and all other people in the west are one class, because everyone depends upon the main industry of agriculture, and everyone to-day sees the wisdom of having stabilized agriculture in the prairies. I am sure we got that impression in this house when bill No. 5 was being discussed. It was apparent from those who spoke on that bill—those members from the west—that they did not want to be left to the speculation of a few but wanted the income of the farmer put on a stablized basis even to the point of being controlled, whether in connection with the wheat board or the wartime prices and trade board.

There is an absolute necessity to enforce these controls if we wish to have a stabilized economy in the west. It is the only way, because we have tried other means. Apparently it is the only way by which we can be relatively prosperous in the country.

When I speak of controls, I do not mean that we must maintain controls indefinitely, because that has not been the policy of the government, and as time goes on they can be relaxed when possible. Of course I am not in a position to judge exactly the time or the item. That is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance. He is a capable man and he has shown that he can do a good job. I am satisfied to leave the responsibility to him, because I know he will look after the interests of the Canadian people, and that includes my people.

After all, in this world we have to put our confidence in somebody or something and I am content to put my confidence in the efforts of the Minister of Finance. The Prime Minister, in explaining the policy of the government on price and wage control, on January 31, 1946, made the position of the government quite clear. I quote two short passages so that the government's attitude may appear on the record.

> In moving toward the period when price control is no longer necessary, the government believes that subsidy payments should continue to be kept to a minimum and eliminated as promptly as is feasible. There is a great deal of difference between a gradual and planned policy of adjustment to post-war conditions, which may involve some modest increase in prices, and a policy of rapid removal of anti-inflation controls. The objective of the government's policy is to continue to protect the people of Canada from a sharp upswing in prices and living costs, and from the inevitable aftermath of deflation, unemployment and distress. Its purpose is to protect the value of wages and war-time savings. It is aimed to help to open larger markets both at home and abroad, and thus hasten progress toward the high level of peacetime production and employment which is our leading economic objective. With the intelligent support of the Canadian people Canada's anti-inflation programme will achieve its aim. It will bring our country through the most destructive war in history and its aftermath without the economic and social disruption which have been the sorry heritage of past conflicts.

The duty of the government is quite clear. If one looks back at what the government has done so far he will see that it is just a bare and simple implementing of what it said it would do. I realize that controls in themselves are not popular. Somebody has to take the responsibility of maintaining them. I repeat, it is the responsibility of the government, and I hope that they will have the courage to stand by it.

I should like to give a brief picture of the position of agriculture in the three western provinces, and try to indicate how they appear under a controlled economy such as we have had in the last few years. I hold in my hand a report issued by the dominion mortgage and investment association. This association is made up of thirty of the large mortgage and investment companies in Canada. It comprises most of the sum total of the mortgages which are held by the farmers of the three western provinces. I shall quote the first part which gives a picture of the conditions existing in the last year. This is the report for 1945 and reads as follows:

Farmers in the three prairie provinces reduced their mortgage and agreement for sale debts by 26 per cent in 1945. This estimate is based on the experience of thirty life insurance, trust and loan companies which have a substantial investment in farm mortgages and agreements for sale in the prairie provinces. The farms which are security for these mortgages are located in all sections of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Thus the experience of these companies can be taken as representative of that of all farm mortgage investors in western Canada.

As was to be expected, payments of mortgage principal and interest by farmers in the prairie provinces were lower in 1945 than in 1944. This would have been the case even if farm cash income had not declined since the total amount owing at the beginning of 1945 was substantially less than at the beginning of 1944.

In view of the reduction which occurred in farm cash income, payments of principal and interest were maintained at a high level. Farm cash income for the three prairie provinces dropped from $1,033 million in 1944 to $847 million in 1945, a reduction of $186 million, or 18 per cent. Principal and interest payments as a percentage of the total amount owing were greater in 1945 than in any previous year with the exception of 1944.

The total amount owing to the thirty companies by farmers in the three prairie provinces on farm mortgages and agreements for sale declined 26·1 per cent in 1945. The reduction in the amount owing by Manitoba farmers was 25·4 per cent; by Saskatchewan farmers, 25·6 per cent; and by Alberta farmers, 28 per cent. The reduction in the amount owing since the end of 1937 is remarkable. It is doubtful if any other group in Canada has been as successful in reducing their liabilities during the past eight years as have the farmers of the prairie provinces. The total amount owing on mortgages and agreements for sale by farmers in the prairie provinces is now considerably less than half what it was at the end of 1937—the percentage reduction being 60 per cent. In Manitoba, the decrease since the end of 1937 is 67 per cent; in Saskatchewan, 57 per cent, and in Alberta 65 per cent.

These large decreases have been achieved by thousands of farmers reducing substantially the amount they owe by way of farm mortgages and agreements for sale and by thousands of others paying off their mortgages entirely. During the past eight years the number of farmers in the prairie provinces who own their farms entirely free of debt has increased very materially.

At the end of 1945 there were 6,339 fewer farmers in debt to these thirty companies by way of mortgages and agreements for sale than at the end of 1944. As compared with the end of 1937, the reduction in the number of farmers in debt to these thirty companies is 27,671, or more than fifty per cent.

The annual report of this association for 1943 made reference to the estimate of total farm debt in the three prairie provinces made by Professor W. J. Waines of the university of Manitoba for the royal commission on dominion-provincial relations. He estimated total farm debt in Manitoba at $108·7 million, $432·5 million in Saskatchewan, and $265·1 million in Alberta, a total of $806·3 million. Since it is a well established fact that farmers use increased income to liquidate current indebtedness before applying it to long-term indebtedness such as mortgage debt, it is a reasonable assumption that total farm debt in the prairie provinces has declined just as fast as mortgage debt. It would appear, therefore, that total farm debt in the prairie provinces has declined by more than $450 million in the past eight years.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

SUPPLY

PRICE CEILING POLICIES WITH RESPECT TO FARM PRODUCTS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mackenzie that the house go into committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mrs. Strum.

Mr. JUTRAS: Mr. Speaker, before six o'clock I had just dealt with the report of the various loan companies in the west, showing what had been accomplished in western Canada over the last seven years. I want to say immediately that hon. members should not jump to conclusions. While it is true that I did mention that the picture was much brighter in the west than it was before, I merely pointed out that farmers had paid 50 per cent of their indebtedness over the last seven years. That implies that they are still 50 per cent in debt. They are in the process of digging themselves out of the hole at the present time. But we must remember that agriculture has gone through a period of debt and disaster. I hasten to point out that this achievement of the last seven years has not been accomplished by taking trips to California, or by playing bridge, or even by reading Hansard during the winter months on the prairies, as was suggested by some hon. members. It has been accomplished through toil and sweat, by their own hands, while their sons and daughters were fighting the war overseas.

It does not mean, either, that they are making large profits at the present time. As a matter of fact they are making very small profits. But it is mostly the fact that there is a small profit in all the various aspects of agriculture which accounts for the picture I have drawn. To my mind it is a case of a little here and a little there.

In my view it is time the Canadian people revised their thinking so far as agriculture is concerned. There are too many city people who think of prices of agricultural products in terms of prices during the depression. At the present time, because it has been said that the price of milk will be twelve cents in the city, a wave of protest has arisen in some cities. I suggest that the people of Canada are getting the very best of food, and so far as milk is concerned they are getting a much improved product. I do not consider twelve cents a quart is too much or too high a price to pay for such a good product. Too many people forget that to-day milk has to be pasteurized and homogenized. It must be delivered in sterilized containers; it must come from T.B.-tested cows. It must be subjected to quick cooling after milking, because of the factor of acidity. Then there is a deduction made from the price if it does not reach 3·5 per cent butterfat. It must be delivered to the door—and delivered before breakfast, in the wee, small hours of the morning. So that when one compares milk with soft drinks, with tea and coffee or with fruit juices, or with any of the various food products, including luxury beverages, I do not think the price of milk is too high.

While I am not offering this as a case in point, I must maintain that too many people in the cities are thinking in terms of prices they paid in the years of depression. At that time farmers were generous enough to give away their product because they could not keep it and could not sell it. So they just made a gift of it to the people. Those conditions are, we hope, gone. Had I the time I would deal with this matter more fully. However, I trust I shall have another opportunity to do so.

At the present time I wish to deal briefly with the C.C.F. amendment. I know that in that party there are a few competent farmer members who are sincere in their convictions. However, it would appear from the amendment presented to the house that in that group they are but a small minority. I wish to give full credit to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum), who moved the amendment to the amendment, for her sincerity in doing so. I admit the sincerity of the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), who seconded the motion, but I would point out that the diversion of opinion between the two differs just as greatly as the diversion of opinion between any of the parties in this house. No doubt the hon. member for Cape Breton South appealed to the motherly instincts of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle in order to have her add the word "workers" and gather under the protection of her wing all the people of Canada. But be it as it may, it would appear that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle in wording her amendment in that way serves one purpose only, that is, to confuse the issue. I ask: What burden does an increase in prices of farm implements impose upon the workers of Canada? It is just a case of, "he is getting it, we want it too." It is simply a demonstration that within the ranks of the C.C.F., labour is the dominating factor.

Just before the six o'clock recess the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Probe) was pointing out that the C.C.F. party were unanimous about the question of controls. I should like to refer briefly to what the seconder had to say about the great concern he had over controls.

In connection with the cost of living he said, as reported at page 1557 of Hansard:

> There is also a difference in the cost of living; I realize that, but it is not equal to the differential in the income of the workers. I do not care how high the cost of living goes.

Here is what he had to say about inflation, a matter about which I feel very deeply:

> There is a whole lot of the bogey man in this business of inflation. I am not very much afraid of it.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman but he has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. COLDWELL: Let him finish.

Mr. JUTRAS: I shall take only a few minutes.

Mr. SPEAKER: Has the hon. member unanimous consent?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. JUTRAS: Here is what the hon. member had to say about controls:

> This business of waving that flag of inflation is overdone. A little inflation is good, if it does not get away from you. If you mean your price controls, when you get the thing where you want it and control it forever I do not think you will have any difficulty. But I do not believe you are controlling anything to-day; that is my opinion.

Then to show his concern over the increase in farm prices, he said this:

> Do not forget that about eighty or eighty-five per cent of the cash handled by the average small-salaried man or wage-earner in this country is spent on food, clothing and shelter, particularly on food. That does not include any luxuries. When you put the increase on a pound of butter and a pound of bacon, and on clothing, you are hitting him one hundred per cent.

> Flour is up twenty-four per cent; sugar is up thirty-two per cent; potatoes are up fifty per cent; tea and coffee are up thirty-one per cent. In fact everything is up but wages.

I am wondering whether he was asking for more wages or for a higher return for the farmer. He continues to speak on price controls as follows:

> The point I was going to make is this. As I said a moment ago, President Truman ordered an upward trend in wages in order that the people might have purchasing power, because if they cannot buy we are going to have unemployment. The trend in Canada is the reverse.

That shows the confidence the hon. member has in price controls. Then he goes on to say:

The farmer asks for increased prices. Fine; I agree with that. I believe those prices have to be stepped up. But when we increase the price of farm products we automatically increase the cost of living.

The hon. member had said just previously that he did not mind the cost of living going up, and he then goes on to refer to the industrial worker:

And that comes back to the industrial worker. If farm prices are going up, then in proportion to those increases in farm prices we have to increase the wage structure if we are to keep on an even keel. Unless this is done, the effect will be that of dumping an additional load on the shoulders of the small salaried worker.

I am sure that is not what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle had in mind in her amendment. Let me say in conclusion that if that represents the unanimous opinion of the C.C.F. towards agriculture, it is a pretty poor show indeed.

Hon. W. EARL ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) and I want to compliment him upon the excellent speech he has made. I noticed that he was careful not to get too close to the issue and further confuse the house. I observed that he mentioned chiefly the doughnuts that were served in Windsor and the cocktails that were served in Detroit, as well as many of the things that are not even produced in Provencher. Generally speaking, his remarks were in keeping with the policy of the government of the day.

This issue concerns more lives in the Dominion of Canada and throughout the world than perhaps any other issue that has been presented to this house this session. Everyone within sound of my voice as well as everyone in Canada knows that there is nothing more vital to maintaining the peace that we have achieved at such a great cost. When we realize the malnutrition that exists among the children of Europe to-day, when we realize the lack of housing for the boys who fought the battles overseas; when we realize the demand for consumer goods and the failure in production, then we know that we are face to face with a crisis in the affairs of this dominion, a crisis more concerned with production than any other crisis in our history.

I make no apology for speaking on this issue. You, Mr. Speaker, have been in this house almost as long as I, although you are many years younger. I think you will have observed how consistently I have supported a policy of greater production. I think you will recall as will the erstwhile leader of the party opposite, that some years ago I urged the government to stop its policy of non-production and get ready for the days of peace. You will recall, and I certainly recall having said that food would win the war and food would save the peace. That cry, which was uttered by many others on this side, fell on deaf ears.

I speak as a member of the party that is recognized in Canada to-day as being the farmers' party. We have not a farmer as our leader simply because he is a farmer; we have him as our leader because we represent the farmer's viewpoint in Canada. Food production is necessary in times of war, but it is no less vital in times of peace. Anyone who knows of the starving millions in the world to-day realizes that food is vital. We are receiving white cheese instead of butter; on Tuesdays and Fridays we cannot have meat; yet this is a great agricultural country. We begin to wonder what is wrong when we are told by former President Hoover and many others that millions will starve this coming winter. To my mind all other issues should be washed aside if we really live in an age when we believe in humanitarian principles. Should the unproven threat of inflation deter us in our efforts to meet this humanitarian need?

Mr. PROBE: Tell that to Massey-Harris.

Mr. ROWE: If I knew as little about Massey-Harris as the hon. member does I would not be saying much about it. I followed the remarks of my hon. friend this afternoon very carefully. He followed the negative motion of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. He wants to cut down the wages that the labouring man receives rather than increase his earnings so that we can have a higher standard of living among working men.

Everyone knows that there is a food shortage in this dominion. Everyone knows that there are millions starving. It is common gossip in the barber shop, in the blacksmith shop, in garages, in the country store and on the street corner. What did Mr. Bevin, the British foreign minister, say the other day, and by the way he represents a government not quite as socialistic as my hon. friends to my left, but one that wants to assist labour? Mr. Bevin said: "Nazism, socialism and communism will be wiped out if we can feed the world." He went on to say that farm prices may be low for a year or two, but remember that food is so essential that we had better let farm prices rise and let wages rise so that labour can buy its products. That was Mr. Bevin. It was not the Tories speaking, but that is what we believe in too. Mr. Bevin was followed by the Right Hon. Mr. Amery who, speaking before the United States chamber of commerce, said that we must have more agricultural production to supply the world food shortage at the present time and keep millions from starving. He said that Britain must produce more food, and that that increased production must be achieved despite competitive prices from outside Britain. So that I say to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) that price is a secondary matter. With millions starving in Europe, with little children suffering malnutrition, surely if we are living in a new age let us wake up, and do what the world is looking to us to do.

President Truman of the United States is also pleading for more production and as a sane American businessman how does he say that it can be achieved? By work, work, and more work. That was stated in yesterday's press. How are you going to get more work? I suggest to the Minister of Finance that if we are still living under the democratic principle of free enterprise we must give greater incentives to work and production. There is no other way unless we are going to revert to dictatorship and controls, and tell the people what they shall do and what they shall get for it.

Why have we so many strikes among labour to-day? Why are men not at work? Because they want more money. I am not disturbed by the jibes of those to my left or by the cackles of those farther down when they speak of our friendship for labour. I take second place to no man in my friendship for labour. Ask any man who works for me, and he will answer. The only way to get more work is to pay the workingman more money. We shall have more production when the workers can get a reasonable recompense for their efforts in whatever line of work they may follow.

We now come to the issue why are people starving overseas. Will the government tell me why the total bacon exports of this dominion have fallen over 30 per cent during the past year? Will the erstwhile leader of the government, who never produced anything in his life, tell me why our bacon exports have fallen? Will the Minister of Finance tell me? They both know the answer. Every man who has watched the developments knows the answer. Why were 250 million pounds less of live stock produced this year as compared with last year? I have farmed all my life. I belong to a family that has been farming for four generations, and maybe more, but I do not want to go too far back.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Better not.

Mr. ROWE: Why is our sheep production down in Canada by 13 per cent? Why is our poultry production down by 13 per cent? Is it because some controller here in Ottawa has said: We will raise prices to the farmer by 10 per cent, even though his costs of production have increased by 28 per cent? That is the reason, and nobody knows it better than the Minister of Finance.

Mr. ILSLEY: Your figures are wrong.

Mr. ROWE: Your figures are often not correct. But the figures I just gave were taken from your department. Will the minister tell me why in the first two months of this year the retail distribution of commodities has increased by 13 per cent and the wholesale distribution of commodities by 30 per cent when farm production has been falling? There must be something wrong with our economy when that is happening. It is all very well for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) to tell us that the farmers are so happy, but he said the other evening that the farmers were not satisfied because they were carrying the greater part of the burden of this new-fangled economy. Everyone knows that, and no one knows it better than the farmers themselves.

What has been the Liberal policy over the years with respect to agriculture, and what is their policy to-day? Nobody knows better than the Minister of Finance, who just interrupted me. I have watched him very closely in the House of Commons, and he is a fine, honourable gentleman, but I remember that on October 13, 1945, when bringing down his budget—and this proves that the farmer is the forgotten man by this government, that the farmers have been made the guinea-pig of a new experiment—the Minister of Finance said:

> The house will note that the sales tax is being removed from machinery and apparatus used in the manufacture or production of goods but not those used in distribution or in the rendering of services. The principle which we are endeavouring to follow is to remove the sales tax from the costs of those industries which bear sales tax on their products, including also those whose products have been deliberately exempted as in the case of food products. The sale tax will be imposed still on machinery and apparatus used in the distribution and in service industries on which no sales tax is levied.

The interpretation of the Department of National Revenue is based almost completely on two phases in the above speech, namely "directly in the manufacture or production of goods", and "not those used in distribution or in the rendering of services". Their ruling is that generating station equipment and step-up and step-down transformer stations are exempt, but that any material or equipment used in either transmission or distribution line construction must be classified as not used for manufacture or production, but for transportation or distribution.

What effect has that on the farmer? The Department of National Revenue has ruled that sales tax must apply on all materials used in the construction of power transmission, and distribution lines, such as poles, towers, insulators, conductors, cable and/or wire, hardware and fittings, are not regarded as machinery, apparatus or complete parts thereof and are therefore subject to sales tax. In Ontario the province contributes 50 per cent of the cost of rural lines, as a grant in aid to agriculture. Yet there are many members of the party opposite who claim that the government of Ontario and the party I represent are not favourable to agriculture. How do they reconcile that with the fact that the government gives 50 per cent of the cost of rural lines as a grant in aid to agriculture? The approximate cost per mile for these materials is $1,200, on which the dominion tax is $96. On the 1946 programme, calling for a construction of two thousand miles, approximately $200,000 will be required to pay the dominion sales tax, of which the province must pay half. This sales tax of $100 per mile of new line represents about a year's revenue from three average farms to pay the dominion levy on this service to the farmers. Remember, the Massey-Harris company does not have to pay that; these other manufacturers do not pay that; yet the dominion government collects $100 per mile as a levy against the farmers of Ontario, while the dominion government is contributing $1,200—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROWE: —I should say, while the Ontario government is contributing $1,200 per mile as a grant in aid to agriculture.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Your friends cheered the wrong thing.

Mr. ROWE: I don't think you have anything to cheer about. If you have, I should like to hear you cheer.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I won't cheer you.

Mr. ROWE: No, you don't very often. But what your government does very often is to collect heavy taxes—half a million dollars—from Ontario farmers; because it is the farmers who are the largest contributors in the rural districts to this federal taxation. It is to this government, which pretends to be the true champion of the farmers' cause, that the farmers of Ontario have to pay not only sales tax on all the equipment which is necessary to get energy to the farms, but sales tax on appliances purchased through the dealers, and war revenue tax on the energy used. Why does the farmer who uses energy for his chopper, his cutting box, his pump, and all along the line, including lights in his barn while he is working hours far longer than those which industrial workers have to work, also have to pay revenue on this energy and equipment when the manufacturer of his implements pays no revenue on transmission? It is clear-cut evidence of the fact that as far as the dominion government is concerned the farmer is the forgotten man; and he has been, for the last quarter of a century, as I shall proceed to show. It seems to me that the farmer deserves consideration and should be considered as a manufacturer of food products, to-day, when food products are so much more important than many other products which you cannot buy without a card from the war-time prices and trade board. I have watched with interest the record of this government. I have sat here in this house and listened for many years, for I have been here for some time—

An hon. MEMBER: Too long.

Mr. ROWE: My hon. friend says, "too long", but I was here before he was and I may be here after he is gone. Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, I have closely observed this government. They say they have fixed prices at what they thought was fair. There is not an hon. member sitting opposite to me who does not know that when they fixed the selling price of agricultural products, those prices were below parity. Will the Minister of Finance rise in his place and tell me that they were not below parity in 1941?

Mr. ILSLEY: Tell me what parity is.

Mr. ROWE: Well, I observe from past records that the minister does not know, so that I do not think I should try to tell him now. I know he always fixed them as at 1926—heaven only knows why. That is why I ask him to rise now and tell us what they are.

Mr. MACKENZIE: You should answer the question.

Mr. ROWE: Taking the government at their word that 1926 prices represent parity, let me point out that they fixed the ceiling price in 1941 on agricultural products at 80 per cent of what other prices were. If the minister does not know that let him ask some of those wise-eyed statisticians and economists he has in his department.

Mr. ILSLEY: You are wrong again. But go on.

Mr. ROWE: Well, you have been wrong often. If I am wrong I will sit down and let you correct me. Mr. Speaker I suppose silence gives consent. Evidently the Minister of Finance and I stand on common ground. But the farmers' share of the national income is a fair example of government policies. Will the Minister of Finance, or my congenial friend, the leader of the house for a while—in fact, I wish he were leading it all the time, for it would not be any worse led; it is only half-led, anyway—

Mr. MACKENZIE: It is never mis-led from this side.

Mr. ROWE: —will either of these hon. gentlemen rise and tell me to-night that farmers' costs between 1914 and 1918 were higher than they are now?

Mr. WARREN: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. ROWE: Certainly.

Mr. WARREN: Would the hon. member tell us about the prices of farm products between 1930 and 1935?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ROWE: Oh, yes, I am coming to that. I am not going to be disturbed by the gibes of back-benchers who do not take much interest in the party along the front that control the country. The hon. member's question has no bearing on the matter in issue, but I shall deal with it in a few minutes, and I hope he will follow me. I will show him the record of his party.

An hon. MEMBER: You were here.

Mr. ROWE: Yes, I was here; you were not. There is not an hon. member who does not know how farm costs stood between 1914 and 1918. The hon. member who interrupted me when I was speaking of the costs of agricultural implements, and the Minister of Finance, who also interrupted me a couple of times, will not deny, what everyone who has bought farm implements knows, that they were lower between 1914 and 1918, and I know very well that farm costs were not as high in those years as they have been since. But during those years the party which I have the honour to represent was in power, the Union government.

Mr. MACKENZIE: What name?

Mr. ROWE: It had the best of your party.

Mr. MACKENZIE: What name?

Mr. ROWE: It was called the Union government; it took the best of your party and left the rest over there. It did a good job; it won the war; it had the courage to go to the country on war issues and decide them as war issues.

Mr. MACKENZIE: And it has changed its name six times since.

Mr. ROWE: A fool never changes; a wise man sometimes does. But in those years, between 1914 and 1918, the Canadian farmer received $1,534 million for the wheat he produced. Twenty-five years afterwards, while my hon. friends are boasting about how much was obtained by industrial production, while they boasted about the growth of the country —and in twenty-five years one would expect some growth in a young country—we find that agriculture has all along been left in the lurch. Even after a quarter of a century, while industrial production has multiplied many times, and standards of living should have been increased, what did the farmer receive in the first four years of this war? He received $1,125 million, or more than $400 million less than the Canadian farmers received from 1914 to 1918, when the world was not as short of food as it is to-day. In those years he received for wheat exported a total of $1,059 million; from 1939 to 1943 he received only $818 million. For a quarter of a century we have had these gibes about inflation and the high prices of years gone by; yet we find that twenty-five years ago, under the party to which I belong, the farmers received $400,000,000 more for what they produced while the country received $200,000,000 more for what was exported, and the world was not then crying for food as it is to-day. I said $200,000,000; actually it was $240,000,000. I make that correction so that the Minister of Finance will not have to correct me. He thought the $200,000,000 was wrong, but I can tell him that the $240,000,000 is right.

Mr. ILSLEY: I am not going to try to check you.

Mr. ROWE: I know you will not bother checking it, but look at it to-morrow in Hansard, with your statisticians. I am not disturbed by the smiles of the Minister of Finance; in fact there is no man in the House of Commons I would rather see smile. Would anyone suggest that the farmers' costs were not lower during the first four years of the first war than during the first four years of the last war? Where were these champions of the interests of the farmers? The other night some hon. members opposite lectured those on this side of the house who, they said, were not farmers. Even the Minister of Agriculture wanted to know why so many people talked so much about agriculture when they knew so little about it. Well, he should know.

Mr. MACKENZIE: He is a good farmer.

Mr. ROWE: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to go back a few years, and let you and me reminisce about the records of the two great parties. As far as I am concerned, I did not begin to support this party just recently. I am not a Progressive Conservative only; I was a Conservative. We are growing more progressive all the time, and I have no apology to offer for the name "progressive" because the late Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald said that this party must be progressive if it was going to be anything. Some hon. gentlemen across the way have been here for only a short time; others have been here longer, but I have been here longer than anyone I see in the front row to-night. I say I have no apology to offer for the past. This afternoon I was amused when I listened to the remarks of my young and honourable friend the member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras). He made a very nice speech; in fact when I was his age I likely made more foolish ones, but I am not going to be disturbed for this moment. The hon. member for Provencher knows very well—or if he does not know his elders will tell him—that back over those years the Conservative party has not very much for which it needs to apologize.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ROWE: I hear the cackles of many who were not here then. My hon. friend across the way was not here; he was not thought of at that time, and he is lucky to be here now. Indeed, he may not be back. When the party now sitting to your right came into power in 1921, the first war had been over for three years. To listen now to the gibes of the back-benchers, to the noise of the front-benchers and to the applause of all government supporters, one would think this country had gone to the dogs between 1918 and 1921.

Mr. GRANT: No; between 1930 and 1935.

Mr. ROWE: I shall come to that. You were not here then either, and you are not too sure about what is going on now, let alone then. Why, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal party has been the party of wheat. I remember I pleaded with the Liberal party time and again, over a quarter century, to think of something other than wheat alone. My hon. friends will remember that I pleaded for a balanced agriculture. Even the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) is too honest to deny that; and I think he is about as honest as anyone left over there. But hon. members will try to lead people to believe that this party had overlooked agriculture. Wheat and wheat flour were practically the specialties of Liberalism; in fact many times you would not think anything was produced, even in Ontario and Quebec, except wheat. When you were in the political realm, Mr. Speaker, how in caucuses you must have listened for years to a discussion of wheat alone. In 1921, the year hon. gentlemen to your right came to power, we exported $377,000,000 worth of wheat and wheat flour to the markets of the world. That was the legacy which was left to the party sitting to your right. What happened in 1930, the year they went out of power? Our exports to the world in these commodities totalled $138,000,000. In other words, those exports dropped from $377,000,000 to $138,000,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ROWE: Even the Minister of Finance laughs. Everyone laughs at that, when they remember the speeches which have been made lately. I want to relate a little history for the benefit of some of the members who seem to forget so many things as far as the policies of their party are concerned. Hon. members opposite who sit on the back-benches and who follow this new form of Liberalism should remember that when it started in this country Liberalism believed in free trade, in buying where you paid the least. They were the champions of markets for the farmers throughout the world. They were the ones in this country who pleaded for markets in the United States. They were the boys—and your fathers were the men—who championed commercial union with the United States in order to find markets for the agricultural products of Canada. You are the descendants of greater men who in 1911 said, "We want reciprocity with the United States." Why? It was not to help manufacturers of Toronto or Winnipeg or Montreal. No; it was to help the farmer find markets for his produce. Those were the champions of the farmer. But in 1921, when the Liberal party came into power, our exports to the world of all farm products totalled $610,000,000. In 1930, the year the Liberal party went out of power, our exports amounted to $428,000,000. Those are the facts, and I challenge the Minister of Finance to deny them. I pause for a moment; if he does not agree with my statement let him deny it. Silence gives consent, for he knows those figures are correct. I also remember when I was not in this house, though I was still in public life—

Mr. MACKENZIE: In Ontario.

Mr. ROWE: I was too young, as the minister perhaps suggests. But I have a reasonably good memory, and I remember that in 1921 the party opposite campaigned throughout the ridings of Ontario saying, "Elect us. We will find markets for your agricultural products. We will lower the tariff. We will lower the cost of production."

An hon. MEMBER: Were they successful?

Mr. ROWE: No, and I will tell you about it. You were not old enough to vote then, but others will tell you that our markets failed and we lost them to the extent of $100,000,000 of exports to the United States alone. The Fordney-McCumber tariff came in, and what was the policy of this government? Nobody knows what it is to-day, but in those days it was economic appeasement. We were told that we must not provoke the United States, but within eight months after the Liberal party came into power in 1921 the Fordney-McCumber tariff was introduced in the United States and we lost a great market in that country. In that period of time we sold less than $15,000,000 worth of agricultural commodities there. It is true that was not the fault of the government, but their economic appeasement and their policy of "must not provoke" did not work, because, regardless of that, the United States brought in their Fordney-McCumber tariff. Then for ten years the party to your right, Mr. Speaker, who were the champions of agricultural products, were in power. What happened in the export markets? We had exported to the world $75 million worth of meat in 1921. In 1930 we were not producing enough bacon to feed our own people. We were importing New Zealand cheese.

Mr. McIVOR: Butter.

Mr. ROWE: The hon. member for Fort William says it was New Zealand butter; the hon. member is right. Thanks for the correction. I am glad he has observed the record of his party, but I am surprised at his following it. In 1931, one year after this party came into power, we exported seven million pounds of beef to the United States, instead of 22 million pounds the year before. We exported one and three-quarter million gallons of cream and butter instead of four and three quarter million, as we had the year before. Why? Because of the Hawley-Smoot tariff? What is the government policy to-day?

Mr. CLAXTON: Does the hon. member know how much we exported to the United Kingdom in those years?

Mr. ROWE: Yes. In 1921 the United Kingdom imported from us 255 million pounds of bacon, and they imported six or seven million pounds from Denmark. But by 1930 the minister's party lost that market and they imported 600 million pounds from Denmark. We imported bacon to feed our own people.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and I wish the rules of the house would permit you to give us the information, because nobody else does, what is the government policy to-day? What is this government's policy? Nobody knows what the agricultural policy of this dominion is. It is the greatest gunshot prescription that this country has ever heard of. Why, Mr. Speaker? The other night the Minister of Finance said that the reason we are producing so much is that a high acreage plan has been decided on. The Minister of Agriculture has been planning a low acreage system for three or four years. There seems to be a conflict of policy in the cabinet. The Minister of Agriculture tells us in one year that our increased production is due to summer-fallow. The next year he tells us that the loss of production is due to the weather. Is there any wonder that the minister does not deny that the farmers are carrying a heavy burden in this new planned economy? One minister bonuses the farmer to grow wheat, and another minister bonuses by exemption in income tax to market wheat the following year. One minister says we must not empty our bins; we must stock for the future. Another minister says we must export every available bushel by August 1. Is it any wonder that neither the farmers, the exporters nor anyone else knows what our policy is?

The other night the Minister of Agriculture said that we should not raise the price of wheat because, if we do, the farmers may probably have to take seventy-five cents a bushel in two years. What an empty garden variety threat that is. Why, Mr. Speaker, every hon. member and every farmer in this country know that is not a fact. No wonder the government's spokesman saw the revelation of this policy, and stated that it was not encouraging the young farmers to go on the farms.

Mr. WARREN: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. WARREN: Before the hon. member leaves the question of foreign markets, would he mind telling us the transformation and gradual improvement that took place after this government entered into an agreement with the United States after the terrible—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Put it on the order paper.

Mr. WARREN: —conditions this country passed through under the rule of the Bennett-Rowe government.

Mr. FERGUSON: He is telling you, not educating you.

Mr. ROWE: I do not know that that is worthy of an answer. The hon. member ought to have that information himself.

Mr. WARREN: I have.

Mr. ROWE: I hope the hon. member has. The hon. member then knows that in the United States the farmers are getting 30 per cent more for their cattle, 25 per cent more for their dairy products, and pretty nearly $1 a bushel more for their wheat. The old champions of the United States markets for Canadian farmers ought to be a little ashamed when we cannot even sell our own products there now.

Not long ago the Minister of Agriculture said that one-third of all the cultivated areas of western Canada should have been in wheat, one-third in grass and one-third in summer-fallow. I am glad that the farmers did not listen to that shotgun prescription because they knew that would mean we would not produce any more wheat than we had produced twenty-five years ago. The government wished to establish a restricted policy, reverting back almost a quarter of a century, that would not meet the demands for world requirements at a time when the government has made commitments to Britain. The minister knows that it cannot fill those commitments. Every phase of agricultural production is falling down to-day. I am sorry the Minister of Agriculture is not here to-night. No wonder the Minister of Agriculture himself has admitted twice over the radio that this country was probably coming rapidly to a production drought; "a development drought" were the words he used. Why is it a development drought? He has had a lot to say about agricultural prices. What has he had to say about farm implement prices? At eleven o'clock on April 12 the wartime prices and trade board announced that prices of agricultural implements would be raised 12½ per cent. I sometimes wonder what parliament is for. Some of my hon. friends have chided me for not being here that day. In view of what we see happening many of you are here too much. Ninety per cent of you as government supporters are just rubber-stamps to controllership and dictatorship done behind the closed doors of cabinet council, and the other ten per cent of you that form the cabinet council evidently take advice from the controllers and the boards of dictatorship which have been established, but not elected.

How long is this country to go on like that? We hear more spectacular news when we get the evening papers than we hear in parliament. I have listened to arguments here and I at time have heard very little—

Mr. MACKENZIE: The same is true to-night.

Mr. ROWE: Well, nobody knows but the hon. member that he is here. But, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but he has spoken for forty minutes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Continue.

Mr. ROWE: If hon. members across the way will permit me to go on I shall do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Continue.

Mr. ROWE: My hon. friend said something about 1932. I am not going to chide the Minister of Agriculture regarding agricultural implement prices because I understand he said that he heard it first over the radio. If he did, then he is in the same position as the rest of us, because nobody else heard it before. I am glad that he said in Melfort, Saskatchewan, if the price of farm implements was raised, farm prices should be raised. I am in agreement with him on that.

The Minister of Finance is worried about inflation. I recall that I suggested we should have compulsory savings twelve months before he adopted the policy. If the minister is so worried about inflation in connection with farm prices may I ask him why he suspended compulsory savings and threw into the consumer market purchasing power of $250 million and added another $250 million in family bonuses, thereby adding half a billion dollars to purchasing power at a time when we were trying to keep the purchasing power down. This was all done at a time when we were paying over half a billion dollars in subsidies. Where is this money to come from? Are we to sell our wheat at seventy-five cents less than what the world would pay for it? Are we to sell our bacon and beef for thirty per cent less than the United States would pay for it? Are we then going to ask the labour man, the white-collar worker, the industrialist who will employ the veterans, to pay this money? That is why I am opposed to the motion of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum). It is a negative motion. It says to labour, we will not give you any more; it encourages increases on farm implements. This party stands for the removal of the ceiling on farm products so that the farm implement workers who make our products may get a reasonable standard of living. That is what we stand for. We believe in a reasonable standard of living for those who fought for victory. But where are these new fantastic economists who are pulling the golden rabbits out of the hat, going to find these billions of dollars?

When we have inflation, who will be the most responsible for it? The Minister of Finance has been most conscientious in trying to carry out this checkered shotgun policy of this government. But he knows very well that it will take ten times more revenue to carry this country under the policy of this government. When I came to this house first it took only one-tenth of what it does now to carry the expenditures of this country. The leading economists tell us we shall have to increase our national income, that we shall have to increase it by 50 per cent if we are to maintain these new types of fantastic Liberal policies.

If we are going to increase our income by 50 per cent, and if it takes ten times as much more to run the country, why cannot the farmers at least get parity for their produce? I will not support the subamendment, as I said, because it is a negative. I do not think the government will support it. But I believe that upon reconsideration—well, perhaps I should not say I believe it, because there are none so blind as those who will not see what these controls mean—so I will say that upon reconsideration they may not support our amendment.

In conclusion, I would ask what these controls mean. They mean that the consumers and the starving millions in Europe have the satisfaction of knowing about price ceilings in Canada, but they have no assurance that food products are being produced at a maximum.

Controls in wartime for the purpose of increasing production may be necessary. But the necessary powers granted to the executive in wartime are now being used to satisfy a lust for power in time of peace.

It may seem ridiculous, but I walked down a street in this fair city last Christmas, and I saw in the window an advertisement urging me to buy pyjamas for a dog. I walked into another store to buy a Christmas shirt for my son, but I could not get one. That is what happens under this type of controls. While national controls may be necessary in time of war, individual freedom is just as vital in peace. I know, as you know, Mr. Speaker, that if the farmers of Canada are prosperous the returned men will be employed and the farmers will be employed, and will be able to pay fair wages to the men who are employed, so that they can work and receive fair remuneration.

There has been misrepresentation by hon. members to your right, Mr. Speaker. A few may cling to the methods of war time, to methods of dictatorship, but many will prefer the ways of peace.

Competition, reasonable pay for services, recompense for individual effort, choice of vocation—all these things are influenced by the law of supply and demand. These are the main-springs of free enterprise. They are the corner-stones of democracy and of freedom. These are the bulwarks of democracy itself. That is our way of life. That is the freedom and the liberty described as victory.

The history of liberty is a history of the limitation of government control, not its increase.

I urge upon the government once more, in closing, that they give the farmers parity with other producers in Canada, so that we may feed the starving millions of Europe, and that other business may be assisted, and peace secured.

I urge upon the government to rescind some of these controls, and get rid of some of the controllers. After all, you know, many of them never milked a cow in their lives. We look forward to the day when these controls may be eliminated. This party stands for the elimination of price ceilings on agricultural production and wage controls, and in due course for the elimination of other price ceilings. I plead for the majority of the Canadian people, for the 600,000 or 700,000 farmers of Canada, and the 400,000 or 500,000 labourers, to help them to get proper returns, and in the end to obtain freedom and reasonable recompense for individual endeavour.

Mr. McIVOR: May I ask a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. McIVOR: I wish to ask a question. If I am not permitted to do that, I shall have to rise to a question of privilege. The hon. member said that we were 90 per cent rubber-stamps. I should like to know if he includes me.

Mr. ROWE: I will answer that. When I saw the hon. member sitting in the front row I knew I could say that he was not a rubber-stamp. Because he sits pretty close to the cabinet, he is better than some that are in it, so that I would include him in the other ten per cent.

Mr. F. D. SHAW (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, we have heard the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) lodge perhaps his greatest broadside against the government. It is not many days ago that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) did the same with respect to the official opposition. So that the only conclusion I can come to is this, that if just ten per cent of what was said on either side was correct, thank heaven I am a Social Crediter.

The present debate has been long. Much of a relevant nature has been said, much that has been irrelevant has been contributed. I believe that is due largely to the fact that the amendment and the subamendment are couched in indefinite terms. I have studied them carefully, but I have not been completely certain that I am able to determine just what the Progressive Conservative amendment is driving at; and their speeches have not helped to confirm any opinion I might have.

The same can be said about the C.C.F. subamendment. We find a number of contradictions in the speeches, and I have not yet received from either of those parties a comprehensive picture of what they propose as the over-all pattern which the government should have in operation.

Agriculturists in my part of Canada are extremely perplexed and not a little disturbed. That comes largely as a consequence of the fact that to-day, above all else, we lack what I would regard as stability as applied to agricultural policy. The farmers for whom I speak fear the future. There is considerable justification for that fear.

They came out of a very difficult period prior to the war, a period during which there was apparently no effort to establish what was commonly regarded as parity for agricultural produce. We all realize that at the time the farmer was receiving—and this applies to my district—as little as twelve to fourteen cents a bushel for his wheat, two cents for hogs and one cent for beef. At the same time his costs increased tremendously. I make specific reference to those things which the farmer found it necessary to purchase.

During that grim period preceding the outbreak of the war the farmer did not enjoy anything comparable to a long-range crop and live stock production policy. When he went into hog production, the bottom fell from under hog prices. When he switched to cattle, the bottom fell out from under cattle prices. He encountered the same conditions in almost every undertaking in which he became interested.

He was not able to get insurance against natural hazards such as drouth, insect pests and so on. In many areas in the west, insurance rates were so high that he found it absolutely impossible to insure against these hazards. Many areas had been completely blacked out by the insurance companies as being areas of too great risk.

He also had little if any protection in the field of debt. It has been stated frequently that during he middle thirties relief was granted to the debt-ridden farmer by the introduction of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, but experience proved that with conditions as they were at that time very few farmers were actually helped. The terms of the new agreements proved to be even more difficult to meet. After all, the thing that made it possible for a farmer to meet his debts was the prices which he received for his products. If a farmer had a $6,000 debt which was reduced to $3,000 and he was still left producing at a figure less than the cost of production, his position was just as hopeless as it had been before the debt legislation was introduced.

When Alberta adopted a realistic debt settlement policy it was promptly declared to be ultra vires.

During that grim period the farmer did not have adequate marketing facilities free from manipulation and monopoly control. I shall refer to these matters in more detail in a few moments. During the same period he was unable to secure low-cost credits for agricultural purposes.

When the war broke out in 1939 he was called upon to perform a tremendous task for his country. If one examines the production statistics between 1939 and 1944 for hogs, cattle, butter, eggs, oats, barley and flax, he will discover that in spite of his impoverished condition, lack of labour and his inability to secure adequate machinery with which to carry on his farming operations he still increased the production of those commodities to a tremendous degree. Some say that he did so because of the higher prices he received for his products. Naturally that constituted some inducement, but he realized it was essential that he do his part on the home front to the best of his ability just as our service personnel were performing on the field of battle. During war time the farmer was not given any indication that the policies then instituted would be such as to enable him to look into the future with any degree of confidence.

We speak about a forty-hour week, but I think it is well known that the farmer talks in terms of an eighty or ninety-hour week. During the war period when there was less skilled help his hours of labour exceeded even that point. I wish to emphasize that in spite of every possible handicap with which an industry could be confronted, agriculture did perform magnificently during the war.

Then we passed out of the period of the war. The farmers in my part of Canada are becoming greatly incensed because of certain policies which have recently been put into effect. As one chap said to me when I was back home at Easter, referring to the increase in farm machine prices, "It is just another kick in the pants, and on the basis of that we can anticipate quite a number of others."

During the war the farmer agreed to accept lower prices for wheat that was consumed domestically or by the Canadian forces as a contribution toward the prosecution of the war. When the export price of wheat was in the neighbourhood of $1.55 a bushel, he was given approximately $1.25. In accepting from twenty to thirty cents a bushel less, he realized that he was receiving much less for a better grade of wheat than was being paid south of the border for a poorer grade.

The farmer feels that it is not fair that the machine companies just have to protest or refuse to produce and they are granted increases.

The farmer indicates to me also that he resents the fact that labour demands, or strikes, and is granted increases in wages when he must sit back unable and unwilling to engage in strike action. I think it is well known that the return to the farmer to-day is practically the same as the return to industrial concerns in 1941, yet industry gets increases. He feels that there is a deliberate effort being made to keep him in a condition of permanent bankruptcy. An attempt has been made to stabilize farm prices, but the farmer contends that stabilization makes sense only as long as the costs of the commodities which he has to buy are also stabilized. We did not hear many complaints from the farmers in the part of the west in which I live until the costs of the commodities which they had to buy started to be increased. As I stated a moment ago, this started with the 12½ per cent increase on farm machinery.

The farmer asks that he be allowed one basic thing, namely, a fair margin of profit over and above his complete costs of production. It is most maddening for an industry of this kind to be subjected at one moment to high speculative prices, carry on its business for a period on that basis, and then be faced with low depressed prices at the next moment. There can be no stability in the agricultural industry until we remove that situation. The farmers are also greatly disturbed because of the recent action taken with respect to the subsidy on milk. They have indicated to me that they felt that the consumer subsidy on milk was one of the most scientific subsidies known to man. The farmer looks upon it as granting to him a fair return for his product. He looks to the consumer as one who was, while in receipt of a subsidy indirectly, able to purchase substantially more of his milk product than he could prior to the application of the subsidy and considerably more than he will be able to buy when milk jumps to eleven, twelve, fourteen and sixteen cents a quart as it is bound to do in many parts of Canada by the end of September next.

The farmer also feels this: If we go to the consumer now after removing the subsidy and take the full two or four cents a quart from the consumer, we are taking from him the money or purchasing power with which he would be able to purchase other farm products. So I say that he calls that another kick in the pants.

He has chafed for years under the existing freight rate structure in this country; yet he reads in the paper that the two great railroads of Canada are likely to apply for permission to increase freight rates and he feels that their application will be granted, even though we have in operation in this country one of the most iniquitous freight rate structures to be found anywhere in the world. In discussing freight rates the farmer of western Canada says to me: Why should there be a generally lower scale of rates between points in eastern Canada than between points which are the same distance apart in western Canada? He chafes under that, and until such time as that condition is rectified he will continue to do so.

Then he asks: Why should there be higher freight rates on certain basic commodities produced and consumed in Alberta than rates on the same commodities produced in eastern Canada? He refers to the unfavourable position of the distributor and the consumer in Alberta as a result of the water-compelled lower trans-continental rate basis from eastern Canada to coast points as compared with Alberta points.

I also hear farmers constantly referring to the unfavourable position of Alberta relatively as a result of the rate structure between eastern Canada and Alberta breaking at the head of the lakes, and of the unfavourable effect of the rate structure applying between the head of the lakes and Alberta points caused by the constructive mileage introduced between Fort William and Winnipeg.

Then he refers constantly to his unfavourable position in Alberta relatively to other western provinces as a result of the higher mountain scale of rates in effect over the prairie provinces. Finally, he refers to the grain rate structure between eastern Canada and western Canada, and particularly as it detracts from Alberta's geographical advantage of using the province of British Columbia as a consuming market.

These matters are being discussed almost daily out there, and when the farmer reads that the railroads are likely to ask for permission to increase their freight rates, naturally he becomes extremely incensed because he knows that these applications for increased rates have been granted before and he concludes that they will be granted again.

We have a condenser in my constituency. Milk canned at that point and shipped to Vancouver pays a higher rate than that on the same quantity of milk canned in Ontario, say at Tillsonburg, and shipped to Vancouver. That is a most disturbing thing because, if we take into consideration the higher freight rate costs, the industry in Alberta cannot pay to the producer a comparable price to that paid in districts adjacent to Tillsonburg in Ontario.

We feel—I am speaking of the farmers—that we in that part of Canada are forced to absorb the shock from both east and west and on both exports and imports. I am pleased to know that the governments of the three prairie provinces have been able to get together with a view to prevail upon or assist, whichever you choose to call it, the Dominion of Canada in bringing about a more equitable freight rate structure in this country. I cannot see for a moment how you can grant justice to the farmers if that is not done.

Reference has been made here—and I constantly hear farmers referring to it—to marketing facilities. They insist upon adequate marketing facilities free from manipulation and monopoly control. They make particular reference to the live stock industry, and here the packers enter into the picture. A farmer handed me a clipping which he had evidently cut from a copy of the evidence given before the royal commission on price spreads in 1935. He showed me a statement which he said appeared between pages 59 and 60 of the price spreads report which was made by the president of Canada Packers Limited before that commission. It was this:

> The total live stock is sold for the total sum, whatever it is; from that sum is deducted the packer's expense and the packer's profit and the farmer gets the balance.

Can one be surprised at our live stock producers being greatly agitated when they read a statement of that kind emanating from the then president of Canada Packers Limited? The evidence went on to point out that between 1929 and 1934, when the live stock industry, which is one branch of agriculture, was taking such a terrible beating in western Canada, the profits of the packing industry increased threefold.

The farmers say this to me repeatedly: We realize that the packers are in business to make a profit; we have no complaint against their making a legitimate profit because we ask the same opportunity for ourselves, and we realize too that the packing industry performs a useful function in the country. But they do not agree that a system should be permitted which enables those in the packing industry, which in effect is a monopoly, to thrive during a period when the primary producer does not receive a sufficient return to make it worth while for him to take his live stock to market. The profits of the packing industry increased between 1929 and 1934 by about 300 per cent. I should have mentioned that they wrote off repair charges and depreciation in a scandalous fashion, and the price spreads commission reported accordingly, saying that if the repair charges and depreciation had been fair—I will not say honest—the profits during that period would have been considerably greater. As the president of Canada Packers at that time said:

> The total live stock is sold for the total sum, whatever it is; from that sum is deducted the packer's expense and the packer's profit and the farmer gets the balance.

Another matter to which we must pay heed if we want stability in agriculture is the tariff. The farmers are discussing these matters much more frequently and much more intelligently than probably they did a few years ago, and this seems to be their general view with respect to tariffs. The farmers in my area believe that the tariff impoverishes the nation by an amount much greater than the value of any non-material national purpose it may achieve, and I am personally in agreement with that view. They believe that tariffs should be reduced on commodities entering into the every-day cost of living. It is most essential that that be done so far as our western farmers are concerned. Moreover, they certainly believe that there should be a proper division of the national economic burden of tariffs, bearing in mind, of course, provincial populations. In the past, as shown by statistics presented during this debate, the farmers of the west have borne a tremendous load in connection with machine costs simply because of tariff barriers and embargoes designed, I say, to profit the industrialists of central Canada. They remember vividly out there, with respect to tariffs, the extent of the absolute burden during the depression. If I were to indicate four incidents with respect to tariffs which made it much more difficult for the farmers during the depression years, I would refer to the enormous expansion of the number of items which were added from year to year to the tariff list, the increased import duties, the application of anti-dumping legislation, and fixed values for duty purposes. Farmers certainly feel that the whole matter of tariffs will have to be carefully scrutinized, and that we must bring in a realistic policy if we are to have a flourishing, sound agriculture during these post-war years.

We cannot forget that in 1931 we in Alberta paid $8,211,148 in tariff subsidies to protected manufacturers. If I remember correctly, the Manitoba brief to the dominion-provincial conference estimated that the cost amounted to $110.38 per western farmer. Canadian farmers on that basis paid $32 million in the year 1931 because of tariff protection given to the manufacturers of central Canada. So that I think, when some people talk about the "poor relation in the west", the western farmer, they should bear in mind certain of the burdens which have been borne by those farmers because of protection granted to industries in central Canada.

As I stated early in my remarks, it is my firm belief that if we are to have a stable agriculture we must, as was indicated in his concluding remarks by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe, have parity prices established. I cannot see how we can avoid it. There is a great deal of argument as to exactly what "parity" means. There is a great deal of disagreement as to exactly how it should be established. I do not profess to be any expert, I do not presume to indicate how it could be established, but I say with certainty that we have in this country people capable of establishing it. In the second place, we must have during future years a long-range crop and live stock production programme in this country, not one just for this week or next month. I would say too, having in mind the various natural afflictions from which we suffer in the agricultural areas of the west, that we must establish a general crop insurance scheme. I would even go so far as to say that I personally feel it should be established on a non-contributory basis. We must arrange adequate low-cost credits for our western agriculturists. We must have equitable debt adjustment. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) indicated that farmers had paid approximately 50 per cent of their indebtedness. That is a tribute to the character of our farmers; it proves one thing, that they are willing to meet their obligations when they can, but it also proves that they still have on their shoulders 50 per cent of their burden. Moreover, I have known many farmers—hundreds of farmers—who were completely out of debt but who, when prices went to rock bottom, soon found themselves hopelessly mired in debt again. With no control over the general price structure that may be the inevitable result. We must remove from our marketing facilities any manipulation which may exist and, certainly, monopoly control of the industry. Then, as I stated, we must also have adjustments in our freight rates structure and in our whole tariff set-up.

Let me emphasize also that one of the things which is bothering the farmer tremendously to-day is this question of taxation. He calls the tax collectors "predators"; some of them call them "pre-daters". I think all hon. members will agree that when a farmer, faced by conditions over which he has no control and which threaten to take from him everything he has accumulated over the years suddenly finds himself with an income which, though not large, is much better than he has ever had before, it is natural that upon being pounced on for taxes, even upon an income of only $1,200, and having part of it taken away, he chafes because he realizes that in all those years when he had next to nothing the dominion government was extremely reluctant and tardy in coming along and granting him the assistance which alone would make it possible for him to carry on. I think it is quite reasonable to suggest that the unmarried farmer should not be taxed on the first $1,200, or the married farmer on the first $2,000, of his income. I think also that, in bombarding us as the farmers have with requests for action in this regard, they are making a legitimate request. Let me assure the house that we over here took that stand long before we were bombarded with cards requesting that this course of action be taken.

I do not wish to take more of the time of the house, but let me emphasize, what I believe all hon. members know, that we cannot have a stable economy in Canada without having stability in our basic industry, namely agriculture.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate I want to deal particularly with the statements made in the motion of want of confidence moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken). First of all, however, may I say that I am sorry that the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) has now left the chamber. Though he was gibing at some members on this side for being new members and as not knowing what had occurred in the past in this house, I can speak as a member who has been here from 1930. I well remember sitting over there just about where the leader of the opposition is sitting for the moment, and during all the years from 1930 to 1935 I never heard the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Senn) or the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe have much to say about the farmers. There was a silence over here regarding the farmer that could almost be felt. It went through my mind also that in the great campaign of 1930 his party slid in to office on butter. In 1930 they went through the province of Quebec and spoke about "fifty cents for butter"; and then I thought of the years 1930 to 1935 when butter was so cheap they were greasing axle wheels with it; cows were being sold for five to ten dollars, and eggs for seven to nine cents a dozen. I realize however, that to go back to those days and dwell on them now serves no really good purpose, but I mention it because I listened attentively to the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe, and his party is to be congratulated because about three times a year that kind of show is put on by the Progressive party.

I intended to deal particularly with the want of confidence motion of the leader of the opposition, and I am coming to that now. I believe that motion can be briefly stated in four sentences: A lessing production owing to the inequitable position of agriculture. Production down; dairy products, poultry and hogs. Canadian wheat should be the same price as in the United States, and the agricultural contribution, if so, amounts to about $200 million. Finally, no justification in holding the price down.

To take the wheat statement first, everyone knows that wheat is the king-pin of our national economy, and I was surprised at what I term a loose statement made by the leader of the opposition, that he would take wheat, the king-pin of agriculture, remove the ceiling, and let it rise to the same price as in the United States. May I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the house that the farmers of the United States are not any better off or as well off as the farmers of Canada. I just came across a press clipping which states that 2,000 farmers intend to leave what is called the good old United States where all these prices are received and come to northern Alberta and British Columbia, to God's country, the best country on earth. I am wondering if the leader of the opposition has considered what might happen and, in fact, what would happen if we were to follow the United States in regard to the price ot wheat. I am surprised that when he spoke of the price of wheat he did not go farther and take in all other articles, for I think it can be said without fear of contradiction that if you lift the lid off wheat and all farm products you had better be prepared to lift the lid off everything. If that is the policy being enunciated by the leader of the opposition he should come out and tell this house and the country that that is exactly what he means.

Let us see for a moment just what would happen in this country. If the price of wheat were raised to over $2 a bushel the first thing we would have to do would be to call in all the agreements we have with Great Britain and make a readjustment in regard to prices. We would have to say, "Well, when we settled these agreements with you and the prices were fixed, we agreed to give you wheat at the present set price. Now it has gone up to over $2"—and it would have to go to that price to equal the price in the United States—"we will have to raise prices and have new agreements." Just how that would work out no one can predict, but I am wondering if hon. members of the Progressive Conservative party have thought how the people of British Columbia would be affected if such a thing were to take place. As far as farming is concerned we in British Columbia go in principally for poultry, eggs and dairying, and we are a wheat purchasing province. We look to the prairies for our wheat, our barley and our oats, and the price there definitely affects the produce we have to sell. It is well known that were it not for the large subsidies paid at the present time by the government we could not carry on and make ends meet.

A few nights ago, when we were discussing the removal of the two-cent subsidy on milk, a thought entered my mind. I wondered if hon. members realized that the people of this country were paying the full price for milk anyway. If you look at the figures you will find that from 1939 to January of this year some $23,888,666 has been paid by the people of Canada in that two-cent subsidy on milk. So that when we speak of the price of milk being increased, let us not overlook the fact that the people have been paying this two cents right along. But it is well known that the nicest way to tax people is not to let them know they are being taxed at all, as we collect the sales tax and so on, by taking it from them indirectly. But when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) brings down his budget and we come to discuss the income tax no doubt we shall hear a cry for increased subsidies and lower taxation. Just how those will be reconciled I do not know, and I doubt if even the minister will be able to reconcile them. But what about the other commodities if our wheat prices follow those of the United States? Wheat is but one thing. Lift that lid and the ceiling is off as regards everything else.

Mr. FERGUSON: Why?

Mr. REID: I do not think I need waste a great deal of time saying why. In the first place, wheat is the king-pin, and if you removed the ceiling on wheat every other commodity would demand the same treatment. Do you think for a moment that labour and the manufacturers would remain quiet if you permitted the price ceiling to go where it liked? But I am going to leave this thought with hon. gentlemen opposite, and with the leader of the opposition. Are we going now to adopt the policy that in times like the present, when prices a little better than those guaranteed may be obtained, shall allow the prairie farmers to be free agents and go into the world markets to obtain those prices; and then when wheat drops to away below a dollar have them turn around and say it is up to the state to assist or protect them? Personally I do not think you can have it both way. If the state is to take an interest in the farmer when the price is low, in my opinion the state should take an interest when the price is likely to go out of sight. To my mind, the policy suggested by the Progressive Conservative party is extremely short-sighted, and I shall give my reasons for making that statement.

Mr. FERGUSON: If I may ask a question, have this government given the farmers any assurance that they will set a floor price when the price of wheat drops?

Mr. WEIR: They have already done that.

Mr. FERGUSON: Have they given that assurance to the farmer?

Mr. WEIR: Yes.

Mr. FERGUSON: They have assured the farmers of Canada that, irrespective of the actual price, they are going to get a floor price continuously, year in and year out.

Mr. REID: My information is that the present government have guaranteed the farmers that at no time within the next five years will that price drop below $1 a bushel. They have put a floor under wheat.

Mr. FERGUSON: For five years!

Mr. REID: At least. That will do for the present, and that answers my hon. friend's question. For the next five years at least the price will never go below that figure. The farmer is assured of $1.55 at the present time, because he gets $1.25, less the freight to Vancouver or Fort William, and then he participates in sales of wheat abroad at whatever price is obtained. That is the picture as I get it from the Department of Agriculture, and generally speaking, I think that is a correct statement. Surely the guarantee to the farmer is worth something. Surely it is of some advantage to be guaranteed a definite minimum return. In a moment or two I am going to dispute, and try to prove my point with figures, that price has not been the principal reason if there has been any drop in agriculture. I am going to take the statements made by the leader of the opposition, and I am going to give the authority for any figures I quote. I believe that when figures are quoted in this house the source of the figures should be definitely stated, so that one hon. member is not quoting from one source, and another from some other source. I have gone to the bureau of statistics for the figures I am going to quote, and I am sure no one will accuse the bureau of statistics of being a partisan body. I have kept away from the Department of Agriculture and any other department. To-night I am sticking to the figures of the bureau of statistics.

Before I deal with that, may I say that it is a well-known fact that farmers are not satisfied. I know of no group of individuals in this country who are satisfied. Even members of parliament are not satisfied. I have met members of parliament who have received an increase of $2,000 and some of them are not satisfied. I know that some have attended the sittings fewer times since they received the increase than formerly. I say that as one who has been present at every sitting. No group in Canada is satisfied. No one seems to be satisfied. And so the farmers are not the only class of people who are not satisfied.

The leader of the opposition said that the production of dairy products is down. He mentioned poultry and hogs. From the figures I received from the bureau I find that the statement made by the leader of the opposition is not correct in so far as dairy products and poultry are concerned. I hold in my hand the years and the millions of pounds of production of meat in Canada as given by the dominion bureau of statistics. I find that more beef has been produced up to 1945, which is the highest year since 1935. More veal was produced. There was more mutton and lamb produced in 1945. There was a greater production of turkey and chicken in 1945 than in 1943 and 1944, or the average between 1935 and 1939. Therefore the statement made by the leader of the opposition should be corrected. I am endeavouring to correct it to-night and put on the record the exact figures given to me rather than just make a general statement. It is all very well to make a general statement and say that production is down. I am placing these figures on Hansard to-night, so that any hon. member may check them later and refute them later if he cares to do so.

If one goes over the list of products of agriculture he will find that, on the average, the production is not down from 1935 to 1945 except in some few instances. Here again the leader of the opposition has not mentioned the effect the weather has, and it is a fact that the weather influences our crops.

The leader of the opposition dealt particularly with wheat. I looked over the figures for wheat, oats, barley, hay and clover, and I found that in 1940 there were 54·1 million acres in all sown; in 1945 there were 55·4 million acres sown; in other words, there were 1·3 million acres more. Regarding wheat, with almost the same acreage as in 1945, the production of wheat was 129·6 million bushels greater in 1944. The same thing applies to barley. With the same acreage in barley the crop in 1944 was 36·9 million bushels greater than in 1945. Oats with the same acreage produced 118 million bushels more in 1944 than in 1945. Hay and clover were a little less. In fact, in 1941, with two million acres less, on the average the wheat crop in that year was greater by nine million bushels. Why? Because of weather conditions. But the leader of the opposition tried to leave the impression and I believe he partly succeeded in certain quarters, that the production of agriculture was the result of the policies of this government and the prices that are being paid. I claim that that is somewhat of an indictment of the farmers, because with nearly 400,000 fewer people on the farm they have, since 1939, been producing more year after year. The production in 1945 shows an increase in most instances. It certainly shows an increase in dairy products and in poultry. It is true that hogs dropped down a little. Milk production is about the same level in 1945 as in 1944.

There is one element that enters into the fact that our people are not keen to go on the land, which was not mentioned by the leader of the opposition, namely, the attitude of labour to-day. With fewer men on the farm, with more machinery, farmers are producing generally more than they did in 1939 or 1940. When young men read of the proposals of certain labour organizations, some of which are asking for a six-day week, $25 a week minimum pay, time and a half for overtime after thirty-six hours, double time for Sundays and statutory holidays, and the payment of at least $25 per week for the full period of unemployment, is it any wonder that many men cannot be induced to stay on or go back to the farm? I do not know whether Your Honour has farmed, but farming is one of the occupations where you just cannot put it over old mother nature. You have to work on the farm. You get up early in the morning and you work long hours, or you do not stay long on the farm. With the trends that are taking place and the way things are going, is it any wonder that many young men are thinking as they are and drifting into the cities by the thousands?

If the leader of the opposition had been covering the whole gamut of our life it is a wonder he did not suggest the following for the farmers: For cleaning the stables and hauling the manure the farmer should have at least as much as the garbage collector; for eighty per cent of the time that he is working as a scientific agriculturist he should have an hourly rate of pay equal to that of the skilled mechanic; for working as a business manager he should be paid as much as a business man with similar investments; for the money he has invested he should have returns comparable with the earnings on money invested at comparable risks. He should have all this income but he has never had half of it. Farming, of course, cannot be put on a dollar-and-cents basis, because farming is not altogether a business; it is a means of living, a mode of life, and those of us who live on the farm do so because we love that kind of life or occupation.

I come back again to what the leader of the opposition dealt with in his endeavour to leave the impression that the drop in agricultural production was due to the policy of this government. I say that it was an irresponsible statement made by a responsible public man, because I believe it is contrary to the facts, as can be seen if one analyses all the facts carefully.

Speaking about labour conditions, I say it is one of the greatest indictments of our country that we have to keep here something like seventeen thousand German prisoners of war to work in pulp camps and sugar beet districts. If they stay here much longer I would be surprised if some champions on their behalf will not later rise and say these men saved agriculture in the years 1945 and 1946. I repeat, it seems almost an indictment of our people that these men are remaining. Personally I should have like to see them taken out of this country just as soon after the defeat of Germany as possible, because these men have been bred in nazism and should not be left any longer in Canada.

I heard the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) speak about being friendly to labour. I am sorry he is not in his place at the moment because I was going to deal particularly with German labour in so far as he was concerned. If I never got a man to work for me I certainly would never take a nazi. I submit that these men should have been sent back long ago. But if you are going to lift the ceiling on wheat and provide the same price as they receive in the United States, then let us go all the way. If that is what the leader of the opposition wants, why does he not say so? It is all very well for him to advocate a wheat policy, but if inflation overtakes us who will be held responsible by the Canadian people? This government will be held responsible, and that is where the difference lies. This government is responsible for the welfare of the people of this country. But when one is in opposition these statements can be made, because if anything disastrous happened—and I claim it would happen if the ceilings were taken off—the entire blame would then rest with the present government. What would happen in British Columbia and elsewhere in Canada if there were no ceiling price on lumber? I know some people in British Columbia who are so eager to get lumber that they would gladly pay $100 for a thousand feet of it. We are thankful for the fact that there is a ceiling price on it. But that is only but one example.

We produce enough lumber for our own people, but there are other factors which enter into the sale and disposal of Canadian lumber. There is the matter of shipping our lumber to Great Britain and keeping our trade both with Britain and the United States open, and let us not forget that the United States supply us with 50 per cent of our coal. One might ask why we do not produce all the coal here, and why we have to depend upon the United States.

In the past year more lumber was produced in Canada than in any other year in our history. But, as everyone knows, we are supplying Great Britain and a certain percentage is going to the United States. Those are markets which must be maintained. The lumber manufacturers have said thus far, without contradiction, that if all the lumber in this country were sold in Canada the price would jump from $15 to $25 a thousand immediately, due to labour costs and the price of logs which they purchased in the open market. That statement has never been refuted.

Let us again look at prices in the United States. All our fishermen who catch fish in Canadian waters, on both the Atlantic and the Pacific, would have to get the same price as they get in the United States. Workers would have to receive the same pay. Where would it all end? The whole thing comes down to this that the people in the United States are not in as good position as we are in Canada, where price ceilings have been kept down by the present government.

My chief reason for rising this evening was to deal with the statements made by the leader of the opposition. My analysis and my reading of the figures presented by the bureau of statistics certainly do not bear out what he said. The only conclusion one can draw from his statement is that the price of wheat in this country should follow the United States price. He and his party evidently are in favour of lifting the lid off price ceilings. I say to the people of this country, God help us if that happens.

Mr. H. R. ARGUE (Wood Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I was glad to hear the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) make clear to the house the policy of the Progressive Conservative party. The party for which he was speaking this evening wants controls lifted from everything. I think reasonable people in Canada everywhere know that this would mean inflation. And when the spiral of inflation comes, the workers, farmers, small business people and professional people are caught in that spiral and suffer tremendously.

It has been suggested by many hon. members that the workers and farmers do not see eye-to-eye on the policy of price increases. May I point out that recently in Saskatchewan the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, the Canadian Congress of Labour and the Saskatchewan Teachers' Federation set up the Saskatchewan occupational group council and issued a joint statement respecting their policy on ceiling prices.

First of all, they pointed out that as a solution of the spiralling of prices we request the reestablishment of price ceilings as legally in force in August, 1944. Further they said:

> We agree with the principles of parity prices, and we suggest it be placed upon the basis of $1.55 per bushel for wheat, with a royal commission appointed to set all items and wages in comparison thereto.

That organization representing farmers, labourers and professional people went on record as supporting parity prices, and saying that $1.55 a bushel for wheat was something close to parity price. They also asked that the government provide equal representation of all occupational groups, on the wartime prices and trade board, or on any other price control board. This agrees with the policy of the C.C.F. as enunciated many times, in that any board having to do with the making of policy affecting the people of Canada in an economic way should have on it representatives of the farmers, the industrial workers, small business and the professional people in Canada.

The council further stated that if any logical reason were given by the government why the requests for a return to the price ceilings of 1944, with certain exceptions, were not followed, then they supported the stand of the United Farmers for a 20 per cent increase in the prices of grain. They, too, were supporting a policy of parity prices, because they said that if the cost of things the farmer has to buy goes up then prices of commodities the farmer has to sell should also go up.

The leader of the Progressive Conservative party (Mr. Bracken), speaking on his amendment, made certain that he did not criticize the government in any respect for having allowed the 12½ per cent increase in the price of farm implements. He did not say that the implement companies were not deserving of it. One can see, if he reads the speeches of members of the Progressive Conservative party, that they are supporting big business from one end of Canada to the other—and I shall be the first to admit that they are doing a fine job of it.

Much has been said in the debate about the reduction in the selling costs of farm implements. It is true that there has been a considerable reduction. I do not think the precise nature of that reduction in selling costs has been pointed out to the house. When we understand how the reduction has taken place we shall see that it is permanent, and that in some respects it has not been brought about in the most admirable way.

Ten years ago, if a man in a small town were in the implement business, he was an implement agent. He had little to invest by way of capital. That man was simply the contact man for the implement companies. He talked to farmer customers and drew up a slate of prospects for various implements. He sent that slate of prospects to the implement companies, and they in turn sent a salesman to the town. The agent would get into the salesman's car and they would go out to the farmer's home. Then, if a sale took place, and payment were to be made on time basis, the company would take the responsibility of making collections. The agent would receive his commission, and he had nothing to lose as long as the sale went through.

Then, too, the companies used to stock repairs for implement agents. Every once in a while the auditor would come around and check the stock of repair parts, and the agent would be asked to pay for the repair parts he had sold. The point is that the implement agents were not forced to take any credit risks and were not asked to put a great deal of their money into the business.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is not true.

Mr. ARGUE: That is true. I happen to have had direct association with the implement business in Saskatchewan, and those are the facts. I venture to say that to-day 80 per cent of the people who were implement agents have now nothing to do with the selling of farm implements. Perhaps twenty per cent of those people are now dealers and they are in a much different position from what they were in when they were agents. A dealer must put in a complete machine repair and service shop. He must hire mechanics and supply tools. He must carry his own stock of repair parts. He must buy the machines from the company and sell them to the farmers. If we get back to time sales in the future, should any loss occur the implement dealer will absorb it and the implement company will lose nothing because, as soon as a machine leaves their hands, it is completely paid for. I want to point out the growing monopolization in the implement distribution field. The small business man no longer has a chance of making a living; instead he is asked to put thousands of dollars of his own money into a very risky business. When the squeeze comes he is the one who will be squeezed out. In presenting his statement to the house after the increase had taken place, the minister said as reported at page 853 of Hansard:

> In their submissions the companies disclosed increased costs since the basic period of 1941 averaging, roughly, materials and components twenty per cent, labour twenty-eight and a half per cent, and general overhead twenty-three per cent.

I think it would have been fairer to the people of Canada generally and to hon. members if we had been given an opportunity to hear the submissions made by the implement companies, to conduct a thorough investigation into those submissions and then attempt to find out if increases were necessary and, if so, how much they should be. According to the implement companies, material costs have increased twenty per cent. I wonder what part of that increase was due to the increase of $5 a ton in the price of steel allowed some time previously. When steel was increased $5 a ton it meant that in each process in which steel was used there was a pyramiding of the $5 a ton increase. If any of the increase in the cost of materials was due to the increase in the price of steel, then this government is responsible for the increased cost of materials.

We were told by the implement companies that the cost of labour has increased 28½ per cent. I do not know if that is true and I am not going to pass judgment on that statement, but we should have been given sufficient evidence to know whether or not it was true. On looking at the report of the parliamentary committee which sat in 1937 to consider farm implement prices, I find that of the labour costs of producing a machine, 51 per cent was indirect labour. Of that indirect labour, one-quarter was for the payment of foremen and foremen's assistants and one-third was for the wages of factory executives and clerical workers. I should like to know if any large part of that 28½ per cent increase in the cost of labour is due to large increases in the wages paid to foremen and factory executives.

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. ARGUE: The minister assures me that that is not so. I hope he is correct, but I should like to see evidence of it. Surely the people of Canada will say that if part of that increased labour cost has been given to the foremen and factory executives they do not want to pay that additional cost. The company said that the overhead had increased 23 per cent. We do not know whether their depreciation calculations were reasonable. We do not know whether the fixed payments on capital were reasonable. But we do know that in 1944 the Massey-Harris Company made $1,800,000 profit, which was 80 per cent more than they made prior to the war. The Cockshutt Plow Company doubled their profits from 1937 to 1944. These figures show that these companies have been doing quite well. We should know whether the trend toward increased profits has changed; we should know whether these companies could have gone on increasing their profits with the old retail prices. I suggest that these questions have not been fully answered.

Mr. ILSLEY: They were answered by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C.

Mr. ARGUE: I shall deal with him in a minute. The minister went on to state, as reported at page 852 of Hansard:

> I should add that the analysis of costs conducted by the prices board indicated that a price increase of upwards of 30 per cent above 1941 levels would have been required to regain 1941 profit percentage margins for the farm implement industry. Consequently, the price advance of only 12½ per cent means, admittedly, a serious profit squeeze upon the industry.

I am going ahead to prove that that statement is not in accordance with the evidence as we have it in this house, nor is it in accordance with the statistics to which we have access. The increase of 30 per cent refers to factory costs, and the parliamentary assistant stated that. What we want to know is what the 12½ per cent increase in the retail price means when it is applied to the factory cost. I have before me the proceedings of the special committee on farm implement prices, and on page 138 is a table setting out the total costs and sales realizations of typical implements manufactured in Canada. This table gives the cost of the various items going into a machine. The retail price is taken as 100, and over a long period of years the cost of materials is shown to be 27·01 per cent of the retail price. We are told that the material cost increased 20 per cent. If that is so, then a 5·4 per cent increase in the retail price would take care of the increase in the material cost.

It is stated in this table that the labour cost is equal to 8·64 per cent of the retail selling price. We were told by the Minister of Finance that the labour cost had increased 28½ per cent. In order completely to cover the increased cost of labour the retail selling price needed to be increased only 2·46 per cent. We should not be told any more that prices are going up because labour is getting more. I have shown by these statistics that the claimed increase in labour costs amounts to only 2·46 per cent of the retail selling price. We are told by the implement companies that the burden cost increased 23 per cent. The parliamentary committee found that the burden cost was 13·89 per cent of the retail price. That cost has gone up 23 per cent, so that an increase of 3·19 per cent in the retail cost of farm machines would have fully compensated the companies for the increased burden which they claim took place. Instead, the government gave the implement companies a 12½ per cent increase on all implements. The total increase in the retail selling price that would have been necessary to cover all the increased material costs, labour costs and burden costs claimed by the companies is 11·05 per cent. So that the claim by the government that they drove a hard bargain cannot be substantiated by the facts. After they came out of the conference with the implement companies, they gave the companies 1½ per cent more in a retail price increase than would have covered all the increases in all the costs which the companies claimed had taken place.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not want any misapprehensions to get abroad. The items in the cost of implements are not only those the hon. member mentioned. There is the item of direct materials, which constituted 38·6 per cent in 1941, and in 1946 it constituted 55 per cent of the cost of this particular implement, which is a 20-run double disc drill. Then labour, direct, in 1946 constituted 11 per cent of the cost, and labour, indirect (70 per cent of factory overhead) 17·2 per cent; other factory overhead, 7·3 per cent; engineering, development, warehousing, shipping, general and administrative, 13·4 per cent; selling expense 17·3 per cent. Then there was factory profit or loss, which was nil without the increase granted. I can give, and I will if I have time, the increases that took place in the various items of cost, between 1941 and 1946 as regards that particular implement. Those increased costs showed a factory loss of $53.08 on that implement. My hon. friend cannot pick out just two or three items of cost but must take the whole lot if he is going to present a correct picture.

Mr. ARGUE: I assure the minister that I did take the whole lot as presented to the parliamentary committee, which constituted the picture for Ontario and for Regina. Those facts are substantiated, and for the minister to bring into the house at this time figures on one particular implement as the minister has done is merely to shift the whole basis of his argument.

Mr. ILSLEY: I have similar figures for a number of other implements.

Mr. ARGUE: We would like to have them. We have not yet been given a decent explanation. The parliamentary assistant had this to say:

> The Minister of Finance has already informed the house that such cost increases were in excess of twenty per cent over this period and such cost increases could not be offset entirely by a reduction in general expenses.

But all the increased costs that the parliamentary assistant referred to have to do with factory costs, material costs, labour costs, general overhead costs.

Mr. ILSLEY: I want to correct that. The figures given by the hon. member for Victoria, British Columbia, were after crediting the saving in selling expenses. The saving in selling expenses between 1941 and 1946 was 20 per cent, and between 1936 and 1939, 40 per cent. But making a comparison between 1941 and 1946 the figures given by the hon. member for Victoria, British Columbia, were after giving credit for the saving in selling expenses. If the selling expenses had not been deducted the amount of increase that would have been required to save the companies from an absolute loss would have been considerably greater than the increase which was actually given.

Mr. ARGUE: The Minister of Finance gave a statement to the house. I think what he is saying now substantiates what I have said, that a complete explanation has not been given to this house, and I would suggest that he give it all in one speech, instead of taking up parts of my time here and there.

The Minister of Finance stated that the increased costs were on materials, labour and overhead. We shall just leave out for the moment what the hon. member for Victoria, British Columbia, had to say. I have substantiated, I believe, and the minister can read my speech in Hansard to-morrow, that on the basis of the percentage costs of the retail price as shown by the report of the special committee of this house in 1937, the companies have been given a retail price increase that more than covers all the increases in costs which they claim have taken place. The parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance listed a number of machines, and he went over them to point out the comparison between the price relief that had been given and the cost increase. Then he had this to say:

> I think the house will agree that the implements selected are in common use by farmers, and it is therefore important to note that in all but one of the cases the amount of relief provided is appreciably less than the actual cost increase incurred.

Looking over the list of implements which he gave, I see a five-foot mower. There are not many of those sold in Canada. I see also a manure spreader. That may be of some use to the farmers but I think it would be of much more use to the members of this house.

I made it my business to find out the value of the various implements that have been sold in Canada in a recent year. I was able to obtain the figures for 1943. I think the value of the different implements that are sold in any one year is important, because all of us will realize that if an implement company can make an unusually high profit on one implement, and if that particular implement brings in much more revenue than any other implement, the company can afford to make only a little profit on some other implements so long as it is making a lot of profit on its most popular implement.

On the 8½-foot one-way disc the companies were given an increase in price relief of $3.62 above the cost increase. In 1943 all of the drills sold in Canada—and that includes the 13-run single disc drill, the 20-run double disc drill and all other drills—amounted in value to $730,300. The value of the one-way discs sold was $2,064,500. The company sold one-ways to the value of almost three times the amount they received for their seed drills. So that, naturally, if the implement companies can make a large profit on one-ways, which sell to a value of three times as much as all drills, they can afford to take a lesser profit on the drills that they sell.

The value of the binders sold in 1943 was $582,700. There were sold $2,064,500 worth of one-way discs, almost four times as many one-way discs in value as the binders sold in that year. So, that, if the companies can make satisfactory profits on the one-way disc they can afford to take a lesser profit on binders, because they are selling so many more one-way discs in value than they are selling binders. Anyone in western Canada knows that the one-way is the most popular implement, that the trend has been for farmers to buy more and more one-way discs. Many farmers are seeding their crop with the one-way disc and are doing all their summer-fallow operations with these implements. That is a trend which will be continued. In the future there will be even more one-ways sold in relation to binders and seed drills than have been sold in the past. So that the companies stand to gain by government policy even more in the future than they are able to gain at this time.

The parliamentary assistant assured the house that increased selling costs had gone down by 40 per cent. I would refer to the parliamentary committee report on farm implement prices. The committee found that on a long-time average, distribution expenses were 19·46 per cent of the value of net sales, and that net sales equal 75·85 per cent of the retail price. Therefore distribution expenses are approximately 15 per cent of the retail price. The parliamentary assistant has assured the house that the companies have saved 40 per cent of that, which means that they now save $6 out of every $100 that is spent on farm implements. On the basis of their savings, their net profit will be increased by $6 on each $100 of retail price, and they have been given an increased price which will net to them, on the basis of statistics and correct evidence, an additional amount of 1½ per cent more than their claimed increases in factory costs. The committee report further shows that factory costs were slightly less than 50 per cent of the retail price. So that on the basis of the squeeze treatment that the government gave implement companies on April 13 last they can look forward to making an additional profit on factory costs of 15 per cent more than they have ever made in the past.

Mr. BURTON: What a lovely squeeze!

Mr. ARGUE: I submit, in conclusion, that this house has not been given adequate proof that increased costs did occur, or, if they did occur, that they were justified; that the 12½ per cent retail price increase more than covers the claimed increased costs which the companies say have taken place; and on top of that, thrown in along with that, the 40 per cent savings which the companies have made will mean that they will now be able to make a much higher profit.

I suggest that the government would be following a sound and logical policy if they withdrew the 12½ per cent increase and if they made an adequate inquiry into the costs of producing farm implements in 1946. We know that large profits have been made by the implement companies in the past. The house has no assurance that these large profits have not been made in the last two or three years; more than that, we have substantial evidence to show that these profits have been maintained and, in some instances, increased; and I submit that, on all the statistical evidence and the authentic evidence which is available to members of parliament, we cannot arrive at any other conclusion than that the implement companies in the future and this year are going to be able to make far larger profits than they have ever made in the past.

I support the subamendment because these price increases certainly have been unjustifiable.

Mr. A. W. STUART (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I know I am speaking for a great majority of the people in the constituency I represent when I say that it would be disastrous to have price ceilings removed at the present time. It might be of benefit to the few, but generally, I feel, it would be responsible for making the rich richer and the poor poorer.

I personally am much more interested in having fair prices permanently placed on products of the farms and the sea than I am in having ceiling prices removed. There is an old saying that a burned child dreads the fire. I believe it would apply in this case, because many of us should remember that period during the first great war and the years following when millionaires were made overnight and less fortunate people with small incomes were unable to have more than the bare necessities of life.

As to price ceilings discouraging the production of needed food, I feel this has to a great extent been responsible for increasing production, because the primary producer could plan with some guarantee of security, knowing he would not be obliged to sell his product below the cost of production.

This security would have been greatly appreciated in the constituency I represent prior to the war and, I am sure, will be in future years if sustained by this government. Production will never fall on account of price ceilings. The same cooperation as was exemplified during the war, under difficulties relative to the shortage of man-power, will, I am sure, continue and be further increased if these people are given a chance to produce. With world conditions as we find them to-day, these men that I speak of will not let us down. Production may fall during this year. If it does, it will not be owing to any lack of the energy or will to produce, but to matters beyond the control of the producer.

It is true that a small percentage of the farmers in Charlotte depend on farming alone for their livelihood. The great proportion depend to a great extent on the products of the forests, the pulpwood, lumber, firewood and boxwood which they usually cut in the winter time. Prices paid for these commodities during the war have been encouraging. If one compares prices being paid for these commodities to-day with those paid in 1940 he will find that they compare favourably with price increases in labour or manufactured products.

The argument in favour of this movement would seem to be relative to the agricultural industry. I realize the important part this industry plays in the general welfare of this country, and I feel it warrants great consideration, because it would affect every province and a great proportion of our population. Might I remark, this industry is well represented in this house, not only by an able minister; but, from my obesrvations since I have been here, I would say that three-fourths of the members of this house represent agricultural communities, and I would also say that three-fourths of the time of this house have been taken up in discussing matters pertaining to agriculture.

It would appear that too few people realize that there are other primary producers in Canada than farmers, and that their problems might be quite as important to them as to the problem now under discussion is to the farmers. I wish to make my position clear; I do not want to give the impression in any way that I consider the farming industry unimportant. It is one of our greatest industries, and certainly I regard it as such. In the past, prices of farm products have fluctuated greatly, but I should like to point out certain advantages which this industry has always had as compared with the products of the sea. The fisherman has an extremely perishable products, which must be sold immediately it is taken from the sea. It cannot be held indefinitely awaiting better market conditions. Therefore the producer is always at the mercy of the canner and exporter and must accept whatever they have to offer. That is why I am very much interested in floor prices. I feel that it would be a selfish attitude for any primary producer to take to ask for floor prices without also having ceiling prices. From past experience—and this is my own experience—I would say that the fishermen of the constituency I represent certainly would support floor prices.

During the war years the price of sardines was set by international agreement between canners in Canada and the state of Maine. This was necessary since a great part of the sardines caught in Charlotte county are exported to Maine in the fresh state. I feel that I am speaking for every sardine fisherman in Charlotte when I say that nothing would please them more or give them a greater feeling of security than to know definitely that the prices now set would be continued during the next five years or longer; and fishermen in other branches of the industry would be of the same opinion. Since prices during the past five years have been fair, their prosperity has been based solely upon their ability to produce.

The increase in the prices of farm implements has been debated and criticized by a great many hon. members. In most instances it was urged that the farmer should have an increase in the prices paid for his products or that the government should absorb the increase by way of subsidies. No doubt there would be some justification for this argument, and under certain conditions I feel that from time to time adjustments will be necessary. But might I point out that since the ceiling price on sardines was established materials used in the construction of sardine weirs—and I want hon. members to listen very carefully—have increased in price by 300 per cent. Unlike farm machinery, the greater part of this material has to be replaced each year, costing each sardine fisherman hundreds and, in some instances thousands of dollars annually.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Could the hon. gentleman give us two or three examples of such equipment?

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): I can. The material used in the construction of these weirs is wood. The sticks that are driven into the ground are anywhere from twenty to sixty feet in length. In 1940 I could buy a fifty-foot stick for $3.50. In 1946 they are $12.50 each. That is just one case. Three hundred per cent is a fair, conservative estimate. I can show you plenty of fishermen with equipment in the water worth thousands of dollars.

Mr. BLACKMORE: What kind of equipment would that be? Remember this is all strange to us.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): I realize that. This equipment would be wood and nets. To-day a man may have $5,000 worth of equipment in the water. To-night a bad storm may come up and he is swept off the map. Another great disadvantage is that it is utterly impossible to insure any part of that equipment. The fisherman has to put it in the water and take his chance. If he loses it he is licked. There is no insurance. The price of boats has gone up in the same proportion. A boat worth $500 in 1940 is worth $2,000 to-day, and that is no exaggeration.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Could the hon. member give the relative prices of the nets?

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): Government control has kept the price of nets practically where it was in 1940. I should say that in 75 per cent of the cases the materials used are supplied by the farmers of Charlotte county. That is one great benefit I know they are receiving to-day, because I am helping to pay it. I can assure hon. members that not one of these fishermen who are paying these increased costs has ever asked for a subsidy, and I can assure the house that as long as they can they will stand on their own feet.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Does the hon. member believe they can stand on their own feet, with such increased costs?

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): They are standing on their own feet and not asking for help. They will not ask for help as long as they can make a living, and they are ready to work for it. Another thing I might mention is that I have heard a great deal of talk in this house about the hours the farmer puts in and the way he works. I spent twenty-one years on the water, and I think in that time I did as much work as any farmer in the House of Commons. I feel that I have put in longer hours than any farmer in this house in order to make a living. In the winter time I have been twenty miles off shore, taking sardines on board a boat, and I should like to see some of the farmers in this house to-night in the same position, so that they would appreciate that the fisherman works for what he gets.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The hon. member does not suppose the farmers are antagonistic toward the fishermen?

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): No. The only thing I suggest is that 75 per cent of the time of this house is taken up in discussing the problems of the farmer.

Mr. BLACKMORE: We are interested in your problems, too.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): I feel that this agitation for the removal of controls has a tendency to encourage manufacturers and others in Canada to hold materials off the market at the present time, in the hope that they may be materially benefited. I really believe that to be true. I have one solution to offer. I should like to see this government remove the duty from all materials that are in short supply, to permit them to come in from the United States duty free for a period of thirty, sixty or ninety days, or for an indefinite period. I believe that would clear out some of this material which might be in storage awaiting the removal of price control.

In conclusion, I should like to quote from an article which appeared in the Montreal Daily Star of May 11, 1946. Hon. members will realize that this is not a Liberal newspaper, but from my short experience here my impression is that many of the discussions which arise in this house are promoted entirely for political reasons. To support that view, I should like to read part of this article, which is headed, "Party politics in foreground." It states:

> The element of party politics seems consistently in evidence. It arises in connection with the agitation for the removal of price controls, with farm production very conspicuous just now and it is likewise displayed in the sustained attack upon the spy case procedure. Some methods followed at the time are admitted to have been unusual. The question is whether a distinction may properly be drawn between an ordinary criminal case and one in which the safety of the state is involved. In this instance, the whole case of the crown, it is urged, might have been frustrated had the alleged conspirators been allowed to get together personally, or through counsel.
> The political factor is also apparent in the dominion-provincial conference affair and the collaboration there of Mr. Drew and Mr. Duplessis. Prime Minister King has declined to be drawn out but what he did say on Thursday confirmed the forecast in the Star that the government's position will be revealed in the budget and not before. Quite likely, it will be delivered by the end of May.

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): In the very few minutes that remain, I should like to make a few remarks on an aspect of price control. I do so especially because I wish to refer to some remarks made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) in this house in December last. I hope I realize the difficulties that face those who are dealing with price controls. I do not speak at all lightly of this subject. There are certain necessities, particularly things like rent, where I think price control has been justified and, so far as my opinion goes, is still justified. But it seems to me that what we entirely lack is any indication of principle, and, indeed, any indication of practice to give one an idea as to the directions in which the mind of the government is moving. I should like to read briefly some remarks made by the Minister of Finance on December 18 last, and then refer to him an instance which has come to my own attention quite recently. I do this in the hope that quite possibly it may be of some interest to him; and it might even lead to certain reconsiderations of what was done, not so much in this case, because it has been taken care of in another way, but a reconsideration of the principle which guided the department in this case. The remarks of the minister that I wish to read are based upon a question that I asked him in December last. I said, granted we need controls on necessaries, does that apply to luxuries and does that apply in particular to a thing like jewellery? Here is what the minister said, as reported at page 3738 of Hansard:

> I have discussed the matter with the officials and I have put the question to them: Why can you not take the price ceiling off jewellery and a long list of other things? We have gone into that question very fully, and it is extraordinarily difficult to do it unless you see the end of price control in sight, because you cannot pick out any class of things that do not enter in some form into the cost of other things. As I say, I have no time to enter into it in detail, but it is most difficult. The policy now is an over-all price ceiling, with an increasing tendency toward increases on certain articles.

Having referred to that, I wish to bring to the attention of the minister and of the house a small incident that came to my attention a week or two ago. I was communicated with by two friends of mine who were blacksmiths in Huntsville. They told me that they had applied for an increase in their schedule, and had been turned down. I got in touch with wartime prices and trade board and explained the difficulty to them. They were sympathetic, and I am bound to say that I used the expression that I thought controls on small things like this are fantastic. I could not really believe they entered importantly into the question of inflation. I thought the official to whom I talked was sympathetic to what I said. In fact, what he said to me was this; he asked me to let the matter stand for a week. From the way he talked I got the impression—and I think I was entitled to get it—that he hoped within a week the ceiling might be taken off. I called him up a week later, and he said to me that it had not been possible to take the ceiling off but that they were dealing with the matter in another way by giving it an increase of rate. They did give the increase of rate, and I think the particular problem of my friends is dealt with for the moment.

The reason I raise this point—and I am glad the minister is in the house to-night—is that I submit to him and to this house that surely we are getting doctrinaire views on patterns—I think that was the word the minister used; that it all fits into a pattern. Surely that does take us on extraordinary lengths into the matter of doctrinaire views. Here is a man shoeing horses in Huntsville. Incidentally, I believe the price that he asked was perfectly agreeable to the people who were asked to pay it. His present schedule was clamped down at a time when prices had been going on unchanged for many years. This price is clamped down on him, and his costs have gone up in the interval. He and his friends were perfectly agreeable to reaching an agreement among themselves, but they could not do that because of the pattern. That is my story. It is a simple thing, but I submit to the minister that at the present time what people are groping for is something in the way of a principle. It is hard for me to believe that any principle of orderly and common-sense release of controls is in practice when a small thing of that kind can take place and be given effect to. I was saying to the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) this evening that one of the few Latin tags I could still remember from my time as a law student was de minimis non curat lex which means, "the law does not concern itself with little things". I suggest that should also apply to the wartime prices and trade board.

Finally, I would say that if I am right in my attitude toward this particular case, and if I am right in assuming, as I did assume, that it is symptomatic of a great many others, then it seems to me that there is a great deal of room for ordinary common sense to be introduced into the subject of controls, difficult as I admit it to be.

On motion of Mr. Bryce the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ILSLEY: I move that the house do now adjourn. With regard to to-morrow, this debate will be continued and, I devoutly hope, will be concluded. If it is, we should like to call at least three departments in committee of supply. The departments would be labour, post office and veterans affairs, and also having priority I should say over calling these departments even would be the matter of interim supply. We have run out of money and we need some more. I have to get interim supply to-morrow some way or another, or the carrying on of the public business will be seriously prejudiced.

Mr. BRACKEN: If I may comment on the minister's remarks I should like to say that there will be no objection from this party to putting more departments into supply, and we shall be glad to facilitate the voting of interim supply. I may say that the minister spoke to me about this a day ago. I complained, and I think with justice, that this particular motion had been held up for three weeks. I take some responsibility for suggesting to the minister that it ought to be dealt with. I said it was not fair to this section of the house to have the motion standing day after day and not dealt with. The minister has been good enough to bring on the debate. There will be no disposition on the part of this party to extend the debate at all, but I feel that it should be dealt with. Once it has been disposed of, we shall facilitate in every way the granting of interim supply. There may be some questions on detail. The minister has already had two months' interim supply and he now wants two months more. In addition to that, he wants something extra for some departments which require more funds in the earlier part of the year than in the latter part of the year. I should think that the house would be disposed to meet any reasonable request that the minister makes with respect to the granting of interim supply.

Mr. ILSLEY: I wish to thank the leader of the opposition for his offer of cooperation in the matter of interim supply.

With regard to the holding up of this debate, I felt that we were proceeding as fast as we could, with one exception, and that was the absence of myself from Ottawa for two days. That was unavoidable, and it brought about the chief delay in proceeding with the debate. I believe those days were Monday and Tuesday of last week.

Immediately upon my return we proceeded with the debate. However, be that as it may, we hope to conclude this debate to-morrow and get into supply. If we should finish interim supply, and get those three departments in, we shall be free to take up any other bills or resolutions on the order paper. But I doubt whether there will be much time for that, it being Wednesday.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It is not clear to me why there should be three departments brought in.

Mr. ILSLEY: Only five departments are in at the present time, and to facilitate the work of the house we thought we should have three more. There are twenty or more departments to come, and that will give ample opportunity for motions on going into supply to make known grievances. What I am suggesting is, I feel sure, in accordance with the practice of former years.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

Wednesday, May 22, 1946.

The house met at three o'clock

PRIVILEGE

REFERENCE TO REPORT IN MONTREAL "GAZETTE" OF MAY 21

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, may I crave your indulgence and the indulgence of the house for a moment to make a word of personal explanation with regard to a story concerning my personal plans which is being carried in many newspapers and which I am told was also the subject of comment last night over the radio. For instance, in the Montreal Gazette the story appears under this title:

> St. Laurent to retire soon from public life.
> Ottawa, May 21 (CP)—

I take that to mean the Canadian Press.

> Justice Minister St. Laurent said to-day in an interview he plans to retire from public life shortly and return to the law practice he left in Quebec in 1941 to take the justice department portfolio for the war period.

I must say that I gave no such interview to the Canadian Press. The night before last I did have a conversation with a newspaper man and there is a paragraph in this which I certainly did authorize. The last paragraph reads:

> He termed as "ridiculous" a newspaper report which said speculation among back-bench Liberals was to the effect that Prime Minister Mackenzie King would retire within a year, appoint Mr. St. Laurent to succeed him, and continue to sit as Liberal member for Glengarry until the next election, when he would retire.

I said that that was ridiculous and that I had no objection to being quoted as saying that. As to the preceding paragraphs about plans of mine to retire shortly from public life, I have given no interview about that, nor have I authorized the publication of any such statement. There are many newspaper men who have known ever since my first meeting with the press when I came to Ottawa as Minister of Justice in 1941 that I retained the hope of getting back at a convenient time to my law practice, but I have no definite plans that would warrant any announcement. I would not say anything about this except that the language used would appear to convey the impression that I had made a declaration about it for publication. Whenever these plans are sufficiently definite to warrant an announcement, that announcement probably will be made in a more formal manner than in the course of casual conversation with a friendly newspaper man.

PRESS REPORT OF MEETING WITH LABOUR DELEGATION

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I should like to say a word about a meeting that I had yesterday with a labour delegation. The press said that this was a stormy meeting, but I think those who know me best know that I do not take part in stormy meetings.

Mr. COLDWELL: Not if you can help it.

Mr. MITCHELL: Not if I can help it. I will say that we had a very frank discussion, and I say that in a kindly way. I just wanted to observe that I do not think it adds to industrial relations in these difficult times to express an opinion of that kind. I have no objection to the man who wrote the news story, but it was not a stormy meeting.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

RECOMMENDATION OF 27TH SESSION OF GENERAL CONFERENCE OF INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I desire to lay on the table copy of the authentic texts of the recommendation which was adopted at the twenty-seventh session of the general conference of the international labour organization held at Paris from October 15 to November 5, 1945, in accordance with the provisions of article 406 of the treaty of Versailles and corresponding provisions of other treaties of peace; also the text of P.C. 1889 of May 14, 1946, dealing with the competence of parliament with regard to the subject matter of this recommendation.

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

VICTORIA DAY

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Acting Prime Minister): I was asked the other day whether the house would sit on May 24, and I said that I expected it would. The cabinet has given consideration to this question and has decided that the house ought to sit on May 24. That is the usual practice. We have a long programme ahead of us, and we feel that we would not be justified in moving the adjournment of the house on Thursday night until the following Monday.

Mr. J. L. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the applause which greeted the statement of the Acting Prime Minister that the house would sit on May 24 came mostly from the Ontario members, and to a lesser extent from Quebec members. We shall find very few of those members sitting here with us on the 24th. Once again it will be found that the maritime members and the members from the west will be carrying the white man's burden. I would ask that the decision be reconsidered, if possible, and I should like to have some supporters.

3. The chairman and the other board members serve the wartime prices and trade board without remuneration.

INCREASE IN PRICE OF FARM IMPLEMENTS

Mr. MENARY:

Is a manufacturer of farm implements permitted to claim the increase in price authorized on April 13, 1946, in cases where implements were ordered and deposits made thereon prior to the increase?

Mr. MAYHEW: May I suggest that this question be dropped? It cannot be answered by either yes or no. What the hon. gentleman is really seeking is a legal opinion, and it cannot be given to him here.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

Mr. GRAYDON: If I might be permitted a word, Mr. Speaker, an answer to this question has been declined because the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance felt that it was asking for a legal opinion. With great deference I suggest that that is not so, and I think on reflection he will agree. Actually this is a question of the utmost urgency in agricultural sections right across Canada, I suppose there is no other question that those interested in agriculture are more eager to have fully answered, having regard to the price increase on agricultural implements announced by the Minister of Finance. If the parliamentary assistant will look at the question he will find more involved in it that a legal opinion. I think that a clarification of the regulations should be put on Hansard so that the people may know exactly what the situation is. I would ask the parliamentary assistant to reconsider his answer.

Mr. MAYHEW: This question has been given a great deal of consideration. There are many complications in connection with it. There are a good many orders which might be considered contracts binding upon a company. It would be pretty difficult to answer the question in the way suggested, because we have no definite contract in front of us. A manufacturer might have a provision in his sales plan that the price quoted was applicable only on the date on which the order was placed. In other cases he might have actually entered into a contract. But to all intents and purposes the price goes into effect at the date the announcement was made.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I ask the parliamentary assistant to make as full a statement as he can at the next sitting, outside of any question of giving a legal opinion?

Mr. MAYHEW: I shall be glad to give the matter consideration, to see if anything further can be said.

[Later]

Mr. MAYHEW: The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon) asked if the answer could not be reconsidered, and I said that it could, and that I would reconsider it. However, it did not appear on the order paper yesterday, nor is it on to-day, but I should like the privilege of making a little amendment to the reply I gave because of the fact that the hon. member for Wellington North (Mr. Menary) brought it up in the debate last night and asked the Minister of Finance a question. The revised answer is:

The upward revision in the maximum prices of farm machinery, made effective April 13 by the board, constitutes provision for appropriate increases in prices, but does not make such increases mandatory.

In any case where a buyer and seller had a firm contract as of April 13 for future delivery of farm machinery at prices lower than the new maximum price, the buyer has the ordinary protection of law against any variation in the contract price, although if both buyer and seller agree, the price might be adjusted within the limits of the revised maximum price.

BRIDGE OVER BOW RIVER AT CALGARY

Mr. JOHNSTON:

1. Has the government let the contract for a new bridge over the Bow river at Calgary, to replace the Cushing bridge?
2. If so, what is the amount of the contract?
3. What will be the location?
4. When will construction start?

[Mr. Graydon.]

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull):

1. No.
2, 3 and 4. Answered by No. 1.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland):

1. How many persons drew unemployment insurance benefits in Nova Scotia during (a) the month of October, 1945; (b) the month of April, 1946, stating the number for each district?
2. What was the total amount disbursed in Nova Scotia during (a) the month of October, 1945; (b) the month of April, 1946, stating amount for each district?
3. What was the total disbursements for the six months period ending April 30, 1946?
4. How many persons in Nova Scotia have drawn their full benefits under their initial claims?

Mr. MITCHELL:

1. (a) October, 1945, 2,203; (b) April, 1946, 7,079.

Note.—No information is available as to district.

2. (a) October, 1945, $88,418; (b) April, 1946, $311,410.36.

Note.—No information is available as to district.

3. $1,362,778.36.

4. 43 in 1942; 102 in 1943; 488 in 1944; 972 in 1945; 129 in January, 1946; 160 in February, 1946.

Note.—It is quite possible that many of these claimants who exhausted their benefit rights for the first year have subsequently set up another benefit year.

BARRINGTON PASSAGE—CAPE SABLE ISLAND COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland):

1. Have surveys and estimates been made by the federal government of the cost of building a causeway, bridge or wharves for the use of ferry to cross Barrington Passage to Cape Sable island, Nova Scotia?
2. If so (a) on what dates; (b) what estimates; (c) what expenditures have been made to date?
3. Did the provincial government of Nova Scotia request the federal government to make such surveys and construct such works or contribute to the cost of same?
4. If so, what undertakings have been given?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull):

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. No.
4. Answered by No. 3.

SUBSIDIES

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

1. Since Canada declared war on Germany in the last great war what articles and goods have been subsidized by the government of Canada?

2. What is the amount of subsidy paid on each of such articles?

3. What is the total amount paid by the government as such subsidies?

4. What articles are now subsidized?

5. On what articles have subsidies been discontinued and when?

Mr. MARTIN: I would point out to the hon. gentleman and to the house that during the present session two orders have been passed by the house relating to subsidies. One was moved by the hon. member for Peterborough West (Mr. Fraser) on April 13, as follows:

1. What subsidies were paid by the government during the year 1945?

2. What subsidies have been paid since January 1, 1946?

The reply to these questions was tabled on May 2 of this year. Another question was asked on May 20 last, by the hon. member for Beauharnois-Laprairie (Mr. Raymond), reading:

What subsidies were paid by the government during the years 1939 to 1944, inclusive?

The return has not yet been tabled, but will be shortly, and as it will cover the information asked for in this question I ask that the question be dropped.

Question dropped.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

WAR ASSETS—AEROPLANES

Mr. CASTLEDEN:

1. To what corporations, firms, provincial governments, or individuals, have serviceable aeroplanes been sold by War Assets Corporation to date?

2. What firms, corporations or individuals have been used by War Assets as recognized dealers in the sale of serviceable aircraft?

3. What type of aircraft and how many have been sold to each of these firms as of April 1, 1946?

4. What was the price of each type of aircraft so sold?

Mr. McILRAITH: Return tabled.

PARK STEAMSHIP VESSELS

Mr. MacINNIS:

1. How many of Park Steamship vessels have been sold by the government from April 1, 1945, to date?

2. Who were the purchasers in each case?

3. Was any provision in the agreements of sale to the effect that the vessels sold must be operated by Canadian officers and crews?

Mr. McILRAITH: Return tabled.

SALE OF RADIO LICENCES IN NORTH VANCOUVER

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North):

What are (a) the names; (b) the residences; (c) the military service of each of the men now selling radio licences in a house-to-house canvass in the city and district of North Vancouver?

WARTIME PRICES AND TRADE BOARD—PUBLICATIONS AND ADVERTISING

Mr. FRASER:

1. What publications and advertising has the Wartime Prices and Trade Board used during 1945 and 1946?

2. What is the cost of each of these publications for 1945 and 1946?

3. What was the cost of other advertising during 1945 and 1946?

WAR ASSETS—CARBERRY AND BRANDON AIRPORTS

Mr. MATTHEWS (Brandon):

1. How many trucks and tractors are being used in connection with the airport at Carberry, Manitoba and at No. 2 A.C.U., Brandon?

2. Are there any trucks and tractors at each of these places not being used?

3. If so, how many and of what size, in each place?

4. Under whose direction or disposal are such unused trucks and tractors at the present time?

5. Have they been declared surplus to war assets?

6. If not, when will they be so declared?

7. If so, what steps are being taken to put these trucks and tractors in circulation?

HALEY'S CORNERS, ONT., MAGNESIUM PLANT

Mr. CASTLEDEN:

For a copy of all contracts, agreements, or other arrangements made between the Department of Munitions and Supply and the Dominion Magnesium Limited or other companies or individuals regarding the construction and operation of the magnesium plant at Haley's Corners, Ontario.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ADMINISTRATION OF CANADIAN ARMY IN HOLLAND

Mr. COCKERAM:

For a copy of the report of the court of inquiry held by Lieutenant-General Price Montague, C.B., D.S.O., M.C., into the administration of the Canadian army in Holland.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Abbott) I wish to oppose this motion on the ground that it is not in the public interest to produce such reports, and also that the report is privileged and therefore should not be produced. The hon. member on the 4th of April asked the minister when the report would be produced in the house, and he was then informed that it was not customary to produce such reports in the house and that this practice would be followed. This rule has been followed previously as regards documents pertaining to military courts. The stand taken was that it was not in the public interest to produce such documentation because it would seriously hamper the administration of justice in the armed services if officers who in the course of duty are called upon to serve on these courts martial or to prepare such reports are made to feel that their actions or their statements may be debated in the House of Commons or be the subject of some controversy in this house. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that even more serious considerations exist as regards courts of inquiry. My hon. friend knows very well that courts of inquiry in the armed forces are an ordinary matter of administration, taking place every day; they are convened at the demand of the minister or of a commanding officer to inform this officer on any matter affecting the ordinary course of internal administration in the army or in the other services. As a matter of fact, the rules of procedure provided for under the Army Act state that such courts of inquiry and such reports are not admissible in evidence in courts martial which may follow; and I think it is very clear—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. This motion is not debatable. It is the privilege of the hon. member to give a reason for not accepting the motion—

Mr. ABBOTT: That is what he is doing.

Mr. SPEAKER: —but he should not make a speech.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is what I was trying to do. However, if the house feels that the reasons are sufficient I will just ask that the motion be dropped.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. COCKERAM: I had a very definite object in asking for the production of the results of this court of inquiry. K.R. & O. states that courts of inquiry may be either closed or open.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I have already ruled that motions of this kind are not debatable. If the hon. member does not want to withdraw his motion, there is only one thing to do, and it is to put the question to the house.

Mr. COCKERAM: Mr. Speaker, the reason I bring this up is that there was a court martial in Amsterdam a few days ago, and this inquiry or the subject of this inquiry was brought up at that court martial—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. COCKERAM: —with the result, Mr. Speaker, that the prosecuting officer at that court martial—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. COCKERAM: —said that he would rejoice to see the accused acquitted.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. gentleman again, but I have no alternative. If the hon. member does not consent to have the motion withdrawn, I have only one thing to do, and that is to put the question to the house. Dropped?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. FERGUSON: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: This question is not debatable. I would ask the hon. member to resume his seat.

Mr. COCKERAM: Mr. Speaker, I am not satisfied. I want either a vote or something else on it.

Mr. COLDWELL: Put the motion.

Mr. COCKERAM: Mr. Speaker, you have not put the motion. You have not done anything. You are trying to shut me out.

Mr. COLDWELL: You must put the motion.

And five members having risen:

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for York South should know that the Speaker, realizing that he is the voice of the House of Commons, is as much interested as anybody else in protecting the authority of the Chair.

Mr. COCKERAM: Put the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member knows perfectly well that it is the privilege of hon. members, if five of them rise, to have a vote taken on a motion that is before the house. When I sat down I did not see five members rise. Now that I see five members I will put the question to the house.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I respectfully suggest, Mr. Speaker, that I do not think you put the motion; you merely said, "dropped". I think you omitted to put the motion, and that is the trouble.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry, but I first read the motion before the house: Moved by Mr. Cockeram, seconded by Mr. Boucher, that an order of the house do issue as set forth in No. 4 on the order paper. I asked if it was the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion, and then the parliamentary assistant rose and gave some explanation. But I should like to insist upon one point, which I discussed a few moments ago. I believe that the Speaker is doing everything possible to be fair to both sides of the house, and to indicate plainly that he is not acting for a party—for any party—or for any side of this house; he is the voice of the House of Commons. I cannot stand and I will not stand any such reflection as was made a few minutes ago.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I do not think anyone in the house, Mr. Speaker, questions your fairness. But the fact that the parliamentary assistant made some explanation relating to this motion does not mean that the motion must be dropped, and if the hon. member moving the motion wishes it put to the house, surely it is the duty of the Speaker to put it to the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: The parliamentary assistant said in his statement that he could not comply with the motion, in that he could not produce the report. If the hon. member wants to withdraw his motion, it is his privilege to do so. If he does not want to withdraw it, the rule is quite clear that motions of this kind are not debatable. If there is not unanimous consent of the house to the motion being dropped, the Speaker has only one thing to do, and that is to put the question to the house.

Mr. ILSLEY: "Yeas" and "nays".

Mr. SPEAKER: And it will be up to the house to decide. So I will put the motion: Moved by Mr. Cockeram, seconded by Mr. Boucher: That an order of the house do issue for copy of report of the court of inquiry held by Lieutenant-General Price Montague, C.B., D.S.O., M.C., into the administration of the Canadian army in Holland.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Cockeram) which was negatived on the following division:

(In the course of the division):

Mr. BRACKEN: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that I inadvertently voted. I am paired with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), and I would like, if I may, to withdraw the vote.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is that permissible? I remember on one occasion another member of the house did the same thing and he was not allowed to withdraw his vote.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It is quite permissible as long as the declaration was made before the vote was recorded, which was done in this case.

Mr. COLDWELL: It was not allowed in the case I am thinking of.

Mr. BRACKEN: If it is not permissible I will explain it to the house and the house and the country will understand. That is the main point.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): I was paired with the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Macdonald). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I was paired with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. BROOKS: I was paired with the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Lalonde). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. GAGNON: I was paired with the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Dionne). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. STOKES: I was paired with the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Pinard). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. LACOMBE: I was paired with the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Bertrand). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Speaker, I feel that there is a matter which should be the subject of your ruling. I want to draw your attention to standing order 9, citation 84, which reads as follows:

The Speaker, when his attention has been called to a breach of order in the course of a division has directed that the division should proceed, and has dealt with the matter when the division was completed.

I bring this to the attention of the house not to reflect upon the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) because I think anyone inadvertently might do the same thing, but rather to get a clear understanding of what is the rule of the house. The life of a government—I shall not say this government—may depend on a single vote, as it once did in this house when an hon. member voted when he was paired. I would also draw Your Honour's attention to citation 72, which reads as follows:

If a member who has heard the question put should vote inadvertently, contrary to his intention, he cannot be allowed to correct the mistake, but his vote must remain as first recorded.

That has been my understanding of the rule. It was recorded when the name was called.

Mr. JACKMAN: It was not recorded—just the intention.

Mr. MACKENZIE: On the point of order, may I say that the whole question depends on the interpretation of citation 72 just recited by the hon. member. I may be in error, but my recollection is that the vote was called by the Clerk Assistant but not recorded by the Clerk. If the vote was recorded by the Clerk, then the point raised by the hon. member is well taken, but I am not sure as a matter of actual fact whether it was recorded or not.

Mr. COLDWELL: The Clerk can tell us whether it was recorded.

Mr. SPEAKER: I shall consider the question raised by the hon. gentleman and I shall try to give a clear ruling to the house to-morrow.

Mr. HOMUTH: It is not important; it is a waste of time.

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is what the whole division was.

Mr. COCKERAM: Mr. Speaker, referring to my comment before the vote was taken, I should like to say I regret the incident; after the Secretary of State had spoken you said, "Dropped", and you did not put the motion. That is why I took the action I did.

HOUSING

NOTICE OF EVICTION ON MAY 31 FROM LONDON BLOCK SASKATOON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. KNIGHT (Saskatoon City): I should like to direct a question, of which I have given notice, to the Minister of Public Works; and the Minister of Veterans Affairs is also interested. Will either minister make a statement which will remove once and for all from the minds of the tenants of the London block in Saskatoon any fear of eviction?

Hon. IAN A MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I can assure my hon. friend that every phase of the situation is being carefully explored and considered by the officers of both departments, who are at present on the ground in Saskatoon.

Mr. COLDWELL: June 1 is coming very close.

Mr. KNIGHT: This is a matter of urgency, because the evictions are to take place on May 31.

RADIO BROADCASTING

APPLICATION OF C.B.C. FOR WAVE LENGTHS OF CFRB AND CFCN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, but since he is not here perhaps his parliamentary assistant will deal with it. I want to know whether or not the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has applied to the Department of Reconstruction and Supply for the wave length now used by station CFRB in Toronto, and whether or not a similar application has been made for the wave length of CFCN in Calgary.

An hon. MEMBER: Put it on the order paper.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I have had it on the order paper for three days now.

Mr. G. J. McILRAITH (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): If the hon. member will permit his question to stand as a notice, I will have the information brought forward.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I also ask the parliamentary assistant to tell us whether these licences are annual or permanent?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Annual.

Mr. GRAYDON: How would the minister know? He did not know anything about it yesterday.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INTERIM SUPPLY—SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Acting Prime Minister): Before the first order is called I should like to suggest, in view of the importance of interim supply, that we take up interim supply now and then go on with the debate on the motion to go into supply. I am afraid that debate will not end this afternoon, having in mind what I am told about the number of speakers, and that is the only reason I am suggesting this procedure. It would just mean that by consent of the house interim supply would be granted, and then we would resume the debate just where we left off. We would not try to get in any other departments; we could not do that.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): With all respect I suggest to the Acting Prime Minister that he ask the house to continue with this debate to-day and to-morrow, and conclude it; then we will offer all cooperation in passing interim supply. I do not want to go into the reasons why a day or two ago I asked the right hon. gentleman to proceed with this debate; I do not want to get into that discussion, but I am prepared to continue this debate this afternoon and to-morrow, and to conclude it. Then we will offer our full cooperation in getting whatever is necessary in the way of interim supply. With all respect I suggest that we should finish this debate now, a debate which began nearly two and a half weeks ago but which the house was not permitted to continue until just the day before yesterday.

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): With respect may I point out that we cannot possibly have a debate on a motion to go into committee of supply on Thursday, except by suspending the standing order in relation thereto, because on Thursday the Speaker leaves the chair without the question being put.

Mr. BRACKEN: We are prepared to do that.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I find it very difficult to see how we could accede to the request of the Minister of Finance. I would be prepared to adopt the suggestion of the leader of the opposition, that the debate go on. I do not know whether we can suspend the standing order. I suppose we could do so by unanimous consent, and as far as I am concerned I would be prepared to give that consent so that it might be done to-morrow.

Mr. ILSLEY: I could get along all right on that arrangement; in fact if the debate cannot be concluded to-day I would prefer to have it proceed and concluded to-morrow, but I will have to see what can be done in the way of suspending the standing order. I will have to have that looked into between now and six o'clock. If we can have unanimous consent for the suspension of the standing order to-morrow in order that we may proceed with interim supply—

Mr. BRACKEN: I gave the consent of this party, and the leader of the C.C.F. party has already given consent on behalf of his party.

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): We shall do everything we can to facilitate this matter being brought forward to-morrow. Perhaps at that time we may have something to say about the discourtesy that has been shown in the matter of asking for interim supply.

Mr. ILSLEY: Well, I apologize for that. In previous years it has been my practice to call up the leaders of all parties on the telephone. I did not do that this time, but last evening I spoke about it publicly in the house, so as to give full notice, and I did speak to the leader of the opposition. He has a special status; he is the leader of the official opposition, and I did speak to him. Then I mentioned the matter publicly in the house, so if any leader of any other party or any other hon. member had any objection, that was the proper time to raise it. I am sorry if the hon. gentleman feels there was any discourtesy. Certainly I did not have any intention of proceeding without notice, or without giving every opportunity for exception to be taken in the house.

Mr. COLDWELL: I was in the house last night at eleven o'clock, though I was away on Monday. I thought possibly one of my colleagues had been spoken to.

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. COLDWELL: Then I feel as the leader of the Social Credit party feels. I believe when something of this sort is to be done by consent, all parties should know something about it. The leader of the opposition represents the largest opposition group in the house, but there are other parties here who are not connected with the official opposition.

Mr. BRACKEN: It is not often that I come to the defence of the Acting Prime Minister, but I want to do so on this occasion. He spoke to me about this matter, and I am sure he would have spoken to the other leaders on that occasion, but I objected to his proceeding with interim supply while this motion was on the order paper, where it had been for two and a half weeks. I think perhaps that is why the matter of speaking to the other leaders slipped his mind. That is all I want to say out of consideration for the minister.

SUPPLY

PRICE CEILING POLICIES WITH RESPECT TO FARM PRODUCTS

The house resumed from Tuesday, May 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mackenzie that the house go into committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mrs. Strum.

Mr. WILLIAM BRYCE (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I come from a constituency which contains all classes of people. It has the white collar class, which has had fixed wages plus a cost of living bonus during the war; industrial workers employed in the great railway shops adjacent to Winnipeg; the mill workers in Selkirk; the fishermen on the lakes, and also the farmers. During the war all these people have been subject to prices fixed and controlled and maintained by the government. The advances in prices of farm machinery and steel have caused this debate. I have listened patiently to all parties in the house offer their arguments, and the very thought of ceilings being broken and the spiral of inflation starting causes me a great deal of concern. I saw inflation at work when I came here as an immigrant in 1919. I became a farmer in 1920 when everything was high, and about eighteen months afterwards, cattle I had purchased for $140 and $150 were worth only $25 or $30. Surely everyone of my age must know that the same thing will happen again if we allow our price ceilings and floors to disappear.

I come now to the implement companies. The parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance has defended them and has told the house that they needed this advance. Personally I cannot see that they do. I notice from the papers of April, 1938, that the shares of Cockshutt Plow were quoted at 7 while the shares of Massey Harris were quoted at 5¼. I shall not give the quotations for the shares of other companies, as I think these two are sufficient for my purpose. By April 2 of this year the shares of Cockshutt Plow had advanced to 16¾ while those of Massey Harris had come up to 17¼. According to to-day's paper there was a further increase, Cockshutt shares being quoted at 17¼ and Massey Harris at 18½.

I admit that I know more about live stock than this sort of stock, but it seems to me that these companies must be in a sound financial position when there is this improvement in the value of their shares on the stock market. These increases show that there must be an expectancy of greater profits in the future. I cannot go into details with the Minister of Finance in the same way as those who are trained in finance, but here is the way I look at it: No one would be buying these shares unless he thought there were to be greater profits than before. I cannot forget the report made in 1937 by a committee of this house. It contained thirty-six recommendations, but I shall refer only to three which appear on page 500. They are as follows:

> 28. That the profit to the farm implement companies on the sale of replacement parts is excessive, and the price of these to the consumer should be materially reduced.
> 29. That the increases announced by the companies in January, 1936, were not justified by an increase in manufacturing or distribution costs or by the financial results of the companies in so far as these were affected by the price level of farm implements.
> 30. That over the period 1891-1936 retail prices of farm implements have been maintained at too high a level as shown by the financial returns to the companies engaged in the industry during that period.

I wonder if those things were taken into account when the machinery companies made their representations to the wartime prices and trade board. I have the gravest doubts about the increase that has been granted in the prices of farm machinery. The companies' case should have been made public, so that farmers, not only in the constituency of Selkirk but throughout the whole of Canada, could have read for themselves why it was thought that this price increase was justified.

When the leader of the Conservative party was the leader of the Liberal-Progressives in Manitoba he used to advance an argument with which I agreed. He maintained that as agriculturists made up one-third of the population they were entitled to one-third of the nation's income. I hope the leader of the opposition still holds that view.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): He still maintains the same argument.

Mr. BRYCE: I am glad to hear that. I would point out to him that the only time agriculture ever came near to getting one-third of the national income was at the end of the last war, and since we have had the stabilization of floor and ceiling prices.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): They never received it in the history of the country.

Mr. BRYCE: I said that the only time they had come near to getting it was at the end of the last war, when I came here from Scotland, and during this war. The other day the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Cleaver) placed some figures on Hansard to show that we were a long way from getting one-third of the national income. Certain hon. members who sit behind the leader of the opposition have advanced the argument that price ceilings should be abandoned, that the lid should be taken off, that we should let things go. Surely no hon. member who has the support of a farming community can be in his senses when he makes that request.

The farmer has always been the victim of prices. When he has anything to sell, he must go to the packing house or some other organization and say, "How much will you give me for this?" When he wants to buy anything, he must go and say, "How much do you want for this?" He has had to buy in a controlled market and sell in a controlled market. The worker is in the same position. He must sell his labour in a controlled market, and he must buy the necessities of life in the same type of market. Perhaps when the worker and the farmer and the fisherman become better organized—labour is organized only about twenty per cent; the farmer about the same and the fisherman much less—they will be able to combat big business, the manufacturers and the packing-houses which are all organized one hundred per cent. Even our lawyers and doctors are organized one hundred per cent.

The farmer does not want to hold up the consumer for unreasonable prices, but he must have his costs of production. Producing food for the nation must give a return to the farmer which will provide him with a standard of living equal to that enjoyed by other people. Guaranteed prices must be maintained over a period of years so that the farmer can look ahead and plan his production accordingly. The worker should have a guaranteed wage so that he will be able to budget and plan for the future.

I should like to deal for a moment with the cattle situation. A great deal has been said in recent weeks about the shortage in the supply of cattle. Personally I do not think it has been so much a shortage of cattle. The shortage of supplies can be immediately traced back to the order of the wartime prices and trade board about two years ago fixing the price for cattle for the whole year round; that is, one price irrespective of when you marketed your cattle. In the cattle business you have to look fairly well ahead and arrange your business so when the order of the wartime prices and trade board was issued the farmers took some time to reorganize their plans.

This spring has shown a lack of supplies for the simple reason that it does not pay the farmer to feed cattle in the winter time.

One hon. member to my left said a few days ago that there was really no difference between grass-fed and stall-fed cattle. I cannot agree with his view, and in support of what I think is right, I submit that the packer in Canada has always been prepared to pay two cents more for stall-fed cattle. Surely every hon. member in this house, whether he has an agricultural background or not, must realize that the feeding of cattle in this country in the winter entails a great deal of work. Even if you do not take into consideration the feeding of grain, and you only put the hay in front of the cattle and take it away from behind them, that entails a certain amount of labour that the man who markets grass-fed cattle does not have to do.

In discussing this wartime prices and trade board ruling on previous occasions with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), he has assured me that some farmers asked that the price be the same the year round. Of course I agree with him this far. If I were a rancher I would think that the Minister of Agriculture was a fine fellow, or if I were a farmer in Ontario with a few grass farms and I could buy cattle in the spring and put them on that grass, I would think the minister was a fine fellow too. But I am thinking of the man who puts in steers in the fall and feeds them through until the spring. He certainly deserves a greater return for his labour.

Coming back to the man who has been in the habit of feeding steers through the winter, there is no incentive whatever for the extra feed or the extra labour involved, and this might I point out to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley), in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, is one policy of the wartime prices and trade board previously made was steady supply of meat every month of the year. The arrangement which the wartime prices and trade board that is hindering a in my estimation on a much fairer basis, because the farmer was encouraged to feed cattle during the winter and market them during the spring months when our shortest supply comes, but under the present policy he can market his cattle any time and they must still sell at one and the same price.

Now that we are beginning to reap the fruits of the present policy of the wartime prices and trade board in this regard we can expect a flooded market this fall, when the packers will not be able to absorb the heavy run and will bid a lower price. The packer will sit back and dominate the situation and instead of the farmer getting 12 cents for his steer, as he is entitled to according to the wartime prices and trade board, he will no doubt have to take 10½ or 11 cents.

Of course I know that the minister is going to tell me that the meat board will come on the market and buy up these cattle and have them processed so that the farmer will not have to take a loss. But might I remind the minister that the packing companies cannot process what they have now; so where is the government going to have them processed?

This brings me back to a previous argument I made in the house, which is that the only ceiling or floor on cattle to-day is after they are hung up by the heels in the packing plant. The live animal is never taken into consideration; there is neither a ceiling nor a floor to protect the farmer when he sells his animals on the hoof. It is only after they are dead that the ceilings begin to apply.

The Minister of Agriculture told us last week that the subsidy to the consumer of milk is to be removed. This just throws the problem right back into the lap of the provincial milk boards. The removal of the subsidy and the resulting increase in the cost of milk to the consumer can result in either of two things—an increase in the cost of living index, or a lowering of the consumption of milk. Milk is the most necessary item in our diet. Research carried on by the medical profession, the army, air force, and navy, has proved conclusively that milk is something everyone should have. I therefore deplore the discontinuance of the subsidy on milk, both from the nutritional standpoint and because it will raise the cost of living. It will strike at the old-age pensioner and at all people of limited means—the widows, for instance, who have lost their husbands in this war, because no matter what happens, their means will remain the same.

Increases have been allowed in different commodities that the consumer has to buy. I maintain, and I think I am right, that these subsidies and these ceilings should have been maintained until goods became much more plentiful, because when you advance the price of one commodity you immediately in turn have to advance the price of another, and immediately after that you have to raise a man's wages to enable him to meet his increased cost of living

May I say in passing that the production of milk involves more drudgery than the production of any other commodity. The successful dairyman has always been the man with a family he could exploit. That is, the family milk the cows and produce the wealth, and their labour never was charged against the production of the milk. The government should maintain the ceiling and the subsidy so that these essential services to the nation may be carried on on a satisfactory basis. If you interfered with the ceiling or floor on fish, the same thing would happen to the fisherman. You would deprive him of his present income, out of which he would be compelled to pay for the expensive gear which he bought at war time prices.

The hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) pointed out to the house last night that the fishermen's problems were never discussed in the way that the farmers' problems are. I can agree with him that there are more farmer members than fishermen members in this house, but I would be the last one in this house to forget the fishermen in my constituency or any other part of Canada. He talked about the hard life and the long hours put in by the fishermen. I can agree with every word he said, because in the northern part of my constituency, where we have twenty hours of sunshine in the twenty-four, I have seen in the summer time—I did last summer—fishermen leave very early in the morning, and they were still dressing their catch by artificial light at night. This I am sure will compare favourably with the hours put in by the fishermen on the east coast. I do not think that the hardships and the risks taken by the fishermen on lake Winnipeg can be any less than those taken by the fishermen on either the east or west coast. Never a year passes but we read in our Manitoba papers that two or three fishermen have disappeared on an ice floe in their endeavours to feed a hungry world. I might say to hon. members that I have crossed the Atlantic at various times, both on modern liners and on tramp steamers, and never in all my experience have I seen rougher weather than that which can develop on lake Winnipeg. If we do not protect the ceilings and floors which have been established on fish, and at the same time see that the ceilings on the things that the fisherman has to buy are not destroyed, the risks he takes and the hardships he endures will bring him nothing.

I do not agree with my hon. friends to the right that ceilings should be taken off, but I want the government to be consistent, and not to advocate the maintenance of price controls on the floor of the house and to the people of this country and then proceed to destroy those controls. Guaranteed ceilings and floors are more needed urgently to-day than they ever were in the history of Canada, and if the government breaks them it will be condemned for generations to come.

The government has a golden opportunity now to stabilize the economy of this country and prevent inflation. I say to them, if you want to build the new world that you have promised the people of Canada, don't fail them now. I ask this with but little hope; for the only difference I see between the government and the Tories on my right is that the Tories want to blow the top right off, and the Liberals want to do it gradually. I do hope and pray that they will maintain these ceilings and floors so that every Canadian, whether he be fisherman, farmer or worker, will be able to get his fair share of the national wealth.

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, first may I refer to the amendment and the subamendment. The amendment moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) is as follows:

This house is of the opinion that the government's price ceiling policies with respect to farm products are discouraging production of needed food and imposing on the food producers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's stabilization policies.

The C.C.F. amendment is:

This house is of the opinion that the government's policies of permitting recent unjustifiable increases in the prices of farm machinery and of steel have resulted in imposing on food producers and workers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

The subamendment has been very skilfully drawn. All of us can accept the view that in the light of the explanations so far given, the recent increase in the price of farm machinery is unjustifiable and unfair. But one thing which this subamendment does establish, as was made clear by the hon. member who preceded me (Mr. Bryce) is that the C.C.F. do not believe that the farmers should receive any increase for their farm products. They have made their view perfectly plain in this regard.

Mr. WRIGHT: That is not correct.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am glad to have that statement, because I find it difficult to follow my hon. friends of the C.C.F. in their peregrinations on this subject.

An hon. MEMBER: Like the Tories.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I have just heard these terrible Tories referred to by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce), and we did not say anything. We listened. Now I am going to answer on behalf of this party, and I ask the same consideration—being always willing to answer questions—that was given to the hon. gentleman who preceded me.

When I listen to my hon. friends speaking over the radio in the province of Saskatchewan I notice that they do not say what they say here. They tell the farmer that he is not being fairly treated, that farm prices are lower in Canada than in the United States—the inference being that they support an increase in farm prices. But when they come into this house they move an amendment which can have only one effect, that of neutralizing the amendment introduced by the leader of the opposition, and striking a death-blow to the cause of any increase of farm prices in Canada. Apparently they do not believe that any increase of farm prices at the present time would be justified. If they have that view I know they are sincere; all I am trying to do is to make it perfectly clear that that is their point of view. One of my hon. friends said a moment ago that it was not. I propose to read from a very fine address given by the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bentley), reported in Hansard of this session at page 867. The question of increased prices of farm implements was before the house. The leader of the opposition raised the question. He said the increase was unjustified, and hon. gentlemen in all parts of the house agreed with him and supported the condemnation he directed to the government in that regard.

The situation as to farm implements was this. There was an increase of $5 per ton in the price of steel in this country, as in the United States; but the difference was this. In the United States—and this for my hon. friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell)—the increase was given on the condition that the workers should receive an increase in wages. That was not a stipulation in this country.

Mr. ILSLEY: There were many increases in the price of steel in the United States before that.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I realize that.

Mr. ILSLEY: And none here.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I realize that, but the fact remains that in that increase, no matter if some were given before—and there were increases in wages before—

Mr. MITCHELL: No, there were not, not since the Little Steel formula.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I find it hard to hear my hon. friend. I say there were wage increases before that. My hon. friend knows better than to say there were not.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend is developing the same argument as the C.C.F.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The C.C.F. have made their stand quite clear, and the government's stand is also clear: the farmers will not get an increase in the prices of farm products, regardless of whether production is down in consequence of our prices being down in comparison with those of the United States. The C.C.F. policy was set forth succinctly in the address delivered by the hon. member for Swift Current, as reported at page 867 of Hansard.

As was pointed out by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), the leader of this group, we have supported the government's policy of control, even though there has been some discontent in rural constituencies of the west—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I understand that the hon. member is referring to a previous debate in the present session. If so, he is out of order.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Very well, Mr. Speaker. What the hon. gentleman said in effect was this—I will not quote his remarks—that the C.C.F. party supported the government in placing a price ceiling on farm products, that it opposed any increase in that price, that it had no objection to Canadian wheat being sold abroad at $1.55 regardless of the world price; but he pointed out that if the government did not do something about the farm implement situation, he and those associated with him would have to change their views and support those on this side of the house who believe that there should be a reasonable increase in the prices of farm products. So far as the leader of the C.C.F. party is concerned—and again I cannot quote from that hon. gentleman's remarks, which will be found at page 319 of Hansard—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I do not think the hon. member should refer even to the page of Hansard reporting a previous debate in the session.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It is the same debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: It is another debate. I am sure that page 291 of Hansard carries the report of a previous debate in this session.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Very well, sir. It is far from my wish to contravene the rules of the house, and therefore I will put it this way. The view of the leader of the C.C.F., very clearly expressed on different occasions, has been that the C.C.F. party supports the government in its stand that there shall be no increase in the prices of farm products in this country.

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Speaker, allow me to correct misrepresentations. The government has never said that there would be no increase in the prices of farm products in this country. There have been adjustments upwards through the years, as the hon. gentleman knows, and there may be in the future, but they will be made in an orderly manner and not in the way that hon. members opposite suggest.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I do not mind the minister making a brief statement, but I do not want him to make a speech. He says that they will increase prices in an orderly manner. Let me say that the farmers throughout the west to-day are asking when, under that orderly plan, they are going to be placed in the same position as the farm implement manufacturers who have been permitted to increase the price of farm implements. I am not allowed to quote what the C.C.F. members have said in previous debate, but they want to ask questions for the purpose of showing that they did not say that which I am not allowed to quote.

Mr. IRVINE: Would you mind spending a little time telling us what your belief is?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Isn't that the natural reaction? My hon. friends have pictured us in lurid terms. We have been referred to as Tories; slurs have been cast in our direction, and now when one wants to make the record clear and definite so that all who run may read, the jabbering begins.

Mrs. STRUM: Well, aren't you Tories?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am only too willing to answer questions that I can hear. However, to pass on—

Mr. IRVINE: I should have thought you had passed on a long time ago, only nobody told you.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: In that observation my hon. friend speaks with the voice of experience so far as he is concerned. Now, sir, the leader of the opposition takes the stand, which I believe is also taken in all parts of the house, that conditions throughout the world to-day demand an extra production of farm products. One would scarcely think it necessary to establish that fact. Someone to my left has referred to what Mr. Hoover said recently on his return from abroad, and only within the last two days a general summation of the situation appeared in the Christian Science Monitor, which shows what the people are facing in the different countries of Europe. I quote:

France—Average ration of meat for two meals is about two-thirds of an ounce. Potatoes are scarce.

Greece—With wheat supplies down to nine ounces a day per person, the nation is almost entirely dependent on the united nations relief and rehabilitation administration.

China—In Hunan province, known as the "rice bowl" of China, it is estimated that 7,000,000 persons of a population of 27,000,000 are approaching or are suffering starvation.

Czechoslovakia—All foods except potatoes are rationed. Dairy products, fats and meats are short. Transportation difficulties are acute. Country gets one-seventh of its grain from UNRRA.

Hungary—Average daily ration, about 500 calories, is so low that medical officers assert it is responsible for 40 out of every 100 fatalities among children.

Italy—Two pounds of bread cost $4.50 on the "black market." Adequate "black market" meals cost $5.

Yugoslavia—Five million people rely entirely on UNRRA. In many places the only food available is three slices of bread a day.

Poland—Nine million bushels of grain will be needed within three months. Own grain stocks are running out. The nation is fast approaching the danger line of hunger.

Albania—Local grain stocks are running out, and about 57 per cent of the people now depend on UNRRA wheat and flour.

Belgium—Darker bread loaf has returned and "black market" is flourishing.

Germany—Representative meal is a boiled potato, two spoonfuls of fish or hash, and dry bread. Potato supply is near exhaustion.

The situation there depicted undoubtedly calls for extra production, and how shall we obtain it? My hon. friends to my left have their own point of view in that regard. Australia found it necessary to raise the price of wheat; in other words, to raise the price which the farmer should receive, to the end that greater production be encouraged. Argentina is in the same position. The Canadian farmer is urged to produce essential foods to allay the starvation that stalks the world everywhere, and in no other country could there be such an increase in food supplies as there could be in Canada. In Russia, according to the New York Times two days ago, the present low standards of nutritional diet are such that even if agricultural production were expanded, the extra production would be needed at home. The United States can double its agricultural production, but this would necessitate a change in the whole economy of the country, and several million people leaving the cities and going to the rural areas. In Australia and New Zealand, while there can be small increases, it is frankly admitted that there can be no material increase. Realizing conditions of famine in the world at large, in order to secure the extension and expansion of production in wheat and other farm products at this time, our position is that prices of farm products should be increased, without in any way wishing to do as the hon. member for Selkirk has suggested, namely, to remove the price ceiling in its entirety. There is no such suggestion anywhere on the part of any official of this party. The only removal of the ceiling that we advocate is the removal of the ceiling on farm products so far as the present ceiling impedes production. Decontrol should only take place in other respects when the necessary supplies are available to assure a fair distribution. Speaking for myself alone, I say that if controls were removed altogether at this time I should be fearful of conditions everywhere in the country. On the other hand, much is made of the danger of inflation; but, may I add, nowhere has there ever been any serious inflation through increased prices, that are reasonable and fair, on farm products.

Take the situation in Canada to-day. Does the Minister of Finance say that there would be inflation if a fair and reasonable increase were allowed on the price of wheat and other farm products? He is fearful of inflation with increased farm prices. There was no fear of inflation in some of the social legislation which I supported, and which was brought in with the consent of hon. members in all parts of the house.

While the United States is endeavouring to encourage the production by the only means they know, the increase in price, which is also true of Australia and Argentina, here the policy is followed of refusing to face the situation which confronts this country. At this time the farmer, by reason not only of prices but also of unfairness of the income tax, is going on a strike in many parts of Canada, or he finds himself in a position where there is not the encouragement of production which there must be if there is to be the necessary production.

We believe that to establish extra production the first requisites are equity and security in farm prices. To remove the ceiling on farm prices to-day in order to bring them into line with world prices in no way requires the removal of the floor. No one suggests that. But we do say that with extraordinary and terrible conditions existing in the world to-day, with famine stalking nineteen or twenty countries in a manner the like of which has not been seen in four hundred years, surely this is the time for extraordinary measures to assure the production in the one country where production can be expanded and would be expanded if the government would give the lead.

With regard to farm costs, I realize that prices have gone up to some extent, but farm costs have also gone up. Only recently R. J. Deachman, a well-known economist, wrote an article in which he took the 1939 prices as 100. In that article he pointed out that manufactured goods have risen 24·7 per cent; seeds, 77·4 per cent; feed, 61·8 per cent; gasoline, oil and grease, 23 per cent. I presume that is without the three-cent tax that should have been removed had there been any desire to encourage extra production on mechanized farms throughout the country. Building materials have risen 61·2 per cent; binder twine, 34·8 per cent, and farm labour 110·8 per cent.

Mr. ILSLEY: What about farm implements?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I have not farm implements here, but I think they have risen approximately 8 per cent.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is in that list.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I have not it in my notes. I believe it is 8·5 per cent.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I want to place the facts before the house. The Minister of Finance accepts one of the statistics. I ask him to accept those that I quoted from the same author, which is another reason why there should be an increase in farm products.

There is one thing that the Minister of Finance might do. If he did it, it would remove a certain type of propaganda that is going on throughout the country. Senator A. N. McLean recently returned from the United States and gave an interview on UNRRA and the food situation generally in Europe. His statement received wide circulation. If it is not in accordance with the facts, it should be denied; if it is in accordance with the facts, there is something seriously wrong. He said:

> Therefore it seems rather fantastic that large quantities of foodstuffs right under the noses of these organizations is being taken away for export abroad.
> Fish products are being exported from Norway, Iceland, Spain, Portugal and the United Kingdom.

He goes on to say:

> There is certainly something wrong with such an uneconomic system. Ships leave American ports loaded with fish products, for instance, and in the mid-Atlantic meet ships from Europe destined for America, loaded with similar products. This does not make sense, and someone should be held accountable.

I repeat: This statement received the widest possible circulation in this country. It is a strange thing that conditions like this should exist, if they do; if they do not, the Minister of Finance, in the interests of the morale of this country and the mobilization for securing the necessary additional food for Europe, should see that it is stopped at the earliest possible opportunity.

In my opinion some changes must take place in the income tax. In the statement made by the Minister of Finance a moment ago I detected an indication that the pressure of the campaign of the leader of the opposition that there should be fair and reasonable advances in prices of farm products is about to secure results.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is just what we have been doing ever since 1941.

Mr. FERGUSON: Look at the results.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I think it can be safely said from the statement made by the minister to-day that the farmers are going to get more than $1.55 a bushel for their wheat. When that happens let it be perfectly clear that it was not my hon. friends to the left, the C.C.F. party, that mobilized opinion in this country; it was the leader of the opposition who throughout the last year has been endeavouring to secure a fair and reasonable share of the national income for Canadian farmers.

With regard to income tax, I am not going to go into the various recommendations that were set forth in great detail by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at its meeting in London in January last. While by the recent changes in the income tax, a step was made in the right direction in order to secure the sale of the wheat that the farmers of Canada had on their hands, I suggest to the minister that at this session the basis of the assessment of income tax in so far as agriculture is concerned should be extended over the present period, and certainly over a five-year moving average. My hon. friends to the left have also frequently advocated this. I am in agreement with them on it. Allowance should be made for the labour of the farmer's wife, his sons and daughters in connection with farm production, because without these allowances being granted there is not the incentive that there should be to secure the necessary increase in production. I point out another difficulty in connection with the income tax. It has to do with hired help on the farm. A man comes to a farm and wants to get work. He refuses to work for the farmer who desires to deduct the income tax from his wages. While I realize that that condition cannot be rectified, nevertheless the fact remains that it is a factor.

Having regard to world conditions, no one in this house suggests that we should endeavour to take the world by the throat and to exact anything unfair. The government say that is what we would be doing if more than $1.55 a bushel for wheat were charged. They say that in selling below the world market price they do so in order to establish friendly relations in Europe and other parts of the world, so that when peace comes markets will be available. So that in reality we have a form of advertising, coupled with philanthropy, it is true, for which the farmers instead of all the people of Canada are asked to pay. As far as this party is concerned, it believes this. Sell wheat at whatever price you believe is reasonable, but do not saddle the farmer with any loss incidental to the advertising. That should be paid or assumed by the state.

As to the income tax, if the suggested changes are made and lowered rates imposed there will be greater incentive. I know there are those who say they believe in production for use rather than for profit, but they are the first to argue that, with the income tax as it is to-day and with the anomalies that exist, there is no incentive. By that very argument hon. gentlemen to my left show in effect how impossible it would be to change human nature under the influence of socialism. They say that the farmers will not produce because there is too little left over, because the income tax is too high. At the same time they say that there is a change in human nature, that mankind will accept the principle of production for use rather than profit.

There is one other matter—

Mr. IRVINE: Try speaking on the subject now, for a change.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: As my hon. friend knows, the observations that one cannot hear can never be answered. I should like to refer to one other matter to which I want to direct the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) particularly. That is in regard to what is being done in connection with the production of sugar. This year the government called upon sugar beet producers to increase their production materially. Those producers in the five counties of southwestern Ontario have had 35,000 acres set by the government as their target. According to the statement yesterday of the hon. member for Kent, Ontario (Mr. Desmond), the acreage to be signed up so far amounts to about 26,000. In that industry there is a great shortage of man-power. There are those who say there cannot be very much unemployment in the country if we are calling for man-power in this industry. Well, there are approximately 250,000 unemployed men in this country.

Mr. MITCHELL: Men and women.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes; but that fact does not secure workers for this type of work. I am not one of those who would advocate in any way the compulsory transfer of workers, or anything like that. It is a fact that this is difficult, trying and irksome work, and the fact is that the necessary man-power is not available. If Canada wants an increased production of sugar something must be done to make more men available in those five counties. Yesterday the Minister of Labour pointed out that 1,050 prisoners of war would be made available. He said that 852 were now available and that possibly the other 200 would become available within the next few days, or shortly. I cannot understand the mystery about those additional 200, but no explanation was given.

Mr. MITCHELL: If my hon. friend wants an answer I can give it to him now.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: If I may conclude this portion of my remarks I shall be glad to have the minister's answer. Of the 850, some 223 are on individual farms, which may or may not be growing sugar beets. In any event, these workers cannot be organized into flying columns or squads. In addition, 100 other prisoners have been allocated or promised to individual farmers. In other words, of the 850 some 323 will go to individual farms, leaving only about 530 available to work on the sugar beet farms. Last year there were some 850 available in addition to the 200 on individual farms. Last year there were only some 17,000 acres in sugar beets. This year there are 26,000 acres; yet the number of men available under the prisoner of war scheme is several hundred less in those five counties than it was last year. There is a distinct shortage of sugar in this country, and the production in that area alone will materially assist in alleviating the shortage. I realize the difficulties of the minister, and I commend him for what he did yesterday; but I am informed that the situation to-day is such that unless three or four hundred men are made available immediately, thousands of acres now signed up for sugar beet production will be sowed to alfalfa, to the definite detriment of our sugar supply.

Therefore I would ask the minister—and I intend to give him the opportunity to answer, without making a speech—to advise the house and the country whether or not the appeal of these farmers will be heeded, and whether these prisoners of war will be made available. They will not be taking jobs from other people, because other people will not do that work, a definite recruitment campaign having been carried on for several weeks in this connection. Again I ask if it would not be possible, with a view to assuring that extra production of sugar this year, to do something in the way of increasing the number of prisoners of war available, to which the minister made reference yesterday. He has asked me for the opportunity of answering, and I give him that opportunity now, if I may then proceed.

Mr. MITCHELL: It is very simple, Mr. Speaker. Speaking from memory, we have 10,000 prisoners of war in the lumber industry at the moment, for one thing. It is all a question of shipping. At the moment I cannot give any guarantee on the question of shipping these people back to Europe. They bring back our soldiers in transports and take the German prisoners back in the same transports. As I suppose my hon. friend knows, those transports are controlled by the British government, and they are either going back into normal channels of trade or being prepared for that or used as transports for bringing British army, navy and air force personnel from distant parts of the commonwealth. It all depends on that. If I could get some assurance in regard to transportation this problem would not be too difficult. However, I think we have taken care of the sugar beet industry across the country, in Alberta, Manitoba and Ontario, up to now; and every effort will be put forth to see to it that the necessary man-power is provided.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I thank my hon. friend for his statement.

Mr. MITCHELL: I want to thank my hon. friend for having brought the matter to my attention several times.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: No one asks for any preference. All that is asked, as far as this industry is concerned, is that having regard to their production they be placed on a parity with Manitoba and Alberta.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I conclude by saying that as far as I am concerned I suggest that something should be done, but not in the direction of removing the entire ceiling. No one advocates that. The amendment of the leader of the opposition makes it quite clear that it does not advocate a removal of the entire ceiling. Yet hon. members on the government side, in answering this demand of agriculture across the country, endeavour to befog the issue by raising the bogey of inflation and pointing out what happened after the last war.

Mr. ILSLEY: Is it not the announced policy of the Progressive Conservative party to remove the ceiling from prices of farm products?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: There is no argument about that. I am speaking about the entire ceiling. As far as farm products are concerned, they are maintained at a level far below what is fair having regard to prices of other products. All that the farmer asks is that he receive parity prices. All he asks is that one section of the community should not be sacrificed for the benefit of other sections.

This would do more than anything else to encourage production. It is doing it in the Argentine and in Australia. No doubt, after the crops are in and the possibility of expansion is over, the government will raise prices, but if this action were taken now it would act as an incentive for increased production. A situation the like of which has never been seen in our time faces the world to-day. Mankind calls on Canada. Experience shows that extra prices afford an incentive to increase production, in the case of agriculture as well as other industries. It may be too late in two or three months. The world calls to-day.

There is hope in what the Minister of Finance has said, but let action be taken now. The amendment moved by the leader of the opposition was moved in a humanitarian desire to secure that extra production and to assure that agriculture shall receive its fair share of the national income.

Mr. ILSLEY: I wish to make it clear that I had nothing more in mind and meant nothing more than what we have said and meant from 1941 on in the way of adjustments that have been made from time to time.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That means nothing.

Mr. NORMAN JAQUES (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to this debate, and to the members of this group it would appear that so far it has generated more heat than light. That is not to be wondered at because it has been carried on mainly by the three parties, the Liberals, the Conservatives and the C.C.F.—three blind mice. Fundamentally they all believe in the same policy. They are all controlled by the same outworn orthodox system of economics. They all believe in planning and they all believe in control; the only quarrel between them is as to who shall do the planning and who shall do the controlling.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is very important.

Mr. JAQUES: It is important to those who hope to do the controlling. The members of this group believe that the individual citizens of this country should do their own planning and control themselves. This afternoon I heard the statement, "production for use and not for profit." Why that saying should be currently repeated, I do not know. Surely it is obvious that if a person is to produce something at a profit he must produce something useful. Otherwise there will be no profit. It is not up to any minority to tell the majority what they are to consume and how much. That is the affair of the individual, not of an organized minority.

The Liberals claim that they believe in the profit system, but they are destroying the profit system by taxation. In this connection I should like to read a letter which I received from a constituent of mine, one of the best known agriculturists in the Lacombe district. I might say that the Lacombe district is one of the best farming districts in western Canada. It may interest the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) to hear the contents of this letter. I am not sure, but I believe the writer is or was a supporter of the government; I do not think he is a supporter of mine. The letter is dated May 21, and reads:

Dear sir,

You will no doubt be somewhat surprised when you receive this letter from me and you no doubt receive many of the same nature from other people in this constituency along the same line.

I believe that in my business, which has extended over a period of almost thirty-eight years in this district, that I do have perhaps a better opportunity than most people to hear and know just what our farmers are doing and talking about, and I refer you especially to the present income tax law as regards our farmers.

I would like to point out to you and others who may be responsible for the present situation that during the last fall and this spring season of farm sales which I have conducted, there have been no less (and I think more) than 12 of our young and most successful farmers in the Bentley and Lacombe districts that have sold out and quit simply because they feel that the income tax is unjust and that they absolutely refuse to work 365 days in the year and then if they do happen to have a good crop, give the government anywhere from 25 to 40 per cent of it.

I know of others who are still staying on their farms, and men who a very short time ago were the largest feeders and raisers of live stock (cattle and hogs) that to-day are not feeding or raising a single head of live stock. They say that they are not going to buy feeders, work every day, Sunday as well as week days, snow or blow, cold and wet and then if they are lucky enough to make a few dollars give most of it to the government for income tax.

[Mr. Jaques.]

Others that I know are quitting and hiring all the work done on the farm. I am of the opinion that the farmers of this district are no different from the farmers all over Canada. Most of them feel that when they have paid their municipal, school, social service and many other indirect taxes they have done enough tax paying. They all feel that they are not getting a fair and equitable deal regarding their income tax. They talk something like this. That it is nowhere near fair to tax them plenty when they are fortunate enough to get a good crop as well as price, and then when they are hailed, froze or dried out and get no crop, there is no recompense.

Now then, Mr. Jaques, you can do as you please about what I have written. Do something about it or throw this into the wastepaper basket. But I am telling you and those who are in power at Ottawa that they have got to do something about this whole business, or we are not going to have any good farmers left in this district.

That letter is signed by Mr. C. F. Damron, one of the best known agriculturists in western Canada. There is no man with a sounder knowledge of farming than Mr. Damron and there are no better farming districts —I doubt if there are any as good in the whole of western Canada—than Lacombe and Bentley. That is the condition of the farmers there. While the socialists would, I suppose, make profits a criminal offence, the Liberals are making profits impossible through taxation, and under the orthodox system of finance there is no alternative. As I said when I started, they are all going the same road; they are all going the same place. The only quarrel is over who shall do the planning and who shall do the controlling.

I have heard something about inflation. What is the cure, and the only cure for inflation? It is production. Why should we not have more production? Because the producers in the first place are discouraged by taxation, or they are frightened by what more controls may be in store for them. They are uncertain; they do not like to go ahead and start things when they cannot see the end of their ventures.

I would not, of course, advocate the complete removal of controls, but as a general policy I am all in favour of doing away with controls as quickly as may be possible. I believe in free enterprise. There are only two methods of production. There is persuasion, and there is compulsion—it is one or the other. So far we have always had production by persuasion, and under that system we have not only produced enough for everybody but we have actually had overproduction. It is not really a matter of production. We have solved that problem. We shall have to solve the problem of consumption, and that cannot be done by the old price system, by orthodox finance and orthodox economics. As I said, the Liberals and Conservatives would plan and control by taxation, while the socialists would have planned production, which, of course, in the end means planned scarcity. That is the history in those countries where socialism has really been tried out.

I am familiar with one of the choicest and most desirable parts of western Canada. I refer to the Fraser valley in British Columbia, and I see that the member of Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) is in his seat. I have lived in the valley and I am fairly well familiar with conditions there. It is one of the garden spots of the world. At the present time I believe the farmers there are prosperous. I am glad to say that they have done well, but for many years before the war they were certainly in a depressed condition. I have close relations who are producing milk in the Fraser valley and I had many conversations with them before the war. They depend, of course, upon the Vancouver market to sell their whole milk. Their trouble before the war was this, that although the market and the demand for milk was there, the demand was not effective because it was not supported by money. The Fraser valley milk producers' association had the idea that if they could only get 100 per cent of the retail market they could raise the price of milk by keeping a certain amount of it off the market. In other words, they could raise the price by making milk more scarce. I used to tell them: If you could do that, apart from the moral question involved, you would do two things at once. If you succeeded in raising retail prices under these conditions, you would at once stimulate the production of milk in the valley, but you would also lower the sales of milk because, although you raise the price, you do nothing to increase the effective purchasing power of the people to pay the extra price, and what would happen would be this. You would increase the supply of milk, but much of it would go into the milk factories and be sold on the market in the can. There is no profit for them selling milk in the can; their profit is in selling raw milk over the retail counter. But since the war they have done very well for the simple reason that there has been a great increase in the population of Vancouver. I do not know the figures, but there has been a very great increase in Vancouver's population, and of course an enormous increase in payrolls, so that there is more money in the hands of the people. The reason why these farmers in the Fraser valley have done well is simply that they have sold most of the milk in the raw state over the retail counter because the people want the raw milk and have money to pay for it.

The reason I mention this is that the milk subsidy is to be taken off. I believe that is a great mistake. What we have to do is to stimulate production and the only real way to stimulate production is to stimulate consumption. We should finance consumption, and then production will finance itself. The milk subsidy—and there were others—was a direct application of a social credit principle, and that is the direct financing of consumption. It was done in Great Britain during the war to an enormous extent; I have not the exact figures but I believe it was something like one billion dollars a year. I understand that this subsidy is to be removed. I think that is a great mistake. If we take care of consumption, production will take care of itself.

Conditions after this war have been compared with conditions after the last war. In fact I heard an hon. member contradict himself: he pointed to conditions in 1919 as an illustration of the terrors of inflation, and later on in his speech he said that 1919 and 1920 were the only years when the farmer got a just reward. According to that, you can have a just reward only under inflation. Then he blamed on inflation—or at least I so understood him—the depression which followed those good years. It was nothing of the kind. As I remember it—and I was farming at the time; in fact I have been farming since 1901, and that is a considerable time—after the last war there was an extraordinary recovery. In a year, or perhaps two years, the world seemed to have recovered. There was no talk of starvation; there was no talk of famine; there was plenty, and very soon there was more than plenty; in fact it was said that there was over-production.

Why have we the opposite conditions today? We talk about famine and starvation. You cannot get any goods. You go to a store to buy even such a thing as a shirt and you cannot get it. In those days there was plenty of goods but no money; in these days there is money but no goods. I say that both those conditions are artificial, and I believe they are deliberately brought about, through planning. What we are doing with regard to food is, we are entrusting the control of the world's food to the hands of very few people. I hear complaints and criticisms of such institutions as the grain exchange. Some people think it would be better and safer to do away with such bodies and place the control under a board; in other words, in the hands of a few people. To my mind that is a most dangerous proposal. It is a terrible proposal. Already we see some of the consequences of these controls; certain countries are being threatened with starvation if they do not toe the line. What we are coming to is world dictatorship, world tyranny through the control of the world's food. If that is the "new order," for heaven's sake let us keep to the old. World control or world planning, with the systems of coupons and rationing, means world slavery. I will say this, that only the crook demands and only the craven desires security at the price of freedom.

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): I am glad that the house has abandoned the idea of taking a vote on this question to-day, because I believe this is one occasion on which all hon. members should have an opportunity to express their opinions. In fact, had this debate taken place a month or more ago the government might have saved themselves a great deal of trouble, because at the present time they are being asked to answer many questions and consider many things which should have been answered and considered before the action was taken which precipitated this type of debate.

Before coming to the amendment itself, I should like to straighten out a few of the statements which have been made by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker). I must admit that I admire his ability in speaking in this house, but very often I feel that he does not make the best of his ability when, instead of stating the facts as they are and basing his argument upon them, he takes the thin edge of the pyramid and builds his whole argument on one point which, when it falls, causes the whole thing to crumble. I am afraid he did something of the sort to-day in misrepresenting the stand of the C.C.F. party on the question of price control. He spent so much time in making statements which were not in accordance with the facts that he did not make the stand of his own party at all clear; in fact he confused the issue to a point where, I believe, no one knows where his party in the house stands.

I wish to refer to what the leader of our group had to say on May 6. Speaking in this house on this amendment—not the subamendment—he said, as reported in Hansard, at page 1253:

> . . . if we are to have price ceilings let us have them for everybody, not pick somebody out and provide him with a hole in the ceiling.

That in a brief way sets out the stand that we take. We are not opposed to price control as a principle, especially so at this time, because we believe that if it has been found necessary up to now, conditions as to shortages of goods have not changed enough to make it possible now to remove price control. In fact, if there is to be justice in the matter of prices and wages there will have to be price control. That is the stand we take, and I think it was made perfectly clear by hon members speaking for this group that we are not attacking the government because they are maintaining a certain price ceiling policy as such, but because the policy they are following has been working to the disadvantage of certain groups of people in this country, especially the farmers and the workers.

We have made it clear also, but I want to repeat, that we believe that certain adjustments have to be made in the price ceiling policy when the government have permitted a price increase not only on farm implements, which have been mentioned so often in this house, not only of two cents a gallon on gasoline in western Canada, but on many other articles including drugs, cosmetics, tobacco, paper, jewellry, millinery, textiles of all kinds, steel, and steel products—I could name them by the hundreds. Price ceilings have been raised on dozens of manufactured articles. We say it is time that the government gave some consideration to the workers and the farmers of this country in order to recompense them for the higher costs of living resulting from the price increases. That is the stand we have taken, and I think it is clear enough. For some reason the hon. member who spoke before me attempted to becloud the issue and muddy the waters in order to make it far more difficult to understand.

I am going to try as clearly as I can to show what is the stand of each of the political parties represented in this house. If I am wrong they will have an opportunity of setting me straight when they speak.

Let us come back to the Progressive Conservative party. In the same speech this afternoon the hon. member for Lake Centre set out three different attitudes or, one may say, took three different stands on the question of a price ceiling. In the first place he said that no one in his party was advocating doing away with price control, which, of course, is not as I understand it, because if we read the speech made last night by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) or the speech made by the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) the other day, we shall find in their own words as recorded in Hansard—unless it is not correctly reported —that they are in favour of doing away with price control altogether

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is not a fact.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is misrepresentation.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: If that is so, it will be necessary to look up the record and see.

An hon. MEMBER: Put it on the order paper.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Before I am through, it will not be necessary to put it on the order paper. Speaking in this house, the hon. member for Calgary East, as reported at page 1567 of Hansard, said—and if I do not interpret it rightly they may interpret it for me, or misinterpret it as they like:

> In view of that fact, I think all believers in free enterprise, including the government, who profess so to believe, should now be bending their thoughts and energies toward the abolition of all those controls which were forced upon us during the war.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What was he talking about?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: About price control, in case you do not know. That is the statement.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Farm products; read the rest.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: He did not say so. He said, "all those controls which were forced upon us during the war". That takes in the whole territory. No one to my right can deny it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): You are taking out a part and leaving the rest unread.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: You will have an opportunity of reading it for yourself when you speak, but there it is on the record and I have given you the page number, and you have plenty of spare time.

Mr. GRAYDON: Obviously referring to farm products, in this debate.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: He said:

> . . . toward the abolition of all those controls which were forced upon us during the war.

You can argue all you want to—

Mr. MACKENZIE: It is very clear.

Mr. GRAYDON: Those controls are farm controls.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I will not waste time in arguing that fact.

Mr. GRAYDON: For your own benefit you had better drop it.

Mr. IRVINE: Order.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The amendment has been read several times in this house and I do not think it is necessary for me to read it again; if necessary hon. members can read it. I think it can be said that both the hon. member for Calgary East and the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe definitely stated on the floor of the house that, because they believed in free enterprise, therefore we must do away with controls entirely, and the house will bear me out in that statement. I realize that quoting from the record sometimes does not answer the question, because I noted down carefully a few of the statements made last night by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe, word for word as he said them, and other members did the same, as he was speaking; but when we take up Hansard to-day we find these statements have been substantially changed. Evidently—

Mr. GRAYDON: Oh, well, now; just a minute.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: —someone has changed his mind about what is the proper thing to say.

Mr. GRAYDON: On a question of privilege, I am entitled to the floor—a question of personal privilege. The hon. member, I think inadvertently, has referred to Hansard as having been changed by an hon. member of this house. I know he does not mean that, but he ought to have an opportunity of withdrawing it because it conveys an impression which I think should not be conveyed by any member of the house, as directed against another hon. member.

Mr. SPEAKER: I suggest to the hon. member that he modify his statement.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Mr. Speaker, in compliance with your suggestion to modify the statement I will do so. I know you have not asked me to withdraw the statement but to modify it. I therefore modify it to this extent that, although I have average hearing, and so has my deskmate, yet what we both heard last night and noted down word for word is not what appeared in Hansard to-day under the name of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe. I hope that makes it clear enough, and it carries no offence to anyone. But that happens to be the fact. So much for the record.

We come now to the stand of the government itself. Just what is the policy of the government? Where does the government stand? Listening to the speech of the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown) the other evening, I got the impression that he believed the government had done wonderfully well by the farmers. He said:

> However, strange as it may seem, I come from an industrial area and I was elected.

Of course, greater wonders have taken place.

I think the people of Canada are quite well aware of the benefits that have accrued to them from this government—this Liberal government.

Evidently he felt quite satisfied with the work of this Liberal government. But when we come to some of the statements of other members of the same party we find they were not quite so satisfied. For example, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Cleaver), speaking on May 15 in this house, said:

I have a statement from the bureau of statistics showing that the farm income in 1939 was $722·3 million; that is the cash farm income. I concede at once that the industry was a depressed industry at that time—

We must not forget that we had this same Liberal government from 1935 to 1939, and if this government had done as well, if it had been as generous to the farmers, as the hon. member for Essex West implied, then why does a member who supports the same government say that he admits at once that the industry was a depressed industry in 1939, after four years of Liberal administration? He goes on:

—but may I point out to the leader of the opposition that, while agricultural income was $722·3 million in 1939 and the industry was then in a distressed condition—

It was not only a depressed industry but it was also a distressed industry, and he admits that.

—the distress at that time was nothing like what it was in the early thirties when the party of his adoption was in power.

He was speaking of the leader of the opposition. In other words, the only defence he had to make was that the Liberal administration was not quite as bad as the Conservative administration had been from 1930 to 1935. There we have a difference of opinion between two members of the same party in the house as to how generous the government was to the farmers of the country.

I would say—and if I am wrong the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) will correct me—that the policy of the present administration as to price ceiling has been one of pressure; that is, the group who could exert the most pressure on the government to have price ceilings raised in their particular industry succeeded in having them raised. There did not seem to be any pattern to follow—

Mr. ILSLEY: Under the rules I am under no obligation to rise when invited to do so, but I certainly disagree with the statement of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: We will not argue about that. I am giving my impresion of what the government policy appears to be. Speaking in the debate on farm implement prices, I asked the Minister of Finance, very early in the debate, to lay before the house all the evidence of the implement companies to show that they required a rise in the price of their product. I waited patiently through the debate and heard the Minister of Finance speak later on, but we did not get the evidence asked for. There were some abstract figures and a few statistics that, to my mind, proved nothing. Here are figures that prove a lot more. I find that in 1937 the Massey-Harris company made a profit of $1,043,728. It could not have been called a depressed or distressed industry when it was doing as well as that. In 1944 it made a profit of $1,413,396. It was not so distressed then.

Mr. McCANN: On war contracts.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: It is good money whether coming from war contracts or anything else. In 1945 it made a profit of $1,800,000. There is no sign of distress there. Unless the minister can present better evidence to this house before the debate ends than he has done up to now to show that there has been a necessity to raise the prices of farm implements at a time when the farmers of this country have placed thousands and thousands of orders for farm implements and are willing to go right to the dealer's door, willing to pay him cash on the barrel-head, the farmers will not agree with him. The companies claim that they are going to lose money at a time when their selling costs are going down to the vanishing point. It is not necessary for the implement companies to go into advertising, to employ salesmen, or to incur any of those expenses of sales which go into overhead, because the farmers are begging for the machines and have cash to pay for them.

These are figures and statistics that should have been placed before this house before the government permitted or authorized an increase in the prices of farm implements, and not after. The responsibility for having broken the price ceiling structure cannot be placed anywhere except on the shoulders of the government. I clearly remember listening to the speeches of the candidates of the party opposite during the last election. Their expressed policy was one of maintaining price ceilings in fairness to all. They held out promises of full employment, good wages and fair prices, things which we could all well support. They were elected on that basis, and within one year after that election they have broken the price ceiling structure at least a dozen times. I have already placed on Hansard a number of manufactured articles on which price increases have been permitted. They did not tell the people last June that within one year after the election the price of farm implements would go up 12½ per cent. They did not intimate that in western Canada the price of gasoline would go up two cents a gallon. They did not give us any warning that the price of paper, textiles and millinery, steel products and so forth would all go up in price inside of one year. They were elected in good faith on their platform of maintaining a stabilized price structure. That was in June, 1945.

There is another angle which has to be considered before we go further, namely, the injustices which have cropped up or which are now in the present ceiling policy of the government. In many cases these are injustices which started five years ago. It is not something that has cropped up overnight. When the price freezing order was put on in 1941, prices and wages were frozen at levels which, in many instances, were not adequate. No one will say that in 1941 the price of farm products was the right price. According to the bureau of statistics, in 1941 the average price of wheat, which is a staple product of the west, was only fifty-five cents a bushel. That is the average of all grades. No one will say that that was a fair price. If one wants to go into wages he will find that many of them were far below standard, and yet evidently it was accepted by the government that the price which obtained in 1941, when the order was put in, was the correct price for everybody. Very little effort was made in the first year or two to make adjustments where adjustments were needed. That is a matter of history.

The hon. member to my right brought up to-day the question of the increase in the price of wheat. He said that if a price increase is allowed it will not be because of the C.C.F. group but because of the action of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken). I cannot understand how an hon. member can make that statement when he knows the history of prices. Let me take him back to 1943. At that time the present leader of the opposition was not in the house. I am doubtful whether he then owed allegiance to the party which he is now leading. That, of course, does not matter. In 1943 four by-elections were held in this country. Shortly before they were held a delegation of four hundred farmers from western Canada, practically all of them from Saskatchewan, came to interview the government in an effort to have the initial price of wheat raised to at least $1 a bushel. That is all past history. We know that the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) is credited with having said that if four hundred farmers could afford to come all the way from Saskatchewan to Ottawa as a delegation they did not need a price increase very badly, and they were not very successful at the time. As I say, four by-elections were held in 1943. In the riding of Selkirk the hon. member who now represents that riding in this house, was elected. In Humboldt the hon. member who now represents that riding in the house was elected by an overwhelming majority. That did more to raise the price of wheat than all the delegations that had come here prior to that time. In other words, what was it that caused the price to jump not to $1 but to $1.25 a bushel? It was because the people of the west expressed themselves emphatically at the polls in Selkirk and Humboldt, and they did so by voting for C.C.F. candidates.

Mr. MACKENZIE: What about June, 1945?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Incidentally, in both of these constituencies the Progressive Conservatives did not even have the courage to put up a candidate. Therefore how can they claim that it was through their efforts the price of wheat was raised or is to be raised at the present time?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Would the hon. member tell the house what percentage of the electorate was polled at these by-elections?

Mr. MacINNIS: The Conservatives did not get any of the number polled.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I am sorry, I have not these statistics available. I was not expecting to go into these matters to-day, but because of the speech that was made by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) it was necessary for me to put these things on record.

Mr. GRAYDON: What about the Ontario results?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MacINNIS: Take the results of 1943 with 1945.

Mr. GRAYDON: We are bringing them up to date.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Take the last election.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I do not mind taking on two Conservative members at a time, but not in this house. If they want to shout I cannot out-shout them.

Coming back to the question under discussion, I said that it was the responsibility of the government for having damaged the price structure. It is a responsibility which they cannot shelve by making excuses; it is one which cannot be shifted to the opposition or anywhere else. I maintain that the policy which is indicated in the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum) is an expression of what I believe is the opinion of the majority of the people of this country, namely, by permitting certain price increases on manufactured articles, especially on steel and steel products, farm machinery, and a myriad of others that I cannot mention just now, the government itself is upsetting the price structure. That is why the subamendment was moved in the terms in which it appears. It was not made merely to obliterate the amendment of the Progressive Conservative group, as they seem to think. It was made to put the whole thing in its proper perspective. It is not a question of doing away with price controls, because we know, without having to debate it, that the people of this country do not want to do away with them, even though the party to my right seems to favour it. We know also that if the government is going to permit certain price increases for certain favoured industries or groups of individuals they will have to permit price increases for the farmers and the workers. That is the stand which we take; that is the stand which is indicated in our subamendment and I think it is clear enough.

Before I resume my seat I should like to bring another matter to the attention of the house. During the debate in connection with farm implements the Minister of Finance was asked how it happened that certain stock should have been sold to a select group of the Massey-Harris company, on which they stand to gain a good deal of money, and how it was that this should be pulled off just at about the same time this company was applying for a price increase. I wish to read an excerpt from News Comment, referring to an article which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of April 20:

> Last January 9 the Massey-Harris Company sold to certain of its officers and employees 115,250 shares of the company's stock at $14\frac{3}{8}$ per share. The options are to run for three years and the beneficiaries can take up one-third of the stock each year. If the price of the stock goes up on the stock exchange, these favoured officers and employees can take up their options and sell their stock. It so happens that the price of Massey-Harris stock has gone up. It is now selling at around $20.

This was on April 20. The price increase was announced in this house on April 15. There is something fishy about the whole thing, when a company asks for a price increase on the 15th, or is granted an increase on the 15th—at least it was announced then; we do not know when it was granted, because evidently it was done behind closed doors—and five days later the price of the stock goes up to 20.

Mr. ILSLEY: It did not go up in those five days.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Well, it was at 20 on that date.

> That is, within three months these favoured few have seen the stock rise $5 per share, which on the 38,000 shares which they got on option, now represents a profit of $190,000. "By selling their stock," the Free Press observes, "they can get that money. And what is more they will not be liable to the payment of a dollar of income tax—

Mark this; it is very important.

> —because that is capital gain, not a profit."

That is a pretty skilful way of evading the payment of income tax and making a little ready cash. I think the minister should explain to this house how it was possible for the Massey-Harris company to manipulate its stock in such a way as to give its officers a profit of $190,000 which is not taxable.

Mr. ILSLEY: Its wage-earners, just as much as its officers.

Mr. FRASER: The people you are concerned with. You are begrudging the employees a profit.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Just a minute; don't try to give me that kind of story, because it says here very plainly, "these favoured officers."

Mr. GRAYDON: One of those officers started as a newsboy in Toronto.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I am not going into the family tree of every officer of the Massey-Harris company just in order to satisfy the hon. member. The point is that this company manipulated its stock in such a way as to make available to its officers $190,000 on which they need not pay income tax, and that is the same company which came to the government weeping crocodile tears and asking for an increase in the prices of farm implements. That is something which will have to be explained.

Then I should like every hon. member to realize that when a price increase is permitted to a manufacturing industry, that increase goes on all its products and affects all consumers. If there is an increase in the cost of production in a manufacturing industry they can absorb that by increasing their price again, passing that increase on to the consumer. In other words, the man who finally pays the increased price is the consumer of the goods. In this case it happens to be the farmer. In other cases it may be the worker, the professional man or anyone else. Therefore it is necessary for all hon. members, including private members sitting on the government side, to make their opinions known and their influence felt in this house on behalf of the workers and the farmers, because in the last analysis they are the consumers, who cannot pass on any price increase to anyone else. They have to take it right on the pocket-book; they have to be the cushion for the shock. I believe private members on the government side should say just where they stand, whether or not they are in favour of letting these price increases go through without protest. I was amazed when the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) took the tack he did the other day in this house. He attempted to scold the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle because one had spoken in support of the farmers and the other in support of the industrial workers. There is nothing strange about that. If the hon. member were to participate in some of the conventions of the party with which I am associated he would not be at all amazed that one member should speak up for the farmers and another for the workers, because in this party we accept farmers and workers as the people of Canada, and we try to represent the interests of both labour and the farmers. We do not go to the west among the farmers and give them one story, and then to the east among the workers and give them a different story, which have been the tactics of some hon. members who now sit on the other side of the house.

Mr. FRASER: Then your policy has changed since 1943.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: We did not change our name, as you did.

Mr. ILSLEY: Would my hon. friend mind moving the adjournment of the debate, in order that I may make a motion before six o'clock, or is he finished now?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Very well; I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 28

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the provision of standing order 28 in relation to Mr. Speaker leaving the chair without question put for the house to go into committee of supply be suspended for the sitting on Thursday, May 23, 1946.

Mr. BRACKEN: I understand this is to come within the rules and make it possible to continue this debate to-morrow?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. BRACKEN: Speaking for this party, we are entirely in favour of this procedure. Might I ask if some consideration has been given to whether or not this will pass if it is protested?

Mr. ILSLEY: Unless there is unanimous consent we cannot pass it.

Mr. BRACKEN: Does it require unanimous consent to-morrow?

Mr. ILSLEY: No; just now.

Mr. BRACKEN: Then you have our consent.

Mr. MacINNIS: And you have the consent of this group also.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, May 23, 1946.

The house met at three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATEMENT OF MR. SPEAKER ON DELETION OF VOTE IN COURSE OF DIVISION, MAY 22

Mr. SPEAKER: When the house divided yesterday on Mr. Cockeram's motion for production of certain papers, Mr. Bracken (Leader of the Opposition) rose from his seat and his name was called by the Clerk Assistant and recorded by the Clerk, who repeated Mr. Bracken's name. This repetition of a member's name is an announcement to the house that the member's vote has been recorded. The Clerk is sworn to record the res gestae on things done in the house. When another member's vote, namely Mr. McGregor's, had been recorded and duly announced, Mr. Bracken rose again and stated he had voted inadvertently as he had been paired with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) during the latter's absence in England. He suggested that his vote be deleted, and the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Ilsley), the leader of the house (Mr. Mackenzie), and several other members agreed that this should be done. No opposition being taken, the Clerk then rubbed off the mark he had made opposite Mr. Bracken's name, which was not included in the division list.

The Clerk's action was not a new departure. Bourinot, 4th edition, page 382, says:

In the Canadian Commons the Clerk at the table has been on more than one occasion allowed to strike off the name of a member who is recorded and then admits having been paired.

In 1926, when Mr. Bird voted though he had been paired, he announced his error after the result of the division had been given out and the Speaker had declared the motion carried. There was no possibility at that time of making any correction and the Speaker was right in refusing to allow that the vote be withdrawn. The Speaker then said:

The rule is that when a vote has been recorded, when the result has been proclaimed and when the motion has been declared carried or lost, that expresses the judgment of the house.

—and he refused to entertain Mr. Bird's request that the recorded vote be deleted. Had Mr. Bracken's request been made after the house's decision had been declared by the Speaker, it would certainly have been refused, but I see no objection in having his name struck out immediately after he had inadvertently voted.

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I may say so, by consent of the whole house, I am sure that the conduct of the leader of the opposition was of the most honourable kind.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to compliment you upon making a most intelligent ruling on the incident. If the time ever comes when the rules of this house preclude the withdrawal of an inadvertent vote when the obvious intention was clear, it is time that the rules were altered. I compliment Your Honour upon your decision.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, as the member who raised the question yesterday, may I say that I did so only to have the rules clarified. I too am satisfied with your ruling.

PRIVILEGE

REFERENCE TO PRESS REPORT OF STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN OF WARTIME PRICES AND TRADE BOARD

Mr. G. S. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, may I crave your indulgence and the indulgence of the house to rise on a question of privilege which affects the rights of every member of this house.

In the press of yesterday and this morning appears a press release by Donald Gordon, chairman of the wartime prices and trade board, which reads in part as follows:

[Mr. Speaker.]

Asked to comment on allegations that the wartime prices and trade board used gestapo methods in the course of its enforcement activities, Donald Gordon, chairman of the wartime prices and trade board, stated bluntly to-day that such statements were utter nonsense.

Further he stated:

On the other hand we have this type of wild accusation about gestapo procedure.

Further he stated:

I resent strongly the use of the word "gestapo" and I do not propose to let it pass without expressing my objection to such loose and improper language.

These remarks by Mr. Gordon refer to a speech made by myself in this house on May 21, reported at page 1726 of Hansard. The press statement adds:

Mr. Gordon was commenting on remarks made in the Commons last night by G. S. White, Progressive Conservative member for Hastings-Peterborough.

We in this chamber, Mr. Speaker, are members of parliament sent here by the people to represent them. In the discharge of this high duty the most valuable right which we possess is our freedom of speech in debate. It is a right which we must ever be jealous to guard; for it is the foundation of our effectiveness as members here. Its fundamental importance is recognized in the immunity which we are given from legal action for any statement made in this chamber. I must submit, sir, that our independence in this chamber should include complete freedom from attack, abuse or censure from any paid public official whom we may happen to mention in the course of our duties in debate here. I construe Mr. Gordon's statement as an admonition to me, a representative of the people, that I must not again in the terms I use or in any other way express my views of his administration in terms objectionable to himself.

I resent any such admonition or any attempt by Mr. Gordon to dictate the language to be used in this chamber. I regard it as high impertinence and an insolence directed against every member of this house. The proper person to answer any attack made upon any branch of the public service in this house is the responsible minister. It will be a most serious thing if the time ever comes when a member of parliament before criticizing a branch of the public service, must first consider the abuse which he may draw down upon himself from the officials of that service.

I have no intention, Mr. Speaker, of being instructed or lectured in any way by Mr. Gordon, a public servant. The remarks made by Mr. Gordon are simply a further indication of the gestapo methods of the chairman of the wartime prices and trade board in attempting to castigate a member of parliament. The language I used was neither loose nor improper, but accurately and justly described the actions of the officials who operate under the direction of Mr. Gordon. Apparently Mr. Gordon is above the government and the minister who administers the department under which the board is placed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has stated his point of privilege, and I do not think he should go on, upon a question of privilege, to reflect on members of the government.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): I am not reflecting on the government. This is the only opportunity I have to answer Mr. Gordon, and I submit that this is the proper place for me to answer him. I have only one further sentence to add, and it is this: I submit it is high time that the chairman of the wartime prices and trade board was reminded that he is a public servant and not supreme czar.

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. gentleman use the word "gestapo" the other day, and I was remiss in my duty in not rising at once in my place and objecting to the use of that language. When conscientious and responsible officials of the public service are called by such names as "nazis" or "Hitlers" or "gestapo", I will not, with regard to any officer in my department, object to their taking public exception to that type of abusive language. The only thing for which I blame myself is for not having taken immediate exception to that abusive language. The only abuse which was used in this case by any of the parties concerned in it was that involved in the use of the term "gestapo" by the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. White).

Mr. FERGUSON: And was it correct?

Mr. HOMUTH: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. HOMUTH: This sort of quacking from the far end of the house is heard very often. Let me say to the little minds down there that if their mentality is the mentality of waddling ducks I wish they would not express it here.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. To what is the hon. member speaking?

Mr. HOMUTH: A question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the hon. gentleman rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. HOMUTH: I rise on a question of privilege, and, as an elected member of the house, I register my opposition and, may I say, my disgust at the fact that a member of the cabinet, who in the absence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) is leading the government, states that he has omitted to do something, in the place he occupies, where it ought to have been done, with regard to something which was said in this house, but he is quite prepared to allow somebody else, a servant of this house, to answer for him. I say—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HOMUTH: I am not to be stopped by that kind of thing. This is a question of privilege.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Where is it? What is the privilege?

Mr. HOMUTH: The privilege of an elected member as against that of someone who is appointed by the government.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would call the attention of hon. members to the fact that, while it is their right to rise on a question of privilege, they should state what it is, without going into unnecessary detail. A statement on a question of privilege should be brief and to the point.

Mr. HOMUTH: Mr. Speaker, for the first time in my political life in Ottawa I agree with the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), when he says that the government no longer governs. There is a bureaucracy in control.

Mr. QUELCH: May I refer to the point of privilege which was brought up by the minister just now? I should like to remind him that he is to a very large extent responsible for the term "gestapo" being used in connection with the wartime prices and trade board.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I will not permit any debate. There is nothing before the house.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

REFERENCE OF CERTAIN ITEMS TO COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance) moved:

That items Nos. 422, 423 and 469 of the estimates for 1946-47, approved and reported upon by the sessional committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, be referred to the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT

TRAINS OR CARS MOVING IN REVERSE OVER HIGHWAY CROSSINGS

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce bill No. 138, to amend the Railway Act.

He said: The object of this bill is to amend section 310(1) of the Railway Act so as to permit a locomotive or its tender moving in reverse to eliminate the posting of a man in the front of the locomotive or tender while it is crossing a highway at rail level. The amendment has been sought for many years by the railway brotherhoods. It has received the approval of the board of transport commissioners and I hope it will commend itself to the house. There is a similar amendment with reference to section 421 of the act, mutatis mutandis.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

TRANSPORT STORES

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE ANNUAL MAXIMUM INVENTORY VALUE

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce bill No. 139, to amend the Department of Transport Stores Act.

He said: The object of this bill is to amend the Department of Transport Stores Act so as to increase the inventory of stores at the end of each fiscal year from $1,250,000 to $1,600,000. This increase has been made necessary because of the expansion of certain activities in the Department of Transport.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*STANDARDIZATION OF DEFENCE EQUIPMENT

Mr. SKEY:

What steps have been or are being taken by the government to ensure that a fair proportion of military and civilian defence equipment accepted for standardization by the United States and Canada will be produced or manufactured in Canada?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The hon. member has indicated that he wishes to have this question answered orally. The answer is: At any time when policy may require the adoption of new defence equipment of a common standard with the United States, as well as with the British commonwealth, it is understood that arrangements will be made for production in Canada of any items which may lend themselves economically to Canada's manufacturing resources. For example: in the case of automotive equipment, it is proposed that any basic designs which may in future be adopted will be adapted to meet the techniques and facilities of Canadian industry.

May I add that in view of present adequate stocks, occasion has not yet arisen for specific arrangement for the production of new equipment.

EXPORTS OF LUMBER

Mr. FLEMING:

What was the volume of Canada's exports of lumber of all kinds, by countries (a) by measurement; (b) by price, in 1945 and to date in 1946?

Mr. MacKINNON: (a) and (b). See statement below.

MEDICINE HAT PRISONER OF WAR CAMP—PLUMBING MATERIALS

Mr. WYLIE:

1. Are any unused plumbing materials stored at the prisoner of war camp at Medicine Hat, Alberta?

2. If so, how many, if any, unused bath tubs and sinks are stored there?

3. What is the value of such material?

4. What steps have been taken to dispose of such material?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Yes.

2. Sixty used but serviceable, cast iron, enamelled, flat rimmed sinks, size 16 inches by 24 inches.

3. $540, approximately.

4. None. It is intended to utilize these sinks in proposed construction and alteration of reserve army buildings.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

EXPORT OF PULPWOOD

Mr. HATFIELD:

1. Is the export of pulpwood controlled by exit permit requirements?

2. How many cords of (a) spruce pulpwood; (b) balsam pulpwood were exported under permit to the United States during each of the years 1942 to 1945, inclusive from (1) New Brunswick; (2) Quebec; (3) Ontario; (4) Nova Scotia; (5) Manitoba; (6) Saskatchewan?

3. What was the total pulpwood production in cords during the 1944-45 season for Canadian pulp and paper manufacturers in (a) New Brunswick; (b) Quebec; (c) Ontario; (d) Manitoba; (e) Nova Scotia?

4. What has been the total pulpwood in cords exported during 1945-46 season to date to the United States from (a) New Brunswick; (b) Quebec; (c) Ontario; (d) Manitoba; (e) Saskatchewan?

5. How many cords of pulpwood were exported in each of the years 1942, 1943, 1944 and 1945, to mills in (a) Minnesota; (b) Wisconsin; (c) Michigan; (d) Ohio; (e) Pennsylvania; (f) Maine?

HOUSING

Mr. FLEMING:

1. How many housing units were built and completed for occupancy between May 8, 1945 and May 8, 1946?

2. How many of that number were constructed (a) under part I of the National Housing Act; (b) under part II of the National Housing Act; (c) under part III of the National Housing Act; (d) by the Veterans Land Administration; (e) by Wartime Housing Limited; (f) by Housing Enterprises Limited?

3. Up to May 8, 1946, under the National Housing Act, 1944 (a) how many contracts have been entered into under part I? (a) What is the total number of houses for which loans have been authorized under part I? (c) How many of such houses have been completed and are now occupied? (d) What is the total amount of the loans authorized under Part I? (e) How many contracts have been entered into under part II of the Act? (f) What is the total number of rental housing projects for which loans have been authorized under part II? (g) How many of such rental housing projects are low-rental housing projects? (h) How many of such rental housing projects have been completed and are now occupied, and how many of them are low-rental housing projects, and where are they located? (i) What is the total amount of the loans authorized under part II? (j) How many limited dividend corporations have been recognized as qualified to receive loans under section 9 of the act? What are they, and where are they authorized to operate rental housing projects? Which ones are institutional housing corporations, and which are institutional holding companies? (k) Which of such limited dividend housing corporations have received loans under part II? (l) (1) To how many municipalities have grants been made pursuant to section 12; (2) what are the individual amounts of such grants and what municipalities respectively received them; (3) what are the other terms, if any, of the said grants? (m) (1) How many municipalities have applied for grants pursuant to section 12; (2) how many have been refused; (3) how many of such applications are still pending? (n) How many contracts have been entered into under part III? (o) (1) What is the total number of houses for which loans have been authorized under part III;' (2) how many of such houses have been completed and are now occupied? (p) What is the total amount of the loans authorized under part III? (q) How many contracts have been entered into with manufacturers of plumbing and heating equipment or other component parts of houses, pursuant to section 15? (r) How many payments have been made under part IV, and what is the total thereof? (s) What studies and investigations, planning and research have been carried on under part V? (t) What expenditures have been made pursuant to part V out of the $5,000,000 authorized by parliament in 1945, under section 27A?

Mr. FLEMING:

1. How many houses have been completed for occupancy up to May 8, 1946, by Wartime Housing Limited?

[Mr. Hatfield.]

2. (a) What expenditures have been made to May 8, 1946, by Wartime Housing Limited; (b) has any portion thereof been expended otherwise than on houses? If so, what portion and on what?

3. (a) How many houses are under construction by or for Wartime Housing Limited; (b) in what municipalities are they located?

4. (a) How many other houses has Wartime Housing Limited contracted for; (b) in what municipalities are they to be located?

5. When is it estimated that all such houses will be completed and ready for occupancy?

6. (a) How many of the completed houses have cellars, and how many have no cellars; (b) how many of those yet to be completed will have cellars, and how many will not?

7. What quantities of building materials of all kinds has Wartime Housing Limited on hand?

8. (a) How many persons are employed by Wartime Housing Limited; (b) who among such persons are in receipt of salaries of $3,000 per annum, or more, and who are they, and what services do they perform; (c) what is the monthly payroll of Wartime Housing Limited?

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. FLEMING:

1. On what date or dates have the three parts of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act come into force?

2. Who have been appointed as officers and directors of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and on what dates and at what remuneration?

3. Where do such officers and directors respectively reside?

4. What are their respective qualifications for appointment?

5. How many meetings of the corporation have been held, and on what dates, and who were present at each?

6. How many meetings has the board of directors held, and on what dates, and who were present at each?

7. Who are the members of the executive committee, and when did they take office as such?

8. How many meetings has the executive committee held, and on what dates, and who were present at each?

9. How many employees has the corporation?

10. (a) How many offices has the corporation; (b) where are they located; (c) how many persons are employed in each?

11. (a) What scale of salaries and wages and pension or superannuation benefits has been established for officers and employees; (b) what is now the monthly payroll: (c) does the board of directors contemplate further extension of staff and payroll?

12. What expenditures have been made by the corporation, and for what purposes?

13. What steps have been taken and expenditures made by the corporation on research, and on what types of research?

VETERANS AFFAIRS—LEGAL SERVICES—
W. C. THOMSON, K.C.

Mr. LENNARD:

What remuneration was received by or is owing to W. C. Thomson, Esq., K.C., of Toronto, for work performed for the dominion government while acting for the Department of Veterans Affairs from January 1, 1945 to December 31, 1945, in the way of (a) salary; (b) fees; (c) commissions; (d) expenses?

APPLE CROP

Mr. BLAIR:

1. What was the value of the apple crop in (a) Ontario; (b) Quebec; (c) British Columbia; (d) Nova Scotia, in each of the years 1939-1944 inclusive?

2. How much was paid by way of subsidies on apples in each of said provinces during each of said years?

JOSEPH NICHOLISAN PLANIDIN

6. Have they been sold?

7. If so, how many, to whom and at what price?

8. Was the price of said planes paid in cash?

9. If not, for what reason?

RADIO BROADCASTING

APPLICATION OF C.B.C. FOR WAVE LENGTHS OF CFRB AND CFCN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): I wonder if the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply will answer the question he said he would take notice of yesterday.

Hon C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): The question was directed to the minister and perhaps I had better answer it. The answer is yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: I should like to direct a question to the minister arising out of the affirmative answer he has given to the member for Calgary west. Are the licences given to private stations issued as permanent licences, or are they on an annual basis, terminable at the pleasure of the government?

Mr. HOWE: All licences are issued annually, for the current fiscal year only. With regard to class 1-A wave lengths, which are wave lengths permitting unlimited power, the following endorsation is included in the licence:

The frequency of ... Kc/s per second being a clear channel is definitely reserved for the national system of broadcasting and this station is authorized to use this frequency provisionally until such time as it may be required for and assigned to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. COLDWELL: What stations are covered by such an agreement?

Mr. HOWE: I think we have eight clear channels, but I am not sure that I can name them all. There are two in Toronto. One is used by a government station and the other is owned at the present time by a private company. I do not remember the wave lengths of either. There is one in Montreal used at the present time by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. There is one in Winnipeg used at the present time by the Manitoba telephones. There is one in Alberta used at the present time by a private station. There is one in Watrous, Saskatchewan, owned by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and there is one at Sackville, New Brunswick, which is also a C.B.C. station.

BUILDING MATERIALS

INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO PRIORITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. Is the government contemplating the issuance of any further order or orders providing for priorities with respect to building materials?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): What the government intends to do is a matter that must be made known in due course. I may say that I have no new orders in mind, but I may have something in mind to-morrow.

CANADIAN ARMY

ALDERSHOT MILITARY CAMP—JUNIOR PERMANENT FORCE OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. C. BLACK (Cumberland): Is the Minister of National Defence yet in a position to make a statement regarding the retention of Aldershot military camp for permanent force training for the army?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of National Defence): I thank my hon. friend for asking the question. I have had similar inquiries and representations from the Minister of Finance, the senior member for Halifax, and, I believe, most if not all of the Nova Scotia members and senators with respect to the future of Aldershot camp. The question arose, I believe, in consequence of some press dispatch, which I did not see, to the effect that training of the permanent force was to be centralized in Ontario or Manitoba. That is not accurate. The active force will include the brigade group, field units, training schools and establishments, the usual static units at district headquarters, and so on. These are to be spread across Canada. I do not recall how many schools there are, but there are several of them. One will be located at Dartmouth, Nova Scotia—an artillery school; and others will be located right across Canada: one in British Columbia, some in the prairies, some in Ontario and, I believe, in Quebec. Aldershot camp was not used before the war as a permanent establishment where troops were quartered the year round. It will not be so used after the war. In that respect it will be in the same position as Petawawa, Ipperwash, Dundurn, Farnham, Utopia and a number of others. These camps will be used in the summer months for the training of the reserve army, and no doubt a skeleton staff will be kept there the year round. So far as the permanent force units are concerned, they will be located where there are permanent quarters. Before the war in Nova Scotia that was and will continue to be Halifax and Dartmouth.

After receiving notice of this question from several hon. members I went into the matter rather carefully. I found that the total permanent force strength in military district No. 6, Nova Scotia, will be in the vicinity of 1,200 men as against about 500 before the war. The same plan will be followed there as throughout the rest of Canada. Aldershot is to-day and will continue to be the principal training centre for the reserve army in Nova Scotia.

Mr. HAZEN: May I ask whether any of he permanent forces will be maintained in New Brunswick?

Mr. ABBOTT: There will be, but I cannot give my hon. friend the numbers at the moment.

Mr. PEARKES: May I direct a supplementary question to the minister? Does he include the units of the brigade group when he refers to them as being spread across Canada?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, that is correct.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. KIDD: Is the minister in a position to answer the question I asked on May 21 with reference to junior permanent force officers?

Mr. ABBOTT: I can answer that, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member asked me the following question:

Could the discharge of the junior permanent force officers in the army be deferred or held up until such time as appointments in the service can be assured in their branch or some other branch of the service?

I do not know exactly to which type of permanent force officer the hon. member is referring. I assume he means a number of permanent force N.C.O.'s who received their commissions during the war.

Mr. KIDD: That is right.

Mr. ABBOTT: These commissions are not permanent force commissions; they are temporary commissions granted for war only. A thousand and some odd former permanent force non-commissioned officers received commissions during the war, some going as high as major and lieutenant-colonel. In the reorganization of the army some of these officers are not suitable, because of age or otherwise, for the post-war army; therefore the answer to my hon. friend's question must be in the negative.

Mr. FERGUSON: I should like to direct a further question to the Minister of National Defence. Are the outstanding facilities at Camp Borden to be utilized in the training of branches of the permanent force?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes; Camp Borden is one of the principal permanent force establishments, and always has been.

ESSENTIAL COMMODITIES

INQUIRY FOR LIST OF GOODS AND MATERIALS IN SHORT SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Will the Minister of Finance, at as early a day as possible, make a statement to the house giving a list of every essential commodity in Canada at present in short supply?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): I do not really know how to answer that question. With regard to some commodities it would appear to me to be a matter of opinion as to whether they are in short supply or not. What the hon. member is asking for is a very difficult thing to do. I do not think I can undertake to do it. If the hon. member would like to put the question on the order paper I shall do the best I can with a written answer.

COAL

USE OF BIENFAIT MINES TO ASSIST IN MEETING SHORTAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): On May 21 I directed a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply referring to the use of the Bienfait coal mines. The parliamentary assistant to the minister asked that the question be allowed to stand so that the minister could make a reply. Is the minister now in a position to reply?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): I proposed to make a statement on the coal situation to-day, but in view of possible developments in the United States, which will affect the Canadian situation very materially, and which may take place within the next twenty-four hours. I have deferred the statement until either tomorrow or Monday. I shall try to deal in that statement with the situation in the western Canadian mines.

SUPPLY

PRICE CEILING POLICIES WITH RESPECT TO FARM PRODUCTS

The house resumed from Wednesday, May 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mackenzie that the house go into committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mrs. Strum.

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): When the house rose last evening I was endeavouring to point out that this group have been carrying on this debate in the hope of getting a better deal for the farmers and the workers of this country. I also invited the private members who support the government to give us their opinion as to whether or not they approve the actions of the government in relation to its price ceiling policy up to the present.

In the short time remaining at my disposal I should like to put a few constructive proposals before the government and the house, in order to establish that we are not here merely to criticize, although we do not pull any punches when criticism is necessary, but also to propose steps to the government and to the house which we feel would be for the benefit of the people. I have five points which I should like to place on the record by way of indicating a certain line of action which in my opinion will meet with the approval of the great majority of the people of Canada.

My first point is that the government should permit increases in the prices of farm products and fish in relation to the cost of production. In view of the action of the wartime prices and trade board, authorized by the government, in permitting certain increases in the prices of manufactured articles—I do not need to go through the very long list of articles concerned—I do not think anyone in this house will deny that it is now necessary to give consideration to an increase in the prices of certain farm products and fish.

My second point is that the government should permit an immediate increase in all substandard wages. While in some instances wages went up during the war, wages in many other occupations are far below the standard. and there is necessity for an immediate increase in these wages in order that the people concerned may make both ends meet.

The third point I suggest is that a floor price of $1.55 per bushel be placed under wheat for the next five years, with comparable floors under other farm products, fish, and wages. There has been a great deal of talk in this house over the contention that the ceiling on wheat should be raised. While I believe that is true to a certain extent, what the farmer wants and needs for the next five years is not so much a ceiling pegged at a high level but some certainty as to what is going to be the floor price. At the present time provision is made for a floor price of $1 per bushel for the next five years. If the present trend is to continue, the cost of production will be such that $1 per bushel simply will not be sufficient, so I think the government should not hesitate to increase the floor price to the figure I have mentioned, in view of the world situation, the possibilities of markets, and the prices of other articles.

My fourth proposal is that the government increase the income tax exemption to $2,000 for married persons and $1,200 for single persons. My reason for offering this proposal is obvious from what has gone before. The purchasing dollar to-day does not buy what the purchasing dollar bought two years ago. A single person with an income of $1,000 or $1,200 is not able to provide the necessities of life and at the same time pay income tax. A married man receiving $2,000 or less, with the cost of living as it is and as it seems likely to be for quite a while, certainly is not able to maintain a family and at the same time contribute by way of income tax.

My fifth proposal is that pensions to the aged and the blind be increased sufficiently to compensate for the increased cost of living. The reason for that also is obvious. This is the class of people who, as I think all hon. members will agree, have been hit hardest by the rising cost of living, because they are attempting to live—in some cases merely to exist—upon fixed incomes. They cannot go on strike and ask for higher pensions. They cannot organize and refuse to sell their produce. Evidently they cannot lobby the government with any success. Therefore it is up to the members of this house to show their appreciation for our old people who pioneered this country and made it what it is, and their consideration for the unfortunate people who are suffering from blindness and other disabilities. These people should have their pensions increased immediately in order to meet the increased cost of living.

I do not advance these proposals merely, so to speak, to put the government on the spot, but because I feel they are legitimate demands which the people of this country were led, during the last election campaign, to believe would be met. I am not going to rehash what was said at that time; I need only mention the fact that during that campaign there was a great deal of talk about the new social order. Pamphlets and other literature were printed and distributed to the people in which they were told that never again would this country go through what we experienced during the hungry thirties; never again would we suffer from lack of social security, and so on. I do not say these promises were made only by the party now in power; every party represented in this house had such things somewhere in its programme. But it happens that the party across the way, the Liberal party, is in power at the present time, and it is the only party which can do these things for the people.

In order that hon. members may not think I have concocted a synthetic set of proposals out of my own head, I should like to read a resolution which was submitted to me by an agricultural society at Ethelbert, Manitoba, in my constituency. The farmers who belong to this society do heavy work; they are not the sort of farmers someone to my right mentioned the other day, who work six months a year and spend the other six months in California. I am sure not one member of this society has ever seen Florida or California, or ever hopes to do so. Here is what they say:

Whereas the members of the Ethelbert agricultural society have always been in favour of stabilization of prices of farm produce at a fair price to the producer, provided that the things the farmer has to buy are kept at a reasonable price.

Whereas the prices of many commodities the farmers have to buy have risen considerably, and the prices of farm products have not increased correspondingly.

It is therefore resolved that this society go on record as:

1. Deploring the action of the dominion government in allowing an increase in the price of farm implements;

2. Recommending that the dominion government reconsider its decision to permit an increase in the price of farm machinery, or take immediate steps for a general increase of all farm products corresponding to the increased cost of production.

I could go on and quote resolutions of the same sort from other farm organizations and labour unions, in which they point out that if they are to be asked to help maintain the price stabilization policies of this country, in return they have a right to expect some security and fairness of treatment; in other words that the load will not be placed upon the low income groups of this country. That is the stand we take on this side of the house. I believe this debate has brought out what I said in my opening remarks yesterday; that is, that if the government had taken this house into its confidence; if it had brought before the house this question of raising price ceilings and making certain unannounced adjustments, giving the members of this house an opportunity to express their opinions and give their advice in good faith, it could have saved itself a great deal of trouble and could have won the respect and support of the great majority of the people of this country. As it is to-day the government have sowed seeds of distrust in the minds of the people. To-day no one in the country feels secure, because they believe the whole price control structure is built upon sand, so to speak, which may be washed away at any time. I think it is high time the government did something to restore the faith of the people of this country in the principles of fairness in connection with price controls.

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, knowing the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum) as I do, and having a knowledge of her constituency, I am inclined to believe that in presenting her subamendment the hon. member has been the victim of the C.C.F. board of strategy. May I just read the amendment which was moved by the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Bracken) on May 6:

This house is of the opinion that the government's price ceiling policies with respect to farm products are discouraging production of needed food and imposing on the food producers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

The debate was then adjourned by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, and she then presented the following subamendment:

This house is of the opinion that the government's policies of permitting recent unjustifiable increases in the prices of farm machinery and of steel have resulted in imposing on food producers and workers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

An hon. MEMBER: What is wrong with that?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): All that is wrong with that is that she entirely approves the present price ceilings on agricultural production.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is fantastic.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Just a minute; she has made her speech, and many of her group have made speeches. I admit they have talked in as many different directions as they have had speakers, and have signified their support of the conditions in which the farmers find themselves. She has taken the meat out of the amendment, and eliminated the words:

> Price ceiling policies with respect to farm products are discouraging production of needed food.

Those words are taken out entirely. Their only grievance, according to the subamendment, is based upon the increase in the price of farm implements and steel. I have raised just as strenuous objection to that increase of 12½ per cent on farm implements as has any member in the house. I am not satisfied to stop there. I am dissatisfied with the price ceilings on the products of the farms to-day, as are a great many farmers at this particular time. May I emphasize that in that subamendment the group to my left approves these conditions in connection with price ceilings to-day. By the wording of the subamendment it would seem that they are satisfied with the recent increase in the price of gasoline in the prairie provinces, and with many other grievances; because they have taken the meat out of that original amendment and pinned their whole grievance to the increase in the price of farm implements, rightly or wrongly, after all that has taken place by way of protestations of various members to my left. In fact, if one wishes to follow that through, only a week ago, on May 16, we saw their leader rise in his place and protest against Mr. Speaker's ruling, taking the side of my colleague, the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), and then in almost the same breath voting the opposite way. I think we have to be careful about the wording of that upon which we are going to vote, despite protestations which are raised in the house.

So I say there are these many grievances which are bound to aggravate the situation from the point of view of agricultural production. I say distinctly that I for one am dissatisfied with the price of wheat to-day, with the price of beef, the price of hogs and of dairy products, as compared with the prices in any other of the united nations with which we were associated in the prosecution of the war.

As was so ably said by the hon. member for Lake Centre yesterday, great famines prevail in many parts of the world. We know little in Canada about the cost of this war—certainly not in the lack of foodstuffs. But rightly or wrongly, with the war over, many of these farmers are letting up on their production.

The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) from my own province seemed to be quite satisfied with the plight of the farmers to-day. I know that he did not speak even for all the farmers in his own constituency, let alone for the province of Manitoba.

Recently the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, through their executive, asked the dominion government to make an adequate study of farm costs of production at the earliest possible day and to relate the findings to the incomes of other Canadians. The federation suggested that the study should be made with all speed, and they added:

> Agricultural prices cannot be fixed equitably, during the period in which they must be fixed, until the essential facts are known. Agricultural production cannot be increased unless the prices of farm products are reasonable in relation to costs and earnings of non-farmers . . . The simple quick way to achieve parity between farm and city workers is to permit farm prices to rise until the scales are balanced. Those who know something about farm earnings and incomes will agree that an immediate 50 per cent increase in farm prices would be necessary to bring farm hours into line with city hours.

Just the other evening, when my colleague the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) was speaking, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) asked what "parity" is. I have heard him ask that many times. The minister did take a basis for organized labour, namely the years 1926-29, as parity. It is recognized throughout this country, of course, that there is considerable difference of opinion between the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture. I think it is conceded by those who follow current events that they do not see eye to eye. They are even far apart in some cases. But surely there should be agreement between the ministers and their parliamentary assistants. When we were debating this subject of parity on September 25, during the last session, the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) rose in his place and spoke for forty minutes on the subject, in an endeavour to point out that this governement was fighting to get the principle of parity prices accepted and written into the statutes of Canada. That was the basis of his argument, which he continued for forty minutes. Yet, after all that, the Minister of Finance in this debate professed that he did not know what parity meant.

Mr. ILSLEY: I did not know what the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe meant by parity. That is why I was asking.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): More serious consideration should be given by the Minister of Finance and his colleagues to the most recent requests of the executive of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. It is most important at this time.

The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) rather surprised me the other evening. On most issues he and I have been in agreement, but I thought he was wrong when he was setting forth the satisfactory conditions pertaining in agriculture, and talked about production in different parts of Canada. He did not put all the figures on the record which may be found in government reports to-day respecting the production of beef, pork, dairy products and other matters which are most important in the production of food.

Wtih respect to my good friend from Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny), who preceded me in the debate, may I say that his remarks of yesterday evening greatly surprised me when he attempted to misrepresent the statements of my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness). I interpolated a remark, and he said, and rightly, that I would have an opportunity to explain those matters later. He endeavoured to leave the impression that my colleague wanted all ceiling prices removed immediately. That is contrary to the facts. My colleague, speaking in this debate, said this among other things:

> Artifical controls are the essence of a socialistic state, and the people of this dominion demonstrated at the polls that they do not want a socialistic state as evidenced by their lack of support for hon. members to my left. So that I think we may take it for granted as something definite that everyone will admit that the majority of the people of this country are believers in free enterprise. In view of that fact, I think all believers in free enterprise, including the government, who profess so to believe, should now be bending their thoughts and energies toward the abolition of . . . those controls which were forced upon us during the war.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I was following the quotation which the hon. member was reading. I should like to know why he left out the word "all" after the word "of". It says, "of all those controls". He did not read that.

[Mr. J. A. Ross.]

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Of all those controls. I presume that my friend and many of his colleagues, in order to put their philosophy into force, if they ever were in power and should then be of the same opinion as they are to-day, would have to continue many of these controls.

Mr. COLDWELL: Many of them.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I hope I shall never be forced to live under that. Further I hope my family will never be called upon to live under that.

Mrs. STRUM: Does the hon. member speak for his party? Would his party do away with the wheat board and return the handling of wheat to the grain exchange?

Mr. COLDWELL: That is control.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I am speaking for myself, and I think probably my party are of the same opinion. May I say that the hon. member's predecessor in the house could not be surpassed by any hon. member in his suport of the Canadian wheat board, and I always supported him on it.

Mrs. STRUM: The hon. member did not answer my question. Would he put the handling of wheat back into the hands of the grain exchange?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I certainly would not. I have stated in this house on more than one occasion, and the hon. member and other members must have heard it if they were listening, that in March 1943 the then member for Qu'Appelle and I moved a resolution asking that the grain exchange be closed and that coarse grains as well as wheat be handled by the wheat board. I still stand by that.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I do not mind questions, but my time is limited, and the hon. member has already made a forty-minute speech.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. No hon. member should interrupt the hon. gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I should like to make reference to the argument made by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid), who put a lot of statistics on the record. I have statistics here, which I shall not put on the record, but which were gathered by the bureau of statistics and appear in the Agricultural Review, put out under the Department of Agriculture. These statistics show that the slaughtering of hogs in 1945 decreased by 35 per cent over 1944. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) is in his seat and can correct me if these figures are wrong.

There is a decrease, not only in hog production but also in the production of beef, milk, poultry,—where the decrease is very large,—and in every other farm product, according to the government's own statistics. I cannot attribute this decrease in production of farm products to anything else but the policies of this government.

When his estimates were before the house the other day the Minister of Agriculture read letters from his constituents, as did the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) and others.

Mr. GARDINER: Not from my constituents.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): They were addressed to the minister. After all, this is a national government.

Mr. MACKENZIE: We admit that.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): This government is supposed to represent all the people of this dominion. These letters showed that there had been a decrease in production of farm products, even though we had much more man-power in Canada in 1945 and 1946 than in the war years.

The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce) yesterday extolled the leader of the official opposition. He said that when he was in Manitoba he had always argued that approximately one-third of the population at that time were farmers and were entitled to that share of the national income, and he went on to say that he was in full accord with that argument.

Mr. BRYCE: There is nothing wrong with that.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I say too that there is nothing wrong with it, but I was going to add that nobody in this debate has told the house what percentage of the national income the farmers of Canada received in the first great war or in the second great war. According to a government publication of this year the farmers of Canada received twenty-nine per cent of the national income during the first great war, and in the second great war they received only eighteen per cent of the national income. That is quite a difference. I notice that the leader of the house is peering over here to see the name of this pamphlet. It is Canadian Affairs, No. 19, of 1946—"Science Serves the Farmer".

A word on controls. We have frequently seen how the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley), under whom the wartime prices and trade board operates, has not been able to explain fully some of the decisions announced by the officials of that board. I have always paid tribute to the Minister of Finance as a most conscientious and hard-working member of the government, but he often finds himself in an embarrassing position through the actions of the board. Just the other night, for instance, he was unable to explain the ramifications of the removal of the milk subsidy. Again yesterday there was a question on the order paper with reference to the 12½ per cent increase in the retail price of agricultural implements, and the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance said that he could not answer it because it was a matter of a legal opinion being wanted. I was at home when this 12½ per cent increase was announced, and it led to confusion and controversy in that whole farming community. The agents for the different companies could not explain how it was going to work out, and none of them knew how to carry on. Some thought that the 12½ per cent increase applied at that time, and some companies were adding it to the price of implements which they had had in their possession for some time past, while others did not. The whole thing was in a state of confusion.

The hon. member for Wood Mountain (Mr. Argue) the other night devoted his whole speech to the increase in the price of agricultural implements and made a statement that was not a fact. I want to explain why I interrupted at that point. I have worked in years past for the implement company which most hon. members have been discussing, the Massey-Harris company, and I travelled all through southwestern Manitoba and southeastern Saskatchewan, and my reference to the hon. member's statement was this. He said that there was no responsibility on the local agent when a salesman went through the country making sales, but I say that in those days, and I think it is the same to-day, until such time as their collections were completed the local agent of the Massey-Harris company did not receive his commission. I want to make it clear that that was the only issue I was taking with the hon. member.

There has been controversy over a press release by the wartime prices and trade board, and to-day an hon. member of this house raised a question of privilege in respect to a statement by Donald Gordon, chairman of that board. The Minister of Finance, under whose jurisdiction the board operates, took violent exception to the word "gestapo". That is strange, because I wish to refer to what seems almost unbelievable action taken by the board in the case I am now going to mention. I have here a letter from a prominent lawyer and outstanding citizen in my province, in which he says:

Re: Robert Stratton, MacGregor, Manitoba

The above party is an oil dealer living at MacGregor, Manitoba.

Stratton was convicted a short time ago for offering to sell a used McLaughlin-Buick car for more than the ceiling price. He pleaded guilty and so there was no evidence given, but we believe that he advertised the car for sale for approximately the ceiling price and when a buyer came he quoted the man $1,300. The man wanted to buy, even at $1,300, but Stratton did not sell it to him. The chap was a Brandon man and later phoned long distance to Stratton and Stratton, who claims he did not want to sell to this fellow at all, told the man over the phone that the car was already sold for $1,275. This was not true, as Stratton apparently had not sold the car at all.

So far as the writer can gather, this would-be purchaser then got in touch with the Brandon wartime prices and trade board with the result that Stratton was contacted by the wartime prices and trade board officials and the Mounted Police. He told them what had happened, signed a statement, came down to Portage, his car was immediately seized at Portage la Prairie and he was left to get home the best way he could. The writer was retained and the writer immediately drew an assurance that Stratton would not dispose of the car above the ceiling price and sent it to Mr. Siddall, representative of the wartime prices and trade board in Winnipeg.

When the case came up for trial, which was a week after the seizure of the car, my client pleaded guilty and was fined $50 and costs. The wartime prices officials did not think this was enough. After the plea of guilty, counsel for the wartime prices and trade board asked the magistrate to make an order to further retain the car. The writer naturally took the stand that the magistrate had no jurisdiction to do so. As a matter of fact, we thought it was unlawful for them to have retained the car for the week preceding the case. The magistrate refused to make the order and the car was turned over to Stratton.

We now have the spectacle of this car being seized under an order signed by C. H. Blair, assistant secretary, presumably, of the wartime prices and trade board. We enclose herewith a copy of this warrant. The car has been tied up so far in Stratton's own garage, but, as you can see, the board apparently are going to sell this car notwithstanding the fact that Stratton does not want to sell it and notwithstanding the fact that he has given an assurance that he will not peddle it above the ceiling price.

We have made application to Mr. John C. Ross of Winnipeg for re-consideration of this matter and have asked him to refer it to Ottawa. We are writing you to ask you now if you would be good enough to intercede in this matter and see if he can have his car released, as he needs it in his oil business.

[Mr. J. A. Ross.]

The regulation under which this has been seized reads as follows:

"16. Any goods which any person buys or sells or in any way deals with or attempts to buy or sell or in any way deal with contrary to these regulations may (in addition to any other penalty which may have been imposed on any person or to which any person may be subject, with relation to such unlawful act or omission, and whether or not any prosecution in relation thereto has been commenced) be seized and detained and shall be liable to forfeiture at the instance of the Minister of Justice upon proceedings in the Exchequer Court of Canada or in any superior court, subject, however, to a right of compensation on the part of any innocent person interested in such property at the time it became liable to forfeiture or who acquired an interest therein subsequent to such time as a bona fide transferee for value without notice, which right may be enforced in the same manner as any other right against His Majesty."

That, I think, is a pretty high-handed exercise of authority, and the assurances we have had in other matters with regard to the rights and liberties of the individual citizen are certainly ignored in that order. It shows there is need in this country to-day for the bill of rights which was debated here a short time ago. The letter continues:

Whether the regulation will hold water, or not, is beside the point, as people like Stratton have not money to fight these various bureaus of the government, but for a free country this is pretty drastic procedure when officials of the government without any court order whatsoever can walk into a man's place and tell him that they are going to seize and sell his own property.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: And confiscate it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Yes, and confiscate it.

Nevertheless, it is the law if the regulation is valid but it is this kind of regulation that makes the people despise the law and as you know the body of people otherwise law-abiding who are evading deliberately these regulations show all too clearly that the people are not in sympathy with the law or else they would obey it. Certainly actions like this which are perilously close to being high-handed only have the effect of creating concern in the minds of the people as to whether or not we are going completely totalitarian.

To this letter is annexed a copy of a warrant or instructions, as follows:

To Robert Stratton Esq.
MacGregor, Manitoba,

And to John C. Ross, Esq.,
Prices and Supply Representative,
Wartime Prices and Trade Board,
Winnipeg, Manitoba.

And to whom else it may concern:

Whereas the said Robert Stratton was convicted under the wartime prices and trade regulations for having offered or attempted to sell a used McLaughlin-Buick car at a price in excess of the maximum price fixed for such a used car by administrator's order No. A-1489 made by the administrator of motor vehicles and parts.

And whereas the board has no assurance that the said Robert Stratton will not hereafter sell or attempt to sell the used car at a price in excess of its maximum price.

Just think what that paragraph means.

Now therefore pursuant to authority conferred by the wartime prices and trade regulations P.C. 8528 dated November 1, 1941, and amendments thereto, the board orders as follows:

1. John C. Ross, prices and supply representative of the board at Winnipeg is hereby authorized on behalf of the board to take and retain possession of the used car and all documents of title relating thereto and to cause the used car to be sold for cash at a price not exceeding the maximum price at which it may be sold to such person as the said John C. Ross may designate.

2. Robert Stratton shall permit the said John C. Ross to take and retain possession of the said used car and all documents of title relating to it, shall do all acts and things which are necessary or which the said John C. Ross may require on behalf of the board to complete the sale and delivery of the used car to the person designated as purchaser and shall refrain from in any way impeding or preventing the said John C. Ross from carrying out the authority conferred upon him by this order.

Dated at Ottawa, this 10th day of May, 1946

The Wartime Prices and Trade Board,
by C. H. Blair,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: No right of appeal.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): No right of appeal. The courts are disregarded. Yet the Minister of Finance rose in his place in this house at the opening of this afternoon's sitting and protested against a certain expression applied to such proceedings. I ask if anything more high-handed could be conducted by gestapo agents in the totalitarian states which we fought against for years than such an order as this.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): They were carrying on a black market, and they should be put in the courts.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I am not favouring black marketing at all.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): You are favouring it right now.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That man never sold his car. I would not raise my voice on behalf of anyone engaged in what is known as black marketing.

Mr. JACKMAN: Will the minister answer the question?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Just a second. Donald Gordon says that their procedure is in accordance with justice in a democratic country. Will the minister say that that procedure is in accordance with justice in a democratic country? He was disgusted with the use of the word "gestapo", but I do not know what more high-handed action could be taken by gestapo forces than the carrying out of that very order and that warrant which I have read.

Mr. ILSLEY: Has the hon. gentleman finished? I am not participating in the debate. I am just saying something in response to an invitation by the hon. gentleman. The hon. member has not brought that case to my attention before.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I will admit that.

Mr. ILSLEY: And I do not know whether he brought it to the attention of the board. I would have to look into it before I could say anything about it. But I do not think the hon. gentleman knows much about gestapo methods if he thinks that that is a gestapo.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): He knows something about black marketing, though.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I want to take exception to the statement of the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) that I know a lot about black marketing. I do not know any more about it than he does, and I have done my best to suppress it anywhere in the country.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): Yet was not this friend of yours on the telephone, ready to sell a car for $1,275, and was he not convicted in what to me as a layman is one of the courts of this country? Members of parliament, I think, should be standing up here supporting the Minister of Finance in every attempt to stamp out the black market.

Mr. RONALD MOORE (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the house has listened to a very interesting debate, precipitated by the amendment moved by the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Bracken). After a careful study of the amendment and of the amendment to the amendment I think we can all agree that there are two main issues before the house with which we ought to be particularly concerned. The first issue is directly contained in the wording of the amendment, which states that because of the government price ceiling policy, agricultural production is being hampered. The second issue is not stated in the wording of the amendment, but I think the speeches of practically every hon. member to my right have been to the effect that price controls in this country ought to be abolished.

I have listened carefully to every debate which has taken place in this house, both in this session and in the last, and they have left with me the impression up to the present time that the Conservative party is unequivocally opposed to the price control system which was established in Canada during the war years.

This is a very important subject. It is not only of importance to the farmers; it is of great importance to the workers, including the industrial and the white-collar workers, and I think every party in this house should have its leader go on record as to what is to be the policy of that party with respect to price control. Our leader has already gone on record with respect to that situation. I have not yet heard what is the official stand of the Progressive Conservative party in this matter, and I should like to know what it is.

With respect to the first issue, I do not think there is any question but that the government's policy with respect to price ceilings is hampering agricultural production. I am in favour of maintaining the price control system which was built up in this country during the war years. I support the maintenance of it because I happen to have had the privilege of being in another British country during the war years where price control was not in effect. I can tell the members of this house that the people in that country suffered considerably because of the fact that there was no control over the prices of goods. I refer to Newfoundland. In St. John's, Newfoundland, in 1942 a dozen eggs cost $1.20—I know, because I was there—and other agricultural products were just as high. Coal sold at $25 a ton in St. John's because there was no control over prices. While I do not agree with the economic policies put forward by the present government, I do feel that we ought to give them credit for building up in this country an effective system of price control. The only objection I have to that policy up to the present time is that they are allowing private interests to punch holes in the price system, and I venture to say that we may come to the time when we shall have to abandon price controls owing to the fact that we have allowed the system to become honeycombed by rising prices.

This is the position of the farmer as far as I can see it. Under our price control system we have permitted the prices of a large number of goods to be increased, and on some of our commodities we have permitted the price control to be completely lifted. That has resulted in a reduction in the purchasing power of Canadian farmers, because the prices of goods they have to buy have gone up steadily ever since the beginning of this year. The increase in the price of gasoline, petroleum products, farm machinery, clothing and a great number of other commodities has reduced the purchasing power of the farming group as a whole.

But what applies to the farmer applies also to the labourer. I have listened with great interest to hon. gentlemen to my right discussing the subject, and they have tried to tell us that the farmers and the labourers of the country cannot unite on a common policy because their interests are divergent. This is not true. The farmers and the industrial workers are in the same boat; the economic problems that confront the one group equally confront the other; and it is up to us to see that we follow some policy that will be favourable to both these groups.

I would like to put on the record an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail of May 17 dealing with the increase in the cost of living to the industrial workers of the country. It comes from George Burt, Canadian director of United Automobile Workers of America, and this statement appears:

> Instead of wages rising since the end of the war, they have been falling. Average hourly rates in money terms are down at least three per cent, real hourly rates are down nearly six per cent. Average weekly earnings dropped ten per cent and real weekly earnings, take-home pay, dropped thirteen to fourteen per cent. Mr. Burt made this announcement as the dominion bureau of statistics reported that the cost of living index had reached 120·8 as of April 1, the highest point since the war.

He goes on to say that a great many authorities in Canada have stated that if we are to increase the wages of the industrial workers we must of necessity increase all other costs of materials in this country, and he points out that this is not the situation. He refers to what an increase in pay would mean to the cost of production of agricultural implements. This is for the United States:

> In the United States a three-bottom gang plough, for which the farmers pay $153,50, has a manufacturing labour cost of only $11.17, while a cream separator, which costs $100.84 and which bears the highest labour cost of any agricultural implement, requires a wage bill of only $14.66. In the case of cream separators, therefore, a thirty per cent increase in wages, with no improvement in labour productivity, would raise unit costs by only four per cent.

Recently I saw an interesting article in one of the western newspapers. It dealt with the increased productivity of Canadian industry in the war years, from a survey made by the war production board, which stated that in 3,750 of our largest industries, comprising forty-two different companies, the productive efficiency, when they shall have been reconverted to peace-time conditions by July 1, will have increased by some 86 per cent over 1939. But the additional amount of labour employed will be only 33 per cent. Reducing these two factors to equal terms, when these plants are reconverted to peace-time conditions their productive efficiency will have increased since 1939 approximately 40 per cent. That means that they will be able to make the same production with approximately 40 per cent less labour. This is not true for the whole Canadian industrial picture, but it is true for that number of industries. The only possible way in which to meet the situation is to reduce hours of labour and maintain the same rates of pay.

In order to show the effect which removal of price ceilings has had throughout the country, I should like to quote from a resolution I received from the federal union of base metal workers, No. 172, at Flin Flon, Manitoba:

> Federal local No. 172, which speaks for the great majority of the workers in this community, is making strong representations to the federal government to take action to forestall the deplorable situation that is fast developing in this community. With the allowance of certain price increases and the lifting of ceilings on other products and services, we are rapidly approaching a condition where the pay envelope no longer contains sufficient buying power to meet our daily needs. We appreciate the difficulties that are being encountered in the reconversion period but feel that the workers here are being asked to bear more than their share of the burden.

That is the general opinion abroad throughout the country. The workers of Canada are of the opinion that the government is removing price ceilings at this time, or revising them upward because of pressure that is being brought to bear by groups in the country. That pressure is being brought to bear by large industries in Canada who are anxious to make a killing on the vast backlog of production that exists in the country, and I do not think the government of the day should yield to it. They should have stood firm and refused to grant many of these increases.

I do not want to go on record as being opposed to adjusting the price system. It may be necessary in certain instances to increase or decrease prices, but I think it should be done scientifically and should not be done until it has been thoroughly proven that the increases are necessary. If the prices of the commodities which the farmer has to buy are to be increased by increasing the price ceiling, then we must of necessity increase the selling price of his commodity, so that his buying power will remain substantially the same.

I should like to refer to a few remarks that have been made during the course of this debate by hon. gentlemen to my right. The other evening I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) as he spoke on this subject. He spoke at great length and with great force, but in all fairness I do not think that he dealt with the subject in the manner in which he should have. For instance, one of his statements was, "As a friend of labour I take second place to no one." I presume he was referring to the group as a friend of labour. I do not think the actions of the Progressive Conservative party have proven that. Their actions did not prove that from 1930 to 1935, and I do not believe they prove it to-day. It will be remembered by all hon. members what the leader of the Conservative party had to say on this subject in 1933, when there was a great deal of labour unrest throughout the country. He said that it would be necessary for the government of that day to apply the iron heel of ruthlessness when dealing with the situation. That was the labour policy enunciated from 1930 to 1935. To put the word "progressive" in front of the word "Conservative" did not alter substantially the real policy of the party.

A little further on in his address the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe said that the farmer was the forgotten man. That is true. It was true especially before and after the last great war and the first great war. It is fair to say that during the war the farmer received a reasonable amount of the wealth of this country. The hon member for Dufferin-Simcoe went on to tell us that this condition had existed in Canada for twenty-five years. That is also true; but do not let us forget that during part of the twenty-five years the Conservative party was in power. They were in power from 1930 to 1935. They had an excellent opportunity to correct the situation at that time if they had desired to do so.

In his speech this afternoon the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) made reference to remarks made by my colleague, the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny) who spoke in this house on this subject yesterday. He referred to remarks made by the hon. member for Dauphin concerning the speech made by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe. I checked Hansard in connection with the matter, and I want to tell the house that the hon. member for Dauphin was quite right when he made that statement. I checked the original script of Hansard and I wish to quote it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I did not make any reference to the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe. I referred to the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness).

Mr. COLDWELL: No.

Mr. MOORE: If that is the case—

Mr. COLDWELL: Just put it on the record.

Mr. MOORE: At page 1751 of Hansard the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe is reported as having said:

> The leading economists tell us we shall have to increase our national income, that we shall have to increase it by 50 per cent if we are to maintain these new types of fantastic Liberal policies.

I listened very carefully to the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe when he was speaking, and I believe the hon. member for Dauphin was also listening very carefully. I think I heard something entirely different from that. It sounded to me like "social services" instead of "fantastic Liberal policies". I checked the original script of Hansard, and that is what was said. It was "social services", instead of "fantastic Liberal policies." I appreciate the fact that the hon. members to my right do not wish it to get abroad that they are not in favour of extending social services; nevertheless I think we ought to keep the record straight on that issue.

We ought to consider for a few minutes what would happen in this country if we took off price controls. The results would be serious for the workers of Canada. If we were to take off the controls it is quite possible that our prices would increase by twenty-five per cent by the end of this year. This increase in price would take place on all agricultural and industrial commodities. If that happened we would have a spiral of inflation with which agriculture would not catch up for the next three or four years. An agricultural depression would hit this country, and it would require five or six years to get back to normal. Possibly we would not get back to normal until different policies were followed. In this regard I should like to quote what United States authorities have to say with respect to price control. I shall quote from a statement made by Mr. Paul Porter, administrator of the OPA in the United States. This statement was made before the banking and currency committee on April 17, 1946. Speaking of the possibility of the lifting of price controls in the United States Mr. Porter said:

> We cannot assume that the boom would collapse in a single year as it did last time. The rise in prices might well continue. As they moved up to levels 75 and 100 per cent above current prices, the purchasing power of the dollars that American families have put into war bonds, insurance policies and other forms of savings would continue to fall. If present prices doubled, the things which a dollar bought on September 1, 1939, would cost $2.60. To put it another way, the dollar's 1939 purchasing power would have shrunk to 38 cents.

If we are to follow a similar course in this country it is only natural to expect that we shall get a similar result, and I wish to go on record as being in favour of retaining price controls, with the proviso that as the situation develops the price of agricultural products ought to be raised in line with the price control system of maintaining the purchasing power of the farmers of Canada.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I rise to a question affecting the privileges of this house? The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat referred to a distinct change in the record of Hansard. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that it be looked into and the record of Hansard put in the manner in which the statement was originally made.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I have taken note of the remarks of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, and I shall have the record perused and shall bring the matter to the attention of the officials.

Mr. L. E. BAKER (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): I had not intended taking part in this debate, but it has gone on for so many days that I wish to put myself on record as being solidly behind the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Ilsley) in his endeavour to maintain price controls.

I have listened to the debates, and I have listened with great interest to what the western members have said. I am particularly concerned with what affects primary producers, and more particularly fishermen. I am sympathetic to the problems of the westerners, and I trust that we shall get their consideration in matters that affect the people of the maritimes and the Pacific, the fishing constituencies of the inland lakes and all across Canada. It seems to me that undue stress has been put upon the position of the farmers. I would suggest, in a very kindly way, that the farmers will get more sympathy if they do not emphasize only their own case and make themselves out to be the people who are always abused, because I do not think that is the case. I am sympathetic toward the farmers; I have many of them in my constituency but, as I said, I am even more sympathetic toward the fishermen.

As far as price control is concerned, having lived in European countries where I have seen the black market work; having listened to various arguments from the opposite side of the house which are to some extent conflicting, I should say we are fortunate in having our present set-up with the wartime prices and trade board which at least knows where it is going and what it is doing, and I hope we shall retain it for quite some time. I would not want anyone to think I should like to see prices remain as they are now, for all time. That would be a stupid statement to make. When supply equals demand it seems to me only common sense that we shall be able to relinquish certain price controls. At the present time you do not have to go out and sell articles; you must go to the seller and ask if you may buy them. When the time comes that people have to go out and sell things, then some controls may be removed. There may be times when you will have to allow price ceilings to rise in order to increase production, as has been done in connection with farm machinery. I am not an industrialist, but the industrialist is a human being like anyone else, and it seems only reasonable that he should be able to get a fair return for his efforts or for the money he has invested, just as the farmer or anyone else should.

I have only one suggestion to offer. I own a few shares of stock in a company which produces farm equipment. I would not sell those shares now, because they are very much lower than the price at which I bought them many years ago. I suggest to hon. members on the opposite side of the house that if they believe these companies are going to make so much money and are going to do so well, they should either individually or in groups buy up this stock. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. I do not want to go in with them, because I do not feel like putting money into farm equipment stock at the present time. I do not believe there is much profit in it, but that is my suggestion. When some of them come back here and tell me they or their organizations have done so, then I think they will have a little more to talk about.

I hope that eventually our price control organization and many other bureaux will be done away with, so that we may get back to where we were before the war. But we must be very careful in going about this. I suggest that it takes a man of courage to maintain these price controls and continue the policy that has been adopted by the wartime prices and trade board. It would be very easy for the Acting Prime Minister to say, "Oh, yes; we will relinquish this control and that control." It is so easy to say yes, but it is a little different when you have to say no, with perhaps some of your own constituents fighting against you and some people over the whole country opposing you. I like a man who can say no when he believes that is the right thing to do. Regardless of what happens in this House of Commons, I will leave it to the public to decide who is right and who is wrong. I am supporting the Acting Prime Minister and the wartime prices and trade board, hoping that, as time goes on, certain controls may be dropped, and that we shall continue to receive popular support until such time as we can do away with all these things.

Mr. MAX CAMPBELL (The Battlefords): Mr. Speaker, I had prepared quite a lengthy speech in connection with this matter, principally on the question of farm machinery. However, I think that subject has been pretty well covered by other hon. members, and I do not intend to devote very much time to it. I wish to place on record part of a letter I received from a Massey-Harris farm machinery agent because, if the facts are as set out in this letter, I believe the minister should get to the bottom of this situation. This is what this agent says:—

> At a convention held in Saskatoon, April 2, 1945, Mr. Burns, Massey-Harris Company manager there, told us the Massey-Harris Company made $2,300,000 profit in 1944 and that by or for, starting January, 1946, they were going to give their agents $1,300,000 more than they did for the machines they sold in 1944.
> Then he, Burns, told the agents that the 102G senior tractor that sold for $1,492.90 gave the agent $251.54 in commission and that the new rate would give him $101.50 more, a total of $353, and this increase is to apply in proportion to all machines starting January, 1946.
>
> There is also a bonus at end of year of varying amounts on sales up to $20,000, 1½ per cent; up to $35,000, 2 per cent; up to $50,000, 2¼ per cent; then an extra 2 per cent if all sales completed in the year.
>
> The dealer buys the machine and parts from the company, and pays wholesale price only. Before this year the dealer paid selling price and got his commission at end of year.
> The dealer guarantees the machine—not the company.
>
> There is quite a lot of detail in connection with these prices. That I will not bother you with.
>
> But the question is: Why did the company give the agents about 40 per cent more commission than he got before then ask the wartime prices and trade board permission to increase prices 25 per cent and got 12½ per cent?
> The agent sure has a good thing for the next three years, he can sell all he can get.

I think enough has been said about prices of farm machinery to indicate the need for the wartime prices and trade board to make a thorough investigation into the matter. A committtee of this house should be set up, and this whole matter of farm machinery prices should be brought into the open. I know the minister said the wartime prices and trade board made an investigation, but from the figures which have been given in this house I do not believe that investigation was thorough or complete, and the farmers of Canada are entitled to all the facts. A few days ago the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) made the statement that the farmers of this country were happier—I think that was the word he used—than they had been for many years. I believe he was right up to a few weeks ago, but judging from the letters I am receiving now the farmers are not satisfied. I do not believe there would have been very much protest from the farmers if the old price ceiling had been maintained, though I think some of those prices were not exactly right. There should be a price fixing board on which the farmers, the workers and various other groups in the country should have representation, which would ascertain the proper relationship of prices and then set prices accordingly. Then there would be no kick from anybody.

What is the situation in Canada to-day? A great many people are dissatisfied. The workers are dissatisfied with their wages. The farmers are dissatisfied with the removal of the milk subsidy, for example. We have a strike in the logging industry, and we are threatened with other strikes all over Canada. According to the newspapers we are threatened with a strike of farmers right here in the province of Ontario. These farmers threaten to throw their milk down the drain. I do not like strikes; I think they should be avoided, if at all possible. I do not like them because those who do the striking are in the long run, the losers. In respect of wages, if they get increases under the present system. immediately the cost of the article made from their labour goes up, and the increase in the wage they obtain through striking is counteracted by the cost of the article they must buy.

The farmer has no protection; he is not in a position to strike. Perhaps the milk producers could throw their milk down the drain for a few days or a few weeks, but who wants to see that? Little children will suffer if a thing like that is done. We do not want to see children going without milk in this country for a month, while the farmers are throwing milk down the drain.

I heard over the radio last night that the government was going to have a meeting to consider putting the subsidy back on milk. I hope something will be done. However, I did make the statement in the house last year, in my maiden speech, that I did not believe the government would do the things that would have to be done in order to get the things the people of this country want. Those things are security, stabilized prices for farmers, and wages for workers in industry which will give them a decent standard of living. We want them to know they are going to have jobs all the time, and not just some of the time.

I have been listening to some of the statements made in the house, and have been surprised at some of them. The hon. member who has just taken his seat comes from a different part of the country. Then Tuesday evening the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) told us injustices were being suffered by the fishermen on the east coast. I support the fishermen, or any other group of men who work for their living; because we must realize some day, sooner or later, that wealth is produced by the people who work, and that the working class, the people who have produced the wealth of this country in the last hundred years, to a large extent have been poverty stricken.

I was surprised when the hon. member for Charlotte said this:

> Sticks that are driven into the ground are anywhere from 20 feet to 60 feet in length. In 1940 I could buy a 50-foot stick for $3.50. In 1946 they are $12.50 each.

Here is an instance of a great increase in the price of something the fishermen has to buy. Where I come from, if a member for my constituency did not rise in his place in the house and protest against that sort of thing, he would not be a member very long. I am surprised that the hon. member for Charlotte did not protest on Tuesday evening when he was speaking.

Then, speaking again about the fishermen, he said:

> They are standing on their own feet and not asking for help. They will not ask for help as long as they can make a living, and they are ready to work for it.

Then he went on to say:

> In the winter time I have been twenty miles off shore, taking sardines on board a boat....

And so on. He proceeded to tell how hard he had to work. I realize he had to work hard for a living, and I am trying to represent people who have to work hard for a living. I want to see people who have to work as hard as the hon. member worked get something for the wealth they have produced.

On Tuesday evening we heard a speech from the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe). This is what he said as reported at page 1744 of Hansard:

> I speak as a member of the party that is recognized in Canada to-day as being the farmers' party.

Mr. IRVINE: Ho, ho, ho! That is a jolly good joke.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I do not think that is correct. Before the last election the Progressive Conservative party sent an organizer into my constituency. He could not find any Tories in my village, so he spent the evening with me.

Mr. MacNICOL: A waste of time for the Tory joke.

Mr. CAMPBELL: He was a very pleasant fellow and a good conversationalist, so we had a good time. But one of the things he said was this: "I cannot understand why you fellows get beaten time and again, but come back every time, and each time a little stronger." I said, "There is a reason for it. The reason is that we have a policy. We have something in which we believe."

Mr. GARDINER: Then the Tories all voted for you.

Mr. COLDWELL: Oh, you know better than that—in Melville.

Mr. IRVINE: Some of the real Liberals did.

Mr. CAMPBELL: So that when the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe states that his party is the farmers' party, I would draw something else to the attention of the house. This is what he said, as reported at page 1750 of Hansard:

> This party stands for the removal of the ceiling on farm products.

He sits in the front row; he is one of the leading members in his party, and he makes the statement that he is in favour, or his party is in favour of the removal of the ceiling on farm products.

At another point in his speech he said that he took second place to no man as a friend of labour. Well, what would happen in Canada if the ceilings were taken off farm products? I am a farmer, representing a farming constituency. I want to see the farmers in my constituency, not get all they can get, no, but get something that will bear a fair relationship to the prices of the things they have to buy. If the ceilings are taken off farm products, either by the government —or by this other party, if it should ever get into power—what could we expect? If the ceilings are taken off one group of products, it follows necessarily that those earnings must be taken off every other product. What happens then? We have inflation for a while, and it may be that a few would benefit from that inflation. But from past experience we know who suffers most when deflation comes.

Mr. MITCHELL: The farmer and the working man.

Mr. CAMPBELL: You bet your life, it is the farmer and the working man who suffers most when deflation comes.

Do we want deflation? We do not. As our leader has said in this debate, we do not want high prices one day and low prices the next. What we are trying to make the house see is that we want stabilized prices, so that the farmer will know what he is going to get when he puts in a crop, so that the working man will know what his wages are going to be, and will not be losing his job.

What happens when we have deflation? We went through a period of deflation after the first great war and before the second one. I have given reasons before in the house why we have had those periods of deflation. I have been satisfied for some time that if we continue under the capitalistic system we shall have those inflationary and deflationary periods; there is no way out of it. If, as the hon. member has said, his party is in favour of taking the ceilings off farm products, he must also be in favour of taking the ceilings off every other product. That is not what the farmers of Canada want to-day, and that is not the kind of party they want to represent them.

Later in his speech the hon. member said:

> Competition, reasonable pay for services, recompense for individual effort, choice of vocation—all these things are influenced by the law of supply and demand.

Economists used to tell us that two great laws regulated our economic system, the law of competition and the law of supply and demand. There was a time when those two great natural economic laws did work, but nobody can tell me that they are working to-day or that they have worked in the last twenty years. Is there competition in this country as between one big business and another? Absolutely none. There is a certain amount of competition among small business men but there is no competition and has not been for some time between the large industries in this country. We had proof of that when Mr. Duncan, manager of the Massey-Harris Company, was before the 1937 committee of this house on farm machinery prices. He was asked, "How do you arrive at prices? Do you all get together and fix prices?" He said, "No, we wait until International Harvester brings out their price list and then we bring one out like it." There is competition in this country among labourers for jobs when there are five labourers for every job, but there is no competition so far as big business is concerned.

As to the law of supply and demand, I think many of us in this house know something of that law. There are two kinds of demand.

There is what we call the effective demand. Then there is another demand which many of us know more about, namely, the stomach demand. There was a stomach demand all through the 1930's, when people did not have the money to buy what they needed, and so that demand was not effective. Does anybody want to go back to the old competitive system and the law of supply and demand? I am a cooperator. I believe in cooperation. I believe that competition is just as bad among business as it is between nations. Competition is one of the things that is responsible for war and for a great deal of the hardships that we have seen in this country. Take the small business man, for instance, who has worked hard, saved a little money and established a small business. Then, under the competitive system somebody comes along and sets up a store beside him, perhaps someone with a little more capital. better stock or connected with a chain store, or it might be a large corporation. What happens to the small business man? We know by government statistics that thousands of small businesses go out of existence or go bankrupt year after year. Do we want to return to that system? That is not what the farmers are going to support.

Mr. E. G. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, many speakers in this debate have presented statistics to prove their case that the government's recent policy of decontrol has meant undue hardship for agricultural producers and workers in this country. I believe, and I think in this I am in complete agreement with all members of this group, that this whole problem of decontrol facing the government to-day stems out of the lack of policies which they should have formulated during the war. If those policies had been formulated we would have known when we entered this post-war period exactly where we were going. I am sure that this government has no policy in regard to decontrol. It is giving in to pressure behind the scenes.

As a new member of this house, I would have thought this government would have learned something during the war, but I am quite sure now that we have simply the same set-up that we had during the war, a set-up for the protection of the vested interests of this country. In any proper policy of decontrol you cannot treat agriculture independently of other branches of our Canadian economy. We must recognize that our whole economy is so interlinked that farmers and workers and all the Canadian people are interdependent. But once again we see the government giving in to these powerful corporations who, behind the scenes, are exerting pressure upon it.

[Mr. Campbell.]

During the war these companies made tremendous profits. I do not wish to give figures that have already appeared on Hansard but will say briefly that in 600 odd companies listed here the profits ranged from 13·3 to 17·6 per cent. These companies have made money and they are making money again. It is true, as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) stated, that agriculture had some of the best years it ever had during the war; nevertheless he went on to state that the average income of agriculture in its best years was only $2,000 par farm.

I should like to say a word about our national debt. On March 31, 1939, our gross debt, according to the bureau of statistics, was $3,710,610,592.87, and in 1945 it had grown to $15,712,181,527.26. This means that once again the people who made profits in the past during the development of this country are in a preferred position, with the taxpapers of this country owing money to them.

When we are planning for the post-war period we should predicate our whole policy on making available to the common people of this country the things which they produce. In 1939 we had a national income of $3 billion and that has grown to-day to a national income of $9 billion. Our whole system should be so arranged that the workers will be enabled to get a fair share of the things that agriculture produces and that the farmers will be able to buy the things they need which the industrial workers produce. Look at the number of our farms to-day that have no bathtubs and no modern bathroom equipment; at the number that are without cars and all the amenities of life that they should and could have. But the decontrol policy of this government is bringing about a situation that lowers the purchasing power of farmers so that they will be unable to buy what the industrial workers produce. Consequently we are going to pass through another phase of unemployment.

It seems to me that the machinery companies in their pressure on this government are doing very much what the aluminum company did in the months just before the war, when they refused to go into production until they got the profits which they demanded. Tremendous profits have been made by these big companies. The Shipshaw power project during 1941 to 1945 received from the government a special depreciation amounting to $164 million, in addition to huge profits based on prices of from fifteen to seventeen cents per pound. The machine companies are also making huge profits. What the government is doing by making this gap in the ceiling on farm machinery will result in breaking the ceiling on every other commodity. I have here a report from the Free Press Prairie Farmer of May 7, 1946, headed "Farm hardware price rise seen", in which one hardware merchant who specializes in hardware materials which farmers require says that price increases of from 5 to 10 per cent on farm hardware can be expected.

There was an example of this to hand yesterday in statutory orders and regulations, May 1, 1946, by this government providing that prices of metal beds, cribs and bassinettes are increased by 10 per cent and metal bedsprings, trunks and cots are going up 12½ per cent. So that in fact we have no longer any control policy.

As reported at page 1781 of Hansard the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) in his speech the other day said, referring to the leader of this group:

> ....the C.C.F. party supports the government in its stand that there shall be no increase in the prices of farm products in this country.

I believe that when the leader of our group speaks he will make it abundantly clear that he never said that and does not believe in it, neither does any member of this group. We have always taken the stand that we believe in a scientific, organized Canadian economy whereby the price of farm products will bear a fair relationship to the cost of their production. But what is happening at this time? Let us consider the serious position of our 800,000 veterans, most of whom have come back only to find that the government has allowed the cost of housing to go up about 50 per cent, the cost of machinery to rise by 12½ per cent, with increases in other directions. These boys and girls returning to civilian life find that their gratuities are insufficient to buy or build houses or to buy farm machinery; yet their incomes are stabilized. In consequence, they are not able to rehabilitate themselves. This is not fair, because these young people went into the services with the idea that they would not be any worse off when they came back than those who did not enlist. They find that through conditions beyond their control housing costs have gone up 50 per cent, and by a statutory order issued on May 20 the government has allowed the price of furniture to be increased from 10 to 12½ per cent. So it looks as though the government in its decontrol policy has no regard for these people. The outlook is serious.

What we need is, not a plan for agriculture alone or for the industrial worker alone, but general planning on a basis whereby our Canadian economy can be scientifically arranged so that the people of Canada can absorb the goods which they produce. I do not think it is sensible to look for foreign markets so long as the people on the farms are without radios, bathroom equipment and other necessities. Likewise I do not believe that, apart from the emergency we are facing to-day, we need to worry about foreign markets for our agricultural products. As was pointed out the other day, when we went into war and began to put pay cheques into the pockets of our workers they started to buy the beef, butter, pork and cheese which the farmers were producing, and the Minister of Agriculture himself said, when speaking in the province of Saskatchewan, not much beef had been shipped out until we had to resort to the rationing of beef. The point was that for the first time in many years purchasing power was put into the pockets of large numbers of people.

What is happening to-day? It would seem that the same situation is likely to recur which existed prior to 1939, when the leader of this group, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), and Mr. Douglas, now Premier of Saskatchewan, proposed on various occasions that money be provided to put to work the young men who were then on relief. The question arose then which we hear now, where is the money to come from? I suggest that it will not be many months before we shall have the same situation. The money will be in the hands of the financial corporations of this country, and we shall again be faced with the same inquiry, as to where the money is to come from. Yet we have the farmers needing equipment, because for six years prior to the war, owing to low prices, they did not have purchasing power, and in the six years following, because steel was needed for war purposes, they were and are, though provided with some purchasing power, unable to replace their farm machinery. While we pay much lip-service to all-out food production we are in fact achieving nothing of the kind because of these restrictions. I know in my district people are wondering if it is worth while trying to farm, and certainly the young men and women returning from the war are not going back to the farms.

I do not think I need speak any longer on this matter, but in conclusion I charge the government with failure in its decontrol policy, on five counts.

In the first place, it has failed to maintain full production in the industrial field, because it is not providing incentives.

In the second place, it has failed to maintain all-out food production because of its income tax policy, the increase of three cents per gallon on gasoline, and the increased costs of farm machinery.

In the third place, it has failed to achieve full employment. I have just inquired of the bureau of statistics as to the number of registered unemployed in Canada, and I wish to point out that at this time, when we are supposed to go into a full housing problem and all-out food production, 225,000 persons are registered as being unable to find jobs.

In the fourth place, the government has failed to distribute the national income fairly among our people. I believe that farmers and their wives who have worked long hours during the war, and workers in industry, should be entitled to a fair share of the nation's income, that it should be so distributed as to provide decent standards of living in this country.

In the fifth place, the government has failed to maintain housing and other rehabilitation costs at levels at which the veterans can decently rehabilitate themselves.

These, Mr. Speaker, are my views on the decontrol policy. I think it is absurd for any hon. member to make suggestions or even to criticize the government merely on one phase of this policy; it must be faced as a problem of the whole Canadian economy. We in this group insist that if the country is to avert another depression, if we are to have the kind of post-war programme to which those who fought this war are entitled, it will have to be worked out on a scientific basis.

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, my reason for participating in this discussion is that for the last three decades in my own section of northern Ontario we have had the greatest agricultural development of any area in Canada. At the very outset I must state my belief that the discussion which is taking place on the resolution of non-confidence will prove beneficial to the people generally, because it will bring forcibly to the attention of parliament and of the Canadian public the controls which we have had during the war and which will probably have to be maintained to some extent for a great many years, if not for all time to come.

It is not popular to work for and to support controls, it was a real ordeal as far as I was personally concerned, because no Canadians, in fact no people living in democratic countries, relish controls even in war time, much less in peace time. However, I thought it my duty and my obligation, more particularly during the war, when I saw some dissatisfaction over rationing and price controls, to step into the breach and tell our people what these restrictions meant to them, to our war effort and to our allies, and I am going to do much the same thing even now that the war is over, because I know that controls are still needed.

During the present debate we have often been reminded that the war is over. It is true that the armed conflict is ended. But the war has left us a horrible and costly heritage, and I for one could never feel that after five, six or seven years of bloody conflict we could reasonably expect a heaven on earth to result. There was bound to be a residue of hardship for the Canadian people as well as for all the other peace-loving people of the world, in fact, for all the nations; and for many years to come, apart from the bloodshed, sacrifices will have to be made throughout the world so as to solve the post-war problems. It was not a pleasant thing even from the political point of view, and in this connection I wish to quote a statement made by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) in the maiden speech he delivered last year, which was so well received on all sides in the house, not only because the speech itself was an able one but because of the reputation and the ability of the hon. gentleman who delivered it:

> I was in a very small shop one day located in my riding. Like most country stores it was really a tiny departmental store. In it was a dry goods section, a grocery section, a boots and shoes section, and so on. I should think one could have taken any of those departments and put it in a good-sized wheelbarrow. The owner of that shop was somewhat annoyed on the day of my visit. It seems there had been two government inspectors who came to the shop during the afternoon. They travelled in very fine cars supplied with plenty of gasoline—and this was during the rationing period. One of them examined, let us say, his dry goods; the other examined, let us say, his boots and shoes, to see that all was in order. From my own point of view it was perhaps a good thing, because I think the owner of the store was a faithful member of the Liberal party, and I left that shop with some feeling that perhaps he might change his allegiance.

This was not my own attitude in my riding. I had no desire to inquire into the political party affiliations of anyone, retailer or wholesaler, though I have no doubt that in many instances people were irritated by the controls. We all realize to-day, however, how necessary those controls were. I do not think anyone should refer to the fact that inspectors or officials of the wartime prices and trade board were travelling around in cars, good or otherwise. It is true that they did travel, but they had to travel somewhere and they had to have some means of travelling because there was a great deal of territory to be covered. It may be true that they were using more gasoline than the average citizen, but I do not see any ground for criticism there, because they simply had to travel and they had to have the gasoline.

I would, however, ask hon. gentlemen this question. Have we as parliamentarians; have we as leaders in our own individual communities, done everything which it was in our power to do to make the controls effective? It would be a very easy matter to capitalize politically against the government on the controls. It would be quite easy for me to state in this house that I am opposed to controls as such and that there should never have been any price control system. That would be popular in my section of the country. But would that be playing fair; would it be playing the game, from the point of view of the national economy? Would it be doing anything to help toward a solution of the post-war problem?

The motion of non-confidence has been, I believe, properly analyzed and interpreted by the farmers of the country, and they will certainly not be happy about it, nor will they be inclined to commend the leader of the Progressive Conservative party and his followers for that motion, for its implications against them. The amendment carries the implication that because of the controls that have been in effect, as a necessity because of war conditions and at the present time, our farmers have not played fair and have refused to produce to the maximum of their capacity.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers of this country—I think, for that matter, the same can be said of farmers everywhere—are not only a robust people, but a loyal people as well, and we know how hard they worked during the war and are still working. Unlike those engaged in industry or in the professions, they cannot draw up a chart in the spring of the year, knowing exactly how much they will grow, exactly what they will reap from the seeds they have sown, what returns they will get for the sweat of their brows. But have not all the farmers of this country, not only during the war, but under all circumstances, and under handicaps of every kind, dedicated their vocation to the good of the country as a whole, and done the best they possibly could under all conditions?

I do not believe for a moment that controls have had any effect on the farmers in the way of influencing them to curtail production or not to produce to the fullest extent possible. They have not done that in my part of the country, nor do I believe they have done it in any other section of Canada. What is more, I am positive they will not take that attitude in consequence of a slight increase in the price of farm implements. I am speaking for the farmers and settlers in my own section at any rate.

A little later on I wish to consider, in the light of the amendment that has been proposed, prices that are actually paid in the United States, and in this connection I will quote some comments made by certain United States newspapers of wide circulation giving the reasons for prices having been so high. We all know that sometimes there is decreased production as far as farm products are concerned, but this is not due to any government policy; it is due, generally, to climatic conditions. We can be thankful that the government cannot be blamed for the weather; if the government could be blamed for it, then no government would long remain in office, and it is really the only thing on which it can be challenged. In my part of the country in 1944 we had about one-fifth of our average hay crop, although we received some help from the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa in getting lower freight rates on hay shipped to our section. But a good many people had to sell dairy and other cattle because costs were prohibitive. The government certainly cannot be blamed for that situation.

I should like to read something that shows how pathetic the farmer's position is. It is pathetic regardless of any government policies or controls. The following is a brief article that appeared in the Regina Leader-Post in May, 1946:

> There is an anxious furrow in the brows of southern Saskatchewan people as they scan the skies these days. Early though it is in the spring season, there have been several invasions already of the dreaded enemy—dust. Eyes have smarted,throats have been constricted with the acrid taste, and the wind has whipped up to the devastating proportions of ten years ago.
> Few who experienced the siege of a decade ago can ever forget that period when the whole pattern of the province's economic and moral fibre rocked and reeled to a series of constant dust storms. Agriculture was, of course, the most vitally affected. Saskatchewan farmers needed and drew upon a courage almost superhuman to bolster them against the sight of constantly drifting, precious topsoil, and the knowledge that their crops and livelihood were blowing away each day with the evil drouth winds. The fact that they did stick it out grimly and steadfastly, has become yet another saga of brave Canadians. It is to be hoped they will be spared from such another trial.
> Urban dwellers felt the reprecussions of the economic depression also and doctors reported that eye, ear, nose and throat trouble sprang up overnight due to the vicious onslaught of the dust-laden air.

I have read nothing that describes so poignantly the anxiety and pathos of the farmers during their seeding season as well as in the crop season. I repeat, the leader of the Progressive Conservative party was ill-advised to introduce a resolution that seeks to convey to the people of the country the impression that, as a result of certain government policies, the Canadian farmers have not been true to their calling and have not produced to the best of their ability, and have seized any opportunity to curtail production.

So far as decreased acreage is concerned, I can assure the house that there will be no decrease this year as a result of the 12½ per cent increase in the price of farm implements. On the contrary, there will be a larger acreage than in the past. The following Canadian press dispatch appeared early this week with reference particularly to Ontario:

> Seeding of the new crops across the country is well ahead of this time last year except in the maritimes, a survey by the Canadian Press showed to-day. And farmers are planting more wheat than last year.
> Winter killing of fall wheat, hay and clover crops was considerable in central and eastern Ontario. The weather so far has been unfavourable for growth of these crops and of course for pastures too, with most milking herds still stabled.

We all know this is a backward spring, and not conductive to profitable operation so far as dairying is concerned. I continue with the quotation:

> Ontario is expected to seed somewhat higher acreage of spring grains, and a considerable increase in acreage of tobacco, soy beans, corn, early potatoes, field peas and sugar beets.

Surely there is no danger of defeatism in Ontario farmers and the farmers throughout Canada, no matter what may happen to governmental activities. I continue:

> Ontario expects the biggest tobacco crop in history, with a twenty per cent increase in all types. The plants will be set out around May 24. The tobacco growers are anxious for ample rainfall right now, however.
> All vegetable growing districts in Ontario expect increased acreage this year in practically all vegetables. Transplanting and seeding is up to normal in most places and well ahead of normal in others.

I just wanted to put that on the record so that parliament and the people from the urban centres will know that our Canadian farmers are not discouraged. They were at times working under a great handicap. We remember the depression; we remember the terrible years of dought in the west. We have had difficult times in my own section where we have been pushing out the borders of civilization under climatic conditions that were not ideal for farming, particularly grain farming. Year after year we had to face premature frost in the fall and early frosts in the spring. In my own farming activities it was only in the seventeenth year after seeding grain on our soil that we harvested grain crops for seed purposes. I am showing by that, that our people are not discouraged, even by the elements.

No one will make me believe that an increase in price of a fraction of one per cent will discourage all our farmers from going ahead with their work. It is a calling with them; it is a duty, besides being their way of living. They have heard the appeal of the famished people of Europe; they have heard the appeal of Mr. LaGuardia, of Mr. Hoover, of the Canadian government, of every member of this parliament, of the necessity of growing more crops to feed the people of Europe. Most of them know what happened during the last war. Therefore on this score I am absolutely at ease in speaking.

I know that our farmers do not like this increase in the cost of their farm implements. They are human, the same as anyone else. I know they will never be satisfied with their lot. But that is a happy situation, because every section of our population should agitate logically, practically, sincerely and honestly for a better place in the sun, for more comfort and prosperity than they have; in a word, for a better way of life. We do not need to worry as far as the rest of our population is concerned when that takes place. The farmers are basing their opinions on that score, but they are realists. They know that to-day their situation is better than it was four, five or six years ago. They hope that never again will the prices that obtained during the depression be prevalent throughout Canada. At that time eggs were selling at eleven cents a dozen and butter at eighteen cents a pound. As a wholesaler and retailer I know that this was not good for Canada as a whole. It was not good for anyone. I hope that the price and floor controls which were established two years ago will, when in full swing, stabilize prices, and give a fair amount of controlled prices so far as farm production is concerned.

May I now touch on the question of price ceilings? Farmers realize that it cannot be absolutely rigid; it must be resilient to some extent. The same thing applies to floor prices. At times, some of the floor prices will have to be increased and decreased. Being logical, labour also knows that the workers cannot expect a rigid wage scale. Everyone knows that the industrialists cannot work or manufacture on the same prices as ten years ago, five years ago, or perhaps ten years from now. Rigidity is never conducive to the good functioning of any economic system. They have it in some countries, but surely we do not want it imposed on us. Our farmers know very well that an increase of one-fifth of one per cent, or one-tenth of one per cent in their cost of production is not going to upset their own activities, because they have received some increases. They received an increase recently on the price of butter, and they are satisfied to some extent, but not entirely so. I know this is a delicate problem for me to deal with, but I know of no section of our population which is more logical and practical; they understand the other viewpoint, and I know it is my duty to express my opinions on such questions forcibly and honestly.

An hon. member when speaking this afternoon said something about hon. members who had invested in farm implement companies. I hold no brief for the farm implement companies, because the few dollars I placed in those companies had never brought me very much. I am willing to sell what interest I have in those companies very cheaply to any member of parliament, because I have never received any dividends except some years ago, and those small profits very likely came out of war contracts. Therefore on that score I am perfectly at ease to speak sincerely. The statements I make here I shall make to my own people, because they will be satisfied if, with a slight increase in the price of farm implements, more farm implements can be made available.

I must state frankly—I do not know how true it is—that when some farmers learned from the newspapers that farm implements were being shipped to Europe and they were not able to get them and were having a difficult time in cultivating their land, they did indulge in a certain amount of criticism. But generally speaking—and I say this sincerely—our farmers naturally accepted that increase, because they have confidence in the wartime prices and trade board and its officers, and more particularly in Mr. Gordon. He must have been a courageous and sincere man, because with his qualifications it would have been easy for him to resign his position and get another and an easier and more lucrative one. No matter what he did, whether he increased or decreased prices, there is a section of our population who would have been willing and ready to criticize him, and sometimes unfairly. We owe him a great debt of gratitude for staying in his position not only during war time, but also at the present time. Who will challenge the statement; who will say that Mr. Gordon could not step out of his position and go into private enterprise and, because of his own initiative and ability, make more money than he makes at the present time? Personally speaking, I say that there has been some unfair criticism levelled against him, but the vast majority of our people deeply appreciate his great accomplishments.

With regard to price controls, I have always maintained that it is the primary duty of the department to educate our people, to make them realize the necessity of price control. After a person has been fairly warned; after the organization work has been done, and the proper publicity given to the necessity of price controls, if infractions take place in these controls the law should take its course. A splendid job has been done in that connection.

I must confess that I do not claim to know all the ramifications and all the details of price control. To do so would be presumptuous on my part. I believe it was necessary during war time, and I believe it will be necessary for a number of years to come. To think in terms of ten and twenty years is to try to fool ourselves. The era of laissez-faire has gone forever, whether it is industry, farming, labour, finance, or any other occupation. The time has arrived when, for the welfare of every section of this population, the government must, of necessity, interfere to some extent with the affairs of these organizations and social groups. No matter what we may think or say—and I have no grievance against anyone who expresses his own opinions—under our present system, which I hope will be maintained indefinitely, the capitalistic system must, of necessity, revise its way in many instances in a drastic way; it must be progressive in the full sense of the word; it must realize that controls that were existing during the war will also be necessary to a limited extent after the war is over, for the good of the whole population.

I have in my hand the report of a speech made by Mr. C. L. Burton, president of the Robert Simpson Company Limited. I have no real criticism to offer in regard to it, because he spoke as a good business man, a man who knows big industry and the questions of the big retail and wholesale houses. However, you can see in that speech how quickly he would like to see these controls done away with. I believe in these remarks he was voicing his own sentiments, as a prominent business man; but whether or not the Progressive Conservative party took a lead from this speech, I believe the policy of that party also is to do away with controls immediately. That is often mentioned in the Conservative press; time and again on the floor of this house they come out clearly and strongly with statements that price controls should be done away with at once. I do not believe they really want price controls done away with immediately, but that has a fine political ring at the present time. Any person who has been prosecuted under the law for infraction of these controls, for instance, certainly is not sympathetic toward them. But I believe that at the bottom of their hearts hon. gentlemen opposite, hope the government will continue the policy they have followed up to the present, in gradually retreating from control but not giving it up entirely, because they know that controls are absolutely needed. I believe I am perfectly safe in making that statement. These are some of the statements by Mr. Burton:

> Canada's urgent need to-day is to cut out controls and promote production.
>
> Canada must choose—and should choose soon—in order to establish the standard of living she wants. We have two choices:
>
> 1. Large production and full employment; or
> 2. Small output, and unemployment, due to price ceilings and wages control.

No one has yet shown that price ceilings or price controls have been or will be the cause of unemployment. Then he goes on:

> Controls were universally accepted in war time. Their administration was successful during the war, having the full support of both government and business, as well as general acceptance by the public. True, the introduction and maintenance of controls were accompanied by no small measure of publicity, and various programmes of propaganda, but on the whole wartime administrators and controllers did a good job.

If they did a good job during the war, they are doing a good job at the present time, too.

> It will be generally conceded that those controls were essential which kept out of civilian use goods necessary to the forces. In any event, whatever differences of opinion there might have been during the war were subdued and submerged in the general patriotic effort against our enemies.
> Now that the war is over, controls over wages and prices are on longer needed nor are they in the public interest.

In reply to Mr. Burton I would say that the public know better. To-day the public know certain safeguards are absolutely necessary, in the form of controls. In my own section of the country, about seven months ago rent control was lifted, and in some instances rents increased by as much as 200 per cent. The people who had been inclined to criticize rent control immediately became aware of how necessary and how beneficial it had been to the country as a whole during war time.

Then Mr. Burton mentioned the shortage of goods, trying to tie it up with control. No businessman could make this nation believe that the shortage of goods is due to these controls, because the controllers have studied that situation from all angles. I do not suggest that errors have not been made. I believe the controllers have made mistakes; they are human, and they would be the first to admit it. But they have diligently rectified their mistakes. I repeat, however, that the shortage of goods to-day is not due to price controls, though I am still puzzled as to why certain things are done in some quarters. For instance, I can go into any store in the city of Ottawa, or, for that matter, any part of Canada, and buy all the neckties I want at anywhere from fifty cents to $5.50. These ties must represent a lot of good material. On the other hand I cannot buy a man's shirt. I should like those sitting in the front row here to look into that question, because there must be some shirting material and some shirts somewhere. If it should be found that shirts were being hoarded in order that higher prices might be obtained, then I would ask the authorities to bring those concerned immediately before the courts of this country. I make that statement deliberately, because some lines of the retail trade are absolutely famished. I do not want to impute any ulterior motive as far as industry is concerned, but I am puzzled as to why in some stores there should be all kinds of goods, goods of only limited value as far as real wear is concerned, while in the staple lines it is almost impossible to buy anything.

Mr. GRAYDON: Lots of ties and no shirts.

Mr. BRADETTE: Yes; and something must be wrong somewhere. I know that is where control is absolutely needed. Personally I would not go so far as to say that some traders are hoarding, but certainly there is nothing practical or logical about the situation.

It is often maintained by the official opposition during discussions in this house that our farmers should receive the same prices as United States farmers. When we deal with fiscal and national matters in this house, we are dealing with our own national economy. We do many things as well as and some of them better than they are done by our American friends, while there may be other things they do better than they are done in Canada. Would the proponents of parity prices as between United States and Canadian farmers apply the same principle all along the line and say that all production in the two countries should be on a parity? That would be Americanism with a venegeance and would be absolutely impossible of application. Many goods are cheaper in Canada than in the United States, and vice versa. I believe our farmers realize the situation. It is only natural that they would want a higher price for their wheat when they see a higher price paid in the United States. It is only natural that they would want a higher price for their meat when higher prices are paid in the United States. But, as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) said a few days ago, our farmers realize that this is a matter for the future as well as the present. The farmer always thinks in terms of long periods of time. When he puts the seed in the soil in the spring he knows it will be a matter of months before he gathers the fruits of his labour. The same thing applies to the public policies of the farmer. He does not look only to the immediate future; he remembers vividly when he received higher prices for his wheat after the first great war. He was not very happy under those conditions, because he knew that those prices were artificial, that they were not normal prices and that there was bound to be a reaction which would be detrimental to the wheat growers of Canada; and that was certainly what happened.

I should now like to quote from an article which appeared in Life magazine last month, dealing with farm problems and production in the United States. I wish to make it clear that these comments relate to the United States farmer, and that I deal with this question only because it was brought forward a few weeks ago by the leader of the Progressive Conservative party (Mr. Bracken) in asking for parity prices as far as meat and wheat were concerned. But this will show what happens in the United States, that even with the present high prices for farm products generally speaking the United States farmer is not happy. These are some of the comments:

> The name of American farmer has never had a "nasty taste" before. He has been thought of rather as the backbone of our nation: as a man who works harder, lives closer to God and nature, drinks less, raises stronger sons, votes more thoughtfully and is generally a better citizen than his urban brother. He is also thought of as getting the short end of the economic stick. But as the American businessman knows and the labour leader is learning, no stereotype is shatter-proof forever. Is it the farmer's turn to lose his reputation?

Then it goes on to explain that under war conditions the United States farmer, the same as the Canadian farmer, under a great handicap due to a shortage of labour, had so increased production that it astonished the nation and the world. These are the words:

> To make all this money, and to feed our armies and allies, the American farmer increased his output during the war by over 30 per cent. He had to hump himself to do it, for the farm population (despite draft deferment and other attractions) actually declined. In fact the U.S. farmer worked like a horse from dawn to dark and nature assisted him with one of the longest spells of drought-free weather in our annals.

The next paragraph deals with climatic conditions. In the same way as did the Regina Leader, it tells the American nation the conditions under which the farmer has been working, always relying almost implicitly upon the whim of nature, and at the mercy of drought, wet weather, rain, early frost and so on. Then it continues:

> The farmer whose lobbyists are among the smartest and toughest in Washington, is a political force more powerful than his numbers. But when LaGuardia began to breathe life into UNRRA and Hoover took over the famine emergency committee, fires were started both to the left and to the right of the farm politicians, leaving them nowhere to hide their naked greed. With the country at large declaring its willingness to be rationed and an almost scandalous glut of black-market meat, there had to be action.
> Meanwhile the farm lobbies were helping congress beat the pulp out of OPA.

I want the house to remember this, that apparently the United States public is in favour of maintaining the activities of OPA. It continues:

> The end of OPA would mean that grain prices would go still higher; this prospect made the farmer hold on to his grain still tighter. So to lure the grain to the dockside, government action had to take the form of a bribe.
> First the farmer was offered a certificate guaranteeing him the benefit of any price increase that might occur after he sold his grain. That didn't work. Then he was offered a flat 30-cent bonus on every bushel of wheat (bringing it to $1.85) or corn (to $1.41) he sells for export before May 25. That is working a little better but not well enough. Under-Secretary of State Acheson is even talking about "seizing" the grain. At last week's official count there was twice as much wheat on the farms (some 200 million bushels) as the U.S. really needs for reserves. It is not enough to save the world, or even to fulfil our promises, but it is enough to choke the farmers who are hoarding it and damage their reputation for a long time to come.

The record of our farmers shows no hoarding; there has been no holding back, no absenteeism, if I may use that expression. No doubt they were not pleased when there was an increase in the price of gasoline. There was no rejoicing in their ranks when there was an increase in the price of farm implements, but they take these things in their stride. At the same time they know they are one of the great corner-stones of our national economy. They realize, too, that the time has arrived when, of necessity, they must more and more be recognized. These are not times when our farmers should be satisfied to be the forgotten men in our nation or in any nation.

The farmers recognize their strength. At times they have organized politically, because they have felt in their hearts at times in the past that they did not receive the attention they deserved in the national or provincial forum. It was due to that pressure and the logical arguments that two years ago floor price regulations were instituted by parliament. I hope it will never be necessary to apply them. However, we know that international markets are very uncertain things, and that one cannot know what the conditions may be from day to day, or from year to year. But we do know that under that legislation our farmers, who comprise one of the finest sections in our population, under any conditions will receive satisfactory remuneration for their labour.

I have not time to discuss this matter at greater length. But I must say that our Progressive Conservative friends, and the press which supports them, would not be absolutely satisfied if price controls were entirely destroyed. They realize that those controls are necessary. Those of us who are somewhat older remember what the farmers got between 1917 and 1921. I have known a farmer along the Montreal road, for instance, who bought a farm in 1918 for $17,000, which was a reasonable price at the time, and who, after making a payment of $5,000, had to let it go because of the deflation which followed inflation. It was impossible for him to meet his payments.

We do not want a repetition of that; we want farm values to be maintained. I repeat that, generally speaking, to be succesful the farmer must possess the qualifications and abilities of a businessman, a professional man, and a financier. He knows that, of necessity, he must fight for his rights but, at the same time, he will never want anything that is not logical and practical. But I wish to make it very plain also, that he will never want to go back to years in the past when he was the one who was paying the shot, and suffering for it.

I hold in my hand some editorials from Saturday Night. After a thorough study of the situation those who write in this periodical have come to the conclusion that, of necessity, a certain amount of control must be maintained. They go so far as to say that if, owing to the fact that the war is now over, the wartime prices and trade board should be dissolved, there would be a wish that the Minister of Finance might include in his own department a branch almost equivalent to the present wartime prices and trade board, in the matter of controls.

I shall quote only one paragraph from the Winnipeg Free Press, headed "Fighting Backwards," and stating:

> The wartime prices and trade board is effecting what might be called a fighting retreat, holding each line up to the point where the rising flood of supplies makes further control unnecessary. In attempting this difficult manoeuvre it is obvious that mistakes will be made and that injustices will arise. This is inevitable.

But the over-all gain to Canada of maintaining the controls is far greater than any of the vexatious mishaps which take place from time to time. The pressure to remove the controls is very great. It comes, to far too great an extent from politicians who seek an easy platform success by wanton utterance. They appeal to the narrow interests of the group they happen to be addressing and thereby neglect the national interest.

In wartime, greatly to the nation's credit, such appeals were ignored. They are far more dangerous to-day when the inspiration and discipline of war have vanished or grown stale. A further effort is needed.

I am going back to my constituents, and I will continue to fight for practical price control. It is not a sympathetic move; it is not popular. But I believe that in doing that I shall do my duty to my country and as a representative of my people, in speaking my mind on a question which, in my viewpoint, will be a great factor in recuperation during the post-war period.

At six o'clock the house took recess

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, since May 6 we have listened to a great many speeches on this general subject. I gather from all the speeches that everyone who has spoken has his heart in the right place; he wants the same thing. The great problem arises when he tries to determine how to get it. It seems to me that we ought to face realities in a realistic fashion. We live in an age of science. Let us therefore be scientific in our approach to the problem which is now before the house.

The matter that we are discussing has been raised by two amendments and there have been two main questions under discussion: First food production and the dangers of discouraging food production through unsuitable prices and the need for encouraging food production by suitable prices; and second the distribution of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policy and specifically the fairness or unfairness of the share of that burden being borne by the food producers of Canada or by the workers of Canada.

The amendments assume that the share of the burden at present carried by these two groups is unfair. The amendment blames the unfairness upon the government's price ceiling policies with respect to farm products and the amendment to the amendment blames the unfairness upon what it terms "the government's policies of permitting recent unjustifiable increases in the price of farm machinery and of steel". Theoretically we are now discussing the amendment of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum), but actually we are discussing both the amendment moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the amendment moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken).

In this discussion I felt that the members had a right to expect certain things. These things in large measure they did not get. I have been disappointed. I had expected some sort of scientific approach to be used. Only about three members of those who spoke used the genuine scientific approach to the problem before us. There came into my mind certain questions. First, what is the cost of the government's price stabilization policy? I do not recall that any member stated what the cost was. Second, who are the various classes of people in Canada who to-day are bearing a share of this burden? The producers and the workers are mentioned; call them groups "A" and "B" and tell us then what would be the other groups, "C", "D", "E", et cetera. Third, what is the share of that burden at present borne by each group, and how is that share computed? Fourth, what ought to be the share of each group, and how is the amount of that share to be computed? Fifth, to what extent does the share now borne by each group differ from the share that ought to be borne by that group, and why? Sixth, to what extent has the price increase in farm machinery and steel contributed to the difference between what each group now bears and what it ought to bear, and how? Until these questions are answered I fail to see how those who moved the amendment and the amendment to the amendment can establish their case at all.

When we turn to the Progressive Conservative amendment the house needed, in my judgment, to have the leader of the opposition name all the classes of food producers, primary and secondary, and indicate the validity of the amendment by reference to each. Probably he had in mind no such comprehensive programme, but it seemed to me that that should have come out, judging by the wording of the amendment. We ought to have been told of the situation of the producers of each of the grains, wheat, oats, barley, rye; each of the meats, beef, grass-fed and feedlot fed; pork, mutton, poultry; each of the Canadian-grown commercial fruits, apples, pears, peaches, plums, prunes, apricots, strawberries, raspberries, grapes, loganberries; and each of the major processing vegetables, peas, beans, corn, tomatoes, as well as potatoes, milk, eggs, honey, maple products and beets for sugar-making. Until all these are dealt with I fail to see how the leader of the opposition can establish his case, judging by the wording of the amendment.

We also ought to know what should be the price for the fishermen engaged in freshwater and salt-water fishing. Instead of having a scientific treatment of the whole case, what the members have had, as far as I can judge—and I have listened closely—is a rambling, ill-connected parliamentary talkfest, establishing hardly any fact except that something is seriously wrong with wages and prices in Canada, and tending to scarcely any conclusion other than that something drastic ought to be done about it. I believe we were all agreed on those two propositions before either the amendment or the amendment to the amendment was moved.

Just now in our national life the need is great and urgent that the members of parliament establish many important facts; that they reach many sound conclusions, and that they frame and adopt many vital policies. What we need above all things, in my judgment, in order to do these things is knowledge, detailed knowledge, and that knowledge, Mr. Speaker, at the present time is completely beyond the ordinary member of parliament. He simply cannot get it. I am not so sure but that it is beyond the cabinet ministers.

That something is very seriously wrong, we can judge by the fact that beef prices are not producing the results that we would have them produce; and by the fact of a threatened milk strike in Ontario, with literally thousands of milk producers threatening to pour their milk out on the ground or to waste it some other way unless they are given a $3 advance. These men know what it costs to produce milk, and they declare that they simply cannot produce milk at the price it is going to be, with costs as they are at the present time.

To show how serious the matter is, I am going to put on Hansard a letter in which I know the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) will be deeply interested. May I, in passing, congratulate the Minister of Finance because, while there is hardly a man that is more badgered than he at the present time, he is, all things considered, standing right up and taking it on the chin like a man. But just the same there are reasons for differing with some of his policies, and I am sure he realized that. This letter will be interesting to him and to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). It comes from the Lethbridge Central Feeders' Association, Lethbridge, Alberta. These people feed thousands of beef in pens every year and are consequently, I suppose, about as well equipped to pronounce on the soundness of the price structure as it affects beef as any group of people who could be found. Here is the letter:

Lethbridge, Alberta,
May 7, 1946.

Mr. John Blackmore, M.P.
Ottawa.

Dear Sir:

Our contention is that the horizontal ceiling on beef works an undue hardship on the feeder who has to sell grain-fed cattle under the same price ceiling as the rancher marketing grass-fat cattle. The horizontal ceiling ignores the position the feeder plays in producing beef tonnage for late winter, spring and early summer months when beef is normally in short supply. United States has recognized the importance of the feeding industry and has acted accordingly. If our own government fails to recognize the importance of the feeder by allowing him to market his products under ceilings commensurate with his costs then the cattle finishing industry will suffer a tremendous set-back.

The average daily gain over a period of years in our feedlots has been 1¾ to 2 lbs. per day. To put this on requires:

	Cents
(a) Grain—10 lbs.—No. 4 wheat at 99 cents including subsidy	16·5
or barley at 68 cents including subsidy	14·2
Average	15·3
Oats at 47 cents including subsidy (not purchaseable at this price)
(b) Hay 12 lbs. at $16 per ton.....	9·6
(c) Pulp—40 lbs. at $1.50 per ton delivered	3·0
(d) Molasses—2½ lbs. at 1 cent per lb.	2·5
(e) Death loss—3 per cent	2·0
(f) Labour	2·0
(g) Interest, feedlot depreciation, commissions and other expenses	2·0
	36·4
Total cost per lb. of gain.....	18·2

For all practical purposes 12 cents per pound live-weight can be considered the top price expected for finished cattle under present ceilings. A feeder therefore is losing 6·2 cents per pound of gain.

Might I interject there to point out to the house how serious that is, if a man feeding cattle in a feedlot is 6·2 cents worse off for every pound of meat he puts on the animal, then obviously something is seriously wrong.

Mr. MacNICOL: He ought to stop it.

An hon. MEMBER: Shoot the cow.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I go on with the letter.

If the animal gains 250 pounds the total loss would be $17.32 per head. To compensate for this loss he must expect a spread in price over the in-going cost of his cattle. This spread must not only make up for his loss on the gain but must give him a profit which any business man expects who assumes such a risk. As the average farmer-feeder feeds aproximately 100 to 150 head, a per head profit of $15 would not be excessive.

Assuming the in-going weight of the animal to be 750 pounds the feeder must envision a spread of 4·33 cents per pound before he feels it will be worth while to feed. In other words he must buy his feeder steers at 7·67 cents per pound in order to operate. Try to do this.

For the past few years our feeder cattle have been bought in direct competition with the packers who in the fall, will purchase anything with a kill on it. The only type of animal left for the feeder would be the skin and bones variety which the packer will buy for bones at 8 to 9 cents anyway.

Unless adequate increases are provided for grain fed cattle, either through direct subsidy to the feeder, or seasonal ceiling changes, you may rest assured that the cattle feeding industry in the west will come to an end.

Yours very truly,
Lethbridge Central Feeders,
Per A. D. Palmer,
Office Manager.

I thought that the committee would like to have that on Hansard so that they could study it. I believe that the leader of the opposition will be pleased to get that information, because it exactly supports one of the statements he made. Still, nothing is said about what to do about it, but there is the situation with respect to beef feeding in my constituency, which, I believe, is one of the finest beef-feeding areas in the country.

To see how difficult is the situation with respect to labourers, all we need to do is recall the strikes which are on at the present time or being threatened right now. According to my information, we have a lumber strike in British Columbia with reportedly 37,000 out; we have the seamen's union strike called for June 3, with 35,000 seamen, and a declaration that they will call out the seamen of the deep sea unless they are able to get results. There is a copper strike, according to my information, with work stopped at Anaconda America Brass Limited, New Toronto; and a rubber strike is threatened. It may be said that these conditions are to be expected at the close of a war. Those of us who have gone into matters of this kind have been impressed, I believe, with the case of these men. I personally have been greatly impressed; I have wondered how men could face life with anything like confidence while deriving such a low income from the work they were doing, and I believe something simply must be done.

I am not endeavouring to blame anybody. I am not unduly criticizing the government; I sympathize with the difficulties they are in; but then, there is the difficulty, and it is a challenge to the house. Something simply must be done. My regret is that in all this debate we have just been complaining; we have been offering no solution. In our time we are moving among conditions new and strange to see. The world is seething; we are haunted by countless anxieties; we are threatened with dreadful dangers at home and abroad. Never was there a greater need for accurate knowledge, intensive, extensive and comprehensive, never such insistent need for courageous, realistic, epoch-making thought and action, and I submit that just such is demanded of the members of this house.

Someone will say, "Well, what has social credit to say about the question at issue? What has it to say about controls and all the rest of the questions which are being raised?" Perhaps I should give a little attention to that matter.

The social credit reaction to the questions under discussion is about as follows. First, with respect to controls, social credit does not advocate the removal of the controls too rapidly. It does not advocate maintaining controls too long. But the word which social credit likes to use in respect to controlling prices is "regulation". Regulation does not connote so much regimentation, so much threat of legal proceedings. Social credit proposes to induce fair wages and prices. There are two different ways of going about a thing: one is to force people to do it; another is to lead them to do it. Social credit believes that it is possible to organize even our society in these terrible times on the basis of inducement, and we propose to induce fair wages and prices by two main means: first, a guarantee of equity and stability; second, subsidies on primary production and compensating discounts on secondary products as they go into consumption, and wage bonuses. That, in brief, is the system and general attitude of social credit on the matters under discussion.

With respect to prices we maintain that the price subsidy is the correct system to use. We heard with regret the government's decision to remove the two-cent subsidy on milk. We considered it a most unwise move. The government should have maintained that subsidy and enlarged and applied it far over the wide field of prices. As the days and years go by, if we are fortunate enough to see them go by without too much disaster, it will be found that the subsidy is the secret of maintaining primary production prices for every kind of primary product.

With respect to secondary products, Social Credit believes in having the government pay a portion of the retail price on such acommodity as, for example, a binder. Consequently anyone who noticed what Social Crediters said will find that when the 12½ per cent advance on machinery prices was announced, we stated, "We are not arguing that the advance should not have been made, but we are arguing that the farmers should not have had to pay it." If there had to be a 12½ per cent increase, if that had been found to be necessary, then that 12½ per cent increase should have been paid by direct government subsidy.

The question arises: Where will you get the money? I will discuss that point later. In the meantime, let me say this with respect to wages. Our men everywhere are dissatisfied with their wages, some justifiably so, some perhaps unjustifiably. I do not know. But where a wage increase is to be granted, that increase should take the form of a government cost of living bonus. There are some industries which are probably able to pay an increase in wages without raising prices, but all industries which are not able to do so should be assisted by the government with a definite wage bonus.

This will sound strange; it will sound epoch-making; it will sound entirely new. But just a moment's reflection on the part of hon. members must convince them that there is soundness in the proposal, because at the present time, every time labourers strike they force prices up, and when prices go up the labourers strike again to bring wages into line with prices. So that you have a vicious circle, a spiral leading to inflation, never ending.

There is only one way of dealing with that situation, namely, to determine what labourers ought to receive in any given industry, by mutual consent, study and understanding, and to see that they get it; and if the industry involved cannot pay the difference the government should. That is the social credit idea on wages.

What is the fundamental scientific approach of the social credit philosophy? First of all, social credit says: What you are to do in a nation depends entirely on your ability to produce. If you can produce enough goods of a sufficient number of kinds, you can give people pretty nearly any income which those goods can support. If you cannot produce goods, you certainly cannot have an income. If, however, you can produce goods, you ought to be able to have an income, and therefore social credit's whole approach is based on the answer to the question, how much goods can your country produce, and of how many different kinds?

Therefore the first thing that social credit would ask with respect to Canada is this. Let us have a national account book set up in Canada in which we will record, with such accuracy as we can achieve, first of all actual production in the country to-day—production of every kind what we are producing in every industry; second, what would be the capacity production? That is to say, are we producing as much as we could? If not, let that be set down. Then, what would be a reasonable estimate of potential productive capacity, considering the coal deposits, the forest wealth and all the other deposits and resources we have. What we ought to be able to produce in the way of coal, lumber and so forth, the probable potential productive capacity, should be set down.

With that information the government would be able to draft a policy for the future, looking to increasing production and thereby raising the standard of living in the country. Having set this down as the fundamental basis upon which to work, social credit would say: You will next proceed to stimulate production to the desirable maximum, production of every kind of goods, and you should aim in a general way to make your economy as nearly self-supporting as you can. It is foolish to import rubber when you can make it; it is absurd to import sugar when you can produce it; and so on. The more nearly you can come in your economy to producing the necessities of life, the more capable you are of being independent of external influences, and the more capable you are, therefore, of governing the price structure and every other factor pertaining to the standard of living in your country. That is the general idea of social credit.

We favour a sort of national economic independence in the nation. We favour the use of our total resources, both man-power and natural or material resources, in so far as that total use is necessary to obtain the desired standard of living. If the people want a high standard they must be prepared to work in order to get it. If they do not want to work to produce, then naturally there is no income for them. Once people all over the country realize that the standard of living which they can have depends upon the amount of goods they can produce, their whole outlook on the surrounding economic situation will change.

Having stimulated production to the necessary degree, social credit says that you must stimulate consumption. There is no use in producing if you cannot consume. In normal times social credit would stimulate consumption by using wage bonuses, subsidies on prices, and by direct distributions of consumer purchasing power, taking the form of wage increases or dividends, or whatever form it may be found necessary or agreeable or desirable to issue it. Having taken care of the stimulation of production and consumption to the optimum degree, then social credit would say that you could raise the standard of living in Canada to the highest point consistent with Canadian production and Canadian productive capacity.

When social credit makes that statement it is completely in agreement with practically every speaker who has spoken in the C.C.F. organization and most of those who have spoken on both sides among the other parties. The question is, how to attain the objective? Social credit maintains that it has one or two ideas which are quite different from those advocated by any other groups in the house. Having raised the standard of living to the desirable level, social credit would say, we will now pay off the national debt with our surplus production. This is a note of hope. As far as I can make out, the concept of the Liberals and the concept of the Progressive Conservatives—I am not prepared to pronounce on the C.C.F. because they have not said very much about it—the concept of the two old line parties is this: If you cannot wring money out of the pockets of the taxpayers you cannot pay off the national debt, you cannot pay the interest on it.

Social credit says that is just pure nonsense, for you can pay your debt off with your goods. If you can produce enough goods you can pay your debt, provided that you manage it rightly. Then the question rises: Can Canada produce these goods? Well, I do not think there is anyone in this house who doubts that Canada can produce enough goods in ten, fifteen or twenty years, with all her productive power, to pay off her debt, and still maintain a high standard of living. But the question will be raised: Where is the money to come from? I wish to word very carefully what I am about to say so that every member can get its exact meaning. The money must come out of production. The commodities we can produce in excess of what the consuming public can purchase with the money they can obtain under the present debt-creating financial system—such commodities can be represented by the government with commodity dollars. The question will arise in the minds of some—I can almost see it written on the faces of some—how can you have commodity dollars? In this war we have seen developed a splendid example of commodity money. During the war the British, needing goods from members of the sterling bloc, created pounds and bought the goods they needed from the members of the sterling bloc. These members now hold these pounds. These pounds are redeemable in British goods, and just as soon as the British can produce the goods to cover these pounds they will pay the members of the sterling bloc in goods and recover the pounds.

These pounds are not backed by gold; they are backed by British goods, both those that are produced and those that will be produced. These are commodity pounds. Commodity dollars can be created in Canada too. Such dollars created to the extent to which we have production can be used in stimulating production, financing consumption and raising the standard of living of all Canadians.

There are certain things that I think ought to be done now. I do not suppose it will do very much good to talk to the house about ideals and things to be done in the future. Let us see what we can do to-day. What can we do within the remaining weeks of this parliamentary session? These are the suggestions that I would offer. We need facts above all other things in this house to-day. Therefore we should appoint a fact-finding commission a royal commission if needs be, or fact-finding commissions, to ascertain for us in a thoroughly dependable way the information we need; and this they should do with all possible speed. I would say we should set to work a commission or as many commissions as we need to find with all possible expedition the whole truth bearing upon about eight main problems in the country: First, the production of goods in Canada; much of the argument and discussion that has gone on in this debate has been the result of insufficient knowledge, inaccurate knowledge regarding production costs. We are not in a position to get that knowledge; it is not available. A commission with such skill and of sufficient size and with sufficient money should be appointed to get that information in respect of every item of food production in this country; then everything of truth with respect to the morale and efficiency of workers. How much does a workingman need? How much ought he to have, first of all, if he is married, and, second, if he is not? How much of it should be left free of taxation? We wrangle about it in this house and nobody ever decides; nobody has any means whereby to decide. Certainly we ought to have a commission to find all these facts. Here we have the seamens union threatening a strike. Is their stand justified? Only a fact-finding body can determine the matter and give us the information with which to work. There are other topics about which we should have the full truth, namely, the justifiable cost of processing foods such as butter and cheese, canned goods, meat packing, sugar manufacturing and flour milling.

Look at the tremendous amount of talk we have had in the house regarding what packers are able to make. What a fine thing it would be if we could have the result of a commission's investigation on this whole matter! Another matter is the cost of transportation of both freight and passengers by train truck and bus. In the west we feel ourselves deeply aggrieved at the freight rates. We ought to know exactly to what extent we are justified in feeling aggrieved. Only a fact-finding commission can determine this matter for us. We should have the facts concerning distribution, the cost of wholesaling, jobbing and retailing. We should have the cost of shelter, the cost of all kinds of building materials and of fueling. We should have the details concerning the cost of clothing. What should be the price of wool, of rayon and other clothing material? What should be the cost of processing this into the clothes that people need?

Then we should have the Canadian potential standard of living. Only a royal commission can ascertain that. We should have a national account book set up by a royal commission, showing our total potential productive capacity, and our total production, consumable or potentially consumable by Canadians, and the reductions which are essential for public service at home and abroad. Then we should have the deductions essential for servicing our debt, the deductions essential for maintaining our defence, the deductions essential for replacing capital goods and any other essentials which can be found. We should have a commission at work on this problem.

Then a commission should ascertain how we can in Canada develop the maximum consumption. Social credit has a set of proposals which, in the judgment of the Social Crediters will distribute the goods of Canada among Canadians. There are those who challenge the social credit stand; but my stand is this: If a better system than social credit cannot be found, then social credit should certainly be adopted; it certainly should be examined. It should be examined in an atmosphere in which, when a Social Crediter stands up, some silly, thoughtless creature will not shout out "25 a month", or some other idiotic expression. That is the kind of thing we hear. It is utterly impossible to have the matter fairly considered in this house.

You have never had a royal commission in Canada or anywhere else; certainly you have never had one in Canada, scientifically study social credit with the Social Crediters there to present their case. I do not think we have ever had a careful investigation into the method of distributing the goods in the country, and yet this is the main problem which needs to be solved. We have solved the problem of production; we do not know how to distribute. The need of such a commission as I have indicated was clearly shown this afternoon by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) when I asked if he would give us a list of the goods which are in short supply. The minister foresaw that he would not be able to answer that question because he did not know where he could turn to get that information. In my judgment that is the very thing the minister ought to be able to turn to without hesitating a second. We ought to know the goods which are in short supply in this country. We ought to know why they are in short supply. We do not know that. How in the world can we go about scientific housekeeping in this country when we know so little about the essentials?

I maintain that Canada should forthwith begin to prepare to put her house in order. It is high time that Canadians as a whole found out just where they stand.

Mr. LEWIS MENARY (Wellington North): I wish to say a few words to-night on the question to which I was refused an answer yesterday, namely, question No. 19 on the order paper of May 22, which reads as follows:

> Is a manufacturer of farm implements permitted to claim the increase in price authorized on April 13, 1946, in cases where implements were ordered and deposits made thereon prior to the increase?

I should like to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley), what is a contract? I should say it would be an agreement between two parties; and if this is not a contract it is a sad day for the people of Canada. How much money could I get from any bank if I said that even after taking a deposit I was still in no way bound to sell? I have had various letters from my riding with regard to a former ruling by the Minister of Finance concerning the price of machinery sold prior to the date of the order, without deposits paid on the machines. These were just ordinary contracts taken prior to that date. As a matter of fact, I understand that one dealer, on his understanding of the interpretation by the Minister of Finance of my question, agreed to deliver to his customer a tractor that had been sold prior to the date in question.

The question I asked yesterday was in regard to six small threshing machines, three of which have already been delivered. These machines were ordered either last fall or not later than January of this year. The company accepted these orders at $800 each; and when the agent sent in the orders, prior to the effective date of the increase, each order was accompanied by a deposit of $100. The implement manufacturer did not want to make 100 threshing machines and have some left on his hands, so that the agent was compelled to take a deposit of $100 from each farmer and turn it in with the order. This he did; the orders and deposits were taken and accepted long before this increase was considered. If these orders had been given just prior to the price going up, it might have been a different matter, but now this increase will bring the price to $900 for the three farmers who have not yet received their machines.

It is things like this and the removal of the milk subsidy that make the farmer feel he is being unfairly dealt with by the government. I believe the minister should reconsider this matter, in the light of this explanation. Certainly it seems to me that orders taken in 1945, before there was any mention of an increase in price, should be valid. Even if the orders were taken in January, 1946, there was still no mention of an increase in price at that time. In all fairness I ask the minister to reconsider the matter. It is important to the farmers of the country, and particularly to these three farmers who are still waiting for their machines. Could the minister give me an answer now?

Mr. ILSLEY: We are not in committee, Mr. Speaker, and I am not in a position to answer the question. This is a question which was put on the order paper yesterday, is it not?

Mr. MENARY: Yes.

Mr. ILSLEY: I think I shall have to see the documents and obtain legal opinion on the matter. Possibly I could get that from the solicitors of the wartime prices and trade board.

Mr. MENARY: I may tell the minister that I have had legal advice.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I must call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that we are not in committee.

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, when the amendment to the motion to go into supply was moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) I took occasion to address the house on that amendment. To-night, therefore, I intend to confine my remarks largely to the subamendment which has been moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum). However, I should like to call attention to the suggestion made by one or two of the speakers this afternoon in comparing the wording of the two amendments. The amendment of the leader of the opposition is in these words:

This house is of the opinion that the government's price ceiling policies with respect to farm products are discouraging production of needed food and imposing on the food producers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

The suggestions made by hon. members of the official opposition are to the effect that they are opposed to the ceiling prices we now have on farm products, and from their remarks in that connection I assume that they hold similar views in regard to the general policy of maintaining ceilings. In other words, I take it that their feeling is that we should remove controls to the extent that they affect the establishment of ceiling prices, and thereby permit all prices to go up. The C.C.F. amendment is in these words:

This house is of the opinion that the government's policies of permitting recent unjustifiable increases in the prices of farm machinery and of steel have resulted in imposing on food producers and workers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

From the wording of this amendment and the statements made by those who have spoken in favour of it, I assume that the C.C.F. party places very strong emphasis upon the stabilization of prices.

Mr. CARDIFF: "Unjustifiable."

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; they say "unjustifiable", but they place strong emphasis upon the stablization of prices. In that regard to a certain degree they support the policy which has been advocated for some considerable time by the government. On the other hand, by confining their remarks to increases in prices of farm implements and steel they have been confining themselves largely to a certain line of criticism which has been emphasized for a long period of years in western Canada. Irrespective of party, I think we in western Canada have been opposed to high prices for farm implements, and there is an obvious reason for that. We are the greatest users of farm implements in Canada, and farm implements are more essential to the production of farm products in western Canada than in any other part of this country, in proportion to the entire cost of production. We have always maintained that it is of interest to western Canada that we should have the lowest possible cost for farm implements utilized by the farmers, particularly in that section of Canada, and it applies only in a lesser degree to the farmers all across Canada.

I should like to call attention to only one or two remarks made in relation to farm implements. I refer first to what was said by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) earlier in the discussion when he suggested that farm implements could be bought cheaper on the United States side of the line than they can on the Canadian side of the line.

If that is true—and probably it is true, because the hon. member lives within a few miles of the United States boundary line, and he should know—he can buy an implement on either side of the line. If that is true, then of course the suggestion that farm implements can go up the full amout of the increase in the ceiling is hardly in accordance with the fact. There is no duty on farm implements coming into Canada; if a person can bring an implement from the state of Montana or the state of Dakota into Manitoba or Saskatchewan or Alberta from across the boundary line, and those implements are being sold at a lower price there than they are being sold in Canada, then to the extent that they are being sold at a lower price they come into direct competition, and the price would not go up 12½ per cent.

I merely say that if implements were being sold prior to this action on the United States side of the boundary at a lower rate than they are being sold in Canada, then we are assuming too much when we assume that implements can go up the full 12½ per cent. I hope the condition is as it has been described by the hon. member for Souris, because, if it is, it changes considerably much of what has been said in this debate.

However, that was not the matter I rose to deal with particularly. I had in mind some of the remarks made a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore).

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I think the minister will admit that these implements are at present in short production. I made the whole thing clear when I spoke upon it in this debate.

Mr. GARDINER: They are in short production, but to the extent that they can be purchased on the other side of the line they influence the price. We all know in western Canada that in every distributing point there are agents of nearly all the important United States farm implement companies. There are also the agents of those who manufacture implements in Canada, and if the price structure is lower on the other side, that does affect the position on this side of the line.

But the matter with which I wish to deal particularly is that of beef prices as related to feeders of live stock in Alberta and elsewhere, and as related to others in Canada. I should like to say, first, that the last time I checked the record—and that was during a discussion in a previous session—I found that there was less than 10 per cent of the beef marketed in Canada that was produced in feeder lots and on what are generally known as ranches. I found that 90 per cent of the beef produced in this country was produced on the farms, where the farmers breed and raise their own live stock.

They are not running feeder lots. They are breeding their own cows and raising their own steers until they are of an age to be fed. Then they feed them and they put them on the market from time to time. They supply by far the greater part, or a sufficient proportion to cause us to base our arguments with regard to the supplying of beef for Canada upon the 90 per cent rather than upon the 10 per cent, when we are suggesting that we ought to do something which will assist the farmer.

I believe it was suggested by the leader of the opposition earlier, and, I understand by the leader of the C.C.F. the other evening when I called attention to the fact that the policy had been changed two and one-half or three years ago, that the condition which ought to prevail is that feeders should be in a position to go on the market in October and November and buy steers at from 1½ cents to 2 cents a pound less than the price at which they will be sold in the late winter or early spring; and that in order to be able to feed cattle at a profit they must be able to do that.

Mr. CASE: Who suggested that?

Mr. GARDINER: It was not "suggested"; it was said in so many words a few minutes ago. If my hon. friend had been listening to the debate he would know exactly who said it.

I have before me the average yearly and monthly prices for steers. These are the monthly average prices for good butcher steers at Toronto in all the years since 1914, and in all the months in each of those years. I would suggest to those who are advocating these policies that they take a look at this sheet which is published regularly, and is available to everybody. I suggest that they take a good look at it, because this is what it shows. I am now picking out five different years during that period. I take first the year 1920. In October, 1920 steers were selling at $10.78 and, in November, at $10.05. In the spring of 1921 the month of April, they were selling at $9.34, and in May, at $9.04. In February they were selling at $8.77.

In other words, under the system of no control and no regulation, the system under which it was presumed that cattle were going to remain at some particular level after feeders put in their feeding stock, what happened? They put them in at $10.78 and $10.05 and sold them at $9.60, $9.34 and $9.04. Well, they not only lost 2 cents or 1½ cents that they argued they must have, but they lost another 1½ cents on top of that, in reduced prices.

Then let us come down to 1928, which was a particularly good year. The average price of steers in that period, during the whole year, was $10.48. The prices in the months of October and November were $9.50 and $9.10. In other words, an attempt was made to carry out the idea which has been advocated here. But when we get down to the month of February we find they were sold at $9.27, and in the month of March they were sold at $9.40. It was the month of April before the price was at all above the price paid for the cattle in the fall of that year.

Mr. CASE: There were no price ceilings then.

Mr. GARDINER: No, no price ceilings then; and what I am trying to point out to my hon. friend is what he will not understand, namely, that when there was no price ceiling a policy was being followed which he and his party have been advocating ever since this debate started, and that the farmers lost more money under that policy than they have lost under any policy since then.

Mr. HARKNESS: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. HARKNESS: I suggest that the minister has taken two years in which two great depressions started. Has he the picture for the years which were not the beginning of depressions?

Mr. GARDINER: I have the figures for all the years; but I suggest to the hon. member that he requires some enlightenment when he says that 1928 was a depression year. That is the best year the farmers in Canada ever had prior to this war period.

Mr. HARKNESS: The minister gave the figure for the spring of 1929.

Mr. GARDINER: I gave the figure for the fall of 1928 and the spring of 1929.

Mr. HARKNESS: That is what I questioned.

Mr. GARDINER: The winter of 1928-29. Let us come down to 1931, which was a real depression year, and a time during which my hon. friends were in office in Ottawa. What was the price then? It was $5.90 in October, $5.60 in November, and when they sold in the spring of 1932 the price was $5.13 inMarch, $5.13 in April and $5.33 in May. If you want to take the next year the price went down to $3.98 in October and to $4.09 in November, and they sold in the spring $5.39

To come down to 1937, the price was $6.19 in October and $5.74 in November. A Liberal government was in power then, but the policy being put into effect was the policy which is being advocated by all three groups on the opposition side of the house to-day in this debate. The price in the spring was $5.56 in March, $6.05 in April and $6.65 in May. We at least had the price a little higher in the spring than it was in the two months in which the beef was put in. But the price was not sufficiently high to make any profit such as has been talked about in this discussion.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Were not those figures true during those depression years in every country in the world which raised cattle?

Mr. GARDINER: I would say that the low figures were true in every country in the world, but not the price relationship as between October and April, which is the point under discussion. I am not now criticizing the fact that prices were low during that period. But the argument is that feeders ought to be permitted to buy steers in the fall at a price 1½ cents below the price they are going to have to sell them at in the spring. What I am suggesting is that the people who are arguing that never at any time made anything out of their cattle over a long period of years, with the exception of three or four years. There has been no opportunity of making a profit in that way with the prices that have prevailed.

I would ask this further question. Why is it that that policy was brought into effect in the first place? The fact is, as every western farmer knows, that in the western part of Canada a great many cattle are on the grass, particularly in the ranching areas; they are left out on the grass until October, when they are shipped to Winnipeg or Calgary. There were so many cattle on the market in the fall that the butchers could not possibly buy them and pay butcher's prices for them. Therefore certain persons, some of them being in the governments of the western provinces, more particularly in the province of Alberta, particularly the gentleman who at that time was minister of agriculture and his assistants, conceived the idea of advocating feeder lots. They encouraged feeders to go on the market and buy cattle in the fall, put them on these feeder lots and feed them over the winter months, and thus distribute the cattle over the winter in such a way as to make it possible to market a greater number to better advantage.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): What year was that?

Mr. GARDINER: That was in the years preceding the war. That was the idea. That policy was advocated more strenuously by Mr. Grisdale than by anyone else during the time he was in the political life of Alberta, and Mr. Grisdale is one of the advisers of the prices board in Ottawa at the present moment. He advocated that policy in peace time, and it has something to commend it.

One of the suggestions I want to reply to is that this policy which is now in effect is a prices board policy. Strong citicism was made by one speaker yesterday or the day before—I read it in Hansard this morning—that the present policy is the prices board policy and that because it is a prices board policy put into effect by Mr. Gordon it ought to be opposed by this house, partly for that reason and partly because those making the statement believed that it was not a sound policy.

I wish to point out that the remarks made this afternoon by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) in relation to the prices board and particularly myself and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) have no foundation whatsoever in fact. The fact is that in the first three years of this war I advocated continuously that that policy which had been followed prior to the war and which served the purpose prior to the war was serving no purpose whatsoever during the war except to keep down the price of cattle to farmers who had cattle to sell in the fall. Why? In the period preceding the war we could not get a market for our cattle readily in the fall of the year. Therefore we asked people to take those cattle and feed them over until the spring. The price was depressed, not by design and not by the fact that there was any particular policy in that regard but simply because there were so many cattle on the market. Those who fed those cattle in the winter months did not make as much money in the spring as people are now trying to tell us they would make if we did the same thing over again.

When the war came what happened? After 1942, particularly, we had a market for every one of our cattle that could be put on the market in any part of Canada. All one had to do to sell cattle was to offer them for sale and they were all sold.

We were told a few moments ago by the hon. member for Lethbridge that feeders, in order to buy cattle last October and November, had to go into the markets and bid against the packers; in other words, bid against the butchers whether they were packers or not. Why? Because there was a market for every pound of beef that came on the market ready to kill.

There is no one in this house who knows anything about farmers' returns who would suggest that every farmer who put on the market last fall a good butcher steer ought to take a cent or a cent and a half or two cents a pound less for it than the ceiling price made possible, in order that some farmer or some feed-lot operator near some city could take those cattle, buy grain and feed them over the winter and put them on the market next spring a little heavier in weight.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I do not argue that the farmer should take less in the fall but that the feeder should be able to get a bigger price in the spring.

Mr. GARDINER: There is no way of doing that except by having two different ceilings, and that is what prevailed down to three years ago. We had a lower ceiling in the fall than in the spring. Therefore the farmer who was bringing his cattle on the market in the fall had to take a price under the low ceiling in order that someone else could get the cattle one and a half to two cents lower than the spring price. That is the policy advocated by the feed-lot supporters now. I had a group of representatives of these feed-lot men in my office the other day, and two out of the five expressed themselves most strongly, before leaving the office, as opposed to the policy proposed and saying that the present policy was superior after it had been explained to them.

The situation does not need to be proven by anything I say with regard to it. All one has to do is to take the figures. Members on both sides of the house have been saying that what we want is stabilized prices. To go back to 1928, the average price was $10.40. The price went down to $9.10 and up to $11.48. If one takes one of the years in the middle of the depression the average price then was $5.93. The price went down to $5.60 and went up as high as $6.23.

If one takes different years preceding the war and during the early part of the war, one finds that the average from 1926 to 1929 was $9.04 for good steers at Toronto; for 1928—to go back to the year we were discussing a few moments ago—it was $11.48; for 1920 it was $12.89, the variations running all the way from $12.89 down to $9.04 back in that period in which, we sometimes say, farmers enjoyed the greatest prosperity prior to the present time.

To come to 1941, about a year and a half after the war started, the price went down from the average of $9.04 back in those years and of $10.48 back in 1928, to $8.70. At an earlier time, just prior to the war, it had been higher than that. In 1942 it went up to $10.29. It was in 1941 and 1942 that we were having these discussions as between the prices board and the Department of Agriculture. After two years of discussions, after all these men who run the feed-lots and all those who run feeding farms in eastern Canada and those who run these small farms across Canada had had delegations in and discussed the matter, we finally, two and a half years ago, convinced everyone that the present policy was more likely to bring about stabilization and give good returns to the farmers than the policy which had been followed throughout the years preceding the war and during the early part of the war. We argued it on the ground that there is a market every day of the year with war and since we began selling beef to Britain for every pound of beef that is put on the market.

Why should there be a variation in price under those circumstances? If farmers have beef to market every day of the 365 days and people want to eat all the meat every day, why should there be any variation in price or holding for better prices? The only reason there was that the variation before was because the supply was greater than the demand. Let me say to my hon. friends on the other side who are inclined to scoff at the idea of supply and demand, that the law of supply and demand has operated ever since there have been men on the face of this earth who have made any records; supply and demand will continue to operate, and anyone who loses sight of that fact is going to get into trouble sooner or later. When supply and demand were more or less balanced, as they were during the war period, what was the position? The average price in 1943 was $11.46; in 1944, $11.48; in 1945, $11.65. There has been a variation from $11.46 to $11.65 during those three years of stabilization, and prices are higher than the average price obtained in any other continuous three years since 1914. When one goes back over the months what does one find? Let us take 1944, which was the second year in which this was operating fully: January, $11.78; February, $11.76; March, $11.68; April, $11.61; May, $11.78; June, $12.04; July, $11.71; August, $11.10; September, $11.04; October, $10.51—down 53 cents—November, $10.63—up 12 cents—December, $11.04; an average throughout the year of $11.39, and with some adjustments made recently on those prices it averages out, I think, at $11.48. All I wish to say on that matter is this, that if hon. members are in favour of policies which give stabilization to farmers they must accept the policy which is in force at present as the one that has been most successful in that direction of any policies we have had since the begining of world war I down to the present time. I do not think we can improve on that record. I think experience speaks for itself. While theories are advocated by persons who have even found them to be wrong by their actual experience, we should look at the records, follow those records, and having done so, accept the conditions which exist.

Mr. CASE: Would the minister permit a question? Will he admit that export demand has had a greater influence than any other factor on our domestic price?

Mr. GARDINER: Well, some people do not like to talk about exports because that has been associated over a long period of years with what we call trade. I heard a little discussion in a place south of here in the past week in which one gentleman said that the only way we would ever get back to a sound position would be to allow the competitive element to operate freely in a world where trade operated fairly freely. Another gentleman got up afterwards and quoted figures to show what happened when we had that condition. It was not long after that till he was saying that we have more starvation in the world to-day than we ever had before. I sometimes wonder whether we get anywhere in using these general statements about things. There are so many other reasons why we have general starvation at present that I should not like to say it is because we have control of trade, and there are so many other reasons why certain things happened in certain years over the period I have been talking about that I should not like to say that any one thing caused the situation which did exist. But what I do want to say is that, in controlling prices during the last three years, in finding markets for all the meat products which we had, and in leaving a very small variation as between the ceiling price and the floor price, we have had the greatest degree of stabilization, leaving out of consideration altogether the level of the prices, through those three years, that we have had in Canada at any time, for any reason. Then, when we find that they are stabilized at a higher level than we have had for any continuous three years, and a higher level than we have had in any other three years during the whole period since the beginning of the last war, there is not very much to be said in favour of the suggestions that we change, which have been made in the course of this discussion.

There is only one other thing I wanted to say a few words about, and that has to do with the prices which we obtain for our products as compared with United States farmers. I believe the leader of the opposition asked me some time or other—probably it was during my estimates, but it will fit in here as well as anywhere—what the relationship is between prices in Canada and prices in the United States. I took the trouble to get some of those figures and place them on record the other evening with regard to hogs, and I have them here with regard to dairy products. During the last few days we have been talking a great deal about dairy products. I must say that because of something which was said to me a few moments ago by an hon. member on this side of the house I am not going to insist that this record is absolutely correct until I get back into my estimates and I shall have the information on the question which was asked me. That question was as to the relationship of subsidies on milk in the United States to prices or returns to farmers. I cannot state offhand whether there is any subsidy which affects the return on cheese or butter, but the return on butter to the producer in Canada is 48 cents on creamery butter 92 score—and it was 92 score at Montreal that I quoted a moment ago—while in New York it is 47½ cents. Cheese, first grade, 92 score at Montreal, f.o.b. factory, under the present subsidy which was announced the other day by the Minister of Finance, carries a subsidy return that would amount to 27 cents, and the return on No. 1 Cheddar, United States, at Wisconsin cheese exchange is 27 cents. I gave figures the other day to indicate the return on hogs, showing that it is practically the same as it is in the United States.

Mr. HACKETT: Is that in the same exchange? Is it Canadian or American?

Mr. GARDINER: I believe that is figured out in a manner which brings about a proper relationship, just as it was in the figures I gave the other night with respect to hogs. This was figured in the same way at the request of the leader of the opposition, and if there is anything wrong that enters further into the question I shall be pleased to produce these figures when we are discussing my estimates.

What I would point out is this. Under our adjustment prices we have dealt with hogs; we have dealt with cheese; and the results are as I have indicated them in relation to prices on the United States side of the line. The two products we have not yet dealt with are beef and wheat, and there have been some discussions here with regard to these products and some suggestions as to what we might do or ought to do. All I wish to say to-night is that these two products have not yet been finally dealt with; and when hon. members are voting with regard to these amendments that are before the house, if they are in earnest in suggesting that it is most important that we maintain controls, and in the second place, most important that we maintain these controls in some kind of parity relationship, I would say this to them. I may say in passing, I hesitate to use the word "parity", saying that we have parity, because it takes a long speech to explain what one means.

Mr. HACKETT: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. HACKETT: Before leaving the question of prices, would he state what is the price on raw milk per 100 pounds in the United States and in Canada?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not those prices here, but I shall have them on my estimates to-morrow. These are the only ones I have figured out. I understand that directly over the border from where my hon. friend lives there is a higher return for whole milk, but I wish to check that up to make certain before putting on Hansard a statement with regard to it.

What I was about to say is this. You have a stabilized price and you have a price on a level which is comparable with prices being obtained elsewhere; and may I say further, we have just come out of a period when prices were allowed to run very much higher in the United States than in Canada. We as farmers took the position that we did not object to United States prices going up to a high level and ours remaining at a lower level, provided that all the commodities we had to buy could be purchased on a lower level than in the United States, and provided at the same time that we were not going to permit prices to run down as fast in this country as in a country where there were not as complete controls as we had here. We laid down those two provisos, and for that reason I would say to the official opposition that we intend to go slow in this matter of removing controls, on ceilings if you like, but certainly so far as floors are concerned, and to maintain the position where the farmer can get a return, during the transitional period, which is comparable with the return he obtained during the war period.

I believe that if we do that, in spite of the criticisms that are being made in this house at the present time, when the time comes the people of Canada will judge that policy by results rather than by criticisms. Someone said to me on one occasion that I was the most criticized man in the Dominion of Canada. Probably I am. He said also that my departmental administration was the most criticized, and I said in reply that there is only one way to conduct oneself in politics, where an election comes every fourth year—

Mr. ROSS (Souris): And that is to be right in the fourth year.

Mr. GARDINER: You have to do more than that. You have to be right the day after the election and the first year after it is over, at least, and then you have three years to prove that you were right. If you wait until the last week or even the last year before the election you will find that the people of this country are too wise to let that kind of thing go by. The hon. member for Humboldt twitted me with feeling that I was always right. I am going to say to him that unless you do feel that you are right you will not be able to put over to the public what you do believe in, and I hope I have never attempted to put over anything which I did not think was right. So that, if one starts in with four years ahead of him to put something over which he thinks is right, by the time he gets around to the election he has two weeks in which people agree with him, and that is about long enough. His next job is to start off again with something else which he believes in, immediately following the vote.

We went through the last period advocating stabilization of prices and came through with the most successful system of stabilization of farm prices that this country or any other country has ever had and because of that we were sent back here to carry on the policy.

With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) the other day, the hon. gentleman said that India had a poor crop; that the people are starving there; that the people are starving in North Africa and South Africa; that the people are starving in France and starving in some other countries. Well there are two or three reasons why they are starving in most of those countries; but there is one reason in every one of them and that is that they had a crop failure last year. In India they had one of the most complete crop failures they have ever experienced, with low production; in North and South Africa they had one of the greatest crop failures they have ever experienced, with low production; and one could enumerate other areas in which there is the greatest difficulty in relation to food at the present time.

Why is it that when persons are calling attention to these facts they refuse, when they come to Canada, to say that we have had three of the poorest crops in certain wheat-growing areas, the last three, that we have ever experienced? Hon. gentlemen who come from the southwestern part of Saskatchewan know that this year the people are receiving payments under prairie farm assistance in greater amounts than in any other year but one in the whole history of the act since 1939 up to the present time. Why? Because they have a poor crop; and when we admit that every other country is in difficulties which has had a poor crop, why can we not be honest with ourselves and say that Canada is in difficulties in delivering greater quantities of food too because she had a poor crop in the grain-growing area during the last year; not quite so poor the year before, but still poor, and poorer the year before that?

Why cannot we be more honest with ourselves and say that in the week before the week that has just gone by authorities reported that we had in Canada the poorest prospects that we have ever had in the same week in twenty-four years. Why cannot we be honest with ourselves and say these things? And let us say them to the world, and not tell people that no matter what the weather is like we are going to have a good crop this year; that all we have to do is to put in more acreage, and do more of this and the government do something and we shall have a crop just because they say so. I have said that a week ago we had the poorest condition for twenty-four years, but I do not want the house to come to the conclusion that we are bound to have the poorest crop we have had in twenty-four years. Every western member knows that if we have three good rains in June and have them properly distributed we shall grow a crop in spite of everything that has happened up to the present. With the conditions we have to-day, if we do not have those three rains, if we do not have at least two of them, we shall be talking next fall about difficulties similar to those that we have experienced before. We in this country have to take our own history into consideration.

When our hon. friends were considering this matter within the last week this suggestion was made: you ought to increase your wheat acreage seven per cent for the whole world in order to produce so many bushels of wheat during the next year. During the last three years we have increased our wheat acreage in Canada by over fifty per cent, and we have not had as much wheat in any one of the years during which we had the increased acreage as we had in the year preceding that. Therefore I think we should face the facts and simply admit that in this country we depend upon good weather to produce feed grain. This is a country where we must feed live stock for seven months of the year. We depend upon feed grain to finish our live stock and get food upon our own markets and also to be able to export food to other countries. If we get it we shall be able to help; if we do not get it we shall be in the position in which some other countries find themselves this year. Take South Africa. South Africa is the most like this country of any country that is producing wheat to place upon the markets of the world. I sat in Washington yesterday and listened to the representative of South Africa review a story that was so nearly like our story of the thirties that one would almost believe he was talking about this country. He said: "Two years ago we thought we were going to be able to help solve the problem of food shortage throughout the world. But to-day we find that instead of helping with it we are asking for food from other parts of the world."

Their area is like ours; it is a dry area. The only areas in which you can produce No. 1 hard wheat are dry ones. I do not think that can be repeated too often. No. 1 hard wheat is a good food to be utilized for dealing with situations such as we have now, because it will keep for ten or twenty years in a good bin. If you grow too much of it this year you can pass it around some years hence. We are trying to find some kind of policy that will not only stabilize prices, but do something else which is essential to the stabilization of prices, namely, stabilize distribution, so that you can carry over your big crops into a period when there is going to be a shortage instead of throwing them on the market and pressing the prices down. If we can do that we can not only stabilize prices to our farmers but also stabilize the distribution in order that fewer people will suffer from hunger throughout the world. If we recognize these facts we shall get along much quicker with the solution of our problems.

Mr. TUSTIN: I have a question to ask—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I rise to a point of order before the hon. gentleman proceeds. I hope Your Honour will not rule that I am too late. The reason I did not rise before is that I did not want to appear to be rude to the minister. My point is this: on various occasions all of us over here have asked for reports from various departments, officials, boards and so on of ministers. We have been refused because we have been told that they were privileged. In his speech to-night the minister quoted things that had been said and reported to him by members of the beef advisory board. If the rule works that we cannot have these reports, then surely the converse must be true, that no minister may give us reports from persons whom we have no right to examine, and whom we do not know. It is not of great importance to-night, sir, I agree. I do not say this at all critically, but I should like to know where we are going in future. Is the minister or any minister going to be able to repeat in this house reports that he has had and we be refused reports for which we have asked? I should like a ruling on that.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I think the hon. member for Calgary West has brought up the particular point which is involved in the rule. Ministers have officials, and in evolving policies they put these officials out to examine into what is going on in different places and to report back. They ask them to see certain people, discuss matters with them and report back. But once the report has been made by the officials and policy has been evolved upon it, that policy is brought before this house, and all the reasons for bringing the policy before the house is cited at the time. Everything that I have said here to-night, apart from the last remark or two about some discussions I listened to, most of which were in the press yesterday, has been reported to this house.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I was not thinking of that.

Mr. GARDINER: I think every other matter that I referred to has been reported to this house in previous debates.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I was referring to the statement where the minister said that he had recently consulted with some members of the beef advisory board, five of whom were here, and the other was—

Mr. GARDINER: That was a delegation that came in from outside, not my officials.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I thought the minister said an advisory board of five that had reported here. If I am not right I apologize. I thought the minister was speaking of the advisory board.

[Mr. A. L. Smith.]

Mr. GARDINER: No; that was a delegation sent by the food producers to make representations.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Sir, on another occasion I shall ask for your ruling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I do not think it is necessary for me to give a ruling on the point raised by the hon. member for Calgary West.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Not now. I thought it was the beef advisory board about which the minister was speaking. However, I shall check Hansard rather carefully because I am still of that opinion.

Mr. GARDINER: If I said that it was not correct. They came from the outside. I could not name them at the moment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I thank the hon. member for Calgary West for bringing the matter to my attention. Perhaps on some future occasion a ruling will be made.

Mr. TUSTIN: I wish to ask the minister a question to obtain information. A few moments ago the minister compared the price of cheese in the United States with that in Canada. In Canada all cheese is made of whole milk. My question to the minister is this: Is not the greatest percentage of cheese manufactured in the United States made of skim milk?

Mr. GARDINER: That is why I compared the price in Canada with the price in Minnesota. The cheddar cheese of Minnesota is most like ours of any cheese made on this continent.

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): As usual we have just listened to an interesting address by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), during which I think he convinced himself and, I expect his cabinet that they have a good stabilization policy. In effect what he told us is that we have the best Liberal government now that we have ever had. We never had any other kind than a Liberal or a Tory government. I would say to the minister, considering their vote in the last election, that it had better be the best Liberal government we have ever had or we shall not have another one for a long time. It appears to me that in this debate many speakers have been more concerned with attacking the opposition groups than they have been in championing the cause of the farmers and the workers. The hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) attacked the C.C.F. and tried to prove, by quoting from a former speech of mine, that the C.C.F. are less friendly to agriculture than the Progressive Conservative party, which of course is a descendent of the old Tory party under which Canada suffered during those infrequent occasions when the electors favoured them with their vote.

Mr. HACKETT: Your knowledge of history is rather incomplete.

Mr. BENTLEY: Well, I have lived in Canada for a long time. However, it is the government that I am critical of just now, because they have the responsibility; and during this debate I propose to justify my criticism. I shall leave the Tories to the memories of those people who lived through the years from 1930 to 1935.

Sufficient has been said on behalf of those members of society with fixed, low incomes, such as pensioners and those who live on the earnings of their investments, to convince any fair-minded and well-intentioned government. Various hon. members have put on record figures which should convince any except those who are so set in their views as to be completely unchangeable. I am going to try and present the matter from a somewhat different aspect. I should like to examine the government's attitude toward factory owners on the one hand and farmers and workers on the other, because during another debate I charged the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) with being more amenable and more receptive to arguments placed before him by monopoly capitalism than to the claims of farmers, workers and other such gorups.

The minister's claim is that the farm machinery manufacturing companies showed by their records that they were losing money under the old price structure and could not continue if not granted an increase. As reasons they gave higher factory costs, some of which are labour costs, as well as higher capital costs. I say to the minister, bring these records into the house and let us examine them. Let us apply the very same kind of reasoning to an examination of farm units, and see where we arrive when we apply the same reasoning to both groups. To do so we would have to examine a great many farm units in the country. We would take the owner of a farm and ascertain his capital valuation and fixed charges, as the government have done in the case of the machinery companies. Having done that, we would have to allow the farmer wages for each type of operation performed on the farm, as I believe was suggested during this debate by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid). We would have to do that whether the work was performed by the farmer himself, by his wife or by some other member of his family. Then we would have to permit him to fix his selling price high enough to pay the costs. That is the privilege given the farm machinery manufacturer.

The minister says that farm machinery costs have risen by about 28½ per cent. I believe that was the figure given; in any event it is close enough. He went on to say that the government had been tough, and had granted them an increase of only 12½ per cent. I am convinced that most farmers would be prepared to accept an increase in the selling price of farm products in the same ratio to their costs as disclosed by the sort of investigation I have just recounted; that is, in the same ratio that 12½ per cent bears to 28½ per cent.

Then we must permit the industrial worker to place a value on his labour sufficiently high to cover his cost of production; that is, the cost of maintaining his labour strength and efficiency, which means buying the products of labour, of farmers and other producers. When the minister agrees to this he will be moving toward absolution from the charge of favouring his capitalistic friends.

Please remember, Mr. Speaker, that farmers must operate with a great deal of unpaid labour. Let us compare the factory and the farm. The factory owner hires someone to do the char work, and includes those wages in the operating costs of his factory. The farmer's wife frequently does the char work in the barn and hen house, but is allowed no wages. Ergo, let the factory owner's wife clean the office and factory for nothing. The factory owner hires truck drivers to deliver his products to the railroads or to the markets, and enters the wages in his operating expenses. Frequently the farmer's teen-aged son and occasionally his daughter on returning from school in the late afternoon must harness a team of horses or get in a truck and deliver a load of farm products to the market. Ergo, let the factory owner's children deliver the factory products for nothing. One could cite many cases, but these should suffice to indicate what I am driving at.

Now compare the factory owner and the factory worker. After working all day, a factory worker must go home and do his own gardening or hire someone to do it for him. He must remove the storm windows in the spring and put on the screens, and reverse the process in the fall, or hire a handy man to do it for him; that is, if he has a house. The wages of this handy man are not deductible from the income of the worker in a case of that kind. The factory owner can send a factory worker to his home to do these chores, and any others which may have to be done around the place, and the wages of that factory worker are an expense of factory operation and deductible for income tax purposes. I am not guessing about that, because I have been a factory worker and have been sent home even in the old days to help the wife of the boss on the old, hand-style washing-machine and bread-mixer, which was hard work.

It has been said to-night that the C.C.F believe in stabilization operations. We believe in stabilized incomes as far as it is reasonably possible to have them. Possibly the best way would be that mentioned by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) this evening, when he said that we should have a fact-finding commission, which I presume would be composed of men capable of examining every phase of our economic life. Probably that would be the best way; but while agreeing to some extent, we believe we need to move now, and for many classes of society it might be a little too late if we did not do the best we could with the information available at the present time while awaiting the establishment of this hypothetical fact-finding commission which the hon. member for Lethbridge may want, but which he has no power to put into operation. I am afraid he will have to do a great deal of talking of the kind he did to-night before he will convince the present administration that this should be done.

The C.C.F. has supported and does support the government in regard to price control, but we do so only as long as fairness is the guiding principle in such control. Certainly, if the government is going to favour unfairly industrial owners, the C.C.F. is capable of withdrawing that support. We have no illusions either about Liberals or Tories. As announced by our leader, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) the Liberals were elected to power by established electoral practices, and the C.C.F. will assist them in their programme as long as fairness is the guiding principle.

He stated that the C.C.F. have doubts as to the success of the announced government policy as expressed in the speech from the throne. The government is more and more giving evidence every day that it will support monopoly privilege and profit, regardless of its effect upon productive workers and farmers. This increase in the price of farm machinery, together with the recent removal of subsidies on milk, are final proof of my statement that the minister and his colleagues will always give more sympathetic consideration to monopolistic enterprise and profits than to the needs of the working population.

I sincerely wish the announcements of the Minister of Finance regarding price increases on commodities other than farm products and wages to workers would work in reverse as did his announcement in the early part of the winter of 1941-42. At that time I was in Regina attending the annual meeting of a great farm organization. For two days the newspapers and radio advised the people to be sure to listen in at seven o'clock on a certain evening to come shortly, so that they might hear the radio address to be given by the Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley, Minister of Finance, at which time he was to make a very important announcement.

Well, we crowded around the radio at the appointed time with our mouths open, all agog for this important announcement. The ministerial voice came over at the appointed time, and announced that prices of oranges and coffee would be reduced. That was wonderful news. But inside of two months both these commodities went up in price. Can we hope for such a reversal in the announcement of price increases on farm machinery and gasoline? If his announcement in respect of these items is to work the same as it did in respect of oranges and coffee, I would say we would have some hope for the future; because when the minister said they would go down on that occasion, they went up. On this occasion he says they will go up; let us hope that they will go down.

The minister contends he is not the friend of monopolistic enterprise, that he and his officials are tough when dealing with them. But in view of the favours he and his officials grant to these monopolies it is difficult to discern the same kind of toughness which he used and applied to the veterans of the last war, when he refused to grant clear titles to their farms.

Nor did he and his officials display the same toughness when dealing with the farm machinery manufacturers, the steel manufacturers and others as they did toward the province of Saskatchewan in connection with their seed grain debt. This was a calamity in Saskatchewan. No figures need be produced to prove to the country or to the house the extent of that calamity in 1937. This was followed by a year when there was a terrific increase in the price of seed grain, and destitute farmers had to buy back the products of their own farms at those increased prices, in order to continue their farming operation.

This tremendous increase in price was the result of the government's failure to retain sufficient of these grains in the hands of the public during that terrible year for the following year's seeding. But having made the blunder, the government is still tough, and demands every ounce of every pound of flesh it says is coming to it. The government is extremely tough to all working-class requests for increased wages or incomes in the face of rising living costs, but was anything but tough—

Mr. MITCHELL: Where did my hon. friend get that information?

Mr. BENTLEY: I read the newspapers. You should read them sometimes.

Mr. MITCHELL: You must read them upside down.

Mr. BENTLEY: But the government was anything but tough when dealing with the representatives of the capitalistic governments during the recent dominion-provincial conference.

Then let us take the government's attitude toward Alberta when that province attempted to introduce what they believed were essential monetary reforms. The government spared no effort to invoke every single, obscure, legal technicality to prevent the then new Alberta government from accomplishing its stated purpose.

During the last session, each time members of the Social Credit group mentioned something in connection with their monetary theory there were cries from across the house of "funny money". That is a hangover from the days when the committee on banking and commerce was discussing the revision of the Bank Act and when "funny money" was a term frequently used, and one which is sometimes attributed,—although I was not in the house to hear it, to the Minister of Finance.

But when the term "funny money" was used I noticed it was one of the rare occasions when the Minister of Finance smiled. Sometimes his smile is very pleasant; but this time, with the words, "funny money," it was tinged with sarcasm. I do not believe the Minister of Finance knows what "funny money" is, or that he would recognize it if he saw it.

I am not going to attempt to give a dissertation on what Social Crediters believe is the proper kind of money. But I am going to say that the kind of money we have had sometimes is about as funny as any money could be.

I shall tell a little story which came into my mind when I saw the sarcastic smile on the minister's face on that occasion. I would assume he is somewhere in the same age group as myself—possibly a few years younger. I am informed he was reared in about the same part of Canada as I was. Therefore he must have gone to the little schools back in the corner by the pine groves, the same as I did. At those schools he learned, as I did, his "readin', writin' and 'rithmetic," and a little bit of Euclid. Possibly he was taught how to describe a circle from a given point, on a given straight line, or something like that. Possibly he did a few simple equations, some single entry bookkeeping and a little double-entry, with some further training about business and commerce and bank notes.

He was told that the banks were the most solid institutions in the British empire, particularly our Canadian banks. He was told that a bank note was not money, but that it was a promise by the bank that, on demand, it would pay to bearer that amount of money in gold.

I am just wondering if, after he had completed his schooling, he went out and picked apples for a couple of months at the munificent wage of around $10 a month, which obtained in those days. Perhaps he worked for a couple of months and got in his hands two of those big $10 bills we used to have. Perhaps then he got curious and went down to the bank to see if the banker would really pay him in gold. He would walk devoutly, because in those days a bank was like a cathedral. We were not initiated into the mysteries of banking. He would walk quietly. I can just picture this young chap going in and saying, "Is it true that you will give me a $10 gold piece for this $10 bill I have in my hand, and I can imagine the banker honouring the transaction.

He would put the money in his pocket, along with the other $10 bill he has left. Then perhaps he went back to the hills and joined the Dutchmen in quaffing a few flagons of that Scott Act brew they had in those days, and then went to sleep for thirty years. And that is not so fantastic, either.

Then he would awaken thirty years later only to find that his $10 gold piece had disappeared, but holding the $10 bill in his hand. He thought he would like to do the same thing. So he walked into the bank thirty years later and laid down his demand note and said, "I would like gold for this." But the banker said, "No, we do not have to pay our debts any more in gold. Our paper is good enough." I am sure that he would walk out of that bank and say, as he looked at the $10 bill, "By gum, that is funny money."

The Liberal government requested and received almost unanimous support for the recent legislation it brought down, and probably would receive it again in the same measure, for the same purposes, providing a loan to Britain to enable the British people to purchase from us the things which we have, which they need sorely and for which we get payment before the end of the century in goods which they will produce and which we expect we shall need. But the government was very tough when it refused to consider the request of the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine), who recommended a domestic investment to develop untapped resources in his riding. Yet such investment and development in that riding would, long before the turn of the century, have provided a tremendous increase in the variety of goods at present needed by the Canadian people for their own use and for trade with countries who may need those goods and have other goods we need with which they would be willing to pay for ours.

The motion before the house, Mr. Speaker, is practically a motion of want of confidence in the government for not carrying out its pre-election promises. Whether it has been able to do so or not, it certainly has not done it. It has not dealt with the unemployment situation in the way it said it would, and we have only to read the press reports from the Canadian Legion convention in Quebec city to hear their criticism. If that is not enough, let us take a very small place in Canada, where I come from. I should like to read into the record an article in the Sun, a weekly paper published in Swift Current, the city in which I live. It is a small place, with perhaps 7,000 people. It does not cover much of the Dominion of Canada. Nevertheless there is an employment situation there. I quote from the Sun of April 30, 1946:

> There may be a shortage of materials, but there doesn't seem to be any dearth of labour. One local businessman found that out. The response he got to an advertisement in a well-known farm paper calling for "carpenter's helpers and a couple of men to work in a tannery," simply overwhelmed him. He was flooded by applications by letter, 319 in all, including one telegram from a very ambitious person who wanted action. From Saskatchewan came 213 applications; from Manitoba, 57; Alberta, 26, British Columbia, 16, Ontario, 7.

Three hundred and nineteen applications for three or four jobs in the small city of Swift Current! The owner and editor and publisher of the Sun is not a supporter of this party, although he is a very decent individual and tries to be fair. I continue with the quotation:

> The Sun balked at the story at the outset, but when this businessman came back a few minutes later with a hugh file of letters we couldn't be sceptical any more. The letters were counted in the Sun office and sure enough totalled 319.
> Quite a number of the applications for the job came from men who had overseas experience in the war. One fellow, 22 years of age, was ready to start at "not less than $50 a month."

How can a government claim through the optimistic reports of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe) and other ministers here that the unemployment situation is overcome when this advertiser was deluged with applications for a job in a small prairie city? It is not a big industrial centre. So that I think the criticism which has been directed against the government has been justified.

The government professes to have made a reasonably good start in providing housing for the veterans, let alone the rest of our citizens. But here again I suggest that hon. members read the press reports emanating from the biennial convention of the Canadian Legion which is now taking place.

There was no sound reason given to this house to justify the 12½ per cent increase in the price of agricultural implements. The Minister of Agriculture may be right technically, that the same type of implement is cheaper in Montana and North Dakota, if you can get over there and get it, and if you pay the exchange and all these other things. You can bring it over free of duty if you can buy it. But that kind of argument to support the statement that the law of supply and demand will work along the United States border facing our prairie provinces does not work, and the minister must know it. It may work some day, but it certainly does not work to-day, and we are not talking about some day hence.

We have been trying to point out that the workers and the farmers were severely hit during the 1930's. They took the small increases that were made during the war by owners of factories and monopolistic industries with fairly good grace, although they did have to do some pretty spirited talking to the government on some occasions to get even a share of justice from this government during the war. But now the war is over, and just when there is a possibility of our farmers pulling themselves out of debt and buying farm machinery or paying farm debts, or in the case of the industrial worker paying for his home if he continues to hold his job, these price increases are permitted by the government. There is no reason why these price increases should be granted to the owner of a factory who is very likely charging all the traffic will bear to make his expenses look high. A stock company, I suppose, whose stock is quoted at a high figure calls that a liability to the public and they are supposed to make some return on it, and because such companies have expanded their plants in war time under the impetus, not of patriotism, but because they got increased profits which they asked for at the start of the war—

Mr. MITCHELL: That is not a fair statement, and my hon. friend knows it.

Mr. BENTLEY: It is very fair, and I will say it again emphatically, if necessary. If there are to be increases, everybody should participate in them if anybody is going to. If nobody is going to be allowed to participate, nobody else should get an increase. You should not start granting increases in the higher brackets until the lower brackets are first looked after. Before the war these ceilings were not all level, as I am indicating; they were like this, slanting. If you are going to puncture the ceiling at all, start at the lower level up.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is just exactly what we did.

Mr. BENTLEY: You have not raised the price of agricultural products since the war.

Mr. ILSLEY: We certainly have. That is nonsense.

Mr. BENTLEY: Since the war was over, I should have said. I will correct my statement to that extent because I want it square on the record.

Mr. ILSLEY: We started first with agricultural products.

Mr. BENTLEY: The government did not do it to help the farmers out; they did it because the open market prices on the Winnipeg grain exchange were going up too rapidly, and the railway transportation systems would not allow of the movement of grain fast enough from country points to where it could be delivered against the contract, to take care of it, so that they had to close the grain exchange, for trading anyway, to fix that price. You have not "kidded" anybody in the west by doing that.

An hon. MEMBER: You are not "kidding" anybody either.

Mr. BENTLEY: I do not suppose I have done much to convince the government.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

An hon. MEMBER: Don't worry about that.

Mr. BENTLEY: Hearing the applause on the other side, I am almost inclined to agree with the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) in one statement he made the other evening, what he said about "rubber-stamps". The impression he has left with me is that at least in one respect he was speaking the truth.

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: I would remind any hon. member who may want to speak that if the minister, who is the mover of the motion, speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. ILSLEY: I hope it will be possible to finish this debate to-night, to vote both on the subamendment and on the amendment.

Mr. BRACKEN: Before the minister proceeds, Mr. Speaker, you indicated that the acting Prime Minister might close the whole debate at this stage. That surely cannot be correct.

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. BRACKEN: We have before us the motion, and we have before us the amendment to the motion, and we have the amendment to the amendment. If the Acting Prime Minister speaks now he is not closing the whole debate. I just want to be clear; I am sure the Speaker was not correct in that.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. ILSLEY: There are some things I have to answer which have arisen in the course of this debate, and while it probably is not true that I can close it, I am expressing the hope that we can take the vote to-night both on the subamendment and on the amendment.

Mr. GARDINER: On a point of order, may I suggest that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) is absolutely correct; but if the two votes are taken first, the leader of the government has the right to close the debate; that is, if the vote is taken on the subamendment and on the amendment, the minister will have the right to close the debate on the main motion.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I am not going to detain the house for more than a few minutes, but there are one or two things which I should like to say before the subamendment is put.

In the course of this debate a number of questions have been directed to the C.C.F. group in this house. I want to say at the very outset, as I have stated on a number of occasions before, that we have stood solidly for the idea that we should continue to endeavour to stabilize prices to the very best of our ability. I believe, as we have often said, that the people who will suffer most if the price ceilings are punctured are those who work on the land, in the factories and in other places where wages and salaries are paid, and that pensioners and others in like position will also be among the first to suffer if we allow prices to sky-rocket.

I wish to deal very briefly with the amendment and the subamendment. The amendment moved by the leader of the opposition reads:

> This house is of the opinion that the government's price ceiling policies with respect to farm products are discouraging production of needed food and imposing on the food producers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

I believe that the statement in the amendment is true that the policies which have been followed by the government, particularly in recent weeks, have placed an undue burden upon the producers of this country. I realize that the words of the amendment, which I suppose must govern, because the written word prevails, do not carry the significance which the speeches that have been made in support of the amendment have carried. We have heard from the official opposition several times, in this debate and in a previous debate when we were discussing farm implement prices, that controls must go. The direct question has been asked of some of the leading men in the Progressive Conservative party, and they have replied as did the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Senn) and several others of his party, that they were opposed to controls, so that if we were voting on the speeches which have been made in support of the amendment we would certainly be voting in opposition to it. But when the Journals of the house are written and the amendment and the subamendment are recorded the records will carry only the words of the amendment; and the words of the amendment are plain, that an undue burden has been placed upon the producers of this country through the policies of the government. I would have liked the leader of the opposition to be more explicit as to what he meant when he spoke of the price control policies of the government. The interpretation that was placed upon it, I thought, in his speech was that the price ceiling policies that had been punctured had placed that undue burden, but there is an obscurity in the amendment because of the lack of explanation from the leader of the opposition. As I say, however, the written word is what we have to vote upon.

Now I have something to say about the subamendment, which reads:

> This house if of the opinion that the government's policies of permitting recent unjustifiable increases in the prices of farm machinery and of steel have resulted in imposing on food producers and workers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

The subamendment has been criticized because we have specifically mentioned farm implement prices and the price of steel. Those are the two most recent changes which have been made in the price structure which have affected agriculture; and because of that, rather than make a general and sweeping statement, we chose to direct attention to those two matters which we believe have been most recent and have had a disastrous effect on our price ceiling policy.

The hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) yesterday made the statement that all of us must accept the view that, in the light of the explanations given so far—and I note the qualification—the recent increase in the price of farm machinery is unjustifiable and unfair. But while the hon. member for Lake Centre may have said that yesterday, it is not what his colleagues were saying when we debated the prices of farm machinery a short time ago, and I do not believe that all the members of his party have changed their minds in the course of the last two or three weeks; if they have they have made a complete change of mind.

While I am speaking of changing minds, may I refer to what the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) said this afternoon? He said that in one breath I supported the request that the Speaker declare the proposal of the member for Lake Centre in order and in the next breath I opposed it. Not at all. What I did was to hear the discussion; having heard the discussion I came to the conclusion that the ruling of the Speaker was right, and consequently I said that that ruling was right. May I remind the hon. gentleman that, even so, a wise man can change his mind? A fool never does, and I do not think there have been many changes of mind in the ranks of the colleagues of my hon. friend in any regard. The hon. member for Lake Centre said:

> Apparently they do not believe that any increase of farm prices at the present time would be justified.

And a little later he said:

> The view of the leader of the C.C.F., very clearly expressed on different occasions, has been that the C.C.F. party supports the government in its stand that there shall be no increase in the prices of farm products in this country.

I have said nothing of the kind. The hon. gentleman referred to my speech as recorded at page 319 of Hansard in a previous debate. Like him, I am precluded from reading the exact phraseology, but if he will look at what I said on that occasion he will find I suggested that increases and changes might be necessary but that when they were necessary they should be made after negotiation among all the parties concerned. I did not say at any time that we did not believe that certain adjustments were necessary from time to time. I regret the necessity of these adjustments. I believe the government would have been wiser had it stuck to its original plan of maintaining the price ceilings in this country in the interests of the people; and although the speeches that have been made by my hon. friends of the Progressive Conservative party have been of such a nature that we have disagreed with most of the ideas they have advanced in support of the amendment, we are, I believe, compelled to vote for the wording of the amendment as well as for the wording of our own subamendment, and I shall have to leave the matter at that.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): The motion before the house is one by the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Ilsley) to go into supply to consider the estimates proposed by the government for its expenditure during the coming year. To that motion an amendment was moved by myself and an amendment to the amendment by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum) representing the C.C.F. party.

On a motion to go into supply opportunity is given to members to raise matters of major public concern or to bring forward any grievances from the electorate in any part of Canada or to discuss any other matter of public interest. The amendment I proposed raises two major matters of public interest. May I say in passing that many members have spoken of it as a non-confidence motion. Mr. Speaker any amendment moved to a government motion the speech from the throne or the budget or supply is of course a lack of confidence motion. In that connection I may say that this motion was not moved with any expectation of dislodging the government or in any attempt to do so. It was moved with the intention of bringing before the house and the government and the country two major questions of public policy, which I think are very important and, with all respect, very clear in the amendment that I moved.

Before I read the amendment may I say one or two things with respect to the debate so far. It has covered a very wide range, and I agree with some of those who have said that much of the debate had no direct bearing either on the amendment or on the amendment to the amendment. I propose in my remarks to-night to deal wholly with the amendment, and with the amendment to the amendment, but chiefly with the former. Before I do so may I refer briefly to two or three of the addresses we have heard to-night?

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), in his remarks, answered partly a question I asked him the other day when he was on his estimates or on going into supply. I asked him to give a statement of the prices paid to farmers for the major agricultural products in Canada, and with it a statement of prices paid to farmers in the United States—prices paid under comparable conditions here and across the line in the United States. To-night he quoted prices on butter and cheese and indicated that they were approximately the same in the two countries.

Mr. GARDINER: I have the information now. There is a subsidy on milk entering into cheese. It is twenty-five cents with an additional twenty cents put on for these two months in connection with the recently announced policy to encourage production and there is also a five-cent subsidy on butter. That would put cheese on the United States side about two cents a pound higher than ours with the subsidy with the exception of these two months, when another two cents is added. On butter it is about the same.

Mr. BRACKEN: I did not mean to be critical of the figures the minister gave.

Mr. GARDINER: I understood that but wished to get it on the record as soon as possible.

Mr. BRACKEN: The minister referred briefly to the fact of almost similar prices for butter and cheese in both countries, and with respect to the latter he has now made some modification which indicates that the price to the cheese producers is higher on the other side. On a previous occasion the minister told us that the price of hogs was not very much different in the two countries, and he said he did not have information at hand with respect to beef wheat and milk. In that connection, I might say that the wartime prices and trade board issued a release three days ago, on May 20, in which they give that information respecting milk; and since the question was partly answered by the minister, perhaps what the wartime prices and trade board had to say with respect to relative prices on the other side and in Canada ought to be given. This is the statement:

In United States, where conditions are most comparable, the average price of milk in January of this year, on basis of the same size quart, was 19·5 cents against an average or 12·5 in Canada, both figures in Canadian funds.

I presume, although I do not know, that that was before the two-cent subsidy was removed.

Mr. GARDINER: I would not be sure.

Mr. BRACKEN: This is the statement exactly as it was issued, and it continues:

The highest price for milk in the United States is 20·6 per imperial quart as against 13 cents per quart, the highest price, in Canada.

After much debate in this house, so far as wheat is concerned, one does not need to quote again the difference in price as between the United States and Canada. It is a very great difference. It changes a little from day to day, different reports indicate. With subsidies paid over there it is eighty or ninety cents or more higher than it is in Canada. I make no point of these differences at the moment; I simply add them to the record.

In his remarks the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) dealt with two questions, first, the necessity of production if we are to increase our standard of living in this country, and, second, the value of subsidies as an equalizing force in our economy. He said that he favoured subsidies as a means of equalizing the returns to different sections of our economy. With practically all that he had to say regarding production I am in agreement. I could not follow him clearly with respect to his support of subsidies, but even there I could go with him part way.

In referring to the amendment and the subamendment the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) intimated that my amendment was not explicit as to what was meant by "price ceiling policies with respect to farm products," and that there was some obscurity in the wording. May I repeat that amendment? It reads as follows:

This house is of the opinion that the government's price ceiling policies with respect to farm products—

If there was any obscurity there, let it be removed. It means price ceiling policies with respect to prices of farm products or the prices of other commodities that enter into the cost of producing farm products.

Mr. COLDWELL: The hon. member did not say that.

Mr. BRACKEN: I did say that. I repeat:

. . . that the government's price ceiling policies with respect to farm products—

It was not intended to be limited.

[Mr. Bracken.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BRACKEN: I am simply giving the explanation; hon. members may take it or not. I repeat:

—with respect to farm products are discouraging production of needed food . . .

That is one of the two sections of the amendment. What was the other? This is it:

—and imposing on the food producers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

That is all there is in the amendment—these two statements. They are either correct or incorrect. If they are incorrect I know the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) will present the government's side, showing, as well as he can, that they are incorrect. If they are correct it is a serious indictment of the policies themselves or of the administration of the policies. I am inclined to criticize the administration of the policies more than the policies themselves, because you cannot raise the price of one commodity which enters into the cost of others without creating inequities. That is the position we are taking.

With respect to the observation that speakers have talked about other things, let me say, Mr. Speaker, that there is nothing in this amendment about taking the lid off controls; there is nothing about allowing prices to go sky-high; there is nothing about uncontrolled inflation; there is no attack on the principle of trying to control inflation. There is nothing in the amendment save this, that the combination of the government's price control policies and its administration of them during recent months is discouraging production of needed food in a time of famine; and to the extent that these policies and the administration of them increase farm costs more than they do farm prices they discourage the production of food in a time like this.

Mr. Speaker, these are major questions. We take the position that we want production. We take the position that we want equity between producers and workers and business and industry. If this amendment refers only to the producers of food on the farms of Canada it is not because of any favour desired for farmers but rather that they shall not be denied equity in our economy. We hold that recent policies put them in a relatively inequitable position. I shall deal with the merits of the matter in a moment.

The first question is: Is the production of agricultural products going down in Canada or not? It will not be enough to show that production is going down to prove that it is because of the government's price policies. Weather conditions affect the yield of crops; but surely there is no one in this house who will say that price does not affect production also. Price gave us production of industrial equipment in the war. The advance of almost unlimited credit to industry, together with cost-plus contracts, and priorities in needed supplies gave producers the incentive to produce and they did produce. However we may criticize details, they got production on a scale that we are all proud of. But we are not applying as generous policies now toward getting production of food in a time of famine. As a matter of fact, the government's policies are working the other way, because some of these price ceilings on non-farm products—some of the farm costs—have been raised more rapidly than the prices of farm products.

Let me deal with the question of production of food on farms. The major farm products of Canada may be grouped in two; grain or cereals, and live stock products of various kinds. There are many other lines, of course, but I cannot now deal with all. I need not discuss the production of cereals. We discussed all that a while ago. The government's policy was then clearly stated. They did not favour any increase in the acreage of wheat. It is true that the acreage of wheat has gone up, but not as a result of government policy; it has gone up in spite of government policy, gone up by taking some of the acreage that would go into coarse grains, part of which would go to feed live stock, gone up because some of the summer-fallow acreage has been put into wheat.

Let me now deal with the production of live stock products and see what is happening in Canada. Our position is that production is going down, and that the government's price policies tend to discourage production. Some speakers said that over the last ten years the production of food in Canada increased. It did. This country is gettting more populous every year, and in the last five of those ten years we had good weather most of the time. During that period, and particularly during the last three or four years, we had the incentive of favourable prices, and in the war years we had the added incentive of patriotism. Farmers were working harder, working longer hours; older men returned to help; farmers' wives and children all helped, and I include also the incentive of a favourable relative position of prices of farm products to cost, during the last three years. Taken together, that combination gave us a large production.

But what is happening now? The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) said he was quoting reports of the bureau of statistics. Any figures I quote here are taken from official documents of the government. There can be no purpose in trying to misinterpret statistics. Anyone who attempts that sort of thing will soon be caught up with. Let us have only what the truth is. What do they say? In connection with creamery butter our production in 1944 was 298,000,000 pounds and in 1945 it was 293,000,000 pounds, a reduction of only two per cent. In 1944 we slaughtered 8·8 million hogs; in 1945 we slaughtered 5·7 million, a reduction of 33 per cent.

And what is happening in more recent months? That is what we are concerned with. Now that the war is over and we are getting back to peace-time conditions, changes are being made every litttle while by the government or its officials. What is happening now? From January to March of this year, as compared with January to March of last year, our production of butter shows a reduction of 18 per cent; our production of factory cheese shows a reduction of 33 per cent; our production of concentrated milk products shows a reduction of 9 per cent; the number of hogs slaughtered shows a reduction of 50 per cent as compared with 1944 and of 33 per cent as compared with 1945. That is not a completely accurate interpretation of what will happen during the whole year but it is a pretty good guide. For the rest of the year pastures will help out production, and differences will not be as great; but those are the latest figures we have, and that is what they show—a steadily declining production.

I have taken the trouble to add up the production, the total weight, of creamery butter, factory cheese, concentrated milk products, dressed weight of inspected slaughter of live stock products, including hogs, cattle, calves, sheep and lambs. What does this show? In 1944 the total produced was, in round figures, 2,900 million pounds. In 1945 it was 2,700 million pounds. But what about January, February and March of this year as compared with the same period last year and the year before? In 1944 the total was 716 million pounds; in 1945 it was 632 million pounds, and in 1946 it was 502 million pounds, a reduction this year of 30 per cent as compared with two years ago and of 20 per cent as compared with last year.

I have admitted, Mr. Speaker, that increasing disparities in prices and cost may not cause all that reduction. Weather and coarse grain supply help; but price is a major factor, and increasing costs do discourage plans for production.

I come now to the next point, but before I deal with it let me read the amendment moved by the C.C.F. The resolution moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum) reads:

> This house is of the opinion that the government's policies—of what?

> —of permitting recent unjustifiable increases in the prices of farm machinery and of steel have resulted in imposing on food producers and workers . . .

The rest is the same. How does that change the original amendment? It takes out of my amendment the whole question of the effect of the recent administration of these price ceiling policies on production. It removes that entirely from the immediate question before us. And that was the major economic question I wished to have this house discuss. It is important to know whether the policies being followed by the government and administered by the government are discouraging production.

I have no objection in the world to the C.C.F. bringing forward a motion such as this and discussing it on its merits. Are these increases in the prices of farm machinery and steel unjustified? On one ground I would agree that they are. They are unjustified in so far as they increase farmers' costs without increasing farmers' prices. On other grounds I leave it to the government to bring forward evidence to show that these increases were justified. It may be they can do so. I imagine they have that evidence, or they would not have put the increases into effect. I expect they will show that the cost of producing that machinery and that steel, whether as a result of the increased cost of labour or of raw material, or whatever it be, has so gone up that enterprise would not risk its capital to produce goods and to give employment if it were not likely to have enough returns to pay those additional costs for labour and materials. If the government can show that, then responsible members will not have much choice but to accept its decision. But I suggest that this is an amendment which might have been brought in by itself. As it is, it discards altogether the heart of my amendment, which I submit is a proper and an important economic question for discussion and decision, not necessarily on party lines though, as this house is constituted, probably that is too much to expect.

Then the C.C.F. amendment goes farther and says these things:

> . . . have resulted in imposing on food producers and workers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

I have no objection to the words "and workers" being put in, but I wonder what farmers will think of people who frame an amendment which suggests that food producers are not workers.

I have dealt with the question of whether or not production is going down. In this connection I should like to read from a report of the Ontario department of agriculture dated May 14:

> Production of butter by Ontario creameries in the first four months of 1946 was down more than 1,500 tons as compared with the output in the same period last year, the Ontario department of agriculture said to-day in its monthly dairy report.
> Cumulative output of creamery butter for the first four months was 15,327,400 pounds against 18,806,400 for the same period last year. Butter production in April, 1946, was 5,352,100 pounds against 6,117,500 for April, 1945. Stocks of creamery butter in storage warehouses throughout the province up to May 1 was 1,064,400 pounds against 1,478,000 in the same period of last year.

Then it goes on to give similar figures showing decreases in the production of cheese, but I shall not take time to put more of the statement on the record.

I have been dealing with the question: Is production going down?

I wish now to deal as briefly as I can with the question of recent price ceiling decisions in their relation to equity for farmers. The point is: Are price ceilings, as now being administered by the government, affecting unfairly the producers of this country? Are they or are they not? If not, then that section of my amendment should not be supported. If they are, then it should be supported.

What are the facts? I have here a statement showing the dates when all these price ceilings were established, a statement of the date of the last subsidies, and what they were. At this late hour I shall not take time to deal with all of them, but if I were to make a brief summary of them, it would be this: Except for minor changes, the majority of price ceilings and subsidies in farm products have been constant for two or three years. There have been some minor increases in recent months, of course—indeed, there have been two or three small increases since this debate started. Sometimes I have wondered why there was this long delay in proceeding with the motion which was moved some two and one-half weeks ago.

I have said that except for minor changes, the majority of price ceilings and subsidies on farm produce have been constant for two or three years. The policy of this government with respect to price ceilings in the early years of the war was to fasten upon agriculture a level of prices 20 per cent below parity, and it remained that way for some years, even under serious protests from organized agriculture, and from every student of agriculture. About three years ago that condition was changed. I shall not go into the question of why. Perhaps rising world prices helped. An hon. member of the C.C.F. has said it was because of victories by their candidates in the west. But I have sometimes had the notion it was because in December of 1942 the official opposition took a stand for a square deal for all agriculture, as a start to raise the price of wheat from 90 cents to $1.25—which was done by the government the very next year.

I may say to the house that at no time except the last three years has agriculture had anything like a square deal at any time since the last war—only in those three years. On the basis of what some called parity—and it is parity only in one narrow technical sense, but not real parity—it was well treated in those three years. But on the basis of real parity, that is a farmer receiving a fair proportion of the nation's income, it has not had that kind of parity even in those three years.

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Speaker, I am assuming it is the pleasure of the house to continue so that we may have the division to-night.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BRACKEN: I think I can finish in about ten minutes, but I do not wish to detain the house if it wishes to adjourn.

Mr. ILSLEY: I move:

That the house be not adjourned at eleven o'clock this day.

Mr. MacINNIS: Before putting the motion, may I point out that a motion to vary a standing order of the house cannot be moved without unanimous consent. If that were not so, hon. members on this side of the house would have no protection from the majority.

Mr. ILSLEY: That was my impression, too.

Mr. SPEAKER: I call the attention of hon. members to standing order 45 which says:

Forty-eight hours' notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a bill, resolution or address, for the appointment of any committee, or for placing a question on the order paper; but this rule shall not apply to bills after their introduction, or to private bills, or to the times of meeting or adjournment of the house.

Mr. ILSLEY: If there is any serious objection I would not insist. May I ask, informally, if there are likely to be other speeches.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes.

Mr. ILSLEY: Then I think I ought not to press the motion. Usually these things are done in an atmosphere of consent. I have a strong feeling that we should not proceed to-night, and I shall not press for it. I therefore suggest that the leader of the opposition continue until eleven o'clock.

Motion (Mr. Ilsley) withdrawn.

On motion of Mr. Bracken the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 28

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the provision of standing order 28 in relation to Mr. Speaker leaving the chair without question put for the house to go into committee of supply be suspended for the sitting on Friday, May 24, 1946.

Mr. BRACKEN: I am glad to support the motion, and I would gather that it has the unanimous agreement in the house.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BRACKEN: With reference to the debate, might I point out that though I would have been through in about ten minutes I agree with the leader of the house that it is not desirable that we proceed.

Since the Acting Prime Minister desires to have interim supply, may I point out also that, so far as this party is concerned, we shall help him to get it, if by to-morrow evening this debate is not concluded.

Mr. ILSLEY: Thank you; but I do hope it is concluded.

Mr. BRACKEN: I am just saying that we shall be agreeable to a postponement of the debate at that time, if necessary. If we do not conclude the debate in the afternoon, we shall help the Acting Prime Minister to get interim supply to-morrow evening.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, May 24, 1946.

The house met at three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATEMENT OF MR. SPEAKER ON RULING UPON RIGHT OF REPLY, MAY 23

Mr. SPEAKER: When I stated yesterday that the finance minister was entitled to reply and would close the debate on the motion that I leave the chair, I am afraid I unintentionally misled the house. Standing order 43 says:

(2) A reply shall be allowed to a member who has moved a substantive motion, but not to the mover of an amendment, the previous question, or on an instruction to a committee.

A substantive motion is a distinct and original proposition the terms of which may be amended either by (a) leaving out certain words, (b) by leaving out certain words in order to insert other words, (c) by inserting or adding others words. This definition does not apply to the motion that the Speaker do now leave the chair, which is merely a formal motion and is not the real subject of debate. The actual question now being debated is the amendments, the movers of which, as I have just said, are not entitled to reply. This is one of the debates in which the privilege to speak a second time by way of reply is not conceded to any member who has already spoken.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Fifth report of special committee on veterans affairs.—Mr. Tucker.

SMALL LOANS ACT

REDUCTION OF MAXIMUM INTEREST RATE

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce bill No. 140, to amend the Small Loans Act, 1939.

He said: The Small Loans Act, passed, I think, eight or nine years ago, places a ceiling on the interest rate which small loan companies may charge of two per cent per month. Experience has shown that that is unnecessarily high in the light of recent changes in interest rates and so forth, and it is therefore proposed in this bill to reduce that interest rate to 1½ per cent per month. It is anticipated that the bill will be referred to the banking and commerce committee where the appropriateness of that rate can be investigated. The superintendent of insurance recommends the rate.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST READING—SENATE BILL

Bill No. 137, to incorporate Evangelical Churches of Pentecost.—Mr. Dechene.

RADIO BROADCASTING

APPLICATION OF C.B.C. FOR WAVE LENGTH OF CFRB

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): I should like to direct a question, if I may, to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, under whom I believe radio broadcasting partly comes. My question is: In view of the minister's statement yesterday that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation had made application for the use of the wave length or frequency occupied by station CFRB, will the minister give an undertaking to the house that no steps will be taken by him or the government in this connection until all parties interested in the matter, including representatives of radio listeners, shall have had an opportunity of presenting their point of view to the special house committee on radio broadcasting?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): I think my hon. friend's question should more properly be directed to my colleague the Minister of National Revenue, under whose jurisdiction the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation carries on its operations.

Mr. GRAYDON: Well, Mr. Speaker, it has been such a job to know who has control or supervision over this matter that I took the precaution of sending a notice to both ministers. I was hoping that I would not have to make it something in the form of a circular to the ministers, but when someone asked the Minister of National Revenue a question two or three days ago he said he did not know anything about the matter.

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): There should not be as much difficulty as the hon. member for Peel suggests about knowing under whose jurisdiction any of the broadcasting operations come. I believe he knows full well that the Radio Act is administered by the Minister of Reconstruction and supply. The Canadian Broadcasting Act comes more particularly under my jurisdiction. The hon. gentleman, in order to make sure that he would have an answer to his question, evidently circularized the ministers, because I also acknowledge having received notice of his question. In reply thereto let me say that neither the minister nor the government has any intention of dispossessing the tenant who has CFRB before all interested parties are given an opportunity to make their representations before the radio broadcasting committee, which we expect will sit on Tuesday next.

Mr. GRAYDON: Our people do not want to lose Jim Hunter.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

AVAILABILITY OF PRISONERS OF WAR TO SUGAR BEET GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. JUTRAS (Provencher): In view of the growing alarm in Manitoba with respect to the future availability of prisoner-of-war labour for the cultivation of sugar beets, is the Minister of Labour in a position to clarify the situation?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I would like to assure the hon. member for Provencher, that the Department of Labour will make every possible effort to provide for the sugar beet industry in Manitoba—as we will in Ontario. At present 705 prisoners of war have been assigned to Manitoba for this work, and we are trying to get an additional 200, which I hope we will get to make the number 905. Last year the average number of prisoners of war engaged in the sugar beet industry in Manitoba, that is throughout the year, was 860. This included a larger number in the autumn for the harvest. As the hon. member should know, the availability of prisoners of war in Canada for work in the sugar beet industry, for the lumber camps, and other projects, depends on the wishes of the British government with respect to transfer of these prisoners back to Great Britain. After all, they are British prisoners of war. Britain is short of the type of labour for which these prisoners of war can be used. Furthermore they must be moved back to Britain as ships are provided.

We hope that some other arrangements for labour in the sugar beet fields may be made.

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead): May I ask the Minister of Labour a question? Did the government undertake to provide in south-western Ontario a number of prisoners of war necessary to plant, till and harvest a sugar beet crop of 35,000 acres? If so, have these prisoners of war been made available to the sugar beet growers of the area?

Mr. MITCHELL: The answer is no.

BRITISH COLUMBIA BERRY CROP—PROVISION OF CONTAINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): I should like to ask whichever minister is responsible what steps have been taken to provide crates, hallocks and barrels to save the current British Columbia berry crop.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): If my hon. friend can solve the loggers' strike in British Columbia, they will get all the crates, barrels and other things they need.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: If the minister will take my advice it will be solved to-night.

Mr. MITCHELL: This fellow is a wizard, Mr. Speaker. He is wasting his time as a member of this house at $6,000 a year. My advice to him is to go to Washington and give Mr. Truman a hand. If he has an answer, what I would call a rational answer, you understand, which will solve the problem in British Columbia, I shall be glad to see him as soon as the orders of the day are finished.

STRIKE OF BARTENDERS IN ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Before the orders of the day are called I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. I did not give him notice, because I received a telegram concerning the matter after I came into the house. I do not ask this question to be amusing, but has he been made aware that the bartenders of Alberta are going on strike because of their dissatisfaction with the order of the regional war labour board?

COAL

MINERS' AND RAILWAY WORKERS' STRIKE IN U.S.—SUPPLY SITUATION IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): On May 8 I made a statement to the house on the coal situation and pointed out that unless the production of bituminous coal was resumed in the United States in the near future the Canadian position would be most serious.

Since that time, the miners have agreed to resume work for a truce period of two weeks, a period which expires to-morrow. In spite of the truce, many of the mines, and particularly those in Pennsylvania which supply large tonnages to Canada, did not resume production. The United States government took over the mines on Thursday, but no information is available as to what effect this action will have on the future production of coal.

Yesterday, as the house is aware, strike action by a section of the United States railway employees paralysed the whole rail transportation system of the United States. This action will result in a complete stoppage of coal production in the United States mines, and will also prevent the delivery of any coal that is at present en route to Canada. The implications of this action are so far-reaching that it is impossible to make any forecast of the effect upon our coal position, except to say that it makes a bad situation very much worse. The whole problem is at present being most carefully reviewed, and I shall advise the house later of the action considered necessary to give the greatest possible protection to our industry and people.

I believe the house should be informed of the situation facing this country before the railway strike occurred. The truce in the coal fields, unfortunately, caused some Canadian consumers to believe that our troubles were over, but the facts of the case did not give any basis for such optimism.

Last year Canada imported some 2,979,000 tons of United States bituminous coal in the seven weeks from April 1 to May 19. In the same seven weeks this year our imports have been 710,000 tons, a straight loss of 2,200,000, or ten per cent of our estimated needs. That, Mr. Speaker, was the position as at May 19, but it was by no means the whole story. By the end of June, when, if work had continued in the United States mines, coal should have become freely available, our deficiency as against last year would have risen to almost five and one-half million tons, or one-quarter of our estimated requirements of bituminous coal in the central provinces. The point I would emphasize is that we were facing this deficiency under the best of circumstances, that is, the maintenance of full production.

During the summer months the vessels in the great lakes are usually employed to capacity in carrying coal, and the loss of some three months of navigation forms a handicap that can never be fully recovered. It was planned to use the rail facilities to the utmost, but even here there was a very definite limit and it did appear that at the end of the twelve-month period, at March 31 next year, we would only have received from eighteen to nineteen million tons to supply a requirement of approximately twenty-two million tons.

That, Mr. Speaker, was the basis for present orders restricting the consumption of coal. There are many consumers throughout the country who are well aware of the danger, and see clearly that five weeks' production of coal cannot be lost without serious effect. These consumers, of their own volition, have taken every possible step to conserve their dwindling supply. There are also the heedless and careless who will not see, and this government would be failing in its duty if it neglected to take such steps by order as are necessary to protect both the welfare of our citizens and the operation of our industries.

I must advise the house that a new directive will be issued requiring suppliers of coal in the central provinces to maintain sufficient stock to protect the requirements of those consumers such as hospitals, public utilities, food processing plants, et cetera, whose continuing operation is essential to the health and safety of the country.

This order also sets up a scheme of priorities on the delivery of any coal, over and above that necessary to protect the previously mentioned essential requirements. Other orders will probably be necessary in the near future, and I shall endeavour to keep the house fully informed on any prospective action.

Every possible step is being taken to use our Canadian coal resources to the practical limit, to maintain industry in operation. At the present time, practically all the available surplus of bituminous coal in both eastern and western Canada is being directed to the central provinces, and consideration is being given to the possibility of supplying some quantities of the sub-bituminous and other fuels.

I would appeal to both the miners and the management in our Canadian coal industry to put forth their utmost effort to increase production, and provide some measure of relief and protection to their fellow citizens.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that unless the production and transportation of coal is resumed in the United States in the near future, the central provinces of Canada are threatened with nothing less than a calamity, and that our people and our industry may be faced with hardship and distress on a scale never experienced during the war years.

These remarks refer to the supply of bituminous or soft coal for use by industry and other large consumers, and I now turn to the supply of other coals for domestic heating.

Anthracite has been entering the country in about the same volume as last year but, even if supply is maintained at this level, there will not be enough anthracite to supply the requirements. Negotiations on the renewal of the present labour contract are under way in the United States between the miners' union and the operators. This contract expires on May 31, and notice has been served by the union that work will cease at that date if a satisfactory contract is not signed. Regardless of possible strike action our supplies of anthracite have, of course, been stopped by the railway strike, and even if this strike is settled in the near future, the dislocation in normal rail traffic will prevent full supply for some time. A definite possibility of a stoppage of production is a threat of extending into future weeks or months.

Some action had already been taken to maintain the supply of suitable fuel for domestic purposes by retaining the government coke plant at Hamilton in operation. Since this and other coke plants in Ontario and Quebec use United States bituminous coal to a major extent, it will not be possible to count upon full production until bituminous coal is again available. Canadian coal is being directed to some coke plants to maintain operations on a reduced scale and prevent damage to the ovens, and this movement will be increased to the limit of the supply available.

I would advise the house that this phase of the coal problem dealing with the supply of domestic coal, which directly affects the health and welfare of every citizen, is a matter of the deepest concern. It may well be that, even with the most drastic action on the part of government, the individual consumer will have to reduce his fuel consumption in the coming winter. As soon as the situation in the United States is clarified I propose to advise the house in detail of the action taken and proposed by government to meet the serious emergency that we will have to face.

Mr. GRAYDON: In the preparation of the statement which has just been given, the minister must have refreshed his memory as to the amount of coal that we import each year from the United States. That is important to the question I desire to ask. Does the minister happen to have the figure in his mind at the moment?

Mr. HOWE: About twenty-two million tons of bituminous, and I think some two or three million tons of anthracite.

Mr. GRAYDON: The purpose of my question is to give information to the ordinary laymen of Canada who do not know much about the technical aspects of the coal problem. They should like to know why we import so much coal from the United States, and then, in an emergency such as this, find that our own coalfields are perhaps able to produce the coal. In spite of that we are importing from the other side. This is a simple question which has been put to me and to many other members of the house, and will now come up more acutely than ever before and I should like some answer from the minister.

Mr. HOWE: The capacity of the mines in Canada to produce, even at low points of consumption by industry, has never been stepped up to such an extent that Canadian production could take care of anything like the full requirements of this country. As my hon. friend knows, the coal of Canada is on the east coast, in Nova Scotia, and in the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia. Arrangements have been in effect for many years subsidizing freight rates into the central areas, so that it has been possible to ship Nova Scotia and Alberta coal to the central provinces, as far as the laid-down cost of the commodity is concerned. Nova Scotia and Alberta coal has been placed on a competitive basis with United States coal, but still our production in Canada is now something less than forty per cent of our total requirements, and only last winter quantities of American coal were shipped as far east as Truro, Nova Scotia. In other words, for the last few years the maritime provinces have hardly supplied their own requirments for coal. The western mines have supplied the needs of the prairies, and have shipped a certain amount of coal to central Canada, but even under the conditions of full production that have obtained for the last several years the additional supplies from the prairies have filled the needs of only a small part of the market in the central provinces.

Mr. COLDWELL: Has the minister considered the possibility of increasing the strip mining in southern Saskatchewan with a view to supplying the prairie area in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and releasing the coal ordinarily used in that area for shipment to eastern Canada? Has that been considered?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. Special arrangements have been made to increase the quantities coming from the strip mines in Saskatchewan. Again it is largely a matter of available equipment. We expect another five hundred thousand tons from the south Saskatchewan area to help out the situation this winter. All the strip operations sponsored by the government during the war in the prairie provinces are now in operation, and every effort has been made to get coal from all available sources.

Mr. GILLIS: Following the minister's answer to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon), I take it he is not suggesting that we are now fully exploiting our coal resources in Canada. I think I am safe in saying that if those resources were properly developed we could supply at least seventy per cent of our own requirements.

Mr. HOWE: I would certainly appreciate anything my hon. friend could do to help me fully develop them, because for the last four years I have been putting all possible pressure on our coal mining areas to get coal for our Canadian market, yet during that period the importation of coal from the United States has almost doubled.

Mr. GILLIS: That is on the operating industry only, but a large part of our resources have not been touched.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the minister say if there is any anthracite produced in Canada?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The minister spoke of getting coal to operate these coking plants. Where do you get that coking coal in Canada?

Mr. HOWE: I cannot give my hon. friend the individual mines. I could give him the information on Monday. Our experts have found that certain western mines do produce coal suitable for the particular process at a particular plant. Each coking plant uses a little different process, and coal can be found in western Canada to suit all the plants.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): A certain tonnage of coal and coke has come from Nova Scotia, though it is true some of it is mixed with United States coal.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Hon. members will admit that I have allowed a good deal of latitude in asking questions on this matter of coal, in spite of the fact that most of the questions were out of order. Questions of this kind should not be asked on the orders of the day.

USE OF BIENFAIT MINES TO ASSIST IN MEETING SHORTAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): May I answer a question which was asked by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. McCullough). The hon. member asked whether or not plans were being made to utilize to the fullest extent possible the coal mines in the Bienfait area. I might say that the maximum production possible from this field will not be sufficient to meet deficiencies in the prairie markets. It is estimated that possibly 1·8 million tons of coal may be produced during the current year, but this is predicated upon the resumption of production by one of the larger operators. This in turn depends upon the ability of that operator to get back into production by early winter, after a disastrous fire which destroyed the tipple at that particular mine. The answer to the question is that we are doing our best.

SUPPLY

PRICE CEILING POLICIES WITH RESPECT TO FARM PRODUCTS

The house resumed from Thursday, May 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mackenzie that the house go into committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mrs. Strum.

[Mr. Hackett.]

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): When the house rose last evening, Mr. Speaker, we were discussing two amendments to the motion to go into supply. I was dealing with what I regard as the growing inequity to farmers arising from the government's administration of its price and wage policies. I had explained to the house that the amendment deals with two points: first, the depressing effect of the government's recent administration of its price and wage control policies on the production of food; and second, what I regard as the growing inequity being forced upon farmers by allowing increases in their costs of production without corresponding increases in the prices of their products.

With respect to the first matter, namely the effect on the production of food, I had endeavoured to show three things: first, that agricultural production, which increased year by year during the war, up to 1944, since that time had been decreasing; second, that agricultural production was decreasing more rapidly at the present time than during similar months in either of the last two years; third, that while that decrease was partly due to the weather, over which we have no control, it was also partly due to the policies of the government, over which it has full control.

With respect to the second question, namely that of the growing inequity to the rural population, I was about to attempt to show three things: First, that farm costs were being allowed to rise; second, that farm prices were not being allowed to rise accordingly, and, third—and the result of the other two—there is a growing inequity, to the disadvantage of the rural population. I think that is a fair statement of the argument respecting this part of the main amendment.

What is the evidence with respect to increases in farm costs and no compensating increases in farm prices? I propose to recite three or four sets of facts. Let me turn first to the increases which have been allowed in price ceilings on non-farm products. Many of these were outlined by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny) and by some other hon. members; therefore I shall not review them in detail. But to state a few: A 12½ per cent increase in the ceiling price of farm machinery; a 16 to 20 per cent increase in certain types of bedding and upholstered furniture; 4 cents per quart increase in the price of Barbados molasses; increases ranging from less than 5 per cent to 10 per cent in finished paper and paper products; a suspension in the ceilings on a number of less essential converted paper products; increases approximating $5 per ton on steel ingots, and the resulting increases in large numbers of products of which steel is the raw material; an 8 per cent increase in the wholesale price of lumber; an increase in the ceiling on gasoline in western Canada of two cents per gallon.

I place these on record only to illustrate what is being done that increases the cost of production to the farmers. In addition to that, the government's policy to subsidize production is now being changed. The wartime prices and trade board have indicated that in 1945 they paid $107 million in subsidies; in 1946 they expect it will be about $99 million, and the estimate for the next year is that it will be between $60 and $75 million, or a reduction of from $30 million to $40 million in those subsidies.

Another set of facts which illustrates to farmers these costs is found in the increase in wholesale prices. That index has been rising every month since September of last year; and, what is more, the rate of increase is becoming greater.

Since September the annual rate of increase each month has been as follows: October, November and December of last year, at a rate of 2·3 per cent per year; January, 8·3 per cent; February 7·1 per cent. Then, while in March there is a drop to 3·5 per cent, in April there is an estimated increase to approximately 11 per cent. In other words for the past three months the rate of increase in wholesale prices is close to the average rate of increase from January to October 1941, before the price ceiling policy was instituted. When we consider the numerous examples of black market activities and the loss in quality of goods, the present rate of increase in wholesal price levels is probably nearly as much as it was just before the price ceiling policy began. In other words, we no longer have a stabilized price ceiling policy, because the government itself has broken it.

Another set of facts has to do with the increases in farm costs. Here again we take our statistics from government departments. Prices of agricultural products were unfair at the beginning of the war, to the extent of 20 per cent. When this policy was established it attempted to freeze the prices of farm products at a point 20 per cent below parity. Through constant pressure on the government some price ceilings have been raised from time to time, but generally speaking those changes came too late.

We need not go into the many changes which were made from them until 1943. Perhaps it is sufficient to say that by 1943 a reasonably acceptable relationship between the prices of farm products and the cost of equipment required on the farms had been achieved. The point I make is that, with the exception of two or three recent and minor changes, the majority of these farm products ceilings and subsidies have been constant for two or three years. They have been relatively constant, with the exception of these minor changes, but at the same time farm costs have been going up.

To what extent have those costs been going up? The index of the cost of things farmers buy stood in 1943 at 102·8, while to-day it is estimated to be 110·8, or an increase of approximately 8 per cent.

I might mention here that farm labour costs have more than doubled what they were in 1939, and they are 40 per cent more than in 1943, when this relationship for agriculture was established. If that relationship was approximately fair in 1943, then it is definitely out of line to-day because costs have risen to a greater extent than have prices.

That is the point I wish to make, namely that this policy has discouraged production and that it is creating an inequity that this house ought not to allow, an inequity which affects a great section of the rural population. Another evidence of this fact is to be found in the small increases introduced by the government since this motion appeared on the order paper. It will be sufficient to mention only a few of them: The removal of the two per cent consumer subsidy on milk; the proposed removal in September of the producer subsidy of 55 cents per 100 pounds; the temporary increase from 35 cents to 55 cents per hundred until September; the increase of four cents a pound on butter; an increase on hogs; an increase of 10 cents a hundred just the other day on milk entering into the production of cheese; and an increase of 8 cents a hundred on milk used in the production of concentrated milk products Those are the minor increases that have been given to this great industry, while costs all along the line have been going up. That, together with the fear in the farmers' minds that later on prices are not going to be so good, is the reason for the abandonment of farms in this and other parts of Ontario. It is causing the farmer to say, "If we cannot make a little more out of this than we put into it, we will slow up until conditions get better." With farm labour difficult to get, with farm labour higher in price, with only about one out of five of the boys who left the farms during the war to go into munition work at high pay coming back, with farmers growing older and finding these difficult labour conditions to face, not having the same patriotic impulse to produce that they had during the war, many are not now feeling the necessity of putting their shoulders into it as they did, and the result is decreased production.

What the farmers are afraid of to-day is the return of conditions similar to what they have had to face in the past. What were those conditions? Let me take one product as an example, because it is easy to state—the history of the price of wheat. In the depth of the depression they received forty cents per bushel, the lowest figure in four hundred years. A few years later they received sixty cents per bushel. When some of us tried to get that raised to eighty cents we succeeded only to the extent of having it raised to seventy cents. The initial price went up to only ninety cents per bushel during the first two or three years of the war, and then in 1943 it was raised to $1.25. There was something from participation certificates to go on top of that.

I contend that we should try to retain at least as good as the recent relationship because it was considered to be relatively fair on the basis of what some people have chosen to call parity, which in some respects is not a fair or wholly acceptable relationship. Farmers are afraid of even that relationship being departed from, and so am I. That is why this amendment has been moved. In this connection I should like to read what was said by a gentleman who is now president of the organization which is trying to relieve famine in much of the world. The Minister of Agriculture met him in New York. I am not suggesting that we should have the same prices or the same wages that they have in the United States. We can have satisfactory conditions here if we have a right relationship between farm prices and wages. I quote from the Ottawa Citizen of May 22, 1946, as follows:

> Criticism of low prices paid to Canadian farmers for their products was expressed by UNRRA Director F. H. LaGuardia at the united nations food and agriculture conference yesterday.
> He said nations cannot get away with "squeezing their farmers" any more. Farmers must be able to earn decent incomes if nations are to prosper because farmers are industry's best customers.
>
> President Roosevelt understood this, and obtained legislation ensuring parity between agriculture and labour. This, however, has had a great bearing on Canada, resulting in disparities which must be adjusted.
> Later Mr. LaGuardia explained to this bureau that the low prices of Canadian agricultural products are a constant threat to farmers in the United States, who fear they will be undersold in their own markets.

I have here also a report issued by the bureau of agricultural economics, United States Department of Agriculture, in which is given the relative position of agriculture to-day in their economy. Taking the period prior to the last war as a basis of arriving at what they call the parity ratio, the index for 1945 is given as 116, with the present day figure being a little above that. That is what that nation has done for its agricultural industry. There has been some criticism over the fact that the agricultural organizations over there have been able to maintain a relatively better position for agriculture in their economy than what they regard as parity. I am not suggesting anything of the kind here. We want to get real parity, and we want to keep it and not let things drop back to where they were before.

Much has been said in this debate about the desirability of stabilized farm prices. The government has said it is trying to stabilize the situation and not let it get out of control. Speaker after speaker has said that we want stabilized farm prices. That all sounds very good, but it does not mean quite as much as it seems to. It is not only stabilized prices the farmer wants; it is a stabilized net income. If we stabilize farm prices and let farm costs go up, that will be the best way I know of to bring about the bankruptcy of our farmers.

It is somewhat comparable to the position of the wage earner. What he needs is not so much a higher hourly rate of pay, but a higher annual income. What he needs is not so much a stabilized hourly wage as a wage related to the cost of living. What agriculture needs is not only stabilized prices but prices that bear a right relationship to costs, particularly when they are increasing.

What are the facts with respect to this matter? The government has allowed its wage control policy to be broken time after time. I am not saying this by way of criticism at the moment, but it has happened. It has allowed the price ceilings to be broken in ways that have been outlined here by different speakers. In defence it has pointed to the danger of inflation, which is a real danger. But even while it points to the danger of inflation it continues to practice policies which increase that danger. Nor am I at the moment criticizing those policies; I am simply pointing to the fact that they do increase the danger. What are some of these government policies?

Samples of these inflationary policies are deficit financing to the extent of $2,500 million a year; large foreign loans; reduction in consumer subsidies; the elimination of certain import subsidies, and high, or if I may be allowed to say so, in some cases extravagant, government expenditures. All this has created a backlog of purchasing power which is bound to break out somewhere and is breaking out in the form of the black markets that we have to-day. There is a growing lack of respect for law, which in turn has created the need of an army of agents to try to enforce the law. All these are difficulties with which the government has to deal. What is the answer? What are some of the evidences of this backlog of purchasing power?

Let me mention a few. The average monthly deposits in banks in 1939 were $2,600 million; now they are $5,700 million. The increase in savings accounts of $5,000 or less from 1940 to 1944 has been over $600 million. Bank deposits and currency in 1939 were $224 per capita; they are now $458. Notes in the hands of the public in February, 1946, were five times as great as in the pre-war period. The total of war bonds purchased amounts to over $12,000 million. This represents withdrawals as future purchasing power equal to one and one-third times the entire national income for last year. It is this backlog of purchasing power which is sure to break out somewhere and which is the cause of the black market we have now—the worst black market, in my judgment, this nation has ever had.

What is the antidote? The government tries to hold the line. One antidote is to increase production of the products in short supply, the products which the people want, and, particularly in time of war, the production of food. The best way to encourage the production of food is to give some incentive to provide more food rather than to withdraw some of the incentives we have had. We must give the farmers a square deal: that is the whole contention of this amendment.

With respect to the subamendment, it is a legitimate subject of discussion, but, I suggest, not at the expense of discarding altogether the amendment with respect to the effect of the government's policy on food production. With parts of the subamendment I agree. It is unjustifiable to increase farmers' costs without increasing their prices. Whether it is justifiable to increase the prices of steel and farm machinery on some other grounds is a question which I expect the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Ilsley) to deal with. It has already been discussed by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Mayhew), perhaps by others. To the extent the government can show that the cost of labour or of materials entering into the production of these things makes these increases necessary, all those who believe in giving enterprise a fair deal will have to support the government's position. The government has made a pretty good defence. It has outlined how much the cost of labour entering into the production of steel and farm machinery has increased. I do not remember exactly the figures, but I believe it was indicated that the increase is much more than the increase which has been granted these industries. So far as those who are associated with me are concerned, if the government can justify those increases on the grounds I have mentioned we shall have no alternative but to support the government in this particular respect, because we cannot stand for a fair deal for the farmers alone and for labour alone, and deny fair treatment to those who invest their money in industries which produce needed goods and provide needed employment. If the government is too generous to these concerns, we shall vote against them; so long as they are only fair to industry, we shall support them, and I look forward to hearing what the Acting Prime Minister has to say on the matter.

As regards my own amendment, I believe the meaning is plain even though the wording may not be quite so clear as some think it should be. If the government's policy is discouraging the production of food in a time of famine, or even if it is failing to encourage the production of more food in times like these, the amendment deserves support. If the government's recent administration of the price ceiling and other control policies—and I am criticizing recent administration, not so much the administration prior to the last six months—is putting farmers in a less favourable position, the amendment should be supported; and to the extent that it is supported it will be a guide and in some degree an instruction to the government to increase farm prices at least to the same extent that it increases farm costs.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Seaker, I had not intended to take part in this debate, but the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) having raised questions to which I think this group should reply, I have now decided to say a few words.

I am not going to read the amendment and the subamendment: they have been read several times, and I think the house is fully conversant with them. They deal with price ceilings and the stabilization of prices.

In this very difficult time—that is, since the war began—I have tried to appreciate the position of the government. Perhaps I have succeeded in appreciating it too much. I have refrained from criticism unless I could fully justify that criticism. I have even been accused even from the government side of supporting the government too much. However,

I am not concerned about these things; I do not mind being misunderstood by others so long as I understand myself.

We have been dealing, as I said, with the government's stabilization policies. The leader of the opposition, just before he sat down, made in my opinion a most revealing statement: he said that he had been satisfied with the government's prices policy until quite recent months. I had not thought that that was so, but I take his word for it. Why is he not satisfied with it now? I will tell you why: because the clamour for the removal of controls which has come from his side of the house, and from the government side too, and from big business in this country, has compelled the government to remove controls when removal of controls was not justified, and every time you allowed prices to rise in one place you created an inequity in some other place. The leader of the opposition nods his head in assent. That is the position we are in. This group has not been advocating the removal of all controls, which would only perpetuate the difficulties and increase the inequities we have, and which, as the leader of the opposition pointed out, the farmers had during the depression years and the workers had during that same period. Those who are advocating at this stage the removal of controls and the return to the old economy are merely deluding themselves. We cannot return to the conditions of the past any more than a chick can return into the shell once it has come out of it.

The leader of the opposition last night criticized the government for the delay in proceeding with the debate on this motion, and referred to the date on which he had moved his amendment—May 6. The government has delayed the debate much longer than that, because on April 9, when a motion was made to go into supply, the leader of this group raised the question first, of the government's practice—and this is something that the official opposition should have done—of delaying the moving of the motion to go into supply until about five minutes or even two minutes to eleven, thus preventing the members of the house from taking advantage of that motion and using it for the purpose for which it was incorporated in our rules of procedure. It was intended to give the members of the opposition, who are most likely to make use of it, the opportunity to bring up grievances before supply is granted. So that from April 9 until May 6 the government prevented this motion from coming up, and consequently prevented this discussion from taking place. The leader of this group was ready to proceed with his motion, but the leader of the opposition, being in the most advantageous position, got the eye of the Speaker.

Mr. BRACKEN: Perhaps the hon. member will permit me to say that if this debate arose earlier than five minutes to eleven, on a certain day, he may not know but I know that the leader of the opposition was responsible for it.

Mr. MacINNIS: I do not know what deals the leader of the opposition may have had with the government. We did not have any.

Mr. BRACKEN: We did not have any deal, but I protested against the procedure of going into supply at five minutes to eleven.

Mr. MACKENZIE: On a point of order—

Mr. MacINNIS: We beat the hon. gentleman to it.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The leader of the opposition saw me at six o'clock on that afternoon, before adjournment; he asked what was the business at eight o'clock, and I said supply, and he immediately got up and moved the amendment at eight o'clock.

Mr. COLDWELL: It was understood the week before that we would go into supply early.

Mr. MacINNIS: I want to refer to a few things the leader of the opposition said. Speaking in the house last night he made this statement—Hansard, page 1843:

> Mr. Speaker any amendment moved to a government motion, the speech from the throne or the budget or supply is of course a lack of confidence motion. In that connection I may say that this motion was not moved with any expectation of dislodging the government or in any attempt to do so. It was moved with the intention of bringing before the house and the government and the country two major questions of public policy, which I think are very important and, with all respect, very clear in the amendment that I moved.

If the only purpose of the hon. gentleman was to bring these questions to the attention of the house, I think the usual procedure is to withdraw the amendments after debate has taken place and allow the house to go into supply. I am only pointing out to the leader of the opposition the logic of his own argument. A certain trend has been evident all through the speeches of my hon. friends to the right. Later the leader of the opposition said—Hansard, page 1846:

> I have no objection in the world to the C.C.F. bringing forward a motion such as this and discussing it on its merits. Are these increases in the prices of farm machinery and steel unjustified? On one ground I would agree that they are. They are unjustified in so far as they increase farmers' costs without increasing farmers' prices. On other grounds I leave it to the government to bring forward evidence to show that these increases were justified. It may be they can do so. I imagine they have that evidence, or they would not have put the increases into effect.

It is amazing what faith the leader of the opposition has in the government when the government is dealing with big business, and how little faith he has in the government when the government is dealing with agriculture or perhaps—although it was not mentioned—dealing with labour. The hon. gentleman chided us last night. He said: What would farmers say of people who framed an amendment which suggests that food producers are not workers? We never suggested that food producers are not workers. What we did was what he did this afternoon. He spoke of farmers and he spoke of industrial workers. We used those terms in the general sense in which they are employed in common usage. Now if the government increases the price of steel and farm implements and other factors which increase the cost of production for the farmer, we maintain that the farmer should have an increase in his prices, provided his prices were previously just and reasonable on the basis on which he was producing. But, if the farmer receives an increase in the price of farm products, that increase will raise the cost of living to industrial workers, and the lower the wage or salary the greater the increase will be. That is so because the worker spends a greater proportion of his wage or salary on food than the highest paid workers. The person receiving $700 a year, and having a wife and family to support, spends a greater proportion of the $700 on food than the person receiving $1,500 or $2,500 does. Therefore immediately you increase the cost of food you lower the standard of living of the low-income industrial workers. It is for that reason we say—and I have insisted on this all along—that the stabilization of prices has always been carried on the backs, or on the stomachs, of the low-paid workers of Canada.

The inference in the speeches made by the hon. members to my right would lead one to believe, if he did not know the difference, that we were debating a motion of want of confidence in the C.C.F. and not in the government. Last night the leader of the opposition said, as reported at page 1847 of Hansard:

> I may say to the house that at no time except the last three years has agriculture had anything like a square deal at any time since the last war.

That is some admission. But during that period we had Conservative governments and Liberal governments. During the whole of that period, on the admission of the leader of the opposition, farmers did not get a square deal. Just before that the leader of the opposition said—I am reading these in reverse—

Mr. IRVINE: That makes them logical.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is correct. The leader of the opposition said:

> About three years ago that condition was changed. I shall not go into the question of why. Perhaps rising world prices helped. An hon. member of the C.C.F. has said it was because of victories by their candidates in the west. But I have sometimes had the notion it was because in December of 1942 the official opposition took a stand for a square deal for all agriculture, as a start to raise the price of wheat from ninety cents to $1.25—which was done by the government the very next year.

The obvious question to ask at that point is why the opposition delayed so long in taking action for a square deal to the farmer. I will tell you why they have delayed so long. We will go back to beyond December 1942, when they chose my hon. friend the leader of the opposition as leader, and changed the party's name from "Conservative" to "Progressive Conservative", by the way, a contradiction in terms. In 1941 they chose a new leader in the railway committee room of this building. He was not a farmer but a leader of big business in this country. When he tried to get a seat in this house he was defeated and a C.C.F. candidate was elected in York South.

Mr. GRAYDON: He did not last long.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Where is he now?

Mr. MacINNIS: That is quite all right; the world is young.

Mr. GRAYDON: It would need to be for him.

Mr. MacINNIS: You fellows are going and we are coming.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): You have a long way to come.

Mr. MacINNIS: If there are any congratulations on the change in policy of the Progressive Conservatives as regards farmers, and on the election of a new leader, they should go to this group and to no one else.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): State the facts and let it go at that.

Mr. GRAYDON: You and the Liberals were together on that.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Fight it out over there; neither of you have a chance.

Mr. MacINNIS: That remark was not made with as much confidence as it used to be, either.

Mr. GRAYDON: They are just playing around the cemetery over there.

Mr. MACKENZIE: You are in the middle of it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Who said this was the twenty-fourth of May?

Mr. MacINNIS: I said that the trend that ran through the whole of the arguments of the Progressive Conservatives in this debate was that the Progressive Conservatives alone are interested in the farmer. The hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) took up the refrain. He said, as reported at page 1783 of Hansard:

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Which session?

Mr. MacINNIS: This session; Wednesday of this week. He said:

I think it can be safely said from the statement made by the minister to-day that the farmers are going to get more than $1.55 a bushel for their wheat. When that happens let it be perfectly clear that it was not my hon. friends to the left, the C.C.F. party, that mobilized opinion in this country; it was the leader of the opposition who throughout the last year has been endeavouring to secure a fair and reasonable share of the national income for Canadian farmers.

Just before that the hon. member for Lake Centre, in a voice husky with emotion, was telling the house of the need for increased production because of the terrible conditions in the countries of Europe; the very next moment he was chuckling with glee, not because we were going to feed the starving peoples of Europe but because the Progressive Conservative party was to get the credit from the farmers for the increase that the government was to allow in farm products. Well, may I tell my hon. friends that I am willing to let them have the credit, because they need a lot of it to balance the debit that the farmers of Canada have against them.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What does the hon. member know about the farmers?

Mr. MacINNIS: What do I know about the farmers? I was farming before you were born.

Just a few days before that, I think on Tuesday, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) paid the house the honour of a visit, and he put on a 1911 speech-making exhibition. This is what he had to say, as reported at page 1744 of Hansard:

I speak as a member of a party that is recognized in Canada to-day as being the farmers' party. We have not a farmer as our leader simply because he is a farmer; we have him as our leader because we represent the farmer's viewpoint in Canada.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Hear, hear.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. MacINNIS: Say "hear, hear" after I finish reading this. I have a little office worker, and I put her to work to find out the Progressive Conservatives who represent the farmers in this house. I took the numbers of the Progressive Conservative members in the various provinces, and this is what I found. From British Columbia there are five Progressive Conservatives, not one farmer. From Alberta there are two Progressive Conservatives, one farmer-teacher. From Saskatchewan there is one Progressive Conservative, a lawyer, and I am told a good one. From Manitoba there are two Progressive Conservatives, one farmer, and the leader of the opposition. From Ontario there are forty-eight Progressive Conservatives, fifteen farmers, ten of whom are plain farmers and five hyphenated farmers. From Quebec there is one Progressive Conservative, a lawyer. From Nova Scotia there are two Progressive Conservatives, manufacturers. From New Brunswick there are three Progressive Conservatives, one farmer. From Prince Edward Island one Progressive Conservative, a fur farmer.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): How many C.C.F. in that province?

Mr. MacINNIS: Just look over here and count the farmers for yourself.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): From Ontario?

Mr. MacINNIS: I counted them. Then if you go to the provincial legislatures you get the same picture. In British Columbia, you know, we really have no Progressive Conservatives and, for that matter, no Liberals.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend mentioned a hyphenated farmer. What is that?

Mr. MacINNIS: That is a farmer-manufacturer, a farmer-business man, a farmer-contractor, a farmer-lumberman, or someone of the kind. In British Columbia there are thirteen listed as Progressive Conservatives, but in my province we call them coalitionists. There is not one farmer among them. In Alberta there are no Progressive Conservatives listed. In Saskatchewan there have been no Conservatives, either progressive or reactionary, for ever so many years. In Manitoba there are thirteen Progressive Conservatives listed, of whom two are farmers. Well, a party with a record like that surely should be careful before it comes on the floor of this house and says it alone is representing the farmers.

Mr. GRAYDON: We want to hear about the Ontario C.C.F.

Mr. MacINNIS: Don't worry; you will hear plenty about the Ontario C.C.F.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Order. I would ask hon. members to keep order. It is not very courteous to keep interrupting the hon. gentleman, and it is definitely against the rules.

Mr. GRAYDON: But he is not counting the C.C.F. in Ontario.

Mr. MacINNIS: I do not mind the interruptions.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Your figures are not accurate.

Mr. MacINNIS: I have listened carefully to the remarks coming from all sides of the house, and I notice that on the government side most of the time was taken in comparing the cost of wiener sandwiches and haircuts in the United States and Canada. It was noticeable that there was no mention of the prices of farm products, and no mention of the wages paid in the two countries. I am not going to offer an opinion on the question whether the standard of living is higher here than in the United States, or higher in the United States than in Canada. I would be more inclined to bet on this country if I were to say anything at all, but I do not know enough about it to reach a decision. However, I am going to place on record the difference in the wages paid in some trades—and this makes a great difference if you have to pay more for your sandwiches. These figures are for the month of April, 1946:

	U.S.A. (per hour)	Canada (per hour)
Larryman, coke ovens....	1.15	.76½
Roller, bloom mill.....	2.44	1.46
Heater, bloom mill.....	2.43	1.42
Bottom maker, bloom mill	1.58	.81
Shearman, bloom mill....	1.58	.82
Manipulators, bloom mill	1.61	.91½
Stove tenders, blast furnace	1.19	.74½
Pig cast, blast furnace..	1.03	.70
Gas washer, blast furnace	1.14	.76½
General labour.....	.96½	.64½
Blacksmith	1.38	.82½-.90
Bricklayers	1.49	.90
Carpenters	1.26	.82½
Machinists	1.41	.92½
Pipefitters	1.25	.82½
Pattern maker	1.36	.90-1.00
Welders	1.31	.90

Mr. MITCHELL: Where do you get the figure of 90 cents an hour for bricklayers?

Mr. MacINNIS: These figures all have to do with the steel industry.

Mr. MITCHELL: I thought they were paid rather more than that, that is all. To finish the story, give us a comparison between the congressman in the United States and the member of parliament in Canada.

Mr. MacINNIS: I have not the figures, but my idea is that they are both overpaid.

I should like now to refer briefly to the conditions which are likely to confront the farmer in the near future, as the leader of the opposition has very well pointed out. We have to be consistent. This amendment asks for the removal of all controls on farm prices. If these controls are removed, the farmer will be able to get the high prices paid in the world market.

Mr. BRACKEN: The amendment does not ask for the removal of all farm controls.

Mr. MacINNIS: The amendment does not limit what it asks for.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Read it.

Mr. MacINNIS: I have read it. The amendment does not mean only what is contained in the wording of it; it covers what has been said by my hon. friends all during this session. On another occasion the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) said something which the other members of his party spent some considerable time trying to cover up. He said the price of eggs might go to $1 a dozen and added, "Let it go." Well, that is the attitude behind these things.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): He never said that.

Mr. MacINNIS: Well, it may have been butter; but I think he also referred to eggs.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Of course my farmer friend may not know the difference between butter and eggs.

Mr. MacINNIS: There are many new members in all sections of the house, and I suggest to them that in these difficult times through which we are passing they should get and read the report of the royal commission on price spreads in 1935. I am going to read a few very short paragraphs, the first on page 5:

> The depression has, furthermore, demonstrated that the strong and the organized are attaining an ever-increasing position of dominance in our economic life; that economic power is becoming concentrated. With this concentration, old theories of economic control are proving inadequate.

Last evening the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) said that we could not leave the law of supply and demand out of our calculations. The law of supply and demand is more and more going out of our calculations; and no matter how great the resistance may be, we are more and more coming into a controlled and planned economy. As a matter of fact that situation is so clear to all who care to see that it is no longer a question whether we are going to have capitalism or collectivism. The question is what kind of collectivism we are going to have.

An hon. MEMBER: There is only one kind.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is what the hon. member says, but I do not agree with that. Indeed, the future would be hopeless, would be dark indeed, if there were nothing confronting us except the regimentation of totalitarianism or the destroying effect of a restrictive economy. And that is what capitalism is. I do submit there is something else. I quote the following from page 6.

> Fundamentally, the problems which confronted the commission are those of a transitional economy in which simple competition still prevailed in some parts, monopoly had succeeded it in others, and monopolistic or imperfect competition characterized the rest.

I submit that since 1935 that trend has gone a long way in our economy; we are much more under the control of monopoly to-day than we ever were before.

An hon. MEMBER: Government monopoly.

Mr. MacINNIS: In Canada, as everywhere else where the government has had to come into the picture, it has come in to protect the people from irresponsible private monopoly. That has been the story throughout the world. Again, reading from page 7:

> This urge to increase sales without serious price reduction is often the explanation of the intensified competition which breeds unethical practices. It is the fierceness of the struggle, not any unusual depravity in the men concerned, which leads to the adoption of such practices. No one business man can afford to follow the dictates of his conscience and refuse to conform. If he did he would be eliminated.

That is what you have in the present system. It is a struggle for survival, not of the fittest but of the slickest and the most ruthless. Then, on another page I find this:

> It is, furthermore, a tragic delusion that the solution for these economic problems can be left to automatic forces, because the conditions which once permitted the easy and equitable operation of such forces have ceased to exist.

And then one last quotation:

> From 1929 to 1933 farm prices fell 50 per cent but the production of farm crops actually increased four per cent. This is "simple competition" with flexible prices. On the other hand, the prices of agricultural machinery and implements were allowed to fall less than 7 per cent—

That is 7 per cent as compared with 50 per cent.

> —but their production in number of physical units decreased as much as 91 per cent. This is "imperfect competition" or monopoly, with rigid prices.

In the face of that let me repeat, the trend in the direction of monopoly has not diminished; it has increased. What should we do? The other day the leader of this group asked the Minister of Labour if the government would call together representatives of businesses, of farmers and of industrial workers in an attempt to iron out some of our economic difficulties. The minister replied that he did not believe in conferences. Well, for a member of a government which does not believe in conferences, we take part in a great many.

I believe we shall have to find some other purpose, some other objective, in place of the one we lost at the conclusion of the war. Last night the leader of the opposition mentioned cost-plus contracts, and other means that were taken to speed production. I think we can do something better than that to-day. I believe we can appeal to men on a basis higher than that of mere personal gain. But before we do so we shall have to give farmers and workers the assurance that if they work hard and produce in abundance, the mere existence of that abundance is not going to be the cause of their undoing. That is something we have never been able to do.

I have faith in my fellowmen. I believe that we can appeal to them, and that motives other than those of personal gain will move them. I am willing to make an appeal to the country now on that basis. As a matter of fact it is being done in Great Britain to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. MacINNIS: I wonder if I might make one further comment.

Mr. MITCHELL: Go on.

Mr. MacINNIS: The country, the government and the people as a whole are facing difficult times. We should do everything we can to bring together all the factors engaged in production in this country. As I said before, we should try to place the picture before them so that they may see the need for greater production, and so that in the days ahead we may not lose the things for which young Canadians died.

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. I listened to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) who spoke very briefly—about an hour and a half. Then I listened to the leader of the C.C.F. from British Columbia, who spoke for fifty-two minutes. As I understand the leader of the oppostion, he believes in lifting all ceilings on farm prices. I entirely disagree with that. Then, as I say, I listened for fifty-two minutes to my good friend from Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis), and I still do not understand what he means when he talks about ceiling prices, nor do I understand the subamendment moved by his party.

My only reason for speaking is to justify my own stand, and the position I shall take in the vote. When I was elected I told my constituents that if I thought the government was wrong in a matter of policy I would vote against it. But I also told them if it was a straight vote of want of confidence I would vote with the government—and on this occasion I intend to do that.

I am even more convinced that I should vote with the government, after listening to hon. members opposite. What would happen in Canada if the leader of the opposition were to lift all price ceilings? What would happen to the people if this government were put out and the party led by the leader of the opposition were to take its place?

Mr. MacNICOL: There would be great progress in Canada.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I do not know what name the Progressive Conservative party would use, if it were in power, or under what leader it would be.

I speak briefly this afternoon, one of my reasons being that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) refused to take my advice. I speak to him—in a most kindly way, of course. When I spoke to him before he made a flippant answer on a matter of vital importance not only to British Columbia, but to all the people of Canada, and after listening to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) we realize that it is a matter of importance to the people of the whole world. What we need most in the world to-day is foodstuffs. In British Columbia, in my district and the district of the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling), we are being faced with the necessity of dumping fruits because we are not able to obtain the crates, hallocks and barrels needed for the fruit now being grown. The reasons are different from those given by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell). Apparently my services are in demand, because I got the following note,—not from the Minister of Labour:

> The Minister of Labour will see you now, and immediately you have settled the timber strike President Truman will see you in the White House.

I do not know who sent me that note. I enjoyed my last trip to Washington and I should be glad to go down again. I suggest to my hon. friend that we have plenty of troubles of our own to settle; let the United States look after theirs. I am not going to go into the timber situation to-day, in deference to my friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley), who is acting as leader of the government. I understand he wants to have this debate brought to a close and a vote taken before six o'clock; therefore I shall be brief. But I intend to have something to say about the timber situation on Monday. I have a solution to offer to the Minister of Labour with which I think the hon. member for Vancouver East will agree.

Mr. MITCHELL: Why wait until Monday?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I did not want to take up too much time to-day, but I think I will take a full forty-two minutes on Monday. To-day I want to justify my stand in connection with ceilings. To the best of my knowledge I am the only member who insisted on the ceiling being taken off the prices of strawberries and raspberries. That may seem strange action on the part of a member who disapproves the removal of ceilings from all farm products, but small fruits are in an entirely different category, since they are perishable. I approached the wartime prices and trade board and asked that the announcement of the removal of this ceiling be made by April 1 in order that the producers in the Fraser valley could order the necessary crates, hallocks and barrels for SO2 berries and other fruits. Replying to a question asked by an hon. member on the other side, the Minister of Finance said that we could not expect an industrial firm to produce at a loss. I do not know how the wartime prices and trade board can justify the stand they took in expecting the farmer to produce at a loss. Before these farmers could order the necessary crates, hallocks and barrels, they had to know whether the ceiling would be taken off, but that announcement was not made until much later. I am not going to weary the house with the dates, but that was released on the same day that I was given permission to release the information. The result is that these producers have not the necessary crates, hallocks and barrels for SO2 berries and other fruits. Some solution must be arrived at, and on Monday I hope to suggest a solution to the Minister of Labour so far as British Columbia is concerned.

Unless a solution is arrived at it will be necessary to dump these fruits instead of their being preserved to be sent to the people of starving Europe. I blame this situation on the officials of the wartime prices and trade board. As I said before, there is no practical agricultural man on that board. I was not given permission to release this information earlier because they said it would work to the detriment of the producers in being able to make a deal with the manufacturers of these supplies. I replied, "Who knows best, the producers' association or some clerk?" I will not use language such as that used by an hon. gentleman the other night, but the fact is that some of these clerks down at the wartime prices and trade board have not and never had any knowledge of small fruits. As I have said before, the sooner we put agriculture back into the hands of the Department of Agriculture, the better it will be for the producer and the consumer.

I should like to refer briefly to milk. I think the dairy producers in British Columbia will agree with me when I say that I think the government made a mistake in establishing a consumer subsidy of two cents a quart. At that time the people were prosperous; our workers were getting high wages, but now we have unemployment, our veterans are coming home from overseas, and this subsidy is to be taken off. I do not agree with the leader of the opposition that all ceiling prices should be taken off, because if that were done, things would be worse for the farmer. If a policy of subsidy payments is put into effect, then that policy should be continued while ceilings are on, and at a proper level.

I do not think the federation of agriculture will agree that the increase from twenty to thirty cents on cheese is sufficient, and the same observation would apply to the increase on milk from fifteen to twenty-three cents. I understand that a final decision has not been reached on this matter, that it is still open, and I would urge that the producers' representatives be called in and consulted. I do not want to take up any more time because as I tell my friend the Minister of Labour, I intend to take up forty-two minutes if I am permitted on Monday to explain exactly how the lumber strike in British Columbia can be settled.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Cruickshank) has warned us about what he is going to do on Monday so that we do not necessarily have to be here. I am glad to have this opportunity of saying a few words on this matter. I understand it is hoped that the debate will be concluded before the house rises at six. I shall endeavour to complete in a very few minutes what I want to say.

In the first place I am opposed to the removal of price ceilings at this time because I believe in price control. I believe that unquestionably the object of the amendment under discussion is to remove those controls. The action taken by the government has given some excuse to the opposition to come to parliament and demand that changes be made. Increases have been permitted in commodities such as steel, oil and farm implements.

The Conservative party, with "Progressive" tacked on, has moved this amendment:

> This house is of the opinion that the government's price ceiling policies with respect to farm products are discouraging production of needed food and imposing on the food producers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

To me that means only one thing—the intention to remove all price controls from agricultural products. If that was not what the opposition meant, then they should have said this:

> This house is of the opinion that the government's price ceiling policies with respect to farm machinery are discouraging production of needed food and imposing on the food producers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

That would have made it quite clear that what the opposition wanted to do was to increase farm prices to equal the increase in the production cost occasioned by the increase in the prices of farm implements.

Mr. BRACKEN: That was the intention of the amendment.

Mr. IRVINE: If that was the intention of the amendment, then I think it was ambiguously worded. I do not question the word of my hon. friend, and I have no doubt that was his intention, but it is unfortunate he failed to convey his intention to those whom he is leading.

In the course of his speech the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) was asked this direct question by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley): "Is it not the announced policy of the Progressive party to remove the ceiling from prices of farm products?"

Mr. ILSLEY: "Progressive Conservative party."

Mr. IRVINE: What did I say?

Mr. ILSLEY: "Progressive".

Mr. IRVINE: Well, "progressively" Conservative party. Perhaps I had better quote Hansard, page 1785:

> Mr. Ilsley: Is it not the announced policy of the Progressive Conservative party to remove the ceiling from prices of farm products?

That was the question of the Minister of Finance. The reply of the hon. member for Lake Centre was this:

> Mr. Diefenbaker: There is no argument about that.

That is settled so far as our party is concerned; that is beyond all cavil. "I am speaking", says he, "about the entire ceiling." We do not want to remove the entire ceiling, we just want to remove the ceiling on the price of farm products. That in effect is the statement of one of the most effective debaters and supporters of the hon. gentleman who moved this amendment. So I think it is unfortunate that, while his intention was, as he says, to achieve something far different from that which is stated in the amendment, his party following was not informed of the fact.

The government started all this fuss by permitting the increase of prices on steel and, particularly, on farm implements. The government has told us that careful investigation was made and that it was discovered that sufficient profits could not be made by those industries unless this increase was given. I pointed out when we were discussing that particular increase, and others have said pretty much the same thing, that an increase of price of one commodity would go right down through the whole economy of the state. Already that is beginning to be felt. Farmers, wage earners and people on fixed incomes will be particularly affected by the alteration of any important commodity price. Although I believe in price control, while I am not saying there should be no alteration in it at any time for the purpose of maintaining the balance—everybody understands that that is implied in price control—I suggest that before the government granted an increase of prices to the industries I have mentioned they should have caused a survey to be taken of the wage earners' incomes and standards of living as compared with, say, the standards of living of those who are running the implement manufacturing business and the manufacturers of steel.

I am not going to quote figures at this time, but those who have studied this question will admit that the average income of the wage earners and the farmers of this country is far below that which has been found to be necessary to provide a reasonably decent standard of living. If anyone disputes that statement I would refer him to Doctor Marsh's report, which was published not very long ago, and I think it will be also agreed that since the publication of his report standards of living have not risen but have rather been lowered, because prices have risen where wages have not been correspondingly increased. Even without the increase which was granted to manufacturers of agricultural implements these people would stand a far better chance of making a very good profit than the average working man and the average farmer of Canada stands to make a fair living. Now that the increase has been granted of course the fat is in the fire; we shall have to go on increasing prices and wages until we meet ourselves coming back like the hon. member who has recently left the chamber, who spoke yesterday and who goes round in circles so much.

I would not like to be a party to the removal of price control. The amendment moved by the leader of the opposition means only one thing, the removal of price control. I want, if possible, to use my vote in such a way as to increase farm prices and wages to equal the increases already made in other commodities which enter into their costs of living and of production, but I want at the same time to support adequate price control. What the government should have done, rather than increase prices, was to take over the manufacture of farm implements, or alternatively to make it possible for the agricultural industry to get control of this manufacturing industry on a cooperative basis and produce its own implements at cost. I do not believe that the industry as it now stands is producing sufficient implements to meet the needs of agriculture. When these things happened during the war the government knew what to do and stepped in and did it. It produced the goods and won the war. Now it is charged with winning the peace. We need goods now in peace time just as badly as we did during the war, and the government is hoping by raising these prices a little to do the job, without recognizing that its action imposes a tremendous burden on the great masses of the people. I suggest then that instead of having done this they should have taken over the industry and operated it as a government institution, and then if there was a loss it would be borne by all the people of Canada rather than be placed upon the backs of agriculture. Better still, I think, it should have taken the advice of the agriculture committee in its report as contained in the journals of the house for 1937:

34. That the companies themselves—

Speaking of the implement companies.

—should make every effort to reduce these costs or farmers should be encouraged to organize for the cooperative distribution and servicing of farm implements.

I hope that the government will take notice of that suggestion and also remember that it is not merely my suggestion but the recommendation of a committee of this house, and will make it possible for the industry to be financed for the farmers and placed in their hands, in order that they may be permitted to have control, to some extent at least, of some of the costs which enter into their production. If the controls were all removed from farm prices, as has been suggested specifically by hon. members speaking for the Progressive Conservative party, it would commit agriculture to the mercy of open market operations. We have a long experience of that, and the farmers have not been satisfied with it.

Every member in this house knows that when the farmer was on the free private enterprise basis he had no chance because he happened to be the one man in the country who was not able to make his own prices, to add costs and profit to the price of his commodities, and the only organization that can make prices for the farmer is the government. The government for the past few years has been making prices for the farmer, and during that period the farmers have been better off than perhaps they have ever been in their history. That is now being forgotten. The government itself is weakening somewhat on the question of the control of prices.

In the old days the Conservatives and Liberals did the same thing, though they professed to believe differently. We all know what happened in the old days of the tariff debates. The Conservatives wanted to raise the tariff and the Liberals did not want it raised, but the Liberals usually did the raising and the Conservatives lowered it. Now the Conservatives openly wish to remove price ceilings, while the Liberals say they want to have the ceilings still there, and yet they proceed to remove them. That is the position as I see it.

It may be popular to advocate the removal of farm price ceilings at the moment. While there is no doubt that if the controls were removed, the price of wheat and prices of other farm products would rise rapidly for a time, in the long-range view that would be a disastrous policy to follow. Incidentally, it is being adopted by the government itself unwittingly. But just as surely as other commodity prices have been raised, so surely will the farmers demand an increase and there will be no excuse for not giving it to them. It will have to be given; the same will be true of labour, and those of us who try to hold on to price controls will have to throw in our lot with the underdog in demanding a corresponding rise in his income.

I wish to maintain price controls. I want wages and farm incomes increased so that the standard of living of those people will be equal to that of the manufacturers who received 12½ per cent increase. The official opposition, as has been noted already, made their chief attack on the C.C.F. Particularly was the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) unfair when he attacked the leader of the C.C.F. in the following words, as reported at page 1781 of Hansard:

> It is far from my wish to contravene the rules of the house, and therefore I will put it this way. The view of the leader of the C.C.F., very clearly expressed on different occasions, has been that the C.C.F. party supports the government in its stand that there shall be no increase in the prices of farm products in this country.

I challenge the hon. gentleman to find a single sentence in any speech ever delivered by the leader of my party or by anyone else in that party which would justify any such statement.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: If the hon. member will permit me I will read the section.

Mr. IRVINE: I should like to hear it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: At page 319 of Hansard I quote the following:

> Mr. Coldwell: I am rising because I want to make it very clear that we are not joining them in the propaganda to get rid of all price controls including the controls on the prices of farm produce.

Mr. COLDWELL: Now read the next sentence.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Very well:

> In order to show that I am not saying this only this afternoon I should like to refer to the speech I made in this house on March 18.

And so on.

Mr. IRVINE: Go on.

Mr. COLDWELL: I know what I said. I did not leave it there.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I was asked to produce the proof.

Mr. IRVINE: Of course. Now go ahead.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, at this particular point a definite statement was made by the hon. gentleman, the leader of the C.C.F. party, and while he certainly stated differently to-day, those are his words at page 319.

Mr. COLDWELL: The hon. gentleman will find that in the next sentence or two I suggested that price adjustments might be necessary and that all parties concerned should be called in in order to make those adjustments equitable.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. IRVINE: I think I have afforded hon. gentlemen a good deal of my time. I knew perfectly well, when I threw out the challenge, that the hon. gentleman could not sustain his position. Even if we take the words which he has read, that does not say anything of the sort he suggests; it does not mean anything of the sort; and when he drew the inference he did, it was absolutely unfair. I do not know whether I should say it was deliberate or not. I hope not; I have great respect for the hon. gentleman and I do not think he would be deliberately unfair.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: In connection with the challenge, I should also like to read what the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bentley) said.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would point out to the hon. gentleman that when a member has the floor he should not be interrupted without his permission.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I realize that what you say is correct, but the hon. gentleman challenged me to point to particular paragraphs, and naturally, being challenged, I should be permitted to point out that the hon. member for Swift Current made his position perfectly clear at page 867 of Hansard when he used these words:

> As was pointed out by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), the leader of this group, we have supported the government's policy of control, even though there has been some discontent in rural constituencies of the west, as expressed to us in letters. We supported the price ceiling of $1.55 for wheat on the ground of our belief that it was necessary for the reconstruction of the world, for the feeding of its peoples, and to make it possible for Great Britain and other countries to have sufficient agricultural products without suffering too heavily the penalties of war.

Mr. COLDWELL: Read the next sentence.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: To continue:

> If the present increase in farm implements is allowed to continue, any support I have given to a programme of that kind will have to be withdrawn, and I shall have to join forces with those who are demanding a substantial increase in the price of farm products.

Mr. MACKENZIE: This discussion is entirely irrelevant, Mr. Speaker, but it exemplifies the complete confusion in which both the Progressive Conservative and the C.C.F. parties find themselves.

Mr. IRVINE: Now the Minister of Veterans Affairs apparently himself is confused. In reference to this alleged proof that we have been given, I suggest that the hon. gentleman has proved that what I said is absolutely true. Not a single word of what he read would justify the statement which he made. I suggest, sir, that the attack was centred on this party because it has been outspoken in favour of a planned economy and control of prices.

The opposition are not so much afraid of the government maintaining controls; but they would be very much afraid if the C.C.F. got into power, because they know that we would stand for planned economy, and so they centred their attack on us. Then they say that they are the party of the farmers. That is really an amusing statement, coming as it does from the Conservative party. I am afraid that it needs more than the Progressive appendage to guarantee that. One of the very principles of conservatism is that there are certain things that always remain the same—particularly the Conservative party. That being so, it has a long history which accounts for what it is now. It can never be other than what it is. It cannot cut itself away from its past. It is very much like this; I am not saying it with any implications at all to any hon. member or to anybody in this house. You can call a donkey "Bessie", but it would not shorten its ears or weaken its kick or make it a little bit more human than it was before. You can call the Conservative party "progressive", but the Conservative party can never get away from its past. Its whole history has been not that it was the friend of the farmers, but the very reverse. The entire policy advocated by the Conservative party and shouldered on the people of Canada ever since confederation, the policy of tariffs shows that it is anti-farmer. That is the history of the Conservative party, and they will not be able to get away with calling themselves a farmers' party until they have done something, and not merely talked about stopping someone else from doing something.

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. FULTON: I am perfectly aware that the house wishes to take a vote this afternoon, and I shall try to say what I have to say within the limit of five minutes, but I will not guarantee it.

I might point out that for the last few minutes we have heard a great deal of abuse of this party because of the stand it has taken, a stand in favour of criticizing the government for its present policy of price control, for one reason, namely, because the world is faced with famine. However much hon. members may care to disagree with the method we advocate of combating that condition, I submit they cannot question the fact that we are sincere. We advocate it because we want to produce food. We say that controls were imposed previously to impede production. We now advocate the removal of the price ceiling on farm products in order to increase production to prevent famine.

The last few speeches of the C.C.F. group all attacked the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) who, I realize, is quite capable of taking care of himself, but he is precluded from speaking again in this debate. In the few remarks I have to make I wish to put on the record statements made by a great C.C.F. authority which I think hon. members will agree is entirely at variance with what they have been saying this afternoon. I shall not go into details of what the hon. members of the C.C.F. party have said, but I would just remind the house that the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) criticized the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) for advocating the removal of price ceilings. The hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine) made a violent attack on the hon. member for Lake Centre because he said that the hon. member for Lake Centre accused the leader of the C.C.F. party of not favouring an increase in farm prices, and yet the hon. member for Cariboo said—and I took down his words —"I am opposed to the removal of price ceilings." Then again he said: "To remove farm price ceilings would be a disastrous policy in the long run." If that is not a policy in favour of the maintenance of the present price ceilings on agriculture, I am at a loss to understand the meaning of the words.

In the introduction to his remarks last night, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) used words to this effect, that he had stood solidly behind the proposition that the price ceilings must be maintained. That is the stand which we are attacking, and when we find it echoed by the members of the C.C.F. party we join in attacks on them as well as on the government.

I have said that I wanted to place on the record a statement by a high authority of the C.C.F. party which is entirely at variance with the stand taken by this party in this house this afternoon and on other occasions. Before I do so, may I say that last night I was glad to hear the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. McCullough) coupling the name of this authority with the name of the leader of the party in this house as authorities. The words to which I refer are taken from the Ottawa Evening Journal of April 25, and were spoken by an authority of the C.C.F.

Mr. COLDWELL: Name him please.

Mr. FULTON: He said:

If the dominion government—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Who is he?

Mr. FULTON: Perhaps hon. members will allow me to read the words first; then they may not be so anxious to know who the authority is, but I shall be glad to tell them. I continue:

If the dominion government were to make a full-scale retreat from the price ceilings, rather than backing away from them piecemeal, it wouldn't be so bad.

If the lid were taken off altogether, farm produce would quickly find its own price level.

Hon. members of the C.C.F. party have been asking who the authority is. The authority, Mr. Speaker, is Mr. Thomas Douglas, Premier of Saskatchewan. He said this in an interview with the Journal on April 25.

Mr. COLDWELL: Why pick out two sentences?

Mr. FULTON: The point I would make is that Mr. Douglas is the premier of a province and the leader of a government. He has knowledge of the problems of government. Therefore Mr. Douglas has to face realities, and is much more inclined to speak realities than the members of the party to my left.

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): Before I speak in the debate, may I say that it might meet the convenience of the house if we tried to finish up some time between six and seven o'clock. After these divisions take place it will be necessary for me to ask the house for interim supply, and I am sure that not all of that can be done—although I do not intend to make a lengthy speech—before six o'clock. I am afraid that I cannot finish my speech and procure interim supply in the next half hour. Notes have been sent to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) and to the other parties, and I understand they have no objection. With the consent of the house, if I can get it, I move:

That Mr. Speaker shall not leave the chair at six o'clock to-day.

The intention would be not to sit to-night if we go past six o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. ILSLEY: We have had a long debate on the amendment of the leader of the opposition, which reads as follows:

This house is of the opinion that the government's price ceiling policies with respect to farm products are discouraging production of needed food and imposing on the food producers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

Also the amendment to the amendment, moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum):

This house is of the opinion that the government's policies of permitting recent unjustifiable increases in the prices of farm machinery and of steel have resulted in imposing on food producers and workers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

There has been much attack and cross-attack between the members of the Progressive Conservative party and the members of the C.C.F., and naturally there has been much attack upon the government by the members of both parties. This afternoon I should like to speak rather seriously, and without attempting to reply to attacks, of a political character at least, that have been made upon the government, but in defence of the government's price stabilization policy. Most of the speeches in this debate have been against the government, though there have been some excellent speeches from this side of the house in defence of the policies we are following.

We instituted the price ceiling policy in the fall of 1941, and continued that policy with great rigidity until recently in respect of everything except farm prices and wages, and perhaps fish and products of that kind. The figures I used in speaking to the house in a previous debate on farm implement prices indicate that the treatment which was accorded between 1941 and 1946 to what is called industry was entirely different from the treatment accorded to the primary producers and the wage-earners of this country. The number of wage increases that have been allowed; the extent of the wage increase that have been allowed; the number of price rises and subsidy payments which have been used to increase the returns to primary producers, have been very extensive and very great. I put some of those figures on record when I spoke to the house on that other occasion. The net result of the figures is that the level of farm prices in Canada, including subsidies, has risen 44 per cent since the basic period in the fall of 1941, not including the wheat participation certificates which would add several more units per cent. But with regard to the great range of commodities in this country, the price ceiling has been rigidly maintained. I believe that was the right policy to follow. It was a policy followed in the face of great pressure and much opposition; nevertheless it was a policy which by ingenuity and firmness we were able to follow during those years without putting people out of business.

When I say there was rigidity, there was not complete rigidity. There were price increases, some of them on unimportant products and some on more important products, during the years. But we finally came to the time when more flexibility had to be introduced. Conditions changed to such an extent, with the disappearance of war business and when the cumulative effect of wage and price increases, which entered into costs, began to be felt, that it was entirely unreasonable to expect certain industrial producers to carry on, because they would be obliged to carry on at a loss. I understand that the attitude of the Progressive Conservative party—and I am not speaking technically now; I am not speaking to the language of the amendment—has been made abundantly clear in this debate, as well as outside this house; and I believe that the policy of the Progressive Conservative party is the complete removal of ceilings on the prices of farm products. Am I correct?

Mr. BRACKEN: May I comment there?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. BRACKEN: I may say to the Acting Prime Minister that, while that is the objective of the party, it is not a part of this resolution.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is exactly what I said. That is the objective of the party and the policy of the party: the immediate removal of all ceilings on farm products. Of course, if that policy were put into effect all ceilings would go almost immediately.

Mr. BRACKEN: With all respect, the minister is not speaking of this resolution.

Mr. ILSLEY: Well, I do not think we can take a legalistic view of the resolution, though I think the leader of the opposition did.

Mr. BRACKEN: Just take a realistic view of what the amendment actually says.

Mr. ILSLEY: The policy is clear, and it has been reiterated in this debate. Apart altogether from the resolution, I wish to point out to the house and to the people of Canada the disastrous consequences of implementing a policy calling for the complete removal of the ceiling on prices of farm products. Then the cost of living at once takes a great rise, with this condition of world shortage and national shortage in so many foods. When that rise in the cost of living takes place the effect on wages is immediate and violent. The effect on prices of manufactured goods is immediate and violent, leading at once to further increases in wages and further increases in prices of farm products. So that the policy of this government is not the removal of the ceilings on all farm products. It is the control of prices of farm products, which we will try to operate as fairly as possible in a period of very great difficulty.

If it had been possible for us to refrain from making any changes whatever in wages, in prices of industrial products and in prices of farm products, despite the rigidity of that position it would have been perhaps the easiest to take. But, as I say, you come to a place in this operation when war industry disappears; when the effects of all these increases in prices through the years begin to take sharp effect; when you have to make adjustments upward, and then we enter into the most difficult phase of price control operations. As I understand the position of the C.C.F., in theory it is not very much different from the position of the government in regard to price control, with one or two qualifications.

Mr. IRVINE: Improvements.

Mr. ILSLEY: I cannot agree that they are improvements. In the early part of the debate, when I listened to the leader of the C.C.F., I thought that he was in favour of continuing rigidity; that if you back up here, you must back up somewhere else, so that we should not back up at all. I thought that was the position. But, of course, after some prodding from members of the Progressive Conservative party, the C.C.F. speakers were driven to the point of saying that they would like to see some prices go up, that there had to be an orderly upward adjustment of prices, and so on, but that it must be done on what was called a scientific basis.

Mr. COLDWELL: I said that on March 27. I have my speech before me.

Mr. ILSLEY: Then I am wrong in my interpretation of the attitude which I thought was the initial attitude of C.C.F. speakers in the debate. It will be understood that I am not trying to make political gain against them; I am just trying to clarify the situation. In theory, their position is not very different from that of the government with regard to this matter. They say that there must be other adjustments, and that the process, while a very difficult one to operate equitably, is a process which must go on.

But if I understand the speeches which C.C.F. members have made I do think this—and it is not a point which has been made very clear in the debate—that they believe in permanent price control. That is, they believe that it is not something which we should go out of, but rather that it is something incidental to a planned economy, that if we do not have permanent price control certain parts of the community will suffer and that therefore we should institute a permanent policy of price control.

That is constitutionally impossible, whether it is economically possible, or not. Having had some experience with provincial premiers, I know perfectly well it would be impossible to get an amendment to the constitution which would permit our embarking upon a policy of indefinite price control. Holding the views I do, I do not think it would be economically justifiable. I know, from the experience I have had as the minister under whom the wartime prices and trade board operates, it is just agony of the most acute kind, where we go from a period of war; during which a great many people say to the government, "Whatever you say we will do, because we are at war", to a period when each man is aggressively asserting his own individuality. I know it is just about impossible for any central authority to exercise any logical and consistent price control over a long period of time.

Therefore the government has announced a policy of progressive decontrol, and in recent months some of the ceilings have been taken off entirely. Usually in a case where an apparent balance has been struck between demand and supply, or a position has been arrived at which appears to be reasonably permanent, the government, in such instances, has taken ceilings off entirely. In other cases the ceilings have been adjusted.

The amendments of both the C.C.F. and the Progressive Conservative party condemn the government for having been unfair to agriculture, either in its policy or in its administration of policies. I cannot admit that that has been so. I can say to the house that certainly we tried not to be unfair to agriculture. One can understand that when the government is putting ceilings on this, that and the other thing, endless arguments can be developed as to whether one is fair or not. People in this world have a habit of seeing things their own way, and opinions differ as to what is fair to oneself. But, by the ordinary tests that can be applied, I suggest that the administration of our stabilization policy has been fair to agriculture.

For one thing, one might take the difference between the relationship of prices of farm products in 1945 and prices of fully and chiefly manufactured goods. I have before me a chart which I believe would be of interest to the house. That chart shows that the relationship of prices of farm products to prices of manufactured goods in 1945 was more favourable to the farmer than in any other year in the past fifty-six years, with the exception of one year, 1917, during the first world war. That is to say, the price level of farm products is farther above the price level of fully and chiefly manufactured goods than it has ever been since 1890 with, as I say, the exception of the year 1917. If we take the test of parity, again I would say that everyone has a different definition. However, let us take the period 1926-29 as the basis of parity, a period which apparently is regarded as being a favourable one for the farmers, and which is usually referred to as the basis of parity. Official figures from the bureau of statistics show that in March, 1946, the average wholesale prices of Canadian farm products was six per cent higher than the average of 1926-29, and that is without making any allowance for wheat participation payments. I am informed that if wheat participation payments were added, instead of being six per cent the figure would be something like ten per cent. Over the same period the official index of prices of commodities and services, including labour used by the farmers had, according to the bureau of statistics, increased by seven per cent. That is, the actual level of farm prices is slightly higher to-day than in 1926-29, and the relationship between prices of goods farmers sell, and prices of goods and services farmers buy is almost identical with that which prevailed in the former period of prosperity, the advantage being in favour of the farm prices. I have taken this period because it is the one frequently quoted in respect of parity.

The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) rather confirmed what I am saying on this point. He said—and very fairly, I thought —that up until six months ago, for the period up to and before that for some time, the relationship was reasonably satisfactory between farm prices and other prices.

Mr. BRACKEN: Oh, well, only for the last three years.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, for the last three years, since 1943.

Mr. BRACKEN: And on this technical definition of parity, which I do not accept.

Mr. ILSLEY: At any rate, what the leader of the opposition said then, and what he says now confirms what I am saying. But he bases his arguments upon developments in the last few months. I have not had an opportunity of examining the figures which he gave with regard to the movement of wholesale or farm prices since that time, because those figures were used for the first time this afternoon. But the figures which he gave show that there had been an irregular movement of wholesale prices which, on balance, is upward. I suppose those were the wholesale prices of fully and chiefly manufactured goods and that is why there had been an irregular movement.

Mr. BRACKEN: It was regular except for one month.

Mr. ILSLEY: It went up; it went down; then it went up and it is higher than it was.

Mr. BRACKEN: It started at 2·3 and went to 11.

Mr. ILSLEY: I still submit that what I say is correct, that there has been an irregular upward movement during the last few months. The leader of the opposition also gave the increases in farm prices during the last few months. He gave quite a list of the adjustments that have been made and one would have to see how those compared—

Mr. BRACKEN: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. ILSLEY: Would not it be just as well to let me finish? You have no idea how much I have listened to this week.

Mr. BRACKEN: I am listening to you and I would not have the Acting Prime Minister say that these recent increases amounted to very much.

Mr. ILSLEY: We shall never get anywhere if we are going to argue every little point. The leader of the opposition is basing his whole argument, not upon the price stabilization policy, not upon what has happened year after year and year after year, but upon what has happened in the last two or three months, since the first of the year. I have to take these figures and see whether they amount to anything. I have to balance the adjustment in farm prices against these others, and I have to see what is the trend and what are the prospects of there being further irregularities in these movements.

I am not putting forward these arguments with a view to saying that the price relationship is perfect or anything like that. I am not saying that total farm cash income while very high by any standards is too high. All I am saying is that we are confronted with an amendment, and I want hon. members, on this side of the house particularly, to understand that our price policy is being attacked vigorously by both oppositions in this house and that the administration of that price policy is being attacked vigorously by all oppositions in this house. It is being attacked on the ground that the administration has disregarded the farmer and has been unfair to agriculture.

An hon. MEMBER: And to the worker.

Mr. ILSLEY: From the C.C.F., "the worker". It is said that it has been unfair to the farmer and the worker, but the official opposition has contended mainly for the farmer. I am saying that when you apply some of these tests that are about the most valid tests that you can apply it will be seen that the government through the wartime prices and trade board, and the government itself by its subsidy policy, has tried very hard and has succeeded reasonably well in maintaining a relationship which, on the whole, is favourable to agriculture.

Of course one of the main items of attack in this debate has been the attack on the price adjustment which was authorized for agricultural implements. There has been a large amount of discussion on that and it will be hard to answer some of the things that have been said. It will be impossible for me to answer them fully because a large number of speeches have been made and quite technical arguments have been advanced. I have already said a great deal of what I propose to say now about these adjustments.

To begin with, what was done by the wartime prices and trade board? One obvious thing should be pointed out, that the wartime prices and trade board did not order up these prices. All the wartime prices and trade board did was to say that if the companies put them up, they could not put them up more than 12½ per cent at retail. It was not a case of putting up these prices; it was a case of saying that they could put them up only so much.

An hon. MEMBER: That was plenty.

Mr. ILSLEY: Just let me talk now. I am not very good at repartee and it throws me off if there are too many interruptions. I should like to go along without any interruption. When I spoke to this house before, I said that I had confidence in the price-fixing agency we have in this country. During the debate this week I have heard one speaker after another attack the wartime prices and trade board on one ground and another, and upon my word one would have thought that we had in Canada a price control agency that was a bad one, that was something we should be ashamed of. I am only saying what people everywhere are saying, and perhaps it is going a little too far for me to assert dogmatically that we have the best price control agency in the world. Compared with any price control agency that one hears about in any other country, the price control agency in the Dominion of Canada is recognized within this country and out of this country as being as conscientious, as competent, as resolute and as efficient as any body could be. I must shout that if necessary to the people and to this house because it is true that the price control agency we have in this country is a good price control agency.

Mr. REID: That cannot be refuted.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. ILSLEY: It is a little hard for me to take these attacks upon Mr. Gordon. It is within the privileges of hon. members to make them, but it is within my right to defend the wartime prices and trade board, and I hereby do so to the utmost of my ability. The wartime prices and trade board did not act speedily or hastily in this matter. They received applications from the implement companies as early as January for an increase in prices on the ground that with the loss of their war business, with the smaller volume that they would have thereby and with the increases in costs—some of them substantial—they were getting to a place in 1946 when it would be virtually impossible for them to do business if they were not permitted to advance their prices.

They advanced figures, but some of the critics have said that those were merely figures given by the companies and they would not be convinced anyway, that they ought to be investigated. Those figures were investigated as far as it was practical for an official agency to investigate figures. After a protracted investigation, the wartime prices and trade board came to the conclusion that ceilings should be lifted to this extent if we were to have production in this country this year. The production of agricultural implements in this country this year is very important.

Mr. COLDWELL: Did the wartime prices and trade board know of the stock bonus that was given to the officials?

Mr. ILSLEY: No, they did not. I made inquiries about that and I am glad the leader of the C.C.F. brought the matter up. They did not know about that, but I do not see what relevancy it has. The government knew nothing about it and the wartime prices and trade board knew nothing about it. The policy of distributing stock among employees is not an unusual policy. I understand it has been done before by implement companies and on some occasions the stock has gone down. In this case the stock went up and then came down slightly, if I understand correctly the record of that stock. The board did not consider it was part of their duty to go into the valuation that a speculative public might put upon common stocks because anything might happen to-day to common stocks, and there are fluctuations in a great many common stocks. The wartime prices and trade board kept their minds on what they considered were the essentials of the situation.

By the way, I wish to say that when I interjected the other day that there was distribution to wage-earners I was wrong about that; it was to quite a number of salaried employees, not to wage-earners. But that again is irrelevant if my view of the situation is correct.

The basic standard in considering the case for a price increase is what is called financial need, based on the over-all financial position of the producer concerned. If an industry or firm can show that it is getting or is likely to get in the near future an unreasonably low return or no return on its operations it has a case for a price adjustment. Under our economic system, industrialists, merchants and farmers require reasonable incentives if we are to get a high level of production and employment. It has never been part of the stabilization policy to ask producers to work at a loss or at an unreasonably low return. The prices board has squeezed margins in many, many cases, but there comes a time when it is unreasonable to ask particular producers to absorb any further squeeze, and when to attempt to do so might have unfavourable effects on production.

The implement companies in this case were able to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the board that without some relief their profits would be unreasonably low and, in the case of some companies, non-existent in 1946; not their profits from one particular employment or type of business, but the profits on the total of their business, including their export business, which is more profitable than their domestic business owing to the price control here in Canada. That is why they received an adjustment, because they could show that their financial position justified some relief. They did not get the relief by just asking for it. They had to produce their figures in great detail; they had to answer a great variety of questions put to them by prices board officials, the sort of detailed questions which some hon. members have been raising. Investigation of their position took a considerable length of time and a great deal of work. They applied in January. The adjustment was not decided until April.

Having decided that some relief was necessary, the board had to decide how much. After making a number estimates about volume and costs in 1946, the board came to an adjustment which it estimated would permit the companies to make in 1946 an average of 70 per cent of their approved standard profits.

I want to explain what these standard profits are. In the case of a company that applies to the board of referees, these profits are fixed by the board, under the Excess Profits Tax Act, according to the principles laid down in that act, and I have never heard any criticism of the board of referees on the ground that it was too generous in its fixing of standard profits. I have heard quite a lot of criticism on the other side, that it was unfair to these companies and was squeezing excess profits out of them by fixing too low a standard of profits. The board estimated on the basis of this 12½ per cent increase, if they took advantage of it, they would, in 1946, make 70 per cent of their approved standard profits.

The estimates the board used in regard to the volume of business they would do and the costs which they would incur in 1946 appear to have been too optimistic, for two or three reasons. In the first place, the effects of the steel and coal strikes in the United States on the quantity of materials and components likely to be available are serious, and yesterday we had this railway strike in the United States. These contingencies could not have been foreseen. But all these things are upsetting this calculation and making it likely that the volume of business done by the implement companies in Canada in 1946 will not be as great as estimated by the board. The board made its award on the basis of the volume being double the average volume of 1936-39, and it may fall considerably below that; if it does, of course the costs per unit go up proportionately.

Moreover, the estimate of costs did not take into account the probability that prices of United States components will increase in line with the recent authorized increase in prices of finished machinery in that country. In the United States, it must be borne in mind, shortly after the increase was permitted in the selling price in Canada an increase was permitted in the selling price in the United States which gave the manufacturer, if it were taken advantage of, something over ten per cent increase. But, prior to that, manufacturers in the United States had had several increases; in fact the recent increase, together with the previous increases, were given by the hon. member for Victoria, British Columbia (Mr. Mayhew) in his speech to the house, as somewhere between 17 and 22 per cent since 1941, during which time we held our prices absolutely rigid. Not only is that so, but the office of price administration in the United States is authorizing from time to time new price increases on particular implements for particular companies in that country. I want to bring that to the attention of the house because, while conditions are not the same in Canada as in the United States, it lends quite a lot of weight to the reasonableness of the action of Canada, which never allowed a price increase at all from 1941 down to 1946 for farm implements, when in the United States they have to allow a still further increase in the price of farm implements although several had already been granted in the intervening period.

In consequence, it is clear that the companies will find it difficult to achieve the level of earnings which the board regarded as reasonable when it authorized the 12½ per cent price adjustment on Canadian-made implements sold in Canada.

On the question of increases in costs, we have had a lot of interesting speeches. It was pointed out first by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle that when I said that wages in this industry had increased 28½ per cent, factory overhead had increased 23 per cent and the cost of materials had increased 20 per cent, I was not saying anything very important, because those percentages applied to only a small part of the retail price, and that the figure of percentage of direct labour employed in the manufacture of implements was given as very small. It is small in the farm implement industry. But direct labour is only part of the labour which enters into the cost of implements. The item of factory overhead, if I remember correctly, includes 70 per cent labour—what they call indirect labour—and while it is not a logical or a valid deduction to say that, because wages have gone up 28½ per cent, or in the case of Massey-Harris, 33 per cent, according to the figures I gave the house before, they can reasonably expect the cost of their implements to go up that much; while that must be conceded, nevertheless there is a substantial increase in over-all costs after allowing for the reduction in selling costs. The hon. member for Wood Mountain (Mr. Argue) seemed to assume that there had been a 40 per cent reduction of selling costs since 1941. There has been only a 20 per cent reduction of selling costs since 1941; and 40 per cent reduction has been since the 1936-39 period, and if the hon. gentleman will look at the speech of the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.), he will see that that is the case.

Mr. ARGUE: I would not wish to interrupt the minister, but I did not assume that it was from 1941 to 1945; I took the statement of the parliamentary assistant that it was a 40 per cent reduction from 1936.

Mr. ILSLEY: I thought on reading the hon. gentleman's speech that he did assume as I said, but if he did not, well and good.

I asked the wartime prices and trade board to go over the matter of increase in costs and arrive at a figure of increased costs of production of these implements as a whole, not of any particular implement; and after going into the matter very carefully they have advised me that the actual net increase in total costs as a percentage of the retail price has been approximately 15 per cent since 1941.

The hon. member for Wood Mountain got a considerably lower figure than that, but the figure arrived at by the wartime prices and trade board is an increase in total costs as a percentage of the retail price of approximately 15 per cent.

But that is only part of the story. Since then, the earnings of the companies have been adversely affected by the cancellation of war contracts. Indeed, because of the removal of war business, their total sales volume will be smaller in 1946 than in 1945. Some of the facilities used for war production are not suitable for the manufacture of implements and, in addition, shortages of materials are limiting the extent of expansion in implement output. The price adjustment which was authorized was based on all the relevant considerations, not on the position concerning one implement or group of implements or type of business. Costs were carefully examined. Estimated volume was studied. The proportion of export business was considered. All these factors and others entered into the decision. I cannot say that the increase on a given particular implement is the exact amount which theoretically might have been applied on that implement. The board simply could not have adjusted prices in that sort of detail. It had to look at the over-all position and to make the smallest practicable adjustment that was appropriate to the over-all position. That is precisely what the board did.

As I said at the beginning, we did not want to do this. We knew it was not exactly the sort of action that was calculated to add popularity to the government—increasing the price of farm implements. But one has to be fair about these matters. One has to be fair to industry as well as to agriculture. We cannot say that we are the party of any particular section of the community, as the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) said the other night. We have to look at the situation from the point of view of the people as a whole, and we must therefore be fair to agriculture, to labour and also to business.

I am satisfied that this adjustment which was made was fair, that it was necessary, unless we were to treat the agricultural implement industry, just because it was the agricultural implement industry, on a basis different from that on which we treat all other industries.

I do not think I have very much more to say. As I said at the opening of my remarks, I have no apologies whatever to make for the wartime prices and trade board, and the work that it has done for this country since it was set up at the beginning of the war. I repeat, I have no apologies to offer for it to-day.

We cannot take the position, which the Progressive Conservative party is taking, that we must remove at once all ceilings from prices of agricultural products, because in a very few weeks that would bring ruin to the whole population of Canada. That is an irresponsible position to take.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is not what the resolution says.

Mr. ILSLEY: Their resolution does not say that, but everyone else says it. If I understand the position of the C.C.F. party, I cannot share their view that we should not decontrol, that we should go on permanently as we are. We cannot do that constitutionally, nor do I think it would be practical from an economic point of view. I do not for one moment admit their position; I assert the very contrary. I assert that in this particular instance of agricultural implements we have acted with great care, with fairness and with moderation and have authorized an increase which was no more than was necessary to make it possible and probable that we should get the maximum production of agricultural implements in 1946.

Mr. HLYNKA: I was paired with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ISNOR: I was paired with the hon. member for Colchester-Hants (Mr. Stanfield). Had I voted I would have voted against the subamendment.

Mr. LEGER: I was paired with the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Senn). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Brandon): I was paired with the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Barrett). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JACQUES: I was paired with the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Cloutier). Had I voted I would have voted for the subamendment.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I was paired with the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Fournier). Had I voted I would have voted for the subamendment.

Mr. CHARLTON: I was paired with the hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Healy). Had I voted I would have voted against the subamendment.

Mr. DANIEL: I was paired with the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. McDonald). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I was paired with the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Cleaver). Had I voted I would have voted for the subamendment.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is on the amendment.

Mr. LOW: Before the vote is taken, Mr. Speaker, will you permit me to put a specific question to the leader of the opposition?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry; I do not think I can do that.

Mr. LOW: I did not speak to the motion, and unfortunately I had to be out of the house for a short time this afternoon.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. gentleman wants to put a question on the amendment which is before the house, he may do so.

Mr. LOW: That is what I wish to do. In the light of the exchanges that took place between the Minister of Finance (Mr Ilsley) and the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Bracken) this afternoon, I should like to ask whether the leader of the opposition means by his amendment the immediate and complete removal of ceiling prices on farm products. If that is the purpose of his amendment it would make a difference in the way I voted. If it is not; if it means exactly what the words say, then of course I must govern myself in another way.

Mr. BRACKEN: If I may be permitted to answer, Mr. Speaker, I think our position was made clear to the Acting Prime Minister. This resolution means exactly what it says, and nothing more. It means a square deal for agriculture.

Motion (Mr. Ilsley) agreed to, on division, and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY BILL

Mr. ILSLEY moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $136,598,972.86, being one-twelfth of the amount of each of the several items to be voted, as set forth in the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1947, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, plus an additional sum not exceeding $2,327,018.33 being one-twelfth of the amount of each of the items 8, 10, 11, 16, 26, 122, 125, 126, 139, 140, 142, 159, 160, 163, 165, 166, 167, 170, 175, 373, 401, 402, 433, 479, 541, 554, 559 and 620; plus a further additional sum not exceeding $64,911,397.66, being one-sixth of the amount of the several items 172, 174, 419, 464, 482, 487, 501, 549, 551, 555, 558, 569, 605, 610 and 611, a total of $203,837,388.85, be granted to His Majesty on account for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1947.

Mr. LOW: Does the minister intend to ask for another interim supply?

Mr. ILSLEY: I certainly do. I wanted one-sixth, but the leader of the opposition thought that under the circumstances he should agree to only one-twelfth, so I shall be back soon.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Mr. ILSLEY moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1947, the sum of $203,837,388.85 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Ilsley thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 141, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1947.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. ILSLEY moved the second reading.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I ask for the customary protection from the minister that in agreeing to second reading of this bill we shall lose none of our rights with respect to discussion, deliberation, and the final passing of estimates?

Mr. ILSLEY: I take pleasure in giving that undertaking which is the usual one.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Sections 1 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Shall the preamble carry?

Mr. GRAYDON: I think it is customary to mention the schedules because they are perhaps the most important part of the bill.

Schedules A and B agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Ilsley the house adjourned at 7.05 p.m.

Monday, May 27, 1946.

The house met at three o'clock.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Sixth report of special committee on veterans affairs—Mr. Tucker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LUMBER INDUSTRY—STRIKE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA —FOOD CONTAINERS

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Acting Prime Minister): The hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) indicated on Friday that he intended to-day to bring up the question of the supply of wooden containers for food in British Columbia the production of which is rendered impossible by the strike of those engaged in making lumber for boxes and material for baskets and other wooden food containers.

I understand that if these containers are not produced the result will be a large wastage and spoilage of food of many kinds produced in British Columbia both for the Canadian market and the overseas market during the coming months. I understand also that there is a disposition on the part of both operators and members of the unions to recognize the gravity of this situation and that meetings are being held, at least between the farmers and the workers, with a view to putting an end to this lamentable situation.

As the house knows, the importance of food at the present time is of great concern to the government, and I would like to say on behalf of the government that it is the sincere hope and wish of the government that arrangements be immediately made whereby the industry making material for wooden food containers will resume work at once, without prejudice to any negotiations regarding conditions in the industry which are now proceeding.

The Minister of Labour is unavoidably absent from the house to-day but I know that this is his wish as well as that of the other members of the government, and I am therefore, on behalf of the government, making this earnest appeal to all those concerned in this dispute to arrange for the resumption of work at once in the lumber mills which make lumber for containers for the shipping of fish and fruit and other food products.

I am not now dealing with the other phases of the strike in British Columbia, which are very grave. I will have to leave these for the Minister of Labour, who is putting forward every possible effort to bring about the settlement of the dispute as a whole.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I wish to express my thanks to the minister for his statement. Now I will not move the adjournment of the house.

GRAIN

1944 CROP—BARLEY EQUALIZATION FEE—ONTARIO WHEAT EQUALIZATION FUND

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): On behalf of the Canadian wheat board I wish to make a brief statement regarding the 1944 barley equalization payments and the 1944 Ontario wheat equalization fund.

We are at present in process of making payment to all producers who delivered barley either through country elevators or by farm-to-farm transactions in the crop year 1944-45. An amount totalling $6,106,932.94 is involved in this payment, being the difference between the advance equalization payment and the equalization fees collected in respect of barley exported, after allowing for administrative costs and the estimated cost of making the payment. The payment covers deliveries made between August 1, 1944 and July 31, 1945, inclusive. In the case of deliveries through country elevators, the cheques are compiled from information submitted to the board by the handling companies. Where producers made deliveries to more than one elevator, separate cheques will be issued, one for each of the companies to whom deliveries were made. The cheques will be forwarded to the elevator companies for distribution when completed, but cheques covering the farm-to-farm transactions will be distributed by mail from the offices of the board.

Approximately one hundred and fifty-five thousand cheques are involved covering total deliveries of 80,435,781 bushels, and the amount per bushel of the payment is 7·59 cents.

Immediately following completion of the barley payment, payment will be made to the producers who delivered Ontario winter wheat in the 1944-45 crop year. This payment will be made on the basis of monthly reports received from the elevator agents in the province of Ontario. The surplus arising as a result of the equalization fees collected in Ontario winter flour and other wheat products exported from that crop, after allowing for administrative costs and the estimated cost of making the payment, totals $192,824.77. The per bushel payment amounts to 3 cents. Approximately twenty-nine thousand cheques are involved.

Mr. BRACKEN: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question with respect to the announcement the minister has just made? He mentioned that the barley equalization payment has already been made.

Mr. MacKINNON: No—is in process.

Mr. BRACKEN: Is in process of being made. When it is made, then a similar payment with respect to Ontario winter wheat will be made?

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes. The wheat board is proceeding with the barley payments now, and as soon as they are completed the Ontario payments will be made. The wheat participation payments will follow that.

Mr. BRACKEN: That is the question I was going to ask. There has been a good deal of criticism with respect to the delay in the payment of the participation certificates. My understanding is that they have not been paid since prior to 1943. Can the minister say now when these payments are likely to be made?

Mr. MacKINNON: I have been in very close touch with the wheat board on this matter, partly because hon. members on the other side of the house have raised the question here. The assurance I get from the wheat board is that the issuing of these cheques will commence in June immediately following the cheques to which I made reference in my statement.

Mr. BRACKEN: That is for the crop year 1943-44?

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): May I ask a supplementary question? Would it be possible for the minister to make a statement before the cheques are issued as to how much per bushel these payments will be?

Mr. MacKINNON: That is exactly what we are waiting for—advice on what the payments will be, and to have the auditors pass on them. Just as soon as that figure is arrived at, and I believe it has just been arrived at, the cheques can be made out. I understood that the hon. member for Souris was asking for the prices of the different grades. The actual price, if it is now known, has just been arrived at.

STANDING COMMITTEES

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—RADIO BROADCASTING—CHANGE IN PERSONNEL

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved:

That the name of Mr. Breithaupt be substituted for that of Mr. McIlraith on the standing committee on external affairs.

That the name of Mr. Coldwell be substituted for that of Mr. Zaplitny on the special committee on radio broadcasting.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

WAR ASSETS—AIR FORCE BUILDINGS AT MEDICINE HAT

Mr. WYLIE:

1. What buildings have been sold at No. 34 S.F.T.S. Medicine Hat, Alberta?

2. Who were the purchasers and what amount was paid for these buildings?

3. Who purchased the linoleum from the officers' mess?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. and 2. The following buildings have been sold to the city of Medicine Hat for $15,092:

No. 5 N.C.O.'s quarters; No. 6 N.C.O.'s quarters; No. 7 N.C.O.'s mess; No. 9 other ranks quarters; No. 10 other ranks quarters; No. 15 hospital; No. 17 large canteen; No. 30 dental clinic; No. 32 other ranks quarters; No. 3 officers quarters.

One of the conditions of sale in respect to all buildings mentioned above was that all normal fixtures contained within the buildings were included and further that the buildings were not sold for removal but were to remain on the site provided that fencing-in of the property along the lines as indicated in the site plan was undertaken by the purchaser. The buildings are to be used for emergency housing.

3. The linoleum, not being crown property, has not been declared surplus to War Assets Corporation.

POLYMER CORPORATION—PRODUCTION OF RUBBER

Mr. MURPHY:

1. What is the present cost per pound for the production of the different types of rubber produced by the Polymer Corporation Limited?

2. What was the cost for the production of the different types of rubber by the Polymer Corporation Limited during each quarter for the years ending March 31, 1945-March 31, 1946?

3. How many pounds of the different types of rubber were produced in each quarter during the years ending March 31, 1945-March 31, 1946?

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Speaker, this question refers to the manufacturing data on the current operations of Polymer Corporation. The public accounts, recently published, contain the balance sheet of the operations of Polymer up to the end of March, 1945. The difficulty of giving the present-day costs is that the rubber is competitive in foreign markets with that of other manufacturers, and it is prejudicial to the work of the directors on policy matters to have the day-to-day operations made public in a forum such as the House of Commons. If the government intends to be in competitive business I think the same latitude which is permitted to competitive business should be permitted to crown companies; therefore in the public interest I must ask that this question be dropped.

Question dropped.

LOANS TO PROVINCES

Mr. DORION:

1. What was the amount of the loans each year from 1939-1940 to date, by the federal government to each of the provincial governments?

2. What was the interest on these loans?

3. What amount has been reimbursed on these loans?

4. What is the total amount due to date by each of the provinces to the federal government?

PRISONERS OF WAR FOR SEASONAL LABOUR

Mr. DESMOND:

1. How many prisoners of war are going to be available in camps for seasonal labour?
2. How many prisoners of war will be available in the sugar producing area of Ontario?
3. Can reasonable assurance be given that camp labour will be available?

Mr. MacKINNON:

1. This year it is the intention to place as many prisoners of war on individual farms as possible rather than house them in camps. There will be between 3,600 and 4,000 prisoners available for agriculture for at least the early months of the summer, some will be in camps but the number will depend on how well the plan to place them on individual farms works out.

2. Between 872 and 900 prisoners including those on individual farms are allotted to the Ontario sugar beet area.

3. The period of time for which this labour will be available is dependent on the arrangements which can be made with the British authorities, and upon the latest dates when available shipping space for the return of the prisoners to Europe can be secured. At present no assurance can be given that the prisoners will be available beyond the early part of August.

AIR FORCE—ELEMENTARY OR RESERVE TRAINING—FLYING CLUBS

Mr. DIEFENBAKER:

1. What policy has been established by the Department of National Defence for Air in connection with R.C.A.F. elementary or reserve training?
2. Is such training going to be allocated to the flying clubs in whole or in part?
3. What grants or other assistance will be given to flying clubs?
4. Which flying clubs sponsor and organize elementary flying training school companies?
5. Which of said flying clubs benefited, and to what extent during the period of the war, from contracts from the Department of National Defence for Air in connection with the operation of elementary flying training schools?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West):

1. Elementary training as was known in the British commonwealth air training plan in which civilian flying training school companies trained pilots on light aircraft has been discontinued. It is the intention of the R.C.A.F. to carry out reserve training at some future date.

2. It is intended that certain elementary training will be allocated to flying clubs.

3. The loan of certain equipment and aerodrome facilities together with fees for such training as may be agreed upon.

4. A list of flying clubs which sponsored elementary flying training schools under the B.C.A.T.P. appears below.

5. See list below answering No. 4.

POLYMER CORPORATION—DOW CHEMICAL COMPANY

Mr. MURPHY:

1. Did the Polymer Corporation Limited pay the Dow Chemical Limited for material supplied and services rendered?

2. If so, in what amount?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. Pursuant to an engineering contract made with that company dated May 1, 1942 Polymer Corporation Limited paid Dow Chemical of Canada Limited for engineering services performed by it in connection with the process design and engineering of the styrene plant at Sarnia and for acting as supervising engineers during the construction of that plant the fees and disbursements payable to the said company under the said contract. Pursuant to its operating agreement with that company, entered into as of May 1, 1942, Polymer Corporation Limited has paid to Dow Chemical of Canada Limited management fees for services rendered by it. Polymer Corporation Limited has also paid to Dow Chemical of Canada Limited certain royalties payable to Dow and/or the following firms: Universal Oil Products Company; Standard Oil Development Company; Jasco, Incorporated; Koppers Company; Koppers United Company; Monsanto Chemical Company; Carbide and Carbon Chemicals Corporation; Phillips Petroleum Company; The Lummus Company; The Dow Chemical Company; pursuant to an agreement on the exchange and use in Canada of technical information relating to styrene, dated October 15, 1942. No payments were made to the said company for materials supplied by it, other than the engineering drawings and specifications referred to above and the fee paid for enginering services includes the said drawings and specifications.

2.

ELEMENTARY FLYING TRAINING SCHOOLS—DISPOSITION OF SURPLUSES

Mr. DIEFENBAKER:

1. Have any of the companies which operated elementary flying training schools during the period of the war been requested to turn over to the Department of National Defence for Air, any or all of the surpluses earned under contract?

2. If so, which companies, and how much has each of said companies turned over?

3. What were the reasons and/or justification for such requests?

4. Have all of said companies been treated on the same basis in regard to the disposal of surpluses?

5. If not, what companies have been differently treated, in what respect, and why?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West):

1. Yes.

3. The contract provides that 80 per cent of the surplus be returned to the crown and the remaining 20 per cent paid to a flying club approved by the minister. By voluntary resolution the operating companies surrendered all profit and/or surplus in excess of $5,000 per annum, such restricted profit and/or surplus to be paid to flying clubs approved by the minister, in the hope that at the termination of the agreement the dominion government would make available aerodrome facilities and equipment for the continuance of the operation of these flying clubs.

4. No.

5. (a) London Elementary Flying Training School, Limited; Quebec City Flying Training School, Limited. The schools operated by these companies were closed down at the time or prior to the renewal contract becoming operative.

(b) St. Catharines Flying Training School, Limited. This school has as yet made no voluntary surrender of its profit and/or surplus in excess of $5,000 per annum.

(c) Quebec Airways (Training) Limited, Cap de la Madeleine, P.Q., owned by Canadian Pacific Air Lines, Limited. This school surrendered all profit and/or surplus.

POLYMER CORPORATION—ST. CLAIR PROCESSING CORPORATION

Mr. MURPHY:

1. Did the Polymer Corporation Limited pay the St. Clair Processing Company Limited for material supplied and services rendered?

2. If so, in what amount?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. Yes. Pursuant to its operating agreement with that company Polymer Corporation Limited paid St. Clair Processing Corporation Limited management fees for services rendered. No payments were made to the said company for materials supplied by it, since no materials were supplied to Polymer Corporation by that company.

2. For services rendered between October 1, 1942 and March 31, 1946, Polymer Corporation Limited paid to St. Clair Corporation Limited $758,992.30.

PUBLIC DEBT

Mr. POULIOT:

1. What was the total debt of Canada (a) on September 1, 1939, and (b) on April 30, 1946?

2. What was the total revenue of the dominion government (and also of all its agencies) from September 1, 1939, to April 30, 1946?

3. During that period what was the total expenditure in virtue of (a) main and supplementary estimates; (b) war appropriations; (c) what was also the total expenditure by all government agencies and not provided for by the abovementioned estimates and appropriations?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. Gross liabilities of the Dominion of Canada on August 31, 1939, totalled $3,767,-114,590. The figure for total debt or gross liabilities at April 30, 1946, is not yet available but for March 31, 1945, it was $15,712,181,527.

2. Total revenue of the dominion from September 1, 1939, to February 28, 1946, was $12,681,719,279. (Later figures are not yet available).

3. Non-war expenditures (under main and supplementary estimates including statutory items) from September 1, 1939, to February 28, 1946, totalled $4,702,870,331. War expenditures in the same period totalled $17,366,355,982.

Note.—Net revenues of government agencies which accrue and are paid to the government are included in the government's revenue. Net expenditures of government agencies are included in the government's expenditures either under government-owned enterprises or war expenditure. In the case of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, however, the corporation has the right to retain for the purposes of its act all moneys received by it rising out of its business and consequently its net revenues or net expenditures are not included in the government accounts.

To include gross revenues and expenditures of government agencies would involve duplication in many cases, e.g., expenditures of Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation are included in the government's war expenditures.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION—REMOVAL OF RIPPLE ROCK

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

1. What have attempts to remove the menace to navigation on the Pacific coast of Canada known as Ripple rock cost Canada to date?

2. Is the government considering the use of atomic energy in its attempt to remove said Ripple rock?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull):

1. $831,793.78.

2. The development of the application of atomic energy is still in the hands of research scientists, and its practical uses, particularly under water, are still unknown.

REPARATIONS

Mr. THATCHER:

1. Has the Dominion of Canada, to date, received reparation payments of any kind from Germany, Italy or Japan?

2. If so, of what nature and value?

Mr. ST. LAURENT:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

ADVERTISEMENTS SPONSORED BY DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

Mr. LOW:

1. What has been the total cost to date of the series of advertisements in Canadian newspapers, sponsored by the Department of Trade and Commerce on the subject: "Thirty-five cents out of every dollar you get comes from Canada's trade abroad"?

2. What has been the purpose of the advertisement?

[Mr. Mayhew.]

Mr. MacKINNON:

1. Fiscal year 1945-46, $9,288.05; fiscal year 1946-47, $12,796.86.

2. The current advertisements sponsored by the Department of Trade and Commerce are of two kinds: (a) addressed through newspapers and magazines to the public on the general theme "One Third of Your Dollar"—the proportion of our national income conservatively estimated as earned, directly or indirectly, by export trade. These advertisements are designed to bring home to Canadians generally, in addition to producers and exporters, the importance of foreign trade to their daily lives. The advertisements further point out that in order to build up our export trade now it would be wise to do without some things in the domestic market in order that at least token shipments may be sent to markets abroad, thus enabling connections to be established that will be needed in the future; (b) addressed through business publications to actual and potential exporters on the general theme "C.Q.P."—meaning continuity of supply, quality that is consistent, prices that are fair. Good export practices are the long-term means of promoting our trade, and the advertisements are designed with that purpose in mind.

In general, therefore, the Department of Trade and Commerce is trying through its advertisements to prepare the ground at home for the maintenance of the level of export and import trade which is believed to be essential to Canada's prosperity.

BARBED WIRE—SHORTAGE FOR FENCING PURPOSES

Mr. HOWE: On May 21 the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine) asked this question:

Have the government any information as to the great shortage of barbed wire for fencing and, if so, what are they doing about it?

The average monthly production in Canada of barbed wire is approximately 1,000 tons. None of this is exported at the present time. This barbed wire is distributed by the producers to the consumers through the regular trade channels namely the jobbers, distributors and hardware firms. The producers are doing their utmost to maintain equitable distribution of the available supply. To divert increased tonnages of wire for this product would merely result in taking the steel away from some other product which is equally urgent and in equally short supply. For example, it could very possibly affect the production of nails, another wire mill product. The short supply of barbed wire is merely one part of our overall acute steel supply position. The condition here is no more acute than the supply position of plate, structural, sheet bars, rods and all wire mill products.

We can expect no relief until such time as conditions in the United States return to something approaching normal.

*RADIO BROADCASTING—"JOHNNY HOME SHOW"

Mr. McCANN: Mr. Speaker, a question was asked on May 15 by the hon. member for Peterborough West (Mr. Fraser) having to do with the cost of certain shows put on by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I should like to answer that question more fully, verbally.

In reference to the "Johnny Home Show", as indicated in the answer to this question there is no extra cost to the C.B.C. for lines, facilities, station time and producer cost, but if sold to a sponsor, production, lines and C.B.C. station time for this programme would cost $871.32 per week. With reference to the show "The People Ask", the C.B.C. station time for this programme, if sold to a sponsor, would cost $280.80 a week. Is that answer satisfactory?

Mr. FRASER: I want to thank the minister for the answer.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

HOUSING—VETERANS—BOWMANVILLE AREA

Mr. STEPHENSON:

1. What is the name of the company constructing veterans homes on No. 2 highway about two miles east of Bowmanville?
2. If incorporated, what are the names of the directors and officers of the company?
3. If a partnership, who are the partners?
4. On what basis was this contract let?
5. How many houses are being built at this location?
6. When will they be completed?
7. What will the sale price be and have any been sold yet?

HOUSING—VETERANS—PORT HOPE AREA

Mr. STEPHENSON:

1. What is the name of the company constructing veterans homes on land near Port Hope on highway No 2 under the Veterans Land Act?
2. If incorporated, what are the names of the directors and officers of the company?
3. If a partnership, who are the partners?
4. On what basis was this contract let?
5. How many houses are being built at this location?
6. When will they be completed?
7. What will the sale price be and have any been sold yet?

VETERANS LAND ACT—ELGIN COUNTY

Mr. COYLE:

1. How many farms under the Veterans Land Act are now awaiting inspection in Elgin county?
2. How many farms have been purchased in Elgin county since the Veterans' Land Act came into force?
3. What was the acreage in each farm?
4. What was the price paid for each farm?

HOUSING—SMALL HOLDINGS

Mr. STEPHENSON:

1. How many houses have been built in Canada under the D.V.A. on land known as small holdings?
2. What is the sale price of these houses to veterans and on what terms?
3. How many houses have now been sold to and are now occupied by veterans?
4. What is the government's plan for continuation of such building for veterans homes?

INSURANCE COMPANIES—FILING OF BUSINESS STATEMENTS

Mr. MARSHALL:

1. Were any insurance companies penalized during the last fiscal year for failure to file their business statements under the terms of the Department of Insurance Act in the required time?
2. If so, what companies?
3. Were any of these companies granted rebates?
4. If so, which companies; in what amounts, and for what reasons?
5. Were any companies, late in filing such returns, not penalized? If so, which companies?

REPATRIATION OF JAPANESE NATIONALS

Mr. REID:

1. What is the number of Japanese nationals for which arrangements have been made for repatriation to Japan?
2. Of these, how many were born in Canada and how many were born in Japan?
3. Have arrangements been made to transfer to their account in Japan, cash or other assets?
4. If so, what is the total amount of cash assets from Canada which will be available to them on arrival in Japan?
5. Are any gifts or sums of money being given by the Canadian government to the Japanese being repatriated?
6. If so, are these sums of money in addition to any cash assets belonging to those being repatriated?
7. What will be the cost or charges for each Japanese national repatriated, giving the cost of, (a) transportation, both rail and steamship; (b) any gifts or sums of money?
8. What will the total costs be for the numbers for which repatriation arrangements have been made?
9. Is General MacArthur in charge of affairs in Japan? If so, has he been consulted in the matter?
10. Has he given his approval to the entry and establishment in Japan of the Japanese nationals in Canada who requested repatriation?

BLACK MARKETS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SITUATION IN MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): May I direct a question to the Minister of Justice? It was intended that notice of the question should be sent this morning, but I regret that it did not go until after lunch. In view of the serious allegations regarding the implication of bank employees and distilling channels in the extensive black marketing of sugar and butter reported to-day from Montreal, will the minister make a report to this house regarding the matter?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Minister of Justice): I received notice of this question just before coming into the house. I shall be glad to take it as a notice and obtain a report from the R.C.M.P., and then consider whether their report can be made public without hampering the proceedings being instituted for the repression of this black market. If that is possible I shall be glad to communicate it to the house.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is satisfactory.

WHEAT

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS IN LONDON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with a press dispatch from London regarding a meeting between the president of Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers and the British food and agriculture ministers respecting a long term agreement covering wheat. The question is: Has the government given instructions to its representatives there that the minimum price in respect of wheat under a long-term agreement shall be $1.55?

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am not sure whether the hon. member for Lake Centre is referring to a statement by Mr. Wesson which has appeared in the press—

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is it.

Mr. MacKINNON: If so, I am quite sure Mr. Wesson would be the first to deny that he was in any way speaking on behalf of the government or the Canadian wheat board. I might add that negotiations between the United Kingdom and the government or the wheat board are proceeding with regard to the sale of Canadian wheat. We hope to have a conference here in Canada very shortly between officials of the United Kingdom and our own officials.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STRIKES OF LUMBERMEN AND SEAMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): I had intended to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, but I notice he is not in the house. In view of the statement made a moment ago by the Acting Prime Minister, I would suggest that when the Minister of Labour returns to the house he might make a statement on the strike in the lumber industry and the strike of the Canadian seamen's union.

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Acting Prime Minister): I shall bring the request of the hon. gentleman to the attention of the minister.

RESEARCH COUNCIL

APPOINTMENT OF VICE-PRESIDENTS AND EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, ETC.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Research Council Act to provide for the continuance of the committee of the privy council on industrial and scientific research; for the appointment of two vice-presidents to the research council, their tenure of office and salaries; for the appointment of an executvie committee of the council; for the creation of corporations to carry out certain powers of the council which may be more conveniently performed by a separate corporation, and also to provide for the organization, administration and financing of such corporations; and to provide further for the superannuation, pension and other rights of the employees of the said corporations.

Mr. GREEN: May I ask the minister whether it is his intention to make a statement with regard to this resolution?

Mr. HOWE: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The present Research Council Act was passed in 1924, and has not been amended since. On the other hand, as everyone knows, the research council has expanded greatly since that date in order to meet the needs of Canada in this technological age, and the present amendments are being proposed in order to bring the formal organizational structure of the council into harmony with its present day activities.

Before discussing details of the proposed amendments, I would like to indicate in very broad terms the great changes that have taken place in the scope of the council's work since 1928. In that year a full-time president, Dr. Troy, was appointed, and a decision was taken to provide a research laboratory building. Previously the activities of the council had been confined to awarding scholarships, making financial grants in aid of research to university and other workers, and organizing cooperative research projects. The council's budget in 1928-29 was $323,366.56. In 1932 the main research building on Sussex street was formally opened. For the fiscal year 1932-33 the council's budget was approximately $450,000, and the professional staff numbered 57. For the fiscal year before the war, that is 1938-39, the council's budget increased to approximately $1,000,000, and there was a total staff of a little less than 300.

During the war, as we all know, the council's activities expanded greatly in magnitude and diversity, and during the last year of the war the council was supporting directly a total staff of 1,600, and indirectly another 400. The total direct expenditures amounted to nearly $7 million, or seven times the 1938-39 figure. And, in addition, the president and other administrative officers of the council carried scientific responsibilities for operations such as the atomic energy project, and many other secret operations supported financially by the Department of Munitions and Supply and the Department of National Defence, which ran into many millions of dollars. All this expansion took place without any permanent change or additions in the permanent administrative staff.

The government has decided that the peacetime needs for scientific research in Canada require that the activities of the research council be maintained on the same order of magnitude as in war, and in the estimates for the current fiscal year the needs of the council are placed at about $6,378,000, which is apart from the very sizable expenditures on atomic energy activties which are directed by the president and administrative officers of the council.

Compared with the staff of 300 in 1939, the full-time civilian staff will number about 1,500. In addition to the one large laboratory building of 1939, the council is now operating sixteen other laboratories in Ottawa, in Montreal, in Chalk River, in Winnipeg, in Saskatoon, and plans have already been drawn for several others, including a building research laboratory, a road research laboratory, and a new radio and radar laboratory.

In addition to the laboratories, the president is responsible for the administration of about 50 associate research committees and 100 subcommittees, on which sit literally hundreds of the country's most distinguished scientists, engineers, and industrialists, and who in turn consider and lay down policy in connection with broad research projects such as aeronautics, Canadian government purchasing standards, medical research, explosives, geophysics, dental research, radio research and a number of others.

The council also operates scientific liaison offices in London, Washington and Ottawa, maintains a large scientific library, publishes the Canadian Journal of Research and many other reports. It has an active programme of awarding scholarships and making grants in aid of research—all of which have increased during the past few years in the same proportion as the other activities.

The president of the council acts as adviser to the government on an increasing number of scientific subjects, sits on a large number of boards and committees of a general character, has assumed the responsibilities of director-general of the research and development branch of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, is proposed as a member of the atomic energy board to be set up, and also acts as a special adviser and consultant in connection with military research—all of which, it will be seen, represents a greatly increased administrative burden as compared to the organizations of 1932 and 1939. While the war was on, the administration of the council received help and advice from senior officials seconded from universities and from senior officers in the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, but now that such help will no longer be available, it is obvious that there is need formally to strengthen the top administrative set-up of the council by providing for two senior officials: a vice-president (administration), and a vice-president (scientific); and there is also need for other provisions which will be found in the proposed amendments.

The remainder of what I have to say deals with individual sections of the bill. Perhaps that might best be said after the bill has been introduced.

Mr. GREEN: Could the minister not give us that further information at this time?

Mr. HOWE: I shall be glad to; but whether it would be intelligibe or not, without having the bill before us, I cannot say. I might explain, however, that the amendments to section 4 provide for the appointment of the two vice-presidents and for an increase in the size of the honorary council in order that the vice-presidents may sit on the council and also that the various scientific interests at present covered by the scope of council activities may be represented. Provision is also made for an executive committee with the normal functions.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the minister, but he is out of order. The house cannot discuss the details of the bill following the resolution, when that bill is not actually before the house.

Mr. GREEN: Perhaps I am at fault.

Mr. HOWE: That was my impression.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, the house has before it this afternoon two of the most important resolutions we have ever considered, namely resolutions numbers 13 and 14 on the order paper. Of the two, probably the former is the more important.

Speaking briefly to this resolution, number 14, may I point out that we welcome the proposals contained in it, and look forward to the introduction of the bill. We have long been of the opinion that an expansion of our scientific activities is essential at this time. As a matter of fact, what I fear is that people in public life—political leaders, and in some degree men in charge of our defence forces—are failing to exercise, in the matter of scientific progress, that degree of imagination the scientists themselves are exercising.

I hope this resolution means that Canada will expand her scientific research in a big way, and that the scientific branch in the national research council will be comprised of our outstanding young men in science. I was amazed when I learned the ages of many of the young scientists who had been engaged in the important work to which the Minister of Reconstruction has referred. We know something of the contribution they made in the discovery and development of RDX; we know of the work they did in radar, and of the work they are doing in connection with nuclear physics.

We wholeheartedly support the idea behind the resolution, and behind the other resolution about which I shall speak at a later time. I would hope, however, that the scale of salaries we shall institute will be sufficiently attractive to secure able scientists for the public service of Canada. We have lost too many young scientists in the past to our great neighbour to the south, and in various fields they have found employment across the seas. Some of the physicists, doctors and scientists who have made names for themselves in Great Britain were graduates of Canadian universities. I sincerely hope the scale of salaries, the superannuation benefits and the conditions of service will be such as to attract the best of our young Canadians.

I hope that ways and means will be found also to encourage our young Canadian scientists to exchange their scientific knowledge with scientists in other countries. We cannot allow matters of defence to be betrayed when the government desires to retain them or to let them out only on a reciprocal basis, but I think there is a danger at the present time of scientific researchers being so constricted or restricted that the exchange of scientific knowledge among the nations may be interfered with to our disadvantage and to the disadvantage of the world generally.

All I intended to say at this stage is that we welcome this resolution. We believe it is a step in the right direction. It shows some forward-looking thinking on the part of the minister and his advisers, and I sincerely hope that the scientific research branch of Canada will contribute to the scientific knowledge of the world and to the development of our own great resources, primarily for the good of Canada and, of course, of the world generally.

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I do not think any of us will disagree with the remarks of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) as to the desirability of the government being forward looking in the matter of scientific research, and indeed as to virtually everything else he has said. I want to make it very clear that that is my view. There is one question I should like to raise with regard to this resolution, because it seems to me it may be carrying us in a direction in which we ought to go somewhat cautiously. Among other things the resolution provides.

—the creation of corporations to carry out certain powers of the board which may be more conveniently performed by separate corporations—

I am not suggesting that that may not prove to be a perfectly proper step to take, but when the bill comes down we on this side may have considerable to say on a point we have spoken about so often, namely, whether this is again taking matters away from parliament and leaving them to be dealt with entirely by a corporation which, although theoretically subject to this house, gets pretty far away from it and can only be reached in some indirect and far-off manner.

Perhaps when we see the bill the point which I have in mind may seem to be not very practical, but at the moment it seems to me to be very practical indeed. It seems to me that it might be wise for this house to take the position that it will retain a good deal of control over what is to be done. However enthusiastic one may properly be about scientific research and about what scientists do, the fact remains that when the theories of scientists, however practical, come to be put into effect their enthusiasm sometimes has to be controlled and directed by those who are not scientists but who are men of a certain amount of experience and common sense.

Mr. HAZEN: The minister told us that the estimates for this year called for an expenditure of $6,378,000 for the research council, apart from atomic energy activities. Is the minister in position tell us what the estimates are this year for atomic energy activities?

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Speaker is in the chair and I do not think it is appropriate to ask questions at the moment.

Mr. SPEAKER: I draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that the house is not in committee and they are not supposed to question the minister. When the house goes into committee they will have an opportunity to ask any question relevant to the resolution.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the general question of the encouragement of research I do not think there will be any one in this house who will oppose that objective. It is the view of many of us that Canada, relatively speaking, has been behind in research matters, and to the extent that this measure provides for the encouragement of research, this party will be enthusiastically behind it.

In the resolution several specific matters are mentioned. Your Honour made a ruling a moment ago which was technically quite proper, that the details of the bill cannot be discussed before we have the bill. However, with all respect, sir, there are a great many matters in this resolution which can be discussed and which this party will expect will be discussed in committee. They might very well have been discussed here, but they can be discussed in committee. Let me point out some of them.

This resolution is to amend the Research Council Act and provide for the continuance of the committee of the privy council on industrial and scientific research. It provides also for the appointment of two vice presidents to the research council. The very item the minister was discussing is mentioned in the resolution. I rose merely to say that I hope nothing in the bill will prevent the minister when we are in committee of the whole from outlining fully the position of the government and the purpose of the proposed bill with respect to the various items mentioned in the resolution now before us.

Mr. PHILEAS A. COTE (Matapédia-Matane) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join those who have already complimented the hon. the Minister of Reconstruction (Mr. Howe) on the two resolutions which he is submitting for our consideration to-day, and which, to my mind, will contribute perhaps more than anything else not only to the development of science but also to the creation of a truly Canadian spirit, with equal opportunities for all Canadians.

Indeed, if there is a sphere where all can be in agreement, it is certainly the field of science. Unfortunately, in the past, a great many of our scientists, irrespective of their creed or nationality, have been compelled to take up residence in the United States because we did nothing to keep them here: Incidentally, may I recall, Mr. Speaker, among others, the case of your brother, one of our foremost scientists, who has certainly been a pioneer in research work on diseases of the heart at McGill University, and who himself has had to leave for the United States in order to continue his studies. I could mention many other such cases.

I hope that concurrence in these resolutions will permit us to retain in Canada all those who wish to devote their lives to science in order to ensure better protection for future generations.

I also hope that when the time comes to appoint the vice-presidents in the Research Council and the members of the executive committee of that Council, the honourable the minister will have some thought for my two French-language universities of Quebec and Montreal, have already done so much for science and who could have accomplished still more if better opportunities of doing so had French-speaking fellow-citizens who, in the been given to them.

(Text):

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great satisfaction to see this resolution introduced. In Canada we are faced with two great problems. First, we must learn how to adjust ourselves to the atomic age. When the atomic bomb was first used I was afraid that the calamity howlers were going to terrify us into a state of paralysis so that we would not do anything about this atomic bomb but lie down and yield our national sovereignty to some international body or do all the other foolish things that were being suggested. This resolution indicates a determination to go right out and meet the situation; after all that is the only sensible thing to do.

I heard a story the other day about three or four soldiers who some thousands of years ago were supervising the first attack with a catapult on a walled city. When they were all ready to shoot the first great stone with the catapault, one of the soldiers said to his companions, "Well, this will end war all right!" But we are still finding new methods of warfare, and we still must learn new methods of meeting new weapons. I take it that this organization will direct its efforts first of all towards defending ourselves against an atomic bomb attack, and next towards the means of launching an atomic bomb attack in case we need to do so.

The other extremely important problem is one which I have not yet heard mentioned as one of the problems that would be given to a research council; considering its seriousness I am amazed that we have not long ago turned it over to a national research body. I refer to the problem of distributing goods. We fought the last war because men did not know how to distribute goods, and the indications are that we shall have to fight the next war because men still do not know how to distribute goods. Men do not seem to realize that distribution is a scientific problem which has to be solved by scientific means. I hope that at an early day the minister will turn over to a considerable body of scientific men the task of ascertaining how to distribute in Canada the maximum amount of goods which Canada is able to produce, so that the people of Canada will be able to enjoy the maximum standard of living which would be justified by our productive capacity. The minister should say to them: We are not telling you where to go to look for the solution, but we want you to solve the problem and to find a solution soon; then we want you to find out how to distribute any surplus which we cannot trade away to other nations of the world.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. We are discussing the principle of the resolution which is before the house, which is:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Research Council Act . . .

I doubt whether the subject now being discussed by the hon. gentleman is covered by the resolution, I suggest to him that he wait until the bill is before the house, when he will be able to see whether the matter he is anxious to discuss is covered by the bill. On the resolution I think the hon. gentleman is out of order.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Mr. BLACKMORE: Mr. Speaker, I think I have completely covered what was in my mind. If this resolution does not envisage solving the problem of distribution, it is high time the minister took it back to his office and so drafted it that it would attain that end.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Mr. GREEN: Mr. Chairman, this is not the stage of the measure at which any statements of policy should be made. As the leader of the opposition has suggested, we are very much interested in the promotion of scientific research in Canada, and at this particular stage, when the resolution is in committee we want to get a good deal more information from the minister with regard to the resolution and the proposals of the government. I should like to bring to his attention four or five points on which we wish to have information.

What is the policy of the government with regard to having research carried on in different parts of Canada, and how far does the government propose to go in dividing the work up to make certain that problems which affect perhaps only one or two parts of Canada are not overlooked because of too much centralization? The minister did say a few minutes ago that there were several branch research laboratories, but we should like to have further information on the plans of the government for spreading out research work across the whole dominion.

The second point has to do with the power which is to be given to the research council to set up corporations. They have not that power at the present time, but the resolution reads:

. . . to provide for the creation of corporations to carry out certain powers of the council which may be more conveniently performed by a separate corporation, and also to provide for the organization, administration and financing of such corporations.

Is the power to set up these corporations to rest with the research council, or with the government? A good deal of concern is felt about the present trend of the government in setting up crown companies. It is a new policy, one which was adopted during the war, as the minister said a few days ago, but it looks as though he had now acquired the habit of doing business through crown corporations. We should like to know just how the crown corporations are to be fitted into the framework of the research council. That brings up the question of the extent of the control the minister is to have over these crown corporations; and, more important still, what control parliament is to have over them. The danger in setting up these corporations has been that they are so far away from parliament that they might as well be in another world so far as effective control by the elected representatives of the people is concerned. They are right outside the control of the Canadian people.

Another point has to do with the type of employee. Under the present Research Council Act employees can be appointed by the governor in council—the minister will correct me if I am wrong—and I presume that that power is to be continued; in other words, this greatly enlarged staff of the research council will not be subject to the Civil Service Act or the civil service commission. Will that principle apply also to employees of the corporations set up under the research council? Are they to constitute what might be called a super-civil service? We are getting a long way from the intention of parliaments in the past, which was that the civil service should be under the Civil Service Act. What is the plan with regard to the employees of the research council and of the new corporations?

Finally will the minister explain why it is necessary to provide for the continuance of the committee of the privy council on industrial and scientific research. That seems to be amply covered in the act as it stands at the present time. Who are the members of the privy council on this committee, and what are the plans with regard to the setting up of an executive committee of the research council? The minister said nothing about that in his opening statement, and I think he should give us an explanation of the type of executive committee which it is proposed to set up under the amendments that are to be made.

These are some of the questions which we should like to have answered. Others will come up as the discussion proceeds, but I should be grateful if at the moment the minister would give us a reply to these questions.

Mr. HOWE: I shall be glad to give what information I have on the subjects mentioned. In the matter of conducting research outside headquarters at Ottawa, the war has already furnished developments of that kind and has proven the desirability of not concentrating all operations of the council in one locality. As my hon. friend knows, a branch of the research council is being established in the prairies and will be charged particularly with finding a solution for problems which affect the prairie provinces and which are not common to other parts of Canada. Consideration is also being given to research facilities in British Columbia. Plans are being considered for facilities on quite a substantial scale which will operate in conjunction with the university of British Columbia. Similarly, consideration is being given to the development of research facilities in the maritime provinces.

Research facilities are at present integrated with the facilities of the provinces. Close integration has been established for the purpose of preventing overlapping in the work of the two organizations, and this is now being extended into the field of private research, the object being to coordinate public research and private research to eliminate any overlap.

In the matter of crown corporations, the purpose is to separate certain operations of the council, which are themselves attaining very sizable proportions. For example, the council controls a considerable number of patents. The number was greatly increased during the war. These have a commercial value which should be exploited. It is simply a corporation to hold patents and exploit them for the crown. In the United States a corporation functions for a similar purpose in conjunction with national research facilities there. I see none of the dangers mentioned by my hon. friends in a corporation of the kind, which simply paves the way for keeping the books on the operations and bringing a balance sheet before parliament.

Mr. GREEN: Are they to be operating companies?

Mr. HOWE: That would be an operating company; it would own patents and either sell or lease them for public exploitation.

Mr. GREEN: Will it do any manufacturing?

Mr. HOWE: No. It is simply a merchandising company, merchandising patents owned by the national research council. It would also follow up experiments being conducted and would have experts determine whether discoveries of the council are patentable, make sure that they are patented and brought into commercial use in order that the crown may recover some of the expenses involved in the creation of the asset.

I cannot agree with the argument that the creation of a corporation removes the operation from the eye of parliament. It seems to me it brings it under the eye of parliament in a manner which permits it to be constructively criticized. I wonder how many hon. members could give me any idea of what the balance sheet on the operations of the canals of Canada represents? The canals represent an investment of over $100,000,000, and there are certainly operating revenues.

Mr. MacNICOL: Six hundred million.

Mr. HOWE: Yes, six hundred million; my hon. friend is right. Operating revenues and operating expenses are involved. I was curious to know how the balance sheet stood in that regard, and it took me several hours to dig out the results from various parts of the public accounts. It can be done; nevertheless, if operations can be put before the country in balance-sheet form, the tendency will be to reduce expenses and to make some effort to increase revenues.

I like to place the people responsible for operations of that kind in the position where they must face a balance sheet, where they must be conscious of a balance sheet at all stages of operations, and must face the prospect of the balance sheet being discussed in parliament and questions being asked as to why expenditures exceed revenues, if that is the case.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): You had better do that for us in the public accounts.

Mr. HOWE: I should be glad to have someone else answer for public accounts. I like to be able to know from month to month how any balance sheet stands, and with corporation accounting that is easily possible.

I think the fact that during the war commercial operations were conducted by corporations has added greatly to the efficiency of those operations. It has allowed us to check the pricing of the commodities. It has allowed us to watch the operations more closely than would have been the case under another form of accounting. My endeavour throughout has been to bring government transactions into corporate form, for reasons which I believe are good for operation and good for the conduct of those responsible for carrying out those operations.

Under this bill two corporations are proposed. One is definitely required at the moment, and that is a corporation to own and commercialize patents owned by the national research council. As regards the second, it has not been definitely decided, but I am of the opinion that Chalk River should be operated as a corporation.

Mr. GREEN: Will these corporations be organized under the Research Council Act?

Mr. HOWE: No, under part I of the Companies Act. Consideration is also being given to placing the operations of Eldorado under the national research council. Eldorado deals in uranium and radium, the sale and distribution of which must be controlled by a corporation in which the national research council will have the paramount interest, and the provisions of this act will permit the placing of the crown company known as Eldorado Mining and Refining (1944) Limited under the direction of the research council.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): They will own the whole interest?

Mr. HOWE: That is correct.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The minister said the controlling interest.

Mr. HOWE: I meant the whole interest.

Mr. GREEN: They were supposed to under the other bill, the resolution preceding which was discussed the other day.

Mr. HOWE: At the moment the other bill simply provides for these companies to be in existence. There would be nothing in that act, when passed, that would prevent moving any of these companies under the direction of the research council. But provision is now being made that the research council can exercise jurisdiction in case the government wished to transfer jurisdiction of the crown companies to the national research council.

Mr. COLDWELL: I understand that $6 million is being appropriated to carry out the purposes of this particular measure. Is that right?

Mr. HOWE: The current appropriations of the national research council are those which are given in items 345, 346 and 347, which total $2,087,852, also item 612, which totals $4,291,000. These are the items I mentioned which total something over $6 million.

Mr. COLDWELL: If this resolution is as comprehensive as it appears to be, that would seem an inadequate sum to carry out what is intended. The minister said that there were fifteen hundred employees in the council at the present time. If the average salary paid is $2,000 it would account for $3 million. An additional $3 millions for the expansion seems to be a very small amount. An average salary of $2,000 is ridiculously low. It struck me that if this is what it appears to be, an expansion of our scientific research, the appropriations in the estimates to which the minister has referred do not carry out the intention of the resolution.

I had hoped this meant that we would embark upon the kind of scientific research that many of us contemplate. Many hon. members of the house hoped that there would be a wide expansion of scientific research.

While I am on my feet may I say I believe the minister is right in his defence of the principle of setting up crown corporations. I thoroughly agree that to bring these activities into the estimates in the form in which we usually get them in the various departments would give us no picture of what was being done; yet we have to safeguard the employees of this organization from political interference. We can easily devise ways and means of doing that in these corporations if the men at the top are interested in getting and hiring the best men they can. It seems to me that we cannot have day to day interference on the part of parliament with operations of this description. The alternative appears to be crown corporations. Probably public activities in the future will be along that line; I believe they should be. The point I had in mind is that I am rather disturbed at the small amount of money estimated to carry out this important scientific project. Perhaps the minister has in view introducing some further amounts in the supplementary estimates—I do not know.

Mr. HOWE: I would remind my hon. friend that the national research council has substantial revenue in addition to the appropriation by parliament. For example it undertakes projects initiated on behalf of others, the cost of which is paid by others.

Mr. COLDWELL: Could the minister give us an idea of the revenue?

Mr. HOWE: I am sorry; when I suggested that, I was afraid my hon. friend would ask me that question. But I shall have the information when we discuss the bill.

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not think it would compensate for the amount—

Mr. HOWE: It is a substantial amount.

Mr. LOW: Is that revenue not taken into the consolidated revenue fund, and does it not have to be revoted?

Mr. HOWE: No. The present Research Council Act permits special allocations of that type to be used for the purpose for which it was intended. However, I shall obtain the information. I would also point out that that appropriation does not include anything for atomic energy research for the Chalk River project. The amount for that is included in items 605 and 609. But compared with the total appropriation of around one million in 1939 we are not doing badly.

Mr. GREEN: There are two or three questions the minister did not answer.

Mr. HOWE: Yes. I intend to deal with them. With reference to the appointments not being subject to the Civil Service Act, I believe that that is vital to the service. The type of service in research is not the type of service in the public departments generally. There should be a considerable turnover of research men. In other words, people should move from universities into the government service, and after they have made their contribution there they should move back to the universities. In government there should be a good deal of moving from one department of research to another department, from one type of research to another. There should be moving from public research into private research, and from private research into public research.

Mr. JACKMAN: How about your leader?

Mr. HOWE: He is not in the scientific service. I believe any scientists would hold the view that I am taking now, that there should be a fluid system of employment in scientific research. Therefore the retirement fund for the national research council should be different from the civil service retirement fund in general. It should be possible for men to be able to leave the service and take their retirement fund with them. Special study is being given to that phase of the retirement fund for the national research council. There are many reasons why it is not desirable that employees of national research council be placed under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. GREEN: Do the same reasons apply in respect of the employees of these crown corporations?

Mr. HOWE: That may or may not be so. The Civil Service Act does apply to certain employees of corporations. They can be drawn from the permanent civil service and retain their status in the service, or they can be employed outside the service. It would depend on the kind of work as to whether or not it would be desirable to place employees of crown companies under the civil service.

Mr. GREEN: What is the intention with regard to the crown companies mentioned?

Mr. HOWE: The Research Council Act will apply. It provides that the employees shall be employed by order in council.

A question was asked about the committee of the privy council on industrial and scientific research. The present act makes provision for the committee, but it does not prescribe any duties for the committee, and the committee has not—

An hon. MEMBER: They do not do very much, anyway.

Mr. HOWE: No, very little, as a matter of fact. The committee has no authority or legal standing other than by being mentioned in the Research Council Act. The purpose of the amendment in this case is to give the committee certain duties and responsibilities.

Mr. GREEN: Who are the members of the committee?

Mr. HOWE: I have the honour to be chairman of the committee, and among the other members are the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Mines and Resources, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and several others whose faces are familiar to me in other capacities.

Mr. GREEN: How often does the committee meet?

Mr. HOWE: It meets to consider the annual report. The Minister of National Defence is also a member. When the duties and responsibilities are more clearly defined we hope the committee will meet much more frequently.

Mr. GREEN: What about the executive committee?

Mr. HOWE: The membership of the national research council is large. In effect that council owns the corporation and directs its activities. Its membership is made up of busy men, and it is very difficult to bring together. The purpose of the executive committee is to carry on certain duties at present being dealt with by the full council.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister said something about patents, and if I understood him correctly I gather it may be intended to have the national research council set up corporations to carry on manufacturing. I am glad to see the minister shake his head, indicating that it is not the intention under this bill for the national research council or the government to go into the manufacturing of anything that may be developed and patented. I always thought the research council did good work, that the country owed a great deal to what has been developed there, and in the past I was under the impression that when anything worth while was developed the patent was put up for sale and purchased by some company which would carry on the manufacture. Is that the way it is to be done?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am glad to hear that. In the course of his remarks the minister said something about roads and also medical research. In what way is the council to cooperate with the provinces? At present all roads, with the exception of those in the far northwest, are under the control of the provinces, though perhaps in connection with the trans-Canada highway, which is now almost completed, the government may have something to say. What would any research council in Ottawa have to do with roads? Ontario carries on its own research work in connection with road materials for the construction of provincial highways; would we not be interfering with provincial jurisdiction in that regard? I also understand that everything pertaining to medicine comes directly under the provinces. I have never heard of any federal medical college giving doctors licences to practise, so it seems to me that this matter too comes under provincial control. Something was also said about scholarships. What can the federal government do in reference to scholarships? Is that not entirely an educational question? In the past the provinces have been very jealous of their control of all matters pertaining to education.

I do not like to take from what I have heard that it is the intention of the government to continue to operate crown companies. I had hoped the government was going to get out of operating crown companies at the earliest possible moment, because no one can convince me that every crown company can operate with anything like the same degree of efficiency or economy as a private company. If I were convinced that the plant set up at Haley's had been operated economically it might be an argument in favour of crown companies, but as the minister knows, this country has already put—he will know if I am wrong, and I do not know if I am right—two or perhaps three million dollars into the proposition at Haley's; that will never come back to the country. The same thing applies to the crown company at Fort McMurray, where we have already expended approximately $2,000,000. Later I am going to try to find out what is going to be done up there. The plant has been burned down, and some insurance is due to somebody. I should say the government should take that insurance, put it into the public treasury and get out of that undertaking altogether. As far as I have observed, crown companies cannot operate with the same efficiency as private companies. Why? It is as plain as a-b-c. In a private company there is incentive to develop and produce, to sit up all night and experiment, as I have done times without number, with no extra remuneration but because it was my duty to see that the company existed and went ahead. There is not that inducement in a government institution. I had hoped that instead of creating crown companies which would remain in existence at government expense, the reverse would be the policy. There is no trick whatever in operating a company if you can put your hand into the public treasury to meet the deficits of operation. Private companies cannot do that. The factories in your riding, Mr. Chairman, cannot do that; they have to operate on a businesslike basis.

On the other hand I am firmly in favour of the research council developing what they can and proving what they can, if they at once dispose of it to the public by tender and get out of it themselves. Then I would see some hope for development along that line; but if the government is going to operate plants I just cannot see that at all. For a while some of these plants the government has set up may have to be kept in operation by the crown, until they can be advantageously disposed of. No doubt in the end there will be losses to the country. I am not going to blame anyone for that, because many of these crown companies would not have been set up if it had not been necessary to do it for war purposes. So far as that is concerned, for whatever has been achieved I congratulate those responsible for setting up companies that private industry could not and perhaps would not set up because they did not have the money with which to do it. Now that the war is over I think it is time for the government to get out of all manufacturing, with the possible exception of military production, since there seems to be quite a strong feeling that war equipment should be produced by the government.

That is about all I have to say at this stage. I am reassured by what the minister indicated when he nodded his head a couple of times, but I should be a great deal more reassured if I knew that in due course the government would be entirely out of the manufacturing of anything.

Mr. HOWE: The national research council has been taking the lead in medical research since its inception. There has been a very strong medical committee for many years, under the direction of the council, and it is the desire of the profession that these activities should be enlarged rather than restricted. There is no difference between the provinces and the dominion as to medical research. It is a little different from anything having to do with the practice of medicine. Medical research is a valuable part of the service of the national research council. The same applies to dental research. Research into road making and road building materials is also a subject, as far as science is concerned, which is and has been of interest to the council. I know the provincial governments are also interested in research. I assume anything planned in that direction will be at least with the knowledge and approval of provincial agencies.

Mr. MacNICOL: Are we not going to overlap with provinces having their own research institutions? I know there is one in Toronto. The minister's proposal is that there will be research institutions under the control of this government, which will be operating in the various provinces. If there is to be one in Ontario, for instance, how will it cooperate with the institution at Queen's Park?

Mr. HOWE: The greatest precaution is being taken to prevent overlapping of federal government research with provincial government research. I am sure there will be no overlapping.

Mr. JACKMAN: Mr. Chairman, while it is always comforting to see Mr. Speaker apply the rules not only against the humble private members but also against ministers of the crown, yet I must say I was sorry the minister did not have a chance to continue his explanation when he spoke upon the introduction of the resolution. I should hope that before long he would discuss any point which appeared in his original memorandum, even though he does not refer specifically to the sections involved.

Meantime I should like to know what is being done in respect of this great problem by other countries. This is not a problem singular only to Canada; rather it is one which the United States, Great Britain and other great powers must be working. Perhaps we could borrow some suggestions from them. On the other hand we may be blazing a trail along lines much better than the ones they are adopting.

Secondly I should like him to explain the relationship between the council, as it will be reconstructed, and the three national defence services. As the minister mentioned a while ago, the privy council committee on industrial and scientific research did not meet as frequently as it might have. We might assume from that the Department of National Defence was not as active in putting forth its point of view, or of having research carried on by the central council, as it might otherwise have been.

I should like him to speak briefly on the responsibilities for these various corporations envisaged by the minister, two of which I believe are to be formed at the present time and perhaps more in the future. What is to be the form of reporting to parliament? Will the same practice be followed as is followed by the Canadian National Railways, which reports to a parliamentary committee set up from one parliament to another? Or is it to report to a select committee of some other description? In connection with the reporting by the Canadian National Railways, I believe it is a well managed company, and one relatively free from outside influences. Yet when they appear before a parliamentary committee only for one week in a year, the background members of parliament may have acquired in the preceding year has been more or less lost in the interval. I would welcome a proposal from the minister for a committee of parliament which would have continuing interest in and supervision over the policies and general affairs of the corporations he intends to set up.

Perhaps it might be well to have an officer with functions modelled somewhat after those of the auditor general. He would be responsible to parliament, would report directly to it and not to the minister or to any agency of government. Because once the principle of private ownership and incentive is abandoned, sometimes the minute supervision so necessary to the effective carrying on of a company's operations is removed.

The matter of the relationship between federal research organizations and research laboratories, such as those mentioned by the minister as being located in the prairie provinces, British Columbia and the maritimes, has been discussed by the hon. member for Davenport. While the minister has said that every precaution has been taken to prevent overlapping, the very fear in the mind of the minister that there might be overlapping would lead one to the conclusion that certain existing research facilities could very well do the work without creating new agencies. If there is a danger of overlapping, there is the necessary implication that that which already exists is capable of doing the work. I hope the minister will be as specific as possible on this point.

Some hon. members in this section of the house are afraid that the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, who is undoubtedly able in many respects, has a tendency to gather unto himself many threads of power which soon become strong ropes. If some of the measures giving him those powers were used to their fullest capacity we would certainly find that the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply had become the economic dictator of our country. In this instance he is setting up a research organization not only in Ottawa but in the various provinces. He must be careful not to overlap with certain existing —and, in this instance—provincial research institutions.

May I say a few words with respect to patents? I understand the minister wishes to set up these corporations in order to exploit them. I do not like the use of the word "exploitation" in connection with a publicly-owned company . I think the word has been reserved to our friends of the C.C.F. who like to use it in connection with certain other forms of enterprise. As one of their witnesses before a parliamentary committee once said, the words "exploit" and "monopoly" are emotional words, and we should be very careful how we use them. I do wish to learn from the minister whether any patents evolved by the research institution will be available to private industry upon payment of reasonable fees, or is it the intention to exploit them—if you like—or develop them to their utmost, and collect as much by way of fees as possible? It is not unreasonable to expect that patents thus developed should be used to recover some of the expense which has gone into research. However we find in respect of Polymer, for instance, that that process is being used exclusively by one company. This afternoon, when the orders of the day were called, a question was asked as to the cost of producing a pound of this synthetic rubber. We were told that this information was not available, although we appear here on behalf of our constituents, and are all shareholders and owners of the company. In explanation the minister said it would be unfair to Polymer to give the information because the effect would be to give competitors in the synthetic and natural crude rubber fields an advantage to which ordinarily they would not be entitled. I cannot see that in respect of a publicly-owned corporation such as Polymer the reason given by the minister was adequate. I hope he will give the committee further information as to the fees to be charged for these patents.

The minister said that he favoured setting up separate companies because of the process of corporation accounting, and that assets and liabilities would be apparent on company statements. I hope if these separate companies are set up, and corporation accounts are kept for them, some consideration will be given, not necessarily to the appointment of private auditors, but to having the auditor general look after the auditing of the accounts of the separate companies. The auditor general's report is looked forward to every year, and he could do this work most effectively. I hope there will be no reason to feel that accounts are not properly audited as far as income and outgo are concerned. Many of us have the suspicion—sometimes it is well founded and perhaps at other times it is just a suspicion—that when a corporation is owned by the government it receives assistance from other instrumentalities of government. The Trans-Canada Air Lines, for example, has virtually a monopoly of the airways of this country. The amount of revenue that T.C.A. takes in or the expenditures which it makes are not considered in relation to the appropriations made for the Department of Transport for the upkeep of air fields in this country. Sometimes the relationship between a government-owned corporation which publishes a balance sheet showing a profit in a particular year is so close to a government department which does not operate under balance sheet accounting that the profit and loss of the corporation is lost sight of because many things are done for the corporation by the government agency which would otherwise not have been done.

Mr. NICHOLSON: How about the Canadian Pacific Air Lines? Does that company not use the same facilities?

Mr. JACKMAN: I said that the T.C.A. has virtually a monopoly in this country. That answers the question.

Will the government once and for all declare its policy with regard to municipal taxation? Many of our municipalities have had to carry a great burden during the war because large factories were erected and in some cases Wartime Housing carried on operations. The municipalities obtained no revenue from these operations, and yet they had to provide all municipal services, including education.

The profits and revenue of the national research council from year to year should be allowed to circulate instead of being revoted by the house, as was suggested by the previous speaker. In the case of Canadian National Railways any revenue above operations must, under the provisions of the 1937 Railways Act, go into the consolidated revenue fund. Then if parliament in its wisdom sees fit to vote money for capital expenditures, that is done by this house. Unless some adequate explanation is offered, I believe that the same method should be adopted in connection with the research council.

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend has touched upon many subjects, and I shall be glad to answer those that I can remember. He suggested that the accounts of the company should be audited by the auditor general or someone appointed by him. That has been taken care of already. The accounts of all crown companies are audited by the auditor general, and the public accounts give the detailed balance sheet of each crown company operation. The comments of the auditor general also apply to the conduct of crown companies. A similar provision is contained in the Research Council Act, and this would apply to any crown company organized by the council. It would be subject to audit by the auditor general and the details of its operations would be published in the public accounts. Any provision that parliament may wish to make for the examination of the annual report of the national research council is a matter for parliament.

I would suggest that the accounts of all crown companies might very well be submitted to a parliamentary committee, perhaps the committee on railways and shipping, government owned. The scope of that committee might be enlarged so that it could undertake the examination of all crown companies. That is my suggestion, but it is a matter for parliament to decide. My hon. friend is as free to move that the report of the national research council be handled in that way as is any member of the government.

Mr. JACKMAN: That committee sits but one week in the year, which means that fifty-one weeks intervene between each sitting. That makes it difficult to have any continuity. It is the responsibility of the minister to decide matters of policy. Can he suggest any way in which there would be continuity in examination of the operations of these companies?

Mr. HOWE: The auditor general exercises supervision, and the comptroller of the treasury keeps a careful check on accounts.

Mr. JACKMAN: What about policy?

Mr. HOWE: I suppose policy is the responsibility of the minister under whose jurisdiction the various companies operate.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The minister told us where the different branches of the research council were to be located, and I was surprised to hear that no provision had been made to operate a branch of the council in conjunction with the university of Toronto, which is located in perhaps the largest industrial centre in Canada. Why was that decision arrived at, and why are some of their buildings not to be used? What coordination is there between the Ontario research foundation and the national research council? On the surface it would appear that much of the expense of research work is to fall upon the shoulders of the university of Toronto.

Mr. HOWE: The university of Toronto has been closely associated with the national research council, especially during the war years. Some very substantial items of research have been carried out, and carried out successfully. I believe the amount of work that the university will carry out for the council will be limited by its capacity to handle it.

The council will be very glad to send the university any items of research which the latter feels it can carry out along with its own major activities.

The council has worked closely with all universities, and has encouraged them to take on research work organized by the national council. I think that will continue to be the policy of the national research council. So far as the research foundation of Ontario is concerned, it is my recollection that the director of the foundation is a member of the national research council. In any event he works closely with the chairman of the national research council. I do not think my hon. friend need have any fear that the work of the two organizations is not closely coordinated.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The minister said that the university of Toronto would carry on research work and that the research council would give it as much research as it could handle. I am not a graduate of the university of Toronto; I went to McGill, but the university of Toronto is a great university and has a very large student body, which at the present time are very much cramped for quarters. The minister has said that plans have been made for buildings in connection with the university of British Columbia and, I suppose, in connection with the university of Manitoba and the university of British Columbia. If new buildings are to be built in connection with these other universities the university of Toronto should receive consideration because it is a great research centre located in a large industrial centre and urgently requires additional accommodation. Some time ago hon. members brought before the house the situation in connection with Research Enterprises. I presume that those buildings are sold. At all events it does seem to me that since new buildings are to be built in connection with other universities something should be done to provide more premises for the university of Toronto.

Mr. HOWE: The national research council erects buildings for itself and not for universities, but it happens that some buildings it erects for itself are, for purposes of administration, located adjacent to universities. If my hon. friend will visit the important annex to the university of Toronto known as Ajax he will find magnificent buildings there housing a large student body. These were made available to the university by the Department of Reconstruction and Supply.

Mr. BOUCHER: This resolution provides for the creation of corporations to carry out certain powers of the research council. Order No. 10 on to-day's order paper is to provide for the operation and financing of government companies. Would the minister explain to us the relationship between the corporations to be set up under the research council and the companies contemplated in order No. 10?

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think it is competent for the committee to discuss order No. 10 while on this resolution.

Mr. HOWE: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I might be allowed to say that order No. 10 makes provision for all crown companies, and that the resolution now before us provides for the research council supervising the activities of certain crown companies.

Mr. BOUCHER: Therefore the crown companies contemplated under the resolution now under discussion will be governed by the measure contemplated under order No. 10. The minister has mentioned that he proposes to establish two companies, one for the owning and commercializing of patents, another for the Polymer Corporation, and I think he mentioned a third, for the Eldorado company. The resolution before us is to give the research council power to create and operate as many crown companies as it deems desirable. I am therefore confused by the answer given by the minister to the hon. member for Davenport that it was not proposed that the crown companies set up under this resolution would be operating companies, because most certainly Eldorado and Polymer are operating companies.

Before this resolution passes we should have a statement by the minister defining the limits of the power of the research council to create crown companies and to operate crown companies in a commercial way because, as the resolution reads, it gives almost unlimited power to the research council to establish crown corporations for any and every purpose that they could possibly conceive of as having anything to do with research.

We realize, of course, that research is one of the most important things that the House of Commons could discuss in these reconstruction days, and I think every member is zealous to see to it that Canada maintains and enlarges her research activities carried on during the war so that they can apply to peace-time industry. But we should be very careful to ensure that the research council confines its activities to research for the public benefit. I should not like to see a crown corporation set up and removed entirely from the control of parliament as some of the crown companies now are. I should not like to see any crown company established and put in a position where we would have to question any one of three or more ministers about its activities as we have to do in connection with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I would not want it to be thought that because the crown companies will produce an annual balance sheet the House of Commons will get much more information about them than if the information were contained in the auditor general's report, because that has not been the experience of the house. The fact that a financial statement of a crown company appears in the auditor general's report or in public accounts and that the statement is audited and supervised by the comptroller of the treasury or by the auditor general does not of necessity give parliament the particulars it desires of the operations of the company. I think we all will agree in this day of reconstruction that the government in carrying out the mandate of the people of Canada and administering affairs of the scope of the national research council's work should do so not behind closed doors, not in secret, not in a manner that will withhold information from competitors in private enterprise or even from other nations, but should act for the benefit of mankind and for the information of private enterprise.

The Minister of Reconstruction gave some reasons this afternoon why he thought that the cost per pound of manufacturing rubber in Polymer should not be given to the public, but the reasons did not impress many of us. Polymer operated during the war in a time of emergency for the benefit of the people of Canada, and if it is to continue in time of peace it must be prepared to show that it can operate economically and must convince its shareholders, the people of Canada, that it is a wise and prudent investment for them to continue. But we cannot get that information if the particulars are withheld from us, nor can private industry benefit by the research work done at Polymer if its research information is not to be made public. It is but the part of prudence for any man before deciding whether an enterprise is sound or not to be able to compare its efficiency in production with that of its competitors. I therefore trust that the minister will make a statement defining the scope of the power that is to be given to the national research council to create and operate crown companies. Such a statement would allay the fears of many of us and probably expedite the passage of this resolution, because then we would be in a better position to judge what course we should take.

Mr. HOWE: The purpose of the national research council is to promote research, and incidentally to the promotion of research it finds itself involved in certain business activities which it is not primarily organized to handle. For example, sixty per cent of the time of the chairman of the national research council is given to problems both of organization and of business. The purpose of the reorganization of the national research council staff is to provide assistance to the chairman, who is also director of research, and relieve him of certain business activities by placing them in the hands of corporations. As I have said, the handling of patents involves a great deal of time, and in my opinion the organization for handling patents at the moment is not adequate. I believe that a corporation which will relieve the national research council of that duty is desirable. Whether a corporation proves to be the best means of handling Chalk River I am not at the moment prepared to say, but at present it is the view of those associated with the project that it can be handled to best advantage through a corporation. Chalk River involves the administration of an industrial plant, a townsite, the purchase of raw materials and the sale of the product. It has business activities as well as research activities, and it may very well be that the scientists there would prefer to have the business administration of Chalk River handled by a corporation so that they would be free to devote all their time to science.

Mr. GREEN: Is it run by the research council now?

Mr. HOWE: No. At the moment it is being operated by the contractors who built the project. It will be turned over to the national research council when it has been thoroughly tested and can be regarded as a fully operating project.

As regards Eldorado, that is concerned wholly with producing materials which will be used by Chalk River and by similar establishments in other countries, and it may be that the direction of Eldorado should be associated with the work of the national research council through a crown company reporting to the council. It will be simply asking the management to report direct to the director of the national research council and to the board of the council rather than to the minister. I have no desire to limit the number of companies which the research council can have. If it needs twenty, then it should have twenty. I am giving it power to have crown companies, and there are very sensible people on the council, so that we can leave it to the good sense of the national research council to decide how many crown companies they should have.

Mr. BOUCHER: Will the minister make a statement regarding his intentions in the matter of limiting the scope under which any companies which may be created under this measure will operate. He has stated that the research council is interested primarily in research, but he has demonstrated the fact that he intends the research council to go into commercial production. I do not under any circumstances rest my case on limiting the number of companies that can be organized or created by the national research council, but I would ask the minister to give serious consideration to the question of limiting the scope under which the companies so created may act.

Mr. HOWE: The authority is limited in the resolution for the creation of corporations to the carrying out of certain powers of the national research council which may more conveniently be performed by a separate corporation. My hon. friend has reiterated, and so have hon. gentlemen opposite, that a corporation removes the operations from the control of parliament, and he bases that belief on the fact that I am not prepared to give the cost of producing rubber at Polymer last month. Does he know what it cost to produce rubber at any other plant last month? I can tell the selling price. Does he know, for example, what the cost of producing motors at General Electric is? The purpose of crown corporations is to publish a financial statement once every year. That is done through the annual report which is published in the public accounts of Canada. I hope we shall not hear too much about my not being prepared to give the cost of producing rubber at Sarnia last month.

Mr. BOUCHER: It is not merely a question of rubber. I think the minister will agree with me that it has been proved that scientists are not great administrators; or perhaps that it has not been proved that scientists are great administrators. When it come to putting in the hands of crown companies, engaged in research, matters of business management, I believe the minister will agree with me that some limit should be put to the scope of the operations of the concerns which are so created. He has not answered that.

Mr. HOWE: One object of the legislation is to appoint a vice-president of the council who will be a business man in charge of business administration. At the moment we are trying to correct that weakness in seeking the power to form companies. I am not putting a limitation on that.

Mr. JOHNSTON: The hon. member for Carleton asked a question and I am not sure whether the minister answered it clearly. I understood the hon. member to ask whether the information obtained as a result of researches carried out by the national research council would be made public or be given to private enterprise. My understanding is that such information will be made public in connection with the development of any process after it has been proved successful. I believe the minister indicated that at the end of the year, in their annual report, information on these various researches will be made public. Is that so?

Mr. HOWE: Steps are being taken for a wide dissemination of the results of research. I have told the house on a previous occasion that the Department of Reconstruction and Supply has a particular branch devoted to making the results of research immediately available to industry, and the national research council is made acquainted with the requirements of industry in the direction of research. In every province a representative of the department will consider any problems of research that may be helpful to the economy of that province. Further, the research council will make its library available to industry or to any user of scientific information, and if necessary, it will initiate research to supply any deficiency in available information. The latter would probably be at the expense of a business firm which might require the information. However, discoveries of the national research council are patented and it is now the practice to patent all discoveries of reasonable value. Many are in use and many patent holders already pay fees to the council for the use of the patents. Hon. members will agree that anyone wishing to use a patent of the national research council should pay its full market value, and it is to obtain the revenue that should properly come from the patents of the council that the proposed corporation to handle patents is to be established.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Will it be possible for any private enterprise to acquire a patent from the research council and then, as has often been suggested is the practice of some establishment—whether it is true I am not in a position to say—to hang the patent on the wall and simply keep it there? Would the research council have some control over private enterprise and make it develop and market these patents which it gets?

Mr. HOWE: In that case it is the practice of the national research council to lease the non-exclusive use of the patent. I cannot say that it is done in every case, but I think the council will retain the right to grant the use of the patents to more than one user.

Mr. JOHNSTON: The minister spoke of different branches of research being set up in the different provinces in order to spread the activities uniformly throughout the country. That is commendable. They should be scattered throughout the dominion. Does the minister contemplate the setting up of a branch of this research work in Alberta and also in Saskatchewan?

Mr. HOWE: They are there to-day.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Will there be an expansion, or will they be left as they are?

Mr. HOWE: I am speaking of the representatives of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply who are agents of the national research council. There are representatives of the department located in Edmonton, Regina and Winnipeg. They are being kept busy supplying information that seems to be required in those provinces.

Mr. JOHNSTON: So far, our discussion seems to have been directed along industrial lines. The national research council seems to be endeavouring to broaden the field. In listening to the minister I heard him speak of research in the medical field. That is admirable, but we should extend our research effort into the economic field. At this point may I congratulate the hon. member for Lethbridge on the recommendations he made for research into the proper distribution of goods. What efforts will be made toward research in the medical field? I mention that because, like many other hon. members, I have received many letters about the terrible disease of arthritis. There does not seem to be any material progress made in that field. Then there is cancer, which has been brought before the house on other occasions, especially by the late member for Portage la Prairie, who was especially interested in that subject, and took an active part in the discussion. This is one field in which the research council could do important work. It could assist in other ways. It could assist in research into the control and elimination of not only cancer but also arthritis. It is all very well to speak of the economic standard of our people, but if the national health is deteriorating, then the national economy will also deteriorate. Efforts should be made by the research council to extend their studies into the medical field to see what can be done with these two diseases, cancer and arthritis. Is any progress being made along that line?

Mr. HOWE: The direction of medical research is in the hands of a committee of the national research council, on which the medical societies of Canada have representation. I cannot say what work is being conducted in the two particular fields mentioned. Of course, many millions of dollars are being spent at the present time in many countries on cancer research. Certain research is being carried on here, but I cannot say to what extent. All the scientific information in that field is pooled and we sincerely hope that a cure can be found for cancer, which is the greatest killer of all diseases. However, the medical councils of the country decide the lines of activity which will be followed in medical research. The purpose is to make the funds available to the council go as far as possible, and to undertake lines of research which will be most helpful to the Canadian public.

Mr. JOHNSTON: The same answer would apply to arthritis?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: Does the national research council get in touch with the various foundations that are dealing with these diseases? There is a disease called disseminated sclerosis, which is a mysterious one, and which is attacking people to-day. I know there is a foundation in New York which is studying this disease. I wondered whether our research council kept in touch with the foundations that are dealing with these particular types of diseases.

Mr. HOWE: Yes. Our national research council maintains in Washington an office with a considerable personnel for that specific purpose. It also has an office and staff in London, England. It has facilities for obtaining the results of discoveries in any part of the world.

Mr. NICHOLSON: This afternoon a good deal has been said about the Polymer Corporation. I should like to remind the committee that after Pearl Harbor, when our supply of natural rubber disappeared, the firms which normally might be expected to manufacture rubber were not particularly interested in risking any of their capital. Had not the minister in his wisdom been prepared to invest $50 million of Canadian money in this project, the war might not have ended as soon as it did. Now that it has been demonstrated that a high quality of synthetic rubber can be made by Polymer, there are those who think the government should retire from this field. The minister would be wise not to pay too much attention to those who argue that the free enterprisers should have clear sailing in this field in which the people have invested $50 million. I believe it has been demonstrated that the quality of the rubber compares favourably with rubber made anywhere on the continent. The facilities there are adequate to make all we need here and some for export. Should we now at this stage decide that there should be five, six, seven or a dozen similar plants in the country, or shall we continue to use the facilities that are there? Hon. members to my right can be assured that the operation of this corporation will be reviewed by the people's representatives in this parliament from time to time, just as the operations of the Canadian National Railways, and the Trans-Canada Air Lines are reviewed from time to time by the people's representatives, and that a satisfactory explanation can be given for the operation. Even the most ardent supporters of the Canadian Pacific Railway company cannot make a very good case against the publicly-owned railways.

Earlier this afternoon the minister said that it would be a splendid thing to have men working in research work move freely from university to research council, from research council into private enterprise, or back into universities. I do not share this view. A research problem is something a man cannot pick up and handle in a short time. There are men who are working on one problem for a lifetime. Those who are in the national research council should be placed in a position so that they might continue in the government service for their lifetime if there were a chance of making a decent livelihood. It is a pity that they should be obliged to leave the national research council or any public organization to go to private enterprise at a time when they are bringing up a family and are not receiving enough to make ends meet. We have had a number of distinguished scientists attached to the national research council who have been working, certainly during the war years, on compensation entirely out of line with the service they perform. It is extremely difficult to estimate in dollars and cents what some of this research has meant. I understand that at the national research council glycol has been made from low grade wheat. It has been used in cars as anti-freeze and compares favourably with Prestone. I see no reason why, when the people have spent so much money in developing a process of this kind, we should not go on and develop it, sell it to our people and find a market for our low grade wheat, and at the same time provide our car drivers with a suitable anti-freeze at a lower price than we normally pay for Prestone.

I am very glad to hear that additional money is to be spent in western Canada. I am sure the people of Saskatchewan will be pleased to learn that Doctor Larmour has been selected to direct the activities of the research council in that province. He is one of our own graduates, a man who enjoys the confidence and respect of scientists across the country, and I am sure he will do a very good job. I am heartily in favour of research on the ground, as it were, when we have so many products going to waste. I consider it quite conceivable that during our lifetime, for instance, we may find some use for the wheat straw that is destroyed in such large quantities every year. I think it is not too much to expect that if the federal government will spend a little money in the initial stages they may do research work that will pay attractive dividends from a long-term point of view.

I should like the minister to reconsider the matter which was raised earlier, of having the employees of the national research council move freely back and forth from the university to the council, where they will get their training, and then to privately owned organizations, which will obtain the benefit of the research that has been carried on. I do not think these men should be encouraged to leave for salary reasons. I see no reason why the taxpayers cannot pay salaries as attractive as those paid by private organizations. Therefore, in formulating his plans for the future I should like the minister to make upward revisions in the salaries paid to the scientists of the research council, so that none of these men will feel obliged to leave for financial reasons.

Mr. BROOKS: I was pleased to hear the minister say that it was the intention to decentralize the work of the national research council. If that principle could be applied also to manufacturing in this country it would be a great benefit to all. The minister said that a research branch would be set up in the maritime provinces. I should like to ask at what point he contemplates setting up this branch and what particular work it is proposed to do. At the present time, for instance, we have a fish experimental station at St. Andrews. I should like to know whether the work of the council would be correlated with the work of the fisheries departments, both dominion and provincial.

In connection with the method of disposing of these patents, I understand they are not sold outright to any particular company but are given to the companies for the development of certain articles. Would different companies be allowed to bid for the patent, or would the council itself decide what particular company should obtain a certain patent? Then, if that company did not deal with it satisfactorily, could the council exercise its authority at a later time and take away from any particular company a patent which the council felt had not been developed to the fullest possible extent? These are questions the minister might answer, if he will.

Mr. WRIGHT: I have one other question somewhat along the same line which the minister might answer when he is replying to the last speaker. I was wondering what research work the council does on behalf of other governmental bodies in Canada, that is, municipal and provincial governments. The provincial governments have control of our natural resources, and a vast amount of research work could be done in connection with the best uses to be made of those resources. Does the national research council do this work for the provinces, and what are the financial arrangements as between the dominion and the various municipal or provincial governments?

Mr. HOWE: As far as research facilities in the maritime provinces are concerned, I simply said that they were being contemplated. I doubt if the study of the matter has reached the point where we can determine the exact location or the exact nature of the work. However, the work will be supplementary and additional to the work at present being carried on. In any event there is nothing in this resolution dealing with that particular enterprise, and I am not at the moment prepared to be any more definite than that. Feld representatives of the branch are operating in the maritime provinces, in association with the Department of Reconstruction and Supply.

The policy in connection with the use of patents is determined by the national research council, and in future will be determined by the council operating through the proposed corporations. I assume the policies would vary, having regard to the nature of the patents and the use to which they were to be put. For example, perhaps the most valuable patent owned by the council, at least the one I know most about, is concerned with turning ammonia nitrate into prills. When ammonia nitrate was first put on the market as fertilizer by Canada it was referred to in the southern states as tombstone fertilizer. It was found because of moisture, that if a bag were left out in the open for two or three weeks it would turn into a pillar of concrete. Employees of the government working at Calgary discovered a way to turn this material into small pellets known as prills, and by manufacturing fertilizer in that way we have found a method of marketing our surplus ammonia in a satisfactory form. That patent is owned by the national research council. We have applications from almost every country making ammonia for the use of the patent, and a policy is being studied in that connection.

Mr. FRASER: Do you collect royalties on any patents?

Mr. HOWE: We certainly will if we dispose of it. At the moment it is owned by the government and is being used in government plants, but if we dispose of the patent outside Canada we will dispose of the use of it for a price, and we have decided in that case the policy will be only to dispose of the non-exclusive use. In other words, we may license a company to use it, but will not give that company a monopoly in any territory.

Mr. COLDWELL: What was the annual salary of the young fellow who discovered that process?

Mr. HOWE: He was one of our more expensive men. I should like to make it clear that in referring to a turnover of scientists it was not my purpose to suggest that the national research council should starve them out. I believe most scientists like to move from field to field, and my feeling is that it is a good thing for them to do so. I have always encouraged young engineers who have been associated with me to try somebody else after a time, to broaden their experience. I think it is a good thing for scientists to move from laboratory to laboratory and in that way build up their background.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is what we recommend to the people of Canada.

Mr. HOWE: But unfortunately you have not provided suitable alternatives. In science we have good men coming along to replace the people who leave us, and that seems to be the great difficulty in government circles.

The hon. member for Melfort asked a question in regard to financial arrangements as between provincial and federal governments. Matters of science are treated as matters of interest to all the people. I do not think there is any exchange of funds as between the federal government and the provincial governments, unless in connection with a problem in which both are interested, but which is assigned to one, along with a financial grant. I believe the national research council would be prepared to undertake any problem it thought was of importance to any part of Canada. For example, research into the use of wheat for glycol is being carried on by the national research council as one of its projects, and I presume that would be one of the projects transferred to the laboratory in Saskatchewan for further development.

Mr. MURPHY: Mr. Chairman, I had not thought that Nos. 10 and 14 on the order paper would interlock to such a great extent. What I shall have to say will refer more particularly to No. 10, and I shall say it at a later time.

The point which now concerns me has to do with research chemists, as it applies to Polymer, and also as it may apply to many other corporations. We know that in the development of Polymer time was a big factor, and that both governments obtained the support of engineers and chemists not only from the United States and Canada but from Europe.

What concerns me now is that in the area of Sarnia, where Polymer is located, there is a tendency on the part of many of these chemists, some of whom were employed by the Imperial Oil company, to terminate their contracts with Polymer. I am advised that some of the top men in Polymer who were most instrumental in the production of rubber so quickly, when time was an important factor, have the option of returning to Imperial Oil within a year, and that by doing so they will be eligible to take advantage of the retirement and pension schemes offered by that company.

I know, and I have no doubt the minister knows, that inducements are being offered to the head chemists at Polymer by private industry. I hope that in order to preserve this important industry the minister will see to it that we retain our top chemists, scientific research men and engineers. After all is said and done, we know what private industry will pay men of a high calibre. In this connection, one might compare what is paid to the head chemist of Imperial Oil with the amount paid to the head chemist at Polymer. If Polymer wishes to have men equal in ability to those employed by the private company, an inducement by way of price must be held out. We are alarmed at the fact that many of these men will be leaving, although they still have eleven months to serve. However, this fact leads us to doubt the permanency of the plant, and we want assurance that the head chemists will be retained.

I am not so much concerned about the question which seemed to bother some hon. members this afternoon. A week ago last Tuesday the minister gave the price of rubber, and also the price of it last September and October. I notice there has been very little change. I also notice that some of his employees in the Polymer Corporation have given out prices of rubber from time to time. I do not see how it can be any great secret. I am not quarreling about the minister's not answering the question because, after all is said and done, some of this information can be obtained later. A week ago last Tuesday the minister told us that the price was 20½ cents; and why he had to reject the question to-day, I do not know.

Mr. HOWE: The question was as to the cost of producing rubber. I am willing at any time to publish from the roof tops the selling price of rubber. But the question asked was as to the cost of producing rubber last month. While I may be willing to tell the house that last month was the best month we ever had, so far as costs are concerned, yet I am not anxious to tell the world what it costs us from month to month to produce rubber at Sarnia.

Mr. MURPHY: I did not ask it from month to month.

Mr. HOWE: I think the hon. member did, as a matter of fact. This is the question:

1. What is the present cost per pound for the production of the different types of rubber produced by the Polymer Corporation Limited?

The present cost would be the cost per month. Then he asked:

2. What was the cost of the production of the different types of rubber by the Polymer Corporation Limited during each quarter for the year ending March 31, 1945-March 31, 1946?

We are attempting to hold our research staff at Polymer. We need that staff, to keep up to date. Through the research work carried on at Polymer we have substantially improved the quality of our rubber.

The St. Clair Processing Company Limited had on loan from Imperial Oil certain chemists involved in plant operation. Now that the St. Clair Processing Company Limited is no longer in charge of operations at Polymer, some of those chemists are returning to Imperial Oil. Polymer has a permanent staff of chemists. The head chemist came to us from the oil industry. He left that industry to come to us, and I have heard nothing to indicate that he intends to leave us to return to that industry, at least in the near future.

We were admitted to the patent pool, which controls all the rubber patents, on the undertaking that Polymer would spend a certain amount of money each year on research work, and that the results from such research would be turned into the pool. We are carrying out that obligation. We believe that our contributions to the pool of information respecting synthetic rubber are well up to the expectations of those who admitted us to the pool.

Mr. FLEMING: I have several questions to ask, and I am prepared to submit them separately or in a group.

Mr. HOWE: I can remember only one thing at a time.

Mr. FLEMING: Then perhaps I should put them individually. First: Was the advisory committee under the act consulted about the present bill, and particularly that feature of it which contains the proposal respecting the setting up of companies?

Mr. HOWE: The bill was framed by the director of the national research council, and I have every reason to believe that he consulted his committee before recommending it to the government.

Mr. FLEMING: We have heard about many aspects of these companies, but I do not think the minister has told us anything about the method of financing. Is it proposed that the national research council should have power to finance the companies out of its budget, or is some other method of financing to be followed? I take it that they require some financing, even if they are only patent holding companies.

Mr. HOWE: Funds must be provided either from those voted to the national research council, or through funds voted specifically for the purpose by parliament. The cost of operating a patent corporation would be no greater than that of employing those persons who at present deal with patents on behalf of the corporation. I believe that no new funds would be required in that respect.

Eldorado has funds and working capital. It is an operating company, and we would assume it has an income sufficient to carry out its obligations. Chalk River would undoubtedly require an appropriation by parliament. If it is operated through a corporation, parliament would need to provide working capital for the operations at Chalk River, and probably in addition, some annual appropriations in the initial stages to provide for the experiments carried on at that point.

Mr. FLEMING: The resolution refers to the provision to be made for the superannuation, pension and other rights of the employees of the corporation. Has any basis been contemplated for general application to such companies? I am particularly concerned about a comparison with the pension and superannuation provisions for civil servants.

Mr. HOWE: Any superannuation plan for government employees is examined by the superintendent of insurance and by the civil service commission. Obviously, the government would not permit any superannuation plan to be established which was out of line with government practice in other directions, but the form of superannuation benefits differs as between industries. For example. the rubber corporation is closely associated with the petroleum industry, and it would require a form of superannuation which would not be dissimilar to that in effect in the industry with which it is associated. The same would probably be true with the other corporations. The purpose is not to set up a standard plan for all crown companies and the national research council, but to work out plans specially adapted to the requirements of each industry.

Mr. FLEMING: They will not necessarily be the same as among the different companies?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. FLEMING: Could the minister say a word as to the extent to which an expansion of research work is contemplated, provided that the bill goes into effect? I take it that there will be an enlargement of the executive of the council, and I should like to know if there is to be a corresponding enlargement of the staff as well as a programme to retain scientists in Canada. We all know that many scientists have drifted to the United States, and one of the chief reasons given for this is that the salary inducement in Canada is not adequate to keep them here. This is a matter of great concern to us all.

Mr. HOWE: As I said, prior to the war the personnel of the national research council numbered 300; it is now about 2,000. The purpose of this bill is to expand the structure of the council in order to permit it to administer the number of scientists who are at present under its control. We are adding vice-presidents and enlarging the administrative staff at the top. With regard to salaries, as my hon. friend knows a royal commission is now investigating higher salaries in the public service, and the civil service commission is considering a new scale of salaries for the national research council. I hope that we can improve the salary position of our scientists so that it will be comparable at least with that in other countries which are competing with us for scientists.

However, there is an acute shortage of scientists throughout this continent and abroad. I suppose the atomic energy development has in a measure been responsible for this, but the fact remains that any man of science can step out into industry to-day and double or treble his salary. I say that without fear of contradiction. I know of tremendous salaries being offered to men who are working here in Canada. These offers are sometimes made by Canadian industry and sometimes, perhaps more often, by industry abroad. That is the situation, and until we can develop more good scientists it will be difficult for the national research council to hold its personnel.

Mr. FLEMING: In the auditor general's last report there is one reference which troubles me. There was some discussion this afternoon about the audit of receipts and expenditures of the research council by the auditor general, as provided for by section 12 of the act. I should like to quote paragraph 225 of the auditor general's report for the year ended March 31, 1945, to be found on page 52. It reads:

225. The council caused an addition to be constructed to the medical laboratory of Queen's university. The addition is currently regarded as a public work of Canada. The contract, dated October 25, 1944, with Doran Construction Company, Limited, was executed on behalf of the council by Professor G. B. Reed of the university. The plans and specifications were prepared by the Department of National Defence. The contract is on a cost-plus-a-fee basis.

The contractor has been paid a fee of $1,000 and a further $1,500 for engineering, superintendence and other services. Total expenditures of $23,625.38 have been charged to war appropriation. Attention is drawn to the transaction because the records do not disclose either that tenders were invited or consent of the governor in council sought, as is required by section 36 of the Public Works Act.

Would the minister make a statement about what happened in connection with that particular matter, having particular reference to the concluding sentence?

Mr. HOWE: I shall be glad to inquire about it. I did not notice that reference in the auditor general's report. I think those who are best acquainted with the council realize that its business administration has not been all that could be desired. All matters are referred to the president of the council who should be occupied almost wholly on the scientific rather than the business side. One of the purposes of this bill is to provide a business administrator who will be more careful about transactions of the type indicated. I think it is quite possible that the council, having the funds, went ahead without obtaining the consent of the government which is necessary when public works are being constructed.

Mr. PROBE: I should like to commend the Minister of Reconstruction for introducing the general policy which is implied in this resolution. I feel he is pursuing a wise course in setting up corporations within the national research council to look after necessary business functions which are bound to be involved when these men, who are test-tube people, make important discoveries. I hope that the patents which will result from their efforts will be utilized properly for the benefit of the people of Canada. In deference to the hon. member for Rosedale, I will watch my use of the word "exploited" because there are so many connotations of the word. I hope that this will be a corporation which will have the efficiency which private industry prides itself on being able to show. I hope that we shall be able to come back in a year or two and point with pride to the fact that this corporation has been run on a commercial basis. To that end I should like to bring forward a matter in the auditor general's report which I believe the Minister of Reconstruction should take up with the co-ordinating committee. This would seem to indicate a loss of revenue to the national research council. I would refer the committee to page 14, paragraph 41, of the auditor general's report of 1945, which contains this statement:

The bureau of mines collected $1,481.93 for assays and analyses . . .

It then goes on to state:

Scales of fees exist, but most of the work is done without charge. The bureau's chemical laboratories performed 24,524 determinations, 1,566 gold assays and 294 silver assays in the year. These include tests made for other divisions. The scales of fees for such tests range from $2 to $7. Had all been assessed even the minimum rate, the revenue would have been $52,768. The actual revenue received was $1,481.93.

In view of the fact that a comparable activity, the national research council, makes charges for work performed, attention is drawn to this department's policy.

The minister stated earlier this afternoon that the Minister of Mines and Resources was on the privy council committee on scientific research. Here we have two public departments doing valuable work for people who might be considered the friends of the hon. member for Rosedale, who speaks of the efficiency of private enterprise. These two departments are doing a service for private enterprise. There is a scale of fees in the Department of Mines and Resources, but apparently the fees are not levied by the bureau of mines, while the fees are levied by the national research council. If we are to have research run on a commercially sound basis I submit to the Minister of Reconstruction that he should get together with the Minister of Mines and Resources and say: Either your department can go ahead and do this work without charge if you think that is in the public interest, or we will do the work under national research council and charge and collect our nominal fees. Would the minister indicate why this conflict apparently exists between the two departments in the matter of assays and determinations.

Mr. HOWE: I would hardly call it a conflict. The Department of Mines and Resources has a policy of collecting fees but apparently someone is not collecting them. I presume, now that the auditor general has called attention to the matter, the fees will be collected. The research council has also a scale of fees. I would not like to guarantee that full fees are collected in every case, but with better administration we could see that they are collected.

Mr. PROBE: They are collected by national research council but not in the other case, and therefore the bureau of mines is working as a free agent. That does not seem quite right.

Mr. HOWE: Yes, I agree.

Mr. HAZEN: There is a question I should like to ask. It may not be an important one, but it has to do with a matter that is not clear to me after reading this resolution and the preceding one, which is No. 13 on the order paper. The question is this: What, if anything, will the research council have to do in the future with the investigation, research and development of atomic power? I ask that question in view of the resolution which is No. 13 on the order paper, which provides for the setting up of a corporation to be known as the atomic energy control board, to have control and supervision over the development, application and use of atomic energy. Will the board that is to be set up under resolution No. 13 control the activities of the research council so far as atomic energy is concerned? Was any attention given to making the atomic energy control board a part of and come under the research council, or why was it made, as it apparently is to be, altogether separate from the research council? The minister said that Eldorado would come under the research council and that Chalk river might. Why should Eldorado not come under the atomic energy control board rather than under the research council?

Mr. HOWE: The atomic energy control board is primarily a policy board. There is only one appointment to the board that is ex-officio, and that is the president of the national research council. There are other obvious appointments to a policy board. One would be the representative of the government of Canada on the international atomic energy commission. There would be other interests that would have an important contribution to make to the policy governing atomic energy.

The operation of the Chalk River plant, however, would be associated with the national research council. The atomic energy commission would determine policy in the use of the product and in disseminating knowledge of atomic energy as it affects the people as a whole. But the operation of the Chalk River plant would naturally and, I think, necessarily be under the direction of the national research council, from which it would draw practically all its scientists.

Mr. HAZEN: Policy is a matter for the government.

Mr. HOWE: The government will be advised by a commission in this case.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): Speaking of Polymer a little while ago, the minister stated that that company was a member of a patents pool. What are the names of the other members of the pool?

Mr. HOWE: All the manufacturers of synthetic rubber on this continent.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): Principally the big oil companies; is that not right?

Mr. HOWE: I think the big oil companies own certain plants, but in any event all the patents available on this continent at the time this work was needed were acquired by the government of the United States and were made available under certain conditions to those wishing to use them for war purposes. We availed ourselves of them. We could not have built the rubber plant without them; we could not have obtained the information required to build it. But we met the conditions and obtained the use of the information, as did others who were commissioned to build synthetic rubber plants at that time.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): Are there any restrictions on those belonging to the pool? Could a private enterprise group in Canada, if it wanted to, build another factory for the manufacture of synthetic rubber, or is there monopoly control?

Mr. HOWE: If they could get the use of the information, yes. I think it would be very difficult for any private group to-day to obtain all the necessary information on synthetic rubber and build a plant.

Mr. Chairman, I have on the order paper three resolutions that I should like to deal with, and perhaps hon. members would allow this resolution to pass now since we have had a long discussion about it.

Mr. GREEN: Some members of the opposition desire to ask further questions.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am not ready to let it pass yet.

Mr. COLDWELL: Will the minister take the resolution under order No. 13 next? The same questions will arise there.

Mr. HOWE: I had in mind to finish the resolution under order No. 10 first, where the same questions will arise, and then we could take No. 13.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): As I said earlier in the day, we are all entirely in favour of the continuation and extension of the work of the national research council. The minister explained that one of the proposals under the bill would be that the council, it was hoped, would make certain discoveries through scientific work, which discoveries would be made the subject of patents and in proper cases be made available for use in ordinary business and private enterprise. He also indicated, as the resolution itself indicates—and it is in this regard that I wish to ask him a question—that several corporations might be set up which the council would in fact operate and manage. When he first spoke he mentioned two or three of these corporations, but later in the afternoon I understood him to intimate that there might be a considerable number. I can understand the operations of the national research council; I can understand their making discoveries; I can understand these discoveries being made available by means of sale or lease as the case may be. But what is of importance, regarding which I should like to have some further information, is this. One or two cases were mentioned by the minister—Polymer, Eldorado and, I believe Canadian Arsenals. Will he indicate what he considers to be the kind of cases in which there might be further corporations—and by that I understood him to mean corporations, some of which, at any rate, might be carrying on some kind of business? Will he indicate the general principles which will underlie the formation of these further corporations?

Mr. HOWE: It has never been the practice of the national research council to go into the manufacturing business. For example, even during the war, all scientific discoveries in the field of radar made by the council were developed commercially elsewhere. At that time the work of the council stopped in making one prototype. A new radar device would be invented by the research council, and a prototype made, which would then be sent to Research Enterprises for manufacture, the actual manufacturing details being worked out by the crown company which was not associated with the national research council.

The present policy would be for the national research council to make the prototype. It would then be sent to a private industry, which would work out the manufacturing details and put the device on the market, or manufacture it for the armed services, as the case might be. This will continue to be the policy so far as this government is concerned. It has been decided as a matter of policy that the work formerly performed by Research Enterprises Limited will now be done by private interests. In other words, with the liquidation of Research Enterprises, it is not proposed, in future, to perform through crown companies the work which was formerly done by Research Enterprises.

The crown companies supervised by the research council will be those which will deal with the business side of the national research council. For example, in my opinion, the marketing of patents must necessarily be associated with the national research council. Further, experiments on atomic energy must, of necessity be a part of the work of the research council, and so large a part of the staff connected with that project should logically be associated with the council. If Chalk River is associated with the council, Eldorado, which furnishes the raw material for Chalk River, should also possibly be associated with the council. It has not, however, been decided finally whether Chalk River and Eldorado will be associated with the national research council. These, together with the parent corporation, are the crown companies which are envisaged at the moment. There may be one as the minimum; there may be three as the maximum. If I mentioned Polymer I did so inadvertently. It is not proposed that Polymer will be placed under the national research council.

Mr. MacNICOL: It could be disposed of by and by.

Mr. HOWE: It could be, or it could be operated under some department of government. The latter would be the logical development for Polymer.

Mr. MacNICOL: The first two should be under the government.

Mr. HOWE: They are closely associated with the work of the research council; and inevitably, for several years, they will be scientific establishments rather than commercial establishments. We hope that in time Chalk River will develop a commercial establishment and, if it does, probably it should be withdrawn from the research council, and put under another department of government.

Mr. MacNICOL: Or disposed of.

Mr. HOWE: I hope I have made the position clear. It is not intended that the research council shall go into the manufacturing business. That has not been the policy to date, and, as now contemplated, will not be the policy in the future.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Perhaps I might make sure that I have understood fully what the minister has said, and to do so I might sum it up in this way. I understand the minister to have said that the companies he has in mind will be companies necessitated by scientific operations of the research council or by such business dealings as are incidental to those scientific operations.

Mr. HOWE: That is correct, yes.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I should like to correct an impression I may have left in the minister's mind. Before the recess he said that he did not intend to put up buildings for the University of Toronto. I never asked him to do so. What I had in mind was this. With the large university there, and all the work they have done, it seemed to me that one of the branches of the research council might very well be set up in Toronto. I may have left a wrong impression in his mind in that regard. The minister also said that we have done pretty well by the university of Toronto because we have allowed them to have the buildings of Ajax. I should like to make a correction there too. It is not a question of allowing them to have the buildings of Ajax, but the university of Toronto wanted to do work in connection with the rehabilitation of men returning from overseas. They have at present more applications than can possibly be taken care of. They could take a good many more if they had more room. I do not wish the government to get the idea that they are doing the university of Toronto a favour in that respect, because for every student who goes there it costs them money. I just wanted to get that straight.

During the war a great many crown companies were formed. How many of these companies were formed by order in council and how many by acts of parliament? Is it proposed under this bill that the companies which are to be formed will be formed by individual acts of parliament to be discussed here before the companies are formed?

Mr. HOWE: The provision of the bill is that companies will be formed under the provisions of an act of parliament, part I of The Companies Act, and therefore a separate act is not required.

Mr. MacINNIS: I do not wish to say very much at this time because I believe we are wasting time on discussion that should take place on second reading of the bill or when the bill is in committee. At that time we shall have more information before us and we can discuss the matter much more intelligently. All we have to do now is to approve the principle outlined in the resolution which is fairly clear. If we do that, then the matter of the setting-up of the companies and all the other matters mentioned in the resolution will appear in the bill.

A moment ago the minister said that it was not finally settled whether the Chalk River undertaking would be associated with the national research council. It would be a bold man who would say to-day that anything is finally settled. We are in a world that is moving fast. An indication of that is the bill which is about to be brought before us. Ten years ago or even seven years ago it would be unthinkable to have a resolution such as this introduced into the Canadian parliament. We should not really concern ourselves as to whether or not the matter is finally settled. Conditions will determine what changes are to be made.

So far as we of this group are concerned, our leader made our position quite clear this afternoon. I support the principle of the resolution and I think we should get on with the bill as quickly as possible. At that time we shall be able to discuss it much more intelligently than we can now.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Howe thereupon moved for leave to introduce bill No. 154, to amend the Research Council Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. GREEN: This afternoon the minister had not quite finished making his statement with regard to this measure. It would be helpful if he could finish his statement at this stage rather than waiting until we are on second reading.

Mr. HOWE: It is understood that the bill is read the first time. Perhaps it would be in order for me to finish the statement.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: There is no debate on first reading.

Mr. GREEN: Just to finish his statement.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Moved by Mr. Howe, seconded by Mr. Glen, that the bill be now read a second time.

Mr. GREEN: No; next sitting of the house.

Mr. STIRLING: Even though debate on first reading is not permissible I wonder whether, with unanimous consent, permission could be given to the minister to complete the statement which he began to make and was prevented from doing this afternoon. The reason I ask that is that we shall have the bill in our hands soon and it would facilitate later consideration to a great extent if the statement could be completed.

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Speaker, is it not usual to give the bill second reading and then consider the details in committee? Would not the bill have to be read a second time or passed into committee before the minister can make a further statement? It seems to me that this afternoon Mr. Speaker called the minister to order because he was about to discuss the various sections of the bill. If he was out of order then, surely he would be out of order now.

Mr. STIRLING: I think it will be agreed that with unanimous consent we could listen to the remainder of the statement.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am not going to object to that.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I understand there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am not objecting to it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: There is nothing before the house.

Mr. GREEN: There is no objection.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I would suggest that after second reading is moved the minister can make his statement and the matter can then stand over.

Mr. JOHNSTON: We should have a look at the bill before it gets second reading. The minister can make any explanation he wishes now; I have no objection to that, but we should have the bill before us. I have not yet seen it.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. HOWE: In the circumstances perhaps we can adjourn the debate and I shall make the statement immediately on second reading. Will that be satisfactory?

Mr. JOHNSTON: Take up the other resolutions.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Second reading will be given at the next sitting of the house.

GOVERNMENT COMPANIES

OPERATIONS AND FINANCING—SUPERANNUATION AND PENSION PROVISIONS, ETC.

The house resumed from Tuesday, May 14, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Howe—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the operation and financing of government companies, to define their status as agents to His Majesty, and to provide further for the superannuation, pension or other rights of the employees of such companies.

Mr. MURPHY: In a brief statement this afternoon I mentioned that I was primarily concerned with the Polymer Corporation, which is one of the companies affected by this particular resolution. Since the Polymer Corporation happens to be in my riding I should like to make some comments on this resolution. First of all, I wish to say that I appreciate the fact that this particular industry is located at the particular place where it is, which, after all, is the logical place for its location. As everyone knows, this plant is on the great lakes, and is next door to the Imperial Oil refinery. While Imperial Oil happen to be the largest refiners in the British empire, they have several refineries in Canada, and the largest in this country is at Sarnia. So that obviously this was the natural and logical place for the Polymer Corporation.

I think I should say in the beginning that we all appreciate the fact that after Pearl Harbor it became absolutely necessary that we manufacture rubber immediately. Time was of the utmost importance; cost was not. We were in a state of emergency; we were all concerned with producing rubber in order to prosecute the war successfully, and producing rubber as quickly as we could. With that in mind, this country and the United States, with support received from other scientific sources, were able to gather together a very considerable group of scientists, research engineers and chemists who pooled their knowledge to bring about the manufacture of rubber in this country. At that time we in Canada had the support of some of the most capable men in our industrial life. On the board of directors when the Polymer Corporation was incorporated we had men such as Mr. Campbell, president of the Ford Motor company, the president of Goodyear Tire, and other men of high reputation who, working with that body of scientists, were able to get together and perform a miracle. I have no hesitation in telling this committee now that, as a result, Canada was in the lead in the development of synthetic rubber, something of which we may all be proud.

I am speaking as the member for that riding. As a matter of fact this plant is located in the township in which I live. As a crown corporation it is not liable to taxation, which of course is also the case in other ridings in which crown corporations are located.

Another aspect of the question, with which I should like to deal a little later, is the security of the men who carry their dinner buckets, who are vitally interested in whether or not the present operation is continued.

I wish to deal first with the matter of taxation. The minister stated that some $50 million had been invested in this corporation. I do not attempt to suggest that if this were a private corporation that entire amount would be subject to taxation. We all know that, while land and buildings would be liable to taxation, under our assessment act the municipal assessment or taxation would be on but a small part of that total. According to the company's statement as of March 31, 1944, I find that the capital for land and buildings was in the neighbourhood of $7,000,000, in round figures, while the capital as of March 31, 1945, was about $1,250,000 more. I submit that the municipality in which this corporation is located is subjected to expense by necessity, for instance in connection with the maintenance of roads, hospitalization, administration, education and so on. I should like to give some rough figures with respect to education, having in mind the fact that, according to the minister, this corporation turned in to the government profits of some $10,000,000, apparently since the 1944 statement was issued, because in that statement we were told that the loss of the corporation was around $440,000. In this particular township there are four school sections which have had, by reason of the Polymer Corporation, a capital outlay on new buildings and rentals, in addition to extra teachers, amounting to something like $250,000, on which there is of course an annual charge. We find that in the six months since November 1 of the last year the cost of hospitalization was about four times the cost three years ago, and we must anticipate increased costs in that connection, though we do not know how great the increase will be. The same argument will apply in connection with relief.

At the time the plant was in the course of construction I happened to be on the township council, and we received from the corporation a grant of $6,000 toward the cost of road maintenance. As hon. members know, construction was carried on both winter and summer. We are not quarreling over the additional cost incurred, because time was of the utmost importance, and everyone wanted the work done in a hurry. We all know it could have been done more cheaply in peace time, and it could have been done more cheaply in the summer time, but no one objected to the work going on summer and winter because the plant had to be completed in record time, and it was. But in order to carry on that work they had to haul gravel over the roads at periods when full loads were not permitted, and as a result they gave the township $6,000 toward road maintenance. That summer they also contributed $5,000 to the general township fund, and similar annual grants have been made since that time. There was some argument as to what should be the proper amount. We did not know what the expenses would be to which I referred a moment ago, or what the increase would be.

I maintain that if this crown company is to remain a crown company and operate as such the municipality should receive some consideration by way of compensation for the additional expense incurred, which I have somewhat laboriously pointed out. I am certain that if it were a private company and were assessed as such, the assessment of that plant alone would just about equal the present assessment in the township. I am also equally confident that if it were a private company, and if it were to be assessed at a lower value, as other industries are, our revenue from Polymer would be at least $70,000 a year. If it is considered advisable to have this measure pass, some consideration should be given to these modest claims by way of compensation for the township.

I notice from the resolution that the minister has included provision "for the superannuation, pension or other rights of the employees of such companies." I should like to emphasize at this time why in my view each of these companies, in the interests of good reasoning, should be incorporated separately.

After all is said and done, we are concerned about the permanency of the Polymer Corporation, and its continuation. The employees have a great deal invested because of employment in that company. At this time I believe that they have group insurance coverage to the extent of $2,500 a year. If I am not correct in that, I shall be pleased to be corrected. I believe, too, that they now receive some hospitalization, sickness and accident benefits.

Referring to these social security benefits, I was glad to hear the minister say that he had in mind the Imperial Oil plan. My point is that if the Polymer Corporation incorporated separately, it would not be jeopardized by the failure of any of the other companies. Since this corporation employs much the same type of employee as does the Imperial Oil Company, my suggestion is that in all probability Polymer Corporation employees should be entitled to the same standards of superannuation, hospitalization and other benefits. While during the period of construction the plant may have employed what might be described as journeymen types, in its present operations the type of workman employed is superior to that found in most plants and, as the minister has said, of a type comparable favourably with those employed by the Imperial Oil Company. Many of them are skilled mechanics, and they are employed because much of the operation in the plant is technical.

My chief concern is as to the permanency of the company, whether it is to be operated as a crown company or as a private concern. The minister has said that no atttempt has been made to see what the purchase price would be. I would suggest, however, that any company showing a profit of $10 million would seem to be a tempting organization in which to invest money. I shall leave the matter there for the moment.

At this point I should like to read into the record a statement made by the minister, and for the next few minutes I shall attempt to place on the record the series of events in proper sequence. The first is a statement by the minister on May 14 where, at page 1513 of Hansard, he is reported to have said:

> One difficulty is analysing government-owned business in general is the government's method of bookkeeping. It is a simple method of bookkeeping. Everything that is paid out by the treasury is charged up as expenditures from a government appropriation and everything that is received is entered on the books as revenue.

In the next paragraph he says:

> The bill that will be based on this resolution provides for the normal corporation accounting for crown companies.

As I said a minute ago, the minister did state as reported at page 1561, that Polymer Corporation was built at a cost of about $50 million. He said on the same day that the cost per pound of rubber was about 20½ cents.

Then, in reply to my question on October 29, 1945, as reported on page 1570 of Hansard, the parliamentary assistant to the minister answered:

> To September 30, 1945, Polymer Corporation Limited released to War Assets Corporation, buildings, machinery and equipment to the value of $1,757,740.31, and machine tools to the machine tool and war service committee to the value of $208,761.28. These transfers were made at cost to Polymer Corporation Limited. Direct sales and returns to manufacturers were made by Polymer Corporation Limited to the value of $144,861.47.

I turn next to public accounts for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1944 and direct the attention of the committee particularly to page K-108, on which appears the balance sheet as of that date for the Polymer Corporation Limited. Under the heading "assets" appear these items:

> Inventories, at the lower cost of realizable values, as determined and certified by the management—
> Materials and manufacturing supplies (including coal, $1,791,731.03), $2,836,064.67.
> Pre-production expenses applicable to butyl rubber, $638,500; training of technical employees, $503,421.97, $1,141,921.97.
> Net loss for the year ended March 31, 1944, $420,936.33.

Just by way of observation in connection with these latter figures, I should like the minister to explain whether the item of $1,141,921 covering pre-production expenses applicable to butyl rubber and the training of technical employees covered all the pre-production expenses, or was it only part? It is shown here as part of the assets.

In the 1945 public accounts the balance sheet as of March 31, 1945, is on page MA-123. In the assets column we find an item of $1,558,907.99 covering inventories at cost as determined and certified by the management. Then, under liabilities we find an item of $967,685.30 covering portion of administrative expenses capitalized during the period of plant construction, now written off. I do not know what the total of that item is, although I expect we shall get that information later on. Since this item gives only a portion I think we are entitled to have the complete picture.

There is another item which I feel I must cite. There is set out capital assets held in trust for the crown as at March 31, 1945, and under this is one item of $1,513,094.43 covering construction camp, staff and bunk houses and roads, sewers, et cetera. Then, under liabilities are shown reserves which I think will require some explanation if we are to know how to assess this resolution. One item is unascertained losses and other contingencies, $3,000,000, and another is inventory appreciation, $1,802,484.74. Then under "surplus" I find an item of $1,134,551.56 covering special reduction in inventory appreciation reserve.

What worries me as a businessman when I look at these figures is how I can arrive at some intelligent answer without having a great deal more information. I have had some experience in business and I should like to have more details of these items which cover very large amounts of money. According to the minister, the cost of Polymer is around $50,000,000 and he tells us that the company has turned over $10,000,000 in profits to the government. I am wondering whether certain items should be charged to profit. If so, it will alter the statement on profits and affect the cost of rubber per pound.

Certain features in connection with this Polymer Corporation seem a little cloudy to a businessman, and any remarks I make in this connection are not intended to cast any reflection on anyone. As I understand it, by agreeing to this bill we shall be endorsing what has been done. I should like to quote from sessional paper 250, which sets out the operating contract between Polymer Corporation Limited and Dow Chemical of Canada Limited, dated as of May 1, 1942, but not executed until June 28, 1943, covering the operation of the styrene unit; and operating contract between Polymer Corporation Limited and Canadian Synthetic Rubber Limited, dated as of March 26, 1942, but not executed until March 22, 1944, covering the operation of the buna A copolymer plant. The note which follows is, I think, very important. It reads:

> No operating contract or letter in lieu of contract relating to operation of the units being operated by St. Clair Processing Corporation Limited exists. Imperial Oil Limited and St. Clair Processing Corporation Limited have proceeded on the strength of the assurances received from the senior officials of Polymer Corporation Limited that they would be paid on a reasonable basis for services rendered and products supplied. Negotiations are proceeding.

Here we have the government or some agency of the government doing business in millions for a year or two with nothing in writing. Apparently these transactions were carried out on the strength of assurances by senior officials of the Polymer Corporation Limited. I assume that they would be the directors and Mr. Nicholson, the general manager, in whom everyone has complete confidence. I have heard it whispered here and there that Mr. Nicholson's salary of $25,000 is too large, but I want to go on record right now as saying that I happen to know Mr. Nicholson and that if the general manager of Polymer corporation is not worth $25,000 a year, he would not be the manager. After he pays his income tax he has only about one-half of that left. However, this sort of thing, contracts on assurances, does not look like good business to a businessman.

There is no question in my mind about the future operations and the continued success of the Polymer corporation, but the taxpayers and the employees there are wondering just what permanency there may be. As I said this afternoon, we have had the benefit of much expert advice but, now that the war is over, these people will be returning to their own places of business, having performed their duties more or less from a patriotic point of view and having received no money therefor. Now that they have left, the government must depend upon what remains in the way of expert technical advice. The people are wondering if a change in government policy is likely to affect the jobs of these 1,800 persons, with their families, as well as their investments, the municipal obligations they have undertaken, public services and schools and that sort of thing. Are they to continue as employees? They say that rubber may be used as a means of barter between Canada and some other country and that perhaps the production of rubber, by government policy, will decrease 50 per cent. Some maintain that under private ownership, with so much invested and so many stockholders interested, they would naturally carry on to the best of their ability. We know that this government in the operation of this plant did import products duty and excise free, but that is only a matter of bookkeeping anyway. We realize that, whether it is under public ownership or private ownership, we shall have to compete, there being no duty on rubber, with foreign markets. We know that we have an export market in the Scandinavian countries, a bit of a market in England and a bit in the South American countries.

The point I wish to emphasize is that some of the employees who have been with this corporation a long time, some of them during the course of its construction, are sceptical, many of them, about the efficiency of government operation. They wonder what this $10 million profit means or if it is a $10 million profit. They know, for instance, that in the course of construction of Polymer there were some thirty-five or thirty-eight bunkhouses, staff houses, hospitals and so on and that some of their friends bought some of these staff houses, which cost from $25,000 to $30,000, for one or two thousand dollars as the case may be. They know also that their friends wrecked these buildings, dismantled them. I know that in one case the purchaser obtained the property for the purpose of obtaining a heating unit. He took the heating unit out for his hotel, and he took out the plumbing and the electric light wiring, and then sold the shell for as much as he had paid for the complete building.

Another one—and mind you, these people know this and it is one reason why they are so sceptical—purchased one of these bunkhouses for an amount in the same neighbourhood, dismantled the building and claims that he made from four to five thousand dollars on the deal.

The point which I think is most important to these men who have seen the scrap collectors go in with their trucks and take out scrap which was not scrap is that they wonder if that is the way the government is going to carry on this proposition.

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend is making charges. I will be very glad to have a committee investigate the charges that he is making at this moment. This attack by insinuation is not helpful.

Mr. MURPHY: The records I have here, Mr. Chairman—I will give them to him right now—the minister will be able to verify if he looks up his own records.

Mr. HOWE: So far as any wrongdoing is concerned, the public accounts committee or the war expenditures committee will be glad to investigate any charges, and I shall expect my hon. friend to appear before whichever body he chooses and substantiate his charges.

Mr. MURPHY: The resolution before us, as I read it, is to provide for the organization, administration and financing of such corporations. And the question is, do we want the government to operate these companies? If not, why? I am telling you why.

Mr. HOWE: I am asking my hon. friend to substantiate the charge he made that junk dealers go in and take out material that is not scrap. That is a charge of dishonesty and my hon. friend as a member of the house will have to take his responsibility for that charge.

Mr. MURPHY: I will take my responsibility right now.

Mr. HOWE: Then you will do it before a committee of this house.

Mr. MURPHY: I will give you an opportunity of verifying it from your own records.

Mr. HOWE: I shall ask a committee of this house to verify it.

Mr. FRASER: We know that 3,300 stoves were sold as scrap.

[Mr. Murphy.]

Mr. MURPHY: The other day in the war expenditures committee I asked the head of War Assets—I think his name is Mr. Berry—

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order.

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. member asked for it.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): The hon. member is out of order in referring to something that is before a committee of the house.

Mr. MURPHY: I will leave out what took place in the war expenditures committee. We have only started in there; there is more to come. I wish to put this on the record, that an article known as:

6″ Standard cast iron rubber lined obnoxious vapour condenser. Fig. 4010 Size 14″ x 17″ x 47″ (new).

Not old.

Reported to War Assets by Polymer. Cost $325.40. Sold as scrap to Lampel—

A disciple of Shylockism, and there are many more throughout the country.

—on MTL-18838 at $1.34.

I do not know why they put in $1.34, except that it makes it hard to figure the percentage. I can imagine this man Lampel going to your man in War Assets to buy this and your man saying, "It cost us $325.40," and they finally got down to the point where the War Assets man—I could name him—finally took $1.34—a dirty dollar, three dimes and a nickel and gave back one penny, and the War Assets man gave this fellow, the disciple of Shylockism, one penny.

Mr. HOWE: You mean he was a Jew. You may as well come out and say it straight.

Mr. MURPHY: If you will keep your seat—

Mr. HOWE: If you want to make this unpleasant, we will have it good and unpleasant.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I think the hon. member is entirely out of order in bringing up this matter on this resolution.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): All these matters are being dealt with by a committee of the house and the hon. member had an opportunity of presenting them there. He is out of order, on this resolution, in discussing these matters which are before a committee.

Mr. GREEN: Mr. Chairman, may I point out on the point of order that one of the companies referred to is covered by this proposed measure, the Polymer Corporation. The hon. member is now dealing with what happened at the Polymer Corporation and I submit that he is perfectly in order in doing so.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I must disagree. The hon. member is dealing with something in connection with War Assets, and that is before a committee of the house.

Mr. MURPHY: I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this case has not come before the committee. This resolution, if it is adopted, means that we endorse having this company operated as a crown company. The resolution asks us to endorse the government in continuing this company as a crown company. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the company must be judged on their record, and I am prepared to give the record. This has not yet been before the war expenditures committee.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): The hon. member is referring to some business transaction with War Assets Corporation. War Assets Corporation, with all its dealings and its methods of doing business, is now the subject of an inquiry by a committee of this house. I think the hon. member will agree with me that it is not in order to bring matters of that kind before the house while the committee in question is sitting.

Mr. MURPHY: Am I to understand, then, Mr. Chairman, that, even in order to appreciate the question we are discussing, we must not go into details and seek information upon which we can base our judgment?

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I hope the hon. member will not take that view. We are discussing crown companies, but the matter which the hon. member was dealing with had to do entirely with War Assets Corporation. The article he mentioned as having been disposed of was disposed of by War Assets.

Mr. MURPHY: I will deal first with what was sold by Polymer Corporation.

Mr. HANSELL: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, as I understand your ruling—and I am interested in this because I expect to speak on the matter—it is that on this resolution we cannot discuss the operations of War Assets. I take issue with that, because there is no committee specifically set up to investigate expenditures of War Assets Corporation. The committee itself is a war expenditures committee which has the right to investigate any war expenditures at all, and just because at the present moment the committee is investigating War Assets, it does not follow that that is what it was specifically set up for. If your ruling is correct, we cannot on this resolution discuss the three companies, because they also have been operating in time of war. I suggest that if there is anything in your ruling it can apply only to such items as may be under discussion at the present time, but I do not think it can apply to all the business of War Assets any more than it could apply to all the business of any other crown company.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I would point out to the hon. gentleman that this is not my personal point of view. It is recognized as a rule governing the whole of our parliamentary procedure, that while some matter is being discussed by a parliamentary committee set up for the purpose, such questions should not be referred to or dealt with in detail in the house. If the hon. member was going to proceed to deal with crown companies, that is what we have before us at the present time; but only a short time ago the hon. gentleman was referring absolutely to what happened in the committee, dealing with one particular item. I am quite sure he will agree with me that I am right in calling the attention of the committee to the fact. The motion in connection with the war expenditures committee was this:

> On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King it was resolved:
>
> That a select committee be appointed to examine the expenditure defrayed out of moneys provided by parliament for national defence and demobilization, and for other services directly connected with the war, including the disposal of surplus war assets, and to report what, if any, economies consistent with the execution of the policy decided by the government may be effected therein—

And so forth.

Mr. MACKENZIE: On March 22, 1946.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I hope the hon. member will deal with crown companies. He is in order in doing so.

Mr. MURPHY: I presume I may continue this argument on a more limited basis by referring neither to the article nor to the person who purchased it.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): If the hon. member is going to bring up those matters I suggest that he should bring them up in detail in the war expenditures committee.

Mr. MURPHY: I should like to have the position clear. I emphasized at the start, purposely, that there were certain questions I had in mind. I want to determine whether certain figures are to be considered as capital cost or to be charged against profits. We have had the statement that $10 million was made; we also had the financial statement up to March 31, 1945, giving us in some detail, very limited, capital costs; and my point is simply this, that in order to determine whether they are capital costs or must be charged against profits we must have more information. I submit, then, that I am entitled to ask the minister or the government what particular capital account or figure these amounts can be charged up to. So that we may agree on this, take the figure I have just quoted, which was $325, and the item was sold for $1.34. My argument is that if the capital costs are as outlined by the statement, at $50 million, this represents a loss of $323.66 which must be charged up against capital, or it must be charged against profits, or it must be the amount representing the loss that would be actually sustained if you and I were operating that company. That is clear. I do not wish to be overbearing on this sort of thing. I am an Irishman; I am rather new here, and I am willing to learn.

Another item amounts to $218,058.55. That was sold for $3,500. There is another item of $286,460 which was sold for $19,000; another item of $22,350.84 which was sold for $3,650; another item of $21,076 which was sold for $1,900; and another item of $46,658.96 which was sold for $1,560. Another item of $107,597.47 was sold for $1,188.25, or 1·7 per cent of the cost. Another item of $269,489.13 was sold for approximately $6,000, or 2·2 per cent of the cost. The total of these eight items is $775,815.95. These items were sold for $35,602.59, or 4·5 per cent of their cost. Was that part of the capital cost of Polymer? Looking at the statement, and trying to interpret it as a businessman, one must come to the conclusion that there is a loss of $742,413.36 somewhere.

I appreciate the difference between something used and something new. I do not expect that the government through any of its agencies will realize as much on the cost if the article has been used as they would if if were new. Let us take bunk and staff houses as an example. No one expects that they are going to be sold for what they cost. I quoted some of these figures purposely to show that they were sold for less than could have been realized for them by what one might consider businesslike methods.

[The Acting Chairman.]

We have also to take into consideration the important fact that some of this merchandise was never used and was sold at so much per ton. Some of it was sold since the statement I quoted was drawn up. This statement is dated March 31, 1945. Do those sales enter into the cost or profit of Polymer? We want to know that.

This afternoon the minister chose to ignore the question which I happened to have on the order paper. He may have acted wisely. That is for him to say. But if we are to endorse the resolution to let any department of the government operate or continue to operate we are at least entitled to information, and I submit that we should have had a different answer. How are we to analyse a statement without having such information before us?

I understand that some of the new merchandise which was sold by the ton, and which forms the greater part of the amount quoted, was sent to another plant just below the Polymer Corporation. I do not know why, and my people wonder why, it was sent there to be loaded on cars instead of being loaded in the Polymer Corporation. I submit that these amounts which I quoted represent a realization of some 4·5 per cent of cost. I also appreciate that the government or some department of government could have a building in some faraway place which would have involved a considerable amount in dismantling, and the cost would probably be out of proportion to what it would have been worth when dismantled. But there is one point which my people question, and rightly so. We are not the only place in Canada which is hard up for housing, for toilets and wash-basins, for electrical wiring and so on. I do not mind telling this committee that considerably more than two or three million feet of good lumber could have been salvaged from these staff and bunkhouses, et cetera. It seems like poor business for the houses to remain there unused when the material could be used in erecting houses for veterans and others who need them.

It seems obvious that I am not permitted to put on record more details concerning these particular sales, but the few items I have given come to a little better than three-quarters of a million dollars. In all probability, when these and other companies are investigated by the war expenditures committee there will be considerable doubt in the minds of reasonable people on both sides of the house as to whether or not it is good policy to endorse this resolution. As I see it, if I vote in favour of this particular resolution I am endorsing what the government has done. I tried to tell the committee, and I finally did what it had attempted to do. I submit in all sincerity that, on the record of what has taken place there and elsewhere, we ought to question whether it is a wise policy. Let me give an instance that they know about. Everybody is talking about this sort of thing, and this is what our people are restless about. An item involving some $22,000 was sold for about $2,000. It consisted of forms for building pavement. They would be just as good twenty-five years from now as they are to-day. Any contractor who knew they were to be sold or were for sale would have given, fifty, sixty or seventy per cent of the cost price. The only conclusion I can come to is that to which my constituents would come, namely, whether it is to be a wise policy to agree to this, and whether they are to be secured not only there but wherever there is a crown corporation, if those crown corporations are to continue operating as they have done in the past.

Mr. HOWE: The hon. member for Lambton West undertook to discuss a plant which cost $50 million, and which is regarded as one of the finest plants in the Dominion of Canada.

An hon. MEMBER: By whom?

Mr. HOWE: I shall leave that to any competent person in this country or in the United States. As a matter of fact it has a record in the industry of being the finest integrated operation that came out of the rubber expansion—

Mr. MURPHY: I said that half an hour ago.

Mr. HOWE: You made your speech. I will thank you very much to keep quiet for the next few minutes.

Mr. MURPHY: I said the same thing you did.

Mr. HOWE: As I say, the hon. gentleman started talking about that type of operation, and he got down to his own level very quickly, the level of the junk pile of construction material. Unfortunately, when a plant has to be built—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. FRASER: I think the minister should withdraw that statement.

Mr. HOWE: I will withdraw nothing.

Mr. FERGUSON: Take a look at what he says.

Mr. HOWE: I can discuss my hon. friend who has just intervened and some of his war work any time he wishes, and would be very glad to do so. I have a few notes on this subject I shall be glad to make available.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Now, don't be mad. Let's get on with it.

Mr. HOWE: All right. I have been engaged in war work now for five years; I have spent some twelve billion dollars of this government's money. This is the first occasion on which I have been accused on the floor of this house of dishonesty; and that is the charge to-night.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh no.

Mr. HOWE: That is the charge; dishonesty.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Don't be silly; nobody accuses you of that.

Mr. HOWE: That is the charge absolutely; dishonesty, and my hon. friend will have a chance—

Mr. MURPHY: It is not personal dishonesty at all; I would not have any such intention. I wish the minister would believe that.

Mr. HOWE: It is dishonesty of myself or my staff.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Nobody accused them.

Mr. HOWE: I will just take what the hon. member said and analyse it. Sit down and let me make my speech.

Mr. MURPHY: When the administration wastes money I do not say it is your fault. You cannot look after it all.

Mr. HOWE: I suppose my hon. friend was discussing to-night the disposal of the construction plant. A construction plant to build a $50,000,000 building costs a great deal of money. Expensive equipment must be brought in; bunkhouses must be built; temporary buildings must be erected for use during the construction of the project. Probably they are used for a year or, at the most, a year and a half; then they are disposed of. I have been in the construction business all my life, and I know the difference between the cost of construction articles when they go on the job and their value when they go off the job. However, my hon. friend will have a chance to explain all this to a select committee of this house; and the proper officers of my department will be there to cross-examine him on the subject, since he has made the charges. I think I shall venture to attend myself, because certainly we cannot allow the record of the Department of Munitions and Supply to be smeared as it is being smeared to-night.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): What do you want to do about it?

Mr. HOWE: I am going to discuss it, as my hon. friend discussed it a few moments ago. I am going to talk about it for a while, if I can have the attention of the committee. Be that as it may, perhaps I might deal with the reasonable part of my hon. friend's speech, brief though it was.

The hon. gentleman spoke of the fact that the Polymer Corporation is not liable for municipal taxes. That arises from a provision in the British North America Act whereby property of the crown is not taxable by provincial or municipal governments. The township knew that was the case when the industry located there. I received no objections from it at the time; in fact I had a very warm invitation to locate the plant in Sarnia, and we were very glad to do so because it seemed the reasonable point at which to establish the industry. The plant does pay for services; it pays a very substantial amount to the town of Sarnia and the township. My hon. friend mentioned $70,000 a year as a reasonable tax. Well, I believe the plant pays to the township or the city of Sarnia something like half that amount for services. But I would point out that, as a result of the government plant being constructed in its present location, private industry has located on adjoining property; and private industry is spending some five or six million dollars, with every prospect that this amount will be largely increased as the years go by. From the very nature of its operation, the Polymer plant will be the focal point of an organic chemical industry which uses the by-products of the Polymer operation. I think the town of Sarnia and the adjacent township will have no financial reason to regret that the Polymer Corporation has been established there.

An hon. MEMBER: They do not, either.

Mr. HOWE: I understand they do not, except the hon. member who represents them in the house. As far as the earnings of the corporation go, my hon. friend is quite correct in saying that the plant went into operation in 1944. In that year it obtained a total revenue of $9,664,000, while the cost of producing that material was $10,084,000, resulting in a loss on operations that year of $420,000; and there were pre-operation expenses which for the time being were capitalized. In 1945 the plant sold material valued at $29,460,000, and after $3,662,000 was set up as a replacement reserve the cost of material was $27,828,000.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): To whom were the bulk of those sales made?

Mr. HOWE: To private industry; rubber companies in Canada.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Private industry, in that year?

Mr. HOWE: Yes; in every year. So that after the reserve was set up the profit amounted to $1,632,000, and including the reserve the profit was $5,295,000. In 1946 the replacement reserve was set up in the amount of $2,706,000, and after that reserve the profit was $2,585,000, so that the total profit, including reserve, was $5,292,573.36. I spoke of the fact that $10,000,000 had been returned to the crown by the corporation out of the $50,000,000 advanced. The exact amount of balance in profit and loss, all on the side of profit, is $10,166,687.92, up to March 31, 1946.

Mr. MacNICOL: Was that profit on operations?

Mr. HOWE: Yes, on operations.

Mr. MacNICOL: You mean from the beginning?

Mr. HOWE: Yes, from the beginning. The balance sheet of the company as at March 31, 1946, showed assets as follows:

Current assets	$ 987,368 31
Inventories	4,689,580 66
Fixed assets	49,644,409 48
Prepaid expenses, etc	190,318 37
	$55,511,676 82

Then, on the liabilities side:

Current liabilities	$2,102,724 78
Reserves applying to inventory	1,449,785 47
Contingent liability	3,000,000 00
Share capital	32 00
Dominion of Canada advances	38,792,446 65
Surplus accounts	10,166,687 92
	$55,511,676 82

I might explain that the item of $3 million is a reserve set-up to cover a liability created in connection with the purchase of crude rubber prior to the fall of Singapore. The government had, at the time, outstanding contracts for crude rubber. It was purchased f.o.b. docks, Singapore, and at the fall of Singapore the question arose as to how much of that rubber would be delivered, and how much liability would be set up in Singapore for rubber which we would not receive. Originally the reserve was something more than $5 million, that being the peak value of the commitments in Singapore.

At this time the rubber has been largely delivered. Some of it came in during the war years. Some came in ships riddled wtih gunfire, but still afloat. A surprising amount of it was received even after the fall of Singapore. But there still remained a considerable amount of rubber unaccounted for, and the $3 million was maintained on the books to cover the complete liquidation of those liabilities.

Recently, other shipments of rubber have arrived from warehouse stocks in Singapore, and we have now determined that the $3 million item is much in excess of the actual liability.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Is that a matter of contract?

Mr. HOWE: Yes, contracts were outstanding for delivery of rubber in Singapore, and until the last of those contracts is liquidated we are maintaining the $3 million as a contingent reserve, rather than taking it into profit. However, by the next balance sheet I think the item will have disappeared and the amount of reserve will be taken into profit.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Surely there can be no profit in that. However, I am happy about it. Do not worry.

Mr. STIRLING: Is this rubber that was captured by the Japanese not used by them, and now being delivered.

Mr. HOWE: I presume so, yes. It was rubber that was left on the docks at Singapore, or in warehouses at Singapore and Penang, in Japanese occupied territory. After the recapture of the territory the rubber was found intact, and sent on to its consignees.

Mr. STIRLING: Extraordinary.

Mr. HOWE: Yes. It did not arrive in the best of condition, but still we got a good deal of it.

Something has been said about the cost of synthetic rubber. The plant operates on a basis of first setting up a replacement reserve. In an operation of this kind, funds must be available to change processes and to keep the processes up to date. Recently, we have sold certain by-products. In order to make the maximum use of the by-products, we have had to instal additional equipment, and that is being paid for from the replacement reserve, quite properly, because that is the purpose of it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): What percentage is set up, on an over-all basis, to take care of that?

Mr. HOWE: The reserve is different for different operations of the plant. There is a formula in existence, but I have not it here.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Do not bother.

Mr. HOWE: The amount set up for that account in 1945 was to bring the reserve up to date from the commencement of operations. That amount was $3,662,000. I should think the amount set aside for 1946 would represent one full year, making an annual amount of $2,706,000.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): A reserve, covering what?

Mr. HOWE: A reserve set aside to cover replacements. I suppose in ordinary business you would call it a depreciation reserve.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): With regard to the item of $3,662,000, does that include interest charged on the amount?

Mr. HOWE: No, that is replacement reserve, as it is called here. Perhaps in other business it may be called a depreciation reserve. Interest on the investment is represented by the dividends to shareholders, which is all the money that is not required for the operation.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Should we not regard part of that profit as something to be considered in lieu of interest.

Mr. HOWE: The profit belongs to the government, of course. The way this is set aside on the balance sheet is as follows: $6,369,000 depreciation reserve, or replacement reserve, whichever you wish to call it. This leaves $4 million for the two-year period as dividends to the owners of the common stock.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Is the minister not confusing depreciation and amortization, and is he not leaving out interest on the capital invested? I am sorry to be so awfully technical, but I have been licked so often on these things in my business, that I am very careful. Would the minister try to differentiate between amortization and depreciation, and that thing my hon. friend from Muskoka-Ontario referred to, namely capital invested? Let us get down to two and two makes four—not five.

Mr. HOWE: From my slight understanding of corporation work, I believe amortization applies only to outstanding bonds. If you wish to get rid of them you amortize them.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Amortization is applied when a plant is useless.

Mr. HOWE: I thought that was depreciation.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): No; you borrow money on bonds, and amortize against the end of the road. Depreciation is just the little house you live in—but of course the minister lives in a big house. However, he understands me. Let us not be wrong about this.

Mr. HOWE: We did not borrow the money.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): No, because you had unlimited capital to spend. You never borrowed a dime.

Mr. HOWE: No, we did not borrow a dime. We got the appropriation from the consolidated revenue fund, or from whatever source such moneys come.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I can think of a better word.

Mr. HOWE: And it is represented to-day by common stock. Common stock has this advantage, that there is no amortization. There are dividends, if you have the money; otherwise, everything goes on merrily.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): Is not depreciation deducted before you show operating profit?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Well, there is one man who doesn't know what it is—but he asks the right question.

Mr. HOWE: And it is a good question. I referred to the fact that some $10 million of the $50 million had been returned to the government. Some of it has returned in the form of depreciation reserve, or replacement reserve, and the other is returned in profits. But it is all returned to the government. The bank account of Polymer is cleaned out every Saturday night. So that the government, instead of having $50 million outstanding at Polymer, according to its own books has only $40 million.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): This free and easy way of dealing with interest does not seem to work out with what the minister said this afternoon about the advantages of the accounting methods of crown companies. However, I am not going to deal with that at the moment. I have here the public accounts for 1945, and I find it a little difficult to understand the relationship between Polymer Corporation Limited and Polymer Sales and Service Limited, which apparently was formerly Fairmont Company Limited. I gather that their operations are closely allied and I should like the minister to explain the difference between the two.

Mr. HOWE: Back in 1939, at the commencement of the war, the Fairmont company was organized, I believe as the second crown company, to stock-pile rubber and silk, two commodities for which the government was dependent on foreign sources. Since it was impossible for private buyers to operate in the market, it was necessary for the government to take over the purchasing of all rubber and silk that were required for war purposes, or, in fact, for any purpose. The Fairmont company carried on its operations until 1943. At that time the Polymer Corporation was selling synthetic rubber and it seemed reasonable that that corporation should also take over the selling of crude rubber. Therefore, the name of the Fairmont company was changed to Polymer Sales and Service Limited.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That was for crude rubber?

Mr. HOWE: Crude was purchased from the Fairmont company and also in the United States. Polymer Sales and Service Limited continued to sell all rubber, both crude and synthetic, that Canada used during that period.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Does that mean that they sold the whole Polymer output?

Mr. HOWE: That is right. Later on, the activities in connection with crude rubber reached a low ebb because we had plenty of synthetic rubber available.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): What time would that be?

Mr. HOWE: June 30, 1945. As I say, activities in crude rubber practically came to an end, and it was thought reasonable to amalgamate Polymer Sales and Service Limited with Polymer Corporation Limited and make the corporation its own selling agency. The balance of $228,422.01, which represented the profits of the predecessor company, was paid into the treasury of Polymer Corporation Limited as a dividend, and Polymer Corporation Limited took over the physical assets and liabilities of the predecessor sales company.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Was the sales corporation acting for Polymer and nobody else at the time it was taken over?

Mr. HOWE: It was the selling agency for all rubber bought in Canada. They sold the output of Polymer and they also bought crude rubber from other agencies, chiefly in the United States.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That was right up to the time they were taken over?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. Even to-day Polymer buys crude rubber from outside sources and sells it to the trade.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You have not mentioned reclaimed rubber?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I may have something for you on that.

Mr. HOWE: At one stage, reclaimed rubber was important and came into quite general use as a substitute for other forms of rubber, but as soon as synthetic rubber came into free supply, the reclaimed became a drug on the market. Unfortunately we have some dumps of reclaimed rubber for which we can find no great market.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Is that the kind that slips on the ice?

Mr. HOWE: I believe it is the synthetic.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): There are two or three points I cannot understand in the public accounts for 1945. Page MA-124 sets out the operating statement of Polymer Corporation Limited for the year ended March 31, 1945. It shows sales of some $29,460,000, and then certain deductions are made. Then, if you turn to page MA-128 you find the income and expenditure statement of Polymer Sales and Service Limited for the same period. In that statement the sales are shown as only $21,202,000. Are those figures subject to adjustment, because I think the minister said a moment ago that Polymer Sales acted for Polymer Corporation and other people as well?

Mr. HOWE: The reason for that is that Polymer Corporation sold its by-products, such as ethylene, to the Dow Chemical company. Polymer Sales handled only rubber, but its other products and processes were sold by Polymer.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): As I say, page MA-128 shows the sales of Polymer Sales as $21,202,000. This simplicity of crown companies which the minister talks about is not simple enough for me to understand readily these next two items, which are:

Surcharge income	$5,843,084 20
Stabilization income	4,627,561 72

Mr. HOWE: Stabilization income is the subsidy on crude rubber. Crude rubber cost between 45 and 50 cents a pound and it was sold at about 26 cents a pound.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Does that mean that from another pocket we took $5,000,000 in order to help make this $10,000,000?

Mr. HOWE: No; it had nothing to do with the operations.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Does it mean that the people of Canada donated $4,600,000 to create this stabilization income which found itself, through Polymer Sales Corporation, into Polymer Corporation Limited and helped to make the $10,000,000? Where did that money go?

Mr. HOWE: It did not channel in that way at all.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Where did it find its way?

Mr. HOWE: It had to do with crude rubber sales and Polymer does not make crude rubber.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Who put up the money?

Mr. HOWE: The government of Canada put it up to subsidize the price of crude rubber to the manufacturers of Canada and thus to the public.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): At what time was Polymer Sales and Service Limited taken over by Polymer, and at what time did these figures enter into the accounts of Polymer Corporation itself?

Mr. HOWE: June, 1945, but, as I explained before, there was no cash handed over from Polymer Sales. Polymer Sales made no profits out of its transactions. It simply paid what it had to pay and sold its product for the ceiling price, twenty-five cents. The subsidy paid by the government was not to help Polymer or anyone else except the user of the rubber.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What about the surcharge income of $5,800,000?

Mr. HOWE: It is a charge of the same nature. It has nothing to do with Polymer. It is a balancing item in the accounts of Polymer Sales. The explanation given in the auditor general's report is as follows:

> This company (formerly Fairmont Company Limited) ceased business as of June 30, 1945. It acquired the stored crude and synthetic rubber and made sales thereof to manufacturers having contracts with the Crown for the production of war supplies, and to manufacturers engaged in essential civilian production.
> As stated in paragraph 252 of last year's report, stocks of rubber were revalued upwards in 1943 to the equivalent of current replacement prices, and an offsetting inventory appreciation reserve established. Order in council P.C. 5750 of July 20, 1943, authorized the company to collect surcharges (based on tire deliveries) from the Department of National Defence and other organizations, for the proportion of rubber going into the production of war supplies, and also to collect from Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation Limited amounts from time to time estimated for the loss incurred on the proportion of rubber going into the production of civilian goods.

It is clear to me, and I think I can make it clear to my hon. friend.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is not necessarily the same thing.

Mr. HOWE: My memory is perhaps helping me. I think I can explain it now. The Polymer Sales Corporation bought crude rubber where it could at the price it had to pay. It sold the rubber going into consumer goods at the ceiling price. The stabilization corporation objected to stabilizing rubber going into military goods. It said: We are responsible for the consumer but we are not responsible for the war, and therefore you must separate the crude rubber that goes into civilian goods from the crude rubber that goes into military uses. Therefore, after the total subsidy had been arrived at, it was divided into two items, one of which was paid by the stabilization corporation and the other by the Department of Munitions and Supply. One was called stabilization income, paid by the stabilization corporation, and the other was the war item, called surcharge income, which was paid by the Department of Munitions and Supply. But both covered the same item; that is, the difference between the purchase price of crude rubber and its sale at the ceiling price.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister has made it clear about the $10,000,000 profit that we had by virtue of regarding ourselves as shareholders. Nevertheless, when you are looking at it from an accounting point of view, it would have been better to charge yourself some interest on your investment. But let that pass. Do I understand that what is shown here as sold in 1945, totalling $29,000,000, was the total output of Polymer? The minister said something about that being sold to the public or to the trade, or did I misunderstand him? Was that the total output?

Mr. HOWE: The $29,000,000 is the sales of rubber and other commodities for the year ended March 31, 1945.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Was that the total output for that year?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): And that was the total income of Polymer for that year?

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. HOWE: The sales were as follows:

Buna S rubber	$25,512,044 09
Butyl rubber	2,606,883 60
Ethylbenzene	789,699 08
Cumene	551,106 96

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): How was the price arrived at?

Mr. HOWE: Buna S was sold at the ceiling price which was established for that commodity.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): How was it established?

Mr. HOWE: By the wartime prices and trade board. It was the same price at which it sold in the United States, 20½ cents. That was the ceiling fixed for synthetic rubber as against a 25-cent ceiling for natural rubber.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Was that fixed for this large volume or for smaller amounts?

Mr. HOWE: That was the price fixed to the manufacturer.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): I think the minister can have a rest for a few minutes while I say something to our Tory colleagues. The level of debate in this house is usually fairly decent, even although it is quite frequently dull. When it gets indecent, as when a discussion takes place on the Japanese, for instance—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): There is no point of order involved.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Will you allow the Chairman to decide?

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): Will you please sit down.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You are big but you are very much annoyed. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the Japanese have nothing to do with this subject.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): That is quite right.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You see I was right.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): The hon. member for Lambton West to-night made an insinuation, which I think was wretched and cowardly, against a group of people in this country, and that, following upon the protestations for civil rights and appeals for liberty which come from the Tory party enables us to judge how much sincerity there is in them.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member referred to a statement made by the hon. member for Lambton West as cowardly. Let him take it back if he has the guts he has for his size.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I hope the hon. member for Calgary West will take back the remark he has just made.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I certainly will. Let him join me.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Thank you.

Mr. FLEMING: If I am correctly informed, Mr. Chairman, the word "cowardly" is entirely unparliamentary and must be withdrawn. No member of the house is entitled to use that word of another member under any circumstances.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I ask the hon. member to withdraw it.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): In deference to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the word but you know what I mean.

Mr. JACKMAN: The hon. member must retract without any qualifications whatever.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): The Chairman will decide whether I am in order or not.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): The hon. member must withdraw the word "cowardly".

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): Very well, Mr. Chairman, I do. Something has been heard in this house about the iniquities of the government, and I have no doubt they are plentiful, in allegedly selling materials at very low prices. But there are two parties to every sale, the seller and the buyer, and be it noted that those who are doing the buying from the government are the same private enterprisers of whom the Tories are so proud. They are the ones who are getting the benefit of it. They are the ones who are getting all the gravy, and there is a lot of it going.

Another statement made was that the balance sheet of Polymer was uncommunicative. I think that is true. There is no question of its being rather uncommunicative, but it is not more so than the balance sheet of any other commercial organization that I have seen, and I do not think that is an unduly strong lash to use against the government. I would say to the minister, much as I admire his undoubted ability, that there are nevertheless times when he makes statements that are not altogether borne out by the facts. On March 23, 1944, he made this statement:

I do not favour cartels. I believe that the cartel is a relic of the past that is rapidly disappearing. I wholly agree with its disappearance. I believe that the disappearance of the cartel will be a benefit to industry as a whole. Canada has been singularly free from cartels.

That is surely an imaginative statement in view of this report of the commissioner under the Combines Investigation Act in regard to international cartels. The contents of the pamphlet are, in part:

1. Examples of cartel arrangements affecting Canadian import commodities.
Fertilizers: Potash, Nitrogen, Phosphorus
Tanning materials: Quebracho
Flat glass
Sulphur
Dyestuffs
Tools—Cemented Tungsten Carbide
Magnesia Refractories
Titanium Pigments

2. Examples of cartel arrangements restricting Canadian manufacturers to home market on exclusive basis
Chemicals
Soda Ash
Electric Lamps
Radio Tubes and Sets Matches

3. Examples of cartel arrangements involving participation by Canadian exporters Base Metals: Copper, Lead, Zinc, Nickel Steel
Aluminum
Acetic Acid Radium
Newsprint

In the course of his speech when he introduced this resolution the minister said, as reported at page 1517 of Hansard:

I have yet to hear any businessman suggest it was not a good thing for Canadian business to have Canada's only source of rubber in the hands of the government, rather than in the hands of a private corporation.

I find myself in complete agreement with him on that statement, but why does he restrict himself to rubber alone? Are there not other materials equally necessary and valuable to Canada apart from rubber? One of them, one with which the government has had something to do, is magnesium. Although I support the principle of the resolution, I submit that the government ought to go farther in this matter of crown companies and take under its aegis or its wing those corporations which are dealing in a monopolistic way with materials that are vital to the welfare of Canada, one of which, as I have said, is magnesium. The history of this metal is interesting. At the end of the last war it cost $5 a pound in the United States and there were eight competing companies. Two years afterwards, there were only two competitors, one being the American Magnesium Corporation, a subsidiary of Aluminum Corporation, which I shall call Alcoa, and the other was the Dow Chemical company. For a number of years these two corporations were apparently in competition because the price fell to fifty-five cents a pound in 1927. Then the American Magnesium Corporation and the Dow Chemical company came to an agreement whereby they were going to split the market and sell the material on a certain basis at a certain price agreed to between themselves. One of the reasons for that was that the aluminum monopoly feared competition. It had invested millions of dollars in bauxite and did not want that investment imperiled by this new light metal, magnesium. The Department of Justice, as a matter of fact, ruled that the companies had agreed to keep the price of magnesium one-third higher than the price of aluminum, and in this connection I would quote from "Patents for Hitler" by Guenter Reimann, who, in turn, quotes Norman M. Little, assistant United States attorney-general, who made the following statement in a lecture delivered before the Indiana state bar association:

> And so it is with a productive capacity in the aluminum industry inadequate to meet the numerous demands of the expanding airplane industry, we are also simultaneously confronted with a limited capacity for the manufacture of magnesium, the only competing metal! This is all the more appalling when it is realized that of the sources for magnesium, brine deposits and magnesite are plentiful in this country.

In Germany the nazis had realized to the full the value of magnesium. The price was exactly the same as that for aluminum, and realizing its value, the Germans in 1931 came to an agreement with Alcoa whereby the patents of Alcoa were pooled with the I. G. Farben company and there was formed the Magnesium Development company. That organization was formed, not for purposes of production, but with the object of holding patents. The only company which was granted a licence was the Dow Chemical company, and by special agreement production was limited. This, again, was private enterprise at work, ensuring for themselves the maximum profits, no matter what the danger was to the country.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Will the hon. gentleman please tell me what he is quoting from?

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): I was quoting from the Truman report in the United States on the patent inquiry before the senate.

[Mr. Stewart.]

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Just what are you saying and just what does the report say?

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): The facts I am giving are taken from the Truman report. It will probably be found in the library.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Do not use the word "facts". You are quoting opinions.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): The result of that policy was that at the beginning of the war German production exceeded United States production by ten times. The value of this metal is obvious when one considers that aluminum is a third as heavy as steel and magnesium half as heavy as aluminum. The government apparently decided that this was a necessary and vital metal for the war effort and started a plant at Haley's Station, and last year as will be found in sessional paper 241, I asked certain questions. I quote:

> Was a new process for producing magnesium developed at the national research council? If so, who was responsible for this development?

The answer I received was:

> An old process for the production of metallic magnesium was investigated by a private group and funds were provided by the group to have the process tested at the national research council laboratories. A small pilot plant was set up and out of this came improvements that were applied in the construction of the commercial plant. The work was done under the direction of Doctor Lloyd Pidgeon of the national research council staff and became known as the Pidgeon process.

I next asked:

> Was a crown company formed to exploit this development in Canada?

The answer was:

> No. Dominion Magnesium Limited was formed by the original group of parties interested and acquired a deposit of dolomite near Haley's Station, Ontario, in an area where power was available.
> After investigation of the cost of the erection of a plant to produce magnesium in Canada, the capital cost for the required production rate was found to be lowest by using the Pidgeon process so the minister of the Department of Munitions and Supply entered into an agreement with the Dominion Magnesium Limited to design, construct and operate a plant on the property near Haley's Station, Ontario. The supervision of the work was carried out under Wartime Metals Corporation starting in April, 1942.

The cost of the plant to the dominion government to produce this material was $3,464,102.15. Afterwards, we got rid of it to this company for $1,400,000. I am going to suggest to the minister that he consider very seriously the advisability of taking this plant over again on the basis that what it is producing is vital for Canada, not only in war time but also in peace time, and also in view of the fact that there is no guarantee at all that the new company will not enter into some cartel arrangements with foreign countries to the detriment of Canadian trade.

In the Financial Post of May 18 it is stated that a new marketing agreement has been completed by the company with Swedish interests and that a similar agreement is in process of being completed shortly with interests in Belgium. The wording may be unfortunate, but at least it smacks too much of the cartel arrangements which have been made in the past.

Now a word about the Aluminum Corporation, which is also another monopoly in this country and which, therefore, should be government-owned and controlled. A debate has already been held in this house on more than one occasion when the charge was made that aluminum was a monopoly. I believe there was an investigation into the matter by a committee, and the committee tried to whitewash the corporation. They did not succeed. The United States department of justice showed that it was a monopoly, and so it is. The danger of monopoly is that the men who run it are more interested in making profits for themselves than in looking after the interests of the country. That, I think, can be easily seen from the senate inquiry in the United States. Again I quote, and this time Mr. Thurman Arnold, who appeared before the patents committee where he was asked some questions about Alcoa's monopoly. The charge had been made that when this great monopolistic corporation knew processes had been discovered which threatened to impair the capital of the company, it had bought the processes and filed them away, thus not making them available for the benefit of the nation as a whole.

Thurman Arnold stated:

> To Alcoa's monopoly, the use of the processes covered by those patents would have been disastrous, for its monopoly is basically a monopoly control of bauxite resources; its control of processing and fabricating facilities would have been much easier for a competitor to challenge. As a result, when a potential competitor appeared in this country with the Haglund patents for making aluminum from something besides bauxite they finally reached an agreement with him on a very remunerative basis. He received, I believe, about a million dollars and employment as a consultant at a fancy figure. The process never went into production; and Alcoa only recently was referring to the processes as "experimental," although we are informed that Italy has had them in production since 1928.

To add further to the patriotism of these great monopolies I would call to the attention of the committee the case of Mr. Arthur Bunker, who was the chief of the aluminum and magnesium section of the OPM, one of the dollar-a-year men. It was his task to preside over this section and, although the United States government provided funds for financing new plants, there was extraordinary difficulty in getting these funds used. Protests were made continually to the government that no additional aluminum plants were made because the same Mr. Arthur Bunker who was getting a dollar a year from the government was also getting $60,000 a year from the Lehman Corporation, which had a large investment in aluminum shares. These are only two examples of monopoly in this country which ought to come under government control, and I can think of no better method than that of the crown corporation. May I commend that to the attention of the minister, especially in view of his statement which I again repeat:

> I have yet to hear any businessman suggest it was not a good thing for Canadian business to have Canada's only source of rubber in the hands of the government, rather than in the hands of a private corporation.

If that is good for one monopoly it is good for others.

Mr. HANSELL: I have listened with some interest to the previous speaker's talk on this resolution. I was particularly interested in the challenge thrown out by the hon. member for Calgary West to the hon. member for Winnipeg North. I thought immediately of going to the lobby and standing on the sidelines—

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): I would have put him to bed.

Mr. HANSELL: However, I was also interested in the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North, because in my imagination I saw another scene. I almost saw him going over to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, putting his arms around him in brotherly fashion and beginning to sing with him: "Hail, hail, the gang's all here".

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): If the minister takes my advice I will do it.

Mr. HANSELL: It might be all right.

Personally I cannot work up any enthusiasm over this resolution, which calls for a measure which will form the basis for the organization of all crown companies. I suppose the minister has in mind the three large companies which have been mentioned previously. Nevertheless the legislation does provide the basis upon which all crown companies could be incorporated. I am not going to go into the details such as the sale and purchase of equipment, the prices paid, and all that sort of thing. I should like to deal with the matter from a more general point of view. I should like to touch upon the principle. It seems to me that the big principle is, generally speaking, do we favour the government going into business? I am quite prepared to say that times and circumstances may arise when it is wise for the government to do business and to set up a crown corporation, but I am never enthusiastic about it. I cannot see much difference between that and what is generally accepted as being the philosophy of socialism. There may be a difference but I am sorry I cannot see it.

An hon. MEMBER: What about the Alberta bank?

Mr. HANSELL: All these questions can be asked, but for myself I am saying that I cannot work up any particular enthusiasm about government going into business, and I do not care what government it is. Of course there is some little excuse for the government to be in business in time of war. That is a time of emergency when certain freedoms have to give way to a type of regimentation, a type of control, because there is a specific job to be done. I am going to compliment the minister; I think I can do that without going too far as a member of the opposition, in saying that during the war he did a fair job in bringing this country into the full-time productive effort that was required. But since the war has ended some of us have been looking for some of these controls to be loosened up a little and dropped off. Sometimes I wonder if the minister has not just a little bit of a mania for wanting a finger in a great many pies. Whether he has or not, I do not know, but I do not want him or any minister to become a sort of czar of government business.

Sometimes these government corporations start quite innocently. Their intentions are good. I might refer to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation which was innocently brought into existence to see that the Canadian public got good radio free from abuses, and so on. But over the years that corporation has gradually taken to itself tremendous authority, and has practically become a radio monopoly in Canada. I deplore that.

There is something else with respect to government corporations, and it is this. They do not necessarily have to operate at a profit; they can operate at a loss. Let us recognize that. Let no one say that I am in favour of exorbitant profiteering, but government corporations do not have to operate efficiently by reason of the fact that they must make both ends meet. If they do not; if they show a loss, the government can say, "Well, we always have the taxpayer to rely upon to make up any deficiencies," so the public pays just the same. I believe that in the minds of the Canadian people to-day there exists a desire gradually to do away with controls. The present administration may put on a bold front and say, "Gradually we are going to do away with these controls." But if, in place of these controls, they set up huge government corporations with power to regulate business, then the effect of controls is there just the same. I need only refer again, as an example, to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It is supposed to be in the competitive field of radio; yet it makes the rules and regulations. By reason of special authority given to it under the act, it controls radio in Canada; and no fooling. There is nothing to say that ultimately any government corporation cannot do the same thing in its own line of business. I believe in private enterprise.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is good commonsense.

Mr. HANSELL: I think it is, and I like to be a good commonsense man. I do not believe private enterprise has any right to license. I believe there is a place where, by legislation rather than controls, by law, private enterprise can be governed according to statute. I believe private business itself should be alarmed at the trend of things to-day in this country and in the world. It is all very well to say that we must have government corporations to combat monopolies; but, generally speaking, when government corporations come into existence they become monopolies, and monopolies under the state. Private business has need to be alarmed at that trend.

I am going to suggest, too, that labour should be alarmed. Perhaps on the face of it that may sound strange, but the more the government goes into business, the less freedom labour will have. Let them recognize that.

Mr. MacNICOL: And the less labour.

Mr. HANSELL: Yes, perhaps there is something in that, too; less labour. Instead of dealing with local management as labour can to-day, it will have to deal with all-powerful governments. There is a place where the Canadian people can lose their freedom even in what might appear to be a type of legitimate business, if that business is government owned and operated.

I am going to advance one further thought, because I believe that government in business affects parliament in the sense that parliament has been regarded as a legislative body. Members of parliament have been regarded as legislators. But it seems to me that parliament has become and is more and more becoming an administrative body, and that, instead of members being legislators, they are fast becoming government agents. I mention this because some great man said that country is governed best that is governed least. Someone might remind me who made that statement.

Mr. JACKMAN: Burke.

Mr. HANSELL: It is a pretty good saying, whoever said it. The more government goes into business, the more legislators become agents and, if they are on the government side, apologists for what the government is doing, while if they are on the opposition side they become perhaps business critics, when we should be laying a legislative foundation upon which business, people and the country itself can be free and enjoy the liberties of mankind that our democracy, if it is effective at all, can offer the country. I think we are all cognizant of the fact that parliament is beginning to fall into disrepute in this country. The public are beginning to feel that we are dilly-dallying. The public are beginning to feel that we are dealing with a lot of non-essentials, trivial things, when there are such big issues in the world to deal with. I say that because I believe that the more the government go into business, the more critical we have to be of the dollars and cents they may spend, or the amount they may make here, or the individual who may be employed here, or the authority given to somebody over there. To my mind, it is all a matter of private and individual liberty.

Let us be legislators, creating a legislative foundation upon which the country can build a real, effective and free democracy, where the people themselves will enjoy to the fullest extent all that Canada can offer them.

I cannot work up any great enthusiasm for the measure, because I do not know where it will lead us. I do not agree with the principle of the government in business.

Mr. HOWE: I would remind the hon. member that the Liberal government is at least working in his direction. A year ago we had thirty-one crown companies. At present we have liquidated eighteen and are in process of liquidating eight more. In a short time we will have reduced crown companies thirty-one to five. So that we are at least working in his direction.

Mr. HANSELL: May I ask a question—and I have just now reached the question period. I was not in the chamber when the discussion on the resolution took place. However, I must ask this question: Why is this measure necessary? We now have three companies, and I believe they are operating. In respect of other corporations, we have specific acts as a result of which those corporations have been brought into existence, and upon which they operate.

They operate according to their particular law. For instance, there is the act affecting the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and another act for railways. Why do we have this one?

Mr. HOWE: These are companies under part I of the Dominion Companies Act. They were established under the War Measures Act, and financed from war appropriations. They are being given power here to carry on under the provisions of the Dominion Companies Act, by a special appropriation from parliament, if necessary. We are simply giving them a status which they have not, except through war legislation.

Mr. FLEMING: I should like to ask the minister some questions. Perhaps I might follow the procedure I followed this afternoon, namely, that of putting my questions individually and thereby facilitating the answering of them.

Is it correct to infer from the minister's remarks that this measure is intended to be of general application? It will not simply specify the five companies or corporatioins which the minister has referred to as being likely to continue in existence for some time?

Mr. HOWE: It is of general application. The terms of the bill to be founded on the resolution refer only to the organization and financing of the companies.

Mr. FLEMING: Are the terms such that the bill is capable of application to corporations hereafter created?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. It does not contain power to create new companies, but its terms could apply to companies created subsequently.

Mr. FLEMING: Will it make these corporations liable to be sued and entitled to sue?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. FLEMING: Like any ordinary corporation?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. FLEMING: Will it make provision for submission to municipal taxation in the form which this house approved last year in connection with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation? I am referring to municipal taxation. I think we are all agreed that there is no power on the part of a municipality to levy taxes against property owned by the crown in the right of the dominion. But we have the precedent set out in section 30 (2) of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, chapter 15 of the statutes for 1945, which provides:

> Where title to real or immovable property becomes vested in the name of the corporation or of His Majesty, whether alone or jointly with any other person, in consequence of foreclosure or other proceedings taken in respect of a mortgage assigned to the corporation or to which His Majesty is a party under the housing acts, the corporation may pay to a municipal or other taxing authority an amount equivalent to the taxes which might be levied in respect of the said property or of the interest of the corporation or of His Majesty therein by the said authority if the said property or interest were not so vested, and may enter into such agreements as may be necessary to give effect to the provisions of the subsection.

Will this bill make such provision?

Mr. HOWE: I scarcely think such provision would apply. That provision is one where a corporation holds a mortgage on a property, and later has to take possession. In such event it can continue to pay taxes. But I think that would scarcely help any corporation the government might establish.

Mr. FLEMING: It goes farther than that. That is only the aspect of the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation which has to do with mortgage business. The other portion has to do with the acquisition of land for housing purposes. It puts the corporation in precisely the same position in respect of taxation by a municipal corporation, or other taxing authority.

Mr. HOWE: I have read the section carefully, and I can only find reference to property acquired by foreclosure.

Mr. FLEMING: I take it that the minister's answer is that the bill will not contain a comparable provision with respect to taxation by municipal or other taxing authorities?

Mr. HOWE: No; an amendment to the British North America Act would be necessary before such a provision could be inserted.

Mr. FLEMING: It is because of the provisions of the British North America Act that the word "may" was used in the section I read. This matter was discussed in connection with the bill setting up the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation, and I cannot see any distinction in principle. If it is proper that the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation in respect of land owned by it should submit to municipal taxation through legislation in this form, then I do not see why a similar provision should not be written into a bill of this kind which affects other crown corporations. However, the minister has indicated that that is not so.

When the resolution was before the committee on the last occasion the minister indicated, as will be found at page 1512 of Hansard, that he would be willing to table financial statements of any of these corporations which are to be continued. Will he be good enough to submit to the committee the financial statements of Wartime Housing Limited and Research Enterprises Limited? Those are two in which I am particularly interested.

Mr. HOWE: All the balance sheets are published in the public accounts for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1945.

Mr. FLEMING: I have seen the public accounts, but I take it that when the minister made his offer he meant that he was prepared to bring before the committee a financial statement that was completely up to date in in each case. The information contained in the public accounts is now fourteen months old.

Mr. HOWE: I have statements which have been furnished me, but unfortunately they have not been audited. I would be glad to give the information contained therein, but I would hesitate to table as a financial statement anything that the auditor general has not had an opportunity to audit.

Mr. FLEMING: Probably the minister would make them open to inspection by members?

Mr. HOWE: Certainly.

Mr. FLEMING: This afternoon reference was made by the minister to the desirability of referring the annual statements of crown corporations to a standing committee of the house. Does he propose to provide in the bill that these statements shall be tabled in parliament? Will he indicate also whether the government intends to take steps either to set up a committee to review these statements or to clothe some standing committee with power to do so?

Mr. HOWE: It would hardly be appropriate for me to instruct parliament as to what it should do with a report or with a bill. Any member of parliament can ask that a bill be referred to a committee of the house. I have suggested that I thought it would be appropriate to refer these statements of crown companies to a committee. At the present time they are referred to the war expenditures committee, and I suggested that perhaps an appropriate committee would be the committee on railways and shipping, government owned. I would welcome any suggestion from hon. members as to an appropriate committee.

Mr. FLEMING: There is a point which arises out of the statement appearing in the press to-day concerning the new order issued by the government, under which control of Wartime Housing Limited and veterans housing will be lodged in the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Will the minister indicate what bearing this will have upon the operations of Wartime Housing Limited, because that is a crown corporation to which the minister has referred several times during the course of the deliberations on this resolution. He indicated that this corporation would probably carry on for two or three years, but that it was not intended to be carried on indefinitely.

Mr. HOWE: I think my hon. friend has answered himself. The company is brought under the aegis of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Eventually, when it becomes purely an administrative company, its functions will be merged with those of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. While it remains a building company, it will continue to operate as a separate identity and will, perhaps, absorb some of the work at present being carried on by other building agencies of the government. For example, it will probably be the contractor for emergency housing, which now functions under the control of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. FLEMING: Does the government contemplate introducing further legislation along that line which would define the relationship of Wartime Housing Limited to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, or of the minister's department to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation? Under the 1945 legislation which set up the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the corporation was placed under the administration of the Minister of Finance, but by an order in council passed a month ago it was transferred to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation in that respect at this session?

Mr. HOWE: Consideration is being given to certain amendments to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act.

Mr. FLEMING: At this session?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I wish to ask two or three questions which perhaps might better be defined as suggestions. In the meantime I cannot overlook the amazing support given to the principle of this bill, in which I join, by my hon. friends over here. I had occasion to say last fall that they are anxious for the socialization of everything, and they are in great support of the minister on this particular occasion. I noticed they put in their oar and then immediately went away because no doubt they had more important things to do than listen to the minister's answers.

My first problem, my first question and my first suggestion is this: When the minister considers creating a crown corporation will he not consider bringing it within the orbit of a separate bill? He has suggested three corporations, Polymer, Eldorado and Arsenals. I know the minister will realize that I am not attributing anything wrong to him because, from the best information I get, he is going to leave the government on October 31. I cannot see any connection in discussion between Polymer, Arsenals and Eldorado. I know that any schoolteacher would immediately say to me, "Are you so dumb that you cannot separate those things in argument?" I confess that I am that dumb. What I have in mind is that once we get a bill which generalizes about crown corporations it is a very simple thing to bring in a little amendment for one or two more or, as the minister said to-day, maybe twenty.

Mr. HOWE: We had thirty-one at one time. We are cutting them down to five, and I do not think it will ever be any more than five.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): But you said it might be twenty. There are some wonderful expressions of speech such as hyperbole and literative harmony. I do not know what that last one means, and I am inclined to think my schoolteacher friend over here who accuses us of not being farmers will know exactly what that figure of speech means.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): You had all of nine to vote for your amendment.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am just going to say a word or two to the hon. gentleman for Winnipeg North, and I use the word "gentleman" advisedly because he is a very good friend of mine, who last spoke. His position is this: He will go anywhere with anybody who will create socialism. He recognizes us in this group as his enemies. God bless them; let him keep on thinking that because, for the first time in his life, he is right. He is one of those theorists, one of those people who know all about architecture but who have never built anything. He is one of those persons who know all about bridges but never did anything but swim under them. So that I thoroughly understand his position. Nevertheless he is one of the most delightful men this House of Commons ever saw, because he has such wonderful idealism. It is an amazing thing that he has never run up against a few practical facts.

May I suggest to the minister that in bringing in bills or resolutions for the formation of crown companies he bring in one at a time? I am all for the principle of the research council spreading its wings and doing a great deal, but why cannot we deal with one thing at a time? I and my hon. friends to my left differ fundamentally on the principle of doing business. I believe in a principle. I believe in the research council. I believe in its expansion, but I cannot understand why the minister should suggest that blanket authority be given to the research council to form corporations. The minister mentioned one thing. He said, with respect to patents owned by the corporation, that they should be sold at the price the market would bear, and I go with him. But why you should require a corporation to do that business is utterly beyond me. Will the minister not now say what things he wants corporate authority for? If you have a patent to sell you can put an ad in the newspapers and ask for tenders. You do not need a corporation to do that simple thing.

Let me make a comparison between these crown companies and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which is also a crown company. I tried for several days in the house to find out whether the broadcasting corporation had bought one and a half million dollars of equipment. I tried to find out whether they intended to take over certain wave lengths belonging to three stations, one in Toronto, one in Winnipeg and one in Calgary. I was stupid, if you will, but I was persistent, as most stupid people are, and the Minister of National Revenue, who is not in his seat to-night—told me that he did not know whether these things had been done or not. I then asked the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, and he told me that he would accept my question as a notice. Of course I knew they had sent out word a month before to these stations that they were going to take over their wave lengths. Why could we not have been told that in the House of Commons? It is easy to say that these corporations can be reviewed before the House of Commons, but let us see just what can happen. The act setting up the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation provides that the corporation may not spend more than $10,000 without the approval of council and that they may not order anything costing over $10,000 without the approval of council—but we now learn that they have ordered material to a value of $1,500,000.

Do not let anyone think I am suggesting for a moment that the gentlemen who are put in charge of these corporations are not honest. Let us admit that they are, but power begets power. I am going to say something about the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply which I hope he will accept as a compliment. There is a chap named Petrillo in the United States who looks after musicians and they are going to pay him $400 a week for what? For one hour's work a week. The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply and Petrillo are both drunk with power. So do not let these corporations get away from us. I think the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply is the most honourable man I know, but Petrillo is a rotter and a crook. I am not comparing them in that way at all because they are as the poles apart.

An hon. MEMBER: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Chairman, we have spent all day on this, and it is only a resolution. We shall have an opportunity to cover the whole ground on the bill. I wonder if the committee would agree to allowing the resolution to pass now to round out a day's work.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Howe thereupon moved for leave to introduce bill No. 155, respecting the operation of government companies.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, May 28, 1946.

The house met at three o'clock.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House,
Ottawa, May 28, 1946.

Sir:—I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Thibaudeau Rinfret, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber on Tuesday, May 28, at 5.50 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
F. L. C. Pereira,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

PRIVILEGE

REFERENCE TO STATEMENT OF LORD INVERCHAPEL AT HALIFAX ON MAY 27

Mr. BONA ARSENAULT (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. Assuming the fact that strangers to this country, occupying high places, should not take advantage of the prestige attached to their name or to their situation to try to influence members of this House of Commons or of a committee of this house on a decision pertaining to Canadian problems now under study, I wish to protest against the statement made yesterday in Halifax by the newly appointed British Ambassador to Washington, Lord Inverchapel, who expressed his preference as to the choice of a national flag for Canada.

Owing to the nature of his statement, and of the reflection it may bear on some of the members of the flag committee, which is sitting this afternoon at four o'clock, I definitely object to this very untimely intervention in such a controversial matter which concerns Canadians and Canadians only.

An hon. MEMBER: He should mind his own business.

THE KING'S BIRTHDAY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROCLAMATION FIXING MONDAY, JUNE 10

Hon. PAUL MARTIN (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Interpretation Act, the Bills of Exchange Act and the Civil Service Act provide that the king's birthday, or the day fixed by proclamation for the celebration of the birthday of the reigning sovereign, shall be a public holiday under these statutes. The actual date of His Majesty's birthday is December 14, but since his accession, the king, recognizing that the actual date is an inconvenient one, as it is only eleven days before Christmas, has been graciously pleased to approve the celebration of his birthday in the month of June. Accordingly, with the approval of His Majesty, a proclamation is being isued fixing Monday, June 10, as the date appointed for the celebration of His Majesty's birthday in Canada in 1946.

QUEBEC BOUNDARIES EXTENSION

REPEAL OF PROVISION EXCLUDING, FOR PURPOSES OF REDISTRIBUTION, POPULATION OF ADDED AREAS

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce bill No. 156, to amend the Quebec Boundaries Extension Act, 1912.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Mr. Speaker, this bill is an incident of the comprehensive proposals concerning redistribution expressed in the resolution standing on the order paper to-day in the name of the Prime Minister. In 1912 parliament provided for the extension of the boundaries of Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba to take in northern portions. In the bill providing for the extension of the boundaries of Quebec it was provided that the population of the new territory would not be counted for the purpose of ascertaining the number to be divided by sixty-five to determine the unit of representation of the other provinces in the Canadian parliament. Under the proposal expressed in the resolution on the order paper it is suggested that hereafter the unit of population for purposes of representation shall no longer be the population of Quebec divided by sixty-five but the population of all the provinces of Canada divided by 254 or such lesser number as may be arrived at after providing for provinces where representation will be determined by the number of senators they have in the other house.

As a part of the scheme envisaged by the resolution, these conditions which were inserted in the statute annexing to Quebec the northern territory commonly known as Ungava, will become purposeless. This statute of 1912 had provided that it would come into operation only by proclamation, and would not be proclaimed until there had been concurrent legislation by the legislature of Quebec, and this bill would contain a similar provision. It would propose to do away with that restriction in respect of the population of Quebec, but would also contain a clause providing that it would not become operative until proclaimed and would not be proclaimed until met by concurrent legislation of the legislators of Quebec. I might add that no such conditions were expressed in the statutes enlarging the area of Ontario and Manitoba, because there was no similar reason for making any special provision in that regard.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I ask the minister if the legislation to which he refers is not premature? Is it not predicated on the house passing the proposed redistribution bill, which it may or may not do?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: It is a part of the scheme, and it is intended to have it go along concurrently with the other. This is the motion for introduction and first reading of the bill, because it is intended at this time to move the resolution. It is not intended to ask the house finally to adopt the bill until the house has considered the resolution, but it was felt to be proper to have them move along concurrently. Because of the order of procedure in the house this happens to come before the resolution to-day, but at a later stage of to-day's proceedings it is intended to move the resolution.

Mr. MacNICOL: But the resolution would have to pass before this could become operative at all?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Not only would the resolution have to pass, but it is not intended to ask the house to give this bill second reading until the house has disposed of the resolution. And even after it is adopted still it will not become operative until proclaimed, and will not be proclaimed until there has been concurrent legislation by the other legislative body that concurred in the adoption of the 1912 legislation.

Mr. McMASTER: Through you, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister what is the present population of this area?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry, but I must remind the hon. member that it is not proper to put questions to the minister at this stage, nor is it incumbent upon him to answer them.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION

ASSISTANCE IN DEVELOPMENT OF TRADE WITH OTHER COUNTRIES

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to establish a corporation to be known as the Canadian Commercial Corporation empowered to assist in the development of trade between Canada and other nations and to assist persons in Canada to obtain goods and commodities from outside Canada and to dispose of goods and commodities that are available for export from Canada. Provision is made for grants to the corporation from unappropriated moneys of the consolidated revenue fund of amounts not exceeding in the aggregate ten million dollars and other grants out of the consolidated revenue fund as authorized.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Mr. FRASER: Would the minister explain?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must remind hon. members that this motion is not debatable.

Motion agreed to.

REDISTRIBUTION

AMENDMENT TO B.N.A. ACT AS TO RULES FOR READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (for the the Prime Minister) moved:

That, whereas by the British North America Act, 1867 it is provided that in respect of representation in the House of Commons the province of Quebec shall have the fixed number of sixty-five members;

And whereas the said Act provides that there shall be assigned to each of the other provinces such a number of members as will bear the same proportion to the number of its population as the number sixty-five bears to the number of the population of Quebec;

And whereas the said Act provides for the readjustment of representation on the completion of each decennial census, and that on any such readjustment the number of members for a province shall not be reduced unless the proportion which the number of the population of the province bore to the number of the aggregate population of Canada at the then last preceding readjustment of the number of members for the province is ascertained at the then latest census to be diminished by one twentieth part or upwards;

And whereas the effect of the aforesaid provisions has not been satisfactory in that proportionate representation of the provinces according to population has not been maintained;

And whereas it is considered that a more equitable apportionment of members to the various provinces could be effected if readjustment were made on the basis of the population of all the provinces taken as a whole.

A humble address be presented to His Majesty The King in the following words:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Members of the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that You may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom to be expressed as follows:

An Act to provide for the readjustment of representation in the House of Commons of Canada on the basis of the population of Canada;

Whereas the Senate and House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an address to His Majesty praying that His Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for the enactment of the provisions hereinafter set forth,

Be it therefore enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same as follows:

1. Section fifty-one of the British North America Act, 1867, is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

51. (1) The number of members of the House of Commons shall be two hundred and fifty-five and the representation of the provinces therein shall forthwith upon the coming into force of this section and thereafter on the completion of each decennial census be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules:

1. Subject as hereinafter provided, there shall be assigned to each of the provinces a number of members computed by dividing the total population of the provinces by two hundred and fifty-four and by dividing the population of each province by the quotient so obtained, disregarding, except as hereinafter in this section provided, the remainder if any, after the said process of division.

2. If the total number of members assigned to all the provinces pursuant to rule one is less than two hundred and fifty-four, additional members shall be assigned to the provinces (one to a province) having remainders in the computation under rule one commencing with the province having the largest remainder and continuing with the other provinces in the order of the magnitude of their respective remainders until the total number of members assigned is two hundred and fifty-four.

3. Notwithstanding anything in this section, if upon completion of a computation under rules one and two, the number of members to be assigned to a province is less than the number of senators representing the said province, rules one and two shall cease to apply in respect of the said province, and there shall be assigned to the said province a number of members equal to the said number of senators.

4. In the event that rules one and two cease to apply in respect of a province then, for the purpose of computing the number of members to be assigned to the provinces in respect of which rules one and two continue to apply, the total population of the provinces shall be reduced by the number of the population of the province in respect of which rules one and two have ceased to apply and the number two hundred and fifty-four shall be reduced by the number of members assigned to such province pursuant to rule three.

5. Such readjustment shall not take effect until the termination of the then existing parliament.

(2) The Yukon Territory as constituted by chapter forty-one of the Statutes of Canada, 1901, together with any part of Canada not comprised within a province which may from time to time be included therein by the parliament of Canada for the purposes of representation in parliament, shall be entitled to one member.

2. This act may be cited as the British North America Act, 1946, and the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1943, the British North America Act, 1907, and this Act may be cited together as the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1946.

He said: Mr. Speaker, during the last session of this parliament there was a lengthy debate on the redistribution of representation in the House of Commons. It arose on a motion submitted by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Dorion), when he recalled that in 1943, on a joint address to both houses of parliament, an amendment had been adopted by the parliament of the United Kingdom to the British North America Act making it unnecessary to proceed with the distribution consequent upon the census of 1941 until the session following the cessation of hostilities with the German reich, the kingdom of Italy and the empire of Japan. After referring to this the hon. member moved:

That in the opinion of this house the government should conform to the aforesaid resolution and take into immediate consideration the advisability of proceeding during the present session with representation of the provinces in the House of Commons, pursuant to the provisions of the British North America Act.

As I said a minute ago, there was a lengthy debate on the motion. The debate was adjourned at the end of the day, and was not resumed during the session. In the course of the debate I ventured to point out I did not think that the resolution, in the terms in which it was couched, should be adopted, because it would appear to be a determination by the house that it was the government which provided for redistribution of representation in the House of Commons, whilst in fact it is a matter which is the responsibility of parliament.

The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) then asked for clarification of that statement. I stated that of course members of the government, as members of parliament, realized that because they did have some control over the disposal of the time of the house, they had greater responsibility than did other hon. members to see to it that readjustment of representation was provided in due course.

Before I sat down the leader of the opposition put two questions to me. He asked first:

> Does the minister recognize a responsibility on the part of the Canadian parliament to have redistribution before the next election?

And, secondly:

> Will the government say now that there will be such a redistribution?

I answered the first question immediately in the affirmative—and that without the slightest hesitation. Replying to the second question I said I would hope that the government would take the initiative in having that responsibility of parliament to the people of Canada satisfactorily discharged before another election.

Hon. members will recall that in the speech from the throne at this session His Excellency made this statement:

> You will be asked to make provision for the redistribution of representation in the House of Commons.

Hon. members will also recall that when in 1943 the government suggested to the house the adoption of an address to His Majesty asking him to have laid before the parliament of the United Kingdom a bill to postpone the redistribution consequent upon the census of 1941, the reasons stated were that redistribution made on the basis of the British North America Act as it stood, and had been construed by decisions of the courts, would bring about a reduction in the membership of the house from 245 to 238, by reducing by three the representation from Manitoba and by four the representation from Saskatchewan; and that even that would leave a further number of thirteen members, in addition to what would be the representation of the population in the other provinces, based upon the quota obtained by dividing the population of Quebec by sixty-five.

It was also urged that there had been some displacement of population during the war, that it might not be fair to have a redistribution made at that time and on that basis, and that in those troubled days, when the minds of all Canadians were concentrated upon the problems of the war, it might be unfortunate to precipitate the kind of controversy that would arise out of any attempt to make any change in the constitution, as construed, with respect to distribution of representation.

At the last session of parliament it was urged that the amendment in 1943 made it a duty to proceed with redistribution at the first session following the cessation of hostilities. And, though there might have been some technical question then as to whether or not hostilities had completely ceased, that was not the ground upon which it was decided not to ask parliament at that time, or at that session, to consider the problem.

The matter had given us some concern. I had had it carefully examined by law officers in the department, and they had expressed the opinion that there was a duty to have a redistribution made before another general election, but that the statute did not require that it be proceeded with at the first session following even the cessation of hostilities; that the effect of the amendment was to make it unnecessary to do so during the life of the last parliament, but did not change the requirements of the statute otherwise. And it was pointed out that, in fact, redistributions consequential upon former decennial censuses had not always by any means been attempted at the first session of parliament following the publication of the returns of these census statistics.

But in accord with the announcement in the speech from the throne the government has felt it should take the initiative of placing the problem before the house, and of asking that it be dealt with at this session. Thereupon the question arose as to whether or not it would be proper to proceed in the same manner and with the same consequences as would have resulted from a redistribution in 1943, or whether it would be preferable to submit to the house a proposal for readjusting the representation on a basis that would not have the consequences to which I have alluded, in the matter of inconsistencies between the population and the number of members sitting in the house.

The government has come to the conclusion to recommend to parliament the adoption of a petition to His Majesty to cause a bill to be laid before the parliament of the United Kingdom to provide for the repeal of section 51 of the British North America Act as it now stands and to substitute therefor the provisions which are printed on pages 4 and 5 of the Routine Proceedings of this day. I do not think it is necessary to take the time of the house to read the text of section 51 as it exists. I think that text is familiar to all members of the house, who know that it provides that Quebec shall have a fixed representation of sixty-five members and that the number of members to be elected by the population of each of the other provinces shall be determined by dividing the population of Quebec by sixty-five to get a quotient and by using that quotient to divide the population of the other provinces.

If that were done, and if that were all that was provided for in the constitution, the result would be that Prince Edward Island would have two members; Nova Scotia would have eleven; New Brunswick would have nine; Quebec, of course, would have the fixed number of sixty-five; Ontario would have seventy-four instead of eighty-two; Manitoba would have fourteen instead of seventeen as at present; Saskatchewan would have seventeen instead of twenty-one; Alberta would have sixteen instead of seventeen; British Columbia would have sixteen as it has at present, and the Yukon would have one because of the special provision made in that regard.

But there are two qualifications of the application of that general rule. One, introduced by way of amendment in 1915, provides that the representation in the House of Commons of a province will never be of a smaller number than that province is entitled to have members of the senate. That provision makes it impossible for the representation of Prince Edward Island to fall below four, because the constitution provides that Prince Edward Island is entitled to have four representatives in the senate. It makes it impossible for the representation of New Brunswick to fall below ten, because that province is entitled to ten senators.

The second qualification, which has existed from the year of origin of the British North America Act in 1867, provides that on any redistribution the representation of a province shall not be diminished unless the proportion which its population bears to the population of the whole of Canada has been reduced by not less than one-twentieth since the last readjustment of its representation in the House of Commons. That provision gave rise to no difficulty until the turn of the century.

At the turn of the century the application of section 51, even with the qualification, meant a reduction in the representation of Prince Edward Island. The attorney general of that province suggested that under a proper construction of the statute it could not be said that there had been any readjustment in the representation of the people of a province in the House of Commons until the number originally fixed by the constitution had been increased, that until it had been increased there could not be said to have been any readjustment, and that as the representation of the province of Prince Edward Island had never been increased beyond the six which it was at the time of the entry of the province into confederation, there had never been any readjustment and that there could not be any until such time as its population gave it an increase over six.

That argument was submitted to the supreme court and the decision of the court was against the validity of the argument. An appeal was taken to the privy council, and in the case of the Attorney General of the province of Prince Edward Island and the Attorney General of the Dominion of Canada, reported in Law Reports Appeal Cases, 1905, at page 37 and following, it was decided that on a true construction of the British North America Act the argument of the representatives of the Province of Prince Edward Island was unfounded. The language used, and which is to be found at page 51, was this:

> This argument assumes that there has been no readjustment for any province unless there has been an alteration. Their Lordships think this is to give too narrow a meaning to the word. In their opinion, when as the result of a census the representation of the provinces is reconsidered and the necessary changes, if any, made to bring it into harmony with the results of the census, that is a readjustment within the meaning of subsection 4, whether there be or be not any change in the case of any particular province.

That decision of the privy council is to be regarded as a binding construction of section 51, subsection 4, of the British North America Act as it now stands. The effect is that unless there has been a diminution of one-twentieth in the proportion of the population of a province to the population of the dominion between two censuses there shall be no change in its representation in the House of Commons. Although since the number of representatives of the province of Ontario was fixed at eighty-two, there has been a diminution in the proportion of more than one-twentieth, it has no effect on the application of the statute because it has not come about within one decade. However, in the cases of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, even though there has been perhaps a smaller reduction in the proportion of their population to that of the dominion than is at present the case in Ontario since the number of its representatives was changed, there has to be a change because the diminution has come within a decade instead of being spread over more than a decade.

The matter was discussed when the suggestion was made to parliament to adopt an address praying for a postponement of redistribution by way of an amendment to be enacted by the parliament of the United Kingdom. At this stage I shall not attempt to comment upon its validity or otherwise but will merely refer to it as a fact.

As was stated by Mr. Newcombe, who argued the case for the dominion in the supreme court, and whose most interesting argument, as were all his arguments, is reported at full length in volume 33, Supreme Court Reports, this could go on indefinitely. You could have a situation growing over a long enough period where the representation of Quebec would remain at sixty-five, although its population might have become considerably larger than that of the premier province of Ontario, which would still be entitled to retain its eighty-two representatives.

Dissatisfaction has been expressed over this growing gap between the original principle of representation by population and the way the provisions of the British North America Act as construed in this Prince Edward Island decision have worked out, and it was felt by the government, in considering the proposals which it should submit to parliament for the readjustment of representation, that a fairer basis for the representation in parliament would be the population of all the provinces as a whole rather than the population of any one province.

Consideration had been given to taking as the basis the population of the province having the largest representation, and dividing that by 82, because it so happens that 82 is the number of members that Ontario had in the first parliament of Canada. It grew from 82 to 92 and is now back to 82. But it was found that that would not work out entirely satisfactorily, and it was found that it was perhaps not fair to any province to have it in such a position that any necessary reduction in its representation would be attributable to what had happened in the pivotal province. It was thought that it would be fairer to the population of the whole country to have the growth of the country, taken as a whole, determine the representation in the House of Commons, rather than to have the growth in any one locality applied generally throughout the whole country. The proposal which it is submitted it would be proper to request the parliament of the United Kingdom to substitute for the method now in effect is that the representation be fixed at 255; that the Yukon territory, and such other portions of lands as are not now within the limits of any province as parliament may at any time see fit to annex to the Yukon territory for purposes of representation, have one member; that the population of all the provinces of Canada be then divided by 254 to obtain a quotient, and that that quotient serve as a divisor of the population of each province separately; and that if as a result of that operation it should happen that any one or more provinces would have a lesser number allocated to it than its numbers in the senate, then that rule would be disregarded for that province and it would have allotted to it the number of representatives in the House of Commons equal to the number by which it is entitled to be represented in the senate; and that the 254 would be reduced by the number that is allocated to the province to which the rule no longer applied; and that the population of the other provinces would be divided by 254 less that number.

In the present circumstances the calculation made in that way would show that Prince Edward Island would receive only two representatives, and that being less than its number of senators the proposal requires that it be allotted four representatives; that the population of the other eight provinces together be divided by 250, and that the quotient thus arrived at serve to divide the population of all the other provinces.

Mr. MacNICOL: Would the total population include the Yukon and the northwest territories?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No, the population of the remaining provinces. The Yukon and the northwest territories are dealt with in a separate section, and for the time being are provided with only one representative.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Why was the figure 255 chosen?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I cannot say just why the figure 255 was chosen. It is probable that it was realized in advance that one would be set aside for the Yukon and that four would have to be set aside regardless of population for Prince Edward Island. The figure of 250 is used to divide the population of the other eight provinces. A calculation made in that way will give the results which I shall mention in a moment. But before giving those results I wish to explain further a part of the proposal.

The quotient obtained by dividing the population of the eight remaining provinces by 250 is used to divide the population of each individual province. That quotient happens to be 45,578, because the population of the eight remaining provinces is 11,394,666. Each province then receives one member for as many times as 45,578 goes into its population, and when that operation has been accomplished for each of the eight provinces, if 250 members have not thus been allotted, the remaining members are allotted to the province having the largest remainder as a result of each individual division. The result of a calculation on that basis is as follows:

Prince Edward Island, with its population of 95,047, receives four members, because that is the minimum to which its representation can be reduced.

Nova Scotia, with a population of 577,962, receives 12 members, and there is a remainder of 31,026.

New Brunswick, with a population of 457,401, gets 10 members, and has a remainder of 1,621.

Quebec, with a population of 3,331,882, gets 73 times the divisor and has a remainder of 4,688, including the population of New Quebec, which is 3,067. This 3,067 is such a small number that whether you take it into account or not it has no effect whatsoever upon the calculation provided for in this resolution. It would, if you left it out, diminish the divisor by twelve, so that it has no effect whatsoever on the calculation.

Ontario, with a population of 3,787,655, gets 83 units, with a remainder of 4,681. Manitoba, with a population of 729,744, gets 16, with a remainder of 496. Saskatchewan, with a population of 895,992, gets 19, with a remainder of 30,010. Alberta, with a population of 796,169, gets 17, with a remainder of 21,343. British Columbia, with a population of 817,461, gets 17, with a remainder of 43,035. That provides for only 247 of the 250 to be allocated; so that one additional member is allocated to British Columbia, having the largest remainder, 43,035, as compared to the unit, 45,578, and British Columbia's representation in the House of Commons, according to this formula, would be 18. Nova Scotia, with a remainder of 31,026, would also get an additional member and have 13 instead of 12 units; and the third would be allotted to Saskatchewan, which has by the calculation 19 and a remainder of 30,010. That would make up the 250 members.

Mr. MacNICOL: What was the quotient, again, please?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The quotient is 45,578. Perhaps, for the convenience of hon. members, I might put on Hansard this tentative calculation, which has been given to me by the assistant chief electoral officer, showing the population of each province and the representation which would conform with the terms of this proposal. If I have the consent of the house and if the house feels that it would be helpful to have this on Hansard, I shall be glad to have it made a part of the report.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Perhaps the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) would like to have these figures. It will be found that the population of Yukon territory is 4,914 and the population of the remainder of the northwest territories is 12,028.

Mr. MacNICOL: That 12,028 would include Eskimos and Indians?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: Indians too?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I would imagine so.

Mr. MacNICOL: Otherwise the population would not be anything like that size.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I imagine that would include all those whom it was possible for the census enumerators to find in the territory at the time of the census.

The statement referred to follows:

Office of the Chief Electoral Officer

Ottawa, May 27, 1946.

Memorandum for the Honourable Louis St. Laurent, K.C., Minister of Justice

Set out below is a table showing the number of members to which each province will be entitled should the total membership of the House of Commons be set at 255.

The following figures are based on the 1941 population of Canada which is.....		11,506,655
Less Yukon Territory (1 member)	4,914
Prince Edward Island (4 members)	95,047
North West Territories..	12,028
(5 members)	111,989	111,989
Therefore the total population used to obtain the quotient is		11,394,666
And the quotient for 255 members is		45,578

Province	Population	Remainder after division by quotient	No. of members
P.E.I.	95,047		4
Nova Scotia	577,962	31,026*	13
New Brunswick	457,401	1,621	10
Quebec	3,331,882	4,688	73
Ontario	3,787,655	4,681	83
Manitoba	729,744	496	16
Saskatchewan	895,992	30,010*	20
Alberta	796,169	21,343	17
British Columbia	817,461	43,035*	18
Yukon	4,914		1
Total			255

*In order to bring the total number of members to 255, these three provinces, having the largest remainders, are each assigned an additional member.

Respectfully submitted,

Donald Stewart,
Assistant chief electoral officer.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Having made this objective statement as to what would be the application of this formula provided for in the resolution, there is very little I have to add. It will be for the house to decide whether or not it is desirable to proceed in this way. If it is, the procedure of presenting a petition by this house to His Majesty asking that he cause a bill to be laid before the parliament of the United Kingdom is the only procedure that can be adopted. We have section 51 as it now stands in the British North America Act, an enactment of the parliament of the United Kingdom. In the Statute of Westminster it was provided that, although the parliament of the United Kingdom would not thereafter adopt legislation applying to Canada except on the request of Canada, nothing in that statute would affect the provisions of the British North America Act; and therefore, whenever it is desired to have any change made in the British North America Act the procedure to be adopted is to petition His Majesty to cause a bill to be laid before the parliament of the United Kingdom and have the enactment made there.

Mr. BRACKEN: I should be interested in knowing how long it would take to have this amendment passed.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Well, it would be presumptuous on my part to say how rapidly the parliament of the United Kingdom would proceed. All I can do is state to my hon. friend that in 1943 it was a matter of about ten days between the time the petition was adopted by the houses of parliament here and the time it was assented to as an act of the parliament of the United Kingdom.

Mr. BRACKEN: These measures are usually expedited?

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

Mr. ST. LAURENT: That is what happened the last time.

Another question, which has arisen each time there has been any move to ask for an amendment of the British North America Act, has been whether or not the provinces had been consulted and had agreed to it. I think that when the question is put in that form it is ambiguous. The provinces, that is to say the people of the provinces, are all represented in this parliament, and for the purposes of such matters as are confided to the jurisdiction of this parliament it is by those representatives here that the people of the provinces speak. There are other matters given by the act to the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures and the provincial governments; with respect to any of those it is my view that it would not be possible to deal with them without the consent of those to whose jurisdiction they have been confided. My view of the confederation enactment—it matters little whether it be called a pact or any other name—is that there was an assembly of distinguished gentlemen representing in the conferences four colonial legislatures, legislatures which legislated by delegation of the parliament of the United Kingdom; so much so that if one looks at the constitution of 1791, the parliaments then set up for Lower Canada and for Upper Canada were expressly authorized to enact laws for the peace, order and good government of these colonies. It was expressly provided that those laws would be obligatory by virtue of the enactment of the parliament of the empire, and practically the same language was conserved in the act of union between the two Canadas in 1840. Then the representatives of the people which had legislatures of that delegated character met and discussed resolutions which were finally submitted to the imperial parliament for enactment, and by those resolutions they provided that the sum total of the sovereignty would be divided between two jurisdictions; one portion would go to the central parliament, another portion would go to the provincial legislatures; and the courts have held that with respect to what was allocated to the provincial legislatures they are not mandatories or agents of or subservient to the central parliament; they have received that portion of the sovereignty of the nation to exercise it under their own sovereign authority; and it is my view that nothing which has thus been allocated to them can be taken from them without their participation. They have been given exclusive jurisdiction over that field, and it cannot be interfered with. But on the other hand, exclusive jurisdiction over other matters was given to the other representative body of the Canadian people, and it so happens that the representation in this house has to be adjusted from time to time in such manner and subject to such conditions as this parliament, composed of the representatives of all the provinces, determines.

When I hear these suggestions that the constitution of the Canadian parliament results from a delegation made by these original colonial legislatures I sometimes wonder how that can be seriously argued, when it is remembered that at the time the two groups of population with respect to which the argument is urged so forcibly are the group of Anglo-Saxon descent and the group of French descent. At that time they were both in one legislature, and their representatives appointed by that one legislature participated in the conference which led to the enactment of the statute of 1867. It seems inconceivable to me that John A. Macdonald, afterwards Sir John A. Macdonald, was not as much a representative of the group for which he spoke before the first of July, 1867, after confederation had been proclaimed, as he was the representative of that group in the various conferences that took place prior thereto. And similarly that George Etienne Cartier, afterwards Sir George Etienne Cartier, was not as much a representative of the group for whom he spoke and negotiated in the Quebec conference after the proclamation of the statute of 1867 as he was before that time.

These are matters about which one must be rather careful. I know there is no desire anywhere to do anything that is not in accord with the true spirit and intent that presided over these deliberations; but it is apt to appear a bit strange to have it constantly urged that for the purposes of any amendment whatsoever to the British North America Act the persons who are competent to express opinions are the provincial legislatures. They are competent to express opinions on all matters allocated in the statute to provincial jurisdiction; but as to everything that was put within central jurisdiction by the statute of 1867, the statute provided how the people were to be represented and to what assembly His Majesty and his constitutional advisers were to be responsible.

This matter of adjusting representation is something which in express terms falls to be determined by the parliament of Canada. Of course there are rules expressed in the section which can be modified only by the legislative body which enacted them. Section 51 of the original act provided that:

> On the completion of the census in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, and of each subsequent decennial census, the representation of the four provinces—

By virtue of the decision expressly made by the supreme court and the privy council in the Prince Edward Island case, that has to be read "the representation of all the provinces." I continue:

> —shall be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the parliament of Canada from time to time provides,—

Subject to the subsections expressed. It is the parliament of Canada, subject to such action as may be taken by the parliament of the United Kingdom, which is the only body having been given jurisdiction in that regard in 1867. And under the Statute of Westminster it is now provided that the parliament of the United Kingdom will not act in respect of Canadian affairs except upon request. According to constitutional practice that request has to be expressed in the form of humble addresses presented to His Majesty.

As to whether or not it is proper at this time that there should be a modification made that would provide for a truly proportionate representation based on population, it is for this house to decide on this resolution. There can be no doubt that the time will come when the application of these restrictive rules will become unbearable. The general principle is representation according to population. There will come a time—there cannot be any doubt about that—when anything that gets seriously out of line with that principle will be considered unbearable. In this house there are twenty representatives who are not here because there is behind them the quotient provided for by the general rule. In my opinion that is sufficient to make it desirable to get back to a rule which will provide for a truly proportionate distribution of the representatives in this house. Should it be 255; should it be 245, or 238? These are matters of detail. But it so happens that by making it 255 there seems to be at this time only one province which will see its representation diminished, and there it will be diminished by only one.

It is a matter of practical experience, I think, that it is always painful to bring about a readjustment which requires a diminution in representation. It does not seem to me that a house composed of 255 members would be inordinately large, not only in view of the numbers of our population but in view of the immense territory the representatives in this house represent. Do we always realize that the area of this country is enormous—from one ocean to the other, from the boundaries of the United States to the north pole, an area scarcely smaller than the whole of Europe and somewhat larger than the whole of the United States? Of course, were it not for the fact that only a relatively small fraction of it is regarded as potentially valuable for agricultural purposes, it would be difficult to explain why there are only twelve million people in that vast area; but the representation is territorial, and the territory is very large.

I submit that there should be found much to commend itself to hon. members in this proposal, which will provide, if it is adopted, that hereafter the adjustment of representation will be in accord with the general growth all over the country from one ocean to the other and from the United States border to the north pole. And whenever in applying the results brought about by the growth over the whole country it does happen that one province suffers some diminution in its representation, it will not be chargeable to happenings in any other individual province.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Did the minister say just one province would lose a member?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes, I think so.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): As I followed the minister's figures, there will be two provinces losing—Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I think the hon. member failed to take into account the fact that there is a remainder, providing for one member—

Mr. BRACKEN: Saskatchewan still would be one short.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Saskatchewan would lose one member, but Saskatchewan seems to be the only province that would have any diminution in its representation as a result of the application of this rule.

Mr. BRACKEN: And Manitoba, according to your figures.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): If the minister will recall, he gave the extra ones to Nova Scotia, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, so that Manitoba remains at sixteen, whereas they had seventeen. That is as I followed the minister; I may be wrong.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I am sorry, but I handed the statement I received from the deputy of the chief electoral officer to Hansard, and the figures will appear there. My impression was that only one province would have one less member.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I took down the figures as the minister gave them, though I may be wrong.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: My hon. friend will see the figures in the official statement I obtained from the deputy of the chief electoral officer, and I think he will find that the representation of only one province has been lessened.

Mr. JOHNSTON: What provinces will find their representation increased, and by how many?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: There would be increases totalling ten in all; two to British Columbia, one to Ontario and eight to Quebec. That is a total of eleven, but there is one diminution, making a net increase of ten. There are eleven to be allocated, because in respect of Saskatchewan there is a diminution of one.

Mr. CHURCH: As a matter of fact does not this resolution have to pass unanimously before the United Kingdom parliament will consent to it? On the occasion of the last amendment they asked whether the provinces had consented. We people should first vote on it. Why ask for it at a time like this?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I am not sure that I was able to follow the hon. member. However, I will see his question and will endeavour to have an answer to it when I reply. If the question is, does there have to be unanimous consent in this house to enable a petition to be presented, of course the answer is no.

Mr. CHURCH: At the time of the last amendment we were asked about the provinces.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have anything more to add. It will be for hon. members to determine whether in their opinion the time has arrived to bring the representation back to a proportionate basis.

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the house calls upon the parliament of the United Kingdom to make the most far-reaching constitutional change in the British North America Act that has been made or asked since the confederation pact of 1867. This being so, I feel that the speech delivered by the right hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. St. Laurent) requires the serious consideration and study of all hon. members, and I suggest that at this stage the debate be adjourned until a date to be fixed, to the end that such study may be possible. I therefore move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Would the hon. member be prepared to resume the debate at a relatively early day?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Tuesday?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Very well.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: On that understanding, on this side of the house we have no objection to the motion.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SEAMEN'S STRIKE—AMENDMENT OF CANADA SHIPPING ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): In view of a telegram I have just received I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour. Will he consider taking immediate steps to remove the anachronism in chapter 186, section 288, of the Canada Shipping Act, revised statutes, 1927, under which seamen engaged in an industrial dispute can be arrested and tried as deserters?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I think that is a pretty tall order to give the Minister of Labour.

Mr. COLDWELL: I said consider it.

Mr. MITCHELL: The Canada Shipping Act comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport, and I have nothing to do with that matter.

Mr. COLDWELL: Then I direct the question to the Minister of Transport. This is clearly an anachronism, and it never was intended to be applied as it is being applied at the present time. May I just add that during the war the defence of Canada regulations were set aside by order in council in regard to industrial disputes, and it seems to me this is analogous.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): I am not familiar with the section to which my hon. friend refers. If he has reference to the general sections under which charges have been laid, all I can say is that charges laid under the Canada Shipping Act are similar to those laid under the criminal code. The Canada Shipping Act has the same effect as the criminal code, and these charges are not laid by the Department of Transport; they are laid by informants before police magistrates. I have not the section before me, but I shall be glad to look at it and consider the matter.

Mr. LOCKHART: Why are they not permitted bail?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The question of bail is one for the magistrate in the locality in which the charge is laid.

Mr. COLDWELL: Action of this kind could not be taken under the criminal code or under the defence of Canada regulations in connection with an industrial dispute. It seems to me this is an anachronism in relation to an industrial dispute, and one which should be removed.

BEVERAGE DISPENSERS IN ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I do not like to impose upon the Minister of Labour, but I also have a question I should like to ask. I do not want him to put this on to the wartime prices and trade board, because I have received wires and air mail letters in regard to it, as no doubt he has also, from the province of Alberta. What action has the government or the national war labour board taken to avert the impending strike on May 30 of the beverage dispensers of Alberta?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I shall be glad to look into my hon. friend's question.

Mr. JOHNSTON: It is a very serious matter, at least to the people concerned.

MEAT

INQUIRY AS TO RETAIL PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. FRASER (Peterborough West): The Minister of Labour has received a wire from the retail meat dealers' association of his riding, as I have. Since he is a member of the government I should like to ask him what he has done in regard to this matter, or what he intends to do.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I think I have enough to look after in my own department. Other people may not think so, but I am not trying to be funny when I say that. I hope I shall never live to see the day when the wartime prices and trade board is transferred to the Department of Labour. I will make my representations to the board, as no doubt the hon. member will also.

Mr. CHARLTON: When the committee rose a week ago last Friday evening I was speaking to this item, and was pointing out that there had been reports of abortions occurring in herds that had been vaccinated. In that connection I should like to quote one paragraph from an article sent out by the Ontario Veterinary college at Guelph. It deals with the duration of immunity, and states:

The interval of time during which the resistance against infection lasts has not been definitely established. Outbreaks amongst adult vaccinated animals, vaccinated three to six years previously, have been reported. The question of revaccination in such instances is under survey at the present time. The duration of immunity therefore, has not been definitely fixed.

A considerable amount of work is being done along these lines at the Ontario Veterinary college. The paragraph does bring up the point as to how long after initial treatment the animals should be revaccinated. Abortions have occurred in vaccinated animals from six to eight years after, and in this instance from nine to ten years after the vaccination of the herds. This fact may lead farmers to believe that vaccination is not a proper procedure, and I suggest that veterinarians who are doing vaccinating work should reassure the farmers who may have questioned this process. It should be pointed out that vaccination is not a cure, and was never intended to be. It does however have a worthwhile restraining effect upon the recurrence of the disease.

Many breeders have felt that the disease would be contracted from vaccinated animals. I tried to point out last fall that this was not so, and in that connection I would read another paragraph from the same report, which deals with the subject of the stability of strain 19. It says:

The strain has been injected into pregnant females, producing abortion. These animals inoculated, have been free of infection prior to the next pregnancy. Furthermore, contact normal pregnant females did not contract the disease. The germ, when re-isolated, or recovered from these experimental animals, had the same qualities as the original strain 19. Hence, the strain 19 is stable.

Now, as further evidence of the fallacy of this programme as now carried on by the department, I should like to quote from the North American Veterinarian of April, 1944, where it says:

For fifteen years, the blood-test method for the control of brucellosis in cattle has been given the most earnest and efficient support by the vast majority of veterinarians, state sanitary control officials and cattle-breeders. Few disease-control measures have had as much trial or have ever been given greater financial or professional support. This method has been of value in keeping many herds free from infection as far as could be determined by the agglutination test. However, such herds are in constant danger from some undisclosed, latent infection or from infection gaining entrance to the herd from the outside.

In areas where herds are small and cattle are few in number, the disease incidence is reduced and the problem of control is vastly simplified. The ultimate control and eradication of the disease in areas where herds are large and in close proximity and where the rate of infection is heavy, becomes a problem of considerable magnitude. In such areas control and eradication by the testing method alone has in many instances resulted in almost complete eradication of the herd, not only once, but several times.

I should like to emphasize that last sentence. To continue:

After the most thorough and conscientious efforts were expended over a period of years, the more farsighted practising veterinarians and cattle-breeders concluded that this method, even though bolstered by huge state and federal funds, would not accomplish the desired end.

And further down:

Considerable progress of a more permanent nature in the control of brucellosis in cattle in Illinois and throughout the country has been made during the past few years.

And again:

Cattle breeders and veterinarians have found that calfhood vaccination has given them an offensive weapon with which to fight the disease and in recent years definite progress has been made at a minimum of expense. Veterinarians realize that this procedure is not 100 per cent perfect but they have found a method that has enabled them to make permanent gains—a method that has enabled cattle breeders to plan their breeding operations with greater security and confidence.

I should like to say a word about the action taken by the Ontario Veterinary college at Guelph, and to commend the Ontario department of agriculture for the action it has taken; because as far as I know Ontario is the only province that has taken a definite stand on this matter. The Ontario Veterinary college has made available vaccine for all breeders in the province. The vaccine will be distributed through the agency of qualified veterinarians. Vaccine will be maintained in the fresh state and will be distributed free of charge. The breeders will be responsible for the payment for the injection of vaccine. The college will supply the veterinarian with the vaccine, vaccination certificate forms and ear tags. During the present year the college plans to make the programme province-wide in its application.

I hope I have made my point quite clear. Action must be taken for the protection not only of the cattle breeders of this country but of human life as well. As I have said before, this disease probably causes more loss to cattle breeders than any other disease we know of, and it will continue to cause large losses unless something definite is done.

There are two other types of this disease, one affecting swine and the other affecting goats. The one affecting swine is known as brucella suis and the one affecting goats as brucella melitensis. They say that in some parts of the United States seventy per cent of the undulant fever in humans is caused by brucella suis. This disease is very difficult to diagnose in swine because abortions are not noticeable. For this reason brucella suis is far more important from the human standpoint than the brucella abortus which affects cattle. I should like to quote Veterinary Medicine of March, 1946, page 99, as follows:

> On the whole, it is not the economic loss from swine brucellosis but the public health aspect that is most important. In the whole country there is a large number of cases of undulant fever in man, and the incidence is increasing year by year. What percentage of these cases is due to the porcine type of the organism is not known, but statistics gathered in Iowa, the leading state in swine production, shows 75 per cent of the cases to be due to the suis type. Curiously enough, in Alabama, which is not an important swine producing state, a survey showed almost the same percentage—72 per cent—of the cases of undulant fever to be due to the swine organism. Every epidemic of undulant fever that has occurred in this country, so far, has been due to the suis type of the organism, in most, perhaps all instances due to the infection of cattle and contamination of raw milk with the swine type of the organisms.

I think we have much to learn in this country regarding this organism and I suggest that the Department of Agriculture get in touch with the United States officials and find out all they can about it. As I said, it is important not only as it affects the cattle breeders, but also because of its possible effect upon the health of this nation.

Mr. GRAYDON: I rise with some hesitation to take part in a discussion upon so specialized a matter as testing for Bang's disease and tuberculosis in cattle and other animals, but I should like to relate to the committee an incident which came to my notice during the week-end. It was brought to my attention by the farmer concerned, and he was in the gathering where there were others to testify to the facts in the matter. This farmer had an accredited and listed herd of Holsteins, which is the term used in connection with the dominion government testing programme. His herd numbered some forty-four cattle. During the last twelve years he has never had a positive reaction. Tests should have been made last November, but there was some delay caused by congestion brought about by the war. The tests were made two or three weeks ago, and every one of his forty-four cattle went down. There was one calf which escaped but they took the calf off with the rest to the abattoir. The farmer tells me that in this instance a new serum was used for testing purposes. Whether it is more sensitive or not I do not know; in any event the result has been very strange, as I think the minister will agree. This farmer can ill afford the loss of his herd. I would draw the minister's attention to the fact that when the cattle went to Swift's abattoir for slaughtering, particular attention was paid to these animals by those specializing in the making of tests when animals are killed, and not a single bit of evidence of tuberculosis was found in the whole herd. This serves only to arouse further suspicion in the minds of the farming community in which this man lives. In fact it is causing consternation, because the farmers feel that either the new serum must have been too sensitive or there must have been some error in making the test. The farmers are inclined to attribute it to the new serum, and oppose any suggestion that the test was not properly carried out.

I shall give the minister the farmer's name and address, and his lot and concession number—he does not happen to be in my constituency—so that he may make an investigation. It is a matter of grave concern to the farming community, and the sooner a full explanation is made from the ministerial level the better it will be for all concerned. An investigation should be instituted and the truth be made known so that rumours will not be flying about such as I heard over the week-end.

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, in the first place I wish to thank the hon. member for Peel for having brought this matter before the committee. The facts are very much as they have been stated so far as tuberculin is concerned. The reason for introducing the new tuberculin some four or five months ago was that our cattle going across into the United States and being tested with this tuberculin were going down, and that was having a very bad effect on the trade of our breeding stock going into the United States. So the department decided to use the same tuberculin that was being used in the United States. There are some cattle going down under the test of this tuberculin, which did not go down under the tuberculin that was used before. Apparently it has a more sensitive reaction, but so far as we have been able to determine up to the moment it does not result in cattle going down that are not affected by tuberculosis. Of course the object of these tests is to get all the cattle that are affected. It is just possible that cattle which were reacting negatively under the old test are going down under the test with this new tuberculin. It is just as well that the question should be discussed here and information given to the committee in regard to it.

The department is making a most careful check to make sure that no undue hardship is being caused to anyone as a result of the use of this new tuberculin. I am sure that all breeders, particularly those breeding for sale outside Canada, will desire to have their market retained by having the most careful check made of animals on this side.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I ask what have been the results in the last five or six months since this new tuberculin was introduced? Have there been similar cases to the one I have discussed this afternoon, in which whole herds which for years have been reacting negatively to the old test have gone down under the new test?

Mr. GARDINER: We have no information up to the moment as to a whole herd reacting negatively under the old test and then, with one exception, reacting positively under the new test. There are no such cases on record. There are cases of individual animals reacting negatively under the old test and positively under the new test. That was the reason for using this serum. Our cattle were reacting negatively under the old test and were reacting positively to the new serum on the other side of the line. The complaint was made that animals afflicted with tuberculosis were being shipped into the United States even though we were giving certificates that they were free from the disease.

I do not know that I should attempt to give a detailed explanation of the different methods by which the tuberculin is developed, but this serum is being used in the United States, where our greatest market is, and to protect the breeder here we thought we should use the same tuberculin.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GRAYDON: I would ask the minister to clear up one more point which the farmers have made to me. At the abattoir where the cattle were slaughtered the veterinaries—I suppose they would be veterinaries—

Mr. GARDINER: They would be veterinaries.

Mr. GRAYDON: The veterinaries found no evidence of tuberculosis in this herd. Would a veterinary at the abattoir, after a cow had been declared to have reacted positively, be able to find evidence of tuberculosis in the animal?

Mr. GARDINER: That would not be definite proof that the animal was not affected, because the disease cannot always be detected in the slaughtering.

Mr. GRAYDON: It seems strange that forty-four of them had been declared negative and then were declared positive under this new test, and yet not one of them showed any evidence of tuberculosis at the abattoir. This has confirmed the suspicions of the farming community in which this man lives and carries on his business. I would ask the minister to make a personal investigation of the case I have brought to his attention.

Mr. GARDINER: If my hon. friend will give me the name and all particulars, we shall go into the case.

Mr. GRAYDON: I shall be glad to do that.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Brandon): May I ask the minister if there are many municipalities in Manitoba which have made requests for the tuberculin test which it has been found impossible to accede to? In one area I have in mind, the farmers, mostly very good farmers, are raising splendid cattle, but they are isolated, and while all the municipalities surrounding them have had the test, this municipality has not been able to get one because of the shortage of veterinaries. Thus they are placed at a great disadvantage in the distribution of their herds, and they are hoping for a remedy very soon. I know that the trouble has been the shortage of veterinaries, and I would ask the minister whether there is a likelihood of the situation correcting itself in the near future.

Mr. GARDINER: There are six municipalities in Manitoba which have been accepted but have not yet been passed. A number of others—I have not here the figures as to the exact numbers—have made applications which have not yet been finally considered, but six have been accepted but the tests have not yet been made. The reason for that is largely a lack of veterinarians to make the tests. But there are some isolated cases where applications have been made and where it is not intended to make the tests right away. I would take it that a case which would be in the vicinity of Brandon would be in a block, rather than isolated. Efforts are being made to make the test as far as possible in all the areas where there is a block of municipalities around about which have already been accepted and where tests have been started but not completed.

Mr. TUSTIN: A few years ago a test was taken in a number of municipalities, and I understand that it must be continued over a period of several years before it becomes authentic. During the war years some of those municipalities were dropped. Will they be taken on again now and the work started from the beginning and carried right through?

Mr. GARDINER: Just as soon as we can get the men to do it, it is intended to bring them up. Unfortunately, some of them have lost their standing because it has not been possible to do them regularly enough.

Mr. FRASER: Do they inspect this canned meat at the plant, or is it inspected afterwards? I heard the other day that some thousands of cans of food were condemned at Montreal. Does the minister know anything about that?

Mr. GARDINER: All that is put up at the inspected plants is inspected by dominion inspectors, at the plant. There are in the provinces plants which are not subject to federal inspection. That is, we do not accept those plants as plants from which meat can be exported, either interprovincially or internationally. But in certain provinces there may be meat sold which has been put up within the province by a plant that we do not inspect, so I cannot say definitely that all meat condemned in Montreal or Toronto or somewhere else has been inspected by us. We inspect at the plant where the product is being put up for export from one province to another or for export from this country to another country.

Mr. FRASER: The way I understand it is that if the meat is only to be sold within the province you do not have to inspect it.

Mr. GARDINER: That does not cover it fully. For example, there are a certain number of plants in Ontario which are exporting meat, and because they are exporting meat they live up to all the health regulations of the federal department of agriculture. Those are what we call inspected plants. But there are a number, some of them of quite considerable size, that will not bring their plants up to the standard we require: they do not intend to export meat, and therefore, they say, we are going along under provincial regulations as they are, or probably under the health regulations of the city in which they operate. We do not inspect those plants: no meat out of those plants will go into export. But take a plant like Canada Packers in Toronto: we inspect the meat there, and a very considerable part of it may be marketed in Ontario, but it is all inspected; we cannot separate meat to be exported from that to be consumed locally. Because all the meat in that plant is inspected, it can be exported either to another province or to another country, but some is consumed in Ontario.

Mr. FRASER: Then a farmer could start his own canning plant out in the country where, perhaps, they have no health laws and sell that canned stuff any place in the province without its being under the jurisdiction of your department?

Mr. GARDINER: It would not be under the jurisdiction of this department. There are, however, health laws in every province, and there are regulations with regard to local slaughter for local consumption. But they are not under this department.

Mr. FRASER: The reason I brought up the matter is that about forty people were poisoned last year from canned chicken which they had bought, and I wondered what the minister's department does with regard to incidents of that kind.

Mr. GARDINER: We would have to know the exact case before we would know whether we inspected it or not.

19. Compensation for animals slaughtered, $373,036.

Mr. BRYCE: Has the minister given any consideration to the raising of the allowance for slaughtered animals? To-day, if you happen to have an animal from a registered or a purebred herd that goes into the tank, the amount is $96; if you have a grade herd you get only $38 per head. Those figures were set at a time when good milk cows were worth $75 to $80. In the west to-day we are paying anything from $175 to $200 for milk cows, and to get only $38 is not enough. Has the minister given that matter any consideration? I raised it once before.

Mr. GARDINER: It has been up, I think, every session for the last ten years, and we have given consideration to it each time.

Some have suggested that when the price is high we should raise the amount which is paid, but we have always held that it would be most difficult to vary the amount year by year. One might say that when prices are very low we should make the allowance very low, but we have maintained the position that we should have a fair average return. The maximum is $40 on the grades and $100 on the purebreds.

Mr. BRYCE: Is it not $96?

Mr. GARDINER: It may work out at that, but the maxima are, I think, $40 and $100. Over a long term of years those have been considered to be fair rates. We have considered the matter from time to time and have always come back to the same conclusion. One obvious reason is that when prices are high the salvage is very much higher; when prices are low the salvage value is low. That is not the only amount the man gets, as was just indicated by the hon. member for Peel. All these cattle went to the abattoir; then they were examined and apparently the inspectors were not able to condemn any of the meat. The animal was sold. In those cases, at least, the raisers got the full meat value of the animal. In addition to that, they would get the other allowance. It is presumed that the two combined pretty well takes care of the loss.

Mr. BRYCE: Thirty-eight dollars is much too low for an animal that cost $200, particularly if the farmer does not get any of the meat. The individual to whom the hon. member for Peel referred got the meat, but if you do not get the meat the loss on the cow is that much greater. I hope the minister does not think we are going back to the old days when cows were low in price. We may go back to the day when the price is lower than it is to-day, but surely we shall never go back to the days when we were getting $15 for a cow. I would ask the minister to reconsider the matter and try to bring the price up more in line with present-day conditions. The farmer is taking a terrific loss when he gets only $38 for a cow which cost $200, and which goes into the tank.

Mr. GRAYDON: The hon. member for Selkirk mentioned the case I brought up and spoke about the value of the cattle if they were slaughtered for meat. Perhaps I should put more details on the record. The farmer I mentioned could have got $7,200 for his cattle on the open market. Actually he will get exactly $4,800 in spite of the fact that, as the minister says, the meat was not condemned. In spite of that the loss is considerable.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: The salvage plus the compensation amounted to only $4,800?

Mr. GRAYDON: His loss on the transaction is exactly $2,400, the difference between $7,200 and $4,800.

Mr. GARDINER: That is a purebred Holstein herd?

Mr. GRAYDON: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): The matter raised by the hon. member for Selkirk is an important one. It was raised last year by the hon. member for Haldimand. I do not know the year in which the department set the maximum allowance for animals, both grade and purebred, that are slaughtered.

Mr. GARDINER: The maximum is $100.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I know what the maximum is, but in what year was it set? What I am trying to arrive at is the year and the corresponding values.

Mr. GARDINER: It was 1937.

Mr. SENN: They never pay the maximum.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I would ask the minister to have the department give careful consideration to this matter. We have heard a great deal about stabilizing prices for farm products. To-day our cattle are not bringing in anything like the prices obtained in markets in other nations. Therefore there should be some upward adjustment of these maximum allowances.

Mr. GARDINER: I said it was 1937, but it goes away back beyond that, prior to the last war. It has remained at the present level since 1922.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I would think it was set at a time when prices were at a very low level as compared with prices these days anyway. Certainly the allowances are completely out of date. In some of the better sections of the country our people are trying to improve their herds and have them inspected. I presume that there will be an expansion of that work now that more help is obtainable in the way of veterinarians and so on. That being so, those people who are unfortunate enough to have a herd go down take too drastic a loss. I hope the minister will reconsider this matter and try to have the maximum allowance adjusted at this time in line with present prices prevailing for beef.

Mr. FAIR: I should also like to join with the hon. members for Selkirk, Souris and Peel in asking the minister to have his department check up this matter again. Some upward adjustment is badly needed. The farmer who sustains a loss by having his herd slaughtered sustains that loss in the interests of other farmers in the country. Ample provision for him should be made without delay.

Production service—
20. Live stock and poultry, $839,625.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should like to ask the minister a number of questions pertaining to artificial insemination. I shall read the questions and then I shall send them across to the minister so that he can answer them in order. How many artificial insemination centres are operating in each of the provinces? Where are the artificial insemination centres located in Alberta? How many stock men were supplied by each of these Alberta centres in 1943, 1944 and 1945? What breeds of bull are stationed at each of these centres? What is the name of each sire at each station? From what breeder was each purchased? What is the age of each sire? What price was paid for him? What proof of outstanding quality can be furnished for each sire?

Mr. GARDINER: I am afraid I shall have to take that as a notice of questions. It is information that I would not and could not possibly have here. I am asked to give the names of these different animals, and all that kind of thing. I cannot do so now.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Artificial insemination comes under the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, but to get the name of every bull while I am sitting here is rather difficult. Give it as a notice of question and I shall get the information in writing.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I did wish to have the answers at this time. These things are of great importance and could go a long way to improving live stock throughout Canada. Live stock throughout the country is going to depend on this important matter and that is why I raised the question.

Mr. GARDINER: I quite agree with all that. I may say that there is no station in Alberta. That answers part of the question which I think would be of the greatest interest to the hon. member. Possibly there should be a station there. The only thing I can say is that there is so much detail asked for by the hon. member for Lethbridge that I would ask him to let it stand on the record as a question and I shall see that an answer is brought down in the house, if not while my estimates are on, just as soon as it can be obtained. Answers to the questions will be put on the record.

Mr. BLACKMORE: While the minister is obtaining the answer will he also tell the committee from what sources anyone in Alberta would be most likely to obtain the service?

Mr. GARDINER: I think the hon. member can get that from the answers to the questions that were asked. He asked for the location of the different places, the names of the animals and so on. I think all the information desired is covered by the question. When the information is secured the farmers would then examine the pedigrees of their own herds and select the service accordingly. Persons who had been getting sires from some breed herds would probably not desire to utilize the same service. They would make their own choices in these cases as to where they would get the service. So long as all the information asked for is on the record any person wanting to use the service can utilize it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The reason I asked the question is this: if the stations are not in Alberta then from what centres would the Alberta farmers likely get the service? That is the point I want to have answered.

Mr. GARDINER: It will all be in the record.

Mr. MENARY: Will sufficient grain be available in the west to supply the eastern provinces with feed for their hogs and chickens this year? Some farmers in my district are cancelling their orders for young chicks because they fear they will not be able to get the grain. They are also getting rid of some of the young pigs for the same reason.

I should also like to join with the hon. members for Peel, Souris and Selkirk in asking that the price of cattle that go down in T.B. inspection and go to the tank be raised. It is altogether too low.

Mr. GARDINER: I have been attempting during the whole session, and as a matter of fact since before the session opened, to emphasize the fact that feed supplies are low, not only in eastern Canada but all across the dominion. The reason they are low in different parts of the country is that they are low at the source from which the feed is obtained, that is, the prairie provinces, and at present the position for the future is not too encouraging. The crop is not going in under the best of conditions, and I am not in a position to say whether or not farmers will be able to obtain the full amount of feed they may require to finish their live stock. That is something individual farmers will be able to determine much better than anyone here. The fact is that the supply is low, and it is low partly because we have had comparatively poor crops during the last two years, one year getting a little poorer than the year preceding. The other reason is that people are to-day insisting on farmers placing upon the market all cereals available for human consumption. We think in terms of wheat when we think of consuming cereals in this country, but in other countries they want any kind of cereal at all. They simply say that it takes five to eight pounds of barley or oats to produce a pound of pork or beef, and they go on, "Give us the barley and oats for the present." So we are shipping it out.

Just a short time ago, in the last announcement he made in connection with this campaign, the Prime Minister stated that we had undertaken to ship practically all the feed wheat we had left in Canada for human consumption in Europe, and that at the same time we had undertaken to send five million bushels of oats. We knew we were taking a chance in doing so, that perhaps some people who had chickens to feed might have to go short of that feed, but we took that action as a result of the appeals which were made. The only assurance we can give that there will be sufficient to carry us through is the hope that there will be a good crop this year. If that crop should fail to materialize we shall have further difficulties toward the end of the year. The situation in relation to feed is not good.

Mr. SENN: Could the minister give the committee any assurance that the freight assistance policy, which has been in operation for some time, will be carried on for another year?

Mr. GARDINER: All I can say is that the freight assistance policy under which we are now operating was provided under the War Measures Act. I assume that sooner or later a bill will come before the house which will determine whether or not we are to have authority to maintain such a position by order in council. If we do not have that authority it is my intention to submit to the government legislation which would have to be considered by the government and then, if the government passed upon it, by this house in relation to the matter of paying part of the freight upon grain from western to eastern Canada. The general position at the moment is that we are favourable toward the continuance of freight assistance, though I am not sure I can say the full amount of assistance now being given.

Mr. SENN: Then I should like to ask another question having something to do with the question asked by the hon. member for Lethbridge. Would the minister make a statement on what is being done by his department by way of a sire assistance policy? I understand that in times gone by they purchased bulls, boars, rams and so on which they lent to young farmers' clubs. Would the minister made a general statement on the policy which is being pursued in this connection?

Mr. GARDINER: No change has been made for a number of years. The work is being conducted on the same basis as in previous years. Under this policy, purebred bulls are lent to farmers' associations organized for their maintenance, and used in accordance with the regulations prescribed. There is a list of regulations in that connection. This policy provides farmers, who otherwise would not have access to bulls of superior breeding, an opportunity to improve materially the quality of their cattle holdings. As an adjunct to the regular policy, a limited number of proven sires of approved blood lines are supplied to artificial insemination centres, which were mentioned a few moments ago by the hon. member for Lethbridge. That is the general policy.

Mr. SENN: Would the minister say to what extent it is operating and what advantage is being taken of it by farmers' clubs and so on?

Mr. GARDINER: The department buys the bulls and lends them to clubs. From time to time, after they have given service in one place they are moved to another and new bulls are purchased. In western Canada we have enlarged that plan to include the community pastures we shall be discussing in connection with prairie farm rehabilitation. The dominion department buys the bulls which are put into these pastures, which have the same effect as clubs in the communities. The farmers of the area around and about the pasture run their breeding stock into the pasture and the manager looks after the breeding of that stock with a bull which is provided by the government. In principle, the practice is much the same in regard to the other sires the hon. gentleman mentioned. I can get the details later.

Mr. SENN: I do not want to hold up things at all, but at one time the department had a policy under which it furnished thoroughbred horses to be used with Clyde mares and heavy mares to produce saddle or hunter horses. Is that policy being pursued at the present time?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, it is still being followed. Of course it is not being utilized to the same extent. There are not as many saddle and driving horses used as at one time, but the policy is still in effect.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to ask if the department has done any investigational work in connection with the price at which fertilizer is being sold in Canada. In 1943 we were given to understand in the reconstruction committee, I believe it was by Doctor James, that a new process had been developed in Canada for the manufacture of ammonium nitrate, which would materially reduce the price of fertilizer.

Mr. GARDINER: I wonder if we could carry this item. The question the hon. gentleman is asking comes under the next item.

Mr. WRIGHT: Very well.

Mr. SENN: I should like to ask one more question in regard to poultry. At the present time, and for some time past, eggs put in hatcheries had to be from flocks that were accredited as being free from pullorum and other diseases. There was one danger which was apparent at one time, because of the importation of baby chicks. Are baby chicks still being imported and, if so, what supervision is exercised over that importation?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not certain of the exact position, and I have not the poultry adviser before me at the moment. However, I shall try to have him here a little later and give my hon. friend an answer.

Mr. SENN: I think it is quite important.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, it is.

Item agreed to.

Production service—

21. Plant products—seeds, feeds, fertilizers, insecticides and fungicides control, including grant of $25,000 to Canadian Seed Growers' Association, $708,256.

Mr. WRIGHT: If I may follow up the question I was asking, I had inquired if the department had done any investigational work into the price of fertilizers being sold in Canada. I said that Doctor James had given evidence before the committee on reconstruction and rehabilitation in 1943, stating that new developments in the production of ammonium nitrate would reduce the cost of fertilizer. This reduction has not developed, to date. At that time, too, the committee on war expenditures had recommended that the plant at Calgary should be operated by the government after the war for the production nf fertilizer in Canada.

According to recent press reports, it appears that this plant has been disposed of to Consolidated Smelters. In view of the fact that fertilizer is becoming more important to agriculture in Canada, I suggest that the Department of Agriculture should do some investigational work in respect of the prices being charged for fertilizer, in an effort to see that it is made available at the lowest possible figure.

Mr. HENDERSON: I rise as one of the representatives of one of the geographically favoured parts of Canada, southwestern Ontario, comprising the counties of Huron, Lambton, Middlesex, Elgin, Kent and Essex. This portion is geographically favoured, as our latitude of 42 degrees—it will be seen by tracing it out on the map—is the same as that of a large part of the well known state of California. It is often said that this area is the banana belt of Canada, and though we do not grow bananas, our soil and climate are such as to make this a highly productive region for many of the well known and specially favoured canning fruits and vegetables with which we are all so familiar. The composition of the soil is similar to that of the great agricultural states of Illinois, Ohio and Indiana, and our climate being on the border-line of the warm southern states and the colder northern parts of Canada brings us a great variety of insect pests and plant diseases peculiar to both the hot and the colder geographical regions of North America.

The existence of some 20,000 types of insects that may have an injurious effect on the crops of this area is a hazard that cannot and must not be overlooked. The estimated value of this highly productive area in 1943 was $99 million, and the estimated loss from insect pests was eight per cent, or approximately $8 million. This is a staggering loss, not only in monetary value, but in food, which at present is so urgently needed. Since this area, in conjunction with the rest of Canada, is exhorted to produce as we never produced before, we are bringing this matter before the department for its utmost consideration, asking its greatest assistance by way of supplying trained men to help the farmers combat these pests, and thereby overcoming this farm loss.

It is true that our farmers are doing all they can to carry out the methods as recommended to them by departmental experts, but in spite of this we are waging a losing battle. Our clover crop, one of our best winter feeds and soil builders, for reasons entirely unknown, is decreasing year by year. Our exacting methods of farming require a clover crop in our rotation cycle, and we cannot afford to lose it.

Our preferred list of field crops, including tobacco, sugar beets, soya beans, vegetables, fruit crops and field beans, all suffer from important and urgent disease conditions. These are in addition to and far removed from the above-mentioned insect pests.

The farmer, with a layman's limitations, is in the unhappy position where having done all he can do, he still faces the possibility of either complete loss of a vital crop, or an annual loss of staggering proportions.

Since, in this area, we are asked to plant and cultivate 35,000 acres of sugar beets this year, and since, to date, some 26,000 acres have been contracted for, it is urgent that I again bring to the attention of the committee a disastrous plan disease called a nemotode, which is seriously affecting this plant in as yet certain defined areas. But its ravages are spreading. This same nematode is what created such havoc in the sugar beet area of Utah. The entomologists of the Department of Agriculture are well aware of its existence, its ravages and its menace and have made some surveys concerning it; but as yet no complete eradication action has been taken.

The field bean crop is one of great importance because it comprises a large acreage and is a favoured crop in all this area, since some 58,000 acres were reported as of 1942, with noticeable increases in the succeeding war years. Although this acreage may look small to our western wheat growers who compute their acreage in the millions, it was nevertheless a valuable food contribution in our war effort, and was a substantial cash crop to the hard-worked farmer. It requires much attention during the growing and harvesting periods, and scientific skill is required for its successful completion. In addition to the insect pests that attack it, it is also subjected to a plant disease called the fusarium wilt, which as yet is an undetermined disease.

A disease peculiar and injurious to our corn crop is the ear and stock rot. Those peculiar to the tobacco crop are black root rot, brown root rot, blue mould, seedling diseases, and leaf spots. The soya bean is also not lacking in plant diseases, because it is subject to virus diseases, pod and stem blight, and fusarium wilt.

I bring this matter to the attention of the minister at this time further to magnify the farmer's drawbacks and difficulties, and also his dependence on the Department of Agriculture for their trained and scientific assistance and knowledge in combating and overcoming his great drawbacks and difficulties.

Excellent work is being done by the dominion laboratory of plant pathology at Harrow, but here again the staff and facilities available are not sufficient to cope with the many diseases affecting these vital crops.

In addition to the laboratory at Harrow, the dominion government has set up a dominion entomological laboratory at Chatham. These laboratories have been doing excellent work, but the needs are so increasingly great that an enlarged service is necessary. It is appreciated that there is great difficulty in obtaining greater numbers of highly trained personnel, larger buildings, and more equipment to study the origin and control of these insect pests and plant diseases which are playing such havoc. But it is considered that the potential hazards are so great that no effort on the part of this department should be spared in attracting personnel to the fields of pathology and entomology, and also in obtaining the buildings and equipment so necessary for the carrying out of their scientific work.

It is recommended that the dominion entomological laboratory at Chatham and the dominion laboratory of plant pathology at Harrow be expanded to meet present and anticipated future requirements.

The department has recognized our requirements by setting up these two stations to study plant diseases and insects. All of us from that part of the country join in asking for further support. I notice that in the estimates this year there is an extra $89,662 for that particular branch of agriculture, but I exhort the minister on behalf of those six townships for a just and equitable share so that we may carry on as we should like to.

Mr. GARDINER: I rise at once to call attention to the fact that that matter would come under items 8 and 9 which were passed some two weeks ago. I have allowed the statement to be placed on the record without raising a point of order, because I assume the hon. member was not here at that time. I suggest that those who were here discussed the matter fully and I hope we are not going to have another discussion on the same matter.

Mr. WRIGHT: The minister has not answered my question.

Mr. GARDINER: One plant in Ontario is being operated, and there is another one under operation at Trail. A plant was constructed at Calgary, principally for the production of nitrates which were used to make explosives during war time as well as in the production of fertilizer. As was suggested by the hon. member for Melfort, my understanding is that nitrates can be produced at a low cost at Calgary. Unfortunately, the type of fertilizers required in western Canada does not require great quantities of nitrates. The plant could be utilized for the production of fertilizers which could be exported, and it could be used in a limited way to provide cheaper fertilizers even for Canada. The plant in the Niagara peninsula is to be used for the production of explosives under arrangements made with the British and French governments and this plant can supply the nitrates necessary for the production of fertilizers. When all the facts are taken into consideration, in all probability this plant in Ontario can supply fertilizers as successfully and at approximately the same cost.

I do not want to be misunderstood. My information is that if we could utilize the Calgary plant wholly or even partly for the production of fertilizers there would be an advantage in operating that plant. We did not lightly dispose of the plant. The Canadian federation of agriculture approached me a year ago to inquire about the possibilities of the government operating the plant. We examined all the factors, and the results of the investigation were such as I have just stated.

When it was apparent that the government would not be interested in operating the plant I got in touch with the pools in western Canada and suggested that they investigate the matter to determine whether or not farm organizations might be interested in operating the plant. The result was that no one desired to assume the responsibility of operating the plant under all the circumstances and with all the information available. It was not thought, because of the amount of money which would have to be invested, that the plant could be operated as a separate unit by either the farm organizations, the provincial government or the federal Department of Agriculture.

As a matter of fact I made application on one occasion on behalf of the federal Department of Agriculture for full information with a view to our operating it for the advantage of the farmers. After obtaining all the the information, I came to the conclusion that those who were advising against it were probably more correct than I if I insisted upon having the plant operated by the Department of Agriculture as an operation separate from the other operations in Canada.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): At the beginnning of the discussion on the agricultural estimates the minister said that the Canadian seed growers would be given a grant of $25,000. While the grant this year is increased by $6,100 over the grant of last year, it really is not an increase. This year there was a deficit of $6,100, and the Canadian seed growers asked the government to make this up. This is a rather small grant which pays large dividends and I am wondering if it could not be increased.

Mr. GARDINER: The grant to the seed growers last year was $18,900 and a request was made for an increase of $6,100. It was intended that the original grant of $25,000 should be increased by that amount this year, making it $31,100. Some mistake was made when the matter was being considered and the $6,100 was not added. I am proposing to provide for the additional $6,100 in the supplementary estimates. At the moment I cannot say that this will go through either the treasury board or council, but I hope it will come to the committee later on in the session.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I understood the minister to say that the plant at Calgary would eventually be closed.

Mr. GARDINER: I did not intend to say that. My understanding is that the plant at Calgary was sold to Consolidated Smelters and I assume that they will operate it. I was attempting to show that the plant in the east can be operated by the government to do two jobs, and the department concerned did not feel that they could successfully operate the Calgary plant along with the other one which would have to be operated in any event. They argued that the Calgary plant should be sold to the highest bidder. I attempted to have the farm organizations put in a bid. I am not sure whether the plant would have been turned over to Consolidated Smelters if the farmers had put one in even lower, but my understanding is that the only bid was from Consolidated Smelters. The bid was considered reasonable and the plant was sold to them. I do not assume that they are going to close down this plant.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I do not think the plant will be closed down, although its operations have been reduced. Before I left home at Easter I know there was considerable difficulty in getting fertilizer there. I was unable to understand why that was so, because the plant had been converted for some time to the production of fertilizer. Especially was it difficult for the returned man to get fertilizer from the plant at Calgary. In fact I had to get in touch with the manager personally to obtain fertilizer for veterans. The supply was so short that a certain amount was allotted to each district and the farmers were not given the amount they required.

Mr. GARDINER: Was that in Alberta?

Mr. JOHNSTON: Yes. Farm organizations throughout the whole district had put in their orders and the general policy of the plant was—and this is what I took exception to—that no returned man could be given fertilizer until the orders from these farm organizations had been filled. Another difficulty was that a returned man could not get fertilizer unless he had purchased it the year before. They were fighting the year before, and when they came back from the battlefield to the farm they found they could not get fertilizer. No relief was given until I personally telephoned the manager in one or two cases, and he was good enough to take the matter up and see that they did get fertilizer.

The whole point I want to make is that the amount of fertilizer being produced in Canada is not sufficient to supply the local demand. If the minister had thoroughly investigated the whole situation before turning down the idea of taking over the Calgary plant, which was not producing at full capacity, he would have found that the supply was not beginning to meet the demand for fertilizer. If the supply is short in Alberta it must be short in Saskatchewan and, I would think, in Manitoba too. If this plant were producing at capacity it would be of great assistance to agriculture and incidentally the company would be making a profit. I cannot explain why they are not producing enough to supply the demand unless they consider that in two or three years the demand will drop off and that therefore it would not pay them to go into greater production. Certainly at the present time the demand for fertilizer far exceeds the supply, and I think the minister would be well advised to investigate to see what can be done to expand the production of fertilizer.

Mr. GARDINER: The plant at Calgary does not produce fertilizer, but nitrates. Nitrates are not used to any great extent in producing fertilizer in western Canada. They are used to mix with other ingredients in producing fertilizer. If we were to operate the plant at Calgary to capacity it would supply all the nitrates that are needed in all Canada and in a considerable part of the United States. It is not a case of operating that plant to get fertilizer. Our information is that fertilizer is available for all the prairie provinces. No shortage has been reported to us from the prairie provinces. There may be certain areas which do not have not their share; I do not know about that, but the report we have is that there is sufficient fertilizer for the prairie provinces.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Technically the minister may be right. The plant itself produces nitrates, and these nitrates may be shipped in some form or another to be made into fertilizer. But there definitely is a plant there for the distribution of fertilizer. I got in touch with the manager to see that these returned men got some fertilizer, and it was quite evident from the information I got from him that the fertilizer which is being distributed from that particular point is in short supply. I cannot reconcile the minister's statement with the information given to me by the manager because he definitely stated that they did not have a sufficient supply to meet the demand. If a returned man were just starting in on the land he could not get fertilizer because he had not purchased the year before. The only reason he got it was that I interceded with the manager, and he told me that he had to get in touch with the local agent and say to him: "We have allotted you so many tons to fill the orders you have sent in from the farmers around, and you will have available to these returned men." That is how critical the shortage was. The minister should make a further investigation of the situation.

Mr. HATFIELD: I commend the minister for putting the grant back to $25,000 for the seed growers' association, and I hope he will be able to increase this amount in the supplementaries because this association is doing a good job. I would ask the minister what the policy is to be in regard to fertilizer and fertilizer chemicals in the future. During the war you have been subsidizing the trade and equalizing freight rates in different sections of the country. Is this policy to be continued?

Mr. GARDINER: I should correct my statement to this extent. The seed growers proceeded on the basis that they would get $25,000 this year and that we would make up that $6,100 to them in addition to giving them the total of $25,000. It is to make up that $6,100 that we are suggesting a supplementary vote.

Mr. HATFIELD: What will be the policy with regard to fertilizer chemicals this year?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not in a position to state definitely what the policy will be this year. A recommendation has been before me but it has not yet been passed. If my hon. friend will repeat his question at a later day I may then be in a position to state what the policy will be.

Mr. STEPHENSON: There was a report in the press that blue mould had appeared in tobacco in the Delhi district and was causing the growers concern. Would the minister state whether that is true and whether anything is being done to combat blue mould in tobacco? It appears in the greenhouse stage.

Mr. GARDINER: The only information I have with regard to that is the item in the paper. I did see that; but that, again, is back under "plant pathology", and the official who might know about it if it has been reported is not here. We shall get the information on that, as to what extent it has developed.

Mr. PEARKES: This afternoon I received a letter from a dairyman near Ladysmith, complaining that the production of his crop is retarded owing to the difficulty of obtaining agricultural hydrated lime. He says that he has been to all the dealers who usually supply lime and that they have told him that, owing to the request to increase the price of lime by, I think, $1 a ton having been refused and an increase of only fifty cents a ton having been authorized, there is no lime available. He also makes reference to a subsidy being paid on lime and wishes to know whether that is a subsidy on lime for export purposes only. Could the minister inform me concerning the situation regarding agricultural hydrated lime in British Columbia?

Mr. GARDINER: It involves the same information which I said a few minutes ago I was not in a position to give at the moment, with regard to what may be paid in connection with the promotion of the use of lime and other ingredients of fertilizers during the years 1946-47. There was assigned to British Columbia in 1945-46 the sum of $15,200, assistance being given out of the amount which was allocated for that purpose. As to what it will be this year, I shall not be in a position to say until the regulations now being presented to council are finally passed.

Mr. PEARKES: I assume that all supplies of lime in respect of which assistance was granted in the previous year have been used up.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. It was really assistance which had to do with shipping from the source of supply to mixing plants, and bringing into Canada from outside some of the ingredients, and there were certain regulations with regard to what was imported and certain regulations with regard to what is produced in Canada. The materials are shipped to the mixing plant, mixed, and distributed as fertilizer. The regulations are being changed this year; and the form of assistance, if any, which finally comes before the government is being changed to some extent, owing to the fact that conditions have changed with the end of the war. Many of the ingredients of fertilizer are utilized in war time for war purposes. Distribution is now on a somewhat different basis; the assistance, wherever it is given, will be on a somewhat different basis, and on some ingredients there may not be assistance.

Mr. WRIGHT: There has been considerable criticism in the press, and I have heard it elsewhere, as to the quality of the insecticide DDT which is being sold, that it is not doing what it was supposed to do. Does the department make any inspection of the quality of this material before it is sold?

Mr. GARDINER: The department chemically analyses it, and my information is that, so far as we know, there have been no difficulties in connection with it.

Mr. BENTLEY: It has to be made according to certain standards?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; it is chemically analysed by the department.

Mr. BENTLEY: And analysed as it goes out?

Mr. GARDINER: There is a chemical analysis made of the product.

Mr. BENTLEY: There is a standard which has to be maintained by the manufacturers?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Production service—

22. Grants to fairs and exhibitions, in the amounts detailed in the estimates, $30,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Probably I should make a short explanation in connection with this item. The amount here is just the amount which has been paid during the war years. It will be remembered that back about 1941 or 1942 grants to fairs were discontinued because of the necessity to utilize all funds available in the prosecution of the war. This is one of the items which was cut down materially. It is the intention to reestablish fair grants, though probably not on exactly the same basis as they were before. It will be remembered by those who were here at that time that there was a strong agitation all across Canada among those who were operating fairs to have the basis of paying the grants changed, and at that time we were on the point of reorganizing the whole system of paying grants. Consideration of the matter was discontinued until lately, but quite recently the organized fair associations have had representatives in to see us; we have gone into the whole question of grants with them. A new system is being set up. We expect to bring down supplementaries dealing with these grants before the end of the session, in fact as early as possible, because the fairs will be coming along very shortly, and it is desired to make known to those fair boards which are going to operate this year just what the situation is. However, most of those who have been in to see us and who operate the larger fairs do not expect to get under way this year, but they desire to know what the plan is, and they will be under way a year from now.

Mr. SENN: May I ask the minister what the basis is?

Mr. GARDINER: The basis has more to do with the establishment equipment.

Item stands.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Charles H. Larose, Esquire, Acting Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Honour, the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the house went up to the Senate.

And having returned.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the house that the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name royal assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Department of External Affairs Act.

An Act respecting the Financial Agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom signed on the sixth day of March, 1946.

An Act to amend the Criminal Code. (Race meetings).

An Act to amend the Export Act.

An Act to amend The Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, 1929.

An Act respecting the Manufacture, Testing, Sale, Storage and Importation of Explosives.

An Act to amend the Yukon Quartz Mining Act.

An Act to incorporate Canadian Acceptance Company.

An Act respecting Rupert's Land Trading Company.

An Act to amend the Navigable Waters' Protection Act.

An Act respecting the appointment of Auditors for National Railways.

An Act respecting the boundaries of certain National Parks.

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the Public Service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1947.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Production service—

22. Grants to fairs and exhibitions, in the amounts detailed in the estimates, $30,000.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): We were discussing this item before the house rose at six o'clock. At that time the minister gave the committee assurances with respect to certain supplementary votes which would enable exhibitions to carry on their activities. I should like to have a more specific undertaking from the minister with respect to the maritime winter fair, an exhibition which has been carried on for about thirty years or more, and has done more than any other activity in the maritime provinces to encourage stock raising and improvement in the quality of stock.

The buildings of the maritime winter fair are under the control of the stockbreeders' Association and, in a patriotic gesture, were handed over at the commencement of the war to be used for military purposes. The result has been that those buildings have continued under the control of the Department of National Defence, and at that point, up to the present time, a large ordnance storage warehouse has been established. An undertaking was given to the stockbreeders that the premises would be vacated at the end of this month. The association has had meetings from time to time, and I understand it is their wish that the maritime winter fair be reestablished this autumn. In order that this may be done, it is, of course, necessary for them to have grants from the different governments.

The mere fact that the exhibition was discontinued during the years of the war makes it necessary that much additional work be done by the director and others who are interested in the success of the fair. It is desirable that assurance be given by the minister that an adequate vote will be provided in the supplementary estimates to enable the continuance of this exhibition. I regret that provision has not been made in the main estimates. It is important that assurance be given, so that these people may go ahead on the understanding that the grant will be available and that the fair may be reestablished this year.

Mr. GARDINER: The Amherst fair has a building which was constructed with assistance from the federal government. I believe the last agreement entered into was in 1939, the first payment being made in that year. That agreement was for $50,000, for a period of ten years, $5,000 a year to be paid until 1948.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): For the construction of the new arena.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. That is the building which was utilized by the armed forces during the war.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): One of them.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, one of them. The same thing has happened in respect of most exhibition grounds across Canada. During the war, buildings were taken over for military purposes, and they are being turned back at the present time. I believe the agreement under which they were taken over by the Department of National Defence was that they would be reconditioned and put back in much the same shape as when they were taken over.

Answering a question asked by the hon. member for Haldimand, may I say that the plan of grants now being worked out is in these terms. We consider it important that these grants should be based upon equipment rather than upon the prizes offered at the fairs. The old grants were based upon prize lists; and representations have been made to the effect that in respect of both winter fairs and others it would be more helpful if the grants were based upon equipment, not only in the matter of buildings, but equipment necessary for the proper exhibiting of farm products.

For example, as everyone knows, there has been a marked development in the matter of cold storage and refrigeration. At the beginning of the war, strong pressure was being brought to bear to have grants based upon the placing of equipment which makes it possible to exhibit to better advantage dairy products, meat products and everything of that kind.

I believe the system of grants which will be introduced later in the session by way of supplementary estimates will be based upon equipment rather than upon prize lists. One reason I am anxious to bring that in this year has to do with the very point just raised, namely, that some of these boards will find it possible to put on exhibitions this winter in the form of winter fairs. Some others may not be able to. But I think all of them feel that they should be placed in a position where they can put on exhibitions next year. Where the grants are based on equipment, they ought to know in advance what the grants will be so that they can equip their plants in order to carry on exhibitions successfully at a later date.

It is with the idea of giving that information at the earliest possible date that I hope to be able to have something in the supplementary estimates dealing with this matter. I am not in position to say what the amount will be for the fair at Amherst, but whatever it is for fairs of that type, the same grant will be paid to Amhrest as is paid elsewhere and I think it will be satisfactory.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): I do not know just how a grant based upon equipment will affect the maritime winter fair which serves Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, but it would appear to me that the directors of the maritime stockbreeders' association and the commissioners of the maritime winter fair would be at a great disadvantage if it were required that they should put in new installations in order to qualify for a grant. They have not been able to hold fairs during the years of the war and, therefore, have not been able to add to their equipment from year to year. I have no particular information about what funds they have on hand, but I believe it is their general policy to distribute all revenues to exhibitors and to provide facilities in order that stockbreeders may exhibit.

It would appear to me that the minister or some of his officials should have a request or an application from the representatives of the maritime winter fair setting out their requirements. This is a big undertaking on their part, and it is in the interests of agriculture in the maritime provinces that the fair be re-established as early as possible. There should be a clear understanding as to what is expected of them and as to what they may receive in the way of grants to carry on the exhibition this year. This is usually held in November, and they should know as soon as possible what is to be procured from the three maritime provinces in order to supplement the grant from the federal government. I should like to have a statement from the minister as to what the department is prepared to do.

Mr. GARDINER: All the fair boards across Canada have made representations. I should have said that the basis of the grants for winter fairs will be somewhat different from the grants to A and B fairs. There is more likely to be some provision for prizes in connection with the winter fairs. I believe there is a fairly definite understanding between the fair boards right across Canada and the officials of the department as to what these grants ought to be. Of course they will be paid on the same basis right across Canada. I am not in position to discuss the question on this item because there is no money being voted for that purpose. The $5,000 being voted here for Amherst is to carry out a ten-year agreement made in 1938. This has to do with the building of the arena that was erected for show purposes.

As a matter of fact I opened the fair the year preceding the one in which this grant was first made. We discussed the whole matter and went into the possibilities of developing better facilities. The grant will be completely paid out in another two years. It is assumed that the department will go on promoting fairs across Canada on a somewhat similar basis to that which prevailed prior to the war, although there may be some changes based on the experience we have gained and the arrangements made with the provinces as well as with the fair boards as to what proportion is to be paid by each.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Will consideration be given in the supplementary estimates to class B fairs ?

Mr. GARDINER: It will be for class A and B fairs.

Mr. McKAY: I believe the policy just announced by the minister of basing fair grants on equipment is a step in the right direction. Since these items are to appear in the supplementary estimates which will be brought down shortly, I should like the minister to state whether or not grants will be paid for building replacements. Last year the buildings used by the Weyburn agricultural society in southern Saskatchewan were destroyed by fire. They have since been replaced at considerable expense to that organization. All through the country fair buildings need replacement, particularly those in the west. Very few buildings were constructed during the war to replace the ravages of fire, wind and over-all depreciation. The minister has stated that, from now on, grants will be paid on a different basis, that of equipment, and I suggest that the replacement of buildings be considered as part of the new policy in order that these fair boards and agricultural societies may repair the ravages of time on buildings used for housing agricultural exhibits of various kinds.

Mr. BROOKS: I just want to add a word to what my seatmate, the hon. member for Cumberland, has said with reference to the maritime fair. For nearly fifty years this fair has been carried on in the maritime provinces. Ever since I can remember anything about fairs, the Amherst fair has been very popular in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. I hope the minister will be able to give some assurance to the hon. member for Cumberland and to this association that something will be provided in the supplementary estimates to help carry on this fair this fall.

Mr. LENNARD: According to the details of this item, there is nothing for the royal winter fair which is to be held this coming fall in Toronto. Has it been the custom of the dominion department to support that fair?

Mr. GARDINER: We have supported the royal winter fair in Toronto to a greater degree than any other fair in Canada.

Mr. LENNARD: Why has it been left out of the estimates this year?

Mr. GARDINER: The arrangements in connection with the buildings were made with the Canadian national exhibition board, but the payments are all paid up in Toronto. The board have been here in strength on a number of occasions and are pretty well looking after their future requirements.

Item agreed to.

Production service—

23. Grants to agricultural organizations, in the amounts detailed in the estimates, $38,500.

Mr. NICHOLSON: There is apparently a new item here which requires some explanation, $5,000 for the Canadian hunter, saddle and light horse improvement society. While the grant is not large, in the face of the difficulty which other organizations have in getting grants I think the minister should make some statement.

Mr. GARDINER: Prior to the war the Canadian hunter, saddle and light horse improvement society recieved a grant to assist it in carrying on its work of securing and distributing suitable hunter type stallions for the production of saddlers, hunters and light commercial horses. There is a large and increasing demand for Canadian horses of this type. The grant is considered necessary to assist the society in maintaining and extending its activities.

This grant was discussed last session, when the hon. member for Nanaimo raised the question and we had some discussion about it at the time.

Mr. NICHOLSON: With a hungry world clamouring for food I think this is hardly the time to include an item of this size to encourage the people of Canada to embark upon the production of hunters, saddle and light horses. In normal times those who wish to have this type of relaxation might well enjoy this luxury but I cannot see why this item should be in the estimates at this time when so many other more important items cannot be included. The explanation given by the minister is certainly not very convincing to me.

Mr. GARDINER: While there are hungry people in the world, there are a great many other people who are concerned with providing food for those who are hungry, and I do not know any part of Canada where it is more necessary to have this type of horse than in the section from which I come and the section from which the hon. member for Mackenzie comes. A while ago one of the agricultural experts in western Canada visited my farm. He is not particularly a political friend of mine, being more friendly to some of my hon. friend's friends, and as he walked over the farm he said, "I am pleased to see that you have two light horses, bred from a cross between hackney, Percheron and standard bred. That is the kind of horse we ought to have on more farms in western Canada." I use those horses to get into town in winter. You cannot drive a car in some parts of Canada all the year round, and farmers in western Canada require that type of horse to get in and out between the farm and town. They do not always ride in the saddle because they use a saddle horse. I use a cutter or a light sleigh. The only way I have of getting into town in the winter is by using a light horse, unless I get a jeep.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The minister is still living in the horse-and-buggy days. He does not believe in tractors.

Mr. GARDINER: I travel as fast as my hon. friend when I am out there.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The last time tractor farming was discussed by the minister he said that he had never had a tractor on his farm and never planned using one.

Mr. GARDINER: I have not had one yet but I am going to get one, I think.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am glad the minister is making progress in that way. Would he tell the committee just where this money is to be spent?

Mr. GARDINER: Wherever there are hunter, saddle and light horse improvement associations. The last time I was in Regina I sat in the grandstand and watched some of the finest horses in Canada going over the jumps. They belonged to people all over that area, some from the Weyburn area, some from the Lumsden area and elsewhere. People were enjoying themselves looking at those horses perform. I am sure they would take them back home to their farms roundabout and use them not only in winter but during the summer season. The grant is used all across Canada in different areas where people require these horses.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I have no quarrel with people who want to ride for pleasure.

Mr. GARDINER: They are not riding for pleasure.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am complaining about the minister including a grant of this kind when other grants for more useful purposes are not included.

Mr. GARDINER: The places where the money is spent include Ailsa Craig and Brampton, Ontario, in the constituency of the hon. member for Peel; Russell, Manitoba; Shaunavon, Saskatchewan; Kamloops, British Columbia, and at different places. There were twenty-four stallions in all last year.

Mr. WEBB: I notice that there is a grant to the Canadian council on boys' and girls' club work. That is important to me. Would the minister explain how far this activity extends?

Mr. GARDINER: The grant is $5,000. The boys and girls are encouraged to feed calves, pigs and lambs and exhibit them at shows that are held across the country, including those live stock shows that have been mentioned. The practice has been for the prize-winning stock to be sold at auction, and those who are interested in the live stock industry go there and bid fairly high prices for the live stock. It promotes the industry and encourages the boys and girls to take part in the production of better live stock.

Mr. WEBB: I am strongly in favour of this item, which I think is too small to encourage this work right across the country. It helps to keep the boys and girls on the farm and I should like to see the item increased some day.

Mr. HATFIELD: There is an item of $18,000 for Canadian national live stock records. Is this organization not self-sustaining and has it not a big surplus built up?

Mr. GARDINER: It is an organization of live stock breeders associations that keeps live stock records. We have given a grant of $18,000 for many years. The grant is the same size as it was when I came here ten years ago. The organization gives an efficient service. Sometimes it has been thought that we should give this service as part of the operations of the department itself, but the service has been so efficient and so satisfactory to the breeders' associations that we have hesitated to take it over and bring it under the department. I do not know that they have a large surplus. I cannot answer that question because it is not a branch of the department.

Mr. HATFIELD: They make a charge for their services, and I understand that they have a one million dollar surplus. Then why continue this grant?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that the different associations have surpluses but that the records organization has not. I understand that they get their start from the fees mentioned, plus some assistance from the association and some from the government.

Mr. HATFIELD: Do they not furnish a report to the government?

Mr. GARDINER: They report on the money we grant and give us a record of their position when it is required.

Mr. BENTLEY: Is the Canadian council on boys' and girls' club work the organization that brings the winners to the royal winter fair at Toronto?

Mr. GARDINER: That is one of the grants that we have continued during the war. Their final meet is held in Ottawa.

Mr. BENTLEY: And that comes out of this grant?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Marketing service—

24. Marketing service administration, $113,322.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Last week, when the Minister of Agriculture was in Washington, the following press release appeared in the papers:

LaGuardia raps low wheat price paid in Canada

Criticism was expressed by UNRRA director, F. H. LaGuardia, at the united nations food and agriculture conference Tuesday. He said the nations cannot get away with "squeezing their farmers any more."

Farmers are industry's best customers. President Roosevelt understood this and obtained legislation insuring parity between agriculture and labour.

This, however, has had a great bearing on Canada, resulting in disparities which must be adjusted.

Mr. Gardiner said "Mr. LaGuardia seems to have little knowledge of Canadian economy. There is far greater parity between the incomes of farmers and labour in Canada than there is in the United States."

I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he was correctly reported. If so, this would be the proper time to give us some facts to substantiate his statement.

Mr. GARDINER: I have done that so often during this session that I am afraid I would be wasting the time of the committee to do it again. I doubt if there is anyone in the committee who does not realize that we have better than parity prices in Canada. The situation, however, which was being referred to by Mr. LaGuardia at that time had not to do with wheat. The suggestion made was that he was dicussing the relatively low price of wheat in Canada. What he was really discussing was the general world position in relation to food, and laying before the meeting which was held to discuss that situation the conditions existing in the United States in relation to the matter of food. He did pass the remark, toward the end of his comments, that they had made certain provisions in the United States for parity and that the level of prices in the United States provided for under that arrangement did have some effect on Canada. I do not think his intention was to imply that our prices, being lower than theirs, had any particular effect upon the relationship existing in Canada as between what the farmer paid for necessities and what he obtained for his product. His meaning, I thought, from discussions I had with him afterwards, was that if you are going to maintain one price level on one side of the line and another price level on the other side of the line, difficulties are bound to develop in the course of time because of the differences.

The newspaper reporter who asked me what I thought about it at the moment got this reply, that "I am quite certain that the greatest difficulty we have in maintaining price levels as between the United States and Canada results from the fact that we have high tariff walls and that one of those is related to wheat." If anyone mentioned wheat in connection with any of the discussions, it was I. I said that there was no possibility of our ever having the same price level in Canada as in the United States so long as the United States maintained its duty against wheat of forty-two cents a bushel.

I should like to say, now that the question is up, that in my opinion the 42-cent duty on wheat going from Canada into the United States has more to do with the wheat problem throughout the world, both in peace time and during the war than any other one thing. I think, when we are talking about removing obstructions from trade and making it easier for people to assist in feeding one another, one of the first things which ought to be done in some way or another is to have that obstruction removed from the handling of wheat on this continent; and until it is removed there will always be trouble in maintaining price levels as between the United States and this country. That is the remark which I made, and I want to make it here.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Just on that point, the Minister of Labour issued on May 6, a pamphlet setting out the prices of five articles, namely, butter, eggs, sugar, bread and milk, for 1920 as compared with 1946, and indicating a reduction of approximately 46 per cent in prices this year as compared with 1920. But he omitted to state that industrial hourly wages in Canada have increased by over 30 per cent since 1920, which of course is an added injustice to our farmers; and, according to the government's own records, the wages of farm labour between 1939 and January, 1946, have increased by 110·8 per cent.

Other arguments which we have gone through in the past do not need to be repeated. But I may just point out that during the first great war our farmers received 29 per cent of the national income; during the last great war their share of the national income was only 18 per cent; and everybody knows the variation in prices prevailing on both sides of the line for cereals, meat and dairy products. Only the other day I noticed in a Winnipeg newspaper an article wherein the deputy minister of agriculture of Manitoba, in addressing a group of women consumers on the milk problem, stated that never in his recollection of the history of this country had there been so many dairy herds being disposed of as had occurred this spring in Manitoba. I believe the same state of affairs applies throughout the dominion. The minister has admitted that implements of farm production can be bought cheaper in the United States than in Canada. On the other hand, I am sure that if anybody will take the trouble to go to banks situated a few miles apart in Canada and the United States he will be amazed at the result of a comparison of bank deposits of farmers on the Canadian side and in the United States during the last six years.

Mr. HERRIDGE: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few observations on marketing from the point of view of my farmer constituents. We have heard so much from another section of Canadian producers that I think it is about time you listened to representations on behalf of British Columbia farmers. The men with whom I have worked for forty years are not large farmers, but men who have hewn their small farms out of the woods and are more acquainted with the axe, the grub-hoe and the walking-plough than the combines and tractors and rubber-tired machines on which my hon. friends to my right ride around in comfort to do their work. On the whole, the British Columbia farmers find it necessary to work both summer and winter in order to make a living, and I have never seen many of them staying at the Empress hotel in Victoria. But I must say that they are people who have accomplished something, and I am going to put forward their views this evening as the views of people who are not asking the government to do something for them, except to this extent, to provide them with the necessary legal machinery to give them the protection necessary to enable them to work out their own economic salvation.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, that I am a citizen of no mean village. I can illustrate briefly what has been done by these people in a cooperative way. I come from a village which, with a district covering a radius of ten miles, contains about 750 people. I have been in that district almost since the first tree was chopped down. I have seen every acre cleared; I have seen every orchard planted. These 750 people, representing many races, including the various peoples of Europe and different portions of the British isles, have, as a result of cooperative action, in that time built and paid for their own irrigation system and, although it cost $50,000, do not owe a dollar; it supplies water to these farmers at a dollar each per month. They have built their own nine-hole golf course and recreation grounds at a cost of $10,000 and do not owe a 5-cent piece. They have built a community hospital at a cost of $47,000, of which they do not owe a cent. The legion branch in that district, composed of several farmers and farmers' sons, and numbering sixty-seven members, have completed a legion hall worth $15,000 and on which there is not a cent of debt. I mention these facts as an illustration of the type of cooperative effort that goes on in the district which I represent, and which is general throughout the Kootenay district. These people have put forth a tremendous effort along cooperative lines, and they are simply asking the government to give consideration to a type of legislation which they deem necessary to protect them in the future.

Before proceeding further, I must say that the farmers of my constituency believe that, on the whole, the government has handled the marketing of their major products during the war period in a commonsense way and has, on the whole, met very difficult circumstances satisfactorily. But they are concerned with their position when the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act ceases to operate.

When speaking on the agriculture estimates last session I had this to say, as reported at page 2527 of Hansard:

> The farmers of my constituency are particularly interested in three aspects of our agricultural policy: first, marketing arrangements, to assure stable and satisfactory marketing and farm income; second, disease control, to ensure satisfactory crops; and, third, intensive research in the field of marketing problems and disease control.

That is their opinion at the present time. In the provincial field we have a satisfactory natural products marketing act; in the international field we have the food and agriculture organization of the united nations and the latent possibilities of world agricultural councils, but in between we maintain there is a missing link, namely, a national natural products marketing act that will tie together provincial and international arrangements.

I know something of the pioneer days in the fruit industry. In the early days of this century, as most hon. members know, settlers flocked into the interior of British Columbia, settlers without experience on the whole. As a result of their appreciation of the possibilities of cooperation and its practice, they have built one of the outstanding cooperative movements in the British empire and in the fruit industry as a whole in the world.

In recent years I have often heard it said that the pioneering spirit of the Canadian people is dead; but I do not believe this, nor do those who are associated with me. I believe it is simply a question now of channeling that spirit into new fields of social adventure and economic organization. Fruit growers of British Columbia believe that the time is ripe to pioneer a national natural products marketing act. For the information of the members, so that they will get this picture clearly, may I give a brief history of the development of the fruit industry and the marketing arrangements in British Columbia. It is a romance of collective effort, disappointments, failures and final success, worthy of careful study by all who are interested in the various aspects of cooperative endeavour. In the interior the fruit growing sections of British Columbia are located chiefly in the Okanagan from Armstrong to the international boundary, on the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway between Kamloops and Salmon Arm, on the Arrow and Kootenay lakes, Creston and Erickson, and in the Grand Forks valley on the Kettle Valley railway that lies between the Arrow lakes and Okanagan lake. That comprises a total area of about forty thousand square miles.

The first carload of apples was shipped from the interior of British Columbia in 1903. In 1900 the total apple production of British Columbia was 240 boxes, and at the present time it is around six million boxes or over. This year there is a possibility, if the crop continues to develop according to present prospects, of a production of close to eight million boxes. Considering the time it takes to produce orchards, I think everyone will realize that the development has been very rapid indeed.

Originally the production was started to supply the home market of British Columbia and, later, the prairie markets. Production rapidly increased far beyond the needs of the local population, and when the prairie markets could not consume our products new fields were explored, until before the war apples were reaching all parts of the world. I am speaking of just prior to the war. At that time we sent about 40,000 boxes annually to South Africa and 100,000 boxes to South America; we sent 50,000 boxes to Egypt, 130,000 boxes to the United States, but our best overseas market was Great Britain which took from two to two and a half million boxes. During the war these normal marketing arrangements were disturbed, but I am glad to say that there is evidence at the present time of our former customers being anxious again to receive British Columbia fruit. It is amazing how quickly that situation has developed. From the heads of our organizations I understand that we are getting inquiries from various countries of Europe, South America, Australia, South Africa, in fact all of our former customers who are in position to buy apples at this time, although owing to their circumstances they are asking for limited quantities.

Years ago we were under the impression that unified control of the fruit industry could be obtained by voluntary effort, but in 1925 and 1926 the weaknesses of the voluntary effort became apparent to all those directly concerned with organizing the industry. Then a drive for legislative action and assistance was commenced. As a result of that drive the natural product marketing act of British Columbia was placed on the statute books. No doubt hon. members have heard the legislation condemned on the score that its coercive powers savours of regimentation and robs the individual of his rights. Time does not permit me to go into that argument. It is sufficient for me to say that it is based solely upon the rule of the majority. The only type of legislation we have ever asked for is the type of legislation which provides that when seventy-five per cent of the producers of any commodity wish to join together, then all producers of that commodity must abide by the rules and regulations set out in the act as a result of the decision of the majority. I think everyone will agree that a seventy-five per cent majority is democratic to the last degree. If agriculture is ever to come into its own from our point of view, one of the outstanding requisites is unification of action in the marketing sphere, provincially, nationally and internationally. To this principle the fruit growers, the vegetable growers and the poultry producers of my constituency adhere.

I wish to deal briefly with certain aspects of the marketing question. Under present conditions, in the preparation of our crop for marketing extensive facilities have been provided in the way of warehouses, graders and general packinghouse equipment. We must deliver high quality, attractively packed fruit if we are to hold our markets and extend them. I have often heard it suggested that too much expense is incurred in the packing of our fruit, and that we should ship it loose in containers direct from the orchard to the consumer.

I am going to deal with this aspect of the matter for a minute or two because I myself receive letters from the prairies suggesting that this would be the most economical and cheapest way to handle our crop. I can understand that point of view, but I should like to outline some of the difficulties. For the information of the committee let me say that first our fruit has to be graded so as to eliminate insect infested, diseased and deformed fruit. Then it has to be checked over on the graders to be properly sized. The reason is that all these various markets demand a particular size or a particular variety of fruit. I shall illustrate it this way: South America will take only extra and fancy Delicious running 72 to 138 per box. Egypt will take only Newtons and Delicious running 72 to 125 to the box. South Africa demands Jonathons and McIntosh, running 138 to 216 to the box. The south of England prefers apples running 163 to 234 to the box; Liverpool, 150 to 180 to the box; Glasgow, 138 to 163 to the box; Montreal, 150 to 180 to the box, and Toronto, 80 to 125.

That is an interesting point. You always find that the large cities in the old country, and apparently in this country as demonstrated by the figures for Montreal, like the small apples. That is because when poor people want to give each of the kids an apple before they go to school, they like to buy a box containing a large number of apples, because a box goes much farther. It is interesting to note that Toronto buys the largest sizes and most select apples, 80 to 125, so it is obvious that our good friends in Toronto go in for the more expensive apples. Some of our Canadian markets want apples in grade C; others want nothing but the best in extras and fancies. Therefore to get the sizes and grades preferred by the different markets at home and abroad we are almost compelled to pack the whole crop. I am sure that is an aspect of the situation which is not appreciated by many people on the prairies. Harvesting the bulk of the apple crop usually takes a period of six weeks, but it takes twelve months to sell the crop, so that expensive cold storage facilities have been built. At the present time we have cold storage in British Columbia for approximately five million boxes. That represents an immense investment in the fruit industry.

In regard to the sale of the crop I think the growers are at the present time getting a reasonable proportion of the consumer's dollar; but the fruit industry is in a peculiar position. A great deal of its perishable product has to be marketed over a short period of time, and one has to sell through the channels established for the handling of that crop. A wholesaler or jobber cannot keep going by selling apples or tree fruits alone. He has to handle citrus fruits and other commodities to cover his overhead. So that this handling of fruit from the producer to the consumer is a complex and difficult question. I think I can safely say that, without a doubt, experience has proved the value of the natural products marketing act, and the system of central selling organized under its protection, to the fruit growers of British Columbia and the community as a whole. In saying that, I mean it has benefited both the producer and the consumer.

I am going to deal briefly with the conditions that existed before the act was passed, and with conditions at the present time. Mind you, the federal act might not be necessary if we sold all our apples in British Columbia, but we do not. We have to sell a great deal of our crop in other provinces and abroad, and that is why we need the protection of the proposed act.

Before the provincial act was passed we had internal competition, and the fruit grower received a most unfair proportion of the consumer's dollar. We had maldistribution of the crop to the Canadian market, through the practice of selling on consignment. I know in my own district, before we had unified control, our packing house would ship a carload to a certain town, and perhaps half a dozen other packing houses would do the same thing. As a result, a small town on the prairies would have possibly three or four cars of apples roll in the same day, when one car would be sufficient, while another town would be without fruit. Then we had large losses through trade abuses, such as excessive rebates. That was a serious condition before this act was passed. We had a high percentage of bad debts. We had an uninformed public, with little knowledge of varieties or suitable seasons, and we had an unfair division of the Canadian and export markets. All the powerful people were grabbing the domestic market and leaving to somebody else the export market, which of course is less profitable. Then we had a lack of coordination within the industry, which prevented development of the flexibility necessary to meet changing conditions or to enable us to cooperate satisfactorily with a government programme.

Those were the conditions which existed before the act came into force. Since the passing of the natural products marketing act and organized selling under the direction of the tree fruit board and Tree Fruits Limited, we have first, a return to the producer of the greatest possible share of the consumer's dollar under present circumstances and conditions. Looking at the question from the point of view of the national interest I believe the fruit growers of British Columbia are reasonably satisfied with the prices they are obtaining to-day.

Second, we now have a planned distribution on the western Canadian and other markets. We own and control Canadian Fruit Distributors, and the whole distribution of the western Canadian market is planned so that marketing may be efficiently organized.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Third, we now have fair dealings within the trade and the elimination of trade abuses. For instance, prior to the Natural Products Marketing Act, claims made by wholesalers for damaged fruit, particularly on the prairie market, averaged $17 a car. To-day these claims have been reduced to less than $2 a car. That is because we have our own inspection service and can investigate any complaint made.

Fourth, we now have an almost complete elimination of bad debts; and this is a most interesting feature. Since the act came into force Tree Fruits Limited has marketed between $100,000,000 and $110,000,000 worth of tree fruits. A normal business concern allows one to one and a half per cent loss for bad debts. That would mean, under the old conditions, that we would have lost around $1,000,000 in bad debts. Up to the first of this month, after marketing that large volume of fruit, we have lost in bad debts only $163. That is what planned, cooperative marketing does for the producer.

Fifth, owing to coordinated publicity and advertising, we now have an informed buying public. People know when to buy Delicious, when to buy Wealthies, when to buy McIntosh, when to buy Gravensteins. They are informed as to the value of the apple they intend to purchase, and the best use to make of it.

Sixth, we have a planned division of the Canadian and export markets. All the shippers, whether they are cooperative organizations, semi-cooperative or joint stock, have to take their proportion of the domestic market and the export market, and we now have a planned division of those markets.

Seventh, we have a complete coordination throughout the whole industry which makes it possible to meet to the best advantage any given situation, and to cooperate effectively with any government programme. When, owing to war conditions, the government was faced with difficulties, it entrusted their solution in British Columbia and Nova Scotia to organizations which, I am sure the minister will admit, rendered an entirely satisfactory performance, organizations which can do just as effective a job in time of peace. In our opinion the best possible chance of satisfactorily implementing the government's agricultural prices support legislation will be with the cooperation of the producers in the industry concerned, under a national natural products marketing act. In fairness, I must say that during the critical period of our organization and the critical war period, we were most fortunate in British Columbia in having as members of the tree fruit board and Tree

Fruits Limited men of exceptionally high principles and outstanding ability, willing to work unceasingly for the cooperative principle and on behalf of the growers they were elected to represent. We were most fortunate in that respect.

In the few moments during which I have discussed this matter, I think I have proved that the Natural Product Marketing Act has been of great assistance to the fruit industry in British Columbia, and that under the provisions of the act the producers are providing fruit for the consumers at fair prices under present circumstances. As I have said before, we are convinced that if the producer is to be protected we must forge that missing link, a national natural products marketing act. The tree fruit growers of British Columbia pioneered the provincial act. They have been the pioneers in advocating for several years a national act of this type. They are simply asking the government to develop in the federal field what has proved so successful in the provincial field. Hon. members will remember that the federal act passed in the early thirties was declared ultra vires of dominion powers by the privy council. It will be remembered that the federal act passed in the early thirties was declared ultra vires of dominion powers, by the privy council, and the fruit growers of British Columbia have given a great deal of study to this matter in an effort to draft an act that would not be ultra vires. The Canadian federation of agriculture has endorsed the draft act and in their brief presented to the government on March 28, 1946, expressed a desire for federal marketing legislation on this basis.

Before concluding, I should like to read from the Canadian federation of agriculture brief, where it states:

> We desire to express appreciation to your government for the substantial progress made in applying a policy of long-term contracts or floor prices assured a number of years in advance. This is in line with the views of the Canadian federation of agriculture and incidentally in harmony with the fundamental theme of our recent annual meeting.
>
> To carry such a policy into effect successfully, will require orderly production and a regularity of flow of products concerned in export trade to market to meet the needs of importing countries. Unorganized and haphazard marketing methods will not do it. Producers could make a valuable contribution to a national marketing programme in respect to some products if federal legislation were provided to enable them to undertake it. Most of the provinces now have legislation which permits the producers to develop and operate plans for marketing within their respective provinces. These have proven successful in practically all cases and at the same time are recognized as being in the general interest. But producers are blocked completely from coordinating their efforts with fellow producers in other provinces for interprovincial and export movement of their products because supplementary federal legislation is not yet available to them. There is a widespread national demand from our producers for such legislation and since the close of the war particularly it is becoming more and more insistent.
> It should be pointed out that in at least one province in Canada, producer marketing plans which have been in operation under the War Measures Act, and now the Emergency Powers Act will become absolutely ineffective even provincially, without federal legislation such as we are now requesting.

Hon. members would be well advised to secure a copy of the draft act which was originally drafted by the fruit interests in British Columbia, submitted to the Canadian federation of agriculture, gone over again, finally accepted in final form by the federation, and then submitted to the government. I shall not read the whole of it, but I should like to place on record one brief section which deals with purpose and intent. It states:

> The purpose and intent of this act is to provide in respect to interprovincial trade in Canada and in export trade, for the improvement of methods and practices of marketing of natural products, and for the promotion, control, regulation, or prohibition, of the marketing of natural products, in any or all respects and in whole or in part.

I just wish to emphasize again that our people are anxious to see this type of legislation in the federal field, as I said before, to forge the missing link between provincial and international arrangements.

I urge that hon. members give some study to this question. We in British Columbia are firmly of the opinion that if we are to assure the orderly marketing of farm products in the future at fair and stable prices, we must have a national natural products marketing act as the link between provincial legislation and international arrangements. I have, and the fruit growers in my constituency, as well as fruit growers in British Columbia as a whole, have great faith in this type of legislation, because it depends for its success upon local and cooperative action, and involves the people concerned in the administration and the direction of their own affairs. That is what I like about it. This type of legislation permits the development of large-scale planning under the control of the people themselves. It is democratic in principle, democratic in action and, I am sure, has been proven to work to the advantage of the community as a whole. It will move the latent pioneer spirit of the past into action for the requirements of the future.

I should like the minister to express his opinion of the draft act presented to him by the Canadian federation of agriculture, and of the principles of marketing outlined therein.

Mr. HACKETT: Would the minister give me some information with respect to item 22? To get it, I waited patiently all afternoon, and believing that the first hour this evening was to be devoted to private and public bills, I was absent for a short time. Upon entering the chamber at nine o'clock, however, I found that the discussion of the estimates was well under way. Is this the only item in the minister's estimates providing for exhibitions and fairs?

Mr. GARDINER: This is the only item in the main estimates providing for exhibitions. However, I did tell the committee in the hour the hon. member was not here that later in the session I shall bring down supplementary estimates to deal with fair and exhibition grants. There can be a full discussion at that time. Little would be gained by taking time to discuss the matter now, because I am not now in a position to tell the committee the nature of the grants. Representations have been made from fair boards across Canada as to what they desire. These representations are being fully considered by officials. They will then be brought before the government and eventually to the house.

Mr. HACKETT: What amounts were devoted to this purpose in 1938 and 1939?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not the figures before me, but my memory is that at the time we put this through it was in the neighbourhood of $200,000 or $300,000. At certain times it may have been even a little more than that.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): Mr. Chairman, at this point in the discussion of the estimates for the Department of Agriculture I wish to say a few words on behalf of the primary producers in British Columbia. I find myself fully in agreement with the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West. I fully realize that, so far as agriculture in British Columbia is concerned, we have not reached the point of development that has been reached in the prairie provinces. However, with the building of the necessary railways to provide an outlet for the British Columbia-Peace River block, that situation will correct itself to some extent.

The constituency of Kootenay East, which I have the honour to represent, contains some fairly large agricultural areas, with their usual problems and needs. I might mention the Columbia river valley, the Creston valley fruit district and the range lands in the southeast corner of the province.

[Mr. Herridge.]

The setting up of a provincial marketing board has already been achieved in British Columbia, as mentioned by the hon. member for Kootenay West, and it has met with a fair degree of success in its work.

Then, too, the British Columbia fruit growers' association has united in the setting up of the British Columbia fruit marketing board. They, too, are doing good work, but over the years some weaknesses have manifested themselves which call for correction.

The farmers in my constituency who live fairly close to the British Columbia-Alberta boundary complain from time to time of Alberta surplus supplies being sold in British Columbia below our cost of production. It was at this point that our provincial marketing board fell down in that it could not control interprovincial trade. Therefore a dominion marketing board or a national marketing board is necessary to control the organized marketing of our agricultural products. To show that what I am advocating is a live issue, I should like to quote a press report in the Vancouver Sun which bears the date line of Victoria, April 11. It reads:

> Hart will urge Ottawa market law.
> The British Columbia legislature to-day passed a resolution asking Premier Hart to urge on Ottawa authorities next month the need for federal legislation to control organized marketing of agricultural products.
> The question was raised by J. H. Corsbie (C.C.F., Peace River), who said there is need for a dominion marketing act to make provincial marketing legislation fully effective in dealing with interprovincial trade.

Mention has already been made of the dominion marketing act which was passed in 1935 by the Bennett government and which was declared to be ultra vires of the powers of the federal government. I sincerely hope the minister will give serious consideration to the setting up of a dominion marketing board.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to add my voice to that of the hon. members for the Kootenays in connection with the necessity of having a national marketing act. I think the hon. members, particularly the hon. member for Kootenay West, are to be congratulated upon the manner in which they have presented the problems of the fruit growers of their districts. This question of a natural products marketing act for Canada has been up for discussion at different times since I came to this house six sessions ago, and on numerous occasions I have raised the matter myself. The minister has stated that such an act would be ultra vires of the powers of the dominion government. I am not a lawyer, let alone a constitutional lawyer, but I have discussed this matter with many men who know something about it. They tell me that it would be possible for the dominion government to pass an act which could work concurrently with provincial legislation and which would achieve what we want without having to pass an amendment to the British North America Act.

I should like the minister to comment on this and to state whether the government has given consideration to adopting the act which was presented to the department by the Canadian federation of agriculture. This act was given considerable study by different agricultural organizations in Canada. It is recognized in Canada that if we are to have stability in agriculture we must organize our agricultural production along commodity lines, and that will require both dominion and provincial legislation. I think the time has come when consideration should be given to this legislation, and I think that should be done at this session.

Mr. GARDINER: This matter has been an issue, not only since the hon. member for Melfort came to the house but at a time when most of us who are now in the house were not here. As the hon. member knows, this was a matter of live discusion during the thirties. At that time an act was passed which was presumed to do what is now being asked for. That act was taken to the supreme court and then to the privy council where it was declared to be ultra vires. I am not a constitutional lawyer either, but I take it that the members of the privy council are and they decided that that act was not constitutional.

It may be possible to draft an act which is constitutional, but I find it most difficult to believe that that is possible under our constitution. That does not mean that the constitution cannot be amended, but I would think it would be most difficult to draft even concurrent legislation that would be declared by the courts to be intra vires. The previous legislation was I believe, drafted most carefully with the thought in mind that it might be declared ultra vires. That act was in effect when I came to Ottawa and we operated under it for a number of months. However, it was declared to be ultra vires and we have not since acted under it.

The hon. member for Kootenay West has suggested that I express an opinion with regard to the model act which was drafted, I believe in British Columbia, and presented to the Canadian federation of agriculture and by that federation to the government in the year just preceding the war. As Minister of Agriculture, I took the matter to the government and it was discussed there. I had the government's policy with regard to it announced in the first year of the war, which policy is on record in Hansard. That policy was to affect the period of the war, and it was stated that further consideration would not be given to the matter until the end of the war.

To state in as few words as possible the position taken by the government, it was simply this. We had entered upon the war, and during the war period it would be absolutely necessary for the government to set up any boards that were necessary to take control of the marketing of farm products. Those boards would be operated by the government on behalf of the people of Canada and on behalf of those engaged in the war in order to assist in the prosecution of the war. We thought that could be most effectively done by the government operating under the War Measures Act. That is what we have since been doing, and the success of apple marketing during the war period has been partly due to the fact that we have had an arrangement with the apple producers and the tree fruit board right from the first year of the war. Under that agreement the government has taken possession of any surplus product we have had. That has been canned or dehydrated and sometimes given away, but at all times the producer of apples was guaranteed a certain set return for his product.

An hon. MEMBER: The growers appreciated it.

Mr. GARDINER: The growers have expressed their appreciation on many occasions. I think we have had less criticism from the apple growers of Canada throughout the whole war period than from any other group. That action was taken in the first year of the war and was continued right through. It resulted in our paying out perhaps more per farmer engaged in the apple industry than we have paid out on behalf of any other group of farmers in Canada. When you talk about two or three million dollars to assist a branch of the industry, let us say in Nova Scotia, it does not sound very large as compared with other expenditures that are made, but there are only four or five thousand apple producers in Nova Scotia. When you spend two million dollars in order to promote the interests of four or five thousand producers and of those assisting in the marketing and processing of the product it figures out to a higher level per person involved than is the case even with the enormous amounts that have been expended in connection with wheat growing in western Canada where we have spent in the neighbourhood of a few hundred millions, but the number of farmers engaged is very much greater.

Mr. HERRIDGE: The minister will admit that that is because of the loss of export markets.

Mr. GARDINER: I agree that that was the reason for the action taken in the first instance. The British government said in the first year of the war: We do not want any apples at all. I would remind hon. members of that fact when they sometimes speak of fruit as an important food product that would help people who are starving. But the British said: We do not want to utilize any shipping space for the shipment of apples because of their low food value. We all know that that is true. The apple is used not particularly for preventing starvation but for purposes we all understand. I think we all enjoy apples, and most people throughout the world do when they have an opportunity of getting them. But at a time when it was necessary to do everything to prosecute the war successfully the British said that they did not want apples at all. We naturally had to do something about the situation, and the only thing we could do was to guarantee a certain return to the producers until such time as they could market their product.

We had less difficulty with the apple crop in British Columbia than we had with the apple crop of Nova Scotia, for reasons more or less obvious. The apple crop of British Columbia has its market next door in the prairie provinces, for at least a considerable portion of the crop. Might I suggest to the apple growers of British Columbia that something happened during the war which might work out most beneficially to the apple producers of British Columbia and probably other parts of Canada, if the idea is used to the fullest possible extent? During the war we developed to a greater extent than ever before the process of dehydrating fruit and vegetables. One of the difficulties in marketing British Columbia apples on the prairies is that the temperature sometimes gets down to forty below in November, and anyone who knows anything about transporting apples on the prairies knows that if you start out from your town or village with a barrel or box of apples when it is forty below the apples will not be of much value when you get four or five miles away from town.

Mr. NICHOLSON: How often does it get forty below in November?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend will probably find out in a year or two. It has been thirty below on the prairies in October, and even that temperature will freeze apples. The position is that if you attempt to take apples out in their natural state on the prairies you have difficulties in the winter months. But dehydration was developed greatly during the war to the point where apples can now be put on a shelf in any part of western Canada and forty below will do them no harm whatsoever. Dehydration dries them down to the same moisture content as wheat, so that they can be put anywhere and carted about from one place to another and consumed the whole year round.

I had some dried apples from Nova Scotia presented to me just at the beginning of the war. They had been dried three years prior to the time they were presented to me. I took them home and had them cooked, and you could not distinguish the product from apples picked fresh off the tree. I realize that what made it impossible to carry that further was the cost of dehydration. But we have gone a long way during the war, and if we will only take advantage of our experience a great deal can be done to assist in the marketing of the apple crop. Much of that we learned because we were required to process products during the war, partly to take care of them over a long period and partly to feed the troops and others who required different products at different places where storage was necessary.

So far as the act itself which has been proposed is concerned, I wish to state only this. During the war we have used boards. We had a meat board, a dairy board, a wheat board, a special products board and a fruit tree board, and under these boards we have handled most of our farm products during the war. We still have those boards. In addition, we have an agreement with Britain on pork products extending down to 1948. We have an agreement on cheese extending down to 1948. We have an agreement under consideration for wheat extending down to the end of the 1949 crop, which agreement in all probability will eventually be signed. We have also an agreement with regard to canned milk. When one takes all these products into consideration and others I might name, it will be realized that exactly the same condition exists in relation to them down to the end of these agreements as did exist during the war.

We have these boards, operated by the government it is true, but operated on behalf of all the people of Canada, to handle the exportation of our surplus farm products whether they come from a private organization, a cooperative organization or a province so highly organized under marketing legislation as British Columbia is. These farm products going into international trade are taken over by these boards and delivered to some organization in some other country. The greater part of them are delivered to the British food ministry and distributed by them to people who require them under the terms of the agreement. I think that so long as that condition exists—and, as I have indicated, these agreements will extend from two to four years and at the end of that period there will be the possibility of extending the agreements farther—there is not the same necessity for having central boards set up under a federal marketing act as some thought just prior to the war.

On the other hand, I would point out that we shall require to come to this house for legislation to give us authority under an act conferring similar powers to those under the War Measures Act to deal with food, or we shall have to ask the house for special legislation dealing with the different boards themselves and giving us authority in connection with handling them in order to overcome difficulties that exist in connection with the constitution itself. With a situation existing such as we have in the world to-day, when the food production and food distribution problems are just as serious as they were during the war, I would anticipate that there would be no difficulty in having the membership of this house extend that kind of authority to cover the term of these agreements, and so long as that situation does exist I see no reason for putting into effect marketing legislation of the type suggested.

I do not say that we should not be giving every consideration to the possible necessity of it and to ways of making it effective if it became necessary to do so. But for the time being I think the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West have suggested that producers are fairly well satisfied with the manner in which products which are going into export are being handled up to the present, and so long as we can continue to handle them under the arrangement which is now made I should think they would be fairly well satisfied to have it carried on in that way. I have understood that, even from those who are the strongest advocates of the system which has been proposed by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. HAZEN: The special products board to which the minister has just referred, which comes under the marketing branch of the Department of Agriculture, has looked after the marketing and export of certified seed potatoes from the maritime provinces for the past three years. This was done at the request of the provinces and of the exporters of the maritime provinces. My purpose in rising is to ask the minister what the policy of the government is for the coming season while certified seed potatoes continue to be exported and marketed in the way they have been during the past three years. In this connection I should like to point out to the minister that for the first two years this board was under the supervision of Mr. John Tucker and the work of the board was done to the satisfaction of all concerned. But Mr. Tucker retired, and last year the supervision of the board was taken over by another gentleman. Since that time the work of the board has not been nearly so satisfactory to the exporters who are interested in this matter in the maritime provinces. Will the minister tell us what the policy of the board will be during the coming season?

Mr. GARDINER: The arrangement setting up the special products board was made, of course, under the War Measures Act by order in council, and the authority under which they are operating now is the special powers which were given in the measure last year. As hon. members know, that measure is for one year. It operates to the end of this year, provided that we do not make some changes late in the year—my memory is that it is to November or December—and if it continues into the new year and the house is not in session, it goes on until the beginning of the next session and fifteen days into that session. So that the authority under which we are operating as far as potatoes and many other things are concerned is limited at the moment to fifteen days after the opening of the next session. But, as I said a few moments ago, I do not anticipate, from remarks made by hon. members representing all groups in the house when that legislation was under consideration, that there would be any difficulty in having special powers continued with regard to the handling of food. That being the case, probably at the moment there really is not any limitation of the policy which might be followed by the special products board.

In so far as potatoes are concerned, I think, as has been suggested, the special products board has been assisting in the marketing of these potatoes at the request of the growers in the district for about three years, and it is operating under powers given to it to deal with potatoes without any limitation on the period of time. The only limitation that is there is the limitation put on by the Special Powers Act. The fact is, of course, that through negotiation as between the special products board and those who invited them to take over the operation, there may be changes, but in so far as I know at the moment the present arrangement will continue to operate at least for the time we have the authority to carry on as we are doing.

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not rise to say anything about potatoes, but there was one point which was made by the hon. member for Kootenay West, in the very fine outline of what the tree fruit growers of Kootenay have done, that might be emphasized, and that is the packing and grading of the fruit. If we had a federal marketing act the probability is that we could do something in regard to that. It seems to me that is something which needs to be emphasized. The minister and I and other members from western Canada can remember very well that thirty or thirty-five years ago we used to buy barrels of apples from Ontario, but to-day the people of the prairie provinces use almost exclusively the British Columbia boxed product,—

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Much better.

Mr. COLDWELL:—graded and packed. Even in this city, I have noticed, you can buy more economically the British Columbia apple at a higher price than you can buy the Ontario apple at a lower price, because when you buy the Ontario fruit you are not sure of what you are getting but when you buy the British Columbia graded fruit you know you get exactly what you pay for.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Hear, hear.

Mr. COLDWELL: You get a good sound apple, and you are quite sure that you are getting something that you can use right to the very core. You are not so sure of that with regard to the Ontario product.

Mr. LOCKHART: It is better, though.

Mr. COLDWELL: I was sorry that some of the farmer members of the Progressive Conservative party were not listening a little more attentively when the hon. member for Kootenay West was speaking, because I thought the outline he gave of the marketing of fruits in British Columbia was something which might be studied very carefully by the fruit growers of Ontario.

Mr. GLADSTONE: You cannot beat the flavour of Ontario apples.

Mr. COLDWELL: Someone says that you cannot beat the flavour of Ontario apples. I have heard that for a long, long time, but I find it difficult to agree with my Ontario friends, and I am quite neutral.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. MARTIN: Are you sure you were not eating a pear?

Mr. COLDWELL: I am not going to enter into that argument at all.

What I rose to say is that some method should be worked out by the federal department of agriculture with the provinces to see to it that we get a grade which is pretty uniform throughout the country, and particularly in the export market. I agree with the minister that the processing of apples during the war has been quite remarkable. To-day you can buy dehydrated apples which, when cooked, you cannot tell from the fresh product. My hon. friend the member for Fraser Valley shakes his head.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: That may be true of Ontario apples.

Mr. COLDWELL: I buy them in Ontario. I do not know what British Columbia apples are like when they are dehydrated.

One other thing has often occurred to me in relation to the processing of this fruit. I was born, of course, in an apple country, Devonshire, famous for apple products, and I have often wondered why the lower grades of apples in this country are not turned into cider—not necessarily hard cider, but cider. I know from my youthful experience that it is a healthy and quite mild drink, if it is intoxicating at all: I leave that to the hon. member for Fort William to decide. But I have often wondered why we cannot utilize the lower grades of apples in the production of cider—sweet cider, and, if you like, sparkling cider. I believe that sparkling cider is imported into Canada from across the seas. Yet we grow, I would say, very much better apples than the apples which grew in the county where I was born. I have heard it said that they grow a particular type of apple for cider; that may be so, but it seems to me that, in the years to come, at least when we may have difficulties in marketing, apple juice and apple cider might be made to a larger extent and our people encouraged to use it rather than the harder drinks which are being used by many people in this country.

What I really rose to say was that in some parts of Canada much more attention should be given to the grading and the packing of apples for both domestic use and export. I have no doubt, although I said otherwise, jocularly, just now, that the Ontario apple can compete with any other apple if it is properly graded, packed and marketed.

Mr. FAIR: Another item that is also being neglected is prices. On different occasions we have been told about parity prices. I should like the minister to give us a definition of that to-night. In my opinion the parity price that he is speaking about is based on the prices that existed during the period 1926 to 1929. According to the bureau of statistics, the farmers of Canada at that time received 16·6 per cent of the national income. This means that about 33 per cent of the people received 16·6 per cent of the national income. In my opinion that is not a sound basis on which to figure our parity prices. It does not matter how many agreements we make; unless we have worth-while prices we are not going to have a prosperous agriculture. It seems to take many of us in Canada a long time to realize that the farmer does not get that to which he is entitled. Not many days ago we found that the former mayor of New York, Mr. LaGuardia, said:

> The low earnings made by Canadian farmers are a threat to the progress made by farmers in the United States.

There is the opinion of some of our neighbours. Perhaps we at home should look a little more closely at our price structure.

On the fifteenth of last month in defending the increase of 12½ per cent allowed the machine companies the Minister of Finance quoted several increases in prices of farm products, as reported at page 893 of Hansard. Because of that, people throughout the country are perhaps under the impression that farmers are getting far more than they are entitled to. On that occasion the minister should have made it quite clear that when we started out on our war period, or even up to 1941 or 1942, we were still receiving for agriculture the prices which were received in the depression years between 1930 and 1935. Therefore, when all these things are taken into consideration, I feel the question of price should receive far more attention than it has up to the present time in order that agriculture may be placed on an equal footing with other industries in the country.

Mr. FRASER: Do we export solid packed apples; that is, the apple in the gallon can solidly packed?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, we ship some of them.

I might say while we are on the subject that what the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar said is correct, generally speaking. That is, the best graded and sorted apples are those which come from British Columbia. There they have a mechanized system of grading which is very efficient; it does the job particularly well, but there is something other than that associated with the apple as it grows in Ontario and the apple as it grows in British Columbia. When I was a schoolboy I used to learn some things that I never understood the meaning of until much later. One of the things I learned was that nature provides, through the texture of leaves, bark and other parts of plants, against evaporation in dry climates. I never did associate that with apples until I came east ten years ago to take the position I now occupy.

I knew from my experience on the farm as a boy in Ontario where apples were grown, that when you put apples on the shelves in the cellar and left them there for use during the winter months they shriveled up very quickly. The British Columbia apple does not do that, not with the same readiness. If you leave it long enough the moisture will evaporate from it, and there is a simple explanation of it when one has occasion to get the explanation. It is associated with the fact that apples in Ontario have to be kept with greater care than they do if they are produced in British Columbia. In the Okanagan valley the apples are produced under irrigation. The air is very dry, and the result is that the skin on the apple does not permit of evaporation easily. It is nature's way of seeing that evaporation does not take place. The pores in the skin of the apple produced under these conditions do not give off moisture as freely as they do in a moist climate like Ontario, and it is even more moist over in the area in Britain in which the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar lived. That might have something to do with his suggestion that the apples there are not as good even as they are here. They are produced under different climatic conditions.

Those who do take care of apples, and do it properly, in Ontario, are able to overcome that difficulty through cold storage facilities that are made for the storage of apples. In our boyhood days we did not have the cold storage that we have to-day, and the result was that the apples went on the market in a different form from what British Columbia or even well cared for Ontario apples do.

Associated with that is this further fact. A very small proportion of the apples of Ontario and Quebec need to be exported. They have their market right next door to them. We grade the apples which are exported, but there are some years when they have a very good crop and no apples are exported from Ontario and Quebec at all; they are all exported from Nova Scotia and British Columbia. The apples of Nova Scotia and British Columbia have to meet the grading regulations that are put on by the federal department. Apples marketed in Ottawa, if they are from the Ottawa valley, or apples marketed in Toronto from around Trenton or anywhere in that area are not subject at all to the federal regulations. They can market them within the bounds of the province in any way the people within the province will take them, unless some special provision is made with regard to grading within the province; and the restrictions on grading in Ontario are not anything like the restrictions on grading put on by the British Columbia government even, in addition to those that are put on by the federal government in relation to the marketing of products outside the country. These are all facts in relation to the matter of grading apples in Ontario and in British Columbia, which will be there whether you had the marketing act or not. That is what is associated with the situation which exists in the different provinces. There is also the fact that in normal times 50 per cent of the British Columbia product and 80 per cent of the Nova Scotia product must be marketed overseas. Fifty per cent of all our apple production must go out of the country. That being the case, we do control the grading and the marketing of the product that goes out, but we have very little to do with the marketing of the product inside.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to ask a few questions with regard to the purchasing of horses by the Netherlands and the French governments. There was some discussion on this matter at the last session, and the minister indicated then that the methods being used in western Canada were not satisfactory. He said that he intended to change that method and purchase through the municipalities there, or at least use the municipalities for the assembling of the horses for purchase. Representations were made to the government by the various horse breeders' associations in the west that they would prefer to have the purchasing done through the special products marketing board direct from the farmers on behalf of the French purchasing commission which was in Canada purchasing these horses. Could the minister give us some information with regard to the matter? How many horses have been purchased by the French government? What method is being employed? Are they buying direct through the trade, or is the government assembling the horses? Just what method is being used at the present time? Could the minister give the average price that is being paid by the French purchasing commission for the horses that they are purchasing?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: Last session there were discussions in regard to the marketing of horses; I believe the matter was brought up on the floor of the house by the hon. member for Wood Mountain. I do not know that there was any considerable dissatisfaction with the plan followed, other than that there was not a market for all types of horses, and perhaps in regard to the system of asking farmers, many of whom were not able to determine from the circulars put out just what type of horse was required, to bring in their horses and take their chance on selling them—perhaps that did not work out so satisfactorily in view of the fact that too many of them had to take their horses home again.

Two agreements were drawn up; one had been signed. That was with the government of the Netherlands. It covered the delivery of 5,000 horses, beginning a year ago last spring and continuing to next October. When I was in Europe in January I took the trouble to see those on the other side, particularly in the Netherlands, who had been handling the horses. They said they were perfectly satisfied with the horses they had received, as to both quality and price, but they said they did not want any more. Of the 5,000 they had received some 2,200. I asked why they did not want any more, and they said they were going to be exporting horses within twelve months. They told me that the reports they had at the end of the war, on the basis on which they entered into the agreement to buy 5,000 horses from Canada, were not in accordance with the facts as they later developed. They had far more horses in the country than they thought, and they said that within twelve months they would be exporting horses and therefore did not want to buy any more from us. I did not tell them we were going to force them to carry out their contract. We just have not shipped them any more horses. Up to that time they had bought 2,200; since then they have not taken any more, and under the circumstances I do not believe we should insist on the contract being carried out. So that deals with the situation as far as the Netherlands is concerned.

In France it was a different situation. As hon. members know, the French governments were changing very rapidly in January, and we had not signed a contract with them. We never have had a signed contract. The contract was drawn upon the basis that they would buy 35,000 horses over a period of time and would advance a certain amount of money for each horse purchased. We undertook to return any cash that was not required in order to purchase and ship the horse. Under that arrangement, which was never signed, we sent,

I think, something over 2,500 horses last year, for which the farmers obtained an average price of just three cents under $100. The actual figure was $99.97, after making allowance for the losses that had to be taken by reason of certain horses not being suitable. The farmers received that amount of money, and there was some money left over of the total that had been advanced.

Mr. WRIGHT: Was that f.o.b. the shipping point?

Mr. GARDINER: That was $100 to the farmer himself. They cost more than that, of course, at Montreal, from where they were shipped. One of the conditions that developed in that connection was that some people apparently got the notion that they could handle these horses more satisfactorily through local organizations, that is, private organizations. I discussed the matter with the French minister of agriculture in Paris. He said he was of the opposite opinion and thought the agreement should be signed and carried out as it had been discussed originally. Others, however, had different views, and he did not have full control over the purchasing or marketing of the horses. While I was in England last year, a delegation from France arrived here to buy horses. They entered into negotiations with private interests to purchase horses on somewhat the same basis that had been discussed previously with the government. One of the reasons given by some people who were discussing the matter —not by the minister in France—was that in some of the discussions which took place in this house the statement was made that you could buy horses in different constituencies of eastern Canada for $30 and $40, so that naturally they asked why they should be paying something over $100. Well, one can understand that when statements of that kind go to the people who are providing the money some of them begin to wonder whether or not that is the case. I understand that the arrangement they now have is one under which they agree to put up approximately the same amount for each horse that they had agreed to put up with the government, but the buyers who go out to look for the horses are in a different position from that of the government buyers. We had no means of disposing of horses other than to the French and Belgian governments. The ordinary dealer may buy horses for any trade whatever. He goes into a community, buys a carload of horses and probably gets them at an average price of $60—the price at which they tell me horses can be bought in western Canada—to be shipped to Toronto or Montreal. No one knows whether all the horses purchased are of the right quality to go to France or Belgium or wherever it may be. They only know the buyer purchases a carload of horses and pays a certain price. We have checked some of these shipments. I would not say we have checked them all; we had no particular right to check them all. This is a deal made absolutely between the French government and the local buyers, most of them in Toronto and Montreal.

Mr. WRIGHT: But financed out of our loan.

Mr. GARDINER: Perhaps financed out of the loan we made to France, but in any event we put no strings on that loan except to specify that a certain amount must be spent in this country. They buy goods in their own way and no doubt finance their purchases with money lent to them by Canada. On those we did check, however, I had a report from Mr. MacCallum, who is the nearest thing we have to an expert on live stock, indicating that on one shipment the amount the farmer received for the horses that actually went to France was within a few cents of the amount he received for the horses we shipped last fall. Recently I have heard another suggestion that a carload of horses was bought, I think in the neighbourhood of Prince Rupert, at $40 per horse. I have asked for a check to be made to see if we can determine what percentage of those horses went to France or whether any at all went to that country. They may not have gone to France at all; but the horses that were actually loaded on the boat in the one check I made brought the farmer approximately the same amount he received under the plan we put into effect last fall.

Mr. COLDWELL: You do not know how the French government fares in these deals, in comparison?

Mr. GARDINER: Well, within the last week I had in my office two representatives of the French government, with whom I discussed the matter, and they said they were satisfied with what they were getting. At the present time they are asking for a higher standard horse, a 1,500 pound horse as against the 1,350 pound horse that was being asked for by France last fall. They say they are getting good horses; they are satisfied with them and with the treatment they are receiving. So that I would hesitate to step into an understanding of that kind which is satisfactory to both sides.

Mr. WRIGHT: I wanted to ask one other question in regard to marketing, and that is in reference to peas. Has the special products marketing board entered into any agreement with any purchasing agency or agencies in Great Britain for peas for 1946 or 1947?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that an agreement has not been entered into, but Great Britain does want to take all the peas we can supply her, and negotiations are on.

Mr. WRIGHT: At the price which obtained last year, or is there any change?

Mr. GARDINER: Approximately the same.

Mr. COLDWELL: Does that apply to beans from Ontario?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. LENNARD: Referring back to the very fine explanation made by the minister with respect to horses, if my memory serves me correctly I heard all that last session. I realize that many answers will have to be made to questions asked, but if the minister is going to make a 20-minute speech every time a question is asked we shall be on agriculture estimates until the middle of next September.

Mr. GARDINER: Agreed.

Mr. BRYCE: What did the minister find out when he went to the old country? I have asked privately about it, but perhaps he would like to give the committee some information. In the future we are going to have far more cattle in Canada than we shall be able to sell to the United States. I know that next to the domestic market, the United States offers our best market. However, they take only a quota.

Would the minister tell us the possibilities of shipping over live cattle? We have a clean bill of health at the present time, and I understand that Great Britain is to-day paying a bonus on beef. But even if we take that bonus off, one can send over good steers which are not properly finished, and get a better price for them in Great Britain, after paying expenses, than he can get from the packing plant in the fall of the year.

I believe the minister told me that I might speak about hog graders when we reached item 24.

Mr. GARDINER: That would be on item 29, dealing with live stock and live-stock products. The first question asked would more properly come under that item. However, the only answer I can give now is that when I was in Glasgow in January, at the same time the hon. member was there, I visited the three shippers, one of whom is Nelson. I met them all at one place on one occasion. When I was discussing the question with them—and they are three concerns which handled feeder cattle going into northern England and Scotland before the war; Browns handle the cattle going to Manchester and the southern section; I was in the Manchester area, but did not see Browns—the other three said that just as soon as we can ship them feeder cattle they will take all we can ship. We were not in a position to discuss price, of course, but the price would be as good as that paid to anyone.

Mr. ARGUE: What is the flour extraction rate used by millers in Canada to-day? Is there a government regulation covering the minimum extraction rate? If so, what is it?

Mr. GARDINER: There is no regulation as to what millers should use, but the extraction rate in Canada is from 72 to 76. I think that generally it is about 72. The extraction rate in many other places at present is about 80 We dealt with that in this way. We said that there was an immediate requirement for wheat. Canada is handling her wheat differently from most, if not all, other countries. Our wheat is under the control of the wheat board, which means that it is under control of the government. That is not true in the United States, and in many other places.

To those who were discussing the question we said that by another method we can take what would be actually the difference between 72 per cent and 80 per cent extraction by simply saying to-morrow morning that we are going to supply the market with less wheat for domestic consumption. We could save 10 per cent, which is just about equal the amount you would take by the increased extraction method from the mills, and they would have to get along for domestic consumption with that much less. We did not say what they had to do to get along, but I assume that what they had to do is to cut down on storage here and there across the country, and to tell their dealers they would have to do with less in the future.

By whatever method it has been done, when I was in Washington last week I received a communication from the wheat board saying that they had an extra 100,000 tons of wheat to distribute. That was more than they had estimated they would have at the beginning, when different ways of saving wheat and making wheat available for shipment were considered. That wheat was divided up, as I remember, in this way: 34,000 tons to India, 25,000 tons to Britain, 8,000 tons to Belgium, and the remaining amount to other countries. Those were the important ones. In other words, the policy of getting more wheat for these countries is working to the point where we are getting more than we had anticipated a few months ago.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is that due to the diversion from Great Britain?

Mr. GARDINER: No. It is due to many things, of course. We have been making appeals to get more wheat out, and everything that has been done has resulted in there being more wheat available than we had a while ago to go to Britain or elsewhere.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I understood the minister to say that importers of feeder cattle to Great Britain have said they would be interested in quantities of feeder cattle at certain times. Were they referring only to the immediate future, or did the minister gather the idea that there would be a permanent market for Canadian cattle in northern Great Britain?

Mr. GARDINER: I had the idea it would be indefinite. After things settled down and shipping was available, they would be expecting to take the cattle from Canada they had taken in the past, and take them as freely as we can make them available. They are most anxious to get them.

Mr. LOCKHART: Is the production of egg powder still being carried on? There has been some recent criticism. If it is being carried on, to what extent?

Mr. GARDINER: It is being carried on, although not as many eggs are being dried as there were during the war.

Mr. LOCKHART: Could the minister give figures to show comparative shipments?

Mr. GARDINER: As nearly as I can recall, in the agreement we now have it is about half and half. During the war only dried eggs went over for a time. However, they are now talking about half shelled eggs.

Mr. LOCKHART: What was shipped until the termination of the war, and what is being shipped to-day in thousands of pounds?

Mr. GARDINER: The contract amount for 1946 is for 83 million dozen. Of this amount 52,500,000 dozen are in shells, and 32,500,000 dozen dried, or in a ratio of about five to three.

Mr. LOCKHART: What egg powder was shipped last year?

Mr. GARDINER: The contract last year was for 50,400,000 dozen; we shipped 42,000,000 dozen in the shell and 47,700,000 dozen dried.

Mr. SENN: Do the producers receive as much for eggs that are sold in the shell as they do for those sold as powder?

Mr. GARDINER: The farmer gets the same whichever it is.

25. Agricultural economics, including surveys formerly under Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, $245,520.

Mr. SENN: I notice the report for 1945 states that certain surveys were made in regard to farm management and the cost of producing butter fat. The cost of producing butter fat in the Edmonton area is given as 68 cents a pound, while the cost in the Calgary area was something like 54 cents per pound. How does the minister reconcile those figures with the statement he made a short time ago that we have parity in farm prices?

Mr. GARDINER: I do not like to refer to another debate, but it is about the only way I can answer the question. The question of parity prices has been brought up on a number of occasions. In this connection I should like to refer to what was said by the Minister of Finance, as reported on page 1869 of Hansard. He said:

> However, let us take the period 1926-29 as the basis of parity, a period which apparently is regarded as being a favourable one for the farmers, and which is usually referred to as the basis of parity. Official figures from the bureau of statistics show that in March, 1946, the average wholesale prices of Canadian farm products was six per cent higher than the average of 1926-29, and that is without making any allowanace for wheat participation payments. I am informed that if wheat participation payments were added, instead of being six per cent the figure would be something like ten per cent. Over the same period the official index of prices of commodities and services, including labour used by the farmers had, according to the bureau of statistics, increased by seven per cent. That is, the actual level of farm prices is slightly higher to-day than in 1926-29, and the relationship between prices of goods farmers sell, and prices of goods and services farmers buy is almost identical with that which prevailed in the former period of prosperity, the advantage being in favour of the farm prices. I have taken this period because it is the one frequently quoted in respect of parity.

That was the statement made the other evening by the Minister of Finance when he was dealing with this question.

Mr. SENN: It does look as though you have given up the idea of parity when you find that the cost of production exceeds the price which the farmer is getting for a particular product. I do not think you can convince the farmer that he is getting parity to-day in comparison with what is paid for other products. I should like to argue this a little further at some future time.

Mr. ARGUE: This item is of great importance to the people of the west because economic land surveys are different from soil texture surveys. An economic land survey takes into account the distance from markets, the prices of commodities, freight rates, land texture, average production and all the other economic factors that go into making a decent income on a farm. An amount of $75,000 is being provided for economic surveys, but this amount will not be put to the best use if the economic surveys that are made are not themselves put to the best use. If an economic survey is to be useful more attention will have to be paid to the results. These surveys should be the basis of deciding whether land shall be used for community pastures and whether submarginal land shall be taken out of the production of wheat and so on.

I understand that these economic surveys are conducted mostly by agricultural students during the summer time. If my theory serves me correctly, a few years ago these students were being paid something like $80 a month. What is being paid for the temporary help engaged to carry on these surveys? Agricultural students do not have a large field in which to find jobs during the summer months between terms and I think this provides one of the best ways of their making a few dollars.

Mr. GARDINER: The amount paid runs from $1,200 to $1,800, depending upon the students.

Mr. ARGUE: That is the yearly rate?

Mr. GARDINER: That is a yearly rate, which would work out at from $100 to $150 a month. I am more familiar with the engineering students who are engaged to do survey work under the P.F.R.A. The only complaint I have ever had with regard to the employment of these students is from people in the areas where they are working who say that they are being paid better than many people in the community.

Mr. ARGUE: I do not think that is a good complaint.

Mr. WRIGHT: Do they have to pay their own board?

Mr. GARDINER: No; they have their expenses.

Mr. STEPHENSON: I notice that in some departments there is an increase in travelling expenses. I do not know whether the Minister of Agriculture has done this, but I took occasion to figure out the cost of travelling expenses and I find that in the case of the Department of Agriculture it totals $1,360,000. Having been a member of a municipal council where we are used to figuring in hundreds of dollars, I may not have raised my sights high enough to understand why a department should pay out $1,360,000 for travelling expenses. Could the minister give us some breakdown of this figure?

Mr. GARDINER: It would be difficult to go through all the items and pick out each individual or group of individuals and account for the travelling expenses. The fact that travelling expenses are essential in the Department of Agriculture was emphasized by the questions which were asked a few moments ago. We have students out making surveys in the summer months who are paid from $100 to $150 a month. It is absolutely impossible to have them do this work unless they are driven from place to place. At times they must take a train to a certain point and then be driven to different places, checking crop conditions in the west at present in connection with prairie farm assistance and with regard to P.F.R.A., checking the spraying of fruit trees in the eastern part of Canada and many other things that have to be done to give service in connection with the operation of 750,000 farms all the way across Canada. That is a travelling job. There is no way in which service can be given in connection with agriculture unless we move officials around in the farming areas. We do get the complaint sometimes that there are too many of them, and there may be some justification for that complaint; I do not know. By that I mean that there are men employed in that kind of work both by the province and by the federal government. But they are all doing work that is worth while. Sometimes you have men sent out by processing organizations, buying farm products, eggs, butter, hogs, or whatever it may be, and when people see these men they think they are all government officials, but they are not. But I know of no other way of giving service to farmers than by getting people out on the roads and going to the farms and communities where farmers are. That costs money, but $1,300,000 out of a total expenditure of over $100,000,000 at present—the usual expenditures would run to around $20,000,000 or more—is not too high, I think, in view of the nature and value of the work.

Mr. STEPHENSON: Would it be possible to get a breakdown of these expenses?

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member wants the amount spent for hotel accommodation, gasoline, railway services and the like?

Mr. STEPHENSON: Yes, I think so.

Mr. GARDINER: Probably we could get that. Does the hon. member want a breakdown of the total amount of $1,300,000?

Mr. STEPHENSON: I should like to have that.

Mr. WEBB: I think it would be well to have that on the record. There is an increase of $100,000 over last year; I am not complaining about that. It means that the farm services are to be extended, does it not?

Mr. GARDINER: There is, of course, an increase in the total expenditure for ordinary services, $19,429 this year, and $17,215 last year. The increase in travelling expenses will be in proportion, if not a little less, because the one part of our estimates which was pared more thoroughly than any other by the treasury board when I was before them was this very item. They went over it with a fine-tooth comb and took out everything that could be taken out. The real reason for the increase is that more service is being given. Cars can now be obtained which we had to do without during the war, and men are obtainable now, many of them back from overseas service and others that we could not get during the war. Some hon. members have said that we should have more veterinaries inspecting cattle. They have to have a car to do that work, and naturally the more we put on to do the work the greater the expenses will be.

Mr. STEPHENSON: I am not criticizing the expenses so much, but I think we ought to know something of how an amount of this size is to be spent.

Mr. GARDINER: We shall get that for you.

Mr. WEBB: This does not include the purchase of cars, does it?

Mr. GARDINER: I do not think car purchases would come under expenses. There might be depreciation on cars, mileage and that kind of thing.

Mr. QUELCH: Do oil surveys come under this item?

Mr. GARDINER: No. Any that we have passed so far come under experimental farms and under prairie farm rehabilitation.

Mr. BRACKEN: When travelling is done by automobile does the government provide the cars in some instances and allow the expense of running it to be charged up, or is there a double policy, with civil servants driving their own cars and being allowed mileage?

Mr. GARDINER: I answered a question with regard to that earlier under the administration of the department. We have cars operated both ways, but most of our cars are owned by the department, purchased by the department and operated by the civil servant. Some cars are owned by the individuals and we pay the expenses, so much per mile. As I remember the figure given earlier in the discussion, it is nine cents per mile for the first 4,000 miles, and seven cents per mile from then on.

Mr. CHARLTON: Has the minister a statement to make on the increased subsidy asked for by the farmers who met in Ottawa last Thursday?

Mr. GARDINER: The farmers who met in Ottawa last Thursday did not see me. They did not ask to see me after their discussions here at that time, but they have since asked to see me some time this week and I have said that I am prepared to see them any time this week that they can be in Ottawa. No date has yet been set. I do not know that I should say here what I am going to say to them until I have heard them.

27. Subsidies for cold storage warehouses under the Cold Storage Act, and grants, in the amounts detailed in the estimates, $694,221.

Mr. KIDD: How many cold storages are subsidized in Kingston?

Mr. GARDINER: The only one that has had assistance is the Canadian Cold Storage, with space of 17,169, and a subsidy total of $5,617.

Mr. KIDD: What is the total amount of subsidy which has been granted for cold storage?

Mr. GARDINER: It is $5,617.50.

Mr. KIDD: That is the total amount of subsidies granted to the cold storage plants?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. The cold storage subsidy is 30 per cent; half paid the first year and the other half over four years.

Mr. McKAY: Would the minister give us a statement as to the basis of payments of subsidies for cold storage warehouses and plants? In this item I notice that cold storage cooperatives are dealt with; fruit, wine, dairy products and poultry are all included.

Could the minister make a brief statement in explanation of the present policy in this regard, because nothing is allowed for the province of Saskatchewan; at least, I cannot locate anything. We have cooperatives there which do a cold storage business; and a number of cold storage plants are being erected at the present time, including several small ones.

Mr. GARDINER: The four which have had the subsidy are: Moose Jaw Cold Storage Company, Moose Jaw; Saskatchewan Cooperative Creameries, Regina; Saskatchewan Cooperative Creameries, Saskatoon; Saskatchewan Cooperative Creameries, Vonda.

Mr. WRIGHT: They are not listed in the explanation, though.

Mr. GARDINER: They are listed in my explanation.

Mr. McKAY: What is the principle which is being followed?

Mr. GARDINER: I shall explain it. The position is that we have been paying for many years a subsidy which amounts to 30 per cent of the cost of constructing the plant. Half the 30 per cent is paid in the year the plant is constructed and the other half is divided equally over the next four years. The payments are made conditionally; no matter who constructs the plant, whether it be a private individual, a company, or a cooperative, the condition is that the plant must allow the public the services of that plant. The individual cannot utilize the plant for his own purposes if he accepts this grant; if he does not accept it he can do what he likes with his cold storage. Then we have certain rights in connection with the rates which are charged. We simply keep a check on them, and if those we assisted were charging unreasonable rates they would be checked up on that. There is an understanding that they must charge rates which are satisfactory to the department.

Mr. McKAY: What is the situation with regard to these small cold storage plants which are being erected at the present time throughout the west?

Mr. GARDINER: Plants which, I understand, have lockers in them?

Mr. McKAY: Yes, a locker system.

Mr. GARDINER: The regulation is that a plant which receives this assistance can have only 15 per cent of locker space, which is one way of enforcing the idea that the plant must be open to the general public. I have been arguing the point a little recently with officials in the department as to whether that should be changed. I said that conditions have changed considerably, and particularly out in our part of the country. It is the most useful kind of cold storage, I think, that can be put in in villages and towns where you have not any reason for having these large services such as you have in big cities. That matter is under discussion. Personally I am favourable to the suggestion that the assistance under this act should be applied to this class of storage plant, but up to the moment it has not been done.

Mr. McKAY: At the moment none of these has received any assistance?

Mr. GARDINER: No, not up to the moment, if they have more than 15 per cent given over to locker space.

Mr. BURTON: This vote is referred to on page 93 of the main estimates and several pages later, containing the details. I went through them some time ago and I noticed there were not any subsidies listed for Saskatchewan. Why are these not listed in the detailed explanation?

Mr. GARDINER: Those which are listed in the statement are only those which are affected by the grants which are in these votes, and these have not yet been made.

Mr. BURTON: You were speaking of the Moose Jaw and Regina grants.

Mr. GARDINER: I understood the question to be whether there were any in Saskatchewan that have been given assistance. I have just given one for Kingston which did receive assistance. These are already constructed and have been assisted. I do not recall any which have been applied for this year; if they have they would have been accepted if they had met the conditions.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Could the minister indicate whether in the supplementary estimates we might expect some grants for these smaller cold storage plants which are providing locker service? I understood that the minister is favourably disposed to making grants for them. I think it is recognized that they are providing a useful community service; and building costs are now high. If the minister could hold out some hope in this matter it would be well received all across the country.

Mr. GARDINER: There will be money in the supplementary estimates, as there always is, for any applications received between the time these estimates are made up and the time the house closes. But I think we would require to change the legislation in order to bring in the type of cold storage we are discussing at the moment, the locker system where practically 100 per cent is locker space. I think there would have to be an amendment of the legislation, although I would have to check up to make sure that the matter is not governed by regulations rather than by legislation. If it is a matter of regulation there would be a possibility of this being done; if legislation is required it would have to come here before any assurance is given.

Mr. BENTLEY: What particular kind of organization must apply, or likely will apply, if you grant these small places the right to build locker plants?

Mr. GARDINER: A number have applied, and the organization I know best is the one in the second nearest town to where I myself live, that is in Abernethy. It is an organization of farmers, largely, and business people; they formed an association and built a cold storage locker plant, and they wrote here to see whether they were entitled to the grant. We informed them that under the legislation and the regulations as they now are they were not entitled to it. I think maybe I had half a dozen such applications of that type from Saskatchewan.

Mr. FRASER: I notice in the estimates there is $7,000 this year for Trenton cold storage, and there was $15,000 last year. The minister said this evening that subsidies are paid over a period of four years. This has been going on for a number of years—more than four. How much has been paid out in subsidies to the Trenton cold storage warehouse?

Mr. GARDINER: The only explanation is that there have been extensions. If the plant were built twenty years ago it would get its first grant in the first four years; but three or four years ago it may have added an extension on which it is entitled to the grant. I should say that a feature of the law is that any plant which gets a grant must apply before it starts its building operations. If that is not done, they are not entitled under the law to a grant. On a number of occasions, I would say probably a dozen times since I have been here, in ten years, we have had to bring in a special vote for some concerns which inadvertently broke that part of the law.

Mr. FRASER: Do they submit their plans to you?

Mr. GARDINER: They submit their plans to us. First, they have to make a request to the department which is dealt with in the dairy branch. The dairy branch examine the existing situation, as to the need, and advise them at the time the application is made as to whether on that basis it would be acceptable to the department. After that is done, they are required to build it up to a certain standard and live up to the other conditions which I mentioned a few moments ago.

Mr. BURTON: The minister has dealt mostly with the grant part of it; but on what basis are the subsidies paid?

Mr. GARDINER: The only subsidy that is paid—you might call it a grant, or a subsidy—

Mr. BURTON: You include that?

Mr. GARDINER: There is no subsidy. I am informed that there are a few instances where it was impossible for those applying to live up to the conditions of the act where a grant has been made apart from the subsidies that are paid under the conditions of the act, but there are only a few of them scattered over a long period of time.

Mr. BRACKEN: The minister has partly answered the question I had intended to ask. Are these subsidies granted to all who apply, provided that they comply with the regulations, or are you limited by the appropriation or by any departmental regulations?

Mr. GARDINER: I think I can best answer that by saying that in the early stages of the act applications were made and were practically all accepted, but there was a period just prior to the war when cold storage was overbuilt. I believe it began in the period when Mr. Bennett was here, and it continued on to the first years that I was here down to war time when we had to check this whole situation carefully in different communities before agreeing to add to the cold storage. That continued for about two years of the war, and then it became evident that because of the enormous shipping of food products we had to have more cold storage. From then down to the present these have been passed almost automatically. If persons could live up to the conditions of the act and the cold storage were needed—and there were very few cases where it was not needed—it was passed almost automatically. At the moment I cannot recall any that have not been passed in recent years.

Mr. NICHOLSON: In what year was the act passed?

Mr. GARDINER: It was passed in 1907.

Mr. BRACKEN: The department is not required to accept these applications even though they comply with the regulations?

Mr. GARDINER: No, it is not required.

Mr. McKAY: The minister has indicated that there is a 30 per cent grant based on construction costs, I believe.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. McKAY: Is there any restriction in dollars as to the amount of the grant?

Mr. GARDINER: I should say it takes in both the lands and the buildings, but there is no limit.

Mr. McKAY: No top limit?

Mr. GARDINER: No, excepting that it is usually done through Mr. Singleton of the dairy branch. He examines into the situation and he might say to them: "We do not advise you to put in more than a certain capacity." That limits the amount which is spent.

Mr. LENNARD: I see an item here as follows: "Dundas, Samuel Netkin." He has had several grants in 1944, 1945 and 1946. He got $3,600 last year, and I see an equal amount this year. Has the minister the figures to show what he will have for the complete grant when it is completed?

Mr. GARDINER: That is for this year?

Mr. LENNARD: Last year he received $3,600, and there is also the same item to be passed this year. These two items will amount to $7,200.

Mr. GARDINER: It is one of the four items. I could not say whether it is the first, second or third.

Mr. LENNARD: Are they equal payments?

Mr. GARDINER: After the first year they are equal. The first year it is half the total, and then for each of the next four years it will be the same amount. I assume this is one-quarter of half the amount.

Mr. LENNARD: Is that grant given for land and buildings, or just the buildings?

Mr. GARDINER: Land and building.

Mr. LENNARD: No interior decoration?

Mr. GARDINER: The interior equipment, if you call that decoration.

Mr. LENNARD: In this particular case I might, yes.

Mr. GARDINER: The whole equipment of the building, the building itself and the land.

Mr. BRACKEN: The answer to the hon. member's question then would be eight times the figure that is in this year's estimate?

Mr. GARDINER: That would appear to be so.

28. Fruit, vegetables and maple products and honey, including grant of $5,000 to Canadian horticultural council, $683,764.

Mr. CHARLTON: I understand that there has been some change in the classification of the senior fruit and vegetable inspector and the supervising fruit and vegetable inspector. Has there been a corresponding change in salary? How did that change in classification come about?

Mr. GARDINER: The supervisor is supervising the inspection staff and the senior inspector is just the senior inspector on that staff. The two terms have been reversed in a recent reorganization of the department. The supervisor is made the official who has charge of the others.

Mr. CHARLTON: Do the salaries remain the same?

Mr. GARDINER: Not quite the same; there have been salary increases. The senior had a maximum of $2,500: it is now $2,700.

Mr. CHARLTON: The supervising fruit and vegetable inspectors come above the seniors?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. CHARLTON: Their salaries would be higher than the senior inspectors' were before?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: Could the minister tell us something about the honey production, what the marketing of honey is likely to be in the future? I believe there has been a big expansion in the production of honey in Saskatchewan and other western provinces.

Mr. GARDINER: The 1945 honey crop was estimated at 30,683,000 pounds and valued at $4,946,000, or 11·8 per cent short of the 1944 crop, which was valued at $5,253,400. The average yield per colony was only fifty-nine pounds as compared with sixty-nine pounds in 1944, and the 1935-39 average of ninety-three pounds. The production has been down per colony. Adverse weather conditions in eastern Canada were responsible for the reduced total.

Increased interest in beekeeping evidenced since the outbreak of war continued during 1945, the total number of beekeepers rising to the record figure of 43,800 as compared with 40,700 in 1944, and the 1935-39 average of 26,860. The number of colonies of bees operated in 1945 was 524,100, as against 508,500 in 1944 and the 1935-39 average of 382,840. The demand for honey was heavy, despite rationing restrictions, and ceiling prices were maintained throughout the year.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am interested in the possibilities of extending our honey export market. What are the prospects with regard to that?

Mr. GARDINER: In 1940 we were exporting 10,762,000 pounds. In 1942 we exported 4,071,000 and, in 1942, 1,880,000 pounds, and from that time we did not export any. We are utilizing the quantities that I mentioned a moment ago for home consumption.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is there a demand from overseas?

Mr. GARDINER: There is now, and it will grow.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is what many of our people are interested in. They would like to get some assurance that in all probability the demand for our honey will grow on the export market. I believe we produce a high grade of honey.

Mr. GARDINER: They want all the honey they can get, but at the moment they are not prepared to agree to take any certain quantity.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Earlier the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar raised the question of the variation across the dominion in the quality of fruit. On a previous occasion I raised the question of variations in the quality of fruits and vegetables offered for sale in cans. Could the minister make some statement on what his department is doing so that a consumer who buys canned goods may have some guarantee in regard to quality? There has been a great variation in the qualities offered in different parts of Canada at different times. During the Stevens price spreads inquiry it was disclosed that there were some irregularities in connection with this trade. So that I should like the minister to explain what assurance the consumer has that canned goods being offered for sale have been inspected as to quality and quantity.

Mr. GARDINER: As I remember them, the Stevens reports criticized the great number of sizes of containers, and also criticized the quality to some extent. We have regulations which I think were brought in during the last year before we took over in 1935 and which, since that time, have been adjusted as a result of our experience. I believe we have regulations in that regard as strict as any that can be found anywhere.

Mr. NICHOLSON: How about fruits and vegetables canned in British Columbia; how do they compare with those canned in Ontario or the maritimes?

Mr. GARDINER: They are much the same. The standard is the same; the containers are of standard sizes, and the quality is good. There may be some difference in the quality of the different fruits in different years. In other words, some years weather conditions in Ontario make it difficult to produce the best quality fruits, and in other years you will find similar conditions with regard to certain other fruits in British Columbia. The product may not look to be as good, but it is at least supposed to be graded up to an equal standard.

Mr. NICHOLSON: What machinery have you to assure the consumer that Aylmer or Heinz or Campbell canned goods, first quality, are similar to those offered by other competitors?

Mr. GARDINER: The plants are all specially inspected, but I must repeat that we should keep in mind in connection with these matters the fact that we have no control over fruit that is put up in Ontario for sale in Ontario. We control only fruit that may be exported from Ontario. A short time ago I made a statement for which one of the local newspapers took me to task. I said that the red gauze was being taken off peaches. That is a fact; the red gauze is being taken off peaches as far as we have any control over them, but we cannot control the marketing of peaches in Ontario which are grown in Ontario. Of course that was made perfectly plain at the time.

Mr. LOCKHART: The minister would not have time to-night, but at the next sitting of the committee would he deal with a question which is of vital importance to fruit growers almost from coast to coast? It has to do with the importation of maraschino cherries, particularly Italian cherries, that have come or are likely to come into Canada because the ad valorem duty is very low. During the war a definite improvement was made in the production of maraschino cherries from both British Columbia and Ontario fruit, and a really beautiful product has been turned out. I know great fears are felt that this market may be lost. I believe we must say, to the credit of the growers and processors of this country, that they have turned out a product second to none. I know the minister would not have time to deal with the matter to-night, but at the next sitting of the committee would he review the situation and tell us the possibilities? Even if there should be need of subsidies, certainly some assistance should be given to the fruit growers and processors to protect their market, after they made such valiant attempts during the war years to provide a Canadian product which had not been produced heretofore. Would the minister give us a full statement as to the possibilities of protecting that market in the interests of our fruit growers? It has grown to be an important market, and a wonderful product has been turned out.

Mr. GARDINER: I can say that what has been said in regard to the matter is in accordance with the facts as I know them. There has been a considerable development of this production, but I am afraid I cannot say anything about what will happen until the conclusion of the trade meeting which is to take place this summer. That meeting is being held for the purpose of taking restrictions off trade. I do not know whether we are going to advocate putting on any, but that is something which will have to be considered. I do not think I could say anything in that regard that would be helpful.

Mr. LENNARD: Could the minister assure us that these growers and processors who developed that industry during the war years will receive his support within the government when the question arises? I realize that this is a matter concerning duties and that sort of thing, which probably does not come within his department, but could be assure us of his support?

Mr. GARDINER: All I can say is that I am not a protectionist.

Mr. LENNARD: It is not a matter of protection; it is a matter of preventing a product from being dumped in this country from another country where there is quite a different standard of living. It is not a question of protection at all; it is a question of the survival of an industry which has been more or less perfected in Canada during the last few years.

Mr. LOCKHART: It is Italian fruit; we may as well call a spade a spade. Here is a country that is likely to come in and take away the splendid market that has been developed in this country, and I think the minister should give the matter the fullest possible consideration.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend has said it is dumping, and if that is so it cannot be done under the present law.

Mr. LOCKHART: The dumping duty was taken off at the beginning of the war. Why should it not be reestablished?

Mr. LENNARD: To the best of my knowledge the United States has a duty of about ten cents a pound against the Italian cherries, which prevents them from being dumped on that market; and I understand that the British market is closed to this product.

Mr. GARDINER: I believe our duty is 15 per cent plus two cents.

Mr. LENNARD: I think it is 17½ per cent.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

INDIAN ACT—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. D. F. BROWN (Essex West) presented the first report of the special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed to examine and consider the Indian Act, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION

ADDITIONS TO ADMISSIBLE CLASSES—TRAVEL DOCUMENT FOR DISPLACED PERSONS

Hon. J. A. GLEN (Minister of Mines and Resources): I desire to make a statement to the house. For some time the government has been giving serious study to the matter of immigration, and it has been considered advisable to permit a somewhat increased movement of immigrants to Canada than would be possible under existing regulations. In addition to British subjects and United States citizens the present regulations provide for the admission of,

(a) the wife or unmarried child under eighteen years of age of any person legally admitted to Canada who has sufficient means to maintain himself until employment is secured;

(b) an agriculturist having sufficient means to farm in Canada;

(c) the fiancee of an adult male legally admitted to and resident in Canada who is in a position to receive, marry and care for his intended wife;

(d) a person who, having entered Canada as a non-immigrant, enlisted in the Canadian armed forces and, having served in such forces, has been honourably discharged therefrom.

Alien immigrants, other than United States citizens, require to be in possession of a properly vised passport.

By order in council 2071 dated 28th May, 1946, the following have been added to the admissible classes:

The father or mother, the unmarried son or daughter eighteen years of age or over, the unmarried brother or sister, the ophan nephew or niece under sixteen years of age, of any person legally admitted to and resident in Canada who is in a position to receive and care for such relative. The term "orphan" means a child bereaved of both parents.

As there will be a number of persons coming within the degrees of relationship that I have just described who cannot obtain a valid passport required by the present passport regulations, these have also been amended by P.C. 2070 dated 28th May, 1946, to permit of the acceptance of a travel document establishing the identity of the holder in the case of an immigrant who has been displaced from his country of origin as the result of the war and is not in possession of a valid passport.

The action taken is intended as a short term measure to provide for the admission to Canada of approved persons who can be both maintained until established and provided with housing by relatives, and to meet in some measure the pressing demands being made on behalf of refugees or displaced persons having relatives in Canada anxious to provide them with homes.

It is necessary to state that for reasons beyond the control of the government the amending of the regulations does not mean immediate action can be taken to admit immigrants from overseas. At the present time there is an acute shortage of westbound transatlantic passenger accommodation, due primarily to the scarcity of passenger vessels, the return of service personnel and the bringing to Canada of their dependents. There are still approximately 32,000 of the latter in the British isles and on the continent. There are also many Canadians overseas awaiting opportunity to return home. While every effort is being made to complete these movements and hasten the return of normal conditions, it undoubtedly will be the end of the present year before much accommodation will be available for the ordinary traveller.

Prior to the war the immigration branch maintained inspectional staffs at European ports of embarkation for the examination of immigrants. These staffs had to be withdrawn following the outbreak of hostilities. It is proposed to reestablish inspectional facilities on the continent as quickly as circumstances permit, so that as transportation becomes available immigrants of the admissible classes may come forward.

I may say further that I expect there will be a flood of applications made by persons resident in Canada who desire their relatives to come to this country. In view of what I have already said in regard to the transfer and transportation of our personnel in the armed forces, as well as their dependents, and in view also of the acute shortage of shipping, it will not be possible to give any priority to those who may make applications.

I wish to emphasize that the mere submission of applications now will not give any priority to those making such applications. They will be dealt with when the time arrives at which we can deal with them. May I add that the immigration branch to-day suffers not only from a shortage of staff and an insufficiency of space, but from the added fact that it is receiving mail in such great quantities that it is physically impossible to deal with it in the expeditious manner we would wish to follow.

However I give this warning to the house and to the country that applications will not receive any priority until, as I have already said, the personnel of the armed forces, as well as their dependents, and those wishing to be repatriated from European countries, are brought to Canada.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister has outlined some recent action by the government which will result in increasing the flow of immigration to Canada. Might I in this connection ask two simple questions. He pointed out that two orders in council had recently been passed. What are the dates of those orders in council? Then, would he give us some idea—if he has any—of what the increased volume of immigration is likely to be under these new proposals?

Mr. GLEN: The order in council dealing with the admissibility of immigrants is P.C. 2071, dated May 28, 1946. The one dealing with passport requirements is P.C. 2070, dated May 28, 1946. It is impossible to give any estimate as to the number of immigrants.

Mr. GREEN: Does the regulation extend to immigration from the orient?

Mr. GLEN: No.

TRANSPORT TO CANADA OF WIVES OF SERVICE PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Defence or the Minister of Mines and Resources, and I shall be glad to place it on the order paper if my question is not in order. This question is pursuant to the anouncement made this afternoon with reference to service men's wives. I should like to know how many are still to be brought over from the United Kingdom. I do not want the exact number, but are there many still to be brought over, and when can we expect this transportation to be completed?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of National Defence): I have not the figures with me at the moment, but I believe the total is somewhere in the vicinity of 12,000 or 14,000 wives.

IMMIGRATION OF ALLIED EX-SERVICE MEN TO MARRY CANADIAN GIRLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. W. SKEY (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Resources: Will ex-servicemen of the allied forces be allowed to come to Canada under the new immigration provisions in order to marry Canadian girls to whom they are engaged?

Hon. J. A. GLEN (Minister of Mines and Resources): Yes, subject to the regulations.

OPPORTUNITY FOR DISCUSSION OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I desire to ask the Acting Prime Minister a question. Will an early opportunity be afforded to discuss the two orders in council referred to by the Minister of Mines and Resources concerning immigration from Europe? I cannot understand why this is handled by order in council when the House of Commons is in session.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CHURCH: I should like to have a reply.

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Acting Prime Minister): There will be an opportunity on the estimates of the Department of Mines and Resources to discuss the action which was taken. I gather that the order in council was passed pursuant to legislation.

[Mr. Church.]

Mr. CHURCH: It is an outrageous and irregular proceeding while the House of Commons is in session.

QUESTIONS

WAR ASSETS—CONSTRUCTION MACHINERY

Mr. THATCHER:

1. Has the city of Moose Jaw recently sought to purchase from War Assets Limited, certain construction machinery needed to improve its water supply?
2. Is there any such equipment now being stored in hangars at No. 2 R.E.M.U.?
3. If so, what action has been taken to date in this regard?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. The equipment declared surplus at No. 2 R.E.M.U. by the Department of National Defence for Air and now in the possession of War Assets Corporation is being disposed of in accordance with the sales policy of the corporation.

The provincial government of Saskatchewan is exercising its higher priority to obtain some of this equipment and as a consequence the application of the city of Moose Jaw for construction machinery can be met only in part by War Assets Corporation.

"CANADA 1946"

Mr. GRAYDON:

1. Upon what date did "Canada 1946" come off the press and become ready for distribution?
2. Why does the said official handbook contain no reference to the progress made by Canada in the field of external affairs?

Mr. MacKINNON:

1. First 1,000 copies received April 12, 1946.
2. It has been the policy to include the constitution and government chapter, which normally carries such material, at intervals only, owing to the limitations on the size of the standard edition of the handbook. This particular chapter appeared last in "Canada 1940", but reprints of that material have been made available to inquirers in intervening years. During war years especially, increased pressure on space and paper shortages were experienced, but limited treatments on external affairs (mainly in the form of statements in the war effort and illustrative matter) have appeared. In special Spanish and Portuguese editions of the handbook printed in 1945 for distribution abroad, the chapter on constitution and government, together with special external affairs material, was included. Plans for "Canada 1947" have in view the inclusion of the constitution and government chapter in revised form.

COMMITTEE ON FOOD REQUIREMENTS

Mr. MARSHALL:

1. Who are the present members of the Committee on Food Requirements which operates under the jurisdiction of the Privy Council?

2. How is the work of this committee coordinated with the Department of Agriculture?

3. What amount of money was allotted to this committee in the year ended March 31, 1946, and how was it spent?

Mr. MACKENZIE:

1. Present members of the food requirements committee are as follows:

Dr. D. B. Finn, Department of Fisheries (Chairman).

Dr. G. S. H. Barton, Department of Agriculture.

Mr. S. D. Pierce, Department of External Affairs.

Mr. M. W. Sharp, Department of Finance.

Dr. L. B. Pett, Department of Pensions and National Health.

Mr. W. F. Bull, Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. K. W. Taylor, Wartime Prices and Trade Board.

2. The work of the committee is coordinated with the Department of Agriculture as may be necessary by means of the presence at committee meetings of a representative of that department.

3. $855 were allotted to the committee in the year ending March 31, 1946. None of this money was spent.

NOVA SCOTIA FISHERIES—DESTRUCTION OF TRAWL GEAR

Mr. WINTERS:

1. Has the Department of Fisheries received complaints regarding alleged destruction by trawlers of foreign registry, of trawl gear used by Nova Scotia fishing schooners on Quero bank off the coast of Nova Scotia?

2. If so (a) by whom and when were complaints made; (b) what action has been taken or is contemplated to protect Nova Scotia deep sea fishermen?

Mr. BRIDGES:

1. Yes.

2. (a) By Willis Park, secretary-treasurer, Canadian Fishermen's Union, Lunenburg, N.S., on May 21 and by H. C. Meade, district representative Canadian Fishermen's Union, Halifax, N.S., on May 22; (b) complaints are of a general nature and investigation has been instituted to obtain full facts.

PERMANENT FORCE NAVY

Mr. DIEFENBAKER:

1. What is the present strength of the permanent force navy?

2. How many men are in each of the following categories: (a) chief petty officers; (b) petty officers; (c) leading seamen; (d) able seamen; (e) ordinary seamen?

Mr. ABBOTT:

1. Strength of permanent force navy at 1st May, 1946: officers, 751; ratings, 4,364; total, 5,115.

2. As of the 1st May, 1946: (a) chief petty officers, 300; (b) petty officers, 373; (c) leading seamen, 301; (d) able seamen, 400; (e) ordinary seamen, 612.

PRISONERS OF WAR—BOWMANVILLE TRAINING SCHOOL

Mr. STEPHENSON:

1. What are the names of the contractor or contractors engaged in changing the Bowmanville Training School from a prisoner-of-war camp to its original status?

2. If incorporated, what are the names of the directors and officers of the company?

3. If a partnership, who are the partners?

4. On what basis is the contract let?

5. What is the estimated cost of making the change?

6. When will this school be ready for occupancy?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. Frontenac Construction Co. Limited, 67 Victoria Street, Toronto, Ontario.

2. No information.

3. Not a partnership.

4. Contract was awarded on the basis of actual cost plus a fixed fee of $3,500. This fee includes plant or equipment rental, overhead and profit.

5. Estimated cost is $83,483.

6. School expected to be ready for occupancy by June 30, 1946.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. McKAY:

1. How many persons were in receipt of unemployment insurance benefits in the province of Saskatchewan during (a) November, 1945; (b) April, 1946?

2. What was the total amount of the unemployment insurance benefits paid out in Saskatchewan during (1) 1945; (2) since the inception of the act?

Mr. MITCHELL:

1. (a) 902; (b) 3,866.

2. (1) $319,644; (2) the total amount paid out in benefits in Saskatchewan since the inception of the act to April 30, 1946, was $916,765.44.

WAR ASSETS CORPORATION—ADVERTISING

Mr. FRASER:

What was the cost to War Assets Corporation during the year 1945 for all forms of advertising?

Mr. McILRAITH: $35,299.04. This amount includes $33,666.68 for advertising disposal of surplus assets and $1,632.36 for advertising in relation to general administration of War Assets Corporation.

CLOTHING

Mr. FLEMING:

What were the quantities (a) produced in Canada; (b) imported into Canada; (c) exported from Canada, in each of the years commencing 1939, of the following kinds of clothing: (a) shirts; (b) underwear; (c) socks; (d) suits; (e) overcoats; (f) shoes, for (i) men; (ii) boys; (g) underwear; (h) stockings; (i) coats; (j) shoes, for (i) women; (ii) girls; (iii) babies?

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

EMPLOYMENT OF PRISONERS OF WAR IN SUGAR BEET AREAS

Mr. HACKETT:

1. Did the government ask the sugar beet growers of south-western Ontario to plant 35,000 acres to sugar beets in the year 1946?
2. If so, what provision was made to supply prisoners of war in work camps to do sugar beet work in the area?
3. Is the number of prisoners of war available for sugar beet work in camps this year considerably less than the number used last year? If so, why?
4. What numbers of prisoners of war have been made available for sugar beet work in the camps of Manitoba and Alberta this year and how do these numbers compare with those of last year?

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT—SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. DIEFENBAKER:

1. How many quarter sections of land were sold by the Soldier Settlement Board in the province of Saskatchewan between 1943 and 1945, both inclusive?
2. What were the highest and lowest prices realized on such sales?
3. How many of the lands so sold have been purchased back by the Vetedans' Land Act administration?

HOUSING

COST OF HOUSES UNDER VETERANS LAND ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs a question in connection with a news item from Sherbrooke, Quebec, reported in this morning's Montreal Gazette under the heading, "Vets barred from land act homes by Ottawa shift boosting prices." Similar complaints have been received from other parts of the country. I mentioned this matter to the minister this morning, and the question I wish to ask is as follows: Under what authority does the Department of Veterans Affairs charge veterans more than $6,000 for houses under the Veterans Land Act?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the question is one which should be placed upon the order paper.

Mr. FULTON: May I, with your permission, put the question shortly?

Mr. SPEAKER: I suggest to the hon. member that he put his question on the order paper.

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): If I may be permitted, without replying to the question asked by my good friend the hon. member for Kamloops, may I say to him that at the first meeting of the committee on veterans' affairs I, along with the officers of my department, shall be glad to go thoroughly into the whole question of housing costs in Canada.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WOMEN IN ATTENDANCE IN THE GALLERIES—WEARING OF HATS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. GLADYS STRUM (Qu'Appelle): There is a matter I wish to draw to the attention of the acting house leader, the Minister of Veterans Affairs. It has been the custom not to allow women in the gallery without some kind of head covering. So many women go everywhere now without hats that the observance of this regulation is enforcing indignity on this house—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would suggest that the hon. member put her question on the order paper.

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): With deference to Your Honour, I think the hon. member has raised a question affecting the privileges of parliament and of those attending parliament. I suggest that she direct her question to someone more competent to reply than the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mrs. STRUM: To whom should the question be directed?

An hon. MEMBER: To Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GRAYDON: To the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. SPEAKER: As the question asked by the hon. member concerns the house, I suggest that she put her question to the Speaker, but not from the floor of the house, as it is against the rule. I shall be very glad to give it consideration.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SEAMEN'S STRIKE—AMENDMENT OF CANADA SHIPPING ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Yesterday I directed a question to the Minister of Transport in regard to the arrest of seamen who were involved in a labour dispute. Can he make a reply to-day?

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): The question the hon. member asked yesterday was whether immediate consideration would be given to the removal of an anachronism in the Canada Shipping Act, section 288 of chapter 186 of the revised statutes, 1927, under which seamen engaged in an industrial dispute can be arrested and tried as deserters.

I have looked at section 288 of the Canada Shipping Act, and I find it deals not only with the subject matter to which the hon. member referred, but also to several other matters, such as neglecting or refusing without reasonable cause to join a ship or to proceed to sea; quitting a ship without leave after her arrival in her port of delivery; wilful disobedience to any lawful command given by the master; assaulting any master or mate; combining with any other or others of the crew to disobey lawful commands; wilfully damaging the ship or embezzling or wilfully damaging any of her stores or cargo; and lastly, any act of smuggling. I have looked at the section and have given it some consideration. I am informed by the officers of my department that when a seaman is engaged by an operator he signs an agreement, one clause of which provides that he is to give at least seven days' notice of separation. Had that been done in the cases to which I presume my hon. friend is referring, I am told that that would have been a perfect defence to any charge under section 288.

Dealing directly with the question which my hon. friend put, I am informed further that the Canada Shipping Act as it now stands is taken pretty much from the shipping act of the United Kingdom. In fact there is in the United Kingdom act a section which is much the same as section 288. That section still remains in the act, notwithstanding the reference which my hon. friend has made. I am informed still further that following the passing of the Statute of Westminister this parliament decided to enact the Canada Shipping Act. The bill was initiated in the senate and I presume it had the approval of this house. That was done in 1934, not so long ago.

The matter as I see it is that no action was taken by the Department of Transport against these men and it is felt that no action is indicated at this time.

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour which he may treat as a notice if he desires. Can he make a statement on this dislocation of water transport? According to the newspapers the eight hour day has been conceded, and we learn also that there has been some revision, and so on. Could the minister, probably to-morrow, give us a complete statement so that we may have the facts before us rather than the rumours which are current at the present time?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I shall be very glad to do that. I thought we had this dispute pretty well under control until the unfortunate incidents of last Friday occurred in the city of Montreal. I am not attempting to apportion blame to one side or the other. I have heard both stories and until you have really taken time to consider them it is pretty hard to blame one party or the other. I shall be glad to give my hon. friend to-morrow the answer he desires.

I have been in conversation with the owners and representatives of the union both yesterday and to-day. It may be only my judgment and opinion, but I think the differences between them are quite small. When the conference was arranged for Tuesday I thought we could probably settle this dispute without having any unfortunate incidents such as have occurred within the past two or three days.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I follow up what the Minister of Labour has said by making some reference to the ships of the Department of Transport?—because I think there has been some misunderstanding with reference to these ships. In answer to a question put some days ago by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) I said that in the Department of Transport we had the eight hour day in effect, and that while we did not pay time and a half for overtime we do allow time off for any work of an overtime nature that is done. A large number of ships are operated by the Department of Transport. Until recently the men on five of these ships were on strike, or were reported not to have returned to their ships. I am informed that that was due to an error and that there was no intention on the part of the men to abandon their ships. The department has agreed that in the place of the arrangement obtaining hitherto, whereby members of the crews of vessels operated by the department were given time off to compensate for any hours worked in excess of eight per day, we will operate henceforth on a straight eight hour day. It is understood that this arrangement will obtain pending a further discussion with a committee representing the crews on matters affecting the substitution of overtime rates of pay for the present time-off arrangement and a revision of the present wage schedules which has already been referred to, and which is now the subject of a survey by the Department of Labour under the provisions of the government's fair wage policy.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): May I ask the Minister of Transport to clarify the answer he gave to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell)? In the case of an industrial dispute would the notice of strike action be sufficient for the men concerned under section 246 of the Canada Shipping Act?

Mr. MITCHELL: Mr. Speaker, I think I had better answer that question. In the first place let us be frank and honest about this dispute. There was no notice whatever given of the strike. The men just pulled the plug. The hon. member for Vancouver East understands that language; it is an expression used in the labour movement. I am not laying any blame on the labour organization or on the employers, because one must endeavour to be impartial, but if I had been leading the men I think I would have warned them that the seven days' notice was necessary.

BEVERAGE DISPENSERS IN ALBERTA

Mr. C. E. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I am reported at page 1939 of Hansard of May 28 as having asked the Minister of Labour this question:

What action has the government or the national war labour board taken to avert the impending strike on May 31 of the beverage dispensers of Alberta?

May 31 should read May 30; and as to-morrow is May 30, the date set for the strike, will the minister make a statement indicating what the government or the national war labour board is doing to avert the strike, which will be on to-morrow unless something is done?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I had conversations with the national organizer of the union concerned, and my information is that he has advised the membership in Alberta not to strike on the 30th. Another submission will be made to the regional board in the province.

Mr. JOHNSTON: The regional board has already given its decision, and I understand that the national war labour board is withholding its decision on the appeal.

LUMBER INDUSTRY—STRIKE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—FOOD CONTAINERS

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Hon. members will desire to know the results of the earnest appeal for the resumption of work at once to all those concerned in the dispute in British Columbia which has interrupted the production of wooden food containers.

It will be recalled that the Acting Prime Minister made a statement on Monday last as set out on page 1876 of Hansard.

Negotiations on behalf of the owners have been conducted by Mr. J. H. Ruddock, industrial relations officer, Interior British Columbia Lumber and Box Manufacturers Association. His reply is as follows:

Hon. J. L. Ilsley,
Acting Prime Minister

Reference your communication Stuart regarding fruit containers, desire inform you that members Interior Box Manufacturers Association who normally produce all containers used by interior British Columbia growers are now and at all times have been willing continue production necessary containers notwithstanding fact that strike was called on fifteenth instant while provincially appointed conciliator was continuing efforts effect settlement.

Interior Box Manufacturers strongly recommend that instructions be given union to resume work immediately in Interior Box plant and related logging and saw milling operations on basis effective at time of strike and subject only to condition that any settlement of present differences finally arrived at in relation to interior log lumber and box production in interior British Columbia shall then apply. If this is not done immediately, in interest not of lumber or box industry but of agricultural community, there is no doubt that severe box shortage will be created. Interior log lumber and box production is entirely different type of operation from that conducted on coast in relation to which latter negotiations now proceeding before Mr. Justice Sloan. Final settlement in relation to interior operations must depend on separate negotiations in relation thereto and must be on basis mutually satisfactory to box manufacturers and fruit industry in relation to additional costs involved in final settlement. Industry have negotiated in good faith for over eighteen months and, despite arrival on at least two occasions on basis agreement satisfactory to local bargaining committees, union headquarters here on both occasions withheld approval these agreements arrived at in good faith. Furthermore present strike in largest box producing plant in interior British Columbia called in face of valid agreement which that plant has with Canadian Congress of Labour and which agreement has never been terminated either by C.C.L. or I.W.A.

Under all circumstances in fairness to all concerned and particularly to avoid heavy loss to growers we again urge instructions be given for unconditional resumption operations leaving result to legal processes of conciliation and arbitration.

This is the reply received from Mr. Harold Pritchett, president of the International Woodworkers of America:

Retel International Woodworkers of America have no fight with farmers and are in full sympathy with their desire to obtain wood containers necessary to harvest crop. Employers in woodworking industry fully responsible for delay in sincere efforts during nine weeks of negotiations. Woodworking employers have refused to sign an agreement since nineteen forty-four thereby averting present crisis. We are prepared to do everything humanly possible to bring about a just settlement. Urge your government take immediate steps to force lumber operators who stand in the way of crop harvesting to accept union proposals on wages and hours, namely, twenty-five cents and forty hours—

They are asking for an increase of twenty-five cents an hour and for a forty-hour week:

—and abide by award of arbitrator Sloan on union security. Final settlement on wages and hours reached between union and employers could then apply.

Mr. R. V. Stuart, President of Stuart Research Service Limited, who has been acting on behalf of employers on the Pacific coast, has the following to say:

Your telegram requesting resumption of operations in mills and camps supplying materials for food containers. Strike is entirely illegal and operators felt I.W.A. should have ordered men back to work as a preliminary to Sloan hearings. Nevertheless we whole-heartedly agree that needed lumber production should be made immediately available to food producers. Employers concerned will willingly agree to immediate resumption of operations at these plants on basis that workers will be paid at rates finally incorporated in contract now under negotiation.

Hon. members will appreciate from the replies that there are two organizations of employers involved: one consisting of the manufacturers in the interior and the other of the lumber producers on the coast. The wooden containers are produced in the interior.

Mr. Pritchett, on behalf of the union, says that the men will return to work if a twenty-five cents per hour increase is granted and if hours of work are reduced to forty per week subject to a later final settlement. Mr. Ruddock, on the other hand, suggests that the employees return to work at the rates of pay which prevailed at the time the strike took place and that negotiations be continued and settlement of rates be mutually agreed upon as a result of negotiations.

The replies received will be transmitted to the parties and to our conciliation officer at Vancouver, and discussions will be continued with the objective of bringing about immediate resumption of work in the mills which normally are engaged in the production of wooden containers, I am hoping that the good sense and judgment of both parties will bring them to an acceptance of the viewpoint that work should be resumed on the understanding that any wage adjustment finally agreed upon will be made retroactive.

Hon. members will be aware that Honourable Chief Justice Sloan is acting as commissioner and conciliator in connection with the coast lumber dispute and is conducting conferences daily with the parties. At the moment these negotiations are with the group of employers having to do with the coast lumber production, and as soon as this phase of the dispute is disposed of it is the intention that he shall deal with the interior lumber situation. The two problems are so interwoven it is not feasible or practical to have two commissioners sitting at the same time. However, as I have already stated negotiations through the conciliation staff of the province are under way in connection with the interior situation.

Mr. FRASER: I understand that the minister's department had sent out a circular regarding "Save the Food". Was that done by his department, or was that the work of another department?

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): "Save the Food" circulars and advertisements have gone out under direction of a committee of which I happen to be chairman, but not by the Department of Agriculture. The committee is operating with funds provided for the purpose, altogether apart from these estimates.

Mr. FRASER: In one of the folders it is stated that victory gardens should be cultivated in order to grow food for Canadians, and that by doing so more food could be sent overseas. The folder also states that a copy of "Home Garden" will be sent to anyone writing for it. To what department does one write? I have been in contact with the minister's department and they do not know anything about it.

Mr. GARDINER: It is published under direction of the agricultural supplies board, which was set up during war time to promote the production of food. The chairman is Mr. Shaw.

Mr. FRASER: Should inquiries be directed to the department, or to the supplies board?

Mr. GARDINER: Whichever place they are directed to, they should get a proper reply, and the proper reply is that there is such a publication, and it ought to be sent out.

Mr. FRASER: In the literature sent out there is reference to this "Home Garden"; I have communicated with the department and I have had three or four other circulars, but no copy of "Home Garden". In the circular which was sent out, victory gardens are mentioned. I suggest to the minister, as head of that committee, that he get in touch with every horticultural society across Canada and ask them to put before their members the views set forth in the folder. There are thousands and thousands of horticultural society members across Canada, and unless they are personally communicated with, the desired results will not be obtained.

Mr. GARDINER: I understood they were being communicated with. That was the plan which was put forward.

Mr. FRASER: I do not think that they have been so far.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): Last evening we were discussing item 28, dealing with products with which I am somewhat familiar. The minister said that last year the production of honey was 30,683,000 pounds. That would go a long way to helping to meet the sugar shortage. While the low average yield last year decreased the production somewhat, we still have a production in the dominion of some thirty million pounds of honey. We have in the dominion a national honey council which is supported by the primary producers of honey, and it is a credit to the industry that they have not asked for government aid. They are securing funds by a levy of a small fraction of a cent per pound on the production of each individual. The position of this industry, in comparison with other branches of agriculture, is favourable, because of the fact that while dairy products and many other commodities are supported by subsidies, this does not apply to honey. Therefore we do not look to the future with the misgiving that many farmers have as they see the day approaching when subsidies may be removed. We can see the position the milk producers were in when the subsidy was removed; immediately the consumers in the city were demanding that it be replaced. We are in a relatively favourable position because of that fact. We are in need of better domestic grading, but we do not wish the regulations to work to the advantage of central packers and to the detriment of the primary producer.

Many products which the farmers sell are graded, but after they leave the farmers' hands they lose their identity, because the grade is not carried on to the ultimate consumer. This applies particularly to pork. There are several grades when the farmer sells it, but it is all number one when the consumer buys it. The honey producers are keenly interested in having the control of the industry remain with the producers. We do not want it to get into the hands of any government agency or any selling agency of the government. The producers feel that they can manage their own affairs if given proper opportunities. We are in a peculiar position at the moment. The beekeepers of the country are prepared to sell their honey on the export market in Britain. For many years we exported our product to Britain, and we have letters showing that the buyers there are willing to buy our product, but the regulations on that side were such that they could not buy or could pay only so much. I am personally willing, and so are many others, to sell to buyers in the old country, but the control regulations here have in the past prevented us from doing so. Two governments, therefore, interfere in the business. Britain at the moment is offering only 65 shillings per hundredweight f.o.b. British ports. That, boiled down, comes to about 12¾ cents, and taking shipping charges off it does not come up to the domestic price at the moment. However, we believe that the day is coming when we shall again export honey to England. The industry wants domestic grading so that consumers can purchase by grade and know what they are buying. We have grading regulations for export and interprovincially, but that does not apply within the individual province. We do not want to have the industry controlled by government authorities who are anxious and willing to tell us what we should do and how to do it. We ask to have the industry left as independent as possible of government control.

Mr. BRYCE: Mr. Chairman, may I revert to item 26? I know it is against the rules, but I would ask you to extend me the privilege. I am not going to go into the matter at all, but I have received certain material with regard to the price of butter being reduced two cents a pound on the Montreal market. To keep my word to you, Mr. Chairman, I will send this material over to the Minister of Agriculture and he can discuss the matter some time this afternoon.

Mr. GARDINER: As a matter of fact I have already dealt with it. I have started action in connection with it which I hope will meet the situation.

Mr. BRYCE: I am delighted to hear that, because it is a very disagreeable situation to the people producing butter to have the commodity being sold at two cents a pound less after the price has been raised four cents. The thing is altogether out of kilter, unless someone is gambling in butter; and as I have said in this house on previous occasions, there is no room for anybody to gamble in this country with the people's food which the farmers produce. I feel very strongly when I see people gambling with butter.

Mr. GARDINER: With reference to the matter raised by the hon. gentleman, there was a certain proposal under consideration a short time ago in connection with butter. One of the difficulties, when we are controlling the distribution of butter, is that the commodity has to be assembled in May, June, July and August and a certain amount in September. Those are the months in which we have a greater production than consumption, and someone has to carry the butter through until the winter months. Under the price ceilings and price floors a margin of four cents has been allowed, and at the time the four-cent advance was made in the ceiling there was a question whether we were raising the floor sufficiently high when we made that advance. While that matter was under discussion butter was selling at a certain price, and immediately the discussion was dropped butter did go down. It might have been two cents at one point, a cent and a half somewhere else, and two and a half cents in some other place. Immediately that was reported to me by one of the members of the house I opened up discussions again as to whether we should have a narrow margin between the floor and the ceiling, and that question is under consideration at the moment. If we narrow the margin it will have some effect on the present situation.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I wish to associate myself with the remarks of two hon. members who have spoken with reference to the importation of maraschino cherries, because this question is a very serious one in my section of the country in view of the little cherry disease. These cherries have a low sugar content and are smaller in size; consequently a large proportion of our cherries will have to be processed until the disease is cured or eradicated. The minister says he is not a protectionist. I am not either. I am a free trader in principle, though I do not think you can have free trade when you have not equalized standards of living. I was brought up on principles that incline me to free trade. I suggest to the minister however that representatives of the industry concerned should be consulted, and there may be some possibility of cooperative action between the government and the interested growers. In British Columbia we have developed to a considerable extent methods whereby stronger or more favourably situated sections of the cooperative movement assist those who are operating under less favourable conditions. Perhaps a solution could be found through action cooperatively by the government and the growers on the basis of carrying to some extent the other fellow's burden.

Mr. LENNARD: Further in connection with what the hon. member for Kootenay West has just said, and in connection with what was said last evening in this regard, I might draw the minister's attention to the fact that, as I stated last night, there is a duty of something in the neighbourhood of 10 cents a pound on these Italian cherries going into the United States, while here we have only a protective duty of 17½ per cent ad valorem. If we had a fixed value on these cherries of 11 cents per pound, and the duty which is now 17½ per cent were raised to 30 per cent—

Mr. GARDINER: The duty now is 30 per cent.

Mr. LENNARD: Since when?

Mr. GARDINER: Last evening I said it was 15 or 17 per cent, but the official statement this morning is that already it is 30 per cent.

Mr. LENNARD: Very well; even if it is 30 per cent, that amounts to only 3·3 cents per pound on these cherries as against something like 10 cents a pound on the same cherries entering the United States from Italy. The minister said he did not know what could be done, and that quite possibly he would not know until some time in the summer, when a meeting on trade agreements is to take place. It will be too late then, because at the moment the processors are in a quandary in regard to the price they should pay the growers. Last year the growers received something like 18 cents a pound for the cherries used in this process.

Mr. GARDINER: The information with which I am supplied is that pitted first quality Italian cherries in brine are being quoted at from 18 to 19 cents a pound c.i.f. United States funds, that is on the American continent whether in the United States or Canada. The Canadian duty is 35 per cent, while the United States duty it 17½ per cent. In other words the Canadian duty is already twice the duty in the United States.

Mr. LOCKHART: The minister has no knowledge of when that went into effect?

Mr. GARDINER: I have no information as to when it went into effect; apparently that has been the situation for some time. In addition to the 35 per cent duty there is a 3 per cent excise tax, plus exchange, which builds it up to 48½ per cent over the c.i.f. quotation. Second quality cherries are two cents less. I understand that eastern Canadian manufacturers of maraschino and glazed cherries have a fair supply of British Columbia and Ontario cherries from the 1945 crop because of restricted supplies of sugars and syrup. I understand also that Italian cherries are being manufactured in France and the finished product is appearing in Canada at relatively high prices, mainly because the restricted Canadian output does not meet the demand. That restriction, I understand from this statement, is due to the sugar shortage and not to regulations under the tariff or anything of that kind.

Mr. STIRLING: Is it not a fact that there is a very considerable quantity of cherries of this description in Italy from the 1944 and 1945 crops waiting to come into Canada, if it can get in? If that is hanging over the market here, and the Canadian processors are now in a position, as I understand they are, to supply the bakery trade in Canada, will that not to a very great extent wipe out the processed cherry industry in this country?

Mr. GARDINER: Of course the question of import permits is involved, and these would have to be obtained from the wartime prices and trade board. But I should like to suggest to the committee that we are dealing with a product which has no food value whatever. It is a product used for decorating cakes and cocktails, as I understand it, and it would seem to me that a duty of 35 per cent is very high. I can hardly understand why anyone would advocate increasing it beyond that, particularly in view of the argument put forward last night that our protection ought to be as high as that of the United States, while in fact our protection appears to be twice as high. That is the information I have from the department concerned, and if that is the situation I do not know that we should discuss the matter very much further, particularly when we are dealing with these two countries, Italy which was an enemy country, and France which was a friendly country. These cherries apparently are being processed in France, if any processing is being done, and then sent here. They have always sent those cherries here. I remember before the war meeting one of their agents who used to go across the country. It is a product in which we have traded over a very considerable period of time; and at this moment, when an effort is being made to remove all these obstructions, I should think we have gone a long way in putting a duty as high as 35 per cent on a product of the kind.

Mr. STIRLING: Thirty-five per cent may sound a large figure in arithmetic, but when you take 35 per cent of a minute price it does not amount to very much in the way of protection. I understand that these cherries are held in Italy at 11 cents, Canadian funds. That is a mere bagatelle to the producers of cherries in this country. The minister says this product is used in cocktails and in the decoration of cakes. I dare say it is used for those purposes, but it is also used as an ingredient in various forms of cakes and sweetmeats. It is not a matter of food, perhaps, but it is a matter of Canadian demand. The bakery trade of Canada has made this demand on the producers of this country over all these years, and during the war years, consequent on the requirements of the bakery trade, the processors of cherries in this country not only improved their quality but very greatly increased their quantity, and succeeded in meeting the demands of the Canadian market. Now if the Canadian market is still going to demand the same quantity of cherries—and the demand is more likely to increase than decrease—it does seem an unreasonable thing, no matter what Italy's part in the war may have been, to allow into the country an extremely low-priced article, with the price further cut by the rate of exchange as between the lira and the dollar to such an extent that it will harm an industry built up during the war to supply a demand in the Canadian market.

Mr. GARDINER: The prices which have been paid by processors to producers for Canadian cherries during the war years were as follows:

	Cents per pound
1939	4·20
1940	6·24
1941	7·95
1942	8·0
1943	12·03
1944	13·46
1945	16·32
