Knowing that the fight against inflation will take a long time, I was personally disappointed that the Minister of Finance could not see his way to adding something for our older people by way of old age supplements.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear.

Mr. Osler: I still hope we can persuade him to do so. By saying that, I am not suggesting he is not genuinely attempting to fight inflation and that this government is not genuinely attempting to overcome the problems of regional disparity. I, therefore, suggest that it is too bad this motion was brought before the House in its present form, because it smacks of politics when dealing with a very serious matter that a lot of people are thinking about a lot of the time. They are thinking about it as seriously as they can.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member will permit a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question cannot be asked of the hon. member at the present time unless there is unanimous consent. The hon. member has gone beyond his time. Is there agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I listened very intently to the hon. member and tried to discover something worth while in his speech. He mentioned something about unemployment. May I ask the hon. gentleman whether he thinks the government feels that unemployment is just a dirty rumour started by a lot of people who are out of work?

Mr. Osler: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member asked that question, because it is obvious he did not pay much attention to me. I used facts and figures ad nauseam. I do not like using them but I used them ad nauseam to illustrate that we have a very serious unemployment situation that, to my mind, is unacceptable. We have had it for too many years and there must be great stress in cleaning up this unemployment permanently so that our people are not put into that position again. I was trying to say that our problems of lasting unemployment are not the same as the problems involved with the question of inflation. I felt it was somewhat naive to refer to the two matters together in one motion.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Before the next participant in the debate is recognized, may I take this opportunity to make an announcement to the House that, according to the Standing Orders, ought to have been made a little earlier. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Indian Affairs—discontinuance of school lunch program; the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard)—Pollution—air—establishment of national scientific centre; the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Stafford)—Administration of justice—suggested salary increase for federally appointed judges.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—CREATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT BY ANTI-INFLATION POLICIES

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of the present debate, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) introduced the following motion:

> That this House condemns the government's arrogant acceptance of recession-level unemployment in slow-growth areas of Canada and cost-of-living hardships generally while dogmatically continuing discredited policies that have failed to put the national economy on a non-inflationary upward course.

Mr. Speaker, as the representative in the House of an area where unemployment exists on a permanent basis, partly because of the stubbornness of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) who refuses to be fair to the Saint-Hyacinthe area and because of the opposition to progress and lack of imagination of the ministers responsible for the situation we are now facing, it was a pleasure for me to second the motion. I wanted to make a few comments anyway and take part in the debate which aims at improving the situation for those who, momentarily and often permanently, are affected by unemployment.

Unemployment can eradicate understanding within a family as well as its well-being. It creates worry and fear for the future.

It affects not only heads of families but also young people. It is a source of concern and confusion for them. On the occasion of a study made by the JOC, the national president of that organization, Mr. Henri-Paul Labonté, granted an interview to the press during which he stated, and I quote:

"The naked truth is that young people have to wait to get married because there is no work in sight for them."

"The truth is that young people are broken after six months, a year out of work. There are the "disgusted ones" in Drummondville who have nothing better to do than to play pool, to go to the tavern. They no longer look for a job. They do not feel like it any more."

And here is how he concluded his interview:

"For us,...unemployment is a "bleeding hole" in our flesh, a leak draining the hope and wealth of 60,000 of us, a breach in our faith in the nation".

In my opinion, the government should take note of these remarks, which are certainly similar to those of a great number of young people, and use every possible means to stop unemployment before irreparable harm is done.

I regret the absence of several Liberal members who slip away from the House when a subject as important as unemployment is discussed here. There can be no doubt that what is going on in the province of Quebec explains why these Quebec members who should also be concerned with unemployment have chosen to go and help Mr. Bourassa who is seeking to become the Premier of Quebec. But I believe their efforts will fail, because I am confident people of Quebec will see through them.

The purpose of the present debate is not to examine the results of the election campaign being conducted in the province of Quebec, but to consider the problem of unemployment. It is a paradox, Mr. Speaker, to find that a political party which promised during the 1968 compaign to create a "just society" throughout Canada should be the very same to take action liable to create unemployment. The people of Canada would have been justified in expecting another treatment from government members who seem to be implementing methods which can only result in depriving Canadian workers of the jobs they so badly need.

No wonder, therefore, that the Canadian people are disillusioned after being swept off their feet in the last election and for not having learned from past experience which, as the old saying goes, foreshadows the future.

Mr. Speaker, since the country needs to be developed, the government should set up programs likely to give a new impetus to the economy instead of implementing restrictive measures.

Has a government which really has the welfare of the people at heart, ever been seen to take steps with a view to slowing down development? Yet, this is what is doing in 1970 the Liberal government which has always claimed to be a saviour and a promoter of welfare, and promised heaven on earth. The present government does its best to check development. I find that very difficult to understand and I shall certainly never be able to convince government members to do something other than to follow the course they have set for themselves.

The government claims that people must be thrown out of work in order to stop inflation. That is also very difficult to understand. If the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who was often asked to say what rate of unemployment would enable the government to maintain its present administration, had wanted to give an answer, it might be possible to explain the attitude of the government. But whenever members of the opposition have tried to obtain information on the policy of the government as regards the rate of unemployment required to check inflation, they have come up against stubborn silence and unqualifiable arrogance, all this to the detriment of the general public.

It might be interesting to know what some people have to say about the government's policy. I shall not borrow any evidence from the Conservatives, but I shall quote the words of someone who once was Secretary of State in the cabinet of the Right Hon. Lester B.

Pearson and who therefore was a colleague of several present ministers in the Trudeau government.

Here is what Hon. Maurice Lamontagne had to say, as reported in Montréal-Matin, on Friday April 3, 1970:

> The lack of realism of Benson's last budget, Mr. Lamontagne said, the restraints imposed on credit especially on durable goods, will contribute to increase unemployment without curtailing price increases, or if the restraints work, it will be at an inhuman social cost.

That was uttered by a Liberal. The quotation goes on:

> The net result of Benson's last budget, the Liberal senator said, will be that the poor will become so poor, and the weak so weak, that the rich and the powerful will no longer be able to exploit them any further by marking up their prices.

A little further Senator Lamontagne said:

> I do not hesitate to say that to apply monetary and fiscal policies aiming at discouraging demand is a roundabout, awkward and ineffective method of fighting, as far as demand is concerned, an inflation due to permanent structural causes.

As reported on page 14 of its brief submitted last February, the C.N.T.U. had this to say:

> The C.N.T.U. believes that the most serious problem now facing Canada is the problem of unemployment, of regional economic disparities and social inequities. The fight against unemployment and not inflation is the top priority, even though it is in the best interests of Canada to make every effort in order to keep price increases within limits compatible with its competitive position on the international markets.

Those two testimonies blame the government for taking an unrealistic attitude in establishing our national priorities.

I would also like to say a few words about the creation of 100,000 jobs as promised by Mr. Bourassa to Quebec electors. I would like to know where he will find the money to carry out that promise. When he claims that with a Liberal premier in Quebec, there would be no more unemployment, does Mr. Bourassa mean that the federal government is ready to co-operate with a Liberal provincial government, but not with another?

In my opinion, it is quite easy to answer that question.

Perhaps I should not elaborate further on this point as you may be trying to indicate from your frown that I am not in order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I would like the hon. member for St. Boniface to reserve his question until I am through with my remarks and I will be pleased to answer it then.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the reason—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe has the floor just for another few minutes. I think that in all fairness he should be allowed to complete his remarks.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the reason why I would like to put my question now is that my hon. friend seems to be venturing into politics—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I remind the hon. member that the member for Saint-Hyacinthe has the floor and suggest that he let him finish his comments.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I think the remark of my hon. friend from St. Boniface is childish. He says that I am venturing into politics. It is difficult to do otherwise in the House. I believe every member is here because he got into politics and we must keep at it if we want to stay in Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, everyone wonders who is to blame for unemployment. Is it the provincial government or the federal government?

I well recall that, when our party was in power, from 1957 to 1963, the Liberals who were then sitting on this side of the House, had shown clearly and categorically that unemployment was the responsibility of the central government. It is therefore surprising to find today that the same people would like to convince the Canadian people, and particularly the people of Quebec, that it is not the central government but the provincial government that is responsible.

I admit that this may be quite fair for the Prime Minister's delegate, who is travelling through Quebec trying to get himself elected, and that it may also be quite fair for him to try and convince the people of Quebec that this is so, but the facts being what they are, one must recognize that the central government must bear a very large part of the responsibility when it comes to finding ways to prevent unemployment and jobs for those who wish to work.

In an article published on April 20, 1970, in Le Devoir, Mr. Claude Lemelin asks the following question:

> Who bears the responsibility for unemployment?

The article reads in part as follows, and I quote:

• (5:50 p.m.)

Who is responsible for unemployment? Who can check it? Ottawa or Quebec?

Mr. Jean Pellerin stated last Friday that unemployment is "a continental phenomenon that no single effort can counteract to a worthwhile extent". According to the editorial writer of La Presse, nobody, so to speak, is to blame for the increased unemployment. This shows a somewhat surprising indulgence for the former members of Cité Libre—more especially as, according to the Minister of Finance himself, the central government expected its deflationary policies to curtail an increasing number of jobs.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must remind him that his time has expired. He can only continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ricard: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and also the members opposite.

In conclusion, Mr. Lemelin said, and I quote:

After all, were Ottawa following at this time a policy of full employment, the rate of unemployment would probably reach 6 per cent at the most in the province of Quebec. Now, at mid-March, 9.2 per cent of the Quebec labour force were unemployed. It is, therefore, difficult not to blame the Trudeau government for the unemployment of approximately 90,000 Quebecers—namely 4.0 per cent of the labour force.

This is a tremendous figure. And, under the circumstances, this is equivalent to brinkmanship.

During this debate, several government members only criticized and found rather strange that the opposition took advantage of this day allocated to them to discuss the matter of unemployment and place the responsibility on the government.

According to the Liberal government, which takes the responsibility for unemployment, the opposition should do nothing that may incur blame. Now, it is the duty of any opposition which has the welfare of the Canadian people at heart to seize every opportunity to criticize the policy or lack of policy of the government. It is a mainly constructive criticism which, we hope, will shake the government a little out of the inertness in which it is wallowing at the moment, for the misfortune of the unemployed.

One has to know several families suffering from unemployment to realize to what extent the government must make every effort to bring forth solutions likely to provide jobs for those willing to work.

[Mr. Ricard.]

Talking with a mother who cannot clothe and feed her children and trying to comfort such a family is distressing. Even if it were to cost the Canadian people a few dollars to do away with that curse, I doubt that the government would be blamed by the people. But, on the contrary, if unemployment persists, it will harm not only the families concerned but national unity.

I urge the government to use every possible means to put an end to the curse of unemployment, so that those families that are now in dire straits can again live normally as they are entitled to.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Before the member for Saint-Hyacinthe closes his remarks, I should like to put the following question to him: What would you suggest to the government, what is your policy, and that of your party—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member knows that he must speak to the Chair and that he cannot ask his questions directly to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe what he thinks, what is his policy and what solutions he has in mind in order, as he said himself, to curb inflation. I should like to point out to the House that the opposition never made any concrete proposals to us—

Mr. Speaker: In that case, the hon. member cannot make a speech. He can ask a question only provided he has the unanimous consent of the House, since the time allowed the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe has expired. The question being asked, the hon. member could perhaps give a concise answer.

Mr. Ricard: Yes, in a few minutes only, Mr. Speaker. As a quick solution, I should ask the hon. member for Saint-Boniface first to exert pressures on the Prime Minister so as to have him limit his own staff instead of expanding it, and reduce also the extravagant expenditures going on in some departments, for office furnishings for instance and finally to reconsider the establishment of Information Canada. That agency is getting ready to squander money and if the hon. member would only agree to exert such pressures, I believe the unemployed would be most grateful to him.

[English]

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate on the motion introduced by the official opposition, I can only start by saying that it is up to the people to decide whether we can live with inflation or unemployment. Having listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) this afternoon and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who has spoken in the House on numerous occasions on this subject, it is clear to me that they believe it is for the people to choose either inflation or unemployment. The Prime Minister has stated so categorically. He has made it clear that the government is prepared to accept a high level of unemployment, and in fact appears to encourage it, in the interest of fighting inflation.

The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) admitted that unemployment is at the crisis level. Cornwall, Ontario, has been described as the most job-depressed city in Canada. Plant closures have resulted in an unemployment level of 30 per cent. It is little wonder that the opposition wanted to know what the government planned to do about the crisis in Cornwall. A question directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) seemed an appropriate place to start. The minister did not seem to think so. He wondered out loud why the opposition was so concerned about Cornwall. "If it is unemployment you are worried about", he said, "I can point to many other cities in Canada where unemployment is more serious". We have known this for some time, but this is the first time the government has admitted it.

This afternoon data was produced by members of the House concerning the level of unemployment across Canada. In fact, in Saskatchewan—excluding the farm situation —unemployment is in excess of 12 per cent. This does not appear in DBS figures, but it is the situation that exists. As I listened to the Minister of Finance this afternoon and heard how the government plans to help Canadians survive inflation, by causing unemployment, I was reminded of the story of a man who was training his horse to live without food. He had just succeeded when the horse died. I suggest to the House that this is exactly the attitude the government is taking. That is why the motion introduced by the official opposition is quite in order. We in this party have no hesitation in supporting it 100 per cent.

The Prime Minister is putting great stress on the position taken by the economists—a position which I find incredible. I think it is only right that one should look, for an example, to countries other than our own to support one's argument, particularly in view of the fact that economists have different points of view on how to combat inflation and cope with unemployment. I could think of no better place to look than in a publication put out by Loeb, Rhoades and Co., a member of the New York Stock Exchange, which certainly is not recognized as being left of centre. In it there are "Fables For Our Time," and I quote:

There had been no open season for many a year, and the deer had multiplied in profusion. In their search for food they had forayed into the fields surrounding the woods in ever increasing numbers and had become quite a nuisance to the farmers. So the villagers called a council and decided to organize a great hunt. They were an impressive, even frightening sight as they approached the woods in their resplendent outfits, armed with threatening weapons of varying sizes and exhorting each other loudly to mighty deeds of destruction. But, alas, years of inexperience in this specific pursuit had somewhat blunted the acuity of their vision and their aim, and the deer had become strong, stealthy and more fleet footed than ever. So when a temporary halt was called after quite a while for a tally, the hunters had nothing to show for their strenuous efforts but three dead cows and several maimed hunters. "This is quite a bag," proclaimed one of the villagers; "perhaps we had better call it a day." "But we have not even sighted our quarry," objected another.

That reminds me of the Prices and Incomes Commission.

"Silly boy," replied a third who was held in particular esteem by his fellow citizens for having attended the University of Chicago. "We have given those deer a terrible scare, and every fool knows that after a somewhat indeterminate time lag they will just lie down and die. As a matter of fact, considering how we have scared each other, we may have already overdone it. Perhaps we had better throw them some hay lest they become as extinct as common sense economics."

This fable is characteristic of the situation now being faced by the Canadian people. Is the government going to tell the people who are without work, and the communities in slow-growth areas where unemployment is rife, where families without income are faced with daily increases in the cost of living, that all is right with the world? These are the people who really have to pay grocery bills, dry goods bills and all the other bills incurred by a household. I believe that in saying unemployment is not all that bad the government is doing a disservice to the country, to the people it is supposed to represent.

The forgotten people of this country are those on fixed incomes and those who have low pensions. But these people count, Mr. Speaker. However, the government has no communication with them and thus cannot find out what unemployment and inflation are all about. What is the point in proclaiming victory in the fight against inflation if all that has happened so far is that unemployment is up and prices are rising? The government looks upon poverty with no degree of concern whatsoever. When the government talks about poverty it is nothing but pious prattle. We must ask ourselves, what is poverty? What does it do to the people who experience it? What can those living in poverty do for themselves? What can we do about poverty? How can we see that something is done? Is living with unemployment the answer? Anybody with a sense of economics must know that the government cannot solve the problem by creating more unemployment.

I am sure the government will go down in history as the one that methodically and deliberately created a recession in 1970 as a means of solving the problem of inflation. This policy must be rejected. The motion before this House is quite valid in so far as it is a proper criticism of the government. As the CRLA brief to the government said—

> Lest these unemployed become mere statistics in a publication, it should be pointed out that in the latter months of 1969, between a quarter and one-third of those unemployed have been without work for more than four months of the year, a serious indictment of the government's record in this area.

Again, if we look at the situation of the unemployed in the rubber plants, in the agricultural industry, the auto industry, the farm machinery industry and all other industries based on agricultural production generally, we can only come to the conclusion that the government is really not concerned. If one reads the letters that some of the main financial institutions have sent to their branch managers, dealing with farm improvement loans, one can see how these institutions are using the government for their own purposes. I quote from one such letter sent to me:

> I refer to your letter of March 10 in which you enquire as to the bank's policy regarding the interest rate applied to farm improvement loans which go into default and require to be extended—
> As you know, last November the farm improvement loan regulations were amended with respect to the interest rate which may be charged when the terms of the loan require to be revised, and our branch managers are expected to keep this feature in mind when dealing with the individual situations where default has occurred.

Here is another reply I received:

> Where it is thought that a revision of repayment terms will enable a farmer to meet his obligations, our managers are expected to arrange the revision.

Here is another letter:

> Regarding your inquiry, in advising our branches of the recent changes in the farm improvement loans regulations, we instructed them to apply the current rate of interest when the original terms of a loan are revised.

Here is another:

> —our branches have been advised of the amendment in the farm improvement loan regulations. This permits the lender to alter or revise the rate of interest at the time a revision of repayment terms is being considered, with a view to rescheduling the original terms so that the borrower can meet his obligations without defaulting the debt.
> In granting such requests for a revision of terms it is our policy to do so at the rate of interest currently permissible—

Here is another letter:

> It has always been the bank's policy to revise the terms of farm improvement loans when the borrower is in default and the manager considers that such revision will enable the borrower to meet the obligation and is appropriate in the light of the borrower's financial position. The rate of interest charged by the bank in such circumstances conforms to the farm improvement loan regulations.

Questions have been asked of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) about farm improvement loans, and invariably he has answered that the financial institutions are co-operating with the government. However, these letters give a clear indication of the intentions of these institutions, and they will not change their intentions unless the government, by regulation, forces them to remember that they are dealing with human beings. Finally, I wish to quote from a letter written by an individual who has been affected by the practices of these institutions. It reads in part:

> Thank you for your concern in writing to the various major Canadian banks.

It is of little consolation to us as individuals when the government of Canada sees to it that its "hogs" are well fed at our expense.

I believe that puts the situation exactly and in very few words. It also indicates that the government is giving no consideration to people who are not in a position to meet their obligations. If the government had any concern whatsoever for the nation, it would put some ready cash into the pockets of the farmers. Any member on the government side who suggests that through the LIFT program the government is putting money in the pockets of individual farmers is not aware of the facts: he has not gone into the country to find out the real facts.

We have heard from many people that Canada cannot sell its grain, but as recently as last night the Minister of Agriculture made it very clear that this government has no intention of trying to sell Canadian grain or to set up any type of machinery under the Canadian Wheat Board which would really help in selling Canadian produce. So far as I am concerned, the government is performing a disservice to the agricultural economy which members in all parts of this House represent.

At the same time we learned that Canada definitely could stand a merchant marine and shipbuilding industry. We had one at one time. What has the government done about this? Has it really tried to come up with a plan for a shipbuilding industry and a marine service that would mean something to Canadians generally? The answer is no. Absolutely nothing has been done about it. Yet we spend millions of dollars on frivolous matters which mean little to people who are trying to obtain employment. If we had a shipbuilding industry and marine service perhaps we would have better access to world markets. What we are doing now is supporting the so-called foreign flag service which operates in this country without regulation in so far as the Canadian government is concerned. Of course, it is pretty nice for these ships to be able to fly their flags and not be governed by our regulations, but this does not provide job opportunities for Canadians generally.

I am sure many members of the House are aware that this government intends to do very little in so far as an approach to the unemployment situation is concerned, at least in respect of the manner in which it ought to be approached. I am also sure, because of the motion now before us, that the government is suspect in the eyes of the Canadian people. I am very sure that if this government was deserving of any type of respect or support it would go out in the country in an effort to meet the people engaged in whatever occupation it may be; it would see the unemployed and the cupboards that are bare in many cases, and it would try to do something about the situation. It is a disservice, to say the least, for members of the government to sit in the House of Commons and suggest all is well and that the responsibility lies with other people.

I noticed that when the Minister of Finance spoke today he spent a lot of time talking about the Canadian Labour Congress. He suggested that the Prices and Incomes Commission was urged on the government by my party, the New Democratic Party. I am proud that this commission may have been forced on the government by my party, but I should say at the same time that this party never said that any investigation should be conducted in this country without including a study of the profit motive behind the whole situation. Prices and incomes cannot be dealt with without including the third phase, profits. At no time has a government commission been set up to review prices, incomes and profits. I hope that at the committee meeting going on this evening the chairman suggests that the profits of corporations which affect the basic needs of this country be considered. Probably his terms of reference would exclude that train of thought.

I have a feeling that the Prices and Incomes Commission is another commission set up for the express purpose of getting the government off the hook and laying the blame at labour's feet. I suggest that if the government was sincere in this respect and would look into prices, incomes and profits, labour would co-operate. To this day, however, I have seen nothing in the efforts and investigations of the Prices and Incomes Commission which would indicate to the people of Canada that the government is sincere in this regard.

I started out by saying the choice between inflation and unemployment is up to the people. This afternoon the minister suggested that the increase in unemployment is really moderate. For those people who are not unemployed the increase is moderate, but for those people who are unemployed the increase is terrific. This is an important matter which we must consider.

One member who spoke before the supper hour did not appear to be really concerned about the unemployment picture. He tried to play with the figures and say that they were seasonally adjusted. He suggested that the figures really do not mean very much. The fact remains that the unemployment situation is of major concern to those people who are unemployed, to the communities which have an unemployment problem on their hands, and to those families where the breadwinner is unable to bring in the money in order to put something in the cupboard.

I suggest that the motion of the official opposition which condemns the government's arrogant acceptance of recession is quite in order. Anyone who suggests that the government is really concerned about unemployment and inflation is playing with words and being frivolous, to say the least. I believe there is no question that if this government were deserving of support it would come up with a program to assist the people who are unemployed. I close by saying the choice is still up to the people—inflation or unemployment. If this is the choice, then this government is suspect and always will be.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, this is a motion to condemn the government. I am not sure I like the word "condemn"; it has a connotation of remaining in purgatory forever and ever. It requires a great deal of sin to be put into purgatory. I rue the day the government decided to adopt this policy. I disagree with it entirely.

An hon. Member: Are you with or against us tonight?

Mr. Otto: I am with the people of Canada. This is an unfortunate policy. I am really quite puzzled how this government could have become entangled in this antiquated solution to inflation. This will be the last restrictive measure ever accepted in Canada, because it just will not work. It never has worked. The thing that troubles me is that this government had the views and advice of Members of Parliament and the public in respect of various reforms. It introduced the Criminal Code amendments, the corporation amendments and the Arctic sovereignty policy. All these things took a great deal of guts and research, but the government went ahead.

Why did the government not introduce expansive rather than restrictive programs in respect of inflation? Sometimes I am inclined to believe the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has to be very cautious. When he was first elected leader of the party he suggested there was too much input by establishments, by civil servants and by the mandarins and not enough by the representatives of the public. He said he intended to be aware of this. He started out that way.

The establishment grew and his own establishment has grown also. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) referred to Machiavelli. If the Prime Minister were a student of Machiavelli he would have read the chapter which states that princes and leaders need to beware of subalterns and administrators. Theoretically, they are to advise the leader of those things he should hear. But as time goes on the administrator advises the leader of those things which the leader likes to hear. In every administration the same rule holds true, and there is probably no difference here in that respect.

Now I intend to examine the issue which is really the core of this debate. If, indeed, inflation has resulted because Canadians take more out of the economy than they put into it, the choice is this: shall we take less out, or put more in? There is a difference. Shall we restrict, or shall we institute those policies which will make the economy expand? Some time ago I was questioning Dr. Young on this theory and asking him to simplify it. I asked, "If in any plant where production has increased by 10 per cent you increase wages by 7 per cent, will that increase be inflationary?" He said no, it would not be inflationary so long as the increase in production exceeded the increase in cost. There you would have more efficient production, and of course we could live with wage increases in those circumstances. Having said that, though, he admitted that he must follow the conventional thinking when making recommendations to this government on how to cure inflation. The government is not determined to create unemployment—

An hon. Member: What?

Mr. Otto: It is not determined to do anything—

An hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Otto: —in this regard. I hear hon. members making comments. Hon. gentlemen have always enjoyed making comments. The ministers are good fellows and will not breathe a word of what I say to the cabinet or to the government. Indeed, not too long ago when speaking in the House on the matter of the Canada Development Corporation I indicated that there is a private Canadian company of that name. I said this just about three months ago merely to see if anyone in the government ever reads Hansard. Some time later I told the Minister without Portfolio who is looking after the matter of the Canada Development Corporation what I had said, and in a surprised voice he said, "No, is there really?" This proves my contention that what I say here is in absolute confidence, and I invite all my colleagues on this side of the House to stand up and say what they like. In this place they can speak absolutely freely.

Let us examine tight money policy, which is a restrictive policy imposed by the government. The supposition is that if you restrict the flow of money, entrepreneurs will not be able to get as much of it and thus will reduce their costs. When I asked Mr. Bryce how we reduce costs he said, "We make labour more productive; indeed, we offer labour less money." This man is terribly far out in his thinking in today's world. Can you imagine any entrepreneur saying to his men, "Well, fellows; I can't pay you $3.70 an hour, but all those who want to work for $2.50 an hour are invited to come back." That is just nonsense.

What does a businessman do in order to stay in business? He borrows money. Money is in great demand, so he pays not 8 per cent but 14 per cent. I have records in my office showing that businessmen in a productive capacity have paid as much as 37 per cent. They have to. They have made commitments far ahead, ordered machinery and equipment, and guaranteed deliveries. A firm or business cannot restrict its operations. The minute sales fall, confidence is lost. Creditors will not lend the entrepreneur money and the bank says, "Shoo; go away." To stay in business the businessmen must continue expanding. Therefore, the issue is not whether we can restrict our economy but how we can make business and labour more productive.

It is said that in Canada we must replace about 60 per cent of our capital equipment. That is how far behind we are. That takes money. Now, the less money you have, the less credit you can obtain from the banks. The less money there is, the less you will be able to afford new equipment, and you will not be able to compete with Japanese, German and United States concerns with your antiquated equipment. It is no wonder that the CNTU published a pamphlet, which all hon. members ought to read, indicating that Canadians, as producers on a per man-hour basis, rank ninth in the world—below Italy, France, Greece and six other countries. The fault does not all lie with labour. The fault lies with management as well. I have also heard that we have one of the least efficient managerial cadres in the world. That is not surprising. After all, you cannot go to school and learn to be an executive; you learn by being an apprentice and, unfortunately, for the last 30 or 40 years those in a position to teach this skill to Canadians have been Americans. Therefore, we could not learn. I am glad the government is taking another tack on this question.

If the concept of tight money were examined today, it would be found to be absolutely unworkable. Why, therefore, was it introduced? It was introduced because Mr. Rasminsky, Mr. Bryce and gentlemen like them who now count, were the young Turks in the 1930s and were imbued with the ideas of John Maynard Keynes. They wanted to bring about great reforms but they could only act in an advisory capacity. Now, 30 years later, they are in positions of power. But they have not learned anything since the 1930s and they are instituting policies today which could be applied only to the 1930s.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Otto: That is the only reason we have some of these policies. I will not deal with unemployment at great length because other hon. gentlemen have dealt with this serious question. Unemployment now is not the same as it was 30 years ago because the Canadian people will not tolerate the conditions of old. Besides, when a person becomes unemployed he receives unemployment insurance and welfare. He lives because society today will not say to him, "Die." Society provides him with accommodation, clothing and welfare cheques. But the unemployed are not producing. Society becomes poorer because the country is producing less but is still maintaining for most of its people a standard of living which we consider decent and absolutely essential. How can anyone tell me then that unemployment is a cure to inflation? Unemployment means that there will be less production and, obviously, higher costs.

It is said that in 1969 our wages and costs increased by about 8.7 per cent. To offset that our gross national product, according to DBS, increased by 4.2 per cent, that figure being later reduced to 2.7 per cent. According to the way United States authorities calculate increases in gross national product, we were down by .08 per cent. They do not calculate the gross national product by taking inflated sale prices and then deducting the percentage that is attributable to increases.

So perhaps our GNP increased by 2 per cent at the most, while wages and costs increased by about 8 per cent. It is all very fine to chastise the government for its lack of policy in this field, but what is the answer? I think one of the first things we must be aware of is that our production per man-hour is very poor. Tax benefits which would enable industry to junk old, antiquated equipment and to buy new equipment would be a correct sort of incentive. Perhaps the International Development Bank could be utilized and our banks could and should be forced to enter the field.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Otto: The banks ought to do what they were originally meant to do. After all, we have given the banks the privilege of setting up a branch banking system and they have an obligation to fulfil. When they were before the committee hon. members will recall that they said, "Give us a free interest rate and we will invest the money in mortgages." Instead, they reduced consumer credit because that brings 38 per cent a year, which is not bad cookies these days. Those are the avenues that should be explored. They could still be included in legislation in order to increase our production capacity.

• (8:40 p.m.)

I now wish to deal with the subject of labour. There is no reason why salaries and wages should not be tied to the increase in production, whether it is industry by industry or nationwide. I am sure that most unions would accept a proposition that in their industry, plant by plant or any other way, if they increased production by 10 per cent they would be allowed to take 8 per cent. There is another factor. You cannot deal with labour off the cuff in this way. We have one of the great evils, the strike. When the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) spoke in Montreal about two years ago, he said it was time to put and end to this type of labour negotiation by stopping work. It was devised 100 years ago in the coal mines and has not been changed since.

Consider what happens when a strike is declared. Work is stopped. The man still has to live. He draws on his savings, union fund and receives unemployment insurance. When the strike is finally settled, it takes three years to make up the amount of money lost in wages. In the meantime, because the plants are closed there is lost production. In legislation dealing with labour-management negotiations, if there is no contract it would not be a bad idea if the government took the profit made during that time. There could be a 100 per cent tax on the profit made during the time there was no contract and should have been a strike. At least the men would be working and drawing wages, and the country would receive the benefit of the production. The same applies to union dues. Surely there must be another incentive than to say to the labour force, "You have to demand what you want and then quit working," because there is a further detrimental effect.

I have been in business over 22 years. I have dealt with employees and employers. I know that when a strike is settled an awful feeling of antagonism remains for months. Because labour has not received all it wanted, it does not feel it has been treated fairly. In addition, when these men look at their bank balance they see their savings are gone. This antagonism persists for months after the strike has been settled. It results in lost production. The employees have no will to return to work. They say, "Why should we produce when those fellows wine and dine it away on credit cards? Besides, they did us dirt." That is even more detrimental than the work stoppage.

We must introduce a system by which labour-management disputes will be solved without work stoppages. Indeed, this is possible under our jurisdiction. The federal government could introduce legislation, and the provinces would follow suit, stating that contracts settling labour-management disputes for an amount more than the increase in productivity would be void. I am sure no one would object to that. It is obvious that if production increases by 2 per cent and salaries increase by 8 per cent, we have 6 per cent unemployment no matter which philosophy you use. These are the things that can and should be done.

There is a need in Canada for managerial cadre. That means setting up schools, university courses and an apprenticeship system to train our young people to make good management decisions. It is acknowledged by people that I have talked to in Canada that there is a lack of training compared with our American and German counterparts. They admit we are not good managers. If we have inefficient management, we cannot have good labour. A short time ago we were examining witnesses from a motor company. I asked the sales manager of the company what he thought of the idea of putting an end to work stoppages in order to increase productivity. He said yes, it would increase productivity, but managers are used to selling ten months' production. He said they would not want to be faced with having to sell 12 months' production. They have geared themselves to a nice, soft, easy life. Japan, Germany and the United States to some extent are selling 12 months' production. These are the factors with which we have to deal.

There is also the question of gearing prices to the inflationary cycle. Of course, the commission is continuing to advise the Prime Minister and the government that there must be a restrictive measure. Let us not be fooled. We cannot have price and wage controls today. We have somehow tried to merge our thinking with that of the war years when there was a feeling of patriotism. At that time we were not concerned with production because 50 per cent of the production was being exploded. We had a completely different situation. The depression was barely over. Price and wage controls were effective then, but not now. Canadians would not stand for it now. It would not help the situation.

Some of the suggestions I made should at least have been studied by the commission. I have just returned from a meeting with the commission. In the last couple of months that we have been examining this question they have not changed their stand. They are set on a restrictive course—cut, cut, cut. When I asked if they thought of expansion I was told no, that was not in their sphere of reference. I said it was, but as far as they are concerned it is not.

There is the tragedy which the Leader of the Opposition referred to as a comfortable majority. There is no comfortable majority. Even those who are now employed fear they may lose their jobs. They do not know who is going to be fixed next. There has been talk of a 6.7 per cent unemployment figure. I think it is closer to 7.2 per cent. However, we do not know which seven out of 100 are going to be hit and everyone feels uneasy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to listen to the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto). I believe he is the spokesman for the silent majority in the government. I am very impressed with how he sits over there, thinks over here but votes over there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I do not intend to be mean this evening. I just want the hon. member to know I appreciate that very magnificent feat because not too many of us can do it. Some members cross right over. Of course, I expect him to do that one of these days.

Mr. Otto: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Alexander: I come from an urban area and therefore feel compelled to take part in this debate. I have reviewed some of the material that is available. Hon. members know there are reams of material. We have heard a lot of statistics this evening. I do not intend to pursue that area to any great extent.

• (8:50 p.m.)

I am impressed by the fifth annual report of the Economic Council of Canada which was issued in September, 1968. It is entitled "A Challenge of Growth and Change". Considerable emphasis was placed on the value of our human resources. The Economic Council indicated that policy decisions that year—this was written in 1968—or the next year would in many cases have their major impact over a considerable period in the future. This is what concerns me, Mr. Speaker. Notwithstanding this is the year 1970, I believe that statement could well apply this evening.

I also notice that the Economic Council in its sixth report issued in September, 1969, reiterates its belief in the value of our human resources and states:

> The greatest assets of a nation are its people... the most important resources of an economy are its human resources.

The Leader of the Opposition has a mandate to place on the Order Paper a motion drawing attention to the arrogance of this government and its dogmatic attitude, notwithstanding the fact that expertise has shown many times that it has been wrong in the policies it has pursued. I have had an opportunity of reading an important brief from the Social Planning Council of Hamilton and District, issued in March, 1970. This brief examines the area of poverty, one with which all of us are extremely concerned. I was impressed by the first page of the introduction to this issue. Speaking about Hamilton, in particular, the council said:

> In 1969, between 15,000 and 16,000 families in metropolitan Hamilton were in poverty. Metro Hamilton is an important urban concentration, the second largest metropolitan area in Ontario, the most populous province. The problems of the Hamilton area are worthy of consideration because in Hamilton we have a modern industrial economic base. This is the steel centre of Canada. It is an area of a high level of economic activity. And it is evidence that such a high level of activity, important as it is, is not by itself the total solution to the problems of poverty. Other areas suffer from a poverty related to economic underdevelopment, a poverty of the past. The poverty existing in Hamilton is the poverty of a modern industrial city, the kind of poverty we can expect in other areas that are in the process of beginning to industrialize. Unless appropriate measures are taken to end poverty, ours is the poverty of the future, the poverty of a developed region.

When we talk about 15,000 or 16,000 families, would I be wrong in relating such a figure to 45,000 people? So the policies of the government designed to fight inflation are reflected in the city of Hamilton in the situation in which 45,000 people find themselves. I was concerned about unemployment during the last election and I am concerned about it now. I am even more concerned than I was, because it seems to me no headway has been made in improving the quality of life experienced by many Canadians. Instead, the quality of life is deteriorating because of the callous, unsympathetic, complacent attitude which this government has constantly shown.

Recently I read in one of the national dailies something which is very significant because it is possibly an indication of the government's intentions. I read that employable welfare cases have increased by 40 per cent since March, 1969, in metropolitan Toronto. This is attributed to recent unemployment stemming from government anti-inflationary policies. One can conclude that figures of this kind are applicable to municipalities, towns and villages across the country in proportion to their population. No wonder the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) wanted $1 billion in addition to the $3.5 billion he receives now. Perhaps he knows that the policy of the government in creating unemployment means it is saying: Line up at the welfare offices if there is room, and if there is no room there line up at the unemployment offices.

An hon. Member: Or the soup kitchens.

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Alexander: Or the soup kitchens. Do we not realize that when people are spending their time at welfare offices and employment offices, receiving much less than ordinary endeavour and initiative would bring them, the environmental malaise, particularly in urban areas, is drastically increased? I am thinking about drug addiction, suicide, alcoholism, juvenile delinquency, marital discord and all the other social ills and problems which are complementary to the urban expansion. What concerns me is that the urban explosion in terms of increasing population is accelerating daily. Yet the government tells us the proper thing to do is create unemployment, although the administration is pursuing policies which, according to real experts, are unwarranted.

This reckless complacency on the part of the government adds to the frustration, the anxiety and the suffering of those who are at the bottom of the economic ladder. It appears to me that the policy of the government is designed to find out how best to confuse, how best to frustrate the people of Canada. Look at our first citizens, the Indians. They have no hope, they have no faith in this government. Look at the farmers. I am not a farmer, but surely the government is in trouble—

An hon. Member: Both east and west.

Mr. Alexander: —both east and west. As far as the fishermen are concerned, I can say the same thing. What about the old age pensioners, all those who are living on fixed incomes, those who because of a lack of wherewithal or the necessary training in an age of accelerated technological advance have been unable to keep pace? They are being strangled economically. Now there is a further group amounting to about 542,000 people, the unemployed, added to this list—another 6.7 per cent added to those who are already frustrated and who have no reason for liking this government. Mr. Speaker, it seems there can hardly be anyone left after I have run down that long list of areas and people.

There is no concrete evidence to show these people that it is worth their while to continue to place their confidence in the government. There is nothing of great significance which would warrant showering the government with accolades and plugs. The cold fact is that these people are interested in the quality of life, but apparently the government is not. These people are experiencing a deteriorating standard of living, and this makes everyone in Canada who is concerned for his fellow man very concerned. No wonder the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has given up his slogan of "the just society"; it does not mean anything any more, and as far as I am concerned it never did. It was just an election gimmick. After a year and a half he has come to the same conclusion that I have, that it is now necessary to have action, some commitment by way of deeds, instead of slogans.

The government seems to prefer to pollute our human resources and this will result inevitably in the destruction of our potential as a nation in terms both of human initiative and economic development. As a result of this attitude on the part of the government there is an increasing confrontation between adults and our youth, both of which groups are seeking work. There are some 500,000 people who are about ready to seek a place in the labour market, but as a result of the attitude taken by the government they discover a battle is going on between the adult, who requires work to bring home the necessary bread, money to pay the rent and to look after his family, and the student who desires work in order to pursue his education.

We have yet to learn of any legislation designed to widen and to improve employment prospects for those young Canadians who continuously flood the labour market. Little has been suggested to assist those already in the labour force to adjust to the changed conditions of the market resulting from technological advances, and this notwithstanding the manpower training program.

Let me again make reference to a statement made by the Economic Council of Canada. In its September, 1969, review the council states:

> Looking to the future, employment would have to grow by at least 2.5 per cent a year over the next few years, compared with 2.1 per cent in 1968, merely to match the growth in the population of working age without any allowance for an increase in participation rates. Allowing for the participation rate increase incorporated in our potential output analysis, employment would have to grow by at least 3 per cent per year to avoid the additional unemployment and somewhat faster to reduce unemployment.

The Economic Council then goes on to note, as far as our young people are concerned, that notwithstanding youth, unemployment rates are substantially lower than they were in the late 1950s and early 1960s, when the over-all rate of unemployment was very high. It goes on to emphasize:

> Nevertheless the existing high rates of unemployment among young Canadians not only represents a waste of some of our most valuable human resources and a potential source of social instability, but also partly reflect a failure on the part of our society to bring young people quickly and effectively into active participation in the economic life of our country.

The council goes on to indicate that there is, therefore, a need to develop much more effective measures to bridge the present disturbing gaps between school enrolment and productive employment, especially with very large numbers of young people emerging from the educational system. No wonder there is a revolt among our youth! Our basic institutions, such as our churches, our schools and our government are being attacked because they do not seem, to use the language of youth, really to be "with it".

Reading reports of the council over the years, the term "full employment" is continually emphasized. This phrase is coupled with a strong affirmation that it is one of the principal keys to Canada's future. Here on the council is a group of men learned in many subjects and who have been directed to advise the government. Yet the government continues to ignore solutions to the many problems that the age of Aquarius has brought to this great land of ours.

Canada is still a comparatively young country, a young and lusty nation with a vast potential for providing the good life for her citizens and for many people beyond her borders. Most, if not all of our problems could be alleviated or banished for good if a determined national effort were carried on to develop this great potential. I suggest this is what the government should do. It should develop our potential instead of creating unemployment. Certainly this policy would be much sounder and more acceptable.

If a comprehensive policy of national development were given top priority in this country, we would have the assets and the tax base required to give us all the social amenities that are necessary to sustain the world's highest standard of living. This appears so obvious in a country such as ours as to need no emphasis whatever. Yet national development has been relegated to the bottom of the list of concerns of the federal government. The government is more concerned with abortion, homosexuality—

An hon. Member: And marijuana.

Mr. Alexander: Yes, and marijuana, but I do not want to get into that subject tonight. That is another area where there will be great confrontation. Instead, we have the dismal picture of rising taxes and curtailed services. We have all sorts of gimmicks to extort more tax revenue, but no sound program to develop larger or new sources of legitimate taxation. This nation is spending millions of dollars, collecting billions in revenue, and has an export trade which is the envy of the underdeveloped nations and not a few industrialized nations. We have a high standard of living, are possessed of space, our natural and human resources are uncounted, and we are mercifully detached from the problems created by unfriendly neighbours—that is, so far. Yet with all this, and with all our achievements, affluence and potential, we must admit to an inability gainfully to employ more than 6.7 per cent of those of our people able and willing to work. I say shame!

The Prime Minister is aware of this rate of 6.7 per cent and that it is gradually increasing as a result of the policies that he and his government have set. The nation has become alarmed at seeing these figures in print, yet the Prime Minister is prepared to let them go higher. What does all this mean in terms of rates? We talk of 6.7 per cent as being what we call the actual rate, if there is such a thing. There is 10.8 unemployment in the Atlantic provinces, though if the Atlantic provinces are broken down Newfoundland shows a rate of 15.3 per cent, New Brunswick 11.8 per cent, Prince Edward Island 9.7 per cent and Nova Scotia 7.7 per cent. Our slow-growth areas are in trouble most of the time and are seeking assistance. Yet they are subjected to the callous policies of this government.

With regard to Quebec, we are all waiting. I see the whip over there so I will not get into this subject tonight, but in Quebec there is 9.7 per cent unemployment. We know what Bourassa said about that. British Columbia has 7 per cent unemployment and Ontario has 4.6 per cent. It does not matter whether you call this rate of unemployment the seasonal rate, the actual rate or the adjusted rate. The fact is that 6.7 per cent of our employable labour force in Canada is unemployed, which in terms of people means 542,000. There is no argument about that figure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Alexander: I was just getting started, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I am afraid his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must confirm whether there is unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Alexander: May I thank my colleagues for accepting the preamble I have given them so far, and I am now about to come to the meat of my remarks. There is no point in talking about seasonally adjusted rates or actual rates when discussing the effect of the government's policies. Those people who are unemployed know that the situation is drastic, that it is critical, desperate. All they want is some leadership.

I was particularly interested in the meeting between the mayors of municipalities, the provincial governments and the Prime Minister. The Globe and Mail for April 21 last carried the headline, "Unemployment cripples cities". I do not think the government really cares about our cities, anyway. This newspaper also indicated that major urban construction was grinding to a halt, according to Mayor Sidney Buckwold of Saskatoon. There was a serious situation so far as employment opportunities in our cities was concerned.

The Globe and Mail of April 14 indicates that there are no funds in Ontario or any other province to combat unemployment on the scale that was created through the monetary and fiscal policy of Ottawa in trying to battle inflation. Ontario's urban centres such as Hamilton, Toronto, Windsor, London and Kingston are hard hit and will continue to be hard hit. Cornwall was also hard hit, yet I heard the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) say that if we think 20 per cent unemployment is high, he knows other areas with an even higher level.

The Prime Minister has stated that increased unemployment is a very regrettable side-effect of the government's fight against inflation. That is the understatement of the year, particularly when he finds it impossible to point out just what level is unacceptable. This is what the Canadian people want to know. As long as there are 542,000 unemployed, I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) will understand that countless numbers of people are now hoping that the axe will not fall on them. This is the crucial point we are discussing: what is the unacceptable level of unemployment?

Mr. Coates: 6.7 per cent.

Mr. Benson: The level was higher when the Tories were in power.

Mr. Alexander: It is interesting to note that leading economists have criticized the government's policy and have stated that rising unemployment, now at a six-year high, is too big a price to pay. That is a very simple statement and it comes from very learned men. They are not my words. Leading economists say that rising unemployment is too big a price to pay. The government's policies have brought about phrases such as "threat to stability", "very dangerous", "ridiculous plans". All these are being uttered by economists to indicate that Ottawa's policies have the effect not only of reducing employment but of curbing the development of our economy as well. The challenge of growth is ever present in our minds, yet this government ignores it completely.

I conclude by quoting a portion of an article in the Toronto Telegram of April 21, 1970, written by Peter Thomson. It reads in part:

> While Mr. Trudeau has been criticized for the build up of his office staff and the Privy Council office he has not added the type of people who are highly qualified in the art of economic forecasting.

If a 6.7 per cent unemployment rate and a 128.9 consumer price index are any indication, the Trudeau dilemma may well become his Achilles heel.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the no-confidence motion put today by the Official Opposition is worded in an exaggerate and partisan way, but it deals with problems that concern all Canadians, and rightly so: unemployment, inflation and the rising cost of living. Besides, the federal government is well aware of those problems. As a matter of fact, it is almost the only one to have devised a policy and brought forward remedial programs, even though it is not the only one responsible for the unemployment now prevailing and so often referred to today.

Unemployment is eroding areas—and somebody mentioned the province of Quebec a moment ago—where the lack of investments is mostly due to today's unsteady political and social climate. Investments are the key to economic progress and for the most part they must come from outside the province. Bomb threats, disorderly protest or expressions of separatist tendencies based on illusions or extreme, white-hot and blind nationalism will not attract them. They will return when the province is administered by a stable and strong government determined to stay within the Canadian Confederation which undoubtedly serves the interests of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, I listened attentively to the speech the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) gave to support his motion and I must confess that I was not much impressed. The Leader of the Opposition spoke only of the ill effects of unemployment and an increased cost of living for some categories of people. He confined himself to the role of a prophet of doom. In fact, he did not bring forward any solution capable of fighting inflation and reducing unemployment except that he made some general considerations on the need for closer cooperation among the federal, provincial and municipal governments.

Mr. Speaker, this shows that it is always easier to criticize and demand instantaneous cures for all economic difficulties than to suggest effective solutions to settle those problems which furthermore are not exclusive to Canada, but which more or less affect all the nations of the free world.

We are now obviously experiencing some economic problems, as are all other countries, but perhaps to a lesser degree. If all the economic sectors are willing to take pattern by the Canadian government and accept its suggestions, that is to cut prices and wages, I think that before long the conditions will be corrected and our country which has known for several years an unprecedented development, will again make headways. We will then be in a position to maintain the level of our exports, which have known an extraordinary growth during the past 10 years, totalling $14.5 billion in 1969, while maintaining competitive prices and a high productivity rate.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) also pointed out this afternoon, in a clear and concise manner, the dangers of inflation and the urgent need to fight the continuing increase in prices which threatens our economy. He also mentioned the links that do exist between inflation and the fight against unemployment.

The federal government is well aware of its responsibilities in this regard and is particularly worried about people on fixed incomes, that is pensioners, veterans and labourers, whose income cannot increase sufficiently to allow them to face the rise in the cost of living. The government is also concerned about the owners of bonds, which, for the most part have been issued by governments.

Mr. Speaker, inflation has no place in a just society, but there are no drastic, perfect and speedy measures available to control it. There will always be those who will claim that government measures to fight inflation are too harsh or unjust. Nothing is more unfair than yielding to the extravagant requests of privileged groups and then passing on the price increases to those who are least able to bear them.

After many years of economic expansion, we are now undergoing a period of stabilization which has produced some economic slowdown. The measure of success of government policies will determine how long this period will last. We hope they do succeed, so that the restrictions can be eased as soon as possible and the Canadian economy leap forward again.

It should be underlined, in connection with the fight against inflation, that there is no conflict between the theories of those who are concerned with individuals and worried by unemployment on the one hand, and on the other the arguments of those who have only monetary stability in mind, because the primary concern should be to maintain the value of the dollar at its present level, failing which there will be difficulties and suffering far in excess of the cost of the campaign to curb inflation.

The Prices and Incomes Commission set up by the government has been very successful until today. We should commend the members for their good work and encourage them in their fight against inflation. Incidentally, this Commission recently launched a nationwide advertising campaign on this subject. It also published a table showing that salary increases since 1965 represent a true gain much lower than the apparent one. Therefore, it is essentiel to follow the advice of economists and well-informed people who affirm rightly that keeping inflationary pressures in check must remain government's first priority.

However, while it is fighting inflation with the means at its disposal and within its jurisdiction, the federal government is also aware that we must fight unemployment in the slow-growth areas, while promoting specially the establishment of new businesses or the expanding of existing ones.

[Mr. Forest.]

That is why the government has created the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which has, contrary to most others, an increased budget. And this program, which has up to now been quite successful will be even more so as the increase in production is felt. Mr. Speaker, my only regret is that the program will not be extended to my whole constituency. Despite the fears which it arouses, we hear, for instance, the opposition members complain because it is not applied in the regions they represent.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I trust that the textile policy which will be announced in a few days, as indicated this afternoon by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), following the representations we made about this industry, the survival of which is essential to the development of our regions, will result in rationalizing this industry and in ensuring its orderly development.

I hope that everybody will realize the seriousness of the present situation. If everyone will show good will and co-operate readily, the economic slowdown will be rapidly stopped. Moreover, if our country can remain united and strong—an essential condition—it will have a brilliant future, if we want it and if we use the means at our disposal to reach this aim.

[English]

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, today the leader of my party indicated to the unemployed of the nation this party's deep concern over the government's policies, or rather lack of policies, with respect to unemployment. It was unfortunate that the television cameras were not in the chamber so that the Canadian people could compare the contribution of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) with the words uttered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), who attempted to explain the government's academic philosophy in which there is no charity. It was an example, if one were needed, of the heartless approach of the government to the problems of the unemployed.

Mr. Benson: What is the name of your book?

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance, who has just made an interjection, apparently uses as a yardstick for the degree of unemployment that the government considers acceptable the recession that was inherited by the Diefenbaker administration when it took office in 1957. To me it is amazing that the Minister of Finance does not go back further and use as a yardstick for acceptable unemployment, at least so far as the government is concerned, the days of R. B. Bennett.

Mr. Benson: You don't have to go back beyond 1961.

Mr. Coates: That is right, and what government was in office at that time? It was the Diefenbaker administration. Let me read some of the things that were written about the type of legacy it passed on to the Liberal administration in 1963. Time magazine said in 1962:

> In the west, a fruitful half-billion bushel wheat crop was not only harvested but partly sold, and the Prairies again rejoiced in being the bread basket to a substantial part of the world.

That is a far different story from the one we hear today. In 1962 Canadian Business magazine had this to say:

> A 12-nation comparison of retail price increases over the 12 months shows that Canada has been the most successful in keeping down the cost of living. The Canadian increase was just under one per cent.

That is something that could be recommended to the Minister of Finance—a cost of living increase of under 1 per cent.

> The U.S. was only a shade more. Biggest increases were in France, Holland and the U.K. where the cost of living rose by over 5 per cent. In Germany and Sweden it rose by 4 per cent.

I am sure that today Canada must lead the world with respect to increases in the cost of living. Since the Minister of Finance likes to talk about the Diefenbaker administration, here is what the Ottawa Citizen, not usually known as a Conservative organ, reported on December 24, 1962:

> During 1962, employment and labour income reached new highs.

That is a different story from the one we hear today about unemployment. In December, 1962, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce said:

> Personal incomes have continued to expand in the wake of increased employment opportunities, higher rates of pay, and record levels of farm income.

That is a story far different from the one we hear today, but that was the legacy which the Diefenbaker administration passed on to the Liberal administration. The story we hear today is of a heartless government increasing unemployment day in and day out, placing further loads on the backs of the underprivileged and the unemployed, yet it still cannot defeat inflation. The government continues to increase the hardship and the misery of the unemployed.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, this situation reminds me of Hollywood. We should no longer be in Ottawa. We should change the name of this institution. The government is changing everything else and it might as well change the name of this place and call it Hollywood Palace. The colours there are much better. We could have technicolour and cinemascope and we could have the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as the producer, director and main actor in the great scene. As we come into the chamber he would give us rose-coloured glasses. He and the Minister of Finance would stand up, and he would say, "Look around you, all 264 of you including the Speaker, and you will see that nobody is unemployed here". Everybody here is earning $18,000 a year, and the ministers get twice as much and more. The Prime Minister has a large staff and every day he adds one or two people to it. The number now is 75 or 80 and this costs the taxpayers $880,000 a year. Pretty soon we will be in trouble with the taxpayers, we will be in trouble in this institution, I will be in trouble in my office and there may be unemployment even in the civil service.

Mr. Speaker, it is an Alice in Wonderland world in which the government lives. It is a government which pays absolutely no attention to anyone except its own members. The Prime Minister looks in the mirror, like Alice, and talks to himself. He says, "Who is the fairest one of all", and the mirror says back to him, "You are, Trudy baby". Then he comes in the House, puts on his rose-coloured glasses and cannot understand why everybody in this chamber does not wear them too. There may not be any film in my camera, Mr. Speaker, but let me tell you that the Prime Minister sees that there is film in his camera. He even trips the light fantastic with Barbra Streisand. She is Funny Girl and he is funny boy. Let me tell you that it is not funny to the 500,000 or 600,000 unemployed people in this country.

Mr. Perrault: You are speaking in the House of Commons and you should use the proper language.

Mr. Coates: The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) is worried about language. He should go to his constituency and talk to the 7 per cent who are unemployed there.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should address himself to the Chair.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to address myself to the Chair if the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour will do the same. I shall abide by the rules, but I do not intend to take orders from him. I have been in this House a lot longer than he, and at the rate he is going I will be here a lot longer still. If the government which he supports continues its policies, I tell him there will be a great many changes when the next election comes around and many colleagues of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour will not be back, including the Minister of Finance from Kingston.

The Minister of Finance will not have a problem because even under the old pension plan he had more than $30 a week and he says that anybody in Canada can get along on $30 a week. Of course, he also has four or five television sets and he could always sell one in order to buy groceries. The sad fact is that my constituents do not have four or five television sets and many of them do not have $30 a week to live on. The way this government is carrying on, I am afraid a great many more people will not have $30 a week to live on.

Propositions have been put forward to this government time and time again by opposition members in respect of ways and means to eliminate the problems of regional economic disparity and chronic unemployment. The Prince Edward Island causeway would have generated both employment and tremendous benefits for all the people of the Atlantic area. But what has happened? The answer has been "No" in respect of the Prince Edward Island causeway. That was the answer after many millions of dollars had been spent by this government.

The Bay of Fundy tides could have been harnessed. Projects of similar magnitude have been undertaken in other areas of this nation. But when it came to the proposition of undertaking this project in the Atlantic provinces the answer was "No" to the people of that area. This project would have produced lasting power. It would have produced a legacy for this nation and not just for the Atlantic provinces. There would have been employment and a better life for the people of the Atlantic provinces. However, this government and the Prime Minister said "No".

This government says "No" to everybody in this nation. Time and time again proposals have been put forward but the answer is always the same in respect of agriculture, shipbuilding and everything else. This government continues to say "No". It is the only word in its vocabulary. It is the only word Canadians hear, except for one thing—higher taxes. The government says "Yes" every time higher taxes are mentioned.

The government says to the people of Atlantic Canada that the economists who live in their ivory towers in Ottawa will produce special programs that are incapable of being carried out, such as the development program that has been proposed for the people of Prince Edward Island. The economy of Prince Edward Island just cannot undertake the type of program this government has proposed. Indeed, if it endeavoured to do so it would be so far in debt that it would be in a worse position than the government of Newfoundland, yet the government of that province continues to go forward.

Let us face the facts. We have a Liberal government in Newfoundland, we have a Liberal government in New Brunswick, we have a Liberal government in Prince Edward Island and we have a Conservative government in Nova Soctia. When we compare the unemployment figures of the four provinces we find that in Newfoundland it is 15 3 per cent of the labour force, in New Brunswick it is 11.8 per cent, in Prince Edward Island it is 9.7 per cent, and in Nova Scotia it is 7.7 per cent. This shows the difference between a concerned and capable government and three incompetent governments which have been in office too long. In a very short time there will be just two Liberal governments in the Atlantic provinces, because the people of Prince Edward Island will show this government what they think of the development program for that province. I do not live in Prince Edward Island but I do know that much. This government does not face up to the problems of unemployment. Indeed, I cannot see where it faces up to the problem of inflation, because while it is creating unemployment all over the nation inflation continues to spiral upward.

Now we have the worst of two worlds, and unfortunately for the people of Canada we will have to live with it for another two years. We only hope that some day when the Prime Minister looks into the mirror he will see reflected the Leader of the Opposition. Then we shall hear some good advice and tread the right road to prosperity, a road we would be treading if the Leader of the Opposition were Prime Minister today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I should indicate to hon. members that there is a slight difficulty as to whom the Chair should now recognize. The hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) stands, as does the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie). It is not easy to decide to whom shall be given the floor at this time. Since the motion has been moved by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), I think perhaps the hon. member for Dauphin should be given preference over the hon. member for Broadview. I do this with some hesitation because I know we shall be deprived of the fine contribution of the hon. member for Broadview. But all things being taken into account, I think the hon. member for Dauphin should be recognized at this time.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me. I will do my utmost to permit the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) to say a few words. In rising to speak on this motion proposed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), it occurs to me that this is a most appropriate topic for us to deal with at this time. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported that at the end of March, 6.7 per cent of our labour force was unemployed. This is the highest unemployment rate we have suffered in a long time. Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, this unnecessarily high rate of unemployment is having a disastrous effect on the country.

Mr. Jack C. Weldon, a highly regarded economist, is quoted as saying that in the province of Quebec 12 per cent of the male work force is unemployed. I quote from a statement by Mr. Weldon as reported in the Toronto Star of April 20, 1970:

> It is very dangerous for this country when the numbers that are discontented are as large as they will be seen to be in two weeks.
> The government has allowed its prestige to be tied to a goal that was irrelevant and could not be achieved destroying inflation...and it has abandoned its power to attain a very important goal; a reasonably high level of employment.

In questioning the government's handling of inflation problems a wave of misgiving and mistrust is sweeping the country. Throughout the length and breadth of the country the people are seeing at first-hand that the government's anti-inflation policies are not having the effect we were led to expect. All across this troubled country, Mr. Speaker, people are seeing the real effects of the policies; they are watching their jobs disappear and they are watching the cost of living climb at a disastrous rate.

There may have been a time when the policies now being employed to combat inflation might have had the desired effect. But it is obvious that the time is not now; and it is equally obvious that the government has missed the boat. The government has waited too long to take effective measures to combat inflation and what we are witnessing today is not a war on inflation; we are watching the government wallowing in a sea of confusion and indecision. Mr. Speaker, we are in a panic situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ritchie: The government is employing the measures today that it should have considered a few years ago when government policy was to allow banks and other financial institutions to expand the money supply like it was going out of style. Well, Mr. Speaker, it may be that the government was right on one point, at least: money is going out of style, all right, because it is worth less in buying power with every day that passes.

Picture the paradox of present-day Canada. Here we have a country rich in human and natural resources, we have a large and willing work force, we have a stable government—in the physical sense, that is—and we have a population comprised of energetic and forward-looking people. The only thing we lack is leadership. I would have to assume at this point in time that the people of the United States are enjoying a higher level of leadership than we in Canada are enjoying. In the U.S. inflation is declining while ours continues to rise. Interest rates are lower in the U.S. than in Canada, and their rate of unemployment is lower than ours. I am not suggesting that we should have a government that is different from the one we have, but I do suggest that we should have, and must have a higher quality of leadership.

One of the great causes of inflation, Mr. Speaker, and one that can be pinpointed with uncanny accuracy in our present dilemma is government spending of a non-productive nature. Mr. G. A. Hart, chairman and executive officer of the Bank of Montreal, said, as reported in the Toronto Star of April 20, 1970:

> I don't buy the argument that we are importing inflation from the United States or any other country. The root cause of this is excessive non-productive government expenditures.

While not entirely in agreement that all government spending contributes to inflation, certainly I would have to point to the enormous expansion in the goal that we as a nation have set for ourselves in the fields of health, social welfare and education. We have set some lofty goals indeed in these areas. All such services are personal services to the individual, and with the expansion of services in these fields as a result of sociological and scientific advances the ultimate and infinite varieties of services that can logically result from runaway welfare programs can put a serious strain on the gross national product. What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that all programs initiated in these fields should take into account the ability of the gross national product to absorb the enormous costs involved. There should, and must be logical and realistic limits to programs of this nature so as not to throw the national economy completely out of balance.

No government, and indeed no member of this Parliament, wants to place limitations on the dollar value of personal services that are made available to the individuals of this country. But it is of little solace to the individual when a government institutes welfare and other social programs with reckless abandon on the one hand and is forced at some later date to tell the country that the programs have pushed us to the brink of bankruptcy.

So much has been said in this House and around the country about the government's infamous white paper on tax reform that I will not dwell on it at length, but I would like to say that the government should scrap the white paper immediately and try to recover some measure of confidence on the part of the people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ritchie: The extent to which the proposed reforms would alter our economic structure and the manner in which the reforms were presented have shaken the confidence of the Canadian people. Tax reforms should be introduced and implemented gradually only after considerable study and only after the full effect of such reforms on the national economy and on the position of the individual taxpayer can be ascertained. Tax reform should not be implemented with a vicious sweep of the axe. In this age of enlightenment, surely we as a people and as a Parliament can institute necessary reforms with more finesse.

We will soon have another white paper to deal with, a white paper on social services. Needless to say, even before it is introduced the proposed white paper on social services is being viewed with suspicion and distrust. It is evident even at this point that the proposed changes in our social services structure will further burden the strained economy of the country, and the government will not be providing equal stimulus to the industrial and economic expansion that will be required to offset the increased cost of the program.

Now, Mr. Speaker, is the time for the federal government to change its monetary policy. This will help to reduce unemployment in the country by stimulating business. Now is the time for the modest lowering of our interest rates and a modest increase in the money supply. It is perhaps significant that in 1969 Canadian investments abroad increased from $135 million to $250 million. This represents a sizeable increase of capital outflow and may well be a result of the proposals contained in the white paper.

The government ought to increase the mobility of labour in the various regions and help people engaged in labour to move from one part of the country to another. Further vocational training would also be useful, as would extensive government-sponsored research into questions of what makes areas grow and what helps both individuals and the economy. This sort of program was very successfully undertaken in West Germany, where an experiment was conducted after the war. Attention was focused on those areas that might have created general economic expansion.

I also feel that we could well look at the flexible rate of exchange, which I think would constitute a considerable improvement in our economic policy. Our present exchange policies have, I think, been detrimental to our economy. The main objection to a fixed exchange rate is that it requires a country to pursue domestic policies appropriate to this end and could involve a conflict between balance of payments and dollar stability on the one hand and domestic growth and full employment on the other.

I will cut short my remarks, Mr. Speaker, to allow the hon. member for Broadview to speak.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I thank the previous speaker for his courtesy and co-operation in permitting me to participate in this debate. After listening to speeches by members of the Conservative party and the Liberal party, I am absolutely certain that the people of Canada are not concerned about whether the Conservatives had a higher rate of unemployment than the Liberals. They are concerned about the way our country is drifting at the moment. They are reminded of the slogan of the leader of the Conservative party in 1958—the great vision of the north which turned into a blackout.

An hon. Member: You had no vision.

Mr. Gilbert: In 1968 we heard the slogan of the just society, which is turning into an unjust society. It is a good thing I did not have any vision or we would probably be as badly off as was the Conservative government in 1962. I think the people of Canada are concerned with the principles set forth by the Economic Council of Canada. The council said that for Canada to have any sizeable growth required three things: full employment, with unemployment never exceeding 3 per cent, full productivity and price stability.

I wish to deal briefly with the question of full employment. What do we find today? An absolute failure with regard to the methods employed by the government. When we translate the unemployment figure of 6.7 per cent, we find it involves 542,000 people. It involves not only the workmen but the families they support. I am not the least bit interested in hearing whether the province of Nova Scotia is better off than the provinces of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island or Newfoundland. I am not interested in hearing that because there is a Conservative government in Nova Scotia the unemployment rate is reduced in that province. We are all Canadians, Mr. Speaker.

As far as the members of the New Democratic Party are concerned, there is a 10 per cent rate of unemployment in the Maritimes, a 10 per cent rate of unemployment in Quebec and an over-all 6.7 per cent affecting all Canadians. When I think of the ineffective manpower and retraining policies of this government, when I take into consideration that 43 per cent of the labour force have less than a grade 8 education, and restrictions are imposed with regard to training these men such as the requirement of a grade 10 education to qualify for a technical course, or that young workers must be in the labour market for three years, or the absence of any training for Indians and Eskimos, the shortage of living allowances with regard to the retraining of these workers, the administrative chaos and the lack of imaginative approaches with regard to retraining in the Department of Manpower, I realize that the government is bankrupt socially and morally in this field.

I wish to direct my remarks to a particular situation in my riding. I refer to the lay-off of 600 employees at Dunlop Tire and the shutdown of that plant in my area. On March 6, which we call Black Friday, the company called the employees together and announced that they were going to shut down their plant. Prior to that, officials of the company met with provincial government officials at Queen's Park and federal government officials in Ottawa to advise them that they were closing down the plant. The members of those governments were sworn to secrecy with regard to the statement. On March 6 the employees, for the first time, received the news with stunned silence. On March 11 the employees demonstrated at Queen's Park. On March 12 they met with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen). Although they received a great deal of sympathy, they did not find a solution. They were told that this was a provincial problem and all the federal government could do was help them through unemployment insurance or manpower retraining.

All that the employees of Dunlop wanted was the provincial government to make a feasibility study as to whether this industry was dead or alive in Canada. They wanted economists and accountants to get together with government officials to determine the market potential, the price structure, and then determine whether the company should be shut down. Mr. Speaker, the company and the provincial government refused to do that. In fact, telegrams were sent to the Minister of Labour and the provincial minister of trade and development. To this date no reply has been received with regard to any co-operation the officials will give in undertaking a study of the feasibility of continuing this plant.

This is not an isolated experience. We have experience with regard to the shutdown of a textile plant in Cornwall, and with regard to Canadian General Electric. It appears to be a weekly occurrence. Surely the time has come when we should incorporate the principle set forth in the Freedman report whereby if a company decides to make a major change in its operations, this is a negotiable principle. The company and union officials should get together to determine whether the company should continue, and adequate notice should be given if it is not. Surely the time has come to do this. I hope the Minister of Labour will stop swinging his shillelagh at women and start thinking about the workers in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 58(11) the proceedings on the motion are considered to have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—DISCONTINUANCE OF SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on April 15 I directed the following question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien):

> Is it the policy of his department that all school lunch assistance, including lunches in public schools, milk, lunch tickets, and lunches prepared by lunch committees be discontinued as part of the government's austerity program?

Mr. Speaker ruled that my question was not in proper form. Because it is an important matter, I put it down for debate at this hour. My question arises as a result of a letter written by the district school superintendent of education in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Gerald V. Closs. The letter is dated Manitowaning, January 26, 1970. It is addressed to the parents of children attending schools on Manitoulin Island. I quote from the letter as follows:

> All school lunch assistance will be discontinued. This includes lunches in the federal schools, milk, lunch tickets or money for high school students, and lunches prepared by lunch committees.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

> High school students on educational assistance will no longer receive travel warrants, personal or clothing assistance. Although this may create a hardship for a few people, parents will have to assist students with their family allowance cheques, if we are to have sufficient money to pay for their room and board and tuition. Parents should also know that most students away from home have more money than they really need according to the reports of our counsellors.

We must realize, Mr. Speaker, that we are here dealing with a group of people who to a large extent are on welfare a large part of the year. It is not proper to suggest that children away from home have more money than they need. To suggest that Indian parents on Manitoulin Island should begin to pay for these basic services is an indication of the social philosophy of this government.

The idea of a just society has collided with the measures which the government believes must be implemented to restrain spending. The people who will be most adversely affected by this policy of restraint are precisely those who can afford it the least, in this case the Indian people of Manitoulin Island. It may be we shall be told that this is not the general policy of the government. I hope we will. But even if this is true only of the Indian children living on Manitoulin Island, I think the situation is a disgrace. I quote from a press release issued March 4, 1970, by a group who call themselves The Voice of Manitoulin Women. It reads in part:

> The Voice of Manitoulin Women has also discovered that the elementary schools on the Manitoulin Island Indian Reserve are understaffed, and there are no remedial teachers available. There are approximately 1,000 pupils, for whom there is one librarian who has to divide her time among three schools, one of which is some five miles distant from the other two. The provincial standard is one qualified librarian for every 300 pupils.

Later, it reads:

> Parents on the reserve have been told by Indian Education Services that they must assume financial responsibility for their teenagers' high school education beyond $800 per year.

I point out that the cost of educating children in the high school on the mainland is substantially more, in the neighbourhood of $2,400 a year. The department assumes no responsibility for the extra amount and the parents will have to pay the difference amounting to $1,600 a year. Obviously this will be impossible. So in effect the department is saying to the parents on the island, "Your children cannot go to a high school on the mainland where they could get an education which would enable them to get jobs and function within society as to other young people." I say this situation is a disgrace. It is the kind of thing which ought not to have happened. The just society is being cut back precisely in the area where it is most needed. If the reply tonight is that this is not general policy, I feel the government should change this policy affecting the children of Manitoulin Island.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member who has just spoken that this is not departmental policy. While I appreciate his concern and the note of urgency he brought to the matter, I might add that this is something of a tempest in a teapot. The report on which he based his question and his remarks tonight were merely the result of an excessive concern on the part of the district superintendent. He was concerned that he might not have sufficient funds in his budget to carry out the lunch program and other programs of the students concerned.

My information is that the letter to which my hon. friend referred was what I might call a "Dear Parents" letter that was sent by the district superintendent to the parents in regard to cutbacks in the provision of some assistance programs in education which were anticipated because of fiscal problems that the district office faced in the coming fiscal year. As I have mentioned, I think this was a justifiable exercise of concern.

Happily, the budget has proven to be such that funds have now been reallocated—at least my information is to that effect—to the Manitoulin Island district. As a result of this there will be no need to cut back this program or other programs in the area.

POLLUTION—AIR—ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL SCIENTIFIC CENTRE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation to bringing to the attention of the federal Health Department the gravity of air pollution that is daily tightening its vise and strangling us for lack of pure air. I do not believe that the federal government realizes there has been a 700 per cent increase over the last 15 years in respiratory diseases, and that 90 per cent of this increase is in urban areas where air pollution is most severe. Neither do I believe that the government that is charged with the responsibility of handling air pollution is aware of medical evidence that points out that 50 per cent of all diseases in man are traceable at the present time to air pollution, among them bronchitis, coronary disease, emphysema and cancer. I do not believe the government realises, for example, that medical authorities and compensation boards recognize the relationship between air pollution and emphysema.

Most of this air pollution is caused by the combustion of oil and petroleum products. This produces a great deal of pollution, somewhere around 80 per cent of all air pollution that we have today. Last year in the city of Toronto there were 941 pounds of dust dumped per month on each square mile of the city. The state of New York limits the poisonous sulphur content of its fuels to .37 per cent. Ontario's limit is four to five per cent. As far as I can ascertain, no one knows what the federal government's limit is, if the federal government has one.

Let us not be told not to get panicky, that everything will be all right, when there are floating around in the air over the United States and Canada, 160 million tons of particles, and almost two billion tons of gases. Let us not get panicky when some scientist tells us that we have only another ten years to straighten things out or we will not be here. The public is getting awfully tired of our lame-duck approach to our problems.

What guidelines has the federal government laid down to date? Does it have any guidelines? How much research is it doing? What is the federal government doing to bring the provinces up to date on the research it is doing? How many meetings has the government had with its counterparts in the provinces, or is the government getting all its research from the provincial government at Queen's Park? These are questions that need answering.

A child born on the North American continent in 1946 has been inhaling the equivalent of nine cigarettes a day. The World Health Organization has stated that the maximum tolerable dose is .1 part per million in a 24-hour period. But Toronto and Ottawa run as high as 1.7 per million parts. We must remember that air pollution not only kills slowly but it can also kill quickly. I do not have time to put all the cases on the record but I should like to mention one. The most classic case was the smog pollution in London, England, which killed 4,000 people.

• (10:10 p.m.)

I hope I have brought the seriousness of this situation to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary and that he will be able to tell us exactly what the department is planning to do. We hope that they will stop playing with air pollution as if it were a toy. We are now dependent on the winds to bring in from the ocean much of the oxygen we use. We are depleting our oxygen by building roads and by construction work across Canada, by 1 per cent per year. The carbon dioxide content since 1900 has risen by 10 per cent. What a heritage we are passing on!

I would remind the government that the United States spends $480 million to combat air pollution alone. What does Canada spend? Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary can tell me, but my figures show me that it is $300,000. If they were to spend relatively the same amount as the United States, the figure would be $48 million. How can the federal government give leadership without adequate research? Perhaps I could leave the House the solemn warning of President Johnson in the following words, "Either we stop poisoning the air or we become a nation in gas masks groping our way through the dying cities and the wilderness of ghost towns".

I hope that I have in some small way awakened this sleeping department to the gravity of the situation that is facing us today.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the interest of the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) in the problems of air pollution, especially as they affect health and life. At the same time I would like to reassure the hon. member that the federal authorities are not only aware of the problems of air pollution, and indeed of other forms of environmental pollution, but are very concerned about them. That is why at the present time we have before us in Parliament the Canada Water Act. That is why the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) has taken additional steps within his department, asking that top priority be given to the problem of air pollution in particular so that in the shortest possible time he may present to Parliament a clean air act.

For the past 15 years various branches of the Department of National Health and Welfare have been studying this problem, and last month the minister reorganized the environmental pollution division and established a new air pollution control division under the directorship of Dr. Stanley Winthrop. More money has been assigned within the department, not only to hire personnel and to carry out additional programs which would give us a better idea of the extent and the effects of air pollution but also to co-operate with the provinces and to conduct further research in this field.

Last autumn the Minister of National Health and Welfare convened a meeting in Ottawa of experts on air pollution, which included staff of his department as well as experts from the provincial departments which deal with this problem. They have agreed on some very urgent, major problems concerning air quality, and it is hoped that within the very near future national standards will be determined.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary, but his time has expired.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—SUGGESTED SALARY INCREASE FOR FEDERALLY APPOINTED JUDGES

Mr. H. E. Stafford (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday in this House I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) if he was giving consideration to an increase in the salary of federally appointed judges, since the Minister of Justice of Ontario recently announced salary increases to provincial judges whereby some provincial court judges are making within $500 of the amount the federal government is paying Supreme Court judges of the provinces, and up to $4,500 more than the federal government is paying county court judges.

The federal government pays county court judges $21,000 and Supreme Court judges $26,000 per year. At the same time, the Ontario government pays the chief provincial judge $27,000, senior provincial judges $25,000, and other provincial judges—some of whom are not members of the Bar—up to $24,000. It is also a matter of interest that by August 31, 1970, the Ontario government will pay Crown attorneys in Toronto up to $29,011, and Crown attorneys outside Toronto up to $27,916.

There is no question that these increases by the Ontario government are justified. My point is that the federal government must recognize that federally appointed judges have greater and more varied responsibilities than provincial judges and that they should be granted salary increases commensurate with their responsibilities. No serious scholar of Confederation would minimize the importance of provincial responsibility under section 92(14) of the B.N.A. Act. It is the duty of the province to administer justice and organize the workload of the courts for, as George Washington so aptly put it, "The administration of justice is the firmest pillar of government."

The responsibility of the federal government under sections 96, 99 and 100 is equally clear. Lord Atkin referred to these sections in the case of Toronto Corporation v. York as "Three principal pillars of justice"—"not to be undermined": these are the appointment of judges by the Governor General, the security of judicial tenure, and the provision and fixing of judicial salaries by the Parliament of Canada. I doubt if many people, including the members of the legal profession, have a real conception of the exacting and demanding duties of our federally appointed judges. Want of time prevents my dwelling at length on the subject. I would point out, however, that they must be familiar with the whole compass of the common law and statute law; they must have a solid working knowledge of all matters falling into legal and equitable jurisdictions.

It is neither my duty nor my desire to enumerate all the matters with which they must struggle. It is sufficient to point out that they must have an extensive and accurate knowledge of the rules of practice, as well as the principles applicable to matters such as bankruptcy, injunctions, libel and slander, interpretation of wills, construction of statutes, criminal law, municipal law, real property, mortgages, mechanics liens, matrimonial causes, corporate law, constitutional law, civil rights, contracts, torts, taxation and many other divisions of the law. I make bold to suggest that we have placed an unduly heavy and oppressive load on our judges. It is worth while to note that in England the work of the court is divided into three branches: equity, the Queen's Bench, and the probate and divorce division. Not so in Canada. We expect our judges to be qualified to do justice in all branches of the law.

Further, the changes in the texture of our society and in our social attitudes, and the constant changes in our law have served to put greater pressures on the members of the federally appointed judiciary. An able, courageous and conscientious judge is the best guardian of our rights and liberties. Their salaries should reflect, in some measure, our trust and confidence in them and our expectations of them as human beings and as ministers of justice.

I do not wish to detract from the important and necessary work done by the chairman and members of the various commissions and boards under federal jurisdiction, but I respectfully suggest that the range and weight of the burden they bear cannot be compared to the task we have set before our federally appointed judges. I hesitate to refer to specific boards, but it is common knowledge that membership of some of them does not require professional qualifications or the constant decision-making that is the hallmark of the judiciary. Members of boards share their responsibilities and assign some of their work to staff and assistants. A judge, on the other hand, works in a solitary world with only a secretary. He cannot share the agony of his decision; it is his and his alone. Yet a comparative study leaves no doubt that our federally appointed judges are underpaid.

On occasion, something is made of the fact that our judges are entitled to a pension. This is a somewhat illusory benefit, the realities of which may be gauged by the relatively small number of federally appointed judges drawing a pension. Based on past performance, only 15 per cent of the 94 county court judges and the 37 Supreme Court judges in Ontario will live to qualify for a pension. This is partly explained by the fact that the retirement age is set by statute at 75. This is against the trend of present-day thinking and I urge that serious consideration be given to retirement upon attaining 65 or at least 70 years of age.

We tend to forget that most of our judges accept an appointment to the Bench at the moment they are embarking upon the most lucrative stage of their professional careers. Apart from the monetary sacrifice, they are restricted in their business and social activities in a way that few of us would accept, for a judge, like Caesar's wife, must be above suspicion. Fortunately for our way of life there has never been a lack of men prepared to dedicate their lives in the constant labour of maintaining our civil, religious and political liberties through the rule of law. We expect our judges to do justice to all. I suggest we do justice to them.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Stafford) has as usual argued his case well. He is an eminent counsel from Ontario and has put the case before Your Honour very well. I am sorry the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) was not able to be here on this occasion, but I know tomorrow he will read in Hansard with interest the remarks of my learned friend. The minister has asked me to reply to the hon. member for Elgin's well-reasoned argument tonight. The minister advises that he is aware that certain provincially appointed judges are now receiving salaries higher than those paid to federally appointed judges.

This situation adds to the concern he has already expressed to members of this House on several previous occasions, and more recently before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, to the effect that if qualified men and women are to be persuaded to take appointments to the country's senior courts, salaries will have to be competitive with those currently earned by the best lawyers in Canada. It is the minister's intention to review the salaries of judges with the government before next fall in order that government policy can be decided prior to introduction of the annual amendments to the Judges Act next fall.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ITEMS FOR FRIDAY, MAY 1

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, for the guidance of the House I would like to indicate the intended business for Friday. It would be our intention to call as the first item of business government order No. 92, second reading of Bill C-208, with regard to the Bills of Exchange Act, to be followed by government order No. 66, the report stage of Bill C-182, to amend the Supreme Court Act.

TRANSFER OF INVESTMENT COMPANIES BILL FROM FINANCE TO JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among representatives of the parties with respect to a further redistribution of the work of the Finance Committee. I believe there will be found to be agreement to the transfer of the bill with respect to investment companies from the Finance Committee, to which it was referred after second reading, to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. If that assumption is correct, perhaps the following could be made an order of the House:

That the provisions of the Order of the House made February 16, 1970, in relation to the reference of Bill C-179, An Act respecting investment companies, to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be rescinded and that the said bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Forrestall: On division.

Mr. McCleave: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Liberal House Leader what he means by directing this bill to the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It was felt that the only committee approaching the Finance Committee in wisdom and sophistication was the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Mr. McCleave: I can only say that the minister has completely disarmed me, but I do not believe what he says and so I will consent to it on division.

GRAIN

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43 based upon an urgent and pressing necessity.

The circumstances urging me to propose this motion arise from the widespread rejection of the Operation LIFT program and the recent statements by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) that the program will be implemented as announced despite the rejections and submissions made by the national farm organizations and other farm groups, clearly outlining the inadequacies of the program.

It is imperative that the government take immediate steps to overcome the widespread confusion and frustration existing among western farmers, created by the contents of the Operation LIFT program. I therefore move, under Standing Order 43, the following motion:

• (2:10 p.m.)

That as the great majority of farmers in western Canada have rejected the LIFT program, this House recommends that the government alter its proposals and bring forward new and acceptable programs to meet the urgent and desperate situation of western agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Vegreville under Standing Order 43. It requires the unanimous agreement of the House. Is there agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimity the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This shows the scandalous disregard for the farmers of western Canada.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

EFFECT OF JUMBO JETS ON POLLUTION, HEALTH AND WEATHER

Question No. 462—Mrs. MacInnis:

What studies have been made or are being made in preparation for the jumbo jets now in prospect, particularly on (a) the additional pollution of the atmosphere which they will cause and its effects on people living in the vicinity of the airports (b) the hazards to hearing and to nervous health occasioned by their flights (c) the effects on cloud cover and weather generally?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): (a) No specific studies have been done or are being done at present by the Federal Government on the pollution of the atmosphere by jumbo jets and its effects on people living in that vicinity of airports.

The Department of Transport has advised that there is not likely to be an increase in pollution with the jumbo jets as fewer jets are expected to be flying, at least until the passenger travel increases considerably. In addition, new combustors for jet engines which reduce visible exhaust pollution have been given a safety approval by the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration.

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

In a report on the Air Quality Survey in the vicinity of the Toronto International Airport, measurements did not implicate aircraft activity during the period November 1968 to November 1969 as a major cause of pollution at ground level in either Etobicoke or Peel County.

The Health effects of such pollution on people living in the vicinity of the airports, it is expected, would be the same as pollution from motor vehicles and power plants as essentially the same pollutants are emitted.

(b) No specific studies have been done or are being done at present by the Federal Government concerning hazards to hearing and nervous health in preparation for the jumbo jets. The Department of Transport is monitoring noise levels at Toronto and Montreal International Airports.

Manufacturers, operators (airlines) and Government aviation officials have advised that the noise will be no greater for jumbo jets, e.g. Boeing 747 than the current jet aircraft such as the DC8, Boeing 707, etc.

To this might be added, for information, that at the International Civil Aviation Organization Special Meeting on Aircraft Noise in the Vicinity of Aerodromes, Montreal, 25 November-17 December 1969, it was concluded that a study of this problem would be complex, costly and require a long study period. Accordingly the following recommendation was developed:

"Recommendation 2/1—Research on the effects on human health of aircraft noise exposure in the vicinity of aerodromes:

That (a) it be acknowledged that aircraft noise exposure in the vicinity of aerodromes has not been demonstrated as being harmful to health or hearing and that evidence which might so identify it would be unlikely to come from other than long-range studies which, to the knowledge of the Meeting, have not yet been concluded; and therefore (b) selected States and International Organizations, including the World Health Organization, should be requested to actively pursue, and collaborate in, medical and psychological research on the effects on man of long-term exposure to noise such as occurs in the vicinity of aerodromes.

(c) It is believed that the additional amount of combustion products released by the jumbo jet aircraft will be small and therefore no studies have been made on effects on cloud cover and weather generally.

P.E.I.—MANPOWER OFFICE PLACEMENTS

Question No. 1,436—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. In the years 1966, 1967, 1968 and 1969, how many people were placed in employment by the Canada Manpower Offices in Summerside and Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island?

2. Since 1966, by year, what is the number of staff employed in Charlottetown and Summerside in Canada Manpower Offices?

3. Since 1966, by year, what was the total cost of operating these two offices?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Reply for the Department of Manpower and Immigration: 1.

CANADA PENSION PLAN—CONTRIBUTIONS, PAYMENTS AND BALANCE

Question No. 1,517—Mr. Alexander:

1. What is the present balance of the Canada Pension Plan?

2. What are the yearly contributions to the Canada Pension Plan in total by all individuals and employers?

3. What are the total payments, by year, since inception, to date, to the benefit recipients of the Canada Pension Plan?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. $2,855,280,000 as of February 28, 1970.

2. 1969, $737,442,655.

3. 1967, $611,604; 1968, $10,407,127; 1969, $38,109,558.

*CNR—PENSION PLAN BENEFITS

Question No. 1,538—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Has CNR brought its pension plan into line with the Pension Benefits Standards Act and, if not, for what reason and in what respect has CNR not implemented the provisions of the Act?

2. Did CNR ask for time to upgrade its plan to conform with the legislation and, if so, by whom, for how long and under what authority?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 of the question is, yes. The answer to part 2 is, no.

*CPR—PENSION PLAN BENEFITS

Question No. 1,539—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Has CPR brought its pension plan into line with the Pension Benefits Standards Act and, if not, for what reason and in what respects has CPR not implemented the provisions of the Act?

2. Was CPR given time to upgrade its plan to conform with the legislation and, if so, by whom, for how long and under what authority?

3. Has CPR agreed to the proposals made by the representatives of the government and, if not, what steps are being taken to get CPR to meet the provisions of the Act?

Questions

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 is as follows: No. The CPR claims that the Pension Benefits Standards Act does not apply to its pension plan. It has not been considered appropriate for the government to make public any of the details of a private pension plan. The answer to part 2 is as follows: Yes. The CPR was given until May 12, 1970 to have its plan conform with the Pension Benefits Standards Act by the Superintendent of Insurance under the authority of that act. The answer to part 3 is as follows: See answer to part 1 and 2.

ATLANTIC PROVINCES' FIRMS—INVITATIONS TO TENDER F.O.B. MONTREAL

Question No. 1,671—Mr. MacEwan:

1. In invitations to tender issued by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, is it the policy to specify on all tenders sent to firms in the Atlantic Provinces that the prices quoted for goods are f.o.b. Montreal, and (a) if so, for what reason (b) if not, on which occasions and for what reason do the tenders carry the stipulation?

2. Is the Department considering some method whereby bidders in the Atlantic Provinces will be placed in a more equitable position for contracts awarded f.o.b. Montreal delivery?

3. In invitations to tender, will the Department in future consider specifying prices quoted for goods as f.o.b. an Atlantic Port?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. No. (a) N/A; (b) When goods are for shipment to the Eastern Arctic; they are marshalled at and shipped from Montreal under arrangements with the Department of Transport.

2. No, as it is not considered that bidders in the Atlantic Provinces are in a different position than those in other parts of the country.

3. No, the f.o.b. port for all such shipments is prescribed by the Department of Transport.

ONTARIO—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR CONSTRUCTION OF VOCATIONAL SCHOOLS

Question No. 1,751—Mr. Serré:

What was the federal government's contribution to the Government of Ontario and its agencies for the construction of schools for vocational training, retraining and upgrading for each year since the inception of the agreement?

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PERSONNEL OF STAFFS OF MINISTERS OF THE CROWN

Question No. 336—Mr. Crouse:

1. What are the names of the executive assistants, special assistants, administrative assistants, executive secretaries, and all the ministerial aides serving on the staffs of Ministers of the Crown?

2 How many of these appointments were filled by the Public Service Commission?

3. When were these people appointed, under what authority, and what are their salaries per annum?

4. In addition to the above, have any further such positions been established, but are at present vacant and, if so, what are they and what is the salary offered per annum?

Return tabled.

CMHC—FUNDS MADE AVAILABLE TO QUEBEC HOUSING CORPORATION

Question No. 1,441—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. How much money was made available to the Quebec Housing Corporation by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for each year 1966-67, 1967-68, 1968-69, 1969-70?

2. Of these sums, what were the amounts used for construction of homes for the aged in the same years?

Return tabled.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—TRAVELLING SPORT DEMONSTRATION

Question No. 1,481—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. Is there a travelling sports demonstration commissioned by the Department of Health and Welfare and, if so (a) who are the members of this demonstration (b) how were they selected (c) where will they be performing and on what dates?

2. Did they receive invitations or how was their itinerary drawn up?

3. What is the cost of this demonstration and who will contribute to these expenses?

4. What is the purpose of this demonstration?
5. How will its effectiveness be evaluated?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you kindly call notices of motions Nos. 387, 437 and 438?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notice of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

VIET NAM—CORRESPONDENCE FROM MRS. CLAIR CULHANE AND DR. ALJE VENEMMA

Motion No. 387—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondance with and reports to the Prime Minister, Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Canadian International Development Agency from Mrs. Clair Culhane and Dr. Alje Venemma with respect to their observations concerning Canada's involvement in foreign aid to Vietnam, possible misuse of Canadian aid and reported atrocities.

An hon. Member: Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

MAIL TRANSPORT, MONTREAL—BRIEF BY PIERRE BRETON TO GOLDENBERG COMMISSION

Motion No. 437—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the brief submitted by Pierre Breton of the G. Lapalme Inc. to the H. Carl Goldenberg Commission of Inquiry into Mail Transport in Montreal.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by Mr. Goldenberg that the brief was prepared by Mr. Pierre Breton in a private capacity with the assurance that it would be treated as confidential. In view of this trust the hon. member will agree to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Orlikow: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

MONTREAL MAIL TRANSPORT—BRIEFS, ETC., TO GOLDENBERG COMMISSION

Motion No. 438—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all memoranda, correspondence, briefs, tables and submissions presented to the Commission of Inquiry into Mail Transport in Montreal.

Motions for Papers

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by Mr. Goldenberg that no papers or briefs were submitted to the commission at public hearings as none were held. Two papers were received from parties on a private basis on the understanding that they would be treated as confidential. In view of this I trust the hon. member will agree to withdraw this motion.

Mr. Orlikow: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which I believe affects all members of the House. We have had two cases in a row where there has been a reservation of public documentation because people have felt they could make submissions without having their submissions presented to the House. I think that is wrong because the result of the agreement reached between the private individual who presents a brief or the like and somebody outside the House is that members are debarred from seeing the document.

Mr. Speaker: With respect, I suggest to the hon. member that this is hardly a point of order. I think this would be the very point which would be debated if the minister, for good or other reasons, refused to table the documents. The member who put the motion, in this case the hon. member for Winnipeg North, then has the option to ask that the motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. McCleave: Surely this is a question of privilege affecting all members of the House.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I do not, of course, accept the argument which has been put forward by the government. I have expressed my opinion before that there is too much secrecy. I ask that this motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate. Shall the remaining Notices of Motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

STOCK MARKET DECLINE—ANTI-INFLATION POLICY—CONSUMER CREDIT REGULATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Have the sharp declines on Canadian and foreign stock exchanges—I refer particularly to yesterday—caused the minister to conduct a review of the government's policy of slowing down the economy? I ask this question in view of the report that these declines are due to the expectations of business regarding the future and in view of the already heavy level of unemployment in the country.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was a day on which stock exchanges throughout the world declined. I understand the decline in the New York market was greater proportionately than that in the Canadian market. I believe it was the influence of the New York market in Canada rather than the policies of the federal government.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question. I am sorry to learn that the Minister of Finance does not have any understanding of the relationships between world events and those in Canada. I ask the minister whether these events in Canada and abroad have caused the minister to conduct any consultations with his counterparts in other countries in order to ascertain what this may signify in terms of international trends?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I have recently talked to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States in Korea and to the Minister of Finance in Japan with regard to the economic outlook in western countries. It appears to be relatively optimistic except for the great problem in all western countries of overcoming inflation.

Mr. Stanfield: One further supplementary. It looks as if the minister might have pursued the inflationary policies of 1929. I ask the minister whether it is still—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Stanfield: I apologize, Mr. Speaker, if I touched a raw nerve.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I ask the minister whether, despite these developments that are causing concern, based upon expectations in the business community, it is still the intention of the minister to proceed with his consumer credit regulations?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, in 1929 I was six years old so I did not have very much influence then.

Mr. Hees: You were much smarter then.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I answer the last part of my hon. friend's question in the affirmative.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I say to the minister that at least he is holding his own.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members seem to be in particularly good voice today, but that does not make it easy for the Chair to follow the questions and answers. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has the floor.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the gloomy forebodings which are coming from Wall Street and which have resulted in the President of the United States announcing that he will be making a statement on economic conditions in that country, and in view of the effect that this situation may have upon Canada, I want to ask the Minister of Finance whether the government is assessing the situation in light of these events and is planning any change in direction in the policies that the minister outlined yesterday?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the government is, of course, continuously assessing its policies from day to day. If there were to be any change in policy it would of course, be announced in the House in the ordinary way.

STOCK MARKET DECLINE—CONSULTATIONS WITH BANKS ON CHANGING PRIME INTEREST RATE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether any consultations are being held by him with the governor of the Bank of Canada and the heads of the chartered banks in regard to any change in the prime interest rate, in view of the situation as reflected in the stock market drop?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I meet regularly with the governor of the Bank of Canada; as a matter of fact, I spoke to him yesterday. The prime interest rate charged by the chartered banks is, of course, a matter for decision by the banks, not the government.

Mr. Monteith: Not any more.

Mr. Benson: However, unlike what happened under the previous Conservative government, the governor of the Bank of Canada and myself are continuously in consultation.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it not the fact that the governor of the Bank of Canada always takes his cue from and follows the policy of the government of the day?

Mr. Benson: No.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

POLICY RESPECTING SPEECHES BY GOVERNORS GENERAL

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to get into an argument over the previous question because the law has been changed—the minister has apparently forgotten—and the government now has that responsibility. The minister did not know that.

My question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister and has to do with speeches that may be delivered from time to time by His Excellency the Governor General, the rule being, of course, that Governors General can speak only in generalities. May I ask the Prime Minister whether or not there has been any change in the traditional policy under which the Queen and her representatives, in making speeches that in any way contain material that may be of a political nature, or can be interpreted as such, can only deliver them provided they have the consent and approval of the Prime Minister? I am phrasing the question in a general way for very good reasons instead of particularizing.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, answering the question in a general way, there has been no change in policy, whatever it was, in regard to the relations between the Queen and the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, surely the Prime Minister knows what the rules are.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Apparently he does not know any more about that subject than the Minister of Finance knows about his.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether that supplementary calls for a reply. I have the impression that this was not the intention behind the supplementary question.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Elgin.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAKE ERIE—ARREST OF CANADIAN FISHERMEN AND SEIZURE OF TUGS BY U.S. AUTHORITIES

Mr. H. E. Stafford (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Hees: That is not a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Hees: No. I thought Your Honour recognized the hon. member because he wanted to ask a supplementary. He does not.

An hon. Member: Who is running the House?

Mr. Bell: Who is running the country?

Mr. Speaker: Not having my blinkers on today, I saw the hon. member for Elgin from the corner of my eye.

Mr. Stafford: I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Is the minister aware that two Canadian fishing tugs valued at approximately $80,000 were seized and eight Canadian fishermen arrested and apprehended at Painesville, Ohio, yesterday and are currently being held in custody for fishing on the United States side of Lake Erie, and that the penalty for such violation is a possible $200 fine per fisherman in addition to the confiscation of boats, nets, equipment and fish by state authorities, and if so—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member coming to the question?

Mr. Stafford: Yes, Mr. Speaker. If so, what action does the government intend to take?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): We have been in touch through the Department of External Affairs with the Vice-Consul in Cleveland and he is giving every necessary support to the fishermen. We have also from time to time reminded the United States authorities that their northern limits are the international boundary line in Lake Erie.

Mr. Stafford: Have the Americans ever committed similar offences and, if so, do we give them the same treatment?

Mr. Davis: No, Mr. Speaker. We have a gentleman's agreement. They police their own fishery in that respect.

ADDITION OF EXPERT ON U.S. POLITICS TO CANADIAN EMBASSY STAFF IN WASHINGTON

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the obvious need for consultation between the United States and Canada on pollution control legislation, the conservation of our fishing resources and other matters such as the one raised by the hon. member for Elgin a few moments ago, is the government planning to add a full-time expert on United States domestic politics to the staff of the Canadian embassy in Washington?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): One of the functions of our ambassadors and other diplomats abroad is to become expert in the affairs of the countries to which they are accredited.

ATLANTIC SALMON—REPRESENTATIONS TO DENMARK

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs now tell us, in reply to a question which was taken as notice on Monday, whether any representations have been made to Denmark following the latter's threat to withdraw from the North Atlantic Fisheries Commission, in which question is involved the taking of Atlantic salmon on the high seas by Danish fishing vessels?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The terms of a message which will be transmitted to Denmark have now been agreed upon and I expect we shall convey our views to the Danish government very soon.

POST OFFICE

PARTICIPATION OF POSTMASTER GENERAL IN NEGOTIATIONS WITH EMPLOYEES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward Hastings): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is the Postmaster General participating in the important talks which are going on at the present time between the government and the postal workers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The talks are in front of a conciliation board, Mr. Speaker, and it is not usual for a minister to involve himself at that stage.

Mr. Hees: Is the Postmaster General sharing responsibility on behalf of the government in this matter with the President of the Treasury Board?

Some hon. Members: Answer!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a further question? Will the right hon. gentleman tell us whether the Postmaster General is still administering his department?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Waterloo.

Mr. Hees: Come on! Up Up!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask whether the Postmaster General has resigned since there has been no sign of him in the House for three weeks?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

FINANCE

RESIDENTIAL AND COMMERCIAL CONSTRUCTION—DEFERRED DEPRECIATION PROGRAM—GREATER CAPITAL ALLOCATION

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance which is really supplementary to earlier questions. In view of information that is appearing that there is a tremendous increase in plans for construction of commercial and business buildings while there is a sharp drop in residential construction, which would indicate there has been a failure of the minister's deferred depreciation program, is the minister giving consideration to a more definitive policy of capital allocation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the forecasts indicate the underlying strength of the Canadian economy and that it will move forward quickly in the future and I hope at a reduced level of inflation. However, I am not at the present time considering increasing the differential with regard to depreciation.

RETURN TO FLOATING EXCHANGE RATE

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): In view of the effect that is being experienced in the Canadian economy as a result of repercussions in other nations, is the minister giving further consideration to freeing the exchange rate in Canada and returning to a floating exchange rate?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED PRESENCE OF RUSSIAN SUBMARINES IN ARCTIC WATERS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister either deny or confirm the presence of Russian nuclear submarines in the Arctic?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I had a similar question yesterday and I believe I indicated at the time to my hon. friend that probably Admiral O'Brien had qualified his statement pertaining to so-called Russian submarines. I did look at the press report and I was happy to find that he did actually qualify his statement.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question must be directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Because of the interest of Canadians and their concern about pollution in recent months I must ask whether or not the minister can indicate if the government of Canada has sought and received from the Union of Soviet Socialistic Republics assurances parallel and similar to those we sought and demanded from our neighbours to the south in terms of maritime movement in our Arctic? I refer particularly to the voyage of the Manhattan.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

POLLUTION

DESIGNATION OF POLLUTION CONTROL CO-ORDINATOR

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Now that his supporters in committee have rejected the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as co-ordinator of pollution control activities in Canada, will the Prime Minister take action to settle the factional dispute among his ministers and designate a pollution control co-ordinator?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Peace River. Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Aiken: I was waiting for an answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I would not allow an answer because the question is obviously out of order.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he cannot ask a supplementary to a question which is out of order. Perhaps he might ask a different question.

Mr. Aiken: Then may I rephrase the question by leaving out the preliminary statement. May I ask the Prime Minister if he intends to designate a minister to co-ordinate pollution control activities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we do assure co-ordination of pollution activities in a variety of ways, cabinet committees being one of them.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of Fisheries, through several pieces of legislation and the Fisheries Act, now has primary jurisdiction in the field of pollution control, will consideration be given to having him co-ordinate all activities relating to pollution control which now is under four or five different ministers?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member very much for the suggestion which I must say is not very helpful.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would direct the same remark to the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo who asked him the same question and received a polite answer.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

QUARANTINING OF "ORONSAY"—RESIGNATION OF DR. COX—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. G. H. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that Dr. Kenneth Cox, the medical investigator who did such a brilliant job in connection with confining the typhus epidemic on the Oronsay, has been compelled to offer his resignation, will the minister consider referring this matter to the parliamentary committee which has jurisdiction or the establishment of a judicial inquiry under the Inquiries Act?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I question very much the premise in the hon. member's statement that he was forced to resign. The hon. member is correct in that he did resign. I undertook that I would supply answers to the hon. member's questions concerning this whole matter and I hope to do so in the very near future. I would like to learn the hon. member's reaction to those answers and then I will determine what form of action should be taken.

SIDE EFFECTS OF ORAL CONTRACEPTIVES—AVAILABILITY OF REPORT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. On March 16 the minister promised me he would consider making public the report of the medical committee under the auspices of the Food and Drug Directorate in respect of their study of oral contraceptives. Now that this report is to be circulated to all doctors in Canada, will copies be made available to the public?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to take that matter under consideration.

FINANCE

MERGER OF LA BANQUE POPULAIRE AND BANQUE PROVINCIALE DU CANADA

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Can he tell the House whether he has officially received any applications for approval of a merger between La Banque Populaire and the Banque Provinciale du Canada under the terms of the Bank Act?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Permission was sought and I made an announcement to the House to indicate that under the authority given to me I had approved such a merger.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

NATIONAL REVENUE

ALLEGED SMUGGLING OF GOODS INTO CANADA AT WINDSOR

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. It concerns alleged abuses at the Windsor border in connection with the U.S.-Canada car pact and it stems from a statement made by the President of the Customs and Excise Officers Association that dutiable products are being smuggled into Canada camouflaged as auto parts which are duty free. Is the minister aware of this situation and what steps have been taken to eliminate this abuse?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, these allegations seem false as there may be several check points for such parts coming into the country. None the less, we have set up a committee which is now investigating these allegations and, should they prove to be true, we shall take steps to remedy this situation.

[English]

Mr. Hales: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Apparently this problem arises from the working conditions. I should like to ask the minister whether the working conditions have been changed in any way?

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, a committee has also been established to look into labour conditions at Windsor.

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REPORT ON HEALING ARTS—CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS ON PROBLEMS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the report of the committee on the healing arts just released, which indicates a very grave crisis in respect of medical care involving an acute shortage of doctors and a great need for medical schools as well as complete chaos in respect of health legislation, would the minister get in touch with his counterparts in the provinces to consider ways and means of meeting this grave situation?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there is close liaison between the federal health authorities and the provincial health authorities now on the whole question of the health delivery system and its cost and efficiency. Meetings are being conducted on a continuing basis and the whole area will be discussed at the next federal-provincial meeting of ministers of health. We think that the health delivery system in Canada is probably one of the finest in the world. We do not agree with the conclusions of the report to which the hon. member referred.

Mr. Rynard: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I hope the minister is aware that it was his government that brought in medicare—

An hon. Member: And you voted for it.

Mr. Rynard: —and he must accept the responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rynard: He did accept the responsibility and then cut back the health resources fund, the very heart of the program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED U.S. NUCLEAR TESTS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): May I ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister finally reached a decision in regard to making representations to Washington in opposition to the scheduled underground nuclear tests in the north Pacific?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have not yet received the information that would be necessary for us to reach a decision on this matter.

Mr. Mather: Can the minister say why, when the government protested against a much smaller test last year, it is taking so much longer to make representations against this much larger test?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest this is an argument rather than a question.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY LINE RELOCATION POLICY

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport a question regarding the severe traffic impediments which occur as a result of railway lines running through some of our major cities. Would the minister discuss this serious matter with the railway officials with a view to determining an immediate policy and implementing it in order to alleviate this very serious urban problem?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): As I indicated in the House a few days ago, such discussions as the hon. member suggests are already under way. In addition, we have involved the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities as well as, in this particular case, the government of Manitoba and the council of the city of Winnipeg with a view to having the situation in Winnipeg, which is very similar to others throughout the country, be a sort of pilot project, and this combined group is going to bring in recommendations as quickly as possible.

Mr. Alexander: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister give the House any indication as to when he expects this very important report?

Mr. Jamieson: A week ago Monday I met the representatives of the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, among whom was a Mr. Wolfe of Winnipeg who indicated that good progress was being made and he hoped to have the report shortly.

AIR CANADA

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF EASTERN HEADQUARTERS FROM HALIFAX TO MONTREAL

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question also dealing with traffic and it is directed to the Minister of Transport. I wish to ask him whether Air Canada has made him aware that it is considering the moving of its eastern headquarters from Halifax to Montreal? If so, what does the minister intend to do about it?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I have not had any such advice from Air Canada officials.

Mr. MacInnis: The minister has not been informed of a number of things Air Canada is doing, but is he aware that this company which operated with six vice-presidents—that may have something to do with the austerity program—now has 19 vice-presidents and there are three more to come?

Mr. Baldwin: Just like the cabinet.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Would the Minister of Transport inform himself about the situation and advise the House at an early opportunity why it is necessary to consider the removal of the regional headquarters from the Atlantic provinces to Montreal?

Mr. Jamieson: I will be glad to do that, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

SALE OF LAKE ERIE FRESH PERCH FILLETS

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): My question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of the fact that his department and the provincial government have declared Lake Erie fish to be free from pollutants, and as the minister has also ascertained this from first-hand inspection, would he issue a directive to his inspectors to permit the sale of fresh fillets of perch which is a very lucrative market for the fishermen who sell this product?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): The question is one of testing all of the fish. At present the fish have to be held for some time and therefore have to be held in frozen form. Until we have sufficient testing apparatus and men trained to speed up the tests in large numbers we are unable to clear the fish. We want to be absolutely sure that the fish meet all our requirements before they are sold in this country or exported.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Would the minister at least undertake to speed up the testing process? These men are forced to hold them for periods of up to two weeks before they can get an answer.

Mr. Davis: We have several new machines on order and we are training the necessary staff as quickly as we can.

POLLUTION

HOWE SOUND—SOURCE OF MERCURY CONTAMINATION—CONTROL MEASURES

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry regarding the recent closing of Howe Sound to sports fishing because of mercury pollution. Could the minister inform the House as to the source of the mercury pollution, its extent, and the measures being taken to control it?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): We know that the source of the mercury pollution is the FMC Chemicals caustic soda and chlorine plant at the head of Howe Sound. We do not know the extent of the pollution, but we hope to have the results on fish tests by the end of the week.

CHEDABUCTO BAY—PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might beg your indulgence and ask a question supplementary to one asked the other day when the Minister of Transport was not in the House. It has to do with pollution. Can the minister indicate to the House the procedure to be followed or the date on which the government will be in a position to announce the procedure to be followed by residents in the Chedabucto Bay area of Nova Scotia with respect to compensation for the damage they have sustained as a result of the Arrow disaster?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): The procedure has been explained to the residents of Chedabucto Bay on a number of occasions by both representatives of my department and the Department of Fisheries and Forestry. In addition, quite a job has been done cleaning up the fishermen's nets and the like, and I understand that tenders were called yesterday for the cleaning up of shore installations. So to this extent the work is under way. If there is any specific inquiry, either I or the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry will be glad to look into it.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—SUGGESTED TELECASTING OF JUNIOR A HOCKEY FINAL BY CBC

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Because of the absence of the Secretary of State may I direct this question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that there is no Canadian hockey team in the NHL playoffs this year, and in view of the fact that either Montreal or Quebec will be playing Weyburn, Saskatchewan in the Memorial Cup Junior A hockey final series, would the Prime Minister make representations to the CBC with the objective of having them telecast this important, all-Canadian series?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will gladly make those representations. I think the viewing public of Canada should be given an occasion to see how Montreal or Quebec can go and beat the teams in the west.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Wait until they get you out west.

An hon. Member: Now we know where you stand.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I am not rising to inject a note of regionalism, but I wonder if the Prime Minister would not apologize to the House for the sorry state hockey has reached under his leadership.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY INTO CANADA OF STOKELY CARMICHAEL

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Solicitor General. In view of the reported recent visits to Canada, in particular one last week, by Mr. Stokely Carmichael, that preacher of race hatred and violence, can the Solicitor General tell us under what circumstances that gentleman arrived in Canada?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, I regret I cannot. I presume he came with the proper clearance from the Immigration Department, and I will refer the question to my colleague in charge of that department.

Mr. Hees: Everyone is passing the buck.

TAXATION

PUBLIC ACCEPTANCE OF WHITE PAPER ON REFORM

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): I have been waiting to throw this question at the Minister of Finance for two days now. Why did the minister say in Toronto on Monday that he was surprised at the public acceptance of the white paper on tax reform?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I was pleased, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member should not be prepared to wait a while for the reply.

Mr. Bell: Then may I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. As one who received another 100 letters this week objecting to the white paper, may I ask the Minister of Finance how the public can demonstrate any more strongly that they object to its proposals?

Mr. Benson: Well, Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend would look closely at what I said in Toronto he will see I indicated that the general principles of the white paper seemed to be fairly well accepted, for example, the idea of a capital gains tax, redistribution of the tax burden—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition on a supplementary question.

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHANGES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the careful reading that I too give to the minister's speeches, and in view of his statement that the legislation to be introduced will contain many changes from the white paper as presented, will the minister undertake to make a statement to the House at an early date, or before the committee, indicating what changes the government proposes in the white paper?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very interested to note that the hon. gentleman has read that speech since I did not speak from a text.

Mr. Stanfield: I simply read the newspapers.

Mr. Benson: In any case I suppose I will be appearing before the House of Commons and the Senate Committees in due course when they have particular questions to raise with regard to particular aspects of the white paper. Of course, at that time I will indicate my thinking in this regard, but it is up to the committees to make their recommendations. I have a great deal of respect for the committees of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister this question sincerely. Having presented some proposals to the Canadian people which are to be taken seriously, and having indicated that there will be many changes made in those proposals, does the minister not feel he has some obligation to tell the Canadian people what changes are to be made?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a restatement of the question asked previously by the Leader of the Opposition.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF MONETARY POLICY ON TRANSFER OF CAPITAL BY MULTINATIONAL CORPORATIONS

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Was the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission asserting government policy last night when he acknowledged that the government's tight money policy can have almost no effect—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might rephrase the question. He knows he cannot ask it in those terms. It would be better if he could seek the information directly rather than by referring to a statement made outside the House.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is it the government's view that its monetary policy can have almost no effect on multinational corporations which have the ability to transfer cash reserves from one country to another?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would say that our monetary policy, carried out through the Bank of Canada, has more effect on Canadian residents than it has on foreign residents who may be moving foreign funds into Canada and who have foreign funds available to them when we have tight money policies in this country.

Mr. Hees: As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if the hon. member would allow me to recognize two or three members in the back rows who have not had an opportunity to ask questions today.

DRUGS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF LEDAIN COMMISSION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister now in a position to inform the House when we may expect the tabling of the interim report of the LeDain Commission inquiring into the non-medical use of drugs?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would anticipate that the report would be available within the next two or three weeks to the government, at which time the government will have to determine the disposition of it.

GRAIN

POLICIES TO RAISE PRICES TO CANADIAN PRODUCERS TO EUROPEAN LEVEL

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Athabasca.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will excuse me if I am short of breath after popping up and down for 55 minutes.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Yewchuk: In any case I would like to put my question to the Prime Minister. In view of recent reports by the Alberta Wheat Pool that wheat producers in the European community get more than twice as much for their wheat and almost four times as much for their barley as Canadian producers, does the Prime Minister have any intention of announcing or having one of his ministers announce any new policies in the near future that would bring the prices to Canadian producers into line with what European producers are getting?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Yewchuk: A supplementary question. Would the Prime Minister not be willing to look at the programs of the Europeans and the Americans to see if anything could be learned that would be useful in Canada in raising the prices to our producers?

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—ALTERNATIVE ASSISTANCE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the widespread disappointment expressed by farmers and farm organizations about some of the shortcomings of Operation LIFT, can the Prime Minister give western farmers any assurance of alternative assistance for 1970?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have answered this question a few times, and the subject matter has been dealt with many, many times by the two ministers involved.

POLLUTION

OTTAWA RIVER—ACTION FOLLOWING MERCURY TEST RESULTS

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Has the government completed tests to determine the quantity of mercury in the Ottawa River and, if so, what are the results and is there any action contemplated?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, we have received the results of tests made in the Ottawa River which show it is marginally over the tolerable level of half of one part per million. Because the commercial fishing season is about to begin, I am today asking the responsible ministers in Ontario and Quebec who are administering the federal Fisheries Act to close the Ottawa River for commercial fishing through the summer season.

ACTION AGAINST INDUSTRIES TO RECOVER FINANCIAL LOSSES

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Can the minister say whether the government has yet taken any action against any industry to recover financial losses in relation to mercury pollution in the various areas in which it has been observed?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker. Some of the amendments to the Fisheries Act now before a committee of this House would enable us to do that, however.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

MOVING OF CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Government House Leader. When can we expect the motion for concurrence in the second report of the Standing Committee on Regional Development, which has been on the Order Paper since April 14, to be proceeded with in view of the fact that it contains an unanimous recommendation that the committee adjourn from place to place on the east coast of Canada before the estimates go through on May 31? Quite a number of arrangements have been made for that trip.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I anticipate having discussions with the other House Leaders with respect to the general question of travel by committees of the House during the balance of the session. I think the hon. member will recognize that it will be difficult to have more than one committee away from the House at any one time, and there have been a number of requests along these lines. I also believe there has been general agreement in that committee that the request should not be brought forward until the middle of next month.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for York North on a question of privilege.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege based on what I believe is a misquotation in Hansard at page 6346, line 42, where I am reported as having referred to:

> ...the end of the horse personified by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Then there appears this reply:

> Mr. Hees: Oh, go back to Grade 3!

I believe that should read, "Come back to Grade 3."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct that. All members on this side of the House have passed through Grade 13 but a large number on that side are still in Grade 3.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to break through the shennanigans to raise a serious point of order. The Standing Committee on Regional Development has before the House a unanimous recommendation in its second report, and the recommendation—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May we have order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Hon. gentlemen opposite should have some respect for their own backbencher.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Lundrigan: As I was saying before I was interrupted from half a dozen places in the House, the Standing Committee on Regional Development unanimously recommended very early in April, and so reported to the House on April 14, that it adjourn from place to place on the east coast of Canada, following a commitment which is more than a year old. Arrangements have been made. Now we listen to the House Leader indicating that discussions are to be held in regard to this matter. There is a unanimous feeling in the committee about this request, and I have no reason to believe there is anything but a unanimous feeling in the House.

The House Leader has intimated that the motion will not be moved for two weeks, or before the middle of next month, because of conflict in committee travel arrangements. I submit this is not the case. I feel it is a waste of time for our committee to continue to meet unless the committee's report is concurred in. I think the House Leader has no right, as a member of this House, to prevent the report coming before the House, which is exactly what he is doing. I think, Mr. Speaker, that this confirms what other hon. members—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The point which the hon. member makes has from time to time, been presented to the Chair and to hon. members for consideration. I am sure the submissions of the hon. member have been noted. I would not think this is a matter about which there should be debate at this time.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has made the allegation that I have prevented the matter coming forward. I have been acting on the basis of information I received from the committee. I understood that the committee had agreed it would not, in any event, seek to travel before the middle of next month. That information may or may not be correct, but I believe I was acting on reliable information. The other question which has to be borne in mind is that if more than one committee is away from the House, it will be very difficult to carry on the business here.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRICE STABILITY

APPOINTMENT OF JOINT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved:

That a special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, to be known as the Joint Parliamentary Committee on Price Stability, be appointed to consider reports of the Prices and Incomes Commission, and such other related reports or papers as may be referred to the committee, with powers to report from time to time its observations and opinions thereon; to send for persons, papers and records; to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House; to print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by the committee; and to delegate to subcommittees any of its powers except the power to report directly to the House of Commons.

That 12 members of the House of Commons, to be designated at a later date, act on behalf of the House as members of the said committee, seven of whom shall be required for a quorum.

That when a quorum is not present, the chairmen of the said committee or of its subcommittees be authorized to proceed with meetings for the purpose of receiving and printing evidence; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed special joint committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there is before the House a motion to establish a Joint Committee of this House and the Senate on Price Stability. Hon. members will recall that an improved approach toward the achievement of price stability was proposed in the White Paper on Policies for Price Stability which I presented just over a year ago. The new approach outlined in this white paper was clearly intended by the government to supplement and support the use of the traditional instruments of fiscal and monetary management available to the government. It was not designed to replace these traditional instruments.

In the white paper it was suggested that two new bodies were to be created to focus continuing attention on the problem of rising prices that is of concern to us all. One of those bodies, the Prices and Incomes Commission, was appointed by Order in Council last June. I gave notice to the House on December 15 last of this motion that we are to debate today for the appointment of the second of these new bodies, to be known as the Joint Parliamentary Committee on Price Stability. This is the motion we are debating today.

The white paper on policies for price stability envisaged that the joint committee would provide a very valuable parliamentary forum for the public consideration of the reports of the Prices and Incomes Commission and for public hearings and airings and reviews of trends in major price and income development in the private sector of our economy. The white paper recognized the necessity of undertaking a continuous analysis of cost and price developments and of studying the causes and effects of inflation outside the traditional framework of the government decision-making process.

The government proposed the formation of the Prices and Incomes Commission to perform this function, a proposal that at the time received wide support and led to the commission's establishment last summer. In the white paper we said of the commission that its "primary influence should be directed to rallying a strong sense of social responsibility, on the part of those making private price and income decision, in support of the national interest in price stability". We further said, "To achieve this, it will be necessary for the commission to win the continuing acceptance and co-operation of major economic interest groups" and gave our opinion that it could "win this support only by maintaining close consultation with such groups on a regular basis." In the statement I made at the time of the appointment of the commission I said:

> The commission will be asked to inquire into and report upon the causes, processes and consequences of inflation and to inform those making current price and income decisions, the general public and the government on how price stability may best be achieved. The commission will be authorized to prepare and publish from time to time under its own authority specific reports on:
> (a) the results of their studies and investigations of the matters outlined above;
> (b) current developments in costs, prices, productivity and incomes in particular sectors and industries within the economy and for the Canadian economy as a whole.

Following its appointment, the commission accordingly began by devoting most of its efforts toward establishing close relations with leaders of major economic interest groups and winning their support through private discussions for a program of voluntary restraints on prices and incomes. There was at that time, as there has been since, criticism of this approach. Some people suggested that the idea that leaders of interest groups might be induced to give adherence to such a program was illusory; others, while not ruling out the possibility, considered that agreement could be achieved only after the commission had engaged in a lengthy program of self-education followed by public education. Nevertheless, the commission persevered even in the face of setbacks which seemed insurmountable some months ago, and this February it achieved a good measure of success in reaching its initial objective. At the National Conference on Price Stability a large group of business leaders agreed on criteria designed to reduce the number and size of price increases business will make in 1970.

Mr. Orlikow: That is a fake.

Mr. Basford: The agreement is in terms sufficiently specific to make it possible in individual instances to determine whether it is being met or not—in other words, whether these pricing criteria are being followed or not. The program agreed upon at the National Conference on Price Stability was supported by the first ministers of Canada and all the provinces at the federal-provincial conference the following week.

It is interesting to note that shortly after that conference and as a result of it we announced the deferral of a whole range of government fee increases we had intended implementing. They were deferred because of the inflationary situation in the country. Following the conference, the provinces were asked to concern themselves with reviewing their laws relating, for example, to the cost of housing and rental accommodation particularly. Following that conference some provinces have reviewed their laws and some have proposed legislation which will have a restraining effect on rent increases.

In my view, the commission and business leaders together at the National Conference on Price Stability made a significant contribution to the objective of achieving better price stability at much less cost, in terms of output and employment, than would result from exclusive reliance on the traditional fiscal and monetary weapons.

The commission has embarked on a number of reviews of specific price situations in order to determine whether these have been developing in line with the criteria. It is obviously important that the commission come to conclusions rapidly and transmit these conclusions rapidly to the firms concerned and to the governments. If it is to do this as quickly as possible it cannot hold extensive public hearings. However, I think the House will agree that public examination and discussion of these reports is needed, and surely there could be no better forum for them than that provided through the hearings of a joint parliamentary committee.

In view of the flow of reviews of pricing situations that will be emanating from the commission, and the need for assuring that there is adequate opportunity for public discussion of the broader issues involved, I am urging the immediate appointment of a Joint Parliamentary Committee on Price Stability. In addition to its function of carrying out public examination of reports on individual price situations, the committee will also be expected to examine the manner in which the commission has gone about establishing a system for providing quick methods of determining which price increases warrant investigation. I anticipate that these inquiries will reveal the present program is having a significant effect in restraining price increases.

The estimates of my department, and thereby the Prices and Incomes Commission, is presently before the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare. The members of the Prices and Incomes Commission tabled a statement last night before that committee outlining some of the work it is undertaking. For the sake of the record I might review that statement very quickly. The first report of the commission involved a price increase announcement by the steelmakers of Canada, including a variety of rolling-mill products. This report has been tabled in the House and should be examined by this forthcoming parliamentary committee. Secondly, they have issued a report following the National Conference on Price Stability. The report concerns price increases of tinplate. They are now examining a 6 per cent increase in the price of glass containers and examining with the Canadian Transport Commission recently announced railway freight increases.

Mr. Baldwin: You forgot peanut butter.

Mr. Basford: I will come to that. I am glad the hon. member is concerned about peanut butter.

Mr. Baldwin: I was making lunch for my son when I heard that announcement.

Mr. Basford: The commission is working with the copper industry. While copper is still very expensive, we in Canada are paying the lowest price for copper anywhere in the world. The price in Canada is considerably lower than it is in the United States, and well below the world price. It is resulting—

[Mr. Basford.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) seeks the floor to ask a question, if the minister will allow it.

Mr. Basford: I have a limited amount of time, but I will be happy to answer the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orlikow: The minister can have all the time he wants. While the minister is talking about the situation in Canada and saying we have the lowest copper price in the world, will he agree to put on the record the fact that in the past 15 months, since January 1, 1969, the price of copper in Canada has risen by 30 per cent?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I think the government and also the commission have indicated very clearly that we are not happy with the price of copper. However, I think we can take some consolation in the fact that as a result of the work of the Prices and Incomes Commission and its restraining influence, although in Canada we are paying a high price for copper it is a lower price than anywhere else in the world.

I will continue to review the statement filed yesterday. Another part of the work of the commission is that relating to copper. Hon. members will have noticed a statement in the press the other day following negotiations and representations made by the Prices and Incomes Commission to the Aluminum Company of Canada resulting in the price of aluminum ingot and semi-fabricated products not being increased in Canada. Although the world price has increased, the Canadian price to Canadian fabricators remains the same. As a result of the work of the commission, the Aluminum Company of Canada has agreed to keep down its prices. A full review is being conducted by the commission into price increases of tin-plated containers. I think hon. members will appreciate that price increases in glass containers and tin containers can have a pervasive effect throughout the economy, particularly with relation to consumer goods, many of which are packed in tin or glass.

In total, the commission in the period of two months has begun conducting surveys of some 40 products or product groups where price increases have been reported. Reports will be made by the commission on these investigations and will be presented to the House. It seems it will be of vital concern to have these reports examined by a joint committee of both Houses. Some of the products on which price increases are being studied are fine papers, rubber tires, scrap metal, steel plate, cold storage charges—

Mr. Howe: Honey.

Mr. Basford: —dyes, detergents, undergarments, lubricating oil, silicates, coffee, to which the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) referred the other day, honey, to which the hon. member has just referred, canned foods, peanut butter, in which the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has an interest, margarine, meats, grapefruit juice, edible oils, shortening and prescription baby foods. That is an outline of some of the reviews that the commission currently has underway.

Of interest to this House, and particularly to me as Minister of Consumer Affairs, is the concern and interest of the commission in the prices of food and household items which are of such vital concern to Canadian consumers. As a result of that concern the Prices and Incomes Commission has established close liaison with the main retail outlets in both the general merchandise and the grocery sectors. On a systematic basis these sources are being asked to report markups and changes in prices at the retail level for consumer-sensitive items. There is already evidence that this procedure has restrained or prevented price increases in certain food products. Where price increases have already taken place, these are being investigated primarily to determine whether they meet the pricing criteria established by the National Conference on Price Stability.

I did not have an opportunity to participate in the debate yesterday. However, I notice that a number of members were critical of the work of the Prices and Incomes Commission. That criticism has also come forward in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs which is examining the estimates of the commission. I wish to put on record that while we have a long way to go and a great task to perform in controlling inflation in this country, we are meeting with some success, considerably more than many other countries who have economies similar to Canada's.

According to the latest available figures, converted mathematically to a common 1963 basis, in December, 1969, we in Canada had a year-over-year percentage change of 4.6 per cent in the consumer price index and a .4 per cent change in the monthly index for last December. In the United Kingdom, with a government in power that is philosophically aligned with the New Democratic Party, there was a 4.7 per cent year-over-year increase—not as good as Canada's—and a December increase of .6 per cent, again not as good as Canada's.

The United States, with an economy very similar to ours, had a year-over-year increase for 1969 of 6.2 per cent compared with Canada's 4.6 per cent, and a December increase of .7 per cent compared with Canada's .4 per cent. France had a year-over-year increase of 5.9 per cent and a December increase of .3 per cent. Japan had a year-over-year increase of 6.4 per cent compared with Canada's 4.6 per cent, and a December increase of .7 per cent.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Basford: I would be happy to answer.

Mr. Stanfield: Would he tell us what the unemployment rate is in those countries?

Mr. Basford: I do not have those figures in my book here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: I would be glad to obtain them. We have made clear, however, that the more successful the program of the Prices and Incomes Commission is in securing price and wage restraint, the more rapidly we can relax certain aspects of fiscal and monetary policy. I find this difficult to drill into the heads of hon. members opposite; I regret that after a year and a half the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) still does not appreciate this.

Mr. Baldwin: Tell the unemployed.

Mr. Stanfield: Try to persuade the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson).

Mr. Basford: I hear a good deal of chatter from the members of the New Democratic Party but I have difficulty determining what their position is—today it is one thing and tomorrow it is something else. I can only rely on the records of this House and on the Order Paper to help me determine what position they take. I refer hon. members to a motion in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), a leading member of the NDP caucus. This motion, No. 34, urges the government to——give consideration to the advisability of constituting a prices review board . . . such board to operate publicly and with consumer representation and to be given the responsibility of co-operating with the provinces to secure stabilized prices for clothing, housing, drugs, transportation and basic consumer necessities.

Mr. Speaker, the Prices and Incomes Commission has gone much further than simply co-operating with the provinces. It is doing far more than the NDP is asking in the motion to which I have just referred. We have been co-operating with the provinces. We conducted an extremely successful federal-provincial conference on this program. The commission and the government have gone much further than simply trying to fight inflation by co-operating with the provinces as proposed by the New Democratic Party.

Since its establishment last summer, the commission has given the most urgent priority to seeking the support of various sectors of the economy for a program of voluntary cost and price restraint in an effort to reduce the immediate inflationary pressures. The commission has also embarked on longer-term research into some of the more basic problems posed by inflation. A number of studies have already been started and further studies are in the planning stage. An outline of the proposed research program has recently been made available to the Commons Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs which is examining the estimates of the commission.

There are those who ask: Why is further research needed? Mr. Speaker, when I note in this House and in other places the great divergence of views expressed as to the best means of fighting inflation, it seems to me that the country is still in need of effective research into inflation—someone to provide better answers than we have been getting from the official opposition or from the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Baldwin: We just ask the questions; you are supposed to have the answers.

Mr. Basford: Undoubtedly, the joint committee will also wish to review the outcome of these studies and to consider such implications as they may have for the development of new national policies for dealing with the problem of inflation. To date, the program launched by the commission following the national conference has been helping to curb inflation by restraining price increases. This price restraint has been brought about mainly at the expense of profits, because a number of companies have absorbed part of their cost increases rather than fully passing them along in the form of higher prices. The program as it stands has no direct restraining influence on increases in incomes other than profits, of which labour income is by far the most important component.

In the closing statement of the National Conference on Price Stability at which agreement was reached on the current program, it was specified that the groups involved, while "prepared to take an initiative as a contribution to a broad program of restraint", wished to "emphasize that an indispensable requirement for the control of inflation is a comparable measure of restraint by wage and salary earners, by governments at all levels and indeed by everyone".

The response of the trade union movement, given to the government at the annual meeting which took place last month between the cabinet and the major Canadian labour organizations, was entirely negative. With real regret I must express the opinion that no constructive alternatives were put forward on that occasion. If labour has a contribution to make in the fight against inflation, if it has proposals to put forward, it seems to me that a joint parliamentary committee of this House and of the Senate provides the best possible forum for the expression of those views and for their examination by members of this House and of the other place.

In addition, the committee would provide a forum at which management and consumers could state their position, put forward their views and be examined and cross-examined. I hope that on further consideration the labour movement of Canada will take a more positive approach in the longer-term interest of the country as a whole and of organized labour itself.

The government believes that the fiscal and monetary restraints which it has adopted will gradually serve to restore reasonable price stability. The program of voluntary price restraint launched by the Prices and Incomes Commission will, as I said a few minutes ago, to the extent that it is successful reduce the adverse side-effects on unemployment of the fiscal and monetary restraints.

There are already a few encouraging signs that these policies are beginning to moderate the rate of inflation in Canada. I am sure all members of this House, appreciating the impact of inflation especially on those living on low and fixed incomes and the suffering it creates, will join with me in hoping that these early signs are not misleading and that we can, in fact, hope to see a real turn-around in the economy. The greater the success of the supplementary prices and incomes program in helping to reduce these inflationary pressures, the sooner we can adjust our fiscal and monetary policies so as to provide a positive stimulus to economic activity and employment in Canada.

I believe the proposed parliamentary committee has an important role to play, not only in assisting the present program of the commission but also in helping ourselves and the commission to broaden the program and make it more comprehensive and effective.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Mr. Speaker, we have all listened with a great deal of interest to the minister in introducing this resolution. We might refer to it as the gospel according to Mr. Basford. I do not understand his preaching to the labour movement of Canada, on which he lays so much blame for not agreeing to some of the proposals brought forward by his government and by the Prices and Incomes Commission.

We are also getting a little tired of being compared to other countries in the world when it comes to economic problems and inflationary trends. This great nation of ours is not at all similar in terms of size, resources, people and problems, to other countries. I think it is a false premise to compare Canada to any other country in the world. The United States, of course, has ten times the population we have, and if their inflation is greater than ours it is because their population is greater.

Time after time measures are brought forward in this House to deal with economic problems. Some time ago when the minister's department was established it was said to be the great panacea of inflation control. It was going to take hold of those bad businessmen who were putting up prices; it was going to straighten out the labour unions and stop their wage demands. We used this vague term "stability of prices". I do not know that there was ever a period of price stability in this country. There have always been fluctuations up and down, but sometimes prices go up a lot faster than they should. Sometimes those who are to blame for this shuffle the blame on to somebody else and insist that the measures that have been brought forward by the government have had no effect on inflation, on the cost of living, on reducing the number of unemployed or on reducing interest rates. In so many areas of the economy we have the highest percentages we have had for many years.

Returning to the subject of committees and having people working on problems of this type, I was rather interested to read an article that appeared in the Telegram of Tuesday, April 28, written by Dennis Braithwaite. I think there is a lot of truth in what he says. It is headed, "Asking too many fool questions" and goes on to say:

> It is possible to fail through knowing your subject too well, and that is what's happening to us Canadians.
> If we were a little more ignorant of what's going on we might be able to feel something for our country. But every aspect of Canadian life has been so searchingly investigated by royal commissions, parliamentary committees, task forces, polls, surveys, ESP and grandma's ouija board that our minds are clogged with enough undigested data to gag a computer.
> The result is chronic anxiety, inter-regional suspicion and national neurosis. If we were to go on talking about our problems for the next 100 years, which seems entirely likely, we would never regurgitate all the half-truths, myths, faulty statistics and just plain wrong information that's stuck in our collective consciousness. And, in the meantime, all the talk and worry prevents our accomplishing anything or even having a good time.

I should also like to comment on one of the final paragraphs in the article because it could be applicable to this proposed committee:

> Of course, royal commissions are on the way out, too expensive; parliamentary committees, in particular, Senate committees, are the thing today. The Senators, obviously, are keeping themselves busy investigating everything from poverty to the decline of burlesque in order to squelch all this talk about the Senate being a useless appendage that should be abolished.

I am not going to comment on the latter part of this editorial because those gentlemen are going to join in this committee to assist the government to ascertain what is wrong with the economy. As I say, we have had a proliferation of organizations in this area. For example, there is the minister's department which has over 600 employees. This year we also set up a standards branch which, according to a press release issued by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), is an organization set up to protect the buying public and to offer assistance to manufacturers; this is said to be the major benefit of a national standards council.

Mr. Basford: But the official opposition is blocking its passage through the House.

Mr. Howe: This is yet one more organization that is supposed to do great things for the nation, which is what the minister's department was supposed to do. Can the minister claim that unemployment has gone down? Can he claim that prices have gone down or that the pressures on the economy have been reduced since his department came into existence? Probably he has further measures that he hopes will do this, and perhaps this is one that is before us today.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Howe: No, Mr. Speaker, not until I am through. If I may be allowed to continue, it is by results that we judge whether regulations, resolutions and government measures are effective. However, we sometimes wonder why we are in the present situation. I do not think it is always necessary to blame business and labour for it. I believe what the chief of Bell Canada said in one of his statemens, namely, that the problems that we have today are created by the government itself in a great many cases. I should like to quote his remarks, which are contained in a Globe and Mail report of Tuesday, March 3 this year. He said:

> Much of Canada's current fiscal difficulty is due to government programs launched without solidly based estimates of their costs, Robert Scrivener, president of Bell Canada, said yesterday. The situation indirectly causes inflation, he said in a speech prepared for delivery to the Montreal regional council of the Institute of Canadian Bankers.
> "As the costs of these programs have risen, as the administration expense becomes a bigger proportion of their total cost, governments have raised taxes and have thus pre-empted a growing share of the gross national product.
> "This in turn has led to a more rapid deterioration in the purchasing power of money by diverting money from productive use. This inflation in turn pushes up costs."
> Government programs making excessive demands on the gross national product in the name of social welfare are "the very same programs that are doing so much damage to social welfare through the inflation they have largely helped to cause."

Mr. Basford: Why did you vote for medicare?

Mr. Howe: I did not vote for medicare, Mr. Speaker. I fought against the Canada Pension Plan right down the line. However, we know the sort of programs the Liberal Party promises when we are into an election campaign. You might as well have voted against motherhood as vote against the Canada Pension Plan at that particular time, though a lot of people are now having second thoughts about the program. We said both in the House of Commons and in the committee that these sorts of programs are inflationary.

What did we find following the passage of the Canada Pension Plan, Mr. Speaker? The same government had to bring in two taxation measures to assist people who were being abused by the rise in the cost of living as a result of the introduction of the Canada Pension Plan. People had to ask for more money to compensate for all the additional deductions from their pay cheques. This was the reason the cost of goods and services went up. If you continue to make deductions from the amount of money a man can take home, when whether he be a businessman or a labourer the pressures on the economy will increase and get out of control.

The government had the chance in the last budget to reduce taxation. But no, the government brags about the surplus it will have. If the government had removed the 2 per cent surcharge and let labour and business spend it as they wished, instead of as the government wished, or if the government had dropped the 12 per cent tax on building materials which is contributing to the increased cost of building across the nation, it might have assisted the economy. There are so many areas wherein the government could take action instead of setting up committees and commissions and creating new departments of government. The government's fiscal and monetary policy has not worked and it is time it took a second look at some of the things that have happened in the nation during the past two years.

Mr. Speaker, we have been speaking of all these commissions and committees which have been set up. There are many questions on the Order Paper concerning interdepartmental reports. I should like to see some of the interdepartmental reports that are so secret and sacred, because they would provide interesting reading for the members of the opposition since I believe the truth is spelled out in them. We all remember a report that was brought into this House in 1957. We have heard some backbenchers and government members who do not know what went on in those days speak about what happened when we were the government.

Back in 1957 during the first month of that Parliament somebody found a report in the Department of Trade and Commerce. What did that report say? It said that things were not good in Canada in 1957. This was a secret report which nobody was supposed to see. Inadvertently, when the offices were cleaned out, the report was found. That report stated that things were not good in Canada and that we could expect increased unemployment and economic problems all over the nation. We did not create that situation; we inherited it.

In 1957 the policies introduced by the Conservative government got the show back on the road, and by 1963 things were booming. The people of Canada, however, decided they wanted another government. Another government was elected and, as I say, that government is playing with the highest cost of living, the highest interest rates and the greatest unemployment we have had in many years. One of these days there will be a day of reckoning. This proliferation of committees, commissions and reports will prove to be ineffective.

There are some outstanding people serving on the Prices and Incomes Commission. In fact they appeared before the committee last evening and we discussed some of the areas in which they are making studies. Here we are talking about setting up another committee. I wonder whether the minister is aware how difficult it has been to carry on committee work in the past few weeks. In fact, last night when the committee was examining the work of this great commission on prices and incomes there was not a member of the government present, aside from the chairman. When the chairman had a call of nature and had to go out, we had to appoint one of our members as acting chairman. This is an indication of the interest government members have in the work of such a committee.

Someone said he had great respect for the committees of this House. This is one area in which I think Parliament has failed in the past few years. We all remember the days when the estimates were considered in this House, where they were given a thorough study. It is true, as people say, that on the last day or so of a session estimates representing millions of dollars were pushed through. But this happened in the House and every member had an opportunity to participate in the consideration of the estimates. Now, if a member who is interested in the estimates of a particular department should happen to be tied up in another committee he does not have an opportunity to participate in the examination of those estimates. So I believe this government's organization has failed. I believe that in a new Parliament something will have to be done to review the rules so that we can bring back to the House of Commons some of those matters which have been delegated to committees. I do not think some things are receiving a proper examination under the present procedure.

Yesterday morning a committee was studying the estimates of the Department of Supply and Services which supplies goods for the government and this Parliament in the amount of $850 million. How many members were present to consider that matter? There were 7 people present to examine the expenditures of a government department that spends that very great amount of money. Yet the minister has the temerity to stand up and say he has great faith in the committee system. How can such an organization possibly be examined in one hour and a half on one day in one year? It is just not possible to carry out the required examination.

So we come to the matter of this particular committee which is to be set up, a committee which is supposed to study the reports of a commission comprising 70 experts and economists who should be able to do the study themselves. We are supposed to study them. This motion suggests that a special joint committee of Parliament be set up to study the reports of the Prices and Incomes Commission and to report back to Parliament its observations and opinions thereon. In other words, it is to be a committee to report from time to time upon a series of reports, because the terms of reference of the commission do not expire until December 31.

I note that one subject being examined by the commission on prices and incomes is railway freight rate increases. The wording is, "A review is under way on railway freight rates increases". If we go back to the time when the Canadian Transport Commission was established, a great show was made by that commission in respect of taking all subsidies away from the railway. They were going to make the railways self-supporting. What happened? As soon as the subsidies were taken away, what happened to the people of Canada? They found they had to pay higher freight rates for everything they bought.

In this day and age we depend a great deal on the transportation of products from one end of the country to the other and from one part of the world to another. Freight rates represent a tremendous part of the cost of all goods which people buy and a great many of the services they use. So I maintain that the Prices and Incomes people should not be examining this matter; the government should go to the railways and the Canadian Transport Commission and have the freight rate subsidies reinstated.

We introduced a fund of $28 million to keep freight rates on an even keel. We never used the whole amount, but in the four years we were in power freight rates were held at the rate at which they were when we came into power, because we knew if they were increased the effect would be inflationary. Now we have government policy which definitely is inflationary and it is related to the bill which established the Canadian Transport Commission. We have mentioned this matter in the committee and in this House, to no avail.

We can anticipate that the final report of the commission, provided its life is not extended, will appear early in 1972, and the final report of the parliamentary committee upon the final report of the commission will appear some time in the late spring of 1972. That is at least two years from now. Royal commissions and parliamentary committees are often absurd enough in their own right, but to combine them as in this instance is to pile absurdity upon absurdity.

Is the government, in proposing this motion, telling the country that it intends to take no effective action to combat inflation until the Prices and Incomes Commission reports its opinion on the "causes, processes and consequences" of inflation and this new parliamentary committee then reports upon that report some time in the spring of 1972? Does the government believe that if it appoints enough royal commissions, parliamentary committees and task forces, inflation, unemployment and the rising cost of living will steal away? Is this the siren song of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to beguile Canadians, "Manãna, manãna and still more manãna"? Some day the Prime Minister will awaken and find he has run out of manãnas and he will hear the swan song dedicated to him by the Canadian people, "Yes, we have no manãnas, we have no manãnas, today".

I am not one of those who put the Prime Minister down as a member of the pot generation, but I must say he shows an excessive reluctance to get off his pottie. Let us not emulate the childish habit of the Prime Minister. This government motion, proposed by the Prime Minister's colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), whose ends perhaps are somewhat confused, is nothing but an invitation to all of us to sit in solemn silence on our collective potties while the minister, with a loud voice at one end and no responsibility at the other, burps contentedly that all is for the best in this best of all possible worlds.

We propose that if we are to have both a royal commission and a parliamentary committee, they should at least work concurrently and not consecutively. We propose that the terms of reference of the committee be widened to parallel those of the commission. This course has obvious advantages. There is the saving in time; the committee will not sit awaiting reports from the commission. There can be an avoidance of duplication; the committee need not review something that has obviously been thoroughly and exhaustively investigated by the commission.

I ask: With the great retinue of people working for the commission, why do we need to examine their reports? The committee can go on to something else and thus save the time of the commission. It is a fact that the powers of the parliamentary committee are much wider than those of the commission. Both the government and the commission have admitted that the commission is constitutionally hamstrung in the witnesses it can call and the evidence it can force to be produced. The parliamentary committee is not so chained. It can summon whom it likes, investigate whatever it likes within its terms of reference and require the production of whatever evidence it wants. The commission can use the extra powers of the parliamentary committee to assist in its investigations. Equally, the parliamentary committee can use the large and expert staff of the commission without having to build up a large, expensive staff of its own.

Time is of the essence in this inquiry into inflation if the government honestly means to seek the advice of both the parliamentary committee and the commission. By useful cooperation, the parliamentary committee and the commission can shorten the period in which the investigation is made, the interim reports are given and the final report released.

We intend to propose an amendment to this motion. If it is not accepted, it would appear that the government's motion is disclosed as only another roadblock camouflaged as action in the fight against inflation, that it is only another exercise in the gentle art of pottie-sitting.

I move:

That the motion be amended by adding thereto, immediately after the word "appointed", the following:

"to inquire into the causes, processes and consequences of inflation and"

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I assume from the contemplative look on your face that you are disposed to give the matter some thought. I know Your Honour and your advisers will be looking very seriously at Standing Order 47. May I point out that the specific wording of that Standing Order deals with what would appear to be a possible prohibition from making an amendment of this kind when there is reference of a question to Committee of the Whole—this reference is not to Committee of the Whole—to a standing committee, and this reference is not to a standing committee, or to a special committee. With due respect, I suggest that the words "special committee" refer to special committee of the House. It may well be that if it was intended to inhibit this type of amendment with regard to a special joint committee, the words "special joint committee" would be inserted therein.

The people who framed the rule said that you cannot refer it to Committee of the Whole, you cannot refer it to a standing committee, nor can you refer it to a special committee, which can only be a special committee of the House. There is a general rule of law applied here, that the mention of the one is the exclusion of the other, and we are not mentioning special joint committee. I can see a good reason for that. When we have a joint committee, which includes the Senate as well as the House, quite obviously we are beyond the rule, so the failure to include in these specific words the designation of the type of committee to which reference can be made and in respect of which there can be no amendment means it does not cover a special joint committee.

I am sure that my words will commend themselves to Your Honour and that when you have considered the matter you will be quite happy to accept this sound and salutary amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should like to clarify the position of the Chair at this stage. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) was quite right when he indicated that he suspected I have some objections in this regard. The preliminary objections I have do not really lie within the area he discussed. My worry lies in the fact that the amendment may expand the motion before us beyond the contents of the original notice.

I am prepared to hear an argument now. However, I was going to suggest that I would take the matter under advisement so that I could consult the relevant citations and the learned officers of the table before ruling. If it is agreeable—and I do not want to prevent the hon. member for Peace River or the minister speaking, if they so wish—I would prefer to make a ruling after I have had a chance for further consultation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is a reason for my wishing to say a few words at this point, and while I am on my feet I shall disclose my reason. First, may I say that if consideration has to be given to the procedural admissibility of the proposed amendment, I would like to argue that it does have validity. I heard what Your Honour said about enlarging the terms of reference, but I would ask that in your consideration of the matter you look at and study citations 201, 202 and 203 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. These are the citations that set down the general rules about amendments, suggesting that they can leave out certain words, put some other words in, and so on. But these citations also say that there has to be relevancy. I should like to read the following from citation 203:

> The law on the relevancy of amendments is that if they are on the same subject-matter with the original motion, they are admissible, but not when foreign thereto.

It seems to me that in view of the fact that the motion in the name of the minister asks the special committee to consider the reports of the Prices and Incomes Commission, surely anything that comes within the ambit of the work of the Prices and Incomes Commission is relevant. I know of nothing more relevant than the causes, processes and consequences of inflation. Therefore, it would seem to me that the amendment proposed by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat is one that should be considered in order.

However, I said I would indicate my particular reason for intervening at this point. It so happens that the next speaker is to be my friend and colleague from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), and I hope that I am not stealing his thunder if I indicate that he proposes to move an amendment. Until the present amendment has been ruled on, is my colleague's amendment an amendment or a subamendment? If there is no ruling at this point, I should like to suggest that my colleague be permitted to present his amendment subject to Your Honour's ruling on the first one. If the amendment of the hon. member for Wellington-Grey (Mr. Howe) is allowed, then my colleague's amendment could be a subamendment thereto. If the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey is disallowed, then my colleague's proposed amendment could be an amendment to the main motion. Therefore, if Your Honour is not ruling at this point on the validity of the amendment that has been proposed, I hope it will be considered in order for my colleague, at the conclusion of his speech, to present his amendment subject to Your Honour's ruling on the first one.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, as I understand it, it is your wish to consider the amendment of the hon. member for Wellington-Grey (Mr. Howe) as to whether it is in order. If possible, I would like to reserve my position on whether it is in order until that time.

I rise really on the question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) simply to indicate my feeling that the procedure he requests of Your Honour is agreeable to me, namely, that Your Honour reserve decision on the amendment now before the House so that we may have the issues properly before the House for the purposes of debate—even if there has been no decision by Your Honour on the first amendment—and that the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) be allowed to move, as he apparently intends to do very shortly, another amendment.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, might I interpose that this matter could be very simply disposed of if the minister, having been greatly impressed by what was said by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey (Mr. Howe), by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and in lesser vein what is being said by myself, would see fit to accept the amendment of my distinguished colleague and that which I understand is going to be proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). This would simplify matters and show the minister to be the container of a great degree of common sense.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unless there is unanimous agreement to accept the suggestion made by the hon. member for Peace River, I think it would be wiser to follow the course of action suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. There are one or two points I should like to clarify in my mind before ruling on the amendment, but that would not preclude the hon. member for Winnipeg North moving an amendment at the conclusion of his remarks.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Wellington-Grey concluded his speech and sat down while I was reading his amendment. You will recall that I endeavoured to ask a question which he said he would accept at the end of his speech. Would he now allow me to ask my question?

Mr. Howe: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Basford: The hon. member was very critical in saying that my department did not appear to be doing very much. In view of this I wonder why his party, the official opposition, in connection with the inordinately high price of pharmaceutical drugs allied itself with the international pharmaceutical bandits who were charging the high prices and caused a year's delay in the passage of legislation, as a result of which that legislation is only now becoming effective? Further, when we have legislation before the House which would give the department much greater powers to investigate and inquire under the Companies Act and deal with embezzlers, defrauders and those sorts of people, his colleague the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) is violently opposing the passage of the legislation, so that the department cannot acquire this power.

Mr. Howe: I certainly deny the allegations made by the minister, and I do not think it is fitting for a man in his position to make allegations of that type. Certainly the 11 per cent sales tax was taken off drugs, but did it have any effect? It did not, Mr. Speaker, for the simple reason that the inflationary pressures created by the government had eaten up this relief bit by bit until it represented no assistance, and drugs were no cheaper.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it is not surprising to members of the New Democratic Party that the government brings forward the resolution proposed today by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford). When we get the kind of increases in the cost of living which we have had in Canada in recent years, and the kind of complaints which have resulted from them, the government must appear to do something even if it does not really intend to do something. So, we have a resolution proposing another parliamentary committee.

Let me put on the record just what has happened to the cost of living in Canada in recent years. These figures can be found in an interesting discussion of government policy, both monetary and in relation to prices and incomes, prepared by Professor Grant Reuber of the University of Western Ontario. I am sure the minister has these figures in his possession. In 1966 the cost of living went up 3.6 per cent, in 1967 4.1 per cent, in 1968 4.1 per cent, and in 1969 despite the government's alleged program to deal with inflation, the cost of living went up by 4.6 per cent.

That inflationary spiral is continuing. While the government is conducting its so-called campaign against inflation, unemployment is rising at an alarming rate. Let me use the figures for the same month of each year so that nobody can argue that I am trying to exaggerate the situation or to cook the figures, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) suggested the other day when questions were asked of him. Let us take the figures for the months of March during the last four years. In March, 1967, 5.3 per cent of the labour force of Canada was unemployed; in March, 1968, 6.4 per cent of the labour force of Canada was unemployed; in March, 1969, 5.7 per cent of the labour force of Canada was unemployed, and in March of the present year 542,000 people, representing 6.7 per cent of the total labour force, were unemployed.

Increasing unemployment is a direct result of the government's policies which are supposedly designed to deal with inflation. The government's policy for dealing with inflation, and with respect to which the proposed committee will function, is one of voluntary restraint. Let me put on the record what the government and its key officials have said about this policy. I quote from a story by Victor Mackie in the Winnipeg Free Press of December 23, 1969:

> Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau warned Canadians Monday they must join with the federal government in fighting inflation with greater vigor in 1970 or run the risk of a devalued dollar, a destroyed middle class and soaring unemployment.

We have got both higher inflation and soaring unemployment.

The Prime Minister is quoted further:

> "In 1970 . . . we have no choice but to fight inflation . . .
> "We can only get tougher, we will not get weaker," he promised as he sought to impress the press conference with the determination of his government to cope with inflation.
> "Some say the government will get frightened if unemployment goes up as we fight inflation. If they think we will lose our nerve they are wrong. We will not," he said.

He said in the same interview that he would not be afraid of a 6 per cent unemployment rate. He was not afraid, but we now have an unemployment rate greater than 6 per cent. A report in the Globe and Mail of February 3, 1970, about a speech of the governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Rasminsky, says as follows:

> Louis Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, defended Canada's anti-inflation measures yesterday by saying that without the restraints, the situation would have been worse.

The newspaper report goes on as follows:

> On the cost side, the evidence is no more encouraging. Average weekly wages and salaries in Canada continue to show a year-to-year gain in the range of 7 to 7.5 per cent, which was greatly in excess of the trend of productivity increases—

Then the governor is quoted as saying:

> The Prices and Incomes Commission has recently taken an important initiative, which deserves the full support of the whole community.

In other words, the governor was speaking of policies of restraint. The chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission spelled out what these policies mean in an interview with David Crane, as reported in the Globe and Mail of April 24, 1970. The newspaper report says as follows:

> Asked if, following the failure to reach an accord with leaders of organized labor on voluntary restraint, a program including controls was being considered, Mr. Young said people would have to wait and see—
> Mr. Young publicly attacked leaders of organized labor in a Calgary speech earlier this month for their refusal to support the restraint program and said they would consequently have to accept some responsibility for growing unemployment and declining industrial production in Canada.

In his speech today the minister regretted that the two major Canadian trade organizations, the Canadian Labour Congress and the Federation of National Trade Unions, rejected the government's urgings for policies of restraint. Although the minister compared increases in the cost of living that have taken place in various countries—including Great Britain—and in Canada, he did not compare unemployment rates, saying he did not have those available when asked about them.

Well, I happen to have them here. My source is the International Labour Organization Year Book of Statistics for 1969. The seasonally adjusted unemployment rates are set out in it. It lists the percentage of the labour force unemployed in 1969. These are the rates for some of the major industrial countries of the western world: Norway, 0.6 per cent; Germany, 0.5 per cent—in other words, half of 1 per cent—Holland, 0.9 per cent; New Zealand, 1.3 per cent; Australia, 1.4 per cent; Denmark, 1.6 per cent; Sweden, 1.9 per cent.

In the United Kingdom, the country the minister said had experienced a cost of living rise greater than that in Canada, the unemployment rate in 1969 was 2.2 per cent. In Finland the rate was 2.3 per cent; in Italy, 3.1 per cent; in Belgium, 3.3 per cent; in the United States 4.1 per cent. In Canada—I hope the minister is paying attention—the rate was at 4.6 per cent, the highest of all those countries. Is it any wonder that the leaders of the two major labour federations have rejected the government's policies?

There are reasons other than those involving unemployment that lie behind the rejection. I suggest, first, that those organizations have rejected the government's policies because those policies would inevitably, as I have already said, lead to more unemployment. The Prime Minister himself called for higher unemployment when he said he was not afraid of a 6 per cent unemployment rate. Secondly, the government's policies of restraint give no protection to poor people who are working for very low wages, who have fixed incomes, who receive pensions or welfare payments and who are locked for various reasons to fixed incomes. There is no protection for them in the government's policies of restraint.

Thirdly and most importantly, the government's policy of restraint ignores all sources of income but wages. I have challenged the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission again and again, as I challenge the minister, to give one illustration showing that the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission has ever called on any group except the working people, has ever called on any organization such as the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association or any similar organization, to show the kind of restraint which it is demanded that leaders of labour ask their members to show.

May I talk about some of the groups I have just mentioned. Representatives of the medical profession attending the conference of which the minister speaks about so proudly said that profession would not raise its fees. Why shouldn't they agree not to raise their fees? Has any group in Canada enjoyed a greater bonanza than the medical profession has enjoyed in the last couple of years as a result of medicare plans and being able to collect all fees for all the work done? And those fees have been increased.

If the minister wants to see it, I can show him proof that the doctors in my province, Manitoba, have increased their fee schedules in the last two years by over 50 per cent. Has any group of workers increased its pay rates by anything close to 50 per cent in that period? Certainly the doctors offered to hold the line. Having stolen the horse, they are now prepared to lock the barn door. The same thing goes for engineers. Allow me to cite some more examples, Mr. Speaker.

The Globe and Mail in February of this year carried a report prepared by H. V. Chapman and Associates Ltd. on the percentage of executives who earned more than $20,000 in salaries and bonuses. Their incomes in 1969 rose by 9 percentage points over their incomes for 1968, and in 1967 and 1966 there were similar increases. In other words, in those four years executive incomes rose by 40 per cent. I did not hear the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission lecturing the presidents of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce or the Canadian Manufacturers Association and urging them to hold the line on executive salaries.

The University of Toronto professors obtained a unilateral pay increase, as announced on April 25 of this year, for next year of 10 per cent. The professors at York University obtained an increase for next year of 14 per cent. I am not suggesting this is too much, but I have not heard any appeals on the part of the government or the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission to presidents of Canadian universities asking them to hold the line.

Let us also look at the salaries of the top civil servants, the people who are giving advice to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The salary of the governor of the Bank of Canada was recently increased from $50,000 a year to $75,000 a year.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Hold the line!

Mr. Orlikow: The government keeps as much of this sort of thing as possible secret, but I presume that along with the $25,000 increase in salary the governor of the bank obtained a comparable increase in his pension benefits. When the governor of the Bank of Canada lectures ordinary working people to show restraint, I suggest he might begin by showing some restraint himself. The Deputy Minister of Finance has also been quoted as supporting the government's policies of restraint. On September 1, 1963, the Deputy Minister of Finance was being paid $24,000 a year. In September, 1969, the Deputy Minister of Finance was being paid between $37,000 and $40,000. The increase in that seven year period was far supperior to anything the average worker woud have received.

On September 1, 1967, the Deputy Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was being paid $26,500. He is now being paid between $35,000 and $37,000 a year. That is a pretty substantial increase in three years. So it goes on down the list. The deputy ministers are doing very well. I am not complaining. Most of them are probably well worth what they are being paid. However, I suggest that restraint should begin with those who can afford it. If we expect the workers to show restraint, we must set an example. This is not being done by those who are setting the policy.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said he could not understand the program and policies of the NDP in relation to the inflationary spiral which we are encountering. It is not that difficult to understand, but the minister does not want to listen. We reject the policy of the government concerning voluntary restraint in fighting inflation in Canada. We submit that policy is futile. In saying this we are joining the best advisers, some of the most eminent economists, academic and professional, in this country.

I wish to quote from the last annual review of the Economic Council of Canada. This council was not appointed by the NDP; it was set up by this government. Some of its members were appointed by this Prime Minister. I quote:

> Further fiscal and monetary restraint could conceivably result simply in higher rates of unemployment and economic slack with no more than marginal effects on current rates of increase in prices and costs.

That report was issued last September. I say to the minister that the members of the Economic Council were a hell of a lot more correct in their predictions of what would happen than the governor of the Bank of Canada, the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission and the Deputy Minister of Finance, to whom the government listens. The government does not want to listen to its own Economic Council.

I wish to put on record some comments by the best academic economists in this country. I quote from an article which appeared in Toronto Star of April 20, 1970:

> Montreal economist Jack C. Weldon,—

A professor at McGill University.

> —said the policy has resulted in 12 per cent of French-speaking males in Quebec being out of work.
> This will be translated into Parti Quebecois and Creditiste votes in the April 29 Quebec general (election), the McGill University professor warned —and will threaten national political stability.

By coincidence I am speaking on April 29. I wonder whether the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs would care to speculate either publicly or privately about how many hundreds of thousands of votes the Parti Quebecois will get today because of the stupid restrictionist policies being put forward by this government which supposedly believes in one Canada. Professor Weldon goes on to say:

> The government has allowed its prestige to be tied to a goal that was irrelevant and could not be achieved destroying inflation ... and it has abandoned its power to attain a very important goal: A reasonably high level of employment—

Senator Lamontagne, a former cabinet member, a man who had served on a number of royal commissions, recently made a speech in Toronto. This article in the Toronto Star reads in part:

> Senator Maurice Lamontagne, an economist and former Liberal secretary of state, reaffirmed last night his belief, expressed in Toronto last month, that Ottawa's policies demonstrate an "unconscious cynicism" since their main effect is "to reduce employment and curb the development of the weakest spots in our economy."

Later on the article states:

> Mrs. Rosalind Blauer, assistant professor of economics at Brock University in St. Catharines, also disagreed with Trudeau's analysis of unemployment.
> She said Canada is buying very little gain in price stability with major sacrifices in production, and at heavy social cost.
> She argued that pensioners and welfare recipients are the only ones really hurt by inflation, and that the government could compensate these groups for inflation at relatively little cost to the rest of the taxpayers.

That is a concrete suggestion. Of course, the government will not listen because it does not fit into their Hoover-type of economic thinking. We regard the Prices and Incomes Commission as a patsy and frontman for the government. We believe the chairman has forfeited the right to be considered as an objective and honest person dealing with this country's grave social and economic problems. We believe that the present activities of the commission have no effect on inflation. The government is using the commission to do and say things which the government does not have the courage to do. The commission is calling for restraint mainly, if not exclusively, on wages and not on other sources of income such as salaries, rents and dividends. We believe the results of the commission's conference on price stability with business and industry was a complete fraud. The minister talked glowingly about the results achieved there.

I suggest that the commitment which the minister received from the captains of industry to keep prices below increased costs was so conditional as to be almost totally ineffective. Let us look at some of the results before and since the commission held that conference. In my question to the minister earlier I referred to what happened to the price of copper. Since January 1, 1969, the price of copper to Canadian users has increased by 30 per cent. Copper is used in the production of almost every commodity in Canadian industry. For the government to be proud of what they have done in controlling the price of copper would be ludicrous if it were not so serious.

I wish to now deal with the price of nickel, which increased last year by over 25 per cent. What happened when that price increase was announced? The United Steel workers of America, which represents nearly all, if not all, the workers engaged in the production of nickel, called on the Prices and Incomes Commission to hold public hearings. Their call was rejected and ignored. I wish to put on record exactly what happened. I read from the December, 1969, issue of Steel Labor, the official publication of the United Steel workers of America:

> Ottawa's Prices and Incomes Commission are continuing their semi-private "investigation" into steel price increases and wage boosts but have caved in completely in the face of International Nickel's colossal 25 per cent price boost.
> After visiting Canada's steel companies "privately," the Prices and Incomes Commission summoned Steelworkers' representatives to a meeting in Ottawa on Thursday, November 13. Accompanied by CLC secretary Dodge and research director Russ Bell the Steelworkers' group composed of national director Mahoney, research director Milling and research assistant Norton, refused to meet unless the discussions were taken down in detail by a court reporter.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

The minister will gather that they have already had so much experience with the Prices and Incomes Commission that they are not willing to proceed unless there is a court reporter present to make sure they would be reported honestly.

> The steelworkers have agreed to supply—on condition that the information be made public—details about productivity and labour cost improvements. Copies of the data are being supplied to the steel companies. No similar data is being supplied by the companies to the union and no details of discussions with the steel industry have been made public.
> The real cave-in on the part of the federal Liberal administration came when super-corporation INCO, after charging that the recent wage settlement was "inflationary" refused to join in a union request for an investigation into wages and prices and then announced a massive 25 per cent price hike. Ottawa, asked by district director Sefton to investigate the situation, backed off in a rush.
> Rough estimates indicate that the cost of the recent settlement would be less than (Canadian) $86,000,000.
> This was more than offset by the increase of 9 cents per pound announced by INCO prior to 1969 bargaining. Combined with the latest increase, the two price boosts should produce extra INCO revenues valued at more than $700,000,000 (Canadian dollars) during the contract period, enough interest free dollars to finance most of the corporation's projected international expansion program for the same period.

You see, Mr. Speaker, a wage increase of $86 million brings about a price increase which will bring the company $700 million. What does the government do about it? What does the Prices and Incomes Commission do about it? Nothing at all. Is it any wonder that the labour movement is unhappy? Is it any wonder that the labour movement rejects the appeals of the Prices and Incomes Commission?

We have heard about the banks. The banks agreed at the conference not to increase their rates of interest. The interest rate on bank loans has never been as high as it is today. Let me put on record the situation of the banks. I quote from the Globe and Mail of February 25, 1970:

> Aggregate profit—after taxes and appropriations for losses—of the seven largest chartered banks in the year ended October 31, 1969, was more than $157 million. This was a 26.5 per cent increase from the previous year, which was 13 per cent higher than the fiscal 1967 level.

This is an increase of 40 per cent in two years. Is it any wonder that the banks should have agreed very quickly to hold the line? Why shouldn't they? They have already robbed the Canadian people blind. I could go on and talk about the way in which Eatons and Simpsons have increased credit charges, and so on. This is why the labour movement, the economists, the New Democratic Party, reject the work of the Prices and Incomes Commission. The commission's investigations are held in secret. There is no opportunity for the workers in the industry or for the consumers affected to look at the books and examine the submissions made to the commission.

Incidentally, submissions are called for only after price increases have been announced and are put into effect. The review procedures established by the commission are heavily biased in favour of industry and commercial groups.

An officer of the industry concerned is seconded to the commission to perform the analysis. In other words, it is like saying to a robber, "Please come in and look at the books and tell us if you are taking money out of the till." Could anything be more ludicrous?

Finally, the reports of the commission do not contain any detailed documentation to enable them to be analysed. As hon. members know, the commission conducted a survey into the price increases related to tinplate. The report showed that companies can raise their prices and still abide by the letter of the price restraint formula to which they agreed and of which the government and the commission are so proud; they can still make the price increases they have in mind, increases which the commission says are inflationary. Yet nothing can be done.

The minister says he does not understand what we in this party propose. I intend to spell out in clear terms what our policy is, and even this minister will be able to understand provided he has the grade 3 education about which the hon. member for North York (Mr. Danson) spoke earlier today. We call for the disbanding of the Prices and Incomes Commission. We propose its replacement by one which would control the price of key commodities, commodities of basic importance to the Canadian people, while placing restraint on all forms of income, not just on wages as seems to be the main objective of the present chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission.

To achieve equitable distribution of income and to ensure that sacrifices, if necessary, will be made by all levels of society, not just by the poor, we propose a comprehensive incomes policy which would cover all forms of income, that is, it would include profits, rents, interest, professional fees and unincorporated business incomes. If this policy were followed, the government would not be experiencing its present difficulty in securing the support of organized labour. The Prime Minister and the minister have been critical of organized labour because in its submission this year it was not practical; it was negative, it only criticized.

It is not for me to defend organized labour; I am certainly not an official spokesman for them. But I believe it is important to look at the submissions of the Canadian Labour Congress in 1968 and 1969. I am sure one would find in those submissions proposals for an incomes policy. In other words, the Congress of Labour was saying that if the government would place some restraint on other forms of income, they, the congress, would be prepared to support the application of restraint to wage increases affecting organized workers. I imagine they got tired. They found that the government was not interested, that it was not prepared to put the squeeze on those whose salaries were rising rapidly, or on the businessmen who were making more money every year and who are permitted to charge off all sorts of extras, when making up their income tax returns, which working men are not in a position to include. The congress saw that the government was not prepared to put some restraint on the earnings of the professional people I have mentioned. The government is only interested in putting restraint on workers' wages, and this being the case the CLC is not endorsing the incomes policy. A comprehensive incomes policy such as we propose must include the provision of a guaranteed income to avoid injustice and hardship. It must take account of the plight of low-paid workers, disparities between classes of employees and increases in the cost of living.

Let me approach the conclusion of my remarks by telling the minister that if he wants to know what we in the New Democratic Party think should be done specifically to meet the problems of the 1970s, I would refer him to the minority report prepared by members of the New Democratic Party on the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee when it dealt with the subject of interest rates. I should like very briefly to put on the record some of the measures they proposed:

1. We should immediately compensate the victims of inflation by ensuring that welfare benefits rise at least as fast as the cost of living index:

—by abolishing the ceiling of 2 per cent per annum which the Liberal government has imposed on the rise in old age pensions and benefits under the Canada Pension Plan.

—by regular increases in the minimum wage and farm and other primary support prices.

—by requiring private pension plans to be based on best years' earning with a cost of living escalator.

2. Immediate steps should be taken to monitor the allocation of credit by the financial system in Canada.

This would mean that those projects which have some social benefit would get the money they needed, instead of only those that make the most money.

3. The profits of financial institutions resulting from higher interest rates must be stopped.

I have already illustrated what happened to the profits of the banks.

4. In order to control profits of financial institutions, interest rates and credit allocation and to give the central bank a lever that it might use to have greater immediate control over the financial system we propose that all financial institutions engaged in the business of banking be regulated by the Bank of Canada whether they be federally or provincially incorporated.

5. As we indicated earlier, one of the areas where the existing structure of institutions was responsible for price increases in Canada resulted from our trading relationships with the rest of the world. To give us more freedom of action until such time as the world monetary system becomes more flexible we propose that Canada immediately move to a floating exchange rate.

6. Since advertising and promotional costs contribute to inflation by raising the costs and prices of many consumer goods, which in turn, stimulate credit expansion etc.—some form of tax on advertising promotion would have a lot of validity.

7. We reject the present condition in which social capital formation rather than private capital formation must bear the brunt of harm done to the long term capital market by inflation.

The minister has talked about how the provinces at the conference on inflation which was called by the federal government agreed with the federal government. I do not want to say that the minister was not telling the truth, but I do say that it is certainly stretching the truth a long way to say that. Anybody who read the submission of the government of Manitoba to the conference knows that it placed emphasis on the need to look after the plight of those people in need and the need to put public good and benefit ahead of private good and benefit before adopting a policy of restraint. It was only partly agreeing with the federal government's program. I do not want to be unparliamentary, but I say that is really stretching the truth.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Having said that, I propose to move an amendment to the resolution introduced by the minister. This amendment proposes two things. It seeks to amend the resolution on two grounds. First of all, we propose that the Senate be excluded from the committee. Secondly, we propose a substantial widening of the powers of the committee. Without going into detail—some of my colleagues who will be following me will spell this matter out—we object to the inclusion on the committee of members of the Senate, for obvious reasons. We believe it is plain and that the record is clear that there would be an obvious conflict of interest on the part of many members of the Senate. We find it difficult to believe that Senators who are directors of industrial and financial corporations in Canada can be entrusted to protect the consumer's interests in Canada. Let me give one illustration. The chairman of the Banking Committee of the Senate, Senator Hayden, is a director of more than a dozen corporations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I am afraid his time has expired.

Mr. Orlikow: I wonder whether I could take the time to move my amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I should inquire whether there is unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue so he can move his amendment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: For the reasons I have mentioned, I move the following amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the motion be amended, (a) by deleting the words "joint" and "Senate and" from line one; (b) by deleting the words "Joint Parliamentary" from line two; (c) by inserting in line three, after the word "appointed", the words "to inquire into and report upon the trends in the cost of living in Canada and factors which may be contributing to changes in the cost of living:" (d) by deleting from line eleven the words "act on behalf of the House as members of" and by substituting therefor the word "comprise"; and (e) by changing the semicolon after the word "evidence" in line fifteen to a period, by deleting the word "and" at the end of the said line and by deleting the final paragraph of the said motion.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I am not sure what Your Honour's disposition of this amendment will be, but in view of the fact that it is ten minutes to five and that the hon. member for Peace River is anxious to speak, I wonder whether we should defer a ruling on both these amendments at this time. I take the position that both of them are out of order and are not relevant to the motion before the House, but I will advance my reasons later. In the remaining ten minutes—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We go to six. There is no private members' hour.

Mr. Basford: I am sorry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: My proposal is as follows. I think at this time I would be in a position to make a ruling on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey. I would reserve my decision on the second amendment, though having given it a cursory reading I suspect that substantially the same objections will apply. However, in view of its complexity and in fairness to the hon. member for Winnipeg North, I should like to give it the same attention that I gave the first amendment. If the House is disposed to hear my ruling on the first amendment now, I will proceed to give it unless there are some procedural points that hon. members would like to raise.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I would address myself for one moment to the first amendment because I anticipated an objection along another line from that which the Chair was going to consider. If the question whether the amendment departs from the purposes of the original motion is part of Your Honour's thinking, may I address myself to that point for a moment. I think I can express my views simply by saying that if Your Honour is well acquainted, as I am sure you must be, with the terms of reference of the Prices and Incomes Commission—which are engraven upon the hearts of all Canadians—you will realize that the terms of reference are so wide with regard to the whole question of inflation and the cost of living that any special committee of the House and Senate considering reports from the Prices and Incomes Commission would in fact be directing its attention to matters with which the Prices and Incomes Commission is dealing and would be brought, of course, squarely within the additional words proposed by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey, which are "to inquire into the causes, processes and consequences of inflation".

This is what the Prices and Incomes Commission is directed to do under the Order in Council setting it up and under its terms of reference which were added to, I think, subsequently. Consequently, when its reports are received by this special committee, the committee would be bound to inquire into them in total and the inquiry would encompass a wide enough range to deal with what has been submitted by my honourable, learned and distinguished colleague from Wellington-Grey, namely, the causes, processes and consequences of inflation. These words must be assumed to be read into the motion to start with. My hon. friend in simply correcting the omission of the drafters failed and is putting in those things which will engage the attention of the joint committee if it is in fact set up.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, we take the position that the amendment is out of order for the reason that it is not relevant to the motion suggested by the hon. member pursuant to citation 203 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. There is merit in the argument that a general inquiry should not be held and that the committee should be limited to the reports of the Prices and Incomes Commission.

If the amendment should be ruled to be in order, I would debate the merits or demerits of the amendment. It would seem to me, however, that to say it is relevant and in order would be to say that if we had before us a motion that a committee be established to consider the annual report of the CNR, this committee would be allowed to examine the over-all transportation policy of Canada. That would not be relevant to a study of the annual report of the CNR by a committee. The same thing would apply if the annual report of Air Canada was being referred to a committee and someone should move that the whole air policy of Canada be examined. I do not think this would be relevant to the consideration of the report. I submit that the motion is out of order because it goes beyond the original motion and is not relevant to it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, although I intervened earlier and indicated my support for this amendment procedurally—and I also support its substance for that matter—I should like to say a few more words before we have a ruling from the Chair. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has at least done us the courtesy of making clear why he thinks the amendment is out of order. He says that in his view it is out of order because it is not relevant to the motion now before us. I find it awfully hard to understand how an inquiry into the causes, processes and consequences of inflation is not relevant to reports of the Prices and Incomes Commission. What in heaven's name is that commission doing if it is not conducting studies in this very area?

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I might take a moment to place on the record the relevant part of the motion as it stands and then to give it as it would read if the amendment were accepted. The motion as it stands calls for a committee to be "appointed to consider reports of the Prices and Incomes Commission and such other related reports or papers as may be referred to the committee". If the amendment of the hon. member for Wellington-Grey were accepted, the motion would read that such-and-such a committee be "appointed to inquire into the causes, processes and consequences of inflation and to consider reports of the Prices and Incomes Commission and such other related reports and papers as may be referred to the committee". It seems to me the insertion of the words "placed before the House" by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey would not do any violence whatsoever to the law of relevancy. If my hon. friend were to argue that the words are not needed because the authority is already there, he might have a point, except I do not think that would interfere with its procedural validity.

On the other hand, it would seem to be very clear that what is being sought by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey is relevant to what is before us in the motion of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I wonder if I might take a moment longer to spell out those portions of Beauchesne to which I alluded earlier. I would draw Your Honour's attention to citation 201 which gives the general rationale for amendments and says in the concluding paragraph at the top of page 169 as follows:

> A motion may be amended: (a) by leaving out certain words; (b) by leaving out certain words in order to insert other words; (c) by inserting or adding other words.

There is no problem there. The hon. member for Wellington-Grey takes advantage of part (c) and proposes to insert certain other words. I realize that this must be read in the light of the other rules on the subject. Citation 203 (1) states:

> It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed. Every amendment proposed to be made either to a question or to a proposed amendment should be so framed that if agreed to by the House the question or amendment as amended would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

One reason I read the motion as it would read if it were amended is so that the consistency and intelligibility of it would be quite clear. Then we come to the other part of citation 203 (1) which states:

> The law on the relevancy of amendments is that if they are on the same subject-matter with the original motion, they are admissible, but not when foreign thereto.

Then there is a bit about exceptions having to do with amendments going into supply or ways and means. That sentence of course can be left out of further editions of Beauchesne, and let him who is interested take note. Then I draw attention to the fact that there are certain other observations. For example, citation 203 (5) says:

> An amendment was ruled out because it raised a new question which could only be considered on a distinct motion after notice.

This motion does not raise a new question. It just seeks to make perfectly clear that the committee in considering the reports of the Prices and Incomes Commission has the authority to inquire into something that is part of the work of that committee, namely, the causes, processes and consequences of inflation.

Therefore, it does seem to me that this amendment should be allowed. If I am pressing this, it is because I have seen a good many attempts to amend motions setting up committees turned down on procedural grounds. I just do not think it is right in terms of the philosophy or in terms of the processes of Parliament that if a proposal is made to set up a committee—the proposal being made by the government—the only choice we have is to take it or leave it, that there is no opportunity to alter that on the floor of the House. I should like to go back to citation 201, part of which reads as follows:

> The object of an amendment may be to effect such an alteration in a question as will obtain the support of those who, without such alteration, must either vote against it or abstain from voting thereon, or to present to the House an alternative proposition either wholly or partially opposed to the original question.

As I say, I do not think it is in keeping with the parliamentary process that once the government has proposed a committee and set out its terms of reference there should be nothing we can do about it but vote yes or no. I agree with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that there are limits, that if there is a proposal to discuss some aspect of the CNR you cannot drag into it the CPR. I do not agree with what he would not allow to be included under that heading, but I agree there are limits.

I submit, however, that the amendment of the hon. member for Wellington-Grey is well within those limits. I do not want to suggest that there is any weakness in my argument, or in that of the hon. member for Peace River. I do not want to leave any thought that Your Honour can do anything other than rule this amendment in order. But while I am on my feet I should like to make the point that if this amendment is ruled out of order, it does not necessarily follow that all of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North is also out of order. That amendment is like this one in one respect, in that it modifies the terms of reference part of the motion. But there is something else in it altogether, that is, the proposal that instead of its being a committee of both Houses it should be a committee of this House only.

I hope, therefore, that whatever ruling Your Honour makes on this amendment—and I hope it will be favourable—we can have another go at the procedural aspect of the amendment proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank hon. members for their contributions. As I indicated earlier, my initial misgivings lay on the central point that has been discussed by all three hon. members, namely, whether this amendment raises a new and substantive question or whether it is simply an amplification. The hon. member for Peace River argued that it was simply a clarification of the motion, and he drew my attention to the terms of reference of the Prices and Incomes Commission. Unfortunately, I do not have the terms of reference of the Prices and Incomes Commission before me and therefore I cannot use them in trying to decide on the procedural validity of the amendment.

I must say I have much sympathy for the position taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in his general proposition that amendments should not always be ruled out of order on procedural grounds. There may be a higher argument, referred to as the political process, which should allow for a greater degree of flexibility, and he may have a very good point. But I am not in a position to achieve that higher purpose by way of a ruling. That is something that a committee of the House will have to look into, and I think it is a perfectly valid point.

One of the most difficult things for a Speaker is to be caught in the position of ruling out amendments proposed by hon. members. However, unfortunately, from time to time this is the position in which we find ourselves, and we are bound to be guided by the precedent and citations we have available to us.

In trying to decide whether in fact this is a new or substantive question, for which notice should have been given, or an amplification, I consulted the motion and the operative section seems to me to be the following:

> —the Joint Parliamentary Committee on price Stability, be appointed to consider reports of the Prices and Incomes Commission, and such other related reports or papers as may be referred to the committee.

That seems to be a very specific provision of the motion. The amendment is to amend that motion to include the following, "to inquire into the causes, processes and consequences of inflation".

Faced with that, and without the benefit of the terms of reference of the Prices and Incomes Commission before me, I have had to decide, and I have decided, that in fact this is virtually a new, substantive question. Having made that decision, I was then required to consult previous rulings by Speakers, and also Beauchesne. I have here one ruling which combines both the citations from Beauchesne which I was going to use, plus previous rulings. It is a ruling given by Mr. Speaker Michener on December 7, 1962, which came about as the result of a point of order raised by a distinguished member from the province of Alberta. I will read parts of his ruling:

> On the matter of whether this amendment can be received at all, I would draw hon. members' attention to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 291—

That is the citation I was going to use in dealing with this amendment.

> "When the House is considering a motion, of which notice has been given, for the appointment of a select committee, a member cannot move in amendment that the committee be given wider powers than those which were set down in the notice".

Later in his ruling Mr. Speaker Michener quoted a previous ruling by Mr. Speaker Macdonald, and I would like to put this on the record as well. It reads as follows:

I could give the hon. member many more citations and rulings by Speakers. There is one by Mr. Speaker Macdonald which appears in Journals for April 4, 1951, page 243. He ruled that "an amendment cannot be moved giving the committee wider powers than those which were set out in the Notice of Motion".

Then, there is another ruling of Mr. Speaker Macdonald's on November 2, 1951, as contained in the Journals, page 67. He said, and I quote:

"I might say at this time that if the Minister himself proposed an amendment which would widen the terms of the resolution I could not allow it to stand unless it was with the unanimous consent of the House".

It seems to me that I am faced with substantially the same situation today and I must say, albeit with regret, that I must rule the amendment inadmissible on the grounds I have cited.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I now assume that Your Honour is taking under further advisement the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As I suggested earlier, out of courtesy to the hon. member for Winnipeg North I should give at least the same amount of thought to his amendment as I did to the first amendment, and I will later be in a position to rule on the motion before the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Since there are two subjects in it, maybe you should give twice as much thought to it.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I will consider Your Honour's admonishment. I realize now in which direction you will be leaning when we consider the amendment. Your Honour will note that I rose very slowly. I thought that surely a member on the government side would come to the aid of the minister. There he sits forlorn, lonely and isolated.

We have in the House eight members of the government party, the largest number it has had at any time this afternoon since we began considering this motion. Not one of those eight members saw fit to rise in support of the proposal which the minister brought before the House. A short while ago we saw here the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto). Now we see the hon. member for York West (Mr. Givens) and the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker). Surely hon. members coming from an area where there is a very decided interest in the effect of inflation will, before this debate is completed, stand up and tell us that they support the unusual and extraordinary proposal put forward by the minister and contained within the motion.

As I say, I am shocked that the minister cannot at this time dredge up any support from his party for this motion. One of the reasons might well be that the motion is something of a fraud, something like the department which the minister has the honour to head. Apart from those orthodox aspects which were previously the subject of other departmental activity, I think it is a department which was conceived in fraud, born in shame and nourished under hypocrisy. All this time the minister and his predecessor who first engaged the attention of the public and of this House in connection with this department have attempted to persuade people that it had a function, that it would guide the poor, unfortunate consumer through all the problems which were envisaged as facing him during the course of the next few years.

It is a department, Mr. Speaker, which is engaged in obtaining by false pretences $10 million from the people of Canada—the department of false pretences to the extent of $10 million—and I am of course excluding from the departmental estimates those items which deal with the other orthodox or regular functions of the department which were being dealt with previously by other departments. In looking through the annual report I discover that one of the main additions to it is the "Department of Information and Public Relations." I quote:

During the fiscal year 1968-69 the Information and Public Relations Branch added two components to its organization, a media relations division and an editorial division.

The media relations division was established to co-ordinate relations with all news media in Canada through continuous meetings with members of the media, press conferences, interviews, official releases and background material on the legislation and activities of the department.

It goes on and on for another four or five paragraphs. This is a pretty good indication of the proof of the charges which I have levelled against the minister, not as an individual, not as a member but in his responsibility in administering the affairs of this department which adds nothing to the protection of the consumers of our country. That has been carried forward, Mr. Speaker, in the terms of the motion before us, supported and reinforced by the fact that the minister refused to accept my suggestion that he might well agree to incorporate into the terms of the motion the amendment offered by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey (Mr. Howe).

Your Honour has made a ruling on that amendment. Of course we accept the ruling, but still I point out it is wise for the minister, if he wants a committee that will do a valuable, useful job, to consider that amendment between now and the conclusion of this debate, reviewing, reflecting and contemplating so that he may well come to the decision that the amendment offered by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey will add strength and sinew to this motion. As it stands now, Mr. Speaker, after the rejection of this amendment I find it very difficult to see anything useful in the committee. The motion reads:

That a special joint committee ... be appointed to consider reports—

It is limited to considering these reports.

—of the Prices and Incomes Commission—

That is pretty strict wording; there are pretty strong limitations on what the functions of this joint committee will be, even strengthened by the addition of members of the other place, which of course is an issue which hon. friends to my left will deal with at a later time. The word "consider" is very restrictive when we consider what the committee will be able to do.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Baldwin: I thought I might be asked a question. Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the fact that before the hon. member for Winnipeg North moved his amendment the hon. member for Peace River suggested to the minister that he might accept both amendments, does that still stand? In other words, will the members of his party support us in cutting the Senate out of this operation?

Mr. Baldwin: Not at this stage, Mr. Speaker. At the time I spoke I was not aware of the full content of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Had you no faith?

Mr. Baldwin: I sometimes have faith in the hon. member but not always in the views expressed by his party. Occasionally we are ad idem but there are times when we are not. In addition to considering reports of the Prices and Incomes Commission, the committee is authorized to deal with——such other related reports or papers as may be referred to the committee—

The committee is emasculated so far as its freedom of movement is concerned. It is only to consider parts of the PIC and such other matters as may be referred to it. We all know how these committees operate, and we know that it is only at the instance of the government that this special joint committee will have any authority, any right, any jurisdiction to consider issues related to this extremely serious and dangerous question of inflation. It is only when the government sees fit to bestow, out of its generosity, those rights on the committee that it will have an opportunity to do so. What use is this committee, inhibited, restricted, tied closely to the PIC reports and whatever else the government wants to give it? Under those circumstances I find it very difficult to support the motion. I will have to give it very careful thought before this debate is concluded.

I divide my argument into two parts. I deal with the whole question of committees and the powers of committees. These are questions that must be considered. Any member who comes to a decision on this question must first direct his attention to the value of a committee of this kind, or of any committee. To illustrate my point I wish to quote briefly from an editorial which appeared in the Edmonton Journal of Monday, April 27, 1970. It is collaterally relevant to this issue and to my argument because it deals with the powers of government and the opportunities of committees such as this to influence the operations of the government. Although the editorial happens to mention my name, that is only incidental. I quote:

Inside and outside Parliament, the Conservative opposition, notably Mr. Gerald Baldwin of Peace River, has mounted a campaign against what it sees as an alarming trend toward authoritarianism in the Trudeau government.

The action of cabinet ministers in attacking Auditor General Maxwell Henderson for his exposé of government waste, the white paper on tax reform, the setting up of Information Canada, and more have provided ammunition for Conservative critics.

But a pertinent question is whether the Conservatives are winning public support by attacking the growing power of government at the expense of Parliament.

The editorial then goes on to discuss in some detail the rather extraordinary questionnaire circulated in the United States seeking the views of people in that country to this and related questions, which to me indicated the most alarming movement, if the response to the questionnaire is correct, toward strong, authoritarian, dictatorial government at the expense of the public and its representatives, that is, the Congress in the United States and Parliament in Canada. That goes right to the root of the issue here.

Why have a joint committee if it is not to have any real function, if it cannot act effectively, strongly and diligently, and whenever required have the requisite degree of flexibility to direct its attention to all the issues surrounding inflation? I am not going to take the time now to attack the Prices and Incomes Commission and what it has done. I haven't much faith in what it has done or what it is going to do. I think it is simply a matter of the government having established a lightning conductor to steer away from the government some of the wrath and rage of people who have been hurt, who have been damaged and who have been injured by continuing inflation and by the way in which the government is dealing with it by calling upon the unemployed, the oppressed, the disinherited, and the poverty-stricken farmers to bear the full brunt of this war against inflation.

I will deal with that later. I want to direct my attention to this question: What is the value of setting up a committee of this kind? In view of the very rigid position the government has taken, as illustrated by the objection to the amendment moved by my colleague, I can think of very little that can be effectively done by the committee. The government is growing stronger and more powerful, as both speakers who preceded me pointed out. The establishment of task forces of specialists and the tremendous building up of the monolithic apparatus of the Prime Minister's office and of the Privy Council give me cause for concern.

We in this House could have in our hands a very effective and useful means of attacking this trend. I do not suggest that some commissions are not essential. Governments must be strong, powerful and flexible if they are to move rapidly in dealing with emergencies and situations of a crisis character which, in the kind of world we live in today, will be more and more evident. Although I do not like these powers in the hands of government, I feel that we will have to live with them. Yet why, in the name of heaven, must this Parliament every day pass over to the government extensive powers? I will not go back over the debates of the last two or three days, but what has been happening illustrates the extent to which this House is being asked, in breach of its plain duty and responsibility to the people of Canada, to give to those who sit on the treasury benches power to deal with the lives, property, freedom and economic rights of the people of Canada.

Last September the report of the Committee on Statutory Instruments was brought before the House. Had that report been implemented even partially I should have experienced less difficulty in accepting what has been happening. The report of the Special Committee on Statutory Instruments—it was a very carefully drawn up, well documented, unanimous report by members from all sides of the House—pointed out the grave dangers which are evident in the operation of certain tribunals, ministerial task forces, Crown corporations and those emanations of government which have seized and are now exercising greater power.

The report of the special committee illustrated ways and means by which we might deal with that matter. It was brought in with loud hosannas. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and the chairman of the committee told us that at long last Canada, which had been delinquent in this field, would have some means of dealing with the excessive powers of government.

We were approaching the tag-end of the session. I have on several occasions asked the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) and the Prime Minister, in the House and outside, what the government intended to do about this report and whether it intended to implement all or any part of it. I venture to say that the government will make no attempt to implement any part of this report. There will be no means by which members of the House will have any measure of freedom in telling their constituents—and they should have this right—and the people of Canada what are the proposals of the Prices and Incomes Commission. I mention that body in order to bring myself within the relevant terms of this motion.

How, then, can we stand idly by and listen to the minister in a glib and devious way attempting to suggest that what the government is attempting to do here will be very nice for the people of Canada? Until there is some means by which the Parliament of Canada in general and we in this House in particular, have the opportunity of telling our people what they must be told, I think we should beware. It is the business of the opposition to oppose generously, properly and in a constructive way. But surely hon. members on the government side must have some qualms, some fears, as to what they are doing to the people of their country when they so docilely permit the government to have these powers.

I have grave doubts about this matter and cannot be convinced, having read the motion as it now stands, that anything useful can come out of it, particularly after the minister repudiated the very sensible suggestion we made which would have permitted a more intelligent, wider and more constructive approach to be taken by the committee in dealing with the recommendations and reports of the Prices and Incomes Commission.

Surely the members of this House who are to be on the committee, members who have a direct liaison with the people they represent, who travel from place to place in Canada and who, not only in terms of interest but in terms of self-interest wish to find out what people are thinking about inflation and the various reports and recommendations of the Prices and Incomes Commission, should be given the right to make recommendations to this House through the medium of this committee, whether or not the government wants them to do so. Yet the government is saying by this motion and by what has been indicated by the minister, "No; you will not be allowed to do that. You will only be allowed to deal with and consider the reports of the Prices and Incomes Commission and such other matters as we in our graciousness and magnanimity entrust you to deal with."

Who could have confidence in a committee of that kind? For this reason alone I would be very dubious of the value of the reports. I hope that before a final decision is made by the Chair on the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) there will be a change on the part of the government, that the minister who is inflexible may become flexible, that the minister who is now unreasonable may become reasonable and will accept at least that part of the amendment which corresponds to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey, which would give more teeth to this committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hope the hon. member will not retreat. I hope he will ask the minister to accept all of the amendment.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated my position. Mind you, the hon. member is very eloquent. Of course, we in this party are always prepared to listen to reasonable arguments. However, we do not hear them too often, except when they come from our own ranks.

What about the value of the committee itself? The minister referred to some universal recognition given at the recent federal-provincial conference but he was very selective and very shrewd in his statement. He did not read from the statement of conclusions dated February 17, 1970, which by coincidence I happen to have in my file, when painting a glowing picture of the acceptance by the federal-provincial conference of this proposition and the validity and value of the Prices and Incomes Commission. He forgot to read what appears on page 3, which is as follows:

> The conference confirmed the determination of the federal and provincial governments to co-ordinate and renew efforts to bring back price stability and sustained economic growth and social progress throughout Canada.

I can accept that part; this is what the minister had in mind. I continue:

> At the same time, the conference recognized that inflationary pressures were distributed unevenly across the country, and that some parts of Canada were suffering from unemployment or lack of development as well as from inflation.

As Your Honour well knows, that fact is recognized in a province not so far from this city where today the voters are coming to a decision. Some parts of Canada are suffering from unemployment and a lack of development as well as from inflation.

> In view of this, it was recognized that anti-inflationary policies should be applied as far as possible in a way which would not add to the difficulties of regions which were experiencing high unemployment or economic problems.

The Prime Minister should have that passage read to him every day. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) should read and understand it. He sat in at that conference, yet he is ignoring the conclusion to which he as a member of the conference gave credibility and acceptance.

> In this connection, some Premiers maintained that, at the same time as broad anti-inflationary measures are carried out, the federal government should take such actions as would offset any negative effects on the economies of slow growth areas, and which, with additional federal input, would further help the basic problems of regional imbalance of the Canadian economy.

Why did the minister not read that into the record? Those of us who attended some of the meetings as observers noticed that this was the greatest concern to the Premiers of the provinces. The minister conveniently forgot to read that passage into the record. This is what was worrying the representatives of the regional areas, in this case the Premiers. This is what is worrying many of us in this House, both as Canadian citizens and Members of Parliament representing regions. I am greatly concerned about the effect of the government's anti-inflationary program on the people of my constituency in northern Alberta.

Some provinces expressed the view that the federal government must give leadership—

God help us! Where are we going to find this leadership?

—in solving the inflationary situation, and British Columbia and Alberta suggested that the federal government should decrease or eliminate certain taxes, particularly the indirect sales tax and tariffs, to reduce some of the current pressures on prices in Canada.

What indication do we have that the government is seriously contemplating this suggestion?

Mr. Basford: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Baldwin: I would be delighted.

Mr. Basford: In view of the remarks the hon. member has just made, can he explain why the chief financial critic for the opposition, on the night of the recent budget advocated an increase in some tariffs?

Mr. Baldwin: It may well be that the financial critic had something in mind at that time. I am talking about the proposals of the federal-provincial conference which received approval from the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance and to which their signatures are attached. The government is sitting in the driver's seat. They have said to the people of Canada, "Trust us. We will look after you. We will do the things essential to bring you happiness, prosperity and a just society". Why is the minister not attempting to persuade his colleages who were present at that conference to implement these very specific proposals irrespective of what anyone else says? If the colleagues of the minister suggest that, they will have my support and the support of a great many members of this House and people from all over Canada. I continue quoting:

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Some first ministers also stressed the importance of ensuring that governments do not over-react to inflation to an extent which could lead to widespread unemployment and recession, particularly since a number of economic indicators already point to the possibility of higher unemployment and slower growth in 1970. A concern was also expressed that emphasis needs to be given to continued and expanded productivity and economic growth.

How much more hypocrisy can this country stand, Mr. Speaker? The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance said at a formal meeting with the first ministers of the provinces of Canada that this is what the country needs. They said that they believed in this. What do we now see with regard to unemployment? I do not need to go into that. Every day in this House members, particularly in the opposition, plead with the government, pointing with apprehension and alarm to what is happening in their regions and provinces. All they receive is a cold, uncompassionate and calculated indifference from the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance.

For these reasons I have the greatest difficulty in giving any support to this motion which does not promise much for the people of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not know the disposition of the House, but I am in a position to make a ruling on the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North, unless hon. members prefer me to wait in order that they may argue it procedurally later. I do not want to force any ruling on the House at this time. I am in a position, though, to give my ruling.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In the hope and confidence that my previous arguments persuaded Your Honour to treat this amendment with more tenderness than the last one, I would agree that Your Honour might give your ruling now.

Mr. Basford: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I was very impressed with the force and cogency of Your Honour's reasons in connection with the first amendment. The second amendment goes much further than the first amendment, and Your Honour's forceful and cogent ruling on that amendment surely applies with double impact to this amendment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Even if that is true, Mr. Speaker, surely it applies only to that part of the amendment that has to do with the terms of reference. Nothing has been said today that questions the validity of that part of my colleague's amendment which suggests this should be a committee of this House only, rather than a committee of both Houses.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am not sure what I should say about the contributions of hon. members. I make the point which I think is anticipated, if not obvious, to all hon. members. It is that essentially the same objections I had to the first amendment apply to part of the amendment presented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. I quote section (c) of the amendment:

> (c) by inserting in line three, after the word "appointed", the words "to inquire into and report upon the trends in the cost-of-living in Canada and factors which may be contributing to changes in the cost-of-living;"—

My objections to that are the same as the objections I had to the earlier amendment. I again refer hon. members to citation 291 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. However, there are other parts to the amendment. In considering that I must again quote Beauchesne, citation 293, toward the end of the citation. It reads as follows:

> When an amendment is irregular in one particular, the whole of it is not admissible and must be ruled out of order.

I am therefore obliged to rule that the amendment before me is out of order. This does not preclude at a later date the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, if it is his disposition, moving an amendment which would contain those provisions of the present amendment, minus the section that I find objectionable. For these reasons I rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I say on our behalf that we accept that course of action, namely, that if we wish to move the part that is not out of order, we can do so at a later stage. However, is it not also the prerogative of the Speaker to suggest from the chair that an amendment be altered so as to bring it in order? I wonder if Your Honour considered that the offensive part be eliminated and that the rest of the amendment stand? We are in Your Honour's hands. We are prepared to do it either way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Frankly, I had not considered that option. I was not sure whether it was available to the chair. I suggest precedurally it might be more correct if the hon. member will follow the other course, namely, someone else from his group might move the amendment, minus the section to which I object, at a later stage.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We always do what Your Honour suggests.

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I am more than pleased to have an opportunity to speak for a few minutes on the motion of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford). While I am dealing with the subject matter, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of questions I would like to pose.

I had the privilege of spending some time in the committee which studied the estimates of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I was at times disappointed in the attitude of some of the chief officers of that department who seemed to lack the answers, or were not prepared to give them to the committee. It appears the minister has now appointed more heads to this new department than one would normally find on a western ranch. Some 70 of them, I understand, are highly-paid officers. When members on a committee ask questions, one would think they would be entitled to get some kind of answer.

To a large extent the fault lies with the committee set-up; there is no way of exercising any pressure on a department or on its officials to ensure that answers are given. As long as I stay in this House I shall continue to fight to bring back into this chamber the study of departmental estimates by the whole House.

I believe the government is over-reacting to the issue of inflation. In this connection I for one, made alternative proposals to Dr. Young and others, proposals which they were not prepared to accept. Indeed, they were reluctant even to comment on them. One of the more serious difficulties facing this country is the shortage of housing. Some of us tried to deal with this question in the committee, with Dr. Young present, to determine whether any attempt had been made by the commission or by any other branch or agency of government to discuss with the municipalities what action the government should take in connection with land acquisition. Dr. Young thought this was beyond the scope of his authority and declined to elaborate.

Why should we approve this motion to set up a committee of both Houses to report from time to time its observations and opinions, and to send for papers, persons and records, to sit during adjournments, and so on? What is the reason for this request? I mentioned a few moments ago that there are 70 highly-paid officials employed by the department—and there are more to come. This is a complex organization in itself. Why should a joint parliamentary committee be appointed with power to call for witnesses, papers and documents, to conduct research, and then pass the information on to a department which is already established to do this very work? To me, it smacks of additional control of our economy.

I have never particularly favoured joint committees. They tend to become authoritative and hard to handle. I do not believe the recommendations which have been made so far even by committees of our own House of Commons have been accepted by the government, unless the government had already made up its mind to do so. I do not believe a joint committee will get the necessary answers. One of the questions put to Dr. Young was along these lines: What has the department done in the light of information available for some months now, to the effect that roughly 80 per cent of the union contracts in Canada become renegotiable in 1970?

I wanted to know what steps had been taken in light of the fact that the unions have turned down the minister's request for wage restraint. I do not believe a joint committee or any other committee of Parliament will be able to deal with this issue to the satisfaction either of hon. members or of the minister. I should like to know whether the committee which is to be set up would have the power to call the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) before it to explain government policy in regard to one of the problems which has arisen in relation to housing, namely, the continuance of the tax on building materials.

We pursued this line of questioning in the committee, as the minister knows, and Dr. Young's answers on the subject were extremely vague. It puzzles me why we should wish to set up a new committee to consider inflation and the spiralling cost of living, and then leave on the statute books a tax of a kind which directly affects one of the most important industries of Canada. To me, this does not make sense.

[Mr. Skoreyko.]

In 1969 the housing industry reported a rise in the cost of housing of something like 6.9 per cent. If the minister intends to take serious steps to reduce costs, he should approach his task step by step. At one time I asked the minister—if I did not, I apologize I might have asked Dr. Young—whether, if the minister was not prepared to let competition find its own market levels, he would tell us what objection the government had to instituting immediate wage and price controls, as was done in wartime, for four or five years or until the economy had stabilized.

Personally, I cannot see anything wrong with this type of measure. We experienced reasonably good years during the 1940s, during the last war. It would at least assure one thing to the people of Canada, including the business community and people in the work force, namely, that the price of commodities would remain stable for a certain period. It would give business some assurance that their profits would remain reasonably stable over a given period. It would control rents. It would also control land and housing costs. I can see very little objection to compulsory wage and price controls.

My argument is that although the administration of such a program might be difficult, it would be no more difficult than trying to administer this kind of department, particularly in light of the fact that labour groups in the nation have said no to the minister's request for restraint. Although business has not said so, it has not done much in the way of practising restraint.

I do not think it is fair for the government to delve into the private operations of companies. Neither do I think it is fair to set up a bureaucracy made up of so-called paper-tigers supposedly to give the economy some sort of stability. I have before me an article from the Vancouver Province which reads in part as follows:

> If the average citizen came away from 1969 with the impression that the federal government hadn't actually done much to protect him from exploitation by business and the vagaries of life . . . well . . . he isn't that far wrong.
> But there are a stack of government moves just around the corner that should mesh well with the consumer revolt, the public outcry against environmental pollution and concern against galloping inflation.
> Yet, as we enter 1970, Canadians must face this sober check list:

Then follows a list of problems that the country has been facing for a number of years. Approximately a year and a half ago the minister set up this new department which was going to cure all these ills within a very short time. Therefore, I ask the minister: Before we set up this kind of committee, would he tell the House exactly what he expects the committee to do above and beyond those responsibilities which fall within the minister's own department? What can the committee do, how will it be doing it, and what effect will it have?

I cannot see how a joint parliamentary committee that would sit on a year around basis will solve what the minister has pointed out is a very serious problem. I do not know what the committee's main function will be. Is it going to call before it representatives from General Motors in order to find out next year's price of Cadillacs? What is this committee expected to do that could not be done by the department as presently constituted?

For example, there is the service and information branch, and the research branch. I presume that the research branch could research costs and potential price increases in any given industry. I suppose that the operations branch is responsible for the administration of the other smaller branches that are spread across the country. The function of the compliance branch, I presume, is to see that when the government asks a corporation not to increase the price of its commodities in a given year, the corporation so complies.

If that is the case, why do we need a joint parliamentary committee to do the work that these various departments should in fact be doing? We also have the standards branch, in regard to which I ask the same question: Does the minister expect the joint parliamentary committee to call before it representatives of manufacturers from across the country and give to them certain standards that they should follow? That is not the responsibility of a committee. I can see very little purpose in approving this resolution.

I see it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 30, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CAMBODIA—CONSULTATION BY UNITED STATES WITH CANADIAN GOVERNMENT ON AMERICAN SUPPORT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs who I would have thought would not find it necessary to be in the province of Quebec today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: So perhaps I could address it to the Prime Minister—oh, the minister has arrived.

Mr. Baldwin: The late Mr. Sharp.

Mr. Stanfield: I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question relating to Cambodia. In view of the special relationship which we assume exists between Canada and the United States and the fact that Canada is a member of the International Control Commission in Indochina, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether there was any consultation with the government of Canada prior to President Nixon's announcement yesterday of United States air and technical support in Cambodia?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the Opposition knows, the Cambodian government asked the International Control Commission to leave Cambodia. The answer to his direct question is that there was no consultation.

CAMBODIA—REACTIVATION OF INTERNATIONAL CONTROL COMMISSION AND GENEVA CONFERENCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs could tell the House what progress has been made in the active negotiations that the Prime Minister assured the House on April 17 were being held with the other members of the commission, India and Poland?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have had consultations not only with the members of the International Control Commission but while I was in France the Foreign Minister, Mr. Schumann, discussed his idea of reviving the Geneva Conference or of holding a meeting of all of the countries concerned. We have talked with the British government about this. We have had some consultation with other governments to try to see how we might play a useful part. We have made it very clear in connection with the International Control Commission that we would not be prepared to return to Cambodia if we were asked to return unless agreement were reached by all the parties as to the functions of the International Control Commission. We see no point whatever in returning to the kind of futile exercise which prevailed before the Cambodians asked us to leave.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs could tell us what is the status of negotiations with regard to a new Geneva Conference? What prospects are there, in brief, of such a conference being held?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not think they are very good at the moment. There has not been agreement among the principal countries concerned as to the calling of such a conference. Some proposals have been put forward, some tentatively, but there has obviously been no consensus yet.

SPREAD OF WAR IN SOUTHEAST ASIA—REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES—CONSIDERATION BY UNITED NATIONS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. In view of the concern in Canada about the war in Viet Nam, which will be now deepened by virtue of the widening of hostilities into a general war covering Southeast Asia, and in view of our indirect involvement through the International Control Commission, is the government of Canada making any representations to the United States about this matter and expressing its views and its concern about the widening of military operations in Southeast Asia?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be rather premature for the Canadian government to express any views upon American policy until the President of the United States explains the basis upon which this apparent escalation of the conflict has been justified.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the last couple of weeks I have asked both the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister whether the Canadian government would at least follow the lead of France and other countries in calling for a reconvening of the Geneva Accord nations. At that time the government indicated it would be prepared to participate but not to call for such a conference. May I ask now whether the Canadian government would be prepared to join with other nations in endeavouring to put this question on the agenda of the United Nations so that the matter can be dealt with on an international basis instead of allowing it to drift into what could be a very serious war in Southeast Asia?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government would, of course, be prepared to look at any proposal that might help to end this conflict. We would be prepared, of course, to participate in a conference. I can reaffirm that position on the part of the Canadian government. As to bringing this matter before the United Nations, I would have thought this a rather doubtful proposition in view of the fact that several of the countries principally concerned are not now adequately represented there.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has told us all the things we cannot do. Can the minister tell us about any useful contribution Canada can make, or does the Canadian government intend to sit by as it has done in the Viet Nam war and allow the situation to deteriorate?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

SUGGESTED TERMINATION OF DEFENCE-SHARING AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in view of the deepening crisis in Cambodia and in view of the increased United States involvement there, will the Canadian government now give serious consideration to terminating the Canada-United States defence-sharing arrangement?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. The reasons for continuing our defence-sharing agreement with the United States have been explained on many occasions. But I should like to say to my hon. friend and to the Leader of the NDP that I did not hear the same sort of concern expressed about the presence in Cambodia of troops from North Viet Nam.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POST OFFICE

ADMINISTRATION OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. It is in reference to the administration of the Post Office Department which is currently facing grave problems. Does the Prime Minister not believe that there is some legitimate public and parliamentary concern as to who is now administering this trouble-starred department? If so, will he not penetrate this unbecoming curtain of silence?

An hon. Member: Answer!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Regina East.

Mr. Macquarrie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the Prime Minister will not show consideration to the House and to the people, may I appeal to him to show consideration for the Postmaster General himself in light of the accusation that there is apparently not room in the country now for him and the Minister of Labour at the one time?

GRAIN

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM REGULATIONS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. Can the minister inform the House now when the regulations in connection with operation LIFT will be announced? Can he also tell us if these proposed regulations have been discussed with the farm organizations and, if so, which farm organizations?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the regulations are in force. Of course, the pattern of effect of the regulations upon farmers has been discussed very widely throughout the country with most farm organizations.

Mr. Burton: A supplementary question. If these regulations are in force, can the minister make them available to the members of this House and, more important, to the farmers of western Canada?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister say the regulations have been completed and are now confirmed? If so, will he table them today? The farmers of western Canada do not know where in blazes they are going because the regulations have not been made available to them.

Mr. Lang: I think that might be arranged, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Burton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman seeks the floor on a question of privilege.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A facetious answer like that from a minister is not acceptable.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Groan if you will!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Keep it up!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the Liberal members is one of contempt toward the western farmer, as just shown by the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the minister whether he will table the regulations today so they will be available? All we have yet received is a brush-off from a minister who has done nothing for the western farmers.

Mr. Lang: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I, of course, do not have the regulations in my hand. I was conscious of the fact that at a later date it might require the consent of the House to table them. That is why I used the words I did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If it requires the consent of the House, can that be secured now so that this fractious minister can produce them?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

REQUEST FOR CORRESPONDENCE ON ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When did these regulations go into force and on what date was the order in council passed? Also, in view of the fact that the minister was able to release an exchange of correspondence between the President of the National Farmers' Union and himself on the question of operation LIFT, can he indicate to us whether he is prepared to make available all correspondence between the minister and the government and farm organizations since operation LIFT was first discussed with farm organizations?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly be glad to give consideration to the question in relation to the various parts of correspondence. Of course the usual conditions will have to be applied. It might be more useful if we had specific requests rather than a broad one of this sort. The consent of a variety of people may be required in order to fulfil the request.

[Later:]

Mr. Burton: I have one short supplementary question arising out of an answer given earlier by the minister. He asked hon. members to refer specifically to correspondence that they would like him to table. Would he arrange to table the telegram from the President of the National Farmers Union to the Prime Minister on February 22 in which the government's proposals for operation LIFT were specifically rejected?

Mr. Lang: That is the kind of difficulty I can foresee with regard to the general question. I am not sure it is in my hands, in any respect, to table that item.

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—EXTENSION BEYOND JULY 15 FOR SEEDING COVER CROP

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that seeding by most farmers will be at least one month later than the seeding that will be done on the minister's farm, and as the farmers will not be able to reap the fodder from any perennial grass cover crop that he may be able to, will the minister extend the date from July 15 by at least three weeks or one month so that other farmers can qualify in the same way that he can?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): If the hon. member had been here the other day, he would know that I answered a question essentially the same as the one he is now asking. July 15 is approximately the middle of the summer in all regions of Canada. It has to be borne in mind that the permission to seed a cover crop of oats before July 15 was designed for protection against soil erosion, wind erosion, not primarily for the purpose of seeding a crop of that nature.

Mr. Korchinski: In view of the fact that perennial grass cannot be used as hay for at least two years, will the minister be prepared to help farmers who wish to co-operate with him by extending the period for one month and allowing them to use the cover crop for fodder?

Mr. Olson: There is no prohibition in the regulations as far as I know which would prevent any man using this cover crop for grazing purposes.

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—CONSIDERATION FOR FARMERS WHO MADE REDUCTIONS LAST YEAR

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): My question is directed to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. If I may preface it, Mr. Speaker, members of this House have been asking since operation LIFT—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot preface his question in that way. He should ask the question.

[Mr. Burton.]

Mr. Benjamin: In view of the statement issued publicly by a member of the Saskatchewan Federation of Agriculture concerning the parts of operation LIFT which he feels are inequitable and unfair, would the minister say whether or not, taking into account the remarks of Mr. Bowden, additional consideration will be given to the situation of farmers who reduced their acreage in 1969?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): As has been indicated many times, the situation of those who had reduced their acreage previously was taken into consideration at the time the policy itself was formulated; it was felt that any other changes which could be made would have as many adverse effects as positive ones. That is exactly why we achieved the balance we did in the program.

UNITED STATES WHEAT ACREAGE ESTIMATES

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): My question, too, is directed to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board and it relates to recent allegations that farmers in the United States are increasing their wheat acreage this year, thus reducing the effect of the LIFT program. Can the minister give the House the latest estimates of the acreage of wheat to be harvested in the United States in 1970?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): I would be glad to get the precise figures of estimates, but estimates of wheat to be seeded in the United States show a definite downward trend compared with last year and only in one or two isolated areas is an increase indicated.

BROADCASTING

PROVISION OF SECOND TELEVISION CHANNEL IN SYDNEY, N.S.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question is addressed to the Secretary of State, Mr. Speaker. I have given the hon. gentleman notice. It is urgent and it is prompted by a recent statement by the CRTC and the CBC. Can the minister tell us what steps are being taken to provide a second television channel in Sydney, Nova Scotia?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): First, Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for advising me of his question. I was thus able to obtain information and here is the answer I was given.

Cape Breton Broadcasters Ltd., which is now providing television services to the Cape Breton and Eastern Nova areas, met with the CBC in order to reach agreement on the best way to give to the public in these regions a second TV channel.

Technically and financially, however, extending TV coverage in that area is very difficult. For instance, separate technical facilities would be required for broadcasting in the various regions of that territory. I might add however that Cape Breton Broadcasters Ltd., the CBC and the CRTC will get together very soon in order to determine exactly what has to be done and to draft a schedule of the work required in that region.

[English]

MANPOWER

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON AVAILABILITY OF SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. As has been requested on other occasions, will the minister make a statement on motions very shortly concerning the proposed plans for the employment of students during the coming summer months in view of the desperate plight of many students in respect of summer employment?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I intend to make a statement early in the week.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister also make a statement concerning the plans the government has for the employment of those who are not students?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

CYCLAMATE BAN—SAFETY OF SUBSTITUTE SWEETENERS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the ban on cyclamates for use in dietetic foods and drinks, would the minister inform the House what substitute sweeteners will replace them and what steps his department has taken to ensure that the new artificial sweeteners are actually safe?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the industry has developed substitutes which the Food and Drug Directorate is looking into in order to determine their safety. I shall be glad to inform the hon. member of the precise particulars later.

NATIONAL REVENUE

EXTENSION OF TAX RETURN DEADLINE BECAUSE OF WESTERN CANADA FLOODS

Mr. Gerald Richard Cobbe (Portage): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is the government considering extending the period in which people can file their income tax returns in view of the fact that people in many parts of western Canada have been forced to leave their homes owing to serious flooding?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I know of no such plans, Mr. Speaker. However, I shall take the matter up with the Minister of National Revenue.

INDUSTRY

TIRES—MEETINGS WITH COMPANY REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has he concluded his meetings with the rubber industry representatives? If so, has the minister reached any conclusions and is he prepared to make a statement respecting these meetings?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Not today, Mr. Speaker. I shall inquire, however, on the progress of these negotiations going on between the industry and my department and keep the House informed.

TELEVISION TUBES—MEETINGS WITH MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): In view of the crisis facing the television tube manufacturers in Canada, is it the minister's intention to call the tube manufacturers together in order to have similar meetings to work out a rationalization program?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the question implies that my department is not in touch with the tube manufacturers. That is incorrect. Conversations go on all the time and we try to help as much as we can. I should like to emphasize once again that if the tube industry is in decline at the same time the transistor industry is growing and I can demonstrate quite easily that there are more jobs now being created in the transistor industry than are being lost in the tube industry.

PLANS TO MAINTAIN OPERATION OF DUNLOP PLANT, TORONTO, AND YARMOUTH TEXTILE PLANT

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. What special plans has the minister with regard to saving the Dunlop tire plant in Toronto and also the textile plant in Yarmouth because, as he knows, this is very important?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I know it is important. Reasons have been given for the closing of that plant and these reasons have been accepted by my department as facts.

THE MINISTRY

REASON FOR ABSENCE FROM HOUSE OF MINISTER OF COMMUNICATIONS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Could he advise the House whether the Minister of Communications is on leave in view of his absence from the House for nigh on three weeks?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Was it at the request of the minister or of the Prime Minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

JURISDICTION OVER SABLE ISLAND

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the possibility of oil being discovered on or adjacent to Sable Island, will the Minister of Justice indicate whether this island is considered an offshore territory of Canada over which the federal government claims complete jurisdiction or is this island considered part of the province of Nova Scotia?

[Mr. Pepin.]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Not only is that a question of geography, it is also probably a legal question. I should like to take it as notice.

Mr. Crouse: In view of the importance of establishing geographical co-ordinates for the drawing of baselines in order to implement our new pollution control measures as well as to conserve our fishery resources, will the minister give an early indication of the proper status of this strategic island?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I or one of my colleagues in the cabinet might do that.

GRAIN

INTERNATIONAL GRAINS ARRANGEMENT—DISCUSSION OF STATUS WITH REPRESENTATIVES OF EXPORTING NATIONS

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio who reports to the House for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the minister's announcement that a meeting will be held in Ottawa on May 4 and 5 with representatives of major wheat exporting nations, including a spokesman for the European Common Market, to discuss, among other things, limitations of wheat acreages, can the minister advise the House whether discussions on the present status of the International Grains Arrangement will take place, and will he and his advisers impress upon the United States representatives the importance of strengthening the International Grains Arrangement to prevent any further price-cutting by our competitors?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): The meetings in question are essentially to discuss production policies. There will be meetings later among interested countries in connection with the International Grains Arrangement. Of course we are always making our views known to our friends in the United States about the importance of the International Grains Arrangement.

ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—CONSULTATION AND AGREEMENT WITH OTHER HIGH PROTEIN WHEAT PRODUCERS

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Before operation LIFT was announced, was any agreement made or consultation held with other producers of high protein wheat, such as the United States and Australia, so that they could also decrease their acreage?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): No, Mr. Speaker.

POLLUTION

AIR—USE OF MONITORING EQUIPMENT

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the continuing concern over the level of air pollution in our cities and the minister's previous response to a question I asked him when he said that no clean air legislation would be brought in at this session, can the minister advise whether any special arrangements such as monitoring are being carried out at the federal level to meet this continuing serious problem?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Air sampling stations have been sponsored by the federal government across the country for several years now under the aegis of the air pollution control division of the Department of National Health and Welfare, and that activity is being carried on.

MANPOWER

CLOSING OF ERIE FLOORING AND WOOD PRODUCTS PLANT AT WEST LORNE, ONT.

Mr. H. E. Stafford (Elgin): My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has the minister been informed of the decision by Erie Flooring and Wood Products Industries of Toronto to close their hardwood flooring and pallets plant in West Lorne, Ontario, which employs 142 workers and is of crucial importance to this community? If so, has the minister anything to report on the situation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, I am aware of the closure. I know how regrettable it is because the employer is the single employer in that small community. My officers have opened temporary facilities in the Town hall at West Lorne and we are attempting to make all our facilities available to assist the workers.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CO-OPERATION WITH UNITED STATES REGARDING POLLUTION OF ALASKAN COAST

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us whether in fact Canada has a working relationship with the United States authorities regarding the pollution of the Alaskan coast which is claiming large numbers of birds and animal life? If so, could he give us some indication of whether we are contributing to the experimentation to discover the source of this pollution?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will take notice of that question.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CIRCULATION TO MEMBERS OF CITIZENSHIP FORM

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I should like to address my question to the Minister without Portfolio responsible for citizenship. In view of the government's austerity program, could he advise the House why he found it necessary to write letters to the 265 Members of Parliament enclosing a form to apply for proof of Canadian citizenship in view of the fact that every member of this House must be a Canadian citizen before he can be a member?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): With great pleasure, Mr. Speaker. The point of the exercise is to emphasize to Canadians that all people who hold certificates of Canadian citizenship are not new citizens, that you do not need to get them through naturalization but that many people obtain them through the pride of being Canadian citizens, and I thought Members of Parliament might want to celebrate citizenship week by doing so.

Mr. Hales: Were similar letters sent to the Senate?

Mr. Stanbury: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dubé: The senior citizens.

FURTHER ADJOURNMENT FOR COMMITTEE WORK

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the committees of the House are making good use of the extra time granted to them today, but since they need still further time to catch up with the backlog of their work, I wonder if the Prime Minister would suggest to the government House Leader that two or three days might be taken off next week for this purpose and also to enable the government to deal with its white paper on social security so that it might be brought down during the month of May?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): May I say, in reply to the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, that I am informed by the government House Leader of the possibility that another day might be set aside next week if this meets the desire of all parties.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the government use that day, as I suggested, to deal with its white paper on social security so that it can be tabled soon?

Mr. Trudeau: I am afraid a day would not be enough.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Take two or three.

ATTENDANCE AT COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Would the Prime Minister discuss with the government House Leader some way of dealing with the problem which was evident this morning when a committee was dealing with millions of dollars of estimates and only three members were present?

DISTRIBUTION OF LIBERAL PUBLICATION

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): I have a question for the Prime Minister in the extended absence of the Postmaster General, and it is a question on pollution. There are at present many boxes containing hundreds of thousands of copies of the political publication "The Canadian Liberal" at the door of the central post office in this building which are about to be mailed out to the public. By what method of postage, frank or otherwise, is this publication being sent out?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should indicate to the hon. member that this is the kind of question which comes under the jurisdiction of the House rather than of the government. The hon. member's question should be addressed to the Chair in writing. I gather that this is the procedure to follow in such cases.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ACADIA FISHING COMPANY AND BOOTH FISHERIES—ASSISTANCE IN MEDIATING STRIKE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

What steps is the minister or his department taking to assist in mediating or bringing to a conclusion the strike of some 230 fishermen against the Acadia Fishing Company and Booth Fisheries in Nova Scotia?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I am uncertain whether this comes under federal jurisdiction. I doubt that it does. If it does not, then it is up to the Department of Labour of the province of Nova Scotia, which I understand can deal with it more than adequately.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Inasmuch as there is some doubt about the jurisdiction and as it seems to be a grey area, would the minister look into the matter? Would he also indicate whether or not he has received any representations or requests from the government of Nova Scotia regarding this matter?

Mr. Mackasey: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will do that. Because of the fact that my next duty day is Monday, I will take the liberty of communicating privately with the hon. member in the meantime.

MANPOWER

FILLING OF SUMMER JOBS AT RIDING MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK BY WIVES OF PERMANENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of persistent rumours that advertised positions for summer jobs at Riding Mountain National Park are being filled by wives of permanent employees, which undermines the government's "Hire a Student" campaign, does the minister intend to take action to stop such practices?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I will be happy to discuss the matter with the minister responsible for the administration of national parks.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—POLICY DISCUSSIONS WITH NEW PRIME MINISTER RESPECTING GOLD MINING AND DAIRYING

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

During the two past weeks, I had the opportunity to ask questions concerning the correspondence exchanged with the then

Quebec Premier in connection with gold mines and the dairy industry. I was twice told that after the election of a new Quebec government, it might be possible to try to solve both problems. Now, since April 29 has come and gone and the Prime Minister's dream has come true, can I ask him whether he will soon discuss the conditions of the gold mines and the dairy industry in Quebec with the new Premier of that province?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the new Quebec Premier wishes to discuss those matters with the federal government, we will be extremely pleased to do so.

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

JURISDICTION RESPECTING SHORT-TERM ECONOMIC FORECASTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether the Prices and Incomes Commission considers it to be within its jurisdiction or responsibility to engage in short-term economic forecasting as to trends in this country?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe it has on its staff some officials and has been trying to obtain others to do some short-term forecasting.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question. Is it the role of this commission to give the government or the country as a whole any advice as to economic expectations in the short term?

Mr. Basford: In so far as it may have some bearing on price stability and the achievement of price stability which the government is anxious to obtain—yes.

Mr. Stanfield: One further supplementary question which I direct to the Prime Minister. In view of the persistent recommendation of the Economic Council of Canada as to the importance of an independent agency being established to perform this task of providing better short-term economic forecasts, will the Prime Minister reconsider this recommendation? I ask this question particularly in view of the confusion that seems to exist at the present time as to just what is the short-term economic trend not only in this country but in the world at large.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has at its means certain officials and tools with which to consider this question of the short-term economic future. The Economic Council of Canada does not have such a term of reference under the statute which set it up, although sometimes it does indulge in short-term economic forecasts.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ACTION RESPECTING FALSE AND MISLEADING ADVERTISING

Mr. James E. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. What steps are being taken by his department in the area of inspection and surveillance in combating false and misleading advertising across the country and what prosecutions, if any, are outstanding in this regard?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the information he is seeking now is rather far-reaching. I suggest to the hon. member and to the minister that the information should normally be given by way of a statement rather than by way of an answer to the question at this time.

Mr. McGrath: Then may I rephrase the question and ask the minister if he would be prepared to make a statement in the House, in view of the fact that he made a very serious policy statement on this matter in Vancouver recently?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, in Vancouver the other day I announced that in furtherance of our campaign against misleading advertising—

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, my question to the minister was whether he would make a statement in the House. The minister apparently proposes to make the statement now during the oral question period.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding was that the question was accepted only to the extent that it sought information from the minister on whether a statement would or would not be made. That is the extent to which the question has been allowed.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the estimates of the department are currently before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, and I dealt at some length, I thought, in that committee with the campaign we are running against misleading advertising—a very effective campaign, I might say—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the members of the opposition parties are being denied an opportunity to comment or to react to this very important statement of policy because the minister refuses to make the statement in the House. Because of that I redirect my question to the minister in this precise form: will he make the statement of policy in the House in order to enable members of the House to comment on it?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I have already made the statement, and I do not think the time of the House should be wasted by making the same statement again. If it is thought appropriate that I make a further statement on misleading advertising, I will consider that.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF COMMISSIONER E. M. J. A. SASSEN, EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I have the indulgence of the House to introduce in your gallery Commissioner E. M. J. A. Sassen, Commissioner of the European Economic Community.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: Commissioner Sassen's responsibilities include administration of those sections of the Treaty of Rome dealing with restrictive business practices, and we are delighted to have him in Ottawa for mutual discussions.

Mr. Baldwin: I hope he gets more out of you than we do.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact that many of my constituents, the latest being an 82-years old veteran of the first world war, keep asking me when veterans pensions and allowances will be increased by the implementation of the Woods report, can the minister please tell me what answer I can give to those who are suffering severely from the rising cost of living?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this question has been answered many times in the House.

Mrs. MacInnis: A supplementary question. Can the minister indicate any probable date when the period of waiting will be brought to an end?

Mr. Dubé: Not at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question can be a supplementary question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs because it was pre-empted. Can the minister advise if the direction by cabinet to trim $500 million from the proposals of the Minister of National Health and Welfare with respect to increases for the disadvantaged included a cut-back on increases in war veterans allowances and disability pensions?

Mr. Dubé: This is not the case, Mr. Speaker. In any event, of course, I cannot comment on what takes place in cabinet.

SAINT JOHN VETERANS HOSPITAL—STATUS OF TAKEOVER AGREEMENT

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint-John-Lancaster): By coincidence, Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. It is in connection with the takeover of the military hospital in Saint John and the conflicting statements made by the minister and his counterpart in New Brunswick. Can the minister say whether he feels that the contract that has been held up can be brought into effect, or has it been completely terminated and will it have to be renegotiated?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): There is no military hospital in Saint John. This is a veterans hospital, and the agreement between the government of Canada and the province of New Brunswick has merely been postponed.

Mr. Bell: With respect to the correction that the minister has made I am glad to hear him make it. It is the first time I have ever seen him show concern for the veterans.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to hon. members who apparently still have questions to ask, but pursuant to the order of the House made on Tuesday the House will have to stand adjourned until—is the hon. member for Peace River rising on a point of order?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Might I have the permission of the House and of Your Honour to ask the President of the Privy Council as Government House Leader, having in mind the very lean appearance of the order paper, what the minister proposes to put before the House next week?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We only intend to put seven measures before the House in the coming week. For tomorrow's business we will have first the Bills of Exchange Act to be followed by the Supreme Court Act. Monday will be an opposition day. On Tuesday we will deal with the second reading of the Standards Council Bill, to be followed by the report stage of the Oil and Gas Conservation and Production Bill. On Wednesday we hope to carry to conclusion second reading stage of the National Farm Products Marketing Council bill. On Thursday we would propose to call the Law Reform Commission bill, but I would be glad to take into consideration the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that if the extensive committee discussion of this legislation requires a further full committee day we might make a special order for that day.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the government house leader when the House does get around to dealing with the amendments to the Canada Elections Act whether the government has any intention of dealing with sections 61 and 62 which were deleted from the terms of reference to the committee?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Any dealing with the Canada Elections Act would be confined to the subject matters discussed in the committee's report.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the provisions of the special order of the House passed on Tuesday, April 28, the House now stands adjourned until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 2.52 p.m. the House adjourned, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 1, 1970

The House met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF SPEAKERS AND DEPUTY SPEAKERS OF PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURES

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will permit me to bring to their attention the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a group of very distinguished parliamentarians and their wives who are to be in Ottawa today and tomorrow to attend the annual meeting of the Canadian Area Council of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. It is with much pleasure that I introduce to hon. members a group of parliamentarians noted in their respective Houses for their wisdom, impartiality, tolerance, judiciousness, patience and forbearance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: By this description hon. members will immediately recognize the Speakers and Deputy Speakers of our provincial houses.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

On behalf of all my colleagues of the House of Commons, I welcome them most heartily to Ottawa.

TABLING OF WHEAT INVENTORY REDUCTION REGULATIONS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) may I lay on the table of the House copies in both official languages of the wheat inventory reduction regulations referred to yesterday in the question period by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang).

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CAMBODIA—STATEMENT ON INVASION BY UNITED STATES AND SOUTH VIET NAM ARMED FORCES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the House might expect me to make a short comment on the situation in Cambodia. I am sure we all listened to President Nixon's speech with deep anxiety. There can be no doubt that the decisions he announced were hard and momentous at what is bound to be a difficult time for our sorely tried neighbour and a dangerous period for the world.

During the period before the International Control Commission was asked to leave Cambodia we were aware, as a member of the commission, of abuses of Cambodian territory by North Viet Nam and we deplored the inability of the International Control Commission to do anything about it, despite our best efforts over a period of years.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What date was that?

Mr. Sharp: Ever since the conflict began in South Viet Nam one of our objectives, and I am speaking now of Canada—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister allow one question so that the record might be kept straight? On what date were we asked to get out of Cambodia?

• (11:10 a.m.)

Mr. Sharp: I will come to that later.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You do not have the information?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to continue my statement?

Mr. Diefenbaker: If you do not even know that—

Mr. Sharp: Perhaps my right hon. friend has not been listening to the number of statements I have made in the House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I asked a simple question which should have been answered.

Mr. Sharp: Ever since the conflict began in South Viet Nam, one of our objectives as a member of the commission was to try to insulate Cambodia from the effects of the Viet Nam war. To achieve this we tried to have the International Control Commission consider a Cambodian government request in 1966 to have the Control Commission supervise Cambodian ports and borders.

In 1967 we tried to have the commission strengthened by having it accept a United States offer of helicopters which Prince Sihanouk suggested the United States should provide for the International Control Commission. We tried in 1968 to have the commission undertake investigations into the presence of North Vietnamese and Viet Cong forces in the very area of Parrot's Beak, now the subject of military operations, on the basis of prime facie evidence provided by the Cambodian government and Prince Sihanouk himself.

Had we been successful in convincing our commission colleagues to take these measures, the International Control Commission might at least have been able to provide some warning of the magnitude of the Vietnamese Communist intervention in Cambodia which has elicited the present United States and South Vietnamese response and might even have helped avoid the situation developing to the present stage.

I certainly hope the situation in Cambodia will not now be allowed to develop as did the situation in Viet Nam. I deeply regret that the United States government has considered it necessary to take this step, but we are somewhat reassured that President Nixon has given an assurance of the limited nature of these operations and that United States forces will be withdrawn once their immediate objectives are achieved. It would be tragic, and I am sure this view is shared not only by all members of this House but by the American people themselves, if these operations were to result in a further escalation of the conflict in Indo-China.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we must all be very concerned about the developments to which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has referred and the announcement made by the President of the United States last evening concerning armed intervention in Cambodia. I am quite disappointed that the minister has not been able to tell the House this morning of any initiatives the government of Canada has in mind to be helpful in this situation.

Yesterday he indicated, and I agreed, that before the President spoke it would be premature for the Canadian government to decide what initiatives, if any, it might take. But the President has spoken and, indeed, announced somewhat more drastic action on the part of the United States than had been contemplated or expected up to that time.

I suggest that the government of Canada should not abandon hope for a conference like the Geneva conference. I am not in a position to know fully what difficulties there may be in this regard, but it seems to me it is of the utmost importance that every prospect be explored that may achieve some kind of international regulation of this situation which may very well escalate despite the hopes of the President and despite the hope expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I therefore urge the government of Canada to take the initiative in association with other countries that are concerned to see whether there is a possibility of a conference, along the lines of the Geneva conference that took place earlier, in order to try to find a solution to this difficulty.

I regret also that the government of Canada has chosen this time to cut back on its International Control Commission commitment. I recognize there have been difficulties in this regard. The Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to them this morning. But here again it is important that we retain and pursue every prospect of being helpful.

I do not know what efforts the government of Canada made in the past within the International Control Commission, other than those mentioned by the minister, to protest the presence of North Vietnamese troops in Cambodia. Yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs said this was a definite fact. As I say, this relates to the past. I am not minimizing the difficulties of the efforts of the government of Canada within the ICC as they relate to the past; I am not minimizing the difficulties of continuing to use the ICC in a productive way. But I urge that the Secretary of State for External Affairs and his colleagues utilize every prospect of initiative, including the full utilization of the ICC rather than cutting back at this time. I also urge that they pursue vigorously the possibilities of any diplomatic initiative leading to some kind of an international conference to regulate this eruption which is causing so much concern to all of us and, indeed, to the whole world.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately we did not have an advance copy of the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We had to follow it by ear. I am sure all members agree with the minister when he said that we listened to the speech of President Nixon last night with anxiety and that we all regret the action which has been taken in the form of military intervention by the United States and South Vietnamese troops in Cambodia.

The minister has detailed the steps which led to the withdrawal of the International Control Commission because of their failure to insulate Cambodia. The fact is, of course, that the International Control Commission, particularly in Viet Nam, has been totally disregarded by both sides. This can be seen by anyone who takes the trouble to read the reports of that commission.

I think the important thing at the moment is to ascertain the reasons for the military intervention at this time. The President of the United States said in his television speech last night that North Vietnamese troops and the Viet Cong have been in Cambodia for years. What is the particular reason for action at this time? It is significant that the Cambodian government spokesman in Phnom-Penh said yesterday that the government had not approved the South Vietnamese-United States intervention and added that Cambodia is a neutral country. In Washington Thay Sok, the ranking diplomat at the Cambodian embassy, said:

> There is no agreement between Phnom-Penh and the United States to bomb Cambodian territory. We sent a protest to the U.S. government over a new bombing incident only last week.

• (11:20 a.m.)

So what was held out originally as an intervention at the request of the Cambodian government would now appear on the face of these reports to be a unilateral intervention. This is something which it seems to me is most serious. We have a special concern in this matter. Yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs made a comment that I had not protested about Vienamese troops being in Cambodia. I would point out that we do not have a defence-sharing arrangement with North Viet Nam, nor are we selling weapons to North Viet Nam, nor do we have North Vietnamese bomarc bases in Canada.

An hon. Member: Thank God.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We are involved, whether we want to be or not, in any action which the United States government takes and in this case, unless there are facts which have not come to light, it would appear there has been a unilateral military intervention in Cambodia without either the approval or the consent of the Cambodian government—an intervention which the President said in his television address was to make sure that the United States did not become a second-rate power and that it did not suffer its first defeat in its 190-year proud history.

I think the government must do more than make a statement here on motions. I hope there will be an opportunity for a full debate on this question so that the Secretary of State and his colleagues can tell us what initiatives they intend to take.

During the past few weeks I have asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister whether the Canadian government would follow the lead of the government of France in asking for a reconvening of the Geneva conference. I drew attention to the fact that Mr. Jacob Malik, the Soviet ambassador to the United Nations, had said that the Soviet Union would be inerested in having the conference reconvened. It seems to me that this was the time to have seized the initiative and to have joined with other countries in pressing Britain and the Soviet Union, the joint chairmen of the Geneva conference, to reconvene the meetings in the hope that some settlement could be reached which would prevent the Viet Nam war becoming an Indo-China war.

Unfortunately, the only reply I got from both the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs was that Canada was willing to participate. Canada was not prepared, apparently, to take any initiative or to express publicly its desire for such a conference. When I suggested we might attempt to have this matter placed before the United Nations again, the Secretary of State for External Affairs was most hesitant and timid. Full discussion of this subject is needed so that we may know whether the Canadian government intends to take any initiative whatsoever or whether it intends to stand idly by and watch a very serious and barbarous war in Viet Nam become a major war in Asia which may well have disastrous consequences for the human race.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, allow me in the first place to thank all my colleagues for the token of regard they gave me this morning, because 78 per cent of the people of Quebec have proved that they are definitely against separatism. In my opinion, all the right-thinking Canadians are as pleased as we are.

Mr. Speaker, in connection with the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I think that we all regret foreign interventions in Cambodia whether they are from the Viet Cong, the North Vietnamese or the Americans. I believe that Cambodia is entitled to its sovereignty and to the respect of all nations.

However, some of the attitudes we witness in the House are unfortunate. I have just heard the NDP leader (Mr. Douglas) taking the Americans to task for their intervention in Cambodia. But he did not censure—we are all convinced of this—the Viet Cong and the North Vietnamese for their intervention. Why? He has just explained that they did not supply weapons to North Viet Nam, that the NDP did not mobilize troops or force anyone to come to the assistance of that country. He did not say however whether the Chinese Communists or others have given help and advice to these people to enable them to settle in Cambodia or to try to take it one way or another.

In any case, blaming one side and ignoring the other will not solve the problem. A general debate on this question in the House of Commons will not solve the problem either. Even if soldiers armed with pea shooters were sent to Cambodia, they would be unable to drive out the Americans or the North Vietnamese, even if they were under the command of the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: In my opinion, it is the duty of all Canadians to suggest that meetings, discussions and debates be held between parties concerned so that understanding prevails. However, the Canadian government or the Canadian people have no business in interfering in that matter. Even if we discussed it for three months, the situation would not be solved. Canadians must appeal to the good judgment of parties concerned because finally, North and South Vietnamese, Americans and Chinese are human beings. It is a matter of appealing to their reason, not to their lower instincts which lead them to kill one another. On the contrary, we must teach them the great rule of brotherly love. Thus will Canada be able to contribute to the settlement of the conflict which has already lasted for too long in Viet Nam and Cambodia.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CAMBODIA—INVASION BY UNITED STATES AND SOUTH VIET NAM ARMED FORCES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, as evidenced by the brief statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) a few minutes ago, namely, the announcement last night of the widening of the war in southeast Asia, which increases the dangers to world peace, and the urgent need for the government and Parliament to debate the seriousness of the situation, and to seek ways and means of avoiding further escalation of the war and of promoting effective international action to bring peace to the area.

• (11:30 a.m.)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has given the Chair the required notice under the terms of Standing Order 26. I have had time to give a bit of thought to the submission contained in the proposed motion of the hon. member for York South. Unquestionably this is a matter of great importance and concern to all hon. members.

Whether there should be an adjournment of the proceedings of the House today under the terms of the Standing Order is the decision the Chair must make at this time. It is not an easy decision to make. It may well be that such an important debate could be held in the House more effectively and more constructively by prearrangement among the House Leaders. However, this avenue is not provided in Standing Order 26 and the decision has to be made by the Chair.

In view of the fact that from a procedural standpoint I would find it extremely difficult to reject the motion and in view of the importance of the matter I feel I must put the motion proposed by the hon. member. I will therefore ask whether the hon. member for York South has leave to move the motion for the purpose of the House discussing the matter introduced by him under the terms of Standing Order 26(8).

As there is no opposition, the proposed motion will stand over until three o'clock this afternoon.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

CONSIDERATION OF REDUCTION OF INTEREST RATES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to pursue a question or two with the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the difficulty in Cambodia, but in view of the debate this afternoon I shall turn my attention to the Minister of Finance. In view of the apparently changing international business climate, is it contemplated that any reduction in interest rates in Canada will be considered? Also, is it contemplated by the Minister of Finance that the present bank rate will be continued or does he intend to open discussions with the Bank of Canada regarding this matter?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated on Wednesday, I am in very close consultation with the Bank of Canada. If there were any such decision it would be announced in the usual manner.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the extent of unemployment in the country and in view of the concern that has been expressed about unemployment, as well as the apparently changing climate internationally, would the minister be prepared to reconsider the hard stance he has taken both in respect of interest rates and economic policies generally?

Mr. Benson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the matter of our fiscal and monetary policy is constantly under review. If there is to be any change I would announce it to the House.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Finance not take into consideration that this is not simply a matter of policy to be announced in due course but a matter of the policies being pursued which are placing unnecessary strain upon the country and the people of the country?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very interesting statement but it is not a question.

LOWERING OF HOUSING INTEREST RATE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the serious decline in housing starts for the first quarter of this year and the need to stimulate housing and provide employment, would the minister make representations to the Bank of Canada and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to lower the interest rate so that there may be more activity in the housing field?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the only interest rate controlled by the Bank of Canada is the rediscount rate.

EASING OF BANK LENDING POLICY IN SLOW-GROWTH AREAS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the loan acts which are administered by the Department of Finance. In view of the representations which have been made to his department, is he in a position to say whether the banks are ready to ease their lending policies under these three acts in the slow-growth areas of Canada? This question has been brought to the minister's attention.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I have been looking into this matter in consultation with officials of the department who are in touch with the banks, particularly in the hon. member's province, and I hope to have further progress to report shortly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CAMBODIA—INVASION BY UNITED STATES AND SOUTH VIET NAM ARMED FORCES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to anticipate the debate this afternoon but it would be useful if the Secretary of State for External Affairs could give the House some information. Yesterday he said the Canadian government had not been consulted regarding the United States intervention in Cambodia. Since that time have any communications been received from the government of the United States setting forth the reasons for its action in respect of Cambodia?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker; the Canadian government was not consulted about the United States' step in moving its forces into Cambodia. So far as I know there have been no further communications. The President himself gave the reasons to the public in the speech he made yesterday.

May I also be permitted to answer the question put earlier by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. The International Control Commission was first asked to terminate its mission by the Royal Cambodian government through an oral request on October 7, 1969. The request was repeated in a formal note in early December when the ICC was asked to adjourn sine die by December 31, 1969, and all ICC personnel were withdrawn by the end of the first week of January, 1970.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, when I asked the question originally I did so so that the record would be complete. I am glad the minister now has the information which was requested and has placed it before the House.

I should like to ask him this: When suggestions are made that Canada should be making representations to the United States while we ourselves are not taking any of the responsibility nor are expending our blood and treasure, does the minister not consider that such gratuitous advice from Canada to the United States is not in keeping with our responsibilities as a nation?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a further question for the minister. Has he or the government been in touch with their friends in Peking with respect to taking initiatives?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich on a supplementary.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think the minister should get up and tell us what initiatives they are taking with their friends in Peking.

Mr. Speaker: That is not my impression.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's reply to the right hon. member for Prince Albert, but can he inform the House whether or not the Cambodian government has protested to the International Control Commission for Viet Nam, the country from which these forces are moving across the Cambodian border, and whether he has knowledge of any communication that may have been received by the Viet Nam commission rather than the Cambodian commission?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as I said in the statement I made at the beginning, there have been many efforts by us to bring to the attention of the world the presence of North Vietnamese forces in Cambodia. It is because of the many frustrations we have experienced that we do not want to return if asked—and we have not yet been formally asked—unless we can carry on our responsibilities. I am sure this is a view which must be shared by all members of the House. We have been frustrated also in all our efforts, whether in Viet Nam, Laos or Cambodia, when the International Control Commission was in operation.

Mr. Anderson: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the hon. member a supplementary but again I must point out that an emergency debate has been allowed on which I assume some hours will be spent today. I do not think the question period should be reserved or set aside for questions on that same matter. However, the hon. member will be allowed to ask his supplementary.

Mr. Anderson: I appreciate your generosity, Mr. Speaker. It is really to obtain information that I ask these questions, and perhaps it is easier now than it would be in the debate. I appreciate the frustration the Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to as I served for a short period of time as acting Canadian commissioner in Cambodia—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is anticipating the debate. If he has a question he should put it now.

Mr. Anderson: Has there been any protest or communication to the International Control Commission in Viet Nam by the Cambodian government? I am not referring to the now defunct commission in Cambodia but to the commission in Viet Nam, in the country from which these forces are actually crossing the border into Cambodia?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very important question and I will attempt to answer it during my intervention in the debate.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

QUEBEC—PROVINCIAL ELECTION COVERAGE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question.

Several months ago he stated in no uncertain terms that if the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation did not improve its news services, he would close the shop. Well, last Wednesday night we all noticed that the new premier of Quebec was given about ten minutes on the CBC newscast, Mr. Bertrand about five minutes, Mr. Samson three or four minutes, but half an hour was devoted to Mr. René Lévesque and the separatists of the province of Quebec.

Can the Prime Minister tell us whether he will consider the situation, and should he find it necessary to close the shop, will he make it snappy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Speaker, I can give this undertaking to the leader of the Ralliement créditiste. For my part, I am busy dusting my Chinese vases.

[English]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the Prime Minister moves on this matter, could he also find out from the CBC how many complaints it received on Wednesday night about the election coverage or the lack of it?

Mr. Trudeau: I will refer this question to the minister who will no doubt refer it to the corporation.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question in view of the circular that I presume has come across the desks of all hon. members. Would he take this opportunity to explain these remarks which he made during a press conference:

—of course I can't go into the mind of Quebeckers—

And then almost in the same breath:

I think there is a lot of confusion in the minds of the people of Quebec.

Would he mind explaining these statements?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Prime Minister would want to present this explanation by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any harm in trying to direct the Prime Minister's mind—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CO-OPERATION WITH UNITED STATES ON CONTROL OF POLLUTION IN GREAT LAKES

Mr. G. W. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of a recent statement by the Chairman of the Ontario Water Resources Commission that Canada and the United States are on a collision course over the Great Lakes pollution problem, has the minister discussed with the U.S. Secretary of the Interior, or any other member of the U.S. administration, some means of providing better co-operation by Canada and the United States on this matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the International Joint Commission has submitted its report on pollution of the Great Lakes to me. I have asked the United States government to agree with us on a time for release of this report which I think will provide a basis for action by both governments. We are working very closely with the United States and I expect our co-operation will be even closer in future.

Mr. Aiken: Would the minister take up with the United States authorities the question of Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. corporations which apparently are not adhering to some of the programs and standards of the Ontario Water Resources Commission?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think that all these questions will arise out of the action that will be promoted by the report of the International Joint Commission.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the government of Canada was acquainted with the contents of the speech delivered by the Chairman of the Ontario Water Resources Commission before its publication and, if so, can he tell us to what extent the accusations made by the Chairman of the Ontario Water Resources Commission reflect the official Canadian position?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NORTHERN QUEBEC—TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION OVER ESKIMOS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has he any report to give on the meetings that have taken place between representatives of the government of Canada and the government of the province of Quebec with the Eskimos? He stated a couple of weeks ago that he expected a report shortly.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No, Mr. Speaker, I have nothing new to tell the House. I suggest, however, that it would be advisable to wait until the appointment of the new minister before having serious discussions on this matter.

[English]

GIFT OF MONEY BY SOUTHEAST ASIA COUNTRIES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, might I ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether he has acknowledged with thanks the contribution made by certain countries in Southeast Asia in the form of assistance for Eskimos and Indians in Canada, for the reason that the plight of Canada's native people requires assistance? Is he aware that a gift of over $1,000 was made available by these countries in Southeast Asia? This shows the image which Canada has abroad in this regard.

[Mr. Aiken.]

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have read the statement that appeared in the press on this matter, and I hope that the policy that the Prime Minister and myself have announced last June, in an effort to ensure equality to all Canadian citizens in accordance with the Canadian Bill of Rights, will be enthusiastically received by all Canadians, including the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if the minister will now answer the question, has he acknowledged with appreciation the gift from these countries in Southeast Asia, some of which are poverty-stricken but which, because of the reported conditions of Canadian Indians and Eskimos, have made a contribution to raise the standards of these people?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what association can have sent those funds. However, if there is some confusion in the minds of some people abroad, it results from the fact that members of Parliament try to derive some political benefit from the situation, instead of suggesting adequate solutions.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister speaks for himself. What an admission on his part.

SHIPPING

SAFETY AND MANNING CONDITIONS ON WEST COAST TOWBOATS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the recent federal report in regard to dangerous conditions in the tugboat industry of British Columbia. Can the minister indicate whether any progress has been made in the discussions between the workers and the operators to reduce the hazards in this industry which were brought to light by the federal report?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated two days ago in the House I took the initiative to have the head of the steamship inspection branch convene a meeting in Vancouver. I think four sessions have been held. At these both the employers and the various unions have been represented. The meetings are continuing and the last word I had was that progress was being made, and there is some optimism that recommendations will be brought forward unanimously which will help us to introduce the appropriate regulations. I do not know how long this will take.

FISHERIES

ASSISTANCE TO SASKATCHEWAN FISHERMEN BECAUSE OF MERCURY POLLUTION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Has the province of Saskatchewan requested some arrangement for the provision of assistance to those fishermen whose livelihood will be affected as a result of mercury pollution in Saskatchewan?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL PARKS

SUPREME COURT DECISION UPHOLDING VALIDITY OF PERPETUAL LEASES

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the minister completed his study of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to perpetual leases in the national parks, and is he now prepared to provide answers to the questions I asked on March 20 last?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to report any decision in this regard to the House. Officials of my department and of the Department of Justice are examining this Supreme Court decision and we will subsequently announce government policy for the solution of the problem.

[English]

TRANSPORT

SHIPMENT OF OIL BY TANKER SUBMARINES UNDER ARCTIC ICE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister indicate whether discussions have been held between officials of his department and General Dynamics of the United States concerning tanker submarines for transporting oil under the Arctic ice? If so, would he indicate whether a study is under way to determine the best type of undersea navigational aids required and whether such a study would involve the establishing of an east coast terminal?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister might want to reply to the first part of the question. The second part appears to me to be very technical and it seems to me should be replied to by way of a statement on motions. If the hon. member will agree to the suggestion, the minister might reply to the first part of the question.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): What might be described as low-level talks—that is, I cannot say there is any great degree of urgency in them—have been initiated with various groups who come to see us with various proposals for the transportation of substances under water. But I do not think it is something I would regard as being a priority item in the government's mind at present.

ESTABLISHMENT OF SUBMARINE IDENTIFICATION ZONE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the question just posed and all the discussion of anti-pollution measures, can the minister indicate whether the government is giving any consideration to the establishment of a submarine identification zone inasmuch as military vessels are also great sources of pollution?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I find the question rather general in nature. Perhaps the hon. member could be more specific. What area is he referring to? Is he talking about the Arctic?

Mr. Forrestall: Perhaps I should rephrase my question. Is the government giving any consideration to the establishment of submarine identification zones in our Arctic and off our east and west coasts?

POLLUTION

THE ARCTIC—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEASURES TO ENFORCE ANTI-POLLUTION PROVISIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister will recall that some time ago I asked him whether he would be prepared or would ask an appropriate minister to make a statement on motions in the near future outlining to the House the measures that the government proposes to adopt and follow relating to the enforcement of Bill C-202, establishing anti-pollution control in the Arctic waters?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the Leader of the Opposition asked me this, and at the time I answered him that the bill is still before the House. It is still before the standing committee, so I see no need to make such a statement.

Mr. Stanfield: The Prime Minister will recall, on reflection, that he said he would consult his ministers to see whether such a statement should be made. I ask him to bear in mind that the bill itself does not deal with the question of enforcement. In view of the importance of establishing the will of Parliament to combat pollution in the north, would the Prime Minister not agree that it is equally important that we know what measures the government proposes to adopt to enforce this bill? That is the question I asked the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would agree that his supplementary question is argumentative and cannot be accepted procedurally.

HOWE SOUND—RESULTS OF TESTS OF FISH

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. I ask this question in the hope that the minister's reply can assist members of the House of Commons from the British Columbia coast. Is it possible for the minister to advise us how long he anticipates the scientific analysis of fish at Howe Sound will take in order to determine whether or not the present closure should be continued or relaxed?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): I hope we will get the results on Monday, if not today.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROVISION OF HOUSING ON ESKASONI RESERVE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the continual representations by the residents of the Eskasoni Indian reservation deploring the poor and inadequate housing and the lack of adequate money for housing, would the minister at the first opportunity ascertain if remedial action can be taken to correct this serious problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the situation in which the Indians in the Eskasoni reservation, on Cape Breton, find themselves. I know that they are facing housing problems that need immediate attention and to which I shall give particular consideration. The hon. member must understand that we find the same problem in all parts of Canada and that it is always difficult to set priorities. If there is a more urgent problem at the Eskasoni reservation than elsewhere, it will be looked into immediately.

[English]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Would the minister not agree that situations where 10 to 12 citizens of Canada live in three or four rooms are probably not too common?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I know that the situation brings particular hardships—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIRPORTS

NEW BRUNSWICK—STUDY OF SITE

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): I have a question for the Minister of Transport further to a question asked on November 4 by the hon. member for Moncton. Can the minister indicate what progress has been made with the study of traffic patterns in the Maritimes and the possibility of a central New Brunswick jet airport? I ask this question because the minister, very commendably, has some transportation meetings scheduled in New Brunswick and undoubtedly this information would be required.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): If the hon. member will permit, I will take the question as notice so as to get the most up-to-date details and I will try to answer it early next week.

TRANSPORT

ACTION TO EXPEDITE MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker I have a related question for the Minister of Transport. Last Friday I asked the minister about the delay in grain shipments at Thunder Bay. Has he had an opportunity to investigate this situation, and can he assure us that every effort will be made to expedite grain movement into and out of all our ports in order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is only distantly related to the previous one, but it has been asked and the minister might be allowed to reply briefly.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): While I am examining air patterns in the Atlantic provinces I will certainly take into account this related and clearly closely allied question having to do with grain movement in the west.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOTIVE MANUFACTURING ASSISTANCE REGULATIONS—EXTENSION OF EXPIRY DATE

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Could the minister inform the House whether the government has decided to extend the June 30 expiry date of the automotive manufacturing assistance regulations?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): As I said a few days ago, this is under study and I will report to the House when a decision has been made.

Mr. Broadbent: On a point of information, Mr. Speaker, the question asked a few days ago referred to the TAB agreements and not to the automotive manufacturing assistance regulations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—PROPOSED BEVERLEY TOWNSHIP SITE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I should like to direct my question to the genial Minister of Transport. It concerns the proposed auxiliary airport at Toronto. In view of the great number of rumours in the newspapers and on television concerning a proposed site in the Beverley Township area, could the minister say now whether this area is or is not being considered?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I cannot say for the very simple reason that I personally have deliberately avoided getting involved in the actual locations. I can only repeat what I have said on many previous occasions, that about four or five different locations are being examined. There will be no disclosure concerning these until such time as a final decision has been made.

Mr. Hales: In view of the fact that the minister said there were four or five areas, could he say if this is one of them?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

POLLUTION

OTTAWA RIVER—AREA OF COMMERCIAL FISHING BAN

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Because of the concern that has been created in all communities bordering on the Ottawa River by the announcement of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry concerning mercury pollution in the Ottawa River, and also in view of the announcement today, I believe, by the provincial Minister of Lands and Forests of a ban on commercial fishing in the Ottawa River, is the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry prepared at this time to indicate the section of the river about which there is the most concern?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, it is that stretch downstream of Ottawa and Hull.

TRANSPORT

IMPROVEMENT OF FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN NEWFOUNDLAND AND MAINLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It is prompted by statistics which indicate the very serious inadequacies in surface transportation between Newfoundland and the mainland of Canada now existing, of which the minister is well aware and in which he is interested, and which are underscored by the sinking of the Patrick Morris.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please ask his question.

Mr. McGrath: This is a very serious matter, Mr. Speaker, and I thought a short preamble would point up the seriousness of it. What steps is the government taking to correct the serious inadequacies in surface transportation between Newfoundland and the Mainland of Canada as a consequence of the sinking of the Patrick Morris?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are two sides to the problem, one involving the transportation of cargo and the other the transportation of passengers. In so far as the passenger side of it is concerned, a number of proposals are now being considered but there is difficulty with regard to maintaining adequate service at both the western and eastern terminals. I am looking to see if there is a substitute ship which could be added during the peak summer months. On the question of the sinking of the Patrick Morris and a replacement, we are searching now to see if there is a vessel that might be suitable as a replacement. We are also looking at the possibility of using, during the summer months, a tow barge or a system such as that used on the west coast. A number of alternatives are being looked at and we will make an announcement as fast as we can.

AIR TRANSPORT

SERVICE BETWEEN REGINA, SWIFT CURRENT, MEDICINE HAT AND CALGARY

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport about transportation on the prairies. When will a decision be made by his department to inaugurate some type of air transportation between Regina, Swift Current, Medicine Hat and Calgary?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is hardly a supplementary but the minister may want to reply.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I am doing my very best to see that the hon. member gets adequate transportation to and from his headquarters. I hope that the Canadian Transport Commission will be able to make its decision on the pending applications within a very short time.

Mr. McIntosh: When? Before my old age pension is due?

[Mr. McGrath.]

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF UNITED STATES DRAFT DODGERS AND DESERTERS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of statements made recently by the federal government's committee on youth that United States draft dodgers and deserters admitted to Canada are getting involved in crime on a greatly increasing scale, is the government considering any new steps to try to screen such immigrants more carefully in future?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think that the question asked by the hon. member invites a very general statement, and I would think that kind of statement ought to be made on motions. The minister might like to indicate for the benefit of the House whether such a statement is being considered.

Mr. Scott: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I do so in view of statements made by the committee on youth that a large percentage of draft dodgers and especially deserters coming into this country are poorly educated. Many of them lack trade skills or professional training and consequently a large percentage of these people have found it difficult and even impossible to find jobs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a supplementary question. It cannot be put to the House in this way. It is a submission which the hon. member must assume has been noted by the minister.

INDUSTRY

STUDY ON FOREIGN CONCESSIONAL FINANCING

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It has to do with the previous inquiry I made regarding the study of foreign concessional financing. When I asked the question the minister indicated that the study would be ready soon. Is it now ready?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we are still trying to develop a policy statement. In the meantime we have sent one of our officers to Great Britain to discuss this matter with the British authorities. As is well known, this concessional financing is coming to Canada from Great Britain.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for South Western Nova. I apologize to the hon. member. I am sure his patience will be rewarded in a few seconds. I think the hon. member for Waterloo has a supplementary.

Mr. Saltsman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister give some indication of how long it will take before he is in a position to give some definite information to industry in Canada which will indicate that there are some answers to this problem?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, as is so well known, my difficulty lies in attempting to reconcile the conflicting interests in the Canadian business community.

TEXTILES—ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Inasmuch as the statement on textile policy was to have been forthcoming in the month of April and since the month of April ended yesterday, can the minister now tell us, without using the word "soon", when we may expect such statement?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that the month of May immediately follows the month of April.

Mr. Comeau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister now tell us whether he has met with the provincial ministers and whether he will be able to make a statement next week?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have met with as many people as I could, and when it was not physically possible for me to do so my officers have done so.

AIR TRANSPORT

REPORT ON CRASH AT WABUSH

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker, after I had almost given up hope. My question is to the Minister of Transport. Since it is almost six months since the crash of the DH-125 jet at Wabush which claimed the lives of a number of officials of Churchill Falls Corporation, can the minister give any indication when the report on the investigation by his department will be released?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I could not attempt to give a date but I hope it will be very soon.

RESEARCH

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STUDY OF INDUSTRIAL USES FOR GRAIN

Mr. Doug. Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board? In view of the current surplus of grain in Canada, will the minister give consideration to making a statement on motions in order to inform the House of the sort of research in which the National Research Council is involved with respect to industrial uses of grain? Should he decide to make such a statement, would the minister also make specific reference to studies respecting the feasibility of adding quantities of grain alcohol to fuel for motor vehicles as an anti-pollution measure?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should not make the statement himself.

Mr. Gilbert: Answer!

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is a very interesting proposition. I will be glad to look into it.

PRIME MINISTER

ITINERARY OF ASIAN TRIP

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? In view of his upcoming Asian trip, when is the Prime Minister going to release his itinerary? Also, does it include Viet Nam?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the itinerary is subject to approval by all the countries I am visiting, and is not final yet. Thus far there is no indication of Viet Nam in it.

TRADE

EFFECT OF REPORTED AGREEMENT TO BE SIGNED WITH NEW ZEALAND

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? It has been reported that a new trade agreement will be signed with New Zealand. Will this in any way change the trade arrangements that we now have with New Zealand?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to divulge what agreements might transpire between Canada and New Zealand.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION RESPECTING JUVENILE DELINQUENTS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the likeable and lovable Solicitor General.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Now you will have to answer, George.

Mr. Gilbert: I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether, in view of his desire to incorporate into legislation the recommendations of the report on juvenile delinquents, he will bring in amendments to the Juvenile Delinquents Act or bring forth a young offenders act? If so, will that be done before the present session finishes?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we are in the process of drafting legislation on the subject of young offenders. The name of the new bill, of course, will not be determined until shortly before it is disclosed to the House. We are now at the stage of the fourth draft of the legislation and it will have to be considered by the government for official approval before being presented to the House for its consideration. I am unable to say at the moment whether or not that will be done during the present session.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will this new legislation also apply to the young American draft dodgers?

TRADE

ATTENDANCE OF CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVES AT CANTON FAIR

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I should like to know whether the apparent impasse in the Canadian-Chinese talks at Stockholm has affected the presence of officials of his department at the Canton Trade Fair, which it is normally their practice to attend twice a year?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my officers and trade commissioners are there, as well as 50 Canadian businessmen. I might say very confidentially to the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: —that Canadian trade commissioners are the only ones in the world who have been allowed to stay there for the full duration of the fair.

GRAIN

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—AMENDMENTS TO WHEAT BOARD ACT REGULATIONS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board who is on the roster for today. In his absence, I will direct it either to the government House Leader who tabled the wheat inventory reduction regulations, or another appropriate minister. In view of the fact that these regulations tabled today cover only one portion of the Operation Lift program, can the minister indicate if the amendments to the regulations under the Canadian Wheat Board Act, also involved in this program, have been passed by this date?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I do not know Mr. Speaker. I will find out and report next week.

Mr. Burton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the wheat inventory reduction regulations were passed on April 21 and only made available today, will all necessary steps be taken to expedite both the passage and publication of the regulations under the Canadian Wheat Board Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that he is now making a submission which he has to assume has been noted. Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with regard to today's business. I may say there have been some discussions and the order has been inverted. The first item to be called will be the Supreme Court Act, to be followed by the Bill of Exchange Act. I also wish to report there have been some discussions regarding the calling of the Law Reform Commission Bill today. There is no agreement amongst the parties to bring it forward; therefore it will not be called today.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPREME COURT ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING APPEALS

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-182, to amend the Supreme Court Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Turner moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, this bill can be classified as a housekeeping bill because the amendments, although they are important, are not extensive. I am sure that when the amendments have been passed they will greatly expedite the business of the Supreme Court. I read that last May and June there were between 48 and 50 cases listed to be heard in those two months. This indicates the weight of the work these judges must do.

I hope when the minister brings forth his next amendments to the Act he will adopt some of the suggestions that have been made to the effect that there should be an increase in the number of judges in the Supreme Court.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are you available?

Mr. Gilbert: I might say that I am not available, nor am I volunteering. There has also been some criticism with regard to the distribution of the judges on the Supreme Court. I understand that three are appointed from Quebec, three from Ontario, one from the east coast, the Maritimes, and two from the west coast, making a composite of nine.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is from the whole west.

Mr. Gilbert: I have heard the recommendation that the number should be increased to at least 11 judges so that there could be a wider representation from the Maritimes and from western Canada. I hope the minister will take that into consideration when he next presents an amendment.

There has been some discussion as to whether certain types of cases should be referred to the Supreme Court, cases such as negligence cases, taxation cases and expropriation cases. These constitute a fair number of the cases before these judges. I hope when the minister is considering any amendments in the future he will take this into consideration.

With regard to negligence cases, I hope that the provinces will see the wisdom of compulsory automobile insurance and take those cases out of the provincial courts. I notice some of my legal friends winced when I said that. It is very important, Mr. Speaker, that justice be done. Justice will be more than done when these cases come under compulsory automobile insurance, and are taken out of the courts. They take up a great deal of time and sometimes the results are not too favourable to the people who have been injured.

My last point is probably the most important. I mentioned it briefly to the minister when the bill was before the committee. I refer to the necessity of a possible direction to the Supreme Court, by way of an amendment, permitting the court to take the sociological view with regard to constitutional questions. Studies in the past have shown that the judges closely follow the words contained in the constitution, and this has resulted in our laws being ineffective from a sociological point of view at times.

There is a great deal of legislation which is coming forth that impinges on the constitution. I think that the members of the Supreme Court should have some direction from the minister or they themselves should make a statement that they intend to follow the sociological view which incorporates the economic, cultural and sociological aspects of Canadian life. They have been tied too closely to the literal interpretation and to following precedents. If the minister does not deem it wise to make this type of amendment to the Supreme Court Act, I urge the Supreme Court judges to make a statement with regard to it.

I noticed that when welcoming the new judges to the Supreme Court the other day the president of the Canadian Bar Association gave a direction to the court, ex cathedra. He said he hoped they would not become involved in a sociological view. I want to say, as a member of the bar for Ontario and as the representative of the constituents of Broadview, that this is very important and should be done. It is done in the United States and I understand it is also done in England.

• (12:20 p.m.)

The Minister of Justice is very progressive. He has put some forward looking legislation on the Statute books of Canada. I look forward to the minister taking the initiative with regard to future amendments of the Supreme Court Act which will be in keeping with the times. The administration of the law, Mr. Speaker, is very important. There is a social confrontation which is taking place. It is our duty to keep the law in tune with the times. I feel sure the minister will follow that suggestion.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, before the minister replies, I wish to indicate my interest in the appointment of new judges. I ask the minister if all the vacancies in New Brunswick have been filled. If not, when does the minister expect to fill any vacancies that exist?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak further on the bill because I spoke at length on second reading and in committee. In answer to the hon. member's question, I am searching for the best possible replacement for the Court of Appeal vacancy in New Brunswick.

Mr. Bell: There are a lot of people who are anxiously waiting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING BILLS AND NOTES

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill C-208, to amend the Bills of Exchange Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, being a Minister of Consumer Affairs has its advantages and disadvantages. Today, one is conscious of the advantages, because it is with a great deal of personal pride and happiness that I introduce this bill and urge hon. members to support it. The bill seeks to amend the Bills of Exchange Act, and the proposed changes as outlined are intended to remedy a defect in the existing law which has created a serious injustice for many consumers. The difficulty arises from the application of rules originally applied to dealings between merchants in connection with consumer credit transactions. Merchants who deal with promissory notes and similar negotiable instruments are supposed to be completely aware of their significance. People in the commercial world are, I believe, conscious of the obligations they assume when signing a promissory note, but the same cannot be said of the great bulk of ordinary consumers who are often not fully aware of the legal obligations they are assuming when they sign promissory notes which are collateral to conditional sales contracts.

It is standard practice for vendors to assign such promissory notes to third parties, usually finance companies or banks. If the assignee of the note qualifies as a holder, in due course under the conditions laid down in the Bills of Exchange Act he is legally entitled to collect on the note without regard to any disputes that might arise between the buyer and the seller. Performance of the sales contract may be unsatisfactory for many different reasons. The most flagrant case is non-delivery. In other cases the goods may have been misrepresented or may be defective. Sometimes the sales contract calls for the provision of services which the vendor does not perform. It is not uncommon for the vendor to become bankrupt and fail to fulfil his part of the contract for this reason. In such cases the purchaser does not escape his obligation to pay the finance company or other third party which is holding his note. The holder, in due course, is by law insulated from any defects in the performance of the contract and can enforce payment through the courts. Most consumers do not fully understand the process of assigning promissory notes. Some of them believe they can force a vendor to perform properly on a contract by withholding their periodic payments. The finance companies may express sympathy with the difficulties of the buyer and often do, but it is ultimately made clear to the victimized consumer that this solution is not open to him. It is a regrettable fact that unscrupulous and fly-by-night operators have taken advantage of the holder in due course doctrine.

In discussing laws relating to credit or bills of exchange it is easy to fall into the trap of assuming that all credit is wrong and that all those engaged in the credit industry are bad. This is not true. The wise use of credit allows many of us to own things which we otherwise could not possess, and to live better than would otherwise be possible. That is the wise use of credit. There are companies in the industry which are fully conscious of the responsibilities they bear in allowing credit and helping people to use that credit prudently. It is also true, unfortunately, that there are some elements in the industry which are not as responsible as those I have mentioned. Glib and persuasive salesmen, often operating from door to door, can and do take advantage of unsophisticated or gullible consumers. The prototype of this crew was the lightning rod salesmen of a few years ago. The wares may be different now but the basic approach is the same. Once the consumer has completed the formality of signing his name a few times to some innocent-looking documents he may find to his regret that he has assumed an unconditional obligation from which he cannot escape. It is the unconditional nature of the promissory note under the present law which makes it an unsuitable instrument for consumer credit transactions.

These issues are not theoretical ones; instances of inequity are commonplace. Hon. members are familiar with the Box 99 program which we operate in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. People are encouraged to write to Box 99, Ottawa, with their problems and complaints. We have in our bureau a great number of letters from people who have been victimized by the application of the law on bills of exchange as it now exists. I shall give hon. members a couple of examples so that they can see in a practical way the application of the present law, the law we are seeking to change in the bill before us.

Mr. C. purchased $4,500 worth of building supplies from a company to which he gave a promissory note. The building supply company assigned the promissory note to a finance company. The supplies were never delivered and the building supply company went out of business. Mr. C. was sued on the note and a judgment of $4,500 was given against him.

Mr. F. bought a vacuum cleaner on an instalment contract complete with a promissory note. The vacuum cleaner proved to be unsatisfactory and he stopped paying the finance company which had bought his note. He was sued successfully by the finance company, which garnisheed his wages. Mr. F. lost his job because his employer did not like garnishments.

The role of promissory notes in consumer credit transactions has been studied intensively by a number of government bodies as well as by private agencies and individuals in the last few years. The Royal Commission on the Cost of Borrowing Money, Cost of Credit, and Related Matters in the Province of Nova Scotia, was critical of the effect of promissory notes on consumers and concluded: "The purchaser is thus returned to the caveat emptor situation of the middle nineteenth century."

The final report of the Select Committee of the Ontario Legislature on Consumer Credit observed:

> Cases were brought to the committee's attention where the seller in an instalment sales transaction misrepresented to the purchaser, in some cases dishonestly and fraudulently, the terms of the contract. Yet the purchaser was compelled to pay the whole debt because the discounter of the promissory note (the finance company) which formed part of the contract was a holder in due course with no knowledge, or provable knowledge, of the representations made.

• (12:30 p.m.)

The Special Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on consumer credit and consumer matters which I had the honour and pleasure of co-chairing with Senator Croll recommended explicitly in 1967:

> Along with the purchase of the right to collect the consumer's money should go any undischarged obligations to the consumer that formed part of the original transaction.

That is why at the beginning of my statement I mentioned that it was with a good deal of pride and happiness that I rose to introduce this bill today, and I am satisfied that some of the recommendations of at least one committee on which I served are being implemented.

We hear a great deal in this House about the Senate, and sometimes we hear negative comment about the Senate. While some of that might be applicable, and since we are discussing this subject, I would like to pay tribute to the co-chairman of that committee, Senator Croll, who I think has been a very devoted public servant for years and years and who is an adornment to the other place and an adornment to the public life of Canada. Senator Croll has for years been agitating for the amendment that is before the House and that it is my pleasure to introduce today.

In addition to the public examinations that I have mentioned, both the Consumers Association of Canada and the Canadian Consumer Council have recommended a change in the existing law. The question has also been under review in the United States and a number of alternative techniques for changing the law have been proposed in the United States. Uniform Consumer Credit Code. The suggestions have already been adopted by a number of states in the United States, and one of the alternative techniques dealt with under the United States consumer credit code is the alternative that is before this House.

I should emphasize that the proposed amendment to the Bills of Exchange Act is not the complete answer to faulty performance on time payment contracts. I want to emphasize that it is not the complete answer, and that we should pass this legislation in full knowledge of that fact. It will be of great value, but the action we are proposing to take today needs to be supplemented by remedial action by the provincial legislatures. This is because a conditional sales contract itself may contain, and often does contain, many clauses which impair the right of the consumer or the purchaser under the contract. Since the regulation of contracts is clearly under provincial jurisdiction, co-operative action by the provinces is essential if the effect of Bill C-208 is to be as complete as all of us would like it to be.

There is a standard clause in most conditional sales contracts in which the purchaser binds himself not to raise any defences against an assignee of a promissory note. This is another technique designed to isolate the finance companies from any arguments about the quality of the goods or performance under the sales contract. Similarly, there are the so-called disclaimer clauses by which the purchaser waives any common law protection he might have relative to the fitness of the goods. This means that the guarantees and warranties in the contract, which are usually limiting, replace any other legal rights of the consumer respecting the quality and performance of the goods he buys.

There have been extensive discussions between the federal and the provincial governments on this range of issues. The federal-provincial conference of officials on consumer affairs in October, 1968 explored the problem in detail and concluded that remedial action was highly desirable. The matter was again discussed at the later federal-provincial conference of ministers on consumer affairs which I hosted in Ottawa in April, 1969 and informal discussions have been carried on with the provinces since that time.

I have been confidentially advised that some provinces have already developed detailed proposals to support the federal initiative that we are taking today. The Bills of Exchange Act, as it now stands, discourages the introduction of reforms by the provincial legislatures. There is little point in changing the provincial laws relating to contracts if the changes can be frustrated, as they are, by the holder in due course provisions of the Bills of Exchange Act.

The changes proposed in the present amendment, Bill C-208, are overdue and I am confident that if they are achieved, supporting action will be taken by the provinces. This will pave the way to offering consumers in general more meaningful guarantees and warranties and the kind of protection under the various sales of goods acts and conditional sales acts of the provinces which they have been denied for so long.

When this Bill C-208 is passed by this Parliament and becomes law, the door is open to all the provinces to reform or, revise completely their laws relating to the sale of consumer goods, their sales of goods acts and their conditional sales acts. I hope, as I am sure all hon. members of the House hope, that when this bill is passed, the provinces will take advantage of that doorway, will go through it and revise their legislation applying to consumer purchases.

The Bills of Exchange Act is a formidable piece of legislation which constitutes part of the fundamental law of the country and we are making a fundamental amendment in the law. Any amendment to it must, therefore, be carefully formulated in order to avoid unintended effects on the law respecting negotiable instruments in general.

The amendment today is confined to promissory notes and bills of exchange "issued in respect of a consumer purchase" and by definition does not apply to business transactions—those transactions between traders as a matter of trade. Although a cheque is a bill of exchange, cheques and near-cheques—near-cheques are those issued by trust companies and certain savings associations—are only covered by the amendment if they are post-dated by more than 30 days. The inclusion of post-dated cheques and other bills of exchange is designed to prevent the evasion of the intent of the amendment by the substitution of these instruments—cheques or post-dated cheques—for promissory notes.

The first substantive provision of the amendment is that consumer bills and notes shall be prominently and legibly marked with the words "consumer purchase" on their face. If this is not done, if the notes are not marked in this way, the note or bill or post-dated cheque becomes void except under special circumstances where the holder is a holder in due course without notice. In addition, it is an offence to transfer such an instrument if its character is known; that is to say, if its character of being a consumer note or a consumer purchase is known to the transferer.

The second and main feature of the amendment is that the right of a holder of a consumer bill or note to collect is subject to any defence or right of set-off that the purchaser would have had in an action by the seller. In other words, the equities in the original transaction between the vendor and the purchaser travel with the note and a finance company or subsequent assignee will not be able to claim the special status it has hitherto had. The purchaser will be able to raise, on an action or collection of the note, all the defences against the assignee that he could have raised against the original vendor.

One almost certain consequence of the amendment is that finance companies and others buying promissory notes will have, in order to protect themselves, to exercise greater care that the sellers from whom they are receiving the notes are not engaged in any fraudulent or shady operations. This is, to me, a very healthy development in the law. The new rules will make it more difficult for the "gyp" artist and irresponsible sellers to operate.

It has become a commonplace observation that credit has become a way of life. The growth in the volume of consumer credit since the Second World War has been explosive and is involving an increasingly higher proportion of the population. Many innovations have been introduced in the consumer credit field and the law must be as innovative as the practices in the consumer credit industry. We cannot expect consumers to be fairly treated in the last half of the 20th century if we rely on laws and legal concepts which are outmoded and in some cases irrelevant. I would hope that this bill will receive the enthusiastic support of the members of this House so that it can become the law of the land and provide relief and rights to consumers that they have not had up until now. I would also hope that it will pass and become law, certainly by the end of June.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, we find very little to criticize in the principle of the amendment before us. I heard with interest the minister's speech which was an enlargement of the statement he made on April 27 following the introduction of the bill. I do not doubt the minister's tremendous interest in protecting the consumers of this country, but he certainly must be complimented on the tremendous public relations division he has set up within his department. If not every other day, certainly not a week goes by without a most interesting statement appearing across our desks from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford).

Mr. Basford: I want to keep you informed.

Mr. McGrath: If it is not a policy statement from Vancouver, it is a statement explaining the introduction of a bill before the debate has commenced. My point is that the minister would be better advised to make his statement to the House of Commons first, and use this House as a vehicle for making his statement to the public, especially when he makes a statement following first reading of a bill before the House has had an opportunity to debate it. We are concerned about the tendency of this government to erode, by this device, the traditional rights of Parliament.

In his statement on April 27 the minister said, and he repeated it here today, that the change in the law follows the recommendations made by the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Consumer Credit, the Consumers Association of Canada, the Canadian Consumers Council, various authorities responsible for consumer credit legislation and various experts on consumer law. I am amazed that the minister did not give credit to the members of this House who during the past years have introduced bills on this very subject. As a matter of fact, it was as a consequence of these private members' bills that the government of the day in 1966 referred this subject to a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons which was then established with the minister as co-chairman. Although I was not in this place at that time, I read these bills with a great deal of interest. I read with interest the bill of the hon. member for Essex South. I understand that this was one of the important planks in his election campaign during that year.

I think of the bill presented to this House by the honourable and distinguished member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan) in the same year when he came here as an eager and enthusiastic supporter of the Liberal government. I think also of the bill presented by my colleague in the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). These are three bills which come to my mind, but I believe there were a half dozen at that time dealing with this subject. All these bills were referred to the Special Joint Committee on Consumer Credit when the minister was co-chairman of that committee. I find it strange that the minister did not give any credit to these hon. members for their interest in the consumer market before the government showed any interest.

But, Mr. Speaker, this brings up the whole subject of private members' bills and their future in Parliament. I believe it is about time, in setting up its rules, the House of Commons took a long hard look at the matter of private members' bills and the rules that govern them as well as the frustration of a private member, such as the then member for Essex South, who, in compliance with a promise to his electorate, introduced a private member's bill to do the very thing the minister is now doing. He found, however, his enthusiasm was dampened by the whip who mustered up all the government backbenchers he could get to talk out that particular bill. That is a deplorable practice, Mr. Speaker, which has evolved in this House and is one which I think should be changed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: If the bill of the hon. member for Essex South, the bill of the hon. member for Timiskaming or the bill of the hon. member for Spadina had been accepted, we would have had this legislation on the books at least six years ago. So, as I say, we should end the practice of talking out private members' bills. I say we should do this because I think it is a practice which is not in keeping with present-day Parliament and what the people of Canada expect from their Members of Parliament. The government may expect us to merely rubber stamp everything it chooses to bring in, but governments are not infallible. This government certainly is not infallible. This government probably will find that its most serious error in judgment is its failure to recognize the rights of Members of Parliament to contribute to the laws of this country by bringing in private members' bills.

Mr. Gibson: It is getting better.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member who interjects from his seat is probably one of the members who has been thoroughly hurt by this practice and probably, as a consequence of being hurt, has become a little cynical. This is a great pity, because I know the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) came here with good intentions and full of enthusiasm. Certainly, he did not expect his own party to sabotage all his efforts to make a contribution in this House and to the laws of the country.

[Mr. McGrath.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: This is also a great pity because I am sure if the government would allow the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth to do so he would probably make quite a considerable contribution; but with this government he will never have that opportunity.

• (12:50 p.m.)

The minister referred to the report of the committee of which he was co-chairman, the committee on consumer credit. This should be his Bible. Perhaps when it is convenient he quotes from it, as he has done today. But on other occasions I am sure that this document must come back to haunt him. However, in using the recommendations of this committee as his terms of reference for introducing this amendment, the minister forgets to tell us why it took three years to carry out this unanimous recommendation of the committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the minister did not get the mantle immediately upon the establishment of this department, although he thought he would. He had to wait on the bleachers for a while. On looking through the records I find that during the course of the discussion of the legislation setting up the Department the minister's predecessor, who now holds the portfolio of Minister of Justice, said that the government already had many pieces of legislation in the hopper, waiting to present to parliament, and all in the area of consumer protection. Mr. Speaker, we have not seen them.

First of all, the then minister had to take some considerable time setting up the department under the new act. But notwithstanding the fact that he then referred to the presence of galling injustices against consumers, injustices so prevalent across the nation that they required immediate attention, it has taken all this time to bring in these amendments.

Mr. Pepin: Now, now.

Mr. McGrath: The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) could more usefully consume his time by going out and selling some of our surplus wheat.

Mr. Pepin: Then, you would accuse me of not being present in the House.

Mr. McGrath: If the minister has the wheat situation in hand he could take a look at the Grand Banks of Newfoundland where there are loads of fish waiting to be sold.

Mr. Pepin: They are selling very well.

Mr. McGrath: Another recommendation which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs may rediscover one of these days deals with another injustice which the minister knows about, and upon which the committee heard evidence. It concerns the provision of low interest loans to families on low income, and it might be worth while to quote this particular recommendation. It is recommendation No. 3 and appears at page 4 of the report:

> In order to prevent low-income families from becoming mired in debts from which they can never hope to extricate themselves, we recommend that the federal government make available, through the regular banking system, guaranteed consumer loans under specified conditions to all with annual family incomes of $4,000 or less. The loans would be repayable over an extended period, and would bear a low rate of interest. They would be made only for provident and productive purposes related to the preservation of home and family. The maximum size of such a loan would be $1,500.

That is a very good recommendation. We are wondering when the minister will get around to convincing his cabinet colleagues to implement it.

The recommendation on which the amendment before us is based, is No. 6. But, Mr. Speaker, there is another recommendation which I think the House would be interested in noting. It is one dealing with the practice known as captive sales financing, and I think the record should show what the committee recommended in this regard. It is recommendation No. 5, and I quote:

> We are concerned about the practice known as "captive sales financing," which is common in the merchandising of consumer durable goods, particularly in the sale of motor cars. Parliament has expressed, in the Combines Investigation Act, its desire to encourage the regulation of industry by free competition. However, the act does not at present apply generally in respect of service industries. The committee recommends that the scope of the legislation be enlarged, so as to ensure that such free competition will obtain, at least in the sales finance industry, by providing for the regulation of the so-called "captive sales financing"; that is, of the operations in that field of manufacturers, distributors, dealers and others not principally engaged in sales finance.

That is an excellent recommendation. I am sure the minister is prepared to endorse it today, and hopefully he will tell us why the government has not seen fit to carry it out, because abuses across the country are prevalent. As a consumer, why should I be obliged, because I buy a car from a dealer of one of the big three, to go to a finance company owned by the same automobile company?

Mr. Basford: You should not.

Mr. McGrath: Of course, I should not be, but why does the minister not bring in legislation to do something about it? Why shouldn't I, as a consumer, have the right to go and make the best financing deal I can make?

Mr. Basford: You should.

Mr. McGrath: Such a provision would not weaken the sales finance industry; it would strengthen it. The sales finance industry, if it continues with this particular type of abuse against the rights of consumers, should be regulated according to the provisions of recommendation No. 5.

There are other recommendations in this report to which I would like to refer. Again, I would recommend that members of the House read this very interesting bible, this very interesting document, which in many ways could be called the bill of rights of the consumers of this country. If one reads it one suddenly realizes that the interests of the minister, when he was chairman of the committee, were totally different from the interests he now displays as a minister of the Crown. May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a question of privilege before the House adjourns, Mr. Speaker. I did not want to do this formally during the last hour, but now I want to draw Your Honour's attention to a situation which shows the very serious direction in which this House is heading. I did not draw attention to it earlier in order that the House might not rise in the middle of this important debate, but I wish to point out that there have been as few as nine members present in the chamber during the last hour, and most of that time there were only 12 members present—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would point out that this is not a question of privilege. At any time during our proceedings the hon. member was at liberty to draw my attention to the lack of a quorum of the House. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. McGrath: The minister made reference during his speech to the fact that the effectiveness of this legislation would be dependent to a large extent on action being taken by the provinces to bring in complementary legislation to deal with their area of jurisdiction. Under the constitutional provision concerning property and civil rights, they would have the jurisdiction over sales contracts and so on. This points up what we believe to be one of the major weaknesses of the minister's department, namely, the areas of constitutional conflict. In order for the minister to be totally effective in the area of consumer protection, it would be necessary for him to have powers that one could only have in a unitary state. But we do not live in a unitary state. Under our federal system and under our constitution, our provinces also have rights and responsibilities.

This amendment certainly is not something new; it has been talked about at least since 1963 and has been considered at least since 1967 when the joint committee made it's report. We are wondering if the Minister would take some initiative to get agreement from the provinces to bring in the necessary complementary legislation to make the amendments to this particular federal statute, the Bills of Exchange Act, totally effective. For example, we would have expected that the minister would come to the House, during the course of the second reading of this bill, and tell us that he had obtained agreement from the provinces or, at the very least, that he had had consultations with the provincial governments and could tell us what hope there would be for obtaining some type of agreement with the provinces to bring in the necessary provincial legislation. But apparently that is not the case because the minister made no reference to it.

Mr. Basford: I did so.

Mr. McGrath: But the minister did not indicate that agreement had been reached. He merely expressed what I would call a pious hope that once the amendments before the House were passed the provinces would act. I do not think that is good enough.

One other thing about the legislation that disturbs us is the fact that before the amendments can go into force they would first of all have to be proclaimed in the Canada Gazette, and there is no indication when the proclamation will take place. We feel the House is entitled to know when the legislation is to be effective. For example, the Bankruptcy Act, for which the minister is responsible, contains a provision similar in nature to the amendment to the Bills of Exchange Act we are now considering. The Bankruptcy Act

[Mr. McGrath.]

Amendment was passed in 1966 and is in the Statutes of Canada, 1966-67, chapter 32. Section 22 was amended, and it was a very important amendment. It provided for the orderly repayment of debts and made provision to protect consumers from the hazards of bankruptcy and all that go with it.

My point in bringing this out is the fact that this legislation has not been proclaimed to date.

Mr. Basford: It has.

Mr. McGrath: I was under the impression that it had not, but the minister corrects me. However, certainly the necessary concomitant proclamations have not taken place in the provinces.

Mr. Basford: I value the hon. member's comments very highly, and if I might just explain the situation with his permission, I believe his intervention will be even more valuable. Part X of the Bankruptcy Act is only proclaimed in those provinces which request it. It has been proclaimed in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Nova Scotia. The other provinces have not requested its proclamation.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the minister has set the record straight because he has bolstered my argument which questions the effectiveness of the legislation before us. The amendments to the Bankruptcy Act, passed by Parliament in 1966 and now included in the statute books, are only effective in four of the ten provinces. That means that Canadians in the other six provinces do not enjoy the protection Parliament meant all Canadians to have when it passed this particular amendment to the Bankruptcy Act providing for the orderly repayment of debts in the case of people who find themselves facing the rather unpleasant consequences of bankruptcy.

The same argument could be applied with the same force to this legislation, because the act will not come into effect until it is proclaimed. In addition, there is a jurisdictional problem. For this legislation to be totally effective, and we want it to be because everyone in this house is interested in protecting the rights of consumers, especially those consumers in the lower income brackets who are usually preyed upon by those unscrupulous operators, complementary legislation must be introduced by the provinces; otherwise, Canadians will not enjoy the full protection of the legislation. We should like to hear the minister's assurance that the government intends to bring this legislation into force and that the act will be proclaimed.

In conclusion, sir, the minister said this legislation will protect consumers from unscrupulous operators who would prey on them. These operators usually take the form of door-to-door solicitors who prey upon unsuspecting housewives in the lower income brackets, generally speaking, or upon old age pensioners and those who really cannot protect themselves because of educational handicaps or other circumstances beyond their control. The minister referred to an incident involving a lightning rod salesman. We must protect our people from these successors of the lightning rod salesman, the peddlers of magazines, encyclopedias, roofing, aluminum windows and roof repair jobs—in short, the peddlers of those things which can be bought legitimately on the open market at competitive prices. We know the consequences of some of those promotions. Hon. members and the minister may remember the knitting machine operation which swept through Ottawa in 1968 and affected some 300 innocent consumers. If the minister does not remember it, I will send the necessary materials over and remind him.

I will not take up the time of the House in going over the details now. It is from such operators as these that our consumers must be protected. In that regard, we hope this legislation will be effective. We hope the minister will explain to the House why he is not prepared immediately to implement the amendments to the act before Parliament upon their passage through the House and the other place. I think the House deserves to know when the government proposes to proclaim the legislation, because the need for it is greater now than it was in 1967 when the minister, in his capacity as co-chairman of the joint committee on consumer credit, brought in the recommendation in the first instance. We hope it will not take another three years before the legislation is implemented.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, there is always a temptation when a long overdue measure is introduced to praise the minister for bringing it forward. However, I will try to resist that temptation and control myself.

An hon. Member: Better call a doctor.

Mr. Saltsman: I say that particularly because of the long time we have waited for this measure. My colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), has been waiting for seven years for a measure such as this to come before the House. He tells me he has no ill feelings because the minister has stolen his private members' bill. He only regrets that the minister did not do this earlier.

This bill perhaps should be subtitled, "The mills of the Liberals grind slowly bill", or, "The what-took-you-so-long bill". Although the minister in his opening remarks pointed out the obvious merits of the bill, and I gather it has unanimous support from all parties and members, it is really remarkable that the government should have delayed from year to year the introduction of this rather straightforward and welcome change. The minister's position merely points out how long it takes to get anything done here. Our young people today criticize Parliament for its slowness. They contend that Parliament takes too long to act even when it is conceded that the people will derive benefit from what is to be done. In this instance, Parliament is not to be blamed. It is the government that has taken so long to act.

Something else has emerged from the minister's remarks. The federal government's initiative in the field of consumer credit or other fields has a great effect in the country. The minister said that if all the provinces do not go along with this legislation, it will not be completely effective. I think the provinces would be very foolish not to support this measure which has such obvious merit. Now that the federal government has taken the lead, I hope the provinces will follow it. One or two provinces may not follow the federal lead, but that will not diminish the importance of federal leadership in this field. Those provinces have the right to dissent, and their elected representatives will ultimately answer to their people in an election.

I had the privilege of serving on the committee of which the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was the very able co-chairman. Probably it was one of the best committees the House of Commons established. It did very valuable work and prepared a report, part of which has been implemented. The other part has not been. It is regrettable that the co-chairman, the present minister, who played such an important part in the work of the committee should be so reluctant to implement some of the fundamental aspects of that report. Because, Mr.

Speaker, valuable as the present amendments are, they are only a very small step. The minister himself acknowledged that we should be wrong in thinking any dramatic changes will take place as a result of this legislation. It is a necessary but very small step and does not really deal with some of the fundamental problems relating to consumer credit.

The most important aspect of the report in my view, and I think my view was shared by most of the committee, was the aspect dealing with the granting of federal loans to help poor people. The minister is on record and has indicated his concern about the position of poor people who try to borrow money. Federal loans for them are absolutely essential. This seems such an obvious move to make in dealing with one problem of consumer lending, that I find it difficult to understand why the government does not move as the report recommended. This is one area in which the government does not have to seek approval from the provinces. The government can act on its own through the Bank of Canada and through that agency to the chartered banks. The committee recommended that banks in Canada be asked to provide consumer loans at low interest rates up to a certain amount for those people who would otherwise have to use the finance companies or receive no credit. Because of the somewhat higher risk that might attend such loans, it was recommended that some guarantee be given by the federal government. There is nothing in the constitution to prevent the minister from taking this most needed step. What is holding it up? I hope at some time when the minister is before the committee he will have something to say on this matter.

Too often in the past, and to some extent now, we have had a tendency in our society to follow pioneer traditions and pioneer morality with respect to consumer credit. It was felt that people who borrowed were not as good as those who did not. This seemed to be the attitude. The time has come to stop moralizing this issue. The truth of the matter is, whether we like it or not, that we have to live with consumer credit. If we are going to accept the role of consumer credit in our society, we should ask ourselves how we can provide this credit in a fair and equitable way. That certainly is not the case now.

The businessmen have a saying that if you have the money, the bank will give you the money. This, to a large extent, is one of the problems with consumer credit in our society. There are other problems, but you are more likely to receive credit if you do not need it very badly. We have discussed the difficulties that can be encountered by people who are given credit. This serious problem could be dealt with by the recommendation made in the consumer credit report of 1967. We must look beyond that to see what happens. There is a tendency for people to think that only the poor are being subsidized when in fact the middle class in our society receive larger subsidies in many ways, although they do not always acknowledge this.

Credit is available in our society. However, in many cases it is only available to those who are somewhat better off. They may need the credit, but their condition is not all that serious. Those people, born with a lot of drive and the ability to absorb what is provided by our educational system, with the advantages of environment depending on which side of the tracks they were born, in what city or part of the country, are able to progress very well in our society. Those who are not born with these advantages cannot be held responsible for the fact that the liberal society, the open society, does not provide them with an opportunity to do well. They simply cannot run that kind of race for one reason or another. To them, the liberal society is a fraud. The situation is similar to telling people to run in a race where the contestants are unequal or possess different qualifications.

If you are born with the kind of attributes that enable you to attend university, you may take advantage of some very effective subsidies. The largest part of the cost of a university education is not paid for by the fees of those who attend. It is paid out of the public purse. If you are in the position where you either have some income or have been left some income to purchase a farm, there are farm credit corporations from which you can obtain additional credit. This is true in business and in other areas. However, if you are poor and do not possess the skills and the special energy it takes to get ahead in this society, along with a bit of ruthlessness, there is nowhere you can go. The avenues of credit are closed to you. Even if they are open to you, you are immediately placed in a different situation. You are not able to repay the money you borrowed because of the high rates of interest or because your income is not great enough.

I recently spoke at a consumer conference sponsored by the consumer finance companies of North America. I guess they wanted a token socialist! I had a very interesting meeting with some of the groups. I got the feeling that the bad boys, as the consumer industry is sometimes labelled, wanted to change to be more in harmony with the needs and aspirations of our society. I am glad to see that some of these changes are coming about. I would not be surprised if one of the reasons they are somewhat more attractive today than when they appeared before our committee in 1966 and 1967 is the indication by the government that if it has to act, it will. Unfortunately, it acts too slowly. However, it is quite obvious now that the power to act is with the government.

The business oriented attitudes exist and survive only because the government, as a representative of the people, wishes them to do so. If the people of this country, acting through their government, wish it to be otherwise, it is quite obvious where the power lies. The government can act to change things. This realization is not only taking place in the consumer credit industry, but in other industries as well. In my opinion, it is having a very good effect. The people in the industry know that in the long run their survival depends on being able to make a case to the public. They must be able to justify their existence in terms of the social benefits or services they provide to society. They realize that profit alone cannot be the sole criterion for the retention of their place in society. They must go beyond that.

I suggested at that meeting that we should be thinking in terms of providing a fixed sum of credit. I used the arbitrary figure of $25,000, but that does not necessarily have to be the figure. A line of credit does not come automatically to a person. It may be drawn against for various reasons. Since this is a credit-oriented society, we might as well take a somewhat more intelligent and imaginative view of the problem than we have done in the past. Each person in our society should have a line of credit on which he can draw. Those who cannot take advantage of the so-called middle class benefits of recreation, attending university and other advantages, will be able to use this drawing right. It could be used for purchasing a home or furniture, starting up a business of their own, or for a number of other things which will contribute to the happiness of their family and perhaps the matter of their life. This seems to me a more rational way of considering credit. There is precedent. I can recall, as an airman coming back from the war in 1945, that there were all kinds of opportunities open to us. Canada was good to its returned soldiers. We could use the credit we had built up during our overseas service to go into business, or we could use it to go to a university. Many people got their education as a result of benefits made available through arrangements of this kind. Others took advantage of the Veterans Land Act to build homes for themselves. The options were available to us.

I believe an extension of this idea is needed so that it would apply to everyone in our society. As things are, some people can get credit much more easily than others. There is a tendency to think along these lines—that if a person shows an aptitude to go on to a higher education, the country will support him in an almost unlimited way. But the same thinking applies, to some extent, to farmers and businessmen. But there is nothing for the people who most desperately need aid in this country, the poor and the underprivileged. This seems to be a defect in our system.

For my part I would prefer to see lines of credit extended to people in our society than the introduction of a guaranteed annual income. There is a place for a guaranteed income, of course—for those who are unable to work or unable for one reason or another to take advantage of the opportunities which may arise—but I think it would be far preferable to give people an opportunity to help themselves. This could be done by making lines of credit available. Instead of subsidizing housing, for example, why do we not simply allow a person to draw the amount of money he needs to purchase a home? There would probably have to be some element of subsidization involved but I think it would be better to subsidize at that point. Such a program does not rule out other reforms which are of importance in our society, but I do believe we have an opportunity of helping people who do not normally have a line of credit upon which they can draw. If credit were made available to them they would not be obliged to make use of it all. They could use a portion of it, and show their ability to handle it. If we were to provide credit facilities for those who need them badly and are unable to obtain them we would really be doing something significant in the way of a consumer credit program.

I am glad we have finally got around to implementing a policy which obviously should have been implemented many years ago. As usual we are about 20 years behind. I hope this measure will get speedy passage through the committee and that other issues connected with consumer credit will not take as long to resolve.

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I believe this measure goes a long way toward correcting many of the abuses which have taken place in the area covered by the legislation. For many years, now, there has been evidence of serious problems encountered particularly by those in low income groups in connection with the signing of promissory notes and contracts. In some cases the goods were not delivered, or were delivered too late, or were found to be defective. Then, the finance companies moved in like vultures to collect the amounts due on the notes and contracts.

I would call the attention of hon. members to the reference to section 190 in clause 2 of the bill:

> Every one who, knowing that an instrument, other than an instrument described in paragraph (c) or (d) of subsection (1) of section 189, has been, is being or is to be issued in respect of a consumer purchase, obtains the signature of the purchaser or of any one signing to accommodate the purchaser to such instrument without its being or having been marked as required by section 190 is guilty of
> (a) an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars; or

That provision enforcing the consumer credit aspect of these notes is most praiseworthy, in my opinion, and it will add a great deal of uniformity to the law on sales throughout Canada, particularly sales of such goods as refrigerators, automobiles and other consumer goods sold today on a time basis.

The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) said the government had delayed taking action. Mr. Speaker, over the last three or four years there have been several conferences between the provinces to try to speed up the laws in their provinces relating to conditional sales and I am advised the provinces have come close to an agreement with regard to the standardization of many of their requirements. In the meantime, the time has come for Parliament to move on to clean up this aspect of our statutes and I hope the action taken will prove most beneficial to the Canadian people.

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White-Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the news release from the minister's department respecting Bill C-208 is headed "Bills of Exchange Act—Amendment to Aid Victimized Consumers." The amendment is designed to stop abuses of promissory notes by unscrupulous or irresponsible sellers. At the moment, I am neither a seller, responsible or otherwise, nor am I a consumer; I suppose I am a consumer, but I do not regard myself as one who has been victimized.

Having had considerable experience in the appliance sales field for a number of years—ten or a dozen years—I can say that I wrote thousands of consumer sales contracts. I am not now associated in any way with that kind of business or with any finance company. Neither do I presume to be the champion of finance companies, as the minister presumes to be the champion of the consumer. That is not my point at all. But I do feel that in a responsible Parliament we cannot have certain images created—perhaps not deliberately created—without somebody saying something about it.

First of all, let me say I have written thousands of contracts. I come from the province of Newfoundland, and according to the current rash of Newfie jokes we are not supposed to be the most understanding people in the world. But I have yet to remember a purchaser coming back to my dealership and saying that he did not know that his purchase was financed through a finance company. I say that with honesty, and I have a good memory for such things. I remember the first appliance that I sold 15 years ago, and I could name almost every one sold subsequent to that, so the House can see that I know what I am talking about. I cannot remember one single person coming back to me and saying he did not know he had purchased one of these appliances through a finance company.

In his statement this morning the minister said that one of the most flagrant abuses was non-delivery, and I should like to comment on that. Before the noon adjournment I checked, to confirm my own memory, with one of the prominent finance companies that take non-recourse paper, and they confirmed that 98 per cent of the deals that they accept acknowledge delivery of the merchandise by telephone before they issue the cheque to the dealer. The real point that I want to make is that the relatively new Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is one of the most necessary departments of which I know.

I attach prime importance to it, more so than any other department of government. But when we see headlines dealing with amendments to bills of exchange acts to "aid the victimized consumer", and "Basford steps up war on false ads", and so on, then in view of the wide scope of the minister's department I can only describe this sort of thing as nit-picking.

From what I have seen of the operations of this department so far, the real abuses against the consumer have not yet been recognized, and I do not know the reason for this.

Mr. Basford: The provinces have the jurisdiction.

Mr. Peddle: I am not making a political speech. I realize there are a heck of a lot more consumers than there are dealers and finance companies. Perhaps this is why this legislation might be of great appeal to consumers. But let us stop for a moment and wonder whether we are not being a little irresponsible so far as the minorities in this question are concerned.

Finance companies in this country are generally regarded as responsible business corporations. I think the big majority of dealers are regarded as responsible people. If, in making laws to cope with the occasional fly-by-night operator we are going to make every finance company that takes non-recourse paper become a service station, then I do not think we are being responsible. The business of a finance company is money, the same as the business of a car dealer is selling cars. If all the responsible finance companies in the country have to devote their office time to dealing with service problems, then I say it is a case of the tail wagging the horse and I do not agree with it.

I agree with the principle of this bill. I agree that the consumer needs protection against unscrupulous sellers. But for God's sake, let us put the onus where it belongs and tighten up the law regarding people who get licences to sell instead of turning the office of every finance company in the country into a service station. Perhaps we can provide better guarantees. Perhaps the law should provide that a merchant who sells a refrigerator should issue a more legally drawn guarantee. Let the buyer go to the dealer and, by taking legal action if necessary, work out his problem with him. But let us not inflict this sort of law on people in the money business, any more than we inflict the money business on people in the appliance business. Let us be fair about this.

I do not think the minister is naïve enough to think that he can legislate the old warning "caveat emptor" out of existence. If so, he has another think coming. Since human beings being what they are, caveat emptor will always be a very important warning for people to observe.

This is my only point, Mr. Speaker. I think this bill should be studied, and studied very carefully. As I say, I am not the champion of the finance companies. If I had been around on the day they were given legal licence to operate, I would probably have refused them the breath of life. But since they are legally in existence, let us not, for political purposes or otherwise, use them as a whipping boy.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see this bill before us today and should like to make some brief comments on it.

It is not often one gets a chance to toot one's own horn, but I introduced a similar proposal in 1963 in response to an individual series of problems that had arisen in my own riding. Somebody said that northern Ontario is a very gullible market, that the people there can be sold almost anything. They are very trusting people and not used to shysters who come in from southern Ontario and take advantage of their trusting nature. I presume the same is true in Newfoundland and in other parts of the country.

My colleague from Toronto says, "Who are they?"

Mr. Lewis: I must correct the hon. member; he misheard me. I merely said I would get out of his way.

Mr. Peters: What prompted my interest in this matter in northern Ontario, though not in a financial way, was the knitting machine operation. There was nothing much wrong with the knitting machines, but it was a little like going to a circus where you see a man or a woman with a very small knife making all kinds of fancy doo-dads out of radishes, carrots and so on. This little device sells for about 25 cents, and the first thing that happens when your wife gets it home is that she cuts her finger. The knitting machines were somewhat in that class, but they carried another problem. The company selling the knitting machines said that it would also sell the proper type of yarn to be used and that in return for the person buying the machine it would guarantee to take all the knitted products. If the person made 10 pairs of socks per week, the company would take that amount or as many as the person made.

The machine salesman immediately went back to Toronto. The finance company was one door down from his office. He transferred the promissory note to the finance company and as soon as the going became hot and heavy he went into bankruptcy. That was the end of that. The bankruptcy helped him in two ways. He did not have to pay the manufacturer for the machines which had been delivered and, secondly, he owned the finance company two doors down from his operation. Both were shysters and both went out of operation in a matter of months. There are names. I investigated them. I know some of the operations which changed hands five or six times without anything happening.

The minister is well aware of the inadequacy of the Bankruptcy Act of Canada. In passing this piece of legislation what we are really doing is stamping on the promissory note something to the effect that if a person buys this promissory note or piece of paper then he has the responsibility of the original contract. In other words, if the car was guaranteed for two months then the person who buys the promissory note will have to carry a guarantee for two months. The responsibility will be carried over. I know it is not quite that simple, but it means that a person can go to court and have redress against the purchaser of the promissory note. Then, there is the case which the minister mentioned this morning of a person buying $4,500 worth of building supplies, being taken to court and having to pay the $4,500 even though he did not receive the building supplies. He still has not received them and probably will not. So, this principle is very simple.

The Department of Justice of Canada, like many other departments, has people who get carried away with paper work. We have some of these people even in our parties. However, in the Department of Justice, the intention should be to produce in terms of effectiveness rather than in terms of volume. I notice that this bill is almost twice the size of the bill I produced which originated from an act that was passed in 1884, the original act for the prevention of fraud. The basis of the bill the minister is introducing is exactly the same as my bill with more verbiage.

An hon. Member: More input.

Mr. Peters: More input, yes, and not much more output. There is in this bill one particular clause which was not in the bill I introduced because I was interested in the transferring of promissory notes. The minister has introduced a new proposition which I am certainly prepared to support because I believe it is an excellent idea. I did not include it because I did not think of it.

The minister has introduced the additional provision concerning post-dated cheques and the closeness of association there may be between trust companies and others who issue pseudo-cheques and who are involved in the post-dating of cheques. This I believe is valuable because the shysters who are involved in this field will obviously go through this legislation with a fine tooth comb. They will hire the best possible lawyers in this field whose only job will be to find a loophole.

The one point I should like to leave with Members of Parliament who have a direct relationship with their constituents is something with which the officials of the Department of Justice and other departments often are not fully familiar. It seems to me that when a Member of Parliament has a good idea some consideration should be given to that idea. I congratulate the minister for having taken the action he has in this case, but I suggest to him that if he would look at the Order Paper he would find a number of bills containing significant recommendations. I do not believe any private member would disagree with me when I say that the ideas put forward in the form of private members' bills are perhaps in a rough form which could be improved upon, as I believe this piece of legislation has improved upon mine.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has said that he gets some of his ideas from Box 99. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker that I hope these ideas are better than some of the ideas given to the minister from some of the civil servants. If the minister would deal with his own correspondence he would find that the problem of Mrs. Jones might contain a lot more useful information than the problems he finds in Box 99 to which one of his executive officials gives attention. I hope the government, in adopting this bill which was first introduced seven years ago in the form of private members' bills, will have the minister and some of his executives sit down and look at some of those private members' bills. A number of these bills were considered by the committee of which the minister was joint chairman and I believe they led to this legislation. I believe this particular bill will affect the welfare and peace of mind of more Canadians than will much of the legislation which will be adopted in this Parliament. So, I suggest this is very worth-while and overdue legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is there a disposition on the part of hon. members that before the House proceeds to the consideration of the motion under Standing Order 26 the question be put?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the House would be disposed to give the minister a few minutes to reply to some of the arguments raised.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Basford: Thank you, very much. I am particularly grateful to the member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) for his suggestion. I should like to acknowledge particularly his very fine contribution to the debate which I thought to be a very well-prepared and thoughtful discussion of the issues raised by this bill. If, however, he is unable to resolve his difference of views with the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle), I would be delighted to mediate although I believe I would vote on the side of the hon. member for St. John's East who seemed to support the bill more forcefully than his colleague.

The hon. member for St. John's East has raised a number of points as have other speakers, namely, the recommendations made other than by the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on consumer credit and consumer matters. All those recommendations are being considered by the department. The hon. member for St. John's East has referred to this as a sort of consumers' bible. That is the way I regard it also, Mr. Speaker. Being the author of the report, and referring to it as a bible, I do not know quite where that leaves me. However, unlike the premier from British Columbia, I do not claim to be plugged in to God.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just to being another Moses.

Mr. Basford: But I do regard it as a bible. We are, for example, working on all the recommendations of that report regarding packaging and labelling and I am working on legislation which I hope to introduce shortly. We are reviewing the whole system of nomenclature of grades and standards, which is recommended in that report. We have before the House legislation dealing with the corporate disclosure of private companies of economic significance, which is recommended in the report. All of those recommendations are receiving very careful study by the department.

With regard to the matter of the captive sales finance companies, which the hon. member raised, I have indicated and made it very clear that we are, following the receipt of the report of the Economic Council of Canada, revising the Combines Act as quickly as we can. I have said publicly that I see no logical reason why services should be excluded from the application of a revised Combines Act.

With regard to discussions with provincial governments, a point which a number of hon. members raised, I did indicate that this matter has been discussed at a federal-provincial meeting of officials of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and also a federal-provincial meeting of ministers of consumer affairs. At that time I undertook to introduce this legislation, and subsequently have had indication from a number of provinces that they intend to take the complementary action that is really required with this legislation. They, of course, must be left to state their own position. I cannot state it for them. But I am assured in very firm terms that a number of provinces will. I think it would have been a mistake, however, as seemed to be the hon. member's suggestion, that I should have waited until I had agreement from all ten provinces before acting. I think we have assurances from some that they will act, and we will proceed.

With regard to part X of the Bankruptcy Act, it is being revised, and I will have an important announcement to make on this matter, hopefully next week.

The matters raised by hon. members are very much on our mind, and I hope the announcement I have to make next week will clear up many of the difficulties.

With regard to proclamation of the bill, we hope that it will be proclaimed immediately following royal assent. Of course I have no control over how quickly the bill will go through Parliament.

I want to thank hon. members for their contribution and for their support of this bill which causes a fundamental revision or change in some aspects of our consumer credit laws, and I hope that the support that was indicated today will assure a speedy passage of the bill through the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CAMBODIA—INVASION BY UNITED STATES AND SOUTH VIET NAM ARMED FORCES

Mr. David Lewis (York South) moved:

That this House do now adjourn.

He said: Mr. Speaker, some years ago the American Professor Hans J. Morgenthau made the following statement in the opening words of an article on Viet Nam:

It illuminates the many misunderstandings that beset our Viet Nam policy that in order to criticize that policy in public one has first to justify one's right to do so.

This seems also to be the case in this House, judging from some of the reactions of some of the hon. members to my party's position on this matter. I want to make it clear from the outset that I do not intend to apologize for our position. We are and have always been opposed to the U.S. war in Viet Nam.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: We believe and we have always believed that the U.S. forces had no right to go there in the first place, that it is a war which is legally and morally indefensible, that it is a war which has helped the spread of Communism in Asia, that it has achieved nothing either for the United States or for the world, whilst devastating an entire people.

It is said that because we are friends with the United States and because of our special relations with that country we ought to be soft in what we say about any policy of the U.S. administration. In my opinion the opposite is the case. It is precisely because we have special relations of friendship and association with the U.S.A. and because we have such things as the defence sharing agreement with them under which we produce at least some of the armament which is used in Viet Nam, that we have a special responsibility to watch the developing situation and to speak out about it without hesitation and without using weasel words.

Some hon. members keep chiding us of the New Democratic Party that we do not condemn the North Vietnamese, China or the Soviet Union. Anyone who says that is quite wrong. We do. We have no illusions—and I have looked up a speech on the subject of Viet Nam which I made in 1966 and in which I said exactly the same thing, and so has my leader on many occasions—about the long range policies and objectives of world communism. We are agreed that there is need to find proper, effective and peaceful means to counteract the possible appeal of the communists to the hungry and desperate peoples of the underdeveloped world.

But we do not agree that the U.S. policy has served this purpose. On the contrary, I am convinced that the U.S. war in Viet Nam has been a magnet to Communism throughout that area. I agree with what Senator Fulbright said in a recent article in the New Republic of April 18, and I will quote this important passage.

He said:

They cannot—

The Communists.

—drive us out of Indo-China, but they can force upon us the choice of either plunging in altogether or getting out altogether.

It is this choice that the Nixon Administration has thus far refused to make.

He might have added "the Johnson administration before it".

"Myth" is a mild word for madness on so grand a scale. Not only has the rationale for Viet Nam proved unfounded; it has shown itself to be disastrously mistaken. Instead of deterring Communist intervention in Southeast Asia, American military involvement has turned out to be a powerful magnet for it.

I think Senator Fulbright is right in every word that he stated in that short article. It is for this reason, precisely because in our view the American policy assists Communism in the underdeveloped world, that, in addition to our opposition to the war on general principles, we believe Canada must speak out against the recent action.

I also agree with the obvious validity of a statement in the New York Times editorial of last Monday where the following statement was made:

> Military victory in Indo-China has always been a mirage, receding as rapidly as it is pursued. Lyndon Johnson learned that to his sorrow, and it inconceivable that President Nixon would set off at this late date on a similar chase.

It may have been inconceivable to the editorial writer of the New York Times but it is now a fact that that is precisely the course on which the American administration has embarked in Southeast Asia. May I remind the House that when this editorial was written the New York Times was dealing merely with the suggestion that America ship arms to Cambodia. Now, we are faced with an actual invasion of that country. Yet, the President of the U.S. has gone to dangerous extremes through the action of his forces. He has entered on a massive escalation of the war, the end of which cannot be foreseen. He threatens the peace of the world by that action, and it is important that this parliament and this government say so in no uncertain terms.

The fact is that in the present situation the same thing has happened as in the past, except that it happened in a matter of days rather than months. Hon. members will recall that there were originally a few hundred United States military advisers in South Viet Nam. Their numbers were later increased by President Kennedy to 15,000. Then a small army was sent to do the actual fighting. In the debate in 1966, to which I referred, it was reported that, in 1966, there were about 200,000 American soldiers, airmen and marines there. Now, we are speaking of between 400,000 and 500,000 troops despite recent withdrawals. In the present case we heard on April 28, a few days ago, reports that the United States had supplied communications equipment to the South Vietnamese for their entry into Cambodia. We heard on April 30 the reports of advisers and the engagement of United States aircraft; and on May 1 we heard of United States ground troops being in Cambodia.

This action, Mr. Speaker, has produced an outcry of dismay and opposition in the United States Senate and House of Representatives. Those in this chamber who accuse members of the New Democratic Party of all sorts of things because of our outcry, dismay and opposition at this action had better remember that almost unanimously the foreign relations committee of the United States Senate has condemned the action of the president and that there are millions of people in the United States of America who are dismayed and opposed to what the president announced last night.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it will be of great assistance to those millions of Americans and to people of the world opposed to this immoral war if we as a neighbour and friend of the powerful nation to the south of us have the wisdom and courage to join with those voices that are opposed to this policy. United States Senator Frank Church is reported to have said, "This is just a first step of a new set of obligations. It can only lead to a deeper mess and to the borders of China." It is this kind of wisdom that we ought to express through the mouths of our minister and Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). This is not merely an action confined to Cambodia; it threatens the peace of the world, because the war is being escalated.

Let us be clear about one point. In the case of the American intrusion into South Viet Nam, the administration peddled the myth, and it was a myth, that the United States was invited by the government of South Viet Nam. That was the government which the United States administration had set up in South Viet Nam and it was therefore a self-induced invitation. But the government of Cambodia, a government which it is suspected United States authorities were instrumental in setting up, had not the slightest knowledge of American intentions or American action. According to reports I have received, General Lon Nol, the Prime Minister of Cambodia, had no advance warning of the action; that he had just heard of the operation through the press; and that he knew nothing of the American strike until informed by the U.S. Chargé d'Affaires, Lloyd M. Rives, after President Nixon's speech. Please note, Mr. Speaker, that here is a country which has been invaded by the most powerful nation in the world; and not only did it not ask for the American action, but it was not informed about it until President Nixon announced it last night over the radio and television to the American people and the people of the world.

There is no excuse for what the Americans have done now. There is no possible suggestion that they were invited by Cambodia. I say without any qualification that the American action is a straight invasion of Cambodian territory without any information having been given to the government or people of that country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: Of course it is true that the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong had been in some parts of Cambodia for five years, as the President said last night.

An hon. Member: Even longer.

Mr. Lewis: And perhaps even longer. But this, I suggest to you, cannot excuse the United States action. It is no consolation to the world that President Nixon has decided to meet North Vietnamese duplicity by similar action on the part of United States. This is not the way in which peace can be sought in that area or anywhere else. I believe that Canada must speak out in this kind of situation. I hope that when the minister enters this debate he will say, not only as he said this morning that he regrets that the United States found it necessary to do what it did but, that on behalf of Canada he deplores the action, that he considers the action dangerous and that it is not helpful to the search for peace in our troubled and anxious world. Nothing less from this government in my view can satisfy the present situation.

I simply cannot accept the explanation of the President of the United States. He talked about the need for his country to show itself strong, about his fear of humiliation and about the need for the United States not to be a helpless giant. Indeed, in his foreign policy report to Congress of February 18 last, the President stated this significant sentence: "When it comes to maintaining peace, prestige is not an empty word."

What are we dealing with, Mr. Speaker? Are we dealing with national prestige, or with the fate of the world? Is it important for the world that President Nixon maintain his own prestige, or is it important for the world that the war in Viet Nam come to an end?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: All these statements underline the role which the United States has been trying to play in the world, wrongly, for some time. No one nominated the United States of America as the policeman of the world, and in an international community no one should try to act in that capacity.

It seems to me that the action of the United States and the explanation President Nixon tried to give last night indicate a complete reversal of the alleged search by the United States for peace and the intention to withdraw American troops. I suggest that it is difficult for anyone who looks at the situation objectively to believe in the good faith of some of the words expressed. It is difficult to accept good faith when the President promises peace while escalating the war. Sure, there is not good faith with the Communists, either at the present Paris negotiating table or anywhere else; but, I repeat, our answer cannot be to try to match Communist hypocrisy.

In our view, and in my view, the action of the United States yesterday and today has spread the war in Southeast Asia in a way which makes it impossible to see the end of the war. I suggest to you that some of the words that the President used indicate that it is the intention of the United States to retain a sizeable army in Southeast Asia, no matter what may come. The President said, you will recall, that he was taking this action in order to assure the lives of those who will remain in Viet Nam after the withdrawal of the 250,000 troops that he has so far promised to withdraw. I read into that a definite warning to the world, and it is with great sadness that I read the warning, that United States does not have any intention of withdrawing all its troops from Southeast Asia. I believe that to be a pre-condition for any kind of development in that part of the world.

I want to say to this House that there are some steps Canada might try to take. I do not know whether they would be entirely successful. We have suggested on a number of occasions that Canada should try to bring the matter of the new developments in Southeast Asia to the security council of the United Nations. I appreciate that we are not a member of the Security Council now, but we are a member of the United Nations and have every right to seek to have this subject put on the agenda of the Security Council.

I also appreciate that some of the major nations involved, such as China, North Viet Nam, and for that matter, South Viet Nam, are not members of the United Nations and therefore there are limits on what the United Nations might be able to do. In my submission this ought not stop us from trying to put it on the agenda of the only international organization available to mankind to save itself from complete destruction. At least it would be the start of some kind of international discussion of the matter in the United Nations forum.

It may be possible that members of the United Nations could express their view on American policy. It may also be possible for members of the United Nations to influence the United States in its further pursuit of a disastrous and dangerous policy. Canada should try harder to get the Geneva conference back in order to seek a solution to the Southeast Asian problem. I do not deny that the minister is trying to do this. The present situation is so serious and dangerous that it is unforgivable for the government of Canada, or, indeed, the government of any other western country, to just sit and wait for developments to occur.

The situation is so serious and dangerous that the government of Canada must show a sense of urgency about the matter. The Canadian government must try every available avenue to try to get the various nations of the world together to seek a peaceful solution to the disastrous war in Southeast Asia. We must have the courage to speak out and, as I have said, continue the search without letup, indefatigably. Canada is in a good position to do these things precisely because of its special relationship with the United States.

Nothing less than the future peace of the world, and nothing less than the credibility of the democratic world to the rest of the world, is involved in this terrible action which the president of the United States announced last night. I urge the government to deal with the matter as seriously as the matter deserves.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, one of the most difficult things to do today is to get a decent perspective on the situation that confronts us. War is not only hell, but it does more than any other human phenomenon to confuse the logical and rational sense of most of us. Emotional responses are, of course, to be expected. I do not like war. I do not happen to like violence in any of its forms. I believe that killing and torture are the antithesis of everything that we call civilized, but war or wars will not be solved by emotion.

Wars of national liberation, national pride or national survival will not be ended by emotional responses. I think it is the height of folly, perhaps one of the worst aspects of human pride, to allow ourselves to approach this problem either on the basis of our intense dislike for Communist states in all their forms or on an emotional reaction that American involvement seems to stir up in some circles in that country.

Anti-Americanism simply will not do as the basis of Canadian reaction to the Cambodian crisis.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In this instance, anti-Americanism is equivalent to total irresponsibility and abandonment of meaningful and useful Canadian initiatives. Personally, I have great sympathy for the terrible predicament of the American people in Southeast Asia. I believe the United States became involved in what it believed to be an honourable cause. I recognize that it is easy for us who are not involved to give advice. We are not involved in the agony. I assume that those in authority in the United States would love to be out of the whole thing if they could do so honourably.

We must also concern ourselves with the agony of the people who live in the area of conflict, Viet Nam, and now Cambodia. I approach this problem with deep feeling and with a considerable degree of humility. I indicated this morning that I believe the expansion of the present war is one of the worse possibilities we can imagine in terms of ending the unhappy conflict.

It may be that the generals and admirals who are reported to have counselled this move across the Cambodia border will prove to be right in military terms. It may be that the government of the United States will achieve its objectives in this way and bring a speedier end to the battle. However, I must confess my very grave doubts on that score in view of the history of this affair. United States generals and United States presidents have been wrong before in situations like this. I very much fear this is another example of the old saying that you can't be a little pregnant.

In all, the United States has been dragged deeper and deeper into this conflict, each time hoping that some measure would bring the terrible experience to an end. In giving the first indication of American involvement in Cambodia, the United States Assistant Secretary of Defence said that it was:

—a necessary and effective measure to save American and other free world lives and to strengthen the Vietnamization program.

We were all shocked by this development. As has already been indicated, in the United States there may be a considerable degree of condemnation. The Times of London stated yesterday in its lead editorial and I quote:

> Has Mr. Nixon learnt no lessons from the way his two predecessors in the White House got involved in Viet Nam? ... In spite of all the warnings the military men seem to have won again. This was where President Kennedy came in eight years ago, always under pressure from the generals, always assured that victory was round the corner with that little bit extra of American commitment. But victory never did come and the machine ground on inexorably through all the suffering and the waste to the stalemate that finally unnerved President Johnson.

I mention this mainly because I believe the world is afraid that this type of military operation will escalate to the point of no return. While the newspaper headlines this morning were full of the Cambodian tragedy, at the same time there were reports from Peking of the Chinese jubilation over the launching of their satellite and nuclear accomplishments. I think the world has good reason to fear.

Perhaps we ought to remind ourselves of part of the history of southeast Asia; there are many ways of looking at the situation in these countries which now occupy the headlines. We were all appalled at the savage treatment of Viet Nam civilians in Cambodia recently, and we may have wondered what led up to this situation. The Economist of April 25 gives an account of the differences which have soured relations between Cambodia and Viet Nam long before the present crisis. Perhaps I might quote a paragraph from the Economist of that date:

> Educated Cambodians believe they have been the victims of Vietnamese expansionism for centuries. Even today they are thankful that the French saved them from what might have been permanent Vietnamese domination.

The article goes on to explain this at greater length.

Certainly, Cambodia is not Viet Nam. Although it lies next door, it is now, as it always has been, a country of a very different people. Those people are a nation which has learned to beware of invaders. And the ones they have for centuries feared most have been the Vietnamese. It is for that reason cold comfort, if any at all, that the main burden of the Cambodian incursion is being carried by Vietnamese rather than American forces. The Cambodians have been neutral in a very real sense. They have been anti-American, anti-Viet Cong, anti-Vietnamese and anti-Communist. In short, they have been simply pro-Cambodian. Now, they find themselves militarily threatened by virtually everybody.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Although for five years North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops have held substantial segments of Cambodian territory, that country did nothing. The former chief of state, Prince Sihanouk, did not try to prevent the use of his country by Communist troops. When the Communists became even greedier for control of Cambodian territory, Prince Sihanouk was overthrown. The new government decided to resist the Communists. South Viet Nam began making raids across the Cambodian border. Today, South Vietnamese troops are engaged in battle with Viet Cong forces in Cambodia. The Americans are helping. The North Vietnamese are also engaged in that same battle in a country which wants only to be neutral, to be left alone.

It is in these circumstances, recognizing the complexity of the situation, the tragic situation in which the American people find themselves, I realize the situation in Southeast Asia, that Iask the government, if it has started to intensify its work in Washington, Geneva, Paris, London, Moscow and Hanoi if possible. Our envoys and diplomats must call for an immediate and complete freeze on all military activity in Cambodia plus, of course, effective machinery to enforce this. North Viet Nam must be persuaded to recross the border and get out, as must the Viet Cong, the South Vietnamese and the Americans. Of course, there must be methods of enforcement if this is to have any meaning. The question is, of course, how to make them go. That is the major problem. I do not expect the Canadian government to make them all get out by itself. But is it even trying, Mr. Speaker? I suggest to the Secretary of State for External Affaires (Mr. Sharp) that we ought to go to New York and call for an emergency session of the Security Council of the United Nations. Surely, if ever there was a threat to world peace justifying Security Council action, this is it.

The Security Council should immediately set up a new and third version of the Geneva Indo-China talks. It must build on the admittedly imperfect foundations of those talks, to arrive at a new modus vivendi for the people of Indo-China. If the original sponsors of the Geneva Conference are now inappropriate, as I suspect some of them are, then the United Nations itself must sponsor those talks.

I admit the Soviet negotiator, Jacob Malik, has been both encouraging and discouraging on the topic. But he must be approached and every possibility explored. Has Canada made any overtures to Great Britain? Have we sought to cash in on our special relationship with that country and with France to give them encouragement, to give them a good hard push, in the right direction, if that is what is needed?

What can we do on our own, besides the steps I have outlined? I suggest that the attitude expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs with respect to the I.C.C., for example, is not good enough. Although I recognize the difficulties which have been encountered I believe the hon. gentleman's attitude to be defeatist. Unquestionably, the I.C.C.'s chore has been difficult, frustrating and ineffective. There has been little glory to it and it is dirty slogging, especially when one considers the attitudes displayed at times by Poland and by our other partner, India. But we ought not to abandon the one channel of direct action which Canada possesses. The minister says we left because we were asked to go. Very well. But there is now a new government in Cambodia. Would it not be proper for Canada to approach this new government to see whether it would not accept, indeed, welcome, the I.C.C. back?

The I.C.C. will not be able to settle the whole business but it could make a useful contribution particularly if it could be established in a workable form. I believe we ought all, as Canadians, rather than indulge in condemnation, to concentrate our efforts on exploring methods and approaches which might be helpful in the circumstances of this tragedy. Canada dare not pass up the opportunity of even doing this much. We must not pass up any opportunity to persuade the countries involved and the international community generally to freeze the fighting and to get the talks started again. Of course, all this will be of no avail unless there is efficient machinery for seeing that what is decided will be carried out.

I want, now, to make four points in this discussion of the situation. I put them forward with considerable humility and great sympathy for all those involved. I suggest:

1. The terrible conflict in South Viet Nam must not be escalated; it must be isolated and brought to a halt.

2. Canada's fundamental approach must be to use every possible diplomatic and political opportunity which exists for restricting the expansion of the conflict.

3. We should demand an emergency session of the Security Council, asking it to set up, under United Nations sponsorship, a new Geneva conference on Indo-China.

4. Simultaneously we should examine the possibility that a different government in Cambodia would be prepared to take a new approach to the International Control Commission, one which might allow it to work effectively, at least for the achievement of a limited purpose.

• (3:40 p.m.)

It is on this basis, with the hope that some of these suggestions may be constructive, that I put them forward.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thought it might be useful to the House if I were to begin my remarks with a short historical background to the events that we are discussing this afternoon.

The 1954 Geneva Conference on Indo-China drew up cease-fire agreements for each of the three Indo-China states. As one of the countries invited to serve as a supervisory power on each of the three International Commission provided for in the cease-fire agreements, Canada undertook, together with India and Poland, to see whether or not the parties involved in the agreements properly implemented the terms of those agreements to which they had subscribed. In Cambodia these parties were the Cambodian national armed forces, on the one hand, and the Cambodian resistance forces and Vietnamese military units on the other.

The implementation of the 1954 cease-fire agreement for Cambodia proved to be a straightforward matter. The more purely military provisions were put into effect without too much difficulty and, with the Cambodian elections of 1955 over, the Canadian delegation urged that the commission should be disbanded. In Canada's opinion, the job for which the commission had been established had been completed. We were not, however, able to convince our Indian and Polish colleagues, particularly when it became clear that the Cambodian government wished to see the commission continue in being. So the commission remained in Cambodia with its personnel progressively reduced until by 1958 only a token staff was left.

Until about 1963 there was not much for the commission to do. The renewed conflict in Vietnam, however, began increasingly to be felt in Cambodia—often with tragic loss of Cambodian lives and property. As the situation in Viet Nam deteriorated, incidents in the border area between Cambodia and South Vietnam became more and more frequent. For their part, the South Vietnamese and the Americans maintained that any incidents in which they were involved resulted from clashes with Vietnamese Communist forces who were making use of Cambodian territory as a sanctuary to which they retreated or as a base from which they operated against South Vietnam. The charge was also increasingly made that the Vietnamese Communists were making use of Cambodia as a supply route both in the northeastern province along what was called the Sihanouk trail and through the ports along the Gulf of Siam.

Since early 1968 the Cambodian government itself has complained publicly of the activities of Vietnamese Communist armed forces on Cambodian territory. Evidence substantiating these complaints were contained in an official Cambodian government report made public in October 1968 in which the Cambodian Secretary of State for National Security reported that armed Vietnamese continuously installed themselves in certain frontier districts of Svay Rieng province. In another report published in October 1968, the estimated strength of these Vietnamese Communist troops was given as 4,000.

By early 1969 public statements by Prince Sihanouk more and more frequently contained charges of extensive Vietnamese Communist infiltration in the border area. In his March 6, 1969 press conference, Prince Sihanouk declared that Viet Cong and Viet Minh units had infiltrated into Cambodia near Mimot and other areas in an apparent attempt to establish a Vietnamese frontier along the Mekong River. In his press conference of March 28, 1969 Prince Sihanouk declared that Viet Cong and Viet Minh units, in some cases in batallion and regimental strength, had infiltrated into Cambodia along Cambodia's eastern frontier and that they had actually engaged in armed conflict with Cambodian military forces in the Parrot's Beak.

In the Canadian government's opinion, these indications constituted prima facie evidence of a violation of the 1954 cease fire agreement on Cambodia by one of the parties and the ICC had a clear obligation to initiate an investigation to verify the facts. The Canadian delegation proposed such investigations but this was not taken up by our colleagues before the Cambodian government on October 7, 1969 indicated its intention to have the commission "terminate its mission by the end of the year". Earlier, two Canadian proposals were put forward in the commission in response to a general request by the Cambodian government in August 1968 to investigate the alleged presence of Vietnamese Communists in the Parrot's Beak area. These, however, were rejected by the majority in the commission.

Thus, prior to 1969, the Cambodian government appeared to us to be genuinely interested in the International Commission. It gave the commission virtually carte blanche to fulfil its responsibilities and provided the permissive framework within which the commission could act if it so decided. We were unable to convince our colleagues on the commission to do so and by early 1969 the Cambodian government ceased asking the commission to undertake any kind of investigation—even of border incidents allegedly involved U.S.A.-South Vietnamese forces which the commission had been carrying out. On October 7, 1969, as I mentioned in the House this morning, the Cambodian government indicated the desire to have the commission terminate its mission, and on December 4, 1969 it asked the commission to adjourn sine die by December 31, 1969.

It is against this background that we must weigh the present situation in which the United States and South Vietnamese forces have entered Cambodia. The President has declared that this is not an invasion of Cambodia. I express no view on that; that is the statement that he has made. He went on to say that the areas in which these attacks will be launched are completely occupied and controlled by North Vietnamese forces.

He has also made clear that it is not the purpose of the United States to occupy these areas. He said, as I mentioned this morning, that "once enemy forces are driven out of these sanctuaries and their military supplies destroyed, we will withdraw".

I should make it clear here that Canada was not informed about the United States decisions ahead of time. We had no previous knowledge whatever, and there was, of course, no reason why we should. As I said in the House this morning, there is no doubt that these decisions were hard ones and certainly very momentous. It remains to be seen whether they will accomplish what the President has in mind.

I have no doubt whatever that the President is very conscious of the risks of uncontrolled escalation in this situation, and that this must be a governing factor in the implementation of his policy. I think it is fair to say too that the President made his decision in full knowledge of the opposition of many leading figures in the United States, including Senator Fulbright, as referred to by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis).

The United States is a democratic country. There are many countries in the world where decisions of government are made without attention to the views of their people. The American people can at any time reject a government that makes decisions that are contrary to what they believe to be in their interests. I believe, if I may say so, that the American people are as fully conscious as we are as Canadians of the implications of the decisions that have been made by the U.S. government.

It is for this reason I doubt either the utility or the appropriateness of many of the simplistic appeals such as have been suggested in the House today by the deputy leader of the New Democratic Party. I understand the anguish expressed by him. I share it and I am sure all members of this House share the anguish about the war in Viet Nam and in Indo-China. I doubt very much, however, whether the anguish in Indo-China would end if the United States were simply to withdraw its forces immediately and without condition. This seems to me to be the dilemma in which we all find ourselves today.

Hon. members of the opposition have made a number of suggestions. I should like to comment on some of these now. First, it has been suggested that we ought to do more to have the International Control Commission in Cambodia revived. It has also been suggested that we should do more to reconvene the powers involved such as the members of the Geneva conference. Others have suggested we should take steps to bring the matter before the United Nations.

Let me deal first with the question of reconvening the International Control Commission. We have been discussing this question with those governments directly involved in any decision that would be taken on this matter and there is no indication yet that they see the reconvening of the commission as being helpful. I have made the Canadian government's position clear. We are of course prepared to see the commission reconvened if there is any reasonable prospect of it being able to do a job. We have indicated our readiness to participate in a tripartite meeting in New Delhi in order to discuss with India and Poland the function of a reconvened International Control Commission as well as improvements in its methods of operation which would be necessary in order to make it more effective than it was before. Whether there is now any better prospect of the commission being reconvened is at least doubtful. The only responsibility which the commission has is to supervise a cease-fire which has already been agreed upon. It may facilitate the implementation of an agreed cease-fire, but it has no mandate and indeed no capacity to stop the parties engaging in a full-scale conflict.

The French government has put forward the idea of negotiations among what they call interested parties with a view to the neutralization of the whole of Indo-China. When I discussed this proposal with Mr. Schumann in Paris a few weeks ago he made clear that this was not a new proposal for a new Geneva conference, although that possibility was not ruled out. As the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) pointed out, the Soviet Union appeared to show some interest in the idea of a Geneva conference. However, the Soviet Union made no specific proposal as some believe and subsequently made clear, in the words of the Soviet Ambassador to the United Nations, that "Convening such a conference is unrealistic at the present time". The New Zealand Prime Minister, Mr. Keith Holyoake, has also urged the convening of a new Geneva conference on Indo-China. No concrete proposals, however, have been made by anyone and from our own reports we have concluded there is no agreement on the part of the parties most directly concerned that a Geneva conference should be called.

There is some movement toward the convening of a meeting of Asian countries in Djakarta on May 11 and 12.

An hon. Member: It was postponed to the 16th.

Mr. Sharp: Thank you. While Canada has not been invited to attend this meeting naturally we have a keen interest in it since it represents an effort by the countries of the region to reach a consensus on the Cambodian situation and to make recommendations to the parties involved.

It has been suggested that Canada should bring the question of Cambodia before the United Nations. In fact, the Cambodian government is capable of doing so itself and has, indeed, brought the situation in Cambodia to the attention of the United Nations. So far, however, it has not pressed for a Security Council meeting. If in fact the Cambodians believe they have been invaded, notwithstanding the view expressed by President Nixon, then of course they could certainly take this matter before the Security Council.

The difficulty about discussing the situation in Southeast Asia at the United Nations remains as it always has. Many of the parties are not members. Neither North Viet Nam nor South Viet Nam, as the hon. member for York South said, are represented and of course the chair of China is occupied by the Republic of China government rather than by the People's Republic. Furthermore—and I point this out to the House—the Communist side in the dispute has always vigorously denied the authority of the United Nations to discuss the war in Viet Nam.

Mr. Lewis: Of course they would.

Mr. Sharp: All I am saying to the House is that it is very difficult under these circumstances to feel that this would be the most useful thing today since there seems to be expressed opposition on the part of one of the parties to the conflict. For the moment the prospect of any Security Council consideration of the Cambodian situation does not look promising, but there may be other United Nations machinery which might be employed.

I throw out this suggestion. In the past the despatch of a personal representative to troubled areas by the Secretary General has proved a helpful intervention. This is something which I think might be a useful initiative at the present time. When it comes down to it, however, any of these efforts will be successful only when the various parties agree to negotiation. Until the parties are prepared to discuss the issues, a Geneva-type conference or any other initiative cannot be forced on them. As soon as there is any hope in this respect, there will be an opening for Canada, and indeed the other interested governments, to make a helpful contribution. All we can do in the meantime is to urge the parties to get together, but the idea that one could call upon a group of countries that are not involved in the dispute to settle the dispute is obviously unrealistic. There must be a disposition to negotiate and there must be a disposition to agree. In this case, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House of the Canadian government's desire to see this agony in Indo-China come to an end as quickly as possible. We will spare no effort.

I am sure the House will support the government in avoiding what might be called diplomatic gestures, and I hope the House will support us in concentrating upon the hard slugging and even upon the quiet diplomacy that is so often derided but which is of the essence of effective work in the cause of peace.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, all over this nation and throughout the world today there is deep fear on the part of mankind and I think all of us should restrain ourselves on this occasion and not engage in incendiary statements. I am sure that when the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) reads some of the statements that he made so freely today he will regret having done so.

Mr. Lewis: I will not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, there are some to whom common sense will never appeal. I remind him that his party in the United Kingdom has not engaged in the type of speech or action that he has placed before this House. He has a power of language and debating skill that I have always admired, but his reaction to the tragic situation that faces mankind today was not marked by that degree of self-control which is necessary.

Mr. Lewis: Which the right hon. member always uses.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not get the benefit of that interruption. Apparently the hon. member is annoyed already; the interruption indicates that. I listened as he covered the whole gamut of Socialist condemnation of the United States, and one wonders who is the wrongdoer. I am one who has had disagreements with the United States. The state department interfered in Canada in 1962 and 1963 in a way that was completely unjustified. Today we are facing a situation that will not be made better by incendiary speeches, however attractive they may be as headliners for the press.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: One would almost think that the United States has become a criminal in the dock. There are many things with which one disagrees but there is one thing that this House should not forget, that is, that had it not been for the U.S. assuming the titanic responsibilities that Britain had carried for 200 or 300 years without thanks, freedom today would not be in existence anywhere in the world. I am distressed to hear so outspoken a condemnation on the part of this country while across the line the U.S. pours out its blood and its treasury.

I am not in agreement with the hon. member concerning the circumstances under which the U.S. entered Viet Nam. Today that is simply a dialectical exercise. I feel convinced that the United States was invited there. He says it was not. Whichever is correct is of no consequence today. What would we have the U.S. do—get out?

Mr. Nystrom: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: It's the young one speaking.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has made it clear that in his opinion the United States should get out of Viet Nam. If it did, he and young men all over the western world would find themselves in a dangerous situation.

Mr. Crouse: In uniform.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Forty thousand Americans are dead so far. The United States has tried to get out by negotiation. I am surprised that the hon. member would say nothing in criticism of the degree to which North Viet Nam has refused to negotiate no matter what the United States has offered. The President of the United States offered to reduce the number of forces, and he has done so. Did that bring about any softening of the attitude on the part of North Viet Nam?

Mr. Crouse: None.

Mr. Nystrom: It's their country.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The President offered almost everything except the withdrawal which has the support of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. He says "withdraw". Well, you can ridicule the domino theory all you will, but Southeast Asia would fall to the Communists if the United States walked out without a political settlement. The only reason Indonesia stood when there was a Communist coup was the United States.

It is so easy for us to judge what should be done. We face one of those situations where the heart of mankind is shaken by what is taking place. We are fearful. What of the future? What of tomorrow? We do not know the circumstances of which the President of the United States has full knowledge. He cannot reveal those things. Mention was made that there was no knowledge that there was going to be any entry into Cambodia by the U.S. That is not the way I read it. One person made that statement but others said the very reverse. The Americans are in a desperate position in Southeast Asia. I do not think they should have gone in originally when President Kennedy, making one of his various monumental mistakes, moved in there with troops. However, they are there. And my hon. friends as the CCF in 1939 were not right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: They spoke with the same sophistication, the same assurance that from above, they alone had the answer to all the questions. I do not see them turning to that volume of Hansard of 1939 when freedom was in danger and they said that Canada should stand aloof except for economic assistance. When we face problems such as this it is so easy to place the U.S. in the position of being the accused in the dock. As the minister said, I do not want to see this House placing Canada in the role of the accuser. It is a dangerous thing for Parliament to be meeting for the purpose of telling the U.S., "It is your sacrifice. You have poured out the billions to maintain freedom, and a few members of our Parliament sit here on a Friday afternoon and determine whether your course is right and we condemn you". I will have no part in such a proposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Winston Churchill in his famous speech in Fulton on March 5, 1946, said:

• (4:10 p.m.)

> The United States stands at this time at the pinnacle of world power. It is a solemn moment for the American democracy. For with primacy in power is also joined an awe-inspiring accountability to the future.

The United States was new to power, steeped in liberty and a stranger to tyranny. It took over world leadership from Britain which had carried that load for 200 years. Senator Fulbright was a word for every occasion; he has an answer to everything. Since he has been chairman of that committee there has not been a President, whether a Democrat or a Republican, who has been right. They are always wrong. Can you show me where he ever saw that anything was right? I have no such occasion in mind at the moment. Naturally, there will be condemnation in the United States, because there is fear there, too.

Away back in 1914—and I lived through that period—nobody thought a war would come. We read that if there had been a little more industry shown on the part of diplomats in Great Britain, France, Russia and Germany, there would have been no war. Mankind does not want a world war; everybody agrees with that. But, Mr. Speaker, if the United States were out of Asia, the marching legions of Communism would take over in Asia in those places where today they march by subterranean methods.

Do you not think the President of the United States faced one of those awe-inspiring appointments with destiny while others slept? The responsibility was on his shoulders. It was obvious as he spoke last night that he did so with the realization that he and the United States, by risking this action, had undertaken an appointment with destiny. I do not want to see the message go out from this chamber that, with 40 or 50 members present, it endorses any widespread and unqualified criticism of the United States. That responsibility which Britain had and the United States now has is awe-inspiring. In the words of Matthew Arnold, it is like a "weary Titan—staggering on to her goal, bearing on shoulders immense, Atlantean, the load, well nigh not to be borne."

Sir, as I listened to the speeches today I wondered whether we realized how fortunate we are in Canada that our neighbour is the United States.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I had every reason to take strong umbrage because of what happened in 1962 and 1963. What was heresy then, when we refused to take those nuclear weapons after the bomber no longer was the primary danger to North America, was completely approved in the speech of the President to Congress on March 12, as I recall the date. Having said that, I ask, what recommendations can you make? I do not know what recommendations should be made. Should the Geneva Conference be convened? Who will accept the invitation? Is there any nation that will?

For over one year the United States, in facing North Viet Nam across the negotiating table, has continued to make allowances. Whatever the United States has offered has been spurned. Consult the United Nations, someone suggests. My friend, the leader of this party, Mr. Stanfield, thinks this would work and that we should try it. Well, I have no reason to object to anything being tried, but as I see it there is no possibility of anything being achieved. The United Nations today is a denuded shadow of what we believed it could be in San Francisco in 1945. The blame rests on the veto. Some say, "Bring this matter before the Security Council." How long would it last there, with the power of veto? It could be tried, but the attempt would be innocuous unless there has been a complete reversal of opinion on the part of the U.S.S.R.

The minister wondered if there is not some initiative we could take. I would like to suggest two, and I do not want anyone to think I am being facetious in what I am about to say. First, how about sending Chester Ronning again to Southeast Asia? He has gone on two occasions. He has entrée in Asia. He has an unusual personality and a capacity to transmit his views. Second, the Canadian government is negotiating with Communist China the question of recognition. The minister smiles now.

Mr. Sharp: I am waiting.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not suggest that any close relationship from the discussions would permit Canada to place her views with the representatives of Communist China, but when you get right down to it that country is the backbone and the bulwark support of North Viet Nam, and has been throughout the entire period of the war in Viet Nam. Three years ago I was talking to an audience at a United States university. What I said on that occasion was not very acceptable to many. I said at the University of Miami that a military victory by either side cannot be achieved and that a political settlement is the only possible solution. In the light of subsequent events, that statement was well-founded.

Can you imagine the position in which the United States finds itself? It has its troops in South Viet Nam and across the border in Cambodia the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong are accumulated in large numbers. Whenever they want to, they can come out and attack. If a criminal were to commit a crime on one side of the street, would you deny police officers the right to cross to the other side of the street and arrest the wrongdoer?

It is very easy to criticize the United States. I am not surprised at the widespread criticisms. After all, there are to be congressional elections in the month of November and, naturally, political considerations will have some degree of weight among the members of the United States Congress. The suggestion has been made over and over again that we should neutralize much of Southeast Asia, including North Viet Nam, South Viet Nam, Cambodia and Laos, and that the security of those nations should be guaranteed by the United States, Great Britain, Russia and France. That is an objective that can never be attained.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the right hon. gentleman, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the House give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wish to make just two further observations. That objective cannot be attained. It is all right to put these phantoms in the air and try to pick them out. Theoretically they are fine, but there are no one-way streets in negotiations. There must be traffic back and forth, and there is no such thing today between Viet Nam and the United States or, indeed, in any of the countries.

I am not taking a view different from my leader. He said there should be a declaration that the United States and Viet Nam should get out of Cambodia; that is what I understood. That is fine. However, who is going to put them out? Would they agree to leave the protected position in which they find themselves today and from which they carry on their activities? It is a frightening problem. It arouses the fear of mankind as it has not been aroused for a long, long while. Yet in the midst of all these fears a number of members have indicated that most Canadians and Americans do not fear that this will lead to a worldwide, extended conflagration.

It is easy to attack those who have responsibility. I have often been in disagreement with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). Today I thought he dealt with this subject in a more statesmenlike manner than he has dealt with subjects in the past. I do not say that in a manner of criticism, because the minister knows I have disagreed with him strongly in the past. I think today he will keep open our lines of communication with the United States. I hope he will extend those lines of communication by sending Chester Ronning abroad once more to see whether he can bring about a sense of reality that will immediately lead to a national settlement.

I do not want the message to go out from this Parliament today that the United States is in the dock in the view of the Canadian people. Our two countries have been together too long on behalf of freedom to permit such an idea to go out over the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in entering this debate I wish to congratulate the previous speakers for their efforts. I think the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) made great speeches. However, these speeches indicate to many of the younger members of this House that their points of view are not completely applicable to the matter under discussion. I think the speech of the deputy leader of the New Democratic Party will certainly endear him to delegates of that party's leadership convention which will soon be held. It was a good speech in terms of delivery and what he said, far better than my speech will be. However, in terms of content I think he has forgotten precisely the point we are debating this afternoon.

The American involvement in Cambodia which started yesterday is a matter of great concern. It has been well dealt with by other speakers. I wish to emphasize one aspect to which the hon. member for York South made passing reference. He referred to the dismay in the U.S. Senate and in the Congress regarding this action. Just as worrying as the international aspect of this enlargement of the conflict are the internal results that might come from it. This, of course, cannot be predicted, certainly not by a Canadian as far away from the border as we in Ottawa. However, it is one aspect which is extremely worrying. There is a conflict between the President of the United States and Congress, a situation which our system happily avoids. This particular aspect of the problem is just as worrying as any other arising out of the actual ground involvement in Cambodia. President Nixon stated that the expansion of the war is to be of limited duration for limited objectives. Only time will tell.

An hon. Member: That was also said about Viet Nam.

Mr. Anderson: The hon. member has mentioned that this was also said about Viet Nam. I concur in the criticisms of the right hon. member for Prince Albert about the naïvety of late President Kennedy in getting involved in Viet Nam the way he did. Nevertheless, I wish to deal with this particular aspect of the war. No resolution of this or any other House, or the United Nations, regardless of all the problems involved in getting such a resolution passed, will deter the President from this action—certainly not at this particular time. I feel that at this moment we should not attempt to harden American opinion in the way that has been suggested. Nothing concrete can be done to deter them until such time as the results of this action are known. As the NDP member mentioned, this will not be until such time as it is proved incorrect that the American involvement in Cambodia is not limited—if that is proved to be correct.

We must realize that this expansion of actual fighting in terms of the area where the fighting is taking place is not really an expansion of the war zone if considered in general terms. For years this area of Cambodia has had an extensive Vietnamese population and an undefined border. For years it has been used by the Viet Cong. I do not wish to minimize the fact that fighting is now on the Cambodian side of the border. I do not accept the suggestion that this is of a very dramatic and different nature than previously. This area was always part of the war. It is exactly in that area where the Viet Cong forces were treated, regrouped, retrained and recovered from wounds. It is that area which is now being included in the scope of American operations. Much of what has been said in the last 24 hours concerning the expansion of this war is not entirely valid. This area has always been part of the war zone. It has now become part of the front line. Front lines shift, and this particular area now finds itself engaged in fighting.

An example was given by an hon. member for the NDP that the American President said the United States was pulling out of Viet Nam. I think that should be considered in light of what took place in the bombing of North Viet Nam. Obviously there was a counter-productive and unnecessary military activity which the Americans gave up despite objections from their generals and from their Congressmen and Senators. They gave it up because they felt it was counterproductive.

Perhaps I am only throwing out a ray of hope, but to suggest there is a certain type of inevitability in this type of escalation is to ignore the fact that over the last two years there have been modest reductions in the scale of operations. From this point of view we can take hope that the Americans mean what they say, that they are not in Cambodia to stay.

The hon. member for York South made much of the fact that this was actually an invasion. He said that Cambodia was being invaded, that the Cambodian head of state did not know of this and that they regarded it as aggression. The first question in my mind is why the Cambodians did not object. They have diplomatic representation abroad; they are represented at the United Nations. On this particular point we ought, I believe, to leave it to the Cambodians to decide whether or not they are victims of aggression rather than accept the too simplistic suggestions of the deputy leader of the New Democratic Party basing his account on hearsay evidence reported in a newspaper.

As a matter of fact, today's paper talks about Viet Nam task forces linking up with Cambodian troops defending the capital, and about the commanders conferring. It seems unlikely to me that Cambodia is a victim of aggression if the Cambodian commanders are conferring with their Vietnamese opposite numbers rather than opposing them. There has been no indication in the press so far of opposition, and this should be borne in mind when the artificial distinctions made by the deputy leader of the NDP are considered.

I am inclined to think the debate today should be concentrated upon the steps which Canada might be able to take in this trying and unhappy situation. It has been suggested we should go to the United Nations. If we simply wished to satisfy our own public opinion—and members of the public perhaps know less than do members of this House about the effectiveness of the United Nations—I am sure this suggestion is a good one.

We could go there and make speeches as has been done in this House today, speeches which have little value except in terms of political advantage—not that I, as a politician would say that political advantage is something to be ignored. But we should bear in mind that the major parties to this conflict, namely, the North Vietnamese and the South Vietnamese are not represented at the United Nations. Neither, of course, is the People's Republic of China. How there could be a meaningful discussion in these circumstances is hard to understand. I personally regard this approach as a very unlikely avenue. The reluctance of the Secretary General to become involved suggests that this is not the best approach to take.

There has been a proposal that the International Control Supervisory Commission should be re-established. This suggestion was made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who urged us to take a positive attitude toward this organization. I think it would be helpful if before making further speeches on this point his speechwriters and advisers were to read the terms of reference setting up this commission. If they did, they would find that the commission was set up to "control". The word "control" in French, the language of the original text, has a meaning which differs from the meaning of the word "control" in English; perhaps the best word in English would be "supervise" or "oversee".

If the hon. gentleman's advisers would examine this document they would find that the commission is entirely dependent on the good will of the country in which it is operating. If the Cambodian government really desired the commission to operate effectively, and if there were co-operation from Poland in this regard, it is conceivable that the commission could report violations of the Geneva accord or of other accords which might be reached in the future.

However, if the government of Cambodia does not really want this commission to function—and in the past this has been its attitude—there is no earthly hope of it being successful. These are harsh words, but they are realistic. What can three men sitting in Phnom Penh, 300 miles from where the action is, do to observe and report on the violations of the Geneva agreement? They could do no more than three men sitting out in the wilds of Ontario could do to analyse and report on such a thing as a Quebec election. Unless they are allowed to carry out their investigations on the spot, interrogate witnesses and so on, there is no likelihood of their being effective.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member not agree that my suggestion was that the government should inquire whether the new government in Cambodia would take a different attitude toward this commission?

Mr. Anderson: In that regard I accept the correction of the hon. gentleman. I agree with him on this point. This must be examined. There is no magic attached to the ICC. The hon. gentleman does realize this, I think. My comments were directed more to his advisers than to himself. Perhaps those who wrote his speech had overlooked the limitations built into the Commission. But if there is a chance of co-operation, this might be a useful vehicle and I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) is not ruling it out.

The most useful possibility which has been mentioned is the reconvening of the Geneva Conference. I realize this is unlikely to occur. The Soviet Union, one of the co-chairmen, is very doubtful about such a move. I suspect from what the Secretary of State for External Affairs has told us that in recent weeks the nations making up that conference have been canvassed, and that in future they will be continually asked whether their attitude to reconvening the conference has become more favourable. So if it should appear as though a new conference might succeed, one could be reconvened.

This is a difficult subject. It would be easy to wax angry, as did the eloquent member for York South, or to speak in broad terms referring back to dates as long ago as 1914 as the right hon. member for Prince Albert has done. But in situations of this kind I believe we should avoid actions taken merely for the sake of appearing to be active in the eyes of the Canadian people.

This international event in Indo-China might to a certain degree be limited if nations such as ours did not try to involve other nations in this exercise. One reason international events or border activities escalate is because too many nations leap into too many conferences and make statements based on their own experience rather than that of the area involved. It is with great sadness that I suggest we must be careful not to escalate this problem simply out of a desire to show the Canadian people that we are sensitive and active on the Cambodian issue.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) have spent most of their time telling us about all the things that will not work, all the things we cannot do, and how completely futile it is to do anything at all about what is undoubtedly one of the most serious problems facing the world today. The Secretary of State for External Affairs seems to place his entire faith in silent diplomacy—a policy of hear nothing, see nothing, say nothing.

I thought that some of his arguments were most ingenious. For instance, he said that President Nixon is undoubtedly conscious of the risks involved in the policy which he announced last night; that he undoubtedly made this decision in the full knowledge of the opposition which it would incur. Then he went on to say that after all, the United States is a democratic country and the people can remove the government if it is doing something that is wrong.

Surely that is a most invalid argument. Are we to wait till the people of the United States at the next presidential election change the President before dealing with an international crisis? In 1956 when the British and French governments, along with Israel, attacked the Suez Canal, surely it was not suggested that when the people of those respected countries decided to change the government the problem would be resolved. The United Nations stepped in and sought to find a solution to the problem.

Mr. Sharp: They changed their policies.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): They changed their policies under pressure from the United Nations, that is why.

Mr. Sharp: Under pressure from their own people.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The policies were not changed by waiting until the next general election in each of those three countries. Here is the Secretary of State for External Affairs telling us that the only way to resolve this problem is to wait until the United States has a presidential election.

Mr. Sharp: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): He said that he doubts the value of simplistic appeals.

Mr. Sharp: I do.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We would welcome hearing what he does think would be of value. He says there is no value in taking this matter to the United Nations. He points out, quite accurately, that some of the countries most involved are not members of the United Nations, and that is true. But they could be invited to sit in on the discussions, and if they accepted it would certainly help them become involved in the world community.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs points out that the Soviet Union on the Security Council has the power of veto, and again that is true. But as I pointed out this morning, only a few days ago Mr. Jakob Malik, Soviet ambassador to the United Nations, indicated in New York that the Soviet Union would be interested in having the Geneva Conference reconvened.

If the right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) is right and there is a danger of Southeast Asia falling under the control of Communist China and the great hordes sweeping across the Pacific and endangering the freedom of the people on the North American continent, not only would we be concerned about that but the Soviet Union would also be concerned about it. I am sure that Members of Parliament who accompanied the former Speaker of this House to the Soviet Union on a visit in 1965 would all agree that one of the greatest concerns that the Russians have today is the threat of the growing power of China at their back door. I think there is nothing that guarantees that the Soviet Union would not be prepared to find some solution to this problem in Southeast Asia and they would not be just as anxious as we are to prevent a conflagration in Indo-China which could involve Communist China and which could eventually involve most of the nations of the world.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert referred to the United Nations as a denuded shadow. I would not go that far. Certainly the United Nations has not had either the cooperation of the great power or the essential powers in its constitution that it needs in order to maintain the rule of law in the world. But the fact is that it is the only international body we have from which we can hope to establish the rule of law in the world. To have this matter discussed in the Security Council and the General Assembly, to invite the various nations involved to come to such a discussion, to ask the United Nations to step up the kind of machinery or some type of international commission that might work out a solution in Southeast Asia at least offers some hope.

What disappoints me about the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs is that he has offered no hope at all. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich detailed one by one the things we cannot do. Today the world needs leadership. I am not suggesting for a moment that Canada can save the world or can end the war in Southeast Asia. But Canada could join with other nations who are not directly involved and who have no colonial interests to serve in giving moral leadership to the world. The world today is crying out for moral leadership, for nations that are prepared to support the rule of law, that are prepared to condemn aggression whether by the Communists, the United States or anybody else. We might not succeed, but surely we ought to try.

The right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert said that the United States is not in the dock. I say that before the bar of history every one of us who holds any public responsibility is in the dock unless we raise our voices and use our influence to try to find a way of establishing peace in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As I heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs it sounded to me like a counsel of despair—"There is nothing we can do. Just sit tight and hope that this problem will go away". We have been saying this since 1963, and during those seven years the situation in Southeast Asia has grown worse. The only genuine opposition, the only thing that has been effective has been the outcry of the ordinary people of the world. In the United States itself the people who demonstrated, the people who signed petitions, the people who held a moratorium day are the people who ended the bombing of North Viet Nam, not the politicians. I had hoped that this government would go over the heads of the politicians, the diplomats, the admirals and the generals and call on the common people of this country and other free countries to speak out and say, "In God's name, stop this insanity!"

• (4:50 p.m.)

Instead of that we have had this mealy-mouthed explanation that there is really nothing we can do except sit back and let events take their course. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that we share the anguish of what is happening in Southeast Asia, but he also said he doubts whether that anguish would be ended by the withdrawal of the United States forces. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is certainly not being helped by including another nation in this holocaust. The fact is that this is a continuance and an extension of the sad and depressing story of the Viet Nam war which started now some seven or eight years ago.

I have no hesitation in saying and make no apology for saying bluntly, as I have said in this House before, that in my opinion the United States had no business being in Viet Nam in the first place. I was glad to hear the right hon. member for Prince Albert say that he thought they had no business being there in the first place. I find it a little illogical, however, for one to say that they had no business to be there in the first place, but being there they have a right to stay there. I think he will have great difficulty reconciling those points of view.

Mr. Osler: What about the U.S.S.R?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): My friend can make a speech about the U.S.S.R. He probably knows more about it than I do.

Mr. Osler: I doubt it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): So far as I know, the U.S.S.R. has no troops in Viet Nam.

An hon. Member: They have them everywhere else.

An hon. Member: What about Canadian reforms at the United Nations?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): My friend can make a speech later. I have only 20 minutes. We can be here until midnight, so my friend can make a speech any time he likes. I say that before we can understand what is happening in Southeast Asia today we must remember how this appalling situation came about. When the French were defeated at Diem Bien Phu the Geneva Conference was held in 1954 at which the French were given two years to withdraw. A temporary line of demarcation was drawn between the north and the south. At the end of two years there was to be a vote in which the Vietnamese people were to decide for themselves whether they would be one nation or two and what form of government they would have. The United States was not a signatory to that agreement. It is true that General Smith submitted a letter signed by President Eisenhower saying that the United States agreed with the general principle, but they did not sign the agreement. During the two-year period provided for the French withdrawal the United States set up a puppet government under Diem. Then under the pretext of having been invited they moved in their military forces and military hardware.

The International Control Commission of which Canada was a member protested the fact that this was being done. The myth was that they were invited in by Diem. This was like a dummy inviting the ventriloquist to dinner. The elections were never held. What had been a temporary military demarcation line became a fixed border. Some of the previous speakers who spoke about freedom should look at the sort of freedom there is in South Viet Nam. I doubt if there is very much more there than there is in North Viet Nam. The only difference is you have an élitist military dictatorship in the south and a Communist dictatorship in the north. But the United States had a vital stake in Southeast Asia and used its puppet government as a pretext for being in Viet Nam and for preventing the implementation of the provisions of the Geneva agreement. Through the protests mainly of the American people themselves it was finally recognized there could be no military solution. President Lyndon Johnson was defeated largely because of his policies in Viet Nam, and President Nixon was elected on his commitment to de-escalate the war.

The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich said that perhaps the invasion of Cambodia will prove to be counter-productive and consequently may not amount to anything. Mr. Speaker, the invasion of Cambodia is merely opening a new chapter in a ghastly story. As someone mentioned today in the press, this is not a turning point in the war; it is a turning back in the war. Anyone who reads the history of Southeast Asia will realize that a western industrial power invading any country in Southeast Asia is like a fly landing on flypaper; you can get in much easier than you can get out. The French learned that. The Japanese learned that and now the United States is learning it. The announcement last night by President Nixon that the United States is sending ground troops and bombing planes into Cambodia opens a sinister chapter in this already bloody story.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has pointed out, as did the President last night in his speech, that there have been Viet Cong and North Viet Nam troops in Cambodia for five years. This is the business of the government of Cambodia. Apparently Prince Sihanouk, who was the head of state, did not object. As a matter of fact, I gather from the comments of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that one of his quarrels with the International Control Commission was the fact that they were reporting the presence of the Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops in Cambodia. But Sihanouk was deposed. A military government took over. It could be assumed that they would be much more in opposition to the presence of foreign troops. But it is interesting that they have not asked for intervention. They have made no appeal to the United Nations, to the United States or to the government of South Viet Nam.

This morning's Globe and Mail states:

> A Cambodian government spokesman in Phnom Pehn said yesterday that the government had not approved the South Vietnamese-U.S. intervention, adding that Cambodia is a neutral country.

The article points out that the ranking diplomat at the Cambodian embassy in Washington made a similar statement. As a matter of fact, President Nixon himself in his television speech to the United States people said that the government of Cambodia had been informed but not consulted.

• (5:00 p.m.)

When a country is invaded and merely informed that it is going to be invaded, without its having asked for help, without its having requested intervention, that constitutes aggression. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich says, "Cambodia can protest to the UN". He said, "The fact that they have not protested proves that they are very happy with the situation". They have not had much time to protest since they only found out about it last night. But are we to accept the situation in which the United States, the Soviet Union or anybody else can invade another country merely because they do not like the troops that are stationed in that country? If we accept this doctrine, it is a dangerous precedent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired unless he has unanimous consent to continue. Is there such agreement?

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I will make my remarks brief. We have to recognize, I think, that for several years now every time there has been an escalation of the war in Southeast Asia we have been told by politicians, and particularly by the Pentagon, that a few hundred thousands more troops and in increase in military activity will bring the war to an end. Surely we have not forgotten that for a long time General MacArthur pleaded with President Truman, saying that the North Koreans were using Chinese territory as a sanctuary for their planes and asking for permission to invade right up to the Yalu River. He did so, and the roof fell in.

This invasion of Cambodia is not going to be a mere side issue. It means being sucked further and further into the jungle, it means involving more and more American troops, it means involving the west in a war which they cannot win on the battlefield because all the history of Southeast Asia indicates that a nation that is prepared to take to the jungle and fight a guerilla war can go on for years.

The action of the U.S. yesterday has shocked the world and saddened the friends of the U.S. both at home and abroad. I still hope that we can persuade the Canadian government to take a more forthright position with reference to this matter. We are not asking the Canadian government to be anti-American. What we are saying is that as the closest friend and neighbour of the U.S. we have the responsibility to tell the U.S. when we think they are wrong, when we think their actions are endangering the peace of the world, when we think that an act of aggression such as was committed yesterday will only strengthen the Communist position rather than weaken it. It is no accident that Peking today is very happy, because this gives them the kind of confrontation which they like without it costing them a single soldier.

My plea is that this government make a clearcut declaration that it wants to see an end to the war in Southeast Asia and that it deplores the invasion of Cambodia. The French government has already said this. There is no reason why the Canadian government should not say that. There is no reason why the Canadian government should not make contact with other governments in the western world, other democratic countries, to make representation to the U.S.

Mr. Osler: Would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have already exceeded my time. When I am finished, if the Speaker will allow it, I will gladly answer the question.

There is no reason why Canada, in concert with other friendly, democratic nations, should not bring this matter to the United Nations. If the UN is able to reconvene the Geneva Conference, fine. If the UN is prepared to set up an international commission in an endeavour to bring the parties together, that is all to the good. But our plea is twofold: let the government make a clearcut statement that will challenge the conscience of the people of the world and will call upon the people of the U.S. to give leadership in bringing this barbarous war to a close. Second, we ask the Canadian government to become actively engaged in the task of mobilizing the various countries of the world to seek ways and means of ending this war before it escalates to the point where it threatens, as it may well do, the survival of the human race.

Mr. Osler: Would the hon. member allow a question now, with the indulgence of the House?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member's time having expired, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) will need unanimous consent to ask the question. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Osler: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and members of the House. It is a very simple question, but I think the plea could be more easily endorsed unanimously if the hon. member would invite the government of Canada to do what it could to join with all other like-minded governments to tell all the great powers how stupid they are being in relying on the use of force in this day and age.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I would endorse that statement completely. I have made it clear again and again that I am just as opposed to the aggression of the Soviet Union in Czechoslovakia and Hungary as I am to what is happening in Viet Nam or what happened in the Dominican Republic.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, today the House is involved in a debate that is very important to everyone, not only in this country but potentially important to everyone around the world. If you follow the history of the Vietnamese war as it has affected the United States, you will see that it has had an effect on that country on almost every issue possible. It has divided families, it has divided communities, it has split the generations.

I think some of the speeches we heard in the House today have emphasized the rift between the generations in their interpretation of the Vietnamese war. The reply that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) made to my suggestion that the United States withdraw from Viet Nam was, I think, a good example of the different interpretations of the two generations. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) sometimes understands the feelings of most people in the younger generation, judging from some of the things he said today.

People of my generation throughout Canada and the United States feel very strongly about this war for a number of reasons. People of my generation are going into the jungles in Southeast Asia and are dying there. Many of them do not know why they are going in, why they have to die, or even what the cause may be, and many people in my generation do not like the attitude that is so conspicuously evident in speeches like the one given by the right hon. member for Prince Albert or, as a matter of fact, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), Vice-President Agnew or President Nixon.

This type of speech suggests that we are continuing on in the same old world in which we have been living for so long, a world that has placed humanity on the brink of disaster, a world that has produced the types of weapon that can destroy us in a matter of minutes, a world that on both sides seems to be emphasizing military might rather than the importance of sitting down and trying to rationalize and discuss our problems. I suggest that the most recent American intervention in Cambodia will do nothing but escalate the possibility of even more insecurity and the possibility of an all-out war not only in Asia but perhaps even around the world.

It is with great anxiety, concern, frustration and anger that I rise to say a few words in this debate. There is a lot of fear around the world, no matter which continent you are looking at; and all members here, I think, share the same concern over what has been happening in Cambodia. That does not mean that we are anti-American or anti-anything. You can look at the press clippings which have appeared in the last few hours and see that members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives are condemning the President of the United States for intervening in Indo-China. I should like to quote briefly from one or two such clippings. Senator Frank Church, a Democrat from Idaho said, "This is just a first step of a new set of obligations. It can only lead us to a deeper mess and to the borders of China." Senator Church is a member of the foreign relations committee which will meet today for the second successive day to consider the Cambodian situation and give the presidential speech its first thorough scrutiny.

Mr. Pepin: The hon. member's argument does not make much sense.

Mr. Nystrom: I see the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) is again interjecting. May I remind him that all people of his generation do not look on the Viet Nam war as he does. The leader of my party, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and many Senators of the United States and members of Congress have spoken out against the United States policy in Viet Nam. I am sorry the minister cannot see it this way. If he did, perhaps he might influence his leader and the Secretary of State for External Affairs to adopt a different position in this whole matter.

Mr. Pepin: If it is a question of age, lets get the age of everybody who has spoken on the subject.

Mr. Nystrom: May I continue? The committee to which I referred will also consider a proposal by Senator Church and Senator John Sherman Cooper that would cut off funds for American military or civilian personnel in Cambodia and also ban the furnishing of military aid to the new Cambodian government. Senator William Proxmire called the President's decision a tragic mistake and said, "We are going into the same sad mistake that we went into in Viet Nam." I could quote many statements showing that both Democrats and Republicans in the United States Congress condemn the action of President Nixon.

This brings me to a number of reasons as to why we as Canadians and Canadian parliamentarians ought to be concerned about what is happening in Viet Nam. It appears that the President of the United States once again has listened to his generals and sent troops into Cambodia. His troops now are 20 miles inside the Cambodian border. We ought to be concerned, because this is a threat to the peace of the entire world. This type of activity in my opinion will only escalate the war which has gone on long enough in Southeast Asia. It will spread the war and proliferate it, in the real sense of the word. It will invite extra participation on the part of countries outside Cambodia. It may well provoke the Chinese government to send more arms and even troops into both Viet Nam and Cambodia.

By intervening this way in Cambodia, the United States are risking the escalation of the war. Any country in the world, regardless of its political affiliations or alliances, I believe will speak out against outside intervention in the affairs of Cambodia and Viet Nam on the part of the Americans, the South Vietnamese, the North Vietnamese or any other country. We must look at new methods of solving these problems, because if we continue with this process of escalating the war we are only inviting disaster. The war will spread from Indo-China and perhaps engulf the rest of the world.

My second reason for being concerned and for saying that Canada should take a stand and act is that whether we like it or not we are involved with the United States. Canada and the United States participate in a defence-sharing agreement under which each and every year we send millions of dollars worth of equipment to the United States. We are involved because we are part of NATO and NORAD, and we are very much involved with the American way of life. Whether we like it or not, the United States controls a huge portion of our economy and much of our lives. For these and other reasons I believe we are obligated to tell the United States that its latest moves in Indo-China are wrong. They are wrong in intervening in Cambodia. Their actions in Viet Nam and Cambodia are wrong from a political and moral standpoint.

The defence-sharing arrangement we have with the United States makes us party to what has happened in Southeast Asia. In 1969 we sold $600 million worth of defence and military equipment to the United States. In 1964, five years earlier, we sold $161 million worth of such equipment to them. In 1969 there were about half a million troops in Viet Nam, and in 1963 there were about 23,000 troops there. As you can see, our sales of military equipment to the United States have gone hand in hand with the increase or escalation in the Vietnamese war.

Mr. Pepin: Would the hon. member tolerate a question?

Mr. Nystrom: I will tolerate a question as soon as I have finished my remarks, if the minister does not mind. Much of the equipment that goes to the United States is used directly in the war in Viet Nam, and the equipment that is not used there directly contributes indirectly to the entire United States military offensive. For reasons like these we must be concerned; for reasons like these we must speak out. We must end our complicity, if you can call it that, in the matter of Viet Nam as soon as possible.

The main thing we must be concerned about, as I have already said, is the real possibility that the latest United States activity in Cambodia will escalate the war to embrace the whole of Indo-China. For years the people of Viet Nam have been dominated by foreign powers, by the Japanese, by the French and now by the United States. What is happening in Cambodia today is a natural extension of the war in Viet Nam. That is why we must try to end it as soon as possible.

The leader of my party outlined a number of things that have been happening in Cambodia. He told us that the head of state of Cambodia, Prince Sihanouk, was out of the country visiting Moscow and Peking when ousted. He wanted to ask the Soviet Union and China to protest to North Viet Nam and ask for North Vietnamese troops to be pulled away from his borders. It was while he was out of the country that these events occurred. Many people have said that there may be a strong possibility that the government of Cambodia was nothing more than a puppet of the United States. The United States recognized the new regime in Cambodia only hours after the ousting of Prince Sihanouk. A few weeks later the action we are speaking of occurred.

I should like to make a few more comments about what has been happening. When making his announcement last night to the United States people, the President justified this new American action by saying that it is justified and necessary because, "This will bring to a quick end the war in Viet Nam." Apparently this is a necessary type of activity which will save the lives of U.S. soldiers in Viet Nam today. May I suggest that this is nonsense and sheer hypocrisy. If we look at the history of the Viet Nam war we find that the United States authorities have always justified any escalation in this way. They have always said, "If we want to bring real order and peace to Viet Nam, we must escalate the war. We must do this if we are to bring about democracy and peace there."

• (5:20 p.m.)

We must also remember something else which is important. It has been referred to here today. When the Americans are moving into Cambodia and attacking some of the Vietnamese sanctuaries, they are not attacking a fort, a big holdout, road or something of this nature; they are attacking a guerrilla or commando headquarters. As soon as the Americans come in, the tendency is for the Communists to establish new headquarters a few miles away. This is the history of the war in Viet Nam. It is one of the reasons why the war is becoming so complicated and involved and why it is increasingly difficult for the Americans to withdraw.

They say they are only going in for six weeks or two months. If they go in at all the chances are they become entangled and will remain in Cambodia for a long time. It is just not possible to go in and wipe out guerrilla headquarters in one march or offensive. Because of that there will probably be a real escalation of the war in Viet Nam and Cambodia. This is something we should not tolerate. We should speak out against it as strongly as we can and as soon as possible.

The President justified the latest American step in the intervention in Cambodia by saying that the United States had to do this because they did not want to become a second-rate power. They do not want to suffer their first defeat in 190 years as a nation. This type of attitude and national pride by any nation really frightens me. This type of ultra-nationalism and national pride has led to many wars in the past. A gentleman in Germany between 1935 and 1939 justified many of his activities because of national pride, necessity and democracy.

We cannot sit idly by and let any country, whether it is the United States, the Soviet Union or China intervene in small countries because it might hurt their national pride or inflict a bad image on the president of their country in the world community. As the leader of my party suggested, this type of move would help destroy the credibility of the United States among the countries of Southeast Asia and many other countries in the third world. It will not improve the credibility of the United States.

The President's statements of national pride should be of concern to each and every one of us. When the Americans intervened in Cambodia they did not consult the government of Cambodia. This has already been pointed out in the House. Passages have been read from newspaper articles quoting diplomats in Cambodia saying they did not ask for help from the United States; they did not ask the United States for armed intervention. This type of unilateral activity or declaration can be very, very dangerous.

This leads me to the conclusion that there are a number of things we as a country should be doing to try to bring about an end to the terrible crisis in Southeast Asia. We cannot sit idly by while countries on many different sides of the camp, either Communist or non-Communist, are intervening in another country. We have a responsibility to speak out as loudly and as clearly as possible. Canada is greatly respected in the world community, but Canada cannot end the war by herself. No one can end the war by himself. However, we can play a leading part in a great movement to end the war in Viet Nam and in turn bring peace and security to the people of Southeast Asia.

We have to intervene and speak out on behalf of the Canadian people from coast to coast as well as on behalf of mankind in general. Canada must tell the United States that it is wrong in intervening in Cambodia. They must tell the North Vietnamese and the Viet Cong the same thing. They must call on all belligerents to talk this over immediately. Canada must tell the United States to withdraw from Viet Nam immediately. Canada should discontinue its defence-sharing arrangements with the United States. As long as we are sending them ammunition, defensive and offensive materials, we are partisan; we will not be taking an unbiased attitude in the war in Viet Nam. Through the United Nations we must do all we can to bring about a peaceful settlement of the war in Viet Nam. Today mankind has built the weapons and has the technology to destroy itself. The sad thing about the situation is that we live in a state of international anarchy. We do not have an international organization with any real power, influence or sovereignty that can solve problems such as this.

I appeal to the government to do all that is possible to convince the Americans to withdraw from Cambodia and Viet Nam and to do the same with respect to other countries involved from the outside. Everyone in this country must speak out. If they do not, the war cannot help but escalate and become more and more serious each and every day.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I propose only to add a footnote to the eloquent and effective statements of our views on this crucially important matter that have already been expressed in this House by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), by my leader and by the hon. member who has just spoken. I want to devote my few remarks to denying the canard that is sometimes put about regarding criticism and condemnation of American intervention in Southeast Asia. The latest phase of it is the invasion of Cambodia. In so doing, we in this party are often referred to as anti-American, inspired by some hostility toward the United States of America. The reverse is true.

For the approximately eight years I have been a member of this House I have had the honour to be one of my party's spokesmen on external affairs. I have always recognized that the intimacy of our relations with the United States makes it one of our first interests to maintain friendly relations with that country and to be concerned with her interests. What is in the interest of the United States? Has it been in the interest of the United States to have this disastrous involvement in Southeast Asia? I think clearly not. We have consistently spoken of this intervention as a ghastly mistake. Surely the facts have fully justified our stand. Thousands of lives have been thrown away. People have been devastated. Billions of dollars have been poured down the drain. To what end? We said this was wrong then, and we say it is wrong now. We will continue to say it is wrong.

It is time for the friends of the United States to speak up in clear tones and not in any form of quiet diplomacy. The nature of the American commitment to the war in Southeast Asia is such that it is open-ended; it never ends. It is always a good military argument to go a step further and give another turn to the wheel of escalation. That has always been a good military argument, and always will be. However, there is no end to the process unless you start doing the opposite, that is, stopping what has gone on.

The most heartening aspect of this whole matter has been the growing body of American opinion, and to some extent even official opinion in the United States Congress and Senate, about this involvement. This is the time for the voice of mankind, whether it be American, Canadian, European, Asian or African to issue the united call to end the tragedy that threatens to engulf the whole world.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

MANPOWER

STATEMENT ON STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, a little over two months ago I reported to the House briefly on the results of the student summer employment program conducted last year by my department. Today I wish to tell the House some of the things we are doing, and will be doing, to help ensure equally encouraging results this summer.

As hon. members may know, a National Committee on Student Summer Employment has been set up to co-ordinate efforts in this field. It is made up of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, the University and College Placement Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Economic Council of Canada and my department. This committee, in co-operation with other interested groups such as labour bodies, provincial governments, business and industry organizations, farm groups and student groups, has been working throughout the winter and spring to see that every effort is made to find jobs this summer for students.

Some hon. members will have total and immediate recall of the importance and urgency of obtaining suitable summer employment as a means of providing for college or university tuition fees and other costs. Some others, although obliged to cast a little farther into the mists of time, will, I am sure, be able to sympathize with the desire of young people to work in order to finance next year's college or university term.

In my last report I outlined the success of last year's campaign which resulted in some 93 per cent of nearly 350,000 post-secondary students who sought work being successful in obtaining it. This summer, we estimate that some 385,000 students who are, or will be, enrolled in post-secondary institutions will be on the labour market looking for jobs. Over all—taking both secondary and post-secondary categories—we expect that approximately 641,000 students may be seeking employment this summer, an increase of 60,000 over last year.

My department is mobilizing its resources to assist students in search of summer employment. As a part of this effort we will be hiring some 570 students to take part in placement and referral operations and in other departmental work across Canada. In this connection, I might say that student help engaged by my department last year was most effective in contributing to the success of the employment campaign. My department as a large employer of students for summer work has expressed complete satisfaction in the type of services rendered and we are in a position to recommend a similar course to other employers.

The federal government will this summer be taking on at least 11,365 students throughout the various departments and agencies. This represents a 27 per cent increase in the number hired in the past two years. These students will earn some $12,242,000, an average of more than $1,000 per student. I want to emphasize that this employment is in no sense a make-work program but that useful and effective work is performed by the students. Because of the very large numbers of students who will be seeking employment, federal government hirings will necessarily be limited to students either entering or already attending post-secondary institutions.

In addition to providing employment for more than 11,300 students the federal government, through my department, is allotting $260,000 for a national advertising campaign designed to enlist the support of employers in providing jobs for students.

Canada Manpower Centres across Canada are offering their services in assisting students to obtain summer work and are working closely with employers in compiling inventories of appropriate employment opportunities. Of the approximately 570 students to be employed by my department, 375 students will assist our regular staff in developing employment opportunities for students and in providing consultative assistance to students interested in starting selfhelp or entrepreneurial projects.

This year, as well, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce is making an important contribution to the campaign by encouraging its 125,000 members to provide productive summer jobs to students registered with Canada Manpower Centres. My department has appointed five regional co-ordinators whose special assignment will be to ensure the effective functioning of the campaign in each region.

I should like to emphasize that if we are to match last year's successful campaign a very high degree of co-operation will be required by business and industry in every sector of the economy, and by other levels of government. In this connection I might note the "Hire a Student" campaigns of a number of provincial governments and the practice of a number of newspapers of offering free advertising space to students looking for summer jobs. Summer employment for students is an old and valued tradition in our society. Today it becomes a necessary and useful exercise, both for the students and employers.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the minister is so proud of his statement that he could not let us have a copy until he delivered it or whether it was difficult to prepare and was not ready until the last minute before delivery. However, there are some comments I wish to make at this time.

I hope the minister will make every effort to develop a fully co-ordinated attack on the problem of student unemployment and the finding of adequate employment for students. I hope the minister receives full co-operation from other governments and from industry.

I wish to spend a few minutes to emphasize that, in addition to any program the minister may mount, it is obvious that the number of students who receive employment this summer will depend not only on his efforts and the efforts of those associated with him but upon the general employment situation in Canada. There can be no question that the general economic policy of the government, justified in the name of fighting inflation, has created unemployment across the country. A situation has been created whereby students looking for work this summer will be competing with those already seeking employment. The general state of unemployment is a very important factor, although the Minister of Manpower and Immigration did not deem it worthy of mention this afternoon.

There can be no question about the importance of summer employment for students. There can be no doubt about the reaction that will set in among young Canadians who are forced to drop out of either high school or post-high school education for financial reasons. There can be no question about the seriousness of this situation to the individuals involved and to the country as a whole. Those who are forced to drop out may never get back to anything like as advantageous a position. So I urge the federal government to review its general policy with a view to increasing the opportunity for students and others to secure employment in Canada this summer.

In addition to special programs such as he has announced the minister should set in process machinery for determining to the fullest extent possible how many students are affected and how many will be unable to obtain employment. He should obtain this information in good time so that in consultation with the provinces measures can be taken to reduce to a minimum the number of students who will have to drop out of school because of unemployment.

I do not want to be unfair to the minister personally, but I suggest that in the circumstances, and given the outlook facing us, he has made a highly complacent statement this afternoon.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): First, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister for having given me a copy of his statement. I might say that in future I would appreciate getting such statements before he begins to make them instead of two or three minutes after he has started.

My first impression is that the statement is highly optimistic, that he did not present the real problem of student unemployment this summer. An article in the Toronto Star last Saturday drew attention to the prospect of serious student unemployment in Ontario this summer. Failure of a student to obtain a job this summer may mean inability to continue his studies, and his dropping out of school or university.

There is a special problem to be faced in areas already suffering from economic depression—the prairie provinces, Saskatchewan in particular, the Maritimes and the rural parts of Quebec. Many of these areas are not able to provide as many jobs for students this summer as they did last year or the year before. The government should take this into consideration and try to work out special programs applicable to these regions. They will need special attention this summer if even a small proportion of the students concerned are to find full-time summer employment.

In the second place, I believe the government should co-ordinate its student employment program as closely as possible with the plans of the provinces. This is of particular importance in the case of Saskatchewan, the Maritimes and Quebec. Last year, even though 93 per cent of the students concerned did find summer employment of some kind it was not, in all cases, full-time employment at a good wage. Just because a student has a job does not mean it will provide sufficient income for him to return to school again. This observation applies particularly to girls who in many cases cannot get jobs which pay wages as high as some of the men can command.

Finally, the whole question of student employment is very much a part of the government's over-all economic and financial policy. Also, it must not be forgotten that there are young persons who are not students and who also need to find employment. Forty per cent of the unemployed in Canada are under the age of 25, and this situation must be borne in mind when we examine any of the plans which the minister may produce.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, according to the minister, there may be about 641,000 secondary and post-secondary students looking for a job this summer.

The Department of Manpower and Immigration will hire about 570 students to take part in placement and referral operations, whereas various government departments and agencies will enlist 11,305, on a total of 641,000.

Mr. Speaker, the matter of summer employment for students is a most urgent and serious one. If we do not take steps to provide them with work during the summer months, they will find themselves something else to do. Of course, this is not the sole concern of the central government. Provinces, municipalities, school boards and private enterprise can also co-operate. We have been told that the Chambers of Commerce are now looking into this matter.

In my region, for example, the mining companies hire local students during the summer months. The Noranda mine, for one, had between 1,000 and 1,200 students on the payroll last year, but this year they have decided to hire only some 200.

I believe that the government could provide some incentives for private industry in order that students be given summer employment. If the government were to co-operate, I think that many private companies would hire young people. Even if that were to cost something to the government, it would still be less expensive than leaving our youths to their own devices or to activities of which no one approves.

Mr. Speaker, summer employment for students is a very serious problem and I am convinced that the government, with the full backing of the opposition parties, should suggest to the provinces that they tackle this issue so that as many students as possible will find summer jobs.

We have but one wish, Mr. Speaker: that action be taken in order to assure our youths that they will enjoy some security thanks to the summer jobs that will be found for them.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

STUDY OF POSSIBLE SALE OF POLYMER SHARE CAPITAL

Question No. 423—Mr. Fortin:

1. Has the government studied, will it study, or is it studying the possibility of selling all or part of the share capital of Polymer Corporation and, if so, will it table these studies in the House?

2. Who conducted, or is conducting, the studies concerning the total or partial sale of Polymer Corporation?

3. Was Polymer Corporation exempted from the provisions of the Government Companies Operation Act and, if so, for what reasons?

[Translation]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): 1 and 2. The government has approved some diversification of Polymer Corporation activities and as a consequence the company is studying methods of financing the diversification program. The company will be submitting proposals for financing to the government for consideration.

3. Yes. Polymer Corporation Limited is in keen competition with publicly owned companies throughout the world and it is essential for its continued success that it be free to act quickly in response to changing business conditions and have the same relative freedom of action as its competitors.

ROLE OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT EXHIBITION COMMISSION IN INFORMATION CANADA

Question No. 1,227—Mr. Francis:

Is it the intention that upon transfer to Information Canada, the Canadian Government Exhibition Commission will maintain its own separate identity and continue to play its role for the federal government both inside and outside of Canada?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): Yes.

APPLICATIONS OF RAILWAY AND HOTEL COMPANIES STILL UNDER REVIEW—LABOUR (STANDARDS) CODE, PART I

Question No. 1,356—Mr. Orlikow:

1 How many applications of Railway and Hotel Companies who applied for deferment and for suspension of Part I of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code are still under review?

2. When were these applications made to the department?

3. How many workers are covered by each of these applications?

4. What are the reasons for the applications for deferment still being under review by the department?

5. What is the date when the department expects to have settled all these cases which are under review?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): 1. Thirty eight; 36 for deferment and two for suspension.

2. The applications for deferment were made prior to July 1, 1965. One application for suspension was made on July 20, 1965; the other application for suspension was made on February 21, 1966.

3. Information not available.

4. The applications are still under review because, to date, the department has been unable to find ways and means of disposing of them in a satisfactory manner in view of the circumstances prevailing in the industries concerned.

5. At this time it is not possible to anticipate when decisions can be made on the applications.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ALLEGATION RESPECTING ATTITUDE OF PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the seriousness and importance of the charge the Prime Minister made over the weekend that the equivalent of blackmail has sometimes been resorted to too often in the past by the province of Quebec and sometimes by other premiers of other provinces, I should like to ask the Prime Minister to which premiers he was referring?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt very much that a question asked in those terms is in order. I have some doubts about it. My understanding is that a question may be asked in respect of statements made outside the House to determine whether or not they represent government policy, but I am not too sure really whether the question as asked is in order.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of Canada has made a serious statement in respect of the provincial premiers generally and it seems to me it is of the greatest importance that the Prime Minister of Canada clarify this statement so that whatever slur he was casting does not fall on every premier in Canada. I suggest, with respect, that this is a matter of importance and that the Prime Minister of Canada, having made a statement like that, ought to clarify it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Again I have the same doubts I had previously. The point made by the Leader of the Opposition is of interest, but it seems to me that the statement the Leader of the Opposition is inviting now would perhaps be better made on a question of privilege. It seems to me that the question is not one that would normally be acceptable from a procedural standpoint.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is this the way the Prime Minister intends to proceed to prepare the way now for further constitutional consultations leading to reform of the constitution, and does the Prime Minister think a statement like this, without any clarification, is a proper way to prepare for the reform of the constitution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): One of the proper things to do if one wants to reform the constitution in a realistic way is not to close one's eyes or ears to the fact that there has been talk in parts of Canada in respect of western separation, eastern alienation and so on. I am surprised that the Leader of the Opposition has not heard of these sentiments.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have heard very much of these statements.

An hon. Member: By whom?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister to tell us how he believes these attitudes to which he is referring justify his charge that the premiers have resorted to blackmail.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the supplementary I repeat that if one wants to deal realistically with the problem of national unity one has to take such expressions as these seriously in an effort to deal with these feelings of frustration or alienation. The Leader of the Opposition now says that he has heard very much these expressions. May I ask whom he has heard them from?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. May I, as a member from New Brunswick, ask the Prime Minister if he was casting a slur on my province and saying we are guilty of blackmail?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Bell: There was a nod of the head.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NORTH VIET NAM—RENEWED BOMBING BY UNITED STATES FORCES—CONSULTATION WITH U THANT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the renewed and intensified bombing raids on North Viet Nam by United States forces, will the Canadian government make urgent representations to the U.S. government deploring this latest escalation of the war in Viet Nam?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As hon. members know, it is reported that these latest air strikes against North Viet Nam are specific and retaliatory and that they do not represent a policy of the resumption of bombing. Whatever the case, we continue to be opposed to such action. We had thought that the cessation of the bombing was a fixed feature of the situation in Viet Nam. This action can only further complicate the already difficult search for a negotiated settlement.

Mr. Brewin: Would the minister say whether the government proposes to consult or has consulted Secretary General U Thant of the United Nations about the ideas which the Secretary General says he has to prevent the whole of Indo-China from being engulfed in the war?

Mr. Sharp: The hon. member may recall that during my intervention in the debate on Friday I said that I thought it might be a good idea if the Secretary General were to send a representative to Indo-China. We are exploring this idea with the Secretary General at the present time to ascertain whether he feels this would be a useful initiative. He has indicated that he has some ideas on limiting the war in Indo-China, and I have asked our representative in New York to inquire about his ideas because I agree with him that it is absolutely essential that some way be found of limiting the war in Viet Nam. Indeed, the latest developments over the weekend confirm the fears that I expressed on Friday about the possible escalation of this war.

CAMBODIA—REACTIVATION OF INTERNATIONAL CONTROL COMMISSION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy Royal): What information can the minister give us about the progress in the last 48 hours or so in the negotiations with Poland and India on reactivating the International Control Commission?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There is no progress. We have not found that our ideas are acceptable. There is some talk about a simple reactivation on the basis of some sort of argument that it would be a good thing if there were the presence of the ICC in Cambodia. We do not agree. We think that the situation is far more serious than that and that if there is going to be meaningful action by Canada, let us be sure we know what it is we are being asked to do.

[Later:]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Could the minister indicate to the House whether or not talks have broken off between our country and Poland and India on the question of the International Control Commission? I ask this question in light of the most depressing report today on the lack of progress in negotiations.

Mr. Sharp: The hon. gentleman knows that Poland, India and Canada are members of the International Control Commission operating in Laos and Viet Nam, so obviously we have not broken off our discussions. We are continuing them also in the capitals of those countries and with their representatives.

CAMBODIA—CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS AT THE UNITED NATIONS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does he intend to make clear in a formal way before the world, that is at the United Nations, the position of Canada with respect to the situation in Cambodia?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: I do not know whether the hon. member was here but I dealt with this question. I have noticed that Lord Caradon made in New York the same point as I did the other day, namely, that the Soviet Union has objected very strenuously to taking the Viet Nam war before the United Nations. Under these circumstances I am very doubtful about the prospects of success. If there were any at all, Canada would not hesitate.

CAMBODIA—ACTION ON ADVICE OF CHESTER RONNING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I have a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has he received any correspondence or communication from Mr. Chester Ronning, former Canadian diplomat who once headed the Far East division, indicating that the United States is ignoring the rule of law and resorting to unilateral action regardless of decisions of the United Nations in the most recent Cambodian issue and, if so, what action has he taken in regard to Mr. Ronning's advice?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Like the hon. gentleman, I read Mr. Ronning's statement in the press. He has not conveyed it to me personally but he certainly intended to convey it to all Canadians. I respect his views, as I respect the views of all members of this House. I suggest it ought to be our purpose in all our actions, whether as private individuals or as the government, to work for a peaceful settlement of this dispute. The way things are going, now the risks of an even greater conflagration are very great.

CAMBODIA—EXPRESSION TO UNITED STATES OF DISAPPROVAL OF AMERICAN INVASION

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the House whether or not the disapproval of the Canadian government of the recent action of the Americans in Cambodia has been directly conveyed to the United States authorities and, if so, what response was there?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think that all hon. members noticed that the debate that took place in the House on Friday was being followed very closely by the representatives of the United States government.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INVITATION TO PRIME MINISTER TO COMMENT ON QUEBEC ELECTION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister.

Yesterday afternoon, the Prime Minister was invited by "Télé-Métropole" to speak on an hour-long television program about the recent provincial elections in Quebec. I do not always agree with the Prime Minister, but that is not the point.

Here is my question: Was the famous corporation called CBC which operates an English and a French network kind enough to invite the Prime Minister of Canada, as it is usually so eager to welcome such people as Messrs. Lévesque, Grégoire, Parizeau and Michel Chartrand?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is true that I was invited to appear on Channel 10 to talk on behalf of the Canadian government about Canada and Canadian unity. But following the attacks of the last few months against federalism the matter had to be cleared up.

The English network of the CBC also extended an invitation but none came from the French network. However, I was told this morning that two days ago they had asked me to make comments on birth control in underdeveloped countries. They are not much interested in the Canadian situation.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question. Has the Prime Minister finally finished dusting his Chinese vases?

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SUGGESTED LOWERING OF INTEREST RATE TO STIMULATE ECONOMIC ACTIVITY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Prime Minister. As widespread lay-offs in the electrical, textile, footwear, rubber, radio, television and other industries have given a very clear indication that unemployment today is considerably higher than the 6.7 per cent reached in March, will the government now give consideration to having the Bank of Canada gradually lower the interest rate so that employment in this country may be stimulated by economic activity to provide the jobs needed not only for the 554,00 people unemployed in March but also for the 650,000 students who, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration told us today, will be looking for jobs this summer?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Could I ask the Prime Minister to answer my question? He does not seem to be interested so I will ask him a simple supplementary question. How much higher does the government intend to push unemployment in its fight to cure inflation, to the last unemployed Canadian?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

QUEBEC—SPECIAL ACTION TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): In view of the statement made last night by the Prime Minister-elect of Quebec that the federal government should devote special attention to provinces of low inflation and high unemployment such as the province of Quebec, may I ask the Prime Minister what special programs or special action the government has taken to cure the very serious unemployment in that province which is suffering the consequences of the government's policy to fight inflation?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that he is inviting the Prime Minister or a representative of the government to make a general statement which should be made on motions.

MANPOWER

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE MATCHING THAT OF INDUSTRY AND BUSINESS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): May I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration a question in reference to his statement about students as I represent one of the university areas of Canada. In view of the fact that there are 540,000 looking for work, would the government now consider matching, dollar for dollar, assistance to students from industry, business and professional men, thus helping students obtain the money they need so they can continue their courses of study? This is a very serious problem and I mentioned it the last time I was in the House.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is a serious problem. There is a large body of students coming on to the labour market and we depend upon very substantial assistance from the private sector in placing them. As I mentioned, today the Canadian Chamber of Commerce is beginning its program "Operation Placement" and it is calling upon its membership throughout Canada to assist in placing over 600,000 students. This seems to me to be constructive and in line with the suggestion made by my hon. friend.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister be good enough to speak to the Minister of Finance and see if he could get him to withdraw the white paper on tax reform in view of the fact that it is discouraging investment and development in this nation and causing unemployment?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made a representation and he has to assume it will be taken into account by the minister.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS—ACTION TO ENSURE MAXIMUM WORK PERIOD

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. In view of the fact that last year's successful program still left almost 50 per cent of those students who got jobs employed for not much more than half or two-thirds of the summer, what steps is his department taking to ensure that students who need a full summer's work in order to return to university next fall will be able to get it rather than just work for part of the summer?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are taking the general steps that I have outlined and which proved effective last summer in obtaining employment for 93 per cent of the students who wanted it. It is true that some of the total number did not work all the months of the summer. This year we hope that the program in which we are co-operating, started by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, will be an added feature and will help extend the period of employment. This is in addition to the heavy advertising that we have done, that provincial governments have done and that newspapers have done in an effort to build up the capacity of employers to take on a very large number of young people for a very short time, creating jobs for them. We think that all these efforts will help generally and also help the specific problem mentioned by my hon. friend.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Should the efforts of his department not meet with the success anticipated in finding employment for students, is he prepared to consider enlarging the scope of the grant and loan provisions so that students can return to university?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that the question is hypothetical and cannot be asked in those terms.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, if I might reword my question, is the minister considering reorganizing the grant and loans structure for university students?

Mr. MacEachen: Not directly, Mr. Speaker. It is a matter under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance.

NATIONAL PRESS CLUB

SUGGESTED CONGRATULATIONS ON ADMISSION OF WOMEN TO MEMBERSHIP

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a question to the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister, in his capacity as keeper of the Canadian Bill of Rights, express on behalf of the House of Commons our congratulations to the National Press Club for having decided to recognize women?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a suggestion rather than asking a question.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SAFETY OF WATER FROM CONTAMINATED LAKES AND RIVERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and has to do with a concern being engendered in all parts of Canada by persons who use the waters of lakes or rivers which have been placed out of bounds for fishing because of mercury poisoning and the like. Is there any danger whatever to the individual in consuming that water for drinking purposes and general domestic use? I think his assurance on this score would go a long way to remove the fears.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I must say that at many levels of government and amongst the people generally it is agreed that many of the waters of this country are polluted and are not safe for drinking purposes. I do not think that the Departments of Health, federally or provincially, would be prepared to give any undertaking that these waters could be consumed safely.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would then confine my question to two particular rivers.

[Mr. Speaker.]

What about the use of water from the Ottawa or Saskatchewan Rivers? Has any examination been made?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, without checking into the matter further, at the moment I would not be prepared to give any undertaking with respect to either of these rivers.

[Later:]

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he can assure the Canadian people that waters contaminated by mercury, if processed by the filtering plants normally utilized by cities, are thus guaranteed fit for human consumption?

Mr. Munro: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

YELLOWKNIFE—INDIAN DEATHS ALLEGEDLY CAUSED BY SEWAGE PLANT WATER

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this is a supplementary and related question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare which no doubt will be of interest to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the minister received a written statement from Mr. Roy Daniels, President of the Indian Brotherhood of the Northwest Territories, alleging that polluted water coming from the sewage plant at Yellowknife was the cause of a number of deaths among both Indian adults and children during the past winter? If so, what action is the government taking to investigate and rectify this serious situation?

An hon. Member: Nobody knows.

[Later:]

Mr. Southam: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I had a legitimate supplementary question.

Mr. Munro: I am sorry. I missed the hon. member's question.

Mr. Southam: The question is related to the one put by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. Has the minister received a written statement from Mr. Roy Daniels, President of the Indian Brotherhood of the Northwest Territories, alleging that polluted water coming from the sewage plant at Yellowknife was the cause of a number of deaths among both Indian adults and children during the past winter? If so, what action is the government taking to investigate and rectify this serious situation?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I have no knowledge of the letter coming to my attention, Mr. Speaker, but I shall be glad to check into the matter.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

REQUEST BY ATLANTIC PROVINCES FOR ALTERATION OF SHARING FORMULA

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the government studying the request of the four Atlantic provinces' governments to alter the sharing formula under the Canada Assistance Act? If so when is a decision expected?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, I met with the provincial welfare ministers last Friday. They came forward with a proposal which I said I would be prepared to take under consideration and bring to my colleagues. This proposal will need to be examined by my department for some weeks prior to bringing the matter before the whole cabinet.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF FERTILIZER PRICES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a rather urgent question for the Prime Minister in view of the absence of both the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In light of the fact that Esthol McKella, President of the Charlotteville Federation of Agriculture in Norfolk Country, has called for an investigation into fertilizer prices by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, will the Prime Minister assure the House that the government will commence or cause to be commenced an investigation into these very serious charges?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the question as notice on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture who, as the House knows, is at the moment chairing the two-day ministerial meeting of the grain exporting countries.

MANPOWER

YARMOUTH, N.S.—SERVICES TO LAID-OFF TEXTILE PLANT EMPLOYEES

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that the Cosmos textile mill in Yarmouth has started its lay-offs, and in view of the fact that the minister said he would offer special services to the employees, can he tell us what these additional or special services are?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the services that we provide are well known. They are especially geared to each situation and I am satisfied that in the Yarmouth case they will be helpful also.

Mr. Comeau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister spoke about special services. If he cannot give me the answer in the House, would he write and tell me what these special services are?

An hon. Member: Funeral services.

IMMIGRATION

NUMBER OF U.S. DRAFT DODGERS AND DESERTERS ADMITTED TO CANADA

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Would the minister indicate how many draft dodgers and deserters have been allowed to enter this country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for statistical information. That kind of question ought normally to be placed on the Order Paper.

PENITENTIARIES

INVESTIGATION OF OUTBREAKS OF VIOLENCE

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General. Is the Solicitor General in a position to inform the House whether the outbreaks that have occurred in a number of penal institutions recently are under investigation by officials of his department? I refer especially to the grievous attack on correctional officers at Dorchester Penitentiary.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the first part of the question is in such general terms that it is difficult to answer. As to the latter part, I am not in a position to advise the House fully on the subject today but am having the matter looked into.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POST OFFICE

POSTAGE RATE INCREASES FORECAST BY MINISTER—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. May I also be permitted to advise him that the Postmaster General is back and making speeches.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: In reference to the speech he made today, may I ask if the Postmaster General is expressing government policy in these times of anti-inflationary measures when he speaks of mail rate increases to come with greater frequency than in the past and when he warns people to make allowance in their forward planning for such increases in 1971?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Postmaster General is assuming, and I assume he will be right, that inflation will be licked by then.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You don't say that seriously.

Mr. Macquarrie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister also say whether the Postmaster General is expressing government policy when he says that those who do not use the postal service will not be picking up the bill for those who do? Will this odd philosophy regarding a basic government service be applied to other basic government services such as the RCMP and the CBC?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—ASSISTANCE IN CREATING NEW JOBS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's assurance to Mr. Bourassa of Quebec that he would help him to meet his pledge to create 10,000 new jobs in that province by the end of 1971, can the Prime Minister give a similar assurance to the Premier of Saskatchewan who in 1964 promised that 50,000 new jobs would be created within four years.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

NATIONAL AND ROYAL ANTHEMS

INQUIRY AS TO INTROUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Government House Leader. Since I have not bothered him on this subject for some time, could he now indicate whether we can expect in 1970 legislation dealing with Canada's national and royal anthems?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think I can assure the hon. member now that there will not be legislation on this question before the end of the present session. It is conceivable, of course, that the legislation might be introduced in the next session.

[Later:]

Mr. Forrestall: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Government House Leader indicate whether the government would consider bringing in a piece of legislation to deal with the royal anthem at least, because that is not subject to the difficulties the government is encountering in securing the rights to "O Canada"?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider that.

THE MONARCHY

COST TO CANADA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I revert once more to the very interesting and revealing performance of the Prime Minister on the CBC. Among other things he stated that one of the difficulties in maintaining a level of expenditures on the part of the government was the cost of the monarchy. I should like him to tell the House what he meant when he spoke of the cost of the monarchy to Canada, or was that just one of those nebulous things that was thrown in to becloud the issue?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think I have to make the same ruling about this question as I did about the question of a similar nature that was asked originally by the Leader of the Opposition. I doubt whether the question can be asked in those terms.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, could I ask it without referring to the speech? I thought the Prime Minister would like a reference to his qualities as an actor.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not think the answer would require much information or research. Can the Prime Minister answer? Does the monarchy cost Canada anything directly?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question ought to be placed on the Order Paper.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All right.

EDUCATION

FINANCIAL SUPPORT FOR FRONTIER COLLEGE

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the excellent work Frontier College has done in educating people in the outlying regions of Canada and in view of the current cutback in funds, would the minister, as one method of increasing student employment, reconsider his department's decision not to provide the funds requested of his department by Frontier College?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there is some misunderstanding. The Department of Manpower and Immigration is currently making a total grant of $10,000 to Frontier College. This is a doubling of the grant that we made available previously. The college was supported in the past by the Department of Labour and now will be supported by this department at that level for the time being. In addition we are increasing our course purchases from Frontier College, which we hope will be another helpful step in the direction of strengthening its valuable work.

[Later:]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration that is supplementary to the one asked a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. In view of the universal agreement on the part of federal and provincial authorities that Frontier College does really good work in the field of manpower training and in view of the crisis that organization is experiencing and its request to the minister's department for a one-shot grant of $50,000 to help it over its crisis—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member kindly ask his question?

Mr. Orlikow: Could the minister give further consideration to granting the amount requested by Frontier College?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, naturally I would be glad to consider any suggestion, but my commitment to consider should not be regarded as an indication that the decision might be favourable.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS TO DENMARK RESPECTING ATLANTIC SALMON

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he indicate whether Canada took a negative position against Denmark's involvement in the North Atlantic salmon harvest? Also, would he be prepared to table the contents of the message forwarded to that nation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is right in assuming that we are opposed to the sort of action that Denmark has been taking. I do not think it would be in accordance with established practice nor good for relations between countries to table the note. I might perhaps be able to table a summary of the representations as I have done in other cases.

CO-OPERATION WITH UNITED STATES REGARDING POLLUTION OF ALASKAN COAST

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for his co-operation on that matter. In view of the question he took as notice last week, could he indicate whether Canada is involved in experimentation and investigation, with United States authorities, in regard to the pollution of the Alaskan coast?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have asked the department to inquire but have not received a reply yet.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

EXEMPTION OF OLD ORDER MENNONITES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the very friendly and successful meeting he held with the Mennonite representatives in Winnipeg, is he prepared to reconsider their request that Mennonites be granted exemption from the provisions of the Canada Pension Plan?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this question was substantially discussed with them and an answer was given to them at that time or in writing in the days which followed the meeting. I can only remind the hon. member that it was not all the Mennonites who were requesting this. It was, I believe, a very small sect of them on behalf of whom the ones I met were talking. They were making representations on behalf of a much smaller group.

GRAIN

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—LONG-TERM EFFECTS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Was the Minister of Agriculture stating government policy when he indicated he believed that the Lift program, which basically asks the farmers to give up one year of income, would have beneficial long-term effects?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is seeking to confirm whether a statement made by a minister expressing an opinion or a belief, does in fact represent government policy. I have some difficulty considering this as a question which can be accepted procedurally. The hon. member might like to rephrase the question.

Mr. Yewchuk: I will try to rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister indicate whether he agrees that the principle of asking a farmer, through the Lift program, to give up one year of income is now government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, it is not, Mr. Speaker. I am afraid the member does not understand the policy.

Mr. Yewchuk: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. A couple of nights ago the Minister of Agriculture indicated on television that he felt the Lift program, which basically asks the farmer to give up one year of income, will have beneficial long-term effects for the farmers involved. Does the Prime Minister agree with this?

Mr. Speaker: I had the impression this would be a supplementary question by the hon. member. I did not want to complicate matters. This is why I allowed the question. I was not sure if the hon. member was satisfied with the reply he received and a further supplementary question was allowed.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I want to try another supplementary. In view of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture has expressed the view that the Lift program, which asks the farmer to give up a year of income, will have beneficial, long-term effects, would the Prime Minister and his colleagues, as a show of faith in these people, be willing to give up one year of their income to see whether that will have beneficial long-term effects?

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member obviously does not understand anything about the whole Lift program. The object is not to have the farmer give up a year of income but to have him curtail his production for a year and receive compensation. It is only $100 million we are offering. I know this is only crumbs to the opposition; however, we think this is an important contribution to the farmer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

MANPOWER

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM—GRANTS TO PRIVATE INDUSTRY

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

The minister has announced today his plan to help students during the summer months. Is he ready to grant subsidies or provide incentives to private enterprise, in order to encourage the hiring of students during the holidays?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, in a very public spirited program, has undertaken the commitment on its own, without subsidy, to encourage employers to take on over 600,000 students this summer. I think that this is the best way to proceed at this time. I hope the response among employer members across the country will be as effective as if we came forward with a subsidy program for them.

DRUGS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF LE DAIN COMMISSION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the Le Dain Commission report been received yet?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

CONFISCATION OF LITERATURE BELONGING TO U.S. CITIZENS RETURNING FROM CUBA

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I have a question for the Solicitor General of which I have given him notice. In view of the fact that in Montreal on Friday the RCMP confiscated a large quantity of personal documents belonging to United States citizens who recently returned from Cuba, and in light of the fact that this baggage had already been cleared by customs in Saint John, can the minister say whether he has investigated this situation? If so, can he explain to the House why this action was taken?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I first want to thank the hon. member for having given me notice. Unfortunately it was only received after the bell rang at two o'clock today, so I have not a full answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McIlraith: In any event, I had looked into the matter and the situation is this. When the persons referred to by the hon. member entered the country, they failed to declare approximately 600 packages of literature. This literature was subsequently seized in Montreal under the authority of the Customs Act. It has not been confiscated. It is under seizure under the Customs Act. After it has been examined to see whether it is in contravention of the law, it will be dealt with either by way of confiscation or return.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister give assurance that this baggage will be returned to its owners?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker. If this literature is in the country contrary to the laws of this country, it will not be returned.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—CONSIDERATION OF INCREASE IN OLD AGE PENSIONS AND VETERANS' PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That this House calls upon the government to give consideration to an immediate and substantial increase in the basic amount of the old age security pension and in veterans' pensions and allowances, and this House also urges that still further steps be taken to improve the quality of life of all our older and retired people.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order before the debate on this motion commences. It was agreed among the House Leaders that today would be an opposition day and that the motion would be put by the New Democratic party. However, it was not agreed that it would be a non-confidence motion. Although notice was given by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that he was bringing such a motion, there was no agreement to that effect.

In the past we have proceeded on the basis that a non-confidence motion was the prerogative of the official opposition unless there was agreement to the contrary. I understand there has been discussion among the House Leaders concerning this particular matter, but that no agreement has been reached. In the absence of our House Leader, who is currently away on official business, I rise to give notice that the procedure today should not be considered as a precedent.

There is also some doubt whether the nature of this motion can classify it as a non-confidence motion under Standing Order 58(9) or whether it should more properly come under Standing Order 58(11). The subject matter of the motion is worthy of debate and discussion in this House. We do not oppose proceeding with the debate at this time. I merely rise to file a caveat that a similar procedure in the future will have to be by way of agreement.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): At this point, Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer a comment on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. I recognize that all he is seeking to do is enter a caveat; that he does not object to the House proceeding today with this motion. I am afraid I must enter the counter caveat that the rule does not say that all non-confidence motions are the prerogative of the official opposition.

It is true that all the non-confidence motions moved since the new rules came into effect have been in the names of hon. members of the official opposition. We have contended both last session and this session that in view of the relative size of our party compared with that of the official opposition we should be entitled to at least one of the six in the course of each session. We have endeavoured to arrive at this understanding by agreement, but agreement has not been possible and, this day having been assigned to us, it being the last of the six in this session, it seems to me it is our right to ask that this motion of ours be one of non-confidence.

As the hon. member who has just spoken knows, I made it clear to his party on Friday morning that it was our intention to file this motion and ask that it be one of non-confidence. While I am prepared to take part in further discussions, I enter this present statement as a counter caveat to the caveat put on record by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken).

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): In order to make the government's position clear, may I say that the practice followed has been for myself, as leader of the House, or my representative from time to time to indicate which of the sitting days should be considered as an allotted day for the purpose of Standing Order 58. I have not assumed responsibility for deciding which of the days should be taken up by which of the opposition parties, nor which of the days was to be regarded as a day for putting forward a motion of non-confidence. On this basis, I was not privy to discussions regarding the use to be made of the day between hon. members opposite. I merely gave an indication that Monday would be an allotted day.

It might be of some assistance in this regard if Your Honour could indicate whether, in your view, this motion does in fact constitute a motion of non-confidence or not. In itself, the wording might just commend itself to some of my hon. friends on this side of the House. But, of course, they would not feel obliged to vote for it if the effect would be to cut the government's throat. So it might be useful if Your Honour could rule whether or not a motion purporting to be under the terms of Standing Order 58 (9), while not expressing in its terms any want of confidence in the government should be regarded as a motion under that part of the Standing Order or whether, rather, it should be regarded as a motion under Standing Order 58 (11) which is the one providing for motions other than non-confidence motions, motions in connection with which debate would expire at ten o'clock rather than be put to the vote.

Subject to this reservation, the government takes no position one way or another on the point of order. Nevertheless, if these questions are to mean anything, if they are to be the occasion for more than a ritualistic battle, it would seem to me that non-confidence motions should be expressed in such a way as clearly to indicate non-confidence in the government. The feeling among some of my hon. friends might be that the motion before us does not fall into this category.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should address myself first to the point raised initially by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) about which a caveat, a counter caveat and a non-caveat have been entered by the three hon. members who took part in the discussion.

I doubt very much that the Chair could intervene in this aspect of the proceedings. Obviously, the only way in which the Standing Order can be operated so as to work and make sense is to have agreement between hon. members, in this case between representatives of the parties in the House. As has been pointed out, there has been no such agreement in this case, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on behalf of his party has presented a motion under the terms of Standing Order 58(9). The only role assigned to the Chair in this respect relates to Standing Order 58(4) (b) which states:

> When notice has been given of two or more motions by members in opposition to the government for consideration on an allotted day, Mr. Speaker shall have power to select which of the proposed motions shall have precedence in that sitting.

Had there been more than one motion filed within the required time under the terms of Standing Order 58(9), the Chair would have had the responsibility of determining which took precedence—the motion sponsored by the Official Opposition or the motion sponsored by another party in the House. In this case I suggest I cannot go beyond what I have before me and this motion is the one which has to be considered by the House this afternoon.

As to the second point, the point which was raised by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) and to some extent by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, I suggest it would be difficult for the Chair to rule that this is not properly a non-confidence motion and to treat it as an ordinary motion under the terms of the relevant Standing Order. I have some sympathy for the point raised by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka and reinforced by the President of the Privy Council. This motion does appear, on the face of it, to be a substantive motion or even a private member's resolution; it does not indicate that by a vote hon. members would be expressing non-confidence in the government.

It seems to me I ought to remind hon. members that a number of similar motions have been before us in the past, motions which could have been interpreted as being substantive motions rather than as motions expressing want of confidence. It may well be that in future the Chair should look at this matter more closely. My impression, without having gone into the situation in detail, is that motions of no-confidence, or motions alleged to be motions of no-confidence within the terms of Standing Order 58(9) have been put to the House before, in this form, and have been considered under that Standing Order and voted upon at the expiry of the debate at 9.45 p.m. This is my impression. I would have to go over the precedents nad see whether I am right or not. In the meantime, I think this motion should be put in the terms in which it has been presented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and be considered as a motion under Standing Order 58(9).

This having been said, I should like myself to enter a caveat. The matter will be looked into a little more closely, and perhaps the next time the Chair is presented with a motion which purports to be a no-confidence motion there will be an indication on the part of the Chair that it should clearly be a no-confidence motion rather than an expression of feeling or opinion in the form of a substantive motion or of a private member's resolution such as this one appears to be. There has been some difficulty in connection with the present motion and I suggest we allow the debate to go ahead on its present basis, reserving the position both as far as the Official Opposition is concerned and as far as the Chair is concerned. It might be very useful for the House leaders to hold discussions on the subject, and the Chair will take the initiative in this regard.

Mr. Aiken: May I comment on one observation which has been made by Your Honour in connection with Standing Order 58(4)(b)? It would, of course, have been possible for the Official Opposition to have filed a counter motion under this provision so that Your Honour would have been called upon to make a decision. However, we had made an agreement that this should be a day allotted to the NDP and we did not feel that we would be carrying out our agreement if we tried to block their motion.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I present this motion today on behalf of the New Democratic Party, not just as another motion on the question of old age pensions and the pensions and allowances of our war veterans; I present this motion because I believe the situation is fast becoming one of emergency and that the time has come for this House to call on the government to take action in these two fields. In view of the discussion that has just taken place on a point of order or two, I shall rearrange the remarks that I was going to make and say at this point something that I had intended as my peroration. I refer to the question of whether or not this motion really is one of non-confidence.

I quite deliberately avoided using the words "this House condemns the government" for such and such a thing because I know that there have been over the years a number of non-confidence motions, particularly in the days when there were supply motions which the opposition sought to amend, which expressed views which the government was prepared to accept; and when the government accepted those views, saying it had no objection to the motion that had been presented, the non-confidence motion lost its non-confidence character. That is precisely the reason for wording the motion in the way it has been worded. It is my hope that the government will say that it agrees with what is said in the motion. It is my hope that the government will agree that it is now time to deal with these two groups of pensions, and that it will therefore permit the House to pass the motion unanimously at 9.45 this evening.

As I say, there have been a number of instances—true, not since we changed the rules to the six opposition days for such motions, but in the years when we had non-confidence motions attached to motions of supply—where a so-called non-confidence motion lost that character because the government accepted what was proposed therein. Therefore, I hope that the government spokesman today, when he speaks to the motion, instead of raising a point of order will welcome the fact that I did not use the word "condemn", and will welcome the fact that this motion, filed though it is under Standing Order 58(9), calls on the government to take a certain course of action.

I filed it under Standing Order 58(9) for this reason only, that if the government is unwilling to agree with the simple, clearly stated, straightforward proposition in the motion then, of course, we shall have to express by our vote non-confidence in the government, a non-confidence being felt by an increasing number of Canadians. Therefore, I hope that during the course of the day we will not have the sort of speeches we sometimes hear from members on the government side who stand up and say they agree with what is in the motion—sometimes they say that they are more in agreement with the motion than we are—but, of course, they will have to vote against the motion because it is one of non-confidence. This so-called non-confidence motion can fast become a confidence motion if the government will just agree that what is being asked for in this motion is something that the government ought to do right away.

I said in my opening sentence or two that this motion asked the House to consider the plight of our old age pensioners and war veterans, not just in academic terms, not just as though once again, as we do so often, we were having an intellectual discussion about pensions, but rather in terms of the emergency situation that has developed.

I want to give the House a few figures, but only a few, to support my contention that we are in an emergency as far as these people are concerned. However, before I do so may I point out that we have taken care of the pensions of certain other groups. For example, we have improved the pensions of retired public servants, retired personnel of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, retired personnel of the permanent armed forces and others in similar categories. We have taken care of our own pensions, and we have done that rather nicely. We have had referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications the question of the pensions of retired Canadian National Railways employees, and I hope we will get at that matter soon. If we get action in this area, I hope it will carry over to the retired employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway and others.

There are groups in our society, therefore, who have had their pension position protected or improved, and rightly so. This action has been taken in the midst of this inflationary period, this period of austerity. This is because all members of the House contend that if there is any case to be made for a measure of austerity, the last people who should suffer from it are our pensioners, whether they be retired civil servants, retired permanent armed forces people, retired Members of Parliament, those retired some years ago, or what have you.

Having done all this for all these other groups of people, I say we are being most unfair if we call upon our old age pensioners and war veterans who are recipients of pensions under the Pension Act or of allowances under the War Veterans Allowance Act to wait while we go on and on in our study of the Woods report and the white paper on that report, and in the hope that some day we will see the government's white paper on social security based on the Willard report.

I think a few figures will demonstrate that the situation is one of emergency. According to the latest figures I have at hand, which are to be found in Hansard for November 17, 1969, there were at that date 1,529,768 recipients of the old age security pension. At that time 785,873 of those people were also in receipt of the guaranteed income supplement; and 473,358 of those were drawing the full amount of the guaranteed income supplement.

Let me put these figures in terms of percentages. This means that 51 per cent of all our old age security pensioners, those people in Canada who are 65 years of age and over, are drawing the guaranteed income supplement, having submitted themselves to the income test that is involved. This means that those people are close to the poverty line. Of that 51 per cent of pensioners drawing the guaranteed income supplement, 60 per cent, or nearly 31 per cent of the grand total, are drawing the full amount of the guaranteed income supplement.

• (3:30 p.m.)

In order to draw the guaranteed income supplement one literally must have nothing else. Oh, one can have $1.95 of income and still draw the full guaranteed income supplement. If one receives $2 he starts to lose. As I say, it is therefore clear that over 30 per cent of the people of Canada who are 65 years of age or over literally are below the poverty line; literally, they have nothing else. This is demonstrated because they draw the full $111.41 a month which is available to them under the old age security pension and guaranteed income supplement.

Now, let me demonstrate with another set of figures the position of these people. The present arrangement in the Old Age Security Act of a basic pension of $75 plus $30 guaranteed income supplement, subject to increases year by year as the cost of living goes up, was enacted in 1966. May I emphasize the fact that in 1966 the consumer price index—popularly known as the cost of living index—stood at 111.4. Today, in this part of 1970, the consumer price index stands at 128.9, and it is still rising. Thus, since the present basic pension figures were established there has been an increase in the cost of living of 17.5 percentage points or 15.7 per cent.

Let me repeat that from 1966, the year in which the guaranteed income supplement was brought in, to the present time there has been an increase in the cost of living of 15.7 per cent. During that period of time, however, the increase that old age pensioners have had on the basis of the supplement of up to 2 per cent per year on account of the cost of living increase has been only 6.1 per cent. That is, the $79.58 per month they received instead of $75 or the $111.41 they received if on the guaranteed income supplement instead of $105, is an increase of only 6.1 per cent. Therefore, that is a clear indication of the position of these people. Their cost of living has gone up in the period from 1966 to 1970 by 15.7 per cent and their pension has gone up by 6.1 per cent. That is the situation in respect of 30 per cent of the people of Canada who are 65 years of age or over. We are literally taking money out of the pockets of those people who make up that 30 per cent or more. Their costs have gone up by 15.7 per cent, their pensions have gone up by 6.1 per cent and they are 9.6 per cent behind. That is the same as taking $9 out of every $100 they get. Therefore, I say that the situation is an emergency one and that the time to act on it is now.

Having given these figures, may I add a few more and then I think I will be through with figures. My motion refers to two main groups, the recipients of old age security pensions on the one hand and war veterans on the other. According to the latest figures I have been able to obtain, there are 136,800 veterans drawing pensions under the Pension Act. About 29,800 survivors also draw pensions under the Pension Act and there are 83,400 who draw allowances under the War Veterans Allowance Act. It would not be correct to add those figures for a grand total of 250,000 because there is a fair amount of overlapping between the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Pension Act. I suspect, however, there are close to 200,000 individuals, either veterans or survivors—their widows and their children—who are drawing pensions under these two pieces of legislation. There have been some increases in these pensions but it is a long time since those increases were granted. There have been no cost of living adjustments in the pensions paid under the Pension Act nor in the allowances paid under the War Veterans Allowance Act.

It is true that if a veteran or his widow is on the guaranteed income supplement and the war veterans allowance, that person receives the increase in the guaranteed income supplement and the war veterans allowance people graciously allow such a person to keep it without taking it away. But that is an increase only in the guaranteed income supplement and old age pension and not in the war veterans allowance portion of his income. Therefore, we have moved this motion not only on behalf of the 1.5 million Canadians who draw the pension or supplement under the Old Age Security Act but also on behalf of these 200,000 people who draw pensions or allowances under the Pension Act or the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Now, I know that during the course of this debate we will be told these matters are under consideration. We all know this. If I may deal with the veteran side of the problem, this is in the hands of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs and I must not take advantage of the fact that the committee has not yet reported. But I believe it is proper for me to point out that, although that committee is dealing with the Woods report and with the government's white paper on the Woods report, we have been told categorically by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) that matters having to do with the amount of the pensions paid under the Pension Act and the amount of the allowances paid under the War Veterans Allowance Act must wait until after we have had the government's review of social security policy as a whole. In other words, there can be no increase in the basic pension rate under the Pension Act and no increase in the war veterans allowance until we have the white paper on social security, and for all we know we may not get it then.

I submit that it is most unfair to these people to tell them they will have to wait, and wait and wait. We understand there are to be a few adjustments. The Hong Kong veterans might get into the picture according to the Woods report, as confirmed in the white paper, and there are a number of things to be done in respect of the administration of the Pension Act which are good but overdue. But the basic thing, the need for more money on which to live, is not to be discussed so far as our veterans are concerned until the white paper on social security has been presented.

So, I ask when will this happen? So far as the study is concerned that the government no doubt will tell us is being given to the position of the old age pensions, we know about that. There was the Willard report which at one time we thought we would see soon but which apparently we are not to see at all. Now it is to be the white paper based on that report. This was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne last October. We thought we were going to get it soon, but now apparently we will not have it until just before the end of the session and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) has made clear that it is not expected any action on the basis of that report will be taken at this session.

Therefore, the picture emerges as a very clear one that these two main global groups of people about whom I am speaking, those on the old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement as well as veterans drawing pensions or allowances under these two pieces of legislation I am talking about, will not receive any attention this session. So, what will happen next session? Will we have the same situation again and no doubt we will have to wait until the session after that, the one just before the election? If that is the case, this discrepancy between the 15.7 per cent increase in the cost of living and the 6.1 per cent increase in the pensions, as in the case of the old security recipients, will become even worse. What I described today as an emergency situation will become one of tragedy so far as Canada's older citizens are concerned.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

As is said in our motion, we think there are other things in life than money. We would like to see things done to improve the quality of life of our older and retired people. If there were more time, I could list a whole range of things that could be done in connection with other services such as health, housing, recreation and all kinds of things that could be done not only by governments but by people generally. But it is rather futile to preach to people about improving the quality of their lives if they do not have enough dollars to hold body and soul together.

I submit that the kind of situation that has developed is one in which we have done something for lots of other groups of pensioners, one in which many people have won increases in their wages and salaries, but for this group of a million and a half old age pensioners and 200,000 war veterans, all we have done has been to tell them to wait, and in particular to wait until after we get the white paper on social security. To put it in its simplest language, it is not fair, it is not just, and I think there should be action on this matter in this session.

I have no doubt that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) and perhaps someone speaking on behalf of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) who, I understand, is in Europe at the present time, will tell us that we should wait not only because these things have to be studied but because there might be some better way to deal with these matters than we have employed thus far. I confess to some fear about these suggestions because I hear so much talk about selectivity as a way of handling these things, and I am still an ardent advocate of the principle of universality. I do not like keeping the poor that way, as Ian Adams says in his current book. I think that the way to go is in the direction of the guaranteed annual income. I think the way to go is in the direction of raising the living standards of all our people, and therefore what we propose in this motion is not inconsistent with what might be sometime later a proper and adequate solution to the whole problem of security for our older people.

For example, I have not raised in this motion questions of detail such as the 2 per cent ceiling on the amount by which the pension can go up each year. I have not raised the questions of the means test or the income test or the guaranteed income supplement.

My views about all of these have not changed one iota, but rather than suggest that the House bog down in the details of these things, in view of the fact that a study is in progress and that something more has to be done later, I simply suggest that we take what we now have and act on it in an interim way because the situation is an emergency.

I say that the basic amount of the old age security pension should be increased immediately and substantially. What I mean by the word "substantial" will be pretty clear if one looks at the Order Paper. There is a notice of motion in my name that calls for the pension to be raised to $150 a month across the board. In that motion I suggest that we wipe out the guaranteed income supplement, wipe out the means test, and go for $150 across the board. I think that is a better solution than one based on selectivity. But when I ask in today's motion for a substantial increase in the basic amount of the old age security pension, I leave it to the government to decide on the amount. For example, if the government decided to grant an increase from $75 to $100 to meet this request, then may I remind the government that the guaranteed income supplement is defined as 40 per cent of the basic pension. Therefore, an increase in the basic pension from $75 to $100 would increase the guaranteed income supplement up to $40 and produce a grand total of $140 a month.

I offer that as something less than the $150 that I am asking for across the board but I offer it as a compromise because, as I was saying, we have an emergency situation that calls for immediate action, whatever is going to happen with respect to the white paper on social security that is to be presented later. That is the kind of thing I think should be done. I apply the same reasoning to the pensions under the Pension Act and to the allowances under the War Veterans Allowance Act. I think there are some basic changes that should be made there in the way those pensions and allowances are structured. But at the moment we could help meet the immediate emergency by a straight percentage increase in the pension under the Pension Act and by increasing the amount of the war veterans allowance and by raising the ceiling under which those allowances are paid.

There are many other groups. As I said, some were covered, like the retired civil servants, but there are other groups such as the blind, the disabled and the handicapped, who all too often are forgotten. If I brought those in, I would be told there is the Canada Assistance Plan and there are the provinces. I do bring them into these remarks because I do not want us to forget them. But I am also trying to avoid confusion, to avoid our running off into a lot of different alleyways and missing the main point. I am asking the House to concentrate on these two main groups—old age pensioners generally, of whom there are a million and a half, and veterans who are recipients under the Pension Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act of whom there are about 200,000.

I have already said that this motion, although there were some questions about it as to whether or not it was a non-confidence motion, is deliberately drawn to go either way. If the government says no, even if it says this under the pretext that it is a non-confidence motion, and says it is going to vote against it, then of course we have no option but to force the vote and to let those in the House who believe that pensions should be increased stand up and be counted and those who are not prepared to do that also stand up and be counted. But it is quite in keeping with precedents of the past, quite within the way in which this motion has been worded, for the first speaker for the government to say that the government accepts the intent and the spirit of this motion, that the government believes it should give consideration to an immediate increase in the pensions under the Old Age Security Act and in the pensions and allowances paid to our veterans. If the government does take that position, the motion will not have to be put to a recorded vote at 9.45 p.m. but it will be a unanimous vote and the government will not fall. We do not want the government to fall, not today. There is no point in that at this stage. There is too much to be done around this place to have an election right away. But, to put it in plain language, we do want to put the government on the spot on this issue and we ask the government to face this situation by doing what it ought to do, by saying that it does agree to this proposition. That being the case, there will be a unanimous vote at 9.45 p.m. and all will be well. All we have to do then is to wait for the government to give that consideration and bring in legislation before the end of this session. Failing that, there will have to be a vote and the country will make up its own mind as to the extent to which the government is really interested in our older people.

I have just two more things to say and since only two minutes of my time remain, I shall have to say them fast. First, let us not have an argument from the other side in the course of this debate about inflation, that these people have to be enlisted as soldiers in the war against inflation. They have already had 9 per cent cut off their income for all practical purposes. They are suffering most of all from inflation. While the executive salaries are going up and with all the other things that are happening, let us not put the burden of fighting inflation on these people. These are people for whom we should be taking the action suggested in this motion.

The final thing I want to say—and I say it carefully without any attempt to be oratorical about it, but I say it plainly—this House has a particular obligation at this time, a strong moral obligation, to do something in the pension field. We have done something in this field for ourselves. I am not going to raise those arguments again. Members know where I stand on that. However, I submit, having done what we did for ourselves before Easter, we have as great a moral obligation to our old age pensioners and to our war veterans as we have ever had. I hope we will meet that obligation today with unanimous support for this motion which calls for consideration of an immediate and substantial increase in the basic amount of the old age pension, for an immediate and substantial increase in veterans pensions and allowances, as the first steps toward improving the quality of life of all our older and retired people.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to support this motion that has been placed before the House. I point out that it asks only that the government give consideration to extending something like justice to the older people and the veterans of the country. I, therefore, hope that other Members of this Parliament on the government side might also be prepared to support this motion and thereby indicate that, in their personal view, the poor, the aged and the veterans deserve a higher priority than being always at the bottom of the heap in Canada.

There have been some encouraging news reports suggesting that a sliver of conscience has found its way into the cabinet, and that some of the ministers, and some of the other supporters on the government side, are unhappy about the government's policy of socking it to the poor and the weak in order that the prosperous and the strong might thrive. Today, they have a chance to say the same thing in Parliament they have been saying in private.

It is a shocking comment that, in a country so proud of a high standard of living, Parliament must devote a day to give direction to the government to give consideration—simply give consideration—to stopping discrimination against the people who worked to build up that standard of living, and fought to protect it. The people the opposition parties seek to relieve today are often the people who have spent or risked their lives in the service of Canada, and want now no more than a decent standard of living in their retirement. Quite apart from the total absence of justice in the so-called just society, the refusal of this government to respond to the plight of these Canadians—the insistence of this government to maintain a cruel discrimination against the elderly and the veterans of Canada—is an act of callous and monumental ingratitude.

This motion must have caused great consternation in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) office. They just will not know what the country is coming to. Last week it was the unemployed and now it is the pensioners and the veterans. In the East Block they must be asking, why is Parliament bothering to bring up these problems out of proper order? Doesn't Parliament know that problems must be dealt with in order and that now is the time to fight inflation, so until it is licked we cannot consider the problems of the aged or anybody else?

Don't we know, they say in the East Block, that inflation is hardest on old people and consequently nothing can be done to ease their problem? That argument, of course, is absurd. Fight inflation, certainly! But it is wrong to suggest that those who want to provide some relief for the aged or the veterans want to cease and desist in the fight against inflation. It is one of the prime minister's stark and false alternatives that he is fond of putting forth. Certainly, let us continue to fight inflation but let's not allow those who suffer most to bear the principal cost of continuing the fight. If Parliament keeps up these demands to help people, the Prime Minister's flow charts will be thrown out of whack. And it is well known that in this government, flow charts are far more important than people. You don't hear anyone on that side calling a computer a "regrettable side effect".

I want to dwell on that aspect for a moment. It is the claim of this government that they are efficient. Other governments, in other times, have wanted to be compassionate, or visionary, or open. This government wants to be efficient. And when it is obviously being inefficient, it wants to shut the windows on the federal government, cut off the critics and set up "manipulation Canada". Then, when the government is inefficient no one will know. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) has a word for that. He calls it being effective. But whether it is efficient or effective, this government has a style it is going to defend against all comers. It is prepared to be tough with the poor, tough with the old, tough with those 542,000 "regrettable side effects" who are out of work in Canada.

Clearly, there has been no adequate adjustment in the cost of living in connection with old age pensions. We know that the adjustment of approximately 2 per cent is limited to the basic pension of a little less than $80. It does not even cover the whole pension, including the guaranteed annual income supplement. I am concerned particularly with the older people who are in need. The resolution speaks of the basic old age security pension, and I certainly hope the government will consider this. Whatever the government may say about the problems of raising the general level of old age security at this time, they should at least give serious consideration to effective revision of the guaranteed income supplement.

I do not want to spend too much time on figures, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has already given some. The poverty line indicated by the Economic Council of Canada before the Senate was $1,800 for a single person and $3,000 for a couple. If this is adjusted to 1970, these figures become $1,950 for a single person and $3,250 for a couple. I know that people do not like to think of themselves as being poor or to be called poor, but these are the figures produced by the Economic Council of Canada as minimal for a decent existence in this country. The guaranteed income supplement added to the existing pension gives a total for a single person of $1,336.92, about $600 below the poverty line. For a couple the total would be $2,673.84, also about $600 below what the Economic Council of Canada established as the poverty line.

As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out, about 51 per cent of those receiving the old age security pension are receiving the guaranteed income supplement, in whole or in part. This gives us some idea of the percentage of old age security recipients who are well below the poverty line. I do not want to worry the House too much with figures, Mr. Speaker, but these can be amply documented. Surely, this is a serious situation. The government should consider immediately, without waiting for more white papers, moving to offset the rise that has taken place in the cost of living. It is wrong, as I have said, to ask our older citizens to bear the full cost of the fight against inflation. I say, let us all fight inflation but let the Prime Minister and his colleagues stop using the war against inflation as a club to beat the heads of the weak and old. Let us use anti-inflationary measures as they should be used, as a shield, and let us supplement that with justice to those who are being particularly hard hit by inflation.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: The government has also, of course, taken the same sort of line against Canada's veterans, many of whom are also on fixed incomes which inflation is eating away and which the government stubbornly refuses to augment. I offer this warning: if the government thinks veterans groups are going to be easy to push around, it is in for a surprise.

This debate today concerns veterans' supplements and allowances. The considerations which should guide our debate are considerations of justice and equity, and of the mean conditions of life which many Canadian veterans are forced to endure today because of the policy of this government. I think it is also appropriate, in passing, to make the point that if any group of Canadians has a special claim on justice from their government, they are the men and women who risked their lives for this country and sometimes suffered disabilities that seriously limited their later private lives and earning power. There is no need for me to dwell on our duty not to be blind to our obligations. Certainly, we should show more gratitude than a stone-cold response to the veterans' request for a just and decent standard of living. In particular, disability pensions must be improved. In the beginning, the veterans' disability pensions were tied to the cost of unskilled labour. These pensions are a long way short of that rate now, and some adjustments must be made to take account of recent changes.

I suggest we should also consider raising the ceiling of income for those in receipt of war veterans allowances. The ceiling today is $245 per month for the married veteran and $145 a month for the single veteran. The last adjustments in these figures were made some time ago. If a man has no other means of income and is not yet eligible for an old age pension, that means he is forced to get by today on $2,940 per year if he is married and $1,690 per year if he is single. That is barely more than $30 a week, Mr. Speaker, for a single man; and while that is the income recommended by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), it is not at all a just or adequate income for a Canadian citizen, whether he is a veteran or not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bell: Thirty buck a month Benson.

Mr. Stanfield: I suspect that the answer will be that the government has the matter under review. Sometimes I expect that will always be the answer; and the review will never end and will never produce results for the Canadian veterans. It is at this point in the debate that I wish to refer briefly to the growing disenchantment in this government among Canadian veterans. In addition, there is a growing lack of confidence in the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) on the part of Canadian veterans.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: Canadian veterans just cannot understand why it has taken this government so long to make some simple long-overdue adjustments in what they are receiving. They are concerned that the minister has taken the same attitude towards veterans that ministers in this government from western Canada have taken towards the west—that is, that he sees his purpose as protecting the government agains the veterans. That, surely, is not at all an adequate attitude.

This seems to be a government of technocrats and public relations men. The technocrats believe it is enough for a government to be efficient and the public relations men settle for less than that. They think it is enough to seem to be efficient. I have spoken before about the false image of efficiency and the deliberate campaign of this government to eliminate or restrict critics who might point out how inefficient the government really is in fact.

I want to deal briefly with another new, basic ideology, the ideology of efficiency which allows the government to regard and describe half a million unemployed as "regrettable side effects". This government has a computer for a conscience. As it turns out, the computer usually cannot count. But at least it cannot be said that the mistakes of this government are human mistakes. There is a machine on which to put the blame, and probably that is appropriate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I know this attacks the basic faith of the technocrats in the East Block, but the government in a civilized country has a larger responsibility than just to be efficient. It must do more than make the trains run on time.

This government, in the false name of efficiency, has consistently set itself against the weak and the dispossessed. It is not clear whether their guiding philosophy is that the poor deserve to be poor or else they would be cabinet ministers, or whether it is that someone always has to sacrifice and suffer when a new approach is being introduced. If the new theology of efficiency is going to claim some victims, it might as well be the poor and the dispossessed.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Stanfield: It is better, sir, that someone strong enough should complain and get in the way of "progress". I repeat, this government has taken a consistent, hard line against Canadians in need. Earlier this year I proposed that the government immediately take off the tax rolls those Canadians who were paying income tax and living below the poverty line. But the government refused. The Economic Council of Canada has indicated that one Canadian in five is living below the poverty line in this rich country. The government could act. It has refused to do so thus far, offering as an excuse that it has another policy review in progress.

Inflation, which the government claims to be fighting by creating these 542,000 "regrettable side effects", is still like a thief, stealing every day from Canadians on fixed incomes. Some Canadians with comfortable incomes might be in a position to hold the line on incomes and join the fight against inflation. But when you live in hardship, when inflation cuts into your ability to buy basic necessities, you should not be asked to stand in the front line of the fight. You are in it already and the government has no moral right to load on a greater burden. As I said before, the government can claim it is being tough; it can claim that it is taking a hard line if it wants to do so. In fact, this government is being revealed to the nation as cold-blooded.

Mr. Woolliams: It is against the poor.

Mr. Stanfield: They will certainly hold the line. Yet I suggest that we owe the elderly people of this country not only gratitude but justice. They have a special claim to the attention of the government, because it is difficult to be old in a country that is so consciously young. Already, and often with adequate reasons, governments have changed traditions that were part of life to many older Canadians. Urbanization has changed their landscape and broadcasting and other influences have changed their sense of standards. A good many of the events of the last few decades in Canada have militated, in effect, against the elderly. This country which they built is less easy for them to live in than it was for their parents or grandparents. These are the people who built Canada when they were young and who are eligible for pensions today.

• (4:10 p.m.)

These people are the psychological victims of change. Instead of adding to their discomfort by making them the economic victims of deliberate government policy, this government should go out of its way to show its older citizens that this is their country too, that we are grateful for their service and determined to ensure that they live their last years in as much decency and comfort as is possible. Therefore, I sincerely press the government—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the House give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stanfield: I was just finishing my last sentence, Mr. Speaker. I urge the government to seriously consider the contents of this resolution and the recommendation contained in the resolution, that financial relief be granted to our older people and veterans so that we can feel we are doing something like justice for these people.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the motion now before us deals with a most urgent matter since, as far back as 1962 at least, hon. members were recommending the adoption of measures similar to those suggested in this motion which reads as follows:

> That this House calls upon the government to give consideration to an immediate and substantial increase in the basic amount of the old age security pension and in veterans' pensions and allowances, and this House also urges that still further steps be taken to improve the quality of life of all our older and retired people.

Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, I met retired CNR employees, one of whom receives a monthly pension of $28.

It is so ridiculous that I even advised him to return his cheque, because it was not worth it cashing a $27, $28 pension cheque after having worked 30 or 35 years for the Canadian National.

As social security, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) mentioned that the white paper was about to be brought out, as announced at the opening of the session. This was referred to several times last year and two years ago, and in the meanwhile, our pensioners are still barely able to keep body and soul together, living in need.

As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said of the veterans, they are the very ones who from 1939 to 1945 were on the other side of the Atlantic, ready to shed their blood for country, civilization and Christendom.

Mr. Ralston, then Minister of National Defence, visited them in Europe. The Right Hon. Mackenzie King, Prime Minister, and the Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe, Deputy Prime Minister, enjoined our soliders to fight gallantly. When you return to Canada, they said, you will never know want, recession or insecurity.

During the four or five years that the war lasted, young people were encouraged with brazen lies since today, married veterans get $245 a month and unmarried ones, $145. I think these allowances are not enough, and it is a shame to treat these veterans this way.

If war were declared tomorrow, the same promises would be made to the new generation of soldiers. They would be told: When the war is over, you will never have insecurity again.

Right now, in Canada, veterans have no security at all and they are worried.

Old Age and Veterans' Pensions

Mr. Speaker, the motion before us concerns several other categories of citizens who need help. This is the reason why I give it my wholehearted support.

I regret that neither the mover nor the Opposition Leader who both support the same resolution, have not the same aims and did not indicate by what means these pension increases would be made possible, because, finally, everybody will ask again: Where will the money come from? This is the problem.

Why not pay $150 pensions to old people? I remember that in 1962, when the old age security pension was $65 a month and that my colleagues and I called for it to be raised to $100, we were literally told that we were crazy, that we were asking for the moon. Now, in 1970, the same pension has reached $111.41 a month. This means that the government is crazier then we were then by $11.41 a month.

The question remains the same: Where will the money come from? When it was decided to increase the pension of hon. members, did anyone ask where would the money come from? Nobody did. It was like an electronic system—so smoothly it went through.

The pensions are there. As far as the wage increases are concerned, they were granted without too much difficulty. The delivery was not too difficult. Things run smoothly when we are the ones concerned, but for the disadvantaged and the aged, the story is different.

Mr. Speaker, can an older person live on $111.41 per month in present circumstances? What about needy mothers, widows, the blind and the disabled who receive only $75 or $65 per month? How can they live on so little? It is impossible.

If the minister believes that it can be done, why does he not publish the "recipe" in order to teach people how to live, in 1970, on $65 per month? Of course, no such recipe is sent with the cheque because everyone knows that it is impossible to live on such a ridiculously low pension.

Mr. Speaker, is it normal that needy mothers on social assistance, who often must provide for four or five children, should receive only $130 or $135 per month?

Let us suppose that a mother has five children and they are placed in a foster home. The home would get in such a case $50 a month for each child, which means $250 per month. And when the mother has the courage to support her own children and look after them herself, she only receives $135 per month. If this is what we call social justice and a just society, I fail to grasp the meaning of words.

[Mr. Caouette.]

It is a shame to treat people so, although this is what we see in our midst. Mr. Speaker, such situations exist in the riding of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and each minister can see in his own constituency cases of the most distressing poverty. Why? Is it because there is a shortage of goods? No. Because the stores are empty? No. Because the factories are unable to produce? No. It is because people have no money! That is the problem. And instead of tackling it all kinds of other things are given consideration.

The Leader of the Opposition was not much clearer than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he offered his solution. In their opinion, taxes should be increased, a floor on poverty and a ceiling on wealth should be established. When a certain level of wealth has been reached, we should take from the rich and give to the poor so that they may reach the set minimum.

Mr. Speaker, as far as the floor is concerned, I agree. We should set one, so that everyone may at least be on the same minimum level. From there on, people should be free. A vital minimum should be set, allowing for decent living conditions and not dismal, pitiful and shrunken ones.

That principle once applied, let personal initiative do the rest. If someone becomes a millionaire, good for him, if another becomes rich, good for him; if still another remains at a lower level, it is just too bad. If he cannot do better, it is unfortunate, but at least he is free to use his personal initiative.

We should leave it to competition in private enterprise to settle the price problem instead of using government gimmicks or unrealistic schemes which only lead to price increases.

When will prices go down? When will the government consider the consumer problem instead of thinking only of controlling production?

In western Canada, $100 million were paid to farmers with instructions not to grow wheat for a year. In eastern Canada, they were asked not to produce milk. Even in the constituency of Bonaventure and in Abitibi farmers were requested not to produce milk. It is dangerous to reduce production. Any such reduction entails an increase in unemployment and this not only in Quebec.

I recently went to the Magdalen Islands where 80 per cent of the population lives exclusively on welfare allowances. In fact, conditions are not good for fishing at this time of year. Income is limited and people live on social welfare. Election convassers even told the people that if they did not vote for their party they will lose their family and social allowances. I advised the mothers to throw out those canvassers with a broomstick. I do not if they did it, but at least that was what I suggested.

In any case, this is an important matter. The government is racking its brains trying to work out a production policy, but it is ignoring the consumers who should normally benefit from it. Then, why does it not tackle the true problem, that of production? Indeed, the whole production cannot be used up.

Just let the producers produce and give the consumers the means to purchase the products. And how can we do that? By allotting additional purchasing power to the consumers. They would then command production. So that our senior citizens might buy more products, and they are in abundance, or at least be able to get the necessities of life, we must first increase the old age pensions to $150 a month. No pension must from now on be less than $150 a month.

Where will the money come from? From the pockets of those who have money? No. That is the solution of socialism. Some European countries adopted it but the situation was not much improved. Such a policy crushed the rich but did not help the poor very much.

As I often say, millionaires do not pile up their money in a corner of their bedrooms. They use it in a productive way. Plant extensions, new industries, new jobs and respect of personal initiative are the products of private enterprise. If people were roused against millionaires because they live in castles, if 10,000 poor people who live in shacks were brought together to fight the rich, there would come a time when the castles would be blown up. The poor would be satisfied because the castles would be destroyed. They would return home and find out that they still live in the same shacks. This action would not have improved their standard of living, but would have destroyed what was good. This solution is not the right one. It is bad to take something from those who have and give it to those who have not.

That is done in Russia, Czechoslovakia and other Communist countries of the world. We do not want that regime. If we do not want it, the time has come to consider seriously the problem of consumption in order that those who have something keep it. It is difficult to convince people of this. Still, it is possible to convince those who have time to think. It is a waste of time when one is dealing with press gallery correspondents. Incidentally, I see there is nobody in the press gallery. It is impossible to convince the CBC of this. The CBC advocates that we must take from those who have, stir up people and give to those who have nothing. It comes to the defence of the poor, but fails to take the means required to help them.

As for us, we talk about monetary reform and people say we are lunatics. And while the lunatics are shouting, Canada is in the throes of a recession. The poor, the disabled, the blind and the old are at the mercy of economic conditions.

Mr. Speaker, production in Canada this year will amount to $72 or $75 billion. Compared to this production achieved by Canadians, we will have a total national income of some $50 billion. This means that there will be from $22 to $25 billion worth of products for which we will not have the purchasing power. There is no money for that. That means that the total income cannot buy the total production. It is as simple as that. Neither the journalists nor the CBC people can get that through their heads. I do not mean the small employees of the CBC, no, but the big shots as they are called.

Mr. Speaker, other countries have run into similar problems. Must we necessarily follow in their footsteps? Are we waiting for a revolution to break out here in Canada, for the poor to revolt? An old proverb says: It's no use preaching to a hungry man. Now, if we allow those people to revolt, there will be no point in preaching to them. If the husband, the wife and the child are hungry, eventually they will act. Hunger will not be tolerated in as rich a country as Canada. That is obvious. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) knows it as well as I do.

We had a depression from 1929 to 1939. When we speak of that depression to the young people of today, they think it is a fairy tale. Only, we "wi.nessed the fairy and the tale" at the same time. And today we seem to be heading towards a new depression.

Mr. Speaker, I say it again: a floor for poverty, yes; but a ceiling, no. That is clear. If we impose a ceiling, as soon as it is reached, people with initiative will say: Before working for the government, to hell with everything. I will go further. We already see that in the case of those who, for instance, work overtime in plants, and are literally robbed of the fruit of their overtime through income tax. What does that fellow tell himself? He says to himself: Do you think I am going to work for the government? To hell with the government, I am going home. I am not doing any overtime. And who could blame him?

The ceiling, that is what discourages all personal initiative. Everybody admits that all minds are not equal. Some people are more intelligent than others. Some people have inventiveness while others will never invent anything. The government in power now will not invent much in the years to come.

An hon. Member: Taxes.

Mr. Caouette: That's right, taxes. It is the only invention we have, taxes.

Mr. Speaker, the Créditistes come up with a reasonable solution. The ministers and the government members know that. If war broke out tomorrow, would there be a money problem in Canada to supply our soldiers with equipment and weapons. Not only "pea-shooters," but good rifles. Would there be a lack of money to feed those soldiers and clothe them decently?

In 1939, when war broke out, there was a great economic crisis in Canada. We did not get money from those who did not have any. We created $200 million in the Bank of Canada, through the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Ilsley. I say it once more, we found $200 million. Then Saint-Pierre l'Ermite and all kinds of war plants sprang up. They provided work for all men, women and young girls. There were 800,000 soldiers and now we cannot create 600,000 jobs. But to create 800,000 jobs for soldiers in time of war that is something we are able to do. It is preposterous, but we tolerate it.

Mr. Speaker, it is too bad to hear all the time that we have no money. And all that time old people are getting older and are worrying too. There is no security for them. Medical cards that are granted when a supplement is provided. But all our older citizens do not have that card. They have to ask for it in writing from the government, and some cannot write—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired, and unless the House gives unanimous consent, he cannot proceed. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed, for five minutes.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleagues. I will need only two more minutes, even if I am offered five. Therefore, it cannot be said that I am greedy and demanding a national dividend immediately.

Mr. Speaker, all this to say that the motion as drafted is very much acceptable. We support its intent because all the people and groups mentioned in the motion interest us to the utmost.

For many years now, we have been asking for $150 per month for old age pensions. We are now asking for a similar basic pension for the blind, the disabled and for each and every category of people since production in Canada can sustain it.

If our production failed, we should necessarily have to turn to it, but that is not the problem. The problem is that we are saddled with a production surplus. I see that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) is supporting me. He knows there is a production surplus, even in his own province and in his own riding.

The other day, I was strolling down St. Catherine Street, close to my hon. friend's riding and there were sales advertised in every shopwindow: season sales, off-season sales, quarterly sales, underwear sales, for my very good friend over there. Sales everywhere. Unfortunately, people walk right by because they have no money.

The problem is a pocketbook problem.

I am asking the government to think in term of pocketbook rather than in terms of production.

When our Canadian housewives have enough purchasing power to go and buy themselves clothes, food or what not, and when our breadwinner enjoy security through the purchasing power that will assure them of at least a fair standard of well-being, then, the government of Canada will have served efficiently the nation.

[English]

Mr. Barney Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise to take part in this debate which is one that touches us all very deeply. I regret that the motion is worded in such manner that many of us who sympathize with its spirit and intent cannot vote in its favour. I hope that the hon. member who moved it, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), takes some time to learn something about the rules of this place so that in future we can do this in a different way. But as I say, many of my colleagues share both his concern and sympathy.

Mr. Benjamin: The hon. member was quoting rules here before you were born.

Mr. Danson: I am sure he was. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) made some interesting comments. He felt it was not enough to appear efficient, but certainly that is not a problem that he will ever have. I was disappointed in the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) when he made some remarks about "Thirty dollar Benson". I think that is unworthy of "Two-bit Bell"; but I hope we can raise this debate to a higher level.

I think this debate gives us an opportunity to reflect on the role played by our older people and our attitude toward them in this society of ours, which really, with all its problems, is an affluent society. We have the second highest standard of living in the world. Some claim we have the third highest; but from what I know of Sweden, while I admire that country and its people greatly I suggest that Canada still has the second highest standard of living. Most of us today are living better than we have ever lived before, most of us better than we ever really expected. Yet our older people, though perhaps better treated than they were in former times, are not treated as well as they should be.

I think the approach to the matter is a purely selfish one on the part of us here. God willing, most of us will ourselves be old some day. Perhaps this is a cynical way of approaching old age, but if we can develop our society to the extent that we will not have any fears, trepidation or uncertainty about getting old, about security in our senior years, then we can devote our thoughts and energy to the future, to things which will be productive in themselves, which will help us fulfil ourselves as Canadians and which help Canada fulfil its destiny. I don't mean adopting the approach of "live for today and to heck with tomorrow".

Another reason for our approach to the elderly, apart from the selfish motive I have mentioned, is that there is nothing in it for us. The elderly themselves are a defenceless group and will not be around much longer to vote; no one cares much about them. It would be better to put them away and forget about them. However, we feel that, as human beings in a civilized society—and I hope we are that—we must come to the assistance of our senior citizens. The youth of course are important too, and I think we should give some attention to them but the number one priority of politicians and society as a whole should be our senior citizens. The youth have the future ahead of them. We, more or less in middle age, have problems which must be looked at and handled in the best way possible but the older people do not have time. They have concerns and one thing which concerns them so much is money. The motion says that consideration should be given to an immediate and substantial increase. Well, I realize the problems involved but somehow, as a Canadian and as a member of this House, I am not satisfied yet that we are doing all we can, particularly in view of what I consider to be the rather immoral and unconscionable pension increase for ourselves which could have been handled in so many other ways. That was indefensible, as I see it.

• (4:40 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Why didn't you vote on it?

Mr. Danson: I did not vote on it because I was not here. I do not apologize for that. I do not know what I would have done had I been here. I was at a meeting of the Canadian Tax Foundation in Montreal with my committee. I apologize for digressing, Mr. Speaker.

The senior citizens have made this country the type of country it is, in the main. We have inherited the benefits of their investment. I think it is time we gave them a proper return on their investment. I say we should give it to them, and when I say that I do not mean we, as members of a government or as politicians. It should be given to them by all Canadians of conscience and goodwill. Really, we would not be giving them anything because it is their money. They have been paying their dues a lot longer than we have. Parliament and the government of Canada give nothing to the Canadian people. We just redirect our resources in order to reflect the objectives of this society. If we on this side do not succeed, then somebody else will be sitting on this side and we will be on the other side. That is as it should be.

Previous speakers mentioned the quality of life. It has been suggested that dollars are nothing, but it is only with dollars that people can buy many of the things they need today, even though the value of the dollar is shrinking so much. On Saturday of last week I attended the laying of a cornerstone of the Union Villa, a new home for the aged in my constituency near Unionville. It is a lovely place. They even have a greenhouse in which these people can work. This is a semi-rural area and these older people have grown up in farming areas. They will have the opportunity to grow things as they had in their earlier days. Incidentally, there is also a child care centre. I was concerned about this at first. I did not think that geriatrics had developed to such a science. Apparently, however, this is a child care centre where these people will look after the children of working mothers and so on. There is even a bar so that the old people will not have to sneak a bottle under their pillow but, can live with dignity.

Despite all the dignity these people may have, there is the terrible fact that some of them have a fundamental insecurity. Some of them are able to look after themselves. Many of us have seen parents and grandparents who, because they have known other older people in difficulty, are afraid they might end up in a similar situation. One gentleman at Union Villa, who had been secretary of a senior citizens group, told me he had quit because they were a bunch of old fogies and he didn't want to live in a barrack with old people. There is also a sad side to it. I saw two old ladies who were to be the first persons admitted to this place. They looked as if they might not make it while they were sitting there waiting to be admitted. Here we are talking about something that is within our power, and I believe within our resources, that we should look at very carefully and give high priority to in government.

I refer to the simple dollars that are not easy to raise. When we speak about a guaranteed annual income, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) does, some people scream about socialism. These are the people who run to the Leader of the Opposition when we discuss the tax reform. Perhaps a negative income tax, combined with a guaranteed annual income, might be something for the future, but we are discussing the present. Of course, this must be examined. Perhaps something in the form of a negative income tax plan could be applied to the guaranteed income supplement so that those who do have a little ahead of them do not lose it.

In so far as the veterans are concerned, I speak with a certain conflict of interest.

[Mr. Danson.]

There are veterans who are disabled and there are veterans who are inconvenienced. I am talking about pensionable veterans. I think we should take a look at and review the situation in respect of those who are really suffering and who are desperately dependent upon their disability pension. There are also those, such as myself, who are simply inconvenienced. There is a difference. I am not as thoroughly familiar with the activities of the Veterans Affairs Committee as I would like to be in respect of its study of the Woods report, although I have attended some of their sessions and I am sure the committee will come up with a report that will be very worth while. But I think this differentiation is terribly important at a time when we are talking about the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) which calls for immediate consideration and for immediate action.

Perhaps in this context we can differentiate in respect of those veterans who are truly disabled and urgently in need of additional assistance. It is difficult to say more, Mr. Speaker, because one really wants to express sympathy, if that is the right word, with the intent and spirit of this motion. It would be difficult for any of us to be against it. I regret that it is worded in the way it is because I do not think it is a motion that should be one of confidence in the government. Because it is, I must vote against it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the hon. member not aware of the fact that the motion is worded differently from motions of this kind? It does not use the word "condemns". It was worded deliberately so that the members on the government side could vote for it and call upon the government to take action now to increase pensions.

Mr. Danson: But it is still a motion of non-confidence as I read it on the Order Paper and I have great confidence in this government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It depends on how the government votes.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, a few months ago, while walking on the street in a town in my riding, I met an old man about 85 years of age or so. He had immigrated to this country in the 1920's settled on the land and farmed about a half section, using up most of his physical and emotional energy in so doing. Finally, he retired after buying a small house in a small town. He is a tall, thin fellow with a bald head and a heavy handlebar moustache; I suppose the moustache was partly an effort to make up for the lack of hair on top of his head.

An hon. Member: A lot of people do that.

Mr. Yewchuk: That is right. He stopped me and had a very sad story to tell. He had spent all his years on the land and retired into town where he was occupying a small house on a grand pension of $110. When you consider the cost of maintenance of a house, the payment of taxes and utilities, the purchase of groceries, etc., you realize that it does not take long to spend $110. The basic pension together with the guaranteed income supplement, in no way covers the cost of living. I listened to him for some time. He told me that he had obtained a small job for a few days somewhere and earned a small amount of money. The authorities involved found this out and deducted around $30 from his guaranteed income supplement. He gave me a slogan that I had not heard before. It goes like this: "Liberale meni chobuti widdibrale". The translation is: "The Liberals took my boots away".

This is only one story. A few days ago I met another man. He came to my office complaining about the same thing. He happens to be a man of 65 who receives a pension at the rate which I described previously. His wife is only 55, however, and this meant that when he retired two people had to live on a pension of $110 a month. She was not old enough to qualify for the old age pension, so the only choice she had was to go on welfare or go to work. She opted for the second choice and she went to work as a cook in a bush camp. This fact was immediately noted by the authorities, and again the guaranteed annual income supplement was cut off. In addition, she had to pay some income tax.

I go home fairly frequently and there is another man who comes to my office once a month. He has done so for the past two years. He has asked me the same question 24 times in two years: "When will the old age pension go up?" All three of these people have asked me what I can do for them and whether I can see to it that their pensions go up a bit. I say that I will do my best to see that the pension goes up, knowing full well that anything I can do, judging by the response of this government in the past two years, will amount to a big zero. I realize that this speech will have the same effect on the government, but I decided to make it anyway in the hopes that somebody would listen. I notice that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is not listening. That is a habit of his. He never listens to any of these speeches on these very important issues that are raised on opposition days. As a matter of fact, it appears to me that government members scoff at opposition days. They look at them as a necessary evil or a concession they had to make in our rule changes, and they consider them as not worthy of attention. I am very sorry that this is the attitude of the government to opposition days because these are the days when the most pressing problems that face the country are usually discussed. These are the problems which should receive top priority but, by a stroke of the hand of fate, seem to be relegated to areas that will not receive consideration from this government.

This question of pensions for the elderly is a very serious one. In the fifth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada, which was carried out in 1961, the following poverty lines were established: $1,500 a year for a single person and $2,500 a year for a couple. These figures were revised in 1968 to $1,800 for a single person and $3,000 for a couple. In 1970 they were revised again to about $1,950 for a single person and $3,250 for a couple. If we look at the pension that people actually get we find that, in the case of a single individual, by adding the basic pension of $79.58 per month to the guaranteed income supplement of $31.83 per month we arrive at a grand total of $1,336.92 per year. When we compare that to $1,950, which is defined as the poverty line, we can see that individuals in this area are living on a level far below the acceptable poverty line. If we look at the pension of a couple, assuming they are both 65 and both receive pension, we find that their combined income is around $2,673.84 a year, which again is far below the $3,250 which is considered acceptable by the Economic Council of Canada.

These two examples do not cover the whole gamut. As a matter of fact, these examples miss a very important aspect of old age pensions. This important aspect relates to the fact that most men are older than their spouses, at least a couple of years older. In almost every case a married man who goes on old age pension, while waiting for his wife to become 65, has to try to maintain both of them on a pension which was designed for only one person. This pension would still be below the poverty line, even if only one individual were dependent upon it. I think this is a gross injustice that has to be considered immediately. I suggest that one way to approach that problem would be for the wife to receive her old age pension at the same time as the wage earner or the husband does, whether she is 65, 55 or even 35. In the case of the woman I mentioned she might have to go to work after he died until she reached 65. The action I have suggested would remove a tremendous burden.

I have been talking about the poverty line, so I think perhaps I should give a definition of poverty to emphasize that it is not a good state in which to be. The dictionary definition of poverty is: "indigence, want, scarcity, deficiency, poorness or meanness". The dictionary points out that the dominant sense of present day usage of the word is that of having little money or property. Poverty also connotes deprivation in respect to various aspects of consumption, and is often accompanied by malnutrition, inadequate health care, poor housing, and all the other things that go with poverty.

When we consider the three men whom I mentioned in my introductory remarks, all of whom immigrated to this country some 30 or 40 years ago and slaved away on agricultural units which eventually grew to be uneconomic, and who were then relegated to a role of living in poverty, one realizes that this is the reward that this great country of affluence gives to its senior citizens.

I might point out that the total number of our senior citizens who have been relegated to this role of living below the poverty line is 474,091, or 31.1 per cent of the total population of old age pensioners. Those are the people over 65 who receive the full benefits, including basic pension as well as guaranteed income supplement and have no other income. The second group, totalling 310,946 or 20.4 per cent of the population of pensioners receive the basic pension plus a partial guaranteed income supplement which is still below the poverty line. Combining the two groups, we find that 51.5 per cent of our elderly people live in conditions of poverty. How can we justify this situation in such an affluent country whose government won an election on the slogan of justice in our society? Since that time the government has been turning a blind eye to this very serious social problem.

It has been said that people should not pay more than 25 per cent of total income toward rent but in many cases an old age pensioner has to pay as much as 30 per cent, which does not leave sufficient funds to provide a well balanced diet. Mr. Speaker, I wonder how many old age pensioners receiving the full amount of the basic pension and the guaranteed income supplement eat steak once a week? Not very many I would say.

One way to improve the situation would be to increase the basic pension, to bring it at least to the poverty line. But that pays no heed to the individual in greatest need, and therefore I think it would be wiser to increase the guaranteed income supplement which is applied more to those with no other income. Unlike the popular socialistic belief, I do not think that everybody should be treated alike, because everybody has not the same needs. Attention must be paid to the individual, so that the individual with a greater need gets a larger pension. If the pension is the same for everyone, then those in need don't get enough and those who are not in need get too much, creating a situation which is unjust.

Another remedy for the low income problem of senior citizens would be the provision of fringe benefits, for instance a travel subsidy. Air Canada provides half rate travel for senior citizens on a standby basis. This can be a hardship on old people, sitting around an airport with their baggage hoping for a cancellation in order that they may make the journey for half fare. This is most unfair and the standard of CP Air should be adopted which allows them to make reservations and to be treated in the same manner as other travellers.

The universal pension is $79.58. The pension index developed for the Canada Pension Plan indicates that provision is made for an increase of 2 per cent in any one year. This is something of a joke, considering that in the past two years inflation has caused a rise in the cost of living of 8 to 10 per cent. The 2 per cent increase in the old age pension, therefore, cannot possibly be sufficient. This is a matter which should be corrected without further delay. When the old age pension was first introduced about 1951, it was set at $40 a month. True, it has nearly doubled since that time, but when compared with weekly industrial earnings which have increased 138 per cent it looks a little ridiculous.

I wish to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I hope the government will take a more serious view of this problem than they have so far. Old age pensioners have enough worries, health and the difficulty of getting around, without having the constant worry that they may not have enough to eat. I, therefore, plead with the government to take speedy action on this matter.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, about 11 months ago, on a day allotted to the official opposition, this House dealt with a report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. The debate disclosed no secret. It was apparent that members participating agreed that the welfare of our comrades who fought in the course of two world wars and Korea was paramount in their minds. Today, we are dealing with pensions in general, including old age security and pensions payable to the disabled, the blind and to veterans. I would like to touch on the pensions of veterans.

That a parliamentary committee sat through part of the last summer holidays, and held countless meetings since, in an endeavour to arrive at possible solutions for the benefit of the war veterans, should be noted as an indication of the government's desire to keep faith with our comrades in need of assistance. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) has pointed out on several occasions that it is the government's duty to consider the problems affecting the one million veterans of Canada. Happily, not all of them require assistance, nor do all especially need to appeal to the government. However, of the one million veterans, 14 per cent are in receipt of pensions, about eight per cent are in need of veterans allowances, and one per cent are continuously in need of hospital care.

For those in need, and an appreciable number of our veterans are in need, provision was made and included in the 1968-69 estimates to the extent of $426 million, and for the year 1970-71 $493 million. I should also point out that there have been three revisions in the pension rates since 1964.

About a year ago, the minister pointed out to the committee certain matters of importance to veterans, and I think I should quote what he said on that occasion:

> First, the program of welfare services, allowances and other benefits is one that seeks to ensure that all persons eligible for war veterans allowance, civilian war allowance and other veterans benefits are assisted to the full extent of the provisions of the various statutes affected.
> The second is the pension program administered by the Canadian Pension Commission, which is a quasi-judicial body reporting to Parliament through the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Under this program, pensions for disability and death are provided as set forth in the Pension Act. The program also includes the adjudication of claims for pensions under several other statutes including the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the RCMP Superannuation Act, and the RCMP Pension Continuation Act.
> A third program is concerned with the provision of treatment services to veterans and to other designated classes of patients as authorized by the veterans treatment regulations.
> Fourth the Soldier Settlement and Veterans Land Act program seeks to effect the successful settlement of qualified veterans as farmers, small holders, commercial fishermen and homesteaders, including Indian veterans on reserves.
> The fifth of the programs, departmental administration, is concerned with the effective and efficient provision of a number of common professional and administrative services.

• (5:10 p.m.)

As I recall, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was on that occasion sarcastically critical of the minister when he introduced the motion to refer the Woods Committee report to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

The government did come through with the approval of an unprecedented number of recommendations contained in the Woods Report, and the committee has practically arrived at the point of writing the final report containing its recommendations. The hon. member believes that the old age pension for everyone should be raised at once to $150. No one is opposed to any increase to old age pensioners. We all know the hon. member's obsession with his own belief that he is the only member who cares for the welfare of the needy. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that he has no monopoly on compassion.

With regard to the Canadian Pension Commission for war veterans, the committee listened to presentations on this subject. The rates now in effect, in their relationship to the Canadian standard of living, were studied and I am sure the government will consider the various recommendations in relation to the general assessment, as promised in the white paper on veterans pensions. Pensions to other dependents vary according to circumstances, the maximum being $1,980 per annum for two dependent parents of a deceased pensioner where there is no pensioned widow.

Old Age and Veterans' Pensions

At page 14 of the white paper on veterans pensions is the following statement on improvements in effect, and I quote:

In addition to the recommendations of the Woods Committee that have been accepted in principle, but which cannot be put into effect until the legislation is amended, about one-third of the 148 have been accepted and can be implemented under existing authorities. These recommendations are already in effect, or they will be as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made by the Canadian Pension Commission or the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Some of them concern existing procedures or are the responsibility of sections of the Commission which, when the Pension Act is amended, will become part of the department, at which time they may be further adjusted. Meanwhile, however, the improvements these recommendations afford are being made available to pensioners and to pension applicants.

Several recommendations, being implemented by the Commission, are designed to give maximum consistency to its decisions through the issuing of policy directives, administrative instructions, procedural directives and memoranda relating to the interpretation of the various sections of the act, the purposes of compassionate pensions and guidelines relating to them, Medical Advisory Branch matters, supplementary benefits, etc.; and by the preparation of a digest of relevant decisions and related comments.

In addition to that, further improvements will, I am confident, be included in the final committee report.

The proposal contained in the hon. member's resolution is such as every hon. member would like to support. Canada's record in comparison with that of other western countries ought to make Canadians feel proud. While the minimum monthly pension payable to every person 65 years of age and over is approximately $75 a month in Canada, in the United States, the wealthiest country in the world, the pension is only $55 a month. If an aged person in Canada has no other income except his pension, he can receive $109.20 monthly. In the United States there is no provision for his receiving more than the $55. In Britain, the minimum monthly pension for a single householder is $56. In France, the pension is 20 per cent of previous earnings if one retires at 60, or 40 per cent if one retires at 65, or 60 per cent if one does not retire until the age of 70. In West Germany, it is 45 per cent of previous earnings if one has contributed for 30 years.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), replying to a brief presented by the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation last October, which asked for an increase in the old age security pension to $150 a month and for personal income tax exemptions of $2,000 for single persons and $4,000 for married couples, said and I quote:

A few weeks ago, referring to inflation, I told a conference of business and labour leaders that "the true measure and the true cost of what has been happening can be found only among those unprotected Canadians whose incomes are fixed and who each year have watched their purchasing power and standard of living drop by 4 and 5 per cent". I pledged then, and I pledge again to you now, that the government will do everything in its power to ensure that your $100 will not dwindle in worth to $75 five years from now, or $50 ten years from now.

Fighting inflation, fighting the spiral of ever-rising costs and prices which so affects you in your daily life, has been and must remain our priority.

This does not mean, however, that we are not also moving in other ways to help alleviate the very real difficulties which so many of you face in trying to meet the monthly rent, the weekly grocery bill, the medical expenses, the small luxuries to which everyone is entitled.

In your brief you called for an increase in personal exemptions from income tax. The White Paper on Tax Reform tabled on November 7th by the Minister of Finance proposes that basic tax exemptions be increased from $1,000 to $1,400 for a single person, and from $2,000 to $2,800 for married couples. In addition, it is proposed to retain the special deduction of $500 for all persons 70 years of age and over; the standard deduction of $100 would also be retained. If adopted, therefore, these proposals will ensure that a single person who has reached the age of 70 will be allowed an income tax exemption of $2,000; married couples will be allowed $3,400. Again, if adopted, these proposals will go a long way towards alleviating the tax burden for senior citizens between the age of 65 and 70.

Your Brief also calls for an increase in the Old Age Security to $150. As the Minister of National Health and Welfare pointed out in his reply to the Brief presented by the President of the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation, to replace the existing Old Age Security and Guaranteed Income Supplement with a pension of $150 would mean an additional cost of $1 billion over and above the present cost of the pension and supplement. Furthermore, because the increased pension would be paid to all pensioners regardless of their need, this very substantial expenditure would be made without in fact achieving the objective of ensuring that it is those most in need who would receive the greatest assistance.

This is one of the many questions in the field of social security legislation which is now under intensive review. We must give most to those whose need is the greatest.

• (5:20 p.m.)

To achieve this aim however, in so complex a field as social security has required many months of study and will continue to receive our urgent attention in order to arrive at an equitable and practical formula.

At this stage, I cannot name a magic figure and say "yes, this is what we promise". What I can do is to assure you that your voice has been heard and listened to, that your needs are not only appreciated but that they are prompting our thought and action in many, many areas: in our determination to curb inflation; in our new tax proposals; in our study of all social security measures.

The government has given a great deal of consideration to increases in federal pensions, old age pensions, retired civil servants, as well as veterans. I am confident that when the whole social security review is completed, a policy will be established in keeping with our well-rounded national social welfare program.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, on August 21 last, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) announced increases in pension benefits. In fact, the headline on his announcement was "Pension Benefits up Again in 1970". In the course of that announcement, the minister made much of the fact—and they are certainly correct figures—that 1,600,000 Canadians would benefit under the increase in the old age security pensions and that over 780,000 old age security pensioners would receive the guaranteed income supplement. If we look at that announcement of last August and at the record and attitudes of the Liberal government, we can only think "big deal". In their usual, inadequate, too late fashion, the announcement, which was in accordance with the 2 per cent allowable increases provision, amounted to $1.58 a month for old age security pensioners and 63 cents a month for those who receive the full guaranteed income supplement. If you were receiving the full $30, you would receive an additional 63 cents.

The five and dime store attitude of this government is apparent when it comes to old age pensions, but when it comes to themselves and their corporate friends they have vision, imagination and lots of money. The government acts in a manner similar to the attitude of certain persons to the south in the United States when referring to the poor and the coloured. It is said they need now to be treated with benign neglect.

Any Member of Parliament who says he cannot support this motion, particularly if he is on the government side, and at the same time approves expenditures of public funds for other purposes not nearly as necessary or urgent, is either being hypocritical or is purely partisan and cold-hearted. There have been increases in the salaries of executive assistants, the regional desks and the staff of the Prime Minister. Some of these increases may have been necessary in the name of better government, but no one can suggest that they have a higher priority than increases in the old age pensions.

Millions of dollars were spent on the Bonaventure. Everyone, including the Liberals, admits that this was a mistake. However, it did have a very high priority. An obsolete and ineffective non-defensive air defence system is being maintained. Surely, what we are doing in the way of pensions for Members of Parliament, and the almost indecent gabble by some backbenchers about what they need in the way of indemnities and expenses, should not have near the priority that is due old age pensioners. We do not need any more patronizing, gratuitous and unconscienable remarks such as "We have had enough of this free stuff" by the Prime Minister and others.

These kinds of pensions are a matter of right, not of privilege. When this Parliament refuses to act quickly on them, it is in fact denying the rights of Canadians. Much is made of how we must fight inflation. It is said these increases would be inflationary. The government asks where the money will come from.

In their fight against inflation the government attacks those who cannot defend themselves. They attack those who not only did not cause inflation, but who are the first and worst victims of inflation. Others can defend themselves in an inflationary situation. They can not only defend themselves, but they can live with it. Corporations do very well defending themselves. Organized workers defend themselves through bargaining and, if necessary, strikes. The wealthy individuals can defend themselves. In an inflationary situation the unorganized, the farmers, fishermen, recipients of veterans' allowance and old age pensioners are victims who cannot defend themselves.

The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) stated that an increase in pension to $150 a month would cost $1 billion. Mr. Speaker, I only say "So what?" There are places where this money can be obtained through a reallocation of priorities in present government expenditures. There should be a proper levying and more taxing of those who have the wealth in Canada. One need only look at the latest figures on net profits of corporations after taxes to see what is happening. They escape paying their fair share of the tax burden in Canada. If one wishes to accomplish two things at the same time, raise additional funds for old age pensioners and fight inflation, one only needs, to attack those who have been well able to defend themselves.

According to figures received from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the mines, quarries and oil wells, the poor social aid candidates, had a net profit of $417 million at the end of 1968. This group of industries, along with the Manufacturers' Association and the Chamber of Commerce, indicated they would co-operate to fight inflation. How did they co-operate, Mr. Speaker? At the end of 1969 their net profits after taxes were $798 million, an increase of $381 million in one year. This does not even remotely resemble good conscience and good corporate Canadian citizenship.

The food and beverage industries, one of the worst perpetrators of cost of living increases for old age pensioners, had an increase in their net profit of $47 million from 1968 to 1969. The chemical and chemical products industries, our friendly polluters, did not do quite as well. Their net profits after taxes were $151 million at the end of 1968 and $156 million at the end of 1969. Surely, some of this money could be made available to old age pensioners.

Among the most guilty of all who perpetrate hardships upon those who are old and poor are the financial and insurance industries. At the end of 1968 their net profits after taxes were $530 million. In 1969 this increased to $586 million. This is the area the government should attack when fighting inflation, not old age pensioners and veterans. The list I have is even longer. I have already said that the trade unions can protect themselves. However, in the course of protecting themselves they must justify any increases they receive either to offset increases in the cost of living or by a comparable increase in productivity.

One reads accounts of weeping and wailing in the financial press during the last several months because dividends are down by 50 cents or a dollar from this or that corporation for the quarter or for the year. Isn't it too bad? Isn't it about time they made a contribution toward fighting inflation? The increase in old age security pensions announced last August does not come close to keeping up with the increase in the cost of living.

My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pointed out there has been an increase of 17.5 points in the cost of living index since 1966, an increase amounting to 15.7 per cent. In that period old age pensions have been increased by 6.1 per cent. To keep up with the increase in the cost of living would require an additional 9.6 per cent, bringing the present pension up to $87.22 a month instead of the present $79.58. It would mean increasing the guaranteed income supplement to $34.89 from $31.83, for a total maximum of $122.11.

This, surely, ought to be acceptable to the "nickel and dime store" attitude of the Liberal government. This would be a minimum. We believe $150 would be more like it, or even the $140 which my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre would agree to, very reluctantly. The hundreds of thousands of families who are attempting to live on these pensions are existing at the poverty level or just below. Every hon. member gets letters drawing attention to such people. I have had my share of these letters. I have received good co-operation and sympathy from the members of the Pension Commission and the Veterans Affairs Department, but these people can only operate within the terms of the regulations and legislation. All one can do is hope they will interpret a piece of legislation widely enough or that there will be enough flexibility in some regulation to enable a small, additional amount to be paid to a worthy and worth-while citizen who desperately needs it.

Another group is still left out—the CNR pensioners. I hope a standing committee of this House will deal with their situation this year. Something has been done about those who have retired from the public service, and retired armed forces personnel. Here is a group whose needs have yet to be considered. The hon. member for Fort William told us about the work the parliamentary committee has been doing during the summer holidays and since. I am sure the committee has met for many hours and done much hard work. But the hon. member neglected to tell us that the committee had been denied any authority to recommend pension increases. This is an emasculated committee. It can recommend changes in the regulations and minor administrative changes; no doubt these are necessary, and the recommendations made are good ones. But it cannot recommend what is really required. It can report on statistics, hear briefs and review the regulations, as the hon. member did; and it can end up, as the hon. member did, with a lot of platitudes. We have been given a white paper on veterans pensions and now this white paper must wait for another white paper on social security measures. No doubt a further white paper will be published, following that, telling people how to spend the money.

The hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) regretted that the motion is worded in such a manner that he cannot vote for it. I tried to note as accurately as I could some of the words he used. He said priority should be given to the needs of our senior citizens, but he cannot vote for the motion. He said we were giving the pensioners their own money, but he could not support the motion. Again, we heard more of those patronizing remarks, those platitudes about pensioners, those phrases in favour of motherhood and against sin. I hope that when the minister speaks he will take the hon. member for York North, the hon. member for Fort William and others on the government side off the hook by announcing that the government accepts this motion; or he should tell the House or make clear to his hon. friends behind the curtains that as far as the government is concerned, any hon. member can vote as he wishes—in other words a free vote. Or a third alternative is that hon. members, including government supporters, should vote as they wish.

An hon. Member: But it is supposed to be a non-confidence vote.

Mr. Benjamin: In any of these circumstances, if the motion passes, the mover of the motion and the NDP group generally would not consider it to have the effect of a vote of no-confidence.

An hon. Member: Then why did he move it?

Mr. Benjamin: We consider the interests of the old age pensioners as having greater priority than any partisan, political interest there might be in trying to win a non-confidence motion and forcing all the members on the government side to vote against it.

The motion is deliberately worded so as to be identical, almost, with the wording of a private member's motion. I am no expert on the rules or on the Standing Orders, and I realize this is no time to brag about it. But this was the only way in which my hon. friend could get a motion on the Order Paper upon which a vote would be taken. Had he put the motion forward under the other Standing Order, no vote would have been taken and I suspect the platitudes from hon. members on the other side would have increased in number and volume. The motion was deliberately worded so as not to express non-confidence. It was deliberately designed by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre so as not to condemn, and there is no member of this House who can carry water for him when it comes to understanding the rules and procedures of this chamber.

An hon. Member: Who would want to?

Mr. Benjamin: The motion can be voted for by any hon. member with or without the approval of his party. It cannot be considered a motion of non-confidence. I ask hon. members to consider the number of times they have called on constituents who live in housing fit only for cattle, who have to meet drug bills which eat up a great deal of the old age pension money which should be spent on food, clothing and shelter. These people do not receive sufficient income to enable them to move into senior-citizen housing. Homes operated by voluntary institutions have waiting lists as long as your arm, and as for those privately owned, only the relatively well-to-do can afford to move into them.

• (5:40 p.m.)

This is not a motion of non-confidence. All the motion asks is that the government consider. Whether or not the government does so is for the government to decide; there is nothing in the motion requiring the government to consider. Should this House pass the motion, there is passed on to the government, for the government's information, the views of the members of this House of Commons. Thereafter the responsibility is the government's, to take whatever action they so choose, whenever they wish to do so. That, purely and simply, is the entire intent of this motion; it asks the government to give consideration to taking action now while we are waiting for the white paper on social security.

Every member of this House knows that it will be some time before the white paper is published, and I hope the minister will indicate today when that will be. Then some time will be required to study the white paper and to hear briefs. No doubt a standing committee will spend weeks, perhaps months, studying the subject. At the earliest, legislation will not be introduced until one year from now.

Surely action retroactive to January 1 last can be taken now in order to provide an increase in the old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement to tide our pensioners over. Their need is urgent. I agree with my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre that tens of thousands of Canadians are facing an emergency situation. I am certain no member of this House would disagree with the intent of the motion. Therefore, I plead in the name of humanity that tonight this House vote unanimously for the motion on a recorded division.

Mr. David Weatherhead (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in the debate on this motion which is so important to many senior citizens, veterans and their dependants in my riding, and indeed all across the country. As a member of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs of the House of Commons, I intend to spend much of the short time allotted to me today in discussing the government's white paper on veterans pensions which is now before the committee. However, before doing so I should like to comment on that part of the motion which relates to the old age security pension and to improving the quality of life of all our older and retired people.

In a speech I made in the House of Commons on October 28, 1969, I stated that I could see no reason why the old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement could not be at least increased annually at the same rate as the cost of living increased. I also suggested in my speech that the guaranteed income supplement be increased by at least $25 a month, at a cost of about $150 million a year, in order that the 500,000 of our senior citizens with no other income at all should receive substantial help.

In addition to that, in a speech I made here last April 6 I gave detailed reasons why I am in favour of a guaranteed annual income plan linked to work incentives. While I am still of these opinions, I am willing to wait for the white paper on social security reform which is to be issued in the next couple of months to ascertain how the government proposes tying in and co-ordinating proposals regarding senior citizens and social welfare proposals affecting all age groups of our population.

We have before us today a very strangely worded motion as it relates to veterans benefits. Not only is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) aware that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) is heading a delegation of Canadians at important ceremonies in Holland marking the twenty-fifth anniversary of that country's liberation; he is also fully aware that the minister has stated repeatedly in the white paper, in the committee and in this House that the rates of both pensions and war veterans allowances are currently being carefully reviewed by the government.

The hon. member would have the government effect increases immediately—this afternoon. It seems to me that the government's approach is a very clear and rational one which will ensure greater benefits for all Canadians and for veterans in particular. The reasoning behind this course, this assessment of all aspects of social legislation, has also been made very clear and is, to me, unimpeachable. I for one do not want to see a hodge-podge of social programs developed much further without this serious effort to co-ordinate our approach.

On June 17 last year the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made this clear in an answer he gave during the question period, when he said as reported at page 10242 of Hansard:

> Of course, Mr. Speaker, this is linked to the policy which has been acknowledged by the government, that we have to review all aspects of social legislation. We are doing this; we do not want to settle special cases. A special plea can be made not only for the veterans but for old people, for retired civil servants, and for all sections of people in society. We are trying to establish a policy that will review this legislation at as little cost to the Canadian people as is necessary.

In the white paper on disability pensions, the government also stated:

> There have been far-reaching changes in Canada's social and economic environment since the pension program was first introduced 50 years ago, and in particular many new social development programs of various kinds have meanwhile been initiated. These numerous plans have evolved individually over the years, and the government considers that the time has come to examine the entire fabric in order to achieve greater consistency between the various elements, and to eliminate unintended gaps or duplications.

Since that time, of course, the minister has repeatedly assured this House that these rates were very seriously being reviewed in their context of the whole fabric of social legislation. Furthermore, both the Prime Minister and the minister have assured the House that the fact these rates are included in a review of social legislation in no way implies that the government looks upon them as social welfare. Quite the contrary, it has been repeatedly stated that veterans legislation is, of course, social legislation. It is certainly not economic, cultural, external affairs or defence; it definitely falls under the broad category of social legislation.

However, no one on this side, to my knowledge, has ever said that veterans pensions are social welfare—because they are not. They do fall under the broad heading of social legislation, but are more akin to workmen's compensation. There is no means test involved; there is no needs test involved. Disability pensions are awarded to veterans who are entitled as of right, and are based on degree of disability and not on other earnings.

While on the subject of pension rates, may I say that substantial increases have been implemented during the last six years. For instance, in 1964 there was a 10 per cent increase, in 1966 a 15 per cent increase, and in 1968 a further increase of 15 per cent. In other words, over the last six years we have had increases amounting to more than 45 per cent on a compounded basis, and I am confident that this government will continue to meet its obligation in this area in an even more co-ordinated, thorough and effective way.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre may try to take advantage of allotted days if he wishes, but this government is taking advantage of planning, co-ordination and progressive thinking to provide the very best in all its social programs.

I have spoken about pensions and I should like to comment briefly on war veterans allowances. The War Veterans Allowance Act came into force in 1930 and has been referred to by legislators and veterans organizations as "the burned-out pension". It was so-called because the studies which led to its being came to the conclusion that returned servicemen of World War I were pre-aged by reason of the hardships of wartime service. A means of maintaining the veteran who had no disability pension or a small pension and who was unable to provide for himself in the employment field, was provided through the act.

Over the years the act has been changed many times and the results have been the liberalization of the legislation. At the present time the act provides for an allowance to be paid to any male veteran, most commonly a Canadian veteran of World War I or World War II who served in a theatre of war or who is in receipt of a disability pension. In addition, that veteran must have attained the age of 60 years and be permanently unemployable because of physical or mental disability, and so on. The allowance may be paid at age 55 to a female veteran or to the widow of a veteran with the disability clause applying at a lower age. The payment of the allowance is subject to a means test. At the present time there are 82,000 recipients of the allowance, about 35 per cent of whom are widows. The cost of the allowances over the past year has been about $92 million.

In 1962, part XI of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act was approved by Parliament to provide benefits, similar to those provided to veterans under the War Veterans Allowance Act, to certain groups of civilians who performed meritorious service during World War I or World War II and to their widows and orphans. There are 2,200 recipients under this legislation, and they receive allowances totalling about $3 million.

In addition to the war veterans allowance there is also the assistance fund regulations which provide for the payment of supplementary awards to the recipients of war veterans allowance and civilian war allowances by way of continuing monthly supplements when the recipient's income is insufficient to meet the basic monthly cost of shelter, fuel, food, clothing, personal care and specific needs of dependants or single payments to meet emergencies, or when it is considered that such alternative form of assistance would best meet the established needs of the recipient. There are some 17,400 recipients who were assisted by these supplemental moneys during the last fiscal year, involving a total expenditure of about $7.3 million.

Recipients of war veterans allowance and civilian war allowances are provided with free medical and hospitalization coverage in Canada. This care may be provided in a departmental hospital or a contract hospital under the veterans treatment regulations. With the commencement of the provincial hospital insurance programs, financed through premium payments and/or taxes combined with cost-sharing arrangements made through federal-provincial agreement, it was realized that recipients would often prefer to be hospitalized in hospitals as close to their homes as possible. Provision was therefore made to pay the appropriate premiums on behalf of the veteran and civilian recipient. The cost of these premium payments in the last fiscal year amounted to about $1,146,000. By these means veteran and civilian recipients receive full hospital and medical coverage either in a DVA hospital or through the hospital or doctor of their own choice.

Not only has this government undertaken to review pension rates and allowances; it has quickly moved ahead in another area of tremendous benefit to veterans—the white paper on disability pensions, mentioned here previously by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai), which undoubtedly is the most comprehensive overhauling of veterans legislation since the end of the second world war. This white paper which is before the standing committee, on which I have the privilege to serve, is of course based on the 148 recommendations of the Committee to Survey the Work and Organization of the Canadian Pension Commission or, in other words, the Woods committee.

As the full name of the committee indicates, basic rates were not within its terms of reference. The essence of the white paper, which incorporates roughly four-fifths of the 148 Woods committee recommendations, is of course to streamline the Pension Act and its administration and to place more emphasis than ever on the human element to ensure that the Pension Act is up to date and designed to serve our contemporary standards of efficiency and social justice.

Mr. Speaker, at present there are about 950,000 veterans in Canada. Of these, some 136,000 and some 30,000 widows and dependants receive disability pension as of right amounting to nearly $250 million every year. Therefore, these pensions and the way in which they are administered under the Pension Act by the Canadian Pension Commission are a very important contribution to the improvement of the quality of life of these very special people to whom we all owe so much.

Perhaps it would be in order to give a little more of the background of the Woods report and the white paper. In 1965, Hon. Roger Teillet, the then Minister of Veterans Affairs, appointed a three-man committee to survey the work and organization of the Canadian Pension Commission under Mr. Justice Mervyn Woods as chairman. This committee conducted hearings in Toronto, Quebec City and Ottawa over a period of nearly three years, and reported in March, 1968. Subsequently, an interdepartmental committee was set up to study in depth the 148 recommendations.

When this committee concluded its exhaustive review, the minister conducted an extensive review in order to make his recommendations. These were considered by his cabinet colleagues and in September, 1969, a white paper was published setting forth a general policy standard of the government relating to veterans pensions. In his remarks today the hon. member for Fort William indicated that the Woods committee report and the white paper were referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs which commenced its hearings back in September, 1969. The committee held 35 meetings and heard witnesses representing the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Canadian Pension Commission, the Veterans Bureau, the Royal Canadian Legion and 14 other national veterans organizations.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six oclock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Speaker, in resuming the remarks I began before supper time, it now appears from the testimony of the witnesses that the government and the veterans organizations are in agreement on the substance of 103 of the Woods committee recommendations. There remain only 33 recommendations on which the government and the veterans organizations are not in complete agreement, 12 of which are under review by the government. However, even among the 33 recommendations on which full agreement has not been reached, the differences in some instances are about the best means of giving effect to an agreed principle.

I should now like to mention a few of the beneficial proposals of the white paper. The first is in respect of Hong Kong veterans. In view of the evidence now available, the government believes that the Hong Kong veterans deserve special consideration. As outlined in the White Paper, the government proposes to introduce legislation which will provide a minimum pension of 50 per cent for all Hong Kong veterans who apply for it and who have assessable degrees of disability. An important result of this legislation will be the full protection of dependants of Hong Kong veterans.

The second proposal is with respect to exceptional incapacity allowances. The government recognizes that many pensioners with 100 per cent disability suffer, because of the nature of their disability, extraordinary physical, social and psychological impairment for which there is no adequate compensation under the present pension system. In order to provide additional relief and support to these pensioners whose disability is exceptional in degree or scope, the government proposed to introduce an exceptional incapacity allowance of not less than $400 and up to $1200 per annum.

This proposal was made after exhaustive study of the whole question of disability compensation, and it is designed to assist all categories of 100 per cent disability pensioners ranging from multiple amputees to polio victims. In his statement to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs on December 4, 1969, the minister outlined in detail the principles which will govern the awarding of exceptional incapacity allowances. They are ten in number and clearly indicate that this important new measure will be sufficiently flexible to meet the needs of this special category of pensioner.

With respect to pension adjudication, it has now been generally accepted that one of the key recommendations of the Woods committee report is the establishment of an independent appellate body with the power of final interpretation of the Pension Act and with final power of adjudication in all pension matters. I am pleased that the government has accepted the principle of this recommendation and proposes to restructure our pension system to include a forum for pension appeals.

The proposed new pension structure really provides for three independent levels of adjudication and divorces the purely administrative function from the judicial function as much as possible. Furthermore, it ensures that at no time will the pension applicant's case be considered by persons who have previously adjudicated at any stage. The new structure thereby meets one of the major criticisms of the current pension adjudication system. There are, of course, other methods of effecting the introduction of an appellate system in the field of pension adjudication, and much evidence has been presented to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs by veterans organizations in this regard.

I am pleased that the minister has made it quite clear that these other alternatives will be given full consideration and that the white paper is not an immutable government position. Whatever structure finally evolves, I am confident that it will provide the best solution to the problems relating to pension adjudication in Canada.

There are many other important benefits in the white paper upon which I do not have time to comment tonight, but I am confident that when all the white paper proposals are implemented, Canada will have one of the most generous and equitable war disability pension schemes in the world.

It is with a dedicated staff of over 10,000 and an estimated budget this year of nearly half a billion dollars that the Department of Veterans Affairs carries out the obligations set out in the Veterans' Charter. I have not even touched upon the many important facets of their work which contribute tremendously to the quality of life of Canada's veterans. The hon. member for Fort William referred to the Veterans Land Act and to the very effective treatment services program which is carried out in our nine veterans hospitals; and there is a new hospital being built at Ste. Anne de Bellevue, near Montreal, to be completed later this year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, the resolution we are debating is quite specific, clearcut and restrictive in its application. This being so, I indicate at the outset of my remarks that I strongly support the resolution. Because it is worded in such precise terms it should be quite easy for the members of the House generally to lend their support to it.

Mr. Woolliams: Even the Grits.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, even the Liberals, as my friend the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) indicates. It should be quite easy for all members of the House to support the resolution. It asks the government to give consideration to an immediate and substantial increase in the basic amount of the old age security pension and in veterans pensions and allowances. This focuses on the area of greatest need in our social security programs as they apply in the first instance to our senior citizens and then to the veterans of Canada. It also contains the important proviso that further steps be taken to improve the quality of life of all our older and retired people. The resolution is couched in such general language that I do not think it presents any formidable barrier for hon. members on all sides of the House to support it.

• (8:10 p.m.)

During the course of debate thus far, those who have spoken on behalf of the government have tended to resort to the red-herring technique and point out all the wonders in the brave new world of the future. When we have deliberated at length upon the white paper arising from the Woods report, and after the government in its wisdom has digested and dissected the contents of that report, we will arrive at the most comprehensive welfare program for all the needy citizens of Canada. I say this is a red-herring technique because it begs the question before us today, which is the immediate needs of the two groups, our senior citizens and veterans. I want to concentrate on these two areas this evening.

In this discussion, Mr. Speaker, we are concerned with the matter of pensions generally. We are concerned with pensions as a means of providing continuous income following retirement or, in the case of veterans, because of disabilities and problems contracted in their service to Canada. Sometimes I think that the private sector of the economy is much more alive and alert to the need for an adequate pension program than is the public sector. Pensions are the most important means of maintaining income beyond the productive years of all Canadians. This principle has been well recognized over many decades so far as the special service of our military is concerned.

The old age security pension was established as a matter of right back in the 1950's. It was placed on a self-supporting basis by the Parliament of that day and it is largely on that basis that this fund is maintained. I am sure everyone who looks at the matter objectively will agree that inflation has placed the rate of payment under the old age security program away out of line with the cost of living. There is no reason at all, Mr. Speaker, why the intent of this resolution should not be carried out immediately—and "immediately" is the operative word—by the government. Pensions of all kinds, whether they be in the private or public sector, are awarded for services rendered. I think this government would be remiss in its duty if it did not accept the suggestion in the resolution and proceed to deal with obvious inadequacies in this area.

A moment ago, Mr. Speaker, I said that sometimes I get the feeling that the private sector is much more alert and conscious of its obligations in this regard than is the government. In this connection I should like to bring to the attention of the government and the House the action being taken on behalf of employees of Canadian National Railway who have been endeavouring to have discussions with the government in order to bring their pension scheme into line with changing economic and social circumstances. I shall read briefly from the petition of the CNR employees to indicate how reasonable are their requests. This petition states in part:

> At a time of rising cost of living, at a time when the railway worker is being held the hardest to the government wage guidelines, we need the right to adequately provide for our own future, we need the right to provide adequately for those who retired ahead of us, we need the right through our own union to negotiate the following changes into the plan.

These are the reasonable requests that the employees of the CNR are making at this time. It is my understanding that the government, as it has in so many instances, is failing to come to grips with this aspect of pension problems. The CNR employees make the following suggestions:

> 1. Increase the benefit to not less than 2 per cent per year.
> 2. Widow's allowance to be increased to 75 per cent.
> 3. Voluntary retirement at age 55 with no deduction for early retirement.
> 4. Cost of living clause to cover past, present and future pensioners.
> 5. All improvements to be retroactive to cover those persons on pension.
> 6. The pension board include a pensioner, and the chairman be neutral.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will agree that this petition is eminently reasonable and there is no valid reason for the government having thus far neglected to respond to it. This resolution is necessary because the government is dedicated to the pursuit of the just society—we might use the phrase "social justice"—rather than pursuing social justice with alacrity and has been using the old stalling devices of delay and buck-passing.

It used to be that politicians, particularly when in power, resorted to royal commissions as a basis for delay. This government has a new technique, the establishment of innumerable committees. In the first instance a royal commission report comes into the hands of the government. Then the government prepares a white paper. The white paper is referred to a Parliamentary committee, where it is deliberated upon for an interminable time. Months and even years go by in the process. This has resulted in the situation where we have disparity between the rising cost of living and the level of compensation payment under the two pension plans being discussed today.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the technique being used by this government dedicated to the pursuit of the just society. It was used in the war on poverty, which has obviously died completely and now has been relegated to the obscurity of a Senate committee which I understand will be proceeding for many more months. In the meantime, the poor get poorer and the rich get richer. Certainly it is the technique that has been adopted in handling the excellent report of the Woods commission. The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead) has given us a summary of some of the features of the white paper arising from the Woods commission report on veterans pensions.

We agree that many of the suggestions in that report will be of benefit ultimately to the veterans of Canada. The problem, however, is that it has taken months, if not years to survey the problem up to the present time. The level and rate of payment right across the board on veterans pensions is way out of line because of the runaway inflation which has exercised the government to such a great extent during the past two years.

I hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), who is in the House tonight will enlighten us and give some assurances on the progress of this comprehensive review that has been under way for a considerable length of time. I read a speech that the hon. gentleman made to the Hamilton Chamber of Commerce in Hamilton in October, 1968. On that occasion the minister gave the definition of social welfare in the modern context. It is a definition that resulted from an international meeting of experts on welfare programs under United Nations' auspices. The following is the definition which the Minister of National Health and Welfare obtained from that source. According to him, social welfare is:

> —a body of activities designed to enable individuals, families, groups, and communities to cope with the social problems of changing conditions ... ensuring that the human and material resources of the country are effectively mobilized and deployed, to deal successfully with the social requirements of change—

The minister then added this postscript:

> This, I think, is an excellent definition of the new role of welfare, so good, in fact, that one almost doesn't know where to begin in seeking to carry it out.

I think this explains the reason for the protracted process this government has adopted in approaching the solution of welfare problems in modern Canadian society. It has been stalling its action because, as the minister said, it does not know where to begin. Well, you have to begin somewhere, Mr. Speaker. I refer to the excellent suggestions brought forward tonight that would deal with the two areas of urgent need. The first is, bring the pensions of our senior citizens into line with the cost of living immediately. That could be done and would have the unanimous support of members on all sides of the House. Second, let us deal with the disparity that has developed because of the long delay in the area of veterans benefits.

There is another aspect of the veterans program that I want to deal with specifically tonight. It concerns the suggestion that has come from the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) that the government, in its social planning, internal discussions and deliberations now in process, is moving in the direction of classifying veterans benefits as part of the general social welfare or social policy program. The hon. member for Scarborough West dealt with this matter and seemed to give his blessing to the current process. I do not want to misquote him. I listened carefully to what he said. He skirted around the subject by saying that veterans benefits are for special services rendered, but at the same time are regarded as coming within social policy as, for example, does the Workmen's Compensation program.

I disagree strongly and vehemently with this interpretation, Mr. Speaker. The Veterans' Charter in no way can be compared or related to the sort of compensation that is available under the Workmen's Compensation program. The very term Veterans' Charter indicates that the charter is a bill of rights, a separate Magna Carta given to the men and women who have served this nation, during World Wars I and II. It is unique from that standpoint. Any attempt on the part of this government or spokesmen for the government to downgrade that basic bill of rights for the veterans will be strongly opposed by the members of the official opposition, by members of veterans associations, and by the people of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

An hon. Member: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the House give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for their consideration. I will try to bring my remarks to a conclusion as quickly as possible. The point I want to make is that the veterans charter is a unique method that the country has adopted of rewarding the men and women of Canada who served this country in time of war. The government's shilly-shallying and procrastination, and the minister's statement that there will be no increase in veterans benefits until the over-all welfare review has been completed by the government and that these benefits are part of the social policy, giving rise to the suspicion that the government is attempting to remove the fundamental rights of the veterans of Canada.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Veterans Affairs, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or whoever speaks for the government, tonight will end once and for all this element of uncertainty that has been introduced and will state in specific terms that the discrimination against the veterans of this country will be removed immediately as the resolution suggests. I hope a spokesman for the government will state unequivocally that the Veterans' Charter, the fundamental bill of rights of the veterans of Canada, will not be violated.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I support the general intent of this motion but I will not vote for it, for two reasons. The first is that despite its non-critical wording, it is in fact a no confidence motion. In answer to a point of order raised this afternoon by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), Your Honour ruled that in his opinion this would be a no confidence motion in view of the fact that it was made under Standing Order 58(9).

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) maintains that it is not a non-confidence motion, but I feel we must respect the opinion of Mr. Speaker and not the hon. member who introduced the motion. If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had really wanted the members of this House to unanimously vote in favour of his motion, he would not have presented it under Standing Order 58(9) which explicitly uses the wording "no confidence motion". It states:

> In each of the periods described in section (5) of this order, not more than two opposition motions shall be no confidence motions against the government.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard).]

The Standing Order then provides for these no confidence motions. If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was sincere in the statement that he would like to have unanimous support for his motion, it is hard to understand why he presented it under this Standing Order. Members on the government side are faced with a dilemna. To many members of this House the wording of the motion is acceptable. It is therefore unfortunate that it has been moved under this Standing Order. Many members would like to vote for the motion, but they are faced with the dilemna of not only voting for a motion which asks that the government give consideration to certain proposals, but also of supporting a no confidence motion.

I have another reason for not supporting this motion, although I accept the general intent and sentiment behind it. It is a much more important reason. In the motion, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre states that we should give consideration to an immediate and substantial increase in the basic amount of the old age pension. I disagree with him. I do not believe we should increase the basic amount of the old age pension. Any increase should be directed to the guaranteed income supplement. This matter was debated at great length when the guaranteed income supplement was introduced three years ago. At that time there was a difference of opinion between the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and myself as well as many members on the government side. My position is that we should direct the limited resources of this country so that those who really need assistance will receive as high a pension as possible. I cannot see any reason for giving flat, across-the-board pensions to those who are still earning salaries. Some members of this House are old enough to receive this pension. I cannot see giving across-the-board pensions to them and to people who are receiving large pensions from their companies, rental income or income from interest and dividends.

Since we have to raise the money we pay to pensioners through taxation, we should direct these moneys to those who really need assistance and who are old. I would change the wording of this motion to read, "give consideration to an immediate and substantial increase in the guaranteed income supplement".

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggested a pension of $150 a month. I would support that, but not as a basic, flat pension payable to everyone 65 years of age or over. I would pay it only to those who qualify for the guaranteed income supplement. It should be paid to those whose incomes from all sources is below $150, under the same system as the $30 income supplement is now paid.

I think the supplement should be raised from $30 to $70. Also, instead of the 2 per cent maximum that we now have on the cost of living increase each year, we should have an increase fully measurable with the cost of living increase which would be payable to those who receive the supplement. I think we should freeze the basic pension at what it is now and in the future pay extra money to those who qualify under the guaranteed income supplement system. I would like to see that supplement as high as $150.

I merely wanted to put these comments on the record. I support increased pensions for the older people, but I think they should be based on a supplement system. I reject a flat increase in the basic amount. I would remove the maximum 2 per cent cost of living provision, to be replaced with a full percentage increase in the cost of living each year.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, quite frequently when motions come before this House there are speakers who make cogent arguments to oppose them. This motion is somewhat different. I do not believe a single member in this House would say tonight that there is no need for an increase in the basic pension of old age pensioners or veterans. If there is anyone here who will state it on those grounds without quibbling about language or because it might be a no-confidence motion or because they believe that the pensions of old age pensioners, veterans and their families are presently adequate, now is the time for him to rise and let us know. Speak now or forever hold your peace!

For those who spoke in this debate indicating sympathy for those people who are suffering because of inadequate pensions, people who have given the best years of their lives to this country, whether on the battlefield or in the pioneer industries or services of this country, to be prepared to vote solidly against increasing these pensions at this time is not honest or straight thinking. I do not think this is even wise from a survival point of view.

Canadians are pretty sick of double talk. They are sick of hearing committees, investigations, white papers, task forces and all the other means of procrastination and prolongation being carried on day after day, week after week, month after month and year after year and receiving nothing in the line of increased pensions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis: I wish to deal very briefly with the bald facts of the situation as put forward this afternoon by my colleagues for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). I wish to indicate why I believe that this is an emergency situation at this time. I read the words of the motion at this point:

• (8:40 p.m.)

That this House calls upon the government to give consideration to an immediate and substantial increase in the basic amount of the old age security pension and in veterans pensions and allowances, and this House also urges that still further steps be taken to improve the quality of life of all our older and retired people.

The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) does not need to worry about his pension. That is the case of a lot of us here. If we were less secure ourselves we would be of more use to the pensioners and to the old people generally.

This is an emergency situation. Since 1966 when the supplement came into force the cost of living has risen by 15.7 per cent. That is more than two and a half times as much as the increase in the pension and supplement together, which rose from $105 to $111.41, a total of 6.1 per cent. By what logic can the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce maintain that he does not favour an increase in the basic pension when he knows that the cost of living has more than doubled in the period we are considering? Let no one bring forward that old chestnut—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis: —about giving the pension to millionaires who do not need it. What is the income tax for, if it is not to bring back the amount of such a pension from people who do not need it? I am tired of that argument, especially here in the House where we ought to know the facts of the situation. I imagine the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce can find some audience in his constituency which does not realize it is possible to get back this money in income tax.

Mr. Allmand: Can I ask the hon. lady a question?

Mrs. MacInnis: If the hon. member is quick about it; I have only a few minutes left.

Mr. Allmand: Does she feel the government gets back the whole amount of the basic pension through the tax system?

Mrs. MacInnis: If the government does not get it back, it should. Under a fair tax system, it would. We are saying that taxation should be based on ability to pay. We shall go for the full amount in that line. If the amount is not retrieved at the present time, who is in the driver's seat? It is not the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis: The situation is similar in the case of veterans and their families. I did not realize until I heard it today that the terms of reference of the Veterans Affairs Committee specified that it can make no recommendation for increases in the pensions of veterans and their families. I do not think the veterans of this country have caught on to that, either; from now on I will make sure that the information reaches as many of them as possible. I think it is shameful that at a time when such a gap exists between the cost of living and the pitiful pensions of veterans, a committee of this House should be given terms of reference which preclude it from making recommendations to increase pensions and allowances. I think it is perfectly disgraceful.

Hon. members may think I am particularly indignant tonight. I have just come back from spending the weekend in my constituency and I have seen some of the results of this inflation-fighting of which hon. members on the front benches over there are so proud. I have seen what the war on inflation is doing to the people on old age pension and veterans pension, people who have been laid off because of restraints which amount of moral restraints as they apply to the rich and economic compulsion as they apply to the poor. I have seen elderly people in their pitifully small places trying to keep themselves dignified, neat and clean, and I have seen them trying to save a few cents on grocery items here and there. Yet we in this chamber are saying there is no emergency and that there is no need to increase the basic pension.

The worst of it is that every one of us here has had a similar experience. Every member knows that an increase in the basic pension is necessary. The other day I asked the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) when we might expect an end to this period of waiting—when the veterans could expect to learn that an increase was coming. He said he could give no idea of a date at the present time. We are told nothing can be done about it or any of these social security items until the entire white paper on social reform has been completed. We now learn that it will not be ready in time for action to be taken this session. In these circumstances the argument for an interim increase in pensions is irrefutable. There must be an immediate interim increase until we have had a chance to look after the long-term needs in the light of the white paper studies.

We in this party are not insistent about taking credit for pushing these ideas and urging that there should be an increase in the pensions. This afternoon we heard members on the other side quibbling about the motion and saying they would vote for it if it were worded just a little differently. I thought then, and I think now, that if the government cared a hoot for the old people and for the veterans of this country it would long ago have introduced a motion with the right words in it, one for which we could all have voted, without waiting for members on this side to find the proper words. It is hon. members over there who are under an obligation to introduce these things. Or, if they prefer, they can take the motion before us and change it around. I do not care what they do as long as they increase the basic pension. The minister knows there must be an immediate increase, bearing in mind that the cost of living has risen by almost 16 per cent since 1966, two-and-a-half times the amount of the increase in the pension.

We in this group have put forward various possibilities. We have argued that the least which should be done is to raise the basic pension to $100 a month plus $40 in supplementary benefits to bring the amount to $140 pending the white paper settlement. We accept that figure because the supplementary payment is 40 per cent of the basic pension. We have said: Raise the basic pension to $100 and the supplementary pension to $40 and the old people will be content to settle for it until the white paper is forthcoming.

I believe every member in this House wishes to see exactly that happen. All right, then. Why do they intend to stand up and vote against it? A great many members on the government side will do just that. Is it because the wording is not quite right? No, because it was possible for them to have brought in a motion of this kind, at any time, worded correctly. Or they could take it now and change it, if it were only a matter of wording. This is the only way in which we could introduce such a motion and take it to a vote. We are sick and tired of listening to their expressions of sympathy, letting their hearts bleed red all over the green carpet while refusing to take action.

Why are they speaking in this quibbling way? They are doing so because they feel black guilt over the way they are treating the old people of this country. They find it hard to face them when they go back home, when they go into these places where the people are. The people know perfectly well that we Members of Parliament have been well looked after here and that other sectors of society are being looked after well. Yet we have no time at all for the people who pioneered and worked hard in this country and risked their lives in the wars.

Some hon. members have said that this is a want of confidence motion. Although I was not here for your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I understand that you ruled to that effect. Let me point out that it is entirely a matter for the government whether they make a big production out of it and try to score points. Perhaps they want to salve their consciences and save face on behalf of their backbenchers.

But the government, if they wanted, could recognize this for the challenge to find a solution that it is. The situation facing the elderly people and our veterans can be likened to the Red River flood a few years ago, or the Fraser Valley Flood, or similar catastrophes or disasters that have overtaken the people of this country. As the water creeps higher and higher, thousands and thousands of our old people are becoming increasingly frightened and bewildered, and indignant at the lack of government action to help them.

I receive letters from pensioners saying if only the government knew what their situation was they would surely do something about it. I try to tell these people that some government members do go into the homes of ordinary people and see conditions there. Or I tell them that surely the government has enough task forces, white papers, regional desks and all the rest of it to be kept fully informed. But still the government takes no action.

I remind the government that this does not have to be considered a want of confidence motion; the motion is not worded in that way. If the government had one iota of statesmanship, it would not make a big production out of the motion by regarding it as a vote of non-confidence; instead, the government could regard it as a problem that needs to be solved.

When there is no agreement that a problem exists, then understandably members of the House become partisan in their politics. But with a question like this one that has got to the stage where everybody agrees that the need of the people involved is desperate, this is no time for any quibbling as to whether or not the motion is one of non-confidence. This is the time for action.

The minister would not lose face if he were to provide for an interim increase in pensions. He has said—indeed, spokesmen for the government have said this—that the government cannot do anything final until the white paper comes down. But I have yet to hear anybody say that the government could not make an interim increase pending the white paper proposals. I therefore plead with the government to accept this course of action. I ask them to treat this problem as they would a national catastrophe, when all the forces of the government and of the public in general would be mobilized to help those in desperate danger.

If the government does not do this, then I should like to indicate what is going to happen. I can remember quite well what was the situation before we had old age pensions. I remember the despair of the elderly who in many cases could not get support from their families simply because these young families did not have enough money to go around. In any case, these elderly people were terribly anxious not to add to the burden of their sons and daughters with growing families. In those days there were cases where elderly people were actually hailed before the court and had to establish in court that their sons or daughters could not support them. Only then could they qualify for welfare or state hand-outs.

That was the position in which we put our pioneers nearly half a century ago. These people suffered privation, humiliation and indignity. Finally, we passed pension legislation to care for these people and to give them some measure of dignity; a measure of dignity for them and a measure of decency for ourselves. At least, we gave them a modicum of respect.

What is happening to these pensions today? They are being chipped and chipped away by an unhampered increase in the cost of living.

If we do not take the sort of emergency action that I have described, these pensions will erode in value to such an extent that our pensioners will be where they were 50 years ago, back on square one, to the days when we did not admit that we should even provide an old age pension. I remind the House that it was not easy to get the first old age pensions legislation through. Of course, it was said at that time that we could not afford it. After all, we never can afford social welfare legislation; it is always a case of jam tomorrow but never jam today. Every piece of welfare legislation has had to be fought for.

I urge that the government take the chance to do something for our pensioners now. We have been listening to expressions of sympathy from members in all parts of the House. However, I appeal to the members on the other side of the House to do something besides crying tears and shedding blood in this House. The place is getting a little messy with all that liquid floating around. If half a dozen members on the other side would vote for this measure, it would do more to move the government and to help the elderly people of this country than anything that even the eloquence of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce might accomplish. He ought to know about conditions in some parts of his riding.

Further, I suggest that if these hon. members would take this course, there would be no retaliation on the part of the government. Much as the front benches of the government would like to cow the backbenchers into submission, they would never dare discipline half a dozen of their own members who had the courage to stand up for the old people and veterans of this country.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me at this time to speak out in this chamber on behalf of our pensioners in Canada. We Canadians are living in a very affluent age. Through our own efforts we have raised ourselves to a standard of living that is envied by most of the world and we should be extremely proud of our achievements in this regard.

However, I suggest that we cannot be entirely proud of our accomplishments until we have remedied some of the serious injustices that exist in this country. Thousands of Canadians through no fault of their own are becoming increasingly deprived with each passing day. Canadians who have worked for a lifetime in Canada and have contributed to the nation's development find themselves trapped by inadequate pensions and incomes. Daily they watch helplessly as their pensions shrink further as a result of an inflation that has been brought about by many years of callous Liberal spending.

Some of these Canadians to whom I refer made special sacrifices in the defence of this country during world wars, though this is something that does not concern the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), among others in the cabinet. But these veterans must not be forgotten. Others of them served in the government service, and often felt honoured to do so. Yet today people such as retired CNR employees must feel just a little bitter about the callous disregard of their plight by those in power. Therefore, we are here tonight to end this bitterness. We are here to prove to the Canadian people, and to our veterans and retired Canadians in particular, that although the Liberal government is cold and uncaring, Parliament is just. As members here, we can do nothing but plead their cause.

Let me speak for a moment about the old age security pension. Quite obviously, it is inadequate. This year the basic pension is $79.58. For those with no other income the government will provide an additional amount of $31.83. This provides a grand total of $111.41 a month, which comes to $1,336.92 a year. In this way it sounds even worse. There was a time when this amount of money represented a decent income, but it is completely inadequate in the Canada of the 1970s. It does not even reach the dizzy heights of the $30 a week which our friendly, smiling finance minister has indicated is sufficient to live on in this country. Even by his penny-pinching standards the pension must be raised.

I hope he will be here tonight to vote with his conscience, and I like to think he would vote in favour of the motion. However, I would hate to count on it. The sad thing is that we are not speaking of a small minority of our elderly Canadians. According to the government's own admission in the brief the Department of National Health and Welfare presented to the Senate Committee on Poverty, 474,000 Canadians, almost half a million, and 31 per cent of all elderly Canadians are trapped in this situation. These are the Canadians who have no other income and therefore receive the full guaranteed income supplement. They are the Canadians who are attempting to eat, live and house themselves on $27 a week.

Mr. Speaker, this is impossible. Yet thousands of these people struggle on because their only alternative is to seek municipal welfare. We must take immediate action to allow these people to live with a little more comfort and a lot more dignity. The basic fact is that the pension is inadequate. But how should we, as concerned Canadians, go about increasing the support for these people without vastly increasing the onerous tax burden that the Canadian taxpayer is now carrying? I suggest that one way to minimize the cost of these much-needed increases is to raise the amount of the guaranteed income supplement rather than simply increase the basic old age security pension. In that way we could assist those who are most in need, such as those who have no other income, and not incur the very heavy cost of paying higher pensions to everyone, including the well-to-do. This is a course which we should consider very closely so that we might balance the very pressing needs of our retired Canadians and the obvious frustration of the Canadian taxpayer.

The effect of inflation on the position of those on fixed incomes, such as pensioners, has been mentioned in this debate. Inflation plays on the weak members of our society who cannot help themselves and who do not have the power to increase their level of income. Pensioners are the most tragic victims of inflation; they do not contribute to it but they suffer most from it. The present 2 per cent limit of inflation adjustment in respect of old age security must go. Its half-hearted defence is the most cold-blooded act ever perpetrated in this House of Commons. It simply is unjustifiable.

These comments, Mr. Speaker, apply with equal force to the situation of our veterans and retired employees of companies such as the CNR from whom all of us have heard in the last few weeks. These people cannot wait for government reviews, white papers and task forces because such things do not pay the grocer or the landlord. These people deserve more justice right now and not at some time in the future.

One might be tempted to ask how we propose to pay for the increases which are proposed. Our Prime Minister has a had habit of saying that if proposals cost money, then it is just too bad. The problem is assumed to disappear with the accompanying shrug of the shoulders with which we are all too familiar. The plight of Canadian pensioners cannot be shrugged off in this way by our Prime Minister or by any other government official who takes his responsibilities seriously. Yet it would seem we could pay for a large part of the cost of the essential increase in pensions by the elimination of much of the waste and the purposeless squandering of public funds by the government.

We might start with the Prime Minister's office. No concerned man could argue that there is a good deal of money for his own office but none for the poor pensioners of the nation. Other examples abound. The reports of the Public Accounts Committee are full of them. The Auditor General constantly points out the waste in this country, and all he receives for his trouble is criticism.

Let us be perfectly clear on this point. If there is insufficient money to pay for increased pensions, it is because of this government's mismanagement. Once again it is our senior citizens who must pay the price. This must end tonight. This House must express its conscience on behalf of those Canadians of whom I now speak. Unless this is done, we will have failed in our job and we might as well go home.

It is easy to demonstrate the callous attitude displayed by this government toward the people on pensions. Let us take a look at the white paper on taxation. The government is proposing to make it harder than ever for people to take care of themselves in their old age. I refer to the proposed plan to use profit-sharing as part of the pension base. I am quite sure many members in this House have received much correspondence recently in this regard. Some of you will be aware that I feel rather strongly about profit-sharing. I believe it has a great potential for this country and I feel it deserves every encouragement, especially in cases where people wish to use such an arrangement in providing for their old age.

A number of companies operate profit-sharing plans with taxation deferred for pension purposes. In one group of six companies some 40,000 Canadians are covered and more than $240 million is involved in employees shares of the profits of those companies which are being set aside to allow those employees to take care of themselves in their old age. Profit-sharing plans have been in operation for many years. They have been highly successful whether measured by the appreciation of the staff, the amount of pension benefits paid out or the size of the accumulated funds. It is generally agreed that profit-sharing improves morale and provides an incentive to employees. But this government proposes to penalize all the people involved in such plans if they should happen on retirement to take their money out in a lump sum. Experience has shown that lump sum payments are used wisely. They provide the retiring employee with the flexibility to reorganize his affairs on retirement. He may pay off a mortgage or other debt or even start a small business.

In these and other ways the employee may use his lump sum to help him become self-sufficient in retirement. Many have found that through careful investment or the retention of common stock acquired through a plan they have been able to offset the inflationary pressures that beset those with fixed incomes of whom we are speaking tonight. The advantages of lump sum settlements are recognized in several countries where they are permitted on a very favourable tax basis.

Three changes are proposed in the government white paper that will affect these people: first, repeal of the present section 36, which is a three-year average provision; second, adoption of an unfair general averaging formula to cover all cases, instead of the present variety of different formulae for different situations; and third, higher rate schedules.

I should like to give hon. members some examples. Let us take a look at a married employee earning $8,000 in each of the last four years and with deductions of about $3,000. If he retired now and took a lump sum payment from the profit-sharing plan of about $30,000, here is what would happen. Under the present system and rates, his tax on the $30,000 is $5,202. I submit that that is quite serious enough. But the system which the present government is proposing in the white paper would more than double the tax to $10,688 if the payment were treated as ordinary income, which it would be if taken in a lump sum. If he is allowed to use the very poor averaging formula referred to in the white paper, his tax on this amount would still go up by over $4,000, to $9,333 on the $30,000.

One should not have to justify employee profit-sharing as a contribution to the common good. Surely our governments should be encouraging, not discouraging, profit-sharing plans. It is one of the best possible ways of allowing employees to participate in their companies. It makes clear to them their stake in the economy and it encourages savings and capital formation, something this government is trying to destroy. I maintain that this is a good example of the government's callous and hard-hearted attitude toward the problems of those people who are retired and on fixed incomes. I plead with the government to do something about this problem quickly, earnestly and with sincerity. These people have waited long enough.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity of listening to many of the official opposition spokesmen speak today about the plight of the old age pensioners and the veterans. Of course, the old age pensioners are my primary concern tonight in terms of my immediate responsibility as Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I am not going to contest the fact that we must pay constant attention to the needs of our senior citizens to ensure that age does not become a financial penalty for them. Nor will I contest the fact that our older people deserve a decent standard of living and that for some, especially for those in the larger urban centres, the present pension level does not always guarantee in complete terms this type of standard of living. However, I wish to remind members of the opposition and the general public that the government is fully conscious of these facts and that over the past six years it has taken a number of important steps toward making old age pensions more adequately conform to basic security needs.

Mr. Woolliams: Don't be ridiculous.

Mr. Munro: Many of these steps have implications that go on into the future and form real considerations when we give thought to any new, comprehensive, over-all plan to deal with this poverty area.

The most important step, of course, was the passing of the Canada Pension Plan. When fully operative, this plan will provide a national portable contributory pension which will finally provide an adequate income floor during the retirement years, completely adjusted to cost of living, using the wage index. This legislation, put through by the Liberal government in the last few years, exemplifies this type of approach which should be preferred in dealing with matters of basic social justice, for it does make a comprehensive and continuing attack on the root-problem rather than a long series of stop-gap or band-aid temporary improvements. It is this comprehensive approach to income security that I personally prefer and about which I will speak more fully later on.

In any event, the coming into force of the Canada Pension Plan should largely remove the use of pensions as a political football in the years ahead and I remind the opposition that the plan is being phased-in over a ten-year period, a far shorter time than is normal in other countries with a social insurance scheme of such magnitude. It is being phased-in over the shorter period because we realize we cannot waste time when the well-being of such a large portion of the population, both now and throughout the years to come, is at stake.

An hon. Member: What about today?

Mr. Munro: Even the ten-year period is not being allowed to languish in some sort of vacuum, as a means of making time. Already the fund has began to pay out to people—and as it grows, so do the benefit levels. Roughly speaking, for each year of contribution a person is entitled to 10 per cent of his eventual pension. For example, after four years of contribution—roughly the current input of most people contributing—the entitlement is about 40 per cent. Thus, in ten years it will be at 100 per cent. Just to give an illustration of the changing and growing benefit levels, let me point out that the figure for February of this year was $44.24 a month.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Munro: I should like to finish the point I am making. The figure I mentioned is over and above the old age security pension and still entitles the recipient to draw guaranteed income supplement benefits. I believe the hon. member wishes to ask me a question.

Mr. MacInnis: I wish to ask the minister what he would do about the pension of a widow whose husband paid his contribution for six months over and above the required amount laid down in the legislation. He is fully aware of the situation and offered to meet with the officials, but nothing further was done about it.

Mr. Munro: Many of the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan did provide for survivors' benefits, but periods of contribution were set down to which a person was qualified before these payments could take place. In many cases this turned out to be very arbitrary indeed and caused much hardship in many cases to surviving widows who did not qualify. This is just one of the many anomalies that have been revealed in the Canada Pension Plan, and it is our hope that they will be taken care of in our over-all review. In the meantime, the present legislation does not permit a payment to the particular widow referred to by the hon. member.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Talking about the Canada Pension Plan again for just a moment, Mr. Speaker, it will be a number of years before the full impact of the plan is felt, as I have already indicated.

Mr. Woolliams: In the meantime, people die.

Mr. Munro: So the question can legitimately be put, as many hon. members have asked: What about now? What have you done for us lately? What about those who are unable to reap the full advantage of the Canada Pension Plan?

Mr. Woolliams: What about those who could not afford to pay the contribution at all?

Mr. Munro: We know that those who could not afford to make a contribution will not be many, because one only has to earn in excess of $600 a year to qualify for the benefit structure. We have brought in other schemes such as the guaranteed income supplement to help those near retirement or already retired who could not afford to be covered. This was one feature of the plan in terms of extended coverage and, as I recall, the official opposition fully supported the $600 earnings at the time the plan went through this House.

Mr. Speaker, we know that the alternative measures must provide for more than token raises and we feel that the whole review must be dealt with in a comprehensive fashion. In doing this we have to take into consideration, not only the raise in benefit structures over the years to assist people in the retirement class through the Canadian Pension Plan but also a number of other plans which we have brought in during the last six years, the full impact of which is now being felt. In some measure this is a reply to those who argue how callous we are in not providing adequate pensions for the elderly.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Munro: Certainly.

Mrs. MacInnis: Before you leave the Canada Pension Plan, is there any provision in view to enable housewives to qualify under the Canada Pension Plan so that they will have some opportunity to participate?

Mr. Munro: As the hon. member knows, if the housewife is working—

Mr. Woolliams: But not on a salary.

Mr. Munro: —and earning in excess of $600 a year—

Mr. Stanfield: Husbands don't pay them.

Mr. Munro: —which is not a great deal in terms of our modern society, and if the housewife earns more to supplement the husband's income, she can now qualify under the Canada Pension Plan. If the hon. member is suggesting she be covered under a contributory plan and not make any contribution at all on any earnings, the whole structure of the plan would have to be altered.

I was going to comment on many of the other questions. Very widespread changes have been made over the last four or five years and are now having their impact, Mr. Speaker. The first, of course, on these three broad fronts where we have brought in changes is the matter of coverage. We were faced with the situation where people were retired at 65 but not receiving the old age security pension until 70. To cope with this situation we had only the traditional old age assistance plan that paid out money on a means test basis which, I think all hon. members would agree, was a very demeaning process.

We brought in amendments to the old age security provision. We lowered the age to the point where it is now, where this year it was being paid at age 65. As a consequence, many more people are covered than ever before. In the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965, more than 1½ million people in Canada were over 65 years of age but less than one million of those were in receipt of federal pension, a figure amounting to only 66 per cent of the total. In 1969, however, there were slightly more than 1,600,000 people of 65 years of age and over. Of these 1½ million, or almost 92 per cent, were receiving federal assistance through these schemes. Because of these vast increases in percentages it is anticipated that in the next year or two we will almost surely reach 100 per cent. That is another area in which we are moving, that is, in lowering the age to 65.

The second front in which we have moved within this relatively short period of time is that of adequacy of benefits. When the party which I represent took office in 1963, individual payments were $65 a month. We raised that to $75 a month soon after taking office. At that time we realized it was still insufficient, so we brought in the guaranteed income supplement of $30 a month on an income test basis. I think our experience with this program has been very successful. It has allowed us to get around the necessity of resorting to the old needs and means testing which involved all sorts of investigators invading one's privacy and had little rehabilitative value for people in need.

This is fairly routine. Most people, whether in need or not, fill out forms each year for income tax purposes. In our scheme they fill out forms showing income, and if it falls short of a set level the federal government makes up the deficiency within the limits of the scheme. This has worked well and has allowed us to gain administrative experience on how income tested programs of this nature can work. It falls in very well with expertise in this area that is required in terms of any approach to a guaranteed income program on a wider scale.

When I speak of this particular area I am faced with the difficulty of trying to reconcile the various points of view expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). In his speech today he indicated that he thought the guaranteed annual income approach was a good one, yet in his motion he talks about the traditional approach that has been used over the years of raising the basic rates of pension. I do not think the two can be reconciled. I think the total concept of the guaranteed annual wage means that the person who wishes to qualify for it must submit to some type of income test.

In terms of the forms to be filled out it is very similar to the procedure when paying income tax. When you fill out any type of form indicating your level of income as a means of determining whether you should pay something or receive something, I think that is a selective process. That is implementing the principle of selectivity and it is what we mean when we speak of selectivity. How the hon. member can say that he is for a guaranteed annual income approach, and yet find any type of implementation of selectivity repugnant, is beyond me.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the minister permit a question? Does the minister not realize that there are different definitions of a guaranteed annual income? Calling the one that he defines as guaranteed annual income the only one, does not make it so. I suggest there are different definitions and he and I happen to differ.

Mr. Munro: When I looked at the references to guaranteed annual income in the hon. member's speeches, I thought he was taking income levels into account in determining benefit structure. If he has other concepts than that approach in mind, I would be glad to hear them, but I did not hear them today. I do not imagine the hon. member is talking about any type of annual income payable on a universal approach to all Canadians irrespective of their earnings. I am sure some measure of selectivity would have to be introduced in any such scheme.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Did the minister not hear me say this afternoon that that is precisely what I favour, namely, the universal approach, but that because of the emergency situation now facing our older people I would accept an adjustment in the program we now have?

Mr. Munro: If by that the hon. member means that he would favour an increase in the guaranteed annual income supplement as divorced from any increase in the universal old age—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Read the motion.

Mr. Munro: You are talking about basic pension rights in your motion. If the hon. member is talking about immediacy, action can be taken in the guaranteed income supplement area exclusively, rather than the basic OAS, just as quickly.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have just one more question; then I will sit down and shut up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I knew that remark would bring applause. Does the minister not realize that the guaranteed income supplement under the Old Age Security Act is defined as 40 per cent of the basic rate? When I ask for an increase in the basic rate, I mean two things: I mean the basic rate has to go up, and it follows that the supplement must go up accordingly.

Mr. Munro: I fully realize that, Mr. Speaker. I suppose what I am saying is that no one has to be wedded to the 40 per cent formula when dealing with the principle of the guaranteed income supplement in isolation from the OAS.

I have now dealt in a very summary fashion with the areas in which we have moved and which will have implication in the future for our senior citizens, namely, the Canada Pension Plan, the increase in benefits under the OAS, the GIS and the lowering of the age to 65. I should like to talk about another area in which we have moved. In this restricted period of time I wish to talk about the fact that we have tied an escalation feature into our old age security and guaranteed income supplement pensions. There will be a maximum in escalation of 2 per cent, in line with the cost of living. So I do not believe it can be said that when we considered all these measures we were totally ignorant of the need that is being experienced by many of our older citizens today.

What have been the results of this over-all approach? Let us look at the figures with regard to individual payments. As I mentioned, when my party came to power in 1963, the maximum federal pension was $65 a month for those over 70. The maximum this year is over $110 a month and available to people five years earlier at age 65. This represents an improvement of better than 70 per cent over a seven-year period, or approximately 10 per cent a year. It also represents a 70 per cent improvement over the rate of increase in the previous seven-year period from 1956 to 1963.

I believe this is an improvement that one need not be ashamed of. And these improvements do not include an individual's potential for receiving Canada Pension Plan benefits right now. If eligible, an individual can receive roughly $60 a month in Canada Pension Plan payment while retaining a certain amount of his guaranteed income benefit and receiving, of course, the basic OAS. For example, at the February Canada Pension Plan level a person eligible for the full guaranteed income supplement could receive a basic pension of $79.50, plus $34.20 Canada Pension Plan, plus approximately $10 in the form of guaranteed income supplement, for a total of $123.40.

Moreover, owing to the improvement in over-all health standards we have found through our research that both the absolute number and the percentage of the population represented by recipients of old age assistance has increased. Thus, the increase in the federal government's financial commitment toward improving the economic conditions of our senior citizens has grown even more than the rate of increase in individual benefit. Starting figures, the federal financial expenditures in the fiscal year 1962-63 were approximately $770 million a year. In 1964-65 these had grown to $930 million a year. That increase will be demonstrated even more when one sees that the estimated expenditure for 1970-71 will be over $1,950 million. This means that in less than ten years federal expenditures have increased by 2½ times since this party first took office in 1963.

I should like, if I may, to say a few words about veterans and the adjustments made under that policy. Since other spokesmen have dealt with this, I will not go into the matter today. I must, however, express to hon. members the regrets of my colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé). As many may be aware, he is in Holland joining with our Dutch friends in the twenty-fifth anniversary celebrations commemorating that country's liberation from Nazi rule. This is a long-standing engagement which he felt it would be unjustifiable to break.

Having spoken about some of these areas that contain implications for the future, may I mention the Canada Assistance Plan and what it can do in this area. There is a section in the Canada Assistance Plan under which the federal government will reimburse 50 per cent of the cost incurred by any province which wishes to supplement the old age security and guaranteed income supplement payments. There is no ceiling on the amount of supplementation than can be allotted, nor are there any complicated forms, terms or conditions that must be complied with. Payments are made merely on the basis of need, and this is in line with all the other programs similar to the Canada Assistance Plan.

Only one province, to my knowledge, has gone into this matter at all seriously, and that is British Columbia which I understand is now providing supplementation under the Canada Assistance Plan to senior citizens receiving benefits both under the Old Age Security Act and the GIS. Most provinces could benefit more from this particular scheme if they wished to, and that remark applies to the province which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) led when he was its Premier.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question? Is he suggesting that the less wealthy provinces are in a position to supplement the old age security payments and the GIS? Is he putting this forward as a realistic national program at this time?

Mr. Munro: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Canada Assistance Plan in all its provisions was discussed in great detail when the hon. gentleman was Premier of his province. It was worked out in combination with the provinces and endorsed by them. The welfare administrators of the provinces concerned were fully cognizant of all the potentialities of this program. I think they must have realized that they could assist the older people in their areas who were in need, by taking advantage of the federal payments referred to. Some provinces are prepared to do it.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, has not the minister just received a delegation consisting of the welfare ministers of the four Atlantic provinces, and have they not indicated the grave difficulties of the four Atlantic provinces in the area of welfare and sought a different formula?

Mr. Munro: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have. But inasmuch as we all appreciate the needs of the less fortunate provinces, I think all provinces are complaining very seriously about their inadequacies in responding to federal initiatives in those areas we have already entered extensively. Need I remind the hon. member about medicare and the complaints the provinces have made with respect to it? It is really a question of what the provinces want to do in terms of their own priorities, which needs they are prepared to recognize most and in which order.

An hon. Member: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. Stanfield: I want the minister to be realistic, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: That's impossible.

Mr. Munro: The Leader of the Opposition has said that the Atlantic provinces rank other priorities more highly—

An hon. Member: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. Stanfield: Let us be realistic.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Leader of the Opposition going through a litany of excessive statements today. He said we had a computer for a conscience, wondered if members on the government had any sliver of conscience, said they were completely lacking in a sense of justice and that they were callous, said they showed monumental ingratitude, were inconsistent, against the weak and the poor, and so on.

An hon. Member: All true.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, that may have been great stuff 10, 15 or 20 years ago, but I cannot believe the Leader of the Opposition really believes this now. Surely he could have suggested what he would have done, in his statement. The Leader of the Opposition could have suggested what he would have done. He could have suggested how much he would have increased the pension and how the federal government should be prepared to absorb this particular cost, what programs must be cut in relation to payments in this area or what other programs he feels should be ranked lower in terms of priority than this particular one. He could have suggested that we should have gone into guaranteed income supplement and not used the basic rate.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: That is what I did.

Mr. Munro: He could give us some guidance about priorities. The Leader of the Opposition really did nothing other than make a blatant political appeal to the old age pensioners of this country. The blatant political appeal, with no substance, that the Leader of the Opposition had to revert to today is one of the reasons why many of our senior citizens are very cynical about politicians.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the minister must have been engaged in conversation when I spoke, because I suggested that he could not do anything beyond the resources of the government regarding the general old age security. I suggested that he concentrate on increasing the guaranteed income supplement.

Mr. Munro: As the leader of the official opposition knows, in the programs in my department alone we are spending approximately one-third of the total federal budget. Counting the health and welfare sides, we are spending in the vicinity of approximately $4 billion a year or more. We must now look at the situation in terms of priorities, recognizing the needs of the old age citizens and veterans of this country as a very high priority indeed. But what about the working poor, the deserted wives and children, the crippled and disabled who are not in this category? What about some of these people whose financial structure is not as rich as those with whom we have been preoccupied today? Where do they rank in terms of priority?

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The only way a question can be permitted is by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. MacInnis: I wish to remind the minister, on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

An hon. Member: The point of order will be phony.

Mr. MacInnis: It may be phony, but you will have to listen to it just the same. The time allowed members in this debate was certainly violated by the minister, who spoke longer just to cut off questions that he cannot answer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Munro: I spent half my time answering questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I remind the hon. member that Standing Order 61 provides—

Mr. MacInnis: You should have reminded the minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Standing Order allows 30 minutes for the minister's reply. We have taken that position in the past whether it is during the debate or at its conclusion. That practice has been followed today.

It being 9.45 o'clock p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section 8 of Standing Order 60, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the motion now before the House. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Division

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 5, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

URANIUM

POLICY ON FOREIGN OWNERSHIP IN INDUSTRY —ELABORATION RESPECTING EXPLORATION ACTIVITY

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in my statement of March 19 to the House of Commons on the subject of foreign ownership in the Canadian uranium industry, reference was made to the fact that foreign enterprises then engaged in uranium exploration would be given a certain period of time to establish the commercial viability of their properties and thereby qualify for the same ownership controls which will be applicable for present producers.

The detailed regulations required to implement the policy statement are now being drafted and will be promulgated at the earliest possible date following consultation with interested parties. However, in view of the scheduling of exploration programs during 1970 and the not unnatural concern expressed by exploration companies over the uncertainties raised by the policy statement, I wish to take this opportunity to give further elaboration on the policy as it will apply to exploration activity.

First of all, a company shall be deemed to have been actively engaged in uranium exploration on March 2, 1970 if it held, prior to that date, valid provincial or territorial authority to mineral rights or an undivided interest therein and, in addition, can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Atomic Energy Control Board that it was engaged in a uranium exploration program on the property to which the mineral rights apply.

Having established this fact, the companies involved will then have six years—until March 2, 1976—to submit documentation to the Control Board which will prove to the satisfaction of the board that they have a commercially viable deposit or deposits of uranium ore on the mineral rights under exploration on March 2, 1970. In recognition of the presently depressed uranium market and the four to five years needed to place a mine in operation, the government will not require actual production or the existence of a sales contract within the six-year period.

Companies which can meet these two criteria will, for the purposes of foreign ownership regulations, be treated in the same manner as that applicable to present producers. Present foreign owners of such companies will be permitted to retain holdings existing on March 2, 1970 but any sales of such holdings must be to Canadian residents until the total foreign ownership is reduced to 33 per cent. At that point sales between non-residents will be permitted but in such a way that the 33 per cent aggregate foreign ownership level is not exceeded and that no greater than 10 per cent of the ownership of the property is held by one foreign investor or group of associated foreign investors. It will be noted that inherent in this statement is the fact that the government has decided not to differentiate between companies with less or greater than 50 per cent non-resident holdings on March 2, 1970. This would apply, of course, to present producers and the exploration companies qualifying as a result of this statement.

Finally, I would like to note that the regulations we are now preparing will stipulate that persons carrying on exploration programs by way of joint venture agreements and holding thereunder undivided interests will be allowed to proceed subject to the same criteria on ownership of such interests as are applicable to share ownership.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the statement we have heard today is another example of the government jumping in, making hasty public statements as to its intentions, and then leaving the industry and mining groups in a state of confusion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Aiken: This is the second pre-regulation statement we have been given on the subject of the ownership of the uranium industry. The first was made in a hasty manner as was perhaps necessary at the time—surrounding circumstances were such as to encourage it. But development and exploration in Canada were likely to be depressed. Today the minister is saying: we intend to make regulations very soon but we are still trying to figure them out; we are going to make another statement to try to clear up some of the things that are in doubt.

I welcome the fact that there is some assurance in the statement on the question of ownership so that exploration and development may continue. Nevertheless, I say this is an unnecessary and careless way of dealing with legislation and regulations which affect major industries. When the regulations are made, then the people concerned will know exactly what is required—and when they are written out in detail their effect may be totally different than now appears. In any case, while being extremely critical about the procedure the government has used in jumping from one situation to another, trying to clear up one mistake and perhaps making another, I welcome the fact that some vague light has been cast on what the government intends to do.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, no one who is concerned about the question of foreign ownership in Canada and, particularly, foreign ownership of an industry like uranium will get any consolation from the statement just made by the minister.

My party, which is particularly concerned about foreign ownership of Canada's economy, says to the minister that his statement contains nothing which guarrantees that the situation in the uranium industry will be changed. The statement makes clear that foreign-owned companies will continue to own the companies they presently own; there is to be no attempt to change this situation until and unless they seek to sell their interests or any part thereof. So a foreign-owned company which is now engaged in exploration for uranium can continue to own its property forever as far as these regulations are concerned without any change at all. This means there is no guarantee with respect to Canadian ownership of the uranium industry. As a matter of fact, recent reports have indicated that Gulf Oil is sitting on a very large uranimum deposit, and that other foreign-owned companies are carrying on exploration.

When the Denison matter first blew up, the Prime Minister made the statement outside the House that the reason the sale of Denison to Hudson Bay had to be stopped was that Canadian ownership in the uranium industry would otherwise be reduced to about 10 per cent. I venture to suggest that this will happen anyway under the policy the government is pursuing, and that as Gulf Oil, Rio Algom and some Japanese interests continue their uranium exploration and exploitation, the proportion of the industry in Canada owned by Canadians will continually decrease and eventually almost disappear.

I emphasize that there is absolutely nothing in the statement to guarantee any extension of Canadian ownership and control of the uranium industry. All the statement guarantees is that if foreign-owned companies in six years from now attempt to sell any part of their interests, they must sell it to Canadians and cannot sell it to another foreign interest. I submit that that is no guarantee at all, that it merely emphasizes the fact that this government is wedded to a continentalist policy and is essentially unconcerned about foreign control of our economy, even in such an industry as the uranium industry.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we Créditistes deplore the fact that the minister who has spoken today as well as his colleagues have for a while omitted to send us ahead of time French copies of the statements made in the House. And moreover today we have received nothing whatever from the minister.

We well understand from his statement and from the comments by other members of the opposition that he had nothing to announce. This is so true that he has submitted no document whatever in this case.

Mr. Speaker, we would ask you in future to see that the ministers pay attention to us as they used to and that they submit their statements in French some time ahead so that we may review them.

GRAIN

WHEAT—COMMUNIQUÉ FOLLOWING MEETING OF EXPORTING COUNTRIES

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the House to return to motions?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the House revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the ministerial meeting concerning wheat has concluded and I should like to bring to the attention of the House the communiqué which was issued:

1. Ministers and senior officials representing the five major wheat exporters, Argentina, Australia, Canada, the EEC and the United States, met in Ottawa on May 4 and 5 to discuss problems in the international wheat market, particularly those brought about by surplus production. The meeting reviewed the current market situation and noted that supplies available in the major exporting countries will be surplus to the anticipated requirements for the 1970-71 crop year, and that a solution to the problem of over-production was necessary if a healthy and stable international wheat market were to be achieved in the interest of both consumers and producers. Ministers noted that in some countries it is difficult to consider the wheat situation in isolation from the livestock feed market.

2. Ministers recognized that the major exporters had a common responsibility to regulate their production in a manner which will bring supplies into balance with opportunities in the international wheat market. Ministers considered that importing countries, particularly developed countries, also had responsibilities in this regard and they agreed to use every opportunity to encourage these countries to accept disciplines in their own production policies in the interest of expanding the international wheat market.

3. Ministers took note of the major contributions made by Canada to resolving the oversupply problem by the withdrawal of very substantial acreage from production in 1970. It was also noted that the United States had, for a number of years, operated a program of wheat acreage reduction, that Australia had recently established quotas substantially reducing wheat deliveries and that in Argentina production had declined in recent years due to climatic factors. The ministers further noted that the EEC had under consideration proposals aimed at a different price relationship between wheat and coarse grains and also at a substantial reduction of land and manpower in agriculture over the next few years.

4. Ministers noted that the urgent need to bring production into a better relationship with demand. They agreed that governments would have to keep production policies under continuing review so that timely and appropriate measures could be taken in the interest of achieving a healthy international market for wheat.

5. Ministers noted that different techniques were used by different wheat producing countries to maintain producer incomes. Ministers agreed that governments should exercise care in implementing new or existing programs of income support to avoid measures which could have the effect of stimulating uneconomic production.

6. Finally, ministers agreed that their governments would keep under continuing review the production policies of both exporters and importers and to this end they agreed to consult closely and anticipated meeting again in about six months.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, although we are pleased that the wheat exporting countries have finally been able to get together to discuss the problem of surplus production we note from the communiqué that no firm commitments have been made by other countries to follow the same course upon which Canada has embarked in drastically reducing wheat acreage. We would have hoped that the Canadian ministers and their officials would press upon the other nations the necessity of a multilateral agreement so that no one country would have to carry the load itself. We are sorry the minister did not take this occasion to assure the House and the country that these things will be done and that Canada can hope to resume the production necessary to maintain a viable farm economy.

While at the meeting the exporters agreed there should be no uneconomic production, the fact is that we see this happening every day of the week in other countries. I need only point out to the minister the arrangements under which the European Economic Community subsidizes the export of grain from France and other countries within the community to the detriment of countries like Canada where there is no such assistance. I believe this is the only country on the face of the earth where the farmers are expected to meet competition without any assistance from the government. It seems to me we are placing our farmers in an untenable position by agreeing that there be some sort of supply-management system that will only apply to ourselves and will leave the exporting countries of Europe and other areas pretty well on their own to make whatever arrangements they like.

I am disappointed that the communiqué could not have been such as to give some hope to our farmers that in the future Canada will be able to export in a market that is not heavily subsidized by the governments of other exporting countries.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, it would have been a better day if there had been better news. The communiqué simply says that the result of the discussions is that the other exporting nations have not agreed to go along with substantial acreage reductions. Of course this was probably not a great surprise to the minister since he has available to him the advice and knowledge of people in his department who can tell him what the attitude of the other producing nations is.

With the European Economic Community doing as it did last year, when it spent $600 million to support its wheat farmers and dispose of the 770 million bushels they produced, it is scarcely likely that it would change its mind at a nod from Canada. If the Economic Community was ready to spend that kind of money last year then certainly it is prepared to stay in the wheat market. The other exporters have stated their position, as mentioned by the minister in his statement, and we in Canada will bear the brunt of the major reduction which is being undertaken in this country. The minister knows very well that if he were to go to Saskatchewan at present he would find that province in a state of economic shock resulting from the slowdown in earnings and income.

No invitation was issued to the U.S.S.R. which, next to China, is certainly the major wheat producing nation in the world. The importers were not present, and it would scarcely be likely that the small group that was called together could agree on a policy which would direct the wheat production of the world. What we are really talking about here is the total production in the world. It is indeed too optimistic to expect that Canada as one nation can affect the total wheat production for the benefit of the farmers on the prairies, and will prove to be a risky venture for Canada.

By way of offering some advice to the minister, I point out that what we should strive to do is to reconvene a meeting of those countries responsible for the International Grains Arrangement and get back to a real international wheat agreement in which all countries participate and which will bring some order into the market. Partial approaches such as are being taken within Canada and by calling together a very few of the nations involved to seek agreement to a major reduction are doomed to failure from the start.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I do not like to be unkind. I must say, however, that I was not at all pleased a moment ago to think that I had to comment on the minister's statement when I had received the English version only upon entering the House and when the French version has just now been given to me. I understand that, on occasion, an oversight may occur, and that is excusable. But when a party spokesman must comment on a minister's statement, I believe he should be given a copy of the settlement at least a few minutes before he rises to speak.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, it would appear that the same question keeps cropping up on the agenda and that the problems of the farmers have become the nightmares of governments. It is a fact that the dairy industry is a nightmare for the government. Governments are also faced with a nightmare when it comes to wheat production. If such nightmares resulted from inefficiency, unemployment or the laziness of the farmers, it could be said that there is a very serious problem created by their apathy. However, since it is a problem of distributing the fruit of the labour of farmers of eastern or western Canada, it must be recognized that there is a surplus of production over consumption. Efforts are made to try to find some way to balance production and demand so as to achieve the proper ratio between exports and imports.

It has been often reported in newspapers that in several countries in the world, many people are hungry and subject to nightmares precisely because they are unable to till the land to make it produce the food they need.

We should therefore endeavor to diversify our production so as not to be stuck with too great a surplus. However, as we all live on the same planet, we should try to produce according to the needs of human beings. Indeed, we must always tend to produce to meet the needs, and not to help dealers make more and more money.

It is only fair to make a profit when reselling any merchandise, but the main objective of trade within a well organized community which is concerned about establishing a just society is to ensure that each and everyone has enough to meet his essential needs. It matters little whether others have more, but it is imperative that all be guaranteed the basic necessities.

Mr. Speaker, such are the observations I wanted to make at this stage. Since the Standing Committee on Agriculture happens to be studying a problem related to grains, I hope that as their work progresses they will realize that, even in Canada, it would be possible in a good many regions to use more products from eastern Canada, which would enable us to absorb part of the wheat production through trade.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH VIET NAM AND CAMBODIA—INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE SUGGESTED BY U THANT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister arising from the reported statement of the Secretary General of the United Nations today that an international conference to cope with the old war in South Viet Nam and the new war in Cambodia is an indispensable step of the utmost urgency. Is it the policy of the government to support this initiative of the Secretary General of the United Nations, or does the policy of the government of Canada remain the statement that the Secretary of State for External Affairs made on Friday last expressing a very considerable degree of scepticism about the utility of an international conference on this subject?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian ambassador in New York has seen the Secretary General of the United Nations on the minister's instructions, as reported by the minister. They did discuss the general question of Viet Nam and of Cambodia in particular.

I am not aware of the substance of the decisions taken by the Secretary General. I do not know if the quotation by the Leader of the Opposition is a complete summary of his proposals. I, of course, would have to study them to see whether they are the kind of initiatives that we will go along with completely or in part.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether this is a complete summary. I assumed that since the government has an ambassador at the United Nations it would be fully informed even if I were not, but since the Prime Minister has not been informed by the ambassador as to details with regard to this proposal there is obviously no point in pursuing the inquiry at this moment.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PURPOSE OF EMPLOYMENT OF W.I.C. WUTTUNEE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is it his intention to continue to employ Mr. Wuttunee of Saskatchewan as an Indian to try to sell the federal Indian policy to the native people despite the fact that Mr. Wuttunee has been disowned by the band chiefs and Councillors of ten reserves in the Battleford area?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in reply, I should like to say to the hon. member that Mr. Wuttunee has been hired for a period of three days, because he is a lawyer and we intended to ask him his opinion on some particular points connected with the review of the Indian Act. Perhaps Mr. Wuttunee is one of the very many Indians who support the government policy and, if his services are required in the future, we will hire him again. Anyway, we hired him only for three days, in the past, and it is not true to say that his name is on the public service payroll. In any event, for the time being, we do not foresee when we will hire him again.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that Mr. Wuttunee is seeking to set up another Indian organization and, if so, is his department giving Mr. Wuttunee any support in that undertaking?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I know that Mr. Wuttunee, like Mr. Frank Calder, the Indian NDP member in the British Columbia Parliament, supports the policy of the government in this regard. I cannot prevent him from informing the Indians about that in order to convince them that we are choosing the right way.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question because the minister did not answer the one I put to him.

An hon. Member: This is the answer.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, indeed, it is an answer but not to my question.

I asked the minister whether his department supported, financially or otherwise, Mr. Wuttunee's efforts with a view to developing a new organization.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, Indian associations are formed by the Indians themselves. We recognize those based on the resolutions of their bands. The same policy applies to any Indian association which exists or which might be created in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister. Can he say whether it is correct that M. Wuttunee was hired to advise the government on means of having the Indian people accept the government's policy?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, according to my information, Mr. Wuttunee has been hired by my department in order to give legal advice on the new legislation which we would like to introduce and which will be entitled "Indian Lands Act" since he may be one of the best qualified persons to advise the department, in view of the fact that he is an Indian himself and a very good lawyer.

[English]

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister care to report on what sort of legal advice he was seeking from Mr. Wuttunee pertaining to this white paper?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for rather detailed information. I would not think the question is in order.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MINIMUM WAGE INCREASE TO MEET HIGHER COST OF LIVING

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister stated in an interview on the French network over the weekend—and I quote his words from the transcript: "the government has rejected wage and price controls because such a policy would be unfair to workers who have been waiting five years for a raise" applying that specifically to those who work for minimum wages in industries which come under federal jurisdiction, has the government now decided to raise the wages of these workers in the very near future inasmuch as the cost of living has risen by 20 per cent since the last raise five years ago and they have been living 20 per cent below the poverty level—

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is now making a speech. Is he coming to the question?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I fooled you that time because I have already asked my question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member fooled me, too, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, may I put the question a little more plainly to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that he said it is unfair to workers who have been waiting five years for a raise, and as those who work for minimum wages in industries that come under federal jurisdiction—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have not yet recognized the question. Perhaps I am again in error.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I will try again. Is the government planning in the immediate future to increase the wages of those who work for minimum wages in industries under federal jurisdiction, as it is five years since they have had a raise and the cost of living has gone up 20 per cent in the meantime?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked a question now. I did recognize it this time.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, we want the answer.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the government's policy in this respect will be announced in due course.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As that is the sort of answer I have been getting every time I have asked this question during the past two years, does the Prime Minister not realize how completely phony his answer makes his so-called just society? When is he going to stop being the joker of the just society and do something honest for the people of this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIR CANADA

POSSIBLE PHASE-OUT OF CERTAIN ADMINISTRATIVE EMPLOYEES—CRITERIA TO BE USED IN FILLING VACANCIES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I know I have greater hope of obtaining an answer to a question directed to the Minister of Transport than to one directed to the Prime Minister. Have the administrative employees of Air Canada, which I regard as one of the finest, if not the finest, air service in the world, received any communication to the effect that some 3,000 of them are having their records reviewed, that there will be a phasing out of that number and that in reappointments to fill some of the vacancies youth rather than length of service and experience will be the prime consideration, as recommended by the McKinsey report?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is a rather complicated question. I will do my best to answer it and I hope to give some additional information later. There is some reorganization going on within Air Canada. As I have said on earlier occasions, I have not received the details of it because it is a corporate matter, but I will make some inquiries for the right hon. gentleman. I am sure that my views to Air Canada will be that people with long service ought to be given more consideration than in the circumstances referred to by the right hon. member. But I doubt very much if what he has outlined is really the case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, my information comes from the employees, and they are the ones who are particularly affected. Regardless of whether a United States company comes to Canada and tells us how to run Air Canada, do we have the minister's assurance that regardless of what the McKinsey recommendations are those who have served well and honourably will not be discriminated against even if they are over 55 years old?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I am getting close enough to 55 myself that I have a particular concern for that age group. I will see what I can do.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the hon. member would remove his blinkers and look in the direction of the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OIL

AUTHORITY FOR PROHIBITING EXPLORATION IN STRAIT OF GEORGIA

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of the fact that a British Columbia cabinet minister has challenged the authority of the federal Minister of Fisheries to prohibit oil exploration in Georgia Strait in British Columbia and has alleged that there is no statutory authority from the House of Commons, can the minister assure the House that he is determined to continue the closure? Also, will he give information as to what authority he was acting under in issuing the closure order?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, it has always been a requirement under the Fisheries Act that the use of explosives in water requires a prior permit. All outstanding permits have been cancelled and therefore it is not possible to continue seismic work in the Strait of Georgia area. That is the ruling to which the hon. member refers.

REVIEW OF DRILLING PERMITS OFF EAST COAST

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is it the government's intention to review the oil drilling permits that have been issued to companies to drill for oil off the east coast of Canada, especially in light of the amendments to the Fisheries Act now before the House?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the question of permits for seismographic work and for further exploration and drilling comes under the aegis of my department. The officials of the department are highly expert in determining what is safe and ecologically sound, and permits have been issued on that basis and will continue to be issued on that basis subject to the strictest interpretation of the rules and to the work being done being supervised by the officials of my department.

Mr. McGrath: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the permits which have already been issued be reviewed in light of amendments now proposed to the Fisheries Act to prevent pollution, and also the Canada Water Bill now before the House?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, in so far as the Canada Water Bill goes, there are no clauses or regulations in the bill which affect the question of offshore drilling. That comes under other statutory authority, and so it would have no effect. The new Fisheries Act of course envisages no specific controls over drilling. I do not believe it will do so specifically, but certainly the Minister of Fisheries under the act does have specific authority which from time to time he may see fit to exercise. But that does not involve our department's review of its total policy in respect of the issue of offshore licences.

POLLUTION

HOWE SOUND—RESULTS OF TESTS OF FISH

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Can he inform the House of the results of testing for mercury pollution in Howe Sound? What species have been affected and when does the minister expect the fishery to reopen there?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the results are mixed. Salmon and herring are all right so far as mercury is concerned, but some of the local stocks of shellfish contain pretty high levels of mercury. Therefore, the upper end of Howe Sound will remain closed for commercial fishing for these species.

LOCATION OF SOURCES OF MERCURY CONTAMINATION

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry whether his department or any other department is undertaking a crash program to locate and clean up the mercury pollution sources across the nation?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, we have had several meetings with both the pulp and paper industry and with that segment of the chemical industry using mercury in the production of soda ash and chlorine specifically, with that aim in view.

AIR CANADA

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF EASTERN HEADQUARTERS FROM HALIFAX TO MONTREAL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport that is related to an earlier question. Do the changes which are going on at present in the reorganization of Air Canada include the removal of the Maritimes regional office of Air Canada from Halifax to Montreal?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been in conversation by phone with officials of Air Canada. I have asked them to send me a detailed report of the reorganization. I have also talked to my colleague the President of the Privy Council with a view to having the Air Canada report referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications at the earliest possible time. At that stage these questions can all be answered by people more competent to do so than I. This will be done as soon as the report on the reorganization is received from Air Canada.

Mr. Forrestall: Are we going to lose it?

Mr. Jamieson: If hot air were music, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend would be a brass band. I was about to say that I will be prepared to provide him with a full report on the reorganization as soon as it is received.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member resume his seat? I will recognize the hon. member in a moment. We have to get on to another subject. I notice quite a few members are anxious to ask questions. For the moment I will recognize the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

Mr. McCleave: The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East asked the same specific question the other day and received a general answer. The specific question has not been answered. Does the minister mean that the decision of Air Canada, which surely the minister must have discussed when he referred this matter to Air Canada, is to obliterate the eastern regional office in favour of centralization somewhere else?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I asked Air Canada. They replied that there is a complex reorganization under way. It is not something that can be answered within the framework of a normal verbal answer in the House. I have said I will make the report available to the House when it is received.

Mr. McCleave: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL VICE-PRESIDENTS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the biggest trumpeter on that side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. MacInnis: I ask the minister if the reorganization within Air Canada makes it necessary for Air Canada to appoint 22 vice-presidents where 6 have heretofore served?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that. The annual report will be referred and the hon. member will have an opportunity before the committee to ask all the questions he wishes.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I indicated to hon. members a moment ago that a number of supplementaries have been asked on the subject of Air Canada. Other hon. members should be given a chance to ask questions on other subjects. If we have time I certainly will not fail to return to the hon. member.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege because of answers provided in this House by the Minister of Transport in respect of Air Canada. A number of questions, including the one regarding the transfer of the regional office, have been asked of this same minister. I have asked questions with respect to an agreement worked out between Eastern Provincial Airways and Air Canada. It is in the written record that the minister informed me he knew nothing of this arrangement; yet the minister and other members of the House were aware that at that time Eastern Provincial Airways was wining and dining Members of Parliament in Ottawa. The minister knew about that and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis: —his answer to me at that time was a downright lie.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member knows that he cannot accuse another member, whether or not he is a minister, of telling a lie in the House.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member used words which went beyond his thoughts and I ask his co-operation in this regard.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I can turn to precedents which show that a Prime Minister lied in the House. I have no intention of withdrawing something I can prove by the written record.

Some hon. Members: Throw him out!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has to withdraw. I again ask the co-operation of the hon. member. He cannot accuse another member of lying.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I may not be able to accuse him so for the moment I will say that I withdraw that particular statement. But I will take the first opportunity to put his contradictions on the record.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thank the hon. member for his co-operation. I say this sincerely.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS—ESTABLISHMENT OF POLLUTION CONTROL AREA ON ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC COASTS

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I assure Your Honour it is on a different topic. With reference to the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act which the minister stated he intends to propose to the House, can he say whether the terms of the bill will parallel the terms of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Bill to the extent of providing a pollution control area extending 100 miles seaward on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of Canada?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the drafting of this measure is not completed. I think I can assure the hon. member this will not be part of the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act.

Mr. Barnett: A supplementary question. Can the minister tell the House when he expects the drafting of this legislation to be completed and the bill introduced for first reading? Will it be ready in time to look at it while we are still dealing with the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Bill?

Mr. Jamieson: That may be impossible, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the outcome of the debate on the Arctic pollution bill may have an effect on the actual drafting of the Canada Shipping Act amendments. However, if there is no likelihood of that happening as that particular debate proceeds, I believe we could have the first reading within two weeks.

FLOODS

MANITOBA—SPECIAL WHEAT QUOTAS FOR FARMERS WITH FLOODED STORAGE FACILITIES

Mr. Gerald Richard Cobbe (Portage): In order to save grain that has not yet been damaged, has the minister's department made a decision to grant special quotas to farmers in Manitoba whose storage bins for grain have been flooded?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I have not received a report from the Canadian Wheat Board on this subject. I thank the hon. member for bringing it to my attention. I will certainly discuss with the Wheat Board the possibility of moving in this direction.

MANITOBA—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO THOSE AFFECTED

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the very extensive damage to homes, businesses and other property caused by the serious flooding in Carman and other areas of southern Manitoba, is the Prime Minister giving consideration to providing assistance to those affected in order to relieve the heavy financial losses incurred in what has been described as the worst flooding in the history of that area?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member is reiterating. Possibly I did not understand the question. I have the impression the hon. member's question is the same as the one asked previously. In any event, perhaps the Prime Minister might reply to the question.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I can merely state that we are awaiting an assessment and appraisal of the damages. If the situation is similar to those in the past where we have helped provincial governments meet the cost of these damages, we will of course be prepared to do so at this time. I cannot answer specifically until I know the extent and nature of the damage.

GRAIN

WHEAT—SUPPLY OF REQUIRED GRADES FOR SHIPMENT TO CHINA

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of reports that ships have been delayed on the west coast waiting for wheat to be transported under the contract with China because the required grades and kinds of grain are not available, although there was ample room, can the minister tell the House if the situation has been corrected?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the situation arose when a very large ship presented itself for those grades several weeks ahead of schedule. With the block system in effect the situation can and is being rectified very quickly.

DAIRYING—POSSIBLE AMENDMENT OF POLICY RESPECTING GRANTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me this opportunity to direct a very important question to the Minister of Agriculture before the oral question period expires.

In view of the widespread discontent of industrial milk producers and in view of the present demonstrations in Quebec, mainly in my own constituency, at Sainte-Anne-de-la-Pocatière, in protest against the government dairy policy, would the minister consider amending or recommending that amendments be made to the dairy policy announced on March 23 so as to adapt it more closely to the needs of dairy producers in order that they be more satisfied and their income less penalized?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): We intend to hold further discussions with officials of the government of Quebec as well as with representatives of the dairy industry there in the hope of getting a better understanding of the reasons for the changes which were made and seeing that the financial burdens of the surpluses are shared more equitably among those who have produced them.

REPORTED IMPORTATION OF NEW ZEALAND MILK—FORM OF PRODUCT

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Is the milk which is reportedly being flown into Canada from New Zealand entering this country in fluid form or in reconstituted form?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I shall have to take note of that question and look into it.

DAIRY POLICY—MEETINGS BETWEEN FEDERAL OFFICIALS AND REPRESENTATIVES OF MILK PRODUCERS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Could the Minister of Agriculture tell the House whether, since the new dairy policy has been announced, formal meetings have taken place between leading officials of his department, representatives of the Canadian Dairy Commission, members of the milk producers' unions and of the CFU of the province of Quebec concerning the problems created in Quebec by this policy?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I am not sure there have been any formal meetings since April 1 when the amendments to the policy went into effect, but certainly prior to that date there were many meetings and the policy which is now in effect was discussed on several occasions.

DAIRY POLICY—MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND QUEBEC EASTERN TOWNSHIPS MILK PRODUCERS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, which follows the one I put earlier to the Minister of Agriculture.

After the huge demonstration that 3,000 people held in Sherbrooke on Friday, April 17, the Eastern Townships' dairy producers decided unanimously to invite the Prime Minister to come and explain the dairy policy to them. Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether he has received such an invitation and, if so, did he answer it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I received an invitation, but I will inquire. If I did, I shall give it serious consideration.

FINANCE

UPWARD REVALUATION OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he proposes to make any statement in the near future with regard to speculative opinion that the upward limit on the Canadian dollar in relation to the United States dollar might be increased?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I am very pleased at the strength of the Canadian dollar. However, I should like to remove any speculative opinion with regard to the government considering revaluation of the Canadian dollar.

POST OFFICE

MOVEMENT OF MAIL—HIRING OF DRIVERS IN MONTREAL

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I should like to address a question to the Postmaster General, whose return to our midst brings joy unbounded.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: Can he advise the House whether the mail is moving normally or, should I say, with reasonable expedition, today in Vancouver, Montreal and Quebec City? Further, can he tell us how many drivers have been hired in Montreal and, of this group, how many are former employees of G. Lapalme?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): We shall be hiring approximately 250 drivers in Montreal to carry out all the work which was formerly performed by 457. So far we have hired about 210; there are about another 40 openings in Montreal. Mail is moving satisfactorily in Montreal at the present time. Yesterday we were able to lift the embargo on parcels. The effect of lifting that embargo will not, of course, be felt for another two or three days.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SPECIAL TRAINING OF FORCES IN CONTROL OF PROTEST GROUPS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can he assure the House that adequate numbers of our armed forces are specially trained in the controlling of protest groups so that no incidents of the kind which occurred at Kent University, Ohio, yesterday could take place here in the event that our troops were called upon to render aid to the civil power in Canada?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): I believe the procedures which regulate the use of troops in Canada are extremely strict. It is manifest, of course, that the troops are always under the authority of the civil power. But we must make sure that in any instance the regular officers would also represent the ultimate authority for the troops.

INDUSTRY

APPLICATION OF URANIUM REGULATIONS TO PETROLEUM AND MINING COMPANIES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In view of the anxiety in the petroleum and mining industries may I direct this question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Following his statement today I should like to ask the minister whether the rules and regulations which were outlined today in relation to the uranium industry will apply in any way to persons or corporations engaged in the development of the petroleum and mining industries in this country apart from uranium.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): There have been no restrictions as to ownership, foreign or otherwise, in any phase of the mining or oil industries except as to uranium. However, as I think has been announced by the government, there is a review in process with respect to foreign ownership of Canadian industry in general. To date, though, it should be quite clear there are no rules which in any way inhibit ownership or limit the possibility of foreign ownership in any area except uranium. The announcement today referred to uranium. Our previous announcements referred only to uranium, and the regulations which are to be prepared for discussion with the industry and the provinces apply only to uranium.

Mr. Woolliams: Since many of these corporations engaged in petroleum production and other mining activities are inter-related and have interests in uranium as well as in other minerals and petroleum, will these regulations and rules announced today apply to such corporations as I have mentioned and to the ownership by them of uranium as well as other minerals and petroleum?

Mr. Greene: They will apply to those corporations in respect of that aspect of their work which concerns uranium but not in any way with respect to their work on oil or petroleum or other substances. And, of course, today's announcement indicated that in connection with properties on which they are already working, or were working as of March 2, they will be treated in the same way as existing mining companies and thus their rights will be preserved over those properties.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are just three or four minutes left; perhaps we might continue with this subject tomorrow.

AIR TRANSPORT

IMPOSITION OF PROHIBITIVE TICKET TAX BY CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has the government protested to Czechoslovakia the severe travel restrictions imposed by that country and in particular the prohibitive airline ticket tax recently announced just as Air Canada's schedule is being developed into Prague?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): No formal protest has been lodged yet but we are looking into it and we shall take whatever decision is necessary or possible within the next couple of days.

URANIUM

INCENTIVES TO SMALL CANADIAN EXPLORATION COMPANIES

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that a number of small Canadian mining firms engaged in exploration for uranium are presently experiencing serious financial difficulties as a result of recent statements affecting that industry, does the government have any plans to remedy this situation by offering special incentives to Canadian-owned mining firms or adapting other measures?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I fail to see how any government announcement could have had any harmful effect on the exploration or mining activities of Canadian firms. The whole purpose, of course, of the initiative taken by the government in this area is to maintain a high degree of uranium ownership in Canadian hands or Canadian corporate hands.

Mr. Cafik: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Temiscamingue.

[Later:]

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Ontario is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Cafik: My point of order results from the answer given to my question by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I raise the question now because the answer given may have implied that I did not know what I was talking about.

Some hon. Members: Explain!

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, the implication is that Canadian firms in the mining industry are not in any way affected by this particular ruling or these statements. I feel that many Canadian firms, not only in that field but in others, often borrow amounts of capital from the United States and are thus affected—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is not a point of order.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PUBLICITY GIVEN PARTI QUÉBÉCOIS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Saturday and Sunday last, the new members of the provincial wing of the Ralliement créditiste and all the candidates at the election of April 29 met in Quebec City. Naturally, the CBC did not refer to the event. Last night, following a meeting of Mr. René Levesque's separatists, there he was on the CBC network. I would therefore ask the Prime Minister whether the government is about to take a decision about that corporation which costs $191 million not only to Mr. René Levesque but also to all Canadian taxpayers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the facts are as stated by the hon. member—and I have no reason to doubt that—I feel that this is a rather shocking situation. I will get in touch with the Secretary of State, so that he may ask the CBC for a report on its activities. Then the House of Commons will be able to decide what should be done about it.

NAMAO AIRPORT—INQUIRY AS TO SALE TO ALBERTA

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister please inform the House whether the airport at Namao, Alberta, is being phased out and sold to the government of Alberta so as to allow the province to build a proposed university on the same site?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this question should be placed on the Order Paper, or debated at the time of adjournment if the hon. member wants the matter given precedence.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, all that is required is a yes or no answer.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer is obviously no.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

METHOD OF MAKING REPRESENTATIONS TO OTHER NATIONS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Further to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby as to whether or not Canada had made official representation to United States authorities with regard to U.S. involvement in Cambodia, and the answer given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the effect that representatives of the United States government were in the gallery, could I ask the Prime Minister whether or not this is the Canadian government's method of conveying information to governments of other nations?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Skoberg: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Moose Jaw is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, this is not a facetious question. I suggest that it is disgusting, degrading and revolting to have an answer given by a minister that suggests that Canada should make official representation simply by quoting something said in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's point of order very much resembles the one raised by the hon. member for Ontario. I would not think it is acceptable as a point of order; rather, it is a point for debate.

Mr. Skoberg: Then, I rise on a question of privilege. As an elected member of the House of Commons and a representative of Canadians, I suggest I should know whether or not the government of the day is making official representations to other nations of the world through the House of Commons or through other forms of communication that are available. I have received inquiries about this, and as a member of the House it is my privilege to seek an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member can obtain this information in many ways, one of which is by putting the question on the Order Paper. Orders of the day.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LANIEL—TEXT OF A QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Beauharnois on a question of privilege.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I have placed on the order paper a question bearing No. 1,811. I feel that the text does not correspond to the one I gave the officials responsible for preparing the order paper. Therefore, I conclude that my French version was translated into English for the English order paper, then retranslated into French for the French order paper, or else my text was interpreted and I am not prepared to accept that. I wish to draw this error to the attention of the Chair and of the House, and I hope this will not happen again.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair shall look into the matter raised by the hon. member.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

STANDARDS COUNCIL OF CANADA

ESTABLISHMENT, OBJECTS AND POWERS, ORGANIZATION, ETC.

The House resumed from Friday, March 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-163, to provide for the establishment of a Standards Council of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lundrigan (p. 4726).

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a few remarks to the House in relation to Bill C-163, by which the government intends to establish a Standards Council of Canada as outlined in the bill.

First of all, I should like to make a few remarks about the amendment moved by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan). At the outset, may I say I think it is a very good amendment in that it has given the trade and the people interested in this legislation the opportunity to study the bill, to look into its ramifications and the very great powers that are incorporated in the bill.

The question of a Standards Council of Canada first came to my attention in this House in December 1968. At that time the House was debating a supply motion and the minister was introducing his departmental estimates. Included in his estimates was an item amounting to $80,000 for the purpose of establishing a Standards Council of Canada. I put forth the argument that the minister should not be asking for $80,000 for this purpose until he had outlined to the members the reasons for asking for this amount. Finally, the minister agreed—and I thank him for this—to my suggestion that he first bring in the legislation, tell the House what it was all about, and that if we approved the legislation and all that it embraced the House would then consider allotting him this money to set up the council.

Then, the matter seemed to be dropped until December 1 when the House gave the bill first reading. Since then it has been discussed on two or three occasions. In the interval since the introduction of the bill many industries, manufacturers and other people interested in it have raised many objections to this type of legislation. No later than today there arrived on my desk a copy of a letter from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. I think all members of this House respect very highly this organization. The chairman of the executive, Mr. Donald N. Byers, sent to me a copy of a letter which he wrote to the minister. In this letter he said some very important things:

Our Executive Council thinks that the Federal Government will merely create duplication of effort and spend unnecessarily, if it forms a new corporation. There is also the distinct possibility of creating confusion regarding standards to be observed by Canadian industry.

Why would any government want to introduce in this House legislation as confusing as this is, knowing full well that industry, represented by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, does not wish this legislation? The letter continues:

The danger of confusion for industry lies in the fact that the Standards Council will make use of existing organizations which will continue to maintain their own freedom in determining priorities and policies in writing standards; and yet in item 2 Clause E of the Bill, the proposed Standards Council will review new standards and revisions of existing standards and approve those standards as national standards where appropriate. Therefore, whose standards does industry follow—the Canadian Standards Association or the Standards Council of Canada?

Industry is confused, perplexed and frustrated. Why would we want to proceed with this type of legislation or even send it to the committee for further study?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, may I make a very simple observation? The Canadian Standards Council—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubt whether the minister can make an observation. He can ask a question at this time but no more.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member aware of the fact that under the legislation now before the House the Canadian Standards Council will not be writing standards.

Mr. Hales: Will not be writing what?

Mr. Pepin: Standards.

Mr. Hales: Well then, I cannot understand why the executive council of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce would ask whether they are to follow the standards of the Canadian Standards Association or of the Standards Council of Canada. This is what the Chamber of Commerce asks.

Mr. Pepin: Neither can I.

Mr. Hales: This brings me to the second point involving why we need this Standards Council now in this period of government austerity. Why should we set up another bureaucracy or empire that will build and build, as has been the case in respect of the Department of Industry. Members of this House know all about that. Yet here we are embarking upon another program which I believe the minister said would cost in the neighbourhood of $190,000 just to launch. We can be sure it will grow like Topsy and become another empire which is not needed at this time. I made it my business to ask a few people what they thought about this proposed legislation. I should like to read a few brief sentences from some of the letters I have received. The author of one letter apparently has been in discussion with some manufacturers in the province of Quebec. This letter raises a rather important point about which I had not thought. It reads:

In discussion of this point with representatives of the province of Quebec, they have indicated that while they are prepared to continue to co-operate with the Canadian Standards Association—

That is the present independent one.

—they would not be willing to continue this arrangement if many of the activities of the Canadian Standards Association were taken over by a Federally dominated Standards Council of Canada.

I had not thought about this, but apparently this gentleman has been advised that the Quebec manufacturers are not too happy about joining in this sort of an arrangement. Here is another letter, which reads:

We feel that a standards branch is indeed another Government control over our operation. A great percentage of our administration time is now spent for Government requirements which indeed have benefits for our country and its people but still affects overhead.

That is from a manufacturer of textile products in my area. The letter continues:

We are not convinced that Government intervention will raise production standards.

These comments are from successful businessmen in the industry. Here is another from the president of a company involved in the electronics industry. He says:

It is our feeling that the cost of another government set-up to do this would be another big expense to the people of Canada, which is overburdened at the present time.

This substantiates what I said earlier. Then I have a letter from a manufacturer of home freezers. It is very interesting to note that 80 per cent of the home freezers manufactured in Canada are made within a radius of 20 miles of Guelph, Ont. So, I come from the home freezer area. The letter reads:

—this smacks terribly of preparation for state-control. Competition is doing a marvellous job in bringing to the market better quality products. Competition is continually striving to produce better sizes, better shapes, better content, better performance and better Canadian goods.

My first and major objection to setting up this new council is that of finances. Canada is already living away beyond her means. No new commissions or councils should be set up. Government should curtail expenses everywhere it can, but a lot of its staff and wherever possible renege on commitments that never should have been made.

We must remember that these letters are from successful business people. Let us get our ears tuned in to the man on the street, the manufacturer, and the person who has to produce income in order to pay the income tax in this country. Let us get tuned in to these people and not just sit in an ivory tower like the people who dream up these ideas for new councils, new organizations and everything else. Let us think about these people who are trying to make Canada grow and produce the dollar bills with which to pay the salaries of government people. It is time we were tuned in to these people. This gentleman goes on to say:

We are likely in the near future to adopt the decimal system. This is going to bring a lot of changes. Now let's not try to make changes too fast. We have present standards for safety of electro-equipment, gas equipment etc., etc. We have standards for quality in foods, meat inspection, food inspection. We have standards to prevent distribution of diseases. We have standards for drugs. I do not think we need any more standards right now. What we need is to correct some of the other problems which are far greater and of far more importance to this country.

I am quite satisfied that any further standards we need which are necessary to progress and international trade can be brought about by existing organizations and we don't need to set up a super council to look after this.

The Canadian Standards Association, which has been in operation for many years and which has done a very good job, has sent letters to most Members of Parliament stating that this bill is not in the best interest of the public in so far as standards activities in Canada are concerned.

The Canadian Lumbermen's Association states their reasons for believing that such a council is not necessary at this time. I believe the amendment of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate is an extremely good one. It would give a six months' hoist to the bill. If we were to do this, I am sure we would hear from many more manufacturers in this country to the effect that such a council is not necessary at this time. I shall vote in favour of the amendment, but in any event I sincerely hope the government will seriously consider completely redrafting the bill or sitting down at the table with representatives of the Canadian Standards Association, as it now exists, to talk this over rather than try to push the bill through against the will of what would appear to be a great many people in this country.

I think that with those few remarks I will simply quote one paragraph from a letter from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. Again, I wish to emphasize the great value of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the opportunity they have to gather information, thought and leadership from those in the trades. They are well tuned into what is going on and know far more in this respect than the government or the people who sit in ivory towers and think up these ideas. The paragraph reads:

Our Executive Council recommends that the government should not establish the presently proposed Standards Council of Canada, but should instead appoint a voluntary co-ordinating body comprising members from primary and secondary industries; distributive and service industries; consumer associations; the academic community; federal, provincial and municipal governments; to work with existing standards agencies to protect the consumer and assist the manufacturer in those areas of standardization the government considers essential.

I will conclude by saying that, judging from the letters and information I have received, there seems to be no need for this piece of legislation now and I fail to see why the government has introduced it. Many things are more pressing in Canada today. We do not have the money to implement the provisions of this bill and its objectives are not clearly outlined. There seems to be confusion, frustration, overlapping and duplication in this area.

I would like to have this bill given a six months hoist. I am sure that at the end of that time the minister, the government and members of this House will have received more information, letters and representations to the effect that this piece of legislation is not necessary at this time.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I think the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) in presenting his amendment provided a very valuable and useful service because his amendment to give the bill a six months hoist has served to focus the attention of the country on the legislation perhaps in a very dramatic way. Certainly if the hon. member had not moved his amendment, the bill could have gone through all stages in the House without receiving the attention which, in my view, it so justly deserves.

I want to endorse, and indeed to reiterate, the sentiments of my colleague who has just taken his seat because I, too, am a little confused as to the reason the government brought in this legislation at this time. Perhaps the minister, in his usual affable and friendly manner, will enlighten us as to exactly what the thinking and strategy is behind his legislation. Certainly, he would be the last minister in the government whom we would expect to espouse the "Big Brother" theory of government which, in my view, this bill represents. This bill suggests that only the government is capable of providing an adequate system of standards in the country. That is the inference I take from the bill and that is indeed the only conclusion to which we can come for introducing the bill in the first instance. We have in this country, and have had for a number of years, the Canadian Standards Association. This body has been providing this service and, I think, even the minister would be prepared to concede it has carried out a very successful and useful function. It has been carrying out this function in a peculiarly Canadian way, without domination by government but with its participation. Indeed, there has been participation by industry and by all levels of government.

The Canadian Standards Association is a non-profit organization that has no shareholders. It enjoys the privileges of a federal charter. It has more than 3,000 members, comprised of government, industry and consumer groups. The standards are drafted by committees which only arrive at a consensus after long and careful study, and it is generally agreed by all across the country that the CSA has more than fulfilled its purpose.

So, we come back to the question: why does the government find it necessary to interfere at this time? What will be the position of the provinces and the municipalities which up to this point have participated in, and have formed a useful part of, the Canadian Standards Association if the government has its way and if it successfully gets Bill C-163 through Parliament? Has there been agreement with the provinces and municipalities? Have these governments indicated their dissatisfaction with the present arrangement? This may be true.

This is an area in which the minister hopefully will take the House into his confidence and enlighten us, because certainly we want to know why this legislation is necessary. Does the minister feel that this type of government action is necessary to prepare ourselves for Britain's ultimate entry into the Common Market and to deal with the governmental standards organizations of Europe? Perhaps that might be the reason. If so, I think it can be usefully argued that the Canadian Standards Association can, for purposes of our dealings with the Common Market countries or other countries in the world, function in the same way as a government body because, as I said, up to this date the government of Canada has participated fully in this organization.

The minister said the following in his press release:

> The Council would be based on the principle of co-operation between all interested groups—manufacturers, commercial interests, service industries, government, consumers. It would speak for all Canadians. The Council will be independent of government in its policies and operation but it will be accountable to Parliament for the expenditure of public funds.

That is government jargon. It is just the government's way of saying, "We are going to control the standards of this country and this is our way of doing so." I ask, has it been necessary? Have there been complaints from the groups mentioned in the press release which make it necessary for the government to take this action? If there have been, then I suggest the minister certainly has a responsibility to tell us, because all of the reasons outlined in the minister's press release of March 12, 1970 can be cited in support of the argument that the government should withdraw this legislation and continue to co-operate with the Canadian Standards Association.

I hope that when he closes this debate the minister will tell us precisely what has influenced his thinking because we have been inundated with briefs, letters and verbal representations from all across the country expressing concern at the government's interference in this legitimate Canadian enterprise.

I find it difficult to quarrel with the many concerns that have been expressed. As the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) just indicated, I too find it difficult to understand why it should be necessary for us to undertake this added financial burden during a period of austerity, why it should be necessary to add to the already substantial bureaucratic machine that has been built up since the government took power.

The Canadian Standards Association is a useful Canadian enterprise, formed in a uniquely Canadian way, and fulfilling a very useful function in our society. The minister would be well advised to take a long, hard look at this before he decides to interfere in this legitimate Canadian enterprise.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I would like to participate in this debate for a short period of time. I do not wish to reiterate the points that have been made by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), but that is not to say that they are not extremely important. I believe that the minister and the government should be interested in acting in such a manner as to accommodate the valid objections and desires of industry, and of others who are interested in the subject matter of Bill C-163. After all, the establishment of standards, both of measurement, of quality and of other things, is an extremely important matter in trade and industry. Up to now, it has been done on a voluntary basis. I have no very strong objection to the establishment of an official board if it also has new duties to perform, provided that the voluntary organizations that have been doing this work are reasonably accommodated.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I hope that when he closes this debate the minister will have something to say to indicate that the government is not rigid in its position, that it will consider sympathetically the valid and conscientious suggestions put forward whether by other parties in the committee, by industry, and by those specially concerned with this question. If the minister sees fit to do that, I am sure it will expedite this debate, and also greatly expedite consideration of the bill and its passage through the committee. If the minister indicates this kind of constructive attitude he will be doing Canadian industry and Canadian consumers a service. I am not suggesting that the minister is digging in his heels, but to dig in his heels on some particular principle I think would not be in the interests of Canadians generally.

One of the duties of the proposed council will be, and I quote, to:

> —review the need for and make recommendations with respect to the use of, or conversion to, the international system of units, known as the metric system, in Canadian industry, trade and commerce.

Although this idea is expressed in but a small sentence, it will be one of the most important duties of the new council if the bill is passed. We in Canada are in a very special position with regard to the usage of, and conversion to, the metric system. Most of the world has already converted to the metric system. Its advantages are obvious, but the conversion should be a carefully considered procedure. I believe that the conversion should be done gradually, perhaps in certain segments at a time. There may indeed be segments in which the metric system need not be introduced at all.

On the other hand, there are parts of our industry and commerce in which the metric system has already been introduced. The pharmaceutical industry is one. For years the metric system has been used in science, and in some other fields. But we in Canada are in a peculiarly difficult situation. We belong to the English speaking world which uses the English system of weights and measures in most cases, or some modification of it. I believe that Britain herself and Australia are in the first stages of conversion to the metric system. However, in Canada we are next door neighbours to the great United States, a country which is still using the foot-pound system, and either we will have to act in concert with the United States in the change-over, or at least act in a way which will disturb our trade relations with the United States as little as possible while at the same time making us more competitive in other world markets where the metric system is already in use.

The more one thinks about the many complications of the change-over the more one is impressed with the vast number of fields of activity in which it would be an advantage to use the metric system, and the longer we delay the transfer the more difficult it will become. For example, the problem of converting building products to the metric system may be a horrendous one because all our building has been geared to the English standard of measurement. The products of building material factories, saw mills and like industries, the thicknesses of metals and specifications for steel, will have to be considered. These measurements will have to be converted carefully to metric measurements, and in many cases the process will be slow.

The field in which the metric system will bring tremendous and enormous advantages is the field of education. But more important than that, the metric system of measurements will prove superior to any other system used for the housewife who is purchasing anything in the market place. It will be much easier to make comparisons between different sizes of containers and so on. You do not have to be a first class mental mathematician to figure out whether it is better to buy two small items, or one large item for a given price. Comparisons will be easily made and this will be of tremendous advantage. Introducing this system will also enable the number of different sizes of tins used for canned foods and like products to be reduced. That will produce economies in the processing industry as well as in other industries making these containers.

In the field of engineering, it is vitally important for measurements to conform to a uniform standard. Pipes, nuts and bolts, the number of threads to a unit of length on a screw, and so on must all conform to one standard. At present the specifications for items like these, produced here are different from the specifications pertaining to those items produced in countries adhering to the metric system. This has created complications, especially in the export and import of items like automobiles that require special wrenches and tools. Sometimes when an automobile has been made in a country adhering to the metric system you find that the standard nuts and bolts made over here will not quite fit it. The universal introduction of the metric system in the field of engineering will simplify international trade to a great degree. I look forward with pleasure to the day when modern countries, especially advanced countries like Canada, United States and Great Britain, will utilize the metric system, thus facilitating the exchange of trade in many ways, especially in those matters involving engineering, building materials, structural steel and that sort of thing.

However, I think we should proceed with great caution to make sure that a minimum of friction is created as we change from the present system to the metric system. The process should be long and gradual, but should be persisted in until it is finally accomplished. The speed of changeover should not be such as would produce great dislocations for trade and industry. Of course, there are many segments of our commerce in which it would not be advisable ever to introduce the metric system. The metric system was not applied to the measurements of time in France, because it was not feasible to do so. I think practically all countries in the world now use the double 12-hour system.

There are other segments of society in which this system may never be applied. One that comes to my mind is that involving land and land measurements. Although I do not pretend to be an authority in this field, I see little need for changing our whole grid of surveys of farmland so that it conforms to the metric system, because nothing useful would come out of that. The farmers of Canada have enough difficulties already without having to struggle with decimal points in trying to figure how many hectares equal a section.

In summing up, may I say that the duty which it is contemplated will rest on the council to be set up will be most important. The duty to do these things, although not its most important duty, will be very important. If it acts wisely, with persistence on the one hand and patience on the other, I think it will have an opportunity to do a great service to Canada and to create a climate which will facilitate the trade and commerce of the country. I take special pleasure in the government's proceeding along this particular line because I myself have had a private member's bill, as have other hon. members, on the Order Paper for some years on the subject of Canada's proceeding with the consideration at least of the process by which it might change over to the metric system.

Mr. Barney Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, I enjoy participating in a debate of this type, if it can be termed a debate. I think it is a reasoned discussion by reasonable men on a reasonable proposal. We are dealing with an area in which I have had some experience in my private life. It is an area that I think deserves the sort of consideration that it has been shown this afternoon. I am a little disturbed, however, that we should have to deal with an amendment which seeks to hoist the legislation for six months. I have the greatest respect for the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) and I am sure his actions are genuine.

I think perhaps we should ask ourselves this principal question: is the legislation really necessary? If we decide that it is, we should then make certain that we are bringing forward the best possible legislation and regulations to make this law work. The question is not really whether this legislation will be good in another six months or six years, but whether the legislation is needed and whether it is good legislation. I think it is. We can always find reasons for delay, and the matter of delay is one thing that disturbs me about this august place.

We are never really quite ready to move, because we have never quite tied up all the loose ends, crossed all the t's and dotted the i's. As a businessman who has been here almost two years, I have found this somewhat disturbing. I was always a little fussy about seeing that everything was in place before I moved, but here things do not work that way. Actually, I think if most businessmen are honest with themselves they will admit that they tolerate a very high degree of inefficiency in their own organizations and they do so for many reasons: first, because they are inefficient themselves, and second because businessmen deal with human beings. People come to Members of Parliament and say, "Get tough; fire these people and knock these people out." When the Prime Minister said that the Civil Service was to be cut back by 10 per cent, the Leader of the Opposition said that action was brutal. And it was brutal. It is not very nice for those who have to carry out this action. That is why we, in our private lives, do not do brutal things very readily but demand that governments and legislators carry out such actions. I do not say these things should not be done. We must be businesslike in our whole approach and thoroughly investigate these suggestions. However, it is much easier to sit back and tell people to do things than to do them yourself.

One minister indicated to me the personal anguish he suffered when it was necessary to make serious cuts in his department. He spoke of the personal hardship this caused. Many people applauded this action, but they did not have to undertake it. Even though everything is not perfect and some things may be criticized, we must still proceed. If the bill is as dangerous as some critics imply, I would be against it.

We must be very careful to not have too much government intrusion into the private sector. I have spoken to many groups across the country on other matters of reform. I am concerned that the tentacles of government do not become too deeply imbedded in our society. Society and industry are changing and are becoming much more complex. It was great to do business in your home town and deal only with people within a short radius. I have been in business for 25 years and realize that businesses have now extended beyond local operations. I am not only talking of myself but other businessmen have seen their businesses spread across the country, into the United States and halfway around the world. The world is not the same; it is changing. We cannot satisfy ourselves with the techniques we have used previously.

I am very familiar with the CSA. I have immense respect for this organization which personifies all that is good in industries and business people working together. I have no time for those people who think that everything done in business is devious. Certainly, there is a dollar measuring stick, but there is also a humanity measuring stick. The same things which keep us from being efficient are the human things that make businessmen responsible and responsive to one another. Of course there are exceptions. There are exceptions in all cases. The CSA has somehow harnessed all the facets of the Canadian industry. There has been great personal sacrifice by the members of this organization who have worked in co-operation with the individuals and companies and contributed to the welfare of these companies.

I found, in working with the CSA, that it sometimes took a long time to develop standards. However, you do not go shooting from the hip because in many cases voluntary standards are being adopted. It is necessary that they be right. However, sometimes there is reason to keep up the pace. I can recall a series of meetings which went on for a number of years concerning the standards for plastic pipe. There was no other body to do this except the CSA. I have been associated with the plastics industry, which is a new industry, and until recently did not have any regulating bodies. It took a fair amount of time to get the CSA working on our problem. The plastics industry's working relationships are improving, but for a long time we were groping. Many new industries and situations are developing so rapidly there will be no time for the same kind of groping.

The Standards Council of Canada can also give assistance to such fine and able people as those associated with the CSA. This is my interpretation of the bill. That is why I am somewhat disturbed about the apparent impasse that seems to exist in the relations between the government and the CSA. I have heard that the initial meetings were most amicable. The objectives seem to be identical. However, for some reason this relationship has fallen apart. As I mentioned, I have immense respect for the people of CSA and the organization itself, as well as the work they have done. I also have immense respect for our Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister in charge of that department is highly regarded on both sides of this House and across the country. The officials of that department are examples of how a first rate government department can operate.

When I return to the business community, for visits only I am afraid, and I am able to talk to the businessmen about something other than the white paper on tax reform, it gives me a great degree of satisfaction to hear about their dealings with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is virtually praise all the way. I do not hear the same praise for all government departments; some departments do have problems. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has a first rate record of working co-operatively with the business people.

As Canadians we must have high standards. We set high personal standards for ourselves, although we do not always live up to them. Sometimes we are pretty self-righteous. Consumers are demanding these standards. As far as my experience is concerned, the CSA never really got down to the consumer level, the housewife level. At a time when we are trying to develop even further as a trading nation, it is most important that people know that Canadian standards are good standards, ones on which they can depend. The Standards Council of Canada seal, if there is to be such a seal, must mean as much outside of Canada as the CSA seal of approval means within Canada. There are countries which have reputations for good standards and good products and other countries which do not.

I think that the Standards Council of Canada can help raise the standards. I do not think they can do this alone. They will require the help of the voluntary groups, the men of good will who know their business. This Council will assist private initiative in this country; rather than opposing, it will assist, co-ordinate and initiate. The Council will offer leadership, guidance and the financing which is very important.

I listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) regarding the metric system. This is an ideal example of how standards can be used to great effect. It is a joy to deal with European businessmen. When sitting around a table of drawings and blueprints, although you are not able to converse in the same language, everything is much simpler because you are working in the metric system. Just moving decimal points around is really great. I think the metric system has many possibilities with respect to engineering, and the hon. member for Malpeque mentioned the construction industry.

The metric system is very useful in systems building. I had occasion a year or so ago to meet with some people from England who were engaged in the systems building business. They are now functioning in Canada in co-operation with a Canadian company. As a matter of interest, they got into this field by building the first Mulberry Harbours for the Normandy landing in World War II. Also, they built 70 per cent of the council housing in London. They have always used the metric system. To convert to the inch-pound system for the American and Canadian markets has been a horrendous experience. The metric system is much simpler.

If we really want to do something for our youth, why not adopt the simple metric system? Of course, we cannot switch over quickly. This is an immense task. Continuous studies of the metric system are being conducted by the Congress of the United States. Even the studies by the Ford Motor Company are immense. It may be an exaggeration, but it has been said that the time spent on a child's education could be cut by 40 percent if he were taught the simple metric system. Trying to figure out pounds, shillings and pence as opposed to dollars and cents is perhaps the simplest example. It would also be interesting if we could work out the time and dates in the metric system. I thought of this not when thinking about the metric system but when thinking about how complicated our system of times and dates is. If we could only get in on to something like the metric system it would result in simplification, but this would involve altering the solar system and I do not think even this government could do that. While we think we have God on our side, I think he is still in control.

I must say I had a notice of motion on the subject of the metric system suggesting that we should at least, as a government, offer leadership by printing all our requests, our purchase orders, our standards and so on in the traditional system with the metric equivalent in parenthesis alongside so that we might slowly get used to comparing the two. It is a matter of comparison. When we say $2.50 and an Englishman says three pounds, two shillings and twopence; he knows what he means without figuring anything out. It is a familiarity which one develops. If we could start developing this kind of familiarity at the earliest possible stage, the transformation would be simple; it would be cheap and we could get along with it. We might even get to be a bi-measurement people as well as a bi-cultural and bi-lingual people.

There is another area. I do not say it has been overlooked but it is one which I have not heard discussed this afternoon. It concerns the importance of our relationships with the ISO. and other international standards bodies. I am sure it has not been overlooked. I think, probably, I was absent when it was discussed. I think this function of the SCC. will be of prime importance. Referring to my earlier remarks about a shrinking world, and how we are doing business in all parts of the world, I think it is terribly important that we should have close working relationships. I have been impressed with the Europeans in this respect. There is one firm in particular I can think of which deals with polyvinylchloride pipe. This is a very small facet of the whole economy but it is terribly important; it may sound highly technical to you, Mr. Speaker, but it is bread and butter to me. In any event, everybody who is involved in this field of work knows everybody else engaged in it personally; they know what they are talking about, they know what the standards are, and the standards are being continually upgraded because Jim Pepper in London knows Herr Schmidt in Switzerland, and Schmidt has developed a darned good system. They upgrade the standard all along. The British have their own, the French have their own and the Americans have their own and each one works a little differently.

I do not think there is any standard to fall into here. But we have to develop one which suits our particular needs and I think the co-ordination of our efforts is important. It is not only the CSA. I sat endlessly on Canadian government specification board meetings, again in the private sector working closely with government, to develop standards applicable to government and useful to government. This was work which government could not possibly have done on its own. I am going back 15 or 20 years, when I come to think of it. We were travelling to Ottawa and sitting in meetings at the National Research Council for hours and hours on end, day after day, stretching over months and months with no compensation, to help develop a government standard that we knew a little about and a few other people knew a little about. We pooled our knowledge to develop a good standard. There was nothing in it for us. Ultimately we got an opportunity to quote on some government business. My experience in quoting on government business is this: quoting on it is O.K., it is when you get it that you are in trouble.

An hon. Member: Who is going to pay for it?

Mr. Danson: I hope the private sector will still contribute in this way and that the standards council will be the co-ordinating body.

I cannot help thinking of the National Building Code. I do not know quite where it will fit in. It seems that one of our failures in this field has been our failure to get the municipalities to accept the National Building Code in its entirety, because there are variations. There is not the co-operation which is necessary and the building code applies in too few important areas.

I believe that since the institution of these hearings the CSA has tried to expand its facilities and broaden its entire approach. I think this is fine. This is possibly what the intent is. If this is what the SCC does, it will be great. It saves the government from getting into something else. A fine organization that is working well can broaden its scope with the encouragement of the government. But I think it has been limited. I think the work of the CSA has been broad and productive, but I think there have been areas which have been missed. I think we shall make certain that there are fewer of these gaps in the future because we shall have a co-ordinating group.

As I understand it, this is not to be a huge group or a terribly expensive group. As a matter of fact, the meetings which the government and the CSA call for in the initial stages imply a very small co-ordinating group. I do not say it will be the Canada Council of Standards, but just as one would not have the Canada Council go out and put on a piccolo concert I do not think you will find the Standards Council of Canada doing the job of the private sector and the voluntary agencies unless it should become absolutely essential, in which case it has a basic responsibility. The work cannot be left altogether to the market place. We are deluding ourselves if we think we live in a completely free economy. I should not say "free". We live in a free society, I suggest. I meant a completely free market.

There are many factors at work, particularly internationally, which are affecting us, all with their good intentions and all with their own viewpoint. None of us is without a bias or without a viewpoint. This is perfectly legitimate. But I think the people from the private sector who are objecting to these proposals are afraid of something which I do not think stands a chance of happening. I am a member of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, of the Canadian Manufacturers Association and of other groups including the Society of the Plastic Industry, all of which, I believe, are concerned. These are the very people who will be involved. They will not only be doing the work themselves but they will be reaping the benefits themselves, as will all Canadians. I agree we must be terribly careful that we do not reach down and spoil the good job that these people are doing. Nevertheless, I think there really is a need for a co-ordinating body. I think someone called it a super council. I do not like that word; it sounds like a commissar of standards and I do not think we function that way in this country.

The problem about some of these criticisms is that we speak as though we were not Canadians. You know, we have always had a system, our Parliamentary system, under which with a Prime Minister and a majority government we could have the worst dictatorship in the world. Yet somehow we have not.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No?

Mr. Danson: Well, not yet. I think Canadians will fight this at all costs. We just would not allow it to happen. If there were even the slightest hint of that from the front benches—and there is no indication of it—the people on the back benches would not stand for it because I think basically we are a free and democratic society, so this will not happen. With all the checks and balances the other systems have, I do not think any have any more responsibility than we have. Maybe there are some which have what might be considered a degree more efficiency but I would not trade that efficiency for the choice I have, and in any case I very much question that efficiency as well.

This reflects itself in the quality of life. I think I was saying in the debate yesterday that we have the second highest standard of living in the world. Some people say it is the third highest because Sweden has a technically higher standard of living. I respect the Swedes. They are a great people and Sweden is a magnificent country. But I do not think I would change our standard of living for theirs, nor would I change our standard of living for that of the country which is supposed to have the world's highest standard of living. These are not things that make a country great. The thing that makes us great is that we are Canadians, and we make ourselves great in our own special way, not any better than other people but just in our own way.

I have digressed into an area of philosophy that perhaps I should not get into when talking on the subject of standards, but the standards we are talking of are Canadian standards. This is Canadian legislation and we will respond to it and co-operate with it as Canadians. This means we will not be extreme unless some of our friends get into the matter too deeply, though I do not think this is likely.

In view of the affection with which the minister responsible for the bill is held in this House, I think that the terms of reference here will be eminently fair. I look forward to a great role for industry, for business and for the consumer as a result of a first class job done by the private agencies in this country, co-ordinated with, and inspired and assisted by, the Standards Council of Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to express my gratitude to some hon. members who have participated in this discussion, namely, the hon. members for Gander-Twillingate, Wellington, St. John's East and Champlain (Messrs. Lundrigan, Hales, McGrath and Matte) who have remained in the House to hear the replies to some of the questions they have asked.

May I also thank the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) for his kind words about me and the officials of the department it is my privilege to head. The reading of his comments on the ability and merits of my staff will make us feel that we should get for our offices a new frame in which to keep today's Hansard.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's East has asked me to throw more light on the matter. That reminds me of the vicar who, in the presence of his bishop, had preached in a particularly aggressive and loud manner. After his sermon, he leaves the pulpit and, when passing in front of his bishop, he says to him: I thundered at them, didn't I, Your Excellency? The bishop, not very much impressed with the content of the sermon, immediately replied: A little more enlightening would have been better. It may be the difficulty encountered by those who, like me, do not thunder at people, namely that they do not attract enough attention when they enlighten. Nevertheless, I shall attempt to answer the questions that were put to me.

It will not be possible for me to do everything today, but I refer my hon. friends to my speech of March 12 where I foresaw many of the questions they put to me then and again today.

In the first part of that speech, I analyzed the very concept of standards: What are standards? Why do we need them? How are they set up? And, what purpose do they serve? I think we have there a small code that every young man should know about standards.

He will find there especially the distinction between voluntary and compulsory standards. The member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) seemed sorry that we are not today going to pass a bill to set up compulsory standards in every field. I feel there is room, in an industrialized society, for these two categories of standards, compulsory and voluntary ones.

But the most important part of the preamble to my speech of March 12 is that where I try to define the characteristics or essential qualities a national standards organization should have. I said, first of all, that it should be representative. The national organization must absolutely be representative of all the parties interested, directly or indirectly, in the adoption of standards.

In my opinion, this body should not only be impartial but also appear to be so. I remember when I quoted the well known example of Caesar's wife who had not only to be chaste but also to seem so in the eyes of the world. The same is true when we speak in terms of a national standards organization.

This organization should also command the respect of all, it should be dynamic and it should be aware of national, domestic and international policies. In spite of all my admiration for the Canadian Standards Association, and though I would be the first to acknowledge the valuable services it has provided to Canada, I do not think that right now, it meets the criteria I have indicated, and this is the view of the Association itself, not just mine. I have here, for instance, a press release from the Canadian Standards Association dated March 3 which reads:

[English]

The Canadian Standards Association today announced a nine-point plan to expand and strengthen its role as Canada's national standards organization. The changes range through improved communication—

That is, communication with their own members.

—to establishment of a consumer council, and give high priority to international standards work and technical aid to Canadian exporters.

Gordon B. Tebo, CSA managing director, said the planned expansion is a direct result of recent reorganization.

[Translation]

If I wanted to show off, I could also suggest that these important changes—which, incidently, I do welcome—are—

[English]

I might add this has been the direct result of the introduction of the Canadian Standards bill in this House.

Mr. Lundrigan: That is not a fair statement, as you know.

Mr. Pepin: I think it is a fair statement. I am glad to see that the CSA is improving itself, but I cannot promise to bring in a bill every year to make sure that the CSA is the totally dynamic body it should be at all times.

Mr. Lundrigan: It is a very unfair statement.

Mr. Pepin: It is not an unfair statement. I am sorry, I am moving into English. I could give a list of 50 sectors in industry within which the CSA has not been fully operative or operative at all.

Mr. McGrath: You are not perfect either.

Mr. Pepin: That is exactly my point. But the way hon. members opposite speak of the CSA, it is as if they are speaking about God or the Bible. The CSA is only one of the standards organizations in Canada; there are many others. The CSA is the most important one and has done wonderful things, but there are many other things it has not done.

The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) asked me what was the philosophy behind this legislation, and the philosophy is simply that. We observe that we have a number of standards-making organizations in Canada; we observe that there are some areas unstandardized; we observe that there is no really national standard policy-making organization. There is no one to decide, for example, in which area a greater effort is needed. This is exactly the reason we have brought the bill into the House.

I think this procedure is quite rational and has been done in other areas of activity. For example, we have a Canada Science Council. I suggest it is quite desirable and normal to have a Canadian Standards Council that is representative of all interests, of consumers, of all levels of government, of all types of groups concerned with standards. Each of these will be represented so that a truly national policy on standards will be evolved. It will be the focus for the forum, the umbrella, under which all those concerned with this sphere of Canadian activity will meet. I think this is a most desirable objective.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Hales: Would the minister accept a question.

Mr. Pepin: Yes.

Mr. Hales: Would the minister not agree that the Canadian Standards Association has done a very commendable job in the past on a national basis? Is there any reason that organization should not be allowed to continue in this way?

Mr. Pepin: I have already said that I have great admiration for the Association and certainly it will be allowed to continue. At the same time I also said that in my estimation—and I hope it will also be in the estimation of most members of this House—this organization has not satisfied fully the criteria which I believe should be met by an organization representing the total Canadian interest in matters of standardization. I do not think it has.

I have received letters from many people, Mr. Speaker, and I, like the hon. member, will read some of my correspondence in a few minutes.

Mr. Hales: That is the only point on which we differ.

Mr. Pepin: I do not think so.

[Translation]

I would like now to come back to the French language Mr. Speaker.

The hon. member's reaction was very interesting. It is quite typical I think. The official opposition usually adopts the "Why change" attitude. It is going to cost more, they say. Why create something new when there are already well established organizations which apparently are quite satisfactory?

On the other hand, the NDP's attitude is exactly the opposite. If the new Standards Council is not—

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would get around to reacting to the fundamental questions raised by hon. members rather than again philosophizing on how he agrees or disagrees with various members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pepin: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not get the question if there was one.

An hon. Member: There was no question.

[Translation]

Mr. Pepin: I was precisely talking about those two attitudes. One, conservative if I may say so, wishing to keep what we already have regardless of its numerous imperfections and the other, from the New Democratic Party, which consists in abolishing what we already have in the hope of getting the ideal thing.

So, as a good Liberal, I suggest a compromise between both extremes. I am pleased to see that the hon. member for Champlain seemed also in favour of a Standards Council of Canada while using the Canadian Standards Association's services. It is exactly what we are trying to do in the bill I have the honour of presenting now.

Mr. Speaker, no doubt some people in the Canadian Standards Association have made great efforts to create concern or fear about the proposed Standards Council of Canada, despite the bill and the minister's endeavours to reassure them.

The Canadian Standards Association sent SOS messages to several groups of individuals, companies or associations in Canada and, at its request, people wrote us. In most cases, I simply replied by sending them a copy of Hansard for March 12, in which are recorded the speech by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate and mine.

Quite often, and particularly on this matter, the correspondence of the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) might not be up to date. Representatives from some associations showed fear following the intervention of the CSA, but others wrote back to tell us that they were quite satisfied with the replies obtained.

I have before me quite a number of such letters. I cannot read them all, but some of them may serve as illustrations.

[English]

This is a letter from the Canadian Gas Association of Canada which, as you know, is an important standards-making association. It reads:

> After reviewing your statements, it is difficult to understand why we have been literally bombarded with statements and briefs requesting our support in bringing about the delay or dissolution of Bill C-163.

It continues:

> Since this step would probably have to be taken ultimately to ensure uniformity of standards-writing in Canada for the benefit of industry and consumer alike, you and your staff are to be commended for your foresight in vigorously pursuing this change and for giving the Standards Council of Canada an opportunity to become organized into a smooth-flowing agency in the event Canada becomes involved in long-range and complicated measurement conversions.

I could read the whole letter. There are two more pages, and it becomes more and more eloquent as it goes along.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So do you.

Mr. Pepin: So do I? I have quite a few more letters. Perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg something, who is a favourite of the weaker sex, would like to know what the National Council of Women of Canada has to say.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I did not say they were weaker.

Mr. Pepin: I don't think so either. This is a letter from the National Council of Women of Canada. The letter reads:

> We wish to assure you of our support when you introduce Bill C-163 and of our interest as we follow the readings through to Royal Assent.

They got the message. I cannot say so much for some members on the other side of the House.

Mr. McGrath: I hope the minister is more conciliatory when he sells wheat.

Mr. Pepin: The Canadian Wheat Board does that. Here is another letter from the Canadian Institute of Plumbing and Heating. This was written to one of my officials, and it reads:

> Please assure Mr. Pepin that this Institute is most anxious to co-operate wherever public interest is concerned. Many of our people are well versed in the subject of standards and we would be pleased to assist the council in determining the need for and the definition of individual standards.

I could give you copies of these letters. They are most eloquent. I am the first to recognize that we also have opposition. Some people have been more influenced by the SOS's, they received from the Canadian Standards Association than by reading the bill. In some instances, I wonder if they have read the bill or read it well. However, most of those who had doubts and who have received the information we provided have been reassured.

A number of specific questions have been asked today which I shall try to answer very rapidly. One has to do with the powers of the proposed Standards Council of Canada. May I repeat and emphasize that the Standards Council will foster, promote and co-ordinate. It will not usurp—which was the word used by my friend from Gander-Twillingate—take over or supersede. The Standards Council of Canada will not duplicate the activities of existing organizations. It will not write standards of its own. But I believe it is fair and desirable in the public interest that the Standards Council of Canada have the power to act if this should be necessary. If there should be a recognized need for standards in some areas, and if none of the existing standards organizations move, I think it is in the national interest that the Standards Council of Canada should have the power to create an organization that will do so or to ask an existing organization to do what is needed. I believe this is in the national interest. After all this is our responsibility in this House. We are not here to do what the Canadian Standards Association believes is right.

We are here to decide, with all the facts before us, what is in the interests of Canada. As Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I am not here to defend the interests of industry; I am here to defend the interests of the people of Canada, and I think it is high time that all of us here concentrated on this particular matter. I add that the Standards Council will not operate inspection or testing laboratories; it will not invade the revenue sources of the Canadian Standards Association or those of other organizations.

The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) is particularly concerned about the finances of the Council as he has to live up to his reputation in these matters. I might say to him that the Standards Council's expenses will be paid out of moneys appropriated by Parliament, so that it will not encroach on the revenues of the Canadian Standards Association or of other organizations. The Canadian Standards Association has its own money which is derived from the services they render to industry. In addition the funds voted by Parliament for its own operation, the Standards Council will have funds to assist the CSA and other standards organizations. When the Standards Council of Canada becomes fully operational in two or three years' time, the annual expenses of the Council and of its staff are expected to be about $400,000. It is also expected that grants to assist the other standards organizations will be determined by the Council on the basis of need. However, it is expected that initially upwards of $200,000 will be required for this purpose annually.

The point was raised that in this time of austerity this was too expensive an item. I believe the hon. member for Wellington, whose intelligence can only be compared to his responsibility regarding public funds, should bear in mind that possibly millions of dollars are not being earned, are in fact being lost, because of deficiencies in our standards operations. I think this should be taken into account at this time.

Mr. Hales: Would the minister permit a question at this point? Could he advise the House on what budget the Canadian Standards Association operates?

Mr. Pepin: I think it is about $4 million to $5 million, but, if my memory serves me correctly, most of this is derived from revenues for services, the very direct services it renders to industry, for example, in the form of testing and inspecting. As the hon. member knows, the federal government provides $51,000 to help the CSA fulfil its international responsibilities. Of course, this will be part of the $200,000 which I already mentioned.

It has been mentioned that the staff of the Council would be very numerous. The Council will be responsible for determining what it needs to do and in the light of appropriations by Parliament and the size of the staff it will require to do it. At the time that the government and the Canadian Standards Association steering committee met, it was estimated that a staff of 13 professional people and 11 support people would be required. Since the Council will not engage in standards writing, testing and inspection activities, it will not need to hire or steal away personnel from CSA or from any other standards organization.

I should like to comment on many other points but my time is almost exhausted. One subject which was raised very often in the House has to do with a comparison between what the bill we are introducing now proposes to establish and what exists in France, Great Britain, the United States or elsewhere in the world. I have a series of comparisons before me now and the conclusion is simply that we have created something sui generis. In some ways it is like the British Council and in other ways it is unlike it. In some aspects it is like the French standards organization and in other aspects it is not. What is wrong with that? We are creating something that is typically Canadian, and personally I am all in favour of that. I understand that some Americans disagree with the way it is done in the United States, and this would only confirm that we should do our own thing.

There is one more point I would like to mention, especially in the light of what the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) said regarding the importance of conversion to the metric system. I am very concerned about the delays that this bill is encountering in the House because it was our intention, and still is, to give to the Council paramount responsibility in the private sector for encouraging preparations for changes over to the metric system so as to achieve optimum benefits at a minimum cost. Specifically, it would be the Standards Council which would initiate studies, planning, consultations and be the ultimate organization for a co-ordinated approach to the conversion which would need to be capable of flexible adjustment to the evolving situation in Canada and abroad. In this instance we need somebody quite au fait, quite well informed.

There is no doubt, as the hon. member for Malpeque intimated, that the speed of the conversion will vary from one industry to another. In some individual sectors the conversion has already taken place; in other sectors it cannot take place until the conversion is carried out in the United States. So we need somebody quite well informed on all these facts to direct the effort that we want to see made in carrying out the conversion to the metric system.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, having all my life advocated flexibility, compromise and co-operation, I am willing today to set an example and prove that I do what I preach.

Since the beginning of this debate, and particularly during the recent sittings of the house which were devoted to it, many conversations, as I already mentioned, have taken place between my officials and representatives of the C.S.A. and the C.E.M.A. —the Canadian Electrical Manufacturers' Association—provincial governments and other agencies of all kinds.

Mr. Speaker, I myself took part in some of those meetings. Other similar meetings are contemplated, one I think for tomorrow, between the officials of my department and the representatives of the Canadian Standards Association.

It seems, Mr. Speaker, that interested people have arrived at a consensus. I should say rather that there is at this time a consensus regarding the establishment of that council. There does not seem to be any more objections to the establishment of the council itself.

• (4:50 p.m.)

As I said earlier, many who had reservations were comforted and reassured, since in any case they were in full agreement from the beginning.

But we still face difficulties about the definition of the powers of the Council to be and the choice of words which for some are too dynamic, too "active". They would want more "passive" words.

Mr. Speaker, I am ready to do the necessary efforts to reconcile all grammar and vocabulary experts on this matter. I think that we should now refer the bill to the committee in order to seek, like men of good will, some compromise.

I wish to make it clear, because I do not want to be charged with having given wrong impressions, that I am not at all desirous to change the substance of this bill. I want very much, however, to please the parties concerned about the formulas defining, for example, the relationship between the Council and the standards organizations.

In any case, the Canadian Standards Association is now ready to appear before the committee—at least according to my information—to submit a brief and discuss changes it would like to see made in the legislation.

As for me, I fully agree with that. Besides, I think that this bill should have been referred to the committee a long time ago.

[English]

I hope that at this time the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) will stand up and accept my very cordial invitation—

Mr. McGrath: The minister's cordiality is a little late.

Mr. Pepin: —to withdraw his amendment and allow the bill to go to committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lundrigan: I was about to reply to the minister's suggestion that I withdraw the amendment. That was the intention of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, previously, but having listened to the minister I am now more convinced than ever that there is a need for the amendment and that the sections of the bill granting certain of the powers need to be redrafted. I also wish to say that it is my impression the minister has misrepresented the views of the opposition, who agreed in principle with the bill but not with the extent of the powers provided by it. That is the reason for our amendment.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Lundrigan) which was negatived on the following division:

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There have been some discussions concerning the particular committee to which this bill should be sent. I think there might be agreement to an amendment deleting the reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and substituting therefor the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. In these circumstances I should like to propose, seconded by my colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene):

That all the words after "referred" be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs."

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pepin moved:

That Bill C-163 to provide for the establishment of a Standards Council of Canada be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Yukon Placer Mining Act

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that much of the private members' hour has elapsed, I wonder whether the House would agree to calling it six o'clock so that we might have a full debate next time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before calling it six o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland)—Grain—Wheat—Suggested withdrawal or alteration of acreage reduction program; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Post Office—Postage rate increases forecast by minister—government policy; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Transport—Fate of regional office in Halifax.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 5.28 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

YUKON PLACER MINING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOCATING OF CLAIMS, ETC.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill S-4, to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Chrétien moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

NORTHERN INLAND WATERS BILL

CONSERVATION, DEVELOPMENT AND UTILIZATION OF RESOURCES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-187, respecting inland water resources in the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chrétien moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I think it might be worth while to take a few moments at this stage of the proceedings to emphasize one point that I think is of importance. I may say that the amendments made in committee were generally agreeable to all members of the committee, and I do not propose to discuss them except to emphasize that the understanding was that the purpose of these amendments was to give the people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories a greater voice in the operations of the boards which will be set up under the act.

However, having recognized that, I think it is important that those of us in this chamber should be aware that what we are enacting here is essentially legislation that would normally be enacted by a legislature within a province. However, because of the existing constitutional situation we in this chamber are, I feel, acting in this particular instance on behalf of the residents of the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories. In addition, we should not be unaware of the fact that this bill ties in, up to a point, with the Canada water bill that is currently before the House.

I am not at this point raising the question of procedure that was debated at one point in the proceedings in the House in regard to the sequence with which third reading should be given these bills. As I understand it, this bill has still to go to the other place. However, I should like to stress—and this is my purpose in rising—that in no case should royal assent be given to this bill until a final determination is made of the water act, to which there is specific reference in this legislation.

Because of the tie-in between this bill and the water act and the fact that both under this bill and under the Canada water bill it is possible to enter into arrangements involving the governments of one or more of the provinces and the federal government, and in view of the specific reference in this bill to involving one or more of the provinces in an arrangement with one or more of the territories, I suggest hon. members should be aware of the concern expressed by the people of the territories, which concern was also expressed by witnesses before the committee, that regard be had to the proposal that the water resources of the territories should be used first and foremost for the benefit of the residents of the territories and for the economic development of the territories.

In view of the jurisdictional authority that we have over the destiny of the residents of the territories, which is different from that which we have over those people dwelling within the boundaries of the provinces, it is important that we stress at this point the operations of the water boards in the two territories, to which the majority of appointments will be made by the federal government.

We should also stress the point with the federal government that what is done under this legislation and under the Canada Water Act should be done in a way which will not be detrimental to the long-range interests of the development of the territories. As one councillor of the Yukon Territorial Council emphasized, they do not want to be locked in now by action which would hamper their growth if and when, as they hope, they become a province some time in the future. I feel that this point is worthy of emphasis as we consider this bill at third reading stage. It was for that reason I thought I should make these few remarks and point out these facts to the chamber. It was something that was certainly in the minds of all members of the committee which considered this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES BILL

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL MARKETING COUNCIL AND AGENCIES

The House resumed from Monday, April 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson that Bill C-197, to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-197 I do not think that in my time in the House there has ever been a bill that will attack the economics of western Canada more than this particular bill.

Mr. Olson: Attack the problems.

Mr. Woolliams: The minister said "attack the problems". If he will listen to me for a few moments I am sure he will agree with me. I do not think there has been more dissatisfaction in western Canada under any government or under any minister whether it be the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) or the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) who looks after the Wheat Board.

At the outset I want to say that there are two kinds of boards. There are boards in which the producer has something to say and where the jurisdiction of the board is under the control of the producer. When the Canadian Wheat Board Act was established by R. B. Bennett in 1935, if one goes back in history he will find that the producers were represented on that board. But when we analyse the board that is being established by Bill C-197, we find the government and the cabinet of Canada is to be permitted to take over the full control of the marketing of all agricultural commodities by proclamation of the government. At the outset, in order to make my point quickly, I should like to say that this is the most dangerous, dictatorial, damaging and destructive piece of legislation ever brought in by any Minister of Agriculture or any government, and it is one which particularly attacks western Canada.

In western Canada, whether in an urban or rural area, the people have no hesitation in appreciating that agriculture in the province of Manitoba, the province of Saskatchewan and the province of Alberta is still the biggest industry of western Canada. That, of course, does not detract from the petroleum industry. But agriculture is still the primary industry. If one examines closely the Canada Year Book he will find that in Ontario the gross national product is equal to that of any of the western provinces when one considers all the farm commodities marketed. The only exception perhaps would be in the few years when there were large sales of grain in Western Canada.

Let us take a look at what this bill really would do. First of all, our position as a party is that we were the party which in 1935 set up the Canadian Wheat Board. It was not a Wheat Board such as we have today, which is controlled by a group of employees of the cabinet. It was a board representative of the producers. The idea of the Canadian Wheat Board was that it would organize the sellers against the organized purchasers, because at that time grain was on the open grain exchange and was subject to fluctuation. In those days grain sold for as low as 20 cents a bushel.

The government of the day, led by the Prime Minister from my home city, brought in legislation known as the Canadian Wheat Board Act. At that time the Canadian Wheat Board was not a compulsory board. It was set up to market a certain percentage of grain and to protect the farmers. It had the support of the wheat pools and the farm organizations. When we look back in history we find that in 1935 the only people who did not support the legislation were the members of the Liberal Party. All one need do to establish this fact is to examine Hansard for that period.

Let us take a look at the present situation. What the government wants to do in Canada is take over the marketing, by proclamation, of all the products produced on the farm. Today I plead particularly for the cattlemen of western Canada. If I might use this phrase without being presumptuous, I would say God only knows, if the cattle markets get into the condition the wheat market is in under this government, what will be left of western Canada? The land will fall into the hands of the state, as promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the city of Weyburn during the last election.

Mr. Olson: That is not true.

Mr. Woolliams: We have heard a good deal of propaganda lately in respect of this compulsory board. Although it is under the jurisdiction of the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan, nevertheless the Minister of Agriculture is on the hustings from time to time defending this particular policy. Not so long ago he sat to my left as a member of a right wing party. I am sure that if he were standing in my place tonight he would be attacking this kind of legislation which he is now trying to pilot through the House, because he would be against this dictatorialness.

Let us look at the Wheat Board. They talk about a world surplus. There is no real wheat surplus. There is a surplus in respect of buyers. Two-thirds of the world's people go to bed hungry every night. Yet we have what we call the LIFT program. All it will ever lift when this plan begins to operate will be the top six inches of soil of the summerfallow of the Prairies. Let us look at what is said about the surplus and what is to be done. They will appoint the civil servants and bureaucrats, they will make the proclamation and then they will take over the control of cattle, hogs and other farm products.

I have read the terms and conditions of this bill. The minister had better go back to his legal officers to find out what it says. Let us look at what this set-up would do. I have before me the latest report prepared by S. C. Hudson for the Economic Council of Canada. This is what it says:

> Canada's wheat export position has deteriorated—

It does not say there is a surplus.

> —from a 24 per cent share of the 54 million ton average wheat marketings for the 1962/66 period to a 19 per cent share of 45 million tons marketed in 1968. An examination of Canada's competitive position in 23 countries or groups of associated countries, which in 1967 accounted for more than 80 per cent of the total world imports of wheat and provided more than 80 per cent of Canada's export wheat market, indicates that Canada's share has been declining in most markets.

• (8:20 p.m.)

What has really happened is that we cattlemen in Alberta do not want the government getting into the cattle business. I say now to the Liberal government, and particularly to the Minister of Agriculture who comes from Medicine Hat, one of the great ranch areas of western Canada, that I am sure the ranchers in his constituency and the ranchers in Alberta will tell him and his government to keep their hands off cattle. They do not want the government interfering in the cattle industry.

Mr. Olson: No one intends to.

Mr. Woolliams: Let me tell the minister that under this bill he will have the power to do so, and so will the cabinet. Maybe he is one of the silent men in his cabinet. In fact, I may say that he was a very strong man when he was in the opposition but he has proven to be a very weak minister because he has no say in the cabinet whatsoever, and he knows he has not.

An hon. Member: So true.

Mr. Corbin: You are saying that because you are jealous.

Mr. Woolliams: I am not jealous. I would rather stand here with my principles than sit over there without them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: I was about to say that in the last two years Canada has moved from being the first exporting nation of wheat in the world down to sixth place. The minister, who is an intelligent man, knows this. He knows that if we had held our first place as an exporting nation, the western farmers today would not be in the mess which was described so well this week in the Globe and Mail. Even they have caught up after two years and realize that the situation is serious in the west. All you have to do is to walk down the streets of Regina. I have not seen anything like it since the 1930's. There is a depression there. We have been talking about inflation in this House, but there is a real recession in western Canada in most major centres as well as in the towns and on the farms, and the minister knows it.

I say to him that with a compulsory board which controls wheat marketing—I will say something about that in a few moments—those salaried people have made a mess in the grain exporting business, which has been intensified by the fact that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) would not make any move with regard to strikes in Vancouver while we were losing our markets throughout the world, particularly in Japan, and not upholding our agreements such as the export agreement we had with Russia. The minister knows it and I know it. This is an indictment of the government and an accusation that I make against the government. It is true, and the minister cannot deny it. There is no defence to it.

Mr. Corbin: It is easy to make.

Mr. Woolliams: This may be, but it is easy for the hon. member to sit in his seat. I do not see him standing on his feet and saying anything intelligent in the House.

Mr. Corbin: You are wrong. You are never in the House to listen to my speeches.

Mr. Woolliams: Let the hon. member listen tonight and he will learn something. I thought that was the member that fell out with the government today, but I may have made a mistake. I continue reading:

> An analysis of observations relating to the competitive position of Canadian wheat in each of 23 selected wheat markets suggests a variety of causes for the deterioration in Canada's share of export markets. These include a lack of uniformity in the protein content of Canadian wheat shipments;

For the last two years this party has continually told the government that one of our export problems is the protein quantity of our wheat in reference to changing the kind of grading. Nothing was done about that situation up to this session.

Let me go on with this quotation. It then reads:

> a lack of flexibility in pricing associated with selling—

What did this government do through the compulsory board? If they make the same mess of the cattle and hogs business, if they put it under this dictatorial act, they will lose markets for the cattle of Canada as effectively as they have lost wheat markets. Let them not deny it because that is a fact.

Mr. Olson: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Woolliams: The minister can ask his question when I am finished. I only have a few moments to get something on the record. I will be prepared to answer the minister's questions any time afterwards. What about flexibility in pricing? While all the exporting wheat nations of the world were cutting their price contrary to the international wheat agreement, Canada sat around doing nothing. I agree that this was long before the minister held his position, but the fact is that Canada sat around and did nothing. Finally, the government and the Wheat Board woke up; the men on salary woke up. It does not matter to them how much wheat they sell, they still get their money. They are not on commission and they do not get an extra amount of money for getting off their posteriors and getting some business.

The selling price beat us. The United States was dumping wheat in Japan and all the other markets of the world, and what did the Liberals say? Their public relations men tell the western producers and a few people here and there in western Canada, "We cannot help it; we have a surplus". They cannot explain the fact that the United States and other exporting nations dumped wheat in our world markets at a price far below the international wheat agreement, while we sat around for a year and a half with labour troubles which did everything to destroy the economy of our western agriculture. I agree with what Senator Cameron said, that if there were an election tomorrow or even after tomorrow there would not be one Liberal elected west of the Great Lakes. He happens to be a Liberal appointment, for the information of my good friends.

Let me go on with the quotation as follows:

> a lack of flexibility in pricing associated with selling on an f.o.b. basis at "one price to all customers"; insufficient effective market development work—

The Economic Council of Canada says that what has been done by the Canadian Wheat Board has failed. On close examination one finds that they are not doing their job. In the face of that evidence this government has the audacity to bring in Bill C-197, to which I will refer in a few moments, under which the marketing of cattle and hogs will be taken over not only in western Canada but throughout the country as wheat is controlled by the Wheat Board.

Let us pause here for a few moments to consider the cattle industry. I should like to read from the Canada Year Book. I know that the Liberals are even capable of changing that when it does not agree with their view, as they did during the last constitutional crisis. I can understand why the Minister of Agriculture would question even the facts contained in the Canada Year Book.

Mr. Olson: All I said was I think it would be a good idea to pause now.

Mr. Woolliams: Let us look at what kind of business we are talking about. We are not talking about peanuts, as the Prime Minister called it the other day. The number of beef cattle exported to the United States in 1962 amounted to 128,524. But on the farms in that year in Canada—this is the latest figure—there were 12,781,000 cattle and calves.

Let us take a look at Saskatchewan to see why the ranchmen want the government to keep their hands off their business. It is bad enough for the government to get into their business through the white paper, but let them stay out of marketing: that is our message to the government. In Saskatchewan there are on the farms right now 1,596,000 beef cattle and 272,000 milk cattle. In Alberta we have 2,167,000 beef cattle and 282,000 milk cattle. On the farms in the whole of Canada today there are approximately 13 million head of cattle. That is not peanuts. That is a multi-million dollar industry, yet this government wants to appoint a bunch of Grit bureaucrats to take over the control of marketing and to lose it as effectively as they have in respect of wheat.

Let us take a look at what this bill has to say. First of all, the board which the government wants to set up will be absolutely compulsory. They set up a special council and say, "You may have hearings". But who appoints the members of the council? The government does. The council then makes certain recommendations to the minister, or the minister makes certain recommendations to the council. You can rest assured that, as with any other board whether it is the board of control for television or Information Canada, a bunch of Grits will be appointed. There is no question about that. I say, first of all, that this board will put all the ranchers and all the farmers out of business. They lost the grain trade because they were operating a paralysed Wheat Board and did nothing to assist the board. Now they will lose the cattle market and the hog market.

• (3:30 p.m.)

What is this dictatorial monstrosity? That is the question I ask this House tonight. It is a compulsory board. I have read this bill and I understand it thoroughly. Once we have passed Bill C-197 it will be a compulsory board; there is no question about that. I can tell the minister that the ranchers in Alberta do not want a board, voluntary or compulsory, but even if they did want a board surely it should be a board formed by producers who know the cattle business. Some of the men the government presently has looking after wheat do not know the difference between wheat, barley and oats. I am sure the same will apply with regard to the hog and cattle industries. If there is any question about that, I would ask the minister to turn to page 4 of the bill where it says:

> There shall be a council to be known as the National Farm Products Marketing Council consisting of not less than three and not more than nine members—

Who will appoint the council? The Governor in Council. Who is the Governor in Council? The cabinet. The cabinet will appoint Grits. Then the bill says:

> If a member of the council, other than the chairman, is absent or unable to act, the Governor in Council may appoint a temporary substitute member.

Then the bill talks about hearings. The only hearings the farmers will get will be if the minister in his graciousness permits them to have a hearing.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Woolliams: That is exactly what will happen. This board will advise the minister, or the minister will advise the board. If the minister decides tomorrow morning to take over the cattle industry of Alberta and Saskatchewan, which I call a multi-million dollar industry—it is worth at least $600 million in Alberta alone—and the marketing of cattle or any other commodity that is known as farm produce, he will be able to do it without a plebiscite from the people and without the consent of the producers.

Then the bill says that the board may consult with the producers. Isn't that very gracious of the government? Members of the government say, "We will consult if we feel like it." We know the kind of government we are getting now. They do not consult with the people. This measure will be rammed through the House, rammed through a sham committee and passed, and then the minister and the Minister without Portfolio who is looking after the grain trade will be able to take over the marketing of cattle. That is the only farm life left in the economics of western Canada, otherwise it will become a dust bowl created by the LIFT program when the winds blow in May and June.

Of course, the minister says that all this is not compulsory. He shakes his head. I have read this bill and I am glad to see he is starting to read it now, because he is getting some bad advice. In connection with public hearings the bill says:

> A public hearing shall be held by the council
> (a) in connection with an inquiry into the merits of establishing an agency or of broadening the authority of an existing agency to cover an additional farm product or farm products;
> (b) where the council has under review a proposed marketing plan; and
> (c) in connection with any other matter relating to its objects if the Governor in Council or the minister directs the council to hold a public hearing in connection with such matter.

That is what it really means. You know, they are so gracious to the producer. They say, "We are not going to be that autocratic. We don't want to be that dictatorial. If we sit down in the cabinet chamber we might call the producers together." I know a lot of boards. I have appeared before many boards and I know many have made their decisions before a lot of the evidence hits the council table. Some of the royal commission inquiries operate like that. The report of the Le Dain Commission is not before the public right now because certain cabinet ministers know they are playing with political dynamite.

The same kind of hearing will be given the agricultural producers. In fact, the Minister of Agriculture might even hold a few sham hearings out in Medicine Hat, but after listening to the farmers he will come back here and do what he wants anyway. If this is not dictatorship, taking over the markets of western Canada, I do not know what is. This is a fight to the finish so far as western Canada is concerned. If the Minister of Agriculture does not resign when he hits the cabinet with this bill without it being amended, I will be surprised because at one time he was one of the best orators, one of the best thinkers, one of the best fighters for western Canada. Where has his soul gone now? He must be thinking of that poem "Just for a pot of gold."

Let us see what else they have the power to do. Not only do they set up a compulsory board under this legislation but they appoint all the people to that board, and they will be Liberals. They say the farmers will be heard, but they will have power as to whether evidence will be admissible or not. Then they can make Orders in Council as to rules and regulations. This bill is like the BNA Act or the constitution of any country giving more power to a cabinet that loves power. They say they are pragmatists. That is one thing the Prime Minister said. He said, "I am a pragmatist. I promised nothing." He delivered nothing, Mr. Speaker. The bill also provides for the making of Orders in Council. Where are Orders in Council passed? In the secret chambers of cabinet where privy councillors are sworn not to tell what goes on behind closed doors.

Mr. Bell: Except Judy LaMarsh.

Mr. Woolliams: You are absolutely right; Judy made her confession. That is the kind of deal the producer is getting in this bill. Having read the bill, I could not sit in my place any longer without opening up and letting the public know. I hope the newspapers and Information Canada will tell what is going on here.

An hon. Member: They won't.

Mr. Olson: They will, but they will get it right.

Mr. Woolliams: Then let me tell you what will happen after you have the council appointed. You have the orders made which give the government more power. What will happen then? Then without the knowledge of Parliament you could make a proclamation saying, "All the cattle, all the hogs of Canada, all the poultry of Canada, all the eggs of Canada, all the soybeans of Canada, all the corn Canada produces are now under this very free-minded Liberal board." That is what is inside this bill. The minister looks sad. He should feel sad, as a Minister of Agriculture from western Canada.

Mr. Olson: I am sad at your misinterpretation.

Mr. Woolliams: The minister should feel sad, remembering what he stood for when he was a member of the Social Credit Party. He must remember that Mr. Aberhart told certain governments to keep their hands off business. So did Premier Manning. Now the Minister of Agriculture endorses this Liberal, dictatorial pragmatism that treats the farmers just like Stalin did the Kulaks when he made them all serfs. Time magazine, which has some sort of charisma with the government, may say this is extreme language. It has to be extreme language, Mr. Speaker, because this is an extreme bill. It is time the farmers and producers of Canada knew what is going on.

Western ranchers came down here at one time and gave a beef supper for Senators and Members of Parliament. What did the head of the rancher's association say at that time? "We ask the government only one favour—keep your hands out of our business." That is what the rancher wants today. That is what the Ontario cattle producer wants. If there is to be a board to provide guidance in the marketing of these commodities, it should be a producers' board, elected by the producers, who should have the say.

When the Conservatives set up the Canadian Wheat Board it was a voluntary producer board. It now pays its members their salaries no matter whether they sell wheat or not, no matter whether they sell 100 million or 200 million bushels.

An hon. Member: What will be the salaries of members of this board?

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Woolliams: Someone wants to know what the salaries will be. I cannot quote figures, but I know the salaries are almost equal to those paid to cabinet members. When this act is proclaimed and the board controls marketing, Parliament will be bypassed, democracy emasculated, the producer emasculated and Parliament itself emasculated. That is what this bill will do.

Another question is, who will appoint the board? It will be the Governor in Council. We know how the government works. If they are to appoint 18 or 19 people to position, they will appoint one non-political person so that it does not look as if the appointments are political. The minister knows they will mostly be Liberal appointments and this government will act under the same kind of motivation as when the Prime Minister set up the board that deals with television. You will see the same kind of philosophy and intellectual motivation at work in the setting up of the board that will govern the hog producers.

An hon. Member: That is Canadian Socialism.

Mr. Woolliams: Someone calls that Canadian Socialism. Well, I believe a certain kind of Socialism at least would give the farmers a chance. Let us look at some of the other things that can be done under the act. The cabinet can enter into any agreement with any province or any importing nation without bringing the agreement before Parliament for approval. That means that this executive, this all-powerful cabinet which is not present tonight in the House can make any agreement it wishes with any nation. I hope the minister remembers the British wheat agreement, because that sold the farmers short and cost the western farmers a great deal of money. I have read one of his earlier speeches in which he said that it cost the western farmers $600 million in one year. But at least that agreement came before Parliament. I have researched this matter in Hansard. But under this legislation the government will take no chances. It never misses a trick.

Mr. Gibson: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Woolliams: No, I will not. I wish that law student would be quiet and go to his library and do his own work. What I am saying is that this government, this executive, can now make any agreement it wishes without bringing the matter to Parliament and without giving Parliament a chance to suggest changes in the agreement. Under the new rules this procedure is very dangerous. But this is spelled out. I ask anyone to check page 17 of the bill and you will see that power referred to.

The minister sits there today but, as Tennyson said, men may come and men may go. If the minister disagrees with the Prime Minister, he may be elevated to the other place as some others have been and another all-powerful minister using this type of dictatorship may sign agreements which may not be in the interest of the producer or the country.

Mr. Gibson: Why would they not be?

An hon. Member: Be quiet.

Mr. Gibson: Why not? There is no reason for saying that.

Mr. Woolliams: Also, the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act shall not apply to this act. It is all right for the government to set up a powerful monopoly, but of course it is wrong for private enterprise to set up any monopoly or get into that kind of hanky-panky. Since the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act are not to apply, I say to the consumers of Canada that this bill will help neither them nor the producers. The price of beef, pork and farm products will be determined at the farm. If that is not dictatorial, if this little Bill C-197, which is not too thick, does not confer dictatorial powers, I do not know what does. Apparently it is all right for the government to have a monopoly, but not for free enterprise.

What happens if you disobey? I can see why they are building a new penitentiary in British Columbia. We have one at Drumheller, and I think I can take a little credit for what has happened there. But, Mr. Speaker, if the farmer contravenes the provisions of this act he will spend two years away from the cows and the land. That is the kind of bill we have before the House. That is dictatorship, as I see it. I submit it will put farmers out of business.

We lost a good deal of the grain trade because the board charged with responsibility was paralysed. It did not represent farmers and had no incentive for doing anything. This bill will create a board more powerful than the Canadian Wheat Board. Frankly, the basis for passing certain regulations controlling the Canadian Wheat Board has always been beyond my comprehension. You cannot sell Saskatchewan wheat to Alberta, or Alberta wheat to British Columbia. We know that you cannot even have a chicken ranch in British Columbia and from the land you own in Manitoba ship wheat to feed the turkeys and chickens. The new board will have similar powers affecting every commodity produced on the farm in Canada. If the white paper does not break the farmers, this bill will.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I have listened to the Minister of Agriculture. He talks about diversification, yet no one will have the right to elect to diversify. Every farmer will be told by this all-powerful board what to produce and, finally, west of the Great Lakes and even in some places in western Ontario we shall see state farms, because that is what we are coming to. That is really the purpose of the bill, and the minister cannot deny it.

Mr. Olson: Just give me a chance.

Mr. Woolliams: I am prepared to go before the committee and call witnesses.

Mr. Olson: Just give me a chance.

Mr. Woolliams: I tried to do this sort of thing before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs when the hate literature bill was being considered. The members there said, "You can have one witness, Eldon. We want to pacify you, but we want to rush this through." Well, we are rushing into a great dictatorship. That is what we are doing here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: That is the kind of government we have. I say, let us save the farmers. Let us take a look at some recommendations contained in "Future Market Outlets for Canadian Wheat and Other Grains". These show some of the things the government could have done to help the wheat trade. The first I refer to is:

> To improve the effective competition of Canadian wheat in existing markets, action is urgently required on many fronts. Such action includes:
> (a) Amendment of Canada's wheat grading system to include protein and other technical criteria associated with baking quality in order to maximize the competitiveness of Canadian wheat from a quality standpoint—

The second recommendation is in part:

> (b) Implementation of the findings of current studies of the transportation, storage and handling of grains—

The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) put a question on the Order

Paper. It was not given much publicity, but what did it ask? It asked how many elevators in Saskatchewan have no elevator agent. The answer was 99. Also, how many elevators in Alberta have no elevator agent? The answer was 71. I forget the number without agents in Manitoba, but it was a like number. Why have they no elevator agents? I will tell you. If you own an elevator in western Canada, you own a gold mine: you get a cent per month per bushel for storage and for the handling charges, according to the economic experts, the elevator should receive up to 24 cents a bushel per year.

Now the government lets the wheat stay there for five years, pays the elevator owners and tells the farmers, "We cannot do anything for you." Do you want to do that with hogs? After all, when hogs reach 200 pounds they must move from the farm to market if they are to be competitive and sell at a proper price. And so it is with cattle. You cannot store cattle or hogs in bins for five years; they get pretty smelly in time. That is something the minister has not taken into consideration in this bill.

• (8:50 p.m.)

The next recommendation is:

Immediate arrangements for a study of Canadian wheat pricing to be made by an outstanding, unbiased, international authority on the subject, as a basis for future policy decisions—

I agree with the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) who talked about the funny little statement made by the Minister without Portfolio. I do not think the minister would have given a lecture like that when he was dean of the law school. There are 44 exporting and importing countries. Canada should take the initiative. We were the first of the wheat exporting nations in the world. We are now sixth. Ask the Minister of Agriculture how we got in that position. Don't blame the lost of market for the surplus. Blame the government and the cabinet for their inaction and lack of leadership. The ministers will not come into the House for the question period. When they are in the House, they make jokes. In answer to a serious question on unemployment, the Prime Minister asked somebody if he was still beating his wife! It is recorded in Hansard. That is the frivolous kind of nonsense the opposition has to put up with.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Woolliams: The next recommendation is:

Provision for a greatly expanded market research and development program.

Let us pay people a commission for selling wheat. When you hand out a few dollars you get some action. I am a free enterpriser. I find there are a few in the Liberal ranks, when I have coffee with them—but not when they are voting in the House. The answer is, give somebody a buck and they will sell our wheat. If the government would get off its so-and-so it would sell wheat and we would not have the trouble we now have.

The farmers do not want a handout. They are independent. What's $100 million? This program will not apply to 50 per cent of the farmers in southern Saskatchewan and Alberta. In this wheat belt 50 per cent of the wheat is grown. How do you diversify in the gumbo area of Regina? The minister knows about that. As soon as it rains, the cattle will be over their hocks in mud you cannot diversify. The government wants to set up a board similar to the Wheat Board to market every other commodity. No wonder I stand in my place and speak as sharply and as firmly as I do. Somebody must.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the House give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is no unanimous consent. The hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin).

Mr. Hogarth: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I offer my consent to the hon. member continuing, solely to see how much more bull he can get into his speech about cows!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: That was a very rude remark by the member. I will let it rest there. I thought he had more dignity, but maybe the dignity came out of something else. I will not go into that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Portneuf.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Portneuf.

Mr. Woolliams: Just a minute. On a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. There was no unanimous consent.

Mr. Woolliams: I ask that Your Honour put that question again. The member made a facetious remark. As far as I understand it, there is consent. I have only one other recommendation to make. I felt that consent was given. I ask Your Honour, in your usual non-prejudiced manner, to put the question again to the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I am sorry, but I heard no unanimous consent. Does the House give its consent to the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is no unanimous consent. The hon. member for Portneuf.

An hon. Member: Who said no?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. There is no unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to make a few comments after what the previous speaker has just said. His observations were quite relevant and I intend to support the position he will take as regards the legislation now before us. Bill C-197, entitled "An Act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products", will merely create a new body to enable the government to find well-paid jobs for friends of the party.

I have serious doubts about the effectiveness of this legislation because we already have the Canadian Wheat Board whose responsibilities are becoming less and less important as sales are down throughout the world. Ever fewer sales, but still the same, well-paid staff. There are no lay-offs at the Canadian Wheat Board, nor any fight against inflation. The report of the Board shows that the wages of its staff are always increasing.

A few years ago, in the spring of 1967, the Canadian Livestock Feed Board was established. After three years of operation, we realize that Quebec farmers and millers must pay $1.06 or $1.07 per bushel for barley, while it can be bought at 76 and 78 cents per bushel on world markets.

In spite of those famous boards, we are still facing obvious injustices. We witnessed the creation of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which, so far, has not brought any results. This situation exists because the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs must accomplish dual functions, which creates a conflict right from the beginning. How can he approve and disapprove something at the same time? Can a department make a stand against the speculator and encourage the consumer at the same time? Can one encourage the consumer while protecting speculators? This is utterly ridiculous and in the light of the bill now under consideration, we realize that this is going to be done.

Indeed, clause 6(2)(b) reads as follows:

(b) have regard to the interests of consumers of farm products and of those engaged in the marketing thereof as well as to the interests of producers of farm products.

Mr. Speaker, this is utterly ridiculous. Can a lawyer speak for the plaintiff and the accused at the same time? This is inconceivable!

• (9:00 p.m.)

Until now consumers have never asked for protection. In Portneuf riding as elsewhere in Quebec consumers are not at all afraid of the farmers because the latter are not evil-doers but mere producers. The enormous quantity of products accumulated in warehouses and stores creates a surplus problem for the government but shows that the farmer has fulfilled his task well.

What consumers want is simply more purchasing power. All things considered, with a little money in your pocket, you can get anything you want. You buy what you want, both from the standpoint of quality and quantity, when and where you want it.

Clause 6 (2) of the bill states, and I quote:

In carrying out its duties the Council shall (a) consult, on a continuing basis, with the governments of all provinces having an interest in the establishment or the exercise of the powers of any one or more agencies under this act or with any body or bodies established by the government of any province to exercise powers similar to those of the Council in relation to intraprovincial trade in farm products;

When has the federal government taken into account the decisions or the representations of a province? What rulings have been made following investigations conducted throughout Canada since 1950? Was the inquiry made by hon. members and senators throughout the country and on which the joint committee reported in 1967 followed up? We are still waiting for the decisions which should have been made after this famous report.

We are also waiting for the report of the Committee on Agriculture, which toured the country last year, including Toronto and eastern Canada, going through Quebec in order to meet representatives from the CFU, the Coopérative fédérée and milk producers.

We all know that this famous report has been tabled, but we are still looking for it in the Clerk's desk because we think that the report was actually hidden so that we could not speak about it for the time being.

The protection granted during the past years has simply been reduced. You will remember that the government paid rather important subsidies. You will recall also that the CFU and all the organizations of this sort in eastern Canada asked not only that these subsidies should still be granted, but that they should be increased according to the rise in the cost of living, that is to say by 5 or 6 per cent each year. However, these recommandations were simply ignored. The decision of a few persons was abided by and the dairy producers of the province of Quebec were penalized by 8 per cent if one takes into account the money they have lost. However, the associations made these recommendations quite voluntarily. It is probably for this reason they have not been considered.

Today, we are getting ready to establish another board, another council to which will assuredly be appointed the party's friends, some of them have perhaps failed under the present economic system while others could hardly earn their own living otherwise, but they will get salaries of around $20,000 or $25,000 a year. This will be an excellent muzzle which will keep them from recommending whatever farmers demand and refrain from making public the objectives already decided upon by another team. This is most unfortunate. I was not wrong when I said it, because if one considers the present situation, one realizes what is happening in Canada today.

[Mr. Godin.]

Bill C-197 is a piece of legislation which simply makes agriculture dependent on the State.

In clause 3, for instance, we see that the chairman and the vice-chairman of the National Farm Products Marketing Council are appointed by the Governor in Council.

Clause 5 provides that members of the Council become public servants.

The purpose of the act, as defined in clause 6, is to maintain and promote an efficient and competitive agriculture industry. We can therefore guess right away that this just means that small farms will disappear.

From a political viewpoint, this would be tremendous, because the government is playing a winning game since at present 92 per cent of Canadian voters are non-farmers. The government listens to the urban population and will be able to handle the farmers at will.

Clause 6(2)(b) makes it clear that it is intended to protect both the consumers and the producers and with only 8 per cent of the population engaged in agriculture, the workers will be the winners. I am not against the workers but the figures are there, Mr. Speaker.

Let us see now what are the Council's powers. Under clause 7(a)(i)(ii) and (iii), the Council may require any person engaged in production or marketing to register with an agency and to maintain books and records in such form as it may require.

As indicated in clause 18 (2), the Governor in Council may designate the new products which will be regulated anywhere in Canada.

The objects and powers of the agencies are to promote a strong, efficient and competitive industry. An agency may purchase, package, process, store, export and sell any product as indicated in clause 23.

As far as arrangements with the provinces are concerned a federal agency may perform on behalf of a province any function relating to intraprovincial trade on any regulated product. It may also grant to a provincial body powers of regulation in relation to the marketing within the province.

The powers of the inspectors are described in clause 34 which indicates that the inspectors may enter any place if they are convinced there is any regulated product or a product intended to be marketed in interprovincial or export trade and may examine the records or other documents in such place.

I shall now deal with penalties. I refer to clauses 36 and 37. With respect to failure to comply with a requirement of the Council, this is what we read, and I quote:

—is guilty of
(a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or
(b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

We are therefore making arrangements to jail farmers. It is obvious that if they are put in prison they will not be able to produce. We will then be able to cut down surpluses.

Penalties have already been imposed. All farmers are not in jail, but we have reached a point where the situation is deteriorating, and I wonder whether many of them would not be more in security behind bars.

I am very sorry that the milk production problem was not dealt with before introducing Bill C-197. I regret that this bill was introduced by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson). In the final analysis, we know that when the worker has problems he goes to his fellow-worker to negotiate his working conditions. If the union leader has some competence, negotiations will be fruitful. When a student has problems, he goes to his professors or to counselors who help him.

When we have health problems, we go to a doctor. If he says he is unable to help us, he then sends us to a specialist.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Unfortunately, the officials of the federal Department of Agriculture have proved their ineffectiveness, and consequently we are always up against the same so-called "champs", so-called "know-it-all", even though they know nothing.

We know the Minister of Agriculture operates a farm and that he does not go in for dairy farming although he has a 500-cow herd. Thanks to his herd, and nature, the Minister sells 400 to 500 calves every year. And so, he owns calving cows.

Today, if we are facing a serious problem, it is in the dairy farming industry. It is obvious that the minister is beyond his depth.

In spite of everything, we still expect him to introduce a beneficial policy, but because of his ignorance, he must appeal to the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) who is quite pleased to make his remarks. It is common knowledge the minister and his parliamentary secretary merely keep floundering along. Moreover, it must be remembered that the hon. member for Richelieu hastened to sell his cows three weeks after his election and it can be inferred therefore that dairy farming was more or less important to him. It is unfortunate that the farmer who is now directing the government's dairy policy has found no other way of showing his knowledge than to sell his cows.

Perhaps he found out that having one in Parliament is as profitable as 25 in the cowshed. At any rate, it is remembered that the hon. member for Richelieu, who is messing about with the dairy policy now, was not even a dairy farmer but a cattle farmer and dealer, and especially a good dealer.

One can remember also that he was part of the gimmick, that he could export all his cattle to Mexico, Spain and South America. All that to say that while the hon. member for Richelieu is still spluttering in English, it could be that the last calves he sold can speak Spanish fluently.

Mr. Speaker, I say once more that dairy farming was of little importance to that ex-farmer and I am convinced he would sell his wife to save the Liberal government's dairy policy.

The Minister of Agriculture announces a $10 million reduction for the Quebec farmers. He cannot indeed be commended for that. The costs of exports have gone from 26 cents in 1968 to 51 cents in 1969. It can be recalled that the farmers of the province of Quebec, and more particularly those of the eastern part of that province, have been imposed quotas in 1967. In fact, at that time, owing to the bad weather, crops had not been good. Milk production had suffered from it. That opportunity was taken to set production quotas. It is surely a good deal for the government, but I am not prepared to admit that it is honest. The hon. member for Richelieu does not object to that.

If a farmer—

Mr. Florian Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Richelieu): Would the hon. member for Frontenac—

An hon. Member: —for Portneuf.

Mr. Côté (Richelieu): —for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) allow me simply to explain what happened at the Committee on Agriculture when two of his Créditiste colleagues were there and the committee report was unanimously approved? If he agrees, I shall read him the minutes of the proceedings of the committee. He knows nothing about agriculture and was not on the committee. He could—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member might like to do that when he speaks in the debate, but I hardly think that is a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, I am the eldest of a family of ten children and my father was a farmer. I, myself, was a farmer for many years before I became a co-operative manager. As for the famous Committee on Agriculture, I do not want the hon. member for Richelieu to call to witness my friends of the Ralliement Créditiste in this matter. He knows very well that each time amendments were moved by members of the Ralliement Créditiste, they were defeated when put to a vote. The report of the Committee on Agriculture is not unanimous and I should not want anyone to cite it as an example.

I continue, Mr. Speaker.

Incidentally, it is always the same thing over and over again. Every time someone—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I am a little mixed up. I listened to what my colleague said, which was that the report had been voted on unanimously, but the hon. member now tells me it was not voted on unanimously.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, since my hon. friend of the Ralliement Crédististe does not understand English—because he never did go to the trouble of learning it—I shall reply in French, if I may.

As a rule, I abide by the Standing Orders which stipulate that a member must accept the word of another member in the House.

My colleague from Richelieu (Mr. Côté) has just told me that the third item of the Agriculture Committee report was unanimously adopted, but the member for Portneuf claims it was not. I should like to know who is right, because I feel I am entitled to know as a member.

[Mr. Côté (Richelieu).]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I consider that the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) has deliberately and voluntarily misled the House a moment ago when he said that I refused to learn English. That is absolutely untrue!

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on another question of privilege. I never said anything of the sort.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat. There is no question of privilege before the House. There is a debate before the chamber, and I suggest that we allow the hon. member for Portneuf to continue.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: I too rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I can hear only one question of privilege at a time. I will hear the hon. member for Trois-Rivières.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I have always thought that every member had a right to know the truth.

Two honorable members are therefore contradicting each another. I would like to hear the official version of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, for example, to see who is right.

Has that section been unanimously passed? It seems to me that it is my privilege to know. I will have to vote Mr. Speaker, so I would like to know the truth.

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he consult the record on this matter. This is hardly a question of privilege; it is a matter of debate. The hon. member has the right to consult the record to determine who is right. It is hardly an unusual feature of this House to have two points of view which are different.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I was coming to it when I was interrupted a moment ago.

Mr. Speaker, when the members opposite say that the Creditiste members in committee and elsewhere were favorable to the government's dairy policy, with all due respect I must say that they deliberately mislead the House. We were opposed to that policy to such an extent that we were not afraid to attend the farmers' demonstration in Sherbrooke, where no federal Liberal member was present, not even the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Côté), and this because they had cold feet.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Again, that is hardly a question of privilege. If we are going to get into this sort of argument, it seems to me that the Chair has only one course to take and that is to insist that hon. members stick strictly to the motion before the House. I have been exercising a certain amount of leniency in allowing the hon. member for Portneuf to go slightly beyond a strict interpretation of the motion, but if as a result of that leniency we are going to get into this sort of argument I shall have to apply the rules of relevancy more strictly than I have hitherto. I suggest we allow the hon. member for Portneuf to conclude his remarks, and if other hon. members want to contribute to the debate they are free to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, I agree with you. There was perhaps no question of privilege. However, that has allowed me to throw some light on something that was becoming obscure.

This has happened before. The notorious report was adopted on division. One day, the meeting was held in camera. So one cannot say just about anything on the matter, since the meeting was held behind closed doors. Nothing is known about it.

• (9:20 p.m.)

If the hon. member for Richelieu meets a farmer who explains his dissatisfaction to him, the hon. member says piously: Think of the circumstances, you do not understand what is going on in Canada. The whole province fails to understand the problem. Right now, he is the only one who understands anything, Mr. Speaker. I regret that he is the only one at the present time to advise the government in matters pertaining to the dairy policy when we know that this question has always more or less concerned him.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Godin: We recall that in 1968 there were quite similar problems. In fact, the then Parliamentary Secretary said that there was a very simple reason for it: all the difficulties were the result of a minority administration. Therefore, a majority government had to be elected.

With its majority what is the government waiting for to prove itself? Up to now attempts have been made to keep the farmer informed through speeches. He has been begged to keep on working his farm and today we realize that if he ever was the king of the land he has not been for a very long time. The Canadian farmer was king but that time is past because the policy of the government aims only at taking hold of all that the others own.

Mr. Rondeau: This is socialism!

Mr. Godin: From the economic point of view, the farmer is in a clearly inferior position to that of other workers. He is very poor compared to other professionals. In order to obtain a better yield, he had to improve his production and cattle breeding methods. To produce more rapidly, he mechanized his equipment. To meet the demand for quality products, he bought modern machinery at a cost of thousands of dollars.

In spite of his efforts, he cannot become prosperous because he is caught between his cost price and the price he has to accept for his products. The price of food is not settled automatically. One must recognize that he is in a very sorry plight indeed because his products are perishable. It is not a question of holding up deliveries, specially milk deliveries. It is also impossible to stock it. Therefore, the producer takes what is given to him, and that has been going on for a number of years.

Although this government has a clear majority, agriculture is always squeezed in between supply and demand and is always at the mercy of various government agencies. Since he had to be satisfied for too long with a low income, he has to go to the Farm Loan Board for financing. Then, he is told that first of all he has to increase his production, after which he will get a loan. The farmer, therefore, goes and buys his neighbour's land, raises more cattle, increases his stock, and then he is subjected to a penalty because he listened to the officials of the Farm Loan Board who told him to increase his production in order to get a loan. Now, they tell him it is absolutely impossible for him to get a loan. Today, he is refused the loan because his profits have declined since last year instead of increasing.

Whether it be natural or artificial, no matter, there has been an increase. It is unfortunate, because for a Canadian anxious to make a living for himself and his family it is the beginning of the end. Effectively, he will be deprived of part of his production not only of the one dollar subsidy, but also will have to accept the export rate of $1.25 per hundredweight.

Milk, which costs $4.50 per hundredweight, will in certain cases just be sold for $2.30 per hundredweight. If that is the government's logic, I fail to understand it.

Now I would like the Minister of Agriculture to acquaint himself with the suggestions put forward by the people most involved, mentioned in the reports of the Committee on Agriculture which collected this evidence when it travelled throughout Ontario and all the other eastern provinces.

The minister will realize, I suppose, that he cannot indefinitely count on the moral capital of these farmers. The march that they once organized on Parliament proves without any doubt that even if they listen to election promises they also want some results between elections. The public meetings organized in Sherbrooke and elsewhere in Quebec and others that will be organized prove that the people cannot stand it any longer.

We have seen auctions. Farmers with very good buildings, excellent implements and choice livestock are financially disorganized and unable to meet the interest on their debts, even if their loans have been made at 7 and 8 per cent. And that situation is deteriorating from year to year due to the tribute which they have to pay, through governments, to the dictatorship of money and credit.

That situation is reflected by the young who leave the farm and have no wish to inherit the debts of their parents. One could read the following in the April 2, 1970, issue of a Quebec City newspaper, and I quote:

> Resounding failure of the integrated farm vocational training.

Everything is being contemplated to retrain farmers, but the training already in existence is in the process of disintegrating. I go on with the quotation:

> The integration of the farm vocational training will have been a resounding failure, if the recently published official figures are true. Indeed, only five training centres have been set up for 1969-70, while for the previous year, there were seven traditional institutions devoted to farm vocational training.
> The enrolment, at the first year level, for 1969-70, that is at the secondary IV grade, in the five centres, are practically five times less than for the previous year, in agricultural schools (49 as against 220). And to conclude those disappointing statistics, while normally 75 per cent of the students enrolled in the first year were coming back to finish the second period of training, only 25 per cent did so this year, although favourable conditions were offered them.

And, as a matter of fact, the report indicates that, for the year 1968-69, 220 students had asked for enrolment, as against 49 in 1969-70.

This is how things repeat themselves. Farm operations are becoming more and more productive, as compared with 15 years ago. The capitalization of a medium-sized farm in the province of Quebec, which was $10,000 15 years ago, has gone up today to $25,000. And at the same time, the value of the land, buildings and cattle has doubled, whereas capital outlays for machinery and equipment of all sorts have tripled. Quite often, we see farms worth over $50,000. And all such changes happened not only before the eyes of the government experts, but on their recommendations. Many farms are worth $50,000 but on the other hand, some farmers are in the red to the extent of $25,000 or $30,000. They had to get into debt, it was for them the only way to make their business profitable.

A Portneuf farmer who wished to borrow $10,000 to expand his barn and whose farm covered 125 acres, who could rent his neighbour's farm for quite a limited amount, was simply refused a $10,000 loan. He was told: "My boy, buy your neighbour's farm and we will loan you $20,000. "Therefore, all they want is to cut those people's throats. The Farm Loan Board and the Farm Credit Corporation do not care to lend $10,000. But once he has bought his neighbour's farm and secured a $20,000 loan, the farmer will be slaughtered. Financing, insurance rates, taxes of all kinds and increased operation costs, that is what today's farmer has to face.

Under the auspices of the dairy policy of the last three years, the farmer has managed to keep his chin up while playing on depreciation and running into debt right and left, because he was trusted. We have witnessed many sales by auction. We shall now see bankruptcies. And, on the best run farms, which bring 80 cents per hour to the operator, people will face a salary reduction. And is it absolutely sure that this salary reduction is what the just society is all about, that just society Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wanted to bring about?

Mr. Speaker, whereas the most prosperous farms in Quebec and Ontario yield only 80 cents per hour to their operators, do we realize the situation, since, according to the Liberal government and the experts that were aiming at a just society, a wage of 80 cents per hour was already too much? In fact, were not all possible means taken to reduce that wage?

In my opinion, this cannot last any longer. How shall we know whether the government, through the Farm Credit Corporation has not enough securities in Quebec to take over all the lands? Does the government want all the farms to be brought under the control of the State and the farmers to become mere public servants? We recall the Prime Minister once expressed admiration for the communist theories and we wonder whether the hopeless indebtness of the farmers is not part of the Prime Minister's plans? Is the government contemplating, through the Department of Agriculture, to take over these farms and to convert them into collective farms? Do they want the farmers to be turned into public servants?

Is there any better way of frustrating an honest man who earns only 80 cents per hour than to bring his income down? Our farmers are in debt or compelled to get into debt while even better means are available. Will this not end, in the long run, by a quiet seizure of our lands? How many farms will be in the hands of the State within two or three years? I would like the minister to answer this and I am still wondering whether the province of Quebec will not be the first to fall into the hands of the government.

There is an article in the March 1970 issue of Le Meunier Québécois from which we may gather how anxious the people are. Here is an excerpt of this article and I quote:

> Mr. Otto Lang, Minister without Portfolio of the Canadian government who is responsible for the wheat policy, has just tabled in the house the emergency plan to solve the enormous wheat surplus problem in western Canada.
> The plan, which will be in force for one year, will cost the pretty amount of $100,000,000—
> Quebec millers are somewhat apprehensive of that wheat policy from the federal government. If the Canadian Wheat Board keeps the control over the sales of wheat, barley and oats that will be produced in western Canada, how much will it cost to the grain merchants in Quebec, who cannot get their supply on the world market?
> Moreover, the federal Minister of Agriculture, Mr. H. A. Olson, stated in the House that the subsidy of $20,000,000 on wheat transport granted to eastern farmers, out of the 1969 budget, will be reduced to $17,500,000 from April 1st 1970.
> While the western farmers are privileged, for they can convert their grain into livestock products and besides get compensated for sowing it, we, millers from Quebec, protest against the federal policy which clearly discriminates against the eastern cattle producers, who will finally and definitely have to foot the bill.

Mr. Speaker, we never saw such blatant injustice and they could not have found anything better to force people off the land.

And if you refer to the last report of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion for the year 1968-69, you can read the following:

> The Regional Development Agency has paved the way in the field of industrial development subsidies—

If we refer now to table 1, on page 19 of the French version of that report, we see the following statistics concerning Quebec:

> $800,110,000 were spent on capital investments, to create 16,934 new jobs, that is $47,249 per job.

Instead of going out after the farmers, out in the sticks, to bring them to the city, would it not have been better to pay them a subsidy of $1,000 a year? They would then have stayed 47 years longer on their farms, hoping to live a bit more decently.

How unfortunate that in times of peace the government does not try to apply a formula to encourage the fulfillment of the human being. Indeed, two great ideologies govern the world: that of domination and that of freedom. Any ideology that strives to establish the sovereignty of one man, one dictator, one league, one State, one trust or one political party is one of domination. On the other hand, if it strives to give the people easier access to benefits, it becomes a policy of freedom.

Mr. Speaker, while maintaining the right to make representations later on for the working class that the farmers constitute, I take it upon myself to call for a bit of justice, precisely under bill C-197. I claim that part to which those people are entitled, quite freely. That is why I shall vote against Bill C-197.

Farm Products Marketing Agencies Bill

[English]

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, considering the history of agriculture in Canada and the present situation of farmers in this country together with the future prospects for farmers and rural people, I would have thought that when the minister introduced Bill C-197 it would have been presented as a brave new step forward in solving some of the very serious problems which face farmers and rural people in Canada. Instead, we find that this bill was introduced with hesitation, uncertainty and indeed with a faltering step.

In reviewing the remarks of the minister when introducing the bill on second reading, one almost gains the impression that he was not quite sure where he was going and just what he wanted to do with this legislation after it was passed, assuming it is passed; and, finally, one gains the impression that he was not completely convinced of the merit of the legislation. Of course, if he says otherwise I will have to accept his word and I will do so without hesitation. Nevertheless, I was rather unhappy with the presentation that the minister made in introducing this bill. I intend to have something more to say on that matter later in my remarks.

I certainly do not underestimate or downgrade the difficulties and complexities of Canada's agricultural marketing situation, because there is no question that agricultural marketing policies across Canada have been a great source of uncertainty and confusion. We have had a wide range of policies, divided jurisdiction and disagreement on policies among both farmers and governments, which have contributed to this picture. It seems to me that marketing boards are essential in order to strengthen farm bargaining power in the economy. The fact is that governments have often dragged their feet in this area and further steps toward orderly marketing are long overdue.

I suggest that federal legislation is needed to establish the machinery for national marketing with which provincial producer-controlled marketing boards could conform and thereby be able to market products in any part of Canada or on the export markets. A related matter has to do with the principle of supporting prices and a variety of techniques, some of which have been used from time to time in Canada. However, often the expenditures have involved help for those who needed help the least and it has been suggested that support plans should be based on income instead. Such plans will certainly need to be co-ordinated with whatever adjustment programs the government eventually brings forward.

An essential requirement of any or all marketing plans is that farmers have advance notice of price levels and quantities to be bought at a specified price. These need to be worked out in negotiation with farmers and farm organizations. This would be of tremendous help to the farmers. By negotiation I mean meaningful negotiation. I suggest that this would be a guide to a voluntary system of supply management. I suggest that stepped up economic research and improved market information are further steps in developing a program of production planning and supply management. Some marketing agencies now have a fairly well-developed system of supply management. The processing industries, it has to be acknowledged, adopt the principle of supply management in various contract arrangements.

The question might be asked: Why not supply management? The basic idea is simple and sensible enough, but it is not that simple in practice. There are very complex and difficult problems to overcome. The whole problem of how to implement supply management is yet to be resolved and the government, through its performance in operation LIFT, has given every indication that it has not learned any of the lessons necessary.

That does not mean that we should throw up our hands and give up, but it does mean that we will not find overnight solutions in dealing with what is admittedly a very difficult problem. I think we need to examine the situation of agriculture as such in considering this bill because, after all, the industry is expected to operate within the framework of a true free enterprise economy and there are few other sectors of the economy which are expected to operate on this basis. Because agriculture and a few other small industries have been forced to operate on this basis, to operate at a disadvantage when compared with other sectors of the economy, the industry has suffered and the people who make their livelihood in that industry have also suffered.

The basic fact is that the Canadian economy has undergone drastic changes. Today we live essentially in a managed economy, and at the same time the government and many in this country still espouse the platitudes of an economic system that no longer exists. Agriculture is expected to operate on the basis of these platitudes. The marketing bill that is before us now tries to straddle some of the old and some of the new. I suggest that in many respects it falls in between, and the farmer is still expected to operate on the same old basis as he has in the past. It tries to strengthen the bargaining power of the farmer, and possibly it helps, but I suggest it is not good enough and it will not really do the trick.

Changes have taken place in our economy over the past number of years. In our economic organization, the concentration of economic power, the influence of technology in all aspects of economic activity have all had an influence on agriculture and on every other sector of the economy. I suggest that no sector of the economy today can operate successfully on an ad hoc or piecemeal basis. I suggest that all industries and all sectors of the economy must operate within the framework of the economic world as it exists. I suggest the only way they can operate sensibly, without causing suffering and hardship, is within a framework of economic planning. Today it is generally accepted that economic planning is essential and must be carried out, but the question is how, and by whom? This is where the bill requires some examination.

I would like to recall briefly to the minds of hon. members the minority report of the Finance Committee on the question of interest rates and inflation. That minority report was presented by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) and myself on behalf of the NDP members of the House. In it we called for a comprehensive incomes policy, something which has implications for agriculture. The adoption of such a policy would mean that people making their living in agriculture would be assured of an adequate level of income and could enjoy a good life in their chosen vocation. We must consider this marketing bill in that context, because just where the legislation will lead farmers is not clear. The bill establishes some guidelines but it does not go beyond the old system to which I was referring a few minutes ago.

The consideration of price within the context of this bill is not enough. We must also examine the entire question of income. The bill does not do that in any way. The minority report on interest rates and inflation also dealt with the question of the allocation of capital. Here again we must consider the need for an adequate allocation of capital for agriculture, at reasonable interest rates. That report also called for compensation to the victims of inflation. With the possible exception of some old age pensioners and those living on small, fixed incomes, I suggest that no industry and certainly no group of people have suffered more from the effects of inflation than farmers.

Finally, I suggest we are living in a new kind of world where the laws of supply and demand as we knew them in the past cannot be depended upon to provide answers to the problems which are facing us. That, therefore, brings us to the question of government initiative and public action to deal with some of our problems. In this field there is to be a farm marketing council established to which, in its own right, no one can object. The bill suggests that the council can recommend, either on its own initiative or at the request of the minister, measures, proposals and other recommendations. But I suggest that banking on the council to introduce adequate policies is not enough. No council, no matter how well-intentioned or how hard it works, can do this job unless it has an adequate degree of government support.

The government must allocate necessary resources in order to put effective plans into use. This bill does nothing of that sort. Certainly I do not expect all aspects of a proper agricultural policy to be included within the scope of this bill. I suggest the bill provides a vehicle, although it is open to question whether it is the best possible vehicle, to be used in helping to find solutions to farm problems. The use that is made of it will depend both on the government and the farmers.

One important point touched on in this debate is the question of farmer participation. Where does the farmer come into the picture? Does he have an important and meaningful role to play? As has been pointed out by a number of hon. members, there is no guarantee of farmer participation on the boards that will be established under this bill. I suggest that the participation and co-operation of farmers is essential for the success of the legislation. We have heard a great deal from government spokesmen about the necessity of moving in the direction of participatory democracy. This bill, in the way in which it is framed, is a negation and a denial of everything the government has said about the necessity for participatory democracy. We are to have a National Farm Products Marketing Council. Various boards are to be established with government appointees, without any meaningful participation by farmers, those directly affected by the legislation.

Another matter that requires examination is the corporate invasion of the agricultural industry. This is a real danger to farmers and to the industry. It threatens the entire social and economic fabric of rural Canada. Admittedly, some aspects lie beyond federal jurisdiction and require provincial action, but the questions that must be asked with respect to this bill is: Will it be used as a tool by corporate enterprises to consolidate their position? Will it enable corporate enterprises engaging in agriculture to consolidate their position and give them an advantage over ordinary farmers who are attempting to make a living by farming?

A few minutes ago I referred to the remarks made by the Minister of Agriculture when he was introducing this bill. I suggest that he used a very hesitant tone in bringing the bill before this House. He suggested that in his view the situation——makes it at least desirable if not essential that we have enabling legislation on the statute books—

That is recorded at page 5968 of Hansard. Note the words "enabling legislation." This raises an important question as to what initiative the government will bring to bear once this legislation is placed on the statute books. The minister also noted that there are serious problems in the agricultural industry associated with fluctuations in farm income. I am glad he recognized that point. But then he went on to suggest that the real purpose of the legislation was to improve the efficiency of our marketing systems.

I have no quarrel with the objective of greater efficiency as long as it is kept within a proper context. Efficiency is not an end in itself. Efficiency is a means which is only well directed if it is directed towards a good and useful end. I suggest that when the minister placed his greatest stress on efficiency he overlooked one of the basic aspects of the farm marketing situation throughout Canadian history, namely, the instability which has been inherent in agricultural marketing. Surely the basic purpose of marketing legislation, whether it be at the federal or provincial level, should be to achieve stability.

The minister said that specific marketing agency legislation had been enacted in the past. He made specific reference to the Canadian Wheat Board. I agree that there is an overdue need for legislation to deal with the whole range of farm products to ensure that they might be marketed on an orderly basis. He also said that the basic role of the National Farm Products Marketing Council would be to provide guidance and advice. I have no quarrel with the establishment of this body for that purpose. Certainly it can play a very useful role. It can also provide liaison with provincial marketing agencies and provincial governments. But, again, the whole question depends on what action the government is going to take.

Such a council can make all the recommendations it likes; it can do everything possible to try and proceed with adequate marketing legislation, but unless it has the full support of the government none of the problems this bill attempts to start to solve will be solved. Mr. Speaker, I could go on to comment further on some of the minister's remarks in dealing with the bill on second reading. It seems to me that we had in the minister's remarks a very real indication that the government will move forward in a very hesitant, cautious way in making use of the legislation. I think it is important that we take note of the whole question of the approach to marketing problems once this legislation has been established.

In his speech the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) made reference to the Canadian Wheat Board. In my view the Canadian Wheat Board has done an outstanding job in the past. I think there is no good purpose to be served by anyone in this House continuing, for whatever purpose he has in mind, to pillory the Wheat Board commissioners. I think this does no one any good. I think it does a disservice to the farmers of western Canada and to the interests of all Canadians, because in my view the Canadian Wheat Board brought order and stability to the wheat scene in this country and to the grain scene in western Canada.

There have been problems, there have been some distortions in the picture, but I suggest that this has not been due basically to whatever shortcomings the Wheat Board commissioners may have had as individuals. After all, they are human beings just like the rest of us, and they can make mistakes just as any of us can. They have attempted to do a good job. I think the point that needs to be kept in mind is that the basic inadequacies have been in the area of government policy.

In my view, the latest example of that has to do with the question of operation LIFT. I hope that no government attempts to introduce marketing policies or to make use of the legislation now before us in the way the government has used the Canadian Wheat Board Act in introducing operation LIFT. The farmers have a rather colloquial and very down-to-earth term in referring to operation LIFT. If I were to use the term in this House, I would possibly be ruled out of order. Perhaps I could refer to it in the way farmers use the term. They describe operation LIFT as being a half donkey type of plan. I think this contention on the part of many farmers is borne out when we take into account the comments made in answer to a Motion for Papers which I placed on the Order Paper some time after the announcement of the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang). On March 25 a Motion for Papers in my name was moved asking—

> That an order of the House do issue for a copy of all background studies and reports prepared for the government in connection with the Lower Inventory for Tomorrow and Wheat Acreage Reduction Programs.

What was the response of the government? When the motion was moved in the House of Commons the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence who on that day was dealing with Motions for Papers in the House, answered as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the hon. Otto E. Lang, Minister without Portfolio, that there are no background studies or reports prepared for the government as requested by the hon. member. Background material on this subject has been prepared by government officials. However, such material constitutes internal government documents and is therefore privileged. As there is no material suitable for tabling, the minister would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

I think that certainly indicates the lack of adequate study and planning in presenting operation LIFT to the people of this country. I also suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if the government is to carry on any sort of meaningful consultations with the farmers of this country in dealing with marketing problems in future, it will have to use a different approach than was used in connection with operation LIFT. I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture, who is in his seat, and to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, who is also in his seat, that when consultations took place with the farm organizations on operation LIFT before it was announced, the plan that was discussed with the farm organizations was different from the plan finally announced. If that is not true, I challenge either of those ministers to rise in his place and say so.

I suggest that this illustrates the bankruptcy of government policy in dealing with the entire area of agricultural and farm marketing. I suggest that operation LIFT and the way it has been introduced is a distortion and perversion of the entire principle of orderly marketing.

An hon. Member: You said it!

Mr. Burton: If this is any indication of what the government will do with marketing legislation in the future, there is grave cause for doubt in dealing with the legislation now before us. I have some further remarks to make, but I do not have time to finish them this evening. Before calling it ten o'clock, may I have your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, to note that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland), who is in his seat at the moment, has also taken a great deal of interest in this legislation. This is the first opportunity I have had in the House to congratulate him on his election to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, may I also have your indulgence to note a unique role that the hon. member for Selkirk has undertaken in becoming a member of this chamber. In 1968 there were elected to the House of Commons 96 members who had never before sat in this chamber. One of those members fell by the wayside when his election was declared null and void. In the two by-elections, prior to the one at Selkirk, held since 1968 we witnessed the return of hon. members who had previously sat in this House. Thus, the 95 of us were still junior members of the House of Commons. Now we have a new member of the House and the 95 of us can now consider that we are no longer the junior members of the House of Commons. The hon. member for Selkirk is now the junior member. Certainly he does not need to look askance at this new role because I suggest he can consider that he has taken the place formerly occupied by 95 members. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

GRAIN—WHEAT—SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OR ALTERATION OF ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM

Mr. Doug. Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday I asked two questions of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), the substantial portions of which he declined to answer on the grounds that he did not agree with the premise upon which the questions were based, those premises being that operation LIFT was a failure and that it will be of virtually no assistance to those farmers whom I have the honour to represent and to farmers in like circumstances throughout the rest of Canada.

It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that the minister has spent a good deal of time lately on the Prairies talking to farmers. I should like to say at this time that if he still believes operation LIFT will succeed in reducing the acreage sown to wheat in western Canada by two-thirds, he has been doing a great deal more talking than listening.

During my campaign I must have visited between 20 and 25 per cent of the farm families in my riding. Not one of those farmers thought he would benefit from operation LIFT, and very few I talked to felt they would be in a position to comply with the provisions of the plan. Indeed, if I may be blunt, the greatest liability the Liberal candidate had in my campaign, next to the Prime Minister himself, was operation LIFT. Journalists have spent considerable time in the last few weeks commenting on operation LIFT and interviewing farmers to find out what they have done. They have all reached the conclusion that Mr. Newman reached in today's Globe and Mail, that farmers are rejecting the plan and will not co-operate with its provisions.

I mention also at this point, with respect to the premise upon which I based my question, that last month there were demonstrations in Edmonton, Regina and Winnipeg which involved over 12,000 farmers. At each of these three demonstrations the 12,000 farmers denounced operation LIFT and demanded its abandonment by the government. If in the face of this kind of evidence and these events the minister still says that the plan is going to be a success, I hate to think of the kind of evidence the minister requires before he will indicate it is a failure.

I do not intend to go into the reasons for the likely failure of operation LIFT in any detail this evening. The reasons have been presented to this House in copious detail by numerous spokesmen of the opposition. All of the reasons are transparently obvious to the most casual observer. In summary, the opposition is arguing that Operation LIFT must be abandoned or substantially modified. Operation LIFT simply does not meet the farmers' needs; as a consequence they cannot or will not comply with its provisions.

In addition, opposition spokesmen have been saying that the plan is discriminatory in the extreme, especially with respect to areas such as the Interlake in Manitoba. Finally, the plan is an administrative nightmare. The validity of the arguments against operation LIFT which the opposition has been pressing upon the government is self-evident. Yet the government has not undertaken the entirely sensible action which members of the opposition parties have been recommending to them over the past several weeks. Why? I believe the government is not taking action because this plan was never really designed to work. That is, whether it meets the farmers' needs or not is entirely beside the point. That is not its purpose.

Operation LIFT was conceived by cynicism and born of arrogance. Operation LIFT is nothing more than another public relations effort by this government which seems to have advertising account executives hiding behind every door. It is a massive put-on. It is simply an attempt to "con" the city dweller into believing that this government is taking some action that will help the farmer. It is a "con" job.

I want to spend a moment on the circumstances in which operation LIFT was born. The farm cash income shortage on the Prairies had reached crisis proportions, so much so that people in the villages and the urban centres of the Prairies were beginning to be affected by it, beginning to sympathize with the farmers and beginning to demand action from the government. Operating on the assumption that they hold few rural ridings and that the cities must be held at any cost, the government conceived a plan which in terms relative to the size of the problem would cost them next to nothing. With minimum expenditure the government could give city dwellers the impression that the government was hard at work attempting to solve the farmer's problems and thus avoid incurring a political liability of vast proportions in its main areas of strength.

The plan is tokenism of the worst sort since it attempts to pose as a substantial remedy. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is fond of saying that it represents a massive injection of capital, $100 million, into the western economy. It represents nothing of the sort. Noncompliance with the plan will mean that the projected $100 million expenditure will be reduced to $55 million at most. Even if the west received the full $100 million, what does that mean in real terms when the farm income in Saskatchewan alone has declined by $167 million in the past year?

Two years ago the then Minister of Agriculture told the farmers of western Canada that he would undertake to sell at $1.95 f.o.b. Lakehead 433⅓ million bushels of wheat per year over the next three years. For a number of years governments in Canada have been advising the farmers that they need to expand and specialize. These promises may have been sincerely made and the advice sincerely given, but the fact is they were wrong. I think the government of the day has an obligation to attempt to solve the problems that have been created because farmers followed that advice incorrect as it was, and because those promises could not be honoured. The proper way to do this would be to buy the farm-stored grain.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I should like to have been able to congratulate the hon. member on his effort tonight in view of his status as a new member of this House. I will try to be as gentle as I can with him, bearing in mind what he has said.

I find it surprising that he should continue to say, in effect, "What's $100 million?"—to suggest that this is not a significant sum and even to infer that the provision of such an amount was somehow helpful to us politically in the cities. In fact it is difficult to explain in parts of the non-rural areas of the country why this program to help farmers was desirable. I am not surprised the hon. member does not understand the program. He has been talking with his hon. friends who have been doing the general disservice of denying themselves an understanding of the plan and failing to acquaint farmers, in discussions with them, with the real benefits to be obtained from it.

I shall not speculate as to the exact number of acres which may come out of production. Before long we shall know the facts. The truth is that the plan provides an opportunity for farmers with surpluses to avoid producing further crops and to dispose of their surpluses in favour of an improved cash position this year. It allows those without surpluses to calculate the advantage of growing wheat as compared with other crops. Generally, it will direct them to the growing of crops other than wheat this year as a further help in disposing of the wheat surplus.

I should like to emphasize the benefit of the plan to farmers without surpluses who will produce other crops. To the extent that this program is successful, many acres which might have been used to grow crops other than wheat may be kept out of production. This would allow farmers without a surplus to have a better market for barley and rapeseed. The plan does provide for an injection of cash into the Prairie region where it is so badly needed, particularly into those areas where grain has been the main source of income and where cash has been shortest.

In a situation like this, $100 million can be of significant assistance. Such a sum in the Prairie region has secondary and tertiary effects as it moves through the economy, and this is why I have asked from the beginning that hon. members join in explaining to farmers the advantages they can take from the plan and not spend all their time in petty, partisan carping.

POST OFFICE—POSTAGE RATE INCREASES FORECAST BY MINISTER—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, since my question was directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) I do not know who will be responding to my comments in this adjournment debate.

Mr. Kierans: I'll give you one guess.

Mr. Macquarrie: Even before the Montreal crisis brought cabinet minister after cabinet minister into the act, the mismanagement of the Post Office Department had become a matter of concern for the whole government.

This is a service department and the people of Canada have a right to ask the government as a whole why service is not being provided. This is especially pertinent when the same minister who has such difficulty in getting the written and printed word into circulation is playing godfather to a satellite communications project which will cost this country millions of dollars. Incidentally, I am sure it will cost much more and go into orbit much later than the minister's forecast of some months ago indicated. But on the hard-pressed Post Office and the long-suffering users of the mail service, this relentless "efficiency expert" will press a pay-as-you-go policy. Up will go the cost of stamps, lock boxes, money orders, keys, and so on—upward, ever upward.

How encouraging to the Canadian people must be the utterance of the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) yesterday. He said:

> I repeat a promise made several times before, that future rate increases will be of smaller absolute size, will be introduced with as much advance notice as possible, and will quite possibly occur with greater frequency than in the past.

In other words, there will be smaller bites but more of them. Scarcely a comforting outlook for a long suffering public, and scarcely a promise attuned to the anti-inflationary chorus which the government has been singing for these many months. All of this is to start in 1971, based apparently on the assumption that the government's pusillanimous policies will have licked inflation by then. Little wonder that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) yesterday injected the comment that the Prime Minister, in agreeing with this assumption, could hardly have been serious. This famous quote in the speech that thrilled me so much yesterday, almost as much as the minister's review, catches the eye:

> We intend to pay our way, which means that those who do not use the postal service will not be picking up the bill, through their taxes, for those who do.

This interesting declamation of the opting-out doctrine may put the Postmaster General in a new school of constitutional authorities. He has been in strange places before, but this might be a new one. I refer to the proposition that the citizen pays only for those governmental services that he uses. I trust that despite all that has happened in the last 20 months the government still admits that the Post Office should be a public service.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

This is a formula with many intriguing possibilities. For example, the childless will be exempted from school taxes. Those who listen to private networks or local stations only will be excluded from the mammoth financial burdens that the country assumes on behalf of the CBC. Conceivably, the citizen who never used or needed police protection would opt out of contributing to the cost of maintaining our national police force, the RCMP. Such a process of selectivity of contributions to the public purse could be fascinating and would open avenues for M.A. and Ph.D. theses galore. You could opt out of this and into that. Individuality is the keynote. The resultant financial labyrinth would, however, make the white paper look like the purest of prose and the epitome of reason.

That the Post Office Department should be unique among government departments and asked to pay for itself, and it a service department, is surely something approaching absurdity. It should be efficient, of course; and at the moment it is not, nor does it seem to approach that goal. But that it must pay for itself, no matter that other aspects of governmental operation dig deeper into the treasury, is unbelievable.

It is this brittle insistence on this satus for the Post Office alone which has contributed considerably to the present plight of the minister and his department. The continuing obsession with the balance sheet, with proving the point come what may, has surely, after all these suffering months, been revealed for what it is. If before we are engulfed with greater ills we could concentrate on service instead of proving points, we might perhaps get things moving, including the mail itself.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the millifluous muse of the Conservative Party is often amusing, but he is rarely relevant and hardly ever impressive. His carping and constant criticisms are neither constructive nor do they reflect any particularly or deeply held beliefs or principles.

Yesterday I simply said to a group of the largest customers that the Canadian Post Office has, "Here are a few of the facts of life. In this day and age costs are rising. The government is determined to cut down the spiral of inflation which robs, as all of us know but few of us will admit, those who are weakest in society. It is our desire to protect them". You can cover the cost, including the present postal union demands which all members on the opposite side will undoubtedly endorse, in one of three ways. This can be done by charging the people whose mail is carried by workers in the Post Office, by improving productivity and efficiency or by increasing the taxes of the general public.

We believe in a combination of the first two. We do not believe that $500,000 should be given in the form of a subsidy to the business community of this country who are 80 per cent users of the service. We believe they can afford to pay for the services they demand. We have given evidence of our intention to improve productivity and efficiency. We do not believe in making pick-ups in mail boxes where there are no letters, or in making runs that are duplicating or irrelevant. We do not believe in maintaining post offices after the population has moved away, nor do we believe in employing 450 people to distribute and carry the mail in Montreal when 250 people can do the job.

Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say this. If we follow what the hon. member seems to suggest and provide this service at less than its cost, where shall the money come from? Shall it come from the pensions we are trying to increase for the aged? Shall it come from programs to increase housing and cure pollution? Shall it come from education? Shall it be taken away from the apparently legitimate demands of the provinces and municipalities? I am trying to point out that the members of the Tory Party exceed in their demands, although one would not expect it, the demands of the two parties to their left. But that party is distinguished from the two parties to the left because the members of that party never say where the money is to come from.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired.

AIR CANADA—POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF EASTERN HEADQUARTERS FROM HALIFAX TO MONTREAL

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, after the high-blown prose of the rhetorical reunion of the two dear friends who have just spoken, my remarks I fear will appear to be pedestrian. Nonetheless I shall persevere. My remarks have their genesis in the question asked on April 29, as recorded at page 6413 of Hansard, by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis). He asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) whether Air Canada had made him aware that it is considering the moving of its eastern headquarters from Halifax to Montreal. The minister replied that he had not had any such advice from Air Canada. The hon. member then asked the minister the following question:

> The minister has not been informed of a number of things Air Canada is doing, but is he aware that this company which operated with six vice-presidents . . . now has 19 vice-presidents and there are three more to come.

There was no response to that question. My colleague, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), asked whether the minister would inform himself about the situation and advise the House at an early opportunity, and the minister replied that he would be glad to do so. The exchange was continued today. Before I relate that in brief, may I say that there was a statement made by the public relations officer of Air Canada, Mr. John Rankin, in Halifax to the effect that the present sales department and operational department will be replaced by a passenger service department. This step, by the way, is to be taken in all Air Canada centres, so I say to the fellows from the west that it will strike the west as well as the east. This is to be under one manager. In the Atlantic region the managers would report through the Halifax manager, as a sort of super-manager, to the head office in Montreal.

• (10:20 p.m.)

My colleague, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East raised last Thursday's question again in the House today, directed to the Minister of Transport. The minister indicated that a full report on reorganization would be given to the House when received. I complained that the specific question that had been raised by my colleague had received only a general answer and, as I recall, I asked, "Does that mean that the decision of Air Canada is the obliteration of a regional office in favour of centralization somewhere else?" The minister replied that this was exactly what he had asked of Air Canada and he had been told there was a complex reorganization under way; it was not something that could be answered within the framework of a normal verbal answer in the House. Thus our appearance tonight; the standard route was followed.

In any event, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East and myself are informed that in a recent bulletin issued by Air Canada something called the Eastern Voyageur Region is defined, and this embraces the province of Quebec, metropolitan Ottawa and Atlantic Canada including Labrador. It stretches from Stittsville, in other words, to Bonavista. There would be a regional office for this large land-mass in Montreal, says this bulletin of Air Canada, and the vice-president for this new region has not yet been appointed. So the prophet, the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond may have been partly right when he said that three vice-presidents were on the way, because certainly one of those three is on the way.

Apparently, Air Canada has not advised the Minister of Transport of this, or perhaps if they sent him the bulletin it was put in the hands of the minister in charge of the Post Office and has not yet arrived. But what a heady word is "voyageur." Instead of canoes, one can see Viscounts, Vanguards, DC-8s and DC-9s floating through the great skies over Atlantic Canada, invisible strings attaching them to some vice-president yet to be appointed in Montreal. Montreal, sir, was always the great centre of the fur trade in the days of the early voyageurs who deposited there the skins that they took from western Canada. Now it looks as if it is the turn of the east to be skinned.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I can merely reiterate in part at least what I said this afternoon and remind the House and you, Mr. Speaker, that in so far as management decisions are concerned it is for the directors of Air Canada to make them and it is not the habit, nor do I think that hon. members opposite any more than any member of this House would want it otherwise, for them to consult with or get the approval of the Minister of Transport for such matters as are entirely and by law, in fact, assigned to them.

I am in a bit of an awkward position, as hon. members will know, in seeking to answer these questions as specifically as I would like to, for the simple reason that until this reorganization is completed I have no way in which I can intrude into the process. I simply have to get the advice on the request of members and pass it along to them. This I have attempted to do.

I was informed, subsequent to our discussion this afternoon, that in fact in the judgment of Air Canada—I am passing this on as a result of our conversation and not in any written form, so I would ask members to bear this in mind—the use of such terms as "regions" and so on has not really been in the old framework of Air Canada; that it came into common usage but was not necessarily a part of the organizational structure.

In fact, now there are going to be regions but there will only be three for the whole of the country. I have undertaken to provide members with a complete outline of the reorganization as soon as it is obtained from Air Canada. But as I understand it, under the new grouping there will be three separate regions, the one to which the hon. member has referred—and I agree with him that it is rather romantically titled—and two others. These will presumably be central Canada and western Canada.

Within these regions, however, I am told that there will be very large districts and that in fact the position with regard to, let us say Halifax, which is naturally the object of the hon. member's primary concern, would continue to be an important focal point in terms of Atlantic air transportation. Whether or not the outcome of this will be satisfactory to the hon. member, I frankly cannot say at this moment. I can only indicate the two steps I have taken. One is to request the details of the reorganization, the second is to advance the time at which the Committee on Transportation can deal with this matter and then hon. members will have a chance to question both the chairman of Air Canada and its top officials as to what is proposed.

I am assured by Air Canada that it is their intention to achieve a more efficient operation, in their judgment, but to do so and to temper this need for efficiency with a great deal of understanding of the personnel problems involved. I hope that satisfies the hon. member.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.27 p.m.
