FROM " THE YEAR OF THE ROSE."

The time of lovers is brief;
From fair first loy to the grief
th t tells when love is grown old.
From no red to the white rose leaf.
They have but a season to seem
As rose-leaves lost on a stream
That part not and pass not apart.

From the bloom and the gloom that enclose from the steath-bed of love where he dozes. Till, a relic be left not of sand. To the hour-glas we that breaks in his hand from the change in the gray garden closes. To the last stray grass of the strand, A rain and ruin of roses. Over the red rose land.

Fearful Gallows Scene.-Five Men Dropping from the same Trap. From the New Orleans Times.

Monday morning, at Napoleonville, the Parish of Assumption, the murderers of Rlisha Eastwood paid the penalty of their crime, and in the presence of almost the entire male population of the parish swung aloft-a dreadful and never-to-beorgotten example of high retribution and inexorable law. A more terrible or freadful execution has never been witessed in this State, or one in which the nhappy victims left fewer mourners. Thursday evening the writer visited them for the first time, and found them smoking cigars and chatting lightly on their backs. Their ankles were secured in the stocks, and under them lay a the most utterly foriors of the unnappy for damages.

The guards had been doubled around the jail, and the utmost vigilance prevailed. The gallows stood at one side of the prison, facing the high road and the bayou. It was quite an original structure, and one altogether suggested by Governor, but not as a hope of pardon.

the steps of the scaffold, and John Ross followed close behind him, walking with a firm and determined gail, but with no appearance whatever of the bravado. The hangman and priests brought up the procession and the former having adjustified for the next victim. Ross was perfectly cool and collected, and making a slight inclination of his head to the throbbing mulitude said, with a loud volce, "Hot with the cooled, and there was not a heart in that immense concurres that did not feel immeasurably relieved at this exhibition of courage on the part of the unfortunate man. They were all dressed in clean linen shirts and light pants, with gloves and white sucks. Their arms were, as usual, tied behind their backs

All the men having been placed in position, the hangman retired, and the priest, with stole on, recited prayers aloud, and was accompanied by the men. Sheriff Heluin next rode up near the scaffold between the two deputies, and read their death warrants in a loud rode. This having concluded he saked looking eyes in an ominous and disagree able way. He wore a light growth of hair under his chin and on his lip, and his nose was slightly hollow in the middle. On the whole, he looked like a man whose acquaintance in life could be advantageously dispensed with.

The next most remarkable person was John Ross; he was of medium height, huge in structure, and with an arm of Herculean muscle. He bore his fate bravely to the end, and the strong lines of character above his mouth indicated a man of no usual nerve and determination. He was a mulatto, with a small growth of hair on his chin, and a good talker to boot. His manner during the latter days of his confinement was perfectly tranquil, in fact, cheerful at times, and his bravery instilled courage into his luckless mates.

The looking eyes in an ominous and disagree read their death wa rrants in a loud voice. This having concluded, he asked the first man, John Ross, if he had anything to say. Ross spoke very calmiy and deliberately for a short time, neither denying nor admitting his participation in the murder of Rastwood, but stating that he was willing and ready to die. God. In a ringing and unfaltering voice he pointed to himself as an example of the end that must inevitably ensue from a misspent life, and exhorted people to remember this fearful warning. He spoke of the kind manner in which the Sheriff treated him in prison, and expressed his thanks for the consideration shown him by the people of the town. His last words were to his mother and children, who stood near in pitiful weeping and distraction, to remember him and to the warning by his fate.
