What! are they left alone All night with graven stone, Pillars and arches that above them While through those windows high, The journeying stars can spy, And dim blue moonbeams drop uncovered feet.

There is a wandering veir d in the hand where those snowdrops lie. Let her rapt dreamy smile The wondering heart beguile, lmost thinks to hear a calm, tented sigh.

What silence dwells between Those sever'd lips serene!

Could not—but failing lay, Sighed her young life away, And let her arm drop in listless rest, Too weary on that bed To turn her dying head, Or fold the little sister nearer to her breast

Yet this is faintly told look of calm surprise, of meek regret As if with life oppressed She turned her to her rest felt her mother's love and looked

How wistfully they close, Sweet eyes, to their repose quietly declines the placid brow The young lips seem to say, "I have wept much to-day And felt some bitter pains, but they over now."

Sleep! there are left below Many who pine to go, who lay it to their chastened souls, That gloomy days draw nigh, And they are blest who die this green world grows worse the long er that she rolls.

And as for me I know A little of her woe, Her yearning want doth in my soul abide, And sighs of them that weep, O put us soon to sleep, For when we wake-with Thee-we be satisfied."

The Yarmouth Tribune of Wednesday gives the particulars of this strange occur-ence. On the evening of Sunday inst, the rrd inst., Mr. Freeman Dennis and family left their house on Parade Street, to attend left their house on Parade Street, to attend the revival meeting at the Rink. The house was locked up. Among the mem-bers of his family who accompanied him was his nephew and adopted son, William Albert Perry, a youth in his 17th year, who had lived with him from infancy. The lad suffers from an affliction in the eye, from which he is almost blind. He remained in the Riak until about 8 o'clock, when, with with the knowledge of those who were with him' he went out. Though he did not return, no thought was given to the matter, and at 9 o'clock Mr. Dennis left the Rink for home. A boy named Frank Perry, a brother of William, ran ahead, but soon came running back in an excited manner and annonneed that the back door of the house was open. Mr. Dennis hastened to the house, and, finding this to be the case, made an examination of the premises, discovering in the kitchen, on the floor, William Perry's coat, which he had worn at the Rink, and his torn collar and neck-tie. On the hearth of the stove lay his spec-tacles, one of the lenses cracked; the table, BLOOMINGTON.

Argus states that within the past few weeks seventeen barns have been burned, principally in the section of country lying between Charlottetown and Summerside. In most cases these barns contained all, or nearly all, of the season's corp of hay and grain as well as farming. crop of hay and grain as well as farming implements, which renders the loss to the unfortunate owners doubly distressing in view of the early setting in of winter.

Pants and Vests. Also, While many of these fires were doubtless accidental, or, strictly speaking, due to the absurd practice many farmers indulge in of storing hot ashes in wooden receptacles in outhouses or corners of their barns, it is well known that some were the work of incendiaries. This imparts a very serious aspect to the situation. The frequent recurrence of such fires clearly imposes on farmers the duty of iusuring their property.

In the bosyline the solutions of pieces, great and small, all glowing with the most intense red heat that can possibly be seen. With a powerful operaglass they silently watched the visible operations of the volcano. Each piece as it ascended into the air was separate; no piece was partly red and partly black, but was on fire and at red-heat throughout; mostly the lava emitted fell back again into the bosom of the heaving mass, but with every emission quantities, large or small, fell on the outside of the mouth. As they descended to the crater the rain had ceased; whilst there for a time it again fell heavily; then the whole it again fell heavily; then the whole rain had ceased; whilst there for a time it again fell heavily; then the whole surface seemed "frizzling and hissing, and steaming," as the two bodies came in contact; the thunder overhead was pealing like the roar of fifty parks of artillery in concert, and the lightning flashing with intense vividness; then the rain and thunder and lightning walk!"

The next moment there was a splash in the river; but before the yawl could be lowered the man had succeeded in reaching the shore, and hallooed out;
