could distinguish, one genuine free trader to be found in their ranks. And, if you judge by their conduct, and by their conduct as crystallized into legislation, do you find any genuine free trade principle in the Government or in the ranks of those who support them? The hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) asks how I maintain that free corn is contrary to the doctrines of free trade. If corn is made free, it can only be justified, on free trade grounds, if other goods are made free and if every person is put on the same footing as those who use corn. The fundamental doctrine of the free trader is to remove restrictions, to do away with duties and to allow trade to flow easily in natural channels, and to raise a revenue to provide for the public needs of the country by taxing fairly and equally the people of the country generally. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that he holds that giving the agriculturists, those who have cattle, or whose particular private or sectional, or local interests demand and require such a favour, free corn, is a measure in the direction of free trade?

Mr. MCGREGOR. Certainly.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Is that in the direction of a revenue tariff, the object of which is to remove adventitious advantages that are possessed by some and distribute them equally to the others? If the hon. gentleman cannot understand a proposition such as that I lay before him, I do not wonder at his supporting a Government like the present; he is in the densest ignorance as to what is required to fulfil the promises of a free trade party. I say that we found during the election contest this same state of affairs. In the county I had the honour to contest, and which I have now the honour to represent, we are generally interested in protection, we pin our faith to protection and avow ourselves protectionists. We were in favour of protection to coal. And what did we find? We found that those who opposed us in the county were not only not opposed to protection to coal, but were prepared to go further in that direction than the Government had gone.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. That would suit you.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). No; no dishonest argument of that kind suits me. I am perfectly willing to take my stand in a manly way upon the public platform and maintain the propositions I believe in. But I do not want a man who is opposed to me to sneak around under a false pretense of believing in something to which his whole party is opposed, in order that he may have a chance to stab me in the back. I want an honest, open, up-and-down opponent, who believes something, who is prepared to lay down his proposition and fight it out for that proposition, and who seeks by argument to secure the support of the electors to whom we are both appealing. I do not want to fight a many-headed, a many-hued party, one man talking free trade, another revenue tariff, another free trade as it is in England, and still another protection. Such a party it is inconvenient to have to fight; such a party it is not creditable to have to fight. We like straightforward declarations on the part of our opponents. We are prepared to pledge ourselves to certain views; and when we come into power, as I believe we shall at an early day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). If the Government continue the course upon which they have entered of trying to sit upon two stools, of trying to ride two horses, they must inevitably come to the ground before long. Clever as may be the leader of the Liberal party, there is no reason in the facts, nor is there anything in their past record to make us believe that they can long maintain such a position.

Mr. MCGREGOR. The people of Nova Scotia and Quebec said they were all right.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The people of Nova Scotia did not say they were all right. The very ground upon which the so-called Liberals appealed to the people of Nova Scotia was that of protection to coal—the party that for eighteen years has denounced protection, and for eighteen years had tried to foment dissensions between different sections of the people by telling the people in the maritime provinces that their flour was taxed for the benefit of Ontario, and by telling the people of Ontario that they were being injured by the taxation on coal. The party which has a policy which can only be developed piecemeal in hole and corner fashion, cannot hope to maintain its position in the face of a party which has one policy from one end of Canada to the other. Our policy is protection, upon that ground we are prepared to stand.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Were you not a Grit at one time?

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The hon. gentleman is very curious. Perhaps I shall be able to satisfy him before the session closes. I hope he is not so dull of comprehension that the hon. gentleman will fail to learn whether I am a Grit or not. I must admit that he will probably have difficulty in judging me from a straightforward declaration of policy, because the gentlemen with whom he associates are not to be judged in that fashion. They say one thing to-day and another to-morrow, they say one thing here and another there. But the hon. gentleman will not find it so upon this side of the House. He will have no difficulty in understanding my position and the position of any man who stands beside me on this side of the House.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I think you are tired of that position.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I can assure him we are not.

Mr. MCGREGOR. The country is tired of it.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I can assure him it is not. I can tell him something more, since he is so anxious for information. I can tell him that the Government he supports is tired of the policy they have been advocating. If not, why is it that this Government is trying to perpetuate its existence by giving us what, upon its face, is practically a protectionist measure? The Conservative party was never more alive than it is to-day. Its policy has so permeated Canada, it is so acceptable to the people of Canada, that the Liberal-Conservative party, instead of being dead and buried, is very much alive, or if it is dead and buried, its spirit is very much alive to-day, and it is so much so that the present Government, in propounding their tariff, has had to adopt the policy of the Conservative party. If not, why is it that they bring down to us what, upon its face, is a protectionist measure? I would like the hon. gentleman who is so inquisitive, to tell me if he has been able to ascertain, in his researches into this tariff, what the result has been? Is the tariff a free trade measure, or is it a revenue measure?

Mr. LISTER. We want to know something about Quebec.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). My hon. friend is very silent when he is asked any questions that are pertinent to this discussion, he is not ready to answer them. I can assure him that while I have had much experience in this House that all these interruptions will be perfectly futile if he thinks they will divert me from the course of my argument. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) wants to know what about Quebec. Well, Quebec has gone Grit, it has gone strongly in that direction, and I suppose hon. gentlemen are very much pleased about it. I suppose they are glad to know that their friends of former days are again with their noses in the trough. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, they would not be at all unwilling to know that at the next great election contest in Canada they would have just the very same class of friends in the public offices, and as ready as they were in days of old to furnish to the Liberal party that assistance which it is credibly supposed the Government of Mr. Mercier did furnish to his friend Mr. Laurier. One thing is sure, that whatever the popular verdict of Quebec has been, those men who know the difference between good and bad government know that the verdict given yesterday was not one which was given after a careful examination of the records of the last Liberal and the last Conservative Government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). What are hon. members laughing about? Are they laughing, at the poor people of Quebec? Are they laughing at the poor innocents in Quebec who, after being reduced to a condition in which the credit of their province was destroyed by a Liberal regime, have seen it restored by a Conservative regime to a decent and respectable position in the ranks of the provinces of Canada? They laugh, and well they may. They laugh heartily since they got in here. No matter with what they are charged by this side of the House, they have only one all-sufficient answer: We are here and you are there. What do these gentlemen care for sincerity? What do they care for the opinion of the public? "We are here and you are there." Apparently the only thing by which these gentlemen are able to judge as to the good or bad character of a movement, as to the good or bad results of a movement, is whether or not it puts them in a position to control the treasury. Why, they openly laugh when reproached with things which in a private individual would be disgraceful. They laugh to scorn the idea that Canada has a right to expect from her leading public men, the great representatives of a great party, honesty of conviction, honesty of purpose, and an honest attempt to fulfil promises made. They laugh at these things, and still that hon. gentleman (Mr. Somerville) hiding his head like the ostrich, shuts his eyes to all the consequences that must come from a public sentiment aroused to a sense of the outrage which has been committed, and which it will not condone when committed by the great men, or those who are supposed to be the great men of the Liberal party, violating the fundamental principles of morality. Now, I say it is not an unfortunate thing at all that we have an opportunity to discuss these measures. It is most important that we should have these opportunities, it is most important that the hollowness of these gentlemen's professions should be made perfectly palpable to the people of Canada. Let these gentlemen indulge in all their happy dreams of a continuance in power for a long time. I have no doubt whatever if, as I believe, the people of Canada are still strongly in favour of that system of protection established by the Conservative Government, that these gentlemen can not long remain in power unless they go further than they have yet gone, and adopt absolutely the whole policy of the late Liberal-Conservative Government. Now, if they decide to do that, I am sure we will have every reason to flatter ourselves, when all these great leaders, these men who for eighteen years assailed the Conservative party and Government, now that they are in power are compelled to go back on every pledge that they have given, on every principle they have valued, and to adopt as they have done, almost to the full extent, the principles they condemned before they attained to power. What better vindication for the Conservative party and the Conservative policy can you find? It is much better in that sense than the result of the general election. No better vindication of the policy of the Liberal-Conservative party of Canada in favour of protection could be furnished than the fact that their opponents have been compelled to adopt it. Therefore, I maintain that it is not at all unfortunate that we have an opportunity, through the resolution that has been introduced by the member for Assiniboia to consider these questions, and at the earliest possible moment, to put ourselves on record as being strictly and straightly in favour of protection, and as being equally determined on every occasion to denounce, as we should denounce, in our character of representatives of the people, the course and conduct that hon. gentlemen opposite have followed in their efforts to keep control of the Government. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) maintained that the action of the present Government in going in a certain direction towards fulfilling their promises to the North-west, is to that extent a fulfilment of their promise to bring in a tariff for revenue. Does the hon. gentleman believe what he says? If he does, he does not understand what he says. Coal oil reduced one-sixth—is that a tariff for revenue? Corn made free, barbed wire to be made free in a short time; binder twine to be made free—does the hon. member for Guysborough consider that these measures form part of a tariff for revenue? Is it possible that his education has been so neglected in the great schools of free trade he has attended that he is not able to recognize the difference between such a policy as that and a policy of tariff for revenue? I cannot believe it, but still I am compelled to believe that the hon. gentleman, seeing the desperate position in which his party has placed themselves, a position that is perfectly indefensible, is compelled to set up such false pretensions as these, with the idea that they will pass unnoticed, and that they will be overlooked as temporary aberrations on his part.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Are you going to vote for Davin's motion?

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The hon. gentleman will find out if he will wait until the vote is taken. The resolution of the hon. member for Assiniboia is one that I am sure will commend itself to his constituents in the west. I am sure he has the very highest possible authority for it, he has the authority of the Premier of Canada. Now, that may be no good at present to the hon. gentlemen opposite, but it ought to be good enough to justify the member for Assiniboia in introducing his resolution, and I should think my hon. friend who is so full of interruptions, would be now in that position in which he would be compelled to vote for that resolution. Did the hon. gentleman not support the Premier at a time when he was making the very promises which the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) is now asking him to fulfil? I would not be surprised if I discovered that the hon. gentleman had on platforms and elsewhere in his own county advocated this very concession. I do not consider that a member is justified in any neglect of duty by what the hon. member for West Assiniboia may have done. It will be time enough when the hon. gentleman has shown himself to occupy the right position, to criticise the hon. member for West Assiniboia. I should not be surprised if the hon. gentleman even now voted for the amendment.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. No.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The hon. gentleman would not be where he is, he would not be worthy of sitting where he is, if he was so honest as to take that step. The truth is that the issue is one of policy. This party stands for protection. That party stands for a mixed policy—a little protection, a little free trade, a little revenue tariff, a little reciprocity, a little of everything. In fact, it is not hard to catch almost anybody with that policy, for there is something in it to suit everybody. The party on this side of the House stands for protection to Canadian industries, and for sufficient protection to those industries. Furthermore, there is this difference between the two parties. This party is for sincerity, for straightforward declarations and an honest attempt to fulfil them. Hon. gentlemen opposite and those who fill the Government benches could not have been sincere in their pledges to the people, because they have not now made any attempt to fulfil them.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not intend to detain the House more than a few moments, but I cannot keep my seat and listen to the speech delivered by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) without making a short reply. The hon. gentleman stated that the Liberal party preached free trade in one place and protection in another, and he said that, so far as he was concerned, he did not do one thing at one place and another thing at another place. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a report of a lecture delivered by the hon. gentleman in New Glasgow, N.S., in 1891. Let me state before reading an extract from the report, that the hon. member for Pictou, for whom I have the very greatest personal regard, ran an election in 1887, and he could not find words strong enough to condemn his present colleague. However, in 1891 the hon. member for Pictou delivered this lecture in New Glasgow, and I will read his reference to free trade. They were as follows:—

I consider the argument of the free trader unanswerable. I believe at this moment that if Canada took a liberal step in the direction of free trade, it would go a long way to place her upon the road to the greatest prosperity. The reasons why I consider Canada should turn about and adopt a free trade policy are: (a) that we might free ourselves from the dominating influences of the United States; (b) on account of the failure of the National Policy; (c) because of the startling revelations of the census.

But in 1896 the genial gentleman, when he was notified of his candidature with the late Solicitor General, changed his opinion. Here is an extract from a report of his speech at the Tory convention delivered last year:

The great issue for this election is the trade and tariff question. I avow myself an admirer of the National Policy, and am prepared to support it in preference to any so-called free trade policy which could be put forth.

Mr. Speaker, we have the hon. member for West Assiniboia who takes up the time of the House to a considerable extent, but I now wish to hail the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) as the Davin of Nova Scotia. I do not think it necessary to make any comments on these speeches of the hon. gentleman, except to say that I trust he will remember the maxim "consistency, thou art a jewel," in all cases.

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To promote the establishment and maintenance of creameries in the North-west Territories $15,000

Mr. DAVIN. This vote was postponed last night in order that we should hear from the Minister. How many creameries are to be established in the Territories and where are they to be established?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). There will be, by this arrangement, sixteen creameries and sixteen skimming stations attached to various stations, making in all thirty-two places where milk will be collected for making into butter. Moosomin, White Wood, Grenfell, Wolseley, Qu'Appelle, Maple Creek, Witaskiwin are creameries newly established. Wolseley will have three separating stations subsidiary to it, namely, Moffatt, Lebret and Fort Qu'Appelle. Witaskiwin, McLean, Balgonie, Craven, Buffalo Creek are skimming stations, and the Prince Albert creamery will have Duck Lake as a subsidiary skimming station. In addition to these, there are the following stations restarted which have been in existence but were not operating, at any rate all of them were not operating, last season: Indian Head, Regina, Prince Albert, Moose Jaw, Calgary, with two or three subsidiary skimming stations. There will be Innisfail with four subsidiary skimming stations and Red Deer with two subsidiary skimming stations, namely, Lacombe and Leduc. There will also be Edmonton with two separating stations and Yorkton.

Mr. LOGAN.

That is a list of the creameries which will be running this season.

To promote dairying interests, by advances for milk and cream, and for making butter and cheese, to be recouped out of the proceeds of sales of such butter and cheese, to be placed to the credit of the Consolidated Revenue Fund..... $100,000

Mr. CLANCY. We should have some explanation from the Minister of Agriculture in regard to this vote. He is asking for a very considerable increase and this is practically a new experiment in the North-west Territories. I think the House should have some specific information on the matter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) says that this is a very considerable increase on last year. For the information of the House I may say, that the vote last year was entirely for the purpose of carrying on the dairy work in Prince Edward Island. That work has ceased altogether this year, but in place of it we are running the creameries I have just mentioned in the North-west Territories. This is a much larger number of stations than we were dealing with last year, and we expect that the produce will be much greater. The estimate made by Prof. Robertson, the dairy commissioner who has this matter in charge, is, that about $5,000 of this vote will be required for the creamery which we are running at the Nappan Farm, Nova Scotia, and that $95,000 about, will be required for advances on the first ten weeks work in the North-west Territories. We hope to make about 10,000 pounds of butter a day, and in the course of ten weeks we expect to make so much butter, that we will be obliged to use up fully $90,000 or $95,000 in advances to the patrons of those creameries. After the ten weeks, we expect, that from the sales will accrue to a sufficient amount to enable us to supply the advances which will then be necessary for the rest of the season. We found that this large amount of money was needed because, we could not market the butter and get the returns for it from the North-west Territories, in less than, at the least ten weeks. The estimate which is made of the production of the North-west creameries during this coming season, indicates that about from $90,000 to $95,000 worth of butter will be produced and exported—or sold at all events whether exported or not—before we get the returns, and begin to utilize the money accruing from the sales, for the succeeding advances.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). I wish to refer to the case of Prince Edward Island. The Government has controlled several cheese and butter factories in that province for several years past, and it has continued for two or three years the subsidies to the weaker factories, the stronger ones being left to shift for themselves which I am glad to say they have fairly succeeded in doing. I regret very much that the Minister has not seen his way to continue the subsidies to the weaker factories, until they would have grown a little stronger at least, and have a better chance of carrying out the work that was so well begun. I believe it is the intention of the Government to withdraw wholly from Prince Edward Island the subsidies heretofore granted. I regret that the Government has not seen its way clear to continue the work; in the case of the weaker factories, for at least another year or two.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I should like to point out to the hon. member (Mr. Macdonald) that before I came into office, the late Government distinctly announced in Prince Edward Island, that they were about to withdraw. They announced more than a year ago that they were going to withdraw from most of the cheese factories during last season; that some of the weaker ones they would continue to run during that season, but, that in the season now commencing they would withdraw entirely. During the visit which I paid to Prince Edward Island last fall, I found that the condition of the work there was such as to justify that withdrawal. There are no creameries running there in summer under the Government patronage, but there were two running last winter. The cheese factories which ran last season, without the Government control, were successful, and from what I saw, I am satisfied, that with possibly one exception—a cheese factory which was started in a neighbourhood which evidently had not yet arrived at that condition of dairy work to justify the establishment of that factory—with that one exception, I believe that the factories this season will be able to operate on their own account. The hon. gentleman has slightly misused the word "subsidy," because there was not a subsidy given to these cheese factories. The Government simply ran them, controlling them and managing the business, and to a certain extent supplying the deficit which accrued on the small factories. It was felt by the late Government, and I concurred in that view, that it was time that these factories should assume the responsibility of doing their own work, and I feel that in the case of Prince Edward Island the time has now arrived when this should be done. However, in view of the fact that some of the factories there are rather weak, or not in a sufficiently advanced state to do without a little assistance, I have decided to maintain in the island two inspectors or teachers, who will remain there this season and aid the weaker factories with advice and assistance in testing the milk and carrying on their work. I think that by this means the island will be well able to carry on that business, which has been well established, and which is certainly a source of great profit and advantage to the farmers there. When I visited the island last fall, I was glad to find it reported that the factories had attained a high standard of excellence, and that their cheese was commanding a price almost equal to the very highest on the English market. Under these circumstances I felt that it was our duty to withdraw from these factories and allow them to manage their own business, as I am satisfied they are well able to do.

Mr. CLANCY. There are two points in connection with this vote that ought to be made clear to the House. It was urged strongly last year by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) that the fact of the Government entering on a work of this kind had a tendency to discourage local enterprise. That hon. gentleman took strong ground on that occasion, but I fancy he ought to be glad now to find that he was wrong, since the hon. Minister of Agriculture is asking for a very large increase in the vote for this year. I do not know whether my hon. friend dissents from the amount; but, aside from that, it does seem to me that the House should have a very clear enunciation of the policy of the Government—whether it is proposed to continue this vote year after year, the Government doing the work, or whether the work is to be left to private enterprise. I do not wish to be understood as offering any opposition whatever; but it is a very large work, and if it is in the right direction, it will necessarily grow, and require a very large addition to the sum already voted. Therefore, I think the House should be informed whether the intention of the Government is to continue in a work of this kind from year to year. I think the House should also have some definite information as to the probable loss, if any, that will arise from the enterprise. The hon. Minister of Agriculture will remember that when the late Government entered upon this work, many hon. gentlemen on that side of the House took very strong ground against it. I hope that time has at last solved the difficulty for them, and that they have now become convinced that the experiment is worth the undertaking. I am sure the committee will be glad to receive from the Minister of Agriculture some definite information on these points.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is the intention of the Government to run the creameries, and they are entering into an agreement for that purpose, for three years. In the case of new creameries, the Government supply half the capital invested, and the people of the neighbourhood the other half. Where there are already established creameries which are in financial difficulty—and I regret to say that most of the creameries in the North-west Territories were in financial difficulties—the Government have stepped in and made arrangements of a somewhat different character, according to the circumstances of each individual case, by which the Government take charge of the buildings and plant and equipment, and advance a sum of money to the owners somewhat in the same proportion as they advance to new creameries; that is to say, roughly speaking, about one-half the investment. Unfortunately, these creameries which have got into financial difficulties invested a larger sum than was necessary for a new enterprise, and the Government have not taken over these plants and buildings at the price they cost, but at a reasonable valuation of their present value. By this means the difficulty that existed when the individuals or associations themselves ran the creameries, disappears, because now the Government is responsible to the patrons who supply the milk, for the value of the milk supplied, and for the returns from the butter sold. When these associations or individuals got into financial difficulties, the patrons would not send their milk to them for fear the product of that milk might be seized to provide for the obligations of the creameries. The result was a deadlock. But we have avoided that difficulty by means of this arrangement, and have given the patrons confidence, so that they will be quite ready to send their milk, feeling assured that they will get from the Government the full returns from the product of their milk. There is one point that ought to be explained, and it is this, that in addition to the charge for making butter, we are charging one cent a pound on all the butter manufactured, which is placed to the credit of the patrons in proportion to the quantity of the milk they supply, and is used to pay off the obligation to the Government for the money the Government advances to establish the creamery. By this means we hope that after a short time, in most instances within the three years of our management, the patrons of these creameries will own in fee simple the proportion of the building, plant, &c. which the Government are now paying for, and the Government will be relieved of the charge, and the money we are advancing will come back into the treasury. At the same time, we will enable this industry to be established on a firm basis in the North-west Territories, to the enormous advantage of the agriculturists of that country. In a short time this industry will be so well established in the North-west that immigrants will find it on a firm basis there, will know it is adapted to the country, will thereby acquire a higher opinion of the country, and year by year their numbers will increase.

Mr. CLANCY. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that a sum was being retained each year from the patrons.

Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. One cent a pound on each pound manufactured is charged to the patrons, in addition to the 4 cents a pound charged for the manufacture. That sum of 1 cent is set aside as a sort of sinking fund. It is credited to the patrons in proportion to the milk they send to the factory. Each patron, as he sends in the milk, shall obtain so much credit, according to the amount of butter manufactured in the factory, and at the end of a few years he will step into the position of the Government.

Mr. CLANCY. How many years?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It depends on the number of patrons and the amount of milk supplied. One cent a pound will be retained for the purpose. If a large amount of butter is manufactured, it will only take two or three years, but if not it will take longer. The hon. gentleman spoke about the Government continuing this work. The arrangements we are making are made for three years, and I hope that, at the end of three years the business will be on such a good basis that the people themselves will be able to carry it on without Government assistance. Just as in Prince Edward Island, the Government for a few years carried on the work, and have now left it to the people to carry on themselves, which no doubt they will do successfully.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the work is very important, but I fear that the Government is entering upon a scheme that may end in a very tedious manner of recouping the treasury through the channel to which the hon. gentleman refers. He said that the intention of the Government was only to give aid for three years.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the hon. gentleman has misunderstood me. We are giving a certain amount of capital sum out of this $15,000, which we were voting to certain individual creameries. In some instances, we are supplying the plant in a new building, the people of the neighbourhood supplying the building. In other instances, where the creameries are in difficulties, we are advancing certain sums to remove some of their difficulties, and are taking control of the plant. We are running the creameries in addition for three years, but the sinking fund for the redemption of the money does not necessarily depend upon our running the creameries. That sinking fund will have to be continued until the whole money which the Government has advanced is paid up, whether in two, three or five years. We have undertaken to run the creameries for three years, so as to insure confidence in the patrons that they will few years he will step into the position of the Government.

Mr. CLANCY. That leads exactly to what I was endeavouring to point out. The Government have adopted a scheme in the North-west Territories which may be used as an engineering scheme for political purposes. They may have that last for two or five or ten years, or perpetually, and I think the House should have some express declaration from the Government that they do not intend coming to the assistance even of the creameries in the North-west Territories on grounds of this kind. It seems to me there is a healthier and better ground upon which the encouragement of this industry might be promoted. While it is a desirable work, it is most undesirable for the Government to enter upon work of that kind, which would practically make them partners with the patrons or make the patrons the slaves of the Government. I wish to point out that no more vicious course could be pursued than for the Government to come to the aid of any concern in this country and become partners in it and be obliged to continue it for how long we cannot say. It depends wholly on how much milk will come in. What will happen? The funds of the treasury will be invested in plants of that kind all over the North-west Territories. This House should have more definite information as to how long the Government intend to be partners in such schemes. While I am most friendly to the North-west Territories, it seems to me that this is a dangerous proposition which we should view with great alarm.

Mr. DAVIN. I confess that I cannot agree with my hon. friend behind me. I followed the Minister of Agriculture carefully, and from what little knowledge I have been able to gain about the practical work of these creameries, I think the House has a pretty good guarantee in the scheme proposed that the Government of Canada will not lose any money by it. I should like to learn from the hon. Minister what is the difference between the creameries he describes at Maclean and the creamery at Balgonie?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Balgonie is a collecting station for cream, subsidiary to the Regina creamery. There is a creamery at Regina where the butter will be manufactured and at Balgonie there is a station where the cream will be collected and carried to the Regina factory.

Mr. DAVIN. I understood from the hon. gentleman that there was a creamery at Maclean.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is another collecting station.

Mr. DAVIN. Is that a collecting station for Qu'Appelle?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. I mentioned the various collecting stations together, but did not know myself exactly the situation of each.

Mr. DAVIN. I would suggest to the hon. Minister whether he would not consider that Balgonie, which is the centre of a fine agricultural district, and is eighteen or nineteen miles from Regina, might not be made a station for a creamery. I know there is a strong desire to have a creamery there. I got the impression, when I was there, that they were able to guarantee a sufficient number of milking cows to warrant the establishment of a creamery there. At present, all that I would suggest to the Minister is that he should consider the matter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not the detailed report of Prof. Robertson, who went to the North-west and met the people at these places, as to the conclusions he came to after carefully investigating the claims of the different localities. But his opinion was that it was better to establish a collecting station at Balgonie and not a full creamery. The House can understand, of course, that there was a great desire in almost every locality to have a full creamery. But we had to look over the whole ground and make a choice, as we could not establish full creameries in all these localities without a larger grant of money. But I think that by the arrangements made we shall learn more definitely what steps should be taken. If, in the near future, this collecting or skimming station shows a sufficiently large amount of milk, we may be able to establish a creamery.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where does the hon. Minister propose to expend this $100,000 for the promotion of the dairying interests? As I understand, it is to be expended in the North-west.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. $5,000 of it is provided for advances to the creamery at Nappan, where we run a creamery every summer, and where the same system is pursued—we manufacture the butter and send it to the market, making advances of the probable value to the people, so that they have not to wait for a return. When the butter is sold the Government is recouped for the advancement. This is only a sum to be used temporarily and returned. The consolidated fund is not poorer than at the beginning.

Mr. TAYLOR. But I wish to know which of the provinces this money is to be expended in?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In Nova Scotia and the North-west Territories.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think that item ought to be so amended as to make it applicable only in Nova Scotia and in the North-west Territories. According to this item it is voted "to promote dairying interests," and is applicable to the whole Dominion. The hon. Minister could spend it in Ontario or any province.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We are not running any creamery or cheese factory there.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, but you could establish one. If it is required only for Nova Scotia and the North-west Territories, it should be made applicable there alone. I may say that I am pleased to see that the hon. Minister is following in the footsteps of his predecessor, the Minister of Agriculture under the late Government. The late Government asked for a certain amount of money to promote the dairying interests in Prince Edward Island; and I know that on our cheese board in Brockville, I have heard the Government berated by the president of the association of that board, Mr. Evarts, for the course they were pursuing in that respect. This Government are following up the same principle and making it applicable to the North-west Territories and Nova Scotia. I think that is quite right, for I believe that the late Government pursued a right policy in setting aside a certain amount of money to promote dairying, both the production of cheese and the production of butter, in the new provinces that have not yet done as Ontario did—because Ontario leads both in the cheese and butter industry, and it came to that state without any help from any Government. But these outlying provinces, which have not had the advantages that Ontario has had, I think should receive, as they did receive from the late Government, a helping hand. I am glad to see the present Government continuing that policy. But I do hold that this item should define where the money is to be made applicable.

Mr. MARTIN. I have no objection to this vote, or to the fostering of the dairying industry in the North-west Territories and other outlying sections of the Dominion, for the outlying sections a more fostering care than the more central sections of Canada. I am glad the Minister of Agriculture has extended his fostering care to the North-west Territories. But I am a little sorry that he has withdrawn the patronage of the Government from Prince Edward Island. You know, Sir, that what was done by the late Government there has resulted very beneficially indeed to the province. I would not object so much to the withdrawal of this support from the factories that have been in operation for several years. But I think it is unjust to factories which have been established only one or two years. I know that the Minister of Agriculture has taken a great deal of care of his department, and is getting on very well. If he could give a little more consideration to Prince Edward Island and give these factories which are to be established the same protection as has been given to those already established it would be a good thing. The change that has been made in Prince Edward Island through the policy of Government aid and supervision has been very satisfactory; it has been one of the greatest boons that has ever been conferred on Prince Edward Island. I did not think that this Government would withdraw its support; I was almost sure that, if anything, they would add a little to what their predecessors had done. We have always been told that we should get a good deal more when that party got into power. We have had in Prince Edward Island a gentleman in the employ of the Government who, I think, has done more service to Prince Edward Island than anybody else except Prof. Robertson, and that is Mr. Dillon. I understand that his services are to be dispensed with in Prince Edward Island, and I am sure if that is the case the cheese industry will get a very bad setback in that province. I may say also that Prince Edward Island labours under some disadvantages in this respect. Almost every province in the Dominion has an experimental farm supported by the Dominion. Prince Edward Island is altogether an agricultural country, and, I think, of all provinces of the Dominion should claim one experimental farm. That was an additional element to be taken into consideration by the Minister of Agriculture before he withdrew this patronage which the Government formerly extended to Prince Edward Island. I am not aware that since the late Government adopted this policy in Prince Edward Island it has entailed very much expense to the country. I think it has been self-sustaining. And I can assure the committee that many of the factories are more than self-sustaining. The late Government did what was right—they took hold of the weaker factories and extended their aid to them. Those factories that were self-sustaining and more than self-sustaining were allowed to operate on their own responsibility. I must say that I have a good word for the Minister, and I must acknowledge that there is a little offset to this in the fact that the steamer is to call fortnightly there during the summer. But even with that Prince Edward Island is not in as good a position as other parts of the Dominion. This is only a fortnightly call, in place of a weekly or bi-weekly call, as in several parts of the Dominion. If the favour that was extended by the late Government is withdrawn, it will not be well received by the people of Prince Edward Island. I do not think the expense would be very much.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I want to remove a misapprehension from the mind of the hon. gentleman. The late Government decided to withdraw from Prince Edward Island, and sent out a circular to inform the people of Prince Edward Island that they intended to withdraw. I am merely carrying out the plan they laid down, a plan which I confess I approve of, because the people of that province are able and willing to manage their own affairs and to deal with their dairy industry themselves. I grant there are some of these smaller factories there which may have a slight struggle for a short time; but at the same time I think the great bulk of them, with only one exception, will certainly go on and be able to manage their own business satisfactorily and well. The hon. gentleman speaks about Mr. Dillon, and his withdrawal some time ago. It was intended before I came to the office that Mr. Dillon's work should cease, and he understood that and was prepared for it. The hon. gentleman no doubt is forgetting these things when he tries to intimate that the policy of the new Government is in this respect less favourable to the people of Prince Edward Island than that of the preceding Government. I wish to have it distinctly understood that the hon. gentleman is mistaken in that idea.

Mr. MARTIN. I scarcely think the Minister of Agriculture can come before this House and say that his policy and that of the Government is to carry out the policy of their predecessors, but that is just what the hon. gentleman has told the House they are going to do. But in this respect I think they are going to follow the policy of their predecessors in a retrograde direction. They have led us to suppose that in following the policy of their predecessors they would do so in a progressive manner, but I am sorry to say that the contrary is the case.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) So far as this matter is concerned, if I remember rightly, I think that two or three years ago it was intimated by the then Government that they intended to withdraw their support from the factories in Prince Edward Island, but owing to the pressure that was brought to bear on the Government by the gentlemen representing Prince Edward Island at that time, they continued the supervision they had been extending to the cheese factories there for another season. At the end of that time it was suggested that they should withdraw, but again pressure was brought to bear, and it was continued for another year in favour of the weaker ones. I did hope that the Minister of Agriculture, with the intelligent advice of the dairy commissioner, would have continued the supervision of the weaker factories for a year or two longer, and of those that were about being established. I think it would cost the country little or nothing, and it would be a great boon to those people who are struggling to make a living at the present time from agriculture. The factories that were only established in the past year, are rather weak, and have not reached that stage in which they are able, as the saying is, to paddle their own canoe. If the Government could only see its way clear to continue the position they have taken heretofore with these factories, I believe it would be the proper thing to do. Let the stronger ones, as they would no doubt, stand alone, but the weaker ones, I think, should be aided for a little while longer.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture what is the arrangement as to the quantity of milk to be furnished at those factories that have received assistance as well as those that have been taken over, if there is a minimum quantity stipulated in every case. The reason I ask the question is obvious. Upon the plan of repayment, the Government must have a certain quantity of milk delivered at each factory in order to have that repayment made within a reasonable time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The dairy commissioner has exercised his judgment as to the number of cows and the number of patrons who are to be subsidiary to these factories, and we have established the factories where we believe there was sufficient milk to justify their establishment.

Mr. CLANCY. It is a most extraordinary ground on which to establish factories, that it is left entirely to the discretion of the dairy commissioner to say how much money shall be put in there, in view also of the uncertain chances of getting it out again. I think we should hesitate now more than ever in voting money upon principles of that kind. I think the hon. gentleman should be able to state that there was some fixed policy as to the quantity of milk to be furnished, otherwise there is not even a possibility in sight that the Government will ever get their money out of them again. Now, I want to ask the hon. gentleman another question which will perhaps make clear the position in which the Government are going. Is there any time fixed with regard to those factories that are being taken over, and those that are being aided, as to when this agreement should terminate? That is very important also, looking forward to putting an end at last to what may be called a partnership, and on the other hand, securing what is no doubt the object of giving these grants, that the creameries and the dairy interest may be in the near future become self-sustaining, and that the Government can withdraw their support as is being done in Prince Edward Island. I think I understood the hon. gentleman, that that is to be the policy of the Government. I am sure he will see how important it is that the people should look forward to a certain period when this will reasonably terminate.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I am sorry to see any measure of opposition being offered to this small vote for the North-west Territories in the matter of creameries. I am sure that if hon. gentlemen opposite knew the circumstances of the case they would see that the Minister of Agriculture is doing good work, not only in the interests of the North-west Territories, but of the country at large. It is very necessary in a new country like the North-west Territories that the people should get some assistance, because the people who come into that country as a general rule have not a large amount of money, and they cannot establish those creameries on their own account. It is almost impossible for them to do so, so it is necessary for the Government to assist them. The Government is not giving them this money, they are simply loaning it to them for the time being, and this money is going to be repaid in the way the Minister has explained to-night. We must take into consideration that when people come into a new country, and we do not always get the richest class of settlers, it takes a year and a half or two years before a settler can get a crop. In the meantime if there is a creamery near to the location where he takes up his land, he is enabled to take his cream to that creamery and to get money to live on. In this way a great many people are coming into the country who would not otherwise come in. I think that the $15,000 that was expended by the Minister of Agriculture in the North-west Territories last year, will do more towards promoting immigration into that country than $25,000 spent in immigration agents and in other ways, in trying to get people into that country. If you want to get immigrants into that country you have to make the settlers prosperous and contented who are there now, you have got to show people that are coming in, and that intend to come in, that there is some means of making a living in the country, and when you do that, you will get immigrants to come in. There is no doubt that one contented settler is worth ten immigration agents. People that settle in that country, if they are enabled to take their milk to a creamery, will write favourable letters to their friends, and be the means of bringing more people into the country. Something has been said about the number of cows necessary to run a creamery in that country. I understand the limit is 400 before any assistance will be granted, that settlers who may get up an association and apply for assistance have to give a guarantee that the milk of 400 cows will be taken to the creamery before they can receive the money. There is a provision in the ordinances of the North-west Territories to carry out the agreement. With respect to skimming stations, I think the Minister of Agriculture is perfectly right in that respect, because in operating a creamery it is just as cheap to use the milk of a thousand cows as three hundred or four hundred, and therefore it is in the interest of the people to run it on as large a scale as possible, and with this view to establish skimming stations. If a creamery can be run with a thousand cows, more money will be obtained by the patrons. The people are taking that view, and although there are some settlers there, as there are elsewhere, who are directly interested in their own backyards, and want a creamery established every fifteen or twenty miles; yet when the matter is fully explained there will be no difficulty in getting them to fall in with the view of the Minister of Agriculture, and creameries can be established at different points to which the milk can be sent. In the place of $15,000, the Minister, I think, should ask for $25,000. I hold that the security is perfectly good, and certainly the Government will be repaid. We do not consider this money as a gift, but as a loan. In regard to farmers having established creameries which are now in financial difficulties, it must be remembered that settlers coming into the country are not wealthy. This assistance, I repeat, is by way of loan. The property is not valued at its cost, but at what it is actually worth, and the security taken ensures that the money will be repaid because the Government has the whole matter in their own hands. They manufacture the butter and sell it and deduct one cent per pound, and no doubt in a year or two the amount will be paid. I am sorry the idea prevailed that there was any general opposition to this vote, and I thought it well to make this explanation for the benefit of gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman is evidently rather sensitive on the question. There is no disposition on the part of hon. members on this side of the House to oppose the vote, in fact every disposition has been shown to support the vote. Members from Ontario are generous indeed in being prepared to grant this large sum to the North-west Territories and Nova Scotia to establish creameries and promote the industry, while in the large provinces of Ontario and Quebec no similar allowance has been made. Certainly I am prepared to approve the vote as being in the right direction, and I hope in every way it will be successful and be productive of much good to the people in those sections of the country. But I would ask the Minister if it is not the intention of the Government, whilst they are granting this large sum for the use of the North-west Territories and Nova Scotia, to place in the Supplementary Estimates a small appropriation for the purpose of granting a bonus to promote the dairying interest in Ontario and other parts of the Dominion, a sum by which a bonus could be granted for first-class dairy or creamery butter no matter from what section of the country it might come. This matter has been discussed in the House already. I think it is a move in the right direction, and I hope the Government will be able to deal with the matter now in order to encourage the industry throughout the country, by granting a bonus to encourage the industry elsewhere.

Mr. GANONG. I am sure I have no objection to this vote, but I rather favour it, while at the same time I hope, like the last speaker, that other provinces will have some consideration. I represent the county of Charlotte, where we have one of those weak creameries. Our farmers have not very great experience, and much difficulty has been experienced in keeping it going. The county is devoted very largely to lumbering as well as to farming, and while it is not especially adapted to general farming, so far as regards its pasturage and water supply we have a county equal to any in the maritime provinces. We are within easy reach of the port of St. John, to which are to run subsidized steamers provided with cold storage. There is ample room in the county for quite a number of creameries, and if the Government were to give assistance to the present creamery, the tendency would be to develop a large business in the line of creameries, and this would tend to keep our farmers more fully occupied than they have been for the past few years. I trust that while this estimate may not be sufficient to include a proportionate amount for my county, the Supplementary Estimates may cover the required sum.

Mr. OLIVER. I desire to remove any wrong impression that may have arisen in regard to myself, either from remarks made by hon. gentlemen opposite, or owing to the position I took last session in regard to a creamery grant. If there is one thing I would dislike more than another it would be to have the idea prevail that any position taken by me has been in opposition to the creamery industry in the North-west. It is only fair to the Minister who has this matter in charge to say that not only at that time I had no opposition, but that I have no opposition now to the project, and further that the system inaugurated by the Minister has given, so far as it has gone, the greatest satisfaction in the constituency which I represent. Of course we cannot tell until the experiment has been longer in progress what the results will be, but the people are well satisfied with the action taken and they hope for good results. The position I took was in respect to the attitude which I understood to be taken by certain other members of the House, which was that the Government should employ its funds solely for the purpose of starting new creamery enterprises. In the district which I represent there were in existence five or six creameries into which the people had put $30,000 of their own money. Those creameries, owing to certain circumstances, were not a financial success. They were ahead of the times, the country was not ready for them, and when they got into financial difficulties, it seemed a very great hardship that they should not receive a share of the aid the Government were evidently going to grant. It was from making a demand or request on the Government that those creameries should receive a share of the aid, that I was construed to be in opposition to the projects relating to creameries. Whatever might have been the intention of the Government at the beginning, I do not know; but I take the opportunity of saying that the Government has shown the utmost desire to aid those enterprises that were already started and had fallen into financial difficulties. They did not do so by coming forward and paying the debts that had been incurred. The people who put their money into those enterprises had to consent to accept the cutting off of the amount of capital put in not represented by the actual value at the time the Government took over the creameries. The people were willing that should be done in order to place them in the hands of the Government and put the business on a satisfactory footing. The conditions against those creameries being successful as private enterprises were these: In the first place, those people were not acquainted with the business. Another thing was, that the country had not advanced sufficiently in this line to support them satisfactorily, and again, they were started in the face of a falling market for butter. In regard to butter, just as in regard to other agricultural products, the price has been going down, so that an enterprise started on a certain basis of value having to face a fall in the market, felt the loss more greatly than if it had to face a rising market. These were the unfortunate conditions that met the creameries which were started by private enterprise in the North-west Territories. The Government has now put these enterprises on a basis which is fair to the country, and fair to the people at large. Throughout the country affected by these creameries, and in the district that I represent, the greatest hopefulness is expressed by the people as to the results that are to be derived from this policy of the Government. There is no reason to suppose for an instant, that the Government will lose a dollar on the transaction directly, while indirectly, both the Government and the country will gain many thousands of dollars. In the district to which I refer, there are five creameries running under Government control, four of which have already been in operation and only one newly established. There are ten or fifteen separating stations, and altogether there is a country 200 miles in length served and thoroughly served, by this enterprise. The share of Government expenditure which has been made in that part of the country, to accommodate 200 miles of territory, is certainly very small compared with the results that will be achieved, and the prosperity which will accrue to the settlers throughout such a very large area. I echo what the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) has said: That, there is no part of the Government policy which has been received with such satisfaction in the North-west, or, that in my humble opinion, is likely to lead to such good results, as this policy, as far as it has gone, of giving aid to creameries.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture, how many creameries in the province of Nova Scotia he proposes to assist out of this vote?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Government has only one creamery in Nova Scotia. That is at the Nappan Farm.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Is it situated on the Government farm there?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Well, adjacent to it.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I may say that the practice of giving assistance out of public money to localities where it was not needed, has been carried out by the previous Government on too extensive a scale to satisfy the public. In the western counties of Nova Scotia where this Government Experimental Farm is maintained, agriculture is well advanced in consequence, whereas in the eastern portion of the province, notably in the Island of Cape Breton, one of the counties of which I have the honour to represent, it has never received the slightest consideration at the hands of the late Government. I hope, Sir, that the present Government will inaugurate a better order of things with regard to Cape Breton in this regard. The Federal Government maintains an experimental farm in the most advanced agricultural portion of Nova Scotia; the local Government of the province, maintains a model farm in the neighbourhood of the Nappan Farm; it maintains a school of horticulture not far from the same locality, and a school of agriculture in the town of Truro also in the neighbouring district. I would suggest to the Minister of Agriculture who is now starting out upon his career as a Minister in a Liberal Government, that he should in a measure at least, change the existing order of things, which has hitherto been so very unsatisfactory to the eastern portion of the province, and particularly so to the island whence I come. I make these observations to call the hon. gentleman's attention to this particular point, as a condition of things, which has hitherto caused considerable dissatisfaction. I regard with approval the remarks of gentlemen on both sides of the House, as to the non-necessity of helping localities that are well advanced in agriculture; whereas in many instances urgent necessity exists for assisting along struggling communities, which are not so fortunate, and which have not been hitherto so pampered in the matter of assistance from the treasury. I trust that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) who is now at the head of this very important department, will see to it, that the order of things that I have described shall be changed or modified, so as to advance the general interests of Nova Scotia, and not one particular locality which has been favoured not only by nature, but by Government as well.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may point out to the hon. gentleman, that the creamery was established at Nappan in consequence of the experimental farm being there, and that is the only creamery in Nova Scotia, aided out of this vote. The gentleman who has charge of that creamery is well up in dairy matters, and during a great portion of the year it is his duty to go round the province of Nova Scotia and aid the creameries by his advice and instruction. I shall take into careful consideration what the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan) has said, and see what can be done to encourage dairying in Cape Breton. I shall be only too glad if possible to meet the views of the hon. gentleman in that respect.

Mr. SPROULE. It is the first time I have heard from any one coming from that province any objection made to an expenditure in Nova Scotia in this line, and it is somewhat surprising after the number of eulogies we have heard with regard to what was being done in that line heretofore in that province. It is generally conceded by most members who come from that province, that there was a most valuable work done, and that the result of the experiment was entirely satisfactory. However, Mr. Speaker, I rose more particularly to draw attention to the position of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). It seems to me, that it is very seldom we have had such an exhibition in this House, of the ability of an hon. member to swallow himself and his convictions in the short space of about nine months. If I understood him correctly—and I think most of the members of the House understood him as I did—at the last session of Parliament he was distinctly opposed to the system of the Government assisting those creameries holding that the Government were coming into direct competition with the farmers of the country who had already established their factories, and did not require Government assistance. To-night he is perfectly satisfied with it. I am glad that he has in the meantime made such inquiries as to satisfy himself that it is a good work, because I believe it is. I do not think it is any discredit to a man to change his views, or when he sees he is wrong to admit it.

Mr. OLIVER. Did the hon. gentleman hear what I said a while ago?

Mr. SPROULE. I think so. I understood that the hon. gentleman commenced by making an apology or some kind of explanation for fear the House would think that his present position was inconsistent with the position he took last year; but he tried to argue that there was no inconsistency in his two positions, that he was in favour of the system before. If so, he was very unfortunate in not making himself clearly understood, because the impression on this side of the House last year was that he was very much against the system, whereas now he is in favour of it. I am glad he is, because I think it is a good work, and I do not think any member on this side of the House has been disposed to criticise it severely or to do otherwise than commend it. I think the Ontario members are generous enough to allow the Minister of Agriculture to assist dairying in the North-west or in any other distant part of the country. I was not in during the early part of this discussion, and I would like to ask the Minister how many associations have taken advantage of this offer last year, and how many he expects to take advantage of it this year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman was not in when I gave the information. There are sixteen creameries running, and sixteen skimming stations, adjacent to the creameries this season.

Mr. SPROULE. How many cows for each?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Four hundred cows for each is the lowest number. In some cases there are six hundred or seven hundred.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman say where these are distributed?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I read the list, and the hon. gentleman will find it in "Hansard."

Mr. WILSON. How many months in the year will these factories run, winter and summer?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That will depend on the nature of the season and on the district. In some cases they will run fully six months, and in some cases not more than four or four and a half months; but I hope in most cases six months, and no doubt as the business proceeds the time will be extended, as it has been in other provinces.

Mr. WILSON. Is that in the summer season?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I am glad the Minister says he will take into account Cape Breton; and I hope he will also take into account New Brunswick, because we have a fine county in King's county, and when he brings down further provisions I hope he will not forget that county.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say to my hon. friend that last winter I carried on a dairy school in King's county which I hope will have good results.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have been in the North-west, and we are all anxious to see that country settled, believing that the future of Canada depends largely on its rapid settlement. I am convinced that unless something of this kind is gone into, a great many of the people of that country will not remain, because last summer they were getting only 7 or 8 cents a pound for very good butter, and I think even less than that. The time has come when something must be done, and I do not think that a better system can be adopted than that of establishing creameries, and I am glad to find that there are to be skimming stations near the creameries, for in Ontario those succeeded best which have skimming stations. If this result in obtaining for the people 12 or 13 cents instead of 7 cents a pound for their butter, it will be of great benefit to them. It is a good thing to have the creameries near the lines of railway; some of the creaming stations are at present back from the railways. I hold that there is no better system of settling up that country or assisting immigration into it, than the system of establishing these creameries and giving the help the Minister is now giving to this object, especially when we know that as early a date as possible the money will be returned to the treasury.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not care to prolong this debate, but I cannot allow hon. gentlemen to assume a position that is perfectly farcial. Nobody has said that this is not a good policy or should not be continued. Speaking for myself, I am prepared to vote even for a larger grant for this object; but we find hon. gentlemen opposite, notably the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, speaking as if some opposition had been given to this proposal, as a blow to immigration. I would like to know if any hon. member has hinted at anything of that kind. I wish it to be understood that I have been simply making inquiry into a system which we want to see properly carried out. The Minister of Agriculture has not given quite as clear an explanation as the House ought to have. One hon. member says the minimum is 400 cows, while the Minister says it is a discretionary matter with the dairy commissioner. These statements are at variance. I will not do more than ask this question of the hon. gentleman, whether there are cases where the creameries have been taken over which are partly private enterprises or wholly so, or whether in every case the buildings and plant belong to the patrons who are furnishing the milk.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think that in every instance these creameries belong to associations or companies. I do not think there is one owned wholly by a private individual. In some instances they belong to the patrons, the people who are supplying the milk being the shareholders. I think that in all cases some of the patrons are shareholders, and in many instances, the people of the neighbourhood or locality are also shareholders. In regard to the first question the hon. gentleman put, I thought I endorsed what the hon. gentleman behind me said. There are no creameries to be established where there are not at least four hundred cows. There may be some cases where possibly four hundred cows are provided, on paper at any rate, but where we have not been able to meet the demand. So I say it is in the discretion of the dairy commissioner to decide whether the circumstances in any case will justify the Government in undertaking this work.

Mr. SPROULE. When this scheme was first outlined, I think it was said that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company generously offered to give some assistance in the way of carrying cream to the creameries at low rates of freight, and perhaps providing storage. Has anything been done in that direction?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Professor Robertson is making arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for certain rates for the carriage of cream or milk? There is no other assistance given by the railway company, but they are very liberal in the arrangements they are willing to make.

Mr. SPROULE. What are the rates? I understood they were likely to be very much below the ordinary freight rates.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot tell exactly. The matter is under negotiation now between Prof. Robertson and the railway, but the railway is meeting Prof. Robertson's views very generously.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has not made it quite clear how, in cases where creameries are held in part by persons living in the town and who furnish no milk, the repayment of one cent a pound is to be collected.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have tried to make it clear to the hon. gentleman, but do not seem to be able to make him understand. The one cent per pound on each pound of butter is placed to the credit of the individual patron who has supplied the milk, in proportion to the amount of milk he supplies, and he will then get a share in the building and plant according to the amount of money credited to him; and when the Government advance is altogether paid up, he and his associates will own the whole building. The patrons who supply the milk will, under this arrangement, eventually become the owners of the building.

Mr. DAVIN. Some hon. members are under the impression that the patrons to whom the hon. Minister refers are the Patrons of Industry. I understand him to mean those persons who patronize the creamery.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Mr. CLANCY. Suppose one-half the capital is invested by townspeople who furnish no milk and the other half is furnished by those who have cows and deliver milk. The Government then comes in and relieves these people by taking say one-half of the factory. The one cent a pound will be collected from those who deliver milk, but what about those who have not delivered any milk, and from whom nothing will be collected?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They will receive the money from the others and give up their proportion of the building as they receive the money.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would ask the hon. leader of the House whether it would not be better not to press the next item to-night, as it is one which will likely provoke a long discussion.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). My hon. friend (Mr. Fisher), I am sure, will be most desirous to give the fullest explanation of cold storage, and as that item is likely to lead to a debate, perhaps it would be better to let it stand. There are, however, a few other items which we might pass, as there is not likely to be any discussion concerning them.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Before you go to the other items, I would like to ask the hon. Minister what the Government propose to do in the matter of branding and registering cheese, concerning which I had a Bill before this House last session. I have had this Bill before the House several sessions, and have submitted to the House opinions from all parts of the country interested in the matter. Ninety-five per cent of the people most interested, including the presidents, secretaries and treasurers of the different organizations interested in the manufacture of this article, have sent me letters resolutions and memorials asking that the Bill which I submitted to the House should be carried out. It received its second reading last session, and with the consent of the hon. Minister it could have been passed in a very few moments, but he asked me not to press the measure, and promised me that the Government would introduce a Bill of this kind, drawn up on the lines of the one submitted by me. I should like to know now what the intention of the Government is in this respect, as the matter is one of very great interest to the country. I find that the Americans are making great efforts to place their butter and cheese on the markets of Great Britain and other countries are also making every effort to compete against us, so that this matter is one of very serious moment and should be attended to in time. I certainly expected to have seen the promise of the hon. Minister, which he made last session, carried out this session, and I hope yet to see it carried out before the House rises. If I thought the Government would not redeem their promise, I would again bring my Bill before the House this session and take the sense of the House upon it, and find out whether they are prepared to extend that measure of justice to the agricultural community. It seems almost dangerous for an hon. member to rise to speak on any subject which is in the interests of the farmers. My hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) brought up a question in their interests and was censured from all sections of the Government side of the House for having done so, and I was very much surprised indeed to find the Patrons declaring themselves against a measure which is in the interests of the farmers, and one which they made one of their planks on every platform.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must remind the hon. gentleman that the item on which the discussion is now entering into might have been made, has been carried and that he is now referring to a past debate or to a vote of the House, which is not in order.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I asked if the House would allow me to speak, and you, Sir, in your place, allowed me to go on, and I am dealing now with the very subject with which I opened my remarks. If you say I am not to be allowed to speak, I repeat that it is almost dangerous for a man to get up and speak here in the interests of the farmers. The very moment he rises, he is stopped by some hon. member opposite; he is censured, and even on some occasions he is bullied in the attempt to stifle discussion. It seems to me that I have the right, as every hon. member in this House has, to speak in defence of what he considers is in the interests of his constituents or of the country generally. I do not think it is proper that I should be called to order when I am simply asking for explanations on a matter in which I feel very great interest and in which, judging by the evidence that was produced by me in this House, the country at large is deeply interested. We on this side desire to receive from our opponents the same treatment which, I am happy to say, we extended to them when they were in Opposition, but which we have not received at their hands since they have come into power. The policy of the Government as to this dairy question is as much an issue as anything else. When this matter was brought up they made free trade speeches, but they settled down to a protective policy. They have criticised the policy of the Conservative party, but I have not yet been able to find out what their own policy is. I would like it if some of their leaders would tell us what their policy is. So many policies have been advocated that I do not know what to call this one.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan, Glengarry) is going a little too far. When he began to speak I thought it was to put a question concerning an item that has been carried, but it is apparent—

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). As you refuse to allow me to go on, I will take my seat.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The reason I allowed the hon. gentleman to go on was because I thought he desired to ask a question. But I see now the hon. gentleman is trying to raise a discussion upon other issues that have been threshed out during the day, and I think that is going a little too far. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he desires to ask a question, to ask it.

Mr. WALLACE. There was a distinct agreement made across the floor of the House between the leaders, that if consent was given to the House going into Committee of Supply, there was to be the utmost latitude of discussion, and hon. members were to be allowed, if they chose, to make in committee speeches they had intended making when the Speaker was in the Chair. In conformity with that agreement I contend that the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan) was quite within his rights and the understanding reached by the leaders.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would remind the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) that the item on which the hon. member (Mr. McLennan) is speaking has been declared carried, and that we are now about to take up the item of quarantine.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan) was not speaking so much on the particular question of the item as on the general question. There is no question now before the committee.

Salaries and contingencies of organized districts, and public health in other districts $50,000

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). This is a question under the Department of Agriculture. I would like to ask the question that I rose before to ask—and I may explain that I should not have taken so much time before had I not been interrupted. I wish to ask the hon. Minister if he intends to carry out the promise made by him to bring before the House a measure based upon the Bill I had before the House last session and the session before? Up to this time the Government has not introduced such a Bill. It is due to himself that he should bring in the Bill which has been promised, and I hope that when it comes it will not be found a mere makeshift. If it is such it will not be a complete carrying out of the promise made to this House. I have no reason to doubt that the hon. Minister will bring in the Bill referred to. I do not intend to make a speech on the matter. I have not spoke very often in this House, and I can say that in the six years that I have been here I have never interrupted any one in this House. I think it is due to every gentleman to allow fair discussion and I have always been willing to extend that right to every hon. member of the House. I would simply like to ask the Minister if it is his intention to bring in the Bill promised.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Bill I am to introduce is about ready, and I hope in a few days to lay it on the Table, when hon. members can ascertain its character.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a reduction of $8,416 in this quarantine item. How does the hon. Minister make that saving? This item speaks of organized districts "and other districts." Will the hon. Minister state to what districts it applies?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This item covers all human quarantine of the Dominion. The saving is made at different ports, sometimes greater and sometimes less. I have been able to dispense with a certain number of officials connected with the department and to reduce the item expenditure in various institutions. The larger proportion of this saving is at Grosse Isle, the quarantine station of the port of Quebec. For the last year or two the department has hired a steamer, a very large one with a very large crew, and the hire of steamer and crew involved a heavy expenditure. I have engaged a bare steamer, and, with the addition of two cheap hands, the staff already at Grosse Isle are able to run the two steamers there, instead of hiring an extra crew as well as an extra steamer. Besides I have made considerable reductions in other respects in the staff, the greater part of saving being at Grosse Isle. I have been able to dispense also with a number of minor officials, one or two at Halifax, one at St. John's, and one, a physician, at Sydney.

Mr. SPROULE. Some important repairs were going on last year and the year before. Are these completed?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No; they have not been entered upon. They were on paper only. I found I was not called upon to go into such extensive repairs. Such repairs as are being made are carried on under the Public Works Department and are not to be paid for from this vote.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. Minister has mentioned some reductions which he thinks he can safely make without interfering with the efficiency of the service. I would ask if he will tell us what these reductions are?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When I came into office I found there were at Grosse Isle four policemen at $1.50 per day. They were engaged some four years ago temporarily, because of a considerable number of people being detained through a number of cases of small-pox, I think, and they have been continued ever since, though the need for them had passed away within a month or six weeks of the time they were first engaged. They were paid high wages because they were supposed to be temporarily employed, but they have been continued during all this time. I was also able to dispense with the services of a man who was called a gardener, whom the superintendent of the staff there, Dr. Montizambert, said was not necessary, and that he could get along perfectly well with some of the other people doing a little of the work that he did. I superannuated the chief constable who had become an old man, and could really work no longer, and I put in his place another, a young man, active and energetic, who had been working in a subordinate capacity, giving him the duties of a chief constable and some other work which he can do without any assistance. Formerly there were the two. I have made the chief reduction in the steamer. One steamer called the "Challenger" is required there for boarding vessels which come into the harbour. Besides that, there was another vessel engaged by the season, called the "Miramichi," which was fitted up with disinfecting plant, so that when vessels arrived which had disease on board and the vessels themselves required to be disinfected, the steamer "Miramichi" went alongside of them and this apparatus was employed to disinfect and cleanse the vessels. This vessel was a large steamer requiring no less than fourteen or fifteen hands, and consequently the department was obliged to pay a large sum amounting to some $6,300 a season for her use. I engaged the new vessel at $2,200 a year, and by the addition of two hands to the crew of the "Challenger," I expect to be able to run the two vessels. Dr. Montizambert made a report to me that he could do this and effect this saving, and I believe it can be accomplished. When I say I had to add two hands to the crew of the "Challenger" and accomplished this by reason of dispensing with the services of this policeman and this gardener, I think I have mentioned all. I have not really added to the staff otherwise, but on the contrary the staff, independent altogether of the crew of the "Miramichi," is a less staff, and I am relieved from the large payment which I had to make to engage this vessel fully equipped and manned.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Does that explain the whole decrease?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not the whole of it, because I have besides dispensed with one of the quarantine officers at the port of Sidney in Cape Breton, who was getting $1,000 a year; and I have dispensed with the services of a matron who was living on the island which is the quarantine station of the port of St. John, practically doing nothing and whose services were not required. I have dispensed with the services of two men at Halifax on board the vessel where, so far as I could make out, they practically did nothing. But if any extra assistance is required at that station, the physician in charge is to employ it by the day, but for years he has not had to have the assistance of these people, and they were practically drawing salaries and doing nothing for them.

Mr. MORRISON. May I ask the Minister with regard to dispensing with the services of the quarantine officer at North Sidney, as to whether there were any charges laid against him, or whether the removal was made for reasons of economy?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No charges whatever were made against him. The chief officer reported to me, after a visit to that port, that the one doctor could perfectly well perform the whole services, and he is willing to do so.

Mr. MORRISON. Am I right in understanding that the senior incumbent was selected?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Mr. PRIOR. I would like to ask the Minister whether any changes have been made in the staff of the Williams' Head quarantine hospital, and whether he has made any decrease in the salaries of the staff there.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When I came to the office I found that there was a caretaker at Williams' Head and another at Albert Head, and as the Albert Head station has been abandoned, that is to say, the buildings have been destroyed, and it is no longer used, I dispensed with the services of the caretaker there. Within the last few days I have received the resignation of one McGregor, who was the caretaker at Williams' Head, and he has been replaced by another at the same salary. The chief officer in charge of the Williams' Head quarantine station has been changed, otherwise I do not think there has been any change in salaries at Williams' Head. There has been necessarily a considerable outlay in the way of building and improvements to the plant and machinery there, but that does not come out of this vote, it is done by the Public Works Department, and will appear in the Public Works vote.

Mr. PRIOR. I wish to impress upon the Minister the necessity of putting that station in the very best condition. I suppose he knows the great danger there is of infectious diseases being brought across in vessels. It may surprise the hon. gentleman to know that during the last year Victoria had the biggest sea-going tonnage of any port in the Dominion of Canada. Now, with these steamers running regularly to China and Japan and bringing in Chinese and Japanese, the danger of infection is considerable. If infection is brought in, it is always from that source, and I would ask the Minister to take particular care of that station and see that infection is kept out. There has also been complaint in the past of inadequate accommodation to cabin passengers. The hon. gentleman has had a report up to the present time, I think, and I wish to call his attention to it and ask him to see that there are more comforts provided for cabin passengers when they are in quarantine.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In consequence of the state of affairs which the hon. gentleman has mentioned I took upon myself this winter to send the chief quarantine officer, Dr. Montizambert, to Victoria to make a special report upon the requirements of that station. He supplied me with a report which dealt with a large number of improvements, the majority of which I have authorized, and I may tell the hon. gentleman that the Public Works Department will, during the next few months, expend probably between $6,000 and $7,000 in improvements at that quarantine station. I ought to say, perhaps, that while making deductions in some expenditures in various ports, I have established a quarantine physician at the port of Vancouver, where I found an increasing number of vessels coming which had not touched or did not pass Victoria, and it was necessary to appoint a permanent physician there. Heretofore that port has been served by a physician who charged a fee to the vessels for examination. That was not consistent with the practice in other ports of the Dominion, and I did not think that the shipping of Vancouver should be charged when the shipping of other ports were not, and therefore I put another official there at a salary of $400 a year, which is about in proportion to the salaries and work of other officers in the other smaller ports. That is an additional charge, and comes within the grant that I have here asked for.

Mr. SPROULE. In connection with these cases that occurred on the vessel which came into Victoria some time since, and were referred to once before in the House, I had put into my hand a paper containing a report from the medical men on board that vessel, and I will read it so that the Minister may make such explanations as may be necessary in order to disabuse the public mind of the idea of anything being wrong in that service :

We, the undersigned medical men, passengers on board the steamship "Empress of China," wish to submit the following statement of opinion regarding the unprecedented quarantine restrictions which have been imposed upon her passengers. The facts of the case are these : On the 20th of April, ten days ago, two cases of discrete small-pox occurred amongst the steerage passengers. The utmost precautions were at once taken, in accordance with the quarantine regulations, to isolate them. They were placed in a hospital, which was shut off from the rest of the ship and ventilated from the upper deck, two men were isolated, as nurses, with them, and absolutely no communication has been held with the rest of the passengers, all food and other necessaries being passed in to them. Further, these two cases were exceptional, seeing that they came from the same house and were cousins. Every person on board was promptly vaccinated, and everything done that was possible, with the result that no further cases have occurred. On arrival, the quarantine officer ordered sixteen days' strict quarantine on shore, all passengers to be landed, ship and baggage to be disinfected. We wish, further, to call attention to the fact that the quarantine officer never went to see the patients on arrival, and never, indeed, went to see them at all until requested to do so ; neither the infected cases nor the steerage passengers were removed until the second day of the arrival at the quarantine station. We wish to give it as our opinion, being, all of us, medical men of some experience, that the medical officer of this station has imposed a quarantine restriction which, under the circumstances of the case, is unprecedented in severity and unjustifiable. A quarantine of five days, making fourteen in all from the first appearance of the disease, would be ample. Further, having, all of us, personally inspected the accommodation on shore, we state as our opinion, that it is absolutely insufficient for the number of persons to be provided for, and that to place on shore for over a fortnight, under such conditions as here exist, a number of persons, many of whom have come straight from the tropics, is a step liable to be attended with the very gravest results.

Quarantine Station, April 28, 1897.

It is said to be signed by seven doctors who were on the vessel. I do not read this for the purpose of complaining as to what has been done, but only to allow the Minister to make such explanations as he thinks are necessary to justify what has been done, or to say why that was done.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I need not go into the whole details of the case, which are already before the public. The "Empress of China" arrived at Victoria, with two small-pox cases on board. Naturally and properly the quarantine officer detained the vessel. He took the precautions indicated by the case, and immediately telegraphed to the department here. We telegraphed to Dr. Montizambert a full statement as to how Dr. Watt proposed to deal with the matter. I may say incidentally that this was a Canadian Pacific Railway steamer. A great effort was made by the company to have the vessel relieved, especially in view of the fact that there was a large number of passengers on board, some of whom were very prominent, and who were very anxious to proceed immediately on their journey. The matter, I repeat, was referred to Dr. Montizambert for an opinion, and he fully endorsed and sustained Dr. Watt's action, stating that what he had decided to do was usual and covered the proper precautions to take. The statement has been made that this was an unusual course to take, a course much more severe than was followed by the United States authorities at adjoining ports. But Dr. Montizambert quoted to me an instance at Port Townsend in the adjoining state of Washington where the United States authorities were much more strict and severe in their quarantine regulations, that a protest was sent to Washington in consequence of the strictness exercised, and that the chief quarantine officer telegraphed back endorsing the local officer and stating that what he had done was correct. Dr. Watt examined the individuals on board that vessel. Finding that certain of them appeared to have been vaccinated properly and showing no sign of disease and that the period of incubation had practically passed, he allowed them to proceed, having thoroughly disinfected the vessel and cleansed it. There were other passengers, however, whom he did not consider showed that vaccination had been properly performed or had taken, and, therefore, he looked upon them as suspicious, and kept them in quarantine at Williams' Head.

Mr. PRIOR. For the full period of incubation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That his course was fully justified is abundantly proved by the fact that four days ago two of the passengers broke out with small-pox, and two days ago two more of the passengers, thus showing that Dr. Watt had taken the proper course.

Mr. PRIOR. Have any cases occurred among those let out ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No report of cases having occurred among those allowed to proceed has been received, and I do not expect any such report, because Dr. Watt took all the proper precautions, and although great pressure was brought to bear by passengers and others that he would relax the full quarantine regulations, he carried them out so far as was necessary, and the results justify his action and show that he protected the health of the people of the country, and at the same time allowed certain passengers to proceed.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman has not given an explanation as to why Dr. Watt did not visit the patients to ascertain what was the matter with them. It is strange that where passengers were alleged to be suffering from small-pox or any contagious or infectious disease, the quarantine officer never satisfied himself as to whether that disease prevailed among the passengers or not, which could only be ascertained by visiting them. These seven medical men state that he never looked at the passengers until asked to do so. I am rather surprised at this, because I knew Dr. Watt for some years, though not since he commenced the practice of his profession, and I do not think he is a man who would be lax in the performance of his duty.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Dr. Watt reported to me that he personally examined every person on the ship, and I am satisfied that any statement to the contrary is incorrect.

Mr. SPROULE. That might have been so, but it is said he did not come on the vessel until he was asked to do so.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Dr. Watt reports that he was on the vessel and examined every individual.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not deny that, but the statement is here made :

On arrival, the quarantine officer ordered sixteen days' strict quarantine on shore, all passengers to be landed, ship and baggage to be disinfected. We wish, further, to call attention to the fact that the quarantine officer never went to see the patients on arrival, and never, indeed, went to see them at all until requested to do so.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot understand that statement. All I know is that the doctor took the necessary precautions, that he examined the vessel and reported to me that he had individually and personally examined every one of the passengers. I have no explanation to make of the newspaper article.

Mr. MORRISON. On a careful perusal of the letter the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) has read, it will be readily seen that there is no categorical statement that Dr. Watt was remiss in any respect in the performance of his duty. The fact is that the steamer came into the Royal Roads flying at the mast head the yellow flag, indicating that small-pox or other infectious disease was on board. Dr. Watt did not proceed with precipitation, not knowing what was wrong, until the usual preliminary steps had been taken. Those people who wrote the letter, and it must be observed that no name is attached to it, were aggrieved at being detained, because they were prevented from connecting with the train at Vancouver and put to a little extra expense, and in their indignation they went to the newspapers.

I have read all those letters that have appeared in the Victoria papers, and every one of them is written anonymously, and present in the most vague and fallacious way the state of affairs. So I think that not the slightest credence should be given to correspondence of that kind, and I was very much surprised that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) should have read a letter of that kind, not signed by any body, but simply alleged to have been signed by so many medical men. They may or may not be medical men ; or if they are medical men, they may be medical men of repute or of no repute. So a letter of that kind should not weigh in any respect against the official information before the department, and if I am correct in recollecting the information before the department, it was that Dr. Watt immediately telegraphed for instructions. The hon. gentleman did not proceed headlong in the matter. Why should he ? The vessel was lying in the roads ; he did not allow the passengers to land, and as regards the people on shore, it was quite immaterial whether Dr. Watt was one hour, one day or even one week in visiting the ship so long as communication was cut off from the shore. So there is nothing in the letter to indicate delay or recklessness on the part of Dr. Watt. The letter states that he did not go until he was asked. But there is nothing to show that Dr. Watt was not signalled at once to go on board. I think the Government and Dr. Watt are to be commended on the efficient way the matter has been handled. Apropos of this matter, I must say that I have been reading during the last two or three days San Francisco papers, referring to the stringency and care with which the quarantine regulations are being observed and carried out in Canada, and instituting a comparison between their methods in California and our methods in this country. They deplore the fact, that notwithstanding they have very strict quarantine laws, they were not carried out owing to the conflict between the federal and the state authorities. The paper gave a number of instances of ships which had arrived from Honolulu and the Hawaiian Islands, where actually two days after the ship arrived and the passengers had gone ashore the officers were instructed from Washington to prevent the spread of contagious disease which existed on board. In one case, actually a week had elapsed between the arrival of the ships and the dispersing of the passengers, before instructions had been sent from Washington, superseding those which had been given by the local authorities. The argument was, that so long as the local authorities had concurrent jurisdiction with the federal authorities in matters of that kind, this deplorable state of things would continue. The article in the newspaper put up quite an argument in favour of the Canadian system, and referred in complimentary terms to the very stringent way in which the quarantine regulations of the Dominion of Canada had been carried out. In a case of this kind, if there was any mistake made, if I should call it a mistake, if there was any error, I am satisfied that Dr. Watt erred on the right side. He could not take too great precaution in this matter. Doctors cannot come in here and try to impress us who are not physicians, with such a statement, as that there was such and such a partition, or such a space between the steerage, and the cabin, or intermediate passengers. That would be all right if small-pox were only transmitted by contact, but if I am rightly informed, the disease is transmitted in other ways. Therefore it would not suffice to say, that there were such facilities on board that ship, that in the opinion of these people would prevent the spread of this disease if it had been in the steerage. Both the Government and Dr. Watt should be strongly commended for the very efficient manner in which they have handled this case. I do not think we need assume, or that the hon. Minister need assume, that the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., are at all adverse criticising what has been done in this case. I think they are simply actuated by a desire to have these arrangements carried out, perhaps with greater stringency, if that were possible. I think I am safe in assuming, that both the senior member (Mr. Earle) and the junior member (Mr. Prior) for Victoria, are quite in accord with what has been done. I cannot construe any questions they have asked as in any way adverse to the policy adopted by the Government.

Apart from this question, I would ask the Minister, whether he deems it necessary to have a quarantine officer stationed on the Fraser River. That river has settled at its mouth during the greater part of the year, a large colony of fishermen. The town of Steveston during the fishing season, the hot season, contains some five or six thousand inhabitants of all nationalities engaged in and about the fishing industry. There are a great many people at Steveston from the United States, and also a great many foreigners, Japanese, Chinamen, Turks, Arabians, in fact every nationality under the sun is represented in that town in the summer. I am supported by the opinion of the people of the locality, that some extraordinary precautionary measure should be adopted to prevent the spread of contagious disease there. It is even a more important point than Vancouver, because ships with contagious disease going to Vancouver, would first have to run the gauntlet at the Royal Roads, Victoria. I think I am not wrong in saying, that no ship can get into Vancouver except by way of the Fraser River passing Steveston, without first being subject to the supervision of the quarantine officer at Victoria. These are the only two routes by which ships can enter Vancouver. What I submit is, that next after Victoria, the important point at which a quarantine officer should be stationed, is at the mouth of the Fraser River. I would respectfully call the attention of the Minister to that matter, and I trust, that if steps may not be convenient to be taken this season, that next session the matter will receive the most careful consideration of the Minister, as I have no doubt it will, and that if possible a quarantine officer be stationed at that point.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member (Mr. Morrison) expresses his wonder that any member of this House would read such a communication. I do not know why it should be a matter of wonder, nor do I see how it could be out of place for a member to draw the attention of the House to any communication in a respectable paper, with reference to the defects of this or any other quarantine station, when this subject was under discussion. The hon. gentleman is very specific in stating that this criticism was not made by medical men. Well, the communication states: "We are all medical men of more or less experience," and that ought to be definite enough for him. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) proceeds to ask what do we know about partitions, that could separate those affected with disease from others, and he says that small-pox is communicated in other ways than by actual contact. The less the hon. member says about medicine the better for his reputation. He shows how little he knows of it when he speaks of it. He jumps to the conclusion that Dr. Watt did his duty in every particular. I would like to know, what would be thought of a medical health officer in this country, if when called to see a patient in a house where there was said to be small-pox, he would placard that house without going in to see the patient to know whether there was or was not small-pox in the house.

Mr. MORRISON. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is in error as to my statement. The officers of this vessel reported to Dr. Watt that there was small-pox on board. Dr. Watt did not require to examine the patients at once, because he was informed by the officers that there was small-pox on board.

Mr. SPROULE. That is where the shortsightedness comes in. It is the duty of every medical health officer to make an examination as to what the disease is, which is reported to him. We know that very often it is reported that a patient has diphtheria, and that when a medical man makes an examination, he finds it is only sore throat.

Mr. MORRISON. The hon. gentleman is misrepresenting what I intended to say. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) evidently does not know that this steamer, in common with every well-regulated steamer, carries a medical man on board. That yellow flag would not have been flying at the mast-head of that steamer, with the medical man on board, unless there was some contagious disease on board. So that whether it was small-pox or cholera or any other contagious disease. Dr. Watt knew that some medical man had discovered disease there, and it was entirely a matter of detail when he should board the ship, so long as it was not near the wharf, and there was no danger of the disease spreading.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman must know that I am not quite so green, after practicing thirty years, as not to know a medical man accompanies such vessels, and what his duties are in case of contagious or infectious disease. That has nothing to do with the duty of the quarantine officer, he as the medical man was not carrying out the regulations without ascertaining of his own knowledge the nature of the disease. The statement here is specific, that the medical man did not go on board this steamer to examine the patients—in fact, did not go on the vessel at all to see them until he was invited to go. Now, I do not want it to be understood that I am criticising severely or wishing to find fault with the Minister of Agriculture. I have read this for the purpose of enabling him to give such explanations as will set the matter right in the public mind if there has been a misapprehension, and I think I was amply justified in reading the letter. But I say the matter does require some explanation, and it would take a good deal more than either the ability or the energy of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Morrision) to convince the public that any medical man had done his duty if he allowed the ship to go in and remain any length of time without ascertaining for himself whether the alleged disease existed or not.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to know from the Minister of Agriculture what has become of that high Chinaman who refused to be examined when the vessel arrived at the port?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He has gone through to New York.

Mr. BERGERON. Was he examined? Did he go through the regulation?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. PRIOR. In regard to the letter which has just been read by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), signed by seven doctors, stating that Dr. Watt had never been to see the patients—

Mr. SPROULE. The letter did not say that he had never seen them, but that he had not visited the vessel when it landed, nor afterwards, until invited to do so.

Mr. PRIOR. I think the Minister should know that before I left Victoria, a very serious complaint was lodged with me against Dr. Watt. It was that when a former ship came into port with a suspected Chinaman on board, he was put into the hospital, and another Chinaman set to watch him; that he was kept there a day and a night, and died during the night, without the doctor ever going near him; that the man who was with him could only make known the Chinaman's death by knocking frantically at the window to the people who passed; that the body was taken away and buried, and that the doctor had never seen the patient from the beginning to the end. That was told to me by a man who must have known the facts. I asked him if he was prepared to swear to that, and he said he was at any time. I told him that it was his duty to send the information to the Minister of Agriculture, but he said he did not want to be drawn into it, because there was some political feeling about the change. I thought it right to mention this to the Minister.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is the first opportunity I have had of hearing anything against Dr. Watt. I shall give him an opportunity of refuting the charge, which I have no doubt he will be able to do.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. As I understand there are some gentlemen who wish to speak on this item. I would ask the hon. leader of the House if he does not think it is time to adjourn.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). If my hon. friend opposite thinks there is going to be a debate on the subject, I certainly cannot refuse his request, as he is usually very reasonable in these matters. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions to be reported.

REPORT.

Annual Report of the Department of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1896.—The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton).

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.20 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 13th May, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, a certificate of the election and return of Stanislaus F. Perry, Esq., member for the electoral district of Prince West, P.E.I.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

Stanislaus F. Perry, Esq., Member for the Electoral District of Prince West, P.E.I., introduced by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) and Mr. Yeo.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 105) to amend the Act respecting the protection of navigable waters.—(Mr. Davies.)

SEED GRAIN DISTRIBUTED IN NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES AND MANITOBA.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

1. What number of farmers in Manitoba and the North-west owe for seed grain sent them by the Government for use on their farms?
2. What number owe for seed grain as bondsmen for other farmers?
3. How much is owed the Government in the former case?
4. How much in the second?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say: 1. 5,384 individuals owe the Government for seed grain. 2. 4,643 individuals are liable as bondsmen for others, 3,439 of these are liable also as principals, and are, therefore, also included in the number who owe for seed grain. 3. $153,602.67. 4. $103,042.94. This amount is, of course, included in the $153,602.67 owed the Government, as the principals owe it, while the bondsmen are only liable for it.

I may add by way of explanation that the majority of those owing for seed grain participated in two or more of the seven distributions which were made. The greater number of the parties liable as bondsmen are liable on more than one bond.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

DUTY ON FARM IMPLEMENTS—COAL OIL IN TANKS.

Mr. DOUGLAS asked :

What will in future be the basis for the imposition of customs duty on farm implements coming from the United States: the retail or the wholesale price? In the transportation of coal oil, will tank vessels be allowed to all ports and tank cars to all railway points? When will this privilege be accorded to the people?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The two matters referred to in the question of the hon. gentleman are now engaging the attention of the Government. With regard to the question regarding farm implements, representations were made by the hon. gentleman himself and a number of others as to the operation of the present system and the Government are inquiring into the matter brought to their notice.

With regard to the question concerning the carriage of coal oil in tanks, that matter can only be dealt with by an amendment to the Petroleum Act, which will shortly be introduced.

HARBOUR MASTER AT MURRAY HARBOUR, P.E.I.

Mr. MARTIN asked :

1. Who is the harbour master at Murray Harbour, in Prince Edward Island, and what is the date of his appointment?
2. What amount of salary does he receive, and is his salary a fixed one, or is he paid by a percentage on collections as heretofore?
3. If fixed by a percentage or commission on collections, what is the rate?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). In reply to the hon. gentleman I beg to say: 1. Wm. Miller was appointed 17th June, 1874 under the provisions of the Harbour Master's Act. 2. Mr. Miller is authorized under the terms of the Order in Council appointing him, to receive a salary of $200 from the fees received by him from vessels entering the port during the calendar year, but if no fees are collected by him, the salary will be merely nominal. No fees appear to have been collected by him during the year 1895, and no return has been received for 1896. 3. The Harbour Master's Act provides that harbour masters shall be remunerated solely by fees, and these fees are defined in the 11th section of the Act, and range according to the tonnage of the vessel, from 50 cents to $5. Fees are payable twice in each calendar year, at the first and second ports at which a vessel arrives.

MR. ALF. JURY.

Mr. McMULLEN asked :

Is Alf. Jury, at present taking an active part in the fight for Sunday cars in Toronto, the Alf.

Jury recently appointed emigration agent and supposed to be attending to his duties? Is it with the Government's consent and approval that he is actively engaged in the conflict?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say that I have no knowledge, except what may be gleaned from the Toronto papers, as to any part that is being taken by Mr. Jury in the contest in question. Mr. Jury was given a short leave of absence to return to Toronto for the purpose of preparing his family to leave for Europe, and I have no knowledge of anything that has taken place there in regard to the matter in question except what is reported in the papers. I may say that I have instructed the Deputy Minister to write to Mr. Jury and make inquiries with regard to the alleged fact. It is not with the Government's consent or approval that any officer should neglect his duties for the purpose of taking part in a contest of that kind. In making that statement, I do not wish to be understood as assuming that the Government have any right to interfere with Mr. Jury's opinions or the opinions of any other official. I am only saying that the Government would not approve of Mr. Jury or any other official neglecting his duties for the purpose of taking part in a contest of that kind.

OCEAN SHIPMENT OF CATTLE.

Mr. SPROULE asked :

Has the Government made regulations for the ocean shipment of cattle which provide that a space of not less than 2 feet 8 inches by 8 feet shall be allowed for each head of Canadian cattle and 2 feet 6 inches by 8 feet for each head of United States cattle shipped through a Canadian port? If so, are they aware that such regulations are operating to the disadvantage of Canadian shippers, by the premium offered vessel owners to carry United States cattle instead of Canadian, seeing a larger number can be put in the same space thereby increasing the carrying powers of each vessel when carrying United States cattle?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). I call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that the last part of his question is merely an argument. I do not want to take any advantage of that now, but I do not think it is advisable that questions should be put in this form. In reply to his question, so far as it is not an argument, I beg to say: The regulations from the first required Canadian cattle to have a space of 2 feet 8 inches clear by 8 feet long, no change has been made in these regulations. United States cattle on the upper or spar deck may be carried in spaces of 2 feet 6 inches, but if shipped between decks must be allowed a space of 2 feet 8 inches in width by 8 feet long, except in the case of regular cattle ships with satisfactory ventilation when the space may be 2 feet 6 inches in width. This change was made to enable the Canadian steamship companies to compete with the American steamship companies for the transportation of American cattle. The United States spaces are 2 feet 6 inches on spar deck and 2 feet 8 inches between deck or 2 feet 6 inches where the ventilation is sufficient, and American shippers will not have any other spaces. Hence it was necessary to adopt these spaces for American cattle to give Canadian steamship owners a chance to compete with American lines and divert a share of the transportation of American cattle to Canadian ports.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—DEPUTY SPEAKER AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. BERGERON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to speak a word of personal explanation with regard to something which took place the other day. I see by the newspapers that on Tuesday there was a discussion in the House with regard to the Deputy Speaker's behaviour, and my name was mentioned. The complaint was made that the Deputy Speaker was electioneering during the session, and my hon. friend from Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac) declared that I had gone into his county to take part in an election during the time I was Deputy Speaker. The hon. senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) said that I had not left the House when it was in session. I desire to emphasize that fact and to explain further. I was appointed Deputy Speaker in 1891. There was an election in my own county in 1892, about the beginning of the session of this legislature. The local Conservative member for Beauharnois, who had been elected in March died about one week after the election. An election to fill the vacancy was held in June. I did not leave my duties here, but remained here, and the Liberal member was elected by nearly 900 majority—that is about 700 more than the same Liberal member was elected by the other day.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). It is just as well you did not go.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know about that; we might have discussed that at the time. I mention the fact to show that I did not leave my duties here during the session to take part in elections. My hon. friend the Premier (Mr. Laurier) said something to which I wish to refer for a moment. Speaking of my having taken part in elections, he said: "It might have been in better taste not to have done it." I was appointed under Sir John A. Macdonald, and when I was appointed I made it a special point that I should be free to go out electioneering as much as I pleased; and I believe that I would not have accepted the position if I had not been left free in that respect. I may say that Sir John Macdonald, and Sir John Thompson also, told me that not only had I the privilege to take part in elections out of session, but it was my duty to do so, as it was the duty of every politician to work for the success of the representatives of his party. So far as my hon. friend the Premier is concerned, I wish to remind the House that I have his certificate that during my term of office as Deputy Speaker, I always acted with the greatest impartiality.

The PRIME MINISTER. The only remark I have to make in answer to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) is that when we suggested that the present Deputy Speaker should be appointed to that office, we made no bargain at all with him.

THE TARIFF—ADMISSION OF MINING MACHINERY.

Mr. PRIOR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to elicit some information from the Government with regard to an item of the tariff—item 535, covering the free entry of mining machinery. There seems to me to be a very great deal of misconception in regard to the interpretation of this clause, and I think it is only right that this matter should be laid at rest as soon as possible, as the mining industry, not only in British Columbia, but all over Canada, is showing a great deal of enterprise, and the men who have machinery to be brought want to know at the earliest possible moment what they can bring in free and what they have to pay duty upon. The item reads :

Machinery of a class exclusively used and required for mining, smelting or refining purposes, and also all materials for the construction of such machinery in Canada, to be free for that purpose—the whole to be subject to regulations to be made by the Controller of Customs.

The other day I spoke to the hon. the Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson) with regard to this matter, and the conclusion I arrived at from his conversation was that there is hardly anything you can bring in free under this clause.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). If my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) would pardon me—I understand that he wants to discuss an item of the tariff. He would be more in order if he waited until the motion was made to go into Supply.

SUPPLY—MINING MACHINERY AND THE TARIFF.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. PRIOR. Having put myself in order, I go on to say that from a conversation I had with the hon. the Controller of Customs, it seems to me there is hardly any machinery used in mining that would come in free because there is comparatively little of it that cannot be used for something else than mining. Take, for instance, the hoisting machinery which represents a large amount in a great mine—that might be used for something else, and therefore would have to pay a duty. Take air compressors, which all these deep mines have to have for running their drills and for ventilation. I was informed by the Controller that he could not say on the spur of the moment, but he thought they would have to pay the duty. Ore cars can be used not only in mining, but in railway work. The Ingersoll drills used in mines can be used for excavations for railways and other purposes. Rock crushers also can be used in connection with railway work. And so with many other things. If the hon. the Controller's ruling is that anything that can be used for any other purpose than mining is not to be introduced free, I do not see how this tariff is going to be of any benefit to the mining industry. The same is true of smelting and refining machinery. I know of one smelting plant which it is contemplated to erect in British Columbia for which there is over 500 tons of machinery ready to be brought in. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) if it is the intention to make the company pay the duty on all that machinery. I am a strong protectionist, I believe in protecting the industries of Canada, and I do not see why the manufacturers of mining machinery should not be protected as well as others. But so long as the machinery is not made in Canada, I do not see why it should not be allowed in free, if the Government believe in that way of bonusing and protecting the mining industry. At any rate, it says in this item that "the whole is to be subject to regulations to be made by the Controller of Customs." I contend that when the tariff was brought down the hon. Controller of Customs should have had these regulations ready, so that as soon as the tariff came into force the mine owners might know exactly what the ruling would be. I would ask him, if he has not got these regulations prepared already, to do so as speedily as possible, so that we may know exactly what class of machinery is to pay duty and what is to be free.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) and I had some little conversation with regard to this matter. The hon. gentleman knows that when the resolutions are laid upon the Table, they go into effect, but that these items are not finally completed until the Tariff Bill is passed. Until that is done, I do not feel that I can make the desired regulations. If questions were coming up for ruling, we would endeavour to give such rulings as we thought would fairly interpret the law. But I have not made any formal regulations.

Mr. PRIOR. How is it with machinery brought in now? Who says what is to be free and what not to be free?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. In case of any doubt, I suppose the case would be referred to Ottawa. I do not know of any references having been made to us so far. It cannot be long before it will be definitely known how this item will read, and then it will be my duty to prepare the regulations, and probably might be able to specify in some way what machinery should be admitted free. It might be in this case, as often occurs in the Customs Department, that special rulings might be asked during the course of years as events transpire. I think there has been no difficulty, so far as I am aware, up to the present time. I think the hon. gentleman will not have to wait long before the tariff receives the final sanction of the House and becomes law, when I will endeavour to frame resolutions as alluded to just now. The hon. gentleman asked if I had made regulations yet; I have not, for the reason I have mentioned.

Mr. TAYLOR. Might I inquire from the Minister of Finance when he proposes proceeding with the tariff resolutions. The manufacturers, as well as the merchants, are in the same state of uncertainty as before as to what the tariff is to be, and business is practically at a standstill. I think that in place of dealing with the Estimates that we had before us yesterday, and are to have again to-day, the Government should settle the uncertainty that is existing in the minds of manufacturers and businessmen as to what the tariff is finally to be. I think the Minister should say whether he proposes to go on to-day or to-morrow, or some day soon, so that we may get the matter disposed of, and the people may know what their fate is going to be.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Answering the hon. gentleman's last remark first, I may say that we have no anticipation of being able to proceed to-day or to-morrow; but I quite appreciate that it is desirable that we should at a very early day have the resolutions before the House in such a form that we can proceed with them. I hope the hon. gentleman will agree with me when I say that there has been no unusual delay in this matter. The time which has elapsed since the moving of the resolutions and the present moment is not an unusual time. If I may add another word on that point, it is this: That if there is any delay, and any further delays are to be given, it is because the business men, whom we are always pleased to meet, are exceedingly anxious, not that we should proceed, but that we should permit them to be heard, and possibly we err in hearing too many. However, we desire as far as possible to meet all the gentlemen who have views to present, and any delay that may have occurred up to the present time, and any further delay, if there should be any, will arise almost entirely from that fact. Now, permit me to say a word with regard to the point that was raised by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior) in relation to mining machinery, in addition to what has been said by the Controller of Customs. In the old tariff the item read that mining machinery of a class not made in Canada might be admitted free. I believe there was considerable difficulty in applying that rule, owing to the uncertainty at times as to what was properly regarded as mining machinery not made in Canada; and I am advised that the customs authorities had some difficulty, and that the mining people had some reason to complain, or at all events, they did complain, of the indefiniteness of that item. We hoped to improve it, whether we succeeded or not, by adopting a different form of words. I have to admit, however, that since then we have been informed by gentlemen interested in mining enterprises, that there is still some vagueness and indefiniteness about the item which is proposed, and they are very anxious that we should agree, if possible, upon a specified list of articles, saying exactly, so far as possible, what machinery should be admitted free, and what machinery should be dutiable. We are having interviews with gentlemen interested with regard to that point, and it may be that we shall be able to make such a specified list as to remove the uncertainty which to some extent has existed in the past, and which, I have to admit, exists in the item as it now reads in the tariff resolutions.

Mr. FOSTER. The point raised by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior) is an important one, and I do not think my friend the Controller of Customs met it in a very business-like way, if he will allow me to say that by way of criticism. My hon. friend introduced here three weeks or more ago a tariff, and from the very moment that he introduced that tariff it was law. It was law and has been acted upon, presumably, certainly under the customs proceedings and proceeding of Parliament from confederation up, acted upon the very moment that it left the lips of the Finance Minister and was declared before this House. Now, my hon. friend had, as one clause of that tariff, that mining machinery was to be free, whatever was used exclusively in the mines, or it was worded in something like that way. Yet three weeks afterwards my hon. friend stands up in the House and states in his place that he has not issued any directions to his officers; states in the next place, that he does not know whether any difficulties are taking place or not, that is, that he does not know how his officers are acting with reference to that item in the tariff; and, in the third place, he pleads for delay on the ground that it has not yet been passed upon officially, and is therefore not an Act of Parliament, and he is not called upon to issue his instructions or to make his regulations, which amounts to the same thing. I think the House will see in a moment that it is not a business stand to take, nor is it the legal stand to take. Mining machinery is coming into this country. If it is not coming into this country free of duty, at least mining men, corporations and individuals are arranging for the purchase of mining machinery, they are considering as to whether they should purchase it in the United States or purchase it in Canada. If any of it is coming in, it is brought to the different custom-houses along the line, and the customs officer is allowing it in under some interpretation. What is the interpretation? My hon. friend who is at the head of that department sits here at his seat in Ottawa and does not know, three weeks after that became law, whether there is any trouble or not, and has not issued any instructions at all to his officers. When he is asked for definite instructions, he says: Well, I don't think I ought to make definite instructions until this becomes law; it is not law yet. Why, the preference clause, the duties with reference to Great Britain, became law the very moment they were enunciated in this House; so did all the other clauses, and so did this. Does not my hon. friend know that the very moment he introduced that mining clause, he demoralized the business of Canadian foundries and makers of mining machinery utterly, so far as mining machinery for Canada was concerned? I venture to state to my hon. friend that not one single concern has been able to conclude any important piece of business with reference to mining machinery from the moment that was promulgated up to the present time. Why? Because those who operate mines in British Columbia, especially, know that if their mining machinery comes in free, they will get it from the United States, and will not pay the heavy freights from the east to that part of the country. He knows that; and I think every member of the House has possibly received representations from mining machinery manufacturers, drawing their attention to the injustice of the clause, and stating that it is impossible for them, under that clause, to engage in competition with machinery from the United States. After my hon. friend's proclamation three weeks ago, the ground was taken all through British Columbia that mining machinery is to be free, and many were the jubiliations of mining men there under the impression that mining machinery was to be free. Under that proclamation, I say, he has paralyzed the business of mining machinery manufacturers all through Canada, and yet he has not issued instructions. Evidently somebody has asked him a question, and the Finance Minister has found out at last that there is to be trouble under that wording, and that there seems to be indefiniteness, and now they are reconsidering, after they have made the tariff. These gentlemen, a Cabinet of business men, were not going around the country to find out what ought to be done, they knew what ought to be done, but afterwards thought it would be better, at least for form's sake, to go about the country a little and listen to the people, and then when they came back there would be no more deputations, they had investigated, they were making up their minds, they had made up their minds that was the end of it, no clerical mistakes, no emendations of the tariff; business men had decided it, and it was decided. Three weeks afterwards, on so simple a clause as mining machinery, the Finance Minister gets up and naively says, oh, so naively, that he finds there are a few difficulties yet, and that probably they will have to go to work and specify every single article of machinery. They will have a pretty long specification, as hon. gentlemen know who have dealt with the Customs Department in the past, and as hon. gentlemen will know who are dealing with it now. Is it not strange that a Cabinet of business men should have framed a tariff and yet have allowed three weeks to elapse without pressing one item to a conclusion; and all the time they have been investigating, showing their utter distrust of themselves and this House, and asking for representations to be made and deputations and delegations to wait upon them, declaring that they were not over-wise and that they were willing to be taught. Yes, they learn wisdom when the actualities of office fall upon them. It often occurs that a man is far more wise before he attains office than when he is in office. Hon. gentlemen brought down the tariff three weeks ago, and yet they are not ready to press it at this date. The position of the country is just as uncertain to-day as it was before the tariff was brought down, in almost all important particulars. Hon. gentlemen have admitted that they have found claims that should be considered and that a great many changes may be necessary, and that the business men are talking matters over with them; and it is high time for the business men to talk with them. That is very wise; it would have been better if hon. gentlemen had talked more with the business men before they brought the tariff. No Government will bring down a tariff or pass a tariff without having had such interviews before or after or both, because the opinions of the business men are highly important and the tariff is made for the business men. So hon. gentlemen are not infallible, but they are worse, for they thought they were infallible when they brought down the tariff, and yet they complain that they are pestered to death with recommendations. They know there are faults, and glaring faults, in the tariff brought down, but although it was submitted three weeks ago the Government has not placed one item before the House to have it definitely settled and enacted into a clause of the Tariff Bill. When is this going to end; when are hon. gentlemen opposite going to get up courage enough to issue the regulations, to let up on the great mining and manufacturing industries and tell them the conditions under which they will have to work? Will it be necessary to wait another three weeks? I beg hon. gentlemen opposite to come to a conclusion, and not to sit there lazily and helplessly, and acknowledge that three weeks after they brought in the tariff they do not know what it means and dare not submit to the House any of its provisions.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman somewhat contradicted himself when in one breath he described the Government as being lifeless, and in another breath, as being pestered to death.

Mr. FOSTER. Many a lazy man is pestered.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I think the hon. gentleman has been giving the House a leaf out of his own past history. I am reminded that I have already spoken, but I may be pardoned if I make a remark. The general instructions have gone out to the custom-house officers who are bound under the instructions always given in relation to the tariff, namely, that all entries made in the meantime are taken subject to amendments of duties. The hon. gentleman knows that it is the invariable rule, that it must be followed. Those instructions have gone out, and no difficulty has arisen, nor can I believe when the hon. gentleman pictures business as at a standstill, he has any ground for saying so, and at all events, I have not yet discovered it.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) has called attention to the fact that three weeks have elapsed since the tariff was introduced, and that up to the present time the Finance Minister has not made known to the House the extent of the changes that may possibly have to be made.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a clerical error.

Mr. McMULLEN. Allow me to remind the ex-Finance Minister that in 1894 he introduced his tariff on March 27th, and it continued under consideration up to July 12th. Yet the hon. gentleman rises and charges the Government with delay, although up to the present time only three weeks have elapsed, while the hon. gentleman himself took twelve or fourteen weeks to complete his tariff. The ex-Finance Minister evidently thinks that the people have made a very great mistake in removing him from the distinguished position of Finance Minister of this country, and placing my hon. friend in the position he now occupies. When the hon. member for York rises to address the House he is evidently under the impression that when his hat is on the best financial brains in this House is covered. He has criticised the Government at a time when they are labouring honestly and earnestly to bring about a revision of the tariff, and to undo what the hon. gentleman and his friends took eighteen years to do, they built up a system of protection that strikes at the resources of the people, and gives to certain classes advantages, which they are trying at the present time to retain. If the ex-Finance Minister will cultivate a little patience there will be a nice, neat and satisfactory tariff adopted, and this will be done in a shorter period than that occupied with the consideration of the tariff in 1894.

Motion agreed, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. PRIOR. Before this item passes I wish to say a few words in regard to the quarantine station in British Columbia. Last night I made some remarks, and I think I gave the Minister of Agriculture a little information he had not received before. I told him of a case that had been reported to me before I left Victoria, of a Chinaman who had been afflicted with small-pox, put in the hospital and died there. The hon. gentleman clearly showed that he doubted very much the authenticity of my information, and in so many words he declared it was scarcely possible, because there had been no report of the same made to him. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman received a report or not, but I do know as a positive fact that he received a bill for a coffin, which is pretty good evidence of it. The fact is that the man was afflicted with small-pox, was taken to the hospital and died there. The charge was made to me,—I do not know whether it is true or not—but the man who gave me the information said he was willing to take affidavit as to the fact, that the doctor never saw the man from the time the ship went into quarantine. I do not want to make any charge against Dr. Watt, who may be a very good man; but if he never went near that individual when he was afflicted with that dreadful sickness and never reported the case to his department, it shows that he is not a fit officer for the position.

He may be a very good man, but anyhow, the results of his superintendence of that quarantine station have not proved at all satisfactory. Since Dr. Watt took charge, three ships, I believe, have come in flying the yellow flag, with small-pox on board. One was the ship "Victoria" from which this man was taken off and died. He was the only one afflicted with the disease on board, but all the crew and passengers were taken off and put in quarantine. After the ship was fumigated, a new crew of longshoremen was engaged in Victoria, and the ship proceeded to Tacoma. In a short time after that numerous cases of small-pox appeared in Tacoma, Fort Townsend and Victoria. The spread of the disease was traced to some of these men who have been engaged to act as a temporary crew, and who had come across the Sound and spread small-pox. Now, whether that ship was properly fumigated or not remains to be proved, but anyhow the result was, that small-pox was brought into these towns. I may say, that at the time, no newspapers on either side of politics, and no business men said a word about it, because experience in years gone by had taught us, that when small-pox was known to exist in a town, that town was isolated and business suffered.

Last night the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) read a letter stating that seven doctors had made charges against Dr. Watt, as to his not seeing patients who were supposed to be afflicted with small-pox on board ship. What I have stated to the hon. Minister (Mr. Fisher) rather bears out that letter, and there may be some truth in what these doctors have said. One would be led to believe from what we hear, that Dr. Watt seems to be afraid to do his duty; he seems to be afraid to go near these patients. I cannot see any other reason why he does not attend to them, if it is not that he is afraid.

Whilst I am on this subject I wish to say a few words in regard to the reasons why Dr. Watt was placed in that position. His predecessor was Dr. George Duncan, and any one who has met that gentleman must say, that he was a first-class man for the position. I do not believe, that the Minister of Agriculture can show that Dr. Duncan ever did anything wrong as superintendent of the quarantine station, but that on the contrary, he always carried out his duties in a proper manner, to the satisfaction of the department and to the satisfaction of Dr. Montizambert who was his chief. I may say, that whilst the Conservative party was in power, both the Minister of Agriculture (Dr. Montague) and the Deputy Minister were very much pleased indeed with the manner in which he carried out his duties. But, Sir, to make place for Dr. Watt, Dr. Duncan was dismissed. Why was he dismissed? What was the cause? Was it because he did not attend to his duties properly as quarantine officer? I say, Sir, it was nothing of the sort. I telegraphed to the Minister of Agriculture asking why Dr. Duncan had been dismissed, and this is the letter I received in reply:

Dear Sir,—In reply to your telegram of yesterday, the Order in Council dismissing Dr. George
Mr. PRIOR.

Duncan recites the facts in connection with his allowing a suspect to leave the isolation hospital in Victoria,—

Not the quarantine hospital at Williams' Head, bear in mind.

—and goes on to say, that the Minister is accordingly of opinion that, in the public interest, Dr. Duncan should no longer retain the position, and therefore, recommends that his services should be dispensed with.

Yours truly,
SYDNEY FISHER.

Now, Sir, Dr. Duncan while acting as superintendent of the quarantine station at Williams' Head for the Dominion Government, was also health officer for the city of Victoria, and it seems that on the 20th June a medical man of that city came to Dr. Duncan as health officer, and reported to him that he had a suspicious case like small-pox in charge. Dr. Duncan went to see the man, and told Dr. Hall that he believed it was chicken-pox and not small-pox, but not knowing where this man had been to get the infection, he said he would take him to the isolation hospital and detain him during the proper period for the incubation of the disease. Dr. Duncan did so, and not only did he take this particular patient, but he also took three suspects who had been in contact with him, and put them all into the isolation hospital. He put this patient into a clean room, gave him lots of pure air, disinfected the three suspects thoroughly by fumigation and baths, and gave them clean clothes. On the 23rd June, that being election day, one of these suspects asked Dr. Duncan to allow him to go down and vote, and Dr. Duncan having disinfected him thoroughly and given him clean clothes, which had not been in contact with anybody, allowed him to go out of the hospital. He also allowed the caretaker, Mr. Heathorn, to go down to vote, and as the other two suspected persons did not wish to vote they therefore did not go. Presumably, Dr. Duncan was dismissed from this position because he allowed two men out of the hospital who voted for my worthy colleague (Mr. Earle) and myself. Well, Sir, here are the affidavits from these two men. The first one is:

I, Arthur Heathorn, of the city of Victoria, in the province of British Columbia, do solemnly declare:

1. That I was employed as outside caretaker at the Isolation Hospital, in the city of Victoria, on the 23rd day of June, 1896;

2. That I begged for, and received, permission from Dr. Geo. Duncan, medical health officer, to go and record my vote at the late election and remain as scrutineer, on condition that I found a competent and reliable substitute;

3. That such substitute I found, and I paid him out of my own funds;

4. That I had not been exposed to infection at all during the period of my employment at the said Isolation Hospital;

5. That I voted for Messrs. Earle and Prior.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath, and by virtue of "The Canada Evidence Act, 1893."

(Sgd.) ARTHUR HEATHORN.

Declared before me, at Victoria, this 28th day of September, 1896.

(Sgd.) F. MACRAE,
Police Magistrate, city of Victoria.

The next affidavit is from Frank E. Murton, and is as follows:—

I, Frank E. Murton, of the city of Victoria, in the province of British Columbia, letter carrier, do solemnly declare:

1. That I was detained as a suspect in a doubtful case of what I believe was chicken-pox, at the Isolation Hospital, in the city of Victoria, during the month of June last;

2. That, on entering the hospital grounds, my clothing and person were thoroughly fumigated and disinfected, and that I did not thereafter at all come in contact with any infected person;

3. That I obtained permission from the medical health officer to go out and record my vote at the election on the 23rd day of the said month of June;

4. That I voted for Dr. Milne and Mr. Templeman.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath, and by virtue of "The Canada Evidence Act, 1893."

(Sgd.) FRANK E. MURTON.

Declared before me, at Victoria, B.C., this 28th day of September, A.D. 1896.

(Sgd.) F. MACRAE,
Police Magistrate, city of Victoria.

Now, Sir, I call particular attention of the House to the fact, that it afterwards turned out that the case was one of chicken-pox and not small-pox at all. I also call attention to the fact that Mr. Frank E. Murton voted for Dr. Milne and Mr. Templeman who were the opponents of myself and my colleague in that election. These are copies, and the original affidavits are in the Agricultural Department, I believe, in possession of the hon. Minister. Now, Sir, there is another telegram which bears on this case and which I will read to the House. It is as follows:—

Victoria, B.C., Sept. 26, 1896.

To Hon. Sydney Fisher, Ottawa.

No authenticated case of small-pox has occurred in Victoria or vicinity during the month of June, 1896.

That telegram is signed by Dr. J. C. Davie, a well-known doctor in Victoria. As I have said, the case was chicken-pox and nothing else, and Dr. Duncan was quite within his rights as health officer of the city of Victoria to allow these men to go out and vote. I appeal to any medical man in this House or out of it, as to whether there was any liability of contagion from these two men going out of the hospital under the circumstances.

Not only that, but I contend that the matter was altogether outside of the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture. Dr. Duncan was acting as health officer in Victoria, and that alone, and if the civic authorities had thought he was to blame, I would not have a word to say; but what are the facts of the case? The matter was brought up before the council, and after an investigation Dr. Duncan was cleared; and not only that, but the mayors of the town for the two preceding years stated that in their opinion Dr. Duncan had not exceeded his authority, and had done nothing against the safety of the town. Now, when we had a good man like Dr. Duncan, it seems to me that it was almost an outrage for the Minister of Agriculture to dismiss him on such a flimsy excuse. We have seen hundreds of dismissals since the 25th of June, for any conceivable excuse; but here was a man who gave the greatest satisfaction to every one brought in contact with him. The steamships on the one hand and the civic authorities on the other hand were perfectly satisfied with him, and I challenge the hon. gentleman to show me in what respect he did not do his duty.

Mr. McINNES. The hon. gentleman says the civic authorities were perfectly satisfied with the conduct of Dr. Duncan as health officer of the city. I would like to ask him if it is not a fact that he applied to be reinstated in that position, and that the civic authorities did not entertain his application?

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman asks me if they were not satisfied? They had an investigation, and the majority of the council, with the mayor, acquitted him—

Mr. McINNES. Did they not refuse to accept his application?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PRIOR. To show the esteem in which Dr. Duncan was held, he has been appointed to the position of secretary of the provincial board of health, to look after the health of the whole province. I said that the steamship companies were satisfied with him. Here is a copy of a telegram which was sent to the hon. Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa:

During the time Dr. G. H. Duncan has been superintendent of quarantine, the duties have been satisfactorily discharged, and no delay or other inconvenience has occurred to the steamers of our respective lines. We, therefore, have every confidence in him and respectfully recommend him as in every way competent to discharge the duties of the office, and hope the Government will continue him in the position permanently.

This is signed by the agents of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, the Oregon Asiatic Steamship Company, the Northern Pacific Steamship Company, and the Northern Pacific Railway Company. I have very little more to say about this matter. I do think that in all fairness Dr. Duncan might have been allowed a chance to vindicate himself. Instead of that, he was never asked to show any reason for what he had done. He was simply notified by the Department of Agriculture on a certain day that his services would be dispensed with, and that he was to hand over the quarantine service to his successor. If the hon. Minister had known as much about the case as he knows now, I do not believe he would have consented to the dismissal.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). In reply to the remarks of the hon. member, I think an explanation is due. In the first place, the facts as recited by the hon. gentleman are about correct. The facts are these, in short: Dr. Duncan was at that time the city health officer as well as the quarantine officer at Williams' Head. The doctor attending this case declared in an affidavit that it was a case of small-pox, and appealed to Dr. Duncan, as city health officer; and Dr. Duncan, by virtue of his position as such, had the patient, along with two suspects, put in the isolation hospital, because he believed it to be dangerous to the health of the city to allow them to be at large.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not quite understand the hon. Minister. I understand that the facts have been correctly stated by my hon. friend, and he states that the case was one of chicken-pox, but supposed to be small-pox, whereas the hon. Minister is treating it as a case of small-pox.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was a case of small-pox by the sworn affidavit of the physician who attended it before and after this occurred.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. Minister knows perfectly well that it did not turn out to be a case of small-pox. I know, as a matter of fact, that the man was vaccinated, and he had a typical arm, which showed that it was not a case of small-pox.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. At the time the suspects were put into the hospital it was considered a case of small-pox, and nobody at that time pretended that it was not.

Mr. PRIOR. Dr. Duncan did.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Then why did he put them into the hospital and keep them there? Because he considered that it was necessary to the public health of the city that they should be put in. When polling day came he was appealed to, to allow this suspect out, and he gave him permission to go out. The hon. gentleman said that he was disinfected or fumigated the day he was let out.

Mr. PRIOR. The suspect swears he was.

Mr. PRIOR.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He does not. He says that when he came into the hospital he was, but not just before he went out, and there is no proof that he was. The caretaker of the hospital swears that so far as he knows he was not disinfected on that day. The hon. gentleman is confusing two dates. When the suspect came into the hospital he was disinfected and was given new clothes; but before he went out on the day of voting he was not, and he does not say he was, and the caretaker of the hospital distinctly states that to his knowledge he was not. The man had been in the isolation hospital for some time. He was attended upon by the same man who attended upon the small-pox patients; and yet this man was allowed to go out for the purpose of voting, and then came back to the hospital and continued to be isolated. If it was safe for him to go out to vote, what reason or justification had Dr. Duncan for continuing him in the hospital afterwards? It was very evident that Dr. Duncan believed that it was necessary for him to stay in isolation, that the period of danger had not passed, and that this was an exceptional privilege allowed to the man, to go out on voting day for the purpose of recording his vote. I did not care how he voted, or for what particular reason he went out. The question of politics did not enter into the matter at all. As a matter of fact, until the statements of these men came to me, that one had voted on one side, and the other on the other side, I did not know or care which way they voted. But Dr. Duncan, as an officer of my department, occupying the responsible position of city health officer, had placed this man in isolation because he considered it necessary to the public health of the city, had allowed him to go out for a certain purpose on a certain day for a few hours without disinfection, and had then put him back to continue his isolation afterwards. If it was safe to the public health to allow the man to go out, he ought to have been allowed to continue out. Dr. Duncan had no excuse whatever for keeping him there: he ought to have given him a free exit from the hospital without requiring him to return at all.

Mr. PRIOR. I may say that I know as a fact that Dr. Duncan would have let him remain out altogether, but that the mayor asked him kindly to keep him in until the full period of incubation had passed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Then, according to the hon. gentleman, Dr. Duncan, the physician in charge, who was responsible, allowed the mayor to run things. I do not want such an officer as that in charge of the health of the Dominion. My reason for the dismissal of Dr. Duncan was simply this, and I think the hon. gentleman's statement now completely justifies his dismissal, that judging by his conduct in this case, I would not feel safe in continuing him in charge of the British Columbia quarantine station. If on voting day he permitted a man whose exit, by his own act, he believed to be dangerous to the public health, to go out and mix freely among the people in a public place such as a polling booth, there could be no confidence in his administration. He might equally be influenced by other reasons, by reasons of personal friendship, by particular regard for a friend who was in port, by particular regard for the feelings of individuals, or for the convenience of large corporations who might ask that their employees should not be detained in quarantine, as often happens when the ships of great steamship lines come to our ports, to relax the quarantine regulations. There could be no safety in leaving such a gentleman in charge, there could be no guarantee that a gentleman who would act as Dr. Duncan did on that occasion would not be equally yielding on other occasions and endanger the public health. Under the circumstances, I considered Dr. Duncan not a safe man to trust with the health of the whole Pacific coast. I may say that the position he occupied is that of the health officer in charge of the Pacific station. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) has spoken about what has occurred since the dismissal of Dr. Duncan. He says that several vessels arrived there, that a good deal of care was required, that Dr. Watt had exercised firmness and done his best for the health of the neighbourhood.

Mr. PRIOR. With very poor results.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That remains to be seen. So far the hon. gentleman has shown no evidence that the administration of Dr. Watt has resulted in bringing any disease into the country. Under the circumstances, I think I was perfectly justified in removing Dr. Duncan, who had been guilty of the remissness and lack of judgment I have described, out of consideration for certain interests or from whatever other motive may have actuated him.

I wish to say a word or two with regard to the hon. gentleman's remarks about Dr. Watt. He said that three vessels floating the yellow flag had arrived at Victoria since Dr. Watt's appointment. I may say that I have no report in the department that there has been any case of small-pox traced to any individual whom Dr. Watt permitted to pass the quarantine. The hon. gentleman has stated that a certain vessel was disinfected and a new crew engaged, and that since the engagement of the new crew, small-pox has broken out in two or three cities in the province of British Columbia and has been traced to that crew. There is no report or complaint of anything of the kind in the department. When there is, I will have the matter investigated. The hon. gentleman has no doubt spoken from some knowledge given him by others, hearsay knowledge or newspaper reports; but I am not prepared to accept such reports as an accusation against the department of which I have charge. If any information be given to the department of any such remissness or anything that might indicate remissness, I shall only be too glad to have it carefully investigated and reported upon. The hon. gentleman spoke also of the death of a certain Chinaman from small-pox. In the department there is no record of such a death, although, as the hon. gentleman rightly says, there is a charge for a coffin. But the officer in charge has not made his official report with regard to any of those steamers yet. The hon. gentleman spoke last night of a case which occurred quite recently on board the "Empress of China." I have telegraphed Dr. Watt to give me the full details of that case, and I shall ask him to give full details and report of the other cases to which the hon. gentleman has alluded, and I shall be very glad when I get that report—which I trust will be by return mail—to give him full information. I cannot accept any statements, which are not made on the hon. gentleman's personal knowledge, as an accusation against my department. Of course, if he states, of his own personal knowledge, that anything of this kind has occurred, I shall accept his statement and have an investigation, but as to hearsay statements and newspaper reports, I cannot accept them as evidence. But I may say that while a number of people told me, at the time of Dr. Duncan's dismissal, that they considered him perfectly competent for the position, I have yet to receive any information which would lead me to believe that Dr. Watt is not perfectly competent. On the contrary, he was strongly recommended to me, not only by people in British Columbia but by people in Eastern Canada, who had known him in his college days and in the earlier part of his practice; and I may say that Dr. Montizambert, the chief quarantine officer of the Dominion, who went to Victoria, at my request, since Dr. Watt's installation, came back with a very favourable report of his capacity. He said he had full confidence in Dr. Watt's ability to carry on the work of the station there, responsible and difficult as it is, owing to the constant communication between that port and China and Japan, from which countries there is probably more danger of disease than from European countries.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I cannot help thinking that the hon. Minister of Agriculture has, in this matter, made a very grave and unfortunate blunder. I do not say that the hon. gentleman did not act according to the light he had or according to what he believed to be right, but I am quite certain that there is no medical man in this House or out of it who will say that the ground he has alleged for the dismissal of an able and painstaking officer, as he admits Dr. Duncan was, from the position of quarantine officer of the port, was justified. Every medical man knows that there is a certain stage at which a doubt arises as to whether the disease is going to be small-pox or chicken-pox. Every medical man is quite aware that there is a certain period when it is very difficult to say whether a case will in twenty-four hours prove to be small-pox or simply chicken-pox, which is a comparatively harmless disease. It appears that Dr. Duncan, in the exercise of that great caution which a quarantine officer is bound to exercise, where there is a possible doubt as to what the result may be, put the parties subject to this doubt in quarantine. Having done so, and the disease not having developed, several days after, when it had become quite evident to Dr. Duncan that there was no danger whatever of small-pox, so much so that he was prepared to release the whole of the party, he allowed two of these persons, all of whom had been disinfected and fumigated when they went into the hospital, to go out for a short time on polling day. Dr. Duncan's observations in the matter warranted him in arriving at the conclusion that the disease was not small-pox. He had arrived at that conclusion from his own observation and experience, he considered that there was no danger whatever, and he allowed these parties to go out. The hon. Minister, finding he has not a leg to stand upon, finding no justification whatever for the dismissal of a competent officer who discharged his duties efficiently and against whom no charge whatever was made, suddenly seized on a ground he had never heard of before as a sufficient cause for dismissal. The mayor of the city was not willing that these parties should be discharged without spending a few days more in quarantine, and, as he yielded to the authority of the chief officer of the city, the hon. Minister says that that is quite sufficient reason for his dismissal. He finds that the ground upon which he dismissed Dr. Duncan slips from under his feet, that it affords no reason whatever to justify the course he has taken in striking at a professional man occupying, and deservedly occupying, a high place in his profession, and with an experience which proves his fitness to discharge the duties of the position he occupied under the Government, and he takes another ground that is equally untenable. The hon. Minister must not forget that the ground upon which he dismissed this gentleman related to a matter with which he had nothing whatever to do. It was as health officer of the city of Victoria that this matter came in charge of Dr. Duncan. This gentleman, as I understand, occupied the position of quarantine officer, and as such was amenable to the Minister of Agriculture; but the hon. Minister of Agriculture has nothing to do with the manner in which Dr. Duncan discharged his duties as health officer of the city of Victoria. He discharged his duty as quarantine officer with great ability, with great, with extra, caution. But his dismissal is justified now on the ground that he respected the authority of the head of the city of Victoria under whom he served as health officer. Why, Sir, I think the position the hon. Minister takes, he himself must regard as one he could hardly offer to this House as any justification for the course he has taken.

But the consequence of the hon. Minister's action seem to have been deplorable. This is another case in which the haste to provide places for supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite ends in disaster to the people of the country. Yesterday we had a lamentable case of the destruction of public property through putting incompetent persons in place of officers who were reliable and careful. To-day we have an infinitely worse case. We have a charge brought against this new officer, this gentleman who is thrust into a position made vacant by depriving a professional man of high character and standing, who had faithfully and ably discharged the duties of his office. Can a more horrible thing be presented for the consideration of this House than the allegation that that quarantine officer took a man who was suffering from small-pox, locked him up and left him without medical attendance. My hon. friend (Mr. Landerkin) is a member of the profession. I ask him what he would say of a medical man who would take a man suffering from small-pox and have him locked up in a room and refuse to see him or to afford relief for his sufferings. The hon. Minister of Agriculture says that the case comes to him as a surprise, that he has not had the evidence, that the only proof he has of the death of this unfortunate man, locked up with small-pox and denied aid and medical relief by the man appointed and paid by this country to fulfil that duty, is that the department has had to pay for a coffin for this individual. I trust that that will be sufficient evidence to him that a death has occurred. And, after the statement made by my hon. friend from Victoria that so dreadful a thing has occurred in this civilized country through the conduct of one of the hon. Minister's officials, holding a high and important position, I trust that the hon. Minister will feel it his duty to investigate the case to the bottom. I say more—I say that if the facts as stated to the House by my hon. friend from Victoria are sustained, it will be the duty of the hon. Minister of Agriculture not only to discharge Dr. Watt from the position he has shown himself so utterly incompetent to fill, but to call the attention of the legal authorities in British Columbia to the question of how a medical man should be dealt with who allows a man to die under these circumstances without offering him that relief he is bound as a professional man and as an officer of the Department of Agriculture to offer.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the Minister of Agriculture laid down a novel rule in this case, the rule that although a man, when appointed to one position is discharging his duties in that position faithfully and well to the satisfaction of those to whom he is responsible and to all concerned, because he happens to do what others think is not right in some other office, that is a reason why he should be dismissed from the office whose duties he discharges satisfactorily. I do not think that that rule would be admitted in any other department of life. If a man is engaged or appointed to do work his performance of that work is the criterion by which he should be judged, and if he does his work satisfactorily and well, he ought to be retained in the position. I can see some strong grounds for Dr. Duncan acting as he did in the capacity of health officer of the city of Victoria. He is called in perhaps to take charge of patients who have been under another medical man's care. That other medical man has given the opinion that the case is one of small-pox. Dr. Duncan does not agree with this opinion, but, as the medical counsel for the city, he feels bound to exercise very great care. For that reason, although, in his own opinion, it is not necessary, he isolates these men for the time during which incubation is taking place, when it will become plain to medical men whether it is a case of chicken-pox or a case of small-pox. On further examination, he is satisfied that it is not a case of small-pox, and therefore he allows these men to go out for a time. He does this feeling satisfied that there is no risk to the public health. And because he has done so in his capacity as city health officer, and under these circumstances, that is held to be sufficient cause why he should be considered unfit to perform the duties he was appointed to do in connection with his other office. I do not think that rule is sound, and I am quite sure that the hon. Minister, on further consideration, will agree with that himself.

Mr. McINNES. I agree thoroughly with what the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) has said with regard to the high character of Dr. Duncan. I regard him as a friend, and all those who have the pleasure of his acquaintance will heartily agree that personally and professionally he is a gentleman of very high standing. It was for this reason that I was very sorry to hear, after the election, that he had taken the extreme part he did in that election; and it is for this reason also that I am sorry that the hon. member for Victoria, though posing as a friend of Dr. Duncan has seen fit to give greater notoriety to a part of the doctor's career which, I am sure, the doctor himself would heartily wish that he could blot out. Now, the facts have been very clearly stated by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). There is no necessity to deal with this matter from a political standpoint. There are acts known to the public that altogether warrant the hon. Minister in acting as he did, without entering into a consideration of the offensive partisan act which Dr. Duncan undoubtedly committed. There is no question that there were two suspects in the isolation station at Victoria, and that Dr. Duncan at the time that he was quarantine officer of that district, allowed these two suspects out. It may be that they had undergone some fumigation and disinfection; but he let them out to mingle among other men, and to go into crowded parts of the city to the polls, unguarded by any guardian, but with distinct instructions to return to the isolation hospital again. Now, the point which occurs to the popular mind is, why in the world was it necessary for Dr. Duncan to give such explicit instructions for these two suspects to return to the station. If they were free from danger after they had undergone fumigation, then they were free from the liabilities of giving the disease, and they might as well have stayed out. But Dr. Duncan himself knew that there was danger in letting these men out, and it was for that reason that he was most specific in his orders to these men to go to the polls and to hurry back again to the station.

But if this matter is to be dealt with from a political standpoint, then there are some questions in connection with the doctor's conduct on that very day which I think would amply warrant the Minister of Agriculture in dismissing him. One case is quite notorious in British Columbia, it is a matter of common notoriety, and it is this: The sanitary officer of the city of Victoria, who was under the directions of Dr. Duncan when he was acting as health officer, was sent out by the doctor at two o'clock in the morning, to a place called Souke, some thirty miles away from the city, presumably to look after a leper case which had been supposed to have been discovered there. His orders were most peremptory, they were most sudden. This man was ordered out at two o'clock in the morning to go thirty miles out of the city, to look after that leper. Now, as a matter of fact there was no leper, there never was a leper there, the whole thing was a cock-and-bull story, and when this man went out to Souke, as you might suppose, all sort of fun was made about it. There are no Chinamen there at all, and Chinamen are the only lepers that we have in that province. But the man came back, I do not know whether he had an opportunity of recording his vote or not; but the point is, that this sanitary officer, Mr. Chipchase, is a very strong Liberal, well known throughout the district as a Liberal, and there can be no doubt at all about the fact that Dr. Duncan, abusing the authority which he had over that man in his capacity as health officer, wished to get that man out of the city on the day of the election.

Now, hon. gentlemen opposite have discussed this matter without a knowledge of the facts, and it reminds me of the discussion which occurred in this House a few days ago with regard to the dismissal of Mrs. McManus, when we saw the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Quinn) rushing down to defend her on the supposition that she was a strong Irish Catholic, calling upon the Solicitor General to defend those of that creed and of that race. But he found out afterwards—

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think the hon. gentleman has a right to refer to a previous debate.

Mr. QUINN. I beg to call the hon. gentleman to order, in the first place, for referring to a matter which was a subject of another debate; and secondly, as making a misrepresentation of what was stated by me at that time. I never said that the widow McManus was a Roman Catholic, I never took that position, never dreamed of inquiring whether she was a Roman Catholic or a Protestant. But I simply took the position I did as a matter of justice, and in vindication of what I considered was the rights of a woman who had been very much wronged.

Mr. McINNES. Mr. Chairman, I well remember, and I can never forget, how the hon. gentleman from Montreal rushed down into the front seat from the back seat where he usually sits and called out to the Solicitor General to come forward and defend an Irish Catholic, when, as a matter of fact, he said afterwards he had found out that this man was an Orangeman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have reminded the hon. gentleman that he has no right to refer to a previous debate. Now that he has answered the hon. member for Montreal, we must consider the incident closed.

Mr. QUINN. I wish again to state—

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I do not think it would be well now to discuss that matter. I have given the hon. gentleman an occasion to deny the statement of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. McInnes).

Mr. QUINN. But the hon. gentleman has not accepted the explanation that I made; on the contrary, he has persisted in making a wrong statement of what I said, and I ask to have the point of order sustained.

Mr. McINNES. I am not surprised, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. gentleman does not want this subject discussed after the extraordinary exhibition that he made of himself on that occasion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has made a statement which has been denied by the hon. member for Montreal, and I suppose he will accept the denial which has been made.

Mr. McINNES. If he denies it, of course I accept his denial. However, Sir, to take up the thread of the argument again, I contend that hon. gentlemen opposite have discussed this matter without any knowledge of the facts, as indeed they have discussed many other matters in the past. For instance, they have made a great deal out of the supposed fact that this man was suffering from chicken-pox and not small-pox. Now, as a matter of fact one month after the case was concluded, Dr. Hall, an eminent physician in the city of Victoria, made a sworn affidavit and sent it to the Minister of Agriculture, that that man did suffer from small-pox and not chicken-pox. Now, the hon. member for Victoria knows that there is no sworn statement to the contrary.

Mr. PRIOR. I appeal to the evidence of Dr. J. C. Davey, who is as good an authority as there is in Canada.

Mr. McINNES. Is that statement before the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. PRIOR. Yes.

Mr. McINNES. One month after that man had recovered, Dr. Hall made a sworn statement and sent it in to the Minister of Agriculture, that it was a case of small-pox and not a case of chicken-pox. Now, the hon. member for Victoria has gone out of his way to discredit the conduct of Dr. Watt since he took office. He made a most disparaging and damaging statement, that during that period a Chinese small-pox patient at the quarantine station had been completely neglected by the doctor in charge. Now, that statement is very similar to some other statements which he has made here, being a matter of hearsay altogether. He did not give any authority for his statement to this House, although he said that the party who told him was prepared to make an affidavit to that effect.

Mr. PRIOR. Yes.

Mr. McINNES. Well, Sir, affidavits from some people are of very little value. I think I am familiar with the people of Victoria, and if the hon. gentleman will do this House the justice, and do Dr. Watt the justice, to give the name of his informant, then I might be able to give an estimate of its value, and what he states might have some weight in the eyes of the House or it might not. If he does not do so, we can only come to the conclusion that the party from whom he gets his information is not a party who would lend a great deal of weight to the statement which he recklessly makes. I have only this to say in conclusion, that all reports I have heard with regard to Dr. Watt's conduct in the serious and trying cases which have come before him of late, have shown him to be an efficient officer of the highest merit; and whatever may have been thought at the time of his appointment as to his ability to fill that position by his opponents and traducers, one thing is certain, that since he has been brought into contact with his duties, he has performed them uniformly in a manner that is in the highest degree satisfactory to the people of British Columbia.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman asked us that we should deal with the facts, and now let us see what the facts are. It is a fact, so far as the records show, that an order was given for a coffin to bury somebody. It is supposed there must have been a corpse, and it was at the quarantine station. But there is no record in the department to show that a death had taken place. A death must have taken place there, or they would not have wanted to bury a corpse, and the department would not have been called on to pay the expense. The next fact must be apparent or assumed: Either the quarantine health officer was there or not; at all events, he never reported the death, but gave an order for a coffin. What explanation has the hon. gentleman to make as to these facts? Who is to blame for this when he allows that to go on? This is the fourth month that has elapsed, and yet there is no information in the department except an order for a coffin in which to bury some one.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The quarantine officers do not make monthly reports of what occurs at their stations. They make reports at the end of the year. No doubt when the report of this station comes down the deaths, if there have been any, will be recorded. I have asked Dr. Watt to give me a report of these cases, because there has been so much talk in regard to them. But I think it very unfair to an officer in Dr. Watt's position that an hon. member should speak from pure hearsay in regard to his conduct, without any proof being adduced and without assuming any responsibility. In justice to any official, I think it is unfair that an hon. gentleman should make the statement that has been made, and not be prepared to state his authority and take the responsibility.

Mr. PRIOR. I am prepared to take the responsibility.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Then I suppose the hon. gentleman has personal knowledge that Dr. Watt placed a small-pox patient in a room in the hospital and did not visit him until that patient's death.

Mr. PRIOR. That is absurd. A member cannot have personal knowledge of everything brought before him, but when the information is given him by responsible and credible persons that should be sufficient.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). The hon. gentleman will see that if he makes a charge of this kind, and he states that his information is obtained from a responsible party, he should in justice give my hon. friend the Minister the name of the party. That is reasonable and fair in a case like this. This, of course, could not be insisted on in all cases; but this is a very grave matter, and when such a charge is brought forward the authority should be stated.

Mr. PRIOR. I am willing to give the name to the hon. Minister privately, but not until I hear from the gentleman, will I be prepared to give his name publicly. I acknowledge that this is a serious charge, and I brought it up so that the Minister might have it investigated, not from any personal feeling but for the safety of the public in general.

Mr. DAVIN. Have the papers ordered by this House in regard to changes in the quarantine regulations and also in the personnel, been brought down?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think they are ready in the department. I will lay them on the Table at once.

Mr. McDUGALL. Is it not a fact that the hon. Minister has dispensed with the services of one of the quarantine officers for the harbour of Sydney, Cape Breton? I so understood from the remarks made by the hon. gentleman last night, when I was out of the House. If I understand the position it is this. Dr. Johnston, who was physician at North Sydney, and whose duty it was to board vessels coming into the port of Sydney, has been removed, and Dr. McLeod, who lives at Sydney and whose duty was mainly to attend at the quarantine hospital, which is located two or three miles from the residence of Dr. McLeod, has been transferred from Sydney to North Sydney. I should like to know from the Minister why this change has been made. Sydney is a very important port, and anything that would render the quarantine service of less security to the public health would be a great mistake, and I hope that before the Minister made the change, which I understand has been made, he instituted full inquiries into the necessity of that service being properly maintained for the port of Sydney. Dr. McLeod, residing in the town of Sydney and within two or three miles of the quarantine hospital, was not located in a convenient place to meet the requirements of the boarding of vessels when they came to the port, and in consequence of that and of the necessity of having the physician who attended the hospital reside near the hospital, an officer was appointed for North Sydney, which is fifteen miles by land from Sydney and from the quarantine hospital. An officer located at a place convenient for the boarding of vessels when they were prepared to enter the port, would not be suitably located to attend to patients in the quarantine hospital. That is the reason why the previous Government appointed two officers and found it necessary to retain them. I should like to know from the Minister the grounds on which he dispensed with one of those officers under those circumstances. I may say that by water the distance between Sydney and the quarantine hospital is only two or three miles, while by land it is between twelve and fifteen miles. In the same way the distance by water from Sydney, where Dr. McLeod resided, to the quarantine hospital is about two miles, while the distance by land is about four miles. The distance between the residence of the doctor at Sydney and the point at which vessels were required to stop until they were examined by a medical officer, is between seven and eight miles from Sydney, or between five and six miles from the quarantine hospital. Under these circumstances it was considered necessary that the two officers should be appointed and retained. It was also considered that the expense was not large in view of the importance of Sydney. I may say to the Minister for his information that Sydney is one of the principal ports of Canada as regards shipping. Upwards of three-quarters of a million tons of shipping, largely foreign, enter the port yearly, and it is therefore of the greatest importance that the quarantine service should be kept intact. I do not think the action of the Minister in dispensing with the services of this officer is a wise move, keeping in view all the facts.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I shall have to repeat the explanation I gave last night when the item was up and this question arose. There were two medical officers, one at Sydney and the other at North Sydney. North Sydney is really nearer the anchorage ground where the vessels come in, than is Sydney. Dr. McLeod is the senior officer, and he resided at Sydney, and Dr. Johnston was the junior officer, and he resided at North Sydney. Last fall I sent Dr. Montizambert, the chief quarantine officer to that port, where he had never been before, to examine into the situation, because I was rather surprised to find two officers at that port, when there was no other port in the whole Dominion that required two officers, except the important station at Grosse Isle. Dr. Montizambert reported to me, that Dr. McLeod was quite ready to do the whole work, to remove to North Sydney which was more convenient than was Sydney, and that the services of Dr. Johnston could be perfectly well dispensed with, without any injury to the service or to the management of the work there. Under these circumstances, I felt that in the interests of public economy it was my duty to dispense with the services of Dr. Johnston. I did so a little while ago, giving him leave of absence, and allowing his salary to go on until the end of the fiscal year for which it was provided, but not providing for his salary for the year beginning the 1st of July next. As far as the quarantine hospital is concerned, the non-member (Mr. McDougall) knows well, that it is on a point in the harbour, between Sydney and North Sydney, and that both these places are about equally distant by water from it. The quarantine hospital is only used when vessels come in and when the physician in charge orders the patients or the crews to be taken to it. It is quite easily accessible by boat from North Sydney, and I do not anticipate the slightest difficulty, and I am sure there will be no difficulty in regard to the patients from a vessel reaching the hospital, quite as easily from North Sydney, as from Sydney, although by the land route it is further around.

Mr. McDougall. Is it not a fact, Mr. Chairman, that the point at which the vessels come to anchor until they are boarded by the physician, is some two miles further out of the port than North Sydney, the nearest point on that side of the harbour to where the quarantine hospital is, making the distance between five and six miles to the quarantine hospital from the point at which the vessel comes to anchor?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. And it is seven or eight miles from Sydney, where Dr. McLeod used to live. The place where the doctor is now going to live, is near the anchorage ground, and nearer the hospital, and therefore more convenient for the work.

Mr. McDougall. But it is not as near to the point where these vessels come to anchor as where Dr. Johnston resided.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Dr. McLeod is going to reside where Dr. Johnston resided.

Mr. McDougall. Oh, no!

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Excuse me, Dr. McLeod will remove to North Sydney.

Mr. McDougall. But Dr. Johnston is not residing at North Sydney. He is residing at Sydney Mines, just at a point right opposite where these vessels come to anchor, and he has only a few steps from his office to the shore, where he can take the boat to board the vessels. In the case of a very heavy storm he might take a steamer from North Sydney to go on board the vessels, but in a great many cases it was more convenient for him to take a boat right from his own door. It would therefore not delay the vessel at all. As it is now, Dr. McLeod is to reside in the town of North Sydney, and has to go two miles to board a vessel, so that the doctor at North Sydney town is not in as convenient a place for the shipping as where Dr. Johnston has resided.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I would ask whether it was not at North Sydney that the quarantine doctor before Dr. Johnston resided?

Mr. McDOUGALL. Yes, the late Dr. Macpherson resided at North Sydney.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). That is where Dr. McLeod now is.

Mr. DAVIN. Does not the quarantine officer make a report to the department of the disposition of the cases? Suppose there are any deaths, will not he report to the department what is done?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will answer that question in a moment.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to ask the Minister, whether or not, there has been any change during the last year in the officer at the quarantine station at the port of Halifax?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The officer in charge is still the same. There was a caretaker and an assistant whose services were dispensed with. The caretaker was replaced but the assistant was not. Dr. Wickwire, who was in charge there, is authorized to employ assistants if he finds it necessary, and to pay them by the day. I dispensed with the man who was employed the year round.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have had no communication with the officer, but I have seen some reference to the matter in the public press. For what reason was the caretaker dismissed, and a new caretaker appointed in his place?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I received information that the caretaker had taken an active part in the elections, was offensive to the Liberal party there, and on that ground I dismissed him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the hon. Minister inform me, in what respect the part which the caretaker took in the election was offensive?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The affidavits which were sent me were to the effect, speaking from memory, that he had frequented a certain house on the shore opposite the island where the committee work of the hon. gentleman's party was being carried on; that he had used offensive language to certain Liberals who had been at the polls, and that he had shown himself a partisan in an offensive manner. I cannot remember the exact details of the affidavit, but that is about the effect.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course it would be impossible to expect that the hon. Minister would remember all the details, but I would like to ask further, whether any opportunity was given to the caretaker to show cause against these charges.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) supplied me the information, and told me he had investigated the charge, and that he was convinced of the truth of it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have to ask another question, whether the hon. Minister is prepared to state that my hon. colleague from Halifax (Mr. Russell) afforded the caretaker an opportunity of answering the charges? If the duties of the hon. Minister are to be performed by my colleague from Halifax, I presume that he (Mr. Russell) would do what the Minister, it seems to me, should have done; that is, to give to this caretaker an opportunity of showing whether the charges were true or false, of defending himself against them, and of making any answer he might have to make. That is no more than the worst criminal in our courts is permitted to do by the law of the land.

Mr. RUSSELL. I could not very well hear all that my learned colleague (Mr. Borden) said, but I fancy he was making a reference to the dismissal of the caretaker at Laylor's Island. This caretaker did not have any more opportunity, I believe, of having his case heard than in the case of the dismissals that were made by the Conservative Government. My own impression is that a man ought to have an opportunity of having the charges against him heard, but the evidence that was given to me in his case seemed to be so absolutely conclusive that I did not think it was requisite to go through the formality of an investigation. I sent to the Minister of Agriculture the affidavit which was placed in my hands by persons who gave their personal assurance that the party who made the affidavit was a perfectly reliable person, and that he was not seeking office for himself or for any of his friends; and they themselves pledged their own personal belief in and knowledge of the charges made against the keeper of the quarantine station. The time this was done was a time when the practice of the departments with regard to dismissals from office was not thoroughly understood. Some were acting on the assumption that a statement made by a representative was quite sufficient in such cases. I myself thought that was the proper position. Others were acting in more deliberate ways—ways that were certainly not known before in this country, and that were not pursued by the late Government for eighteen years. If the hon.

gentleman wants to go into the general question of dismissals from office. I can give him a great deal of information; but I do not suppose this is the proper time to enter into a general discussion of that question. I can only say that I was perfectly convinced that I was justified in sending the papers to the department. I told Mr. Devlin, who came to see me shortly afterwards, that if any mistake had been made in his case, I would assist him in getting any inquiry he wanted, or an opportunity of placing his case before the department. He was very well satisfied with what I had done in respect to the matter, and I see no particular reason for not adhering to what I suggested at that time. If any mistake has been made in this case, I am quite satisfied that he should have an inquiry and be reinstated if injustice has been done to him. Of course, very ridiculous stories have been circulated in the papers in regard to his manner of exit from the quarantine station. I know that Mr. Devlin was dealt with in a far more considerate way than those officials of the Mackenzie Government who were dismissed after the Conservative Government came into power in 1878. I do not for a single moment say that I recommend these precedents as proper precedents to be acted upon. For my part, I would prefer that they should not be. There are so many of them that it would weary the House if I gave them to hon. gentlemen opposite, and I will not do so unless it may be necessary.

Mr. BORDEN. So far as further information is concerned, I am not aware that I would shrink from asking for information on this question because of any information my hon. friend may have. I had no communication at all with this caretaker who was dismissed; but I did see a statement in the papers about his dismissal, and I believe there was a somewhat harsh construction put on the action of the department. It appears now that this man had no opportunity of saying anything until after judgment had been pronounced against him, when he was offered the opportunity of opening up the judgment. It seems to me, notwithstanding what my hon. friend has stated, that it would be only fair that before he was dismissed he should have been called upon to show cause against the charges made against him. So far as the record of the Conservative Government is concerned, I may say that in a great many instances, to my personal knowledge—I do not intend to speak exhaustively about it—men who were Liberals by profession and by active practice were not dismissed from office at all during the Conservative regime; and, in making that statement, so far as I am concerned, I refer to only two counties in the province of Nova Scotia of which I have some personal knowledge. One of these is the county of King's, my native county, and the other is the county of Halifax, of which I have the honour of being one of the members. I know that in these counties, a great many Liberals who held office did take an active part in politics, and I know they were not disturbed. If a new principle is laid down by this Government, well and good. They have the power to lay it down, and it must be submitted to. But I would venture to think that what was suggested by the hon. leader of the Government last session as the proper course ought to be carried out in all cases. I think there should be some investigation by the department or by some commissioner appointed for the purpose. If that is not done, the members who recommend a dismissal should either have personal knowledge of the facts themselves, or should make that investigation on behalf of the department; and even when that is done, I think the officer against whom the charge is laid has only the barest justice done him. That course does not seem to have been followed in this case, and I regret that it has not. It may be that this man is guilty of the charge that has been made against him. All I have to say is that if he is guilty, he has not had the opportunity which every man has in the courts of this country of answering to the charge.

Mr. DAVIN. I have not had an answer to the question I asked as to what disposal is made of the cases dealt with at a quarantine station.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have had no reports yet of any such cases. My deputy informs me that it has been unusual to make a report.

Mr. DAVIN. What time after the quarantine has been closed has it been usual to make the report?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I really cannot tell the hon. gentleman. I will try to find out and give him the information.

Mr. PRIOR. Can the hon. Minister say whether there have been any further cases of small-pox developed at Williams' Head?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A report has come from Dr. Watt that among the steerage passengers from China two cases had broken out, and two days afterwards two more had occurred.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I regret that I was not in the House when the question of the removal of the quarantine officer at Sydney Mines was under consideration. While I was in office a vacancy occurred, owing to the lamented death of the gentleman who held the position of quarantine officer of the port, and also physician to the quarantine hospital; and, in conjunction with my colleague, I recommended the appointment of Dr. McLeod to the office of physician to the quarantine hospital, and

Dr. Johnston to the position of quarantine officer to the shipping, for the purpose of examining vessels arriving at the port. I need not tell the committee that the port of Sydney is one where there is a very large tonnage, and where a great number of vessels arrive. We thought it very desirable that while the physician to the quarantine hospital should be near the hospital at North Sydney, the officer who was charged with the duty of performing quarantine service at the port should be as near as possible to the point where these vessels arrived. Consequently we appointed Dr. McLeod physician of the quarantine hospital, and Dr. Johnson, a very able physician of high standing and large experience, to look after the quarantine service at a point very near where the vessels arrive. Dr. Johnson is not only an eminent member of the profession, but a grandson of one of the most distinguished men that ever adorned Nova Scotia, the late Hon. Judge Johnson, at one time the Premier of that province. I do not mention that as any additional reason why he should be retained in office, but I think that even the hon. gentlemen who now administer the affairs of the country ought not to consider that any reason for the unnecessary removal from office of a gentleman of very high standing in his profession and so situated as to be able to perform the duties more promptly and efficiently than they could be performed by anybody else differently situated. I might mention, at the same time, that Dr. Johnson is the son-in-law of a gentleman to whom the Liberal party are deeply indebted, a gentleman who has long been the manager of the Sydney Mines, and has for a long period given very strong support to hon. gentlemen opposite. I therefore regret very much that the hon. gentleman should have seen fit to dismiss a worthy officer, and one whose position was such as to enable him to discharge the duties of the office much more promptly and efficiently than could be done by an officer at North Sydney. I do not suppose this matter is likely to be reconsidered, but I would have been very glad if I had had the opportunity of presenting to the hon. Minister my views why this gentleman should not have been discharged.

We have had so many statements made in this House by hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches as to the grounds for dismissal that I was rather astonished a few moments ago to hear the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) claim that this Government were entitled to great consideration because they had decided to oppose the removal from office of any person, without preliminary investigations into all the facts and circumstances. I think that hon. gentleman could hardly have been in his place yesterday when a member of the Government announced the fact that he thought the Opposition ought to be very gratified because the Government had only dismissed 45 out of 170 officials in one district. And I think that hon. gentleman could scarcely have been in the House when an hon. member of this House informed us that the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) had handed him the list of a large number of employees in his own district and had given him a carte-blanche to dismiss these and appoint his friends in their places without any question of investigation or charge whatever. The House will learn with some surprise that the hon. member for Halifax should be under the impression that this Government made any pretense now of having any investigation or inquiry, or in fact giving the slightest attention to the grounds on which people are dismissed from office. An hon. Minister of the Crown stated on the floor of Parliament yesterday that he had instructed his officials to remove from office promptly any persons who had been guilty of active partisanship or participation in an election. Therefore, any official who, in the most quiet and peaceable manner went to the polls and recorded his vote is, under the principle laid down by a Minister of the Crown yesterday, liable to dismissal, because that Minister has instructed his subordinates to dismiss all such people from office.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). The hon. gentleman must be in error.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not at all. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals yesterday read, in reply to a question, his reply to the House, in which he stated that he had instructed Mr. Thompson that it was sufficient cause for removal if parties had been shown to have been guilty of active partisanship or participation in elections.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am quite sure that my hon. friend could not clearly have apprehended what the Minister of Railways and Canals said. He referred to active participation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, he said active partisanship or participation.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I was present on the occasion and I must remind the hon. gentleman that my hon. colleague called attention to the fact that there had been a traffic in offices at the time, and that instances were brought to his notice of transactions in which offices had been bought and sold, and it was in that connection that he used the words "active partisanship" and, I believe, "active participation." but certainly he did not refer to the mere act of voting.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have the answer here. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals read this statement from a typewritten copy to the House.

Before selecting the staff for the current year, I gave explicit instructions to the superintendent of the canal, Mr. Thompson (as I did to other superintendents) that he was to take up the list of the employees of last year and give to persons on that list the preference who had given satisfaction in the past, and who had not made themselves obnoxious by active partisanship or participation in the last general election.

So that he meant either active partisanship or—separated by a disjunctive conjunction—participation. The words will admit no other construction. The hon. gentleman laid down the grounds for dismissal, one of which is active partisanship and another is participation of any kind.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. So that construed by the plainest principles of construction, every man, however quietly he discharged what he conceived to be his duty of polling his vote, is under the ban of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and the hon. Minister's subordinates are instructed to discharge them from the service. The hon. Minister gave authority to his superintendent, not to investigate the case, but wherever they, in their wisdom, think a person is open to charge of participation at all, they are to dismiss him from the public service.

But let me call the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to a far stronger case. A member of this House, in the hearing of the hon. gentleman, if, as I presume, he was in his place, made the declaration that this same Minister, the Minister of Railways and Canals, handed him a list of 20 employees in his district and gave him carte-blanche to dismiss the whole of them and put his own friends in their places, without any rhyme or reason whatever. The statement was made by the hon. member for Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Frost), and I will read it to the House. That hon. gentleman on the 6th of May, said :

I know that on the Rideau Canal, where there were over twenty-two officials suspended last fall, when the Minister himself gave me a list, and I could put any official in that I liked—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FROST. Certainly I could; I had that privilege.

The hon. gentleman took credit before the House for the fact that although he was given carte-blanche to dismiss twenty officials and put his own friends in their places, he had not dismissed one of them. The power of dismissal is enjoyed not only by members of the present Government without investigation of any kind whatever, but they instruct their officials simply to discharge men for participation in the late election and not allow them to remain in the public service. And now the hon. gentleman says that he had carte-blanche to cut off twenty of these officers and put his friends in their places.

Mr. LISTER. Ever since the House met in March last, hon. gentlemen on the other side have been constantly finding fault with the Government for what they are pleased to term universal dismissal of public officials. I say, that so far as the Government is concerned, they have nothing to answer for in this matter to the Opposition. Out of thousands of officials in the employ of the Government from one end of the country to the other, very few have been dismissed. Hon. gentlemen opposite pose as the friends of the employees of the Government, pretend to be their champions in this House and out of it. I can only say that if the Government had acted as many men would act, and as hon. gentlemen opposite themselves did act when they attained office in 1878, a much larger proportion of the officials would have been dismissed than have been dismissed. Why, what does the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) raise such a fuss about? Why does he fume over these so-called dismissals of the canal employees? He knows perfectly well that these men are not permanent officials; he knows perfectly well that they are employed for the season only, and that when the season closes their engagements closes—

Mr. MCGREGOR. The same as a sailor.

Mr. LISTER. The same as a sailor, as my hon. friend (Mr. McGregor) remarks. It is perfectly competent for the Government to dismiss these men, because they have no tenure. The letters my hon. friend refers to were letters written recommending certain appointments which the head of the Government had a right to regard and pay attention to. When it comes to employing men who have no fixed tenure, surely the Government have the right to say: We will have our friends rather than our enemies upon these works. That is but natural. Why should the Government be called upon to repel attacks made upon them day after day by hon. gentlemen opposite upon these grounds? Look at the record of that party, look at the record of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) himself. Did he hesitate, when he took office in 1878, flushed with victory, to discharge officials by the hundred from one end of the country to the other? The slightest excuse was sufficient for the decapitation of those engaged in the service of the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The very reverse.

Mr. LISTER. Sir, that these hon. gentlemen have educated the officials of this country to the belief that it was a part of their duty, the duty for which they were paid, to take an active part in politics. And when we say that if they do this they must take the consequences of their acts, hon. gentlemen opposite rise and try to excite public feeling in the country by saying that we are introducing the spoils system into Canada. There is not one man on this side of the House who would for a single moment think of adopting the spoils system. We stand up for purifying the public service of the country, we hold that the public servants of Canada must be taught that now and for all time, no matter whether hon. gentlemen opposite may be in power or not, public officials must discharge their duties to the public and leave politics alone, or lose their positions. I believe that the lesson which has been taught by the acts of the Government will have a salutary effect, and that in the future we shall not have the spectacle of officials of this Government being the principal committee men of the parties to which they belong. The hon. gentleman tries to make the country believe that we are revolutionary in what we are doing. Why, Sir, he is no friend of the officials of this country, for, if we had not such a Government as we have, if we had not men in power with the strong sense of justice possessed by the members of the present Government, not only a few, but many of the civil servants of this country would have been dismissed on account of the appeals made by the leader of the Opposition and his friends behind him. Let us consider the grounds of that attack. During the past years, in order to promote their friends' interest, they have not hesitated to superannuate civil servants who were well able to discharge their duties. William Henry Griffin was an old well-trying servant of this country, having served in different capacities for fifty years. What did hon. gentlemen opposite do?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How old was he?

Mr. LISTER. He is alive to-day and as active as the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition—aye, and more so. They went to Mr. Griffin and proposed to him that if he would consent to retirement he should have six months' leave of absence, he should have his superannuation allowance and the Government would pay him $5,000 in cash. There is no question about the accuracy of the statement I make as to that, for there is an Order in Council showing that it was adopted by the Government. And the sum of $5,000 was proposed in the Estimates, to carry out the bargain made with Mr. Griffin. Sir, they withdrew the item of $5,000, and they did not give him his six months' leave of absence. They did not carry out their part of the contract made with this man, but they retired him in order that a friend of their own might be promoted to his place. Then, take the case of Mr. Vankoughnet, a man in the prime of life. What did they do in his case? They superannuated Mr. Vankoughnet against his will—a capable efficient officer against whom nothing could be said—for the purpose of putting a friend of their own in the office he had filled, saddling the country with the superannuation allowance in addition to the cost of the salary of the new Deputy Minister. Then we have the case of Mr. Zachariah Wilson, who was collector of customs here. They superannuated Mr. Wilson to make a place for their friend Mr. Batson. Mr. Wilson is alive and active to-day, and Mr. Batson is dead. Mr. Wilson was as well qualified to fill the place as Mr. Batson because they were of the same age. And so I might go on and show almost innumerable cases in which hon. gentlemen opposite did not hesitate to dismiss men in the civil service who were quite able to perform their duties, in order that they might put into their places friends of their own. And, Sir, it is well known throughout the length and breadth of the country, that if an official stood in their way, if it was necessary, in their judgment that he should be removed, they removed him in order that they might put a friend in his place. It comes with bad grace from hon. gentlemen opposite to be constantly prating about the spoils system and about the dismissal of this man or that. The hon. gentleman works himself up into a fury about these poor men on the canal. He knows these men are only hired for the season, he knows that it is perfectly competent for the Minister at the head of that department to employ other men if he thinks proper. These men have no claim, they have done the work, and they have been paid, and it becomes the duty of the head of the department, at the opening of navigation next year, to hire a certain number of men again. I am told by my hon. friend beside me that none of the men in either of the ridings adjoining this city, have been changed, but if they have been changed, the Government would be perfectly justified in doing so. I can only repeat what I said once before, that the Government throughout this whole matter have acted with remarkable moderation. Sir, if hon. gentlemen opposite were in our places, after having been in opposition for eighteen years, and after we had filled the offices up with our friends, what a slaughter of innocents would have taken place. Sir, I think it is about time that hon. gentlemen should stop this—

Mr. LANDERKIN. Crying.

Mr. LISTER. "Crying," as my hon. friend says, in this Chamber. The Government have done their duty, they can defend every act of theirs, their followers can defend it, and the only fault we have to find with the Government is that they have not made more dismissals.

Mr. McCLEARY. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat would make this House believe that the officials referred to by the leader of the Opposition were men who were only hired by the month or by the day, that they had no claim upon the Government, and consequently they are not permanent officers of the civil service. The hon. gentleman knows, if he knows anything at all about the employees referred to, that they had been working for the Government for fifteen or eighteen years, and their positions were never put in question. These men have built up for themselves little homes, expecting that so long as they behaved themselves and did their work properly, they would be retained in their positions.

Mr. LISTER. So they would.

Mr. McCLEARY. Well, they have behaved themselves. But notwithstanding that the hon. gentleman would put up this luff upon us to-day, and tell us we are crying too much about it, I want to give him notice that later on we will talk a little more about officials being dismissed, but it is nearly six o'clock now.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman feels a deep sympathy for these men that have been dismissed. He probably feels as deep a sympathy as he does for himself. He has been engaged, I understand, for ten or fifteen years supplying lumber to the Government at his own figures, without tender.

Mr. McCLEARY. I fling back into the teeth of the hon. gentleman the insinuation he makes. I say he is stating what is absolutely an untruth.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McCLEARY. If that is unparliamentary, I will say that he is stating what is contrary to the facts, and in his usual way of braggadocio he wants to try to scare a new member of Parliament, but he will not succeed. I do not propose to be sat upon in that way.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I rise to the question of order. I say that the hon. member for Lambton has flung across the floor of this House a charge which, if true, is insulting to the hon. member. The hon. member has declared that that statement is untrue, and I say the hon. gentleman opposite is bound by the rules of the House to take back that statement.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. A statement has been made by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) which has been denied by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary). I suppose the hon. member for Lambton has no objection to accept the denial.

Mr. LISTER. In obedience to the rules of the House.

Mr. McCLEARY.

It being Six o'clock, the Committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether the officer that visited Cape Breton in connection with quarantine matters, put himself in communication with the two officers that were in charge of the quarantine station there, and if so, after conferring with those officers, did he make a report to the Minister recommending the doing away of that one office?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Dr. Montizambert, the chief quarantine officer, certainly did put himself in communication with the doctor in charge of the said quarantine. Whether he saw Dr. Johnson, I could not say. He made me a report recommending what I have done.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Would the Minister be good enough to lay the report on the Table of the House.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The report was a verbal report.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) who spoke just before six o'clock, when a criticism was going on based entirely upon what was germane to the Minister's Estimates, raised the whole question as to the relative dismissals of civil servants under the two regimes, and is therefore responsible for any extended remarks that may have to be made with reference to that question. The hon. member for Lambton is as well able as any one on that side to take up the whole field of that kind of literature, and make the most that can be made out of it for his party. That has been one of his forts for a long time past, and in that kind of warfare he played a very prominent, if not a very distinguished, part during the last four or five years. It is quite fair to believe, therefore, that when he took up the argument as he did this afternoon, and made a statement as to the dismissals under the preceding Government, he exhausted all the cases which he had at hand, and which could be brought up. His argument was chiefly strong in assertion, but in the actual cases he produced there were only, I think, some three or four or five which he gave as examples of the practice which he alleged was almost universal under the late Government, of dismissing officials who were Liberal in their tendencies. Well, he was not very fortunate in those he brought up. I think every one of the gentlemen whose cases he instanced, with, perhaps, one exception, were cases where Liberals were not superannuated at all, but where gentlemen who were friends of the Administration, and who were of the same line of thought with the Administration, were superannuated and for cause. The instance which he brought up of Mr. Griffin, the late Deputy Postmaster General, was that of a friend of the Administration, at an advanced age, who, on account of his advanced age, and to make way for a younger man, and one who was better up in what may be called the modern requirements of the post office service. It was not a political or a partisan superannuation, it was not a superannuation which was not warranted by age, but it was for the purpose of bringing into administrative capacity in the post office a younger man, a man who, of course, was a friend of the Administration, and of the same political belief, but a man who could put more energy and more modern work into the department. The statement was made that something was added to Mr. Griffin's term of years, but an arrangement was contemplated by which he was to have an allowance besides. That arrangement was contemplated because Mr. Griffin was the organizer of the Post Office Department, and his services were certainly very signal, and it was in contemplation to give an extra mark of his services in that way. That, however, was not pressed to a conclusion, so that the end of it was that Mr. Griffin was superannuated at an advanced age, and a younger man and more vigorous man put in his place. With reference to Mr. Vankoughnet, I think members on both sides of the House understood why he was superannuated. He also was a friend of the Government. It was not a superannuation based upon partisan motives, but was for the good of the service, and for the purpose of getting a younger man, and perhaps a more energetic method into the department over which he presided. These are the two chief instances that were cited by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister); but if he had wished or asked the advice of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), he would have found in the history of the short Liberal Administration from 1874 to 1878 instances which were much more to the point, instances where men were superannuated who are living to this day and enjoy good health and are able to do active and energetic work. I think the Administration has on one of the commissions at present at work in Canada—the Penitentiaries Commission, I think—a gentleman who was superannuated by that party between 1874 and 1878, a gentleman who has been drawing tens of thousands of superannuation money, and who is yet considered to be sufficiently active to be placed on the commission by his friends and who is at work on that commission to-day. The senior member for the city and county of St. John (Mr. Ellis) might have given a case in point, where a gentleman was superannuated in order to give him the post office in the city of St. John. That gentleman is still walking about the streets of that city in fair health and strength, while different changes have come to the gentleman who was made postmaster—the representation of the county in this Parliament, his defeat and subsequent return, and through all that long series of years this gentleman who was superannuated and who has been drawing a heavy superannuation allowance, has been in the enjoyment of good health and a fair amount of strength, and he is so to-day.

But coming down from those two or three special instances to the general affirmation made that it was the general policy of the late Government to dismiss Liberal appointees or officers, we have few concrete instances brought to our attention. On this side we distinctly state that such was not the policy of the late Government; that the Liberals who were found in office when that Government came into power in 1878, who were known to be Liberals, who were not asked and did not recant their opinions and who have worked and voted for their party ever since, were not up to the time this Government went out in 1896 disturbed in their enjoyment of their offices. That was the general rule. No rule in a broad country like this can be operated without having its exceptions, and there have no doubt been exceptions in the long course of eighteen years, in which gentlemen have been for one reason or another turned out of office, dismissed or superannuated; but the instances are comparatively very few in number, and it was never made a policy; on the contrary, the distinct line of Liberal-Conservative policy was that competent officers who did their work should be kept in office, and this was done whether they were Liberals or Conservatives. But the very moment this Government came into power, forced by the back benches, forced by that cry which was very well interpreted and voiced by the hon. member for Lambton to-day, the Ministers, I am bound to believe, against the better thought and better judgment of most of them, have given way to that clamour, and everybody knows that the spoils system has been introduced in the civil service and employment of this country, introduced at first under cover of promises made by the Prime Minister and some few other Ministers that only in cases of offensive partisanship and after full investigation would any Government officer or employee be discharged—gathering force and volume from day to day and month to month, it has clean swept over those good intentions of some of the Ministers, until to-day the spoils system in its nakedness and with its characteristics is the system which is put in vogue and carried out by a Liberal Administration in the Dominion of Canada. There is no doubt about that. No one case probably was a grosser instance than that which I gave the other day with respect to the Minister of Public Works—the suave and excitable Minister, suave when not excitable and excitable when not suave.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). He is all right.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And Quebec is all right, too.

Mr. FOSTER. And I quite understand the other position which the hon. gentleman takes. What did Mr. Cloran say the night before last? He said Quebec has defeated the Tory Government and with a sweep has placed the Liberals in power. And, elevating his standard, metaphorically, he declared: Now Mercier is avenged. The "Free Press," the organ of the Prime Minister in this city, came out with a jubilant heading that at last Mercier has been avenged. It is a Liberal victory, it is a victory for the avenging of Mercier. Is it? If any hon. member wants to take that position, let him be jubilant.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We take it as it is.

Mr. FOSTER. The Prime Minister is no doubt very much pleased to see Mercier avenged. The Prime Minister stated in this House, if not in this House, in the country, that Mercier was the greatest living French Canadian.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. But he is dead now.

Mr. FOSTER. I am quite aware of that. The Minister of Public Works no doubt possesses a great deal of knowledge, but when an event takes place like Mercier's death, the hon. gentleman should understand that others may also know the facts.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let him rest in peace.

Mr. FOSTER. I would, if the hon. Minister would let him rest in peace. When their campaign takes that colour in the province of Quebec, when the shades of Mercier are invoked in order to bring them support, who is it that may properly be taunted for not letting him rest in peace? The Prime Minister is glad he is avenged. The Prime Minister had a good friend when Mercier was in power. He had an intimate friend in Pacaud when Mercier was in power, and the Supreme Court, delivering judgment, declared that Pacaud stole $100,000 out of the Quebec treasury, and ordered Pacaud to put it back. Why did not Pacaud put it back? He pleaded a non possumus. Where did that come in? He had spent the money for his dear leader's party, he had spent the money for his dear leader's campaign, and it had gone into the party's treasury and helped to elect the party supporters and helped to keep them in power, and so he could not pay it back.

Mr. FOSTER.

The hon. Minister of Public Works diverted my attention from the River Du Lièvre, to which I was then referring, and took me away down to Quebec to talk about Mercier and the Liberals, about the patron saint and the party which made him their patron saint. I was saying, that there was never a more glaring instance of the spoils system than that perpetrated by the Minister of Public Works, by the suave but excitable Minister; and when the facts were brought to his attention and the Minister was asked to say what was done why was it done, I am sorry to say that the answer of the hon. gentleman was not an entirely satisfactory answer. The Minister of Public Works, without any report, without any investigation, without going to the trouble of an investigation or getting a report, on the mere hearsay, on a letter written to him, he dismissed two officers, Mr. McCallum and Mr. Raymond. He dismissed Mr. McCallum for a mistake of his own department, on a representation which I believe has not a word of truth in it, and in regard to which I am certain the Minister had not under his hand one single particle of evidence to support. A member of this House wrote a letter which at once made a charge and demanded an execution, and the charge made and the execution followed simultaneously. There was no evidence under the hand of the Minister to justify him under the charge which was made against the officer on the La Lièvre. That is the spoils system pure and simple. My hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) exerted it there. There are other instances, but, Sir, the spoils system has been openly averred by the Minister of Railways, who is now in his place. He missed an elucidation of his policy this afternoon, and for fear he may not read the "Hansard," I will have to call it to his mind again. Yesterday in answering a question, the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) is understood to have read the answer, and consequently it was well thought out and was deliberate. The Minister of Railways declared in effect that to participate—and to vote as quietly and as decently as a man could in an election, is to participate in an election—that any officer who participates in an election would do it under pain of dismissal. That was the statement of the Minister of Railways who knows what the English language means, and who, when he uses it ought to know what he is expressing, and who has no excuse for not expressing what he means when he goes to the trouble of having it written out and reading it here to the House. It was in reference to the same Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) that the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Frost) made the statement in this House that he had been presented with a list of twenty officials on the Rideau Canal, I think, and he had been given the option of replacing all these with his own men; but, magnanimous and honourable, he decided to make no re-appointments and to continue the old men. Under this same Minister of Railways, you have a practical exemplification of the spoils system, and you have had yesterday an exact definition of what he meant to do, and which is certainly no more nor less than carrying out the spoils system. But there was another case exposed this afternoon by the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell). He (Mr. Russell) is a man of learning, of gentle method, a man of deep thinking and plain living, who it would be supposed would be above taking the heads off lower and common people—so to speak in one sense—officials; taking them off almost for the very pleasure of the thing. He has consideration for his friend the Minister of Agriculture, and some affidavits were put into his hands. He did not ask the person against whom these affidavits were made to show any cause; he did not give him information that his office was to be sworn away from him; he did not inquire from him as to whether he had any answer to the charges or not; but this member of Parliament, a professor of law, who ought to, of course, be well grounded in the elementary principles of justice; this member, on the basis of information handed to him, without giving the accused even notice that these charges were made against him, although he lived in the same city with him, sent the ex parte statement up to the Minister of Agriculture, and the Minister of Agriculture promptly decapitates the unfortunate office-holder.

Now, Sir, I think any man who has the most elementary idea of the principles of justice will scarcely uphold that method of trial and execution. Without even giving the caretaker of the quarantine station the least notice, on an ex parte statement, this hon. member decapitates the accused without allowing him to say a word in his own behalf, and the Minister of Agriculture adopts his recommendation. Sir, these are a few instances that are coming up from day to day. Why, a telegram was read the other day by the leader of the Opposition which purported to state that in the county of Beauharnois, during this present Quebec election, methods of terrorization were put in force by the Government, no doubt under the command of the Minister of Public Works, who about that time was a little excited and consequently was not so gentle and suave in his manner as usual. If I mistake not, the gravamen of that charge was not only that one man had been dismissed and a new man put in his place, and that loss had come to the public on account of it; but that certain persons in authority were telling the office-holders in the county that it would be better for them not to vote in the election unless they voted right, or that they would lose the offices which they held. That is an eventuality which springs directly out of the spoils system which has been inaugurated by my hon.

friends opposite, and which has been openly avowed by them through the Minister of Railways, and which has been practically carried out by almost every Minister in the Government.

Sir, I am led to make these remarks because the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) opened up the general question as to dismissals from office under the spoils system. He brought no proof at all to show that it was a system countenanced in the least degree by the Liberal-Conservative Government. The opposite is exactly the truth of the case. That it is countenanced by the party opposite, and that it is being put into execution by the Government, is attested in case after case that comes up day after day, and is also attested by the statements of Ministers themselves. I think it right to place upon record these views in reference to the matter as an answer, and I think a conclusive answer, to the statement that was made by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), and which opened up the general question of the policy of both parties with reference to officials under their care, and in the employ of the Government.

Tracadie Lazaretto..... $4,600

Mr. SPROULE. It was stated a few years ago that the number of lepers was very few, and that they were getting less all the time. How many are in this institution now?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). There are fifteen or sixteen there just now.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if the statement which we saw in the press was authentic, in regard to some cases of leprosy having been discovered in Manitoba, to which I believe attention was given.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The health authorities at Winnipeg asked me to take charge of some lepers who had come to the hospital there. Without assuming any kind of responsibility of doing that kind of work, I authorized Dr. Smith, the officer in charge of the Tracadie Lazaretto, to go up to Winnipeg and see if he could induce those people to go there willingly. He succeeded in doing so, and took three of them down there quite recently.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Where are they from?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are Icelanders from the province of Manitoba, whom he found to be real lepers. They went with him quite voluntarily, and they are now in the Tracadie lazaretto.

Mr. FOSTER. Were they old or new settlers?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were not very old settlers. Two of them were not very advanced cases; the other had been leprous for some years.

Mr. FOSTER. Were they in the Icelandic settlement?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think they came from three different sections of the province.

Winnipeg and St. Boniface Hospitals..... $4,000

Mr. SPROULE. Are these connected with quarantine stations, or how does this item come to be here?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is an old item, under an arrangement that was made by former Governments, and that has been going on for years, to aid the Catholic and the Protestant hospitals at Winnipeg.

Mr. SPROULE. I noticed that some time ago an application was made to the department here to recoup the city of Winnipeg for expenses incurred through the breaking out of small-pox in a company of immigrants who were brought there from Halifax, I believe. Was any settlement arrived at, or was the claim accepted or acknowledged, or is it the intention of the department to settle it?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The claim is under consideration. It has not yet been arranged.

Cattle Quarantines $50,000

Mr. McCLEARY. Under the new quarantine regulations affecting animals, particularly that clause with reference to the inspection of horses entering the United States from Canada or entering Canada from the United States, provision is made for their inspection; but this provision is supplemented with the clause that such inspection shall not take place unless it is ordered by the Minister of Agriculture. I understand that these quarantine regulations are intended to be reciprocal between the United States and Canada. Now, there is means of communication between the United States and Canada at Fort Erie and Niagara Falls, and while the United States officers inspect all horses going from Canada to the United States, horses coming from the United States to Canada are not inspected regularly at all. This is unfair and prejudicial to our Canadian horses, so much so that a leading horseman asked me in Buffalo if there were infectious diseases among Canadian horses. I would just call the Minister's attention to this, because I am sure he will see the unfairness of this regulation, if it is carried out elsewhere as it is there, and will have it rectified.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is quite right. Under the arrangement which I made with the

Mr. FISHER.

United States authorities, it is as competent for us to inspect horses as it is for them, and any moment I think it necessary, I have the authority to order the carrying of it out; and if any evidence is given to me that that is necessary, I am quite willing to do it. Up to the present time I have not thought it necessary to carry out this inspection all along the line. The United States authorities have so ordered it, as they have a right to do, but I do not think it is necessary as yet.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it was the intention of the Minister a year ago, to organize that branch of his department relating to the health of animals, under Dr. McEachren. Has he effected any organization yet or made any appointment?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have been making a good many changes in a minor way, but I have not yet by any means completed an organization for the whole country. In consequence of the new arrangement I made with the Washington authorities, I was able to do away with a good deal of work in connection with the veterinary department. I shall be obliged to appoint officials in different parts of the country, who will be authorized to give the certificates required for stock going to the United States. I am doing that gradually, as I can find men whom I am willing to appoint, but I did not wish to make indiscriminate appointments until I learned about the individuals and the requirements of the trade.

Mr. SPROULE. I know that certain representations have been made from our district, where cattle are being constantly shipped to the United States, and it is sometimes difficult to get the inspection made. Some veterinary surgeons from that part of the country have applied for the position, but I have not heard that any have been authorized to act in that capacity.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Some have been authorized to act in most of the counties of Ontario, but not so many as there will be.

Mr. SPROULE. There are several stations from which cattle are being shipped every week, such as Shelburne, Dundalk, Flesherton, Markdale, Chatsworth, and Owen Sound; and Thornbury and Meaford on the Northern Railway. From these stations a great many cattle are shipped right through the year, and it is important that there should be an officer at each of these stations who would make the inspection.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have taken a note of the stations the hon. gentleman names, and I will try to see that there is somebody there to attend to shippers.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the hon. gentleman attempting under this vote to stamp out certain diseases of animals, such as tuberculosis? I see the next item is for compensation for the slaughter of hogs and sheep and other animals. I understood that Dr. McEachren was contemplating some amendment which would enable him to stamp out tuberculosis. I understood him to say that something of that kind could be done for about $50,000 a year, so that it is quite evident from the smallness of this vote that it is not intended for that purpose. What other disease is it intended to combat with this vote, apart from the portion that will be used for quarantine?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Almost the whole of this item is used for quarantine. There are a few fees which we have to pay for tests or inspections here and there, and we have had to pay certain fees to inspectors who have been attempting to stamp out the hog cholera in the western part of Ontario, which has, during the last season, been very bad, which may break out again this spring, and to deal with which I have to provide some means.

The question of tuberculosis is one which has occupied my attention a good deal. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the report of Dr. Echlin McEachren, he will find in it a statement by Dr. McEachren on the subject. The question is surrounded with great difficulty, and is undoubtedly a very important one, both in the interests of the health of the animals and the health of our people, because no doubt tuberculosis is communicable through the animal, especially through its milk, to the human. Therefore I consider it of the utmost consequence that some attention should be paid to the disease. It was partly in consequence of that disease, that when I made new arrangements with the United States authorities, I agreed that all dairy animals imported from that country into Canada or exported from Canada into the United States, should be tested with the tuberculin test, which is now acknowledged to be a sufficiently accurate test to be used anywhere, the number of mistakes in it being so small as to be inappreciable. There are, however, difficulties in the way, because a good many people do not wish to have their animals tested, and I am very anxious that public opinion should be educated on this point and our farmers induced to have their animals tested as much as possible so as to do away with this source of danger to animal and human life. I have not yet taken any particular steps towards stamping out the disease. That is going to be very difficult. It is so difficult that other countries have so far shrunk from attempting it, with the exception of some of the American states, which have attempted it but have failed to accomplish it, and have even shrunk, in some instances, from putting into practice their own laws. I do not believe that tuberculosis is as prevalent in Canada as it is in some other countries. I do not believe it is as prevalent in this country as some wild statements in the press and elsewhere would lead us to believe, but still there is sufficient of this disease among our cattle to make it greatly in the interests of our cattle owners and people who use stock to turn their attention to it. I hope by having this question discussed in the institutes to bring it to the attention of stock owners throughout the country and make them alive to its importance and thus induce them to have their animals tested and those infected destroyed. At present I am not prepared to go further, but shall be glad if, in the near future, public opinion becomes so aroused that some more speedy measures might be taken to accomplish the desired end.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that the provincial legislature of Ontario passed a law recently making it compulsory on dairymen to have their herds tested, and very strong objections were taken to the law. The question is whether the jurisdiction lies with our department here to do the same thing.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are two divisions in this question. One is the health of the animals generally, which appears to be in the purview of this Parliament, and in the control of the Minister of Agriculture. The other is the question of public health which is in the control of the local authorities. As a general rule, the action referred to by the hon. gentleman in the province of Ontario has been attempted by the local health boards, which, of course, have nothing to do with my department. In certain cities and towns of Ontario, and I believe elsewhere, the attempt has been made to force the city milkmen and the dairies which supply milk, to submit their animals to the test, but the attempt has not been successful. So much opposition has been raised, amounting almost to a rebellion among the milkmen, that the local health boards have not found it possible to put a wholesale testing of this kind into practice. No doubt public opinion will have to be educated up to that point, and I trust in the near future it will be, and when it is, it will not be found that the number of cattle, after all, affected is so very great, although I think it is sufficient to justify very great care and surveillance and the strongest efforts to stamp out the disease.

Mr. SPROULE. Notwithstanding the objections raised to it, medical men are strongly of the opinion that this test is one of the most desirable things in the interests of the health of the community. Are the same regulations in force which were adopted about two years ago with reference to the examination of cattle and other animals going from the port of Montreal to the old country? Do we still weed out those which are diseased in any way?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE.
Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any change in the regulations with regard to the examination of sheep coming from the United States, either to be exported via Montreal or to remain in the country?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All animals, whether sheep or cattle, exported from the port of Montreal, are examined before shipment. Those coming into the country for slaughter are allowed in without examination. Sheep for breeding purposes are required to have a certificate the same as cattle. The sheep brought in for export again are allowed to pass through in bond without examination. Sheep for crossing purposes are required to have a certificate that there was no disease in the district from which they came.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the same in the case of animals brought in for breeding purposes?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE.
Yes.

Mr. QUINN. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. Minister to a report concerning one of the quarantine stations—the station at the first port of entry, which is Halifax, I think. A very valuable herd of cattle was brought into this country for breeding purposes and kept at that station some three months, according to regulation, and the importer complains that the cattle were placed in a large shed where they were almost completely unprotected, during very severe weather, in consequence of which many of them contracted colds and one subsequently died. The cattle were released in the early part of this month. The experience of this gentleman was such that it has deterred a number of others, among whom are some members of this House interested in the breeding of cattle, from embarking in the venture of importing cattle for that purpose. Now, I think this could be altogether obviated by improving the condition of the cattle sheds and the quarantine station and putting them in such a condition that the cattle might be kept there without injury, which, I understand, is not possible at the present time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn) say it was at the port of Halifax?

Mr. QUINN. I think it is Halifax; at any rate it is the first port of entry.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Unless the hon. gentleman can tell me where it was, I cannot reply to his statements specifically. My report is that the sheds at the different quarantine stations are in good order so that cattle can be taken good care of in them.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. QUINN. From my information now, it must have been at the port at Halifax.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will inquire about the matter.

Mr. DAVIN. Could not the hon. gentleman allow this item to stand until the return comes down?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What return?

Mr. DAVIN. The return I asked for a fortnight ago and which the hon. gentleman promised to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Is that about Dr. Duncan's dismissal?

Mr. DAVIN. Dear me, no. I refer to the return of all correspondence made to the department with respect to the new quarantine regulations.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will have it down shortly.

Mr. OLIVER. I would ask the hon. Minister if he has received representations from the district of Alberta as to the changes with respect to the quarantine on sheep?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Speaking from memory, I do not know of any such representations. It may be that some letters were received on the subject.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. Minister of Agriculture was not present when this question was discussed on another motion. But I may tell him that objections are raised by the sheep ranchers in the district of Alberta to the changes of regulations with regard to the quarantine on sheep. I wish to ask him if it is absolutely necessary that the same class of regulations that prevail with regard to cattle quarantine must be applied in the case of sheep. For there is a difference between the conditions with regard to sheep and those with regard to cattle, inasmuch as south of the line the herds of cattle are comparatively free from disease, whereas the flocks of sheep are not so free from disease. In one case there is no great danger of the importation of disease, whereas in the other case there is danger of the importation of "scab."

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) will find, on examination of the regulations with regard to the passage of sheep across the frontier, that the sheep must have a certificate that there is no disease in the district from which they come. Under these circumstances, I think there is no danger in the importation of sheep from the south. The old regulations were very onerous upon the people of Canada who wished to export sheep to the United States, and these modifications were a great benefit, as they facilitated the trade in sheep across the frontier, while, at the same time, they safeguarded our flocks.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to repeat what I said on a previous occasion, that the ranchmen do not generally consider that the American certificate is a sufficient guarantee that there is an absence of disease in the district from which the animals come. Furthermore in regard to inspection at the boundary, it is not a sufficient safeguard against "scab" for the reason that the disease can be carried for some time without appearing in the animal.

Mr. PRIOR. I am sorry that I was not in the House when this item came up, so the hon. Minister will pardon me if he has already given the information I wish to ask for. I would like to know whether he intends to make any alterations in British Columbia in regard to the cattle quarantine. I was informed, when I applied to the department some time ago, that the hon. Minister had a new scheme under consideration. I would ask him if he is going to make a change in the appointments in British Columbia, and whether he is going to pay the officers by fees or by salaries?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not settled that matter. I am in search now of a veterinary officer to take charge of the frontier on the mainland. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) knows that there is a veterinary officer in Victoria, whose duties, in consequence of the new regulations, are much less than before. His payment heretofore was by fees. It was not intended under the new arrangement that we should charge fees, but since communications have taken place with Washington we have decided to charge fees. For the work that the veterinary officer is doing for which he does not charge fees, we shall pay him.

Mr. PRIOR. This officer is a most estimable man, thoroughly competent, and has attended to his duties in the best manner possible.

Mr. DAVIN. I should be very glad if the hon. Minister would let this item stand until we see this return, because there is a great division of opinion in the North-west Territories in regard to these regulations, some approving and others disapproving. I would like to have these papers before we pass this item.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Pass the item, and, if the hon. gentleman wishes to bring up any matter on concurrence, that can be done. In the meantime, the return will have been brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. Minister (Mr. Fisher) Supplementary Estimates with regard to quarantine to bring down?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think so.

Mr. McMILLAN. I would like to say a single word about the quarantine of cattle coming from the old country. I think this point was brought up in the House some time ago. I think it would be well if the quarantine regulations were such that cattle for breeding purposes could be imported more easily from the old country. There should be an examination and certificate before they leave the old country that not only the cattle exported but the herd from which they come were free from disease; another examination should take place when they land here; and if they are free from disease they should be allowed to be taken by the importer, and, if necessary, quarantined on his own place. I am aware that many farmers would bring out cattle if it were not for the present regulation. I was talking some time ago with a gentleman in Montreal who had brought out a herd of Ayrshire cattle, and lost one in the quarantine station at Halifax. I think. He will never try the experiment again unless there is a change in the regulations. If some modification could be made of the kind I have suggested, it would be a great benefit to the cattle breeders, both of Ontario and the North-west.

Special Quarantine Vote—compensation for slaughter of hogs and sheep, and all other expenses connected therewith..... $5,000

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. Minister tell us the extent of the trouble in Kent and—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPROULE. Hon. gentlemen might as well understand first as last, that any question that it is desired to ask will be asked, whether it meets with their approval or not. These questions are reasonable and appropriate questions, and we have a right to expect an answer.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly. I understand that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) asks me the extent of the hog cholera and of the slaughter of hogs in the western part of Ontario. During the last season there has been a considerable amount of this disease. We have had a great deal of trouble and have spent a large amount of money, not only for compensation for slaughtered animals, but because we have had to have a great number of inspectors to go about, examining the herds, disinfecting the buildings, &c. I made a great effort last fall to put a stop to this, and I trust to a certain extent, at all events, I have succeeded. During the early part of the winter we were obliged to slaughter some hogs, and it was impossible properly to carry out the disinfecting process during the frozen period. The result has been this spring again, as the warm weather came on, I have been obliged to send some inspectors to these places to thoroughly disinfect where they have found the disease, and in some instances we find that outbreaks have again occurred. I am, however, taking the utmost precaution to stamp this out, and perhaps even have gone further than some of the farmers were quite pleased with, because they do not like interference with their liberty, and were not quite satisfied with what was necessary under the regulations, and which I believe was necessary for the health of animals throughout the country. But I believe it was more important to try to stamp the disease out promptly than to let it continue through the season, as it did during last season. Under these circumstances I trust that in a short time we will not find any further cases, or only a few sporadic ones. But just at present there are a number of inspectors going about each in his own county, or neighbourhood, endeavouring to make sure that the disease is thoroughly stamped out. I may say that in round figures this matter has cost me last season about $15,000; but I ask in this vote for only $5,000 for the coming season, believing that that will be sufficient to overcome the difficulties under what I consider to be a system producing better results. I may say in connection with the hog cholera that some sheep scab has been discovered in certain parts of Ontario. It was a surprise to me last fall when that came to my notice. We have been boasting that our sheep in Canada were entirely free from scab, but I had unfortunately brought to my notice certain instances in Ontario where I believe it was my duty to take precautions to isolate the sheep, and in some instances to have them slaughtered. The consequence is that in the wording of this item I put sheep scab along with hog cholera, but I trust that with the sheep scab, as with the hog cholera, I have been able to bring it within a very circumscribed area, where there are only a few instances, so that I trust this season there will be very little of it, if any.

Mr. SPROULE. I noticed lately in one of the western papers that there has been a little difficulty between the Government inspector and some farmers, where he ordered the animals to be slaughtered and they refused. What was done in those cases?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I suppose the hon. gentleman refers to a case in Kingsville, in the district of South Essex.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A portion of them were slaughtered, and the others were isolated and quarantined in order to see whether they were really affected or not. The reason that sometimes the inspector prefers to slaughter them is this: Animals that have been exposed to contagion are dangerous to the public health, although they are not necessarily affected with the disease. If they are slaughtered before they are affected, they are fit for human food; that is to say, they are fattened to be used, and the inspector, after slaughter, in many instances finds that they were perfectly fit for human food. But if these animals are allowed to remain in pens, or on the farm where, in consequence of the unsanitary condition of these pens, and the contagion to which they have been exposed, they may show signs of disease in a week or ten days, then they are not fit for human food, and are not allowed to be sold. The consequence is that in many instances the owners are willing to have them slaughtered, although they are not diseased, so that they may be able to sell them if, after slaughter a post mortem examination shows that they are fit for human food. In the case the hon. gentleman refers to there was a certain number which were diseased, and a large number which had been exposed to contagion. The inspector intended to slaughter the whole of them. Those that were only exposed to the contagion and which, after the post mortem, were found to be good, would have been sold, but the proprietor did not wish to do it, and hence the difficulty. That was obviated by the rest of them being held in quarantine until the period of the incubation of the disease was passed, after which they may either be sold, or moved, or kept, or slaughtered, as the case may be.

Mr. SPROULE. If in the case of slaughtering a number where they have only been exposed to contagion by being brought close to diseased animals, what rule does the department follow in granting compensation to the owners of those animals, where they are fit for human food after being slaughtered?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We grant a compensation, and offset against that the money which the owners get.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the amount of compensation you give? The same that it was in the Act for some years past?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Just the same as it has been. I think it is two-thirds where they are not affected with the disease, and one-third where they are.

Mr. CLANCY. Referring to the question of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) in calling the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the duties of inspectors as to diseased animals, I may say that there is a possibility of conflict between the local authorities in the municipalities and the inspector, were he permitted to allow any of these diseased animals to be slaughtered and afterwards sold. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if there is any uniform instructions given to the inspectors. This is a very important question, and I think the Government upon the whole have taken very prompt measures to stamp out the disease. I know of cases where the animal was slaughtered under the circumstances which the Minister of Agriculture has pointed out, and the local authorities took action against the parties selling what was said to be diseased meat. It is very dangerous, I may say, to permit meat to be sold if the animals have any taint of disease about them. It endangers the health of persons who may innocently consume the food coming from that quarter. While it is a great hardship for the farmers to lose any portion of their herds, it is absolutely necessary that most stringent measures should be taken to ensure that no encouragement should be given to placing such meat upon the market.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A circular is sent out to all my inspectors giving them specific instructions in regard to that, and every precaution is taken to see that no diseased meat goes upon the market. At the same time the question of diseased meats on the market is entirely in the hands of the local health boards.

Mr. CLANCY. The conflict, as the hon. gentleman will see, will arise between the local authorities and the inspectors under the control of this Government.

Mr. MCGREGOR. In case of cholera in a district, the hogs are quarantined. As hon. members know, hogs are not allowed to be killed without inspection. The inspector examines each hog before it is sent to the market, and his certificate is sufficient, so that there is no difficulty in that way at all. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) will remember that any animal who dies of that disease will show evidence of the disease after death.

Mr. DAVIN. I want to call the Minister's attention to a question raised by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) regarding sheep being brought in here under regulations. I will not take up the time of the House by reading the debate, but I will refer the Minister to the "Hansard" of April 12th, where the case is stated by myself and the member for Alberta. In my constituency, and all over the North-west, there is a divided opinion as to the effect of the hon. gentleman's regulations regarding cattle. Some condemn, some approve, but so far as I know, the opinion is unanimous that the hon. gentleman has been a little precipitate as regards sheep. But I wish to direct his attention to that debate. It was adjourned on the motion of the Prime Minister because the hon. gentleman was not here. If the hon. Minister will bring down those papers within a short time, we can discuss the matter on concurrence.

Cold storage..... $80,000

Mr. SPROULE. What has been done in that direction; how far has the hon. gentleman perfected the scheme, and will it be available to the needs of the country during the present season.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am very glad indeed to answer my hon. friend. I feel this vote is one of the most important perhaps that will come up in the Estimates this session. The attention of the public generally throughout Canada has been very largely turned to the necessity of providing some cold storage arrangement by which our perishable food products can be carried to the old country in the excellent condition in which they leave our own farms. For the purpose of accomplishing this, I have been giving very considerable attention during the last six or seven months to the question, and I am glad to be able to say that I have made such arrangements as I think will meet the case entirely. In the first place, by reason of Prof. Robertson's work, we were able last year to make arrangements with certain of the railway companies by which refrigerator cars were run on the main lines which carry these products to our ports, and by that means our butter and cheese and some other products were carried in cold storage to the port of Montreal, and there put on board ship in good order. Last year we had an arrangement with one line of steamers sailing from Montreal to Avonmouth, the port of Bristol in England, for what is commonly called insulated cold storage, with ice. This on the whole worked very well, but still not sufficiently well to justify the continuance of it. Therefore I set to work to make arrangements with various steamship lines to furnish mechanical cold storage on their vessels sailing from Montreal and other ports to the old country. Going back for a moment to the railway companies, I desire to say that following the lines of last year we have been able to make much more extensive arrangements with the railways to carry our perishable food products over almost all the lines of the country to the ports. I have here a list of the lines of railway on which this will be done. I do not think it would be worth while to read it to the House, as it would occupy some time, but it practically covers the railway system of our country. By this means the farmers in every section of the Dominion will be within comfortable reach of a railway station at which their products may be placed in refrigerator cars and carried to the great centres or to the ports. This will be done at a comparatively small expense. The Government guarantee that a certain amount of freight will pay its way in those cars, and thereby induce the companies to take this freight at the usual rates, notwithstanding that cold storage is supplied. Last year our loss on this guarantee was trifling. I have no doubt the loss this season will be greater because we have had to arrange for more lines, on some of which the amount of freight will probably be not so great and therefore the cars will not be full enough to cover the full freight we guarantee. Still I have made provision in this vote for that deficiency. These railway lines practically centre in Montreal, the port of shipment for the western provinces, and in Halifax and St. John, the ports of shipment for the maritime provinces. At the same time we are doing this in Prince Edward Island on the Government railway there, so that perishable food products on the Island can be brought to Charlottetown for shipment. I have endeavoured to provide cold storage warehouses at the points of transshipment. In Montreal there is already abundant cold storage warehouse accommodation. There are two large warehouses, containing perhaps 1,200,000 or 1,300,000 cubic feet, quite sufficient for the needs of the trade for several years I think. At Halifax a company is now engaged in erecting a warehouse for this purpose. Negotiations are now going on with some gentlemen in Charlottetown, by which I hope that a warehouse will be established there for the trade of the island. I regret to say that negotiations which I had opened up with some gentlemen in St. John, have fallen through, those gentlemen not seeing their way clear to carry them out. But Prof. Robertson, the officer who has this matter in charge, is preparing to make some temporary arrangements for this season, so that the trade which may centre at St. John may be accommodated. In addition to these arrangements at different ports, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have undertaken to put up a warehouse in Winnipeg, chiefly for their own purposes, although it is perhaps essential to the perfect carrying out of this scheme. This is for the purpose of keeping perishable food products which may come from the west on their way east until there is a sufficient quantity there to make up a carload. These perishable products will come down from the North-west Territories and different points in Manitoba in small lots, they will be collected at Winnipeg and held until there is a sufficient quantity to make a carload or more, and this warehouse is to be used as a collecting warehouse. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company in their own interest and in the interest of the public have agreed to put up the building, and I believe are already doing so.

Mr. FOSTER. Without any Government aid.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. In addition I found it was likely this summer that a large portion of the product of the Government creameries in the North-west Territories would find a good market in British Columbia; and after a careful investigation I considered that Revelstoke on the Canadian Pacific Railway was the most convenient centre from which this product could be distributed. I therefore made arrangements there for a small cold storage warehouse for the purpose of what may be called distribution of our products in the province of British Columbia. This is also necessary in case we may wish to collect the products of British Columbia or of the North-west Territories for export over the Pacific, which is quite possible and may be attempted this summer. Speaking of warehouses, I want to inform the hon. gentleman that the fruit dealers and fruit growers of this country are very anxious indeed to make some experimental shipments of fruit to the old country. This has already been done with very partial success, if any, in cold storage, but those who are best informed in regard to this trade, believe that, with proper appliances for cold storage, a good many fruits which now are not exported to the old country, can be successfully sent there. After having several conversations with the fruit men of the country, I came to an arrangement with the fruit raisers in the Niagara district, the oldest, and probably the best equipped, fruit district of the Dominion, by which they are going to send forward a car-load a week of certain kinds of fruit to England during the fruit season, in cold storage. To accomplish this it was necessary that there should be some collecting point, and I made arrangements with a group of gentlemen at Grimsby that they should prepare this car-load of fruit. I put up a small warehouse there, in which it is to be collected until a car-load is ready to be shipped in connection with the sailing of a vessel from Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. These would not be small fruits?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No; peaches, grapes, pears, and early apples are the fruits that it is expected will be sent in this way. I may say in this connection, that I had a good deal of conference with the fruit growers in the Annapolis Valley, N.S., and that they believed it was quite practicable to utilize the cold storage warehouse in Halifax for their purpose. They did not require the establishment of a cold storage warehouse in their own immediate neighbourhood. I have had, also, a conference with the fruit growers within the area surrounding Montreal, and they have suggested to me that they would send forward their shipments to be collected in the cold storage warehouses in Montreal. For the purpose of the project, therefore, it was only required that I should prepare some facilities in the Niagara district, which I have done in the manner indicated. I made an offer to some gentlemen in the city of St. John, and a similar offer to some gentlemen in the city of Toronto, which is the collecting centre for the province of Ontario, with a view of having small lots collected in that city and sent down by carloads for shipment at Montreal.

Mr. SPROULE. Has that offer been accepted by any company ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A company undertook to accept it, but so far they have not succeeded in doing anything, and I cannot longer keep the offer open, because the season is advancing, and if anybody else will undertake it I shall give the offer to them. I may say that I have had communications quite recently from other gentlemen saying that they will do so. There are cold storage warehouses at the ports of Halifax, Charlottetown and Quebec. I have made arrangements with the latter to store the goods which come from the province of Quebec below the city of Montreal, and which naturally would not want to come to Montreal to be re-shipped. The arrangement which I have made with those various companies or individuals, to provide the cold storage is practically this : I have offered them a guarantee of 5 per cent for three years on such portion of their capital stock as I have agreed to. Those who are establishing the cold storage warehouses have in many instances undertaken a larger investment, and are putting up larger buildings than I consider to be necessary for my purposes. Under these circumstances, I have allowed them to make such arrangements as they choose in that respect, but I am only guaranteeing the interest on that amount of stock which I considered was necessary to provide the necessities that my scheme required, and no more.

Mr. SPROULE. Your assistance is in the way of a guarantee of interest on their stock ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A limited guarantee of 5 per cent for three years. I give no money to any of these.

Mr. FOSTER. Explain one arrangement you have made, and concretely we will get the idea much better.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, we will take the arrangement at Halifax. The company there are starting an establishment with a capital stock of $100,000. I have agreed to give them a guarantee of 5 per cent for three years on $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. On what principle ; why not guarantee on $30,000 or $50,000 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because I felt that it would require $40,000 to put up such a warehouse as would provide the facilities for the extra trade which I hope within a year or so would be required.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they going to put the whole $100,000 into their establishment ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is what they intend to do.

Mr. FOSTER. The whole of the $100,000 stock to go into the building ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Into the building and plant ; that is their intention.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you insure so many cubic feet of space for the use of the public in the building ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Of course the through traffic will have assurance of accommodation in the building. They have formed a company of $100,000 capital, and I guarantee them 5 per cent interest for three years on $40,000 of that stock. As a matter of fact, in Halifax the local government has guaranteed them 5 per cent for three years on another $40,000, so that the company has a guarantee of 5 per cent on $80,000. As a condition of giving them that, I require that the rates shall be such as have been charged during the last few years for cold storage in Montreal, and which rates were considered reasonable. I require also, that they shall submit their books and accounts to show their disbursements and the management of their business, so that I may see that they are not extravagant, and that they are not spending more money than would be justified in the work they are doing. I give the guarantee as a guarantee of interest, which will not be called upon if their own business gives them a profit over and above their working expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. Any profit ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. The guarantee is only to be called upon when they do not show 5 per cent profit.

Mr. FOSTER. On the $80,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, on the $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. If they put $100,000 in, how is the hon. gentleman going to divide it according to the proportion of the stock ? If they put $100,000 in and show 5 per cent interest ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If they put $100,000 in and show 5 per cent interest, on the whole, no guarantee will be called upon from me or from the local government. If they show 3 per cent interest on the whole, then I would have to give them 2 per cent on $40,000 and the local government would be called upon to give them 2 per cent more on another $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose they said they would put $200,000 in, they would rather get ahead of you in that respect if you do not limit the amount of stock ? They could call on you so long as they did not make 5 per cent on their whole stock.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have made an agreement with them that their stock shall be limited to $100,000. That is their charter.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the Government exercise any supervision over the mode of constructing the building?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes; their building is to be according to the plain and the principles laid down by the Government.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the mode of refrigeration? Is it mechanical, or both mechanical and ice?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mechanical wholly, both in the warehouses and on the steamers. On the railway trains it is ice. There is no means that we know of yet for having mechanical refrigeration for cars.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that the cold storage at present is entirely for dairy products and fruits, not for meats.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, for anything. The cold storage accommodation all through is intended to be utilized by anybody who desires to utilize cold storage for any purpose—for meats, eggs, poultry meat, dairy products or fruit. It is at the disposal of the country at large.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. gentleman provided a schedule of rates for storage in these cold storage warehouses?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, not higher than the rates which have been charged in Montreal for the last two years.

Mr. SPROULE. What are the freight rates on railways—for instance, on butter and cheese?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The ordinary less than car-load rate.

Mr. SPROULE. What would be the rate per hundred pounds, say from Toronto to Montreal?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot give that information, as I have not the schedule of rates at my hand. The arrangement is that the railways shall charge the same rates in these cold storage refrigerator cars as they charge for ordinary freight, in consequence of the Government guaranteeing to them two-thirds of the freight on each car.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman has provided for cold storage warehouses at Quebec, Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Winnipeg and Revelstoke, but not at Toronto. Has any provision been made for London, Windsor, Stratford and other large cities?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, I do not provide any except for the export trade. I have not entered into local cold storage at all.

Mr. DAVIN. Has the Minister thought well to have a cold storage warehouse between Winnipeg and Revelstoke?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The creamery which the Government are going to run at Calgary this year has a cold storage chamber, which will be utilized for that purpose, in case it is needed for anything but butter.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman tell us the number of lines he has arranged with to provide cold storage, the number of vessels for each line, the ports from which they go, and the ports at which they land in Europe?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. From Montreal to Avonmouth, the Elder Dempster line, five steamships; from Montreal to London, six steamships—three on the Thomson line and three on the Allan line. The Elder-Dempster line to Avonmouth will leave every week. The line to London will leave every week, requiring six steamships. Four vessels will leave Montreal for Liverpool, two of the Allan line and two of the Dominion line: two vessels going from Montreal to Glasgow. The Liverpool line will be once a week, and the Glasgow line will be once in about two and a half weeks. In the maritime provinces, three vessels will perform a fortnightly service from St. John and Halifax, and I am now trying to make an arrangement by which one vessel will make a round trip from Prince Edward Island to Liverpool.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I suppose that would practically be a weekly service from St. John and Halifax, the vessels running alternately

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, the vessel will leave St. John once a fortnight, calling at Halifax. I tried to arrange for a weekly service, but the company were not prepared to put on enough vessels.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What line has the hon. gentleman arranged for from Halifax?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think it is the Furniss line.

Mr. SPROULE. What are the freight rates on these vessels?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The ordinary ocean freight rates, besides an extra charge of ten shillings a ton of seventy cubic feet. I would like to explain that a ton of butter in ordinary tinettes or tubs was taken as the unit, and it was found that a ton of butter occupied about seventy cubic feet. We thought it fair that all freight going into these cold storage chambers should pay the same amount according to its occupation of space, so that there would be no inducement to steamers to prefer one kind of freight to another, but that all freight going into them would be on the same basis and equal in the eyes of the shipowners. I took as a basis one ton of butter at seventy cubic feet, and all freight of whatever kind which goes into these cold storage chambers will pay ten shillings a ton of seventy cubic feet, whether butter, cheese, eggs or other produce.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you guarantee any certain amount of freight?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. In the event of their not getting freight enough to make it pay, what arrangement have you made?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. None; that is their lookout. I would like to explain a few other things in this connection. I am asking $80,000, but that is a printer's error. It should be $100,000 for that was the amount I sent to the printer, and I shall ask for $20,000 more in the supplementary Estimates. When I undertook last year to spend what I thought was necessary, I said I was afraid I would require $125,000 a year, but I found I could make better arrangements than I anticipated. There were some things I found I could dispense with which I then thought necessary, and the result is I brought the expense down to $100,000. In consequence of this contract with the steamship company, and in consequence of the contract with the warehouses, I shall have to ask the House to pass a resolution later on, endorsing, in the ordinary way, the arrangements I have made. The arrangement with the steamship companies is this: They put in the plant and provide the accommodation, and we undertake to pay them three annual instalments of one-sixth each of the cost of the plant and the fitting up, so that in the course of three years we shall have paid them one-half of the expenditure of fitting up the steamships. At first I thought this unnecessarily large, but I was surprised to find how the contract works against the steamship company. The insulation of these compartments occupies very considerable freight space in the steamer, so much so that by calculation we found that for every 100 feet taken up by the compartment and its walls, there is only about 80 cubic feet capacity inside the compartment. This means a loss to the steamer of one-fifth the compartment, and when you calculate very closely, as the steamship owners do, the space accommodation in their vessels, which is worth so much every voyage, you find that they make this loss of 20 per cent of the whole space occupied by the compartment, and this loss they must suffer as long as they keep the walls and machinery there. It was therefore only fair that we should make some generous arrangement with the companies rather than act otherwise. I made this arrangement, first of all, with the Elder-Dempster Company, with which Professor Robertson had dealings last year. I afterwards came to make arrangements with the other steamship companies, but at first they thought the proposition so unfavourable that they would not agree to it, and it was only after very careful consideration and after I told them I could not possibly make more favourable arrangements with them than I had made with the Elder-Dempster firm that they agreed to accept these terms. I consider that in getting accommodation on the terms I have mentioned, we are accomplishing a great deal in the interests of our export trade in these perishable products. I think I am safe in saying that no less bonus or subsidy or whatever you choose to call it to these companies would have accomplished the arrangement and enabled us to carry out this scheme.

In making up the amount of $100,000, there are some other items included. The guarantee at Halifax, if altogether called upon, would amount to $2,000. A similar guarantee which I expected to be called upon at St. John would amount to $2,000. In consequence of the people there not putting it through, I think it is very likely I may have to spend a portion this year for temporary accommodation, and therefore will still ask that amount. In Charlottetown I may have to provide a guarantee, in case it is called for, of $1,000. At Quebec, as at Halifax and St. John, I have to provide a guarantee of $2,000. At Toronto I have provided for a guarantee of $2,500, which may still be called upon, although the company that originally had the offer has apparently not been able to do the work. The arrangement at Calgary calls for about $500, and at Revelstoke the building and the necessary attention to it, having a man there, will require about $2,000. This means a total of $12,000 for this work.

I am asking besides for an amount to send two men to England to assist our people in placing their perishable food product on the English market. I consider this one of the most important portions of the scheme. At present there are certain parts of our export trade to England well established, which have perfect commercial connections, but we are hoping, by reason of this arrangement, that a very considerable addition will be made to our export trade and that a number of things will be sent to England which have not heretofore been shipped there to any large extent. Our people who wish to introduce this trade are not familiar with the English market, they are not in touch with the English importers and dealers, and there is no doubt a very great risk attendant upon this work. That risk will be very much minimized if we can send over a couple of men who will study the English markets, who will try and get track of the men there to whom our people may consign, and who will send that information to this country for the benefit of those who wish to engage in this trade. I have, therefore, asked for the sum of $6,000 out of this $100,000 to be devoted to that purpose. I cannot yet say that that will be all expended. That will depend very largely upon the success of those who are sent over and upon the proved utility of their work. I hope to be able to send such men there early in the season, probably starting next month, and I wish them to go to work and see what they can do. The continuance of the work or the extent of it or the time they will spend on it will depend very much on the success of it, but, at the same time, I feel it is very likely that these men will have to stay there pretty nearly the whole of the fiscal year, commencing 1st July. Under these circumstances, I do not think that $6,000 is an out of the way amount to vote for this purpose.

In addition to these things I must not forget to say that an offer was agreed to by the House last year of a bonus of a small amount to be given to every creamery in the country which would put up properly cold storage accommodation. I estimated that this would require $10,000 for the coming year, thinking some 200 creameries would make application. Instead of that I find over 300 have asked for the bonus, and say they are fulfilling the conditions. I have a man now going about examining these creameries to see that the work they have done is such as will warrant the payment of this bonus. As the result of this large addition, I am asking for $12,500 instead of $10,000 for this purpose. I may say that in connection with all this work, there has been considerable amount of printing and correspondence and travelling expenses which have already amounted to a considerable sum out of this year's vote and which, during the ensuing year, will also amount to a considerable sum.

And, in this connection, I may say that one thing that I think is important is that we should attempt to make use of the press in the old country to direct attention to our Canadian goods. We should try to get the newspapers there interested. And for this purpose I feel that it is necessary that we should have exchanges and should send articles to them and have them printed and have communications constantly before the English public, so as to direct their attention to our wares, that they may look out for the goods we are sending there. I am satisfied that when they make a trial of these goods, the goods will so commend themselves to the taste of the English people, that having tasted them they will look for more. I believe that in this year of Her Majesty's Jubilee when the attention of the whole British public has been turned to us as it never was before, we have a splendid opportunity which it behooves us to take full advantage of. It is especially necessary at this time that we should do everything we can to show the British people that Canada can supply foods of the highest quality and in the greatest variety to suit the taste of the English people. If we do that successfully and well, I am satisfied that the trade with England which we all desire will be largely stimulated. In addition to the tariff arrangements that this Government has made, this will afford a great opportunity which we can use with incalculable advantage to the producers of our country.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he has provided that there should be the same temperature for all kinds of goods, or will the different lines of goods have different temperatures?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The storage capacity on the vessels will be divided into compartments, and the steamship people will have to keep each compartment at the temperature required for the goods carried in it.

Mr. SPROULE. That is good. I understand the hon. Minister to say that refrigerator cars are to be run on the two great lines of railway. What lines of railway are these cars to be carried on, from what points are they to run and how often—weekly, monthly, or how?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot give that information in detail. The Grand Trunk Railway has eight routes running into Montreal, the Canadian Pacific Railway ten routes running into Montreal, the Canada Atlantic Railway, one, the Quebec and Intercolonial, one; the Quebec and Lake St. John, one; and there is also another line whose name I cannot give at the moment.

Mr. SPROULE. How often are these cars to be taken over these routes?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As a rule, weekly.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the intention of the hon. gentleman to have a bulletin issued at a very early day and distributed to the shippers and those who handle these goods so that they can take advantage of this storage system this season. For, I think, the arrangements are not generally understood. I saw an explanation of the system in one of the papers, but it was a mere outline, and it seems to me that more accurate information should be given so that the public may get the benefit of the use of the system this season. Is it the intention to get out the bulletin and also to publish the details in the different newspapers in the country?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) was probably present when Prof. Robertson gave a complete outline of the scheme in the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, and I understand that provision was made to issue copies of Prof. Robertson's speech. But it was only an outline of the scheme and did not contain the detailed information that the public would require in order to take advantage of the system.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I was not present when Prof. Robertson gave his address, but I understood that all the details were covered by it. If that is not the case, I will see that the necessary information is published as soon as possible.

Mr. McNEILL. I did not quite catch what the hon. Minister said with regard to placing our goods on the market in Great Britain. I was much gratified to hear of the provision he was making in reference to the men he proposed sending across to the other side to push our goods in the English markets, but I did not understand whether there was any arrangement made for depots in different parts of the country. Has that idea been abandoned—the idea of having places where distinctively Canadian goods could be obtained, places to which the purchaser could be referred by those gentlemen who are going over to push the business. I may say that within the last day or two I had a very interesting letter from the old country from a gentleman who has resided in Canada for a number of years. He expresses great regret at finding, while in England, that our goods are so little known there and that so little has been done and is being done in the way of bringing them to the notice of the British public. He speaks of the great advantages which he thinks would accrue from the establishment of some kind of depot or store in different parts of the country where distinctively Canadian goods could be obtained, so that the public would understand that they were Canadian goods.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say to the hon. gentleman that that matter has been discussed, and it seems to me that there were great difficulties in the way of establishing a store or shop where nothing but Canadian goods could be sold until we were assured of a constant abundance of those goods to keep that store thoroughly supplied. Another difficulty is that any other establishment of that kind starting would have to meet the keenest competition whereas, if we could put our goods into the hands of already well-established commercial houses, we should have all the advantage of their connection and their reputation. That is one of the things, however, which, probably, will be looked into by the gentlemen whom I propose to send over, and upon their report we will take action. I may say, in this connection—perhaps it may not be necessary, but it is just as well, perhaps—that the gentlemen I propose to send over are not at all to act as consignees or agents for individuals, but simply as general assistants and friends of those who trade. Their duty will be to obtain information, to put our people into communication with the English people, but to allow the trade itself to be done by the exporter here and the importer there. But they are to be available in case of difficulties arising. In case our people believe that they are not properly treated by their consignees, they may call upon these gentlemen to go and investigate the case and see that justice is done. I do not wish that the public should suppose that these gentlemen are to be agents or consignees.

Mr. McNEILL. I hope the hon. gentleman will not suppose that the remark I made with regard to depots was made in a spirit of hostile criticism, because I wish to say I congratulate my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) very heartily upon the course he is pursuing in these matters.

Mr. BAIN. Would it not have facilitated the scheme of the hon. Minister if he had established more than one cold storage depot in the North-west Territories. He has only one, at Calgary.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Each creamery which we have established in the Territories has cold storage accommodation for its butter, and I think with that and with the collecting warehouse in Winnipeg, there will be no trouble.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it the intention of the Minister to provide, out of this grant, cold storage in connection with the transportation of fresh fish?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This cold storage accommodation is equally available for fish exported as for other goods. Any goods that anybody wishes to send in cold storage they are welcome to send, and the more the better.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Can this arrangement be applied to the transportation of fresh fish between the provinces?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was not at all part of the scheme to deal with interprovincial trade.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I heartily approve of the policy of the Government in providing cold storage for the export of perishable farm products, and I regret that the same policy is not extended to the very large and important fish industry. We have in the eastern provinces an important portion of the fish industry of Canada. To-day, and for years past, I may say, the price of fish is becoming lower, and the fishermen find it more difficult to get paying prices for the product of their labour. In the principal cities of Canada, notably in Montreal and Toronto, the fresh fish that is consumed comes from foreign countries, a large portion of it comes from Portland and from other fishing ports in the United States, while in the lower provinces, notably around Halifax, and the Island of Cape Breton, large quantities of fresh fish are caught, but the people who are engaged in fisheries are obliged to take a price very much lower than they could realize if they had facilities for shipping their fish to the upper provinces. Take the articles of cod fish and haddock; fishermen get only about a cent a pound for that fish where they are obliged to dispose of it at home, while in the cities, consumers pay five, six and seven cents a pound for the same kind of fish that comes from Portland and other places. Now, I am sorry that the Government does not see its way on the present occasion to include the article of fresh fish caught in our own waters in their arrangement for providing facilities for shipping perishable food products, so that this fish may be sent to the upper provinces. I attach as much importance possibly as any member of this House to the necessity of securing all the markets that we can outside of our own provinces for the products of the country, but I consider that we ought to do just as much to keep for ourselves the markets that we have in our own country, and especially in regard to the products of the fishing industry. That is an industry that is prosecuted with great risk of life, and with much danger and hardship to the people who are engaged in it, much more so than attends the industry of farming. Although I am fully in accord with the policy of the Government in providing those facilities for the transport of the products of the farm, yet I consider that some measure of assistance should be extended, particularly to the fishing industry, as long as we have a market within our own borders for a large portion of the products of that industry. We have fish equally as good in quality as can be procured from other places, and we have all the different kinds of fish that are consumed in the cities of this Dominion. I hope that the Government will reconsider this matter, and I hope that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who is personally acquainted with the value and importance of this great industry on the shores of the maritime provinces, will take some interest in this matter and see that the fishermen of the maritime provinces are considered in connection with this system of cold storage for the transportation of perishable products.

Mr. MARTIN. I heartily endorse the remarks that have just been made by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. McDougall) in respect to the need of providing cold storage facilities for the shipment of fish within the provinces. But I wish specially to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that I see there is no completed arrangement for cold storage so far as Prince Edward Island is concerned. The hon. gentleman has told us what he is doing in St. John, in Calgary, and in Revelstoke, and in all the other parts of this Dominion, but he comes before the House and has to admit that he has not completed any arrangement so far as regards Prince Edward Island. I do not think that is very satisfactory to Prince Edward Island. I do not see why an exception should be made in favour of St. John, though I would like very much that St. John should get all the favours that she can. I do not see why an exception should be made in favour of Revelstoke or in favour of Calgary. I think it would be much more satisfactory to the House if the hon. gentleman, with this large sum of money at his disposal, should pay a little more attention to that province. But not only is that the case in regard to cold storage, but the hon. gentleman comes before the committee with arrangements incomplete as regards transshipment to Great Britain. He has told the committee that arrangements are complete at Montreal, at Halifax, at St. John, but when he comes to Prince Edward Island he says the arrangement is not complete at all. In every case Prince Edward Island comes in at the last. He has talked very nicely about the Jubilee of Her Majesty, but I think the people of Prince Edward Island can hardly join in it very heartily if the hon. gentleman is going to treat them in this way. If the loyalty of the people of Canada depends on the transshipment of butter in cold storage, what must the hon. gentleman think of the loyalty of Prince Edward Island? The loyalty of the people of Prince Edward Island does not, however, depend on those favours. I think this item should be allowed to stand over until the hon. gentleman has made some arrangement for that province. It is unfortunate that that little province should be singled out to be slighted on every occasion. Last night I had occasion to point out that Prince Edward Island was left out while special favours were dispensed to other provinces. Now, I do not say this in any carping mood. I know that the people of Prince Edward Island are entitled to as much consideration in regard to this industry as any other part of Canada, and I trust that when the Supplementary Estimates come down, in which I understand the hon. gentleman is asking an additional vote, we shall find that justice is meted out to that little province.

Mr. GILLIES. I want to address a few remarks to the committee on the question that has been raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall), and in doing so I must endorse the words that have fallen from my hon. friend in regard to this very important matter. For my part I may inform the committee that I do not speak in any sectional spirit when I call the attention of the Government, particularly that of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to this particular subject. Last year I took occasion to draw attention to the general question now before the committee, the question of the Atlantic fisheries, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries gave me his close attention and promised that the matter which had been brought to his notice, would receive full consideration from himself and his colleagues. I am quite confident the hon. gentleman meant what he said and that he will carry out his promise. I cannot understand why the vast industry known as the Atlantic fisheries should not be promoted in every possible manner. Two items which the committee voted a few minutes ago aggregate an expenditure of $180,000 to further the agricultural industry, namely, an item of $80,000 for cold storage, and an item of $100,000 for promoting the dairying industry in the North-west. When we look at the large industry of the Atlantic fisheries, amounting to the value of $10,000,000 annually in the three lower provinces, employing, as they do, a large number of people, and prosecuted as they necessarily are in a very limited manner, I fail to see why the Government should not direct their attention to the promotion of that industry in a manner that would and must commend itself to the people, particularly those of the upper provinces. We have the means down there of providing Ontario and the west with first class fish. There is no reason why the markets of Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Guelph, Kingston and other large cities should not be supplied daily with the best class of fresh fish from the lower provinces. That could easily be done if cold storage were provided by means of refrigerator cars; and if it is necessary in the interest of the western farmers, whose interests are small in comparison with those involved in the Atlantic fisheries, for the Government to provide cold storage warehouses and other accommodation, why should not the eastern fisheries interests obtain similar assistance? I hold up both hands in support of the policy of the Government in regard to furnishing assistance to the agricultural interest of the west, but at the same time I ask attention to this matter which I am now endeavouring to bring to the notice of the committee, a question which we desire to press on the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in the most cogent manner possible. I therefore hope to see, if not in the Supplementary Estimates of the present session, a sum provided in the Estimates next session for furnishing refrigerator cars for the transportation of fish from the east to the west; and if it is not possible to do anything this session, I trust the representatives of the eastern provinces in the Cabinet will secure for this important industry that assistance which its necessities demand.

Maintenance and repairs to Government Steamers..... $112,400

Mr. McDOUGALL. What steamers are to be repaired out of this vote?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). This is for the maintenance of the Government steamers. These are the "Newfield," "Lansdowne," "Stanley," "Aberdeen," "Quadra" and "Druid." This vote includes payment of wages, equipment, maintenance and repairs.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a reduction of $34,178. How has this saving been effected?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is a reduction of the amount named. It arises largely in this way: "La Canadienne," the vessel that formerly was engaged in the protection of the fishery service in the gulf from Quebec down, had become disabled, and last year the report made on her was that she would require extensive repairs. She will, therefore, be repaired during the summer. The "Aberdeen," which was in the marine service last year, will take "La Canadienne's" place for fishery service. That saves the maintenance of the "Aberdeen" last year, so far as regards this particular vote. Then there was another item, $4,000, which was asked last year and obtained, for hauling off the "Quadra" which had got on the rocks off British Columbia. Then there was an item in the Supplementary Estimates of $10,000 for the winter steam service.

Reward for saving life..... $7,000

Mr. SPROULE. I observe there is a reduction of $1,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. With the object of seeing if any saving could be effected, without impairing the efficiency of the service, I made an accurate examination of the expenditure during six or seven years, and I found we were taking a grant of $8,000, although we never spent more than $7,000. I therefore determined that it was not necessary to take more than $7,000.

Investigation into wrecks..... $1,000

Mr. SPROULE. Is this for investigation into the ordinary wrecks?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Yes. Time and again we have to investigate these, and some of the investigations last a good while; for instance, in the case of the "Warwick," at St. John the other day, the inquiry lasted for a fortnight.

Canadian Registry of Shipping..... $500

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it intended to publish a new Canadian registry of shipping this year?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, it is published every two years.

Tidal Service—Tide gauges, instruments and staff..... $2,500

Mr. FOSTER. What is the occasion of this decrease of $12,500 in this vote?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). The "Aberdeen," which was engaged in this service last year had to be transferred to the fishery protection service to take the place of "La Canadienne," which ship is laid up for extensive repairs. That necessarily makes a large saving in the tidal service. It is not, of course, essential to carry it on this year. The tidal gauges will continue as usual, but the service in which she was engaged, taking the density of water and the velocity of the tides here and there, cannot be done this year.

Mr. RODDICK. With reference to these tidal surveys, it seems to me to be a mistake on the part of the Government to reduce this estimate to such a large extent. This is a very important matter, and in view of the fact that we are about to have—and I sincerely trust we may have—a fast Atlantic service at an early date, it would be a very great mistake on the part of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine to do away with this survey, as he practically will by reducing the vote to $2,500. It may not be known that this question is looked upon as a very important one, not only by the shipping interests of Canada, but by the scientists of Canada, and in fact of the world over. This survey system originated in Montreal in 1884, when a meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science was held there; the association, which is to meet this year in Toronto. It was there decided to memorialize the Government on this question, and a memorial was forwarded to the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who, I think, was my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster). At that meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, it was decided that this survey was of the utmost importance, and that it was most necessary that the tides and currents of the Straits of Belle Isle and Cabot's Strait should be thoroughly understood. The attention of the Minister of Marine was drawn to the matter, not only by the British Association, but by a report which was subsequently sent to him by the late Lieut. Gordon. In this report Lieut. Gordon expressed the conviction that until we had an exhaustive examination of the whole system of tidal movements, carried out on similar plans to those which have been made on the United States coasts and on the coasts of Great Britain, we shall always be subject to an annual amount of maritime loss due to the lack of information in regard to tidal currents. He also points out

That, in the eighteen years, from 1870 to 1887, the aggregate loss was a little over fifty million dollars, or an average of $2,782,000 per annum; and in the same period the loss of life has been 4,308 lives. A certain proportion of this loss of life and property is certainly due to imperfect knowledge of the currents; and if the number of narrow escapes of vessels from disaster or wreck were known, it would add a powerful argument in favour of proceeding with the work forthwith.

He also adds:

That, if we could only get a record of the narrow escapes, the delays, and the errors of position discovered when a fog clears away, no further argument would be required; but captains of vessels, as a rule, dislike to admit that they have been out of position; and dangers escaped are only remembered in a practical sense, by giving the ship a little more offing the next voyage, when, if the weather is thick, it may be found that the ship is as far north as she was on the previous trip to the south. It is the more difficult, under these circumstances, to collect evidence on the subject. He is himself convinced, however, of the extreme desirability, if not the absolute necessity of proceeding with this work as soon as possible.

Subsequently to that time, the following memorial was sent to the Government signed by 393 masters and officers of vessels:

We, the undersigned, masters and officers of vessels engaged in the navigation of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and of the waters on the Atlantic coast of the Dominion of Canada and of Newfoundland, desire earnestly and respectfully to petition the Government and Parliament of Canada, that they would promptly take such steps as they may deem advisable to obtain as thorough a knowledge as possible of the currents in these waters, whether due to the tides or to any other cause, and to distribute amongst mariners the information obtained. We believe that the serious loss of life and property due to shipwrecks attributable to unknown currents during fogs or hazy weather, may thus be greatly diminished. In such weather these currents are a cause of great anxiety and danger.

Now, Sir, it seems to me that with such strong evidence as that before us that it would be a great mistake on the part of the Government to reduce this vote to the extent that is proposed. As I have said, we should endeavour in every possible way to make the way clear for this fast Atlantic service of ours, and certainly we should take every precaution in our waters, in order to prevent disasters which might possibly occur. I feel very strongly on the point, and I have taken council with some of the prominent shipping men in Montreal, and I trust the hon. Minister will endeavour to induce his Government to retain the original amount of $15,000 for this purpose, and if possible increase it so as to make this service perfect. I understand that the vessels which have been employed recently have not been quite up to the mark, and I hope that if he continues the matter he will see that this deficiency is also corrected.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries what changes he has made in the commanders and officers of the Government vessels since assuming office?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not aware that I have made any. The only change I can recall is the appointment of Commander Wakeham to the charge of the Hudson Bay expedition, and the appointment of Commander Lavoie to his place in the interim. But I have not made any changes in any of the captains or officers of ships that I am aware of.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The same officers or captains?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The same captains, second officers, and engineers, and most of the crews. It is not a service in which changes can be made properly. Men are specially trained to understand the semaphores and signals. Commander Spain gave me the names of the men who he wished taken back, and they were all taken back so far as I know. If the hon. gentleman has any one in his mind particularly, I shall be glad to answer, but I think he will find that I have made no change.

Removal of obstructions in navigable rivers $1,000

Mr. FOSTER. That is a very small vote.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I found that we had been voting $3,000 year after year, and by taking the average of seven or eight years back, I found that we had not spent more than $1,000. There was no sense in taking $2,000 more than we wanted.

Winter Mail Service..... $7,000

Mr. FOSTER. Why the increase there?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Increased efficiency requires increased expenditure. The cost of this service for 1895-96 was $7,779, while the vote was $5,000; and as this was not sufficient to meet the expenses connected with the service, a supplementary vote of $2,000 was granted by Parliament. I may say that $7,000 will not be sufficient, and I shall have to ask for something in the supplementary Estimates.

Salaries and allowances of Light-keepers. $205,000

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if any provision has been made for the additional light that was asked for Thornbury on the Georgian Bay?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not got that name. But we are not now at the right vote for that. For large lighthouses we take special votes. Out of the general vote Colonel Anderson, the engineer, defrays the expense of constructing small lighthouses in different ports, and if the one the hon. gentleman refers to is to be built at all, I fancy it will be built out of the general vote.

Agencies, rents and contingencies..... $15,510

Mr. FOSTER. Any change in these agents?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Construction, &c., of Lights..... $20,000

Mr. FOSTER. It is usual for the Minister to state where he proposes to expend this money.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The following items that were voted last year in the supplementary Estimates will require to be re-voted; the fog-alarm at Belle Island, the new lights on the Lake of the Woods; the light and fog-alarms on Flower Pot Island; the Georgian Bay Range; the light at Port Dover; lights and fog-alarms at the Sisters and at the entrance to Vancouver; the pole light at Chimamis, B.C.; and the light at Eastern Harbour, N.S.—$15,000. The particular sum now before the committee is the general sum out of which all the smaller lights are, I believe, constructed.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is it proposed to expend this $20,000?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. All over the Dominion. We have no particular lights made up for this.

Mr. FOSTER. It has been the custom to lay upon the Table of the House a statement as to what lights were to be built out of this vote. I always did it when I was Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I think my predecessor did it also. In fact, I had to do it before I got my estimates through.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If there is such a list, I shall be happy to give it on concurrence.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman has stated that he proposes in the supplementary Estimates to ask for a re-vote for the pole light at Chimamis and one at the entrance to Vancouver, and also one at the Sister Islands; but a light is wanted at Fiddle Reef, just outside of Victoria, more than any of those. It is asked for by every captain who runs between Victoria and Vancouver and the northern coast.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I mentioned that matter to Colonel Anderson the other day, and he said it was his intention to proceed with the removal of the wreck of the "San Pedro" outside of Victoria, and that he would build these other lights. He had not then made up his mind whether he would build a light on the Fiddle Reef.

Mr. PRIOR. I would like to impress upon the hon. Minister the fact that the necessity which calls for a light at Fiddle Reef calls for one at this point. It is on the east coast of Vancouver Island.

Repairs to wharfs..... $3,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is a practice existing many years whereby the Marine Department takes charge of small repairs to wharfs on which the Government collect wharfage, and this item is for the repairs on such wharfs.

Observatory, Toronto..... $2,700

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The expenditure last year was $2,747, and the decrease is effected by dispensing with two small observatories which Mr. Stupart thinks we need not continue.

Meteorological Service..... $60,930

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The reduction is brought about in this way. I sent for Mr. Stupart, who is a very careful and accurate man, excellently fitted for the position he occupies, and spent a couple of days with him in the department going through the entire staff of the Meteorological Service, in order to see whether money could not be saved without impairing the efficiency. We succeeded in making a saving by cutting down salaries which were unequal in their amount. Where there is a large number of officers scattered through the Dominion and the salaries have not been revised for a length of time, it frequently happens that some men receive three times what is paid other men in other places doing exactly the same work, and in such cases we cut down the larger salary.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any change in the distribution of the reports?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Hydrographic Service..... $16,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This work is being carried on in the Georgian Bay by Mr. Stewart, who is a graduate of Kingston Military College and was trained under Commander Boulton. When Commander Boulton was removed to England, Mr. Stewart took his place and is discharging his duties admirably. He sends home the result of his work every year to the observatory at Greenwich and gets the charts that he makes tested and verified and approved of. He takes up his work this year where he left off last year.

Mr. SPROULE. How long will it take to complete the work?

Mr. DAVIES.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It will not be in the public interest to drop this service for a good many years. In these large waters where shipping is increasing every year, we must have very accurate charts made. It will be found that the country is repaid ten times over the small expenditure incurred. Year by year, Mr. Stewart finds out shoals and rocks, which he marks on charts for the benefit of shipping, and I do not anticipate stopping this expenditure for some years. As soon as he finishes Georgian Bay, he will go on to some other waters.

Mr. SPROULE. I consider this most valuable work. I had inquiries some time ago for some small books in connection with navigation that I got from the department, but this year I was told that there are none for distribution. I think they were the regulation and navigation laws, &c.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are books which are printed at the expense of the Government and for which a small fee is charged. There are no books which have heretofore been distributed free or on payment of a small fee which are not distributed now the same as formerly.

Mr. MONK. I would like to call the hon. Minister's attention to a matter of small importance. It is, that the Lake of Two Mountains, 20 miles from Montreal, has never been surveyed. It is a body of water 15 miles long by about 2 or 3 miles wide, and is now frequented by a large number of pleasure yachts in the summer and also other vessels. I think it would be desirable that a survey should be made of that body of water. It is not an expensive matter. I have been told that a survey could be made for considerably less than $1,500. It seems strange to visitors going to Montreal, going up to Ste. Anne's across Lake St. Louis, and thus reaching this body of water, which they frequent very largely, to find so large a body of water so near Montreal that has not been surveyed. I have sought information, and have been told that Lake St. Louis, which was surveyed as far back as 1836, has never been surveyed since, and that the Lake of Two Mountains, which lies on the north side of the island, and Lake St. Louis could both be surveyed for a sum not exceeding $2,000. But what is of more pressing importance at the present moment is the survey of the Lake of Two Mountains. I think that if the hon. member for Two Mountains (Mr. Ethier) were here, he would bear me out in the statement that this survey should be made.

Marine Hospitals—Care of sick seamen in marine and other hospitals in the Maritime Provinces..... $35,000
Shipwrecked seamen $3,000

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to ask the hon. Minister, what is being done with reference to the application from St. John concerning the cemetery. The Government have lots in the cemetery, in which are interred the bodies of the seamen who die in the hospital, and who must be buried at the public expense. These lots are in a very dilapidated condition, and not in keeping with other portions of the cemetery. The Government, as it has large amounts accruing for this service, should have the lots in a condition in keeping with the rest of the cemetery.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I thank the hon. gentleman for calling my attention to the matter, which had not been presented to me before. I will take measures to see that the present state of affairs complained of does not continue.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we had better stop at that.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Well, if hon. gentlemen wish. Of course, we shall understand that they will give us liberal facilities to-morrow.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We are always ready to do that.

Resolutions to be reported.

ADJOURNMENT—EXPORT OF PULP-WOOD.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House. I may mention to the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), with respect to the question he put to me in reference to pulp-wood, that, without at all desiring to prejudice the question as to what may be done, one way or the other, as to export duties, I am authorized to inform him, that occasion will be taken to prevent any parties who are making contracts for pulp-wood now, suffering, whatever the course adopted ultimately may be.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11:20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to remind the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Davies) of the orders adopted by this House in September last calling for several returns which I would have much liked to have laid on the Table, and which it will not take long to prepare. One relates to the case of the sub-agent of the department at Pictou, and the other to the life-boat. I would also be obliged if the members of the Government present would call the attention of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), who is not here, to the return called for on the 3rd of May regarding the dismissal of the car inspector and car oiler. Though this return was called for but a short time ago, yet hon. gentlemen know that every effort is made to hasten the business of the House, and, as this correspondence must be very short, I would like if this return, as well as the others, could be brought down as soon as possible.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). I called the attention of the officers in my department to the remarks of the hon. gentleman the other day, and asked to have both these returns made ready at once, and I was given to understand that they would be ready in a day or two.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not wish to bore hon. gentlemen opposite, and I will not do so any more. I have spoken so often about the matter I wish to refer to that I am really ashamed to do so again, and this shall be the last time of asking. There were three returns I was careful to ask for very early in the session. One was a return of the commissions appointed to try partisan offences and their reports, and the other a return of the officials dismissed in York and King's county. These would not take much time. This is my final plea, and I ask that these returns be brought down.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). The hon. gentleman has named only two. What is the third? If my hon. friend forgets his returns, no wonder we do.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but if my hon. friend will give me the returns I bring to his attention, that will be sufficient.

The PRIME MINISTER. You would be satisfied with these two.

Mr. FOSTER. For the present—yes.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. RUSSELL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I rise to a question of privilege, a matter not of great moment, but one in respect to which I wish to be set right. I see it stated in one newspaper that I did not vote on the motion of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) in favour of the free admission of agricultural implements. The account of that vote given to the Halifax "Morning Herald" represents me as not voting. My reason for not voting was that I had an arrangement with my hon. colleague (Mr. Borden, Halifax) who, I supposed, would vote in favour of the motion. In effect, I was paired with that hon. gentleman on all party questions in this House that should come up in his absence. I was not quite sure whether this was a party vote or not, but, as the hon. member for Assiniboia seemed to be leading the Opposition on this question, I thought it to be my duty to give my hon. friend the benefit of the doubt. Certainly I had no desire to shirk any vote on that question, and whatever my opinions might have been with respect to the subject of the duties on agricultural machinery, I would have felt bound to vote in favour of the motion to go into Committee of Supply, which, as I understand the procedure of the House, was the only question upon which we were voting.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will be good enough not to go into the reasons which caused him to vote as he did, but simply to state the facts.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not propose to do so, but simply to say that I wanted to give the benefit of any doubt that might exist to my hon. colleague, and for that reason alone I felt that I ought not to vote, although very desirous of doing so.

INVERNESS ELECTION PETITION.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the House to a statement which I find in the Halifax "Herald," which is as follows:—

The Inverness election trial was yesterday further adjourned to July 7th, the judge stating that the respondent was evidently attempting to evade service.

Sir, this is rather a serious charge against me and I wish to set at rest the minds of the House and whoever else may be interested in my conduct in regard to this matter. I also wish to put myself right before his lordship the trial judge in this case, because his lordship is evidently misinformed, as I shall presently demonstrate to the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot go into questions affecting the courts, however interesting they may be. He must confine himself to what affects himself.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). As a member of the House, Mr. Speaker, I think you will agree with me that this concerns me very directly, and I wish to prove by what I will proceed to read to the House, that the charge made against me in this connection is unfounded:

Mr. RUSSELL.

To Angus McLennan, Esq., M.P.,

Respondent.

Ontario.

In the County Court of the County of Carleton. I order and command that Angus McLennan, Esquire, M.P., do attend before Richard John Wicksteed, Esquire, on Wednesday, the fifth day of May instant, at three o'clock in the forenoon, at his office, No. 110 Wellington street, in the city of Ottawa, in said county, to be examined before him as a witness on behalf of the Petitioner herein under the order of the Honourable C. J. Townshend, dated Halifax, April 29th, 1897, pursuant to the statute in that case made and provided.

W. A. ROSS,

Judge of the County Court of the County of Carleton, and Local Judge of the High Court of Justice for the Province of Ontario.

Dated Ottawa, 5th May, 1897.

On the same day, the 5th of May, I found this paper in my room at about half-past eleven o'clock p.m., and as it was evident that I could not turn back the hand of time, in my desperation I appealed to counsel, and that counsel learned in the law advised me that it was impossible for me to obey this subpoena, and I may say that I had a very decided opinion in the same direction before I consulted counsel. However, I thought it wise to consult counsel in the matter, and this is my answer to the charge that I evaded the service of the instrument. I submit this to the House in order that I may set myself right before the House, and before the learned judge who is supposed to try that suit.

SUPPLY—DISMISSALS FROM THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire, before that motion is carried, to say a word or two to the present Administration and to the members of the House generally. We have been listening for some time, judging by the reports in the public press, to long discussions, some times interesting and some times very uninteresting, as to the action of the Government in the dismissal of Government officials. Strong language has been used, and very strong language has been used by the leader of the Opposition, judging by reports from the public press. We were told that the present Administration were demoralizing the whole civil service of this country by their conduct in dealing with the officials of the Government, both in the inside and in the outside service. We were told, according to reports in the public press, that we were introducing the spoils system into the administration of Canadian affairs. Sir, I venture to say now that no Government that has existed in Canada from the days of confederation, when the first Parliament met in the fall of 1867, until now, has acted more leniently and with greater forbearance to offensive civil servants than the present Administration has done. We were told that it was a great outrage upon public sentiment and the public feeling of this country; we were told that the hon. gentlemen upon the Treasury benches were dragging the civil service and the Crown into the dust. Sir, the hon. gentleman who made those statements arrived at one conclusion upon an assumed state of facts and by a certain process of reasoning; I, Sir, have arrived at the conclusion that the Government is censurable on another state of facts and by another process of reasoning. Hon. gentlemen opposite, and especially the leader of the Opposition, desire to censure the Government for dismissing without cause, or with cause, a certain number of civil servants; I, Sir, if I desire anything, desire that the Government should be censured for not dismissing ten instead of one civil servant. Now, I wish to draw the attention of the House for a moment or two to what appears to be a very peculiar and extraordinary case. It will be recollected by those who have paid any attention to the proceedings of the House that some days ago I asked a question, and that question was in the following words:—

Mr. CAMERON asked:

“1. Who is the manager or superintendent of the Industrial School, Winnipeg?”

“2. When was he appointed?”

“3. What was his former occupation and where did he live at the date of his appointment?”

“5. What is his salary or allowance?”

“6. Is the school denominational? If so, to what denomination does it belong?”

I was answered by the Minister of the Interior, and the answer is in the following words:—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. The Rev. John H. Fairlie is the Principal of the Industrial School. 2. He was appointed on the 15th September, 1896. 3. He was formerly a master in the Mohawk Institute, Brantford, and at the date of his appointment he resided at Meaford, Ont. 5. His salary is $1,000 a year with free quarters and rations for himself and wife. 6. The school is denominational. The school does not belong to any denomination, but is conducted by the Department of Indian Affairs as a Church of England school.

Sir, to my amazement I found that Rev. John Fairlie was appointed in September, 1896, appointed by the present Administration. I, who have unbounded faith in the conduct of the present Administration, must express my extreme regret that the Government appointed Rev. John Fairlie to any position under this Administration, and especially to a responsible and lucrative position such as that which Rev. John Fairlie now occupies. The Rev. John Fairlie resided in my riding for many years. He was rector of the English Church in Clinton. He was not a pronounced success. Inside of two years he emptied the church, all the leading men of the church left him and went to other churches. He was complained of by his parishioners to his bishop, and his bishop removed him from Clinton. He then seems to have become one of the sub-masters in the Mohawk Indian School at Brantford. He remained there but a short time, and then moved to a place called Meaford, and when in Meaford he was appointed by this Administration to the position of Superintendent of the Indian School near Winnipeg. If that had been the only thing in connection with Rev. John Fairlie, I would not have very much to say on the subject. But to my certain knowledge the Rev. John Fairlie of Clinton was a Tory of a very pronounced type, and the first I heard of him in that connection was when two of his own parishioners wrote me from Clinton to Goderich asking me if it was possible that this Administration had appointed him to be superintendent of the Indian school near Winnipeg. I answered that it was impossible, that it must have been done by the late Government, because that kind of thing they had been in the habit of doing for eighteen years. I was not satisfied, and therefore communicated with one of the departments at Ottawa, and to my extreme surprise I discovered that this Rev. John Fairlie had been appointed by the head of one department at Ottawa, acting for another head of a department, who was not then in the city. That is not all. This Rev. John Fairlie has made himself somewhat notorious since his appointment. I was curious to know upon whose recommendation the Government assumed, or rather the acting Minister assumed the responsibility of appointing this man. I knew the local members of the Liberal party had not been consulted on the subject. I discovered that the only recommendation was the recommendation of the superintendent of the Mohawk school in Brantford. I do not know what his politics are, but I have a very shrewd suspicion as to what they are, and they are the same politics as those held by the Rev. John Fairlie. That is not all. So far the thing might have been pardoned as having been done inadvertently; but I charge here that the man was utterly unfit for the position, that he had not the least qualification for the position. The fact that he emptied his own church and was removed by his bishop, and remained a short time as under-teacher in the Mohawk school, certainly afforded no justification for his appointment and no qualification for his appointment to the position he now occupies. That is not quite all. We all know the Minister of Public Works. I think everybody in Ontario knows him now. The Minister of Public Works last fall, I judge by the reports in the public press, took a trip to the far west, out to the Pacific coast. On his return I understand the Minister of Public Works remained over for some days at Winnipeg, and while there was invited by the mayor of the city, by the president of the board of trade and by some of the members sitting in this House from that locality to visit the neighbourhood of Winnipeg, and among other places they visited the Industrial School situated seven or eight miles out of the city. I believe a few of the hon. gentleman's friends, whether political friends or not I do not know, nor do I care, accompanied the hon. gentleman on his trip to visit the Indian industrial school.

Mr. HUGHES. Were there fifty?

Mr. CAMERON. I do not know how many were there. Among other places visited was the industrial school, which was quite natural. The Minister of Public Works is a distinguished member of the present Administration. He is a man favourably known all over this wide Dominion of Canada now. He is a man who commands the confidence and respect at all events of his own political friends, and it is known as a matter of fact that he commands also the confidence and respect of a great many of his political opponents. He visited the Indian school, and one would naturally suppose that when a distinguished Canadian and prominent member of this Administration, a man who occupies so prominent a place in the eyes of the Canadian people, visited the school as a Minister of the Crown, he would have been treated with common courtesy, respect and decency.

Mr. CAMERON.

Usually we know when a distinguished man visits one of these public schools a holiday is declared for the children in honour of his visit. There was no holiday declared on that occasion. The party drove out a distance of about eight miles; I think it was in the fall of the year, and it was raw, cold and disagreeable. Naturally the Minister of Public Works and his friends, knowing there was no accommodation at the place, took with them the necessary ingredients.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CAMERON. Now, you know, Mr. Speaker, in fact everybody knows, that the Minister of Public Works is a teetotaler. If the word "ingredients" meant something more than cold water and ginger-beer, as hon. gentlemen opposite clearly indicate, and which they would fortify themselves with in such a case, they might laugh; but as the hon. Minister is known as a teetotaler, I take it for granted that so far as he was concerned he took nothing but teetotal drinks with him. It was quite natural that the party should carry the necessary refreshments. They made application to the head of the school for hot water for tea, not for hot whisky. I am told hot water was refused. They wished accommodation in the school room for lunch during the afternoon. That request was denied, and denied not in the most gracious manner, but, as I am informed, in the most ungracious and discourteous manner. I say that the moment the Minister and his friends were so treated the man should be removed. That is not all. The public press of Winnipeg took notice of it, and pointed out the want of courtesy and want of respect and even disrespect shown to the Minister of Public Works. This Rev. John Fairlie, a late rector in the English Church, a parson, rushed into print, and published in the "Nor-Wester" a letter from which I shall read a few extracts to the House. I say here and now, before the Ministers, and before the heads of the department responsible for this man's appointment, the moment his conduct was such as I have spoken of when the Minister of Public Works visited the school, that moment he should have been dismissed. In the first place, he never should have been appointed, and in the second place, when he was appointed by an oversight, he should have been dismissed. He rushes into print and he uses the following choice language:—

Mr. DAVIN. What is the date?

Mr. CAMERON. It is dated the 4th November. His letter is headed, not by Mr. Fairlie himself, but by the editor, showing that they are both sailing in the same boat; the letter is headed in large letters, "A Jamboree." Now, of all the members in this House, not even excepting the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), I never would suspect my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works of indulging in a jamboree. I might suspect my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), but I never could suspect the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), and the headings on the letter go on, "A Jamboree." "Tarte and the Gang had a glorious time at the school." "A regular spree." "Champagne and whisky and cigars were indulged in galore"; and then the Rev. Mr. Fairlie, an ex-rector in the English Church, a person supposed to be of some standing, writes the following:—

That I refused to loan the tables and chairs for use outside the institution is true, but my instructions from the department are "to lend nothing," and I try to obey orders, and am not blameworthy on this point. That I refused either hot or cold water, is not true.

I am told as a matter of fact that he refused the hot and cold water, and refused the table. He says here, that he was told by the department to lend nothing. Is the man sane, or is he a madman, that he cannot distinguish between the lending of an article, required by a Minister of the Crown for a lunch, and between the ordinary lending out of the property of a school. The Rev. Mr. Fairlie continues:

There may have been a bad smell in some of the rooms, as you say.

I do not wonder at that, considering the man that was sent to take charge of them.

There may have been a bad smell in some of the rooms, as you say, but that would be in one of the smaller rooms, and when a dozen men, who have spent two hours at a banquet where champagne and whisky and soda were served, and cigars freely smoked, get crowded into a small room, it is not conducive to sweet smells.

Now, this is the language made use of by the Rev. John Fairlie, an ex-rector of the English Church, and a parson of that church for some years, and now superintendent of the industrial school at Winnipeg. The moment that letter appeared in the public press I say that this Government ought to have dismissed that man without any further inquiry. A man who will write such a letter as that of a Minister of the Crown, and those who accompanied him, is utterly unworthy to fill that position. He was unworthy to fill it from the beginning, and he further proved himself to be unworthy by the publication of such a letter as this. He goes on to write:

I challenge the fullest investigation of my work and conduct of the school, by either the Government, or city council, or board of trade—only, instead of spending two hours and ten minutes at a luncheon with champagne and whisky, and only eleven minutes in the school, let them reverse the order, and give two hours for the inspection and ten minutes for lunch without whisky and soda, and I will be content to bear their criticisms.

You see how particular he is to put in champagne and whisky in several paragraphs of his letter; the implication being that the Minister of Public Works went there on a big jamboree, indulging in champagne and whisky, and passing the intermediate moments in smoking, perhaps very bad cigars. Now, Sir, I am told by those who were present, and I dare say it will be confirmed here to-day, that that statement is absolutely without foundation. There may have been champagne possibly; I know nothing about that, I care nothing about that. There may have been some whisky; I know nothing about that; and very likely there were cigars, but is that any justification for this official of the Government sitting down deliberately and by implication, if not directly, making this scandalous charge against a Minister of the Crown. Sir, I say again, that the moment this letter appeared in the public press, this man ought to have been dismissed. The moment it came to the knowledge of the Administration that this man acted in such a most discourteous manner towards a Minister of the Crown and the mayor of the city of Winnipeg, and the president of the board of trade, and at least one member of this Parliament, he should have been dismissed. I say further, that Mr. Fairlie never ought to have been appointed. I say that his record shows that he is not a man to fill the position of superintendent of an industrial school.

Now, Sir, I make these statements, because, in the first place, I wish to bring this matter to the attention of the House and the Government, and, in the second place, because hon. gentlemen opposite have been, for the last month, day in and day out, in season and out of season, denouncing this Administration for removing men without any reason or cause. I repeat, that so far as I have heard the discussions in the House, no man has been dismissed without reasonable justification. I say, Sir, that if this Government does its duty, for every man they have dismissed from the public service for offensive partisanship they ought to have dismissed ten. I trust that hereafter when charges are made against public officials for improperly interfering in political contests, and those charges are proven, these officials will be allowed to engage in their political proclivities without being encumbered with a government office and a government salary. I make the statements I have made because this Government has been so forbearing and so kindhearted and so lenient, that they have kept in their employment and re-engaged, time and again, as I and others in this House well know, officials whose services should have been dispensed with. There is only one way to deal with this subject—let hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House kick as much as they like—and that is the way the Conservative party dealt with the officials of this Dominion after the election of 1878.

I recollect well that in 1879, on the dredge that was then working in my county, there was not a hand left who was appointed by the Mackenzie Administration. In that respect hon. gentlemen on this side of the House ought to take a leaf out of the book of hon. gentlemen opposite—I would be sorry if they did so in any other respect—and deal with these officials as they ought to be dealt with. I submit the matter to the House. I do not propose to make any motion; but I would like very much to hear what excuse the Minister of Public Works makes for this official, appointed by the Administration of which he is so distinguished a member, and I shall wait for it and listen to it with a great deal of patience.

Mr. JAMESON. Mr. Speaker, as I was present on the occasion referred to, I would like to say a few words with regard to the events detailed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cameron) who has just spoken. When the hon. Minister of Public Works came to Winnipeg, I occupied the position of mayor of that city, and in that capacity I asked him to accompany us to St. Andrew's Rapids, for the purpose of investigating the necessity of improving the river at that point; and, as we would be absent a whole day, I asked the Minister of Public Works, on behalf of the city of Winnipeg, to a lunch such as we are accustomed to give in that city. We in the city of Winnipeg are accustomed to treat gentlemen as they should be treated. We entertain them, especially gentlemen of official position like the Minister of Public Works, as we think they should be entertained, and we wish to maintain a reputation for doing so. We did not wish to go down there and give the Minister of Public Works anything but a decent kind of lunch, and I admit that amongst the drinkables given there was champagne. But I deny that there was anything in the shape of a jamboree, or drunkenness of any kind. In fact, after we returned, we again entertained Mr. Tarte to dinner at the Manitoba Hotel. So that there is ample evidence that the statements made by Mr. Fairlie to the paper were absolutely false and malicious. I do not wish at this early stage of my parliamentary experience to criticise Ministers whom I am bound to support, although I must express some sympathy with the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. The facts are these. Mr. Tarte was the guest of the city of Winnipeg. He did not know what sort of lunch we were going to give him; he did not know what there was to drink or to eat, but he accepted our hospitality such as we had to give him. This gentleman, Mr. Fairlie, seems to be an extreme temperance crank. There is no doubt he did not treat us with the courtesy due to a Minister of the Crown. When I asked him if we might be entertained in the industrial school, he said it was against the rules of the department to allow any liquor to be introduced into the school. I admitted the force of his objection, and said: "Then, Mr. Fairlie, we will have our lunch in the building adjacent to your school; but we propose to entertain the Minister as we are accustomed to entertain gentlemen in his position, and shall not be guided by your wishes as to what we shall eat or drink at our lunch." When we had our lunch in the building adjacent to the school, Mr. Fairlie refused to give us the most ordinary courtesies; he refused to provide hot water for tea, which some of us drank. Some of those present were total abstainers, and they drank tea, and Mr. Fairlie refused to give us hot water even for our tea; and after the lunch was over, when we went into the school-house again, he treated us with discourtesy. He followed that with the attack he made on the Minister of Public Works in the papers—an attack which was copied in the eastern papers all over Canada—in which he stated that we were all on a big spree or jamboree on that occasion. I must say it shows the extreme Christian forbearance of this Government that they submit to an insult of this kind from an official without any complaint. I have formed the opinion, especially after what I have heard in this House of the iniquitous manner in which the Government are treating some of their officials, that so far as my constituency and its surroundings are concerned, the officials have been treated with the most extreme forbearance. Mr. Fairlie not only treated us with discourtesy, but he has spread slanderous statements about the Minister of Public Works. The Minister of Public Works, at that luncheon, was one of the total abstainers. I confess I was not. At the same time, I maintain that we behaved ourselves with the greatest decorum, returning to the city in as good and sober a state of mind as we left it. I do not know that it is necessary for me to say anything more on this matter. I rose for the purpose of adding my testimony to the effect that this statement of Mr. Fairlie was a gross slander on the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to add, Mr. Speaker, just one word to what has been said. I had the pleasure of participating in the trip down to St. Andrew's Rapids, and I wish to direct attention to one or two points that have not been referred to. I may say that the greatest indignation prevailed among the business people of Winnipeg because of the scurrilous letter which this reverend gentleman sent to the paper; and that indignation will be increased when I inform the House that this gentleman first sent that letter to myself for publication in the paper of which I have the honour to be editor. When I read the letter, and saw that it was filled with lies from beginning to end, I declined to publish it. However, I published Mr. Fairlie's denial that he had refused to furnish hot water. I published all of the letter that it was proper to publish, and explained why the balance was not published. Now, this Mr. Fairlie denies in that letter that he refused hot water to the lady who was the caterer. I may say that when that application was first made by the president of the board of trade, Mr. F. H. Mathewson, and by the mayor of Winnipeg, who had just sat down, for permission to have lunch in the school, it was refused, and I think properly refused; and in my paper I commended Mr. Fairlie for refusing to have the lunch in the school, because wines might be used. After the refusal, the president of the board of trade, and I think the mayor, asked him if he would lend a few tables in order that the lunch might be held in the school-house adjoining. This he brusquely refused to do, and compelled that poor woman to cart tables and chairs all the way from Winnipeg, a distance of over eight miles. And this is not the worst. Even when these tables and chairs had been carted down, and the poor lady applied to Mr. Fairlie for hot water he absolutely refused to give it. I have her statement to that effect in her letter which was published in the "Tribune" of Winnipeg. The charge is also, I think, made in Mr. Fairlie's letter that it took two hours and ten minutes to complete that lunch. My recollection is that we were not sitting there more than three-quarters of an hour, or not more than an hour at the most. I sat myself next the Hon. Mr. Tarte, and I can testify that he was a teetotaler, upon that occasion at least, for he drank no strong liquor. But inasmuch as there were a number of Conservatives with us on the trip, I could not say as much for the entire party. What increased the indignation of the people there in connection with this matter was the fact that on the strength of this letter of the Rev. Mr. Fairlie, the statement was sent broadcast throughout the Dominion that the Minister of Public Works had been on a big jamboree at this school inspection. Upon the strength of that report, the "Mail and Empire" was able to describe him in its editorial "as an Eastern Sybarite who carried his wet groceries around with him."

On the question of dismissing public servants who have taken an active part in politics, I have never said a word publicly but have felt very deeply, especially coming, as I do, from the North-west, where, I may say for the information of the House, the party organization which has existed in that country for the last ten or fifteen years has been almost entirely carried on by civil servants, and it is my profound conviction that the Government has shown the utmost forbearance in dealing with these people. I believe that had the case been reversed, had it been the Conservatives who came into power instead of ourselves, they would have dismissed from office for active participation in politics ten officials for every one this Government has dismissed. When I hear hon. members opposite denouncing the Government in such strong language, when I hear them declaiming about the stupendous outrages perpetrated, the utter absurdity and ludicrousness of the thing provokes me to laughter. I believe that there are hundreds of these officials throughout the Dominion to-day who marvel that they have been left in office so long, and for my part I would be inclined to advise the members of the Government to pay very little heed to the denunciations of hon. gentlemen opposite, but to have no hesitation whatever, where it is clearly shown that officials have participated actively in politics, in cutting their heads off.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). As the Minister whose conduct is called into question, it is perhaps fitting that I should say a few words on this subject. I have no doubt that the Government is open to indictment at the hands of my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Cameron) for having been guilty of appointing a Tory to office. We recognize the gravity of the offence which we have committed; and perhaps it will be proper for me to say that if the hon. gentleman will stay his hand and not condemn us too severely, we will try and not offend in that respect very often in the future. In respect of the particular matter under discussion, I simply desire to say that the appointment was made upon the recommendation of the late Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs (Mr. Reed), who, I have no doubt, satisfied himself that the appointment was a proper one and that the gentleman appointed would be an efficient officer. Immediately after I took office, my attention was called to this, and I may say that I was in Winnipeg at the time the occurrence took place and the fact was brought to my notice there that this gentleman's conduct was open to question in regard to this particular matter. And here let me say that I think it is the greatest tribute to the forbearance of the Minister of Public Works that he did not at once demand the dismissal of this officer. I was somewhat surprised that he did not feel it his duty, under the circumstances, to ask for this gentleman's instant dismissal. When the matter was brought to my attention, I spoke to my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, and we agreed that inasmuch as I had no time before the session to carefully investigate the industrial schools of the North-west, or any one of them, it would be well not to deal with this when the matter was fresh and the people were irritated, but to let it rest until I had time to deal with the management of the schools, which otherwise required investigation, which I proposed to make at the close of the session. That is the position in which the matter stands at present. We have determined to look into this matter and see that the official is properly dealt with and that no person shall have cause to complain of the conduct of any officer holding so important a position in the service.

Mr. CRAIG. I do not think the Government will thank the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) for bringing this matter before the House and the country. I think it is an episode which they might very well have desired should be passed over. As recited by the hon. member for West Huron, himself, it is not at all favourable to the Government of the day, and I do not think it will have that effect in the country. Before dealing further with that question, I wish to refer to a few remarks made by the hon. member for West Huron on the subject of dismissals in general, and I repeat that I am a little surprised he should have brought that subject up, because we have been charged over and over again by hon. gentlemen opposite with wasting time in discussing such questions. In view of this charge so frequently made, it will be interesting to the country to learn that to-day it is not this side of the House but the opposite side which has brought up this discussion and delayed us from going into Committee of Supply. But let me call the attention of the House to this fact, that the only reason why we find fault with the Government is this, that when this matter of dismissals was brought to the attention of the House last session, the hon. First Minister rose in his place and made the solemn pledge that in every case, before any one would be dismissed an investigation would be held and the accused—whether charged with offensive partisanship or any other offence—would have full opportunity of defending himself. I hold therefore that every official in the country is justified, just as the House is justified in placing the most implicit confidence in that formal pledge given by the leader of the Government. No pledge could be more solemn. It was made openly in this House, it was made to the country, it was made to the office-holders throughout the Dominion, and therefore we have the right to complain in every case in which it is violated. Now, what does the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) say? He says the Government have been very lenient, he says that where they have dismissed one official, he would have dismissed ten. I heard a few "hear, hear's" in response to that, but am glad I did not hear many, and I hope that is not the prevailing sentiment among hon. gentlemen opposite. I am sure there is no justice in it, I feel confident that no one, no matter how extreme a partisan he may be, would endorse such a proposition. We have been satisfied to accept the position laid down by the hon. First Minister, that when an office-holder is accused of offensive partisanship, and when he has had an opportunity of defending himself, and the charge has been brought home to him, then, and then only, will he be dismissed. I accept this position, although I am free to confess that in my opinion an office-holder should be allowed a certain latitude, and that political partisanship should not be a bar against his holding office unless that partisanship was displayed in an offensive manner. I am surprised to hear the proposition laid down that absolute neutrality in politics is the price of holding office under the Liberal party. I wish that hon. gentlemen opposite would take the trouble to impress this doctrine upon their office-holders in Ontario. I wish they would indoctrinate their own followers in the provinces with this idea and force them to follow the rule that absolute neutrality in politics is the price of holding office. In my own election, for instance, the most active stumper against me was the inspector of licenses for that county. It was he who was the petitioner when my election was protested. I mention this to show how little consistency there is in the party opposite laying down that proposition and enforcing it against office-holders appointed by the late Government, when in Ontario they take no such stand, and not only allow but encourage the office-holders appointed by themselves to display the most active partisanship. Now, to come down to the matter that has been brought before the House by the member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron), I may say that I remember reading about the incident at the time; and, while I had the idea that the Minister of Public Works was a total abstainer, I had no idea that he was indulging even in tea too strongly. Still, I gathered the impression that the party that were with him were having a pretty good time, and that they had taken an ample supply of champagne and whisky and were enjoying these things immensely. Where is the fault that is imputed to Mr. Fairlie? The member for Winnipeg (Mr. Jameson) puts his crime in a very few words: he says that Mr. Fairlie is an extreme temperance crank. I do not know that it is a crime to be an extreme temperance crank. I myself am a total abstainer, although I am not a crank. But I do not think that the majority of the people of the country will find fault with Mr. Fairlie with being an extreme temperance crank. I do not think that hon. gentlemen opposite would like to have it understood that the Liberal party objected to an extreme temperance crank holding office under them. The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) objects to that and thinks that he should be dismissed. What did he do?

Mr. RICHARDSON. He lied.

Mr. CRAIG. I do not know that it is recognized by the Liberal party as a crime for a man to lie. I will not apply that further. But, Sir, what did Mr. Fairlie do? So far as I remember, he did this: The party was going to entertain the Minister of Public Works, and as they were to go near this Indian school they wanted to have luncheon in the school. But Mr. Fairlie, being an extreme temperance crank, as the hon. member for Winnipeg says, refuses to allow that on the grounds that it was against the rules to allow intoxicating liquor in the school. He was willing, I understand, that they should have luncheon there if they would leave the whisky and champagne outside. But you could not separate them from the whisky and champagne. They said: If that is to be left outside, we will stay outside too. And so the member for West Huron says that Mr. Fairlie was so discourteous as to refuse to allow them to have luncheon in the school, with whisky and champagne as part of the refreshments. Now I say, in all seriousness, that Mr. Fairlie acted as he should have acted in that case, that he carried out his instructions to the letter and that he deserves not dismissal but praise, that he deserves an encomium from the Minister of Public Works for doing as he did. I am sure that any man who does his duty, who obeys his orders, should not be visited with punishment. Had he obeyed his orders even against the head of his own department, he would deserve praise for his courage and consistency. If Mr. Fairlie had allowed this party to have lunched in the Indian school, with whisky and champagne as accompaniments of that lunch, he should be dismissed, as he would not be worthy to occupy his present position. But a great point is made of the fact that Mr. Fairlie wrote a letter. It is said that he represented this affair as what is called a jamboree. But Mr. Fairlie did not call it a jamboree. We know what editors are. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) knows what editors are. If that hon. gentleman had received a letter like this that might reflect against some member of the Conservative party, he might say that the incident referred to was a jamboree, but that would not make the writer of the letter say so. Well, it is said that Mr. Fairlie lied in that letter. I doubt if it can be shown that he did not tell the exact truth. I believe he did, or that he intended to tell the exact truth. I say he deserves credit for writing that letter, because he had been misrepresented in regard to this matter, and this was his defence. The question is, is the letter true?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No.

Mr. CRAIG. The hon. member for Lisgar says it is not true. Well, now I think that this is one of those cases where investigation is required. Some say that the letter is true, some that it is not true. How are we going to decide? I was very much amused, and the House was amused, with the remarks made by the hon. member for Lisgar, when that hon. gentleman said that Mr. Fairlie ought to be dismissed because he had refused to give hot water for tea.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not say that he ought to be dismissed because he refused to give hot water for tea. I say he ought to be dismissed because he lied in his letter and slandered the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. CRAIG. I heard some remark of that kind—that he ought to be dismissed for discourtesy, and one way in which it was said he had shown discourtesy was that he refused to give hot water for tea. Now, Mr. Fairlie denies that. Even had he refused hot water, he might have been justified as an extreme temperance crank, for he might have been afraid that they would use it for whisky, and he did not want to be an abettor in that. He refused tables, we are told. It is coming down to pretty small matter to say that a man should be dismissed from an important office of this kind because he refused tables and hot water for a luncheon party. The whole question is: Did Mr. Fairlie, in what he did, carry out his instructions in refusing to allow whisky and champagne to be taken in that industrial school? Does he conduct the affairs of the school generally in a proper manner? If he has carried out his instructions, if he conducts the school in a proper manner, let him be commended. If it is said that he did not carry out his instructions or that his administration is not satisfactory, let that matter be investigated and the case decided fairly and justly.

Mr. FLINT. As a total abstainer and one representing that element in the total abstinence party who endeavour on all occasions to act the part of gentlemen in our social relations with others who do not take precisely the same view of this subject that we do ourselves, I think this discussion, and the newspaper extracts that have been read amply prove that, whatever else the Rev. Mr. Fairlie may be, he is not a gentleman. He did not betray in any portion of his conduct as it has been recounted here the instincts of a gentleman in his treatment of these distinguished men who visited his school. If every man who is a total abstainer and who happens, in the intercourse of society, to mingle with others who partake of wine and champagne is to be stigmatized as associated with drunkards and with persons who go on what are called jamborees when they associate together in luncheons, the comments in Mr. Fairlie's letter might be justified. I was amused at the ironical laughter and cheers from the other side of the House whenever champagne or whisky or hot water was mentioned, these cheers and this laughter coming from gentlemen who every day mingle in the best social life of Ottawa, where hot water and champagne and whisky at times are used without the slightest intimation or hint or an impropriety on the part of those who use them. I was surprised that gentlemen who see such refreshments customarily used in best society should uphold a man, whether he be a total abstainer or whatever he may be, who would endeavour in the public press to give the impression that simply because certain gentlemen use these refreshments or were present when they were used, they were a party of rowdies and were guilty of improper conduct. The only inference to be drawn from the letter of Mr. Fairlie, the inference that was drawn, as shown by the comments of the Tory press throughout Nova Scotia and elsewhere, was that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works was one of the most guilty parties in the matter in countenancing and taking part in what is known in slang phrase as a jamboree. There is no reason why the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Craig) or myself, or any other of my hon. friends who are total abstainers, might not have been joined in that condemnation if we had by accident accompanied that party visiting the industrial school. But I must say that had I been a Minister of the Crown, had I been a simple member of this Parliament supporting this Government, and been of that party, and seen the use that was made of the letter of the Rev. Mr. Fairlie, and been a witness of the discourtesy, the gross and unpardonable discourtesy, of a public servant in his treatment of these gentlemen, I would have had his official head in twenty-four hours. I say it is intolerable that a public man should be treated in this way, and I think that the whole course and conduct of this gentleman shows that he purposely did all he could to make the visit of these gentlemen as disagreeable as possible. Even if these gentlemen did call for hot water for the liquor which they considered perfectly proper to partake of, what business was it of his to interfere with their enjoyment? Was he to assume that they were guilty of improper conduct unworthy in a public school? My hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) has said in regard to his refusal of the school-room for the purpose of luncheon that it might be justifiable on other grounds, and that he might in a dignified manner pleaded the rules of the department; but when the rest of his conduct is exhibited, his gross refusal of the ordinary decencies of life to gentlemen visiting the school from the city, his conduct was most censurable. The Minister of the Crown was the guest of the city of Winnipeg on that occasion, and aside from the fact of his subsequently writing this absolutely false letter on the subject, I think it was the duty of the Government to have dismissed that man, and I for one would heartily have supported the Administration in such dismissal.

Mr. FLINT.

Mr. SPROULE. I would not say anything on this question but for the fact that I have been well acquainted with the Rev. Mr. Fairlie for several years before he went out to the North-west. I do not know by whom he was appointed or recommended, but I do know that in my section of the country he was for a length of time a very much respected and respectable member of the Episcopal Church, and was in charge of a congregation there. I also know that he had strong temperance sentiments; but that he offensively imposed them on others, I never heard until this incident. Now, I regret to hear so much said against him, because I am quite sure that it will not be accepted by those who are acquainted with that gentleman. I am not here to defend his conduct, I never saw that letter, and I am not able to say whether it contained lies or truth; but from my knowledge of the man, knowing that he was in charge of an industrial school, there for the purpose of helping to civilize an uncivilized people, and to educate the rising generation, I have no doubt at all, from what I know of him, that he assumed it to be his duty as far as possible to cultivate and improve their moral sentiments and religious tone as much as he did to educate them in other lines; and that he regarded it as important to set before them good examples, and to avoid as far as possible that any bad example should be shown them. I have no doubt that he endeavoured to carry out the instructions that were given him when he was put in charge of that school to the best of his knowledge and belief. He might have gone beyond what some other men would have done on this occasion, but knowing him as I have done for so long a time, and believing him to be a respectable and intelligent member of the Episcopal Church, and a strong temperance man, and withal a gentleman so far as I ever knew or heard of him, I would be very sorry to believe that he intentionally did what has been attributed to him as indefensible conduct. I must confess that when I heard of the incident, I was pleased to know he did his duty. I noticed that the Minister of Public Works paid no attention to it afterwards, but left him alone, and I thought it was really very much to his credit that he did so. If Mr. Fairlie did what was wrong, it would react upon himself more than it would upon the Minister of Public Works. Amongst the temperance people of this country, and where temperance sentiment is strong, and amongst the ministers of the gospel of this country, I do not think they are very likely to condemn the Rev. Mr. Fairlie because he tried to set a good example before the rising generation, and to carry out what he believed to be his instructions when he was put in charge of that industrial school.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would ask the hon. member from Grey if he is aware that his own brother, Alderman Sproule of Winnipeg, accompanied that party down the river and participated in that lunch, and further, that his own brother who is a total abstainer, wrote a letter to a Winnipeg paper expressing the utmost indignation and disgust at the conduct of that gentleman, and at the untruth contained in that very letter that was read this afternoon.

Mr. SPROULE. That may all be, but I am quite sure that I may safely say that if he accompanied that crowd he would neither endorse the use of liquor or use it himself. But as to the correctness of what appeared in that letter, I know nothing about it. I am not denying the contention of those who say that it contained a falsehood, nor am I defending the letter, because I never saw it. I am only speaking of the gentleman as I knew him in the past, and because I believe him to be an honest, Christian man.

Mr. BERGERON. I did not intend to say anything about the Fairlie matter, because I know nothing of it. If this discussion has been started by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) with the object of giving a certificate to my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, I may take the occasion of saying that I am happy to bear testimony to the fact that although I have not known the hon. gentleman to be a teetotaler, I have known him to be a very moderate drinker; and as far as smoking is concerned, I know that not only does he not smoke himself, but he hates the company of smokers. But it was not to say this that I now claim the indulgence of the House. I intended yesterday, when this question of dismissals was before the House, to give some few cases which happened in the riding which I have the honour to represent; but afterwards, having heard so much about dismissals, I was afraid that the House might be tired, and I did not speak. But since the question comes up again, it may be interesting to the House to know some cases that have occurred, and which I will give in answer to the reasons advanced by hon. gentlemen opposite who think that the Government should have dismissed more employees than they have done, and also in answer to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), who is astonished at the forbearance of the Government in making, as he says, so few dismissals. Now, if my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has been generous as was claimed by the Minister of the Interior a moment ago in the case of Mr. Fairlie, I am afraid that he has not been quite so generous in the cases of a number of poor employees in the county of Beauharnois. Since the session has commenced, I have asked the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals for his reasons for the dismissals of those employees on the canal, and every time the Minister of Railways and Canals or the Postmaster General have answered that they were dismissed summarily without any investigation, upon the recommendation of the hon. Minister of Public Works. Now, yesterday I heard my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Lister) say that the Government did not intend to introduce the spoils system into this country. Mr. Speaker, allow me to say that the spoils system has already been brought into the Dominion of Canada, for if it is not the spoils system, I would like to know what else to call the dismissal of Conservative employees upon the public works. I am aware, both from personal knowledge and from hearsay, that in my own district employees have been dismissed for the sole reasons that they had been appointed by the Conservative Administration, and because they went to the polls and voted on the 23rd of June last. They were men who had taken no more share in elections than the employees of this House, some of them had not even gone to public meetings, but they were dismissed simply to make places for partisans. When I say that the spoils system has been imported into this country, I mean this: That three lockmasters on the Beauharnois Canal have been dismissed and have been replaced by the most active and offensive partisans belonging to the party of hon. gentlemen opposite. The Minister of Public Works, when he went into the county the other day, must have heard that the men who were recently appointed have been working night and day in the recent provincial elections that took place on the 11th of May. The lockmaster of lock No. 6, whose lock was broken the other day by the steamer "Ocean," after being appointed on the 1st of May, was at the town of Beauharnois on the 4th of May, the day of the nomination, without the permission of his superintendent, having left his work and left his lock, and was serving liquor behind the bar of a hotel in the town of Beauharnois. Hon. gentlemen opposite might not call that active and offensive partisanship, but everybody knew there what it meant.

The postmaster at Beauharnois, Mr. Laurin, who has replaced Mr. Doutre, the old postmaster, on the recommendation of the Minister of Public Works, was an active and offensive partisan during the last elections. When I was at Valleyfield the other day, the postmaster, Mr. Pitre, received a letter telling him to transfer the post office into other hands. The original letter is in French, and I give a translation:

Post Office Inspector's Office,
Montreal, May 8th, 1897.

Mr. D. Pitre, Valleyfield, P.Q.

Sir,—I am just in receipt from the Post Office Department of a letter informing me of the transfer of the post office to Mr. E. Dion, of your locality, who has been appointed in your stead. The transfer of the office will soon be made by one of the officers of the department.

You will please comply with this notice. In the meantime, please make arrangements to hand over to your successor, through this officer, the stamps and the money and all that is now used for the working of your office.

J. W. BAIN,
Post Office Inspector.

I call on the Minister of Public Works, who now knows every one there, to state who is this E. Dion, to whom the office has been transferred. In my opinion he is the most active and offensive partisan—I do not say he is not a respectable man—in the whole county of Beauharnois on the other side of politics. The hon. Minister knows it. Probably he is the man who helped the hon. gentleman in his election more than any other.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Was he in the public service?

Mr. BERGERON. If the hon. gentleman wishes to interrupt me he must take off his hat. The hon. gentleman is in the habit of interrupting members, and he should not do it without taking off his hat. He may speak when I have finished, if he pleases. I was speaking about the new postmaster, and was saying that during the late election, even after he was appointed—this letter is dated 8th May—he was working probably more than any one else. Not only was that the case at the election in June, but during the last local election. Is it not apparent that when any person is so appointed and the spoils system is introduced, so soon as another Administration comes into power this man would have to go purely and simply for the reason that he was an active and offensive partisan? It is evident that the spoils system has now been introduced into this country. I want to bring to the attention of the House a matter which I think will strike forcibly every hon. member on both sides. We have heard very much about the public service and in regard to public servants being allowed, as the Prime Minister declared last session, to give their votes like honest and respectable men, and that every public servant is allowed to go and vote according to his conscience. This declaration was made by the Prime Minister in this House. Have public employees been allowed to do so? Have they been allowed to go like honest and respectable men and put their ballots in the electoral box? No. In Beauharnois there are 75 employees on the canal. Those employees are nearly all Conservatives, having been appointed on my recommendations during the eighteen years during which I had the patronage of the county. When I became a member of Parliament one-half of the employees on the canal had been appointed by the Liberals. Not one of those employees was dismissed by a Conservative Government or their dismissal asked by myself. Their places have been made vacant by death or from officers being superannuated at their own request. Here is a letter sent by the Liberal committee in Beauharnois to every one of the employees on the Beauharnois Canal. The original is in French, and I give a translation:

Beauharnois, 10th May, 1897.

Sir,—I am asked to inform you, that it would be better for you not to vote at the election which takes place to-morrow, for, in doing so, you risk to lose your place.

It is left to you to act in your interest.

By order,

THE COMMITTEE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier).
By whom is it signed?

Mr. BERGERON. "The Committee."

The PRIME MINISTER. Then there is no signature?

Mr. BERGERON. I think the Minister of Public Works knows the writing. This letter, I say, was sent to every man on the canal. We all know human nature. The next day every one of those employees voted against the Conservative candidate. They said they wanted to save their positions. I do not know but that stronger proof could be furnished in the form of affidavits made by some of the men stating that they would vote for Mr. Bisson. Has it come down to this, that employees performing their duty, working hard night or day for $1.25, and having to pay their share of taxes and perform their duties as ordinary citizens, and especially after they have been granted the right to vote, should be treated like slaves, and threatened with dismissal unless they support the powers that be. If such be the case, those men should not have the right to vote, because their judgment is biased: they cannot vote as honest men, but are obliged to cast their votes for a certain candidate in order to hold the positions they occupy. I am reminded that the Premier last session declared on the floor of Parliament that no man should be dismissed unless an investigation was granted and held, so that the charge might be investigated. I declare to my hon. friend now that three lockmasters on the Beauharnois Canal were summarily dismissed without more than two days' notice at the end of April, two or three days before the 1st of May; and I tell him further, that some of those men who had occupied houses for ten or fifteen years, received notice that they had to be abandoned before the 1st of May for new occupants. No reason was given for these dismissals, no investigation was held, they were purely and simply made on the recommendation of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works given to the Minister of Railways and Canals. Some of those men had worked on the canal eighteen years and had always efficiently performed their duty. This fact can be ascertained by asking the superintendent, the engineer in Montreal or Mr. Schreiber, and they will testify that the men have all performed their duty; and in fact the only fault that can be found is that at elections they voted Conservative, having been appointed by a Conservative Administration. I repeat that I am very much surprised such action should be allowed after the distinct and emphatic statement made and the position taken last year by the Premier on this subject. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) yesterday spoke of the employees of the canal as if they were ordinary day labourers, stating that they could be dismissed when the Government wished and replaced whenever their services were required. So far as I know the position of these men on the Beauharnois Canal has never been understood in that way. They have been appointed during good behaviour, and it has always been perfectly understood in the fall that they would be employed next spring. I heard the member for Welland make a statement which shows that the same system prevails on the Welland Canal. These men sometimes built small houses for their accommodation. This was particularly the case with the fourth lockman appointed on the Beauharnois Canal. The desire was expressed that the same number of lockmen should be appointed on the Beauharnois as worked on the Lachine, Cornwall and other canals, and the present leader of the Opposition, when he occupied the position of Minister of Railways and Canals, thought it an act of justice to the employees of the Beauharnois Canal that the same number of men should be employed. Therefore, a fourth lockman was appointed on each lock, and these men had to build their own houses. They did so. What sum can those men be able to obtain for their houses to-day, when they are built far away from villages, as we all know is the case with houses near canal locks? These men were appointed during good behaviour, and so long as they performed their duty to the satisfaction of the superintending engineer. Some of them had been there as long as thirty years, and others who were superannuated since I became a member of Parliament, were employed for forty years and had educated and reared their families there. It is looked upon as a piece of tyranny to turn these men out on the streets, merely for the reasons which have been stated in this House. The other day another man was dismissed named Laderoute, who has been connected with the canal for twenty-five years. He was an honest and respectable man who received $1.75 a day, and who always did his duty faithfully. I suppose we will be told that that dismissal was in the public interest and in the interest of economy but, nevertheless, that man has been replaced by two men. A week ago to-day I was driving along the Beauharnois Canal going to a public meeting, when I saw a gang of eighty men there with two foremen, and one-half of them were watching the other half doing nothing. One of the foremen is named Michel Cousineau whom my friend (Mr. Tarte) will remember, and Cousineau is about the most violent and insulting Liberal politician in the county of Beauharnois. The other foreman was an old employee named Chevalier whom they have made foreman since Laderoute was dismissed. I mention this to show that the spoils system has been introduced by the present Government. Every public employee, whether here in Ottawa or on the Beauharnois Canal, is afraid of losing his position the next morning. Although they may be perfectly convinced they have done their duty, although they may have been diligent and efficient public employees, yet every one of them is afraid of being kicked out in the morning for political reasons. It is a bad thing for Canada that the Government introduced this spoils system, because public employees will take means to provide for themselves, fearing that when the next Government comes into power they will lose their positions. The hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) said he was surprised that more public employees had not been dismissed, and the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) asked: What would have happened if the Conservatives had come into power last June, instead of the Liberals? I will tell what did happen when the Conservatives got into power before, and I will emphasize what I said the other day for the benefit of the Minister of Public Works who is now in his seat. When that hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) was on the same side of politics as I am, there was a man in the county of Beauharnois who insulted the Conservative party on the hustings, who wrote in the papers against them, who went about speaking against them, and who was a most violent Liberal politician. His name was Mr. Beique, and he was the superintendent on the Beauharnois Canal. He called Sir John Macdonald names which, taking into consideration the audience he was addressing, were most damaging. He called Sir John Macdonald an old Orangeman, an old Freemason, said that he had been the greatest enemy of Roman Catholics and French Canadians, and described Sir Hector Langevin as a thief, and other names just as sweet. That man had been appointed on the canal by Sir A. A. Dorion under the Mackenzie Administration. Well, was he dismissed when the Conservatives came into power on the 17th September, 1878? No, Sir. The Liberals of the county were asking not to dismiss him because he was a poor man; they acknowledged that he was guilty but they pleaded that he should be retained. The Conservatives were asking—just like, I suppose, to-day the Liberals are pestering the lives out of my hon. friends opposite—that he should be put out of his position. I took a middle course, and at the suggestion of the then Minister of Railways and Canals (Sir Charles Tupper), an investigation was granted to Mr. Beique. As far as the discharge of his duties were concerned there was nothing particular against him, although charges might have been brought: but it was admitted and proven that he had taken a violent and offensive part in the elections. Now, Sir, let me tell this to the House. Sir Charles Tupper, then Minister of Railways and Canals, asked me not to press for the dismissal of Mr. Beique. He said to me: If you wish him dismissed, of course we will do it, but I am an older politician than you, and if you take my advice you will not have him dismissed, because he will behave better in future under the Conservative Government, and it would be a bad precedent to have any dismissals.

Mr. DESMARAIS. Was that the only reason given at the time?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes.

Mr. DESMARAIS. I think there was another.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to hear it.

Mr. DESMARAIS. Very well; at the time Mr. Mousseau became Prime Minister of the province of Quebec, he wished, in order to have his successor elected in the county of Bagot, that Mr. Beique would not be dismissed. I was a candidate in Bagot, not supported by some of the leaders who made the arrangement, and so Mr. Mousseau, to carry out his promise, obtained the non-dismissal of Mr. Beique.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. Hon. gentlemen opposite had better wait a moment before applauding. My hon. friend (Mr. Desmarais) is entirely mistaken. The Beique affair which I speak of happened in 1880, and Mr. Mousseau only went to Quebec in 1883. The whole thing was settled long before that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DESMARAIS. There were two inquiries?

Mr. BERGERON. There was only one.

Mr. DESMARAIS. And the arrangement was communicated to me by Mr. Mousseau himself.

Mr. BERGERON. That does not make any difference, because I tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Desmarais) that the whole matter to which I refer was settled in 1880, as can be seen by the records of the Department of Railways and Canals. It would perhaps be diplomatic for Mr. Mousseau to do such a thing, but the question as to whether Mr. Beique should be dismissed or not was settled in 1880 by the then Minister of Railways and Canals (Sir Charles Tupper), who is now chief of the Opposition. I mention these things to bring to the notice of my hon. friend the Premier, the pledge which he gave last year that no employee should be dismissed without investigation, and I also bring it to the attention of the House to show that if the Minister of Public Works has been lenient towards Mr. Fairlie, he has been very severe towards the employees of the Beauharnois Canal.

Mr. BERGERON.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is as well that I should say a word or two in answer to the speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron). In the last federal election I was a candidate against him. He made a good fight and I was defeated, but I was defeated because of these two things: First, one hundred of the men who were in favour of me were locked up on polling day and could not get out to vote; and, second, the employees of the Beauharnois Canal, with scarcely any exception whatever, were an organized gang which followed me from parish to parish and insulted me in the most outrageous manner. I do not complain of having been defeated; it did not kill me, and if my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) had not made the speech that he has just delivered, he would have been a little more just. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) will readily admit that I was not severe upon his friends. Some of them were dismissed, but a great many more should have been. I could not stand eight or ten of the men who insulted me in the most violent manner, and I asked that they be dismissed, just to give an example to the other employees that they had to behave themselves. Now, Sir, I say this, and my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) knows it just as well as I do, I was followed from hustings to hustings, from place to place, by the employees of the Beauharnois Canal, who yelled at me and insulted me, calling me a thief and a traitor and a renegade, and all that sort of business. Well, Sir, I did not dismiss them, although I know them by sight, nearly every one of them, and my hon. friend does too; and I am not going to do so—perhaps not many more, because I am not a vindictive man in any way. Moreover, I am free to say this much, that the employees of the canal on that occasion, a great many of them, were forced to do what they have done. I have to draw the line somewhere. In my department there are men who have taken a most active part in the last elections: I know that well; but when they came to me and represented to me that they had been instructed to do this and that, I drew the line there, and did not dismiss them, and I think I did right. When an employee is instructed to do a thing, and does it, if it is not an immorality, he is not guilty. That is the rule I follow. In the county of Beauharnois, I say again, I have been insulted in a most outrageous manner.

Mr. BERGERON. Not by those men.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, by those men. I have seen every one of them at the foot of the hustings laughing at me. I told them: "On the 23rd of June we will be in power, and you should not insult me, for I will then have to deal with you." They did not believe me, they were so sure of the election. But now times have changed, and my hon. friend cannot, nor can this honourable House, expect that we shall be obliged to keep in office all our opponents. But my hon. friend complains that during the last local election some of the employees of the canal have been threatened, and he has just handed me a letter. I do not know the handwriting, but I beg to say immediately that this letter is a most outrageous letter. My instructions in the department are in black and white. When the elections came, I instructed my chief officers to issue instructions to all the branches to this effect, that all my employees, whatever might be their political persuasion, were perfectly free to vote; and I did not do anything else. I claim that a man who threatens another man because he exercises his right to vote is not fit to be an elector. My hon. friend mentions my son. I hope my son has not dishonoured my name. I asked him, because I heard that the accusation had been made against him, that he had threatened men with dismissal if they did not vote for Mr. Bisson. He gave me his word of honour—and so far he has never deceived me—that there was not a word of truth in that, and I believe him. If my hon. friend can produce evidence that my son has been guilty of such an offence, I will be the first man to apologize before this House; but he has not done so. Some of the friends of my hon. friend went to him, I know—one of them especially—and said to him, "I am a Conservative, and I would like to vote." My son answered, "You are perfectly free to vote; but you know what accusations might be brought against you. I know that my father will never ask that you be dismissed, but perhaps it would be just as well for you not to vote."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very frank about it—he gave me that explanation. The man went and voted, and he will not be dismissed; he need not fear anything. I need not say much more about the Beauharnois cases. My hon. friend knows right well that I could dismiss fifty more of them.

Mr. BERGERON. Every one of them?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, with a few exceptions.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend will do me a great favour by naming the exceptions, because I intend to show the House, if he will allow me, that he is entirely mistaken.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not prepared to go into detail; but my hon. friend knows that during that election I was insulted from hustings to hustings. I could dismiss every one of them, and would be quite justified in so doing. But I will not do it. There may be a few more heads to go, but not many.

Coming to this jamboree at Winnipeg, I have only one word to add. As has been stated, I had the pleasure of visiting the city of Winnipeg, and I was invited by the members of the city council and the city board of trade to visit St. Andrew's Rapids. I was the guest of the city and the board of trade; the most important business men of the city, besides members of the local government were there. I was invited to lunch. We had lunch in a public school, just opposite to the industrial school. I did not know before the lunch was over one word of what has been known since. I may say that I was surprised not to be invited to visit the industrial school, as I was a Minister, and rightly or wrongly I was there. I made up my mind that it was my duty to visit the school, and I knocked at the door. The door was opened, and I visited the school. I may say that the school was in very bad order indeed. But I had nothing to say against Mr. Fairlie, because he explained that he had been called up there only a few days before. When the visit was over, Mr. Fairlie took me apart and told me of this incident. He said: One of your friends telephoned me asking for the use of one of the rooms of the school. I asked him if liquor was to be served, and he answered that it was. I told him that I was a total abstainer, and I thought it was a great deal better not to allow him the use of the school." I said to Mr. Fairlie, "You did perfectly right." I did not use one word of reproach against him, and I do not bring any reproach against him to-day. But what I cannot understand is the letter that he wrote. The gentlemen who were at lunch with me were gentlemen in the true sense of the word. I was not the man insulted, and I did not feel insulted, by the letter he wrote. A very bad use was made of the letter. My friends of the Tory press intimated that I was drunk—that I was drunk during that whole trip. Well, one slander more or less I do not care for. It is all over now, and I do not ask for the dismissal of Mr. Fairlie, because I think he was a great deal more to be pitied than blamed. The lunch lasted about three-quarters of an hour; it was the meal of gentlemen lunching together. The letter which Mr. Fairlie wrote is false from beginning to end. I thought he had apologized for it, and there may still be time for him to apologize for it. He made a great mistake. But he may have been misled, he may have been told that there was an excessive use of liquor there, and for all those reasons, and because I did not bother very much about it, I did not ask for his dismissal. But I think that my hon. friends opposite should join with us in giving those employees who will not behave themselves a lesson. My hon. friends are altogether mistaken when they say we are eager for dismissals. They are wrong. There is no pleasure nor is there any political benefit in dismissing people. I am not anxious for dismissals, but, at the same time, I am sure my hon. friends will agree with me that the public service of this country should be faithful and respectful to us. That is all we ask. I think it is about time there was an end to these discussions about dismissals. My hon. friends opposite surely cannot expect to intimidate us, and they may rest assured that we will do our duty and nothing more.

Mr. BERGERON. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, and the consent of the House, I would like to say just a word in reply to my hon. friend.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman can say it in committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has been too often in this Chair not to know that he cannot do so without the consent of the House.

Mr. BERGERON. I have only a word to say, and I have seen this privilege given several gentlemen in this discussion, and I do not think that because I have been in the Chair, I should be refused the same privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman may make an explanation, but I understood he intended going further.

Mr. BERGERON. I merely wish to make an explanation. My hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) spoke somewhat passionately in reply to some statements concerning his son, and I can very well understand his doing so, and I wish to say that I have no desire of charging the hon. gentleman's son with any wrong-doing. I simply wished to recite the facts. The hon. gentleman's son was in Valleyfield, and he happened to be in the Larocque House at the same time that I was. He was in a room there, and my hon. friend, of course, is aware that I would not go there to see what was taking place, but there was no secrecy about it, the employees of the canal went into this room one after another, and the landlord of the hotel mentioned the fact to me and said that Mr. Tarte, jr., was confessing them. These men were brought in there and the consequence was that the next day they voted for the Liberal candidate and against their own convictions. I wish it to be understood that I do not say my hon. friend would have done an injustice wittingly, but I say that if he had granted an investigation—not merely an investigation by Mr. Mercier with his little bench, but an investigation by a judge or somebody in a position to make a proper inquiry—he would have found out that Cardinal. Rufiange, Mathieu and Julien, Danis, Lefebvre and Monette, the men who were dismissed and who were permanent employees never took any active part in politics. He would have found that not one of them ever opened his mouth in any public meeting. I make the declaration here that if he grants an investigation, these men will prove by the evidence of the hon. gentleman's own Liberal friends that they have not done so. I do not say that some others may not have done so, but these men have not, and my hon. friend has been misled into recommending their dismissal without having the facts properly before him. I repeat to him that if an investigation, such as was promised by the hon. First Minister were granted, these men would be still at work.

Mr. McCLURE. I have listened to a number of debates during the short time I have sat here on this question of dismissals, and in the course of every one of them. I have heard members complain that the spoils system is being introduced into this country. I have waited, expecting that somebody would make the statement which was made here to-day, that the spoils system has long been introduced into this country. We have recognized in the maritime provinces, for a number of years, that we have been working under the spoils system. I would ask these hon. gentlemen who are complaining of the number of dismissals to take into account the fact that we are placed in a somewhat peculiar position as regards the civil service of this country. It is very easy to make comparisons, it is very easy to say that the Conservative party did not make such wholesale dismissals as the Liberals are now asking, but I would call the attention of hon. gentlemen to this fact, that when the Conservative party came into power in 1878, they were in a very different position from that in which the Liberal party stands to-day. There had been a Liberal Administration in power, it is true, but only for four years, and the Conservative and Liberal members, from the maritime provinces at least, will bear me out in saying that during the four years of the Mackenzie Administration there was no such thing as wholesale dismissals known, and more than one Conservative has made the statement publicly that one reason why the Mackenzie Administration was defeated was because they left their enemies in office. Now, when the Liberal party came into power, they found themselves in this peculiar position. In the county of Colchester, which I have the honour to represent, the Conservative party organizers and the civil servants of the Dominion have been practically one and the same. When we fought the Conservative party in the county of Colchester, with that party unaided by the civil servants, we defeated them, but when we had to fight them with the power and patronage of the Government against us, they defeated us by majorities of hundreds. I well recollect the evening of the 23rd of June. There were some 400 Government employees who voted in the town of Truro on that occasion, and I could give the House the names, not of ten or twenty, but of a hundred employees of the Government in that town, honourable men whose word I respect, who told me that on that occasion they cast their vote against me because they had been taught to believe during years that if they did not vote Tory they would lose their situations. This Government, on taking office, found that the civil service of the country had been organized against them as a party machine, they found that not only were the civil servants active workers against them, but that down in our part of the country, the doctrine among them seemed to be that they drew their pay, not so much for the work they did for the country as for the aid they gave the Tory party, and I could point to cases in Colchester where they never did any work for the country but a great deal for the party. And since this Government has come into power almost all the changes in that county have been directed in the abolishing, not partisan officials, but offices created for the purpose of paying salary to officials in order that they might do party work. It is all very well for these gentlemen to-day to protest against the introduction of the spoils system. It is all very well for them to lift up their voices loudly against the dismissal of public servants, when for eighteen years they have been engaged in the work of filling every office in the country with their own friends, and have kept them in those offices in order that they might do some service in the future as they did in the past for the party that gave them those offices. I am not asking for wholesale dismissals. I am not clamouring for dismissals of these men, because I recognize that many of them who acted as offensive partisans in the last election did so from necessity, and I am willing they should be given an opportunity to repent, and many of them have repented and shown proofs of repentance by casting their votes on the Liberal side. I am prepared to forgive them if they continue to cast their votes for the Conservative party, but I say that no civil servant should be forgiven if he so far forgets his duty to his country as to give his first service to his party and the second to the country that pays him. I say we have had the spoils system in Canada and hon. gentlemen opposite are reaping the fruits of it. I say if it has become necessary, in order to purify the public service and to expel the spoils system from this country, that certain public officials should be dismissed, let them take their medicine. This dismissal of public servants is not the introduction of the spoils system, but it is the expelling of the spoils system. It is getting down to a solid basis. While we say that no man should be dismissed because of the party to which he belongs, it is time that we should preach the other doctrine that no man shall be held in office because of the party to which he belongs.

Mr. DAVIN. I sympathize heartily with the proposition laid down by the hon. gentleman who has with eloquence addressed the House for the first time, but I may point out that it is the exact opposite of the proposition of the hon. gentleman who opened this debate! My hon. friend from West Huron (Mr. Cameron) laid down that because Mr. Fairlie was a Tory, it was very wrong to appoint him. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to a more serious view of this question than has yet been presented. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) has taken a very proper course; and that taken by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) up to the present moment, will commend itself to every just-minded man. But we have here to-day one of the most extraordinary spectacles that have ever been seen since the great temperance movement began. The hon. member for West Huron makes an indictment against Mr. Fairlie, a reverend gentleman, because when a Minister of the Crown went down to the Rupert Land industrial school, of which he is principal, he did not place his school at the disposal of the statesman and his friends, for a lunch at which intoxicants would be used. You will observe, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister of Public Works does not endorse the charge. On the contrary, he says that when Mr. Fairlie told him what had happened, how he had refused to allow intoxicants to be brought into the school, he said: You did perfectly right. But now we have another doctrine which, however, the Minister of the Interior does not seem to have endorsed, and we have an extraordinary proposition laid down by my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), who is the spokesman of the Dominion Alliance in this House. I would call his attention to it, because I am perfectly certain he uttered the proposition in his sober moments. That proposition is that a strict teetotaler, who is also the principal of an Indian school, is no gentleman if he refuses to lay his school room at the disposal of gentlemen, who want to drink moderately and as gentlemen, whisky and champagne.

Mr. FLINT. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) is stating what he attributes to me, I desire to say that I never made any such statement. I stated distinctly, in so many words, that in regard to his declining to allow the school room to be used for the lunch, Mr. Fairlie was quite right. I condemn him for his letter and for his misrepresentations of the Minister, as well as for his discourtesy.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend will see what he said in "Hansard" to-morrow. What he is aghast at is the terrible proposition he laid down when I put it before him in its nakedness. But he was not aghast at it when he stated it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) will notice that the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) has repudiated that statement.

Mr. DAVIN. Of course I accept the hon. gentleman's repudiation. What I say in my own way is that he repudiates it because he shrinks aghast from it when I put it before him. I accept his statement. Let me point out what the hon. gentleman said. If he will remember, he said something like this: That Mr. Fairlie was no gentleman because those of us who are teetotalers and mix in the best society cannot mix in that society without meeting with people who drink champagne. My hon. friend (Mr. Flint) nods his head in endorsement of what I say. What is the point of that if it is not that Mr. Fairlie did not behave like a gentleman because he resented the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Jameson), then mayor of the city of Winnipeg, that a lunch at which champagne and whisky would be drunk should be served in the school? My hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) spoke somewhat harshly of this gentleman. We have the statement from the mayor of Winnipeg of that time that down they went prepared to give a lunch of the kind usually given by the most hospitable city of the west. We know what Winnipeg is—it is a hospitable city. My hon. friend (Mr. Jameson), whom I have long known, is a man of large heart and genial and kindly disposition, and, no doubt, he was determined to do honour to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte). But let me point out that, the very moment they brought intoxicants of any kind—champagne, claret, no matter how gentlemanly the drink—into this school, they committed an offence against the Indian Act and placed themselves within the clutches of the criminal law. If Mr. Fairlie had consented to what the mayor of Winnipeg at that time proposed and had allowed them to lunch in the school, which is Indian territory where some sixty Indian youths are being educated, there is not a man who sat down to the table but would have been guilty of a breach of the Indian Act. Even my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) himself, merely sitting down at the table, and even though he were not drinking intoxicants, would be sanctioning their use and would be brought under its ban. To have in one's possession a vessel that had contained intoxicants would do this. And we are told, forsooth, that when a Minister of the Crown—who does not resent it himself—goes to this school and the person who is entertaining him is not allowed to break the law, the public officer who refused to sanction a breach of the law must be condemned! Why, my hon. friend from Lisgar ought to have been thankful to him, because he too was of the party, and he too would have broken the criminal law if Mr. Fairlie had not known what was his duty as principal of the school.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I distinctly stated from my place here that I approved of Mr. Fairlie's action in declining to allow wines to come into the school. The very day after the incident I wrote an article in my own paper in which I distinctly said that I commended him for it, for I honestly believed that it was a commendable action.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, an account of that visit appeared in the "Tribune" of the 27th, an account which is evidently written by somebody who was irritated at what took place:

At St. Andrew's, the party called on John McDougall, the genial sergeant-at-arms, and were hospitably entertained. John, who always does the right thing, presented Mr. Tarte with a breast-pin—an Indian arrow point, mounted on gold, which the Minister will regard as a precious souvenir.

I may say in passing, that if the genial John McDougall had remembered what was the most prominent feature of the administration of the Minister of Public Works, and had divined with insight his ministerial character, he would have presented him, not with an arrow head, but with a tomahawk.

Returning, the party stopped at the industrial school, where lunch was served in the adjoining public school-house by Mrs. Hample. A finer lunch was, perhaps, never served in the west. It reflects great credit upon Mrs. Hample, who had to contend with great difficulties, for the discourteous officers of the school had refused to lend tables, chairs or anything else; in fact, they had even refused to furnish a little hot water for the tea and coffee. After lunch, the party were conducted over the school by the principal. The institution is one of the most villainously constructed buildings it would be possible to imagine, and is a disgrace to the department.

Mr. Fairlie was not responsible for that. Now, that was the occasion of the attack upon Mr. Fairlie, and it shows irritation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How?

Mr. DAVIN. I will let the House learn that. Sir, when I am interrupted from the other side of the House, when, therefore, somebody is doing what he has no right to do, and when the interruption goes on, and I hit back, and the person I hit at scatters a little, and you or somebody in the Chair comes to that person's defence, I shall protect myself from those gentlemen, and neither one of them nor the whole of them sitting over there, can awe me here, nor in any other public meeting. So, therefore, in order that I may be free to pursue this course if necessary, I ask in the first place for your protection

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Under the rule of the House nobody has a right to interrupt an hon. member who has the floor, except with his permission; therefore, if anybody wants to interrupt the hon. member for Assiniboia while he has the floor, he must get his permission.

Mr. DAVIN. Now, this gentleman, Mr. Fairlie, wrote a letter to the editor of the "Tribune," and what do you think the editor does? He does not publish the letter, but he has an article headed "The Industrial School Episode."

The "Tribune" has received from Mr. John H. Fairlie, principal of the Rupert's Land Industrial School, a letter referring to the account which was published in this paper concerning the recent visit of the Minister of Public Works and party to the school. Mr. Fairlie's epistle is in such utter bad taste, and, withal, so impudent and gratuitous in its insinuations, that, out of regard for Mr. Fairlie himself, we deem it best, in his own interests, to withhold publication. To be quite fair to the principal, however, we will quote that portion of the letter in which he seeks to exonerate himself from the charge of discourtesy. He says:

Then he quotes what Mr. Fairlie said:

"When I was told that the Mayor of Winnipeg and members of the board of trade wished to have a lunch at the Industrial School on their return from the rapids, I said I would be pleased to have them visit our school and would show them carefully through every department. Was that discourteous? When I was asked if we could assist in giving them a lunch, I said they were welcome to our dining-hall tables, chairs, dishes, and everything that we had; that we could furnish some roast beef, good bread and butter, tea and coffee, in abundance, and our girls would serve the tables. Was that discourteous, sir?"

Then the article continues:

Mr. Fairlie then goes on to say that the reason he declined to allow the lunch to be served within the precincts of the school was, because wine was going to be served. There is, perhaps, not one man, woman or child in the province but will applaud him for the stand and say that he was perfectly right.

That is what the editor of the "Tribune" said while the thing was fresh in his mind.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is what I said this afternoon.

Mr. DAVIN. I am dealing with more than the hon. gentleman. I read in a letter from Ottawa to his paper how he and some other western members waited on the Ministers, and took them by the throat, and settled beforehand the changes that were to be made in the tariff, and announced it beforehand, and he said that he and Mr. Oliver, and Mr. Douglas and others with him spoke, but said he: "I spoke first." I know very well that my hon. friend is a very important man, I do not underrate his importance; I know he is a master of a paper, and that he is leader of a chosen band, but he is not everybody. But at the present time I am not dealing with him, but with the member for Huron. The member for Huron condemns the editor of the "Tribune" as an endorser of the action of Mr. Fairlie, the very action that was condemned strongly here to-day by the member for Lisgar.

Recognizing the absolute righteousness to the principal's position, Mr. F. H. Matthewson, president of the board of trade, promptly acquiesced and it was arranged to serve the lunch across the road from the industrial, in another building. Application was then made for the loan of a couple of tables and a few chairs, but this was refused, and Mrs. Hample, the caterer, was obliged to cart chairs and tables all the way from Winnipeg. Application was also made for a little hot water for the tea and coffee, but even this trifling request was churlishly denied, and Mrs. Hample had to make the best of it.

The one charge, that of discourtesy, that he refused to give hot water, made by the "Tribune" is positively denied by Mr. Fairlie. As regards one of the charges against him, made by the member for Huron, the Minister of the Interior has, by his silence in the past, endorsed Mr. Fairlie; and the Minister of Public Works here to-day has stated that he endorsed Mr. Fairlie. But the member for Huron comes forward and brings an indictment against him because he did not give the school for the drinking of champagne and whisky, and was not in fact prostrate on his belly before the Minister of Public Works. Why, if the member for Huron had read English history he would have remembered what a great king said of an English judge who has become famous in history, because he did rate, rebuke and roughly send to prison the immediate heir of England for forgetting the place, the majesty and points of law and justice. He thanked God that he had such a judge. What we should have expected from an experienced man like the member for Huron, would be that he would come here and say with the Minister of Public Works: Thank God that we have a school teacher that respects his duties to his country, his duty to his office and the law of the land, more than the awe that is supposed to fill the breast of every one at the appearance of a new-fledged Minister. I know very well that in the breast of both Liberals and Conservatives, but apparently more in the breasts of Liberals, a Minister, and especially a new-fledged Minister. is a wonderful thing. He is an Honourable, he is a P.C., he and his colleagues are all lords and hon. gentlemen of high degree, and no doubt they feel immensely swelled out in the head and otherwise, and think, and others think so, too, that we ought all to go down on our marrowbones to them, and worship them, as we are told the Israelites did the golden calf in the wilderness. Well, my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works had more sanity than that. Mr. Fairlie wrote a letter in reply to what he contended was a misrepresentation. The letter was not published and thereupon he did what he had a perfect right to do in order to vindicate himself. He sent the letter to the "Nor-Wester." Is he responsible for the head line, jamboree? What is a jamboree? It is a western word. My hon. friend from Winnipeg knows what a jamboree is. It is said to be an eastern word, too. What is a jamboree?

An hon. MEMBER. Do you know?

Mr. DAVIN. I do know something about it. When a number of gentlemen start out from a city famous for its hospitality, the guests of a mayor known for goodfellowship—when a crowd goes out with champagne and whisky and whatnot, it is travelling very much as they used to do in Ireland, as described by Valentine Vousden:

Some beef, some bread, some porter,
And some whisky in a jar,— Och, that's the way to travel
On an Irish jaunting car.

On that occasion the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) and other gentlemen and the Minister of Public Works were travelling in something grander than an Irish jaunting car—they were travelling in a special car. They had nothing so vulgar as porter, but they had whisky and soda and choice brands of champagne. And why should they not? my hon. friend asks. Mr. Fairlie was not responsible for the headaches. Mr. Fairlie asked to have his letter published, and newspaper men know that it is the practice to publish a reply.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was also sent to the "Free Press."

Mr. DAVIN. I have had as long an experience of journalism as either my hon. friend or the editor of the "Free Press." I know what is the duty of a journalist: it is that if a man accused by a newspaper, sends a reply, it is the duty of a journalist to publish it. The Finance Minister is a journalist, and he knows what the practice is. Especially is this the case when the newspaper has criticised it. To criticise a letter he receives, and then put it into the waste paper basket, or into a pigeon-hole, is equivalent to slapping the man's face and then boxing his ears. Mr. Fairlie asked to have his letter published in the "Nor-Wester," and that journal published it. Is there anything disrespectful in it? The only part of the speech delivered by the Minister of Public Works with which I find fault is when he said that this is a tissue of lies. I should like to ask the hon. Minister where the lies come in.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will tell the hon. gentleman. When Mr. Fairlie says that those who went there were smelling of liquor, and when he intimates that they were drunk—he states what is not true, and he must have known it.

Mr. DAVIN. He does not say that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He says that.

Mr. DAVIN. I will read the part of the letter to which the hon. gentleman refers. Mr. Fairlie says:

There may have been a bad smell in some of the rooms.

It was the olfactory nerves that were in a sensitive state. This gentleman who complained of the odour, was travelling with a Minister of the Crown; he felt big; he was with one of the gods; he was grand and glorious; he was travelling with my lord. Then he said there was an offensive smell.

There may have been a bad smell in some of the rooms, as you say, but that would be in one of the smaller rooms, and when a dozen men, who have spent two hours—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not true.

Mr. DAVIN. Does the hon. Minister mean that the time stated, two hours, was not true?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not true that we were there two hours.

Mr. DAVIN. Did the hon. gentleman spend one hour, one hour and a half, or one hour and three-quarters there? I will accommodate him; I will not bind him to a certain time. Are you going to hang a man because he did not take out his ticker and estimate the time when My Lord and his A.D.C. and other jovialists were together? I will take what time the hon. Minister likes. As Mr. Burke says: "Odzooks! are you going to hang a man for an old song?" Suppose it was only one hour—for there is nothing in the length of time. It is not a very outrageous act to stop two hours at luncheon. I could talk with the Minister of Public Works for two hours. The letter continues:

—and when a dozen men, who have spent two hours at a banquet, where champagne and whisky and soda were served, and cigars freely smoked, get crowded into a small room, it is not conducive to sweet smells.

Is there anything wrong in that? I have heard the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) say things very like that. I am sure the hon. gentleman on the platform, and bursting with teetotal zeal, will say to the crowd listening to hear the words of sincerity falling from his lips, something of the sort:

—two hours at a banquet, where champagne and whisky and soda were served, and cigars freely smoked, it is not conducive to sweet smells.

That indictment is very mild. No matter what the gathering may be, yet if men sit down for two hours, drink champagne and whisky and soda, and smoke cigars and begin to exude, the air becomes close and the conflicting gasses do not conduce to sweetness of smells. Further:

I noticed this also, but did not think that the "discourteous" officers of the school were to blame for it.

This man is a teetotaler, and I will lay it down, and I shall be supported by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) and I am satisfied I can get a dozen members of the Dominion Alliance to side with me, that if a man does not drink whisky or champagne himself and goes into the company of a dozen or two dozen men, who for half an hour or two hours have been drinking a little champagne or whisky, he will smell the "pisin." An hon. friend near me says that is his experience. I will now read the letter, because that is only just to Mr. Fairlie:

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

CALGARY AND EDMONTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 33) respecting the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company.—(Mr. Osler.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. OLIVER. This clause is a new one. It was not drafted in the committee, and it seems to me that it does not altogether express the intention of the committee. I would therefore ask the hon. gentleman if he would agree to the addition of a few words to clause 2, which would clearly express what I think was the unanimous agreement arrived at in committee. I had proposed a very definite amendment in committee in regard to the location of the proposed extension of the railway into the town of McLeod, and there was some dispute about it. The idea was that the amendment should be practically of the same effect as the proposal I suggested, except that it did not bind the company to time.

Mr. SPROULE. The clause read by the Chairman is exactly as was agreed to in committee. Could not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) let the Bill go through committee now, and give notice of his amendment on the third reading?

Mr. OLIVER. It was thoroughly understood in the committee that the interests of the town of McLeod should be protected in the construction of this railway. It was stated in committee that the company did not get unlimited time to complete the railway because the time is limited by the General Railway Act. I humbly submit that it is only fair that the amendment should state what I wish to convey.

Mr. WILSON. The amendment to clause 2 is just the same as agreed to by the Railway Committee.

Mr. OLIVER. It is not according to my idea of what the Railway Committee agreed to. I would like to add the following words to the clause, and I think there will be no objection to them at all:—

Such route and plan shall provide for the establishment and maintenance of a station for receiving and delivering freight and passengers, within the present corporate limits of the town of McLeod.

Mr. SPROULE. That was objected to in the committee, and the amended clause, as read by the Chairman, was adopted instead thereof.

Mr. HUGHES. The Minister of Railways accepted the amendment moved by the leader of the Opposition in committee, and said that the Government would take special care that the views of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) in relation to locating the line through McLeod, would be carried out. It was the opinion of the Minister of Railways that it would be more advisable not to insert these words in the clause, but that the council would see that McLeod was protected.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) cannot propose an amendment now without giving notice. As there seems to be some difference of opinion with regard to the effect of the amendment, it would perhaps be better to let the Bill go through committee, and give notice of amendment on the third reading.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That suggestion is a good one. This proposal was made by the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) in committee, and the conclusion arrived at is stated in the amended clause as read by the Chairman. We all believed that it would completely protect the interests of the town of McLeod and carry out the view of the hon. member (Mr. Oliver). In the absence of the Minister of Railways, who gave this question so much attention, I think it would be well to adopt the suggestion of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. McMULLEN. The leader of the Opposition is quite right in a sense. The question of the possibility of the road completely evading McLeod was the question under discussion, and the Minister of Railways agreed to see that the town of McLeod would not be evaded. But my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) wants to further protect the town by inserting a clause providing that the company shall erect and maintain a station for freight and passengers in the town. They have now a freight and passenger station some two or three miles from McLeod; but the fact of the railway running through McLeod would not be of any benefit unless they erected a freight and passenger station in the town.

Mr. SPROULE. There is this difference in what the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) says. The promoter of the Bill says: "We may never extend the railway to connect with the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, but if we do we must go through the town of McLeod, and we will have a passenger station there." But the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) wanted to impose on the company the obligation of building a station at McLeod, whether the railway was to connect with the other railway or not; and the Railway Act provides that unless they commence the railway within two years and finish it within five years, their charter Act will be null and void. Therefore they would be obliged within that time to build a passenger station at McLeod whether they connected with the Crow's Nest Pass Railway or not, and that the promoter of the Bill objected to. But it was said that if they connected with the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, there was no other way to go except through McLeod.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend wants the Bill to provide that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I must say that the clause as drawn by the clerk of the committee is in accordance with the decision of the committee so far as I understood it. There was a compromise arrived at by the members holding the different views, and I think the clerk has drawn the clause very strictly in accordance with the agreement arrived at. However, if the hon. member for Alberta is not satisfied with the clause, and wants to make it more distinct, he is quite within his right to move in that direction. If he had proposed this amendment, worded as it is now, in the committee, it might possibly have been adopted. I cannot possibly see any objection to the wording of the amendment as he proposes it. It was clearly understood that the desire of the members of the committee should be carried out in that direction if the road should be extended.

Mr. HUGHES. I agree with what the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) states, and those present at the meeting of the committee will remember that when the point was brought up in regard to the station for freight and passengers within the limits of McLeod, the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) said he would see that the wishes of the hon. member were carried out. I think the hon. member deserves credit for the way he stuck to his point, and, having got the guarantee of the Minister of Railways, I think he should be satisfied with this amendment. It is, I am informed, very unusual in railway bills to insist that a station for freight and passengers shall be at any given point. There is no doubt that the railway company would place the station at McLeod if they ever went that way. I think the hon. member's wishes will be met by the amendment, and I think he should let it go through.

Mr. LISTER. The struggle in the committee, so far as the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) was concerned, was to secure what he believed were the rights of the town of McLeod. He contended that the understanding was, when the bonus for this railway was voted, that it should touch McLeod as well as Edmonton, and he said the company had broken its engagement in not touching the town, but remaining two or three miles away from it, with the object, it was suggested, of building up a rival town to the old place. He urged as strongly as possible that the rights of the town of McLeod as originally understood should be regarded by the present legislation; and there is no doubt that it was upon the minds of the committee that McLeod's rights, so far as they could be protected by this legislation, would be protected. Now, I am bound to say that while the intention of the committee was that this railway should touch McLeod, the section as introduced into the Bill is quite indefinite. While we are all alive and while the Minister of Railways is alive to what took place in committee, it may be that this railway will not be built for many years to come; and I think this clause should be made perfectly definite so as to carry out the intention of the committee, which was that this railway should be carried, not near to, but into the town of McLeod, which I believe was the original intention when the money of Canada was voted to give McLeod railway communication.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat will, I am sure, see his error when I point out that it was stated to the committee that the bonus did not require the company to build a railway south of Calgary even, but they could limit themselves to construct the line north to Edmonton.

Mr. LISTER. The Act states at or near McLeod.

Mr. HUGHES. No.

Mr. CRAIG. There was a great deal of discussion on this question in the committee, and, as the chairman of the Railway Committee has stated, the amendment now before the House was agreed to as a compromise. The promoters of the Bill objected to any definite statement such as is now proposed, and this clause was offered as a compromise, and accepted by all the parties after a long discussion; and I think it is hardly fair now to open up the matter again, when those interested in the road are not present to offer their side of the argument. I think it would be better for all parties to accept the clause as amended, because it was felt by all in the committee that the rights of the town of McLeod would be amply protected by that amendment, which provides that if this railway is extended to the Crow's Nest Pass, the plans must be submitted to and approved by the Minister of Railways, and the Minister said that he would take care that the rights of McLeod were protected. There is some force in what the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) said that of course the present Minister of Railways will remember this, but that if the time is long extended another Minister might not; but there will no doubt be some one to bring the matter to his attention. So that I do not think that is a strong argument.

Mr. LISTER. Will the hon. member say that his recollection of what took place at the Railway Committee was that McLeod was to be protected?

Mr. CRAIG. In this way, by this amendment.

Mr. LISTER. Does the hon. member say that this amendment protects McLeod?

Mr. CRAIG. It was thought so at the time by all parties.

Mr. LOUNT. My recollection of what took place in the committee is in harmony with the utterances of the last speaker. It was intended beyond a doubt to protect Fort McLeod by having the railway pass through that town and having a station there; but it will be remembered by the hon. gentlemen who were present on that committee that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler), who is a part owner of this railway, and one of the promoters, offered his opposition, to the demand that was then made to run the road into Fort McLeod. He, however, after discussion, was willing there should be a compromise, and a compromise was arrived at, and the result was substantially what has been read by the Chairman. Now, I would suggest that it is only fair to the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) that the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries should be accepted. The hon. member for West Toronto is not here, he is very largely interested in this road, and the effect of the amendment asked for by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) is perhaps greater than he would be willing to accept. It will be remembered that the hon. member for West Toronto was rather desirous of withdrawing the Bill than grafting upon it some conditions which were beyond the capability of the road to accept, and as he is not here to-night, it seems only fair that no discussion should take place with regard to the proposed amendment until he is present and able to say whether or not he will acquiesce in the amendment. No harm would be done by passing the Bill through to-night, it being understood that on the third reading such an amendment might be discussed, if, in the meantime, a compromise be not reached.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My understanding of the discussion in the Railway Committee was this, that in the event of the road being extended to Crow's Nest Pass, it should pass in or near the town of Fort McLeod, and that any dispute in that connection should be determined by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair). The question of stipulating that the road should have a station at Fort McLeod was not brought to the attention of the committee and may have been overlooked by the hon. member in charge of the Bill. I would think that, subject to any notice to the promoters, some clause might be added which would make it necessary for the company to have a station in or near the town of Fort McLeod in case the road should be extended to Crow's Nest Pass Railway.

Mr. HUGHES. If the hon. member for Alberta insists on pressing his amendment, I would ask that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Lount) and others be accepted, namely, that the Bill should pass through committee and then be allowed to stand until the hon. member for West Toronto is present. I was requested to take charge of the Bill in his absence, and I hope the hon. member for Alberta will not press his amendment; but if he insists on doing so, I would ask him to accept the suggestion made.

Mr. OLIVER. If the House will bear with me, I should like to explain why I was anxious to bring this matter before the House now. I did not expect that there would be any necessity for me to press the amendment because I thought it was thoroughly understood by every hon. gentleman in the committee and would be quite satisfactory to the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill. I only made the proposition, fully expecting it would be concurred in. The reason I made it was to give definiteness to what, I think, every one admits was the general understanding of the committee, namely, that the town of McLeod should be protected. While we have the assurance of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, in whose assurance I have every confidence, that so long as he is Minister of Railways and Canals the interests of Fort McLeod will be protected, at the same time he may not always be Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. How long ?

Mr. LISTER. Twenty-five years.

Mr. OLIVER. He may not be Minister all the time. Many changes may take place.

Mr. HUGHES. You are not throwing any doubts on your tenure of office, are you ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, but the hon. gentleman might take some other department. The section of the Bill does not express the intention of the committee, which was to protect the interests of the town of McLeod, and all I want is that that intent shall be expressed, so that whoever may be Minister of Railways and Canals or whatever circumstances may arise, there will be no question about protecting Fort McLeod. I think that is fair and that everybody in the House will agree to it.

The town of McLeod is a place of 700 or 800 people. It is the largest business centre in southern Alberta, but owing to the uncertainty of its connection with the railway, it is at a standstill, so far as building is concerned. It is certainly not desirable that people should be prevented by such uncertainty from investing their money in improving this business centre. If the House wishes to see that western country opened up, it is desirable that every reasonable opportunity should be given the people located there to invest their money in improving property, which they would not be justified in doing if the uncertainty I have referred to be allowed to continue. All I ask is that the people of McLeod shall have definite assurance that whenever this railway extension is made, they will not be sidetracked but will have the railway facilities necessary for the prosperity of that town as a business place. If the House will agree to those words being added, it will mean the investment of a large amount of money in McLeod during this and succeeding years in the building up of that town, so as to make it a credit to that country and the Dominion ; but if the House refuses to give the assurance to the business people of Mc-

Mr. OLIVER.

Leod that their interests will be protected, they will not be disposed to risk their money in building up a town which may afterwards be sidetracked. I did not suppose for a moment that any hon. gentleman would take a position antagonistic to that proposition. I did not suppose that the hon. gentleman, above all others, who moved the resolution would take such a position, I cannot imagine that he will, and I would ask the hon. gentleman to state whether he does take that position.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The hon. gentleman is out of order with his motion in any case. No matter whether we agree to it or not, it is out of order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that I am much more surprised, and I think hon. gentlemen who are members of the Railway Committee will be much more surprised, at the attitude taken by the hon. gentleman than he can possibly be at anything that has occurred. The hon. gentleman knows that a very large number of the members of the Railway Committee were present when this Bill was before the committee. He knows that he pressed this very question in the strongest and most forcible manner, he knows that the promoters of the Bill were unwilling to accede to it, and he knows that the very terms now used in the Bill were arrived at by the committee as a compromise between what the hon. gentleman wanted and what the promoters of the Bill were willing to concede. There was the greatest possible sympathy on the part of every member of the committee with the town of McLeod, and the committee were most anxious to do every thing they possibly could. There was not a gentleman in it, I am sure, but was most anxious that anything that could be done in the interest of the town of McLeod should be done. But after the fullest and most complete discussion, this compromise was agreed to by the committee unanimously. And the hon. gentleman comes down, and in the absence of the gentleman who opposed the proposition which he is now making, he endeavours to press upon the House something entirely different from that which he, in common with every other member of the committee, agreed to in committee. I can only say that the House has a right to expect that when the committee like the Railway Committee, which is a small Parliament in itself, exhaustively discusses a subject and arrives at a conclusion, that this conclusion will be respected at all events by those who were parties to it.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to repeat that I have no desire to press upon the committee anything that is contrary to the ideas of the Railway Committee. I did not consider that this suggestion was contrary to the understanding in that committee, but as it appears the hon. gentleman holds that

It is contrary to that understanding, I suppose I would be out of order in pressing it further. I am sorry the hon. gentleman did not make the statement before. I will not press the matter now, but will bring it up on the third reading.

Mr. HUGHES. Will you move the third reading now?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Bill reported.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 79) to incorporate the Dominion Portland Cement Company.—(Mr. Britton.)

Bill (No. 84) to incorporate the Continental Heat and Light Company.—(Mr. Rosamond.)

Bill (No. 88) to incorporate "Les Cisterciens Réformés.—(Mr. LaRivière.)

Bill (No. 34) to incorporate the Canadian Securities Company.—(Mr. Madore.)

Bill (No. 74) to incorporate the National Life Assurance Company of Canada.—(Mr. Lount.)

Bill (No. 78) to amend the Act incorporating the Ontario Accident Insurance Company.—(Mr. Osler.)

Bill (No. 97) for the relief of Adeline Myrtle Lawry—on division.—(Mr. Landerkin.)

THE MYCENIAN MARBLE COMPANY.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 83) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of the Mycenian Marble Company.—(Mr. Rosamond.)

(In the Committee.)

On the preamble,

Mr. SPROULE. The patent was applied for, and part of the money paid, the company commenced operations, but through the negligence of their officers they did not tender the rest of the money for the extension of the patent. Therefore, after the time expired, the Commissioner of Patents could not receive the money without he got authority to do so, and this is an application to get that authority.

Mr. LISTER. This is legislation that has been refused two or three times in this Parliament.

Mr. SPROULE. No, I remember distinctly that we put through one or more Bills of the same character some years ago.

Mr. LISTER. I remember several years ago a Bill of this kind being refused by Parliament. I think it is not good legislation.

Mr. SPROULE. This was reported by the committee without any amendment.

Mr. LISTER. The man has a right to his patent if he complies with the law, but not otherwise. He has not done it in this case, and I do not see why the public should be deprived of their right in order to give him a right which he does not possess.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no other person claiming the right.

Mr. LISTER. That makes no difference. The public are entitled to it. Every citizen of Canada is entitled to it.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. In this case it is not binding on the commissioner to grant the patent, he is only impowered to do so if he chooses. In every other particular the application is correct. The commissioner is not bound to accept.

Mr. LISTER. This is giving him power to do something that he has no power to do now.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Unless the hon. gentleman is very anxious to get it through to-night, perhaps he would let it stand. I thought the Minister of Agriculture would have been here, who, I assume, has looked into this Bill, and there will probably be some objection to its passing without his assent being known.

Mr. SPROULE. I have no objections to letting it stand, but I do not think there is the slightest objection to the Bill. I have a very distinct recollection of our passing Bills of the same character once or twice or three times in this House. As the parties have made a very large investment, and are carrying on their operations, and it was only through the carelessness of one of their officers that the money was not tendered, it was purely accidental. No one claims that any injustice is done to the public and no one claims a right to patent except the people who control this legislation. If the Minister wishes this to stand, I have no objection.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My recollection accords with that of my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Lister). Some years ago a similar Bill came up, and there was a great row in the House about it, and about the inadvertence of the officer being accepted as a sufficient reason for renewing a right which had expired through lapse of time. I think we had better wait until we see what the Minister of Agriculture says about it.

Mr. WALLACE. The case to which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries refers was not similar, there were objections to the Bill itself on its merits; in this case there is no such objection. There was simply an error of the solicitor in failing to do his business, and they are coming to this House to correct it. I understand this matter has been before the Private Bills Committee, where it has been fully discussed, and they have passed it after examining into all the circumstances. If there were any objections to the Bill on its merits, it would be proper to let it stand, but I understand there are none.

Mr. LISTER. When did the patent expire?

Mr. WALLACE. It expired without their knowledge and without that of their solicitor, and the deposit was not made that it might be continued. I have a recollection of similar Bills being passed through this House a number of times. If there are any objections to it, any private interests being jeopardized, these, of course, would be fatal objections; but, as it stands now, there are none.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I have a distinct recollection of two or three Bills similar to this one being before this House years ago, and they were thrown out for the reason that the public had acquired rights in the patent, and that this Parliament had no right to take away that which had already been given to the public, for the benefit of certain individuals. I remember one case in particular similar to this, where the solicitor had forgotten to send in the money at the proper time, and this Parliament refused to pass the Bill on that ground, and because public interests would not be subserved by such legislation.

Mr. HUGHES. That being the case, it is very peculiar that the Deputy Minister of Finance, who attended the committee, should not know something about it; yet the Deputy Minister of Finance was present before the committee, and stated that the Minister of Agriculture had no objection whatever; the Bill had been examined and there was no objection whatever on the part of the Government to its passing.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 86) respecting La Banque du Peuple.—(Mr. Préfontaine.)

Bill (No. 100) to incorporate the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Navigation Company.—(Mr. Maxwell.)

Bill (No. 102) respecting the Ottawa Gas Company.—(Mr. Belcourt.)

Bill (No. 103) respecting the Canadian Fire Insurance Company.

RESTIGOUCHE AND VICTORIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton) moved second reading of Bill (No. 99) respecting the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Speaker, there will be a good deal of discussion on this Bill and also on Bill (No. 104), and as I do not wish to interfere with the other Bills, this order had better stand now and let the others proceed.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Before the Bill is put in that unfortunate position, I ask the hon. member (Mr. Costigan) to consider well. He is merely taking advantage of the hour having expired, which is allotted to Private Bills. He can let it go to the committee where its merits will be discussed, but keeping it back now is only blocking it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Yes, blocking it, and if it is blocked now I give my hon. friend fair warning, that if he undertakes to block a Bill in the interest of his own province, then all other Bills coming up after this at this late hour of the session, will share the same fate.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. McALISTER. Due notice has not been given of these Bills Nos. 99 and 104. It is only three weeks since the first notice of these Bills appeared in the local papers and that is not in accordance with the rules of the House. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Domville) has no right to say that we want to block the Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not want to look at the clock just now unless it is the wish of the House, but if there are any other Bills to which there is no objection, they might be read a second time. Shall the hon. member (Mr. Wood, Hamilton) have leave to withdraw his motion?

Motion withdrawn.

RESTIGOUCHE RAILWAY AND BRIDGE COMPANY.

On order for.

Second reading of Bill (No. 104) to incorporate the Restigouche Railway and Bridge Company.—(Mr. Domville.)

Mr. McALISTER. Stand.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Does the hon. gentleman object to the second reading of this Bill?

Mr. McALISTER. Yes.

Mr. DOMVILLE. He takes the full responsibility, does he?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Certainly.

Motion withdrawn.

SUPPLY—DISMISSALS FROM THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

Mr. DAVIN. I find myself, Sir, in the novel position of defending two Ministers of a Government I do not support, against the attack of an eminent follower of theirs. The hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) made an attack upon the Minister of the Interior, and by implication the Minister of Public Works, because if the position taken by the hon. member (Mr. Cameron) is correct then the Minister of Public Works, from his standpoint, was wanting in his duty in not urging the dismissal of the Rev. Mr. Fairlie, and the Minister of the Interior has been wanting in his duty in not dismissing this rev. gentleman. But, Sir, I honour the Minister of the Interior for the course he has taken. He said, when he was coming down here, that he was to have a free hand, and the only thing I regret to-day is that having taken a free hand and having done right in regard to Mr. Fairlie, he showed this afternoon a tendency to apologize. It will be in the memory of the House, that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) stated, he had no complaint to make against Mr. Fairlie except that he wrote a letter on the papers. He told us, that Mr. Fairlie came to him after this luncheon, told him what he had done, and the Minister turned round to him and said: You did quite right. That was a clear statement that we got from the Minister of Public Works. I did not read it in its entirety the account given by the member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) in his own paper, the paper that he edits, and I will do so now. I think myself, that the public ought to thank the member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) for having brought forward this question, because important as the many questions are that come before this House from time to time, no question could be so important as the character of the public men that are ruling the country, and nothing could shed a stronger light on the character of certain men sitting on the other side of the House, than this transaction. It is one of the important functions of the public press, and of the "Hansard" for while we pay $40,000 a year to keep the public eye on hon. gentlemen in this House, as to what we do here, in order that they should see the character of the men that are governing and ruling the country. This article on "Visiting the Rapids," goes on:

Returning, the party stopped at the industrial school, where lunch was served in the adjoining public school-house by Mrs. Hample. A finer lunch was, perhaps, never served in the west. It reflects great credit upon Mrs. Hample, who had to contend with great difficulties, for the discourteous officers of the school had refused to lend tables, chairs or anything else; in fact, they had even refused to furnish a little hot water for the tea and coffee.

And we remember how, in his old-time humorous way, the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) used to make these benches ring with Liberal cheers when he discoursed on Indian affairs. We had the hon. member making very pleasant fun about that hot water, and what it might have been used for—and we know what it can be used for—at the close of one of the finest banquets that ever took place in the west.

After lunch, the party were conducted over the school by the principal. The institution is one of the most villainously constructed buildings it would be possible to imagine, and is a disgrace to the department.

I may say here, speaking as a critic—and I am sure that my hon. friend, the learned editor of the "Tribune" will not object to my saying this, considering that he is here criticising the language of this reverend gentleman—that the institution he speaks of here is the school, and he confounds the institution with the building; but we will pass that. I say it just for the benefit of my hon. friend.

It was ill-smelling in places, and sadly in need of whitewash and cleaning. Some Indian children were put through their facings by a school-teacher, who spoke to the poor youngsters, while he flourished a great goad to inspire them with, as if they were so many convicts requiring the discipline extended to Siberian convicts. The writer is not in a position to say what kind of treatment Indian children require, but, with such a teacher, it is safe to say that they will never learn what love means, or will never cultivate a single grace of life.

We know what an embodiment of sweetness and light and all the charities the hon. member for Lisgar is in this House; and mark, Mr. Speaker—because you, Sir, like a few others of us, belong to the literati of this country—mark the grammar here, and the correct and elegant use of the disjunctive particle.

Those who have read, in "Nicholas Nickleby," Dickens' description of Dotheboys Hall, may be able to form some idea of the way in which, judging by certain points observed in a hurried inspection, the so-called industrial school is run. And yet the country has to pay $160 a pupil per year for these little children.

If the Rev. Mr. Fairlie had only known that not merely a Daniel, but a Chesterfield had come to judgment! He goes on, all the Christian feelings of his nature rising up:

If they were but taught the graces of life, if they were but taught what love is, it would not be so bad. But there were no evidences about the place, except the dusty motto here and there, that any one about the institution knew, or cared, what the meaning of the word is. The country pays the piper, and nobody seems to care. Unless the new Government goes into this whole "industrial school" business, and either wipes it out or reforms it, it will utterly fail in its duty to the country.

Now, Sir, mark what I am going to read:

Even the Minister of Public Works could with difficulty repress the disgust he felt at the way in which the party had been received.

Even the Minister of Public Works could scarcely repress his disgust at the way the party had been received, and the Minister of Public Works told us a short time ago that he was perfectly satisfied, and that he had told Mr. Fairlie that he had done right. There is a clear contradiction, and the hon. gentlemen may reconcile it among themselves. Either the statement made by the Minister of Public Works must be the one that is historical, or the statement here in the "Tribune"; you cannot reconcile the two, because they are as diametrically opposed as black is to white. The Minister of Public Works declared that he had no fault to find with what had taken place there, that the only fault he had to find was with the letter of Mr. Fairlie, which he characterized as containing untruths. I am going to read that letter, and I am sorry the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) is not here and that the hon. Minister of Public Works is not here. But, as I said on another occasion, happily the public are here, and those gentlemen with an ostrich policy will laud them in public contempt. This is the letter which the hon. member for Lisgar would not publish, although he would comment on it. He would hit the man before the public, but he would not give the public what the man had said and—as I said on another occasion in this House when a poor person was being hit in a way in which hon. gentlemen would not dare to hit that person outside—this Parliament of Canada can be employed in no nobler office than in defending any citizen of Canada who is wrong or about to be wronged by power. This letter is as follows:—

My attention has been called to an article in your issue of the 27th instant, headed "Visiting the Rapids," and in which you criticise the management of the Rupert's Land Industrial School, and speak untruthfully and unkindly of its officers; and I ask for a short space in your paper, that I may offer some corrections.

When I was told that the Mayor of Winnipeg and the board of trade proposed having a lunch at the industrial school on their return from the rapids, I said I would be pleased to have them here, and would show them carefully through every department of our school. Was that discourteous?

When asked if he could assist us in preparing a lunch, I said they would be welcome to the dining-hall tables, chairs and dishes, and we could give them roast beef and pickles, good bread and butter, and all the tea and coffee they wished to use. Was that discourteous, sir? So far, all will agree with me that it was not. But I made one stipulation which the men composing the delegation evidently considered discourteous, and which has led to the slanderous and untrue criticism which you publish of our school.

There can be no doubt that they did propose it. The mayor of Winnipeg, I see, has also gone into hiding—I will not use the phrase that has become classical in this House, and say that he has taken to the woods or crawled under the barn; but I think the hon. member for Yarmouth has run for shelter somewhere, and the hon. Minister of Public Works is hiding his diminished head. But it is to me one of the most extraordinary things that has ever occurred in the history of the temperance movement, that a man who was here the Gamaliel of the Dominion Alliance of Canada should rise and say of this Rev. Mr. Fairlie that he did not understand how to behave as a gentleman because he would not allow into an Indian school whisky and champagne—and whisky and champagne not in any small quantities, but in cases, in the voluminous style that we all know the profuse hospitality of Winnipeg exacts.

Let me call attention to the way in which this school was managed before Mr. Fairlie went there, and I presume Mr. Fairlie was appointed not to lower but to improve it. Here is the report of the principal, Mr. John B. Ashby:

In moral and religious training, I must, in the first place, mention that we have been greatly favoured by the advent of the Reverend A. Silva-White into the parish. * * * In going out to work with white people, they are easily led into bad habits, such as swearing and drinking. It is, therefore, most important that they should be placed only in those positions where their moral, as well as their worldly, welfare will be looked after.

There is the danger. They found by experience that these young Indians were specially exposed to falling into drinking habits, which we all know to be the greatest peril to which the young Indians are exposed; and will any man say, whether he be a member of the Dominion Alliance or not, whether he be a member of Parliament or not, whether he be a man who goes from place to place pulling a long face and making long speeches from time to time, as the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) does or not, whether he be a reverend gentleman or not, will any man dare to say that when so great a risk confronted the principal and teachers of this school, the gentleman in charge did not do his duty in saying to those gentlemen: You must not bring intoxicating liquors within these walls? But that is not all; the mayor of Winnipeg (Mr. Jameson), who is now a statesman—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. DAVIN. We must assume that having been elected to Parliament, he is, at any rate, a budding statesman. Here is the Indian Act, and let me read clause 94:

Every one who is found in possession of any intoxicants in the house, tent, wigwam or place of abode of any Indian, or of any person, or upon any other part of the reserve or special reserve, or who sells, exchanges with, barter, supplies or gives to any person, on any reserve or special reserve, any intoxicant, shall, on summary conviction, before any judge, police magistrate or stipendiary magistrate, or two justices of the peace, or Indian agent, upon the evidence of one credible witness, other than the informer or prosecutor—shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months and not less than one month, with or without hard labour.

Now, let me read to you clause 100, which provides that:

And any intoxicant imported, manufactured or brought into and upon any reserve or special reserve, or into the house, tent, wigwam or place of abode, or on the person of any Indian or non-treaty Indian, or suspected to be upon any reserve or special reserve, may, upon a search warrant in that behalf being granted by any judge, police magistrate, stipendiary magistrate or justice of the peace,—

The clause goes on to provide what should be done to persons who would even bring intoxicants to an Indian reserve, and, for the purposes of the law, this school was an Indian reserve. Instead of attacking this poor man, hon. gentlemen opposite should applaud the course he took. Look at the gentlemen who were in peril of being brought under the criminal law. I need hardly tell you that on the faces of these gentlemen you will find nothing that would indicate congenital penitentiary birds. Just look at the men—the hon. Mr. Tarte, the mayor of the city of Winnipeg. &c., altogether fourteen names of leading citizens, including the Hon. Robert Watson and others. And they took up on the way Mayor Dagg of Selkirk, Mr. Cumming and three others, so that we have seventeen leading gentlemen and others. It was evidently a pretty large party, and I may say, from what I know of Winnipeg hospitality, that with seventeen gentlemen and others, the champagne must have been profuse and the whisky galore.

What was, then, the duty of this Mr. Fairlie? He was, for the purposes of the Indian Act, as principal of that school, an agent in a legal sense, and as such he was empowered and bound to arrest anybody found in possession of intoxicants. It would have been his duty, if these people had gone into that school and put whisky and champagne on the table, to arrest them; and yet he is to be censured and denounced because he refused to place himself in the position of being compelled to arrest these gentlemen, among whom was a Minister of the Crown—and not only a Minister of the Crown but a Minister of the Crown with all his blushing honours new. He has calmed down a little since. We know how a party which has been long out feel on again attending office; we know from experience and observation that there is a good deal of the beggar on horseback in us under such circumstances, and we have seen a good deal of it. I am sorry to say.

What can be thought of the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), who is at the head in this Parliament, of a great organization for the promotion of total abstinence by the destruction entirely throughout the Dominion of the manufacture and use of intoxicants. "He may be a very good school teacher," said the hon. gentleman, speaking of the Rev. Mr. Fairlie, "but he is clearly not a gentleman, because in society we have all to mix with people who take a little champagne." And I am afraid that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Flint) belongs to that class of teetotal propagandists who, when they go out to dinner, never miss the Roman punch.

These children fall a prey to the evil of drink only too easily, and if, as you state in your paper, the officers who try to guard them against such evils in their childhood's days, have no "love" for their pupils and do not know or care what the word means, then, what can be said of those gentlemen who were so angry because they were refused permission to bring champagne and whisky into the school to be used in the presence of "these poor wards of the country?"

Now, there is no misstatement here, because every word is corroborated by the mayor, who gave the feast. As we go further, let me see if there is any misstatement:

This matter of having whisky into the school has caused trouble in the past; the correspondence is still on file in this office, and I would have been guilty of criminal negligence and would have deserved the severest criticism, if I had permitted any indulgence whatever. I am certain that every earnest and honest man will uphold me in the stand I have taken.

Unfortunate, deluded, confiding Fairlie! He little thought there would have been an earnest and honest member in this House of the Dominion Alliance who would say to him: Sir, you are not a gentleman.

That I refused to loan the tables and chairs for use outside the institution, is true, but my instructions from the department are to "lend nothing," and I try to obey orders, and am not blameworthy on this point.

Well, if a man carries out his instructions, there is nothing ungentlemanly in that.

That I refused either hot or cold water, is not true: I told them they could have both.

The only charge left, after it is all pared down, is that they were refused hot and cold water, and that he distinctly denies. He says he was ready to give them both, and even give them tea as well, and beef. We all remember that scene in "Punch," in which two Guardsmen are depicted, the one saying to the other:

"Aw, did you know Bwown of owah's?"
"Yahs." "He ate beef and poak." "And did he die?" "Why, of caws, he died."

Of course he did, he died when he ate anything so coarse as beef and pork. For these grand people to eat anything so coarse as the fare the Rev. Mr. Fairlie offered them would have meant death. I have no doubt they had blue points, lobster bisque, sweetbread pâtés, truffies, ducks, red head and canvas backs, fricassée of various sorts, gelée glacée, neapolitan ice cream, liqueurs, claret, five year old whisky and champagne, cooled to 48. I do not know that previous to coming here the hon. gentleman from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) knew the temperature to which champagne should be cooled, but he knows it now, for we often see him flourishing and flaunting about in his dress clothes.

In regard to the buildings, I must say, that I do not think any person is capable of giving a fair criticism of the building from a ten-minute inspection. One room and a hall were in the hands of the carpenters undergoing repairs, being kalsomined and painted, and were in the same state as they would be in your own house under similar circumstances. You seem to have noticed this, but you neglect to state that the rest of the buildings, the halls, dormitories dining-room, kitchen and laundry, were in perfect order and spotlessly clean.

I hope my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works is not going to glide out, because I am about to ask him to point out the lie in this letter. He has stated that there are untruths in it, and I would like him to show where they are. I hope he will not slide away.

This school is our home, and I guarantee that we keep it as clean and sweet as you, or any other gentleman on the delegation, keeps your homes in the city (though yours is the easier task), and you, or any others, are welcome to come and inspect it at any time, even on a Monday, the day when most homes are a trifle disordered.

There may have been a bad smell in some of the rooms, as you say, but that would be in one of the smaller rooms, and when a dozen men, who have spent two hours at a banquet where champagne and whisky and soda were served, and cigars freely smoked, get crowded into a small room, it is not conducive to sweet smells. I noticed this also, but did not think that the "discourteous" officers of the school were to blame for it.

Is there any imputation there? It is admitted by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Jameson) that there was champagne and that there was whisky. It is admitted that these were drunk. We know that when men take wine they want a cigar also. It is perfectly certain that cigars were smoked. And with the fumes of cigars and champagne, mixed up with Corby's, Hennessy's, or Seagram's, we know what combination you would have there; and you must remember also that they had visited the hospitable Mr. Macdougall before they went to lunch. He is a western man, and the reporter declares that he treated them well, and they were prepared for their lunch by this courteous gentleman. If you get seventeen men and others in a room under such circumstances, the odour will not be quite that of a garden that the Lord hath blessed.

Your attack on the teacher was serious, but he is capable of defending himself, and I only wish to say here, that Mr McDougall, the teacher, is a gentleman of experience in dealing with Indian children, knows well how they should be handled, and is, I believe, more popular among the Indian children than any other teacher in Manitoba to-day. These children are taught what "love" means in a way in which the writer of this article never learned it—not that love which is a mere empty sound, but rather "that love which worketh no ill to its neighbour," that charity which suffereth long and is kind—the same love which the Master taught.

You speak of the necessity of the Government either reforming or wiping out these schools. That is just what they are trying to do. The present Government sent me here on the recommendation of the superintendent of the Mohawk Institution at Brantford, a man who knows more about Indian schools than any other man in Canada, and under whom I was trained, with instructions to reform the school; but it is a work that cannot be done in three weeks, the length of time I have been in charge; and yet, when I make the attempt to reform, and forbid whisky within the walls, you abuse me in your paper for being discourteous.

Just as the hon. gentleman for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) said—he was not a gentleman. And what is the charge made against this unhappy man for refusing to patronize and sanction this champagne swill? The charge made by the hon. member for Winnipeg is that he is a temperance crank because he would not break the law of Canada. That made by the hon. member for Yarmouth is that he is not a gentleman, and that made by the hon. member for Lisgar is that he was discourteous.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all; it was that he told a lie.

Mr. DAVIN—

I challenge the fullest investigation of my work and conduct of the school, by either the Government, or city council, or board of trade—only, instead of spending two hours and ten minutes at a luncheon with champagne and whisky, and only fifteen minutes in the school,—

What a terrible amount of sack to a few pennyworth of bread. You remember what Prince Hal said when he went through the pockets of Falstaff and found a tavern bill for one-half pennyworth of bread and capons and gallons and quarts of sack: "O monstrous! but one-half pennyworth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack!" Over two hours for champagne and whisky and ten minutes for the school.

—let them reverse the order, and give two hours for the inspection and fifteen minutes for lunch without whisky and soda, and I will be content to bear their criticisms. Our school is clean, our children are as clean, as comfortably clothed and as happy as the children of any large family in Winnipeg; their mental and moral training is just as careful, and probably more careful, than that given to your city families; their physical health is carefully watched: every child in this school is seen by me personally between 10:30 and 11 p.m., every night, so that I know they are all asleep and well before I go to bed.

Does this seem like neglect of duty or as though the "discourteous officers of the school" did not know what "love" means, or care to teach the children the graces of life?

I understand my duty, sir, and I daily ask God for strength to perform it fully and fearlessly, even to the extent of forbidding so powerful a delegation as yours to bring whisky within its walls.

JOHN H. FAIRLIE,

Principal.

Rupert's Land Industrial School, Oct. 29th, 1896.

Sir, the wolves of the spoils system may pursue that man to destroy him, but that letter will remain to his honour for ever in Canada. I will send this letter over to the Minister of Public Works and ask him to point out where the falsehood is. He assured us that this reverend gentleman came to him afterwards and explained what he had done, and the hon. Minister told him that he had done right. I defend and honour the Minister of Public Works for that. But he added that what he complained of was Mr. Fairlie writing that letter, which I understood him to characterize as containing untruths. With the admissions we have and with what we know of the facts, as incontrovertibly proved as if they had been brought out in a court of justice under cross-examination, will the hon. gentleman point out that there is a single untruth in it or that there is anything in the facts to show that this employee of the Government did not act the part of a brave, honourable and just man, and one consistent with his principles, when, instead of currying favour with a powerful delegation and winking at whisky and champagne drinking illegally and criminally within those walls, he firmly refused to permit it? He was bound to act as he did, because, apart altogether from the criminal law, he is a clergyman; and I am told by my hon. friend who sits near me, and who spoke here to-day, that he is a consistent believer in teetotalism. As such and as a clergyman no doubt he was perfectly familiar with what the hon. member for Yarmouth must be familiar with: Touch not, taste not, handle not. Sir, I honour the Rev. Mr. Fairlie, and I hope that the reverend gentlemen in this House will give the weight of their voices against the Government—or rather against not the Government, for up to this time the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of the Interior have done right, for which I honour them—but against the powerful supporter of the Government who is urging the Ministers to strike at this man, because he was not “gentlemanly” enough to forget his principles, to forget that he was a clergyman, to forget his duty to God, to forget his duty to the Government as the principal of an Indian school, and to forget as a citizen of Canada what is due to her laws.

Sir, it is a serious and painful thing to witness the demoralizing effect of power on the hon. gentlemen opposite. I have had occasion this session to point out the quick decadence amongst hon. gentlemen occupying the Treasury benches, but that need not necessarily have involved degradation, deterioration and falling off on the part of their supporters. But take the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint); we have heard him from a bench behind me, rise and make speeches on the subject of prohibition, we have heard from him fluent arguments as to the imperative need of getting rid entirely of the great evil of the trade in intoxicants. But no sooner did they get into power than not merely do we find on the Treasury benches gentlemen forgetting their previous professions and pledges; but we find that moving in the higher places of genial society frays away the moral stamina of the hon. member for Yarmouth, teetotaler as he is, and earnest expounder as he is of prohibition. He tells us here that the principal of an Indian school who refuses to have the fatal drink placed before the eyes of his Indian children, that that man, because a member of the Government of Canada was in the delegation, has no politeness. I have seen no interest taken in the debate by my hon. and reverend friend from Eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas). I see my hon. and reverend friend the member for Vancouver (Mr. Maxwell) here. I am glad to see that he takes an interest in it, and I hope that he will rise and express his indignation at the course taken to-night by some of his party. The hon. member for Eastern Assiniboia describes himself in the “Parliamentary Companion” as having been elected as an Independent Patron, and he gives himself out to the world at large as having stood as an Independent Patron, and that by and by he was called an Independent Grit. And then he came afterwards to so present his views that people called him an Independent Conservative Patron, and that he used to call himself an Independent Liberal-Conservative, and a Liberal Grit Patron. However, I am told now that the hon. gentleman has blossomed into a full Liberal, and attends the Liberal caucus. Well, I cannot refer to a previous debate, but I can refer to a circumstance that bears on the degeneration of which I speak. The other night when I was here fighting in the interests of the farmers, where were those gentlemen that should have been here to support me? If the vote had taken place the night before, I am told that my hon. friend from Lisgar would have voted for me. He said that to one of my friends. He shakes his head. I won't say of him as Daniel O'Connell once said of a learned judge when he shook his head, “There is nothing in it.” but I take it as a polite denial. I was told the patrons were going to vote with me. They have voted with me once or twice in this House, but where were they? A change had taken place in them within twenty-four hours. I know what happened. I know the influence of social blandishments. Some hon. gentlemen who come to this House—it occurs in every party, I am not making it a point now against your party, it is in the interest of a Government to make men who are behind it as tame as mice if they can, and I am bound to say that one mouse seems to have broken out of the trap to-day—soon feel the hypnotizing effect. The atmosphere of Ottawa is not congenial to independents.

Hon. gentlemen come down here, and they are going to be independent, they are going to do what the hon. member for East Assiniboia said at Qu'Appelle he was going to do; he said he was coming down here to deal a death blow to protection. He also said at Qu'Appelle, What have I to do with Mr. Laurier? And now he attends the Liberal caucus, and votes against a motion made in the interest of the farmers whom he is supposed to represent. Well, what happened in that twenty-four hours? Why, Sir, they were squared, and then a dinner party was given in their honour. One dinner party, I read of in the "Citizen" was given at the Club where we find the names of T. O. Davis, J. A. Macdonnell, J. M. Douglas, who, as we read in the "Parliamentary Companion," describes himself as a Liberal, and received the nomination of the Patrons of Industry as a Patron. Then there was Mr. Tolmie, an Independent, elected as a Patron of Industry. Then we had another dinner party the same night. W. V. Pettet, from Prince Edward County, who is described as an elected Patron of Industry, he was dining out, and the others were dining out, instead of supporting me in fighting the battle of the farmers. But they came in with their white ties on, and their evening dress, and the rose in their button hole, having partaken of a dinner that was the sacrament of their betrayal of the farmer.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman is going a little too far.

Mr. GIBSON. I rise to a point of order. I say the hon. gentleman should withdraw the statement that he has made, that the dinner was held for the purpose of influencing these members to do as they did.

Mr. DAVIN. I said nothing of the kind. I was not in the least out of order; if I was out of order I will put myself in order.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. I did not understand that the hon. gentleman made a specific charge against the hon. gentlemen whose names he mentioned, but at the same time I think there is an insinuation contained in his language, and I would advise him not to go so far.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Deputy Speaker, I certainly would not charge them further than this. I am asking your ruling whether it is out of order—and if it is out of order I will not make the charge—but what I charge them with is this, with deserting Patronism. Is that out of order?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No.

Mr. DAVIN. Then I charge them with deserting Patronism. Not only that, but I charge the hon. member for Yarmouth with having deserted his colours, and being false to his role here as a protagonist of the temperance cause. I say that the position taken by the member for Yarmouth will be known from one end of the country to the other, that he, a temperance man par excellence, said of a reverend gentleman whose letter will be read in the "Hansard," that because he would not place that perilous cup that the hon. member himself has so often denounced as the destroyer of homes, as the maker of widows and orphans, as the murderer of conscience and self respect—that because that reverend gentleman would not put this thing before those Indian children, he is not a gentleman. Sir, he is a minister of the Church of England, and as such, I presume, he has received the education of a gentleman, and that letter is the letter of an educated and independent man; and I say if there is any lack of what is gentlemanly anywhere in regard to these transactions, it is in not dealing openly and fairly with this man and giving him the investigation he asks for, but under cover of the privileges of Parliament, making charges and insinuations, which are groundless, and if that were not so trifling, petty and irrelevant. I will not go into the general question of dismissals at present. I may do so on another occasion. I may have something to say about that matter when the time comes. But I will say here, that there could not be a plainer duty before any member of Parliament than to do what I have attempted when there was a clearly wolfish effort made by a gentleman to destroy this unfortunate man, to stand up and to the best of my poor ability make it clear that the man has acted within his duty, that he has acted perfectly honourable, that he has not uttered any untruths, that he has not been discourteous, and that the charge made against him has not been sustained; that there is a clear contradiction between the statement made by the hon. Minister of Public Works and by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson). Hon. members know very well what a judge thinks of a case when the witnesses on one side contradict each other flatly. We know very well what judgment a judge is inclined to give under those circumstances. In this case the judgment that will be given, which will be that of the public, will be this: that Mr. Fairlie did his duty, that he behaved like a clergyman, like a true principal of an Indian school; that so far the Minister of the Interior has acted rightly in sustaining him, and only failed in adopting an apologetic tone here to-day, and that the remarks made by the Minister of Public Works in regard to that letter are not well founded—because I hand the hon. gentleman the letter and I defy him to point out a single untruth—and the hon. member for Lisgar is in the dock and already condemned.

Mr. MAXWELL. Mr. Speaker, I have been asked, in dulcet tones, to say a word on this question by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I do not think that this particular enticement would have any influence over me. I would not like to make that hon. gentleman my guide in particular matters, because I have been taught in my youth from the good old book that there are blind leaders of the blind, and I am afraid if I should follow the hon. gentleman, we might both fall into the ditch before we had gone far. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I have in some ways been almost ashamed of the spectacle which we have witnessed in this honourable House. I think it ought to be the effort of every hon. gentleman, and especially of a learned gentleman, to make this House a model House to the citizens and public of Canada. I do not know that it is doing us any good, so far as the public are concerned, that we should descend to the level which we have reached to-night by listening to the hon. gentleman.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. MAXWELL. I hope to make plain what I mean before I sit down, and I hope that the distinguished gentleman with the small hat on will possess his soul in patience, or I may devote some attention to him instead of to the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I have been called upon as a clergyman to say something on this matter. It is not the first time that I have witnessed the gushing style of the hon. gentleman over persons whom he supposed to have been unjustly dealt with. I can remember his weeping over a now famous character called McManus, a distinguished lady whom he knew very well, and who does not bear the most reputable reputation in Canada—and I put two and two together. When an hon. gentleman stands up in this House and asks me as a member of this honourable House to have such a character in connection with the Government of this country, I am mightily afraid to have anything to do with him when he gets into the gushing mood again. A great deal has been said this evening with respect to this banquet which took place in the North-west. One thing amused me very much. I do not know much of those orgies, which the hon. gentleman so beautifully described; but I thought this, that no member of this House could have described a bacchanalian orgie as faithfully as the hon. gentleman, because I could not but have the impression forced on my mind that he has been through them over and over again. Now, I do not know anything about them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MAXWELL. I am willing to accept the descriptions which have been presented to us this evening; but I am perfectly certain that the gentlemen who accompanied the hon. Minister of Public Works to this banquet were far superior to the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MAXWELL. I mean no insinuation at all; but I say those are men of undoubted reputation and character in their respective localities, and it was not fair, manly or just that any aspersions should have been cast on their characters as to what they drank or did on that particular occasion. I am sure they would conduct themselves as any hon. gentleman would have conducted himself if he had been present on that occasion. The hon. member has referred also to my reverend colleague (Mr. Douglas). I am very touchy so far as regards my companions in my profession are concerned, and I do not think I say anything disrespectful to the hon. member when I state that it would be a good thing for himself if he bore such an excellent reputation and character as does my colleague who sits behind me here. He has been an honoured member and minister of the Presbyterian Church, and there is no ministry in Canada or in any part of the world that demands so high a character of its ministers as does the church to which my hon. friend honourably belongs. That gentleman has in many ways served his church and his country, and the fact that he was sent to this House by such a large majority eloquently testifies to the respect in which he is held in that particular locality. We have heard a wonderfully eloquent speech, so I may call it, with respect to the duties and excellencies of temperance. We say that sometimes the devil enters into the pulpit to give a sermon; and I could not help realizing that perhaps the hon. gentleman who was speaking had undergone some such transformation. Now, there is one great difference—and this is one lesson I should like to impress on the hon. gentleman's mind—and it is, that it is not what a man says particularly in this House that goes down with the people of this country. But, when an hon. gentleman gets up on the floor of this House, and attacks a man of the honour, and the respectability, and the excellence of character of the hon. gentleman for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) who, whatever he may say, bears the reputation in the country of being a man who honestly upholds his convictions, so far as intoxicating liquor is concerned, and when my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) attacks such a man as that, he need not believe that his word is going to be accepted against the hon. member for Yarmouth. Whatever he (Mr. Flint) said to-day, I am perfectly certain of this: That he is a far more genuine friend of the temperance cause than my friend (Mr. Davin) who has just taken his seat. Now, I do not intend to refer to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) further than this: He says that the public are deeply interested in the character of its public men, and he says, that this banquet throws a lurid light on the character of men who sit upon this side of the House. Now you know, Mr. Speaker, that those who live in glass houses should not throw stones, and when men attack men they ought to be pretty sure, and they ought to be pretty certain that they cannot be attacked themselves. The country has just passed its verdict upon hon. gentlemen opposite, and if I was so minded I would not have very much difficulty in ransacking the archives of the history of the Conservative party to find out, at least, the character of some men who have been held in high honour and high esteem by that same party. And, if I should bring this to light, I think hon. gentlemen opposite should hold their heads down and should be the last men on earth to attack the character of men who, so far as we know, are spotless in the eyes of the country.

I rise, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of trying to elevate this debate a little higher. I know it is a very difficult thing to do, owing to the present state of education which hon. gentlemen opposite have attained, but I am hopeful that after giving them a few lectures we may be enabled to develop them a little more, cause them to rise to a higher level than they have attained at the present time, and to look on matters, not so much in the interest of narrow selfishness, but to look on them, as these interests will be considered and will be judged by the people whom we represent here. I wish to read a letter that was sent to the daily "Nor'-Wester" by J. C. Sproule, alderman of the city of Winnipeg, the brother of a respected member of this House. The letter is to the following effect:—

Sir,—In your morning edition of November 4, you have a letter sent by John H. Fairlie, principal of Rupert's Land Industrial School. With the letter itself I cannot find much fault,—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MAXWELL. Hon. gentlemen opposite had better wait a minute.

—With the letter itself I cannot find much fault, as I am in perfect accord with the principal when he objected to allow liquor to be brought into the school; but what I do take objection to is, the heading of the letter, in heavy leaded type, "A Jamboree, "Tarte and the Gang at the School."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MAXWELL. Well, gentlemen, those who put this heading there were men belonging to your own party. If you like to get up in this House and condemn your friends, then do so, but we must remember that it was an exponent of Conservative principles in the city of Winnipeg who put this heading on this particular letter. Mr. Sproule continues to write:

As a member of the city council, I was present, but was not aware that wine had been provided, until I arrived there, and, in justice to myself and other members of the deputation, I must resent the insinuation that it was either a "spree" or "jamboree." I was pleased to note that those who did drink wine, did so sparingly, and that quite a number of those present did not touch either wine or other liquor, notably the hon. Minister (Mr. Tarte), J. H. Ashdown, Alderman McCreary and myself. Now, Mr. Editor, I hope you will pardon me for mentioning these names, but, as they are all public men whose character and public usefulness might be injured by even an insinuation of that kind, I have been particular to mention them. Another reason why I refer to it is this. Alderman McCreary and myself are candidates for the position of chief magistrate of this city, and I do not want any citizen to think I am capable of going on a spree or jamboree, or of using tobacco or liquors of any kind. I have been particular to mention Alderman McCreary, because he is my opponent. I repeat, that it gave me pleasure to note that he did not indulge in any kind of liquor during the banquet.

Mr. MAXWELL.

Hoping that I have not trespassed upon your valuable space.

(Sgd.) J. C. SPROULE.

Alderman.

Winnipeg, November 5, 1896.

Now, so far as the dismissal of the Rev. Mr. Fairlie is concerned, I will only say this: That I have absolute confidence in the Minister of the Interior that after he has made due investigation as to the circumstances of the case, he will do what is right. And, if the reverend gentleman has been discourteous, if he did not act as a man should have acted in that particular position on that particular occasion, then I do not care whether he wears a black coat or a white one if he has not done what is right, he ought not to be there.

I have listened to a great deal of what has been said in this House on the question of the dismissal of public servants. I confess it is one of the most important subjects we can discuss here, and, speaking for myself, to dismiss a man is one of the hardest things which is given to me on this earth. I do not look so much to the man, as I do to his wife, perhaps to his family, and I take into consideration all the effects that may follow from the dismissal of any man who has a particular position in connection with the country's service. Now, Mr. Speaker, hon. gentlemen will, I think, agree with me, that there are two points which we ought always to take into consideration. First, the duty of the state to the servant. I believe it is the duty of the state to the servant to see that he is properly provided for, to give him a salary that will enable him to live in due competence, to make him comfortable in his home, as well as his wife and his family, and that so far as all these circumstances are concerned, he ought to have a fair field and fair favour with regard to any promotion that may come in his way. But, I think also, Mr. Speaker, hon. gentlemen will agree with me in this: That the servant has a duty to the state which also must be taken into consideration, and, as he has gone into the service of the state—not of the party; as he has gone in to devote his time and his talents to the furtherance of the interests of the state as a whole, that the state—not a party, has a right to demand of that man that he should give his due and absolute attention to all that concerns the whole, and not any part of the whole. Now, with regard to the question which crops out of this, what is the present condition of things. The House will agree with me that the civil service of this country is purely political; at least it is very nearly so. Hon. gentlemen opposite during their long tenure of office, have been putting Conservatives, one by one, into the public offices which have become vacant. So far as my own constituency is concerned, I know of only two Liberals in the postal service, in the customs service, in the inland revenue service, and in all the other departments in which the officers are employed by the Government; only two. No hon. gentleman will say that there were no Liberals, at least equally well fitted as these gentlemen who have been appointed. I am speaking impartially when I say that the best men have not been appointed in the past, and that the men who have been appointed are the men who have in some way endeared themselves to the Conservative party. We hear complaints from the opposite side of the House that Conservatives are not getting justice now. I hear complaints from this side that the Liberals are not getting justice now. What does it all mean, but simply that the cry is political from beginning to end. My position with regard to the civil service is this, the time has come for the well-being of Canada, when politics shall be eliminated from the public service; when men who enter there should enter at the door of competition, when men should get promotion by the same method, and when we should have a pure service, and a pure body of men, entirely removed from those spheres of action where our passions are apt to grow hot and excited when dismissals take place. We should be able to point as the old country points to its civil servants, and say "These men do not interfere with us; they mind their own business, and they allow the politicians of the country to mind theirs likewise." What did the late Government do? I have not the prejudices of the old war-horses on this side of the House. I can respect and somewhat sympathize with my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Cameron) who has long fought on the political battlefields, and—I shall not say who has grown weak, for his voice was strong to-day, but who has fought a hard fight for his party—I can sympathize with him and with other men who have done such yeoman service for their party, and who in days gone by have seen men deposed from their offices because they were Liberals; and now that their party are in power, they naturally feel that the same treatment should be meted out to those men who tried to do their utmost against the Liberal party. At the same time, I say it ill-becomes the members of the opposite party to denounce the present Government for dismissing men, when they did the same thing themselves. Their eloquent appeals have no force with me, because they are simply reaping the harvest they have sown in days gone by; and this state of things will continue in Canada until we rise to the occasion and determine to put the servants of the country beyond the range of the politicians and politics and when we define their boundaries and limits, their uses and liberties. Not till then shall we be spared the pain of discussing and the pain of listening to harangues about men who have been expelled from the public service. So far as I am concerned, I have no sympathy whatever with the spoils system, and when hon. gentlemen opposite talk of the spoils system being introduced into the country now for the first time, I cannot help saying that they are stating what they know is not exactly true. I think I am stating what is correct when I say that in the whole province of British Columbia there have been only four or five dismissals by the present Government. Is that any indication of the spoils system coming into force? When we take into consideration the fact that almost every official out there is a Conservative, this ought to convince hon. gentlemen that when they talk about the spoils system being introduced, they are either talking about something they know nothing about, or else they desire to mislead the country. The same thing is true all over Canada to-day. There are hundreds, nay, thousands of Conservatives still in the service of the country, and these men will be retained in that service. At the same time, it is galling and provoking to know, as I know from my own experience, that the Conservative party went into the post offices and the custom-houses and said to the men there: "You must subscribe to the campaign funds, go to the committee rooms, and work here and there for the success of the party." I say it is tantalizing when you meet these men everywhere on the political battlefield, and a man must be very much of a saint if, when he gets the power in his hands, he does not visit on these men the full weight of their conduct. I had it from the lips of men themselves that they were coerced to assist the election of the candidate opposed to me. I do not blame the men exactly. I have a great deal of sympathy for them; but I say that it is mean and contemptible to force the civil servants of this country to do what in their consciences they feel they ought not to do against men who are just as much interested in the country as they are themselves.

Now, I have just one word to say to the ex-Finance Minister about an expression which dropped from his lips. I expected better things from that hon. gentleman, for, although I say it to himself, I have learned in many ways to respect and admire him. I say he is a credit not only to his party, but likewise to Canada. I hope I may never descend so low as to denounce or besmirch hon. gentlemen who have risen to the front ranks in our political life. I say that men like the leader of the Opposition and the ex-Finance Minister are men whom we ought to respect and admire. I believe that if they were dead to-morrow, there is not a man on either side of the House but would pronounce excellent eulogies upon them, for their virtues and their usefulness to the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MAXWELL. I do not mean that in any sense but its right sense. I say I have learned to admire the ex-Minister of Finance. Having been a professor, I have been naturally drawn to him on that account more than perhaps I would have been if he had been an ordinary member of the House. I have been during a great part of my life listening to professors, and the excellent teaching I received from them has since had considerable influence on my life. I always seek to draw near to professors, thinking I shall get from them something to help me in my political conduct. I suppose it is hardly lawful to refer to a past debate, but I heard the hon. member practically twice assail the Premier of the country for having consulted with one Pacaud. We have had Mercier dinned into our ears, and I am not here to say anything of that late hon. gentleman except "requiescat in pace." But I will say this—and I think every French member of this House will join with me in saying it—that with all his faults he was a man whom French Canadians will not let die in a hurry; and when those of us who know that:

Though they may gang a kennin wrang,
To step aside is human.

When we take into consideration how brilliantly that man was endowed, and with what eloquence he thrilled the citizens of his native province, as I have often heard and seen him do we ought to change the expression of Shakspeare, let the bad go and keep the good in the life that was an example and a pattern for us all. So far as Mr. Pacaud is concerned, I will not say that he was just as pure as all of us would desire; but, Mr. Speaker, it ill-becomes gentlemen to speak in a condemnatory way of men who have taken their hundreds and thousands when they stood by men who had stolen millions. Not only did they stand by them, but they proclaimed to the world, they taught the youth of Canada, something to this effect: "You are fools if you steal your hundreds and thousands; get connected with the Conservative party of this country, steal your hundreds of thousands, you will only get a few weeks in prison, and when you come out you will be treated to a champagne supper, and will be returned to Parliament a few weeks afterwards." I speak of that, Mr. Speaker, with sorrow and regret. When I came to this country, I came as a Conservative, as one who had been brought up at the feet of Benjamin Disraeli, the late Earl of Beaconsfield. I came into this country with all my sympathies on that side of the House, but as I came in contact with these scandals, these robberies of public money, I could not consistently any longer maintain any connection with a party which would countenance such scandals. Hence the reason that I am on this side of the House this evening advocating the things I advocate to-night. I say again that it ill-becomes a party to try and besmirch another party for doing small things, so long as they have had the big robbers on their side who have plunged their big hands into the public purse and stolen the public money. I have said these things just as an expression of my views with regard to dismissals and with regard to this matter which has been under discussion to-day. I hope that we will rise now above these matters which we have been considering to-day. I think both sides might now very well take this position. If there be black sheep on either side let us have them expelled, if there be any taint of corruption in our midst, let us have that taint extirpated, if there be anything in our political life which our people will condemn let us set our house in order and let us try honestly to make this House the honourable House we desire it to be. Let us try to make the politics of Canada so pure that they will commend themselves to all the people of Canada, and let us likewise make the effort so far as we, the representatives of the people, are concerned, to live and act so as to ensure and enshrine ourselves in the memories and hearts of the men and women who send us here to represent them as best we may.

Mr. MAXWELL.

Mr. QUINN. Whatever may be the result of the debate which has been raised by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) this afternoon on the conduct of the Rev. Mr. Fairlie, the House and the country cannot fail to derive some advantage from the discussion, because it has thrown some light upon the methods used and the excuses given for the dismissal of public servants. I shall delay criticising the honourable and reverend gentleman who has just left the House until he has had that drink of water for which, I presume, he has gone, and in the meantime I shall try and deal with the charges that have been made against the Rev. Mr. Fairlie, and then give to some of the hon. Ministers an opportunity to explain some of the dismissals which have occurred upon the Lachine Canal in Montreal. The Rev. Mr. Fairlie is charged by the hon. member for West Huron with having committed several grievous offences. He was guilty of having refused to the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) on his visit to the North-west, the use of his school. He was guilty, according to the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Jameson), of being a temperance crank. He was guilty of having refused the use of the tables and chairs and the use of hot water—for the purpose of making tea, be it understood; and lastly he was accused and guilty—because, of course, having been accused it must follow that he was guilty—of having written a letter. Now these are the principal charges made against Mr. Fairlie, but they are not all the charges nor are they those upon which the different members opposite who have spoken are prepared to condemn him. In fact it seems to be the accepted thing, first to condemn, and then find some excuse, no matter how poor, afterwards. One hon. member condemns Mr. Fairlie because he refused the use of the school, another because he is not a gentleman, and a third, the hon. the Minister of Public Works himself, says Mr. Fairlie was perfectly right in refusing the school and acted a gentleman, but that he was wrong in writing the letter; and the hon. member for West Huron, who made the charge in the first instance, said that the most grievous offence of which Mr. Fairlie was guilty, in his eyes, was that he was a wicked Tory. Now, Mr. Speaker, this last offence is really the most serious and the only charge necessary to be made against any public officer in order to obtain a verdict against him of dismissal from the public service. Let us look at the charges made and then evidence in support of them, and let us calmly, as judges, decide whether Mr. Fairlie was guilty or not of the crimes charged against him, even that of being a wicked Tory.

It is charged that he refused the school, yet it is proven out of the mouths of those who made the charge that he only refused it under certain conditions. It is proven that he refused the use of the school for the purpose of a luncheon at which liquor was to be used. That is why he refused. Mr. Fairlie's letter is before the House, in which he declares—and his statement has not been challenged—that he not only offered the use of the school for the purposes of a luncheon, but even offered to supply the tables, and chairs and the luncheon itself to the extent of beef, coffee and tea, but that he would not consent to the admission of intoxicating liquor. He then is charged with being a temperance crank. Now, that is a very glib expression and very easily used, but I do not know that being a temperance crank is a sin or a crime or anything for which any person holding a position in the public service ought to be dismissed. What is meant by the term "temperance crank?" The term crank is a convenient one used to define a person who has extreme views on any subject. But the extremeness of a man's views depends altogether on the position taken by the one listening to him, and not on the position taken by the man himself. Therefore if a man is a consistent temperance advocate, however much we may differ from him, or however wrong or however extreme we may think he is, we have no title to call him a temperance crank. Having then examined the evidence concerning the refusal to allow the school to be used, and to allow the use of the tables and chairs and the hot water for tea, let us see what there is on the charge of writing the letter, which, mark you, Mr. Speaker, is the only complaint made by the hon. Minister of Public Works against Mr. Fairlie.

For the moment I would like to draw your attention to the statement which was made by the hon. the First Minister, when he, in the fullness of his heart, speaking from his place in the House, declared that no man should be dismissed from public office without the benefit of an investigation into his conduct. I need not remind you how the declaration of his as First Minister was received not only by his own supporters but by other hon. gentlemen who had the pleasure of listening to that statement. But when we look at what has occurred within the last few months, when we see so many members of the public service dismissed, does it not bring back vividly to our minds a certain letter written by a former Prime Minister of this country in which he declared that he was glad the strain was over, that he was too old to stand longer as a guard to the public treasury, too weak to resist longer the assaults made upon it? Is not this the counterpart of what we see to-day? Is it not the fact that the Prime Minister of this country has been too weak to resist longer the onslaughts that have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite, too weak to resist longer the pressure from behind that is intended to drive out of public positions the men who occupy them, in order that those who are hungry for the crumbs that fall from the Government table may enjoy the sweets of these offices?

In this particular case, the only charge that has been made against the Rev. Mr. Fairlie, the only charge upon which he can be indicted before this House and on which a verdict can be expected by those who seek to have him dismissed from the public service, is that in the letter he has written he has spoken disrespectfully of the Minister of Public Works or some other Minister or has said something which is absolutely and utterly untrue. The hon. Minister of Public Works said in his statement concerning that letter—I was careful to take down his words—that when Mr. Fairlie said that some of the guests smelt of liquor and intimated that they were drunk, he said what was not true. I challenge the hon. Minister of Public Works to find in that letter one line which charges that some of the guests smelt of liquor or one word intimating that the guests on that occasion were drunk. I wish to draw your attention to this particular statement of the hon. Minister of Public Works not so much for the inaccuracy it contains, but to point out the injustice of any Minister, and much more any ordinary member of this House and still more of an ordinary citizen sitting in judgment on the actions or words of a public officer when he himself is either looking for the position or for any other reason does not understand the explanations given by that officer. I call your attention to the fact that so much was the Minister of Public Works prejudiced against this man that he, the judge, the one into whose hands the Minister of the Interior had, so to speak, delivered this officer's head had misunderstood the officer's words to such an extent as to declare that the officer had said some of the guests smelt of liquor and had intimated that some of them were drunk and that this was not true. If an hon. Minister can be guilty of things of this kind—I will not call them crimes—but if he can be guilty of misquoting, of misunderstanding, of taking a wrong view of things, how much more may we expect this of ordinary members of the House and of ordinary citizens who do not occupy the exalted positions of Ministers of the Crown, so well characterized by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) in his short address this evening?

Now, the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell) declaring himself to be a clergyman and willing to throw oil upon the troubled waters, and wishing to raise this debate to a higher plane as a member of the Church, as a worthy Minister of the Gospel, spent the greater part of the time which he consumed in a tirade of abuse and vituperation against the hon. member for Western Assiniboia. I have no hesitation in saying that in my short experience in this House I have heard nothing to equal it. I am glad to say that it is the first time that an attack of this kind has been made, and I am perfectly certain that it is the last time it will be made in this House. Now, what did the hon. member for Burrard say? One of the things he charged against the hon. member for Western Assiniboia was that he advocated the interests of Mrs. McManus. Now, what is the case of Mrs. McManus. We have had this case in the House before and it was proven clearly to the satisfaction, not only of this House but of this country, that this woman was dismissed from her office on a report which did not ask for her dismissal but in reality sustained her in her position. But what then, was the actual cause of her dismissal? I will not say that the hon. member for Burrard whispered into the ear of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mullock) the same thing he whispered into the ear in this House, attacking the character and reputation of that woman—I will not say that it was on the ex-parte statement of hon. members who were interested in having that woman dismissed from the office in order that the place might be filled by some friend of theirs that she was dismissed. But I cannot but wonder at the Christian charity of a clergyman who will permit himself to use expressions attacking an inoffensive and undefended woman in this House which he has not the courage to make to the Postmaster General in a charge laid against that woman. My hon. friend from Western Assiniboia has just put in my hand a letter from Mr. Justice Richardson, as follows:—

Regina, 10th May, 1897.

Dear Mr. Davin.—The inclosed letter was received by me to-day. My only recollection of the writer and her husband is, that they kept what we considered at the time a very fair hotel. It was in the spring of 1883 that I first stopped over there, and then onward for one and a half or two years, when holding court sittings, I stayed at their hotel. Except for the brief sojourn each time in Qu'Appelle, I knew nothing of the people. Certainly, while there, their place was respectable, to all appearances visible to me.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) HUGH RICHARDSON.

Now, my hon. friend from Burrard states that he knew nothing of this woman, yet he has no hesitation, as I stated, in whispering not only in my ear but in the ear of another member of this House that this woman was of totally immoral character, after we had attempted to defend her before this Chamber. But my hon. friend has also, I think, transgressed the proprieties as a Minister of the Gospel, as a preacher of charity, when, with the words "Resquiescat in pace" still upon his lips regarding the late Mr. Mercier he does not hesitate to asperse the memory of other men who rest in their graves and ought to be allowed to rest there. I think that instead of the hon. gentleman having given us an evidence of Christian spirit, when he started out to lecture us, he has probably given us a lesson of how far one can forget himself in the heat of a debate; and probably the best thing to be done is to throw the mantle of charity over his conduct on this occasion. Now, the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. McClure) also, in speaking on the subject, said that he hoped the time would come when in this country no man would be entitled to office because of the party to which he belongs, and that no man should be dismissed on account of the party to which he belongs. Yet professing such a doctrine as this before this House, I have no doubt that the hon. member for Colchester has formed one of the deputations to have many of the poor labourers removed from the Intercolonial Railway within his and adjacent ridings.

But it is not for the purpose of discussing the matter of Mr. Fairlie alone that I have risen this evening; but since the subject of dismissals in general has come before the House, I thought perhaps it might not be amiss to put before the House and especially the Government, some cases out of the very large number which have come to my notice in the city of Montreal. Perhaps I ought to preface my remarks by saying that within the last few weeks not only the men to whose cases I am about to refer, but all the men working on the Lachine Canal in the city of Montreal, have been ruthlessly thrown out of their employment, men who were in that employment for twenty, thirty, and some of them thirty-five years, still hale and hearty, and better able to perform their duties than the men who have replaced them; these men have been thrown out without a moment's warning. As a sample, I will read letters covering two particular cases. The first is that of a young man who occupied the position of storekeeper for two years. On the 30th of April, 1897, he received the following letter:—

Sir.—This is to notify you that your services, as storeman on the Lachine Canal, will not be required after the 30th inst.

Yours truly,

ERNEST MARCEAU,

Superintending Engineer.

To Michael Behan, Esq., Montreal.

Now, Sir, you will remark that this is dated the 30th of April, and it states that his services will not be required after the 30th instant. As a matter of fact, this letter was delivered to him about 8 o'clock on the evening of the 30th instant, after he had finished his day's work, after he had gone home intending to return the next day to his employment. What did he do? He immediately went to his late superintendent of the canal, and to the superintending engineer. From the superintendent he received this letter:

Montreal, May 1st, 1897.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that Mr. M. Behan has been employed, as storeman, in connection with Lachine Canal, during the past two years, and during that time has given excellent satisfaction. He is a thoroughly reliable man, and I willingly recommend him to any party requiring such a person.

JOHN CONROY,

Superintendent Lachine Canal.

He then went to the superintending engineer, and received the following certificate:—

Montreal, May 1st, 1897.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that Michael Behan has been employed during two years, as storeman on the Lachine Canal, and that I have always found him a painstaking, able, steady and reliable man, and

I have much pleasure in giving him this testimony.

ERNEST MARCEAU,

Superintending Engineer
of Quebec Canals.

Now, what was the offence that this man was guilty of? Both his superior officers declare that he is able, intelligent and a thoroughly reliable man. Why should he be dismissed? It could not be for the purpose of economy; it could not be because they did not require his services any longer, because the very next morning, on the 1st of May, another man took his place. Was it because he had been an offensive partisan? I do not know, no charge of the kind is made, and I am sure that no such a thing could be proven. But what is the fact, Mr. Speaker? I have no hesitation in declaring this from my place in the House of Commons, that there exists in the city of Montreal to-day a committee of the Liberal party into whose hands has been transferred the power of the political or official life and death of every man occupying any position in the public service; into whose hands has been given the right to decree whether any man in that service shall or shall not be dismissed. Furthermore, the superintending engineer of the Quebec canals has received instructions, from whom I know not, but he has received instructions that no matter who or what is recommended by this committee, he must carry it out to the very letter, no matter whose dismissal is asked for, he must make that dismissal at once. Now, Sir, this is a terrible state of affairs. We talk about the spoils system in the United States, we talk about introducing into this country something which they have always possessed in the United States. But has there been the equal of this in the United States? Truth to say, there has been a spoils system, as we call it, in the United States, but it possessed one virtue, it was perfectly honest, it was perfectly open, it was well understood by the public officers; whereas in this country we have been pluming ourselves on possessing a service that was above reproach, upon giving to men employment during their lives; we have led these men to believe that during good behaviour, they would keep the positions in which they have been placed; and yet without a moment's notice, on the report of an irresponsible committee, all the personnel of which is altogether unknown to the men who are effected by it—I say on the report of this irresponsible and utterly unknown committee, a man is ruthlessly dismissed from his position, thrown out upon the world, and not allowed even a word in his own defence. Now, I come to another case which is even more trying, far more harsh indeed than the one to which I have referred, that is the case of Mr. Michael Enright. Mr. Michael Enright was employed upon the Lachine Canal for thirty-four years, employed regularly. He is a man about fifty-five years of age, a man very well preserved, capable of doing an honest day's work, as lively and as efficient as any officer on the canal to-day. Without one moment's warning he too on 30th April received a copy of this letter which I have already read to the House, and which is headed "Circular." Michael Enright in order to establish his qualifications went to the superintending engineer, and received the following testimonial:—

Department of Railways and Canals—Montreal Division.

Superintending Engineer's Office,
Montreal, May 4th, 1897.

To whom it may concern :

This is to certify that Michael Enright has been connected with the Lachine Canal, as lock labourer, bridge-keeper and watchman, for thirty-four years. During that time he has proved himself a steady, sober, reliable man.

I have much pleasure in stating that I have found him very satisfactory during the last four years, or since I have myself had charge of the canal.

ERNEST MARCEAU,
Superintending Engineer.

Yet without one moment's warning this man, who from the fact that he was employed at the beginning of the season was led to believe he would be offered means of sustenance for himself and his large family, was on the order of a secret, irresponsible and unknown committee ruthlessly hurled from his office and literally thrown on the street. I do not think I can find words in the English language of sufficient strength to characterize such conduct as this. There is no pretense on the part of anybody that this man has given any offence, there is not even the pretense put forward that he has been guilty of partisanship either offensive or inoffensive. As a matter of fact, Behan did not exercise the right of the franchise of voting, and in fact Enright never interfered in elections during the last four years and only used that franchise, which is given him by the law of this country, occasionally. But what are the facts in regard to the people who have been put in the places of these men. Both the men put in are well known "heelers" of the Government party in St. Ann's division in Montreal, they are men who have earned reputations as "heelers" for the Liberal party. One I am informed is a jail bird. Not only is he a jail bird; but at the election on May 11th he proved himself perfectly worthy of the position he occupies as the unworthy successor of Enright, for he was the first to make a declaration before the police magistrate, which I am informed by the man accused is absolute perjury, in order to have the man arrested. So if there is such a thing as offensive partisanship, and that is a reason why a man should be dismissed from office, both of the new applicants are certainly liable to dismissal. I say this standing in my place in this House; I say they are both offensive partisans, and I have no hesitation in making this statement. Is my word not as good as that of a man who occupies no position in this House? Can my word that these men are offensive partisans not be accepted, but must the Government only listen to the voices of men who make charges against employees because they were placed in positions by Conservative Governments of long ago? If so, it is not in keeping with that conduct which I admired so much when displayed by the Minister of Public Works this evening, when he declared it was not his intention to dismiss Mr. Fairlie, that he had not done so, that he felt Mr. Fairlie had acted rightly, and that the only complaint against him was that he had written a scurrilous letter against him. I feel perfectly certain from my knowledge of the hon. Minister that when he comes again to read that letter in the cool, calm light, three, four or six months after the occurrence has passed, he will see there is not such a bitter sting in it as he thought when he first read it after the famous little luncheon he had on the plains. I feel his better nature will assert itself, and instead of dismissing Mr. Fairlie he will say he acted on that occasion as man and preacher of the Gospel, as an honoured member of the Episcopal Church, a gentleman not only by education but by profession, a man who was not afraid even in the face of a Minister of the Crown to deny him privileges he had not the right to allow to the ordinary citizen.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. As a young member, a stranger to the House, a young man not only from the country, but from a far country, I crave your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, and the indulgence of this hon. House while I endeavour to offer a few remarks on the question at issue. I may say, Sir, that it may appear somewhat presumptuous on my part, coming here a stranger, to venture to criticise the proceedings of this House; but I feel somewhat disappointed at the nature of the debate to which we have been compelled to listen this afternoon and almost the whole of this evening. I have had very little experience in addressing an assembly such as this is, and naturally I feel somewhat perturbed at the stand I have taken in venturing to criticise the proceedings of the House in my first speech; but really, I think, the people expect more from the representatives in the House of Commons at Ottawa than that we should discuss such a "tempest in a teapot" so elaborately and devote so much attention to it as we have done to-day. What are the facts in regard to this case? I really fail to see that it is worthy of nearly so much attention as we have given it. We have drifted off on one little line of argument and debate and then another, so that during the whole day we have not arrived at any definite opinion or conclusion in respect to the matter. It struck me as being particularly strange that this House should discuss this issue with such feeling, vim and vigour, because in Manitoba, where the incident occurred, it really attracted no attention at all. The papers took it up for a day or two, but it soon dropped out of sight and no one gave any more consideration to it. We have the ground taken that Mr. Fairlie was to blame for one thing, then that he was to blame for another thing, and again he was to blame for something else; but we have the word of the hon. Minister, who is principally interested, that as regards Mr. Fairlie's conduct in refusing to admit intoxicating liquors into the building, the Minister of Public Works admitted that Mr. Fairlie was perfectly justified in doing so, and I for my part think so too. In refusing the admission of intoxicating liquors into a Government building in which there were young wards of the nation, Mr. Fairlie was perfectly justified. In regard to other matters I will not discuss them, because in Manitoba we have paid no attention to this incident. The Conservatives suffer the misfortune—they have been having a good many misfortunes lately—of possessing an organ in Winnipeg which uses, in journalistic phrase, "scare heads." The "Nor'-Wester" uses very strong language, and says a great many things which the people of Manitoba have come to take with a grain of salt. We do not believe all the "Nor'-Wester" says, and I am here as a living demonstration of that fact. We are accustomed to the exaggerated style of that organ. It is not the fault of the Conservative party, it is the fault of the organ, and in the North-west we give little or no attention to it in general, and in this particular matter we paid very little attention to it indeed. I was much surprised indeed to think that this House should occupy so much time in discussing a question of this character. I quite agree with the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Maxwell) in his desire to see the tone of debate elevated in this House. While I have every respect for the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), I did feel a little pained tonight at the manner in which he alluded to gentlemen on this side of the House. I felt pained at the insinuations which he thought fit to make, and which, from my intimate personal knowledge of that gentleman, I considered beneath him. You know, Mr. Speaker, that we have not all had the great advantage of being born into a society which we could adorn. We have not all had the privilege of being accustomed, as it were, to wearing the purple and fine linen so inseparable from high class society in Ottawa. We of the Liberal party have always been the party of the people, and I for my part am proud to be a member of that party. I must say that while I am always pleased to meet a gentleman in every sense of the word, I am also very glad to meet a gentleman who has raised himself from the lower strata of society. I always feel much more pleasure in the society of a gentleman whose father was a tramp than in the society of a tramp whose father was a gentleman. I must say that I do not think it shows very good taste on the part of a gentleman to make such allusions as the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) indulged in this afternoon.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that there should be in this House so much party. I can quite understand that those old political war-horses who have been sparring across the floor of this House for a great many years, naturally like to have a little canter when the occasion arises. But that is not what we are sent here for. We are not here to discuss paltry matters affecting one party or the other; we are supposed to be here to discuss matters affecting the welfare of the whole Canadian nation. We have all the work we require, and we need all the time at our disposal to perform that work, so that there should be no time wasted in exhibitions such as we have had to-day. I do not believe in this indulgence in invective, particularly of a personal nature, in the legislative halls of the Dominion. Even from the last speaker (Mr. Quinn) who delivered an address which was a credit to him, we heard allusions to political "heelers." Well, you know that in sparring exhibitions you must always have heelers, and if the two political parties were not so entirely antagonistic to each other, and if we had not the welfare of the country swallowed up in a desire for the welfare of the party, the "heeler" would disappear from view. The "heeler" is not so necessary on this side of the House as he is on the other, and in that connection, I may remark, that a little depends on the way in which the word is spelled. As I say, Sir, it is very natural for these old politicians, who have been for so many years opposed to each other, to feel sore and to indulge in personal invective and personal allusions. But men like the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Maxwell) and myself, who come here as young politicians and unused to that kind of business, do not appreciate it. I would beg in the most humble and respectful manner to lay our grievances before those older and more experienced gentlemen, and to point out to them, that we would like to see more work done in this Parliament in the interests of the people of Canada.

In regard to the real question before the House, namely, the question of the dismissal of public servants, there is a great deal to be said on both sides. Like my hon. friend from Vancouver, I would not wish to see anybody dismissed, particularly married men, married men with families who have become accustomed to the duties of their positions, who are dependent to a very large extent upon these positions, and who, many of them, have arrived at an age when it would be very difficult for them to find employment and suitable emolument in other walks of life. But, Sir, we are not altogether to blame. The Liberal party have had eighteen years of exclusion, and have not even had the crumbs which fell from the table. They have been treated with contempt. Of course from the point of view of our friends opposite, the Liberal party deserved it, and perhaps from a worldly point of view they did deserve it. They were foolish enough to stand up for their principles, and for what they believed, during eighteen long years, when all they had to do was to swallow the bait and fall into line. But, there were a great many of these fools in Canada, and they fought battle after battle, and finally after many years of exile they have returned home, and it is but natural that they should feel that they now have a right to share in the fruits of office. I may say, that so far as we in the west are concerned, there have been very few dismissals. I do not know of any in my constituency, and if there should have been one or two, they must be of the most trifling character. There have been very few dismissals as I have said throughout the west, and you know, Sir, it is an old saying: It is time enough to bid a certain gentleman good morning when you meet him. I do not think it is wise for hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to provoke us too far in this matter, and it would perhaps be well for them to use a little discretion and judgment. They have a great many of their political friends and allies now seated in comfortable offices, and I am sure they do not want to see these men, and their wives, and their families turned out. As long as we remain tolerant, as long as we do not attempt to make wholesale dismissals, it would be only wise and reasonable on the part of our friends opposite to treat us with a little courtesy in the matter; God knows we have had little enough of it for the last score of years. I do not wish, Mr. Speaker, to occupy the time of the House at any length, because I believe that our time has been occupied at far greater length in this matter than was necessary or advisable. I feel, like my hon. friend from Vancouver, that it would be in the best interests of the Dominion of Canada as a whole, if we could put our civil servants on some such footing as are the civil servants of Great Britain. If we could have competitive examinations, and if we could have our young men and young women in the civil service, those with brains and energy advancing as they deserve as a result of promotion examinations; if we could have them without fear of the advent to power of one political party or another then we would have a civil service of which we might be proud and in which efficiency would be its own reward. That is the goal which we should strive to attain; but, Mr. Speaker, I trust our friends on the opposite side will not take me too seriously when I say, that before we can possibly arrive at that goal it will be necessary for us to infuse a little Liberal blood into the civil service. If we started in that way at the present time we would have a civil service almost entirely Conservative. It is absolutely necessary that we should get a little Liberal blood into that service before we can begin to make it entirely non-political. There is just one little matter further to which I wish to allude, and it is this: Our friend the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Maxwell) referred to the late Mr. Mercier, and he said what, of course, is perfectly right, and should always be maintained as a principle, that we should let him rest in peace. "De mortuis nil nisi bonum" is a principle which I am sure we all respect in this House. I was somewhat surprised to find the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Quinn), in taking up this part of the speech of the hon. member for Vancouver, alluding to the other individuals to whom that hon. member referred. With reference to them he used the same expression. "requiescat in pace." Well, I have no doubt that there are some incidents and some individuals in the history of the Conservative party, as there are in the history of all parties, that our hon. friends opposite would be very well pleased indeed to leave to rest in peace; they do not like to see them resurrected. Again, I apologize to you, Mr. Speaker, and the House for having taken the great liberty, as a young and new member, of venturing to criticise the proceedings of so august a body; but in what some call "the wild and woolly west" from which I come, and where I have resided a good many years, we have a certain freedom of speech, and a certain absence of restraint, characteristic of the prairie, and I trust that you and the members of this honourable House will take that into consideration, and deal gently with young and tender members like myself.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, I certainly can re-echo the sentiment of the last speaker who regretted that the time of this House was taken up with such trivial matters as have engaged our attention this afternoon and this evening; and I think it was a just complaint that the Government party at this busy time of the session should have thrust this very insignificant matter upon the attention of this House. It is not a matter that could fairly come before this House at all. Even if it could come fairly before this House, I claim that it is a matter too trivial and too insignificant to engage the attention of legislators of a country the size of Canada. Before proceeding to do so, however, I must reflect for a moment or two upon the sentiments of the hon. gentleman who represents Vancouver (Mr. Maxwell). Having been brought up a Presbyterian, I looked with considerable interest upon that hon. gentleman, and was anxious to learn if I could what secret spring it was which directed him to leave the high calling to which, in the providence of God, or in the providence of some other great being, he had been called; and I have had the explanation on the floor of this House to-night. If there ever was an exhibition of the absence of that charity that thinketh no evil, that charity that suffereth long and is kind, it has been manifested on the floor of this House to-night. Not satisfied with attempts to rob the living, who could defend themselves, he would rob the dead of the reputations they left behind them—ghoul-like, re-opening the tomb and desecrating the remains of the departed. When I heard the hon. gentleman reflect on the failings in the character of Sir John Macdonald, and the weakness of his life, I felt that it was but attempting to throw dirt at the sun. The greatness of that man is not only recognized by all Canadians irrespective of party, but it is a subject on which we love to dwell; he was the noblest Roman of us all, and:

The bright and particular star
With whose true fixed and certain quality
There is no fellow in the firmament.

Mr. GIBSON. He never mentioned his name.

Mr. POWELL. It would have been more manly if he had. That enemy is the most to be despised who would stab you in the dark. That enemy is never to be despised who meets you boldly face to face, and throws down the gauntlet and dares you to honourable combat with the sword. The hon. gentleman also resorted to criticism upon the Conservative party generally. With this I have nothing to do. That is a little badinage: we all understand what it means: we can take it at what it is worth. But I was rather amused at the laudatory expressions of the hon. gentleman respecting himself. He was here as an example of all that was pure and lovely and of good report. I could not but think of the verses of his own national poet on a minister of his own church:

O Thou, wha in the heavens dost dwell,
Wha, as it pleases best Thyself,
Sends ane to heaven and ten to hell,
A' for Thy glory,
And no for onie goid or ill
They've done afore Thee!

I bless and praise Thy matchless might,
Whan thousand Thou has left in night,
That I am here afore Thy sight!
For Thy gifts and grace,
A burnin' and a shinin' light
To a' this place.

And when, as it were, inheriting a little of that hostility of Jennie Geddes to the episcopacy, he launched out into abuse of Rev. Mr. Fairlie, a clergyman of the Episcopal body in the North-west, I thought of the following verses:—

Lord, hear my earnest cry and pray'r
Against that Presbyt'ry o' Ayr;
Thy strong right hand, Lord, make it bare,
Upo' their heads;
Lord, weigh it down, and dinna spare,
For their misdeeds.

Lord, in the day of vengeance try him;
Lord, visit them wha did employ him,
And pass not in Thy mercy by 'em,
Nor hear their pray'r;
But for Thy people's sake destroy 'em,
And dinna spare.

But, Lord, remember me and mine
Wi' mercies temp'ral and divine,
That I for gear and grace may shine,
Excell'd by name,
An' a' the glory shall be Thine,
Amen, Amen.

But I will leave that hon. gentleman to the exhibition he made of himself in respect of his Christian virtues on the floor of the House, and shall now pass to the particular matter which provoked this discussion. If there was one thing ever done by a man that I feel proud of as a temperance man, it was the action of the Rev. Mr. Fairlie. I offer no excuse for it, I put forward no apology. I claim that if ever there was an act done by a man in Canada which was worthy of all praise, it was done by the Rev. Mr. Fairlie. Now, what was the act? Here was a gentleman who, in the presence of those who had the power to dismiss him stood fairly and squarely by his principles. This is a question of principle said he, and I will not allow even the Minister of Public Works to violate the law of the land and consume liquor on these premises. Why, it is a consistency in his case which is a perfect jewel, and I was very much astonished that my genial friend from Yarmouth who poses—and I do not use the term offensively—and who is here as the representative of the prohibition party in this country, should have referred to Mr. Fairlie's course in the way he did. While it may have been indiscreet on his part to write the letter he did—I am not going to say anything about that other than it was a well merited rebuke to the editor of the paper who made the scurrilous attack upon him. The rebuke was deserved, although it may have been a little strong, but what did the hon. gentleman from Yarmouth single for comment in the whole affair? Not what was worthy of praise. He did not sound the glory of the man who was true to his temperance principles in the presence of the Minister of Public Works, and refused to admit liquor into the school of which he had charge. No, but he took something that is beside the issue altogether, and pounced down upon Mr. Fairlie as a man who was not worthy of associating with gentlemen and who was himself no gentleman for what forsooth? For not recognizing the fact that some gentlemen do drink, and for refusing to violate his instructions and the law of the land by allowing the party to bring and drink liquor in the school premises.

Let me point to another circumstance worthy of mention. If there is one thing that, as Englishmen and as Frenchmen, we all admire, it is that spirit of chivalry which never displays itself in cowardice. And what have we had here to-day? I think if there is anything despicable on earth it is for a man, when he is protected by his position as member of Parliament, to stand up and asperse the character of another in a way he would not have the manliness to in other places or under circumstances where the law could lay its hands upon him. Why, in the numbers of that paper which were issued after the letter was written and published by the reverend gentleman, what do we find? We find that the man who, on the floor of this House, has stamped Mr. Fairlie as a liar, was as meek as Moses and treated him with the utmost respect. It was left for him, not in the arena in which he could be held responsible for his utterances but in the arena of Parliament where he can speak with impunity, so far as his legal liabilities are concerned, to asperse the character of this gentleman. I know nothing about the Rev. Mr. Fairlie. He may have been a second Ananias, so far as I know.

Mr. FOSTER. The first one started this debate.

Mr. POWELL. The first one started this discussion. The Rev. Mr. Fairlie may be possessed in no way at all of the spirit of truth; but this I will say that if his character for truth is to be judged of in this House by the assertions of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) who wrote those editorials in that paper and dared not say in that paper what he has not hesitated to say here, in the opinion of every honourable and fair thinking gentleman in this House, certainly Mr. Fairlie's character is not going to suffer very much from the attack of that hon. gentleman on the floor of this House to-day. We should remember the position which Mr. Fairlie occupies if he has no respect for himself and not apply the term liar to a minister of the Gospel. I do not accuse my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) of making an assault upon a Protestant clergyman because he is a Protestant clergyman. I entirely exonerate him from that, because he is perfectly willing to hit all round, and it would seem a proper thing that the man who defies the bishops of his own church and stigmatizes them as liars should be perfectly willing to stamp a minister of the Episcopal church as a liar also. But he should remember, in all spirit of charity, that this gentleman never reflected upon him at all and never said that a single member of that company was intoxicated. He should remember that in no way did Mr. Fairlie reflect upon him, but simply, when some member of the company, who was nosing around for congenial dirt, professed in the probably unduly excited condition he was in to hear, smelt a smell in a corner of the building, he said to that gentleman that this smell was, in all probability, the exudation of gentlemen who were filled with the various compounds to which he referred.

I have done with that subject, and shall refer to the dismissals in the county I represent. We have the largest Government railway patronage of probably any county in Canada. I do not believe in dealing in vague generalities. I throw down this challenge to hon. gentlemen opposite, and I make this statement boldly on the floor of this House, knowing it to be true, and knowing that many of the hon. gentlemen who hear me also know it to be true, and that is this, that the hon. Minister of Railways has dismissed since January last, not labouring men but officials, in the city of Moncton more than were dismissed by the Conservative party in the whole term from 1882 to 1886. And I challenge them to produce a solitary instance in which the Conservative party, notwithstanding their immense patronage, ever dismissed one solitary man in that county on the ground of politics. I take exception to the statement that because a man is a strong partisan he should be dismissed. I claim that a man does not sacrifice his manhood and become a slave when he accepts a Government office, and you could not give, to my mind, any greater disqualification for an applicant for an important public office than the fact that he takes no interests in politics. Why, Sir, it is, the noblest work of a citizen to take an interest in politics. The best men of the country take an interest in politics. Every citizen should have the liberty of expressing his views, and so long as a gentleman filling a public office does not debase his office by using it for party purposes, so long as he does not make use of the Government machinery to instal one party in power or turn another out, he should have the same freedom of opinion and action as any other citizen in the land. And nothing will ever be recorded against the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) more derogatory to his greatness as a man or his eminence as a statesman, than the fact that he denied the Government officials in Nova Scotia the franchise which should be accorded to every free man in the country.

Mr. ROCHE. It was not my intention to take part in this discussion to-night. In fact the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) and myself had a sort of agreement whereby neither one of us was to engage in this debate; but since he has seen fit to engage in it, I presume that I must follow suit. One thing that has impressed itself on my mind since I have had a seat in this House is that when any member on this side rises to address the House, the members on the Government side, one by one, leave their seats and do that very act which the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) described, in his not very elegant but characteristic language, as taking to the woods and crawling under the barn. And those who do not leave the Chamber generally get into knots of three and four and engage in running conversations in order to break the force of criticism on this side. On this side, however, when hon. gentlemen opposite rise, we give them a patient hearing; and I have read in the independent press of Canada a compliment paid to the hon. gentleman of the Opposition that we were the most orderly Opposition that has ever graced any Parliament. I am afraid, however, that a similar compliment could not be made to hon. gentlemen opposite, nor can they be congratulated on showing their bravery or valour to any extent, for, almost without exception, when any one rises to speak, who is opposed to them, especially the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), they adopt the tactics I have referred to, and the reason is they fear the castigation which is in store for them.

Now, I think that the discussion which has been brought forward by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron), and the censure for which, if there is any blame to be attached to it at all, must fall upon hon. gentlemen opposite, cannot fail to have some good effect. Had that hon. gentleman to begin over again I think he would have hesitated before provoking such a discussion. Certainly it has not resulted satisfactory to his own party. Certainly it has not had the result he anticipated. Three or four speakers on the Government side took the floor, in the first place, and put a very plausible case before the House, until the other side was presented by hon. gentlemen on these benches, which entirely changed the aspect of affairs and showed that the object of hon. gentlemen opposite was not so much to vindicate the Minister of Public Works and his party as to destroy the official life of this Rev. Mr. Fairlie. Offices are becoming rather scarce, and office-hunters are very numerous, and even the position of principal of an industrial school is not to be despised. Now, the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) has made very serious accusations against this reverend gentleman. He has spoken with a great deal of violence against this clergyman; but as the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Quinn) has pointed out, the most serious charge he made against him was that this man was a rabid Tory. That explains the discussion this afternoon and evening. If the Rev. Mr.

Fairlie had the opportunity to give that hon. member a character, probably it would not at all redound to the hon. gentleman's credit. The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) has declared that he had no fault to find with Mr. Fairlie's reception of himself and party, that Mr. Fairlie did perfectly right in refusing the room for a banquet where liquor was to be dispensed in the presence of the Indian children, the wards of the nation. The hon. member for Lisgar also stated that Mr. Fairlie was right in this respect. When these gentlemen are brought face to face with public opinion, they do not dare take any other stand. They have no fault to find with Mr. Fairlie except for the letter he addressed to the press. They forget what it was that called forth that letter. From their speeches one would suppose that this reverend gentleman had sat down deliberately and designedly, to write something to injure the hon. Minister of Public Works in the eyes of the public. Not so. There was a violent article published in the Winnipeg "Tribune," read here by the hon. member for West Assiniboia, reflecting upon his conduct of the school, and upon the teachers. Is not that reverend gentleman entitled to defend himself? Is the fact that he holds a position, a very subordinate position under the Government, to prevent him from defending the character of the institution over which he presides, and his own character? I do not think any fair-minded man will take that position. He had every right to defend himself. It was to defend himself that he wrote this letter to the press to which such exception is taken. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Jameson) has himself declared that in this letter it was insinuated that members of the party were intoxicated. The hon. member can read that letter from beginning to end, but he cannot find that it contains any such insinuation. It seems to me that these gentlemen protest too much. The hon. member for Winnipeg has given what he considers the very best evidence of their perfect sobriety, which was that they were able to return to Winnipeg and that that very night they were actually able to eat, and had another banquet. The evidence is not very good, but no person, in the press or out of it, ever accused anybody in the party of being intoxicated. The question has been asked: Was the letter true? The hon. member for Lisgar says: No. With all deference to that hon. gentleman, and not desiring to say anything unpleasant, I would say that he is not the best judge of what is and is not true. As a reason for saying that, I may say that at the banquet that night this gentleman delivered a speech—and he never delivers a speech but the Winnipeg "Tribune" reports it very fully, the great "I" running through it from beginning to end. He made a statement which was greeted by the press of Manitoba with ridicule, and to show that I am right in saying that you must take what that hon. gentleman says with a considerable discount, let me say that in order to magnify his office as member for Lisgar, to show in fact that he was the only representative of the west, he said that while he was down here attending his sessional duties he had as many as 18,000 applications for office from his own constituency, and the same number from the city of Winnipeg. Now am I not right in stating that this hon. gentleman is constitutionally addicted to extravagant language? If his statement is accurate every man, woman and child in his constituency must be a seeker after public office.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that in the evening after the lunch was held?

Mr. ROCHE. It was that very night. That is the only excuse I can give for the hon. gentleman. It would seem that there are about a thousand applicants for every position which becomes vacant. The hon. member for Huron rather slightly referred to this "parson of the Episcopalian Church." The hon. gentleman, I think, requires a very severe churching himself in order to cause him to speak more respectfully of the church and the clergy. If he does not believe one clergyman, perhaps he would be inclined to listen when two of them concur in a statement. Surely not all of them are accustomed to speak falsehoods. Let me read a letter to the press which vindicates Mr. Fairlie in what he stated in the letter published over his name:

Sir,—Would you kindly allow me, through the columns of your valuable paper, to draw the attention of the public to a most untruthful and almost libellous account of the condition of the Indian school here, which appeared in the columns of the "Daily Tribune" of October 27? The article in question was an account of the Hon. Mr. Tarte's visit to the St. Andrew's Rapids, and, read by one unacquainted with the true facts of the case, appears indeed a "rather discreditable state of affairs," as the writer puts it, unfortunately. Those who live here and are connected closely with the staff of the school and its admirable discipline, do know the true facts of the case, and, as one of these, I wish to open the eyes of the public to the actual circumstances, as they occurred on the visit of the hon. Minister of Public Works.

Before offering my remarks on the article in question, let me first premise a few facts. First, the principal most courteously offered to entertain the party to lunch, and was, indeed, to my certain knowledge, very disappointed when the other arrangements were effected. Now, the writer of the article carefully concealed from the public the reason why the principal's kind offer was refused. Let me open their eyes. It was quietly intimated to the principal that two cases of liquor would arrive for the luncheon party, and that this would be used at the luncheon. The Rev. J. H. Fairlie, being a conscientious and worthy gentleman, thereupon told his informant that, under no circumstances, could he allow liquor to be brought into the school, as this was contrary to the regulations of the department; but, if the party would forego this luxury, he would do his utmost to give them a good spread. But the party were evidently unwilling to accept this condition, and hence arrangements were made to hold the luncheon in another building. I believe it was solely through the courageous refusal of the principal of the department that produced the spiteful article in the "Tribune." Again, the rev. principal went to great pains in preparing for the visit of the hon. Minister, by having everything in order, and by preparing a short programme of reception, which could not be carried out on account of the "hurried inspection" of Mr. Tarte, too much time having been spent by the illustrious party in the luncheon room to permit of an official inspection.

Let me now refer to the untruthful remarks of the writer in the "Tribune." The first accusation he makes is, that the building was sadly in need of cleaning. Now, sir, I can but give you my word, that at any time you enter that building, it is a model of cleanliness and order. Many Winnipeggers, who have visited the school, can attest to this; and so you can easily verify my statement. The writer next proceeds to compare the conduct of the school teacher to the "discipline extended to Siberian convicts." Mr. McDougall, the teacher in question, has a reputation so far above this imputation, that the writer has here fallen into his own net. Inspector McColl, of Winnipeg, can testify to the fact that this teacher is well known as the most successful and ablest man in his profession. As one who has acted as chaplain, I can indorse this, having myself seen the advance made by the pupils under the able management of Mr. McDougall. The mere fact that all the scholars are devoted to the teacher, proves that they are taught "the graces of life, and what love is." I also have seen many acts of personal kindness to these children by the officers, and those show how the school is run; can affirm that the children are treated with every consideration, kindness and love. In fact, sir, it has been said that the children had "too good a time."

The writer concludes his article with the following pungent statement.—"Even the Minister of Public Works could with difficulty repress the disgust he felt at the way in which the party had been received." It is but necessary for me to say, that when the Minister of Public Works can afford to spend two hours in conviviality, and only ten minutes in "a hurried inspection" of one of the public works, there is something radically wrong.

In conclusion, I must say, that the reverend principal is to be admired for the pluck and courage he exhibited in firmly refusing to break the regulations and rules of the department, even for the honourable Minister of Public Works. The Government may feel assured that they have at least one faithful and conscientious official, who will not "bow the knee to Baal."

This is signed by the Rev. Silva A. White, incumbent of St. Paul's, another clergyman possibly whom hon. gentlemen may believe, if they don't believe Mr. Fairlie. Another gentleman here comes to the defence of the teacher who was so viciously assailed in the article of the Winnipeg "Tribune":

To the Editor of the "Nor'-Wester":

Sir,—In an issue of the "Tribune," I was more than surprised, coming from such a source, to see an article reflecting upon a teacher at the Indian industrial school, which can be none other than Mr. McDougall. I think, knowing Mr. Mc-Dougall, as I do, that it was the most unkind and scurrilous article that has been published for some time. I know, and am sure that my assertion would be endorsed by the chief to any other member of the band, that none could be more devoted to the welfare of those people than the said Mr. McDougall, whose ability as a teacher of Indian children is recognized by the department, as well as by the parents of the Indians of St. Peter's Reserve.

O. J. GRAIN,
Mayor of Selkirk.

This is another independent authority, in addition to those given by hon. gentlemen who have spoken this afternoon. Now, the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) has declared that this is a small matter with which to take up so much of the time of the House. I quite agree with him, but he has got to blame the members on his own side of the House for having begun this discussion. He also declares that the headlines of this "Nor'Wester" were such that the people did not take much stock in them, that the "Nor'Wester" is a very unreliable paper, and that he is a living evidence of its untruthfulness. I return the compliment for the paper in which he has so much confidence, the Winnipeg "Tribune." I am a living example of the untruthful charges contained in that journal by my presence in Parliament to-day. That is not only my opinion, but the opinion evidently of other hon. gentlemen who declared that the article contained in that paper was of the most scurrilous kind. Now, I do not know that it is necessary for me to take up any further time of the House. It is a small matter to engage the attention of Parliament for so long a time, especially when there is nothing serious in these charges made. Not a single exception can be taken to that letter, there is not an exaggerated statement in it, there is not a statement in it in regard to which the gentleman who wrote the letter does not court the fullest investigation; and the only explanation that I can give why such a fierce assault has been made on this gentleman is the fact that the Liberals are hungry for office and they want a supply of places for their followers, and this gentleman seems to be doomed.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I have taken more than ordinary interest in this trivial subject which has engaged the attention of the House this afternoon, from the fact that the reverend gentleman whose case has been under review, was formerly a resident of the section of the country which I have the honour to represent. I am also interested in that subject from the fact that I know something of the diocese of Rupert's Land, in which he has been engaged. We have in connection with the Church of England in Canada a body known as the women's auxiliary, who have been in the habit of extending their work to that portion of the country, and sending articles made by themselves and contributions of clothing and necessaries to the clergy of the Church of England for distribution. Now, it will be interesting to these ladies, as also to the people generally throughout this country, to be told something of the character of the accusers of a worker in that distant field; and I shall deal first with the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron). Those of you who remember the election in which he was engaged. I think in 1887, when he was attacked by one of the leading journals of this country for acts which were certainly infamous; and as allusion has been made during this debate to the odours which existed in the school in the North-west, I may say that they were nothing to the odours which arose in the riding during the election in which that hon. gentleman was engaged. The next hon. gentleman who saw fit to attack him was the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), who has posed in this House from his first entry into it as the embodiment of all that is good and righteous. He has continually reminded the members of the House that he was not as other men were, that he was an abstainer from intoxicants; and yet, Sir, we have this gentleman to-day, professing to hold within his person all the Christian virtues, coming here and attacking a clergyman of the church, a gentleman unable to defend himself, and describing him as not being a gentleman. Well, Sir, I do not know the standard which the hon. member for Yarmouth adopts as that of a gentleman; but, Sir, I should describe the conduct of a member of this House who, by the rules of the House we are obliged to call honourable, as anything but that of a gentleman when he attacks a person absent from the House, and who, by his profession, is unable to defend himself. Now, Sir, another hon. member of the House devoted a portion of his time to ridiculing the member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), and he read us all a moral lecture. He is a gentleman who, as I have read in the journals of the country—I am not prepared to vouch for the veracity of the reports—but I have read of his masquerading, either in this House or in the province of British Columbia, under an assumed name. I am not sufficiently well aware of the facts to state whether the name that he bears in this House is his true name, or whether it is the name that he bears in British Columbia. But, Sir, I have just read from the "Parliamentary Companion" a description that he gives of himself, and which he has placed on record, and I will leave the House and the people of this country to decide how far this reverend gentleman's words are to be believed. He at first described himself as having been educated at a certain school; he goes on further and describes himself as being a graduate of a university, of having entered upon the priesthood, and having engaged in church work. At a later stage he describes himself as having descended into the political arena, having given up these good works of attending to the sick and burying the dead, and other works which we are to suppose this pious and good man should engage in; and he descends into the political arena, probably to cross swords with the hon. member for Western Assiniboia, or any other politician that may happen to cross his path. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members how we can respect the man who has forgotten the noble calling in which he was engaged and has gone back on his profession, and has descended to the lower arena which he has described this House to be. I feel I should be wanting in chivalry and also wanting in my duty towards my friend were I not to confess that I too know this rather celebrated widow, the widow McManus. I happened to be in our western country and knew this—shall I so describe her?—virtuous and good woman. This reverend gentleman has seen fit to attack this lady, and endeavour among the members of this House and among the people and in the presence of members of the press to deprive this poor woman of her character, after having deprived her of her office. I can only say that I lived for a short time at the hotel in which she dispensed good cheer, and where she performed the duties of hostess; and, knowing her, I was rather amused when the hon. member for Nanamio described this good woman as marching to and fro behind the wicket handling a revolver. If the widow in the west is the widow McManus I knew, it would not be necessary to take a revolver to enable her to handle two or three such men as the hon. gentleman. I have rather wandered from the subject before the House, but I must allude, I will not say to dismissals that have taken place in my county, but to the way in which the patronage has been dispensed during the time I have had the honour of representing the riding. During fifteen or sixteen years I have been in this House I have seldom or never drawn distinctions between Liberal and Conservative applicants for office. When I first became the representative of the riding I found all the best positions were held by members of the Liberal party. Those gentlemen have never been meddled with in their office; they were there when I was first elected and they are there to-day. I may describe as another instance of the way in which public officials have been treated by the late Government and by the Conservative party generally, and as regards the facts if the hon. Postmaster General were here, he would bear me out—that is the case of the postmaster of Bradford. He is a Liberal. He was editor of a paper which constantly attacked the Conservative party. The Young Men's Liberal-Conservative Association drew up an ultimatum and presented it to Sir John Macdonald, declaring that if this man were not dismissed, the Government need not expect their support at the coming elections. Sir John Macdonald at that time placed in writing a statement, which it was my duty to forward to the association, that his Government did not dismiss officials except for malfeasance in office; and the Postmaster General will bear me out that this Liberal, who had lost no opportunity of attacking the Government and the Conservative party, and the Conservative club, in particular was able to retain his office in spite of the combination of all Conservatives in that village against him. The Postmaster General, who I regret is not present, and who I was going to say had the honour to represent me in the House, as I am one of his constituents, and naturally I know what took place in his riding better than he does in other parts of the country. The hon. gentleman has made wholesale dismissals not only in my riding but throughout the country by cancelling contracts for mail service, which contracts should be equally sacred with bargains made with private individuals. He under the pretense of saving a small sum of money to the country has dismissed contractors by wholesale, and, were he here, I would quote instances of men who have been thrown up their contracts, which have been resumed by the former contractors. As to partiality. In the village of Tottenham—I see the hon. member for Wellington, who will know the names, is present—there happened to be two mail contracts open. One was let to a lifelong Reformer named Brown, the other was let to a lifelong Tory named Turner. They were both recommended by me, and they received the different contracts. The Postmaster General in his wisdom saw fit to cancel the contract of my Tory friend, but not the contract of the Reformer, who is also my friend; and I think that the residents of my riding, both Liberals and Conservatives, will bear me out when I say that I have dealt even-handed justice to members of both parties, and in many cases, as I know, we have been obliged to defend Liberal office-holders against the attacks of our own, and in many cases I have lost a number of friends in that manner. I have very great pleasure in expressing my sympathy with Rev. Mr. Fairlie in the very unpleasant position in which he has been placed, and though I can hardly exonerate the Minister of Public Works altogether, from the fact that he insisted that this letter did not contain the whole of the truth, yet I hope he will be prepared to do Mr. Fairlie the justice of withdrawing that statement, from the fact that those of us who know him are prepared to say that he would rather believe Mr. Fairlie than a great many of his accusers.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I heard the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) to-day, and to some extent I must confess I sympathized with him. Whether his charges against this gentleman, Mr. Fairlie, made under the privilege of the House, are true or false, the hon. member in my opinion has a great grievance with the Treasury benches. There has been extraordinary discrimination exhibited in the treatment of that hon. gentleman and of many other hon. gentlemen who sit behind the Treasury benches, and it seems to me quite natural that that hon. gentleman should take an early opportunity, even though he did it in a comparatively mild manner, to resent the way in which he was treated or his word or his statement was received by the Treasury benches in comparison with the importance attached to the words of other hon. gentlemen who sit behind those benches. More than once we have been told, that if an hon. gentleman in the confidence of the Government—no matter what his character may be in the country—should go to a Minister of the Crown and make a serious statement derogatory to the character of a fellow-citizen, that by virtue of this hon. gentleman being in the confidence of the Government, his ex parte statement is to be treated as a statement of solemn fact, which will warrant the action of the Government upon it. We are informed that the Government have acted upon that principle upon several occasions. To my mind—and I think in the end, no matter what the opinion of the country may be for the moment—the people will give a general denunciation to so outrageous a proposition. It is unreasonable to think that the statement of any hon. gentleman in this House, in connection with the fierce conflicts that rage in the different constituencies, and considering the influences brought to bear upon him, it is unreasonable to think that his mere statement should be accepted in so important a matter, and should be followed by consequences so serious to men who, after all, may have a great deal of the argument on their side. I have had several instances brought before me which lead to this conclusion. I know that in the county which I have the honour to represent, statements absolutely fallacious—I do not say wilfully false—absolutely fallacious statements have been accepted by members of the Administration, and Ministers have acted upon these statements and have done grievous wrong to citizens of this country. And, Sir, this debate if it proves anything else, will prove what a dangerous principle has been adopted in many cases by members of the Government, in fact by the Government generally, when they accept the statements of members of this House, supporting them or opposing them, in connection with the conduct of officials, when it is absolutely impossible that these members should have individual knowledge of the facts which they assert. I wish to illustrate that by a case which was brought to the attention of the Minister of Railways; and I am glad that the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaacs) is in the House, because it may interest him. There is a man named Mr. Jas. McLean. I do not know the man and I have never met him; I know nothing about him except the information which he has placed in my hands as a citizen of this country. It seemed to me extraordinary, that when I asked the Minister (Mr. Blair) whether the record of Mr. McLean in that department which he had served for thirteen years was good or bad, the Minister of Railways was absolutely silent on that question. When I asked how it was that Mr. McLean's services had been suddenly dispensed with, the Minister (Mr. Blair) told me that his services were dispensed with, as he put it, at the instance of Mr. McIsaac, M.P., who had represented that of his own knowledge Mr. McLean had taken an active and offensive part in the late Dominion elections. There was no pretense that any inquiry or investigation was made, but because the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac) had stated that to his knowledge this man had taken an offensive part in the elections, the Minister of Railways told us he had instantly dismissed him. Now, judging from the material in my hands at the present moment, I believe that this is a clear illustration of the pernicious and unjustifiable system that has been, from time to time, adopted by Ministers at the head of these departments. It will not be pretended, I take it, that if this man had had the good fortune to occupy a comparatively more important position in the service of the country, if he had been a deputy head, if he had been in the service itself, it will not be pretended that there would have been such summary treatment meted out to him. Without desiring to set class against class or to descend to any unfair or unreasonable argument, I, with the greatest confidence take the position, that the humblest individual in the service of the Government is entitled to the same careful consideration and treatment in regard to any charge which may be brought against him of malfeasance or misconduct, as is the very highest in the service under the Crown. I take that position with confidence, and I believe that in the end it will be considered sound by the people of the country, when they come to consider it. I feel satisfied, holding as I do this information which I propose to give to the House, that the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac) will not dare to do, will not venture to do what Mr. McLean, who has been so seriously affected, has dared to do, and that is to make a solemn declaration with all the consequences attaching to it, as to the facts of this case. Mr. James McLean has put in my hands his solemn declaration, denying absolutely the statements which the Minister of Railways says he acted upon ex parte; the statements of the hon. member for Antigonish

(Mr. McIsaac). I have no doubt that the hon. member for Antigonish, like many other hon. gentlemen supporting the Ministers, being told second-hand, third-hand, indirectly of certain facts regarding this man, in good faith to that extent, did make a complaint, and that is sufficient for me to illustrate the unfair treatment of officials in cases in which Ministers acted upon such statements. Mr. McLean had served the department faithfully, so far as we are able to judge from the Minister of Railways. He had done his duty for thirteen years and when I asked the question as to what was his record, the Minister of Railways was silent. He merely gave as an excuse for his dismissal that the hon. member for Antigonish had undertaken the responsibility of reciting that to his own knowledge Mr. McLean had taken an active and offensive part in the late elections. The hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac) never ventured to make that statement outside of this House or publicly, never dared to charge Mr. McLean in any shape or form in which Mr. McLean could make the hon. member for Antigonish responsible for his statements. Mr. McLean has put in my hands this solemn declaration :

In the matter of the application of Jas. McLean, late foreman carpenter on Eastern Division, Intercolonial Railway, for an investigation re his dismissal from office.

I, James McLean, of Antigonish, in the county of Antigonish, carpenter, do solemnly declare as follows :—

1. That I was foreman carpenter on the Intercolonial Railway for the division extending from Stellarton, in the county of Pictou, to the Strait of Canso, up to March 20th last ;

2. That, on the 5th of March last, I received notice that my services would not be required after the said 20th day of March last—no cause therefor being assigned on said notice ;

3. That, at the general election, in June, 1896, and the campaign therewith, I did not conduct myself in any way as a political partisan. I never canvassed any one in said election or campaign ; I never took the platform at any public or other meeting in said campaign to speak in favour of any candidate or party ; I never disturbed the good order of any public meeting by the disorderly conduct or otherwise howsoever, and never interrupted any one at such meeting in said campaign.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and knowing that it is of the same effect as if made under oath, and by virtue of "The Canada Evidence Act, 1893."

(Sgd.) JAS. McLEAN.

Declared before me, at Antigonish, in the county of Antigonish, province of Nova Scotia, this 19th day of April, A.D. 1897.

(Sgd.) ANGUS McISAAC,

A Justice of the Peace in and for Antigonish County.

He received this letter :

New Glasgow, March 4, 1897.

Jas. McLean, Esq., Foreman Carpenter, Antigonish.

Dear Sir,—According to instructions I have received from the department, I have to inform you, that your services, as foreman carpenter, will not be required after the 20th of this month, on which date please send me the key of carpenter's shop and list of tools belonging to the railway, now in your charge.

I remain, yours truly

A. B. GRAY.

Mr. Gray being track-master in that division. Mr. McLean writes on April 21st, 1897 :

Antigonish, April 21, 1897.

Dear Sir,—This is to certify and to show my doings during the general elections in June, 1896.

I left Antigonish on the 20th of April for Pictou Landing, to repair wharfs, and worked there till 19th of June ; left there for Pourquet to repair bridge which was destroyed by fire ; worked there on the 20th and made temporary repairs ; on 22nd, selecting timber for the bridge. On 23rd, voted in Antigonish, and left on special train for New Glasgow, and did not appear on the streets of Antigonish that day.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) JAS. McLEAN.

And I am told incidentally by my hon friend the junior member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall) that the following dismissals took place without investigation in Antigonish : The baggage-master at Antigonish station, Mr. Kelly, a section foreman, Mr. Mr. McDougall, a section foreman ; Colin McKinnon, section man on the Intercolonial Railway ; and the preventive office at Tracadie. But the immediate case that I wish to bring to the attention of the House was this one, for the reason that this man who held the record without blemish and without taint for that long period in the service of the department, was suddenly dismissed ; and while he takes the responsibility of making a solemn declaration denying that in any shape or form he could be considered a political partisan, apart from having voted—and I have no doubt he voted Conservative, though he does not say how he voted, as he is not bound to say ; and the answer given is that the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac) had represented that to his own knowledge Mr. McLean had taken an active and offensive part in the late Dominion election. I say it is not according to the principles of British justice or the principle of any Parliament under British rule, that the word of a member of Parliament should be taken against the humblest in the land in connection with an office held by the humbler individual. That is a doctrine propounded for the first time in this Parliament, and it is a doctrine that cannot stand investigation. It is an enunciation of a principle against which the sense of fair-play and British justice absolutely revolts ; and even if there be a conflict between a member of Parliament and a man outside of Parliament in connection with the vested interests of the latter, no responsible Minister of the Crown should give the preference to the statement of one of his supporters. Whether you regard the heated statements made on one side of the House or the other, you have had evidence enough in this House to-day that party feeling runs so high as to induce even the most honest member of this House to come to what might be considered in a calm and partial investigation, prejudiced and biased views. It is easy for a member of Parliament to come within that dangerous principle laid down by some hon. gentlemen, and by none more strongly than the Minister of Railways, and by that principle being enforced, there is an obvious injustice perpetrated. On this occasion, having heard the discussion in reference to the Rev. Mr. Fairlie, I think I can appeal to that discussion and to the strong opinions expressed on both sides—admitting them all to be honest, and every man to have spoken just as he felt—we have a clear and manifest illustration of the danger of taking the statements of partisans; for we are all partisans on either side in regard to the vested interests of parties outside of the House. And so I protest against the treatment of this man or any other man in the service of the Crown on a mere ipsi dixit or statement not under oath, but ex parte, made behind the back of the accused, whether by a member of Parliament or by some person outside of this House. I am certain that the hon. member for Antigonish will not do what in common fairness he ought to have done before he challenged the position of that man in the service of this country—either under oath or by a solemn declaration which is equivalent to an oath, contradict the statements the man makes under a solemn declaration or state that to his knowledge he did take an active and offensive part in the late Dominion election.

Mr. McISAAC. Mr. Speaker, I felt, from the part the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) had taken in my by-election in 1895, and from the inglorious result to him of that election that he would after I came to this House, pursue me with all the malignity in his power; and I have good reason to believe that he has taken every opportunity since that occasion to obtain from his friends in the county of Antigonish any information he could use against me in this House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to tell him, as I do most sincerely, that I never wrote to an individual in the county of Antigonish, from the time I went into it to this day, asking for the slightest information concerning the member for Antigonish in any shape or form whatever.

Mr. McISAAC. I did not say that the hon. gentleman wrote—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Nor asked?

Mr. McISAAC. But I do know that the hon. gentleman's friends and my enemies in the county have been boasting, since I have been elected, that they would send all the information to the hon. member for Pictou.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is quite a different thing.

Mr. McISAAC. The issue has been raised to-night, for the first time, but I am here to hurl back the insinuations and charges which the hon. gentleman has made. He took up the case of James McLean. Well, Mr. Speaker, in that case he was very unfortunate. He has told the House that I have no personal knowledge of the case and he has also told the House that he himself knows nothing of Mr. McLean. Mr. Speaker, I know Mr. McLean. I have known him for years, and I have personal knowledge of his conduct in the county as an offensive partisan, not for one or two but for ten years. The hon. gentleman read a declaration, but that declaration is confined simply to the month of June last, and even in it Mr. McLean does not make an absolute denial. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that Mr. McLean came to me shortly before I came to Ottawa and admitted that he had attended committee meetings during my campaign last June, and I know myself that he did because I saw him walking in and out of the committee rooms, and I know that he was a most active and offensive partisan during that election. I know further that in the election of 1895, not only did he work against me in the town of Antigonish, but he actually went outside the town, where it was his duty to remain and look after the business to which he had been appointed by the Government, in order to work against me. He went to Mulgrave, where there were some electors working in a ship-yard, and went two or three times to see if they would return to Antigonish and vote against me.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the hon. gentleman speaking of his own personal knowledge?

Mr. McISAAC. I speak with perfect knowledge. He also in 1895, the day before the election, left his post which it was his bounden duty to attend, and went to the district of Ohio, some twelve or fifteen miles away, for the purpose of canvassing against me and seeing that voters went to the polls. Why, Sir, the Conservatives in Antigonish would laugh if they heard the hon. gentleman's statement here to-night. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that Mr. James McLean has been a notoriously offensive partisan for years. Even after the 23rd of June last, he did not cease his partisanship, because he is constitutionally built that way, as an hon. gentleman opposite remarked a moment ago.

The hon. gentleman referred to some other officials who have been dismissed at my suggestion; but before I leave Mr. Mc-Lean, let me say again that what I have said about him is very moderate and that I could say ten time more with absolute truth. He was a most active partisan in June last and in all previous elections.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I know nothing of the man and never saw him to my knowledge. Of course what the hon. gentleman says here, I must accept; but I ask him, in common fairness, to tell the House specifically what offensive act the man committed in 1896?

Mr. McISAAC. I say that in June, 1896, he was a constant attendant at the committee meetings in the town of Antigonish, night after night.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How could the hon. gentleman know that of his own personal knowledge?

Mr. McISAAC. I saw him going in and coming out, and he admitted to myself, not two months ago, that he did attend these committee meetings.

The hon. gentleman has also referred to another man, Mr. Angus McDougall a section man, who was dismissed on my recommendation. Let me give you, Sir, a little bit of history in which the hon. member for Pictou was a participant. Does that hon. gentleman remember the by-election in Antigonish? Does he remember that during that by-election, on a particular occasion, he started from Antigonish to make a trip around by Cape George, and was two or three days away, making the round of the county. Let me recall to the hon. gentleman who it was that travelled with him and who stumped with him against me on that occasion. It was a Dominion official, Dr. Cameron. Does he not remember that while he and Dr. Cameron started in the one sleigh, a second sleigh followed behind with provisions and supplies and with two men, one of whom was Angus McDougall, who was section man on the Intercolonial and whose duty it was to remain at his section and see that the track was kept in good order. Well, Mr. McDougall left the section to which he should have been attending, and in company with a namesake of his, a temporary employee on the Intercolonial, followed my hon. friend as a body guard with the supplies, and were also exceedingly useful in clearing away the snow banks so as to facilitate the passage of my hon. friend, and this they did at the expense of the Government of which the hon. gentleman was then Minister of Justice.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am sorry no one shovelled the snow banks and I had to get through without that.

Mr. McISAAC. The Dominion Government were paying two strong, stalwart employees to facilitate the hon. gentleman's passage. They were there, at any rate, in case there should be any snow banks to be got rid of.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman knows that of his own knowledge.

Mr. McISAAC. I know all about it, but that is not all. The hon. gentleman referred to Mr. McPherson, baggage master in the town of Antigonish. There is not a Conservative in Antigonish who would not admit that if any one should be dismissed for offensive partisanship, it is Mr. McPherson; and Mr. McPherson himself, when he got his notice, admitted frankly that he never expected anything else and that he had got what he expected, I must say that to the credit of Mr. McPherson.

Then there is the case of Mr. Leydon, a preventive officer. Mr. Leydon came to my office and told me that at the by-election, when my hon. friend was in Antigonish, he had the sole control of the Conservative organization in his district, and that all communications from the central committee were sent to him and he carried out the instructions. Not only that, but at the election last June his horse and carriage were used to convey voters to the poll to vote against me. Is this not active and offensive partisanship?

The hon. gentleman has also brought up the case of Colin Mackinnon, another section man. Well, Mr. Speaker, there was no more offensive partisan than Mr. Mackinnon. At the election last June and at all elections he has worked as a most active partisan against me.

Mr. McDougall at the last election was the sworn agent at one of the divisions against me. The hon. member for Pictou says that he never saw Mr. McDougall. His memory must be very poor or he could not have been introduced to the Tory committee of the town of Antigonish. In 1895, day after day and night after night, he was rubbing himself in the Tory committee against Mr. James McLean and Mr. Angus McDougall and other Dominion officials and everybody else he has mentioned to-night. But to-night the hon. gentleman seems to know very little about these men, although when he was in Antigonish, these men and some others were the backbone of the Tory organization in that county, and followed my hon. friend around from district to district. But the hon. gentleman, not satisfied with the assistance of the Dominion officials in Antigonish county, he imported them from Quebec and elsewhere, and it was at his instance, I am informed, that my hon. friend, the late Deputy Speaker of this House (Mr. Bergeron), was imported into that county. My friend the late Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons (Mr. Bergeron) was imported to take part in the contest in the county of Antigonish. The hon. gentleman

(Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) the other day actually professed ignorance as to the late Deputy Speaker of the House being down in the county. He hardly remembered the fact until I jogged his memory a second time, and even then he said he never met that hon. gentleman on the platform. I was present and he was present, and the late Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons was present in the court-house in Antigonish, and he knows it. And the hon. gentleman and the late Deputy Speaker spoke on the evening of nomination day. The hon. gentleman shakes his head. I would like him to get up in his place and deny it so that his friends in Antigonish may know how truthful he is. The Deputy Speaker was a Dominion official. I will not say he was an offensive partisan, for he was very gentlemanly. He was brought in to do up the French Canadian Catholic vote against me in the county of Antigonish. He went there to address meetings, one at Pomket, one at Monk's Head, and one at Tracadie; and afterwards he was to go to Harbour Bouche. It is true that he got here before the opening of this House. But the reason for that was that the Tory party found that he was not doing them any more good than the hon. member for Pictou himself, and he was dispensed with at Tracadie. If ever there was a campaign which was conducted from beginning to end entirely almost by the civil servants of this country it was in the by-election that I ran in 1895. Nearly every man in the committee room was the paid official of the Dominion Government. I am surprised that the hon. member for Pictou should denounce me, because I would dare to declare that these men were offensive partisans. For all that I have said in reference to James McLean I am prepared to prove in this House or out of it, and far more. And I will say the same with regard to other officials that have been dismissed on my recommendation. I do not intend to dismiss any man unless he deserves it. There are Conservative officials in Antigonish who will not be dismissed if I can help it. Let me remind the hon. gentleman of the treatment his party meted out to Liberal officeholders in Antigonish. Hon. gentlemen opposite will say that more officials have been dismissed by the Liberals than were dismissed by the Conservatives. That may be true. But why? I do not think that in 1878, when the Conservatives came into power, there were more than three or four Liberal officials in the county. The first of these to be dismissed was the fishery overseer of the county. He was dismissed a few weeks after hon. gentlemen opposite came into power. Was there an investigation? Were charges preferred? No, Sir. The fishery overseer of the county of Antigonish received an epistle one morning saying: Your services are no longer required. And who was appointed in his place? Not even a man from the county of Antigonish, but a man from the adjoining county of Pictou, represented by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). This gentleman was appointed to succeed the fishery overseer of the county of Antigonish, who was dismissed without a moment's notice and without an investigation, and who does know now what the charges were against him. We did not complain; we never cried over it. The Tories got in and fired our men, and that was the end of it. We have not been eighteen years groaning because they were dismissed from office. We took our medicine like men. Another officer who was dismissed was Colin Chisholm, fishery overseer of the lower South River, and he was dismissed because hon. gentlemen opposite wanted to appoint another man in his place. No investigation was held, nor were charges made of offensive partisanship or anything else. He got notice to go and he went, and never whined over it. A Tory was put in his place and that Tory is there yet. There are Tories in the county of Antigonish whom I do not want to have dismissed because they have behaved themselves. They have voted for the Tory party and are ready to say frankly that they did so, and I respect them for it, and I will never ask for their dismissal. The station agent at Antigonish is a straightforward consistent Tory, Mr. Power. Whose place did he take? The place of Mr. Irish, a Liberal, who was removed to an inferior position without cause and without any charge made against him, simply because his place was required for another. I have no fault to find; I did not find fault at the time. But this was how hon. gentlemen opposite dealt with the civil service when they were in power; and now that we are in power, we must not, forsooth, even dare to remove these offensive and, in many cases, dishonest partisans who, while taking the pay of the Government have worked mainly in the interest of the Tory party. I am quite ready to defend my course in the case of James McLean and the others. Not only Liberals, but Conservatives in Antigonish know well that he deserved dismissal, and he and his friends did not expect anything else. There are many Conservative office-holders in the county against whom I have preferred no charge, against whom I do not intend to prefer any charge. I have preferred charges against some, and may possibly prefer charges against others, but in all cases. I have been and intend to be careful that only offensive or active partisans will be interfered with.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am sure the House will indulge me one moment, not to answer the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac), for I have no right to do that—but to speak a word of explanation. I would be the last man—and I am sure hon. gentlemen opposite will admit that—to attempt to mislead the House ; and I would be the first man, if I had unintentionally done so, to try to set myself right. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McIsaac) has refreshed my memory in regard to one fact, and I wish to make the amende honorable. In the discussion the other day, to which he has referred, speaking of the late Deputy Speaker, I said :

He was in one section of the county of Antigonish two days. What part he took in the contest the hon. gentleman knows better than I do, because I was not with him. * * * I saw him in the county. He was there doing what he could to vindicate Conservative principles and to assist the party to which he belongs.

Now, I remember for the first time, when the hon. gentleman refreshed my memory, that he did speak on the platform with me in Antigonish, I think now on the night of nomination, and sat on the platform in the court-house when I spoke in the afternoon, when the hon. member for Antigonish spoke also. But after that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) went, I think, to Pomket—

Mr. BERGERON. To Tracadie.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. At any rate, the hon. gentleman went one way and I went the other. So that what I stated was substantially correct, that we were not stumping the county of Antigonish together. The House will see that I did not want to lead hon. members to believe that the hon. gentleman was not working for the Conservative party in the contest, and the only slip I made, which was due to faulty recollection of the facts, was in not stating that he appeared on the platform in the court-house in Antigonish.

Mr. TAYLOR. I regret, as every member on either side must regret, and as the people of this country will regret when they read it in the papers to-morrow, that the Prime Minister of this country has delegated to the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac) the right to dismiss public servants. We have the statement of the Prime Minister made in this House during the last session that no public servant would be dismissed without a fair investigation and a fair trial. Yet here we have the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac) saying, I dismissed so and so. Now, surely, after the pledge that the Prime Minister gave to this House and to the civil servants, what can we think of such conduct as we have heard of to-day—numerous cases being cited of men who have been dismissed without this investigation and this fair trial? Surely it cannot be true, in face of the pledge, not only of the Prime Minister, but of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries sitting beside him, repeating the same pledge ; and if the people of this country cannot accept the statements of the Prime Minister and other Ministers of the Crown, what are we to expect of the men occupying subordinate positions? I have heard some other statements made here to-day that I regret, and regret exceedingly, particularly the statement made by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) and the Minister of Public Works, charging a respected and respectable minister of the Church of England with being untruthful, and with not being a gentleman. I resent that statement, I resent the statement made by both these hon. gentlemen. Then we have the general charge made from the other side of the House that when the Conservatives were in power they dismissed a lot of officials of this country for being offensive partisans. Now, I want to refer to one or two cases in my own riding. I am sorry the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) is not here. His father was postmaster in the town of Gananoque when I was elected in 1882. Who was my opponent? The son of the postmaster of Gananoque. After the election was over, the Conservatives there said the postmaster must be dismissed for having taken an active part, and having put his son up to run against me in the county. But I was elected, and the postmaster remained in the position as postmaster at Gananoque until he died. Another postmaster who was appointed in my county took an offensive and active part against me in my election in 1882, in 1886, and in 1891. At the court of revision of the voters' lists previous to the last election, this postmaster was secretary of the Reform Association. I attended the trials before the judge. The president of the Reform Association came forward to prove that he had served summonses on a number of Conservatives to strike them off the list. He produced a notice, stating that he had mailed copies of that notice to each of the parties complained of. I asked, as the law gave me the right to ask, that he produce registration certificates of the letters that he mailed to them. He said, "They are in the hands of the secretary of the Association, the postmaster." The postmaster was called, and I asked him to produce his certificates. He said they were down in the post office. The judge said: I will adjourn the court until you go for them. He went for them and came back in about half an hour with them in his hands ; he had been sworn before he went out. I said: Mr. Postmaster, have you not, since you left this place to go down to your office, written out these certificates at your post office, and changed the post office stamp back to the date now represented on these certificates? And he had to admit there before the judge, that he had done so, and the Judge dismissed the whole case because he had taken the liberty to a certain extent, of forging the certificates that he should have given at the time the letters were registered. That gentleman is postmaster yet, and I have never, and never will, prefer a charge against him. He was postmaster when

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

I was first elected, and is postmaster yet. How many postmasters have been dismissed throughout this country because they only went and recorded their vote? But there were cases like this of offensive partisanship all over my county. It is charged that the late Government dismissed all Liberal officials that were found in office when they came in, but no names can be mentioned. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) made yesterday a wholesale charge, and then named two or three gentlemen who had been superannuated, gentlemen 70 or 80 years of age, and because they were superannuated, he said they had been dismissed. These are the facts. The Conservative Government did not dismiss an official, or if they did dismiss one, they gave him what the Prime Minister of this country promised he would give to civil servants, a fair investigation and trial before they were dismissed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Before you leave the Chair, I would like, in justice to an official of my department, to read a telegram which I received to-day from Dr. Watt. He was accused here last night of having neglected to visit and to treat certain small-pox patients in the quarantine at Victoria. This telegram comes to me, I suppose, in consequence of his seeing statements in the Victoria papers, or of some friend here having telegraphed him :

Victoria, B.C., May 14th, 1897.

Those statements made by Colonel Prior, that I have neglected small-pox patients, are absolutely without foundation. I have personally attended all small-pox patients who have come to the station. If required, sworn statements to this effect from patients, and nurses, and guards can be forwarded. Please ask for affidavit to the contrary which Colonel Prior asserts he can furnish.

Now, a statement was made here that Dr. Watt had locked up a small-pox patient in a small room at that station and left him there for several days until he died without any care. I find from the records of the department that the patient in question who came from the ship Victoria, which arrived on the 23rd of June, was taken into the hospital on that day, and that he must have died there that evening or the next morning, because the bill for the coffin, which was taken as the proof of his death, was dated on the 24th. I have an extract from the "Colonist" here which I wish to read to the House. The statement was made that Dr. Watt had neglected fumigating a vessel which had come in with some small-pox patients on board, and the result was that small-pox had been spread through several towns.

Mr. WALLACE. In the case first mentioned by the hon. gentleman, the statement was not made that this person had been there three or four days but that he was there over night, and that is not in conformity with the telegram which has been read.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I understand the leader of the Opposition to declare that this gentleman had neglected this patient for several days.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not profess to have any information myself, but I said that if the statement made by the hon. member for Victoria were true, then the affair was intensely disgraceful.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As it was not true, the hon. gentleman's sympathy was wasted.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman gather from this telegram that after the doctor locked up this small-pox patient, he visited him?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I gather from this telegram that he attended the patient in the ordinary way a doctor attends to any patient. I have no information to the contrary; I do not believe any information to the contrary can be furnished.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will you read the last telegram?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE—

Personally attended all small-pox patients which have come to station. If required, sworn statements to this effect from patients, and nurses, and guards can be forwarded. Please ask for the affidavit to the contrary which Colonel Prior asserts he can furnish.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is not the one I mean.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no other telegram. The statement I made was from a memorandum prepared from the records of the department, showing that this man came in on the 23rd and died either that night or on the morning of the 24th.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The statement made by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) was this : That Dr. Watt, the quarantine officer, had a person suffering from small-pox locked up with an attendant, and that he died without his having visited him.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That statement is contradicted by Dr. Watt's statement, that he had personally visited and attended all small-pox patients which had come to the station.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He does not contradict that specific statement.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He says he personally visited all of them and personally attended to them.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the Minister read the memorandum which has been prepared from the records of the department?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

"Victoria" left Yokohama January 10. Head Chinese fireman developed small-pox rash third day out. Isolated in ship's hospital. Ninety-three steerage passengers. Detaining them at station until 27th inst. Seven cabin passengers not exposed.

On the same day Dr. Watt wired :

Have landed all Chinese crew and passengers. Released "Victoria."

The account for a coffin, which is given as proof that this man died, was dated on 24th. The vessel arrived on the 23rd, and the man was dead and a coffin was asked for on the 24th, showing it could not have been several days afterwards.

Mr. HUGHES. The statement that it was several days afterwards, was not made.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think "Harsard" will show that the statement was made by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am sure the Minister does not want to place the member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) in a false position. My hon. friend only made a statement on information. I have here the statement made by my hon. friend, and in justice to him, I should like to repeat it in connection with that telegram :

The fact is, that the man was afflicted with small-pox, was taken to the hospital and died there. The charge was made to me,—I do not know whether it is true or not—and the man who gave me the information, said he was willing to take affidavit as to the fact, that the doctor never saw the man from the time the ship went into quarantine.

So my hon. friend guarded himself by mentioning that his statement was made on information.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Later in the debate I asked the hon. gentleman to take the responsibility of making the charge, and he said he assumed the responsibility, because he believed the man who made the charge. Now, Dr. Watt asks him to supply the affidavit which he said he had : and if the hon. gentleman does not do so, I think it is very unfair that this official should lie under that charge.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Did the hon. gentleman tell the hon. member for Victoria that he was going to mention this matter in the House ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I only got the statement a little while ago, and I have not seen the hon. member since.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Fisheries, Salaries, &c..... $90,000

Resolutions to be reported.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.20 a.m. (Saturday).

Mr. WALLACE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines : Messrs. Jameson, Rutherford, Pettet, and Douglas.

Privileges and Elections : Mr. McClure.

Standing Orders : Messrs. Marcotte and Snet-singer.

Miscellaneous Private Bills : Hon. Mr. Davies, Messrs. Pettet, McClure, Jameson, and Marcotte. Printing : Mr. Perry.

THE AUDIT ACT.

Mr. DAVIN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 107) to amend the Audit Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. DAVIN. The object of the Bill is to provide that the spending departments shall call for tenders for supplies, except in cases of great emergency, just as the Public Works Department must call for tenders for contracts except when emergency demands that the contract be given without tender. A general impression prevailed—I know it was my own impression and the same with members of Parliament and even with men employed for years in functions connected with the Government that ought to bring this matter before their attention—that there was legislation compelling every department to call for tenders. But, as a matter of fact, though it has been the practice, the universal practice, for some eighteen years at least to call for tenders, it is not necessary under the existing law. I think it is desirable that we should amend the Audit Act so as to provide that the spending departments should, except in cases of great emergency, call for tenders.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

STATIONARY ENGINEERS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 108) respecting the examination of stationary engineers and for the inspection of steam boilers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Explain.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This Bill is introduced at the request of the Association of Stationary Engineers. It provides for the examination of the, and issuing of certificates to, persons holding the position of stationary engineers, and also for the inspection of boilers. There has been a great loss of life in different sections of the country through want of knowledge, it is claimed, on the part of those having charge of boilers and engines, and it is desirable that some legislation should be passed which will, as far as practicable, bring about the employment of efficient men in this business, and also for the inspection of boilers, so as to prevent, as much as possible, the loss of life and property.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

POST OFFICE INSPECTOR MERRICK.

Mr. ROGERS (for Mr. Pettet) asked :

1. Was Post Office Inspector Merrick attending solely to the duties of his office during the two weeks previous to the 23rd of June last?
2. Was he in the town of Picton at any time during the same period?
3. Did he attend any Conservative meeting or meetings, public or private, during said period?
4. Was he at any Conservative committee rooms during said period? If so, how often was he at such committee rooms, and for what purpose was he there?
5. Did the said Merrick take any part in procuring the withdrawal of Mr. Williams as a candidate for Parliament at the election held on the 23rd of June last?
6. Where was Inspector Merrick during each day of the said period of two weeks?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. Inspector Merrick was attending to his official duties during the two weeks prior to the 23rd June last, saving two days taken as part of holiday, these being the only holidays taken in two and a half years. 2. Yes. Was in the town of Picton and village of Glenora, and inspected both of these money order offices during that period. 3. Yes. Was at Conservative public meeting in the town hall at Prescott, at a Reform public meeting held in the Opera House, Kingston, and at a Reform public meeting held in the Whig Hall, Kingston. Did not attend any other political meeting during the elections. Took no part whatever at any of the meetings. Was invited and pressed to speak in North Leeds against Mr. Frost, but declined to do so. Did not visit the riding during the period mentioned. Did not canvass one voter. 4. Yes. Was in the Conservative committee room at Picton two or three times. Did not know half a dozen people in the room on one occasion, and not more than two or three on the others. Went in and sat down to have a smoke and a chat. 5. No; never spoke to Mr. Williams in his life. Do not know now, nor did he ever know why Mr. Williams withdrew, nor who procured his withdrawal. 6. Attending to his duties at his office with the exception of the days referred to in preceding questions.

DISMISSALS, LACHINE CANAL.

Mr. GILLIES (for Mr. Monk) asked :

1. How long has Ephrem Picard, lately boom-master, Lachine, been in the employ of the Government?
2. Why was he dismissed on the 30th April last?
3. Was there any complaint against him, and by whom?
4. By whom was he replaced, and who recommended the new nominee?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Ephrem Picard, assistant boom-master on the Lachine Canal, has been employed during each season since September, 1887. His services were dispensed with because the position of assistant boom-master was abolished.

Mr. GILLIES (for Mr. Monk) asked :

1. How long has Joseph Sauvé, lately bridge-master No. 5 bridge, Côte St. Paul, Lachine Canal, been in the employment of the Government?
2. Why was he dismissed on the 30th April last?
3. Was there any complaint against him, and by whom?
4. Who was named bridgemaster in his place, and by whom was the new nominee recommended?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Joseph Sauvé, lately bridge-master, bridge No. 5, Cote St. Paul, Lachine Canal, has been employed during the season of navigation since the 1st May, 1878. His services were dispensed with at the request and on the representation of the members of Parliament for Montreal districts, the department did not receive any written complaint against Sauvé. Joseph Archebierre was appointed bridgemaster in place of Joseph Sauvé.

Mr. GILLIES (for Mr. Monk) asked :

1. How long has Joseph Deschamps, lately lockmaster No. 4 lock, Côte St. Paul, Lachine Canal, been in the employment of the Government?
2. Why was he dismissed on the 30th April last?
3. Was there any complaint against him, and by whom?
4. Has he been replaced by one Adolphe Fichaud, of St. Henri, brother-in-law of the member for Hochelaga?
5. Who recommended the new lockmaster for nomination?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Joseph Deschamps, lately lockmaster at lock No. 4, Cote St. Paul, Lachine Canal, has been employed during season of navigation since the 1st June, 1873. His services were dispensed with at the request and on the representation of the members of Parliament for Montreal districts, no written complaint was lodged in the department. Adolphe Fichaud was appointed lockmaster in his place.

MR. KINNEY, POSTMASTER AT SALEM.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Has A. W. Kinney been dismissed from the position of postmaster at Salem, Yarmouth county?

2. How long did Mr. Kinney hold his position as postmaster?

3. If his services were dispensed with, upon what grounds was such action taken?

4. Was any investigation made into this case and was the postmaster given an opportunity to answer or to defend himself?

5. Was a petition received by the Postmaster General from the district signed by forty-five people in the neighbourhood of the post office, thirty thereof being Liberals, asking that Mr. Kinney be left in charge of the district?

6. How many letters have been received by the Postmaster General or by the Deputy Postmaster General since December 31, 1896, from Mr. Kinney?

7. How many have been answered?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. Mr. A. W. Kinney has been dismissed from the postmastership of Salem, county Yormouth. 2. Mr. Kinney had been postmaster since 1st of May, 1886. 3. His services were dispensed with for offensive political partisanship. 4. There was no investigation. Mr. Kinney was removed on representations of Mr. Thos. B. Flint, M.P. 5. Such a petition has been received, but there is no knowledge at the department as to the political opinions of the signers. 6. No letters appear to have been received from Mr. Kinney since 31st December, 1896. 7. Therefore, none have been answered.

CORNWALL AND SOULANGES CANALS.

Mr. BERGERON (for Mr. McLennan, Glengarry) asked :

1. What are the lengths and breadths of the locks in the Cornwall and Soulanges canals?

2. What are the lengths and breadths of the locks to be built by the contracts awarded by the present Government?

3. What is the amount of excavation, and classification of such, in the different contracts which have been advertised by Government?

4. At what time are the contracts to be completed?

5. What was the number of tenders for each of the canal contracts already advertised for, and who were the tenderers?

6. Were they in every case let to the lowest tender? If not, why?

7. What is the total amount of deposit received with tenders for each contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. The length and width of the locks in the Cornwall and Soulanges Canal is 270 feet long by 45 feet wide. 2. The department is considering as to the lock at the lower entrance of the Galops Canal whether it shall be 800 feet in length so as to take in a full towage of the lockage or less. 3. For sections 4, 5, 6 and 7 Soulanges Canal, just re-let: Earth excavation, 851,000 cubic yards; earth in

6. The tenders for this work were invited before the Government decided upon the policy of completing the works of enlargement ready for navigation in the spring of 1899—and the tenders were based on completion in October, 1899. Mr. Hogan, who was the lowest tenderer, upon being informed of the policy of the Government said he could not carry out the work within the shorter time, viz.: October, 1898, at his tender price, and when asked how much additional to the amount of his tender he would undertake the work in the shorter time, declined to put in an offer for the work to be completed in the shorter date. Mr. Onderdonk was then called upon and he said he would undertake it for the shorter date at his tender price and the contract was awarded him. 7. The amount of deposit received with each tender was $8,000.

DANIEL B. STONE

* Mr. GILLIES asked:

1. For what period of time was Daniel B. Stone employed as a lockman upon the St. Peter's Canal?

2. Has he been dismissed from his position as lockman?

3. If so, when was he dismissed?

4. By whom has he been replaced?

5. Were any charges or complaints laid against Mr. Stone? If so, by whom, and of what description?

6. If charges or complaints were preferred against Mr. Stone, was any attempt made to have them investigated before dismissing him?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. Mr. D. B. Stone, lockman on the St. Peter's Canal, has been employed since February, 1884. 2. His services were dispensed with on the 31st March ultimo, the staff on the canal having been reduced from eight to five and reorganized. 5. No.

W. J. CASSELMAN.

Mr. BRODER asked :

Why was W. J. Casselman dismissed from his position as lockmaster on lock 24, Williamsburg Canal? Was there any investigation? Is it the intention of the Government to superannuate him?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. W. J. Casselman has been dismissed from the service. The ground of his dismissal was that he had made himself, during the recent elections, very obnoxious by his partisan conduct. It was not considered at all necessary to incur the expense of holding an investigation in his case, there being no doubt as to the fact. The Government is looking into precedents which have taken place or have been established in similar cases and considering this case, with others which have arisen, as to whether the amount contributed to the superannuation fund should be returned with interest or not.

OLD FORT ERIE.

Mr. McCLEARY asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to comply with the memorials of the county council of Welland and the historical societies, praying that the ruins of "Old Fort Erie" in the village of Fort Erie, county of Welland, be placed under the control of the Board of Commissioners for Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park and be made a portion of said park?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). This matter is now engaging the attention of the Government.

WALTER B. SCOVIL.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked :

Is the Minister of Inland Revenue in possession of the following petition, and if so, what he proposes to do in the premises :—

"We, the undersigned representatives of the Parliament of Canada and Legislative Assembly of the province of New Brunswick, president and executive of the Liberal Association of King's county and province of New Brunswick and voters in and for the said county, do humbly petition you in the premises as set forth hereafter and ask that the same be remedied and the injustice to the county of King's, N.B., be righted by having the office of inspector of weights and measures for the hereafter named counties restored to it.

"In the year 1888, Walter B. Scovil, for many years a member of the Legislative Assembly of the province of New Brunswick, was appointed inspector of weights and measures for the counties of King's, Westmoreland, Albert, Gloucester, Kent, Restigouche and Northumberland and had an office fitted up for him in the public offices at Sussex, K.C. Later on a Mr. Richard was appointed assistant inspector, his residence being in Kent county, N.B. That the said Richard, with some slight exceptions, did little or no work, and about the whole work was devolved on the said Walter B. Scovil, who to the best of his ability performed such faithfully and to the satisfaction of the department.

Mr. BLAIR.

"That the said Walter B. Scovil has been superannuated contrary to his knowledge and without consultation with the representative in Parliament of the said county of King's, and orders were issued to the inspector of weights and measures in St. John, N.B., to close up the office in Sussex, on Monday, April 20th, 1897.

"That the aforesaid Richard has not been superannuated, and it is alleged that the work formerly performed by Scovil and himself will now devolve on one person, causing the office to be removed from the county of King's.

"That your petitioners say that, if reduction had to be made, Mr. Richard, who has performed little or no service for his years of office (which can be verified by an examination of his accounts), should have been the one to go.

"Furthermore, that the said Richard was an active partisan against the Liberal party and its friends, both in Dominion and local elections, which can be clearly established; whilst the said Scovil has most carefully been neutral, although all his friends and relations have done all in their power for the success of the Liberal party and yourself, which also can be fully proved.

"That if the work for the counties of King's, Westmoreland, Albert, Restigouche, Gloucester, Kent and Northumberland had been properly carried out, the income would have fully sustained the office of inspector and assistant; but the assistant performing little or no work, the office had to bear the loss.

"That if the work is properly performed in the future it will produce the expenses of an inspector and an assistant.

"Having laid this before you, we humbly ask that if there is to be only one inspector instead of two, that the appointment shall be made in King's county, which has been loyal and supports your Administration, as it is manifestly unfair that the county of Kent and Mr. Richard, who have been and are still hostile, should be entitled to any benefits accruing from a change of policy in the department.

"Your petitioners ask that you will remove the grievance and give the remedy asked, and in duty bound ever pray.

"(Sgd.) JAMES DOMVILLE, M.P.

"For the county of King's, N.B.,
"And several hundred others."

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). I have received the petition referred to, and it is under consideration.

MAIL SERVICE BETWEEN ASHCROFT AND BARKERVILLE, B.C.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Has the contract for carrying the mails between Ashcroft and Barkerville, B.C., been awarded to Messrs. Ryan & Shields for the sum of $20,000, as stated in the Ottawa "Citizen" of the 12th May?

2. If so, does this contract include any other mail routes except the direct one between Ashcroft and Barkerville?

3. How many tenders were received for the above service?

4. Who were the tenderers, and how much were their tenders?

5. If the contract has been awarded to Messrs. Ryan & Shields, is the Ryan here mentioned, one Peter Ryan, the registrar of titles in Toronto, or his son? Is the Shields mentioned the individual well known in Ontario as "Frozen Whisky Shields"?

Mr. SPEAKER. In respect to the last line in this question, I would suggest to the hon. member that he should change the wording so as to identify the individual.

Mr. PRIOR. I will alter it so as to read, "John Shields, of Toronto."

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). No contract for the service has yet been executed. The contract was held by the British Columbia Transportation Company, at a very excessive price, $26,000. The contract will expire on the 30th June, 1897. Tenders for the service were advertised for. Some tenders were received. The lowest tender was considered excessive. I applied to the lowest tenderer asking him to reduce the amount of his tender.

Mr. PRIOR. Who was the lowest tenderer?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman must understand that this is not the time when I can give that information. I have failed to obtain a reasonable tender, and I am endeavouring to secure a reasonable tender for this service to be maintained in a state of efficiency and with due regard to economy; and if I can succeed, it will effect a substantial saving to the Government. When the contract is let, there will be no objection whatever to give all the particulars, the tenderers, their names, and all details connected with the negotiations, but the hon. gentleman will agree with me that this is not the time when such information can be given in the public interest.

Mr. PRIOR. Do I understand that the contract has not been awarded?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I made that statement.

PACIFIC POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. MORRISON asked :

1. Has provisional allowance been made to the railway mail clerks on the Pacific postal division?
2. Have demands been made heretofore by the railway mail clerks on the Pacific postal division for provisional allowance? If so, have their requests in that behalf been complied with?
3. Have the mail clerks on the Manitoba postal division been receiving provisional allowance?
4. Is it the intention of the Government to pay to the railway mail clerks on the Pacific postal division provisional allowance?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I find by an Order in Council of June, 1895, that provision was made for a provisional allowance for railway mail clerks in the Manitoba service, and this has been paid to them; but the Order in Council in question excluded mail clerks in British Columbia. With the exception of the representations made by the hon. gentleman asking for such provisional allowance to be made to mail clerks in British Columbia, no representations have been made to the department.

JOHN WIGGINS—BRITISH COLUMBIA PENITENTIARY.

Mr. MORRISON asked :

Was John Wiggins dismissed from the position of guard of the British Columbia Penitentiary? If so, when? What were the grounds of complaint against him?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). John Wiggins was dismissed from the position of guard at British Columbia penitentiary in February, 1890, for conduct unbecoming an officer of the penitentiary. He had been reported for having discussed penitentiary business, including alleged personal grievances, with parties outside the prison; and when called upon by direction of the Minister to formulate his grievances in order that they might be considered, he refused to comply with the Minister's request. The Minister thereupon directed that his services be dispensed with.

POSTMASTER AT VALLEYFIELD.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

1. When was Mr. E. Dion appointed postmaster at Valleyfield?
2. By whom was he recommended for the position?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The hon. the Minister of Public Works made the recommendation of Mr. E. Dionne, jr., for the postmastership in question; but it was ascertained that there was no such person as the nominee, and accordingly he had to be appealed to, to give us the name of some person in existence, and did so.

POSTMASTER AT MELOCHEVILLE.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

Has the Postmaster General exacted from the postmaster at Melocheville the amount of money his predecessor had condemned him to pay for illegal sale of stamps?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Some time ago the department, as a matter of routine, without any direction from the then Postmaster General and, in fact, without his knowledge, called upon the postmaster at Melocheville to recoup certain amounts which he had improperly been allowed as salary. This amount the postmaster had not yet recouped, he being a poor man, but he is discharging the duties of postmaster without being paid salary, the amount so retained going towards liquidation of his debt. Until the question on the Order paper was brought to the attention of the present Postmaster General, he, like his predecessor, had no personal knowledge of the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the amount?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not inquire and do not know; I think it is some very trifling thing.

MR. S. A. BRODEUR—BEAUHARNOIS CANAL.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

1. When was Mr. S. A. Brodeur, N.P., appointed in place of Mr. A. D. Danis as collector of tolls and collector of customs and excise on Beauharnois Canal?

2. On whose recommendation was Mr. Brodeur appointed to fill all those positions?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. S. A. Brodeur, N.P., was appointed collector of tolls on the Beauharnois Canal on the 21st of April, 1897. As to on whose recommendation he was appointed, I am bound to say to my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) that as the Government takes the full responsibility for the appointment, we do not feel that we are called upon to state upon whose advice we act.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) would pardon me a moment. I may say that it has been the custom for very many years to give the recommendation. Technically, my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) is right, but that has been the custom, and even since this Parliament has met, most of the members of the Government, when asked that question, gave the answer.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) cannot enter into a discussion now.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to draw that to the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Blair). I know he would like to have the information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not any want of courtesy to the hon. member, because I would give the information to him as readily as to anybody. I do not feel that it is a precedent which we ought to establish or recognize in any way. We take all the responsibility, and as to where we get our advice it cannot possibly be a matter of concern.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) is not obliged to answer, and I do not complain. The hon. the Controller of Customs has an answer to give on the same question.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). With reference to the portion of the question that appertains to the Customs Department, I may say, that Mr. Brodeur was appointed in place of Mr. Danis as sub-collector of customs at Valleyfield, on the 13th of April, 1897.

Mr. BERGERON. On whose recommendation?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. They have not furnished me with an answer to that question.

Mr. MULOCK.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). The answer to the first question is, on 1st of May, 1897, to collect excise duties on commission. As to the second question, I will follow the example of my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) and beg the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) to excuse me for not answering.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

Who has done the work of collector of tolls, of customs and of excise between the dismissal of Mr. Danis and the appointment of Mr. Brodeur at Valleyfield, P.Q.?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The actual dismissal of Mr. A. D. Danis from the position of sub-collector of customs at Valleyfield and the appointment of Mr. S. A. Brodeur thereto were contemporaneous.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Henry Lefebvre did the work of collector of tolls at Valleyfield until Mr. Brodeur was appointed.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). Mr. Danis continued to do the work until the first of May, when Mr. Brodeur was appointed.

WESTMINSTER AND BURRARD TELEPHONE COMPANY.

Mr. MORRISON asked :

1. When was the transfer of the Dominion telegraph lines from New Westminster, B.C., made to the Westminster and Burrard Telephone Company?

2. At whose request was said transfer made?

3. What substantially were the terms of the said transfer?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. By an Order in Council of the 15th June, 1887, authority was given to lease to Mr. Laidlaw, and others, for ninety-nine years, at a rental of $1 per year, the Government telegraph line between New Westminster and Ladner's Landing, B.C., the line including half a mile of cable across the Fraser River. On the 19th March, 1895, the executors of J. A. Laidlaw and James Wilson transferred the remainder of their line to the Burrard Inlet Telephone Company, obtaining from the Minister of Public Works under the terms of the said lease, the necessary sanction for such transfer. 2. The request for the original lease was made by Mr. D. Chisholm, M.P., on the 25th May, 1887, reported upon favourably by the then superintendent of Government telegraph service, Mr. Gisborne, and approved by an Order in Council of the 15th June, 1887. The transfer from the original lessees to the company was recommended to the department by Mr. George E. Corbould. 3. The term of lease, ninety-nine years; line to be kept in perpetuity without cost to Government; lessees not to sub-let without leave; line, if abandoned by lessees, to revert to Government in good repair; rent, $1 per year.

ATHABASCA AND MACKENZIE RIVER MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. OLIVER asked :

1. Is it the desire of the Government to extend mail facilities to the Athabasca and Mackenzie River regions?

2. Is the Government aware that the Hudson's Bay Company's steamer leaves Athabasca Landing for the North about June 1st and that the commissioner of the said company has expressed his willingness to make an arrangement with the Government for the carriage of mails to the far north on this trip?

3. Has the Government entered into negotiations with any person with a view of securing the carriage of a public mail during the summer into the Athabasca and Mackenzie River regions?

4. Have any representations been made to the Government of the desirability and possibility of providing such a service?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). It is the desire of the Government to extend mail facilities to the Athabasca and Mackenzie River region, and the carrying out of that desire is a matter which is at present engaging the attention of the Government. I am not in a position at this moment to give the answers to the second and third questions. With regard to the fourth question, my answer is, representations have been made to the Government of the desirability of such a mail service being provided, and such representations have been made by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver).

PENSION FUND—MR. A. D. DANIS.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to refund to Mr. A. D. Danis the sum of $311.16 which he paid to the pension fund as collector of tolls on Beauharnois Canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). No decision has yet been reached by the Government as to the repayment of the sum paid by Mr. Danis into the pension fund. It is considering the question whether the amount so paid, with interest, should not, under the circumstances, be made.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

1. How much had Mr. Danis paid to the pension fund as collector of customs at Valleyfield from the day of his appointment down to the 9th February last?

2. Is it the intention of the Government to reimburse him for what he paid to said fund?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. 1. $40.94. 2. It is under consideration.

MCCARTHY ACT CLAIMS—PROVENCHER DISTRICT.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

1. Which of the claims existing under the provisions of the Act commonly known as "The McCarthy Act," have been paid to municipal corporations or to persons entitled to the same, in the electoral division of Provencher?

2. What are the claims remaining unsettled, and why were they not paid?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). I beg to reply as follows:—1. Municipality of St. Boniface, $100; municipality of Emerson, $65; municipality of Otterburne, $15; municipality of Dominion City, $15; municipality of Morris, $25; as per page 140 of Inland Revenue Report for 1895-96. 2. F. Jean & Co., St. Boniface, $10, whereabouts unknown; A. Chabot, St. Boniface, $10, whereabouts unknown; Geo. Brad, Dominion City, $15, claimed more—declines to accept; G. H. Patterson, Dominion City, $10, claimed more—declines to accept; Wm. Martin, Emerson, $15, whereabouts unknown; T. Carney, Emerson, $15, whereabouts unknown; V. Ruskoff, Emerson, $15, whereabouts unknown; Robertson & Co., Emerson, $10, whereabouts unknown; J. L. Delaine, Emerson, $10, whereabouts unknown; J. P. O. Allaire, St. Boniface, $296, no amount available by the département. Mr. Allaire was inspector of Provencher district and the claim is for services rendered. The payment of this amount was recommended by the department in March, 1896, but was not sanctioned by Council.

APPOINTMENTS IN CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.

Mr. McDOUGALL (for Mr. Sproule) asked :

Have any persons been appointed to the inside service of the Customs Department since 1st July, 1896, who have not passed the prescribed examination required by the Civil Service Act? Are any such persons so appointed now employed in this department?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I suppose the question is not intended to refer to my private secretary, whose case was covered by the Estimates of last year. With that statement, my reply to both divisions of the question is, no.

COLLECTIONS OF REVENUE AT VALLEYFIELD.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

How much money was collected by A. D. Danis, as collector of excise at Valleyfield, P.Q., since his appointment down to the 30th April, 1897?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). The amount collected was $115,491.14.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

How much money was collected by A. D. Danis, as collector of customs at Valleyfield, P.Q., from 1st July, 1888, to the 9th February, 1897?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. This question cannot be answered in full, as returns from the ports for the years 1889-90 and 1890-91, were not published in the Trade and Navigation Returns for these years, and there is no record of them in the books of the Customs Department. The collections at Valleyfield for the years included in the question up to the 30th June, 1896, with the exception of the two years heretofore referred to, are as follows:—

1891-92.....	12,261 45
1892-93.....	21,833 30
1893-94.....	48,021 29
1894-95.....	29,340 18
1895-96.....	20,763 63

It is impossible to state the collections since the 30th June, 1896, as no returns have been received from the outport since that date. Returns of revenue from outports are only made yearly.

IMPROVEMENTS ON THE ST. LAWRENCE CANALS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER asked :

1. Has any contract been awarded by the Dominion Government for certain improvements on the Galops Canal, Farran's Point Canal, North Channel of the St. Lawrence Canal, and the Iroquois section of the Galops Canal, for which tenders were duly called for by advertisement?

2. If so, to whom was the contract awarded?

3. Has a contract been executed, strictly binding the Government to the terms and conditions of the advertisements for tenders?

4. In the event of non-completion of the contract within the time limited, what penalty, if any, is exacted from the contractors for default?

5. How long after the work is commenced will the Department of Railways and Canals be informed as to whether or not the contractors have sufficient plant, men and material on the work to complete it within the time specified in the advertisements?

6. In case the contractors cannot fulfil the contract within the time limited, what is the intention of the Government in respect to the same?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. Yes, several contracts have been awarded for certain improvements on the Galops Canal, north channel of the St. Lawrence Canal, and the Cardinal and Iroquois sections of the Galops Canal for which tenders were duly called for by advertisements. 2. The contract for the Cardinal section of the Galops Canal was awarded to Messrs. William Davis & Son, contractors, for the improvement of the north channel to Mr. M. A. Cleveland, contractor, and for the Iroquois section of the Galops Canal to Messrs. Larkin & Sangster, contractors. 3. Yes, contracts have been executed in each case in accordance with the terms and conditions of the advertisements for tenders. And I imagine the Government is bound strictly as well as the contractor. 4. At any stage in the construction, if the contractor makes default in advancing with the work to the satisfaction of the engineer, or shall not finish any portion within the period ordered by the engineer, the entire work may be taken off the contractor's hands and finished by the Government at the contractor's cost; all of the plant, the ten per cent drawback and deposit security becoming the property of the Government. 5. As the work progresses, the chief engineer will satisfy himself as to whether or not the contractors have sufficient plant, men and material on the work to complete it within the time specified in the advertisements. 6. If contractors do not fulfil their contract within the time limited, the intention is that the work will be taken out of their hands, and the Government will have it completed by some other means.

FISH ISLAND, P.E.I., LIGHTKEEPER.

Mr. MARTIN asked :

1. Why has Charles E. McDonald (late acting lightkeeper) at Fish Island, in the province of Prince Edward Island, been removed, and when?

2. Was Mr. McDonald one of those recommended on the 6th day of July last for permanent appointment by the late Administration?

3. Did the Government, on the 8th of September last, declare by Order in Council that the recommendation in Mr. McDonald's case was one from which His Excellency the Governor General did not withhold his approval by his memorandum of the 8th of July last?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Mr. C. E. McDonald was not appointed as keeper of Fish Island light, but served as assistant to the widow of the late keeper without the sanction of the department. His services were not required after the appointment of a new keeper on the 8th of March last. Mr. McDonald was recommended for permanent appointment by the late Administration, on the 6th of July last. The recommendation of Mr. McDonald was not included in those from which His Excellency withheld his assent, but he did not officially sign the same. By Order in Council of the 8th of March last, the report of the Council submitting Mr. McDonald's name for the appointment was recommended not to be signed by His Excellency, but cancelled, and Mr. Sinclair was appointed keeper.

P.E.I. DAIRY INSPECTOR.

Mr. MARTIN asked :

1. Why have the services of Thomas J. Dillon, dairy inspector for Prince Edward Island, been dispensed with?

2. If Mr. Dillon withdrew from the service, what reasons did he give the Minister of Agriculture or any official of his department for doing so?

3. Who is to succeed Mr. Dillon?

4. What position is Mr. Woodward to occupy in the dairy service in Prince Edward Island?

5. What are Mr. Woodward's qualifications and experience in the dairy service?

6. Is he a relation of the Minister of Agriculture?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). 1. The Government has withdrawn from the management of all the cheese factories and creameries in Prince Edward Island; and consequently the services of Mr. Dillon will not be required. 2. Mr. Dillon withdraws from the service at the end of May; having intimated that he intends to engage in business for himself in the maritime provinces. 3. No one is required; and no one will be appointed. 4. Mr. Woodward is to be one of the two travelling dairy instructors who will visit the cheese factories regularly. 5. Mr. Woodward has a first-class certificate as inspector from the St. Hyacinthe Dairy School. He is a first-class practical cheesemaker, and has acted for several years as instructor for a syndicate of cheese factories in the province of Quebec. He proved himself thoroughly competent in that capacity. 6. No, and in no way connected with the Minister.

CORNWALL AND BEAUHARNOIS CANALS.

Mr. REID asked :

What was the actual amount paid out by the Government for breaking lock No. 17 in Cornwall Canal by propellor "Ocean" in 1895, and also for a similar break in Beauharnois Canal in 1894?

In the amount paid out for damages in the Beauharnois Canal in 1894, was there anything paid for damages to crops of farmers? If so, how much?

Were owners of steamer notified to attend the survey and were they satisfied with the appraisal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The amount paid out for damages to lock No. 17 on the Cornwall Canal by the propellor "Ocean," in 1895, was $4,208.79. There was paid for similar damages on the Beauharnois Canal in 1894, $1,334.39. There was paid for damages to crops and land on the Beauharnois Canal, in 1894, the sum of $403.25.

CONTRACTS FOR WOOD—KINGSTON AND LONDON BARRACKS.

Mr. TYRWHITT asked :

Have contracts been let during the last twelve months for supply of hard and soft wood for the barracks at Kingston and London? If so, were tenders called for, and who are the successful applicants, and at what prices are the different kinds of wood supplied?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Yes. Contracts have been awarded for Kingston and London for hard and soft wood for the barracks, for the twelve months ending the 30th June, 1897. Tenders were received from three parties for fuel for Kingston. The contract was given to the lowest tenderer, Mr. R. Crawford, of Kingston, at following prices:—Hard wood, $5.23 per cord; soft wood, $3.47 per cord. Public tenders were called for by the Department of Public Works for the supply of fuel wood at London for the heating of their buildings. The contract for the fuel required for the militia at London was given to William Heaman, of London, at the lowest figure obtained by the Public Works, following prices:—Hard wood, $6 per cord; soft wood, $4 per cord.

FAST ATLANTIC STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON moved for :

Copies of all correspondence, tenders asked for and received, Orders in Council, and papers in connection with the fast Atlantic service.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow this to stand. I hope to be able to lay the papers before the House some time, but they are not ready just yet.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not see any necessity for the motion standing, if it is merely asking for that which the hon. gentleman says he will furnish as soon as he can.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no objection to the motion on the understanding that we are not bound to produce the papers immediately.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Certainly.

Motion agreed to.

A NATIONAL MUSEUM AT OTTAWA.

Mr. BELCOURT moved for :

Copies of all petitions, memorials and demands or documents presented to the Government, or to any member thereof, relating to the erection at Ottawa of a national museum.

He said: In presenting this motion, my object is to call the attention of this House, and more particularly of the Government, to a matter which I consider to be of great importance, of national concern and of immediate urgency. Every member of this honourable House, I presume, many visitors and scientists from our country and from abroad, and thousands and thousands of our own citizens, have yearly visited, with interest and profit to themselves, and examined with pride the magnificent collection illustrative of our natural history and natural resources exhibited at the National Museum at Ottawa. There are gathered in that museum the fruits of fifty years of hard-earned experience, of persistent search and inquiry, and of incessant toil and labour, the fruits of our national expeditions during fifty years and of numerous private and individual explorations and adventures. The result of all this is a collection which, for neatness, compactness and utility, is not surpassed anywhere, a collection which has been of the greatest practical utility not only to the scientist, but to the miner, the manufacturer and the agriculturist as well. It is such a collection that it has attracted the widespread attention of numerous scientists not only of Canada, but also of foreign lands, and it has received from various sources the highest meed of praise and admiration. I would like, without wearying the House to any great extent, to be allowed to read one or two extracts from the opinions expressed by some foreign scientists concerning our Geological Museum. I will first read the opinion of Prof. Valentine Ball, director of the Science and Art Museum, Dublin. He says :

The useful materials of Canada are well illustrated in this museum by admirable series of specimens, and polished slabs of the ornamental stones are displayed on brackets on the walls with good effect.

Though unpretentious and practical, the general effect and appearance of this museum is such as to attract non-scientific as well as scientific visitors, a matter of no light importance in a country where its very existence may be said to depend on the popular vote. Its continuance and development are matters of great importance to the mineral industries of the Dominion, and if on this account alone it is supported liberally by the State, science will not fail to reap a share of the benefit so conferred.

Then, again, Prof. James Hall, State Geologist of New York, in a lengthy letter addressed to the late director of the Geological Museum, Dr. Selwyn, says :

Albany, April 26th, 1890.

Dr. A. R. C. Selwyn, C.M.G., F.R.S., &c.,
Director of the Geological and Natural History Survey of Canada.

Dear Sir,—I have lately had the pleasure and satisfaction of spending several days in the museum of your Geological Survey at Ottawa. My special object was the study of the Brachiopoda, of which class of fossils the late Mr. Billings, palæontologist to the Survey, described so many genera and species from the Canadian rocks.

If I might be allowed to make one suggestion, it would be that you republish in one volume, with their illustrations, all of Mr. Billings's earlier papers which appeared in the "Canadian Journal" and the "Canadian Naturalist" or elsewhere, together with any notes or observations upon the genera and species derived from information brought out by later investigations. I am sure you could not do a better service to students in geological science than by such a publication. I feel that I owe to you and your co-labourers my hearty thanks for having provided such facilities for the study of your fossils and the privilege of having free access to these unequalled and systematically arranged collections.

Your collection in this class of fossils, as well as in several others, is a typical and classical one, and no author can with propriety or safety publish the result of his investigations until he has studied the collections in the museum of the Canadian Geological Survey. It has been to me a great satisfaction to find the types and typical specimens of Mr. Billings's genera and species, not only of the Brachiopoda, but of other classes of fossils, so carefully preserved and labelled, and so systematically arranged, leaving in this respect nothing to be desired. In fact, I do not hesitate to say, more perfectly arranged and authentically labelled than any collection which I have seen in the United States ; while there are few museums anywhere which approach this one in neatness, order and compactness of arrangement. * * *

Permit me, also, to say a few words upon the general character of the museum, especially since I have known it almost from its inception, having worked with Sir William Logan in the first attempt to arrange the geological series with their characteristic fossils during several winters from 1851 to 1855. Of its progress in Montreal after that I know little, but now that I see the original conception so fully realized, I cannot but express my admiration of what you and your co-labourers have accomplished.

Your geological collections in which I have the greatest interest are admirably arranged and adapted for the study of science. You have adopted an excellent system of illustrating the geological structure and the order of succession of your geological formations and their products in their natural association. Together with the systematic arrangement of your rocks, you present the gold and silver ores and follow with the other ores and economic minerals which are derived from the older rocks and from their succeeding geological formations. The marbles, of various character and colour, arranged in connection with their geological horizons and in polished slabs showing their adaptation to economic and ornamental use, the fertilizers, gypsum, marls and phosphates, the products of your coal mines, the peat, and the mineral oils, &c., the materials for use in ornamentation and jewellery.

The first floor of your museum presents the most compact and complete arrangement I have ever seen, for the illustration of the geological formations in their natural sequence, and of their mineral products. Nothing more could be desired except greater space for their more extensive exhibition.

I have already referred to your collections in palæontology, which are arranged on the second floor in the most complete and systematic manner, exhibiting the geological or chronological order of the successive groups and the biological order in the arrangement of their fossils under each geological division.

Without having critically examined your collection of plants, I can see that it is very carefully and systematically arranged, needing only more space and quarters better adapted to the purpose of a grand herbarium. Your collection of birds, mammals, &c., is likewise both systematically and very neatly arranged, and carefully labelled, making a very fine exhibition of these classes of animals representing the Canadian fauna.

Your ethnological collection is one of great interest and value, and, like all the other collections, is carefully arranged and labelled and very neatly kept. No one in the least interested in these studies can fail to appreciate such a collection, and its interest and importance in connection with the aboriginal history of the country.

In so far as system, neatness and order are concerned, nothing further can be desired. In all these the museum and its collections are worthy the great Empire between the two oceans, which they represent. The first regret which one feels is, that these typical and historic collections are not housed in a fire-proof building, for their loss would be an irreparable calamity to science, and no amount of money expended in new collections could fill the place of these, which have been made the subjects of original studies, and have entered into the literature of geological science over the entire civilized world. The loss of such a museum would be a serious injury to geological science, not only in Canada, but throughout America and Europe.

With a fire-proof building giving four or five times the space of your present building, you would be prepared to represent the growing collections which your continued and extended researches are bringing into the museum, and for which you have now no adequate space. Such a museum at your capital, representing the natural resources of your enormous country, would not only fully vindicate the wisdom and foresight of your statesmen, in its representation of the economic aspects of your Survey, and the various productions of the country; but it would become a nucleus for the establishment of schools of science and finally a grand university of the Dominion of Canada.

I have also before me opinions of such world renowned scientists as Dr. Schmidt, of St. Petersburg, Russia; Dr. Woodward, British Museum; Baron de Geer; Barrois de Lille; Count Marazzi; Prof. Cope, of Philadelphia; and numerous others. I have also an opinion which was given very recently and to which I am satisfied hon. members will listen with some interest. It is dated April 28, 1897, and is from the Curator of the Boston Society of Natural History. It is as follows:—

I have made two visits to this collection, one a somewhat prolonged one of three weeks' duration. I knew by the publications of the Geological Survey that it was extremely valuable and that it contained many unique types, but until I had gone thoroughly through its cases I had no idea of the vast number of published and unpublished specimens that it contained. I am well acquainted especially with the fossil cephalopods, and in this department I consider the Museum of the Geological Survey at Ottawa to have more specimens of the highest importance than any other in this country. It is not so much the quantity of these as it is the quality of those that have been gathered together there. There are a number of collections which would exceed it in the multiplicity of specimens, but there is not one that equals it in value. I have recently had proofs of this, and have learned that, since my last visit to Ottawa, a very large number of specimens of very great value have been added to its collections. The destruction of some of these unique specimens or their injury could never, probably, be made good. As a rule, the first collector in any locality obtains certain specimens that are never duplicated, and this is especially true of the collection I am speaking of; since Richardson and other collectors passed over places where I have followed them with much greater advantages for obtaining specimens, and yet they took away some species which I was unable to find. I sincerely hope that the Government of Canada will realize the great importance to science of the precious collections which the Geological Survey has brought together, and they will earn the thanks of the whole scientific world if they put these into a building which is absolutely fire-proof.

Of this magnificent collection, a portion only can be exhibited in the Geological Museum on account of the lack of accommodation of the building. A very large portion of the collection is now stowed away for want of space, some specimens being in the attic—some in the cellar and some in the backyard. Then the building is an antiquated tumbled-down old structure, which is entirely inadequate for and unsuited to the purpose it is assigned. It is a building which every now and then the Minister of Public Works has had to prop up in order to prevent it from falling. Only two or three years ago the Public Works Department was obliged to put in no less than sixty props, and any one who visits the museum and who happens to go into that section where these props are most numerous can hardly escape the somewhat weird sensation of being in a standing forest of dead timber. But there is a worst feature than even this. Not only is the building antiquated and dilapidated, it is moreover from hour to hour and day to day in danger of destruction by fire. It is built of inflammable material, and is surrounded on all sides by tenement houses and wooden structures, so that if a fire occurred it would be practically impossible to save the museum from destruction. Not only would the building be destroyed, but the grand collection it contains would likewise be destroyed, and as many of the specimens are unique they could not be replaced, and thus an irreparable loss would ensue. This is not a question that has been brought forward lately, for the attention of those in power has frequently been called to it. Fifteen or sixteen years ago the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite, who were then in power, was called to it. The want of space and the danger from fire at the museum were pointed out; and yet nothing was done. I do not desire to make political capital out of the matter or to follow the example which is sometimes furnished us by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House who are too prone to take advantage of any and every opportunity to make political capital, but I can in all fairness and justice say that hon. gentlemen opposite entirely failed to realize their duty in this matter. Although this magnificent collection occupies a building lying within a stone's throw of the Parliament buildings, yet nothing has been done to secure it from imminent peril of total destruction. The hon. gentlemen opposite have voted immense, nay, enormous sums of money for the construction of bridges, canals and railways to help friends and supporters, and yet nothing was done to ensure the existence of this most valuable collection and prevent the ever imminent danger of its total destruction by fire. Different learned associations, mining associations, mining publications, municipal councils, and the press generally, have drawn the attention of previous Governments to this matter, and the Royal Society of Canada only a short time ago presented a memorial, which I think hon.

members will be interested in having read. In 1894 the Royal Society memorialized the Government of Canada as follows:—

Among the matters of importance upon which the Royal Society of Canada has ventured to memorialize the Government, and to which it has devoted attention almost from the date of its organization, is that of the provision of a suitable building for a national museum. While other recommendations of the society have been acted upon and have already produced evidences of their utility, the circumstances have been such that the Government has not yet seen its way to complying with this particular suggestion. The want is now, however, more pressing than ever, and the council, therefore, take advantage of this occasion again to urge in the strongest possible manner the almost absolute necessity of taking some immediate step in this direction.

What is immediately and urgently required is a fire-proof building suitable for the proper exhibition and preservation of the collections of the Geological Survey, with contiguous offices. These collections at present constitute the national museum in so far as geology, mineralogy, natural history and ethnology are concerned, but it is to be presumed that other collections relating to different lines of the industrial and artistic work of the Dominion would eventually be included in a general museum, and provision for their addition should be a part of the plan.

The collections of the Geological Survey represent in a concrete form and in a manner which could not be duplicated, the work done in Canadian geology and allied branches during more than fifty years. They are still growing and at an increasing ratio in correspondence with the rapidly developing mineral industries of the country, but even at the present moment their proper display would necessitate nearly twice the floor and wall space afforded by the antiquated and unsafe building in which they are yet housed. The fact that over 26,000 persons visited the collections during the past year, imperfectly exposed as they are at present, shows how great an educational effect might be produced by means of a properly appointed national museum. This effect would not be merely a local one, for Ottawa is visited not only by large numbers of persons from all the provinces of Canada, but also by an increasing number of travellers from all parts of the world.

To the public at large a well-equipped museum in which the natural resources and products generally of the country find orderly and sufficient expression, constitutes the best method of disseminating information on such subjects. It constitutes, if it may be so expressed with propriety, the best possible advertisement.

This memorial which is somewhat lengthy, was followed by a resolution that certain gentlemen be a deputation to wait upon the Government and to urge that it should take immediate steps to afford proper accommodation for the exhibition of this magnificent collection, and that it should put up a building that would be absolutely fire-proof. Now that I have directed attention to this important matter, I trust that the present Government will promptly realize its duty and see the necessity which exists for prompt and energetic action. I trust that the gentlemen now in power will not imitate the masterly inactivity of their predecessors in office, in connection with this subject. I hope that we shall soon see erected in the city of Ottawa, a national museum which shall be a credit to the country and worthy the collection which awaits it. We shall then have a splendid museum of national history, including the geological and mineralogical cabinets which already exist, including also a chemical laboratory, and a library to contain all the works and documents connected with the Geological Museum since its inception, and also the records and transactions of the learned bodies of the old world and the new. This new museum at the capital of the Dominion will stand as a perpetual reminder of the enlightened, progressive and truly patriotic policy inaugurated by the Liberal party on the 23rd of June, 1896. I beg, therefore, to move the resolution, seconded by Mr. Lount.

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Government will not consider that the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt), in presenting this question to the House, is speaking merely for the effect he may produce upon his constituents in the city of Ottawa. I trust that the Government will not consider that the hon. gentleman is speaking merely for political effect, but that it will take into consideration the arguments presented by that hon. gentleman, and will have a full appreciation of the importance of the question that has been presented by him to this House. The hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) very truly says, that the collection in the Geological Museum in this city is one of great completeness and great importance. I venture to say, Sir, that there is not a more complete geological museum upon the continent; it is one which reflects credit upon the Geological Department and upon the Government of Canada. I remember some years ago, taking an active part in securing the removal of that museum from Montreal to the capital of the country, and one of the reasons urged for that removal was, that the collection was so creditable to Canada that it should be centered in the capital of the Dominion. The intention at that time, and in fact the practical promise of the Government was, that the museum should be accommodated in this city, amid surroundings that were in keeping with its value. As it is now, it is in an inconvenient part of the city; it is in a building not adapted to the purpose, and so we fail to realize how great, and how complete, and how valuable this collection is. Should this collection be unhappily destroyed by fire, we would then awaken to the seriousness of the loss which we had sustained. I do not desire to say much upon this question, further than to urge that the arguments presented by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt) may receive the consideration of the Government; may receive that consideration which their force warrants the Government in bestowing upon them. I trust that the Government may realize that hardly any duty of more im-

Dominion of Canada. That valuable collection should certainly be moved from its present location. The building is inadequate, it is unsafe, it is badly located, and the country should spend a little money in having proper quarters provided. The loss of this collection would be an irreparable one, and we should take immediate steps to guard against such a calamity.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). There is no objection whatever to bring down the papers which are asked for in this motion. On the contrary, the Government quite realizes that it is advisable that the country at large should be made aware of the numerous representations which have been made from time to time, in days past, and at the present day as well, as to the necessity for having a suitable location for the valuable collection comprised in our Geological Museum. The Government is fully aware of the fact which was brought to their notice by my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), that when the collection was removed from Montreal to Ottawa, it was thought that a suitable place would be then provided for it. The present Government has under its serious consideration now, the question of seeing what can be done in that respect. That something should be done, will go without saying. We cannot be otherwise than alive to the fact, that under existing circumstances, the valuable collection of the Geological Museum which has cost a great deal of labour and money, could be at any moment burned to ashes. There is no protection whatever for it now. If the Government thinks it advisable at some time or other, to ask Parliament for an appropriation to have a suitable building erected, I suppose it can rely upon the concurrence of all parties in this House.

Motion agreed to.

NEWFOUNDLAND AND CANADA.

Mr. MARTIN moved for :

Copies of all correspondence, &c., not already brought down, between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland, in reference to the admission of Newfoundland into the union of Canada ; also, copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and that of Newfoundland in reference to the establishment of freer trade relations between Newfoundland and Canada.

He said : Before the motion is put, I desire to say a few words on this question, which is one of great importance to Canada. Not many years ago some negotiations were on foot for the admission of Newfoundland into the confederation. It is not necessary that I should detail those negotiations, because hon. members are well aware of the reasons why they failed of their object. We also remember that previous to confederation, at the conference at Quebec in 1864, Newfoundland was represented ; and at the time of the union of the original four provinces, Newfoundland did not think proper to join the confederation. Neither did the province of Prince Edward Island at that time, and substantially for the same reasons. Newfoundland saw that large expenditures were likely to be made by Canada for the extension of its railway and canal system, in which Newfoundland would not benefit directly, like other parts of the Dominion, and on that account it did not consider the general terms offered for its entrance to confederation satisfactory ; and the same reasons held so far as Prince Edward Island was concerned. Since 1867 large additions have been made to the area of the Dominion of Canada by the admission of Prince Edward Island, British Columbia, Manitoba and the North-west Territories. All these additions have been accomplished by the great Liberal-Conservative party, perhaps as a matter of incident. And now the Liberal party have an opportunity of sharing in the glory of adding a great many more square miles to the area of this great Dominion, and it is to be hoped that they will be equal to the occasion. At present the Dominion has on its hands a troublesome question in regard to the seal fisheries of the west, arising from the fact that Alaska, which should have been a part of Canada, is now a part of the United States of America. If there is anything which I think the members of this House and the people of Canada regret, it is that the Liberal-Conservative party did not forestall the United States by taking measures to have Alaska become a part of the Dominion of Canada. If that had been done, we would not to-day have this troublesome seal fishery question on the west ; and I think it behooves the Dominion and Great Britain to see that while they have a fishery trouble on the west, they do not have another fishery trouble on the east. We know that Newfoundland is anxious to-day to secure better trade relations with the United States, and if it succeeds in accomplishing that object, the United States may secure in Newfoundland a footing and privileges which will greatly embarrass Canada. In view of that circumstance, I think the great importance of this question can not be overlooked by this Parliament. A troublesome fishery question on the east and an equally troublesome fishery question on the west may involve not only Canada but Great Britain in very serious difficulties ; and therefore I think this question demands very serious consideration at the hands of this Parliament. Not many years ago we had Newfoundland seeking a treaty with the United States, which hon. members will remember very well as the Bond-Blaine Treaty. The carrying out of that treaty was very nearly getting Canada into trouble, and Canada may have some more trouble of the same kind, as I understand that Newfoundland is now again seeking better trade relations with the United States, and Canada's interests may conflict with those of Newfoundland. We have in Newfoundland the nearest British colony to Canada, and for that reason we should treat that province friendly and well. I do not by any means say that Canada has not always treated Newfoundland well, but I say that we should extend to her still more friendly relations. In the preferential clauses of the present tariff, I am sorry that a little more consideration has not been given to the interests of Newfoundland. Besides being near to us, Newfoundland is a province from which we import very largely and to which we export very largely to-day; but I am afraid that these preferential or differential duties in the present tariff are not favourable to her. I would not be astonished if under that tariff, Belgium, Germany, France and other European countries should have more friendly terms extended to them without giving Canada any favours in return than the colony of Newfoundland. I do not think that should be so. Newfoundland being the nearest colony to Canada, and being a good customer of Canada, its fish now coming into Canada free, we should go a step further. I do not think that Canada would lose a great deal if we admitted the products of Newfoundland free altogether. If you will look, Sir, over the Trade and Navigation Returns, you will find that the duty collected from Newfoundland is not more than a couple of thousand dollars a year; and hence I think it would be a generous move, a move in the right direction, and a move that would bind Newfoundland's interests with ours, if we opened the ports of Canada free to the products of that country. I have a few figures which I will read to the House regarding the trade of Newfoundland with the Dominion, and vice versa, as well as the trade of Newfoundland with the rest of the world.

The imports of Canada from Newfoundland in the year ending 30th June, 1896, were as follows:—

Dutiable goods.....	$ 3,536
Free goods.....	547,876
Total.....	$551,412

Duty collected.....$1,197.81

The principal items of these imports were the following:—

	Value.
*Scrap iron.....	$ 835
Firearms	280
Whalebone	200
Fish—
Cod, haddock, pollock, fresh.....	92
do do dry or salted....	364,988
do do not salted.....	575
Herring, fresh.....	13,068
do pickled	43,532
Salmon, fresh.....	25,164
do pickled	31,900
Fish oil.....	22,220
	$502,855

*Duty $343.00. Free.

Mr. MARTIN.

Thus, our total imports from Newfoundland amounted to $551,412, over $500,000 of which consisted of fish and fish oil.

Now, turning to the exports, I find that in the year ending 30th June, 1896, Canada exported to Newfoundland as follows:—

	Produce of Canada.	Not the Produce of Canada.
Ontario	$ 106,318	$ 371
Quebec	606,109	202,352
Nova Scotia.....	580,109	119,752
New Brunswick.....	10,084
Prince Edward Island.....	156,311	39
	$1,459,765	$322,544

making a total export of $1,782,309. That, I think, is a trade well worthy the attention of the people of Canada. Let me, Mr. Speaker, draw the attention of the House to the export trade which Canada does with some other countries. Canada exported as follows in the year ending 30th June, 1896:—

	Produce of Canada.	Not the Produce of Canada.	Total.
	$	$	$
Great Britain.....	62,717,941	3,971,312	66,689,253
Australia.....	515,697	1,561	517,258
British West Indies..	1,627,388	33,412	1,660,800
France.....	573,835	7,705	581,541
Germany.....	606,919	150,612	757,531
United States.....	34,460,428	1,960,740	36,421,168
Spanish West Indies.	980,589	10,826	989,415
Argentine Republic..	431,097	431,097

From this list you will see that Newfoundland is the fourth best customer that Canada has. First comes Great Britain, then the United States, third the West Indies, and fourth Newfoundland, and she is a good fourth, because she buys from us very nearly as much as do the West Indies. I might point out the various sources in Canada which furnish these exports and the amount from each:

The Mines.....	$183,080
Fisheries	4,013
Forest	28,557
Animals	233,866
Agriculture	484,500
Manufactures	524,869
Miscellaneous	580

That shows clearly that Newfoundland is a country our trade with which it is very desirable to encourage, and I think there is no doubt our Parliament can take steps in this direction. These exports are further classified as follows:—

869,458. To show how the trade varies I will quote the figures for 1894, which were as follows:—Exports, $5,811,169; imports, $7,164,738. Now, while the exports are largely to foreign countries, Newfoundland confines her purchases principally to Great Britain and Canada, influenced, I suppose, by patriotism and the attachment of the colony to British institutions. I have not the figures for a late year, but I will give some of the statistics of the trade of Newfoundland for 1891, showing the exports to and imports from various countries:

	N'f'd Exp'd to.	N'f'd Imp'd from.
Portugal.....	$1,051,830	$ 37,000
Germany.....	23,429	Nil.
Spain.....	718,047	194,708

I might continue those statistics as they refer to other countries but I will only summarize the effect of these figures, which is that of the total imports of Newfoundland, more than one-half is from Great Britain and Canada, while Great Britain and Canada do not take one-third of the exports of Newfoundland. The statistical tables for 1894 show the trend of the trade of Newfoundland to be in the same direction—Newfoundland selling largely to foreign countries, while buying mainly from Great Britain and Canada. The facts and figures I have quoted will give the House a pretty fair idea of the trade of this country with Newfoundland. It is a trade worthy of the attention of this House.

There is no British province, I suppose, that has had a more checkered history than Newfoundland. Its allegiance to the Crown and to British institutions under many unfavourable circumstances is worthy of our admiration. Over 300 years ago the importance of the Newfoundland fisheries was known to Great Britain: and Britain's increasing navy, recruited from the hardy toilers of the sea yearly, and returned with crafts laden with fish. I suppose hon. members are aware that early treaties made by England bore heavily upon the interests and industries of Newfoundland. One of these has given rise to what is known as the French shore difficulty, which has severely tested the allegiance of Newfoundland to Great Britain. But through all the strife on that question, the people of Newfoundland have shown great patience. They have been met in France by a system of bounties which bore very heavily upon their exports. And this is true not only of France, but of other European countries. We have to-day, if my memory serves me right, trouble in that respect in the case of Portugal, that country having placed differential duties on fish coming from Newfoundland as against Denmark.

It has been said—I have heard it said myself—that before we should admit Newfoundland into the Canadian confedera-

From this list hon. members will see that the trade of Newfoundland is well worth the attention of this country. Its imports vary a great deal from year to year, and in the year which I have just quoted, 1896, the figures are not by any means the largest. In 1891 the exports of Newfoundland were $7,437,128, while the exports were $6, ation, it would be well to have these questions settled. But I do not think that would be a very magnanimous stand for Canada to take. I think that Canada should extend a helping hand to Newfoundland to settle these questions which hinder her progress, as I have shown.

With the consent of the House, I will read a few extracts from the excellent history of Judge Prowse, which bear out some of the statements I have made in regard to that ancient colony :

Both from an imperial and colonial point, the union of the British North American colonies is a consummation devoutly to be wished ; it is all a question of terms. There are, however, some objections to union. Since the death of the great Sir John A. Macdonald, there is no statesman in Canada strong enough to guarantee us such terms as we would accept.

This was written a few years ago.

The Dominion is a fish producer and not a fish consumer ; our business relations and our future markets lie with the United States ; the customers and consumers of our inexhaustible fisheries are the 63,000,000 Americans. Canada's latest move on the Blaine-Bond convention has alienated the feeling of many Newfoundlanders who were formerly confederates.

On page 541, Mr. Prowse writes as follows :—

On the 27th of February, a message had been sent by Sir T. N. O'Brien to the Governor General of Canada on the question of re-opening negotiations for union between the two colonies ; a favourable reply having been received, the delegates were appointed on the 17th of March ; and on the 4th of April, Honourables R. Bond, E. P. Morris, Geo. H. Emerson and W. H. Horwood, the representatives of Newfoundland, met the Dominion delegates in conference at Ottawa. After many protracted sessions negotiations were finally broken off, the Dominion Government refused to accede to the only honourable terms which the Newfoundland delegates could venture to propose for the acceptance of the colony. The main difficulty was the refusal of Canada to take over the whole debt of the colony.

At this page Judge Prowse has a note at the bottom, regarding a speech delivered by Sir Charles Tupper, which I think, with the permission of the House, I will read

Regarding the admission of Newfoundland as a member of confederation, Sir Charles said he had always attached great importance, and had told Sir John Macdonald when the question first came up, that the rounding off of the confederation by its entrance, was an all-important one. He did not for a moment wish that the island should be brought into confederation unless it be accomplished on terms that would substantially benefit the people of Newfoundland. He believed that union would contribute to the happiness and well-being of that people. He had no desire to see them enter the confederation except with their hearty concurrence, and he deeply regretted the collapse of the recent negotiations. He was vain enough to think that if he had been consulted earlier in those negotiations, the result would have been different. The stumbling block in the recent negotiations was the financial question—the refusal of the Imperial Government to contribute $5,000,000 towards the colony's indebtedness. Lord Ripon consulted him (Sir Charles), but it was a case of locking the stable door after the horse has been stolen. Lord Ripon pointed out that it was utterly impossible for the Home Government to give the desired aid to Newfoundland because it would create a dangerous precedent, and similar aid could not be given to other colonies in similar financial difficulties. But Sir Charles pointed out to Lord Ripon the peculiar circumstances which surrounded this case, inasmuch as under the old French treaty, Newfoundland had suffered most severely, and that about 600 miles of its coast line was practically in the possession of a foreign power. He also pointed out the difficulty of making France believe that a little island of 200,000 people could override the wish of the Imperial Government. The matter would be entirely different, however, were Newfoundland a portion of half a continent with five millions of a population, and were Newfoundland a portion of the great confederation, the question could be settled without much inconvenience. Equally strong reasons for Imperial assistance could not be given by any other colony.

I find also a paragraph here which may be of some interest to the House, and which I will read :

The consolidation of British North America is an Imperial as well as a colonial question ; it was unfortunate that at this particular juncture of affairs both Canada and Newfoundland had to deal with a moribund Liberal Government in England. Had the present enlightened chief of the Colonial Office been at the head of affairs with his large views of Imperial confederation, Mr. Chamberlain would not have allowed such a favourable opportunity to unite British North America to elude his grasp. All the elder statesmen of Canada have repeatedly declared that the Atlantic terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway should be in Newfoundland. In these negotiations the railway across our island should have been considered as part of the great Imperial highway, a Dominion, not a local road. After the Trent affair, the Intercolonial Railway was built through Canadian territory entirely for strategic and Imperial purposes. The Canadian Pacific Railway is used for Imperial purposes to transport the Imperial forces over English territory to the Pacific. By the completion of the Newfoundland route, English naval and military forces could be landed at Montreal under five days from Plymouth. By fast transports like the "Campania" or "Teutonic," they could be placed on English territory in America in three and one-half days' steaming from Plymouth. Warlike operations in modern days are swift and sudden, and the advantages to England and to Canada of possessing the quickest route across the Atlantic and through their own territory are simply incalculable in case of war. In the two last conflicts between England and America, Newfoundland was the headquarters of the North American squadron. As many as thirty-two British men-of-war were at one time in St. John's harbour. With abundant coal supply, splendid harbours on her east coast, an English naval force operating from St. John's or Trepassy, commands within easy range not only the Gulf of St. Lawrence but of the whole trade of the Atlantic. St. Johns and Cape Race are the most important strategic points in North America. Newfoundland is the advanced outpost, the guardian and sentinel of Canada. This was Sir John Macdonald's strongly expressed opinion, every naval expert will endorse the view. Our country will be a great outlet for Canadian trade, but to connect the two countries, to make commerce flourish, to promote traffic between the Dominion and Newfoundland, to unite them in real union, the railway to Port-aux-Basque, and the steam ferry across the gulf, are absolutely essential. The connection between the two countries cannot be made either complete or profitable without those new lines of communication.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that these lines are about to be established, and when that is done I hope that one of the obstacles against the union will disappear. It will be noticed that one of the obstacles that was pointed out in coming to a conclusion in regard to a union with Canada, was that Newfoundland did not find a sufficient outlet in Canada for her exports, though Newfoundland bought largely from the Dominion. I think anything that can be done to-day by this great Dominion in order to remedy that state of affairs, will be a step in the right direction. The great provinces of the west send down to the maritime provinces, out of the wealth of their soil, their coarse grains, their wheat, and their flour; but the maritime provinces and Newfoundland have nothing to give in return except money. Newfoundland, in considering this question of confederation, remembers that the United States is a larger purchaser of her goods than we are. Now, the question for us, I think, is how to remove those barriers to trade. Large expenditures have been made by the Dominion on railways and canals by which to send the produce of the great west down to the east and across the Atlantic; but nothing has been yet done, so far as I know, to bring the produce of the east, consisting principally of fish, back into the west.

It appears to me that if the obstacles were removed, and if facilities were given for the transmission of the products of Newfoundland and the maritime provinces into the heart of this great country—and one way of accomplishing that is by providing cold storage on trains from the east—a valuable trade could be established. I do not think, considering the great importance of doing something that would induce the people of Newfoundland to look with a more friendly eye on Canada, it would be an excessive expenditure to make, so that by means of cold storage on cars going from the east the ocean wealth of the maritime provinces and Newfoundland could be transmitted into the western portion of this Dominion. I have here a statement which goes to show that this Dominion depends to a very large extent on the republic to the south for its supply of fresh fish. This state of affairs, in view of the fact that Canada possesses the most valuable fisheries of the world with which those of the United States cannot compare, is not creditable to this Dominion. The Americans come into our waters, take our fish, return to their own country, and re-ship them to the people of Canada. This, I say, is not creditable to the enterprise of Canadians, or to this Parliament, which should seek to adopt means whereby our fish would be transported to the people of the west. If this step were taken, not only would the maritime provinces be placed in a better position, but an inducement would be offered to Newfoundland to throw in its lot with the Dominion. There is another step that might be taken in connection with this. We are aware that the great agricultural products of Canada have been protected, and in doing so the late Government acted in the interests of the farmers of this country. There has been no legislation within the last five or six years that has done more to benefit the farmers of the Dominion than the protection extended them in the form of increased duties on agricultural products imported into this Dominion. But while protection has been given to the farmer, little protection has been extended to the fisherman. There may be some good reason for this, it may be possible to offer some good explanation; but I am not discussing the reason at the present time. While there is a protective duty of 2 cents per pound on pork, and I think that duty very beneficial to the farmers of all sections of Canada, the duty on mackerel is only 1 cent per pound. The existing duties on fish are as follows:—

Mackerel, one cent per pound.

Herrings, pickled or salted, one-half cent per pound.

Salmon, fresh, n.e.s., one-half cent per pound.

Salmon, pickled or salted, 1 cent per pound.

All other fish, pickled or salted, in barrels, one cent per pound.

Foreign caught fish, imported otherwise than in barrels, whether fresh, dried, salted or pickled, n.e.s., fifty cents per hundred pounds.

Fish, smoked and boneless, one cent per pound.

I do not know whether any measures could be taken to protect the Canadian market for the Canadian fishermen. I am only stating these facts, and leaving them for the consideration of hon. members. The item of imports of fish from the United States, amounting to the value of $386,942 in 1896, is a very large one, in view of the fact that Canada possesses the most valuable fisheries in the world, and has not only the fisheries, but the men and the enterprise to develop them. The following is a statement of the imports of fish into Canada from the United States for the year ending June 30th, 1896:—

Now, Sir, those figures show that this is trade in the wrong direction. No such large items should be found in our Trade and Navigation Returns for fish imported from a country which has not fishing grounds as wealthy, as extensive, and as fruitful as those of this great Dominion. I know that the feeling between Newfoundland and Canada is good, but I think that it could be improved: and in view of the small amount of duty we collect on Newfoundland imports, I do not think it would be asking too much, if all Newfoundland products brought into Canada were placed on the free list. It would only involve a loss of a couple of thousand dollars a year to our revenue, and it would tend greatly to establish a still more cordial feeling between Newfoundland and Canada. I believe also that if cold storage could be provided on railway cars, so as to allow fresh fish to be brought into the interior of our country, Newfoundland would find in Canada a market for her fish which might in a few years be as profitable as that which she now finds in the country to the south of us. It is well worth the while of Canada trying to-day, to see if she cannot win Newfoundland back. If Newfoundland makes a treaty with the United States, we may possibly see the ancient colony drifting further away from us. I trust that some measures will be taken to show that Canada is disposed to do everything that lies in her power to bind Newfoundland in closer union with us, both in commercial and in political respects. I move this motion, seconded by Mr. Macdonald (P.E.I.)

Motion agreed to.

BELLE RIVER BREAKWATER, P.E.I.

Mr. MARTIN moved for :

Copies of all correspondence, telegrams, engineers' reports, &c., relating to the extension of the breakwater at Belle River, in Prince Edward Island.

He said : Mr. Speaker, my remarks on this question will be very brief, and I think I will be able to conclude before 6 o'clock. Last year I brought this to the attention of the House and of the Government. I was told then by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies), that engineers would be sent down and that he hoped some progress would be made. I think the Minister should take energetic action, considering the peculiar position of Prince Edward Island, which is such that the products of the island have to be shipped away in the short space of a month or two, and consequently they want good shipping accommodation. There is no other part of Canada that is so situated as Prince Edward Island in this respect. The shipping season extends principally for only one or two months in the spring and fall, and if the shipping is not attended to then it entails a heavy loss on the producer. When December comes, if the products of the island are not shipped, they have to remain there all winter. It is necessary, therefore, that shipping accommodation should be of the amplest kind, in order that the farmers may be enabled to send their products to the market. This work that I ask for would not involve a very large expenditure, and I trust that it will not be delayed this year again. I hope to have the favourable consideration of the Government. It being now 6 o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude.

Motion agreed to.

LANGENBURG AND SOUTHERN RAILWAY.

Bill (No. 51) respecting the Langenburg and Southern Railway Company was read the third time.

Mr. BAIN (for Mr. Richardson) moved that the Bill do now pass.

Mr. LISTER. There are some amendments to this Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is it proposed to refer the Bill back to the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. LISTER. Yes. The Minister of Railways gave notice of some amendments.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member should have moved to refer the Bill back, on the motion for the third reading. With the unanimous consent of the House, however, the proceedings may stand as if this order had not been called.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Perhaps, with the unanimous consent of the House, the first three Bills, which are in the same position, might stand for the present and be taken up when the Minister of Railways comes in.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). That is a good suggestion.

Mr. SPEAKER. They may be passed over at present, and we will consider going back to them further on.

WINNIPEG, DULUTH AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY.

Bill (No. 17) to incorporate the Winnipeg, Duluth and Hudson Bay Railway Company was considered in committee and reported.

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk) moved that the Bill be now read the third time.

Mr. CRAIG. Should not this Bill stand for amendment in the same way as the other Bills?

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). No notice has been given of any amendment to this Bill.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The amendment proposed by the Minister of Railways was to be general in its application.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I was under the impression that as to all the Bills which had passed the committee which were without the amendment of which I have given notice, that I gave the necessary notice in order that on the motion for their third reading, the Bills might be re-committed, and that the amendment, if agreeable to the House, might be added.

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). I understand that a clause in the line of the amendment of the hon. Minister of Railways was added in the committee.

Mr. HUGHES. It would be a simple matter for the Minister of Railways to see whether or not that Bill has the amendment or not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is in the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the Bill carried?

Mr. SPEAKER. The third reading is carried. The next stage is that the Bill do now pass.

Mr. FOSTER. You had better simply take the regular stage.

Mr. SPEAKER. The amendment concerning which the question was raised is in the Bill, so there is no one raising a substantial objection, unless the hon. gentleman wishes to raise the point of order as to the third reading.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, it might stand over to another day.

Mr. SPEAKER. Then the third reading will stand over.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Would it be in order, Mr. Speaker, to go back to—

Mr. SPEAKER. No, we must go on with the paper as it is.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 83) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of the Mycenian Marble Company of Canada (Limited).—(Mr. Rosamond.)

(In Committee.)

Bill (No. 68) respecting the American Bank Note Company.—(Mr. Belcourt.)

Bill (No. 19) respecting the Manitoba and South-Eastern Railway Company.—(Mr. Landerkin.)

Bill (No. 49) respecting the Richelieu and Lake Memphremagog Railway Company.—(Mr. Belcourt.)

Bill (No. 55) to incorporate the Minden and North-western Railway Company.—(Mr. McHugh.)

Bill (No. 58) respecting the Temiscouata Railway Company.—(Mr. Domville.)

Bill (No. 71) respecting the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway Company.—(Mr. Bergeron.)

Bill (No. 73) to incorporate the Kaslo and Lardo-Duncan Railway.—(Mr. Bostock.)

RESTIGOUCHE AND VICTORIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton) moved second reading of Bill (No. 99) respecting the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company. He said: A charter was obtained some years ago in Nova Scotia and has been renewed from time to time. It carried a subsidy from the local government of $2,500 a mile. The company also had the promise of a subsidy of $3,200 a mile from this House, which was also renewed in 1894. The reason we come here for a charter is because we are going out of the province of New Brunswick into the province of Quebec, and it is very well known that in order to finance a railway successfully, we must have a Dominion charter rather than a local charter. For these reasons, we come to this House and ask for a Dominion charter which will enable us to finish the road in a substantial manner. If the hon. gentlemen who blocked the Bill the other night simply because the letter E was not at the end, wish to discuss the matter, I think their best plan would be to discuss it in committee, where all parties interested, including those who have paid their money without realizing what they expected, can appear before the committee and give explanations. I trust that the Minister of Railways and Canals will see that this Bill goes through this reading and is submitted to the Railway Committee, where hon. gentlemen who are opposing it will have every opportunity of giving their reasons for opposing a road which goes through their own province. It seems to me a very strange thing that hon. gentlemen, who should be surely interested in that section of the country, should be opposed to a Bill of this kind. I will not detain the House any further at present, but after the Bill gets a second reading, if further opposition should be offered to it, I may be called upon to offer some explanation in the shape of some ancient history that may not be perhaps as satisfactory to the hon. gentlemen as they expect. I therefore leave the matter in the hands of the Minister of Railways and Canals for the present.

Mr. COSTIGAN. My objections to this Bill are not based merely upon technical grounds, but they are of a very much more serious character. I object to the Bill because it had no right to be introduced into this Parliament. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by stating that if I oppose this Bill, along with some other gentlemen from my province, he will be obliged to make statements not very pleasant for us; I may learn later; but in the meantime I do what I consider to be my duty, and that is to declare that this is the first time that I have ever known a Bill of this kind to be introduced into this Parliament. The history that I can give of the transaction, without going into the difficulties between the two companies, is simply this: That some years ago a company obtained a charter from the province of New Brunswick to build a road from Campbellton in New Brunswick, to a point in Victoria or Madawaska, also in New Brunswick. That company made a contract with certain individuals to construct the road, that contract had the approval of the provincial government at the time that it was entered into, but the contractors, as I understand, failed to carry that contract out. With that I have nothing to do. At the last session of the legislature of New Brunswick, that legislature, exercising its perfect right to legislate upon railways within its own province, granted a new charter, the old charter has since expired. It granted a new charter to another company, or set of men. That charter is in existence. That new company negotiated with contractors to construct the road, and the parties who had the contract from the original company, finding that on account of their failure to carry out their contract the New Brunswick legislature passed another charter, come here and ask this Parliament to step in and override the legislation of New Brunswick. I say this Parliament has nothing to do with that, it should not interfere with the local Bill. That is the ground that I take upon this measure, not because it was not printed in English and French—if it was printed in seven different languages it should not come here at all. Therefore, I oppose this Bill for the reasons that I give, that the New Brunswick legislature has passed a charter, has passed two charters, one overriding the other; and as to whether they did right or wrong in that I will not say. I am not called upon to defend the action of the New Brunswick legislature. The hon. gentleman states that we should pass a charter here because this road goes into Quebec. Well, the road begins at Campbellton, and instead of running into Quebec, it runs for a hundred miles away from Quebec until it reaches the county of Victoria. The whole line is entirely within the province of New Brunswick. There is another Bill to follow later on, providing for the construction of a bridge across the Restigouche River to connect this road later on with the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. But that is another enterprise entirely, and can be dealt with by itself. Now the ground I take is that there is already a charter from the province of New Brunswick for the construction of that road, this Parliament is asked to step in and give a Dominion charter to one set of men which will block the New Brunswick legislature from going on with this work. I do not think this Parliament should entertain that proposal.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton).

Mr. LISTER. Let it go to the committee.

Mr. McALISTER. The explanation given by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) who is promoting this Bill, as one of the reasons for asking for Dominion legislation, was that the road was going down into the province of Quebec. Now, the Bill does not say that the road is extended at all. As has been stated by my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, it starts from a point at or near Campbellton on the Intercolonial Railway, and goes westward to a point on the St. John River at or near Grand Falls. This Bill does not ask to extend the road at all, it merely asks to confirm the old charter, so that it may be declared a work for the general advantage of Canada, and to extend the time for commencing the survey and for the completion of the work. Therefore, that part of the explanation of the hon. member for Hamilton is incorrect; I believe the hon. gentleman has stated what he thinks to be correct, but his information is not correct. But there is one reference that the hon. gentleman made that surprised me very much, and that was that if we continued to oppose this Bill, statements of an unpleasant character to us would be made. I defy the hon. member from Hamilton or any other person to make any statements that will be unpleasant to us so far as this road is concerned. That undertaking all through, from beginning to end, so far as we are concerned, and so far as the parties for whom we are acting are concerned, has been straightforward and above-board, everything has been straight and honourable. As to making statements of an unpleasant character, we can make statements of an unpleasant character to the parties to this Bill. A charter was passed in 1885 by the legislature of New Brunswick, to build a road called the Restigouche and Victoria Railroad. A preliminary survey was made in the fall of the same year the charter was granted. Nothing more was done until 1894, when this was amended extending the work. That fall some 15 miles of road were surveyed. In the fall of 1895 this charter was transferred to a company with the distinct understanding that they were to commence work at once and build the road. In the winter of 1896, when the Minister of Railways and Canals was the leader of the New Brunswick Government, an application was made for a further amendment, practically to confirm the transfer that had been made, and giving the company power to mortgage the road and power with regard to the issuing of stock. Now we find that the amendment of 1894 provides that :

In order to entitle the said company to the privileges of their said charter, the necessary surveys of the contemplated line from a point on the Intercolonial Railway, in the parish of Addington, at or near Campbellton, in the county of Restigouche, to a point on the St. John River, in either of the counties of Victoria or Madawaska, should be made within three years, and the construction of the said line commenced within six years from the passing of this Act, and the construction bona fide continued from year to year, so that the whole may be completed within ten years from the passing of this Act.

The whole line must be surveyed and completed within three years. That provision was made on 21st April, 1894; accordingly the three years expired on 21st April, 1897. That charter has therefore lapsed. There is no such company as the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company in existence now, and to pass the legislation now proposed will not revive the charter. The notice merely asks Parliament to declare that this work is for the general advantage of Canada, and to extend the time for surveys in connection with the work. It is plain that the charter is dead, and the present Bill does not revive it, and therefore it is not competent for the House to extend the time for declaring the work to be one for the general benefit of Canada when the company is no longer in existence. The Act of 1896 does not revive it. The Act of 1896 merely confers certain powers on the company; that is, it merely ratifies the transfer that was made in the fall of 1895, and confers certain powers on the company as to the issuing of stock and mortgaging the road and nothing more. There is nothing said as to the extension of time. In the spring of 1896, the company to whom this charter was transferred began to survey the road. They put on a staff of engineers to carry out the surveys. They completed twenty or twenty-five miles. For the first month they paid all their bills, the total amounting to about $2,700. The bills now remaining unpaid amount to upwards of $4,000 or $5,000 for wages, &c. The labouring men are not paid, parties who furnished supplies are not paid, and also those who boarded the engineers and staff. These bills being unpaid, the result was that the work had to be stopped, and the company fell into disrepute. In February, application was made to the local legislature for a new charter. When the facts were made known a new charter was granted to this new company in March. That company is composed of men belonging to the locality who have an interest in the construction of the road and who intend to go on with the work. They entered into an agreement not long ago with Malcolm & Ross to build the railway. These men are well known to the people of New Brunswick and also to the people of Eastern Quebec, and every person who knows them believes they will carry out any work they undertake. If the legislation now asked for is passed by this Parliament, it will interfere with a bona fide company which will carry out the work successfully. Who are the men composing the company referred to in the present Bill? They are men who live outside the county and province. The notice asks merely that Parliament shall declare this work to be one for the general advantage of Canada, and the Bill sets out the same. It is not, therefore, within the province of this Parliament to pass this Bill. When the facts are made known to the House, I am satisfied it will not allow the Bill to be further proceeded with. The technical objections are valid, and moreover the circumstances are such as to justify the House in preventing the Bill being further proceeded with.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I am not altogether unacquainted with the early history of the legislation referred to here, and which it is proposed by this Bill to revive by this Parliament; and from what I know I think it would scarcely be the duty of this House to refuse to allow the Bill to pass the second reading and subsequently be discussed by the Railway Committee. It is scarcely a convenient form, or a very usual way in which to consider the objections to the Bill, to have them stated and discussed on the motion for the second reading, particularly where the matters alleged are of a controversial character. From what knowledge I have of this legislation, so far as it affects the provincial legislature of New Brunswick, there is no very grave reason to blame the conduct either of those who are behind this Bill or those who moved for the new Bill, which I understand passed the legislature of New Brunswick at its last session. I am well satisfied that neither one nor the other of those two companies, if both should be incorporated, would be able to carry out the work unless they received assistance at least from the Federal Government, and I judge also from the Provincial Government—in fact, I think the assistance of both Governments would be absolutely required. If both Bills should become law, the one recently passed by the provincial legislature of New Brunswick and this Bill now under consideration, it would rest with the Governments interested to determine, upon inquiry as to all the facts, to which company, if either company, aid should be given. I would not like to undertake to determine the question now, as to what would be the practical effect if we refused to allow the Bill to pass the second reading. There are reasons why, on the face of it, it would be the proper course to pass this Bill. In the first place, it contained the declaration that this work is one for the general advantage of Canada. But there are beyond that reason one or two important facts, to which I would call the attention of hon. members who have objected to the passing of the Bill, and the force of which they will perhaps recognize. It will be seen by reference to the fourth clause that it is proposed to construct this road to a point on the Intercolonial Railway. Another clause authorizes the company to make connections with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, I think it is an admitted fact, that a railway cannot be connecting with the Intercolonial Railway, without at once thereby divesting the provincial legislature of any jurisdiction over the undertaking, and at once conferring upon the general Parliament the power to legislate in respect to it. I am given to understand, that it is the view entertained by some professional gentlemen, that when it appears upon the face of a Bill, that a company is being incorporated to connect with the Intercolonial Railway, that it is extremely doubtful whether a provincial legislature is competent to pass it. To say the least of it, there would be doubt as to whether that view is not sound.

Mr. McALISTER. Nearly all the branch lines under the New Brunswick Government connect with the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That does not alter the case. The law is quite clear, that the moment you connect any of these railways in the province with the Intercolonial Railway, that very moment, by virtue of that connection—

Mr. POWELL. This railway does not propose to make a connection at all. It simply gives you a terminus ad quo.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. member on examining into the clause, will find he is in error, because it says, the line is to be constructed from a point on the Intercolonial Railway, and the next clause refers to this connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, under the law constitutes a work for the general advantage of Canada, and when a provincial legislature is asked to make such a connection, or when it is asked to incorporate a road the object of which is to connect with the Intercolonial Railway; it is certainly a very doubtful question, at least, as to whether any other Parliament can so legislate except the Parliament of Canada. These are reasons which appear to me to justify the House, in not withholding its assent from this motion to allow the Bill to go to the Railway Committee, where I am satisfied, it will be dealt with upon its merits, and where any objections which hon. gentleman may have against its passage, will be fully discussed and determined. I would recommend these gentlemen who are adverse to the passing of the Bill, to allow it to take this course now, because if they are interested in the successful prosecution of this work, and if they desire to have a railway constructed as laid down here, they will certainly not further the undertaking in any respect by placing unnecessary obstacles in the way of this legislation. Though this Bill should pass, it will be open to the Government of New Brunswick, and it will be open to the Government of Canada, and those charged with the duty in connection with those two Governments, to consider the question in all its bearings, and to determine which of the two companies, should, in the public interest, have a subsidy given it, and receive the aid which Parliament may grant.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. POWELL. Would the hon. Minister (Mr. Blair) state what section of the Bill, proposes connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Section 10.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. Minister will pardon me for saying, that I think he is entirely at sea so far as clause 10 is concerned. Clause 10 does not authorize any connection with these roads at all. It simply authorizes this company to enter into an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the lease of the road. It does not authorize a physical connection between the two railways at all. It simply authorizes one company to make an arrangement with the other as to the leasing or sale of the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman well knows, that this road is proposed to start from a point on the Intercolonial Railway. It is proposed to go to Edmunston a point reached by the Canadian Pacific Railway. The whole purpose and object is to make a connection between these two roads, and although the language of the section is, that this company may enter into an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway, it is only for the purpose of running, but unquestionably for the purpose of operating it as a part of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. POWELL. I understood the Minister of Railways to say, that one reason why this Bill should be placed before this Parliament is that on the face of it it showed itself clearly to be within the jurisdiction of this Parliament and possibly beyond the jurisdiction of the New Brunswick legislature. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) is going to place before this House extraneous facts which do not appear on the face of the Bill, to show this Parliament has jurisdiction, then he is shifting his ground. So far as the connection between the two companies is concerned, there is no more reason appearing in the Bill to bring it within the jurisdiction of this Parliament, than if the Bill authorized the particular company which is being incorporated to make a business arrangement with the Canada Atlantic, for the running of the road. It is not necessary, as I understand, to make connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway or Intercolonial Railway. One railway may be a terminus a quo and another a terminus ad quam, but it is not necessary that the road should have, what we ordinarily understand as a railway connection with either—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Do I understand the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) to take the position, that a charter which has been granted by the legislature of the province of New Brunswick at its last session, should be overridden and nullified by a charter to be passed in this House? I thought the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) and his colleagues were champions of provincial rights, but this appears to me to be trampling provincial rights under foot. If the legislature of a province goes beyond its powers in passing legislation of this kind, then the constitution provides that such a measure should be dealt with in a particular way, but this is not the way. The constitution provides, that if a provincial legislature passes an Act which is ultra vires, then the Government of Canada have the right to withhold assent from that Bill when it comes before them, on the ground, that the legislature has transgressed its power. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair), who but yesterday was the Prime Minister of New Brunswick, does not intend to ask this House to use its powers to override an Act of the legislature of his own province. The moment that anything so extreme as that is done, the powers which the constitution concedes to provincial legislatures is altogether nullified. It is practically useless for the provinces to undertake to give effect to their legislation, if friends and supporters of an hon. member of this Government can be induced to trample provincial rights under foot, and to override the Acts of provincial legislatures, by legislation in this Parliament. I regret very much that I was not able to be present when this discussion commenced, but I am told by my hon. friends on this side of the House that this is the position: That the legislature of New Brunswick at its last session passed a Bill to accomplish the construction of a certain work, that that Bill has been assented to and is now law; and that it is now proposed to nullify that provincial law by the Bill now before this House. If the legislature of New Brunswick has exceeded its powers, then the Minister of Railways and his colleagues have their remedy, by disallowing the local Act. But, if on the other hand, the provincial legislature has not exceeded any rights, then it appears to me that there could be no more monstrous invasion of the rights of a province—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh!

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I say advisedly, that in my judgment there could be no more extreme invasion of the rights of a province, than that when a legislature having passed a Bill which it considered necessary; other parties—not the parties connected with the provincial measure—but that other parties, members of this House of Commons, should promote a measure like this and succeed in getting the Minister of Railways to take it under his powerful patronage. The hon. gentleman occupies a position of great influence and of great power, and I may tell him that though it is well to have the powers of a giant, it is not always well to use the powers of a giant. The hon. gentleman, as Minister of Railways and Canals, controls one of the most important departments in the public service. Only a short time ago he was the Premier of the province of New Brunswick, and he is supporting the leader of this Government, who has taken the strongest possible ground in defence of provincial rights, and against their being overridden by any legislation of this Parliament. I appeal to that hon. gentleman and ask him if he is prepared to reverse the position that he has taken so strongly on this question, and lend his countenance and support and the aid of his Government to a measure that is brought here for the purpose of overriding the legislation of the province of New Brunswick.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Speaker, if I might be permitted to say just one word in answer to the statements the hon. member has made, I would say that if he understood that I was proposing to trample under foot the legislation of the legislature of New Brunswick, he is capable of reaching a very large conclusion upon very slight data indeed. How the hon. gentleman could have listened to what I stated in respect to this matter and have drawn such an inference from it, passes my comprehension entirely. I said nothing which would justify any person who is disposed to exercise a reasonable judgment, or who is disposed to allow his faculties to guide him, in coming to any such conclusion. I stated to the House that I was satisfied that it would be a desirable thing, rather than continue a controversy here over this question, that the Bill should go to the Railway Committee. As to the course the Railway Committee ought to take, or as to what view I might put before the Railway Committee as my view, after hearing all that is to be said on the subject, I ventured to give no information; and, as for trampling under foot the legislature of the province, the hon. gentleman is evidently talking about something he knows nothing about. It would be well for the hon. gentleman to be in the House and hear what is said before telling me what course I should pursue or before taking me under his august patronage. I am deeply indebted to the hon. gentleman for his consideration for me under the circumstances, and I can assure him that I shall be just as solicitous about the interests of the local legislatures in my legislative course in this Parliament as he has been. There have been two charters granted by the legislature of New Brunswick. That legislature had a perfect right to grant a dozen charters if it saw fit to do so. It granted one several years ago, and a considerable amount of money was expended in connection with that first charter. There was delay, I am satisfied. Perhaps the delay was such as to disentitle the people incorporated to any further consideration. But the charter has not become extinct; that is my opinion from what I know about the matter—that the charter is still in existence as a valid provincial charter. In fact, there are two charters. Perhaps the hon. gentleman suggests that I propose to trample both charters under foot. I do not propose to trample either. This Bill, which has been introduced by the hon. gentleman, I am not proposing to take under my special charge. I knew very little about it until the hon. gentleman came to me and explained it. I am not proposing to take it under my charge; I am only anxious that this House should deal with the Bill in a spirit of fairness, and refer it to the committee, where these matters can be fully discussed; and if there are any good reasons why the committee should not pass it and report it favourably to the House, they will no doubt so decide. But, in the meantime, I have heard no reason showing why the House should not allow the Bill to pass a second reading and go to the committee.

Mr. POWELL. Have the surveys actually been made?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know, but I am informed by one of the members of the provincial government that surveys have been made and plans filed. At all events, it is not fair for us to jump to the conclusion, without information or data, that the charter has become extinct, and I should hope that hon. gentlemen would not think it necessary to press the objection to the second reading any further. Let us hear what they have to say, and let them furnish any evidence which may be in their possession to justify a refusal to allow the Bill to be reported back again to this House.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. McALISTER. Just allow me one word of explanation as to the surveys. The necessary surveys must be made within three years. No surveys have been made since 1894, except twenty or twenty-five miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is disputed.

Mr. LISTER. That is a matter for the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. Unless the House is prepared for the second reading—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hour is past, and we must proceed to the Orders of the Day.

OBSERVANCE OF THE LORD'S DAY.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 10) to secure the better Observance of the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, as a day of rest.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Chairman, I deem it but fair that I should bring before the attention of the committee the fact that the Minister of Justice has suggested an amendment or a recasting of this clause, and that the hon. Solicitor General has expressed his opinion that this recasting of the clause would perhaps be preferable to the provision as it now stands. The proposition in amendment is as follows:—

That Section 173 of the Criminal Code—which is the section that provides for the punishment of disturbances of religious assemblies, and so forth—be amended by adding the following section at the end of Part XII, respecting offences against religion:—

Every one is guilty of an offence, and liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding fifty dollars and costs for the first offence, and not exceeding one hundred dollars and costs for each subsequent offence, and, in default of payment, to one month's imprisonment, who—

(a) Being the proprietor, publisher, or manager of any newspaper, publishes or issues, or prepares for publication or issue, any copy or number of such newspaper for sale on Sunday, or with the intent that such copy or number shall be sold on Sunday; or

(b) Sells, or employs or procures any person to sell any newspaper on Sunday ;

Provided, that the publishing or issuing, or preparing for publication or issue, of any copy or number of a religious newspaper for distribution on Sunday, or with the intent that it shall be distributed on Sunday, shall not be an offence under this section.

2. The word "newspaper" in this section has the same meaning as it has under paragraph (p. I.) of Section 3, in the sections relating to defamatory libel.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I presume my hon. friend does not propose that the committee shall undertake to deal with that amendment now. It is absolutely necessary it should be printed in order that members of both sides shall have it in their hands. It is very elaborate and makes a very serious change in the Bill.

Mr. CHARLTON. I was about to say, when interrupted, that my own preference is for the section of the Bill now before the committee, and I have read the proposed recast of that section in order that the committee may decide whether it will proceed to consider the section now before the committee or the section suggested by the hon. Minister of Justice.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend will see at a glance that having submitted this amendment on such high authority as that of the hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. Solicitor General, the committee would prefer to have it printed and have it before us in such a way as we could form a judgment.

Mr. CHARLTON. I felt myself bound to place the facts before the committee, and I am, of course, in the hands of the committee as to whether it shall prefer to have the proposed recast of this section or proceed to consider the Bill with which it is familiar.

I move the adoption of the first clause, as it is in the Bill printed. This is a clause which once passed this House. It received the sanction of the then leader of the House, the lamented Sir John Thompson, and the Bill was lost in the Senate. I think the hon. leader of the House, the other night, expressed his approval of this, and I felt it my duty, as the hon. Minister of Justice had suggested an alternative proposition, that that should be stated to the House. I now call the attention of the committee to the fact that the section now under consideration was passed by this House, that it received the sanction of the late Sir John Thompson, and that, I understand, it has the sanction of the present leader of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). There was some force in the suggestion made by the hon. leader of the Opposition that it would be advisable to have before us the amendment suggested by the hon.

Minister of Justice. So far as I could gather the purport of the amendment, it is to make this offence, not punishable by indictment but simply on summary conviction. I would much prefer this to the proposition in the Bill. I stated the other day that I had no objection to follow the precedent laid down by the late Sir John Thompson and adopt the two first clauses ; but looking at the matter again, it seems to me an extreme case to make the sale of a newspaper by a newsboy on Sunday punishable by indictment. The requirements of justice, I think, would be better met if we made the offence punishable on summary conviction under clause 170 of the Criminal Code.

Amendment negatived.

The PRIME MINISTER. I beg to move that the first clause be replaced by the following :—

That Section 173 of the Criminal Code be amended by adding the following section at the end of Part XII., respecting offences against religion :—

Every one is guilty of an offence, and liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding fifty dollars and costs for the first offence, and not exceeding one hundred dollars and costs for each subsequent offence, and, in default of payment, to one months' imprisonment, who—

(a) Being the proprietor, publisher, or manager of any newspaper, publishes or issues, or prepares for publication or issue, any copy or number of such newspaper for sale on Sunday, or with the intent that such copy or number shall be sold on Sunday ; or

(b) Sells, or employs or procures any person to sell any newspaper on Sunday ;

Provided, that the publishing or issuing, or preparing for publication or issue, of any copy or number of a religious newspaper for distribution on Sunday, or with the intent that it shall be distributed on Sunday, shall not be an offence under this section.

2. The word "newspaper" in this section has the same meaning as it has under paragraph (p. I.) of Section 3, in the sections relating to defamatory libel.

The understanding between the leader of the Opposition and myself is that we will move that the committee rise and report progress, and the Bill will be reprinted and come again before the House for consideration.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 2,

2. No canal belonging to Canada shall be open for traffic or business on the Lord's Day between the hours of six in the morning and ten in the evening.

The PRIME MINISTER. There can be no objection to this clause, because the same thing is done already by the Government. For years past the Government has been in the habit of passing an Order in Council which practically brings into effect this clause.

Mr. POWELL. Then this legislation is unnecessary.

The PRIME MINISTER. It does neither good nor harm.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Then leave it out.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it had better been left out.

Mr. PENNY. I understand that Orders in Council are passed at the beginning and close of every season with respect to barges coming down at those seasons of the year.

Mr. FOSTER. Some provision should be made in case of accident.

The PRIME MINISTER. As far as can be provided for, the canals are already closed on Sunday.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think this matter had better be left in the hands of the Government, because the Government have already adopted the policy of preventing Sunday traffic, and this clause would be violated if, owing to unforeseen circumstances, it became necessary to make a slight deviation from the rule.

The PRIME MINISTER. I stated the other day that I proposed to follow the precedents laid down by Sir John Thompson in this matter. He had given this matter a great deal of attention, and he agreed to this clause, and the reason, I understand—

Mr. HUGHES. But the world has moved on a little since then. We have had another election. I do not think this is a clause in the interest of the community at large. If the Government issue an Order in Council at the beginning of every season that is enough. If such a proposition is placed on the Statute-book, every vessel owner who violated it would be at the mercy of any crank along the line.

The PRIME MINISTER. Without committing the Government at all, I may say that I will take note of the objection that is made. Better let the clause stand, and we will take it up again.

Mr. CHARLTON. If I may be permitted—I can understand, in fact I know, that circumstances arise which render it perhaps not improper to leave this clause unenforced, in fact when it would be difficult and contrary to the public interest to enforce it strictly. For instance, a break might take place in the canal, causing a congestion of traffic, or on the last Sunday of the season, it might be necessary under the provisions respecting works of necessity and mercy, to have the canals opened. I would have no objection to the insertion of the provision—and I believe the provision was once inserted in this clause—that the Government, for sufficient reasons might, by Order in Council, suspend the operation of this clause for one Sabbath, from time to time, as circumstances might render necessary. That would meet the objection, and it would be only reasonable, in view of the objection raised, that such a provision should be made. Though it might not meet the views of extreme Sabbatarians and those who are pressing the recognition of the principle by legislation, I think it would probably be reasonable that the Government should be vested with this power. With this, I would prefer to see this clause on the Statute-book rather than leave the whole matter to the Government. It would be more creditable to the country, and the same purpose would be served.

The PRIME MINISTER. I see no objection to the clause going on the Statute-book. There is no sanction to it—there is no penalty attached; it is merely an expression of opinion by the Parliament of Canada, a command to the Government, that the canals should be closed on Sunday.

Mr. POWELL. There is an implied penalty, and any person who has anything to do with using canals on Sunday would, under this law, be accessory to a crime. I differ from the Government on that point.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). Where is the crime?

Mr. POWELL. The violation of a statute, is by itself, by law, a crime.

Mr. HUGHES. There may be a clause tacked on to the end of the Bill that will provide a penalty. Better wipe out the clause.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The violation of a statute is not a crime.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It appears to me that there is a more serious point and I draw my hon. friend's attention to it. This clause absolutely provides for Sunday traffic on the canals, unless the hon. gentleman says that there is no Sunday before six in the morning or after ten in the evening. That this Bill should authorize Sunday traffic on the canals appears to me to be a very serious matter.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would be willing to accept the opinion of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) and bow to him as a more orthodox supporter of the Sabbath observance movement than myself. I can assure the hon. gentleman that there was a great difference of opinion upon this matter. It was contended that those who were moving for the closing of the canals were giving away the principle that traffic should be prohibited during the twenty-four hours of the Sabbath. But after all the discussions the conclusion was arrived at that if the canals were kept closed during the time that traffic would interfere with public worship in the morning and evening, that would be a compromise which would, perhaps, satisfy morality, religion and public convenience, and this provision was adopted that the canals should be closed from six o'clock in the morning, thus providing against disturbance of the quiet of the Sabbath during the day and evening until after evening service was held. At ten o'clock, two hours before midnight, traffic might be resumed. So far as my own conscientious scruples are concerned, they are satisfied with this as a compromise to meet the views of different interests and opinions. I am perfectly willing to see the canals closed from midnight to midnight—that would suit me very well. Still, as promoter of the Bill, I recognize the force of the objections that are raised to this extreme application of the principle and accept this proviso as quite sufficient under the circumstances, as it secures the quiet of the Sabbath from early morning until after evening service. I think we had better leave it as it stands because this principle has been accepted before after full discussion by the leader of the late Government. Under all the circumstances, I believe it to be unnecessary to open the question again.

Mr. CRAIG. I suppose it is not necessary for me more than for any other member of the House to say that he desires to have Sunday well kept and to have it a day of rest. But the question has come to my mind while listening to this discussion and looking at the clause before us: What is the object of putting this clause in the Bill? Is it necessary? Has it been called for? Does the traffic exist which it is proposed to stop, or does the Government, as the Prime Minister has told us, see to it that this provision is carried into effect? Now, I do not know that we are called upon to put a clause in this Bill just for the sake of putting it there, or to afford my hon. friend (Mr. Charkton) the credit of having it passed. I do not say that is the reason he wants it. But I say he should give the committee some good reason for putting it there.

Now, for myself, I am satisfied without this clause. I desire to have Sunday kept on the canal, but I am perfectly satisfied to leave the responsibility of that on the Government of the day, whatever Government may be in power. I think the moral sense of the country is such that they will feel that they ought to do this, and besides in that case they have more liberty, I hold, to relax this Order in Council when absolutely necessary, than they would have under this law. Then there is a point made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, that if we are passing a Bill on account of its being the Lord's Day, or the Sabbath, then that day begins, I suppose, at 12 o'clock on Saturday night and ends at 12 o'clock on Sunday night, and if we are wording it on account of it being a day of 24 hours, then we are bound in consistency to make it 24 hours in this clause. I think it would be expedient to drop the clause altogether, and leave it, as it has been, in the hands of the Government who have always carried it out, and I am satisfied will always carry it out. I think that will be more satisfactory than to leave a clause in this Bill which is not necessary, and which has never been called for.

Mr. PENNY. I quite agree with the last speaker that if we leave this in the hands of the Government it will be perfectly satisfactory to everybody. Take the port of Montreal, for instance. There are certain seasons of the year in the early spring and late autumn when ships are waiting there, and it is necessary, particularly late in the autumn, for ships to have their cargoes as early as possible. I think, therefore, it is far better to leave this to the discretion of the Government, and to strike out the clause altogether.

Mr. FOSTER. This much is true, and I want to call the attention of the Prime Minister to it, if this clause passes the Government has no discretion, no matter how great the necessity may be, for allowing a single hour of Sunday traffic on the canal. But no person or no law forbidding it, they actually do what my hon. friend wish to have done, they keep a quiet Sunday on the canals so much as it is possible unless great occasion arises. Now if you put down a statutory enactment and this Bill becomes law, surely the Government are not going to become violators of the law, they have no opportunity for the exercise of their discretion. Now, I cannot see any reason why, as has been the rule of the former Government and is generally of this Government, what my hon. friend desires may not be practically carried out. My hon. friend admits by his 10 o'clock hour and by his own admission that there may be reasons for traffic on Sunday. Why does he close up the discretion of the Government entirely from having any traffic? There are some occasions when traffic would be necessary. Take the latter part of the season which my hon. friend has spoken of, where parties may have only two or three days to get cargoes out from Montreal and ship them to the east. It becomes absolutely necessary, unless you are to keep large cargoes frozen up on the canals, that they should go through on Sundays, and the Government has always allowed traffic of that kind. But it seems to me that you cannot do that if you make a statutory enactment. I think it would be better to leave that with the Government as it is.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Government upon this matter have no view either one way or the other. The clause seems to me neither good nor bad, because at the present time, and for a long time back, at the opening of the season for navigation, the Government have been in the habit of passing an Order in Council to prevent canals from being opened on Sunday. Therefore, if this clause becomes law it will not change what already exists. I was disposed to agree to the clause, as I said a moment ago, and I took the view of the late Sir John Thompson on this subject. When the Bill first came up I looked up the debate of 1894, and read the views expressed by the leader of the Government at that time. I may say, moreover, that the clause has been asked for by the association for the Observance of the Lord's Day, that was the only thing which moved me in the matter. But the Government is altogether in the hands of the House. If it be the will of the House to carry that clause, I am quite satisfied; if the House desires to have that clause eliminated from the Bill, I shall be equally willing.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Government any discretion if the clause passes?

The PRIME MINISTER. The Government will always have discretion. There will be no trouble to the Government, because there is no penalty. If this clause becomes law it is simply a command to the Government to have the locks closed on Sunday.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. As a representative from Montreal I must oppose this clause. If the clause is passed, and if it is necessary to pass an Order in Council permitting traffic on the canals on Sunday, the Government would be responsible to the country for not observing the law. I do not know how, by Order in Council, the Government could override that law. If the law exists on the Statute-book I do not see how the Government can pass an Order in Council contradictory to it. As for myself, I am opposed to the principle of this Bill. Every business man in Montreal knows that at certain seasons of the year the canal must be worked on Sundays. It would affect to a considerable extent the trade, not only in Montreal but in the whole country, if this law is strictly to be observed by the Government. If this law passes, the Government will be bound by it. I have confidence in the present Government. But changes may take place, a change took place not long ago, and others may take place. And if, under that changed condition of affairs, the Government would say that they were bound by that law, where would we be? Therefore, I think the clause should be withdrawn.

Mr. CHARLTON. The religious sentiment of the country calls for some legislative action upon this question of keeping the canals closed upon Sunday, and it is in deference to that strongly expressed religious feeling that this provision has been inserted in the Bill; and it is in deference to the obvious necessities of navigation that the whole 24 hours are not insisted upon. Now, while I believe that the views expressed by the leader of the Government are perfectly correct with regard to this matter where there is no penalty attached to the enforcement of this clause, and the Government may set aside the provision of the clause at pleasure, yet I think it will be well, if it is contemplated as being necessary for the Government at any time to exercise that power, to make provision for its exercise. As I said a little while ago, this was once done, I think done on the occasion before the last when the Bill passed the House with these two clauses; it was done as near as I recollect, in this way, adding to the clause as it now stands the words:

Provided, that by Order in Council the canals may be opened on Sunday during the last two weeks of the season of navigation.

Now, that would meet all the objections that are raised with regard to the plethora of traffic and the necessity of hastening forward cargoes towards the close of the season. If the Government were prepared by Order in Council to set aside the provisions of this clause in the last two Sundays in the season of navigation, these difficulties imagined or apprehended by my hon. friends would be obviated. If it is desired to add that proviso to the clause in view of the expression of opinion on the part of the Government and on the part of members of the House, I see no objection to its being inserted. These words might be added:

Provided, that by Order in Council the canals may be opened on Sundays during the last two weeks of the season of navigation in each year.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That does not cover the point. It is only at the beginning or the end of the season of navigation that it may become necessary to have the canals open on Sunday. It may come at any time during the season, by accident or by congestion of traffic. The promoter of the Bill should withdraw this clause, for which no necessity has been shown. What is the use of passing a law without power behind it to enforce it?

Mr. LOUNT. This clause is a mere declaration; it is not an enactment which can be enforced, no penalty attaches to it, and so there is no way of making it effective. It is simply a declaration, and to pass ineffective legislation is not a very wise course to pursue. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman does not strengthen the clause in any sense. A mere proviso that this clause may at the instance or order of the Government be made effective when necessary, does not make the body of the clause of any advantage unless by some provision there is a penalty attached for a violation of the clause itself.

From what the Premier has stated, there is an effective law at the present time. Under the present law the Government is enabled to pass Orders in Council dealing with the matter. These appear to be effective and to meet all the necessary requirements with respect to the control and management of the canals. Why should legislation be passed for the purpose of enacting laws when laws already exist which are effective. It has been admitted that the law acts as safeguarding Sunday, which is desired by the hon. gentleman promoting the Bill; and it would be better to leave the law as it is now well understood and as it proves operative, rather than pass legislation which may prevent the law working as successfully as it has done in the past. My views are that it would be better to dispense with this clause and leave the matter as at present.

Mr. DAVIN. I certainly think we must, if we are to preserve our self-respect as a Parliament, go further than this clause goes or not go so far. It is quite true, as the hon. the Premier has indicated, that one of the essential elements in the definition of a law is that there shall be a sanction. But if you put this clause into an Act of Parliament, without any sanction attached what are you doing? You are trifling with somebody; you are either trifling with Parliament, or with the country—in fact you are playing at legislation. Therefore, if we are going to meet the religious sentiment of the country in regard to the Sabbath, why not make an effective clause, and not one that will appear as yielding to that religious sentiment when in fact it does nothing of the kind. If this House desires to enact a law that will be effective as regards the Sabbath, make it such and add a sanction. But if the House passes this law, I quite agree with the view presented by the member for Toronto (Mr. Lount) in regard to the effect of it. At the same time I will add this remark: If this law were placed on the Statute-book you might have complications like this. You might, for instance, find an officer who, knowing this law was on the Statute-book, who would go to a lock-keeper and say: Here is the law; I am going to prevent you opening the lock today. Well, he would reply, I have the command of the Government. But the man would probably say: The Government has no authority; no Order in Council can override an Act of Parliament, and here is the law on the Statute-book of Canada, that such and such regulations shall apply in regard to the opening of canals on Sunday. Suppose, we will say, that an officer is a strong Sabbatarian, and he ascertains that this Bill has been placed on the Statute-book, he might make the matter very unpleasant. It is not very creditable to Parliament, and not after all very flattering to those whose religious sentiments the hon. gentleman wishes to meet, to place what is confessedly considered to be an academic clause in an Act of Parliament. What I point out is, that this clause does not comply with the definition which a jurist will give of what a law is. If so, surely there is not a layman who will not agree with me that it is not respectful to Parliament nor to the country to ask hon. members to pass this clause. If this Bill does not comply with the essential definition of law according to a jurist, why should this Parliament pass it? But if Parliament does pass it and there is no sanction, nevertheless complications may arise under it. According to the contention of the hon. the Premier it should go no further than the Order in Council, and if so, where do you meet the religious sentiment of the country? I hold that the dignity of this Parliament and the dignity of the Dominion of Canada requires what a jurist would demand in law, that is to say, it should meet all essential qualities that are necessary in a law, and one of the essential qualities in a law is the sanction.

Mr. McCLURE. If this clause would promote the observance of the Lord's Day, it should not be left to the discretion of the Government, but, academic statement though it be, it should become part of the Statutes of the country. This would not take away the discretion from the Government. The section states that the canals shall not be open for traffic or business on the Lord's Day. Would that take away the right of the Government in an extreme case, such as the hon. gentlemen have presented, to pass an Order in Council in order to save property and prevent loss?

Mr. DAVIN. Certainly it would.

Mr. McCLURE. I think not.

Mr. CRAIG. I wish to say a word in regard to the hon. member for North Norfolk and the religious sentiment of the people desiring this section of the Bill. That may be so; but I do not think the people demand this section, or that the result should be attained in this way. If I go to the people and ask: Do you think it would be a good thing to have the canals closed on Sunday, they would reply, certainly. If I then said, do you want a law passed to that effect, I would receive the reply, yes. But if I then said, this result is attained now, the answer I would receive would be, I am not anxious then to have it put on the Statute-book, if it is done already. As regards the religious sentiment of the country, does the religious sentiment ask to have this clause placed on the Statute-book, and at the same time say the Government may violate it whenever they think it necessary. It is in effect saying that we cannot trust the Government to keep the canals closed, but we are quite willing to trust the Government to break the existing regulations whenever they wish to do so. That is what it amounts to. I prefer to place the responsibility of carrying out these Orders in Council on the Government of the Day. I want the religious sentiment of the country to hold the Government responsible. Laws are passed by this Parliament not to control the Government in matters of this kind, but individuals, and penalties are imposed if they break the laws. But we are asked to pass a law to which no penalty is attached, and which, according to the declaration of the hon. the Premier, would be neither good nor bad, and I support the Premier in that view. I hold that we do not want to place laws on the Statute-books which are neither good nor bad, which are not necessary, which will not improve things, and which may lead to complications which we do not anticipate. For my part, I am opposed to this clause going in this way, and I am opposed to it because I am in favour of making Sunday as much a day of rest as possible. I believe that the religious sentiment of the country, if the matter is explained to the people, will be perfectly satisfied to let the matter rest as it is now—in the hands of the Government. If the Government should fail in their duty, then it will be time to pass a law like this. If we find that the Government do not conform to the religious sentiment of the country in a matter of this kind over which they have absolute control, then I would favour passing a law like this. So long as the Government do their duty in this matter, I am satisfied to let the responsibility rest upon them as it does now.

Mr. CHARLTON. My hon. friend (Mr. Craig) tells us, that he is satisfied to leave this matter where it is now, to place the responsibility on the Government, and to wait until he sees whether the Government fails to do its duty or not in the premises. Sir, where is the duty of the Government defined in the law? Where do we find on the Statute-book of Canada, a line or a word to say, that the Government shall close the canals for one hour, or for one moment, on Sunday or on any other day?

Mr. CLANCY. Do they close the canals on Sunday now?

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose they do, but it is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Government whether they do or not. This Government may do it, but a Government which might succeed them may not close the canals on Sunday. There is no mandate in the Statute-books that they shall close the canals, and the assumption made by my hon. friend (Mr. Craig) is without foundation, and totally baseless, because there is no duty resting on the Government at all. The Government closes the canals on Sunday, and it is entitled to the respect of the public for doing so. It does what, in our opinion, is a duty, but it may refuse to-morrow to do it, and it can by Order in Council open the entire canal system throughout Canada on the Sabbath day. The Government cannot be said to have failed in discharging its duty; but the Government merely acts in its discretion in that case as it does in other cases. The object of placing this law on the Statute-book is, that this Parliament may express the opinion that this is a Christian nation; express the opinion, that the Government of this country should close the canals upon Sunday, that the Government of this country should not be allowed to exercise its discretion in doing anything else except to respect the scruples and the obligations that rest upon a Christian people. That is the reason that it is proposed to put this clause upon the Statute-book. It is not, perhaps, that it is absolutely necessary, or that it is intended to prevent an evil which exists to-day; but that it is intended to affirm the principle, that this Christian nation should be arrayed on the side of what the great mass of the people believe to be right, and all these objections to putting this law on the statute are academic and peurile. The object of putting this clause on the Statute-book, is to affirm, that in the opinion of this Parliament it is the duty of this Government to observe the wishes of the people of this country, to the requirements resting upon a Christian people. For that reason I have moved in this direction. I have moved in this direction in obedience to the wishes and the desires of the people of Canada; moved in this direction, not that it is necessary to constrain my hon. friend the leader of the Government, not that he is opposed to the principle of this clause, not at all; but that he may have the sanction of this Parliament supporting him in the action he is taking with regard to the closing of the canals on the Lord's Day.

Mr. DAVIN. The English law already exists here in regard to Sabbath desecration, and if my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) wants to assert the principle, he must make it wider than is provided for in this clause of the Bill. I understand that he wants to assert the principle of the sacredness of the Sabbath, but this only asserts the principle of the sacredness of the Sabbath in regard to the canals, and that being the case, it would allow a riot of Sabbath breaking in this country with regard to every other particular. My hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) cannot, in my opinion, go too far in guarding a day of rest, and guarding the sacredness of the Lord's Day. I was not objecting to this clause, what I wanted was to make it thoroughly effective. But I do not care for a clause that holds up before the religious sentiment of the country a mere sham. I would like to give them a clause that would be a genuine guarding of the Sabbath.

The PRIME MINISTER. Better put a sanction on it then.

Mr. CLANCY. It would seem that the only object of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) is to place an Act upon the Statute-book. It does seem to me, that if we legislate here, our legislation should be for the purpose of curing some evil. The hon. gentleman is attempting to put upon the Statute-book a provision that is recognized now as a moral obligation upon the Government, and which is strictly carried out by the Government. No greater tribute could be paid to present and past Governments than, that in the absence of any such legislation they felt the moral obligation to perform their duty in this respect, and they have always done so. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) would not care to narrow that. I am quite sure that the public must come to the conclusion, that we should not place a single line to encumber the statute-books of Canada, unless it has a direct object and is intended to correct an evil. In this case there is no evil to meet. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) is able to point out that in the past the Government have failed, or that they have permitted wrong-doing in this respect, then I quite think they should be bound by law; but the hon. gentleman has failed to point out that. He says, that he wants to prove that the people of Canada are a Christian people. I think, Sir, that the most substantial proof that Canada is a Christian country, is found in the fact, that our canals have been closed on Sunday and that the object of the hon. gentleman has always been carried out without a formal law on the Statute-book.

Section negatived.

On section 3,

Mr. CHARLTON. It was understood that the first two clauses of this Bill only should be acted upon. An arrangement was arrived at by which the Government would accept the first two clauses, and the balance of the Bill would be dropped for this session at least. It would be useless to proceed with the balance of the Bill at this stage of the session, as it would merely endanger the portion of it which has been accepted.

The PRIME MINISTER. Sections 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 ought to be dropped, and section 8 ought to be maintained.

Sections 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 negatived.

On section 8,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The phraseology of that section is very ambiguous, and it would be better, perhaps, to put it in a different form. I would suggest these words for the clause, if they will be agreed to.

No proceeding shall be taken under this Act unless commenced within one month after the commission of the offence charged.

Section 1, as amended, agreed to.

Committee rose and reported progress.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDUCTION AND ABDUCTION.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 13) to amend the Criminal Code, 1892, for the purpose of making more effectual provision for the punishment of seduction and abduction.—(Mr. Charlton.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CHARLTON. The Bill contains three clauses. The first is an amendment of section 181 of the Criminal Code, and provides for the raising of the age of consent from sixteen years to eighteen years. The section in the Criminal Code reads as follows:—

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who seduces, or has illicit connection with, any girl of previously chaste character of, or above, the age of fourteen years and under the age of sixteen years.

It is proposed to substitute the word "eighteen" for the word "sixteen," in the last line of this section. I may say in connection with this matter that the evidences of public sentiment throughout the country favouring this change in the law are very pronounced. I have received hundreds of letters, and the House has had placed before it a great number of petitions, asking for this change and it is unnecessary for me to detain the committee by enlarging on the desirability of making it. The members of the committee are as fully seized of the facts bearing on the question as I am myself, and I refrain from urging the measure further than to make the assertion that the evidences of popular demand for this measure are overwhelming and unmistakable. I move that the first section be adopted.

Mr. CRAIG. I fancy that there will be no objection to this. I am in favour of it, but I rise for the purpose of asking a question. I think I saw it stated in the press that the Minister of Justice is having an amendment like this inserted in the Criminal Code, and if that is so, I suppose it would answer the purpose. I just wish to know if that is the fact.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). I think it is, but there is no objection to sending this Bill to the Senate, and the two can be considered together.

Section 1 agreed to.

Section 2 dropped.

On section 3,

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to call the attention of the leader of the Government to the purport of this clause. It is aimed at the crime of abduction—drawing females into houses of ill-fame, and inducing them to leave the country, perhaps for immoral purposes. Section 283 of the Criminal Code is as follows :—

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment who unlawfully takes, or causes to be taken, any unmarried girl, being under the age of sixteen years, out of the possession and against the will of her father and mother, or of any other person having the lawful care or charge of her.

It is immaterial whether the girl is taken with her own consent, or at her own suggestion, or not.

It is immaterial whether or not the offender believed the girl to be of or above the age of sixteen.

I propose to substitute the words "twenty one" for "sixteen." The crime which it is propose to punish here is a much more serious crime than the mere crime of seduction. It is a crime of abduction as well, inducing the girl to leave home for immoral purposes and consigning her to a life of shame. I submit that this clause is better worthy the favourable consideration of the committee than any other section of the Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). My hon. friend should be satisfied with the two first clauses. We should not favour amending a law without due cause and consideration. I have received some communications on the subject of the third clause, but have not the same weight of evidence as with regard to the first. The first clause partly covers the object my hon. friend has in view. If the girl is abducted before the age of eighteen, the consequences will be the same to the offender, and therefore I do not see any reason why we should proceed with this clause.

Mr. CHARLTON. The wish of the hon. leader of the House is law to me. I have simply to say that reforms move slowly, but that in this case reform is moving at a pace which, taking everything into consideration, is not unsatisfactory.

Bill reported.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier) moved that Mr. Perry's name be added to the Joint Committee on Printing.

Motion agreed to.

THE TARIFF.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Perhaps it might facilitate the business of the House if I should make an announcement with respect to the tariff resolutions. The House no doubt will desire that some particular day be named on which to proceed with these resolutions. I am afraid it will not be convenient to name a day during the present week—perhaps they might be taken up on Thursday or Friday, but it would be more convenient to name a definite day. Monday next will be a holiday, and we shall, therefore, be unable to proceed on that day, and so I propose that at the first sitting next week, Tuesday, the tariff resolutions be taken up, and I anticipate by that time we shall be able to proceed.

SUPPLY—THE TARIFF RESOLUTIONS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. Before this motion is carried, and apropos of what the hon. gentleman has just stated, I wish to say a word or two. I am exceedingly sorry, and I know the country will hear it with regret, that the hon. gentleman is not able to take up the tariff resolutions this week. The hon. gentleman knows, as well as I do, that business is very sensitive to disturbed and uncertain conditions. The hon. gentleman knows also, as well as I do, that ever since the general elections, now nearly a year ago, the business of the country has been in a state of uncertainty with respect to the conditions which would prevail. Those conditions have not been made definite, in fact there is no certainty with regard to them, and this is felt by business men the country through. Pressing as the matter was, the Government did not see fit to call the House together until a very late date, and even though the House was called at so late a date, the Government was not ready to bring down the tariff resolutions until nearly a month had passed. The tariff resolutions were brought down in connection with the Budget, and a very short debate ensued, and from that time to this the Government has done nothing. The Government laid the tariff resolutions before the House, presumably as they wish them to be considered in committee, but the whole country knows as well as Parliament knows, and Parliament knows because it has been advised of the fact, that the Government itself has no certain views with respect to these tariff items brought down, as to whether they will remain as they were submitted to the House or not, and if changes should be made what would be the tenor and degree of those changes. More than that, the Government interjected into those tariff resolutions a clause about which uncertainty exists, and may exist for a long time, that is in regard to what is called or miscalled the preference clause. That clause opens up a subject of doubt to some minds, of no doubt to my mind, and I think of very little doubt to most hon. members on this side of the House. It opens up to business men doubt as to what countries would participate in the trade of Canada under that clause if it were passed. It opens up the whole question of the most-favoured nation clause and the treaties in connection therewith and this one item itself, supposing the other conditions of the tariff were thoroughly known, inasmuch as the range of competition which may be opened up with other countries which are our competitors is unknown, and presumably will remain unknown for some length of time, it may be for a great length of time, adds an element of uncertainty, even when all other items of the tariff as to rates of duty are finally fixed, which they to-day are not. Under these conditions, the Government having brought down the tariff resolutions simply do nothing with them, and having up to the present time virtually wasted two weeks, for everybody knows the House will not take up the items of the Estimates until they know pretty well what the measures of the Government are and members have a chance to discuss the larger and more important proposals of the Government. What measures of the Government are before this House? Nothing but the tariff resolutions. The Franchise Bill was introduced, but all is quite now along that disputed boundary line, and it is possible it will remain quite during the other days of the session. The Government is not pressing its other Bills, and it is not pressing the tariff, and in fact the House is simply marking time, doing a little only with the Estimates; but if hon. gentlemen opposite expect to pass the Estimates before the principal measures they have under consideration are known, they are entertaining expectations which no other Government have ever held, and expectations which I do not think they will find realized. So what the House and what the country wants is the tariff, in order to reduce trade to a state of certainty, if the Government has reduced itself to a state of uncertainty. This is not a partisan matter. Hon. gentlemen cannot read the public press without observing how the state of uncertainty is acting on the country. It is affecting all business interests and industries. Certain business interests will be able to exist or not according to the conditions of the tariff, and the daily papers chronicle from time to time forced closures of industries, and stringency and stress in very many if not all the industries of the country. In fact business men tell me that so far as regards production and sale of goods manufactured in Canada there is simply a hand to mouth business being done, and that the uncertainty as to the future shuts out anything except the hand to mouth species of business. I want to enter my protest and the protest of business men against this further postponement of the tariff issue, the further postponement of taking up the tariff resolutions and arriving at a definite conclusion as what the conditions of business are to be for the succeeding year, or perhaps for succeeding years. I thought it only right to voice that opinion on the motion to go into Supply to-day, more particularly as the Finance Minister held out no hope of taking up the tariff resolutions during the present week. In that, he is disappointing not only the business men of the country but his own political friends. So astute an observer, and one so close to the ear, to both ears in fact of the Government, as the correspondent of the Toronto "Globe"; such an astute observer and one in so intimate relationship with the Government as that correspondent is, fully believed that the tariff was to come down this week, and heading his Saturday's special, he says:

The coming week will bring a renewal of interest in the work of Parliament, which has lagged greatly during the past few days. The debate on the tariff will doubtless be resumed.

That was the general impression, and there is a feeling of disappointment all over the country that the Government has not been able to put an end to this uncertainty and doubt. The only conclusion we can reach is, that the Government have not issued from that state of uncertainty and doubt themselves. It is bad for the business of the country, and the business of the country must be reckoned with.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). From the observations of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) as to the evils of uncertainty, we might venture to hope that at the present time he and his colleagues have recovered from their uncertainty and have discovered where they stand on the tariff question. If it is a fact that there has not been a protracted debate on the tariff, certainly that is not a matter of which the Government can complain. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House were pleased to allow the debate to close at an early date, and we are certainly not disposed to complain of it. We do not think either that they should complain, because it was abundantly evident that these hon. gentlemen were in a very great state of uncertainty, and that they were not in a position to venture to challenge a vote on the tariff. But, Sir, if the object of the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is to urge that there should be the least possible uncertainty, that the tariff resolutions should be completed and proceeded with as speedily as possible, then I entirely concur in that view. I do not for a moment claim that any advantage is going to come to the country by any unnecessary delay. But, if my hon. friend wishes to convey the impression that there has been unusual delay, unusual uncertainty, unusual embarrassment to business by reason of that delay, then I am unable to agree with him, because, if any comparisons are made in the matter, they will not be to the advantage of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) as to the manner in which he handled his own tariff. He is on record as stating that he began his own tariff inquiry in the year 1893; uncertainty therefore began at that time.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My authority is that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) himself stated in his speech in 1893 that they had the subject of tariff revision under consideration during the recess, but they were not prepared to proceed at that time. And he further said, that they intended, during the coming recess, to go into the matter more fully. Therefore, uncertainty began in 1893 and it continued down to the session of 1894. Then what happened? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) brought down his Budget on the 27th March, 1894, and as my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) pointed out the other day, he did not finish his tariff until the 12th July. Therefore, according to the public records, there was a period of uncertainty from the summer of 1893 down to the 12th July, 1894. During all that time business was in a state of uncertainty; gentlemen whose business interests depended upon the tariff were looking with great anxiety as to what might happen; and so, if uncertainty is to be charged as crime against the present Government, then my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is doubly guilty.

But, Sir, we quite realize the fact, that there can be no tariff changes without uncertainty; and it is one of the misfortunes of a high tariff that there is always more uncertainty when that tariff exists, than when the tariff is low, because, so long as you have a high tariff there will always be the temptation for an agitation in favour of its reduction. I entirely agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) that there should be no unnecessary delay, but I am not prepared to admit that there has been unusual delay. I am not prepared to admit that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is right when he undertakes to speak in the name of the business men of the country, and to say that they are anxious to have this matter settled at once. The business men are anxious to have the tariff settled, but they are also anxious that the matter shall be fairly considered, and that any representations they may wish to make on the tariff question shall be heard by the

Mr. FIELDING.

Ministers and shall receive all consideration. And, on every occasion during the present session that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has undertaken to speak in the name of the business men, and to say they were demanding that the tariff should be at once brought down, we were in a position to know otherwise, for we were being daily brought into contact with the leading business men, who did not press to have the tariff brought down at once, but who pressed that the matter might be fairly and carefully considered. I therefore dissent entirely from the view of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) when he conveys the impression that he has a right to speak in the name of the business men of the country.

Mr. hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has not always been reasonable on this point. We must not forget that in the summer session of 1896, almost before the Government were firmly in their seats, at a time when some hon. gentlemen had not even taken their seats as Ministers in this House, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) demanded that we should produce our tariff at once. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has been unreasonable from the beginning, and he has no right to speak in the name of the business men of Canada. I believe the business men of this country are satisfied that the Government are dealing with this question prudently, and cautiously, and with due regard to the public interest, and instead of demanding that the tariff shall be brought down as the hon. gentleman demands, their chief desire is that the Government shall give careful consideration to all representations that are made, in order that in the end justice may be done.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I hardly think that the explanation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is either definite or satisfactory. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) says that in connection with these tariff changes there is, of necessity, uncertainty; but one could go further and say that that uncertainty is always to be deplored, that that uncertainty produces great financial distress and disturbance; and that—as the hon. gentleman himself admits—whether these changes be in the direction of protection, or revenue tariff, or free trade, or what you will, the uncertainty ought to be of as short duration as possible. My hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) would naturally have some warrant in speaking for the business men who are affected primarily by the uncertainty, which all admit exists while a question of this kind is under consideration. We complain, whether right or wrong—representing, as we believe we do, the vast business interests of this country in this particular instance—we complain not merely of the extraordinary delay which is now occurring during the present session in this House, but of the long delay and of the long uncertainty which the Minister of Finance must not forget has existed since June last. Almost a year has elapsed since the business of this country has been submitted to this unprecedented distress and disturbance in connection with the time that it has taken under a change of Government for the enunciation and the settlement of their new policy. Mr. Speaker, I need not argue at any length to prove that the delay which has occurred for nearly a year in the adjustment of the financial policy of this country has been followed by very serious consequences, indeed. Take, for instance, the information that has been given to me by business men. I am told that commercial travellers from United States houses are appearing in the different commercial centres of Canada, particularly just now in the city of Toronto, in great force. It is natural that they should take advantage of any distress or any disturbance that may exist in Canada. I am told that no less than twenty-four car-loads of iron and steel goods went into Winnipeg on Friday. I believe these are exceptional circumstances, not due to the conditions that would obtain if everything were settled, and not due even to the proposed tariff changes, so much as to the uncertainty of our own commercial people, as to the extent they can carry on their business, and as to what extent they can continue their enterprise. It seems to me to require no argument to satisfy the House that business is in an exceptional condition of distress, so long as a matter of this kind is delayed. It is not the case, as the hon. Minister of Finance tried to make this House believe a moment ago, that the Conservative party are in a state of doubt as to their policy or as to their view of the effect of the proposed tariff. The principle of our tariff policy has been understood for more than eighteen years; we are united in favour of the principle of protection. Every man speaking from the Conservative ranks has not hesitated to avow himself a protectionist up to the hilt; and the changes made in the tariff in 1893, as every one in the country knew, and as the Minister of Finance announced, were to proceed on the principle of protection. Who on the other side of the House can tell us whether in this tariff hon. gentlemen are going on the principle of protection or on the principle of free trade? Who among them can say with any decency or reason whether there is either the one principle or the other in their tariff from beginning to end? This is one of the reasons why there is this exceptional trouble and uncertainty in regard to the fiscal policy of the country; and it is an extraordinary commentary on the boast, made chiefly by hon. members on the Treasury benches, that they have formed a Cabinet composed of the ablest men this country has ever seen gathered together upon the Treasury benches, and yet have taken a longer time than has ever been taken by any previous Cabinet in Canada or in any other part of the British Empire to found and put upon the Statute-book a fiscal policy.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to occupy the attention of the House for more than a few minutes; but I think it only right that I should say a few words on this question. I was very much amused the other day to read in the "Globe" some comments in regard to the policy of obstruction of the Opposition, referring to the debate of last Friday, I think. It was rather amusing, when we know how that debate arose and how it was continued by hon. gentlemen on the other side. The correspondent of the "Globe" seemed rather to see the amusing side of the matter himself; for, while blaming the Opposition for obstructing, he went on to say: "Neither are the members on the Government side of the House altogether blameless in this matter, because they continually reply to the remarks made by the members of the Opposition. Now, I want to ask, what are we obstructing? We are not obstructing the tariff. We have been waiting for that a long while. It may be said we are obstructing the passage of the Estimates; but I think there is a good deal of force in what was said by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), that it cannot be expected that the Estimates will go through in their entirety until the members of this House and the country know the complete tariff policy of the Government. The hon. Finance Minister, I suppose, used the best argument he could use when he pointed out that when the Conservative Government were making changes in the tariff they took a long time as well, and the country was subject to some uncertainty; but I think he forgot, what has been suggested by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Herbert Tupper), that the principle upon which our tariff changes were based was well known, while the principle on which this Government are framing their tariff is not so well known. I did expect, when the Finance Minister rose, that he would have taken the House and the country into his confidence, and would have told them the reason of this delay in going on with their tariff changes. He did hint that deputations have been waiting on the Government, and that some changes will have to be made. I have heard it hinted that some difficulty has arisen in regard to the preferential clause of the tariff. I do not know whether that is so or not; and I think it would have been very satisfactory to the House to be assured by the Finance Minister whether or not there is any truth in this report. I suppose the real reason of the delay is what the hon. Finance Minister hinted at, that a great many of the changes made in this tariff have been found to work unfavourably to the industries of this country. Well, that is a testimony to the tariff as it stood before, under the Conservative party. I saw in the "Mail" of yesterday an article in regard to a large industry in Toronto, which, if the new tariff remains as brought down originally, will have to close down, throwing some hundreds of operatives out of employment. The article went on to say that representations had been made to the Government, and that it was hoped that the Government would give relief. All I have to say is that if the Government are taking this time in order to make changes in the new tariff and to put it back where it was before in a great many cases, I am satisfied that they should have that time; but I think they ought to let us know that. If that is the case, however, what becomes of their criticism when the tariff was being changed by the Conservative Government? They then ridiculed the idea of bringing down a tariff and afterwards receiving deputations and making changes in it. They said that was a most absurd way to do business; and we have seen it stated over and over again by the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite that they were not going to do anything of that kind; but they were going to find out what the country wanted before they framed their tariff, and then, when it was framed, it was going to stand. I hope they are not going to persist in that view, and I take it that they are not, but are going to make changes where they find them necessary in the interest of the country—that where they find that industries are being injured by their tariff as originally brought down, they will restore it in those particulars to what it was before. I take it that the delay means that this is what they are going to do; but if so, it would have been more satisfactory if the hon. Finance Minister had let us know it. At the time the tariff changes were made by the Conservative party, hon. gentlemen opposite talked as if it was the most easy thing in the world to make changes in the tariff. When they would change the tariff there would be no difficulty; they would not go around the country with a travelling menagerie, as I think the hon. Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson) called it, to find out what changes should be made; but they would have a principle on which to revise the tariff, and they would do it immediately. All this just shows the difference between having responsibility and having no responsibility. I, for one, am glad that the Government are realizing this, and are taking this time. I offer the Government my sympathy on this occasion. I am satisfied that they have a most difficult task to perform. I believe that if they could only recall some of the changes they have made in the tariff, they would not make them at all, but would leave the tariff to a great extent where it was. But, Sir, I hope they will make any changes necessary for the protection of our industries. I hope that where they find changes have been made which affect injuriously any of the industries of the country, they will reconsider them, and that they will put their party and all their free trade theories out of sight, and do what is best in the interests of the country. If they do, I will give them my support.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. I merely rose to say that I did not intend to deal with this question, but now I will deal with it. I rose to say a few words to the Controller of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière), but I shall endeavour to gratify my hon. friend opposite by dealing with the question, and not only deal with this question but also with the triumphant and dignified party which confronts me at this moment. I am glad, as my hon. friend who has just taken his seat has said, to find that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), is hesitating, and that the hon. Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson) is hesitating, and that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) is hesitating, because they have all demonstrated, since the short time they have been in office, that they are a parcel of quacks who have come into power; and I much prefer, when the country's interests and health are placed in the hands of political quacks, that these quacks should hesitate and listen to the advice of people who know better how to deal with the country's affairs. The peculiar style of reply of the hon. Minister of Finance is edifying. We have heard him several times in this House, and on each occasion, when anything he does has been the subject of criticism from this side, his style of reply is to hint that something of the same character attaches to somebody on this side. Is that any defence of the position taken up by gentlemen, all of whom have been brought into power in Canada in the peculiar way so much boasted of? First and foremost we have three or four Premiers—three or four of the leading men from the provinces from which they come—and who, we are told, have all been successful business men, although the statement is not true. By-and-by, I suppose we are going to have several changes in this tariff; and then when the hon. Minister of Finance will be twitted about them, he will turn round and say to his predecessor, the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster): Oh, you remember, you have had moments of weakness too. Well, if the ex-Finance Minister had moments of weakness, I am afraid the present Finance Minister has had a succession of fainting fits. Now, I cannot understand, unless it be the carrying out deliberately of the policy of double, which has characterized this Government, why it is they are hesitating so much. Sir, in everything this Government has taken up, we have had this policy of double displayed. Why, we have an article in the "Réveil," written by a great admirer of the leader of the House and the Government, who has no doubt at all about the character of this tariff, which, he says, is a free trade tariff; on the other hand we have up in Winnipeg a German paper saying there is not a vestige of free trade in it; and then we have the "Globe," the organ of the party, declaring that there is still a strong element of protection in the tariff. Thus in the tariff, as in other matters, this policy of double is being carried out. On the one side we are told that there are strong protectionist elements in it, and on the other hand, the free traders give the assurance that it is a long step towards free trade. Sir, this whole tariff is constructed on the principle of cross fishing. It whispers to the free trader: I am going to carry out your views by-and-by; it whispers to the protectionist: Never mind the free traders, I am going to stand by you. How long will such a policy be successful in Canada? Now, I want to call the attention of the House to what we are told by "Vieux Rouge" in "Le Réveil," who is a great admirer of the successor of the Holtons, the Huntingtons, and the Dorions, who now adorns the Premiership. After three changes, he predicts that we shall have free trade. He says of the tariff:

Il est conçu de façon à inclure non pas l'Angleterre seulement, mais le monde entier, comme le montre le texte des résolutions.

Which translated means: "It is constructed so as to include not England alone but the entire world, as is evident from the text of the resolutions." This is the way a writer in the confidence of, speaking the language, and with the same blood in his veins as the First Minister, speaks of this two-faced tariff, this Janus measure, which looks with one face to the manufacturer and smiles on him, and with another face on the free trader and smiles equally on him, and which has bamboozled poor John Bull. Even the humour of "Punch" has been taken in, and John Bull is drawn in "Punch" as being delighted with Miss Canada, who is giving him a special favour. The young lady is represented as pinning a rose on to Mr. John Bull's coat, and from beneath the rose depends a riband on which runs the phrase "Preferential Tariff." Under the picture is written: "A Decided Preference: John Bull (to Miss Canada)—"Thank you, my dear! Your favour is as welcome as the flowers of May." What will John Bull, when he understands that the Miss Canada, as embodied by hon. gentlemen opposite, is not the constant virgin he takes her for, but is going to open her doors to every one, and to favour equally the German frock, and the French blouse and the Austrian cap. Instead of being the devoted young lady that John Bull has had her represented by hon. gentlemen opposite, she is a sort of Phryne and you remember the description of that courteous person:—

To all obliging she'd appear.

'Twas "Si, Signor," 'twas "Yah, Meinheer," 'Twas "S'il vous plait, monsieur."

So that this tariff which was to be entirely for John Bull says "oui, Monsieur" to the Frenchman, "yah, Meinheer" to the German, and "si, Signor," to the Italian, and is equally complaisant to many others.

I come now to the North-west Territories and I think we ought to be taken into the confidence of the Government as to what is to be done in that country. I tried to influence the Government here, as I have tried to influence—the hon. Prime Minister will bear me out in that—the Government of my own party. I did not think that the proper course for a member of Parliament was to creep into Minister's offices and seek to influence through ministerial whispers; but to speak his sentiments and his opinions in Parliament, and there endeavour to influence the Government. That is the course to take in a constitutionally governed country, and that was the course I took. But, Sir, the "Globe" correspondent has let the secret out. He has let out his conception and the conception which certain people want to force on hon. members opposite, that they should constitute themselves mere machines for the Whips to use just as they please. The correspondent of the "Globe" complains of the "people on our own side"—that is the Government side stooping for the unconstitutional course of answering any member on this side. Do the young men who have just come into Parliament know what must be the ideas of parliamentary government, and parliamentary life represented by such an utterance and how it affects their interests individually and collectively, as politicians with natural and laudable ambitions and as citizens of a great constitutional country? I can assure them that no greater blow could be dealt to parliamentary government than the carrying out of such an idea to its logical conclusion. Last session and this session we have seen one of the Whips, when an hon. member rose on this side, go and drive out the members on the other side just as a shepherd would drive a flock of sheep. And this session, when an hon. gentleman rose in his place, we even saw a Minister of the Crown—I will name him—the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) go up and drive out the political muttons into the lobby or into room 16. I ask the young men: Do you suppose that any Government can be so strong as not to need the respect of the Opposition? And with all due respect I would say to the Prime Minister himself, because by-and-by he will be held responsible for his party, does he suppose that any Prime Minister, however strong, can rule and lead this Parliament as it ought to be led and with the dignity that ought to belong to the Prime Minister, if it is found that under his leadership a prominent member of his Government, when an hon. member rises on this side, can go and drum out the members? And what is the object of following such a course? To fly from debate sometimes? To fly from expected attack? If it is to shut down on debate, does it succeed in that? What Mr. Justin McCarthy says of the Parliament of England is true of this Parliament. This is not merely a deliberative assembly where we come to discuss and debate; this is the greatest and grandest platform of the nation. And as long as that Press Gallery is there we can get to the country, and when we get to the country we reach the source of power. Some hon. gentlemen opposite, it seems, do not approve of my method of speaking in this Parliament as to what should be done. They have discovered a better method. They, it seems, slink around corners and into cabooses with the Ministers and colloquy with them, get at their ears, and, in that way, accomplish great things. And those of us who dare to address the Ministers in this House are accused of wasting time. I never did that of which they approve with the Ministers of my own party. And it may be that if none of us spoke in this House, these hon. gentlemen would not have had the courage to go to the Minister in private. Perhaps they would not have thought of doing anything had not some members spoken publicly in the House. We have a member in this House who is very fresh—a tremendous fellow of his inches. He writes to the Winnipeg "Daily Tribune," his own paper. This, be it remembered, is a member of the House writing about himself and his colleagues and about me and others, but mainly about himself. And, Sir, you will remember what Byron said when referring to what Wordsworth had sung of the donkey—that he who saw the poet in his glory—well, I have rather missed line—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. It is not often I miss a quotation, so take what comfort you can out of it when I do. But I will give you the sense of it, that—

He that saw the poet in his glory,
Conceived the bard the hero of the story.

Here we have an article headed "Davin sat on" which goes on as follows:—

If ever a man got a severe sitting on in Parliament, Davin got it yesterday. He always was a nuisance in the House, but in view of his protest and the prospect of losing his seat, he seems to have lost what head he had, and has developed into a perfect bore. It is safe to say, he costs the country an average of six thousand dollars a day, blathering away on every conceivable subject, and monopolizing the time of the House. If he accomplished anything, no one would complain, but he has developed into such an un-ferable nuisance that members on both sides curse him, and it is a usual spectacle to see the House empty rapidly when he rises to speak.

It was indeed a spectacle we saw twice last session and this session, the spectacle of the Postmaster General getting up and drubbing out the members on his own side, and among them some members of the delegation that has just entered Parliament. I was sorry to see them so far forget their duty to themselves and to the Parliament of Canada as to go meekly out.

Nobody has any personal feeling against him, the prevailing sentiment being that he wastes the time of the House. Nothing would do him but he must, notwithstanding his stultifying record on the question, make a motion censuring the Government for not placing agricultural implements and lumber on the free list. Failing to get a division on Tuesday, he moved the motion again yesterday, the result being that he was given such a drubbing all round and his record so thoroughly exposed, that he will doubtless take to the tall timber for a time through sheer shame. A lively scene occurred between him and Mr. R. L. Richardson—

The gentleman who writes this article—

—during the debate, the latter charging Davin with being very valiant in the past, when talking, but when the vote came on, it was his custom to take to the woods or crawl under the barn. The Speaker ruled that, if Davin would say he did not crawl under the barn,—

I call your attention to this; it is in the interest of the House that I should call your attention to it:

—if Davin would say he did not crawl under the barn, Richardson must withdraw.

That is exactly what the Speaker ruled.

And then Richardson offered to withdraw if Davin assured the House he had never taken to the woods or crawled under the barn.

Douglas, Richardson, Oliver and the Patrons pointed out that, while they were all disappointed that agricultural implements, coal oil and lumber were not placed on the free list, or greatly reduced, still they had been pressing the Government very strongly lately for concessions on these matters, which, if granted, would bring a great measure of relief to the west. While Davin talked, they were working for their constituents, and had done more for the west in the present Parliament than their predecessors did in fifteen years.

They were working for their constituents! While I was talking they were dining—these farmers and Patrons. With roses in their button-holes they were sitting round the champagne-crowned board, while I was fighting the battle of the farmers.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Was it in the schoolhouse?

Mr. DAVIN. No, it was in a far grander place—in the Rideau Club where vice-royalties have been dined. And, most appropriately, they were dining with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), who is not only a farmer, but as we know, a perfect Apicius.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, because it is in your own beautiful language, the words of Moliere :

Le véritable Amphytrion
Est l'Amphytrion où l'on dîne.

Let them tell us, Sir, what they have done for the west. I proclaim the utterance of this paper, which I have just quoted, a monstrous falsehood. Let them speak and show what they have done that transcended what my colleagues and myself have done for the last fifteen years. When we came in here in 1887 there were great difficulties and grievances in the North-west. There were grievances in the Dominion Lands Act; there were grievances in the North-west Territories Act. One by one we eliminated and swept them away. And the records of Parliament, "Hansard," and our statute-books show what we have done. Some of the legislation passed at our instance does not appear in our name. And why? Because Minister after Minister took up as Government measures Bills that we introduced. Just as the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is about to do this session. I have a Bill on the paper to amend the Dominion Lands Act. Our ideas will be embodied in a Bill to which the Minister will add a clause of his own, and this will be carried. And it has been the same way with important Bills in the past. They say the statement in this paper is true; I pronounce it a monstrous falsehood.

They were not going to cast a vote the sequence of which would be turning from power a Government which had granted a large measure of relief already, and promised more, and place in power a party which immediately restores high duties.

That being the effect of Mr. Davin's motion, they will pass it.

Hear how he sings of his own achievements :

Mr. Richardson added, that if the motion, instead of being a want of confidence, declared that it was in the interests of the farmer that implements and lumber is reduced in duty, or made free, he would vote for it.

Why, I declared in commencing my speech that it was not a vote of want of confidence, and the motion itself said it was in the interest of the farmers, and yet this man, in order to blind the eyes of the farmers of Lisgar, in order to blind the eyes of these bamboozled people who trusted in him and sent him here when he declared that he was in favour of free implements, free coal oil and free lumber, and ran his election on that—that deluded people are to be bamboozled by false statements like these. Last session he said that he would vote against the Government if they did not do the very things that I asked them to do, and they are not yet ready with their resolutions. The Minister of Trade and Commerce told us they would not be ashamed to alter their tariff, and I am doing my best to get them to revise their work :

The result was a terrible blow to Davin, for only nine or ten, out of a House of over 130, voted for the motion, nearly all the Conservatives opposing. The result was greeted with laughter at the expense of Davin.

Mr. Speaker, if that were true it would not awe me an iota. I am familiar with the history of Parliament. Take the history of free trade in England. When Mr. Villiers first rose in 1841 to move the very resolution that five years afterwards Sir Robert Peel carried, he was voted down, as this man would say, "ignominiously." When Mr. Grote, the great historian, first proposed his measure for the ballot in England, he was voted down ignominiously; and when Mr. Berkeley took up the mantle of Mr. Grote, and annually proposed the motion in favour of vote by ballot, he was voted down ignominiously. Mr. Grote was laughed at and quizzed by Tom Moore; and Lord Palmerston quizzed Mr. Berkeley and hoped that when he passed from this world he would have a coffin shaped like a ballot box, and that he would drop into it as quietly as a ballot would be dropped into his desired electoral urn. But the ballot was adopted in England. In past years when one of the greatest men in Canada was sitting where the Minister of Public Works sits now, and I was sitting where the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) sits now, I was advocating a second homestead, and that justice be done to those who were entitled to it. I said to my right hon. friend: I know the map of Canada as well as any one, and I know the course I am taking did not lead to preferment. But I added: I am here to do my duty; you are all opposed to me on both sides of this House, but I have justice on my side, and with justice on my side I am strong against this Parliament. In 1891 I carried my point, and not only that, but I carried several other points in 1891. Now, to show that I have not misrepresented this gentleman from Lisgar as having run his election on those matters, let me point out what a paper who knows him very well, says in regard to that. The "Free Press," in an article on my motion, points out the very extraordinary position taken by Mr. Richardson, as they call him—we call him the hon. member for Lisgar. The paper points out the extraordinary position taken by Mr. Richardson and the Patrons, because the member for Lisgar had run his election on these very things that he had professed he was determined to get, implements free, coal oil free, and a number of other things free. Now, this paper points out that he has attacked Mr. Davin because he brings these matters forward in the House :

Mr. Davin's motion expressing regret that the Government did not place agricultural implements on the free list, created something of a parliamentary breeze, though it did not receive a very large support. It was, probably, not expected that it would receive much support. It was offered by the mover for another purpose, which had very little reference to the duty on agricultural implements. To what extent his motion will square Mr. Davin—

I do not mind these misrepresentations. When I had no constituency to square, I took the same course.

—with his constituents, when he appears before them, we do not know, and we are not much interested to know; but, as to how it affected such of his western colleagues as the members for Lisgar and East Assiniboia, we do feel a little interest, and also some amusement. These gentlemen resented the motion as useless, in which they were quite right; and they were indignant at the necessity it imposed upon them of voting against it, and explaining at the same time why they did so. The result was an acrimonious discussion, in which both Messrs. Davin and Richardson were "called down" by Mr. Speaker; and Mr. Speaker himself gave utterance to the remarkable threat that, "If he (Mr. Davin) cannot learn to respect the Chair, I shall take means to make him do so."

The anxiety shown by Messrs. Richardson and Douglas regarding this useless and awkward motion was amusing, even if well founded. No one really expected that Mr. Laurier's Government would risk commercial disaster by revolutionary changes in the tariff; but both these gentlemen entered Parliament almost solely upon the stand they took, that nothing short of a complete removal of the farmers' burdens would satisfy them. Failing that, they find themselves compelled to explain their position anew; and they have a well-grounded apprehension that their rural constituents may fail to distinguish the niceties of the logic required to meet the case. The most amusing part of it is, that the position to be explained is almost identical with that of their predecessors in Parliament, whom they held up to the world as insincere, hide-bound party men, who sacrificed the North-west to their party attachment. It is a position of their own making, and the world will probably continue to revolve while they are wriggling out of it.

Regarding Mr. Speaker's rather unusual threat, it must be remembered, in extenuation, that he is new to the office, and not accustomed to the amenities affected by some western men; and he was put temporarily off his balance. But the expression is not calculated to win respect from the House, which a Speaker, above all others, must have. To gain courtesy he must give courtesy, even under trying circumstances.

But that is not true merely of an official, it is true of every man on that side. I say to those gentlemen, whom I greatly respect, and amongst whom there are men of first-rate talent, who have come in within two years, I say to them it is not to their interest to fall into weak notions and machine plans that would destroy the respect of this House for them, and militate against their usefulness and success in this House, and also greatly lower their usefulness as members of this Parliament. Now, I did not rise to say anything on this subject, but I found it necessary to do so in consequence of certain tactics which are, at all events, not in the line of the best parliamentary methods.

I rose to call the attention of my hon. friend the Controller of Inland Revenue to a certain matter. Last session I called his attention to the undesirable condition in which the grain standards are, and to the undesirable condition in which the buying of grain is; and I rather thought that I had some assurance from him that during the recess he would take up the question that I brought before him, of the possibility and the reality of the frauds to which the farmer was subjected in consequence of the undesirable condition regarding the purchase of grain. He will remember that my hon. friend who used to be Controller of Inland Revenue, and also Controller of Customs, the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood), than whom we never had a more efficient manager of that or a cognate department, or an abler man in dealing with matters of that kind—he also called his attention to that question last session. Now, some steps were taken by my hon. friend the Controller of Inland Revenue. He may remember that what I called his attention to, was this: That there was a feeling throughout the west that permanent grain standards would be the true solution of the difficulty, and I read letters and resolutions of Patrons, in which they advocated, not a too high standard, but for No. 1 hard, one resolution proposed a standard of sixty pounds to the bushel. Action was taken by the department while Parliament was in session, and the result led to a heated controversy in the newspapers, which must have been brought before the attention of the Minister. That correspondence revealed a state of great uncertainty and a large amount of dissatisfaction existing. I do not want now, nor did I when I rose, to take up the time of the House in regard to this matter, for we discussed it last session and the session before, and in that session I had the able assistance of the late member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin), and my hon. friend will remember how powerfully he came to my aid in that debate, and I quoted his remarks last session. Of course, I could move for a committee, but I do not wish to do so; I want, to point out that there is this discontent and dissatisfaction that the arrangements made have not proved entirely efficient, and to ask the Minister to name a committee to inquire into this question, which is one of so much importance to the farmers of the west.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Salaries of officers and inspectors of excise, and to provide for increases depending upon the result of the excise examinations $305,974

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Will the hon. Minister explain the cause of the decrease, amounting to $5,107?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). I remember that we superannuated an officer in New Brunswick, no collections having been made in his district. I am, however, unable, at present, to furnish the details respecting this reduction.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I suggest that this item be allowed to stand. I would remind the hon. gentleman that during the last four or five years the total average decreases in the Inland Revenue Department were much greater than those he has been able to effect for the coming year. I wish, however, to know in what direction reductions have been made. I would infer that the increases dependent upon this special examination have not been dispensed with, although the statutory increases of officers of the inside service have been abolished.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Let the item stand, and I will furnish the information desired.

To provide for extra duty pay at large distilleries and other factories..... $6,000

Mr. WALLACE. How much was expended last year?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. The total expenditure amounted to $6,147.21.

Preventive Service $10,000

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. This is $1,500 more than last year, and I am afraid that even that will not be enough. We find much difficulty in preventing illegal distillation, laying aside the difficulties that my hon. friend the Controller of Customs experiences in preventing smuggling. We find that the amount voted for the preventive service is not sufficient. To give you an idea of the illicit distillation in certain parts of the Dominion, I may say that during last year, in the province of Ontario, only two illicit distills were discovered; but I am sorry to say that in the province of Quebec fifty-five illicit stills were found; none in New Brunswick; seven in Nova Scotia; none in Prince Edward Island; and none in the other provinces. It really appears as if this illicit distillation was increasing in the most dangerous manner, and I believe we should exert every effort in order to stamp it out. If we compare the number of illicit stills discovered last year with those of the preceding years, we see that never have so many been found before. In 1895 there were in the province of Quebec only eighteen; in 1894, twenty; in 1893, twenty-eight; in 1892, twenty-four; and in 1891, ten. There was nearly as many illicit stills discovered last year as in the whole of the ten years preceding. I have done my best to put down this, what I consider to be a plague. In fact, I sent circulars to all the clergy of the province of Quebec, nearly 700 or 800 to the different parish priests.

Mr. HUGHES. What have they to do with illicit whisky?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Well, I sent circulars asking them to draw the attention of their parishioners to the danger of indulging in that illicit distillation, showing the severity of the law and the penalties, and trying to make the people understand that it was a sin against religion, against morality, and against their material prospects. In one word, I have done everything I could in order to remove any excuse that the people were ignorant of the law. From the time that I have sent out these circulars I have proceeded vigorously against any man who was found in possession of an illicit still. I think it will be easy to understand, under the circumstances, why we ask this $1,500 additional in order to try and protect the revenue.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am sorry we cannot agree with the Controller of Inland Revenue when he says that he has done everything in his power to stamp out illicit distillation, especially in the province of Quebec. Some weeks ago my hon. friend from Montcalm (Mr. Dugas) put a series of questions to my hon. friend (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière), about two persons in the province of Quebec who had been found guilty of illicit distillation. One was a man from the county of Portneuf which my hon. friend the Controller represents, who had been put into jail, and another was a gentleman from the city of Quebec—I use the word gentleman advisedly—a man by the name of George Vézina, and he was not put in jail. My hon. friend (Mr. Dugas) put the question to know why the distinction was made between this poor man who lived in the county of Portneuf, and who was put in jail, and this gentleman who resides in the city of Quebec. The latter had been convicted of illicit distilling, and had been found in possession of a large quantity of whisky and an illicit still in the province of Quebec, but he was not put in jail. After a good deal of skirmishing we found out that one had been jailed and the other had not. The hon. gentleman pursued the inquiry a little further, and he asked this question:

Is it not a fact that the present Controller of Inland Revenue gave orders to have George Vézina, of Quebec, imprisoned under conviction of having infringed the Inland Revenue law. If he did not, why did he not give the necessary instructions to carry out the sentence of the court? If he did give the instructions, why were they not carried out?

It was the Premier himself who gave the answer; my hon. friend the Controller of Inland Revenue being absent. The answer of the Prime Minister was, and I call the attention of the House to it:

When the present Government came into office, they found the case had been disposed of by their predecessors in office, and they did not deem it at all advisable to disturb the disposition of that case.

It was therefore stated in the House, that when my hon. friend the Controller of Inland Revenue took office, he found this case settled; he found that the old Government had passed upon this question, and he did not want to disturb it. But my hon. friend (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) says now that he did everything he could to stamp out illicit stills in the country, and especially in the province of Quebec. He has taken a course which seems to be extraordinary. He has been writing to the curés, and I do not believe that the curés distill illicit whisky in that province.

But, Sir, why did not the Controller of Inland Revenue apply the law? I am sorry to say that the answer given by the Government in the Vezina case is unfounded. As a matter of fact, this case was not settled when my hon. friend entered the department, and, as a matter of fact, the only thing which had been done by the Controller of Inland Revenue in the late Government was to give this man George Vezina delay. I will prove this to the satisfaction of the House. On the 21st October, 1896, the following letter was addressed to the agent of the Minister of Justice in Quebec:—

Sir,—Queen against Vézina—I have the honour to inform you, that I am to-day in receipt of a letter from the Department of Inland Revenue, stating that the delay granted in this matter has expired. The department would be glad if you would now enforce the judgment.

(Sgd.) E. L. NEWCOMBE,
Deputy Minister of Justice.

In face of the answer which was given to the House the other day that this matter had been settled by the former Government I think it well to read this letter which points out that the Controller of Inland Revenue himself had stated on the 21st October, 1896, that the delay in the case had expired, and that the judgment against George Vezina should be executed. But that is not all. On the 26th October, 1896, the agent of the Minister of Justice in Quebec received the following letter:—

Queen vs. Vézina.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 23rd instant, and to ask that you will have every effort made to have Vézina arrested.

Here, then, in a second letter addressed to the agent of the Minister of Justice in Quebec, asking the agent to have this man Vezina arrested. This is a second proof that this case had not been settled by the late Government, that it was still under the consideration of my hon. friend the Controller (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) and that he then had it in his power to imprison this man or let him go. Now, it is well known that George Vezina goes around in the streets of Quebec free, while another poor man, Jobin, who has fallen under the severe discipline of the law, has gone to jail. Here is a man who belongs to another class of society walking the streets, while my hon. friend addresses letters to the curés of Quebec. This case shows, first of all, that the hon. Premier, when he answered in the House the other day that this case had been settled by the Government which he had succeeded, said what was not founded in fact, and, no doubt unwittingly, misled the House; and my hon. friend, when he says that he has done everything in his power to put down illicit distilling in Canada, has not taken the steps that he should have taken to deal with this man Vezina, who was caught with an expensive still, manufacturing illicit whisky in the city of Quebec.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Perhaps you will remember that two or three weeks ago—I have not been able to ascertain the date—my hon. friend asked a question, which I answered in such a way that even his own friends could not help laughing, in regard to this same man Vezina, and this same poor man Jobin, who he says was sent to jail. The first question put by my hon. friend, so far as I can remember it, was this: "When was Jobin condemned for illicit distilling?" I answered: "Somewhere about January or February, 1896;" that is to say, when my hon. friends opposite were in power. His next question was: "When was Jobin sent to jail?" The answer was: "He was sent to jail by the late Government about April, 1896." The second question was: "When was Vezina condemned to jail?" The answer was: "Somewhere about March, 1896." At the moment when hon. gentlemen opposite were sending that poor man Jobin to jail, they got a conviction against Vezina. The last question, which was certainly a most amusing one, was: "Why was Vezina not sent to jail?" And I was obliged to answer: "It is impossible for me to say why the late Government did not send him to jail." Afterwards, in the month of October, I think, I received a letter from Mrs. Jobin, complaining that her husband was still in jail, while Vezina was not in jail. If my hon. friend will ask for all the papers, he will at once see the position I took. I appealed to His Excellency the Governor General to let out Jobin before his term of imprisonment had expired, and at the same time I took proceedings to send Vezina to jail; and if my hon. friend will only ask for the papers, I shall be obliged to submit all the papers to the House, including certain confidential letters which I found among them, which will explain why Vezina was not sent to jail. I have always refused to mention those letters, and I do not wish to take advantage of my hon. friend's imprudence; but if my hon. friend will ask for the papers, I will bring them down, and they will show exactly what took place, and why the late Government did not send Vezina to jail. When I thought it was my duty to send him to jail, I did everything I could. I ordered him to be arrested, and then I got representations from his counsel, who told me that he had actually been sued for the same offence under four different heads, and had been fined $100, which he had paid. If I had been here on the 3rd of May, when the hon. leader of the Government answered the question in my absence, I would have explained exactly what had taken place. I would have explained why the Minister of Justice, in April or May last, stopped the proceedings against Vezina. If the papers are produced before the House, it will be seen exactly why Vezina was not sent to jail.

Mr. CASGRAIN. My hon. friend has not answered the gravamen of the accusation, if it is an accusation, which is that the House was misled by the hon. the Premier. I have no doubt that if my hon. friend had been here, he would not have given the same answer, because it is absolutely unfounded in fact, and contrary to the fact; and if I had not followed up the matter, probably the House would not have been informed of the true state of the case. My hon. friend has tried to make a comparison between the case of Vezina and the case of Jobin; but he has not answered at all what I said. Jobin was convicted in January, 1896, and was imprisoned in April, 1896. As in all these cases, a certain delay was granted to him to pay his fine or to see whether he could get some respite by petitions presented to the Governor in Council. Vezina was convicted at the end of March, and he obtained a delay. My hon. friend asks: Why was he not put in jail immediately? Because he had obtained the same delay that Jobin had obtained. My hon. friend knows that in the month of May the Ministers were engaged in the general elections, and he probably knows, or if not, he will find it out by the records, that Vezina was then hiding and the officers of the law could not lay their hands on him. But my hon. friend came into office in July, 1896, and with his well-known desire to have everything clean and fresh around him, he should then have taken up the case of George Vezina and have seen whether or not the sentence of the court could be carried out. It was not carried out, however, even after my hon. friend had been a long while in office. It was only after the matter was brought to his notice that he woke up and said that Vezina must be put in jail. Now, he tells us that a member telegraphed to the Minister of Justice to suspend proceedings and not carry out the sentence of the court. My hon. friend had written two letters to the Minister of Justice, assuming that the sentence would be carried out, and properly so, because if there is one thing which should be put down it is the manufacture of illicit whisky—not only because it is in contravention of the law but because the stuff itself is poisonous. There have been cases around Quebec of people who have become crazy through this vile compound. It was the bounden duty of my hon. friend to have the sentence of the law carried out. He says that he could produce letters marked "Confidential" which he has found in the records, and by which the House would see why the sentence is not carried out. I know the hon. gentleman well enough to believe that if he found confidential letters left in the records by mistake by one of his predecessors, his chivalrous nature would not allow him to lay them before Parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASGRAIN. However he may put any letters, confidential or otherwise before the House, he cannot get out of the predicament that he has not done what the law says must be done. He has not had the sentence of the court carried out, and to-day this man walks the streets of Quebec freely, while poor men who have been convicted of the same offence are languishing in jail. He has not met the charge either that the answer given by the hon. First Minister is in direct contradiction with the facts found in the record.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I am perfectly convinced that when the hon. First Minister made that answer he made it to the best of his knowledge.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is what I said. I do not mean to imply the contrary at all.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. No doubt he was led to give it by the replies I had given to some other questions, in which I referred to the conduct of the preceding Government.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). If my memory serves me rightly, I think that the item in question was reduced during the last three or four years of the late Administration from $17,000 down to $8,500. I am very much afraid that the extraordinary increase in the excise duties upon tobacco has alarmed the Controller and his colleagues, and that consequently they deem it necessary to increase the vote for this service. My own opinion is that the changes made in the excise regulations will not only fail to increase the revenue but will add to the increase in the cost of the preventive service, the first intimation of which we have in the item under discussion. Is this increase made for the purpose of employing new officials? Does the hon. gentleman intend to add to the preventive service?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I am not prepared exactly to say what we will do. It will depend on the circumstances. That amount of $1,500 is, after all, a very small amount compared to the increase of the duties, and we must expect that the temptation to smuggle will be increased by the higher excise. We are simply asking the House to vote us this additional amount, in case we should find it necessary to use it.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I quite appreciate the danger, which the hon. gentleman mentions, of increased smuggling, owing to the greater temptation caused by the recent changes in the tariff. But I would point out that if he sees fit to employ any more officials, I would recommend a very good man whom he dismissed, for what purpose I do not know. I refer to Capt. Clark, who has done very good service as a preventive officer. The late Government were of opinion that the officers of the Inland Revenue Department, in every district, ought to undertake a large part of this preventive service work. We sent out circulars three or four years in succession to the collectors and inspectors in every inland revenue district, enjoining them to do the work of preventive officers. It is well known that the regulations regarding the sale of tobacco are very often more honoured in the breach than in the observance, and we pointed out to the officials of the department that it would be very easy for them, in the towns and villages of their districts, to occasionally visit the tobacco stores as a part of their ordinary work. We were thus enabled to reduce that item for preventive service from $17,000 in 1891 to $8,250 in 1896. I would impress upon the hon. Controller that instead of increasing this item, he should enjoin his officials to show greater vigilance in the exercise of their work throughout their various districts. So far as my personal recollection goes, I can only speak in the highest terms of the officers of the Inland Revenue Department, both in the inside and outside services. They did do the greater part of the work, and consequently the average amount of smuggling during the past ten or fifteen years has not increased very much. In fact I do not think there were half a dozen convictions for illicit distillation in Ontario during that many years.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not think the committee under the circumstances will refuse this increase of $1,500, especially as last year we ran short in the preventive service. When I took charge of the department I was very much struck with the number of officers I found there, especially temporary officers. When the Supplementary Estimates come down, it will be my duty to explain this matter. Perhaps it might have been wiser on my part to have said to these temporary officers whom I found in the department: It will be impossible for me to retain your services. If their services were wanted, they ought to have been made permanent officers. But I wished to spare them as much as possible, and did not want to disturb one of them so long as it could be avoided. I kept them as long as I could—too long, in fact. There were many of these temporary officers who were appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite, some a few weeks, some a month or two, before the last election. But I kept them longer than I ought to have done until I found that I ran short of the funds necessary to pay them. When the supplementaries come down, it will be my duty to read a list of names and explain who they are. I hope that the committee will not refuse the $1,500, because that would hurt the service. While hon. gentlemen opposite reduced the preventive service from $17,000 to $8,500, it must not be forgotten that a result of this was an increase in the illicit distilling, until we had no less than fifty-five illicit stills in the province of Quebec alone. An increase in the preventive service is necessary in order to check illicit distilling.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I do not think the hon. gentleman should ask for this increase on that ground alone, because I think the officers who are now engaged in the preventive service are sufficient for the work. Still, if he does think it necessary to increase the number of officials, I would like to call his attention to the case of one or two men who were dismissed on the ground of economy, and I would ask him to reinstate them in their old places.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Who are they?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I refer particularly to Captain Clark. I ask the hon. gentleman to take his case into consideration. In view of the number of illicit distillations that have taken place in the province of Quebec, it is possible that the hon. Controller may have some justification for the increase. At the same time, I may tell the hon. gentleman, I will watch with curiosity the appointments made, it having already been stated that his other officers were dismissed on the ground of economy.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. They have not been dismissed, but I have been obliged to notify them that I had no more money to pay them. Some of them I should be glad to take back. On the question of dismissals I am ready to meet my hon. friend (Mr. Wood). During the long discussions that we have had on the question of dismissals, I have not opened my lips. If any one finds fault with my dealings with the officers of my department, I am ready to meet him and to account for every act I have performed.

Mr. BERGERON. I would ask the hon. Controller of Inland Revenue where is Ve-zina now, and is it the intention of the department to see that the law follows its course in his case ?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I suppose Vezina is in Quebec.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to know if the hon. gentleman intends to see that the law takes its course in his case ?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I may say to the hon. gentleman that if he wishes to get the papers in this case, he can do so ; and he will then understand more about the case than he does now.

Mr. BERGERON. It seems to me the hon. gentleman grows impatient. In listening to what has been said in the debate, I have learned that two men were accused of violating the inland revenue law—Jobin, who was condemned to jail and who is now in jail, and in whose favour my hon. friend (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) was kind enough to send a petition to the Governor General asking for his relief at the solicitation of his wife, and Vezina, who is not in jail, but on the streets of Quebec. I want to know if the Department of Inland Revenue intends that the law is to be carried out and Vezina treated like Jobin ; and if not, why not ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why did you not carry out the law ?

Mr. BERGERON. I never was a Minister, I never had the administration of law in my hands.

An hon. MEMBER. Shortis case.

Mr. BERGERON. I have seen enough of the Shortis business.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Do I understand that my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) is asking me a question ?

Mr. BERGERON. I have asked a question, but it appears I have not been understood. I have not asked for all the papers in the case. My hon. friend the Controller of Inland Revenue can answer the question with a "yes" or "no." Is it the hon. gentleman's intention to see to it that the law is carried out in the case of Vezina as in the case of Jobin ?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Will the hon. gentleman tell me why his friends did not punish Vezina ? If he will answer that, I will try to give him an answer to his question.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not understand—

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Will the hon. gentleman say why the former Government did not punish Vezina ?

Mr. BERGERON. That is not an answer to my question. The hon. gentleman (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) is now in charge of the Department of Inland Revenue, and he, and not the ex-Minister, is accountable for the administration of the department. There is a man named Vezina. So we have learned since this discussion began. For my part, I know nothing about Vezina. We are told that he was accused of committing some act in contravention of the inland revenue law, and that he was found guilty. But instead of being punished, he is on the streets of Quebec a free man. Another man named Jobin committed the same offence, and was sent to jail. I want to know why Vezina is not punished the same as the other man who committed the same offence. It seems to me that that is a reasonable question, and the hon. Controller should be ready to tell us whether the law will be allowed to take its course or not. The old Government has nothing to do with the case.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not know that the old Government have nothing to do with it. They may have had some good reason for not sending Vezina to jail. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) wants to find out the reasons, he can ask for the papers.

Mr. FOSTER. I really think that my hon. friend the Controller of Inland Revenue does not treat questioners on this side of the House entirely right. It is a well known fact that when Ministers are putting through their estimates, they are likely to have questions put to them, and when plain questions are put to them it is always a matter of rule and courtesy to answer. But to give an evasive answer as my hon. friend has done, and instead of saying whether he proposes to carry out the law against Vezina, to ask my hon. friend why it was not carried out by some one else, is not an answer to the question, and is not treating the questioner fairly. My hon. friend is now the executive head, he is responsible for carrying out the law, and the simple question that was put to him, was this : Vezina having been condemned for transgressing the law, does my hon. friend intend to carry out the penalty against him ? That is a question which is certainly proper to ask, and a fair one to answer. Then with reference to another point. My hon. friend is asking for $1,500 additional to his Estimates. Now, no Minister ever comes down to the House and asks for an addition to the Estimates, unless he has really some grounds for asking it, and the question is put as to whether this $1,500 was for the employment of new men, or was to increase the salaries of old men ; and I tried to get an answer to that, but I did not hear that my hon. friend answered it. Why, the simplest and plainest duty of a Minister is to give at least the general reasons why he asks for a vote. Surely he knows whether he wants it for additional help or to increase the salaries of old employees, or he would not ask for the vote, but neither of these questions have been answered. I put it to my hon. friend if he does not think that he ought to answer those questions, especially the one as to what course he intends to pursue. If the hon. Minister is not going to carry out the law against those who violated it, there is the best of reasons why the House should not give him the money that he asks; if he is going to carry out the law, that is a good reason for the House to vote him the money. But surely it is a simple question to ask, whether Vezina, having transgressed, is still within the toils, and whether my hon. friend proposes to put the clappers on him.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. If the House chooses to blame me for the way in which I have dealt with Vezina, I am quite willing to submit to its decision. That is the answer I give now. As to what I will do in the future, I will take my own counsel on the subject and do what I consider best.

Mr. FOSTER. Then will my hon. friend kindly answer as to what he has done with Vezina?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have already said what I have done, the explanation has already been given, and I do not see why I should go over the same grounds again.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has one good reason for going over the ground, and that is that I did not hear him answer that question. I would like to have that question answered. It is a mere matter of courtesy between the hon. gentleman and the hon. member on this side of the House.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Vezina and Jobin were both condemned last winter, when my hon. friend was a member of the Government, and when he ought to be answerable as well as his colleagues for the action of the Government in not sending Vezina to jail, whilst Jobin was sent to jail. In October last my attention was drawn to the fact that Jobin was still in jail, and that Vezina was not. Jobin was in jail because he had been convicted, and had not paid the fine to which he was condemned. I thought it was my duty to punish Vezina as Jobin had been punished, and I therefore took such measures as would bring Vezina to jail. When the order was given to arrest him, I received a letter from the legal gentleman who had defended Vezina, and who drew my attention to the fact—I wish I had the letter here that I might read it—that Vezina had been condemned on four different heads for the same offence. He had been condemned to one month's imprisonment and a fine of $500, and again to an imprisonment, I think, of six months, and to a fine of $500. I did not believe, at first, that these sentences were for one and the same offence, I thought there had been a new violation of the law which had brought about all these condemnations against Vezina. When I found that Vezina had been condemned to those four penalties for the same act, and when I found that he had paid the $100 fine, then for the moment I stopped proceedings. When I found that he had been sued on four different heads for the same offence, that he had paid his fine of $100, and when I found it was a custom in the excise district of Quebec, when a fine was paid, not to insist upon imprisonment, then I thought there must have been some persecutions connected with it. I could not understand how four different convictions could be obtained against one man for the same offence, and that is why I stopped the proceedings. My hon. friend wants to know what I mean to do with these $1,500. I think I have frankly said that I do not know exactly whether I shall require it or not. As for increasing the salaries of public officers, my hon. friend is always afraid that I shall do that, he showed the other day his objection to my giving an increased salary to an officer who certainly deserved it. If I find officers who deserve to have their salaries increased in the preventive service, then I will come before the House and ask for leave to increase those salaries. For the present I am not ready to say what we are going to do with this $1,500; I only ask the committee to show sufficient confidence in my purpose to administer this department with economy, and to reduce the expenditure as much as possible, and at the same time to give me credit for $1,500, with my assurance that it will certainly not be wasted if it should not be wanted.

Mr. BERGERON. I am glad the hon. gentleman has given us this information, if he had done so at first this matter would have been settled long ago. Now I understand the Vezina matter well, and I have no doubt that what the hon. gentleman says is absolutely correct. I am ready, even, to support what he has done, and to say that so far as I am concerned I have no more information to ask on that subject. The hon. gentleman said a moment ago that he had not said much about dismissals. That is true; we have not heard much from him about dismissals since that matter has been discussed in this House. I may ask my hon. friend, however, if he will allow me, and if he will take it good-naturedly why he has dismissed this officer in Valleyfield, a gentleman of whom I think he will get very good reports from his department. I would be very glad if he would tell me. I imagine that in doing so he has followed the course taken by two of his colleagues, because this gentleman was an employee of the three departments. I would be very glad if the hon. gentleman would tell me why he has dismissed Mr. Danis. He was a good employee, and was doing his work well.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I said that I was ready to explain every dismissal that I have made since I took charge of this department, this as well as all the others. My hon. friend will understand at once why I was obliged to dispense with the services of Mr. Danis. He is not an officer of my department, he has not been appointed to my department by an Order in Council, he is only a temporary officer of the department. But Mr. Danis is one of those men who have been appointed according to law to collect our dues on commission, in cases where we do not think it proper to appoint an officer on purpose to represent the excise department. I may say we have got perhaps fifteen or twenty cases like this, in which we give to a collector of customs the collection of dues for the Inland Revenue Department. The law allows us to do that, but it only allows us to give that collection on commission to the customs-house officers. The moment that Mr. Danis ceased to be collector of customs, according to law, I had to withdraw from him the collection of our dues on commission. The law did not allow me to leave in his hands the collection of dues the moment he ceased to be an officer of the department.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand, then, from the hon. Minister that the officer who will do this work in the future will be the new appointee of the Department of Customs?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am of the opinion, after listening to the statements made by the hon. Controller of Inland Revenue, that the staff under his charge can be reduced. I believe it will be found, when the hon. Minister makes a personal investigation, that the department is over-manned. I do not think it will be necessary to increase the staff even if there is increased work owing to changes in the tariff. The staff of the Inland Revenue Department at present numbers 335 officers, who receive annually $324,232, or very nearly $1,000 for each man. The entire collections are $7,959,446. Of these officers, there are in Ontario, 191, Quebec, 78, New Brunswick, 11, Nova Scotia, 14, Prince Edward Island, 2, Manitoba, 13, North-west Territories, 4, British Columbia, 15, Cape Breton, 1. There are, in addition, nine inspectors. After the hon. Minister has spent some time in thoroughly investigating his department, I earnestly hope he will be able to make recommendations in the direction of reductions next session, and that hon. gentlemen opposite will not come down with insinuations that such officers have been dismissed for political purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. I have been waiting for some remarks from the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). Three or four days ago when referring to the Inland Revenue Department, he declared war against it. His war is of a very mild type indeed. However, he has been a little better than the hon. member for Huron, who also made a declaration of war against this department the other day and announced what he was prepared to do when the Estimates came up, but so soon as the House got into Committee of Supply the hon. gentleman left the Chamber. I wish to say to the hon. Controller that I thank him very much for the information he gave in regard to the case in Quebec. I certainly did not understand it until he explained it to me. The explanation is, that although this man was condemned on four counts—and it seems strange he could be condemned on four counts unless he were guilty—he was let off on payment of a fine, which was the penalty on one of the counts. That may be a sufficient penalty; I am willing to leave to the Controller the exercise of his discretion in regard to the amount. With respect to the $1,500 increase, I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he would not use any of this sum for the purpose of increasing the salaries of his officers without coming down to the House and stating the amount required.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. My hon. friend will excuse me. I said I did not propose to increase the salaries of any of the present staff without asking the House to agree to those increases.

Mr. FOSTER. The trouble is that the hon. gentleman takes a lump vote, and not one of his officers is named here, and so the hon. gentleman has power to increase the salaries by Order in Council. However, I have no doubt that as the hon. gentleman has made that statement, he will not increase any salary without notifying the House of it, and I am quite willing to trust my hon. friend, although I received a shock by the action of a Minister—which I will bring up in due time—where he made Parliament a solemn promise and violated it. The Minister of Public Works went back on a promise he made, but I will give him notice before I bring up the matter. There is one point on which the House is inexorable, it does not trust any Minister simply on the ground of good-will. The items must be explained and the reasons for increases given. The hon. Minister has in his own mind some plan for using the $1,500 increase. No doubt he will use it rightly, but the House asks for the items to be explained before they are passed. The hon. gentleman's explanation, I understand is, that there will be greater inducements probably for smuggling under the proposed tariff, and therefore he may have to use a certain amount extra. So far as that explanation goes, I am willing to accept it on this occasion.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I desire now to offer an explanation respecting the decrease of $5,107 in salaries of officers and inspectors of excise. Several officers, whose names I can give the committee if hon. gentlemen require them, have been retired and some have died. The reductions in this way amounted to $18,320. The new appointments to replace those officers involve an expenditure of $9,100, leaving a decrease of $9,220. Then there are the following allowances to be made: Changes in classification, $222; regular increases of salaries, $3,216; appointments made in 1896-97, not provided for in the Estimates, $673. These amounts make up a total of $4,112, which deducted from $9,220, leaves a net decrease of $5,107.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). In what particular branch of the work of the department have these decreases been made?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. In the excise branch.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). In view of the new appointments and superannuations, it is evident that this is simply a reduction for this year.

Travelling, rent, fuel, &c..... $48,000

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I observe there is an increase of $400. While the increase is small, I hold that this is an item which should be kept down to the lowest point. There should not be an increase in the cost of collecting the revenue in this department. A careful examination will show that during the last three or four years, apart from the statutory increases of officials in the inside service, there was no substantial increase made. That was the policy of the department in reference to this item about which so much discussion has taken place, and which the hon. the Controller has asked to be increased for the coming year. We brought it down from $17,500 to $8,000, because I felt that that was an item, which of all others, might be abused; and so long as the Minister has more on hand than is necessary, there is always an excuse for appointing some person. That is why I would urge on the hon. gentleman not to ask for any greater amount than usual.

Mr. FOSTER. Did I understand my hon. friend the Controller to say, that he had made a saving of $18,000 by dismissals in this branch?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Not by dismissals. I do not think there are any dismissals in the whole of that list.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they superannuations?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. No. In the case of Mr. Borrodale who was inspector for Nova Scotia,

Mr. FOSTER.

hon. gentlemen opposite superannuated him before I came to the department. His salary was $2,500 and I recommended that this inspectorship should be abolished, and that the inspector for New Brunswick should have charge of the three maritime provinces with an increase of $200 a year, thus effecting a saving of $2,300. There were also several retirements such as Mr. Devine and Mr. Lavallee of Joliette.

Mr. BERGERON. Who replaced Mr. Lavallee?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I cannot say for the moment. In the case of Mr. Lawlor at Chatham whose salary was $1,200 a year, his office was abolished because we found that all the collections were made at Newcastle, and it was perfectly useless to have a collector at Chatham who collected nothing.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the salary of Mr. Lavallee?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. $300. The total amount in these cases is $12,770, plus $5,550 the salaries of those who were removed, and altogether that makes a sum of $18,320. The officers who were paid that total salary of $18,320 were replaced by officers who only received $9,100, so that made a decrease of $9,220. But this sum of $9,220 is not the accurate diminution of our expenditure, and for this reason. We had on account of changes in classification, $222; for regular increases, $3,260, and for appointments made in 1896-97, $673. That made altogether $4,112, which deducted from $9,220, leaves a balance of $5,107, which is the lesser amount which we are now asking for.

Mr. BERGERON. Who replaced Mr. Lavallee at Joliette, and what salary does he get?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Mr. St. Michel replaced Mr. Lavallee and he gets $100 less, or $200 a year.

Mr. DUGAS. I think the man who replaces Mr. Lavallee is not Mr. St. Michel, but Mr. Bazinet who is a brother of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Bazinet).

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not think Mr. Bazinet replaced Mr. Lavallee. He may have replaced somebody else. Mr. St. Michel replaced Mr. Lavallee. You know it is rather hard, with over 400 employees to be able to account exactly at once for every one of them, and to tell the changes that have been made.

Mr. DUGAS. I only want to know about this one. I know that Mr. Bazinet did replace Mr. Lavallee.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). What was the income with reference to methylated spirits last year, was it an increase or a decrease?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. The net income was about $16,000. That is to say, over the $70,000 we have cleared $16,000.

Culling Timber..... $16,750

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have an explanation of this increase of $50 in the salary of the book-keeper.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. This is an officer who appeared to deserve the increase. He rendered excellent service in the department, and the supervisor has advised the increase. Besides, I may say he is doing the work of a man who had $2,000 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is following the bad example of the Controller of Customs, and is making holes through this general policy of the Government not to grant any statutory increases.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. This is not a statutory increase.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not a statutory increase, but it is better than a statutory increase. There are some persons who get this increase, while the great masses of deserving clerks get nothing.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. All those who have got the increase have been appointed by our hon. friends opposite.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is controlling his own Estimates.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Strike it out.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I would be sorry to strike it out. If there are serious objections to it, I shall have to strike it out, but we are trying to render justice to these men.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I would like to ask if the Government are giving any attention to the question of abolishing this branch. In pursuance of what I believed to be the duty of the Government in that behalf, I recommended two years ago a very substantial decrease in the Estimates for this branch—nearly $10,000 less than my hon. friend is asking this year. There is a feeling pervading the minds of the public in the province of Ontario, that we ought not to pay out of the general funds of this country any money for the inspection of timber, which now goes to Quebec; and while the late Government did not see their way clear to the entire abolition of this branch, they did reduce the cost two years ago about 35 per cent from the cost of previous years. The diminution my hon. friend has been able to make this year has been very little.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. The decrease is $950; but I am happy to say the revenue will be increased by nearly one-third. Last year the lumber merchants made an offer to the Government to pay 25 per cent more in the fees for culling. For some reason or other that offer was not taken advantage of; but we are going to take advantage of it, so that we shall have over $3,000 in excess of what we had last year. Nevertheless, I agree with my hon. friend, and I will be very glad to consider the question of abolishing that branch altogether.

It being Six o'clock, the Committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I would like to ask the Controller of Inland Revenue for the names of the cullers who were superannuated?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I did not superannuate them. They were superannuated by my hon. friend. I am sorry to say I have not the list with me.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I think I had the word of my hon. friend this afternoon that he would consider the question of abolishing this branch altogether. The late Government went as far as possible to reduce the expenditure. The item is a very exceptional one. The reason that existed for this provision several years ago, when square timber was sent in large quantities to Quebec, has disappeared almost altogether under the altered condition of things; and we are really keeping it for the benefit of a particular class. I realize how difficult it is for the Government to do at once any more than we have done. Still, it may be possible to make some further reduction before another year comes round.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. It was proposed to make the culling optional, and leave the cullers to be paid by fees, like other classes of inspectors. I certainly think that would be the wisest course to adopt, for this reason, that the timber merchants in Quebec are willing to pay the fees. We have no difficulty in Quebec; but we have a difficulty in Montreal, where I have to admit we have not found the means of carrying out the law so easily as in Quebec, and my hon. friend can perhaps understand why. When the raft reaches Quebec in cribs, it is taken to pieces, and then it is easy to measure the timber, and everybody is satisfied to pay the fees. But in Montreal there are no coves as in Quebec where the timber can be counted; but it arrives on cars, which are run along the wharfs, and the timber is at once put on the ships. The ships will not wait until the timber can be measured, and consequently we find the greatest difficulty in getting it measured. I cannot help thinking that it would be much wiser to make the culling optional, and leave those who choose to avail themselves of it, the buyer and the seller, to arrange among themselves to pay the cullers by fees, as in the case of the inspection of fish and other things.

Mr. McMULLEN. I went carefully over the accounts during ten years of the previous Government, and I found that in those ten years we paid out over $165,000 for salaries and collected $101,000, so that we lost $64,000 by keeping the staff of cullers at Montreal and Quebec. It is time the whole system was abolished or else put in such a position that those who do the work simply get the fees. The staff should have been cut down years ago, and I am glad to hear the hon. Controller say he intends taking the whole matter into his consideration.

Salaries of officers, inspectors and assistant inspectors of weights and measures $49,010

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I would like to give a few explanations to the committee. It will be noticed that last year the sum of $56,850 was asked for this service, which is now reduced to $49,010, making a reduction of $7,840. This is only the beginning of the reductions I propose to make in this service, and it has been accomplished by amalgamating a certain number of districts of weights and measures, one with another, and by reducing the number. For instance, the division of King's, N.B., has been amalgamated with St. John, that of London and Ontario has been amalgamated with that of Windsor, and one of the inspectors superannuated and not replaced, which makes a saving of $1,200. The division of Kingston has been amalgamated with Belgium, and an inspector superannuated and not replaced, making a saving of $1,300. Orillia has been amalgamated with Toronto, making a saving of $1,000. Edmonton and Calgary have been amalgamated with Winnipeg, making only one division, and effecting a saving of $500. Prince Albert has been amalgamated with Assiniboia, making a saving of $600. The reason why I say that I hope to be able to make much greater reductions in the future is this: The expenditure on the branch of weights and measures in the last year was $70,359, and the revenue only $36,869, leaving a deficit of $33,490. If I can effect a shrinkage in the expenditure so as to make it meet the revenue, I would then say to the House: If you choose to continue and assume the responsibility of working this department, provided it does not entail any expenditure, there cannot be very much objection to it in its present condition. In England this question of weights and measures is entrusted to the county council, and it would be perfectly fair to do the same thing here. I have the latest regulations adopted in England, under which the important duty of verifying and inspecting weights and measures is carried on by the local authorities. The objection will be made that we cannot allow every municipality to have different weights and measures, and you must reserve to the Government the custody of the standards, so as to ensure uniformity all over the Dominion, as otherwise we would return to that condition which used to exist, not so much in Canada as in Europe, where every county had a different set of weights and measures. I am not going to ask the House to consider any measure this session, but I think it is right to express the views which the experience of a few months has given me. I consider that there are two applications of the system of weights and measures. I would like to classify the work which so far has been carried on by the central Government by dividing it into two classes. On one side I would place what I consider the enforced and on the other what I consider the optional way, and I would like to diminish what I consider the optional way. There are some things which I look upon as inevitable. For instance, in the case of the large elevators, as in the North-west, we must keep in our hands the responsibility of standing between the farmers on the one side and those corporations which own the elevators on the other. A farmer arrives with a load of wheat. It is dumped at once into the elevator, and he has not the remotest chance of checking the weight given to him on a piece of paper, and no wonder that the system engenders a certain amount of suspicion and complaint in his mind which it is very difficult to allay without a system of inspection of the scales. It is ridiculous that scales that are put to such work as are those of the grain elevators should be inspected only once in two years. Nevertheless, that is the law. But if I am allowed, as I hope to be, to alter this system, I should like to take a part of the money we spend more or less uselessly and spend it more usefully in having an inspection in these cases every six months or every three months, or even oftener as experience shows that it is required. There are certain cases in which it is compulsory upon the producer to have his produce weighed, and to have no control of the weighing. It is in such cases that we must stand between the seller and the buyer—for instance, between the farmers of the North-west and the great corporation that own the elevators. Then, as to the coal mines in Nova Scotia, I would like the committee to understand how childish it is to suppose that an inspection once every twenty-four months can assure the correctness of scales subject to such heavy work as these in the coal mines. I have heard of complaints among coal miners. Workmen paid by the weight, not unnaturally, have a suspicion of their employers.

Sir HENRI JOLY DE LOTBINIERE.

They complain of the scales, and say that they are not justly treated. A couple of months ago, I sent an inspector especially to inspect the scales of the coal mines of Nova Scotia. I received his report, and from that report I can see how indispensable it is, if we want to remove suspicion among a large class of coal miners, just as if we wish to remove in the case of the farmers of the west, we must provide that the inspection shall take place oftener than once in two years. Then, again, there are the platform scales in railway stations. I look upon this as one of the cases in which it is compulsory upon the producer to weigh his goods without being able to control the weighing. It would be very easy for us to inspect the scales at the railway stations, as they would all be so easily accessible to the inspectors travelling by train. There are other inspections that it is indispensable we should keep in our own hands. The inspection of electric light meters is one of these and the inspection of gas meters is another. We have beautiful apparatus all over the Dominion used for the purpose of making inspections of gas and electric light meters. In this case also it is not possible for the consumer to protect himself. How can a consumer know whether a meter measures correctly the amount of gas or electric light that is consumed. On the other side, it appears to me, such inspections as are not necessarily compulsory might be handed over to the municipal authorities. For instance, the inspection of scales of grocers, butchers, confectioners, and all that class of retailers, the correctness of which is more or less within the control of the purchaser. Any one who goes to buy a pound of tea or five or six pounds of sugar, if he has any observation or common sense can soon discover whether he is getting proper measure. He can protect himself, if only by going to another store. A man is not at the mercy of the retailer. It must be well understood that while I classify this inspection of weights and measures in two classes, while I would like to retain the most important ones, particularly that connected with the farming operation, which form the greatest trade, at the same time, it must be well understood that I would propose—because I am not asking this session that the law should be changed, but merely outline what I think is desirable—the Government should maintain control of the inspection of primary scales so as to secure uniformity throughout the country. For instance, every electoral division, if we chose to manage it in that way, might have a standard scale which would be inspected and stamped as correct and in conformity with the standards we have here in Ottawa. I do not see why the system that prevails in England should not prevail here. I do not see why we should saddle ourselves with a responsibility which brings such a heavy deficit every year, especially for such a system as we have. What is the advantage of an inspection made once in two years? Any dishonest retailer can change his balance the moment the inspector's back is turned.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How is the period of two years fixed, by statute or by Order in Council?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. By statute. I need hardly tell my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) that in a number of cases we found that inspections had not been made for four or five or even six years. It is very easy to understand why this is so. The weights and measures inspectors are paid, not by the amount they do, not by fees. And those whose scales they inspect and who are obliged to pay them certain fees—making up the amount of $36,000 of revenue—are not anxious to get the inspectors of weights and measures for the very reason that they are compelled to pay a fee when they come, which fee is returned to the exchequer. There is not profit in it for the inspectors either, as they are paid by the year. I think the inspection of such scales should be left to the municipal authorities as in England. In this connection I would like to refer to market scales. I have not been able to find what profit they bring to all our cities, but I have the figures in a few cases. In Quebec the market scales were rented last year for $1,227; in Toronto this privilege brought $6,230; I find that in Montreal the weighing by market scales brought $10,927. I think it is perfectly clear that we should try to find means of bringing under the municipal authorities that part of the inspection which can be done much better under those authorities, and which they already do to a certain degree. We can scarcely open a paper without seeing that a batch of a certain baker's loaves have been confiscated because they are of light weight. It was not our officers who ascertained that, it was a municipal officer. I may say the same thing of a good many other items, which show how much better the service would be performed if it was performed in some other way than at present, that is, to put it in charge of those who are directly interested in seeing it well administered. I have now given you my views of the service, formed after the comparatively short experience that I have had in this department; and I shall be very glad to hear what can be said by my hon. friend from Brockville, and others who have had experience.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I do not think I shall attempt to follow my hon. friend in all the points which he has no doubt carefully examined. I will point out, in the first place, that which I think has escaped his notice, that in passing the law relative to weights and measures, Parliament had in mind this very important fact, that to a certain extent the public had to be guarded against themselves as a result of their own ignorance. In the first place the weights and measures branch of that department never was intended to be self-sustaining, at least for many years. I cannot say at this moment whether, under the system that has been in vogue in England, the amounts received from fees in the weights and measures branch are equal to the expenditure. I imagine, however, that even in England my hon. friend will find, if he further investigates the subject, which he has undoubtedly studied to a considerable extent, that very accurate reports must be made to Parliament by that branch of the public service in which this information could be ascertained. But if he expects that he is ever going to get the receipts from weights and measures to equal the expenditure, I am bound to say that he will be mistaken, because I do not think that can take place for many years to come. I speak within the hearing of the Commissioner of Inland Revenue, who is himself an authority on the subject, and I think I speak in accordance with his own views upon that matter. My hon. friend must bear in mind that in legislating upon subjects of this kind, you cannot expect, and it never was in the mind of Parliament, that your income should be equal to the expenditure when the object of legislation is the protection of the public against themselves. Now there is a valid reason made by the Controller to-night in favour of what he calls municipal inspection, that does not make with equal force to any legislation which we might have in regard to the inspection of electric lights and gas. If anything, there is much more reason why any legislation pertaining to the weights and measures, which in itself is a subject closely connected with trade and commerce, should be a subject of legislation here, and that gas and electric lights should rather be relegated to the municipal authorities. That is my opinion. Parliament, in undertaking any legislation, should not separate the jurisdiction, leaving a portion within the purview of this legislature, and relegating the rest of it to the municipal authorities. I point out, also, one effect, I think, of the system which he has outlined as possibly containing his policy for the future upon this branch of the subject, and that is that there is no doubt at all but that if you divested this Parliament of its jurisdiction over inspection of gas and electric light, you make it optional to the municipalities to perform that inspection, and you will find gas and electric lights inspected in one municipality and not in another. The very object which you are seeking for, that is uniformity in legislation of this kind, would be defeated by thus dividing the jurisdiction in this Federal Parliament and relegating a portion of it to the municipalities. Now, that briefly is my comment upon what my hon. friend has said. If, however, he seeks to find by analogy a law which he would like to adopt, then I must point out to him what I have done on previous occasions to this Parliament, and ask him whether it would not be better on his part to adopt the metrical system of measurement in preference to the system now in vogue, and which is in force in England. If he chooses to take up legislation on the subject he has outlined to-night, of course that could only be done in the way of a Bill, and would be fruitful of much discussion. Now one of the objects of the late Government in enacting the legislation which the Controller has alluded to respecting the inspection of electric lights and establishments for measuring, was that the deficiency on the revenue obtained might be made up. I am glad to learn from the information that I have received from the department, that the expectations of the late Government in that respect are being very nearly met, and it can only be a matter of a year or two until, under the wise legislation, I must say, of the late Government, the expenditure and revenue in that important branch, will be equalized, as they are already nearly so. I cannot, however, hold out any hope for attaining any such results in connection with any such legislation as exists in England in regard to weights and measures. I think on the whole it would be much better to retain in the hands of this Parliament the sole jurisdiction in regard to that matter. Now let me point out further to the Controller of Inland Revenue, that in making combinations uniting the weights and measures inspection districts, I think he has only followed an Order in Council passed by the late Government requiring that that should be done in certain inspection districts. I think the Controller will find that I am right in this statement, and that he is taking the first opportunity of uniting those districts where it is possible. I was somewhat surprised to find that notwithstanding there has been a union of the different districts and a lessening of the number of inspectors as a result, we find that the salaries in the next item for rents and expenses of those offices, are increased by $50.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. We put that in to make the total a round number.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). If you have lessened the number of inspectors, you must have of necessity lessened the occasion for so much expenditure.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How many less are there?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Eight less.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Can the hon. Controller tell me the amount that has been added to the superannuation allowance in consequence of the union of those districts and the lessening of the number of inspectors? You have already pointed out that you have made a saving of $7,840, and that appears in the Estimates, but we cannot get at the actual saving until we know how much the hon. gentleman has assigned to the superannuation fund.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I am not able at this moment to say exactly what has been added to the superannuation fund. Of course this is not exactly in our department. It is one of those items in regard to which it is impossible for me to say at this moment how much has been added to the superannuation fund. But I can say that it has caused a diminution in the actual expenditure of $7,840, and whatever has been added to the superannuation fund must be very much less than that. The ages of some of those officers are 75, 72, and so on, so that I am afraid they cannot continue a great many years to enjoy that fund.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The hon. gentleman appears to be under the impression that the inspection was continuous. Inspectors of weights and measures can be called upon at any time.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Then an extra amount will be needed.

Mr. DOMVILLE. The hon. Controller has stated that a radical change is now being brought about throughout the country in the way of inspection. I am not prepared to blame him in regard to this matter, because I think he has been advised by those whose duty it is to advise him, and who come under the denomination "departmental." No doubt, in Ottawa there is an officialdom that runs the country. If anything is said in regard to these officials, the reply is made that you are attacking members of the department and seeking to ruin them and their families; and yet these men, when perhaps the Minister has not been very long in office, tell him something that he believes, in the innocence of his heart, to be correct and should be carried out. I do not blame the present Minister, because I do not think that he has looked into this matter at all. There is a power behind the throne. The doctrine now put forward is that the inspection of weights and measures should be a municipal matter. But how could this be carried out in the country without the consent of the people and without proper municipal laws? It would be an impossibility. If this view be correct, we are going to do away altogether with the inspection. Then why not abolish this branch of the department? This might as well be done as that the head of the department—I am not blaming the Minister, I am not talking politics—should declare that this work is not necessary. The department has been carrying out this work for a great number of years, and yet now the chief of that staff at Ottawa comes forward and says that he does not consider this work is needed. I repeat that I am not referring to the Minister or blaming him in any way whatever, because I think he has been badly advised, but I say that two officers in St. John cannot do the work. We have the fact that with inspectors in Kent, King's, York, Albert and various other counties under the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, the work was not carried out, and now it is argued that because those officers do not do their work properly, no inspection is needed by the farmers and consumers, that the whole system of weights and measures should go by the board. Why did not the hon. Minister who was then in charge of the department make these officers do their duty. Now, because it suits them to come here with a new-fangled idea, they recommend the Minister to do away with the weights and measures inspectors, except two officers in St. John. If there was a staff of officers in past days who did not perform their duty, how can it be argued that two officers are going to do the work when twenty men failed to perform it? I am sent to this House to represent my constituents. I believe when we pay our taxes we should receive pound for pound. We find to-day that a man who never did a hand's turn is kept on at the work of inspection, and the man who did the work is put out. Is that common sense? This involves no reflection on the Minister—I absolve the Minister—he cannot know all the country, he has been in office only a very short time and he knows I have kindly feelings towards him; but I contend that his staff has acted wrongly, that his advisers are wrong, and I speak for New Brunswick when I say that in the arrangement made the Minister and the officials acted wrongly. There was a sinister motive under it. They superannuated the man who did the work, giving him next to nothing, $288 a year, and they left in office the man who had never done a hand's turn in connection with the department. Who so advised the Minister? Could the Minister know the counties of Kent and King's and the circumstances and conditions of the case? No. He was simply advised, and he was wrongly advised. I have nothing more to say except that the consumer should receive a pound when he buys a pound; that the Government should place the buyer in a position so that when he purchases his goods he will be protected; or do away altogether with the branch of this department and save the taxpayers the expense, and let them look out for themselves. There is a great deal of force in the argument that the buyer should look out for himself. I have never had very much faith in weights and measures inspection or in the inspection of gas. They have beautiful instruments—they have a dark room and a flash-light. But the man who sells gas can always show eleven candle power if he works the matter rightly. We must consider the question whether it would not be better to abolish the whole branch. I think the hon. gentleman himself has given the best argument for its abolition, namely, that the different counties in the province do not need inspectors, but that two officers in St. John can do the work. This, of course, would be a farce; if the work is to be carried on at all, it should be carried out completely and in its entirety. Let us go back to the common-sense principle, and whatever the cost may be to the country, let us have the principle established on the basis of inspecting what the consumer uses. As I said before, I do not attach any blame to my hon. friend the Controller, but I think that he has been very badly advised by his officers. Neither am I finding any fault with the former Controller, but I am saying, that if the officers in the Department of Weights and Measures had done their duty properly they would have work enough done in King's county and Kent and other counties to pay all the expenses of the inspection. But if they allow one man to go on and do all the work, and the other man to sit there and do nothing, what can they expect but that the country does not derive sufficient revenue on account of the inspection. I again repeat that it is not the fault of the Controller of Customs in the late or in the present Government, but it is the fault of the officers of the department. I think, however, that the Controller of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) before he took this move, might have at least consulted some of his supporters and asked them what they thought of it.

Mr. McINERNEY. It is quite evident to anybody that the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville) has a grievance against the Controller of Inland Revenue; and that that grievance arises very largely, if not altogether, from the fact that a gentleman in the county of King's, Mr. Walter B. Scovil—a very decent man and in his time a very efficient officer—has been superannuated. Upon that fact, the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville) has built up a grievance which has very little foundation. In order to straighten the whole matter out, if the Controller of Inland Revenue would simply answer two or three very short questions that I am going to put to him, I think that he will completely dispose of the grievance that the member for King's (Mr. Domville) thinks he has.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I beg to interrupt the hon. member (Mr. McInerney). I made no grievance; I was talking to the question, whether we should have inspection or not.

Mr. McINERNEY. Then, if the hon. member (Mr. Domville) has not expressed a grievance, it is hard for one to know when the hon. gentleman has a grievance and when he is serious, and when he is in fun. But, I think it strikes the most opaque mind, that the hon. gentleman from King's (Mr. Domville) thinks he has a very serious grievance indeed. The first question which I shall ask the hon. the Controller of Inland Revenue is this: What is the age of Mr. Walter B. Scovil?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. He is seventy-two years of age.

Mr. McINERNEY. Then, I would ask the Controller of Inland Revenue, is it true or is it not true, that Mr. Scovil has done all the work lately, and that Mr. Richard, of Kent, has done none?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Oh, no. I was going to answer the hon. gentleman from King's (Mr. Domville). I will answer my hon. friend by-and-by.

Mr. McINERNEY. I wish to have these questions answered now, and I wish to ask the Controller of Inland Revenue further: if by the change he has made he does not bring about a saving of $800 a year.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. DOMVILLE. We all admit that.

Mr. McINERNEY. Then, in the first place, we have it, that Mr. Scovil is seventy-two years of age, a very old man and should be superannuated; in the second place, that Mr. Scovil has not done the work lately, but that it has been done almost entirely by Mr. Richard; and, in the third place, that the change proposed and brought about already, I believe, by the Controller of Inland Revenue, has effected a saving of $800 a year. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that these three reasons afford sufficient justification for the course that the hon. Controller of Inland Revenue has taken in this matter. But, Sir, we have here what the Montreal "Gazette" heads "A most peculiar petition."—brought into this House the other day by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville), and which is printed in full in the "Gazette." That petition I wish to tell the committee, is from the first to the last a tissue of statements that have no foundation whatever in fact. It represents itself as being signed by "James Domville, M.P. for the county of King's, N.B., and several hundred others."

Mr. DOMVILLE. I rise to a question of order. The hon. member has no right to quote from a paper—will the hon. member for Kent (Mr. McInerney) sit down if he pleases. When an hon. member of this House signs a paper he places himself in the hands of the House, and the hon. member (Mr. McInerney) has no right to quote from that paper, and state that the matter is without foundation in fact. He has no right to state that unless he has some better authority than a newspaper statement to sanction it.

Mr. McINERNEY. Where is the point of order?

Mr. DOMVILLE. I wish him to withdraw that statement "without foundation in fact."

Mr. McINERNEY. I do not think the Chairman will rule against me on that very important point of order which has been raised by the hon. gentleman from King's (Mr. Domville). It is almost too absurd to require a ruling. I am now quoting from the Montreal "Gazette," a petition which was presented to this House and signed by James Domville, M.P., and—

Mr. DOMVILLE. I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Has the hon. member a right to say in this House—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Has the hon. gentleman a right to say that a statement made by myself as a member of this House is without foundation in fact; has he a right to say it by simply reading a newspaper? I ask you to make your ruling on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McINERNEY. This is a petition that is signed and sent in here by James Domville, M.P., and several hundred others.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I want your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bain). I think there is no doubt that an hon. member has the right to quote from the newspapers of the day, any statement that is in public print, and which may bear on the question before the House. It would be better, perhaps, for an hon. member not to use the expression "no foundation in fact" as applied to an hon. member of this House.

Mr. McINERNEY. Mr. Chairman, this is a petition that is printed in the Montreal "Gazette." It is not only signed by James Domville, M.P., but by several hundred others, and I do not know of any better or more polite way of saying that the thing is untrue than by saying that it has no foundation in fact. If there are any other words which would more politely express the idea I have in my mind, and which would meet with the approval of the Chairman and of the House, I would be only too glad to use them.

Mr. DOMVILLE. The newspaper does not say that. It is you who said it.

Mr. McINERNEY. If I did say that a statement by an hon. member in this House had no foundation in fact, I do not think that that even would be unparliamentary; but I am reading from a petition published in the Montreal "Gazette," and signed by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville), and several hundred others. Now, in this petition the hon. gentleman (Mr. Domville) alleges that Mr. Richard has done no work at all, that he has lazed around, and that Mr. Scovil has done all the work. In that statement the hon. member (Mr. Domville) is flatly denied by the hon. Controller of Inland Revenue who says, that Mr. Scovil, for some time has been unable to perform his duty, and that is a fact which every one in the province of New Brunswick knows. I would be the last man to say a single harsh word against Mr. Scovil, who is my personal friend, and who has been a very efficient officer; but that statement that Mr. Scovil has done all the work while Mr. Richard has done none of it, is certainly without foundation. Imagine a man 72 years of age travelling around the country. Those who know Mr. Scovil will bear me out in the statement that he is, by reason of his infirmities, unfitted for the duties of the office. But the hon. gentleman does not rest there. In trying to make a case against Mr. Richard, he said:

Furthermore, that the said Richard was an active partisan against the Liberal party and its friends, both in Dominion and local elections, which can be clearly established; whilst the said Scovil has most carefully been neutral, although all his friends and relations have done all in their power for the success of the Liberal party and yourself, which also can be fully proved.

That is a strange statement to appear in a petition presented to this House. The hon. member for King's ought to know, what many members from the province of New Brunswick in this House do know, that there is no such thing in the province of New Brunswick as a Liberal party and a Conservative party in provincial politics. I appeal to the hon. member for the city of St. John (Mr. Ellis), who for some time past, in the "Globe" newspaper which he controls and edits, has been trying to bring about the running of provincial politics on federal party lines, but he has been unable to do so; and the boast of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) has been for years that while he was Premier of the province his government was not run on Dominion party lines at all, but was a composite government composed of both Liberals and Conservatives. At the present time, the Premier of the province, Mr. Mitchell, is a Conservative, and his cabinet is about equally composed of Liberals and Conservatives. So that the statement made by the hon. member for King's that in local elections as well as federal Mr. Richard has been an active partisan and opposed to the Liberal party, is shown to be absurd; and that one statement is a sample of the statements in the whole petition. Now, I want to deny most flatly—not because I hold any brief to defend Mr. Richard or am interested in his welfare, but simply in justice to the truth—I want to deny most flatly the statement made in that petition that Mr. Richard was an active partisan in the last election. It is not true. Mr. Richard took no part in the last federal election, or in any election, so far as I know, in Kent county since 1878; and I ought to know, because I have been in every contest from that date to the present time. He has taken no active part in politics, either federal or provincial. On the contrary, he was in the last election a deputy returning officer in the town of Richibucto, and held a poll in a part of the building in which was his own office, and in that capacity his conduct was most impartial. Nobody had anything to say against it; he performed his duties faithfully and honestly. As an instance of his impartiality, I may mention that there was in the town a man of the name of Edward Lawson, who was strongly in my favour, and who happened to have his name on two lists in the parish of Richibucto—one at the court-house and one at the polling place over which Mr. Richard presided. When he came to Mr. Richard's poll to vote, Mr. Richard told him that he must go to the other division, that he could not poll his vote in that division. I cite that case to show Mr. Richard's impartiality. So I deny the statement contained in this petition. I will assume that the hon. member for King's was not perhaps acquainted with the facts when he signed this petition. I will suppose that it was manufactured in King's county by some of the red-hot partisans of the hon. gentleman, who thought that if this office were to be taken away from his party, a grievous wrong would be done to them. I acquit the hon. gentleman of signing this petition knowing that what it contained was not true; I do not believe he would be guilty of that. But if he knew that these things were not true, I do not know what I would have to say about the hon. gentleman, because the statement to which I have called attention is on a par with every statement in the petition. Mr. Richard has been, I think, in the service since 1878, when he was appointed to take the place of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Blanchard) now sitting in this House. He was appointed about the same time that Mr. Scovil was appointed. He is a much younger man, he has performed his duties faithfully ever since, and he has taken no active part in politics. Now, I can see no reason why Kent county should not have this position as well as the county of King's. The county of King's is situated at the very end of the group of counties served by this office. There are the counties of King's, Albert, Westmoreland, Kent, Northumberland, Gloucester, and Restigouche. Kent is in the centre of the group while King's is at one end of it.

Mr. McINERNEY.

Mr. DOMVILLE. King's has the intelligence.

Mr. McINERNEY. Yes, it has, and it has proved it on many occasions. Kent county has a larger population than King's county.

Mr. DOMVILLE. No.

Mr. McINERNEY. Well, the hon. gentleman had better look up the census returns of 1891, and he will find that what I state is correct. On that account Kent is entitled to some consideration. I do not say that Kent should absolutely have this position, but I do say that so far as the two counties are concerned, I can see no reason why Kent should not have it and King's should have it. One very peculiar reason which the hon. member for King's puts forward is that King's has been loyal to the Liberal party. That is a most peculiar statement for him to make. Was King's loyal to the Liberal party from 1882 to 1896, when it refused to elect the hon. gentleman every time he offered, and when it elected the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster) on every occasion against him? The hon. gentleman himself was a member of the old guard of Conservatives. All you have to do is to go to one of the rooms here and you will see a beautiful picture on the wall in which you will find the beaming countenance of the hon. member for King's as one of the old guard at that time. But I find no fault with the hon. gentleman for changing his political opinions if he has a reason for doing so; I am simply discussing the statement he makes that King's has been loyal to the Liberal party. Is it not plain to any man that it is for political reasons alone that the hon. gentleman has had this fling at a non-partisan, efficient and well-qualified officer, in favour of some friend for whom he wants the position, whether qualified or not? I have the figures of the last census, which a friend has given me, and I find that the population of Kent is 23,845, and the population of King's 23,087. So that I have proved what the hon. gentleman denied with regard to the population of the county of Kent and King's.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I did not catch the figures from the hon. member. What is the decimal difference of figures between the two?

Mr. McINERNEY. There is a difference of 758. I merely rose for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that it is well known in this House and out of it, that the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville) has a grievance against the Controller of Inland Revenue. And I merely wished to justify the course which the hon. Controller of Inland Revenue has taken in this matter, not from a political standpoint, but on the three grounds, namely, that Mr. Richard has done nearly all the work of late years and Mr. Scovil very little; that there is a saving of $800 effected by the change ; and that Mr. Scovil is over seventy-two years of age, and his infirmity and age call for his superannuation. There is thus no excuse for cavilling at the change effected by the hon. Controller, and I hope the hon. Controller will not be influenced by any declaration made to him by the hon. member for King's, nor do I believe he will. Let the hon. member kick, he is well able to, and if he has not any just ground for kicking, he cannot do much harm to the venerable gentleman and honest man who at present fills the position of Controller of Inland Revenue.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I am somewhat amused at the hon. member for Kent (Mr. McInerney) talking about changing sides. I think he changed six times. He accuses me of supporting the Liberal party to-day. Why should I not support it? What do I owe to him or his political party. I was never tethered, like the Scotchman's cow, by the mouth, and am free to go where I like. I am responsible to the grand old county of King's, and if that grand old county had the discrimination and the good sense to send me here, why should my hon. friend find fault? The hon. gentleman knows that he was right ready to go with the Government of the day if they would take him. When he talks about Mr. Richard not taking part in politics, I hold a letter from Mr. Ferguson, J.P., of the county of Kent, who says he was a most active partisan. The petition I sent him was based on the facts, and the hon. Controller knows that when I spoke to-night, I spoke, not personally of himself, but of the department under him, which was the cause of the mistake made, and I said that if he would bring down to the House the papers, on which the petition was based, they would prove that in eighteen years of service Mr. Richard did little or no work. The hon. gentleman rings the changes on Mr. Scovil being seventy-two years of age. Has he not a right to be seventy-two years old? Who is going to stop him? There is not a scratch against Walter B. Scovil's name in the whole of New Brunswick. If the hon. gentleman accuses me of turning my coat or if I accuse him of turning his coat twenty times, Walter Scovil never turned his. I appeal to Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, who, I think, knows something about him, whether if ever there was a man who did his work well, that man was Walter B. Scovil. What point is my hon. friend trying to make? Does he want to make the point that he did not join us in time and that it is too late now. I see some of my friends over there who have, perhaps, a little more ability than ordinary men, clever fellows, and they drew the wool over his head and said to him: Hold on to us, wait until the school question is settled, it will get us into power, and we will put you in the Cabinet. And the hon. gentleman put the weights into each scale. On the one side he could not get anything, and on the other he stood a chance if his party came in, and the latter had the greatest weight. My hon. friend may find some fault with my criticism, but I am simply following his lead. I am not here to fight the battle of Mr. Scovil, but the battle of principle. The hon. gentleman begged the question, when he said that King's county was at one end of the string and Kent at the other. If that be the case, the string should be cut in the middle and neither should exist.

Mr. McINERNEY. I said that Kent was in the centre of the string.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Then it should be at the other end. Now, my hon. friend claims that Kent county has 758 more population than King's. It is not fair to bring that up against me. He knows that while I was representing King's county and while King's county was supporting the Government, and until that county changed its representative, its population never fell off, but when it did it is a singular fact that there was a decrease in population of over 2,000: and if we retained our normal increase, we would have 6,000 more there to-day. When the hon. gentleman talked of King's county not being loyal to the Liberal party, he touches not me but my county. King's county was loyal to that party. Whatever King's county may have thought of me, the people of that county, in their better judgment, thought that they should displace somebody who was representing them and in whom they had not faith, and they elected me. That had nothing to do with politics. King's county, from one end to the other, was tired of the late Government, and I think it comes with very bad grace from the hon. gentleman to attack us with regard to our Liberalism. My hon. friend has charged that I turned for what I could get. Well, I never had anything out of any party.

Mr. BENNETT. You have a trip to England ahead of you.

Mr. DOMVILLE. You might have a trip to Kingston ahead of you, and a free trip.

Mr. BENNETT. I think the hon. gentleman will probably be going to Beauport soon—there is an asylum there.

Mr. DOMVILLE. We are all driving towards Quebec, I think. My hon. friend has made a great mistake, and I think that if he will come down to New Brunswick and contrast his own position with my position he will see that he has made a great mistake. My hon. friend has gone about in fear and trembling lest a protest should be entered against him. He got through in some way by the law courts. I, unfortunately, am in.

Mr. McINERNEY. I heard that you had got through yesterday.

Mr. DOMVILLE. My hon. friend makes most rash and extravagant statements. He stated that the petition which has been referred to was without any foundation, but now he admits that there are things which justify it. He says that this officer should not be in King's county but in Kent county, because it is in the middle of the district. But in some respects, his county is at the end of the string and not in the middle. I am very sorry that this matter should have come up. I do not know why the hon. gentleman should have made this attack upon me. I have never uttered a word against him. I could say a great deal against him in a political or a parliamentary sense. If the hon. gentleman thinks that anything he can say against me in recrimination is going to hurt me in my county he is entirely mistaken. My county is with me. I can state, as I have stated before to the House and to the country, that I have the greatest pride in supporting Mr. Laurier and his policy. Let that policy be continued and it will be of incalculable benefit to the people. I do not think the hon. gentleman makes a charge against me that it is necessary to meet when he says that I have changed my mind upon political matters. I act here with many gentlemen on this side who seek to recognize public opinion, not to bamboozle the country, but to do their duty. I am sure I spoke to my hon. friend (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) in a courteous manner. I found fault with his department and, I think, justly. It is a department that should be overhauled. I am thankful to my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. McInerney) for an opportunity to show that while I have changed my opinion once he has changed his, I think, six times.

Mr. McINERNEY. I do not intend to get into any altercations with the hon. gentleman from King's. I do not know that any person in this House has much to gain by such a course. There are certain characters that belong to every circus. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman thinks he is in a circus, but he certainly acts as if he thought he was not in a House of Parliament. He seems to think that I brought this matter up. His memory must be failing him. It was not until he attacked the Controller of Inland Revenue that I said a word. He spoke of a certain official who had lazed around and had performed no work, and he spoke of Mr. Scovil, and so forth, before I said a word. But he tries to make the House believe that I brought this matter up and made an attack upon him. I would contemn making an attack upon the hon. gentleman. I have higher duties to perform in this House than that. But, if I were to take up the political record of the hon. gentleman in New Brunswick and lay it bare to gentlemen in this House who do not know it, they would not continue to associate with him either in public or in private life. His character is well known in our part of the country. He boasts because he was elected last election. No doubt the hon. gentleman thinks that he has a great deal to boast about. He has tried to be elected very frequently. When I alluded to his change of politics, I was careful to add that I had no fault to find with him for that change. I have no fault to find with any man who changes his views. The greatest answer that Disraeli ever made was to those who charged that he had not been consistent in his political views. But the hon. gentleman is always lauding the Prime Minister and stating that he is prepared to follow him in darkness and in daylight. Still, I find him, every now and again, getting his knife into some member of the Administration. Is it not known that the ambition lurked in the hon. gentleman's mind that he might be a Minister of the Crown. He took a trip to Ottawa and was told by the Prime Minister that such a thing was altogether out of the question. The hon. gentleman then said: Then let me go to England with you. He is satisfied with that—satisfied to go down Piccadilly and the Strand in a brand new uniform, and doing credit and honour to Canada as well as to the mounted infantry.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Oh, give us a rest.

Mr. McINERNEY. The corps to which the hon. gentleman belongs is very well known, no doubt; but I do not know at this moment whether the hon. gentleman belongs to cavalry or the infantry. But he will be dressed up in his best bib and tucker, and, instead of being a Minister, he will be one of the guards of the Prime Minister when he goes down Piccadilly in the great procession. Some hon. gentlemen beside me say that this is too much. No; I wish to see just such honours heaped upon the hon. gentleman. The county of King's sent him here for a purpose; but he finds now that he cannot control the Controller of Inland Revenue by making such speeches to him, and that the Minister is prepared to do justice to any and all counties, notwithstanding the threats of the hon. member for King's.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I was sorry that my hon. friend from King's (Mr. Domville) did not understand, or, at least, did not appreciate the explanations I gave in the department the other day, when we met in the most kindly manner. I expressed my regret, that anything I had done should have caused him disappointment. Friends are not so plentiful that we can take pleasure in offending them. What I did, I did for the best interests of the public service. If I may be allowed, I should like to summarize the reasons I gave my hon. friend. I have been trying to remodel the department of weights and measures from one end of the Dominion to the other. Superannuations have taken place, not merely in New Brunswick, but in many other parts of the country. This appeared to be a plan which will result at last in economy for the country. I explained to my hon. friend that in the division of King's there were two men, Mr. Scovil against whom I have nothing absolutely in the world to say, and Mr. Richard. I knew neither of these gentlemen, and I have no political leanings to either. I knew they were appointed by my hon. friends opposite, and I respect them for having done their duty. But when I had to choose between the two and saw that I could dispense with one, what did I do? First of all in that division, there are seven counties, and everybody acquainted with New Brunswick knows how they are situated. They are King's, Westmoreland, Albert, Gloucester, Kent, Restigouche and Northumberland. Now, the county of King's is exactly at the lower end of that division, while Kent is as nearly as possible in the middle of it, and that is one of the reasons why I chose from among the two officers, the one who resided in the centre. Secondly, the officer that I chose had a smaller salary by $200 than the other, and that was a gain to economy, although a small one. In the third place, Mr. Richard who, my hon. friend is under the impression is a worthless officer and is not to be compared with Mr. Scovil, collected last year $354, against $120 collected by Mr. Scovil.

Mr. DOMVILLE. That was only one year.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think I have explained to the House that I had the greatest respect for Mr. Scovil, and I never found any fault with him. I do not say he did not try to do his duty, but I have given the result of the collections made by these two officers. There was a fourth reason, and that is that Mr. Scovil had attained the age of 72 years. Now, my hon. friend is not satisfied with my action in that matter, and I am very sorry for it. As I said a moment ago, nothing is more painful to me than to have to give offence to a friend, but I have to perform my duty in the department.

Mr. McMULLEN. I compliment the hon. gentleman on the reduction that he has made in his outside officers, and I think there is ample room in the department in Ottawa where considerable reductions should be made also.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. If my hon. friend will allow me—I would like to say further, in allusion to what was said by my hon. friend from Brockville (Mr. Wood) in recommending the adoption of the metrical system—

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I suggested to the Controller that if he succeeded in carrying out these changes, he had better consider whether it would not be wise to follow the example of England in the adoption of the metrical system. I did not pledge myself beyond that expression.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Now, if anybody in this House understands the metrical system, I claim that I understand it, because I was brought up in a country where the metrical system is in use. It is certainly the best system in every possible way, as it reduces every measure of length, weight and capacity, in both liquids and solids, to one single unit, and adopts furthermore the decimal system. It is impossible to find a more rational system than that one. Now, the reason why I have not recommended its adoption to our Government is that it takes the people a long time to change from one system to another. This is shown by the history of the metrical system in France. It was introduced in 1793, and Napoleon himself, notwithstanding all his power, was unable to force the people to adopt it. It took more than half a century, and it was only in 1845, under the most severe and stringent laws passed under Louis Philippe, that the government ultimately succeeded in bringing the metrical system into use. They had to make it compulsory by heavy fines decreed against every trader who employed any other measure. Now, if it took more than half a century to force its adoption in France, we must be content to work patiently here. I am not in favour of making the metrical system compulsory in this country at once. I want to make it first known here, and I think I have adopted the right way of doing so by sending to France and getting something which I will be glad to show to any hon. gentleman who wishes to see it, and which I mean to distribute among the universities. I have procured a box of models of the different measures of the metrical system, which are placed in every primary school throughout the length and breadth of France so that the children have before them an object lesson showing what the metre is, and what the decimeter is, and the centimetre. I received this box from France about a week ago, and I would like to show these models to the hon. members. I mean to do everything that I can to make the advantage of the metrical system well understood in this country before trying to make it compulsory. The hon. member for Brockville said that in making these reductions, I had only done what the Government of which he was a member, proposed to do years ago. That is very true. In 1881 a strong recommendation was made by the commissioner of the department to reduce the staff of officers of the weights and measures branch, from seventy or fifty. Did my hon. friends reduce it to fifty? During the fifteen years of Conservative Government did any hon. gentleman supporting that Government make any effort to effect that reduction? No, Sir, but when I came in we began to reduce the staff, and I hope we will be able to reduce it still lower than that. My hon. friend speaks of the amalgamation of the different districts so as to make one district out of two or three adjacent districts. An Order in Council was passed by the late Government in 1889, but did they carry it into execution? No, they did not, but they left that for this Government to do.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The discussion has taken a wider range than I supposed it would take, but that is largely owing to the lengthy remarks made by the Controller, and the wide ground he covered. Now, I admit that the hon. gentleman has by amalgamation of some of the different districts, made a saving by superannuating all the persons whose names he read over, but that saving is not shown by the amount of $7,840. You cannot get at the actual amount of saving until we know the actual amount you charge the superannuation fund. The hon. gentleman has taken a good deal of credit to himself for the saving he has made. I repeat that if you take the Estimates in the department for the last four or five years, you will find that the average savings on the inside and the outside service, in taking into account the statutory increases, have exceeded the amount of savings made by the hon. gentleman, which consist largely in the item under discussion. I will only add that it was the intention of the late Government to follow up the Order in Council to which allusion has been made, and the chances are that by this time a few of those changes, at all events, would have been made. Possibly my hon. friend found much less difficulty this year in making changes where the selections were amongst Conservatives and where there were no Liberals. It is possible that if these men had belonged to his political faith, we would not have had this domestic row to-night between the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville) and the Controller. So that when he takes credit for his activity in carrying out these changes and, by contrast, reflects upon the late Administration in not following up that Order in Council sooner, I wish to tell him that the Administration for the last three or four years went in the direction he has gone, and that he approves of, although there was not the same activity the hon. gentleman has displayed in amalgamating these different districts. Let me ask how, in view of the fact that there has been so much activity in the matter of superannuation of so many officers and the amalgamation of their districts, the hon. gentleman expects to run the present system and at the same time have the inspections made more frequently than before? The hon. gentleman has not explained how half the officials can do this increased inspection. The hon. gentleman has complained that it has been found utterly impossible to make the inspection required by statute. How then can this be done when he reduces the number of officers one-half? If the interest of the service requires that a reduction should be made—and I doubt that the superannuations are justifiable—I should like the hon. gentleman to explain why there is an actual increase in the Estimates under this head for the present year. Why does the hon. gentleman ask for $16,000 instead of $15,000, and at the same time takes credit for having reduced the staff?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I am sorry to be obliged to remind the hon. gentleman of one of the greatest acts of injustice ever committed by a party, and it was committed by the Conservative party. The hon. gentleman said the saving made by the Government by superannuations was not a genuine saving because the country has to pay these superannuation allowances. Let me remind my hon. friend that he and his party appear to understand how to economise better than we do. The Mackenzie Government organized the Department of Weights and Measures. When Mr. Mackenzie resigned and hon. gentlemen opposite came into power, the first act they did was to abolish the department, in order to get rid of the officers who had been appointed. But finding they had made a mistake, or at all events they had lost so much patronage, they introduced a new law re-establishing the Department of Weights and Measures. They appointed 67 officers, and of those they reappointed from the whole staff collected by the Mackenzie Government only seven. The hon. gentleman charges me with unnecessarily superannuating officers. Does the hon. gentleman want me to turn out these men as was done by his own party, and treat them with the same injustice as was dealt out to those officers appointed by the Mackenzie Government? No, we are not going to do so. Those men tried to do their duty when they were in office, and we have dealt fairly by them; we have superannuated them, and have given them all the benefit of their contributions to the superannuation fund. The hon. gentleman said that if more of them had been Liberals they would not have been so anxious to superannuate them. I scorn that imputation. If the hon. gentleman says that I have abused my position in order to do an injustice to men in my department, it is a calumny. I do not deserve to be treated in that way, and I appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite to treat me with justice and to admit that I would not deal harshly with Conservative officials.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I would be the last member in this House to cast any reflection on the hon. the Controller of Inland Revenue.

Sir HENRI JOLY DE LOTBINIERE.

I have held various positions of trust in this House. I have occupied the position of Chairman of Committees, also as Chairman of the Railway Committee and other committees, and I do not think that in discharging the important duties connected with them, I have ever allowed any injustice to be done or reflection to be cast on an hon. member. In stating that the hon. Controller might not have acted as hastily if some of those officers had been Liberals, I was speaking in a political sense. When Ministers are putting through Estimates they must be subjected to the widest range of criticism. It is in accordance with precedent and practice that the minority should be allowed a wide range of discussion when the Crown comes down and asks Parliament for money. We are discharging our duty in that respect, and the remark I made was not uttered in any offensive sense to the Controller. I hope the hon. gentleman will acquit me of having said anything offensive. I am afraid the hon. gentleman misconstrued the freedom of discussion permitted in discussing Estimates, and it is a somewhat new role for me to act as a critic in opposition. I now ask the Controller if there is not some mistake in regard to the item of $1,500.

Mr. McMULLEN. I congratulate the Minister of Inland Revenue on the reduction made by him, but I contend there is ample room for reduction in the department as a whole. While a number of officers in the outside service have been put out, for which I commend the hon. gentleman, that reduction appears to be confined to the outside service. There is a great discrepancy between the Department of Customs and the Department of Inland Revenue. The Commissioner of Customs receives $2,800; the Commissioner of Inland Revenue receives $3,200, and in addition he gets $800 as Commissioner of Standards. The Assistant Commissioner of Inland Revenue receives $3,000, while the Chief Clerk of Customs receives $1,800, the Chief Clerk of Inland Revenue receives $2,400. There is another chief clerk at $2,000. So in the Inland Revenue there are four clerks, including the commissioners, receiving salaries aggregating $11,400. Take the entire service of the Inland Revenue Department, and it will be found there are 26 clerks receiving aggregate salaries of $38,542; in the Customs there are 31 clerks, five more than in the Inland Revenue Department, receiving a gross amount of $38,600. That clearly shows that there is very considerable room for the application of the pruning knife.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) should have discussed that when the Civil Government Estimates were before the House. If we go over that again we will be at this item for a week.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to ask the Controller of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) if this vote includes the additional sum which is paid to the Commissioner of Inland Revenue as commissioner of standards?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. In that case, Mr. Chairman, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. McLennan (Inverness):

That the item of $49,010 be reduced by $300, the amount paid to the Deputy Minister as Commissioner of Standards.

I cannot see why we should pay the Deputy Commissioner of Inland Revenue $4,000, when the Commissioner of Customs gets only $2,800, and the other Deputy Ministers $3,200. As far as I can learn, this commissioner of standards is a mere honorary position to which there is $800 a year attached.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire to say a word or two generally with regard to this item. The Controller of Inland Revenue has spoken of dismissals in his department, and while I have no disposition at all to say anything harsh or discourteous to the hon. gentleman, I would like to bring to his attention the matter of the dismissal of two officers in Halifax, namely, the late inspector of weights and measures and the assistant inspector of weights and measures. They were dismissed, I think, in or about the month of November last, and their successors have been appointed. Mr. Frame has been appointed as inspector, and I do not know who has been appointed assistant inspector. I have seen some of the correspondence which has been addressed to these gentlemen, and I understand that they were dismissed without any investigation, and upon the recommendation of my hon. colleague from Halifax (Mr. Russell), on the ground that they were guilty of active and offensive partisanship. I desire to say to the hon. Controller of Inland Revenue, that I regret that he should have taken that course. These gentlemen, I know both of them, were Conservatives. As to how active a part they took in the late elections, I do not know. As far as one of them is concerned I did not speak to him nor he to me during that election, but I believe that it is alleged that he attended a joint political meeting at Dartmouth, and that he made some interruptions. I do not know about that personally I did not notice it if he did. As far as that is concerned I do not know in what way he was active or offensive. The term "offensive" of course is a somewhat vague word; a word which can be used in one sense or another according to the particular ideas of the person who happens to be using it. So far as these gentlemen are concerned, I desire to say to the hon. the Controller this: That however active their partisanship may have been, I am sure it was not more active than that of many officials, Liberals, in the county of Halifax, during the past eighteen years, who have held office during those eighteen years and who have not been disturbed during the Conservative Administration. I can assure the hon. the Controller that that is the fact, and I do not think that my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Russell) would dispute that fact; because if he should do so, I can give him the names of Liberal office holders in the county of Halifax who have been quite as active, if not more active, than either of these gentlemen, and against whom no charge was made on that account, or, if any charge was made it was not acted upon.

However, the principle has been laid down by this Administration: that active participation in any political contest shall be a ground for dismissing an official. I desire to call the attention of the Controller of Inland Revenue to the fact, that he himself during the last session of this Parliament, laid down the principle, that none of these officials should be dismissed without an investigation. I suppose an investigation means, an opportunity to the party to defend himself. I understand from both these gentlemen that they asked for an opportunity to defend themselves from these charges, and that both alleged that these charges could be disproved by them, if they had a chance of doing so. Now, the language of the hon. gentleman (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) was very significant. I am quoting from his words used in this House on the 28th August, 1896; and the hon. the Controller of Inland Revenue then said:

Now, I should consider it my duty to give a careful investigation to every one of these accusations, and if a public officer is found guilty of neglecting his official duties, or whether he is found guilty of taking such a partisan part in elections as his common sense and his feeling of justice should tell him not to take. If he is found guilty, after having had a fair chance of defending himself, he should be discharged, and I believe that on both sides of the House such an act would be upheld.

Now if we assume that the hon. gentleman laid down the correct rule to be followed in his department, it seems to me (unless he has seen fit to change his opinion in the meantime) that he should now grant to these gentlemen the investigation which they have asked for. These dismissed officials have stated that these charges cannot be sustained against them. My hon. friend and colleague (Mr. Russell) thinks that the charges are correct, and possibly he may think that he has personal knowledge, but even if my colleague from Halifax (Mr. Russell) says he has personal knowledge of any of these offences, still, these men have not a fair chance unless they are given an opportunity of putting forward their side of the case. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Russell) is no more infallible than I am, or than any other gentleman in this House, and he may be mistaken, or he may be relying on evidence which is not correct. Surely, it is only the simplest justice to these men, that they should have an opportunity of showing, if they can, that the charges which have been made against them are not true.

There is another fact which I wish to bring to the attention of the Controller. These officials have not only been deprived of the positions which they held in the civil service of this country, but they have applied to the department in vain for an answer to the question: as to whether any allowance is to be made to them in respect to their contributions to the superannuation fund. Both of these men have, I understand, contributed for more than ten years to the superannuation fund. As far back as the 21st of November last, Mr. Ryan addressed a letter to the department on this subject, to which he received an answer in December, stating that that question would receive the attention of the hon. Controller and an answer would be given to him. From that time to the present, as I am instructed—if I am in error, the hon. gentleman will correct me—he has received no answer whatever; and if it is competent to the hon. gentleman, following his later policy, to deprive these men of their position without giving them an opportunity to disprove the charges made against them, surely the hon. Controller will not deprive them of their right to these contributions to the superannuation fund. It would certainly be doing a very great injustice to them. I rely on the sense of justice which I know the hon. Controller possesses in an eminent degree, to see that he will not deprive these men of the money they have paid into the superannuation fund without at least giving them an opportunity of disproving the charges made against them. If the hon. gentleman is not in a position to give an answer on that part of the matter to-night, I would be very glad indeed if he would be good enough to take it into his consideration at his earliest opportunity. I believe it has been under the consideration of some of the other departments as to what will be done in such cases; but I certainly think that, where a party has been dismissed without an investigation, either one of two things should be done—either he should have the benefit of the contributions he has made to the fund, or before he is deprived of them, he should have the benefit of an investigation, which he should have had in the first instance.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). I have, of course, no disposition to interfere with the discussion which the hon. gentleman chooses to raise on this subject. I would just call his attention, however, to the fact that the question he now formally raises, was asked of the Government the other day, and my hon. friend who sits next to me told the House that the question of the disposition of the moneys paid to the superannuation fund by persons who had been dismissed was at present being seriously considered by the Government, and that in a short time we would be able to make a pronouncement upon it. Under the circumstances, I think the House will see that it will be as well at the present stage to let the matter rest.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It appears to me that, where officials have been dismissed without investigation, two questions would arise: First, the general policy, of which the hon. gentleman has just spoken, and second, if the policy is laid down that no benefit should be received by persons guilty of offensive partisanship, whether there should not be an investigation before they are deprived of their contributions to the fund. I think that course would appeal to the hon. gentleman's sense of justice. You are depriving a party of what a very eminent gentleman, some years ago, spoke of in this House, as the vested rights of civil servants. They do have some vested rights in this superannuation fund, if they contribute to it. Let us grant for the sake of argument that you have the right to dismiss them without investigation, upon the statement of an honourable member supporting the Government; their rights to the contributions which they have made to the superannuation fund are being taken away ex parte, if you decide without investigation that they shall not get any benefit from the moneys they paid in.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I wish to repeat the statement I made, perhaps broader than I made it before. Not only in cases where the head of the department exercises his power to make a dismissal on the representations of a member, but in cases where there has been an investigation, and the charges have been proved, inasmuch as there may be a political offence which, in the opinion of this side of the House, does justify a removal from office, there is no moral offence, it is argued, which justifies the taking from those who are dismissed the moneys they have paid into the superannuation fund; and that matter is at present receiving serious and, I may say, very sympathetic consideration from the Government; and the reason is the relation it may have to past dismissals, because it has a wider-reaching effect than appears at the present moment. With regard to the motion which my hon. friend has made, I assume that he does not propose to force this matter to a division, for several reasons. He is perfectly within his right, as a member of this House, in moving a reduction of any vote. We are at this stage in the discussion of our money matters when any hon. member has the right to bring before the House his views on any vote, and in order to do so he has a right to move a reduction in the vote. To that extent, I find no fault whatever. The hon. gentleman is also within his right in expressing his opinion that this salary is larger than it ought to be. On that point I have no doubt the head of the department will say something. But there are one or two points which I think the hon. gentleman has not considered with that care which he generally brings to bear on matters of this kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have sat beside my hon. friend for many years, both in this House and in the Public Accounts Committee, and I have found very few of the members of this House who have given that attentive search and care to the Public Accounts and the Auditor General's Report which my hon. friend has given; and, when I use this language, it is not a mere passing compliment, but is based on many years' experience of my hon. friend as a colleague. I think that in this instance, in his zeal to save the public money, he has, perhaps, a little hastily jumped to a conclusion. I notice that by way of comparison, he referred to the salary of the Commissioner of Customs as only $2,800, and asked why this gentleman should receive more. There are several reasons why that analogy cannot be held to be conclusive. In the first place, the present Commissioner of Customs though a very good and competent officer, has very lately been appointed to that office; and, in the second place, he receives not only $2,800, but $800 in addition as chairman of the Board of Customs Commissioners, making $3,600. I do not think that is too much. But the Commissioner of Inland Revenue is a very old, and I may say, a very competent and distinguished member of the service. It has been my pleasure to know him for many years. He was selected by the Government of Mr. Mackenzie, as far back as 1876, to occupy the distinguished position of financial adviser to the counsel of the British Government before the Halifax Fishery Commission, and he distinguished himself on that occasion in a way which called forth the encomiums of the home Government, and also the approval of the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I know that the counsel who were engaged in that commission acknowledged openly and frankly the value of the services which they received from Mr. Miall. From that time, he has been in the public service, and it is incredible that a man should go on twenty or thirty years with the same salary which he had when he started. I hope there will be no objection to this vote. It would be a most invidious distinction to draw against a man who fills one of the most responsible offices under the Government to refuse to vote him the amount called for. It is not known, perhaps, that the amount of money collected by the Inland Revenue Department almost equals that collected by the Customs Department. Some seven or eight million dollars are collected in that department every year. It is a department, the management of which requires great technical and skilled knowledge. I doubt if there are many gentlemen to-day, clever as they may be in the ordinary affairs of life, who are competent to go in and discharge the duties of this office, to discharge which properly requires a great deal of technical skill that can only be acquired by experience.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have drawn attention to the fact that the salaries in the Inland Revenue Department are higher than in any other. The twenty-six clerks in that department are drawing as much salary as thirty-one in the Department of Customs. My hon. friend says that the Commissioner of Customs gets $800 as chairman of the Customs Board in addition to his $2,800 salary. Well, I venture to say that if either of those positions were vacant to-morrow, you could easily get them filled with competent men at a salary of $3,200 per year, without the $800 addition in either case. At present the commodities of life may be bought at 25 per cent less than they could be ten years ago, and it behooves us to cut down this annual expenditure. I am not at all disposed to underrate the services of Mr. Miall, but I believe that he is well paid for them when he gets $3,200 a year. With regard to the motion, I would say this, that if the hon. the Hon. Minister of Inland Revenue would agree to give this matter his serious consideration—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, Oh!

Mr. McMULLEN. Hon. gentleman had better keep quiet until I get through.

Mr. HUGHES. Back down.

Mr. McMULLEN. I shall do as I please. If my hon. friend the Controller of Inland Revenue will agree to recast the whole service of his office during recess and bring it fairly within the rate of wages paid in other departments, I am willing to grant him the recess to do that, but unless we have some understanding to that effect, I will not withdraw my motion.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The motion of the hon. member for Wellington is somewhat of a surprise to me. I can speak with some degree of knowledge not possessed by ordinary members with regard to the duties performed by Mr. Miall. The Department of Inland Revenue is certainly the most important in the entire service. The work done there is analogous to that done at Somerset House, in England. We are living in an age of shams, in which almost everything is adulterated, not only what we read, but what we eat; and as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has said, there are but few men in this country who would be able to take up the work which Mr. Miall has done, and done so efficiently. It is a work which requires great technical and scientific knowledge, which can only be learned by experience. There is a vast difference between the work of the Inland Revenue Department and that of the Department of Customs, and a comparison between the two is not a fair one. Be that as it may, we should not lose sight of the important fact, not mentioned by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that when Mr. Johnston was superannuated two years ago, as chief commissioner, I decided that if Mr. Miall would perform that work, I would do what I could to secure his getting the additional $400 a year which he had previously been in receipt of. The centre of the administration of the weights and measures branch, of course, is here at Ottawa. Mr. Miall is the head of this branch. He is the head also of the branch under which comes the inspection of the units of measures in connection with electric light and matters of that kind. In relation to the inspection of grain standards I can refer hon. gentlemen opposite to the members of the boards of trade of Quebec, Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg, and by all these they will be told that not only has Mr. Miall's connection with this matter been of the utmost benefit to those large bodies to whom it is of the most vital interest that the department should keep in touch with them, but that they would deplore his departure from his position. I cannot say too much for a gentleman whom I so highly respect and for whose great ability I have such admiration. Therefore, I trust that the hon. gentleman who made the motion will withdraw it. And, before he makes any comparison between the expenditure of the inside services of this and other branches, I trust the hon. gentleman will make a more careful examination of the methods of work in the departments. Having said so much for Mr. Miall I can say the same for the assistant commissioner, for I think that the department is most fortunate in having secured the services of two honest, painstaking, and efficient men.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I need not tell the House, after hearing my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) and my hon. friend from Brockville (Mr. Wood), with what satisfaction I have heard them render justice to a man for whom I have so much consideration as I have for Mr. Miall. I need not say with what satisfaction I would see my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) withdraw his motion and not divide the House. But my hon. friend has attached a condition to the withdrawal of his motion to which I cannot give my consent. The value of Mr. Miall's service has been clearly established. I know the value of those services, and, much as I regret the division which may take place at this moment. I am not going to pledge myself to reduce in any way the salary of Mr. Miall, to which I think he is fairly entitled. Now, as comparisons have been made, I may say that the Deputy Minister of Justice gets $3,600, and also $400 as the solicitor of the Indian Department—a total of $4,000, the same salary as that received by Mr. Miall. The Auditor General receives $4,000, the Deputy Minister of Finance receives $4,200. The Commissioner of Customs, as has been explained, has been appointed quite lately. He only gets $3,600, which is $400 less than Mr. Miall's salary. The Chief Engineer of Public Works—and I do not say at all that his salary is too high—gets, if I am not mistaken, $6,000. The Deputy Minister of Railways has a salary of $4,000. The Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce gets $3,200, and $800 in addition as Chief Commissioner of Chinese Immigration—a total of $4,000. But, furthermore, we have the law which settles this, and as long as the law remains on our Statute-book, I do not see why we should not follow it. Anybody who will look at 49 Victoria, chap. 104, will see the following :—

All comparisons, verifications, and other operations with reference to standards of length, weight, and capacity, shall be conducted under the supervision of the Commissioner of Inland Revenue, and generally he shall have such powers and duties in relation thereto as are assigned to him by the Governor in Council. The Commissioner of Inland Revenue shall also conduct all such comparisons, verifications and other operations with reference to standards of measure and weight in aid of scientific researches, or otherwise, as the Minister of Inland Revenue deems expedient; and in consideration of the special qualifications and knowledge necessary for the proper discharge of such duties, the said commissioner may be paid, in addition to his salary as commissioner, such further allowance, out of any moneys voted by Parliament for the purpose of this Act, as is directed by the Governor in Council.

Now what did the Governor General in Council direct?

The board had before them a memorandum from the Hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue, recommending under the provisions of 42 Vic., chap. 16, sec. 35 and sec. 52, of the Civil Service Act of 1882, the allowance of $800 per annum to the Controller of Inland Revenue, in consideration of his special qualifications and services as Commissioner of Standards, under the Act 42 Vic., chap. 16, sec. 35, such payment to date from 1st January, 1883, and to be paid out of any moneys voted for the inspection of weights and measures as directed in the said Act.

The board recommend the payment of the allowance of $800 per annum from 1st of July, 1883, and that for the previous six months, i.e., from 1st January, 1893, parliamentary appropriations having elapsed, a sum be placed in the Supplementary Estimates to cover the same.

So the law establishes the salary and says how it is to be paid. Now my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) says that if I pledge myself to bring about reductions in my department he will withdraw his amendment. Am I going to be so unfair to himself and to Mr. Miall as to let him believe that I contemplate reducing the salary of Mr. Miall. No. And if the motion must be put, under these conditions, let it be put.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Act the hon. Controller has read is not compulsory; it is entirely within the power of this House and must come before this House for the appropriation of the money. The Act clearly says that the salary is to be paid out of moneys to be voted by Parliament. I say we have a perfect right to deal with the excessive salaries of officials. When these officers get a good round salary of $3,200, that should be enough, and I am opposed to additions to that amount. In many cases officials receive salaries greater than their services to this country are worth. That is my humble opinion. If any of these positions were vacated, you would have no difficulty in finding men who are faithful and efficient to fill them and who would be glad to get them. I do not mean to say that, the new man coming in would be at first as efficient as Mr. Miall or the Deputy Commissioner of Customs. I contend that this vote is entirely in the hands of this House.

Mr. ELLIS. If I were my hon. friend, I would withdraw the resolution. It appears to me that it is not only the duty of the Controller of Inland Revenue but of the whole Government to take hold of these matters. These salaries are too high. This country is paying too much to its officers, not only to deputy heads of the departments but to everybody from the Governor General down. It is time the matter should be grappled with by a strong and firm hand. What would be the effect of this resolution to-night if lost as it is sure to be? It would be such that the Government would be in a position to say that the House of Commons would not consent to a reduction of this salary, and it would be an argument in favour of the continuance of these salaries at the full rate in future. Under all the circumstances I think my hon. friend would do well to withdraw the resolution.

Mr. McMULLEN. What I said was that I would withdraw it if the hon. gentleman agreed to recast his department, and pay his best attention towards the reductions. As I have pointed out 26 clerks in his department are getting as much salary as 31 clerks in the Department of Customs. I contend there is room for reduction, and if he is willing in the interval to devote his attention in the direction of reducing the charges, I am willing to withdraw the motion.

Mr. GANONG. I do not propose to take issue either with the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville) who endeavoured to get rid of some of his exuberant wit, or with the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), who wishes to obtain some personal prestige over this matter, failing all the time to bring up that old chestnut that he might have roasted in regard to the Governor General's salary. I wish, however, to take issue with the hon. the Controller of Inland Revenue in regard to two matters that came up in this discussion, as I believe they affect the country to a greater extent than some of the issues that have come in since. I object in the first place to his characterisation of what he calls the great trades of this country, the grain trade and the coal trade. As I understand he proposes, some time in the future, to remodel this system and divide it into two classes, concerning these two trades. I believe myself, and I think every member of the House must admit, that the grocery business is the great trade in so far as the use of scales is concerned.

Mr. DOMVILLE. You might as well drop your own business.

Mr. GANONG. I am amply able to take care of my own as well as of some other people's business. If I need any assistance, I won't go to the hon. member for King's for it, in view of his past commercial or political record. As far as this matter is concerned, any one must recognize the value of the goods that are handled by these weights and measures, and when you take grain and coal as compared with the value handled by the grocery business, there is no comparison as to their relative value. If there is any class in Canada that needs scale inspection it is the grocery men. The hon. member for King's explains beautifully how little he knew about this business by saying that if he wanted half a pound, he did not want three quarters of a pound. If that hon. gentleman knows as much as he ought to after his business experience, he knows that there is no scale but that, after it is used two years, will give more weight instead of less weight. I have had enough to do with the scale business to know that every grocer throughout the United States changes his scales every one or two years at least simply because he knows that these fine agate or steel pivots on which the scales turn are gradually either accumulating a certain amount of dust around them, or they will gradually work off until the bearing becomes less sharp, and the more it is rounded off the greater amount it takes to turn them. Any hon. gentleman who has any wholesale business in this country, should insist that grocers' scales should be examined, because I take it is just as bad for a man to cheat himself and his family, and particularly his creditors, as it is to cheat his friends. The grocery business, as I understand, is in the same category with the cheese and the butter business, even the hay business and all such classes; so that I trust the Minister, when he looks into this matter, will be careful that he does not cut down the Estimates that are necessary to provide that the grocery trade of this country is put in a proper condition. I believe that a large number of the failures in this country can be attributed to the very fact that the grocery men are peddling out anywhere from one to five and ten per cent more goods than they are actually called upon to deliver for the amount of money that they receive. You can ask the best scale manufacturer in Canada, and I will guarantee that he will bear out my statement from his own experience; and I would also appeal to my hon. friend who lives in Brantford to verify my statement, or any other man in this House who handles groceries. I trust the Minister will consider this matter very carefully before he cuts down the Estimates, so that he may be able to give due regard to that class of trade.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have listened with a good deal of interest to this discussion, and I have heard the tribute paid to Mr. Miall by the Controller of Inland Revenue and likewise by the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood). Now, I would like to ask the hon. member for Brockville if he will kindly inform me when Mr. Miall's salary was increased. Has he been drawing the same salary as other deputy Ministers all along, or when was the change made, and when was the increase given to Mr. Miall? The member for Brockville speaks of his ability and of the technical character of the work in which he has discharged his duties while at the head of that department. Will the hon. member for Brockville tell the House if, during all those years, he was drawing the same salary that he is drawing now, or when was the salary increased? I think the hon. member for Brockville is in a position to let us know. If he did not draw the same salary all those years when his services were so much appreciated by the hon. member for Brockville, will he also kindly tell the House why he did not give him that higher salary to which his eminent services and qualifications and capacity entitled him? Will the hon. gentleman tell us that, and tell us when the increase was made, and when he was placed on the same scale of salary as that accorded to other Deputy Ministers?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Any inquiry of that kind may properly be addressed to the Minister in charge of the department at the present time. However, I do not hesitate to answer the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin), although the tone of his language would seem to indicate that he suspects there was something hidden. Now, every one knows that I have always been in favour of increasing the salary of Mr. Miall to what it formerly was. I think every person knows that he was in receipt of a salary of $4,200, that is, $3,400 as Deputy Minister, and $800 as Commissioner of Standards, for a great many years, almost from the time of his first appointment.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Since 1883.

Mr. McMULLEN. The latter part was taken away by Mr. Costigan.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I do not remember who was the Minister at the time. You are asking me about something that you ought to know as well as I do, although my communications with Mr. Miall in conversation would make me familiar with some circumstances attending the taking away of that $800. I only know that it was put back by the Government of Sir Mackenzie Bowell some time ago, a year or two ago.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I understood you to say that it was granted in 1883 and had been continued ever since.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I never said it had been continued ever since, and I shall be very much surprised if "Hansard" says anything of the kind. All I know is that it was continued for years. It was dropped when I was not a member of the late Government, and I was always in favour of its restoration. I was glad it was restored, and I shall vote for the continuance of its restoration.

Mr. HENDERSON. I heartily agree with what has fallen from the lips of the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Ganong) with respect to the pleasure with which merchants throughout the country will hail the visit of the inspectors. I have been engaged in mercantile pursuits for over twenty years, and I have been pleased to have the inspector make his visit and inspect the scales. We are just as much afraid that our scales may err against us as against our customers, and it is always a pleasure to receive the visit of the inspector and pay him the fee. I am sure it would be a matter of regret if this inspection were withdrawn, and people in trade had not the opportunity of having their scales regularly inspected. But I should like to draw the attention of the Controller to a matter connected with the inspection of scales whereby the work could be made more agreeable, and it is this: While the merchants are perfectly willing to pay the inspection fee, they do not like the idea of being charged even a small sum for the cartage of the standards of the inspectors from place to place. If some regulations were made by which the inspector would be paid this charge, considerable friction would be removed and the service made more acceptable, agreeable and satisfactory. I hope this little matter will receive attention, because the charge is always looked upon as being somewhat unfair.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Of course, I have no right to ask the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood) to state anything which he desires to withhold. The hon. member was, however, in the Government at the time this restoration of salary was made to Mr. Miall, although I do not remember whether the hon. gentleman was Controller of Inland Revenue or not. From the manner in which the hon. gentleman has spoken on this subject and has given information to the House, he may, perhaps, be willing to make some statements not covered by his oath of office. Of course, if the hon. gentleman declines to do so, I have no right to insist. He has, however, taken part in the debate and has spoken of the qualifications of Mr. Miall, and this part of Mr. Miall's salary was taken from him and restored during that period, and perhaps the hon. member for Brockville may be considered to be the proper man to give information on the point, as he was a member of the Government.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I do not wish any hon. member to sit down with the idea that I am not willing to give all the information in my power. I have answered everything that is in my power as clearly as I could.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I declare the amendment lost.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I declared the amendment was lost, before any one got up to ask for a vote.

Mr. DAVIN. I saw members standing, and I entirely object to the Chairman blocking business.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think that the members of this House have some rights. I do not think the action of the Chairman is commendable.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have a right to express my opinion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has not the right to condemn the ruling which I made. He has the right to appeal from that ruling. I put the question, and I thought by the yeas and nays that the amendment was lost, and, as nobody asked for a vote, I declared the amendment lost.

Mr. HUGHES. I beg the Chairman's pardon: there were a dozen members standing on their feet at the time. This is the second time this sort of thing has occurred.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. Shall this item be adopted?

Mr. HUGHES. I insist that the question be put. We are now on the amendment moved by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen).

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The amendment has been declared lost

Mr. HENDERSON. There is no use in proceeding with business in this way, and I do not think the House will permit it.

Mr. CASEY. I rise to a point of order. There is only one means by which an appeal can be taken.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish to say, further.—

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman must sit down when I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman is talking to a point of order himself.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman can only question the ruling of the Chair in one way, and that is by appealing from the ruling by methods well known, and this must be done without discussion. We have been through that often enough to know how it is done. There is a regular way of taking an appeal from the ruling of the Chair; but the House will not permit any hon. member to say that the Chairman's ruling is not right, when the course is open to him to appeal from the ruling, without discussion.

Mr. MACDONALD. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair, and I should like a vote on it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The question is now on the main item.

Mr. DAVIN. The question is, that we appeal from your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is a regular way of making an appeal. The motion is now on the item of $49,010. Is it the wish of the Committee to adopt this item?

Mr. DAVIN. I move that the ruling of the Chair be not sustained.

Mr. HUGHES. I second the motion.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). You are too late.

Mr. DAVIN. If that is the way the business is to be conducted, you will have no items go through to-night.

Mr. HUGHES. Not one.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I hope the committee will not get into a state of disorder over this. It is more a question of fact than anything else. It is in the interest of the Opposition as well as of the Government that the Chair should have proper respect paid to it, and the Chair must be sustained in its ruling. In all cases where a difference of opinion arises about the ruling of the Chair, there is only one mode of testing it, as my hon. friends opposite know very well.

Mr. HUGHES.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. The ruling of the Chair has been appealed from and the hon. Minister has no right to debate it. It must go without debate.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is entirely wrong. This is not a question you can put to the committee. That motion is entirely out of order, and it cannot be received or put by the Chair. The only question before the committee now is, shall the item be adopted. If the Chairman ruled, I am quite sure he ruled believing that he was right, and he rules in accordance with my own judgment as far as I could see. When he put the question, a sufficient number of members did not rise, and it was only afterwards they did so. But, if any hon. member wants to test the question again, all he has got to do is to move that the item be reduced by $799. There is no occasion whatever for getting into a rumpus about it. I appeal to the House to support the Chair in its ruling, and we all know that the ruling was given in good faith.

Mr. HUGHES. The proper way for the House to maintain the dignity of the Chair is for the Chair to maintain its own dignity, and it is not for the Chair—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. As a way of getting out of the difficulty, I move:

That the item of $49,010 be reduced by $799, the amount paid the Deputy Commissioner of Standards.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the amendment?

The Committee divided: Yeas, 37; nays, 52.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. SPROULE. Before that item is carried, I would like to say a word or two in regard to this question which is under consideration. The inspector of weights and measures in our part of the country was superannuated, I think, by the late Government, and a new man has been appointed in his place. I have no fault to find with what has been done beyond this: I think the gentleman who was appointed is really too old to efficiently do the work. The gentleman who was appointed to the position is, in my opinion, a man of sixty years of age or over, and without any technical knowledge, so far as I am aware, that would enable him to discharge the duties of the office efficiently; although he is a very nice man and a very respectable man. He was engaged up to that time in agricultural life and could not be an expert in this line. Now, it seems to me, that it would be much better if a younger man had been appointed. So far as I know, this gentleman stood no examination, nor was he subjected to any test to ascertain his fitness to discharge his duties. However, the hon. Minister may have other information than I have on this subject.

In regard to the question of doing away with the inspection of weights and measure, I am decidedly against it. I have always regarded it as one of the duties that the Government owes to the country, to see that we have honest weights and measures, and that they should be inspected from time to time, so that not only the buyer but the seller may know that justice was being done. I also approve of the system of inspection of gas and electric light, because often injustice is done to the purchaser of these as well as other commodities. Were I in the position, I would be inclined to go further, and appoint public weighers throughout the country, to weigh grain and cattle and everything else that is sold. If this were done you would establish confidence between buyer and seller, and do away with a great deal of bickering that takes place under present circumstances. It is not so much that people do not get their rights, as it is that they are suspicious that they do not get their rights, and so long as that exists they will not be satisfied. I hope that the time will come in the history of Canada when our products will all be weighed by men appointed for that special purpose, and who take an oath to do justice between man and man. I am not at all in favour of the principle of giving this work over to the municipalities, as I do not think it will be efficiently done by them. We had that system in the province of Ontario for a long time, and so far as my knowledge goes, it was a perfect farce. It was only a name and there was nothing in reality. The present system of government inspection is much better, gives greater satisfaction, and I think ought to be continued.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) tell me what inspector he was speaking of; I did not catch the name.

Mr. SPROULE. I was speaking of that gentleman from Egremont; what is his name? Mr. McNichol or Mr. Murdoch.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to say for the information of the House, that Mr. Murdoch has passed a civil service examination, that Mr. Murdoch has not only a great deal of general knowledge, but that he has, as well, a great deal of technical knowledge for this position. He was in one of the largest wholesale establishments in Canada for two years, where it was his duty to verify the scales, and was well qualified for the position. He is a man who has held positions of trust and responsibility in the township where he lives; he has also been warden of the large county of Grey, in which the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) lives; he is well known there and highly respected, and is a man of good abilities and admirably adapted for the position. As to his age, he is somewhat up in years, but he is mature in his judgment and kindly in his disposition, and I am informed by the department that he is a very competent officer and has complied with the law as laid down in the Civil Service Act, and he has the support of the people generally throughout that country. Every day I am told that a more capable and acceptable officer could not have been appointed.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not aware that he had passed the civil service examination, nor that a man of his age could come under the Civil Service Act, because he is beyond the limit of thirty-five years. With regard to his respectability, that is all that can be desired; I have nothing to say against him. I was not aware that he had occupied the position the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) says he did. I would be very sorry to say a word against him, because I have known him to be a respectable man, but I have also known him to be a farmer for thirty or thirty-five years, and I did feel that a man who has reached the age of sixty years or over is hardly the man to put in a position of that kind, because he would be under the Superannuation Act, though not properly under the Civil Service Act. These are the reasons I gave, and not any question of his respectability or general intelligence or kindly disposition, because I have nothing to say against him in these respects. But I really question the wisdom of appointing a man who has reached that time of life to a position which he cannot in the nature of things occupy very long.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There is a Civil Service Act for the outside service as well as for the inside service, and he has complied with that Act. The hon. gentleman spoke of him as only a farmer. I can tell the hon. gentleman that there are any number of farmers in my county who are fit to occupy any position in this country. When anything was to be done for the farmers, I have always heard the hon. gentleman say that it was not practicable or advisable to do it. Hon. gentlemen opposite were always saying that when on this side, and they are always saying it now.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a gratuitous assumption of the hon. gentleman, which has no foundation in fact.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would recommend the hon. gentleman to read the Civil Service Act, and he will find that age is not a disqualification for the outside service. It is capacity that is looked for, and as this gentleman has that capacity, and also respectability and honesty, and the confidence of the people, and is a farmer, he is well qualified for the place.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not want the hon. gentleman to attribute to me language which I did not use. I never said anything against the intelligence or respectability of the farmers or as to their not being qualified to fill public positions. I think I am quite as familiar with the Civil Service Act as the hon. gentleman is, and I know that a man must pass an examination for either the inside or the outside service. I claim that I have a perfect right to criticise the appointment of a man at his time of life to that position.

Salaries of Inspectors of Gas..... $15,150

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). After the reduction the hon. Controller has explained, why do the salaries remain the same?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. It is impossible for me to say what reduction will be made in the number of officers, or what diminution will be made in the expenditure, so far as travelling expenses are concerned, because if the officers do their duty, and go to the same places, they will have to do the same amount of travelling and inspection, whether there are two officers or three.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The item of office rent must, of course, be reduced.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. My hon. friend will see that the Order in Council was only passed two or three weeks ago.

Rent, fuel, travelling expenses, postage, stationery, &c., for gas and electric light inspection $8,000

Mr. SPROULE. I would like the Minister to say what rate is charged now for the inspection of electric lights?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. It has been reduced from $25 to $10 for any number of lights up to 1,000.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Was not that reduction made in the time of the previous Government?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think so.

Oyster culture $7,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). This is the same as last year, except $500 reduction, which Mr. Kemp intimated might be taken off.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How are you succeeding at Shediac?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Very well. The only question now is, how to allow the beds to be fished. If we let everybody go, they will soon be cleaned out. We are trying to have the oysters taken out in a reasonable way which will be fair all round.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I hope that something will be done in the direction of fishing by rotation. For instance, dividing the whole into three parts, and then fishing one division one season, and another the following season, and so on. That seems to be the plan tried in France, with great success. When the scheme was undertaken, it was contemplated that some such plan would be adopted.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly.

Salaries and contingent expenses of Customs in the province of Nova Scotia... $108,915

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). There is a decrease here, owing to some changes in the officers and some reductions in salary.

Nova Scotia..... $91,385

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. There is an increase here, because it is proposed to advance the salaries of some deserving officers at the port of St. John, and perhaps one or two other ports. The increase is proposed to old and very faithful officers, whose merits have been recommended to me strongly by those who are competent to judge.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think the explanation satisfactory. In Nova Scotia we can fairly ask for a decrease in the estimates. The hon. gentleman is comparing these with the estimates of last year, which were very much larger than those of previous years. Take the city of St. John; there is a very large staff in that port, larger, I think, than the necessity requires. As vacancies occur, the department ought not to fill them, because the staff is quite large enough to perform the duties. The expenditure should be cut down, instead of increased.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The position which the hon. gentleman speaks of as being vacant I have not dealt with yet. Whether it will be possible to carry out the business of the port without filling it, I do not know. That subject will receive consideration.

Customs—Salaries and contingent expenses of the several Ports—Prince Edward Island $18,200

Mr. SPROULE. There is a slight increase here. Will the hon. Controller please explain?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. It is proposed to give increases to a few of the officers who have served for a long time and have been recommended for increases. The total increase is very slight. While I appreciate the views expressed by hon. gentlemen opposite, they will agree with me that officers who have performed their duty faithfully for a long time without any advance in salaries, should, not only as a matter of fairness, but in the public interest, receive some increase.

Customs—Salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports, Quebec... $215,185

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the hon. Controller if he has provided to pay the allowance to Mr. O'Hara, assistant collector of customs in Montreal, who acted as collector during the three years between the death of Mr. Ryan and the appointment of Mr. White. I think Mr. O'Hara sent accounts to the department, which is a usual thing, and last year, if I understood well, the matter was considered, but some technicalities stood in the way and it was left over. I would ask if this year something will be done in the matter. I think that, in justice, this account should be paid, as Mr. O'Hara served faithfully during the three years he acted as collector.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I may say that the account referred to has not been fully considered. There are several officers who are in the same condition as Mr. O'Hara. This year, Mr. O'Hara, as far as I remember, has not renewed his request. I am very sorry to hear that he is ill at the present time. Some of the other officers who are placed in a similar position have renewed their request, but I have not been able to make up my mind to recommend any payment, though having sympathy with the cases that have been brought before me. But the idea of the head of the department before I came in seems to be that while such accounts had been allowed in previous years, it was the duty of an officer to discharge whatever duties he might have to perform. All these cases will have to be considered together. I was not sure whether the House would be prepared to sanction a vote for this purpose. There are two cases in Hamilton, one at the port of Windsor, and there were others besides. It was not want of sympathy with Mr. O'Hara and the other gentlemen that prevented me from allowing these accounts, but I thought, perhaps, it would be well not to introduce it at this time. It would require a special resolution at any rate.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand that the case still stands, and the hon. Controller has not yet dealt with it.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. It is still open for consideration.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think the hon. Controller appreciates the strong features of this case, which might remove it from the class of the other cases that come before him. Mr. O'Hara was for a long time acting as collector, and there is a great disparity, as I understand, between his regular salary and the salary of the collector. The duties are very important. I think the points of the case appeal to the hon. Controller. Personally I should be very glad if the rule which has been recognized in previous cases were to be applied in Mr. O'Hara's case, as it is a very strong case and one in which exceptional circumstances exist.

Mr. WALLACE. I see that the expenditure for the port of Montreal has increased to $141,000. That seems very high.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. There are some increases proposed in the port of Montreal. One is an addition of $250 to the salary (now $750) of Mr. Dawson. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) will agree with me that Mr. Dawson is a very efficient appraiser and was receiving a lower salary than should be given to a man occupying such a responsible position as he does. Fewer hands are employed in Montreal than last year. I think if I were to show the comparative expenditures for the first six months of the current year, the hon. gentleman would see that they are about the same as for the first six months of the previous year.

Mr. BERGERON. Concerning this demand for increased salary on the part of Mr. O'Hara, I understood the hon. gentleman to say that some of those who had spoken in his behalf last year have repeated their application this year, but that Mr. O'Hara had not asked for any more. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman would make such a distinction. The demand was made last year in the regular way, and I suppose the Government would not take advantage of the fact that he had not renewed his application. The demand has been made, and is supported by vouchers which are still before the hon. gentleman, and I hope that when he does consider the matter, he will look upon it in the light of a renewed application.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I would certainly be very sorry if I gave the impression that simply because M. O'Hara had not asked for it, I did not consider it. If the other cases are dealt with, Mr. O'Hara's case will be considered also.

Ontario—Salaries and contingent expenses for Customs..... $302,395

Mr. BRODER. Is it the intention to make the present officer at Morrisburg a permanent officer? He is paid out of another fund altogether, as supply officer, I understand. There is a rumour current around Morrisburg that it is the intention of the Government to make that town an outport of Cornwall, and to reduce the salary.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I have not considered that. We take the Estimate because the office is there, and it is being filled in the meanwhile.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it the intention to close the outport at Burlington in the county of Halton? The collector died some time ago, and I understand no appointment has yet been made.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The port was closed, the late incumbent was superannuated, and I think he died just about the same time. He was superannuated at his own request. I am in correspondence now with reference to the matter, as to whether, without establishing that outport again, accommodation can be offered or convenience given by an officer from the port of Hamilton. As the hon. gentleman knows, it is an outport of Hamilton. What may be eventually arrived at, I cannot say now.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the event of closing the outport of Burlington, I hope the hon. gentleman will see his way clear to open an outport at some other place in the county of Halton. If he decides, owing to Burlington being so near to Hamilton that it is not necessary to reopen an outport there he might establish an outport either in Milton or in Georgetown. There is considerable necessity in both places for an outport, and I hope that, as no additional expense will be incurred beyond what was heretofore incurred in collecting the revenue in the county of Halton, we will not be left without an additional port, either reopening in Burlington or establishing one in Milton or in Georgetown, or some place along the line of the Hamilton and North-western Railway.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman don't expect me to make any promise, but I will not forget that he has spoken to me, at any rate.

Mr. WALLACE. There is a large increase in the port of Berlin.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. There is an extra officer being appointed at Berlin. The hon. gentleman knows that there is a great deal of work at Berlin, it is a large port, and there is a large town adjacent to it.

Mr. WALLACE. I understood the hon. gentleman had dispensed with the services of one of the officers there.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Yes. There was a temporary officer there, but another one has been engaged in his place.

Mr. WALLACE. That makes two now, and you propose engaging a third one.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. There is a third one there temporarily appointed within the last ten days. The officer at Berlin has gone to Brantford for a time, the collector of Brantford having been taken ill.

Mr. PATERSON.

Mr. WALLACE. You are appointing two new officers at Berlin?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. If this one was to remain there permanently, there would be two new officers. I am asking provision for salaries for three. I want to give more attention to that town and to Waterloo.

Mr. REID. Has an extra officer been appointed at Prescott? There was a temporary officer there, as I understand, paid out of the extra funds collected, but he resigned, and I understand there has been no other officer appointed permanently.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Would that be Mr. Leahy? Yes, he was appointed there, but he simply replaced another officer.

Mr. WALLACE. As regards this increase of $400 in the vote for Bowmanville, I think it is unjustifiable. What are the collections at that port?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. At Bowmanville a new appointment has been made at a salary of $1,000.

Mr. WALLACE. The whole service of the port does not require an expenditure of $1,000, for one officer could do the work. What were the collections last year?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The collections were $5,898.

Mr. WALLACE. Here is a port that requires 27 or 28 per cent of its collections to pay the salary of the officers taking the money. I can recall another port where $5,800 is taken every month, and there is only one officer employed.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. There are no preventive duties to perform there.

Mr. WALLACE. There are preventive duties, but there are no preventive duties at Bowmanville.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. There are certain duties in connection with Newcastle that are performed through Bowmanville.

Mr. WALLACE. There is absolutely no business at Newcastle except when a vessel comes in there once or twice a year. What is the necessity of having two men at a port like Bowmanville? I sent one of the officers to other ports where a man was needed. It is quite true that the salary of the collector was $1,200 a year, but that was an old appointment, and perhaps the hon. gentleman knows the history of it, as I do. It was an appointment made by Sir Francis Hincks, who got this gentleman to retire in his favour and appointed him collector at $1,200 a year. One man undoubtedly can perform the duties. At points of similar importance, such as Brampton, only one man is employed and at less salary. Do I understand that the collector is to get $1,200 a year?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No, he will receive $200 less than the former collector.

Mr. WALLACE. I intended to superannuate that officer, and to appoint a man at $600 a year, who would have been able to perform the duties.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I think the hon. gentleman had two officers at Bowmanville during his term of office, one receiving $1,200 and another $500.

Mr. WALLACE. The appropriation last year was $1,220, including office rent and contingencies. This year the amount is $1,620, or an increase of $400. There is no excuse for appointing a man at a salary of $1,000 a year, because the officers at Barrie, Brampton and Orangeville do more business and show more collections, and yet the duties are performed by one officer at a salary of $600 or $700.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The fact remains that while the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace) was in office there were two officers at Bowmanville, a collector at $1,200 and an assistant at $500. The collector was superannuated, and the new appointee was given a salary $200 less, and no extra clerk has been appointed.

Mr. WALLACE. Why could not the salary have been reduced by $600 instead of $200?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I did not feel warranted in doing so.

Mr. REID. What is the reason of the increase in the permanent salaries at Prescott?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The amount is to provide for Mr. Leahy's salary, which had been under-estimated last year.

Mr. REID. It has been stated in the papers that the port of Morrisburg had been reduced to an outport. Is that a fact?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. We made no change in Morrisburg.

Mr. REID. It has not been reduced to an outport?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. KLOEPFER. There is a decrease of $375 in the port of Guelph. How does that occur?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. One of the officers resigned, and there was a new appointment made, with a less salary.

Mr. WALLACE. There is an increase in the port of Brantford. Does that mean appointing another officer?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, an acting landing waiter, not a permanent official, has been appointed. As the hon. gentleman knows, the receipts of the port would fully justify it, as they amount to $130,944. There were three officers there, and we appointed another officer at $400.

Mr. WALLACE. The newspapers report that the Controller has superannuated three officers at the port of London. What were the officers superannuated for?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. There were not three superannuated. One of our officers at London died, and two officers there will be superannuated; the notice has not been sent out to them yet. The inspector reported that it was in the public interest that they should be placed upon the retired list.

Mr. WALLACE. Too old, or what?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Unfortunately, not only too old, but I am sorry to say, rather disabled. I think they had a stroke of paralysis.

Mr. WALLACE. I see that one of these officers was born in 1832, and the collector, Mr. Reid, was born in 1822, but the collector is not disturbed, and the appraiser, although ten years younger, was dismissed on account of being too old.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. If the thought is in the mind of the hon. gentleman, that they were superannuated in order to make room for other persons, I can assure him that he is entirely wrong in that. There was no such thought in my mind. They were superannuated on the report of the chief inspector, which was so worded that I felt it my duty to do so. I can assure the hon. gentleman that there was not the first thought in my mind to remove them to make way for others.

Mr. WALLACE. I would again call attention to the fact that the collector of the port, who is seventy-five years old, and a good Grit, is continued in his office; while Mr. Siddons, who I know to be a most competent man, and Mr. Sutherland, both appraisers, both very competent men, and many years younger than the collector, have their heads taken off, while Mr. Reid remains in office.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I do not think the hon. gentleman should say that, as if I had done something which I should not have done.

Mr. WALLACE. These men are very competent men.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Does the hon. gentleman know the affliction of these gentlemen, that has been reported to me.

Mr. WALLACE. I do, in the case of only one.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I speak subject to correction, but I think they both suffered a paralytic stroke.

Mr. WALLACE. No, just one; and I think I am safe in saying that a slight paralytic stroke did not interfere with his ability to perform his duties. I make the statement, that the papers said that three officers were superannuated. The names are: Mr. Siddons, Mr. Sutherland and Mr. Williams.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The papers, contrary to their usual custom, have made a mistake this time. Mr. Williams has not been superannuated, that I know of. Mr. Callet died, and two appraisers have been superannuated, and only two.

Mr. WALLACE. I see the hon. the Controller is asking for just about as much money as before, so, of course, he intends to fill these offices.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Oh, yes, they must be filled. The hon. gentleman knows—no one knows it better—that the position of appraiser requires a very capable and able man. He knows that the port of London is a very important port. I wish to make no reflection upon the officers who have been superannuated. The report that I received in reference to them was that they were good men, but, unfortunately, their state of health was such that they had become partially disabled, one at least—I am not sure whether it refers to the other. It was reported that they were unable to discharge their duties as efficiently as they had done in the past.

Mr. WALLACE. Did they apply for superannuation?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I think they did not apply. I acted on the report of the inspector in reference to the matter.

Mr. SEAGRAM. I would like to ask the Controller of Customs, why Mr. Scully, who was appointed collector by the late Government at the port of Berlin, and whose appointment was assented to by the Governor General, was dismissed and another appointed in his place?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. If I remember aright, that was one of the positions which was included in the list to which His Excellency did not give his assent.

Mr. SEAGRAM. It was assented to, and he was on the published list.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I think the office was one of those that had been vacant for more than a year.

Mr. SEAGRAM. I beg the Controller's pardon; it did not exist for a year.

Mr. WALLACE.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. That is my impression.

Mr. SEAGRAM. I beg your pardon, sir; the vacancy did not exist for a year. Mr. Scully was appointed by the late Government, and he was one of those that the Governor General assented to, and his name is on the list.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. However it may have appeared, I think the records of the department prove that the vacancy had existed for more than a year.

Mr. SEAGRAM. It was less than a year; I have personal knowledge of that. The collector was short in his accounts, and left the country, and the vacancy did not occur till then.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Can the hon. gentleman tell me the date when he left the country?

Mr. SEAGRAM. It was about the 20th of July.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I am informed that he received no pay during July.

Mr. SEAGRAM. I would like to know why that officer was dismissed, because I am positive that he was appointed within the year, and it even appeared in the "Globe" newspaper that this position was filled by J. M. Scully.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. My colleague says his name is not in the list of those whose papers were intended to be signed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Let the hon. gentleman bring the matter up on concurrence, and in the meantime we will look into the facts.

Mr. REID. The Minister will remember the case of the collector appointed at Morrisburg.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. That is Mr. Halliday. He comes in list B, if I remember rightly, but he has not been appointed to the position as yet, and the office is being filled temporarily by an officer from the port of Montreal.

Mr. REID. I understand that the Governor General assented to his appointment, and I would like to know if there is any reason why he should not receive it?

Customs, North-west Territories..... $12,050

Mr. SPROULE. What explanation has the hon. gentleman to give of this increase of $3,000?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. That is accounted for in part by the establishment of an office at Calgary, and an office at Fort Cudahy, and there is an officer appointed in the Yukon District, Mr. Davis, who used to sit in this House.

Customs—British Columbia $71,285

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase here of $3,535. What is the explanation of that?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know whether that is enough or not. We have to have more officers there, owing to the number of people going into the country. The cost of living is very high, and I have increased the salary of one of our officers by an amount which he has been allowed for board.

Mr. WALLACE. What officer?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Mr. Johnson. We have appointed some extra officers in that country, more particularly in the Kootenay district, which the hon. gentleman will agree with me are absolutely necessary.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman asked last session for an increase of $4,000 to $5,000 for an increased force of officers in British Columbia to which I gave my assent, and now he is asking for an increase of $3,700, but he has not increased the number of officers. At Kaslo the customs collector acts as landing waiter as well, and is kept at work from eight in the morning until twelve at night. He has no assistance. The hon. gentleman got an appropriation last year to give assistance in those places where one man was doing the work of two, but he has not made the appointment.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I have sent one there.

Mr. WALLACE. That is not correct unless he went within the last eight or ten days.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I am providing for his salary at any rate.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman provided for his salary last year, and there was no appointment. He is providing now for two salaries and still there is no appointment. Although the collections at Kaslo are more in a month than they are at Bowmanville in a year, he has appointed two men at the latter place.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I appointed only one man.

Mr. WALLACE. There was another there already. Last Parliament the hon. gentleman asked for an appropriation to appoint new officers in British Columbia and Parliament voted the amount, and now he asks for $3,700 more than last year, and does not tell the committee where he is making the appointment or what appointment he is making for the $4,000 or $5,000 additional which he got last year, besides the $3,700 which he is asking for this year.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I propose to appoint a new officer at Medway and a preventive officer at Stevenson. I am making provisions for the appointment of other officers in the Estimates, and hon. gentlemen who know the work that is being done there will agree on the necessity for additional assistance. $3,700 more does not cover a great many officers, if paid commensurate for their services in that country, where the cost of living is very high.

Mr. WALLACE. I would advise the hon. gentleman that places like Rossland and Kaslo, where the collections are much larger than at Nelson, should be made ports and not be continued as outports tributary to Nelson. The principle of establishing outports, except at small preventive stations, should not be encouraged.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I have followed out the suggestion of the hon. gentleman and have made ports of Kaslo and Rossland ports of entry.

Miscellaneous—Day books, &c., printing and stationery, &c., &c., for various ports of entry, and for legal expenses.. $20,000

Mr. SPROULE. How do you include legal expenses in this?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. We have to pay legal expenses in connection with suits entered against the department.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). It is the same form of vote as last year.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase of $2,000.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. That increase is to be accounted for by the fact that blank forms are now given free to those making entries at the Customs. It used to be the rule to charge for these forms. It was a small matter, and irritating and annoying to those doing business with the Customs. Then we will have to provide a new set of books, because of the new tariff.

Resolutions to be reported.

Mr. DAVIES moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.35 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 19th May, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MINING DEVELOPMENT AND ADVISORY CORPORATION OF BRITISH AMERICA.

Mr. MORRISON moved :

That that part of the Fifth Report of the Select Committee on Standing Orders which refers to the petition of the Mining Development and Advisory Corporation of British America, be referred back to said committee for further consideration.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. MORRISON. This Bill came before the House, and in due course was submitted to the Committee on Standing Orders. Inadvertently and unavoidably there was no person present to explain the Bill when the committee met, especially in regard to the second section which the committee did not understand, and reported adversely, and in the report made to the House by the chairman of the committee it was stated that the committee reported against that section. To-day the Bill again came before the committee, and to our surprise we found the second clause has been reported against, and of course the committee did not wish to proceed further at that time. So on the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, this motion is made that the matter may be referred back to the committee.

Mr. WILSON. What is the reason given : is it that proper notice has not been given ?

Mr. MORRISON. The objection raised was that the clause contained provisions which were not covered by the petition. In my opinion this is not quite correct, and the clause does not contain any provision inconsistent with the petition. We are, however, ready to argue that point before the committee to-morrow, and we are confident we shall be able to show that there has been no evasion of the rules.

Motion agreed to.

EMPLOYEES ON CORNWALL CANAL.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry) asked :

1. Has A. P. Ross, superintendent of Cornwall Canal, been dismissed? If so, when, and for what cause?
2. Has there been any complaint against him, and by whom? And if so, what was the nature of the complaint?
3. Has there been any investigation held previous to his dismissal?

Mr. PATERSON.

4. Why was A. Mulaney dismissed without notice? Was an investigation held, and by whom?

5. What were the complaints against Roderick McKinnon, who was dismissed from the Cornwall Canal? Has an investigation been held, and by whom?

6. Why was T. Shields, who has been twenty-seven years in the service of the Government on the Cornwall Canal, and who contributed to the superannuation fund all that time, been dismissed without notice or investigation? Do the Government intend to grant him superannuation?

7. Why was W. Mea dismissed from the bridge across the canal at Cornwall? Were there any complaints against him, and has an investigation been held?

8. How long has J. Graves been employed on the Cornwall Canal? Has he been dismissed? What are the complaints against him? Has there been an investigation held?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair).

1. Yes, the services of Mr. A. P. Ross, superintendent of the Cornwall Canal, have been dispensed with. His services ended on the 31st March ultimo, on account of the office being abolished.
2. There were no complaints against him.
3. There was no occasion for an investigation.
4. The services of Mr. Mulaney were dispensed with on account of reduction of staff. No occasion for an investigation.
5. Mr. Roderick McKinnon has not been dismissed from the Cornwall Canal.
6. Mr. T. Shields was recommended to be retired by the superintending engineer under the Superannuation Act as he is not competent to perform the duties of lockmaster efficiently.
7. Mr. John Mea was removed from office on recommendation of the superintending engineer, he not being a suitable person for the service.
8. Mr. J. Greaves was employed on the Cornwall Canal for thirteen years. His services were dispensed with on account of reduction of staff. No need for an investigation.

CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.

Mr. TAYLOR (for Mr. Sproule) asked :

Have any persons, and how many, been appointed to the inside service of the Post Office Department since 1st July, 1896, who have not passed the prescribed examination required by the Civil Service Act? Are any such persons so appointed now engaged in the department?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). No.

MICHAEL ENRIGHT.

Mr. QUINN asked :

1. Is it true that Michael Enright, an employee at Montreal on Lachine Canal, was dismissed on 3rd April last without notice?
2. Was he so dismissed by order of the Minister of Railways and Canals?
3. On whose recommendation was he so dismissed?
4. Why was he so dismissed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair).

1. The services of Michael Enright, employed at Montreal on the Lachine Canal, were dispensed with. 2. Yes. 3. At the request and upon the representation of the members of Parliament for Montreal districts. 4. No written complaint was lodged in the department.

LACHINE CANAL—MICHAEL BEHAN.

Mr. GANONG asked :

1. Is it true that Michael Behan, storeman on Lachine Canal at Montreal, was dismissed on 30th April without any previous notice?

2. Was he so dismissed by order of the Minister of Railways and Canals?

3. On whose recommendation was he so dismissed?

4. Why was he so dismissed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. 1. The services of Michael Behan, storeman on the Lachine Canal, were dispensed with on the 30th of April last. 2. Yes. 3. At the request and upon the representation of the members of Parliament for Montreal districts. 4. No written complaint was lodged in the department.

Mr. GANONG. The hon. gentleman has not answered the last portion of the question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes : I have given the information.

BREAKWATER—CAMPOBELLO, N.B.

Mr. GANONG asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to repair and extend the Government breakwater at Wilson's Beach, Campobello, New Brunswick, during the coming summer and fall?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). That matter is now under consideration by the Government.

ANTIGONISH —INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

(A.) Have the following, or any of them, and which of them, if any, been dismissed from the service of the Intercolonial Railway :—

(1) Alexander Stewart, section foreman at Linwood, Antigonish?

(2) John Chisholm, section man at Heatherton, Antigonish?

(3) Finlay Chisholm, section foreman, James River, Antigonish?

(B.) If dismissed was any investigation made prior to dismissal, and what was its nature?

(C.) How long were these men in the service of the Government, and what was the record of each for efficiency and conduct?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The services of Alexander Stewart, section foreman at Linwood, Antigonish, were dispensed with on the 7th of January last. (B.) No investigation was considered necessary, as it was explicitly and positively affirmed by Mr. McIsaac, M.P., that Alex. Stewart had infringed the rule laid down in respect to Government employees. (C.) He had been in the service since September, 1880. Nothing recorded against him. 2. The services of John Chisholm, section man at Heatherton, Antigonish, were dispensed with on the 12th of November last on the personal statement and representation of Mr. McIsaac, M.P., that Chisholm had been guilty of active and offensive partisanship in the last general elections. There was no investigation. He had been in the service since August, 1884. Nothing recorded against him. 3. The services of Finlay Chisholm, section foreman at James River, Antigonish, were dispensed with on the 18th November last, on the statement and representation of Mr. McIsaac, M.P., that he had been guilty of active and offensive partisanship in the last general elections. There was no investigation. He had been in the service since June, 1879.

POST OFFICE—ST. VALERIEN DE RIMOUSKI.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON asked :

Has the Postmaster General made any change in the post office at St. Valerien de Rimouski, and if so, who is now in charge of that office?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). A change was made in the month of March last in the postmastership at St. Valerien de Rimouski, and as the office is reported as having been transferred to the new postmaster, it is assumed that he is in charge of it ; no information to the contrary having been received at the department.

RIMOUSKI—INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON asked :

For what causes and on whose recommendation have the following employees on the Intercolonial Railway at St. Flavie Station been dismissed :—Hormisdas Ouellet, Nicéphore Tremblay, Joseph Gagnon, Jean Baptiste Levêque, J. Alphonse Le Brun, Marcel LeBrun, Cyprien Thibault?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The services of Hormisdas Ouellet, Nicéphore Tremblay, Joseph Gagnon, Jean Baptiste Leveque, J. Alphonse LeBrun, Marcel LeBrun and Cyprien Thibault, employees on the Intercolonial Railway, were dispensed with on the 3rd May, 1897, at the request and on the representation of Dr. Fiset, M.P., that these persons had taken an active and offensive partisan course in the late Dominion elections.

VALLEYFIELD POSTMASTER.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

1. Who has been appointed postmaster at Valleyfield in place of Mr. D. Pitre?

2. On whose recommendation was the new postmaster appointed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Mr. Ephrem Desparois has been nominated to the postmastership of Valleyfield. 2. This was done on the recommendation of the Hon. J. I. Tarte.

BRITISH COLUMBIA TELEGRAPH LINES.

Mr. RICHARDSON (for Mr. Bostock) asked :

1. What is the arrangement between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway as to the keeping up and repairing of the telegraph line between Ashcroft and Barkerville and Ashcroft and Lillooet, and how long does this arrangement last?

2. What is the arrangement with regard to the appointing of operators?

3. Who decided at what point instruments are to be installed along the line?

4. Can the Minister of Public Works give any reasons why the instruments were put in the present offices?

5. In the event of the receipts not being equal to the expenditure, who pays the difference?

6. Is there any way of knowing whether messages are sent between points on this line and not paid for?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Since 1st October, 1886, the line from Ashcroft to Barkerville has been operated in conjunction with the Canadian Pacific telegraph system. The branch to Lillooet from Ashcroft was added in January, 1896. The expense for maintenance and operation of the whole is chargeable to the Government, less the amount of revenue collected. This arrangement is terminable at any time at the pleasure of the Minister. 2. The appointment of operators is made by the Minister of Public Works, or by his sanction given to the local superintendent of the Canadian Pacific telegraphs in British Columbia, who also acts as district superintendent for the Government in respect to these two lines. In cases where the office happens to be one of merely passing requirement or where rendered desirable through line maintenance considerations involving no outlay on the part of the Government, the district superintendent exercises his discretion in providing the needful service. 3. All of the older services were established prior to British Columbia entering into confederation and have been continuously maintained. Some later offices have been rendered desirable to meet growing requirements and have been provided for as in the preceding clause. 4. Yes, in every instance to meet the requirements of traffic or to increase facilities for maintaining the line in order. 5. The excess of expenditure over revenue is paid by the Government. 6. The returns of the offices are rendered monthly and the statements signed by the agents in each instance represent the whole of the traffic. The figures are in due course checked one against the other and discrepancies inquired into and adjusted. The rules of the service provide for certain free messages between or on personal account of employees, of which no account is taken in the statements. It is estimated that were these lines worked apart from the railway company's system, the charges (for supervision and accounting) would increase the Government outlay by at least $1,200 per year.

ABITTIBI AND GRAND LAC INDIANS.

Mr. KLOCK (for Mr. Poupore) asked :

1. Are the Indians who live in the Abittibi and Grand Lac districts in the province of Quebec, treaty Indians?

2. Have their claims been extinguished?

3. Are they subject to any game laws of the province of Quebec, and do such laws restrain them from killing beaver and other fur-bearing animals?

4. Is the Government aware that beaver and other fur-bearing animals are their only or principal means of subsistence?

5. Is the Government aware that these Indians are likely to suffer from distress and famine during the autumn and winter if they are restrained from killing or taking those animals for their subsistence?

6. Does the Government propose to take any, and what means to relieve them?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. They are not treaty Indians. 2. There has never been any formal extinguishment of territorial claims in the province of Quebec. As to the Indians in question, a reserve was set aside at Lake Temiscamingue for the nomadic tribes inhabiting that part of the country watered by the Ottawa River, which is adjacent to Hudson's Bay territory, and a reserve was set aside at Maniwaki for the tribes whose hunting grounds extended over the territory between St. Maurice and Gatineau Rivers, and the Indians who live in the Abittibi and Grand Lac districts are taken to be of the tribes for whom these reserves were set aside. 3. They are subject to the game laws of the province of Quebec, under which the hunting of fur-bearing animals is restricted to certain months in the year, and the killing of beaver entirely prohibited until the 1st November, 1900. 4. The Government is aware that beaver and other fur-bearing animals are their principal means of subsistence. 5. The Government fears that these Indians are likely to suffer destitution as a result of the operation of the Quebec game laws. 6. The Department of Indian Affairs has been in communication with the provincial authorities with a view to obtaining some exceptional treatment for these Indians under the game laws. Up to the present, however, no concession has been made in the matter by the provincial authorities, further than an intimation that a special permit might be given to any Indian whose poverty was well established, but it is the intention of the department to continue to urge that a general exception should be made in favour of these Indians. The Government does not propose taking any special measures for the relief of these Indians, but will be prepared, in the event of the occasion arising, to extend some assistance to them out of the ordinary appropriation for the relief of Indians in the province of Quebec.

INLAND REVENUE DEPARTMENT—GEORGE VEZINA.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Was the following letter addressed to the agent of the Minister of Justice at Quebec by E. L. Newcombe, Deputy Minister of Justice :—

“ Ottawa, 21st October, 1896.

“ Sir.—Queen vs. Vezina—I have the honour to inform you that I am to-day in receipt of a letter from the Department of Inland Revenue, stating that as the delay granted in this matter has expired, the department would be glad if you would now enforce the judgment.”

2. Was the following letter addressed to the agent of the Minister of Justice at Quebec by E. L. Newcombe, Deputy Minister of Justice :—

“ Ottawa, 26th October, 1896.

“ Sir.—Queen vs. Vezina—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 23rd instant, and to ask that you will have every effort made to have Vezina arrested.”

3. Was the following telegram addressed to the said agent by the Hon. H. G. Joly de Lotbinière, Controller of Inland Revenue, on the 3rd November, 1896 :—

“ Please suspend proceedings against Vezina until further instructed. I believe he was several times condemned to pay fines. Has he paid any of them, does he owe any more and what sum?”

4. Is it not true that the Vezina referred to in the foregoing is George Vezina, of Quebec, convicted of having violated the provisions of the Inland Revenue laws?

5. If so, the following questions :—(1.) “ Is it not a fact that the present Controller of Inland Revenue gave orders to have George Vezina, of Quebec, imprisoned under conviction of having infringed the inland revenue laws? (2.) If he did not, why did he not give the necessary instructions to carry out sentence of the court? (3.) If he did give instructions, why were they not carried out?” Why did the Government on the 3rd of May instant, as appears in “ Hansard,” p. 1964, answer as follows :—“ When the present Government came into office they found the case had been disposed of by their predecessors in office and they did not deem it at all advisable to disturb the disposition of that case?”

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). The answer to the first question is in the affirmative; the answer to the second question is also in the affirmative; and the answer to the third question is also in the affirmative. The reason why the sentence was not carried out against Mr. Vezina was this: That, after the Controller of Inland Revenue had looked into the matter, he thought the matter had been disposed of by the late Government, and he thought it advisable not to reopen it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that he has not answered the fifth question at all.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, I have.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. the Premier may say that is an answer, but I respectfully submit it is not.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. the Prime Minister has given his answer.

BEHRING SEA SEAL REGULATIONS.

Mr. PRIOR. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Minister of Marine, if he, or any other member of the Government has received a copy of the resolutions passed by the provincial legislature of British Columbia in regard to sealing matters. On the 3rd of May, the legislature sitting at Victoria, B.C., unanimously passed a resolution in regard to the regulations at present in force for sealing in the Behring Sea. It seems that the regulations which were agreed to by the tribunal of arbitration which sat in Paris in August, 1893, did not give satisfaction to a large number of the sealers. Knowing that these regulations might be altered, the Dominion Government pressed upon the Imperial Government the advisability of doing so, and a resolution to the same effect was passed in the local House, to be forwarded to the Dominion Government. I would therefore ask the hon. gentleman if he has seen that resolution, or if it has been forwarded.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). The hon. gentleman was kind enough to send across the House to me yesterday a copy of the Votes and Proceedings of the British Columbia legislature, which contained the resolution he refers to. That was the first intimation I had of the passage of the resolution. It has not yet been received by the Government, though I assume that it will come in the due course of the mail. There is no immediate occasion for hurry. The regulations made under the Paris award were made in the year 1893, and are to be continued for a period of five years. I understand from the resolution which my hon. friend gave to me yesterday to read, that dissatisfaction exists among the Canadian sealers with respect to the regulations. The hon. gentleman is aware, of course, that dissatisfaction also exists, and has been diplomatically expressed, on behalf of the United States with those regulations. In fact, they went so far as to urge Her Majesty's Government, I believe, to consent to some amendment being made in them before the five years expired. The matter was very courteously communicated to the Canadian Government for its information, and the opinion of the Canadian Government has been transmitted to Her Majesty's Government. We see no reason at the present moment for advising any alteration in the existing regulations before the expiration of the five years for which they were made.

Mr. PRIOR. The sealers seem to fear that the Americans are going to urge that the present season be made a close season.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I may say to the hon. gentleman, that the Canadian Government were very careful to press upon Her Majesty's Government the views which we believe to be held by a majority, in fact, by the whole of the Canadian public, and the Canadian sealers in particular; and at the present moment Her Majesty's Government are in full possession of those views. I may say frankly that our views do not differ at all from the views of our predecessors, which they also expressed to Her Majesty's Government.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General whether the return which was ordered by the House, of the evidence taken in the inquiry as to the postmaster at Northfield, B.C., will soon be brought down.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I will make inquiry in regard to the matter without delay.

Mr. McALISTER. I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if the papers and correspondence which I asked for some days ago with regard to the dismissal of Mr. Verge, fishery officer for the River Restigouche, will soon be brought down.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). I have not been informed that the order has yet reached my department, but as soon as it does, there will not be any delay in bringing it down, as the papers are very few. I will see that the matter is at once attended to.

Mr. McALISTER. On the same day, about two weeks ago, I also asked for correspondence in regard to the closing of the post office at Oak Bay Mills, in the county of Bonaventure.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I would like to ask the hon. leader of the House, in the absence of the Controller of Customs and the Controller of Inland Revenue, at what time I may expect a return, which was asked for some time ago, of the number of officials appointed to office since the 30th of July, 1896, in those two departments; also the number of officials who had been dismissed, and the cause of their dismissal since the same date. I understood that we were to have the discussion on the Estimates for these two departments postponed until that information had been obtained, because I think that is the proper time for a discussion of the dismissal of officials who in the opinion of this side of the House have been improperly dismissed. Last night, I regret to say, the Customs Estimates were brought up in my absence and passed, though I had the word of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the Fishery Estimates were to be taken up. I trust that before concurrence we may have the return, which I think by this time should have been laid on the Table of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). I have taken a note of the matter, and I may say to my hon. friend that very strict and urgent orders have been issued this very day to have all these returns brought down with the least possible delay.

Mr. FOSTER. I said the other day that I would not ask again for certain returns which were ordered by the House. Fifteen minutes would be sufficient to make up some of those returns; others are more voluminous. I do not propose to ask for them again. I will take the constitutional course open to me to obtain them.

The PRIME MINISTER. This very day I had the matter in hand, and gave orders to have the returns prepared without delay.

BANK NOTE PRINTING CONTRACT.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to give notice to my hon. friend that to-morrow I will bring up the Burland bank note contract.

SUPPLY—DISMISSALS IN MONTREAL.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Speaker, before this motion is put, I would like to draw the attention of the House, and particularly the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), to the questions which were put in my name to-day, and the answers which were given to them. The first question was concerning Michael Enright, an employee on the Lachine Canal at Montreal. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, in answering this question, said that it was quite true that Michael Enright had been dismissed on the 30th of April last, and that he had been dismissed on the order of the Minister of Railways and Canals and on the recommendation of the members for the city of Montreal. Now, I wish to draw his attention to the fact that my hon. friend from St. Antoine, Montreal, (Mr. Roddick), and myself, who are both members for a portion of the city of Montreal, made no such recommendation, nor did we recommend the dismissal of Michael Behan, who is mentioned in the next question.

The Minister also said that there was no written complaint against these men. Now, I do not think that is an answer to the question why these men were dismissed. The object of the questions was to find out what system had been adopted by the Government in the dismissal of employees on the canal and in other departments. We knew as a matter of fact that these men had been dismissed on the recommendation of some persons who supported the Government but were not members of this House. We had ample proof of that in one case which was brought before the House some time ago, when it was shown that one of the hon. members of this House had handed over to a committee in his riding the right to dismiss employees and to select those who should replace them. We have the same thing existing in Montreal, and it was in order to show this that I asked why men enjoying the good character these two men do, as is proven by the certificates of their superiors, should have been dismissed from the employ of the Government. I was answered that they were dismissed on the recommendations of hon. members from Montreal. This is disproved by the statement I now make that no such recommendation came from me, and by a similar statement which my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Roddick) no doubt will make, that neither did he make any such recommendations. I would ask the hon. Minister who has particular charge of this matter, whether it is not absolutely correct that no such recommendations were made. The House, and I think the country, will see at once that the reply of the Government was not correct, and that these men were not dismissed on the recommendations of hon. members from Montreal. The Government also replied that they were dismissed without any written complaints. But, I ask, why were they so dismissed? Were they dismissed because they were entitled to the certificates which were given them and which I shall now read to the House? To Mr. Enright this certificate was given:

This is to certify that Michael Enright has been connected with the Lachine Canal as lock labourer, bridge-keeper and watchman for thirty-four years, and that during that time he has proved himself a steady, sober and reliable man. I have much pleasure in stating that I have found him very satisfactory during the last four years, or since I have myself had charge of the canal.

ERNEST MARCEAU,
Supt. Engineer.

Was it because of his good conduct and because of this certificate that he was dismissed? If not, what was the reason? There is nothing against his character, there was nothing against his conduct as an employee, there is nothing against him in any way. Why, then, was he dismissed? We are told he was dismissed without any written complaint, but that does not give the reason for his dismissal. What I should like to find out is what system was adopted by the Government in the case of dismissals of men of this kind.

The next certificate concerns Mr. Behan, who was dismissed at the same time. In this case I have two certificates, one from the superintendent of Lachine Canal, and the other from the superintending engineer of canals generally in the province of Quebec. The first certificate is from Mr. Conway, superintendent of Lachine Canal:

Montreal, 1st May, 1897.

To all whom it may concern.

This is to certify that Mr. Behan has been employed as storeman in connection with the Lachine Canal during the past two years, and during that time has given excellent satisfaction. He is a thoroughly reliable man, and I willingly recommend him to any party requiring such a person.

J. CONWAY,
Supt. Lachine Canal.

The second certificate is from Mr. Marceau, the superintending engineer of Quebec canals:

Montreal, 1st May, 1897.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that Michael Behan has been employed during two years as storeman on the Lachine Canal. I have always found him a painstaking, steady and reliable man. I have much pleasure in giving him this testimonial.

ERNEST MARCEAU,
Superintending Engineer Quebec Canals.

I was not at all curious to know from the Government the fact that these men were dismissed. We know that ourselves, and these men know it very much to their own regret and sorrow. We know it, I think, to the shame of the administration of public affairs and the distribution of public offices in this country. But what we want to know is why they were dismissed and how they were dismissed. They were certainly not dismissed on the recommendation of any member of this House from Montreal, and they were certainly not dismissed for misconduct. Is it not true that they were dismissed on the recommendation of men who hold no position in this House? Is it not true that they were dismissed at the behest of a committee occupied in Montreal at present in cutting off the heads of public officers there? Is it not true that these men were dismissed without any reason whatever, but simply because their friends were supporters of the Conservative party and they were appointed during the regime of the Conservative party? If these things be true, should not the country know it? Is it not proper that true answers should be given to the questions put, so that the country may judge whether or not public officers are to be dismissed in this way? I hold that whatever this Government has done, it certainly must assume the full responsibility for this before the country. If they do not, if they have not the courage to assume the responsibility, why do they permit themselves to be coerced into a line of action for which they will not become responsible before the country in a manly and straightforward manner.

Mr. PENNY. In reply to the hon. member for Montreal Centre, I regret very much that my hon. friend and colleague, the hon. member for Hochelaga, is not in his seat at present. So far as I know, there is no committee in Montreal for cutting off heads. I never heard of any such committee, but I have heard that a great many of the former employees on the Lachine Canal were simply tools in the hands of the late Government, and were used as political machines to work against the Liberal party. In the absence of my hon. friend from Hochelaga, that is all I propose to say.

Mr. MONK. It is a matter of great regret both to me and those interested in my county, that there is not a properly organized committee of the Liberal party in Montreal who might dispose of the patronage, at least with some show of justice. In the county of Jacques Cartier, there is a bridge-master at Cote St. Paul, who held his position over seventeen years. He obtained it through the influence of the late Hon. Mr. Laflamme, formerly Minister of Justice in the Mackenzie Administration, so that he owed his position to the Liberal party. Presumably he was a Liberal, but I never saw him before his dismissal. At any rate, he fulfilled his duties perfectly well. But what happened? On the 30th of April at nine o'clock in the evening, this man, who was lodged at the expense of the Government, who had never dreamt of having to seek another position or even another house, to shelter himself and his large family, received notice to quit the very next day. This man occupied his position in the county of Jacques Cartier, where there is a large Liberal contingent, among which surely could have been found some one to replace him, if the Government were bound to dismiss him. But what do we find? Why, a man from Hochelaga was sent in his place. The same thing happened in the case of the lockmaster, a man who was twenty-five years in his position, who was placed there without any political influence whatever, but solely by the influence of his father, who had been in the employ of the Government for many years, and who never meddled in politics. The same treatment was given him. At nine o'clock in the evening of the 30th April, he was given notice to quit his house and occupation the next morning. He, too, was replaced by some one from the neighbouring county of St. Henri. Something similar happened in Lachine. I believe that if these dismissals must take place, the very least that could be done would be to replace these men by other men from the same county, taken from the Liberal ranks, and not take them from the neighbouring counties. I heard the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) say the other day that in his own county he had not seen fit to advise any dismissals. It is a matter of regret to me that our neighbours in Montreal have not adopted that humane policy. We had the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) stating that, in his opinion, when the member representing a county declared that such and such a man, for reasons he might or might not give, was unworthy to fill his position, he should be dismissed. This is going pretty far. I think it is contrary to the principle of British justice that a man should be dismissed without even being told for what reason he is dismissed, wholly without opportunity to answer the accusation which the member for the county may make against him. But to say that members from neighbouring counties, utterly irresponsible to the electors of the county affected, can, by some means, get men out of their positions and replace them by men from their own counties is a phase of this much worn question of dismissals which has not, thus far, been before the House. In the county of Jacques Cartier we have had to suffer considerably from that evil, men being dismissed against whom no accusation could be brought and being replaced by men from neighbouring counties. In this the Government is not doing me an injury but it is doing itself a great injury and committing a great injustice against the people of the county.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Public Works—River St. Lawrence Channel $200,000

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Will the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) tell us exactly what this money is to be used for? Of course I understand the scope of the work generally, but would like to know for what particular purpose this money is to be spent.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). As my hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) sees by the Estimates before him, last year we asked for $78,101. The reason why we are asking more this year is because we need new dredging plant. My hon. friend knows of the great importance of the St. Lawrence. We have two or three dredges which are out of order and we have found it necessary to ask for enough to get new plant. Except for this, the item is to enable us to carry on the usual work.

Mr. HAGGART. If I remember correctly, only one or two years ago the statement was made in this House, respecting the dredges used in Lake St. Peter, that the department had a supply in excess of what was required.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know what may have been said in the past, but I know very well that we are short of dredges everywhere. We have now five dredges working on the St. Lawrence channel, the "Laurier," the "Laval," the "No. 8," the "No. 11," and the "No. 12." Two or three of these dredges are getting old and do not do very satisfactory work, and we need $80,000 to construct a new dredge as well as $20,000 to pay for a tug. We have calls for dredges for every part of the Dominion which we cannot comply with.

Harbours and Rivers—River Kaminstiquia $18,000

Mr. SPROULE. Is this to continue the dredging there?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is to complete the dredging of the turning basin, opposite the elevator of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BERGERON. That is at Fort William?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Public Works and Buildings—chargeable to income—Quebec immigration building on Louise Embankment, and breakwater and Queen's wharf buildings..... $5,000

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What does the Minister intend doing on these buildings?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have painting to complete and general repairs.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if there has not been a request made by the corporation of Valleyfield for public building for customs and excise offices, and post office? I know such a request was made, and I understand that it has been renewed. I would like to ask if it is the intention of the hon. Minister to construct such a building.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not remember such a request having been made.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that such a request was made, and that it has been renewed. The hon. gentleman knows that Valleyfield is a town of 8,000 inhabitants, where a great deal of business is done for the size of the town, and it is important that a building should be erected such as I have indicated. If this matter has been brought to the attention of the hon. Minister, I hope he will not forget it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Hear, hear.

Public Works and Buildings—Ontario..... $30,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would take this opportunity of asking my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works what he proposes doing in regard to restoring the portion of the western block, destroyed by fire, and when he expects that the work will be completed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I may say that we have proceeded as rapidly as possible with the repair of those parts of the building which had only been gutted by the fire, and that portion of the work will be completed in about ten days. That is to say, that portion of the building which is now covered, and which has not been destroyed but only injured by water, will be completed in a few days. As to the roof of the building, my chief architect advises me that it would be dangerous to give a contract for the flooring to outside men. The hon. gentleman is aware that there are a great many people working in the building all the time now, and my chief architect thinks it would be safer for us to make the flooring ourselves. This part of the work will cost, I suppose, about $17,000 or $20,000. As to rebuilding the part destroyed by fire, I may say that this matter has given me a great deal of anxiety. It has been suggested that it might be well to add another story to the building, but upon careful consideration I have come to the conclusion that it would not be wise to do so, as it might injure the aspect of the other buildings by comparison. I have therefore decided to rebuild according to the old plan. For that work, of course, we will ask for tenders immediately, and the plans are now being prepared. We have ordered materials for the flooring from the United States, and we expect them in a few days and the work will then be proceeded with.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How soon do you expect to ask for tenders?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In a few days, as soon as our plans are ready.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I take it for granted that the hon. gentleman means to make that building as perfectly fire-proof as possible. I am speaking from some little knowledge which I acquired the other day when I was in New York, about some timber which is made perfectly fire-proof through some chemical process. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is acquainted with that or not, but now that the matter is under consideration, I would draw his attention to this material, as I think it is of the greatest importance that all the public buildings in Ottawa should be made as perfectly fire-proof as it is possible to make them. Even the shelves for books in the rooms, I am told, can be made fire-proof by this new process ; and if that be so, I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman having had his attention drawn to the matter, will look into it, and see whether the suggestion I make to him now, can be utilized.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend may rest assured that I am very thankful to him for the suggestion he has made to me. I will take note of it ; and at the same time I can assure him that I will take every possible step to make the portion to be rebuilt fire-proof.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the hon. gentleman tell us whether he has come to any decision about putting an additional story on this building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will leave it as before.

Mr. BENNETT. I would take advantage of this opportunity to compliment the Minister of Public Works on the line of economy that he has instituted in the town of Orillia relative to the public building there ; and at the same time, if he is not going to carry out the same line of economy throughout the Dominion, to ask him to recede from the position he has taken in regard to the public building at that point. A few years ago, at an expense of about $20,000, a large public building was erected in the town of Orillia, which serves the purposes of a commodious post office, and offices for the collector of customs and for the inland revenue. To my astonishment a few weeks ago, without any intimation beforehand, the caretaker of that public building was summarily dismissed ; and upon making inquiries of the Minister of Public Works, I was assured by him that it was simply with a view of economy that he had dismissed the official who had discharged the duties of caretaker. The hon. gentleman also stated that he had made an arrangement by which the postmaster was to take charge of the building at an annual charge of $120 a year. Now, if the hon. Minister of Public Works proposes to follow out that line of conduct throughout the Dominion, I have no demur and no complaint to make ; but if he intends simply to make fish of one and flesh of another, then I think it is grossly unfair for him to do so. Now, I recall to recollection a debate in this House a little time ago, when complaint was made by the member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), that the caretaker of the public building at Regina had been dismissed, and I would like to ask the Minister now if he was replaced by another official. I understand from the member for Western Assiniboia that an official has been appointed. Now, if the hon. gentleman proposes to carry out this line of conduct, why does he not apply the same principle in the other case ? I can glance about me and see hon. gentlemen in whose ridings these public buildings are situated in the province of Ontario, and I am bound to say that the Minister has not yet interfered in a single case, but in the case of the caretaker of the post office at Orillia, he seems to have made some discrimination. The postmaster at Orillia receives a large salary, some $2,500, and there was a small allowance of $350 paid to this official caretaker, and yet at a single stroke he wiped out the official existence of that caretaker, and adds $120 to the already large salary of the postmaster in that town. Now, I would ask the Minister if he will give me this assurance : That the line of conduct he has instituted there, he proposes to carry out in every public building in the province of Ontario ; in the next place, if he does not intend to carry out that line of economy, does he intend to restore the caretaker to the position that he formerly held ; and lastly, if he will give his word now that no appointment will be made to the position of caretaker at Orillia at the old salary that was formerly paid, $350.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very glad my hon. friend has called my attention to the case of the caretaker at Orillia. If my hon. friend will look at item 158, he will find that instead of asking for the sum of $73,000, I am only asking for $70,000. The policy I have tried to follow is this : Every time a case has come to my knowledge in which I found it possible to entrust the care of the post office to the postmaster himself, I have done so. We have found that it was better that the postmaster himself be responsible for the building. At Orillia an offer was made to take charge of the building for $10 per month. The department was paying a caretaker $400 a year for this service. I wrote to the postmaster and asked if he would take care of the building, and, if so, for what remuneration. He said he was ready to take care of it for $10 per month. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken if he thinks I singled out one of his friends, for I did not even know his politics.

An hon. MEMBER. He is a Conservative, of course.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is no crime. I have applied the same rule in other cases, at Truro, at St. Jérôme, and in many other constituencies. If I am able to dispense with the services of these men and promote economy, and, at the same time, maintain the efficiency of the public service, I shall continue to do so.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. Minister has not answered my question. He has stated that he received an intimation from Orillia that the duties of caretaker could be discharged for $10 per month. How was it that the Minister became so informed ? It must follow that the hon. Minister singled out the postmaster of Orillia as the first man in regard to whom he should apply the rule as to dual duties, postmaster and caretaker. If this had been a matter of routine, the first case would have occurred at Barrie, where there is a large public building, and where the official appointed in office was appointed practically under the regime of the present Minister of Public Works. How does it occur that the hon. Minister does not interfere with Barrie? On looking round the House I see hon. members representing different constituencies, but in no case have officers been dealt with as in the case of Orillia. I ask the Minister to give the House an assurance that he will not appoint a successor, when the Government get rid of the present incumbent.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have dispensed with the services of the caretaker because they were not wanted, and because my attention was called to the fact that by dispensing with his services I could promote economy.

An hon. MEMBER. By whom was this suggested?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think I have acted rightly in the matter. My hon. friend has called attention to some other cases. I shall be very glad to look into every case presented to me, and if I am able to promote economy, I shall do so.

Mr. HUGHES. I hope the hon. Minister is not going to apply that rule to other places in Ontario, as it will be very dangerous to establish the rule that a postmaster has control of the caretaker. I hope the hon. gentleman will not take that course.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand the hon. Minister has taken this position simply and solely on the ground of economy?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. If so, surely he is prepared to state to the House that he will not make another appointment to that position. Will the hon. gentleman give an assurance that he will not appoint another caretaker in Orillia?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly—I will not.

Mr. BENNETT. Then the hon. gentleman will disappoint many of his friends.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the Minister rather glided around the illustration used by my hon. friend. My hon. friend used an illustration which applies to the administration in Regina. Last year it will be remembered when I asked the Minister of Public Works in regard to the fireman of the court-house of Regina, the Minister told me that he dismissed the fireman because there was nothing for him to do. The hon. gentleman, however, appointed somebody in his place.

The hon. gentleman told me from his place in this House that there was no charge whatever as to lack of efficiency, but that the man was dismissed because there was nothing for him to do. I rather think the hon. Minister has not carried out his promise in regard to that matter. He gave me to understand that if there was no charge preferred against this man, he would be reinstated. What happened was this. In the summer time this man was not paid.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He was not caretaker, he was only fireman. The caretaker has not been dismissed.

Mr. DAVIN. The name makes no difference as regards the principle. Change the name and the principle yet remains the same. What I want to point out is this, that the hon. Minister stated that the fireman was dismissed because he had nothing to do. I rather think that the hon. gentleman, in this matter is not following the strict principle that has been guiding him in other cases.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When I stated that the fireman had nothing to do, I was quite correct, and my statement was true. Later on, when the weather became cold, there was something for the fireman to do, and I thought it proper to hire one, and I did so. Unfortunately, the name of the man was not the same, but the public buildings were heated thoroughly well.

Mr. LISTER. Does the Minister employ for the public buildings in Regina, a caretaker and also a fireman?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I employ a caretaker. I may say that very great pressure has been brought to bear on me to dismiss the caretaker, but I think he is a good caretaker.

Mr. LISTER. This is not a question of public buildings at Regina, or any other point, but it is a question as to whether this is not unjustifiable extravagance, not only as regards employing a caretaker at $350 or $450, but also in having a man employed during the winter to keep up the fires in those public buildings. We can point to public buildings throughout the country which have cost $15,000 to $30,000, where $2,000 or $3,000 are expended in maintaining a caretaker, which is out of all proportion to the revenue obtained. We find public buildings in small towns with a few hundred inhabitants which entail an expenditure of $2,000 or $3,000, and even in some cases this expenditure reaches three or four times the revenue. Sometimes there is an expenditure of $1,200 or $2,000 in the case of post offices and the revenue of those offices sometimes does not equal the expenditure. When we also find that we are constructing public buildings for the purpose of satisfying the voters in certain constituencies, and having an interest charge for all time of many hundreds of dollars per annum; and besides all that, we have officers in the shape of firemen and caretakers receiving very considerable salaries. I say it is a waste of public money and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) goes through this country and weeds out all the small post office and public buildings, he will be doing something that the country will applaud him for. I know perfectly well, that in the large cities, Toronto, Hamilton, Montreal, Quebec, and many others, these officers are necessary as the buildings are large. But, go out to Aylmer if you will, and there the Government has spent $30,000 for a public building, and we are paying at the present time somebody three or four hundred dollars a year for taking care of it. The charge on the public treasury in that instance is probably $1,500 a year for all time, and I venture to say that the receipts of the office do not amount to much more than that sum altogether. If the Minister of Public Works puts the pruning knife well into all cases such as I have spoken of, he will be doing a meritorious work. The system leads simply to a multiplication of offices. If the postmaster were not in a public building, he would have to fire and sweep out for himself, or get somebody to do it for him. It is a waste of public money, and instead of blaming the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) for doing what he has done in Orillia, he is entitled to be praised for it.

Mr. DAVIN. I am sorry to hear the contemptuous way in which my hon. friend (Mr. Lister) speaks of the capital of the North-west Territories. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) does full justice to the building that is there. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) was not speaking about the post office, but about the court-house, and the court-house at Regina cannot be cared for by a fireman only. My hon. friend (Mr. Lister) must have often observed in court—I do not know if he has ever experienced it himself—but he must have seen a man in court speaking to a brief that he had not time to read. My hon. friend (Mr. Lister) is now in that position. He was not acquainted with the facts, for I cannot believe that a man of his judgment and experience could speak in the manner he did in respect to the court-house and public buildings in Regina, and the claims of Regina, if he knew anything about the matter. We have in Regina a court-house which is a credit to the Dominion, and it is not one bit too large for the purpose, because the Supreme Court sits there periodically to hear all the appeals from the North-west Territories, and the district judges court is held there from time to time. Neither is my hon. friend (Mr. Lister) acquainted with the conditions of climate that exist in the North-west Territories. That building cost $40,000, and if you had only one man to attend to the fire and the caretaking, the building would be greatly damaged after one winter. I fear that there is in the breast of hon. gentlemen opposite, the same animosity to Regina that used to inspire them when they were in Opposition. Then, Regina, the capital of the Territories, acted on them like a red rag to a bull, and now we have the Minister of the Interior taking the Indian office down to Winnipeg, and from Regina near to which most Indians are, and from a territory where the Indians are who require most supervision. My hon. friend (Mr. Lister) would, I suppose, like to tear down the court-house and transport it somewhere else. There is talk of other denudations being extended to the capital of the North-west Territories. I must say, Mr. Chairman, that any disparagement of that kind to the capital of Regina and any girding at it, so long as I have a seat in this House, will not go without reply. As to what my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) says, there is no use crying over spilt milk, we cannot undo what is done; but I am sure that he knows well, to put it mildly, that he dismissed Lambert under a misapprehension, and I am perfectly certain, if pressure had not been placed upon him and if he could have taken his own judgment as to what should have been done, he would have reinstated Lambert.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) entirely misunderstood the tenor of my remarks. I was not at all blaming the Minister for introducing an era of economy; I was rather endeavouring to inculcate upon him the duty of the principle, and to solicit him to go a little further in that direction. I instanced the case of the town of Barrie, immediately adjoining, in the riding of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and I will be bound to say that he will not interfere there. The Minister made a statement, that by some means or other he had become acquainted with the fact that the postmaster would discharge the duties for $120. I cannot believe that the postmaster of his own action, ever undertook to write the Minister to that effect, and it must therefore have been, that the party machine was set to work. The fact of the matter is this: They wanted to get rid of the caretaker and they could not get rid of him by an investigation, because nothing could be shown against him either as to the manner in which he conducted the duties of the office, or as to his having taken any part in the elections, and so, the Minister introduced a game of "freeze out" against the caretaker, and that is practically what it amounts to. The Minister has assured me that he will not appoint another caretaker to the position—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT. Would the Minister make this further assurance, that he will not appoint a fireman to the position either? Whether you call him a fireman or a caretaker it is all the same, because the one man discharges both duties. Do I understand the Minister to say that there will not be a fireman appointed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Surely my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) ought not expect me to go into all these details. What I meant to say, and what I will do is this: I will not appoint any other officer to take the place of the man I have dispensed with. I cannot say more than that.

Mr. BENNETT. Very well.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to inquire from the Minister (Mr. Tarte) whether in this item "public buildings, Ont., renewals, improvements, &c." there is any sum included for the repair and renewal of the drill shed at Gananoque. I am glad to see the acting Minister of Militia (Sir Richard Cartwright) in his place, for I want to draw the attention of both hon. gentlemen to this matter. The drill shed at Gananoque was erected on a portion of the market square adjoining the Roman Catholic church. The armoury of the old drill shed was within six feet of the church. It was thought desirable to have the drill shed removed. The corporation of Gananoque approached the Government and offered one thousand dollars for the site on which the old drill shed was erected. The Government accepted the $1,000, and agreed to remove the building within a reasonable time. They gave the corporation permission to remove a sufficient portion of the drill shed to enable them to build the high school, and the school board went on and built the high school. The rear end of the high school building abuts upon the drill shed. At the east end is the Roman Catholic church, a new building, having been erected a year or two ago, after this arrangement was made. About three-fourths of the drill shed and the armoury remain there, to the inconvenience of both the church and the school building, and the Government, having accepted the corporation's money, are under obligations to remove the building to another site, and provision should be made in these Estimates for doing so. I want to know if any portion of this vote is intended to be used for that purpose, or if it will be provided for in the Supplementary Estimates, and if the Government will take steps to remove the building to another site.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will make inquiry; but my impression is that there is an appropriation for that purpose in the Supplementary Estimates which are likely to be brought down for the current year.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see any item here for the building of a post office at Owen Sound. During the memorable election which we passed through some time ago, an implied promise was given—and I think it was intimated that the sanction of the Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General had been obtained—that there would be more than cold justice meted out to the North Riding of Grey if a supporter of the Government were elected. He was elected. I noticed only the other day in one of the Owen Sound papers that a gentleman, supposed to be sent by the Government, had been up there to look at a suitable site for a post office or a post office and custom-house. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if it is his intention to go on and build one.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am glad my hon. friend takes so much interest in the thriving town of Owen Sound. In reply to his question, I may say that my attention has been called to the great importance of that town, and the great pleasure the public would have in having a building erected. At the same time, I think our friends and our opponents too, are alive to the fact that we have constructed pretty large works at Owen Sound. I have met a good many of the people. They do not expect us to spend millions this year. We must economize a little, being fair at the same time.

Mr. SPROULE. I am quite sure the people of Owen Sound will be disappointed if a new building is not erected, because in that campaign, the Postmaster General looked over two or three sites and gave his view as to their eligibility for a public building, and I had no doubt that a substantial building would be erected.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will come out right, I have no doubt.

Mr. SPROULE. Where are these repairs and renewals, for which this money is asked, being made?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is quite impossible to state positively where all these repairs will take place, as accidents may take place here and there, and we must provide for them. The Estimates mention Amherstburg, Barrie, Berlin, Brantford, Brockville, Belleville, Cayuga, Clinton, Goderich, Hamilton, Kingston, London post office, London custom-house, Port Colborne, Port Hope, Peterborough, Prescott, St. Catharines. There may be other places, of course, where we may have to make repairs.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the intention of the hon. gentleman to have the work done by public tender?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is quite impossible to do all these works by public tender. At times they may cost only $50; but when they cost a certain amount of money, we always ask for tenders.

Mr. BRITTON. As the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has referred to the absence of a drill shed at Gananoque, I again call the attention of the Government to the omission from the Estimates of any sum for a drill shed at Kingston, which was promised. One of the acts of the late Government of which no one complained, and praised which every one who knew the circumstances, was to put in their Estimates for 1895-96 a vote of $15,000 for a drill shed there. The drill shed we had, which was a comparatively poor structure, was upon land owned by the Government. The Government sold the land to Queen's College. Queen's College allowed the Government to use the drill shed until it became out of repair and finally fell owing to an accumulation of snow on the roof. The Government received the money that was paid for the drill shed and the land, and they have it yet. There is no place in the Dominion that I know of where there is more urgent need of a building of that kind, and I mention the matter now because it seems the proper time to do so, and I express the hope that the Minister of Public Works will provide for it in the Supplementary Estimates, as the hon. Minister of Militia admits the necessity for it. While on my feet, I wish to say a word or two in regard to the caretakers and the engineers employed in the different public buildings throughout the country. If there is any opportunity for economy anywhere, it is certainly in some of these buildings, where two persons are employed to do one man's work, and I think this Government are fully alive to the necessity of economizing in that particular. But the fact is, as I think nobody in this House will deny, that the moment the Government attempt to practice any economy by the dismissal of any one, the time of this House is taken up by hon. gentlemen opposite rising and complaining that the dismissal of that particular person is because of his political stripe. Of course, all these men were appointed by the late Government, who took good care not to appoint any one on the Liberal side, that I know of; therefore, in telling these men that their services are no longer required, even though actuated by the best possible motives, the Government are accused of wrong motives, and we on this side of the House are all blamed because of the action they have taken. But I say without fear of successful contradiction, that in many cases in the province of Ontario there are two persons employed in public buildings to do what is not more than a fair amount of work for one man, and there is room for economy of that kind in many places.

Mr. McCLEARY. As the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) has thought fit to go back to this question of dismissals, which I thought had been dealt with, I would call the attention of the Minister of

Mr. TARTE.

Public Works to the fact that he is not treating all the caretakers of public buildings as in the case referred to by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). No one on this side will find fault with the hon. gentleman for practising economy and for taking out of the public service individuals who are there just to fill places, but when he makes vacancies for political purposes only, we have the right to find fault. At Niagara Falls, the caretaker of the post office and custom-house had been in the employ of the Government since 1885 and was a most efficient man. He had rooms in the building for himself and family. In the middle of the winter he got a letter from Ottawa, dated 8th of January, 1897, which he received three days later, notifying him that his services would not be required after the 15th of January instant, and to make up a list of all the articles in his possession belonging to the Government, and hand over the building and these articles to Mr. Sheppard, who had been appointed caretaker in his place. The letter is as follows:—

Ref. 178032.

Ottawa, January 8th, 1897.

To Mr. G. Campbell,
Niagara Falls, Ont.

I am directed to inform you that your services are not required after the 15th January, inst. You will please therefore make out a list of all the articles and things in your possession belonging to Government and hand it to Wm. J. Sheppard, who has been appointed caretaker in your place and vacate the premises on that date. Hand over to him also any letters of authority which you have recently received for works that are not yet completed.

(Sgd.) D. EWART.

For Chief Architect.

I do not know whether the hon. gentleman made any inquiry at Niagara Falls as to whether he could have that building cared for at $120 a year or not, or whether any complaints were made against Mr. Campbell or not; but I do think it was very cruel to drive this man out of his home in the middle of winter, without having given him time to find a place for his family to move into. Only for the assistance of friends who came to his relief, he would have been destitute. It seems to me that he was inhumanly dealt with.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it the intention of the Minister of Public Works to have the sidewalks around these buildings renewed? Those in front of the House were laid down, under the late Government, in asphalt, and the work has turned out very well, but all the other sidewalks are in a disgraceful condition.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
Tenders will be called for to-morrow morning.

Mr. ROSAMOND. Does the hon. gentleman propose to do anything with regard to the lighting of the public buildings in Almonte? Application was made some time ago to have electric light substituted for coal oil.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Many applications have come from nearly every part of Canada to replace either oil or gas by electricity, and it will require a very large sum to meet them all. The whole question is being considered by the officers of my department.

Portage la Prairie Post Office..... $20,000

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. Minister decided to change the site of the post office?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Since last year I made up my mind that it was my duty to change the site. Petitions were sent to the Government and to myself specially, by the board of trade and the town council and the citizens generally, asking for a change of site, and after giving the matter every consideration, I decided to accede to their wishes. The new site has been given us free of charge, and I entered into a new contract, by which I consented to give $5,000 additional to the contractors, on their agreeing to remove the building, which they had begun on the old site, to the new one.

Mr. SPROULE. From the information we had last year this new site would not be any more convenient, and you are paying $5,000 more.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have a letter from the agent of the Department of Public Works of Winnipeg, of the 15th August, 1894, to Mr. Fuller, chief architect, in which the agent there says he declined to recommend the site which had been chosen and recommended the site adopted. That site, it appears, was so far from being the best that the town council, the board of trade and a majority of the citizens petitioned my department to change the site. At the same time, as a free site was offered me, I thought it was my duty to accept it, though, I must say, I did not wish to make a change. Public sentiment asserted itself so strongly that I could not but recognize it.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask if the site chosen was that recommended by the board of trade and the town council?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Public Works—chargeable to Income—
N.W.T. $8,500

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to ask the Minister whether Mr. S. A. Clark was clerk of works at Regina, and whether his services have been dispensed with, and if so, why?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Clark was clerk of works at Regina. I do not consider that this Government is bound to employ for all time to come men who happen to occupy positions of that kind, temporary employees, and so I dispensed with his services. We employ a man who had previously been dismissed, Mr. Henderson. Mr. Henderson had been sent up from my department, and without any cause that I know of he had been dismissed and his position given to Mr. Clark. When I came into office, these facts were laid before me, and I thought it was only fair and just that Mr. Henderson should be given back the position from which he had been dismissed without any cause known to me.

Mr. DAVIN. I understand, then, that Mr. Clark, who had been doing the work acceptably and well, and who is a most efficient man, a highly certificated man, was dismissed really without any cause whatever, there being no charge against him. I do not wish to say anything against Mr. Henderson, but I hope that the Department of Public Works did not dismiss him without cause. I know that I never asked to have him dismissed on political grounds and was not the means of his dismissal. Did my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) answer why Mr. Henderson was dismissed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I said he had been employed by the Department of Public Works and that he was dismissed by the late Administration.

Mr. DAVIN. I understand that what happened in the case of Mr. Henderson was this: That a number of persons in Regina and elsewhere in the North-west Territories sent a petition to the department, and in consequence of that petition, the then Minister of Public Works (Sir Hector Langevin) ordered an investigation; that that investigation revealed not that the charges made against him by the petitioners were true, but that he had been guilty of some irregularity in connection with some building outside my constituency; that in consequence of this Sir Hector Langevin terminated Mr. Henderson's connection with the department. I do not think he was dismissed like thunder out of a blue sky, and I know that I did not press for his dismissal on political grounds or any other grounds. I believe that it was established that Mr. Henderson gave out some contracts in connection with the Fort Qu'Appelle Industrial School without being authorized by the department, and Sir Hector Langevin resented this and dismissed him and I understood the Minister said he had other grounds. But I think it is rather hard that a man like Mr. Clark, who has been employed for a number of years and has been doing his work in a most satisfactory manner, as the Department of Public Works will bear witness, should be dismissed merely, I infer, because he was supposed to be a Conservative. He was no

"offensive partisan;" he took no part in politics. Now, in connection with this subject, there is another thing which I have been asked to bring to the attention of the Minister. I have seen it stated in the Grenfell "Sun" that Mr. Henderson, while clerk of the works, takes private contracts. I would like to know whether that is considered right. The following is from the Grenfell "Sun":—

Last week, I referred rather sarcastically to some plans which Mr. Henderson had prepared for some new building. This week he completed plans for the new Hudson Bay store at Fort Qu'Appelle. In all fairness, I think that any Government employee receiving the salary that Mr. Henderson does as clerk of public works, should withdraw from competition with the outside world and confine himself to the duties for which he is paid. He receives about the largest salary paid by the Government to any official in Regina, in fact, the salary of the office he holds was increased a short time ago, because of the amount of work he had to do. Any man in receipt of a Government salary can afford to work for a less amount than an ordinary man can, and it is not doing justice to the ordinary tradesman to compete with them.

The statement has been made, and it is my duty to bring it before the Minister, that Mr. Henderson has taken a contract to put up a building, a Methodist church at Lumsden, as well as this Hudson Bay store. I would like to ask the Minister if it is the fact that Mr. Henderson receives a salary larger than that paid to Mr. Clark. Has his salary been increased since he took office? I would like to ask also whether Mr. Henderson, while clerk of works, is allowed to engage in private practice. I am not here complaining of Mr. Henderson. My complaint is that Mr. Clark, a man against whom there was absolutely no charge, a most efficient man and one holding a high certificate as a scientific man, and ideal officer as clerk of works—being, above all, a man of unimpeachable integrity—should be dismissed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am glad to give my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) the information he seeks. No increase of salary has been given Mr. Henderson; he receives the same salary that Mr. Clark received. As to his being allowed to take outside contracts, this is the first time that the fact has been brought to my knowledge. Mr. Henderson is bound to give to my department all his time. So far, he has proved to be a very good officer. As a matter of fact, all the officers of my department who know him tell me he is a very capable man.

Public Buildings, British Columbia—New Post Office at Victoria..... $53,000

Mr. PRIOR. Will the hon. Minister say whether that is sufficient to complete the building?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That sum of money will complete the work.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. MONK. What is the total cost?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. For the building itself, $198,000. The whole work will cost $312,000.

Public Buildings generally $5,000

Mr. BERGERON. What is that for?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To provide for unforeseen cases. Accidents will occur sometimes, and then we will have this money to use.

Mr. CASGRAIN. When an election takes place, as for instance in the county of Champlain, and 50 or 60 electors are sent to chop ice on the St. Maurice River, is that one of the unforeseen accidents which may happen, and for which my hon. friend is providing?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. In Champlain we were very glad indeed to use the money that was placed at our disposal to protect the village. My hon. friend knows that the floods always come in the spring, and we could not delay that work any longer.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It is very surprising that it happened that my hon. friend wanted to protect the village—I don't know what village he is speaking of—just about two or three days before the election. The election and the flood did not come at the same time.

Mr. SCRIVER. The flood came anyway, there is no doubt about the flood.

Rideau Hall, including grounds and renewals $18,000

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to see the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen in his place. If he were here, I am quite sure that he would ask for an explanation, but as he is not here, I will ask why this sum has been increased. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) ought also to be here to make inquiries, because it is a plank in the platform of the Patrons that the expenses of Rideau Hall should be decreased. But I see that those hon. gentlemen have quietly left, knowing that this item was coming up. I want to know from the Minister of Public Works why the item has been increased this year from $14,000 to $18,000.

Mr. McCLEARY. I suggest that the item stand over until the hon. member for North Wellington is present.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am quite ready to give all the information. I am sure that hon. gentlemen acquainted with the circumstances know very well that the sum I am now asking is not excessive. If you look into the past you will find that the expenditure on Rideau Hall has been as follows:—In 1887, $29,550; in 1888, $22,270; in 1889, $21,418; in 1890, $18,007 ; in 1891, $20,150 ; in 1892, $11,000 ; in 1893, $15,000 ; in 1894, $14,000 ; in 1895, $17,997 ; in 1896, $13,861. There were accounts in arrears, and supplementary estimates had to be asked nearly every year. Now it is no use beating about the bush. We have to spend that sum of money, and I thought it was better to come straight to Parliament and state the facts as they are. That sum of money is absolutely necessary, and I am asking for it.

Mr. TAYLOR. While the hon. gentleman is on his feet, I would like him to give us the figures of the expenditure upon Rideau Hall, so that they may appear on the "Hansard" at the same time, for 1873-74-75-76-77.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not these figures under my hand. That is going pretty far back.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think the item ought to stand until the hon. member for North Wellington and the hon. member for Frontenac come in.

Mr. BENNETT. Does that item include fuel or heating ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, that is a special item which is provided for every year. We are asking for $8,000.

Mr. BENNETT. How is that $18,000 made up ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The largest item is wages, which amounted last year to $8,018.21. Then there is furniture, a pretty large sum, $763 ; maintenance, $2,987 ; lumber, $318 ; painting in 1896, $4,000 ; hardware, $1,390. That was for roofing and plumbing. These are the largest items.

Mr. SPROULE. I see there is an item of $780 for furniture. Was that purchased by public tender, or how ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Furniture is purchased when we receive an order from Rideau Hall for a chair or a dozen chairs. It is impossible to ask for tenders.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it covered by this item ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We buy furniture in this way every year.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this item to cover an expenditure already made, or to be made ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That amount of money has been paid.

Mr. BENNETT. In the absence of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), whose absence is probably due to the fact that he strained himself in endeavouring to kick against the Government, I think it only fair to place before the House some of the ideas which that hon. gentleman has presented to the House in regard to reforming the expenditure on Rideau Hall. I also wish to say a few words on behalf of the Patrons in this House whose bashfulness and innocence prevent them saying anything.

An hon. MEMBER. They are not in the House.

Mr. BENNETT. This item shows a considerable increase as compared with last year. The amount asked last year was $14,000 and the Government now ask for about $18,000. I have never gone closely into the details of the expenditures at Rideau Hall, but considering that we have the high authority of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) on this subject, I am willing to accept his statements as to the facts. I find in "Hansard," that at a time he was only referring to an item of $8,000, while the item now under discussion amounts to $18,000 for furniture, wages and other matters, the hon. gentleman said :

I think we should go back to the first principle of giving the Governor General $50,000, and let him find his own light, and so on. I think it is extravagant for us to give him $5,000 for travelling expenses, $8,000 for fuel and light, and $50,000 for salary, and, in addition to that, to keep up the furniture in the place. The expenses run up from $90,000 to $100,000 a year for the salary of the Governor General, and keeping the building in repair, and supplying additional furniture, and so on. I think we should cut it all off, come down to $50,000 a year salary, and let him do for himself. That is more than he is worth to us.

I do not know whether the hon. gentleman feels more friendly disposed towards the present Governor than towards Lord Stanley, because, to-day he exhibits golden silence, whether it is due to the strain he received last night from his futile kick, I do not know, but I do know that the Patrons to-day are a party of humbugs, because if there ever was a body of political charlatans they are the Patrons, and every one of them went around after last session with a $40 trunk. It must be disgusting to Liberals and Conservatives alike to see the manner in which they have acted, and I hope to be able to provoke some members of that body to rise in their defence. If so, I shall be well pleased at having addressed the House to-day. I am pleased the hon. member for North Wellington has returned to his seat, because I will now refer him to an hon. gentleman who is higher than himself and is a very distinguished member of this House, who said :

It may seem plain talking, but when very serious matters are under consideration here, and Parliament is in session, I understand that the duties of his office have not required His Excellency to be in attendance at the seat of Government ; but he is able, I suppose, with due regard to the public interest, to occupy his time in perhaps more agreeable duties than attending to public affairs here.

I do not know whether the hon. gentleman would apply that remark to the Governor General, but it was applied to Lord Stanley.

Further on, the hon. gentleman said :

I am of the opinion that we hedge around the representative of royalty here with too much of the odour of sanctity, and that we avoid criticising the expenditure of public money in connection with that branch of the service, when it demands criticism. * * * We are being ridden to death by officials.

These remarks were made by the Postmaster General. Not having made a study of the quantity of napkins laundried at Rideau Hall, as the hon. member for North Wellington has done, and not having taken a close inventory of the furniture between one session and another, lest inferior furniture should be substituted, I am incapable of doing that justice to the subject, as the hon. member for North Wellington would do : and I therefore resume my seat, and will allow him to denounce this extravagant expenditure at Rideau Hall.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps I may be permitted to say a word or two in further explanation of the item now before the committee. The average expenditure on Rideau Hall from 1887 up to the present time has been $24,500. I hope to be able to reduce this amount to $18,000. There have been in the past supplementary estimates containing items for the service. I consider it is better to ask for a total amount that is necessary. My hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) has made an attack on Rideau Hall and declared that these expenditures are uncalled for. The hon. gentleman has also made an attack on the Patrons, which I do not think is called for. They have proved themselves to be a very useful body of men, but they have not always found it possible to vote with hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. BENNETT. They never will.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think my hon. friend has acted wrongly in attacking the Patrons as he has done.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister has just stated that the average expenditure on Rideau Hall from 1887 to the present time has been $24,500. I should like to know the expenditures for the years 1873-74-75-76 and 1877, as I do not happen to have the figures with me. I know the hon. member for North Wellington has these figures, because in past years he has given them to the House.

Mr. BENNETT. Napkins.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman is asking this year for about $33,000. He asks for $18,000 : immediately afterwards there is an item for $8,000 for fuel and light, and further down there is an item of $2,000 for clearing snow, and then there is an item of $16,500 for water for public buildings, including Rideau Hall, and I suppose $5,000 should be allotted to Rideau Hall. Adding these sums together it will be found that the hon. gentleman is practically asking for $33,000, and he says that, on the average, the late Government spent $24,500 a year. Now, I do not want the Minister's reply to this extraordinary state of affairs. I want the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) and I want the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) to explain, why they ask Parliament for $33,000 for Rideau Hall when the Minister (Mr. Tarte) has explained to us already that, on the average, the late Government only spent $24,500. This item will likely stand over until after eight o'clock, and I would like the hon. gentleman to give me the expenditure on this account for the years from 1873 to 1878, when the former Liberal Government was in power.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Surely my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) is accustomed to be a little fairer than he is now. I am asking this year, $18,000 for Rideau Hall, including grounds, renewals, improvements, repairs, furniture and maintenance. What I said was that the average expenditure for the years mentioned on account of the same item was $24,500. That is altogether outside of the last item which the hon. gentleman has mentioned, and which has always been found in the former Estimates. For instance, for years and years, fuel and light at Rideau Hall has always been $8,000 added to the $24,000. The removal of snow, and so on, including Rideau Hall, has been the same vote as it is now.

Mr. McINERNEY. I took down the figures that the hon. Minister gave for the years from 1887 down to 1896 inclusive, and I make his totals, $192,983. Now, if you take 1887 to 1896 inclusive, you have ten years, and ten divided into $192,983 will give you $19,298 a year, and not $24,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I admit at once that I made a mistake for one year or two. The expenditure for the years from 1887 to 1892 was $24,500 a year. Since that time the figures were as my hon. friend (Mr. McInerney) states.

Mr. BENNETT. Did I understand the Minister to say that the wages account at Rideau Hall was $8,000 a year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. In order that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) may not be put to the trouble of making the computation, I may tell him, that at an average of about $60 a year for each servant and their keep, that would mean about 130 servants in the employ of Rideau Hall who are paid for by the Government. I know it will shock the Patrons to discover that they are paying for 130 servants at Rideau Hall.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. McMULLEN. I consider it my duty to congratulate hon. gentlemen opposite on evincing, this afternoon, the first evidence of an efficient Opposition. They are evidently developing into an efficient Opposition. I was somewhat struck at the commencement of this session with the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite were not accustomed to the duties of their new position, but if they keep on in their new career they will be of considerable service to the country in scrutinizing public expenditure. In regard to Rideau Hall, I frankly confess that the expenditure in past years has been excessive. I took the opportunity of drawing the attention of the House to it, from time to time, but I have got to say, that the present Government can hardly be held responsible for the entire amount of the present estimate. I have the utmost confidence in my esteemed friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) and I believe when he has time to pay that attention which I am certain he will pay, to this, as to every other item in the department over which he so ably presides, he will secure a reduction in that as in everything else, and he will teach hon. gentlemen opposite and the country that he is capable of making reductions. There is room for reductions. I do believe that when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) comes to deal with this, as with many other items, the Estimates in coming years will show reductions, and will show that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) is a perfect master of the department which he has been called upon to preside over.

Mr. MONK. What sum is reserved for improvements, out of this item, and what are the improvements?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As I have said, we have over $8,000 for wages, and we have got a contract of $2,200 for caring the grounds. Outside of that, there are general repairs, and maintenance, the details of which I have given. There are many changes and improvements to be made. I may say that before giving my assent to this estimate I made a personal visit to Rideau Hall, and I inspected it with all care, and tried to reduce the expenditure. So far, I am sorry to say that I have not been able to do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, I have looked very carefully into the matter, and if I had been able to reduce the expenditure I would gladly have done so. I say again that I have not been able to accomplish that task.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the renewal of that dancing room at Rideau Hall comprised in the $18,000?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. This amount of $18,000 is purely for maintenance and improvements during next year. The other will have to be paid by the Supplementary Estimates which I will have to ask Parliament for.

Mr. BERGERON. At the commencement of the session I had the honour to be at Rideau Hall, and I know that a great many persons complimented the hon. gentleman who presides over the Department of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) for his great generosity in having that dancing hall fixed up in the best way it had ever been fixed before. I am not complaining of it, but I wish to point out that after this long discussion on Rideau Hall, every hon. gentleman understands, as the Minister himself has admitted, that he cannot make any economies in connection with it. I want it to be known through the press and through the country, that there are some of these expenditures which are necessary, and it is a pity that during the eighteen years the Conservative party were in power, some hon. gentlemen now supporting the Government should have brought forward so prominently this fad of complaining about Rideau Hall. Hon. gentleman like the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) and my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) seemed to take Rideau Hall greatly to heart in those days. The Patrons spoke about it in the country and made as much fuss as they could over the matter; but we understand their silence here to-day when they have heard their own Minister telling them that he cannot cut down the expenditure of the Conservative Government. We have had all these fads coming from the Opposition when the Conservatives were in power. I need not speak about prohibition, for we will have that up in a few days, and it will be nice to see how the Government will get out of it. The Patrons tried to get root in Quebec, but I am glad to say for the honour of that province that they failed. I hope that it will now go to the country that some of these expenditures which were condemned by the Government when in Opposition, are found by the present Government to be absolutely necessary. Such conduct on the part of the former Opposition was not politics, but it was purely faddism, and the sooner we get rid of it in the country and get down to serious business, the better.

Mr. DAVIN. I understood the hon. Minister of Public Works to say that the Patrons had come to him about these items and had conferred with him.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never said anything of the kind. I will be glad to see them any day, however.

Mr. TALBOT. It is a joke.

Mr. DAVIN. No, it is not a joke. I may say I misapprehended the Minister. He defended the Patrons against the very pertinent criticism of my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), and said, as I understood him, that that criticism was not just, because the Patrons had been to see him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. DAVIN. Then, we are in this position. Here is a large item of $18,000 for maintenance and repairs at Rideau Hall, and the Patrons have not been to the Minister in private remonstrance against it; and to-day their places are vacant here. The Patrons made vehement efforts to get Patrons into this House, and when questions arise in which the Patrons are interested, there is not a Patron to be seen. I did not understand that the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) was a Patron; I understood him to be a Liberal. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) told us he was a Patron. He told us the other night that he was a Patron-Grit-Liberal-Conservative-Grit Patron. There is one of the Patrons—ah, there is another—just come in, since we called attention to the fact that they were conspicuous by their absence. No juster criticism was ever made than that made by my hon. friend a moment ago, when he said that those men had on platform after platform denounced the expenditure on Rideau Hall, and yet when the Rideau Hall item is before the committee, they are absent, some of them, and others, if present, are discreetly silent.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another.

Mr. DAVIN. We are bringing them in. An hon. friend near me says they have been out consulting. They have had a pow-wow as to what course they will take in regard to this item, and I hope they have arrived at a policy, and will state it in this House. I was about to say that if I had understood my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works rightly, and if the Patrons had remonstrated with him in private, that is not what they were sent here for. What they were sent here for was to lift up the banner of their principles in this House. I have not myself talked much on platforms about the expenditure at Rideau Hall; but I say here that when gentlemen talk outside about the expenditure at Rideau Hall, they are bound when they come to this House either to declare that they have abandoned the principle on which they went to the country, or else to press their views on Parliament and the Government. And can anybody suppose that an item of $18,000 for repairs is not something to make us pause? We have to spend $18,000, $20,000, or even $24,000 every year merely for repairing, renewing and maintenance. I think that is a large sum, and I cannot but think the expenditure could be brought within narrower limits. I hope we shall hear from our Patron friends on this subject.

Mr. McINERNEY. There is one thing I wish to call the attention of the committee to. The hon. Minister of Public Works made a comparison between this estimate and the estimates for the ten years from 1887 to 1896, and stated that the average expenditure for those years was $24,500 a year. When his attention was called to the fact that the expenditure averaged only $19,298 a year, he had to admit that he had made a mistake, and that his average was only for the years 1887 to 1892 inclusive. If you take the figures for the five years from 1892 to 1896, inclusive, you will find that the total amount was $72,000, or an average for each of those years of only $14,400, whereas the present Minister asks for a vote of $18,000 for the same purpose. I appeal to all advocates of economy in this House to support me in the motion I now make, seconded by the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach), that this vote be reduced by $3,000, to $15,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is wrong. The amount voted in the main Estimates for 1896 was $14,107; but if he will look at the Supplementary Estimates of the same year, he will find that there was a further vote of $4,000, bringing the amount up to $18,100.

Mr. McINERNEY. The Supplementary Estimates for this year are not yet down. We are dealing with what we have before us, and comparing this main estimate with the main estimate of the Conservative Government. For the ten years from 1887 to 1896 the average estimate of the Conservative Government was $19,000, and for their last five years their average was only $14,400 a year. If that was too high, as was claimed by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) and other members, I say that $18,000 is too much for the present Minister to ask for this purpose. That is why I move that the amount be reduced to $15,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Hon. gentlemen opposite have not, I think, been fair. The facts of the case are these. The amount that was asked in the main Estimates by the late Government for 1896 was $14,100, but a supplementary vote of $4,000 was asked for and obtained. What is the use of coming twice before Parliament for the same thing? I am asking for $18,000 this year in my Estimates, and I pledge myself not to ask for a cent more. Every one will admit that it is straighter to ask at once just what is wanted than come here and deceive Parliament—I do not say that hon. gentlemen opposite did so willingly—by asking for an insufficient sum, and later on requiring an additional amount in the supplementaries. I may add that the officers of my department informed me that from year to year accounts have remained unpaid because sufficient money was not voted.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister has again shirked the question. To the statement that the average expenditure was $14,000 per annum for the last five years. he has made no reply, but repeats the statement that in some years an additional $4,000 was asked in the supplementaries.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have the Auditor General's report, and according to that, $21,861 was spent to the 1st of July, 1896, so that the statement that the average is $14,000 per year is all nonsense.

Mr. REID. The item for $8,000 for wages is surely too large, and if $21,000 was spent for repairs in 1896, surely $18,000 is not required for the same purpose this coming year. We spent $4,000 for painting the building last year, and ought not to have to spend that amount this year for the same purpose. Then if Rideau Hall was supplied with furniture last year, why should we spend $3,000 on furniture this year? We ought to hear from the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) on this question. One of the planks in the Patrons' platform was the reduction of expenditure on Rideau Hall. Are the Patron representatives going to remain silent when these items are being passed? Surely these men who claim to represent the farmers particularly are not going to allow important items like this to pass without letting us hear something from them. I believe that the farmers of Frontenac will look to see what part their representative has taken in the question of reducing the expenses of this Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat has asked that the Patrons should record their opinion with reference to this vote. I think we can go for even higher game in one respect than the Patrons. I myself would like to hear the opinion of the present Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock). For several years he had a strong grudge against expenditure at Rideau Hall, and went so far as to express himself in favour of reducing the Governor General's salary. Everything about Rideau Hall was extravagant, and how eloquent both he and the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) were over the money wasted. Where are they to-night? We do not hear a word from them, and yet $3,000 are added to last year's vote.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wish to say a few words in reply to some of the statements made by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) who, it seems, has taken the Patrons under his special care. On the 23rd of June he professed that the Patron cause was a burning issue with him. It was the Patrons who gave him the returning officer's vote, and to day he is taking special charge of them, hence is very much exercised as to what position they are going to take in this debate. I wish simply to say this, that as a Patron, I defy my hon. friend from West Assiniboia to point to any speech of mine in which I criticised the expenditure at Rideau Hall, and, more than that, I would call his attention to this fact, that I never advocated the placing of articles on the free list. If I am here, it is not to represent what the hon. gentleman may suppose to be Patron principles, but the principles I advocated during the campaign in East Assiniboia. Everywhere my platform was this, to study economy, and where cause has been shown in this House, I have voted in the line of economy, both with and against the Government. If the Opposition can make out a case in reference to Rideau Hall, I am still prepared to carry out my pledge to the people and vote for economy, but I have not yet seen that a case of extravagance is made out or that the present Government desire to spend more money on Rideau Hall than did the late Government. I am here to represent the Patrons of the riding of East Assiniboia on the principle of economy, and I desire now still further to say that I do not believe in putting articles on the free list.

It being Six o'clock, the Committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

LANGENBURG AND SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. OLIVER (for Mr. Richardson) moved third reading of Bill (No. 51) respecting the Langenburg and Southern Railway Company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I move the amendment of which I gave notice:

That the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of adding the following as an additional section to the Bill, viz:—

Any Act which may hereafter be passed for the purpose of controlling railway companies incorporated by or subject to this Parliament as to the issuing of its stock or bonds, and as to its rates or tolls and the regulation thereof, and as to running powers over or other rights in connection with the railway of any company by any other company and the exercise of powers conferred upon railway companies shall apply to the company hereby incorporated from the time such Act goes into effect, but this clause shall not be construed to imply that such general subsequent legislation would not apply to the company hereby incorporated without its enactment.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. TISDALE. If the Minister presses this amendment, I cannot say that I shall be prepared to divide the committee upon it. But I would ask the Minister to reconsider it, and for this reason—this will be the first time in the history of the legislation of this House in which we have allowed such an amendment to be inserted in a case where there is no reasonable doubt that amendments of the general laws relating to these subjects, such as the Railway Act, the Companies Act, and so on, must apply. Expressing my own opinion, there is no doubt of the applicability to these companies of any amendments made in these general Acts. That being so, it seems to me very undesirable to add such a clause, which seems to imply that there might be doubts in cases of charters not containing such a clause as this, and to suggest such a doubt with regard to the Railway Act is to suggest the same also with regard to the Companies Act, the Companies Clauses Act, and all these general Acts which we have heretofore considered very carefully and upon which no doubt has been thrown. If my opinion on this subject is correct, it may be argued that a clause of this kind will do no harm. But it is a well established principle, and one that cannot be too carefully guarded, that where you put any conditional clauses to protect against future legislation, when they are unnecessary, you are unsettling the general principle upon which all these Acts are based. Suppose we pass this clause on the ground that it is harmless. Then the Railway Committee and other committees of this House upon which rests the responsibility of keeping legislation to consistent lines will no longer be able to object to any proposed clause on the ground that the general law covers it. I feel very strongly on this subject. Not that I am opposed to the improvement of the law upon the lines of the hon. Minister's motion. But I think the proper time to consider it will be when his proposal is brought in to change the Railway Act, and I would be quite prepared to go with him any reasonable distance on the line he has indicated. But to add such a clause as this will bring about changes in the principles upon which we have legislated, and I therefore appeal to the hon. Minister not to press this amendment, but to let it stand until he is prepared with his general proposals; and when that time comes, I am quite sure that in every reasonable change that he can suggest on the line he proposes he will find gentlemen on both sides of the House supporting him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I entirely agree with the view which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) has expressed, that there is no doubt but that this Parliament has the right and power by amendment to the existing Railway Act, to make any changes or impose any additional restrictions which it may in its judgment approve upon all corporations, whether they are in existence at the time that the Act passed, or whether they may be subsequently created. There is, therefore, no dispute between us on that point.

Mr. TISDALE.

I further agree with the hon. gentleman that, on general principles, it is objectionable for Parliament to put in clauses in assertion of a right when there is no question of its power to exercise that right. But the clause that is now proposed as an amendment to this Bill was suggested out of deference to the sentiment which seemed to exist in the committee that it was desirable that something should be done at the earliest possible date to provide additional safeguards to the general public who might be investing in enterprises of this kind, for furnishing further facilities for securing the rights of the public in every way with respect to railway undertakings. It was not possible, this session, to prepare a Bill in amendment to the Railway Act, or to give the necessary attention to the amending of its provisions. But it was thought that it might not be undesirable to give notice, as it were, to all persons who would accept railway legislation during the present session that they must, in point of fact, understand that it was in the contemplation of Parliament to amend the Railway Act in important principles, which, in a general way, are pointed out in this proposed clause. Now, as a notice it may be useful, it will not have any prejudicial effect upon bona fide undertakings. It will not be likely to prevent any persons who are desirous of going into a meritorious work in a proper way from doing so. It will, I think be understood by everybody to be an expression of the intention of Parliament to amend the General Railway Act, and to enact any provisions which may be considered necessary in the public interest. We know very well from past experience that the facility with which the issue of bonds is made, passing from the companies in many cases without consideration, and going upon the market for a trifling sum, and the facility with which watered stock has been issued by railway companies, have been very prejudicial to enterprises of that kind, and we are to-day suffering from the injurious consequences of such a system. I do not think that we can take too early steps in order to prevent a continuation or repetition of proceedings of this kind. If it is the sense of the committee that it is undesirable to add such a notice as is embraced in this clause, and for which the clause is intended, I have no strong desire in the matter, and I shall not press the clause against the judgment of the committee in any way. But I think it is only fair to say that it cannot be understood or interpreted in any other way than as a notice of the intention of Parliament, because I believe that I am expressing the desire and intention of Parliament at the earliest possible date to improve upon existing legislation and amend the general railway law, and to afford a greater measure of protection to the public than the law as it now stands does.

Mr. SPROULE. I confess that I entirely agree with the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), and the explanation he has given seems to me a very important one, that it raises a doubt about how far the Railway Act will have control over railway Bills in the future. If it could be done, and it seems to me quite as easy to do it as to introduce this clause to each Bill, it would be much more desirable to amend the Railway Act, or to introduce a single Bill to govern all cases, because then it would apply to all legislation and would be retroactive as well as applying to railways that are incorporated in future. Unless it is provided for in every Bill in future, any Bills that escape having this clause attached, will certainly be outside our province. Then, as the hon. member for South Norfolk says, a doubt is thrown upon the Railway Act controlling these Bills, and by reason of the failure to do what it was thought it provided for, every member will be disposed to have special clauses in a Bill to provide for it, and I think it would lead to interminable confusion, and a great deal of trouble and uncertainty as to the true interpretation of the Railway Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. member has not had in his mind the chief consideration which has prompted the proposal of this clause; he seems to be under the impression that the same object could be attained by proposing an amendment or amendments to the Railway Act.

Mr. SPROULE. Make a special Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was because it was utterly impossible during the present session of Parliament to recast and revise the Railway Act and to introduce these provisions and submit them to Parliament, that it has been thought well to put the proposal in this form. I realize to the fullest extent that in amending the Railway Act and in introducing new provisions, if these safeguards are to be provided, a good deal of study and consideration will be required for their preparation, and I think it would be impossible to find the time during this session to give them that study they require. Therefore, not being able to propose an amendment at present to the Railway Act, the result will be that the whole matter will have to lie over until the next session of Parliament; and it was with the view of giving notice to the persons who might be proceeding to act under these Bills which are now going through, with the intention of Parliament notified to the incorporators, that the present clause is proposed. Hon. members may think, and I can see that there is something in it, that possibly an inference might be drawn that Parliament thought at first that it had not power hereafter to legislate in this direction, and to rebut any such inference as that a few words might be added to the clause, and the objections which the hon. member has suggested would be entirely overcome. I am quite willing that words should be added with that object in view.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). The same idea as my hon. friend the Minister of Railways has just suggested, has struck my mind. I understand that all parties are agreed that this amendment, as a substantive provision, is a good one, but doubts are raised by my hon. friends opposite whether it would not raise a kind of legal implication that other statutes are not bound by subsequent legislation unless there is a similar clause expressly inserted. Now, that is the only dispute between the two sides of the House, and I would suggest therefore that the following words be added to the amendment of my hon. friend, which will cover that point:

But this clause should not be construed to imply that such general subsequent legislation would not apply to the company hereby incorporated without its enactment.

That removes any possible doubt, and leaves it where the Minister of Railways says, as a formal notice to the company seeking incorporation, that it is to be bound by subsequent legislation without any fresh implied contract.

Mr. TISDALE. I think the addition, on the lines of my objection, makes it worse if possible. It makes it a class of legislation that I do not think is desirable. Surely Parliament knows its power and jurisdiction in a legislative sense. Now, the addition proposed removes the idea that there can be any concession, but it puts in still more unnecessary legislation. I know that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is an excellent lawyer who has taken a great part in discussions in this House, and I am happy to say that he and I have always agreed so far, and he has been one of the strongest advocates in this House of the idea that when a law is clear, then don't pass any more legislation about it, as otherwise you create a doubt. Now, if it is clear, and I have no hesitation in saying that it is perfectly clear, and I am sure my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will agree with me in saying so; then any amendment to any of our general Acts, such as the Railway or Companies Act, or the Companies Clauses Act, apply to all companies in existence at the time the Act was passed, as well as those that may be formed in the future. Therefore, everybody has all legal and proper notice that any legislation that is passed, any charter that is granted, is subject to the general power, is subject to these general Acts, and to the general powers of Parliament to amend them. Now, that is my strongest objection. Any clause put in by way of notice, I don't care how you word it, implies a doubt upon that great fundamental principle, and the proper legislative principle; and it is a vicious principle, for instance, to put in too many words, to try to make a law too plain. I will give my hon. friend a very strong example that is in his own recollection, in which we had a great deal of trouble to agree upon the language, and I think that in the end his view prevailed, and I agreed with him—that was about the new ballot. The new ballot has a circle, and when we passed that Act we provided at first that unless the cross was marked in the circle and nowhere else, the ballot should be bad. We struck out the words, "and nowhere else," because it was considered that no language could make it plainer than to say that it must be in the circle. And yet to-day people are attempting to raise doubts about it. Now, there is no doubt. You talk of giving people notice by an Act that we are passing now, that hereafter we will change the Railway Act. Why should we give the notice? The legal notice is the constitutional right and the constitutional power to pass these Acts, and these Acts do control railways now, and will for all time to come. When Parliament passes these Acts they stand as part of the constitution, and corporations receiving charters under them are bound by their provisions. I quite agree with the proposition generally, but I want to see the clause if I am to be considered as agreeing to its adoption, although, of course, that is a secondary matter. I appreciate the desire manifested by the Minister of Railways to improve the general Railway Act, and I believe there are other points in which it can be improved; but I feel it to be my duty, as I have endeavoured to take my share in passing private and public legislation, to insist that no provision is made to notify those interested in legislation of this character, except the undoubted constitutional ones which exist. It would be most unfortunate if we threw any doubts on any of these railway charters, and thus affect important interests. A court seeks to give effect to every clause in an Act. The judge would say what effect can be given to this clause, if Parliament has the right to change the Railway Act and make it apply to all railway charters. The judge would say that some meaning must be given to the clause because Parliament must have had some intention in passing it. The court will determine what the language means and that becomes the law, and under our constitution that is the law and the people are bound by it and are supposed to have knowledge of it. I am protesting in a moderate sense because I am a little surprised and a little disappointed with the position taken by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies), not that I impute his motives, because I know he is fair-minded in legal discussion and is a lawyer of long experience. If hon. gentlemen opposite are satisfied to pass this clause, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. SPROULE. Taking up the Railway Act, it seems to be plain. I take the application of the Act, and I find the following:—

The provisions of this Act, from Section 4 to Section 39, both inclusive, being Part One of this Act, shall apply to every railway constructed or to be constructed—

So it refers to the past as well as the future.

—under the authority of any Act passed by the Parliament of Canada, and shall, in so far as they are applicable to the undertaking, and unless they are expressly varied or excepted therefrom by the Special Act, be incorporated with the Special Act, form part thereof, and be construed therewith as forming one Act.

The third clause says:

The provisions of this Act, from Section 40 to Section 106, both inclusive, being Part Two of this Act, shall apply to all railway companies and railways within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, except Government railways.

It is, therefore, quite plain that to make it applicable to all the railways and not make it exceptional, as this clause does, there must be either a special Bill or an amendment to the Railway Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No one will deny the constitutional power of Parliament to pass a general law which will apply to all existing charters of these companies and modify or control the charters given them. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale), who has been for a long time chairman of the Railway Committee, knows that this is a legal right of Parliament, but a question may arise as to its being a moral right, and that the companies would say: You have entered into a compact, you have given us certain terms, people have invested their money on the strength of this contract, and you cannot now take away any of our privileges or modify any privileges already given, I thought all parties were agreed that this provision should be made applicable generally, and if doubt should arise in certain cases, that doubt might be removed by declaring that the insertion of the clause must not be construed to apply to general legislation. Parliament can thus retain the constitutional right to modify existing charters, and give notice that companies shall be bound by subsequent legislation, and, at the same time, provide expressly that the insertion of the clause shall not throw any doubt on the general provisions of a charter.

Bill reported.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock) moved:

That the Bill be not now considered, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole to consider further amendments.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved :

That every member of the Parliament of Canada and of the legislature of any province or territory in Canada shall, whilst he is such member, be entitled to free transportation as a first-class passenger by all the regular passenger trains; provided, however, that the company shall not be liable for any injury to such member, or for any loss or damage to his baggage or property, when being so transported.

Mr. TISDALE. Surely my hon. friend the Postmaster General is not serious. Surely he is not supporting this amendment. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) whose motion it is is not here, but I understand the Postmaster General is moving it for him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, no; the member for Vancouver (Mr. Maxwell) moved it.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not wish to take up time in discussing this matter, but if this proposition is to be seriously considered it should be brought in by a substantive Bill. I apprehend that the amendment will be withdrawn without any discussion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a very important matter and it is one that ought to be dealt with on general principles and not dealt with in a Bill of this kind. I would suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. Maxwell) that he do not press the amendment now. If he desires to have the opinion of Parliament upon it, he can take occasion to bring the subject up in a general way.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

JAMES BAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. LOUNT moved third reading of Bill (No. 32) respecting the James Bay Railway Company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved :

Any Act which may hereafter be passed for the purpose of controlling railway companies incorporated by or subject to this Parliament as to the issuing of its stock or bonds, and as to its rates or tolls and the regulation thereof, and as to running powers over or other rights in connection with the railway of any company by any other company and the exercise of powers conferred upon railway companies shall apply to the company hereby incorporated from the time such Act goes into effect, but this clause shall not be construed to imply that such general subsequent legislation would not apply to the company hereby incorporated without its enactment.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

MEDICINE HAT RAILWAY AND COAL COMPANY.

Mr. LOUNT moved third reading of Bill (No. 56) respecting the Medicine Hat Railway and Coal Company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair), moved : That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of adding the following as an additional section to this Bill, viz. :—

Any Act which may hereafter be passed for the purpose of controlling railway companies incorporated by or subject to this Parliament as to the issuing of its stock or bonds, and as to its rates or tolls and the regulation thereof, and as to running powers over or other rights in connection with the railway of any company by any other company and the exercise of powers conferred upon railway companies shall apply to the company hereby incorporated from the time such Act goes into effect, but this clause shall not be construed to imply that such general subsequent legislation would not apply to the company hereby incorporated without its enactment.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

CALGARY AND EDMONTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. OSLER moved third reading of Bill (No. 33) respecting the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company.

Mr. OLIVER moved :

"Such route and plans shall provide for the establishment of a station for the purpose of receiving and delivering freight and passengers within the present corporate limits of the town of Macleod."

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On the amendment,

Mr. TISDALE. After a long discussion in the Railway Committee, the clause as it now stands was agreed upon as a compromise, and passed the committee unanimously. It reads as follows:—

The said company shall not proceed with the construction of the extension hereby authorized, until the route, point of junction and plans have been approved of by the Governor in Council.

The promoters of the Bill simply asked for the usual extension of a charter already in existence. The hon. gentleman who now moves this amendment wished a clause inserted providing that the railway must pass through Macleod. It was suggested as a compromise that this should be left to the Government. The reasonableness of that will, I think, be apparent to the committee, as an ample protection to the town of Macleod. The route and the plans having to be submitted to the Governor in Council, the responsibility would be upon the Government and the engineers of the Government to see that the route went in the best possible direction, and whether there were any engineering difficulties or other reasons why it should not go through the town of Macleod. This was accepted by the committee as a solution of the difficulty; and this is possibly the first time in the history of such legislation in this House in which an addition of this sort was ever allowed in a Bill for the simple extension of a charter. It has been usual, unless some good cause can be shown why a road should not be given an extension of time, to renew its charter as a matter of course. In this case, the company has shown its good faith by constructing and operating a considerable portion of the road, and the Railway Committee considered it a great concession to the hon. gentleman to allow a condition of any sort to be imposed. The whole matter is now in the hands of the Government of which the hon. gentleman is a supporter, and surely he ought not to be more captious than my hon. friends on this side who are opposed to the general policy of the Government. The whole Railway Committee were willing that this compromise should be adopted and that the Minister of Railways and the Government should be seized with the responsibility of dealing with the question. But the hon. gentleman it seems is not satisfied with that. I fear he is somewhat difficult to satisfy at times. When the time of the Railway Committee was taken up for a whole morning with this matter and he obtained a very unusual concession, he ought to be satisfied and allow the other private legislation to be proceeded with. He is within his right if he chooses to exercise it, but he is delaying other private legislation. The Railway

Mr. OLIVER.

Committee unanimously decided on this clause, which will become law in a minute, if the hon. gentleman will allow it, and he ought not to persist in his opposition and show some confidence in the Government of the day which he is supporting.

Mr. OLIVER. I am very glad to accept the correction of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken as to my taking up the time of the Railway Committee and this House, but I will call the attention of the House to the fact that there is not a member of the Railway Committee who has taken up half the time of that committee which the hon. gentleman has. I certainly have not, although I have important interests to conserve, whereas if the hon. gentleman has any important interests to conserve, he has not told us what they are. I have been charged by certain of my constituents to see that those interests are guarded, and I propose to do so in every reasonable way. The facts of the case are these, from my side of the question. The railway company ask for a certain extension of the time in which to build their line to a certain point. I ask, on behalf of my constituents, that a certain obligation be laid upon them in return for that extension. I think that is fair and reasonable. The discussion of the Railway Committee did not turn upon the point whether the company should go into the town of Macleod or not, but upon the question as to whether or not they should be subjected to any restrictions at all, and the hon. gentleman himself stood up in the committee and declared that rather than accept any restrictions whatever, they would withdraw their Bill. That is the question that was compromised. There was no compromise on the question whether there should be a railway station established in the town of Macleod or not. There was no difference of opinion or compromise on that question. The amendment to which the hon. gentleman refers was not drawn up in the committee. It was a verbal suggestion made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, and on that suggestion, the Clerk drafted a certain clause, and I submit it is not fair for the hon. gentleman to say that the committee is bound by the form which was given to a verbal suggestion, and which, in my opinion, certainly does not represent the well-understood intent of the committee at that time. I have no quarrel with the hon. gentleman or the hon. leader of the Opposition who moved the amendment. I believe they were of opinion that the interests of the town of Macleod would be protected by that amendment, but on reading the amendment as it is, I say that certainly it does not protect the interests of Macleod. All I ask is that justice be done to that town. It may be that some hon. members do not understand the peculiar position of the town of Macleod. They are perhaps under the impression that I am pleading the case of a lot of land speculators who have taken up a large area of public land there and hold it as a town site and wish to sell it to the railway at a high figure. Now, this town site belongs to the Government of Canada, and it is this Government which is interested in these vacant lots. All the people of the town ask is that their investments in buildings and property be protected, and surely this House will see that the interests of our country through its ownership of the town site, are protected. The objection to the clause as it stands is this, and I am not throwing any doubt on the good intentions of the Minister of Railways or the present Government when I say that this clause is not sufficient. We pass a certain clause to express a certain purpose, and if we do not say what we mean in that clause, we cannot claim that the Government has to take notice of an intent which we ourselves have not expressed. The whole argument in the committee was regarding the protection of the interests of the town of Macleod, but in this amendment the town of Macleod is not mentioned, and there is no mention of any railway station within the corporate limits of that town. Anybody knows that a railway running through a town is of no earthly benefit to it unless it has a station there.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am in order. The hour for Private Bills has expired. I draw the attention of the Chairman and of the committee to that fact. We have other business to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for Private Bills having expired, the House will proceed with the Orders of the Day.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Rideau Hall, including grounds..... $18,000

Mr. DOUGLAS. In the discussion of this item for the maintenance of Rideau Hall, some wild insinuations were thrown out against the Patrons of Industry because of their silence upon the subject of increased expenditure under this item. I am glad to be able to say that there are some hon. gentlemen in this House who are endowed with the grace of prudent silence, who are not imposing expense upon the country by useless discussion. The Patrons of Industry of Ontario have been represented as going through the country using strong arguments against the expenditure in relation to the maintenance of Rideau Hall, and it is said that they made capital by these arguments, and that, in a measure, to these arguments they owe their position on the floor of this House. But I may say, personally, that is not applicable to my case. No one, especially the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), is able to say that the Patrons in Assiniboia have made use of such arguments. We are here to represent the opinions of the people, and especially to voice the public desire for economy. In view of the agricultural depression in the west it was felt that it was better to observe economy all along the line of Government expenditure than to look after party interest. The question is: Has there been a needless expenditure in connection with this item? I have looked into it somewhat and I find that the sum that is now asked to meet the case is not in excess of what has been expended upon Rideau Hall in former years. The expenditure of an extra $3,000 in this case may not be wasted. Economy does not always lie in reducing expenditure. A stitch in time, it is said, sometimes saves nine. Rideau Hall, we understand, was in such a condition that it was necessary to expend a certain amount of money to put it in proper repair. Thus, this expenditure, though it may be $3,000 in excess of what it was last year, is not necessarily a waste of money. I am free to say that when I first saw Rideau Hill I felt that its external aspect was not at all in keeping with what the residence of the Governor General of this Dominion ought to be, nor yet in keeping with the Government buildings in this city of Ottawa. I feel that if there was a need for this expenditure, and if the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) can show that this money has been legitimately expended to keep the building in repair, I, for one, am not prepared to vote against what is here asked. I would therefore ask the attention of the House to the expenditure upon this building by the late Government. I find that during the last six or seven years it has been in excess of $18,000. The figures, however, are in the possession of the hon. Minister of Public Works and he can satisfy us on this point. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin)—

Mr. DAVIN. Did I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Douglas) to say that the expenditure in the past has been in excess of $18,000?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes. Further, the hon. member for West Assiniboia—

Mr. DAVIN. Will my hon. friend not give us the figures?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It has been larger for a number of years.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend must have the materials upon which that statement is founded. Will he not give us the figures?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will give the figures.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I feel that I am perfectly consistent in the vote I have given in this House in seeking to establish economy. And I would call the attention of the House to the fact that my hon. friend who makes the complaint was in a sad position no later than last night, when a reduction was proposed in the salary of one of the public officials, and he voted against that reduction. It seems to depend very much upon the direction in which the wind blows whether the hon. gentleman from West Assiniboia will vote in favour of economy or not. I do not know that any charge can be brought against me in this regard. If the Opposition can show us that there has been a waste of funds, or that we should reduce this amount by $3,000, to avoid waste, I am prepared to support the proposition. But, until then, I am disposed to support the Government in what I believe to be a necessary expenditure under the circumstances.

Mr. TAYLOR. As a supporter of the late Government I want to thank the Minister of Public Works for his statement that he had personally visited Rideau Hall and had ascertained that the expenditure could not be kept lower than the sum he was asking, $18,000, that he could not practice any further economy than the late Government had practiced. Thus we have from the hon. Minister a certificate of good conduct on the part of the late Government, and an assurance that there was no extravagance with the—

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). But you had allowed the building to run down; it was going to pieces.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) wants to interrupt me I will thank him to rise to his feet and take off his hat. The hon. Minister of Public Works gave certain figures to the House on this subject. If I am not right in the figures I give I wish him to correct me. For the year 1891 the expenditure for the maintenance of Rideau Hall was $20,150; for 1892, it was $11,000; for 1893, it was $15,000; for 1894, it was $14,000; for 1895, $17,997; and for 1896, it was $13,861. That makes a total of $92,008 for six years. And I want to draw my Patron friends' attention to the fact that this would be an average of $15,335 per year. The Minister of Public Works made a statement about the estimate of last year being $14,000. That is their own estimate, although he will no doubt say that it was prepared by the late

Mr. DAVIN.

Government. Yet that there was an over-expenditure, and a sum was placed in the Supplementary Estimates.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I made a mistake, I will explain it.

Mr. TAYLOR. But I want to ask the Minister of Public Works by how large a sum he has exceeded the estimate of last year of $14,000, and how large a sum he will have to put in the supplementaries for the dancing hall that he had built for the Patrons and other gentlemen who go down there and drink their champagne and dance in this hall.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When I ask the House to vote the money for the repairs that I have made during the current year, then will be the time for me to give explanations.

Mr. TAYLOR. As expenditures are now being made, and as the hon. Minister knows the amount no doubt, I want him to give me the figures that the dancing hall has cost that he has erected there without first having obtained a vote from the House. Then the hon. gentleman gave the figures of expenditure on Rideau Hall for the years from 1887 to 1896. I have got the figures that he gave from 1891 to 1896. I have also in my hand a return brought down to Parliament, to an address of the House of Commons, dated the 6th of February, 1893, showing the total amount of money paid by years since confederation, on each of the building accounts. It gives a detailed statement for each year. For the year 1887 the Minister of Public Works gave $29,550. In the return brought down which I hold in my hand, additions, alterations, repairs and maintenance of Rideau Hall for the year 1887, amounted to $25,959. For 1888, the correct figures are $15,216; for 1889, $18,033; for 1890, $12,000; for 1891, $12,444; for 1892, $7,908. Now there are six years, making a yearly average of $18,213 under the Conservative Administration. Now take six years under Liberal Administration, including 1873, for they are responsible for six budget speeches, six estimates, and I give them the benefit of one year of good Conservative rule. Now taking 1873 as being under the rule of hon. gentlemen opposite, I find the expenditure on Rideau Hall was $61,123; for 1874, $37,914; for 1875, $35,018; for 1876, $31,376; for 1877, $30,265; for 1878, $32,469, making a total of $228,195, or an average annual expenditure of $38,032 under Liberal rule. This is for the maintenance of Rideau Hall, just like the item my hon. friend is asking a vote for now.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). You know very well that you were responsible for the estimate of 1873, and that Mr. Mackenzie's Government was not responsible.

Mr. TAYLOR. I said a few moments ago that I would give our friends opposite the benefit of one year. Now my hon. friend here is willing to support the present Government unless we can convince him that they are extravagant. Now I could prove to him, if the Minister of Public Works had answered the question I asked him, that the Government have been extravagant in fitting up a dancing hall there at an expense of $8,000 or $10,000, and now the Minister will come down to this House and ask a vote for money that is already expended, in the closing days of the session, when perhaps my Patron friends will be conveniently out of the House as they were to-day, and when the hon. member for North Wellington will be conveniently out of the House as he is to-day, when he knew this item would come up for discussion. I am glad to see the Postmaster General here, because he used to criticise these items. Personally I do not find fault with a reasonable expenditure on Rideau Hall; but when hon. gentlemen opposite were on this side they were always finding fault, and wished to have the votes cut down. I think that the average of $15,000 a year for the last six years under Conservative regime was quite sufficient, although hon. gentlemen opposite used to say it was extravagant. Now, I think these figures will prove to my hon. friend who has just spoken, that the present Government are extravagant because they are asking $18,000. My hon. friend said Rideau Hall was out of repair, and that the Minister of Public Works was asking for this money to put it in repair. Nothing of the kind. This money is not being voted for repairs that have already been made, this money is being voted for the maintenance of Rideau Hall from the 1st of July, 1898, to the 1st of July, 1899. There is not a dollar of this for the extravagant state in which Rideau Hall is fitted up in order to allow hon. gentlemen and Patrons to patronize Rideau Hall and dance there. The hon. Minister of Public Works is going to ask for that money over and above the $18,000 which he is asking for by the present vote. My hon. friend has moved to reduce the amount from $18,000 to $15,000, which was the average annual expenditure incurred by the Conservative Government, and which hon. gentlemen opposite, as will be shown by quotations from "Hansard" before the debate closes, was condemned by hon. gentlemen opposite as being extravagant. We do not want hon. gentlemen opposite to exceed the amount expended by the Conservative Government—the corrupt Government, as they were accustomed to term it—but we wish they should keep on the same track as was followed by the late Government. Hon. members on this side of the House do not wish to vote $18,000, and be called upon to pass in the Supplementary Estimates an item of $8,000 or $10,000 for a dancing hall. I shall therefore support the motion for a reduction of the amount to $15,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has given the committee some figures. I will further consider the expenditure made in the past, and will go a little further back. If hon. gentlemen will look at the expenditures they will find that in 1879 the expenditure for Rideau Hall was $61,976; in 1880, $69,932; in 1881, $24,934; in 1882, $30,679; in 1883, $66,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What year is that?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. 1882.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A year further on, that is all.

Mr. FOSTER. A year makes a lot of difference some times.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In 1883 the expenditure was $39,402; in 1884, $40,000; 1885, $39,296; 1886, $34,230.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman continue the figures up to date?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly, with the greatest pleasure. I want to show the saving made during the last few years. In 1887 the expenditure was $29,550; 1888, $23,272; 1889, $31,280; 1890, $38,780; 1891, $21,052; 1893, $15,238; 1894, $17,997; 1896, $38,061. Outside of this expenditure, the officers of my department have placed before me accounts for several thousands of dollars which have not been paid. I made a mistake when I said that a supplementary estimate for $4,000 had been voted. It was not voted. The main estimate for 1896 was for $10,000, and there was a supplementary estimate for $4,000, making a total of $14,000, but as I have said there was a large amount of unpaid accounts. The total sum of unpaid accounts for $4,477. I intend to wind up these accounts and settle them; then I hope to be able to come to the House next year and ask for a smaller vote, although I cannot pledge myself to that. I made a careful examination of the house and found it in a dilapidated condition. Then I made up my mind that it would be better to make the necessary repairs. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) strongly objects to the building which he calls a dancing hall. Those hon. members who have gone to Rideau Hall—the hon. member may not have gone there—well know that this hall has been in existence for many years. In regard to this matter I have done simply what any other Minister would have done. I repeat that I ask this vote to wind up the business, to pay old accounts, and next year I will be responsible for the expenditure.

Mr. TAYLOR. I know the Minister of Public Works does not intend to be unfair, but the statements given by him are unfair. The hon. gentleman made the statement that in 1887 the Government expended on Rideau Hall, $30,792.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I stated that the expenditure was $29,550, and I say it again.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have a return in my hand showing the expenditures from 1887 to 1892, and the statement shows as follows:—

Year ending 30th June.	Repairs and Maintenance.	Furniture.	Gardens and Grounds.	Fuel and Light.	Totals.
	$	$	$	$	$
1887....	25,959	1,479	2,111	8,000	37,550
1888....	15,216	1,492	6,262	8,000	30,972
1889....	18,033	7,268	6,411	8,000	39,714
1890....	12,067	1,354	4,685	8,000	26,107
1891....	12,444	5,242	2,940	8,000	28,627
1892....	7,908	996	2,940	8,000	19,844

These figures include $8,000 a year for fuel and light, and they show an average of less than $34,000, while the hon. gentleman is asking for $18,000, $8,000 and $2,000, and these figures together with the proportion of the water rates for public buildings, will make a total of $33,000.

Mr. ROGERS. I did not intend to take any part in the discussion, for being a young man I was willing to watch and listen, but for the unfair and ungentlemanly remarks made about the Patrons.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think the hon. gentleman is in order in using the word ungentlemanly.

Mr. ROGERS. I take that word back, and I substitute unpleasant statements. I should like to know, Sir, what is your ruling as to an hon. member in this House calling a certain body of members here charlatans and humbugs. Is that a gentlemanly statement for the member to make?

I have listened attentively to those Estimates going through the House, and I have endeavoured to consider them as the best interests of my constituents demand, and in accordance with the obligations upon which I entered Parliament. I have wondered why so much time has been taken up with discussion on the different items. I was not particularly interested in the appropriations for Manitoba and the North-west this afternoon, and judging from my past experience of the delays in this House, I thought it might take an hour or two hours, or even two days, before the item we are now considering would be reached. I was called out of the Chamber, and as I was detained longer than I expected, I found this item under consideration when I returned. I found also that some hon. gentlemen had made what were, to say the least, unpleasant statements, to the effect that we were trying to shirk the vote. These nasty and ungentlemanly—well, I will say unpleasant references—were made against the Patrons; it is pretty hard to keep within the bounds of parliamentary language under the circumstances. Now, Sir, the stand which the Patrons take in regard to the maintenance of the Governor General's house and his salary, &c., has always been reasonable, and their demands have always been moderate. We all know that the present worthy representative of our noble Queen was brought out under certain expectations, and certain promises that such and such would be done for him. We Patrons now take the stand that the Patrons did in the Ontario legislature. They wished to do away with the maintenance of the Lieutenant-Governor's residence in Toronto, but they did not propose to do it while the present occupant was in the office, nor do we wish to do so as regards our present Governor General. Neither I nor any Patron whom I have ever heard express himself, wishes to do away with the maintenance of Government House now; but when the Governor General's time of office has expired, we decided that we should take a stand in the matter. We believed it would be a dishonourable thing not to carry out our obligations and bargain, if I may so call it, with the present Governor General. Some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House made great fun about the Patrons going down to Rideau Hall. Well, that may be looked upon in two lights. When we speak of a matter we wish to speak of it from a practical standpoint, and the Patrons want to go down there and see for themselves whereof they speak. When the Governor General kindly gave us an invitation, we wanted to show that we were not discourteous, and we wanted to show that we were gentlemen, as I hope we are. We went down to Rideau Hall, and if we refused to vote for the maintenance of it, we would be honourable enough not to go. Some hon. gentlemen opposite referred to dancing and drinking wine, and all that sort of thing; but these gentlemen were not there to see what we were doing, or they would not have spoken in that way. I rose to refer to the unpleasant remarks that were made about the Patrons, especially by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), who recorded on "Hansard" that we were charlatans and humbugs. When that hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) goes back to his constituents he may be asked to account for these very ungentlemanly expressions. The ex-Minister of Finance also referred to the Patrons in a way that I consider very slightlying, when he said that he would appeal to a much higher grade than the Patrons ; he would appeal to the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). I think he might have left that slur alone, as it was very uncalled for. It is something on a par with the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Montague), who in addressing an audience of farmers told them that there was no fear of the Conservative party being beaten, because the Conservatives had the commercial and manufacturing interests at their back. That shows the opinion the late Government had about the farmers. I give a word of warning to the representatives in this House that when they speak of the agricultural classes who made Canada what she is to-day, they must do so in a respectful manner. Every word and expression which has been used against the farmers will be known to them, and the wool cannot be pulled over their eyes any longer. Hon. gentlemen opposite need not take such a fatherly care of the few Patrons who are here. The Patrons in this House are able to take care of themselves, and their constituents will take care of them when they go back. We came to this House to give whatever Government was in power a fair and reasonable chance to proceed with their policy along the lines of our platform. If the Conservatives had been in power we would have given them the same fair chance to move along the lines of our platform.

Mr. BERGERON. You are all Grits.

Mr. ROGERS. The references made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron), who has interrupted me, were not very kindly to the Patrons. There are not many of them in Quebec, but probably there will be before next Parliament, and he will have to reckon with them.

Mr. BERGERON. They have no show in Quebec.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). There are no Conservatives in Quebec now to fight and we do not need them.

Mr. ROGERS. The farmers and Patrons are anxious to keep their own buildings in a proper state of repair, and they would not thank me if I went back to my constituency after having voted against repairing our public buildings. I have faith and confidence in the Minister of Public Works, judging from his many attempts at economy, that he will be able to give a proper account of the expenditure. We will watch the proceedings closely, and we are willing to give the Government a chance. We have three years or more to consider this matter, and if the expenditure is not properly guarded we will have time to act then. We do not wish to be unreasonable, nor to ask for too much, but we wish to give this Government a chance to economize, as we would have given the Conservative Government a chance if they had been returned to power. A man who had written an editorial for one of our city papers, showed it to me in the proof, said to me that although he was not a friend of ours he spoke in favour of our platform—as I am glad to say the press did all through the country. He said to me : “Nothing but a political alligator would attempt to swallow such a monster as the Patron platform.” I said to him : “My good man, did you ever hear it said in the public press or on the public platform that the Patrons demanded all they were asking for at once ? It is along these lines that we are working, and we hope to attain those things in the end, but we wish to be reasonable, honourable and common-sense ;” and that is the principle we are working on to-day. Now, Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say even so much ; but I could show you in a few words what would be a great stroke of economy, in my judgment. Let a resolution be passed to make every member of this House pay for his share of the “Hansard.” If that were done, some hon. gentlemen would go home with a volume in their pocket ; they would have to use their mileage, and have their passes pretty well mortgaged, to be able to get home again ; and it would be well for this country if that were the case. For my part, I am willing to pay my little share. I would just say that I am willing to give this Government a fair chance, though I have been an old-time Conservative. These very unpleasant allusions which are continually made to the Patrons make it much harder for us to live up to our principles. Hon. gentlemen would do much better if they left us alone. It is very unpleasant for the Patrons to be referred to so sneeringly, but it puts us a little more on our mettle. I am willing not only to give an account of myself to my own constituency, but I will also go to the constituencies of some other gentlemen and make myself heard there.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the few remarks I made this afternoon have had the desired effect, and that the coon has come down.

Mr. ROGER. We will come down again, too.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman had the honour of being elected by acclamation last summer in the county of Frontenac, where the feeling of Patronism ran very high. The leader of the Patron movement in the local House also represents that riding. At that time the “Canada Farmer’s Sun” made some remarks in reference to “the first blow in the campaign,” and among other things it said :

Hurrah for Frontenac ! Frontenac draws first blood ; Rogers succeeds Calvin ; they are both good men.

Well, I think if the “Farmer’s Sun” were to recapitulate the history of the hon. gentleman, it would find that he drew the first of everything when he came here ; because when several leather trunks were sent here as samples at a cost of $40 each, I saw one of them in the vestibule labelled with the name of the hon. member for Frontenac.

Mr. ROGERS. Will you allow me a word ? Just take that back right off.

Mr. BENNETT. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he has not received a leather trunk ?

Mr. ROGERS. Will I get up in this House and villify myself and make a fool of myself in that way ? No, Sir.

Mr. BENNETT. Of course the hon. gentleman took the trunk. He took a trunk full of stationery, too. If anything were required to show the character of the Patrons of this country, it is the exhibition the hon. gentleman has given in this House to-night. Is there a Liberal organization in this country that would ever have chosen him as a candidate ? Is there a Conservative organization that would have chosen him as a candidate ?

Mr. ROGERS. Take that back. I ask your ruling, Mr. Chairman, whether the hon. gentleman is not to take that statement back. It is a false charge against me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman denies that he accepted a trunk—

Mr. ROGERS. I took the stationery, but I took no leather trunk.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman has not denied that he accepted the trunk. Now, Mr. Chairman, in that riding—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take that back.

Mr. RICHARDSON. He said he took the stationery, but not the trunk.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, tell the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) that fools rush in where angels fear to tread.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask your ruling, Mr. Chairman. I took no leather trunk. I do not want that false statement to go in "Hansard."

Mr. BENNETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I can have a little protection—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. BENNETT. I am going to refer to the fact that the county of Frontenac is represented in the local legislature as well as in this House by a Patron. Let me tell the House further that in point of ability—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. McCLURE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I ask the committee to be quiet and listen to the speeches made.

Mr. McCLURE. I understood the hon. member for Frontenac to say distinctly that he had not taken a leather trunk. If that be true, the hon. gentleman ought to withdraw the remark.

Mr. BENNETT. So far as the hon. gentleman who has just stood up is concerned, it is quite patent that his verdancy in this House has hardly worn off yet.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand that the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has made a statement concerning the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers), and that that hon. member has denied the statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No. Yes, he has.

Mr. ROGERS. I emphatically deny it. I said so.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would ask the members of the committee to hear what the hon. member for Frontenac has to say. Does he deny the statement made by the hon. member for East Simcoe ?

Mr. ROGERS. I did. I took no leather trunk.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. member for East Simcoe will accept the statement the hon. gentleman has made.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. member for North Wellington said to-day—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I understand that the hon. member for Frontenac has denied the statement which the hon. member for East Simcoe has made, and I expect that the hon. member will accept that denial.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman says that he has not yet received his trunk, I withdraw the statement ; but I will anxiously scan the public accounts to see if he does get one before the end of this Parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Mr. Chairman, I do not think—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand the hon. member for Huron is rising to a point of order.

Mr. MACDONALD. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) made the charge against the hon. member for Frontenac that he received one of the leather trunks which was provided for the members of this House, and the hon. member for Frontenac denied, in toto, that he received or accepted a trunk.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, he did not.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Yes he did. The hon. member for East Simcoe is, in duty bound, as a man and a member of this House, to withdraw the accusation he has made.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not understand that the hon. member for Simcoe made any charge against the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers), but he made a certain statement which has been denied by the hon. member for Frontenac, and I expect the hon. member for Simcoe will accept that statement.

Mr. BENNETT. I accept the statement, and if all these small fire crackers over there will keep quiet, I will proceed with my remarks. I was about to say, when I was greeted with these interruptions, that the county of Frontenac is represented in the local legislature by a Patron in the person of Mr. Haycock; and I am bound to say, and I hope it will not hurt the hon. gentleman's feelings, that the difference between himself and Mr. Haycock, in point of ability, is as the difference between dollars and doughnuts.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The hon. gentleman is out of order—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I rise to a point of order. The statement of the hon. member for East Simcoe is equivalent to calling the member for Frontenac a doughnut.

Mr. WALLACE. I wish to say a word on the point of order. It must be a mighty fine constituency that sends a Haycock and a doughnut to Parliament.

Mr. BENNETT. Now, I have this to say that the hon. member for Frontenac is the personification of all the humbug that is being manifested—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must withdraw that expression.

Mr. BENNETT. I will withdraw it, and say that he is the personification of the rectitude and straightforwardness and of everything else that has been promised and not carried out in this House on behalf of the Patrons. And he is not alone. Near him sits another illustrious member of the great Patron order, of whom it was said, in the "Farmers' Sun" on December 18th, 1896:

Brother Stubbs, the candidate in Cardwell, is a member of the Patron Order and a popular farmer, whose nomination was regarded so favourably that no Patron nomination was offered in opposition, it being deemed inadvisable.

What have these hon. gentlemen done? They went about the country last June masquerading before the electors as being more holy than either Liberals or Conservatives. Their politics did not consist in denunciation of the trade policy of the country, their politics was not taken up with any of the broad measures before the country, but they went around with a policy of the peanut kind order, denouncing the expenditure on trunks and stationery and jack-knives and other trumpery matters of that kind, and among other things they pledged themselves to the strictest economy, one of the chief items of which was the abolition of the Government House at Ottawa. Now, where do these hon. gentlemen stand to-night? Under the party lash of hon. gentlemen opposite, they have responded to the crack, and are going to vote for what? Not for the abolition of Government House at all, but for spending $18,000 on its maintenance. To-night they are voting that a large sum of money be expended on a dancing hall at Government House. Let me say this with regard to my position. I am prepared to-night to vote for a reduced figure and to denounce the expenditure at Rideau Hall as altogether too high.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is a pity you did not do it years ago.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman says it is a pity I did not do it years ago. All I have to reply is this, that while the hon. gentleman participated in the festivities at Rideau Hall he denounced them, but while I denounce them, I shall have the manliness to refrain from indulging in them. That is the difference between the hon. gentleman's attitude and mine on this question. What is the position of these gentlemen who represent the Patrons? They went before the electors pledged to retrenchment and economy on all these different lines, and to-night their vote is not their own but that of the electors who sent them here and who consented to their election on the ground that they would carry out what they pledged themselves in honourable faith to do. The hon. gentleman from Frontenac sought to give me a little advice. He told me that I had better not say anything disparaging to the Patrons. Well, I have this to say. I had last June a Patron candidate opposed to me, and had he been elected to this House, I can tell the hon. gentleman that he would have made him blush because he would have stood to his word of honour and not responded to the crack of the party whip. I have nothing to take back. I say that I respect the Liberal who comes to this House elected as a Liberal on a straight party platform; but when I see hon. gentlemen elected to this House on a picayune, peanut policy, responding to the crack of the party whip, when I see these hon. gentlemen cringing to the Ministers as they do, all I have to say is this, that I am prepared to denounce the Patron party, as exemplified by their representatives in this House. I have only this to say to the hon. Minister—that if he will promise the House that he will add $100 to the expenditure and use it to get a flash-light picture made of Rideau Hall dancing room with the Patrons in full fling, I will, with the greatest pleasure, support the vote. For, Sir, I would ask no better campaign literature with which to go into the county of Frontenac and politically decapitate its present member than such a picture.

Mr. OLIVER. If I am in order I would like to say a few words on this subject, not because I am a member of the Patron order, but because having received a very large support from that order and sympathizing with their views to a great extent, I think it would not be creditable for me to sit in silence and hear such epithets hurled against them and such insinuations made against them, and, above all, the attempt that has been made to browbeat them and drive them from their right of free action in this House. These gentlemen are elected as free men, representing free constituents, and free ideas; and I think it ill becomes any representative to stand here and use the language that was used by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) who has just sat down with regard to any hon. member. We all recognize the ability of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, but I think the House will unanimously agree with me that on this occasion he has not done himself credit. I think it is not a little disgraceful that such epithets should have been—

Some hon. MEMBERS Order.

Mr. OLIVER. I would not wish to transgress the rules of the House. If I am out of order in using that expression I am willing to withdraw it. I wish to argue this point fairly and squarely without abuse of any kind. I think it must be patent to any member of the House, to any member of the Patron organization, to any Patron constituency throughout this country or, if you like, to any agricultural constituency of the country—for the views of the Patrons are the views of the agriculturists, and they prevail wherever there is an agricultural constituency—that the action of certain gentlemen on the opposite side to-night will not redound to their credit with the Patrons or the agriculturists of this country. If these gentlemen have used the expression "humbug" and "arrant humbug" as applied to the Patrons—

Mr. BENNETT. No, no; but to the members here.

Mr. OLIVER. I think that they may very well reply that the members of the Opposition who are taking part in this debate, under the circumstances that we see are, at the least—I hope I shall not be out of order for saying it—part of an organized hypocrisy. While these hon. gentlemen have been saying everything that could be said in abuse of the Patrons, they have been calling upon those Patrons to do what they themselves would not wish to do, to do what they have never done or never wanted to do, what they have, until this amendment, declared themselves against doing—and, as an hon. gentleman beside me remarks, what they never will do. They are entitled, however, to have it said that, hypocritical as their motions are, they have certainly never made hypocritical professions, for they have never declared that they desire these reductions in the ordinary public expenditure that the Patrons, the agriculturists and most right-thinking men in the country have called for. A large majority of the people called for them on the 23rd of June last, and the majority is still increasing. When hon. gentlemen opposite come before this House with a reasonable proposition, when they come before this House with a motion that they are prepared to back up with facts, they may reasonably expect other members of the House to vote with them. But when they come forward with a motion in which they themselves have no faith, which they themselves would not carry out if they had the power, which they do not even declare they would carry out if they had the power, I do not see how they can in reason, expect other members to support them. I do not see how they can expect members of this House to fall in with such a gilt-brick swindle as that would be.

The question before the House is the expenditure upon Rideau Hall. An hon. gentleman opposite has moved to reduce that expenditure. Those who are responsible for that motion have given no reason for it. They do not even say the vote is too large. But they say: We want to catch the Patrons. Well, I do not think that the Patrons or those who send the Patrons here are quite foolish enough as to be caught with such a saw-dust swindle as this is. I do not know how hon. gentlemen opposite will take it; but, if they are in favour of economy—although I do not know that they are—I have a suggestion for them which I think will receive the support of the Patrons and probably of everybody on this side of the House. Ever since this House met on 25th March last much time has been taken up by hon. gentlemen opposite talking about what? About saving money by reducing the expenditures of Government? Nine-tenths of the time of this House since the opening of this session has been taken up by hon. gentlemen opposite, objecting to savings that the Government has attempted to make in regard to the civil service of the country. Now, I don't ask these gentlemen to agree with these proposals of economy in the expenditures of the country. We know from their past record that they do not agree with that idea at all. just as the country does not agree with them; but I do ask them in reason and in common sense, for their benefit as well as ours, hereafter to consider that every day they talk about nothing, is costing themselves, and us, and the country a very large amount of money, and if they will only, just like the Patrons, keep silent when they have nothing to say, they will save this country more than the total expenditure on Rideau Hall several times over.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works if I understood him aright when I understood him to say that in this vote he had included a lot of money to pay back bills.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. I said that a sum of money amounting to $4,470 had to be added to the vote of $14,000 which had been asked last year. This year I am asking for $18,000 to make repairs and improvements that I thought were necessary, after having made a careful investigation of the case.

Mr. FOSTER. I must have misunderstood my hon. friend. I cannot see how he made the succeeding argument, because he turned round to his supporters and said that he was asking for this vote in order to pay back bills and the like of that, and he hoped another year that he would be able to reduce the sum. However, if my hon. friend now says that that is not so, that clears the matter up. I was going to point out to him that back bills are always the subject of a supplementary vote. Now, I want to ask him whether, in the comparison he made of the later years, he included in the expenditure of those years the $8,000 for fuel and light, because in all the figures he read of the preceding years, $8,000 for fuel and light were included in the total amounts.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is asking for $26,000, for $18,000 and for $8,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, my hon. friend, in clearing up these two things, did not deal quite lucidly with the House with reference to the comparative expenditures under the two Governments. The returns are easily accessible, they have been brought down and printed, and no doubt the hon. gentleman has seen them. If he will look at them he will find there are some instructive lessons, and I have no doubt we might learn from the lessons of the past, together with certain votes that are being asked for this year, a lesson for the future. The lesson to be learned from the past is this: That under Liberal Conservative rule up to 1873, certain expenses were incurred for Government House under different heads, under the heads of additions, alterations, repairs and maintenance, and the like of that; and crockery, carpets, furniture, garden, grounds, &c. This is the fact that remains, that under Liberal Conservative rule up to 1873, the expenditures were kept at a certain level; that during all that time the Liberals who were out of power were making the usual statements as to extravagance, and the usual professions as to economy. Well, they came into power in 1873, and if my hon. friend will run his eye over all those items, he will find that immediately they came into power these items began to increase, and that during no period of five years from that time to the present had the expenditures been so lavish as they were during that time. Now, if he will look again at the last five years of Liberal Conservative rule, he will find that those expenditures have been drawn down very materially. Now, the Liberals during all that time made their protestations of economy, and their protestations against extravagance, just the same as in the period before 1874. They got into power, and what becomes of the protestations? Not only on the general vote do they ask for two millions more than ourselves the first year they bring down Estimates, but when they come to the small items, and this amongst others, my hon. friend raises it to $18,000, raises it at once. The same old path is commencing to be travelled, once they get into power the expenditures begin to leap up. Now, I do not think that there is any reason why, under the large expenditure of the past year, and what has been done—and those of us who have been to Government House know that a great deal has been done—that there is any need for making this extra expenditure of $18,000. As for the Patron members who represent their constituencies in this House, they need not think that any one on this side of the House has any quarrel with them, because they are Patrons, or any quarrel with them because they are agriculturists; the quarrel is with members on the opposite side, and the Patrons are almost as guilty as any others in that although they conduct a canvass on certain professions of economy, when they came in and the party is in power, they sit behind the party that is in power and vote for the party that is in power, and the party that is in power violates every one of the canons of the creed which the Patron members have professed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. My hon. friend—

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend must allow me to make my little speech, then he may have the floor. Does not my hon. friend who rose just now know that a part of the creed of the Patron organization was economy, a lessening of expenses for civil government, a lessening of the number of civil servants, a lessening of all expenditures of government, which they declared were too high and could be reduced; that they asked for the abolishment of the Senate, the abolishment of the expenses of Government House, a reduction all along the line—that was the 'ad captandum' argument that they addressed to the agricultural voters.

Mr. ROGERS. When?

Mr. FOSTER. Ever since my hon. friends have stood on their two legs on public platforms. Does my hon. friend repudiate the Patron principles, and deny that he was asking for economy, and pointing out the different items in which economy could be practised? Does he want me to read the Patron platform? Is he a Patron, or is he not? If he is a Patron, he subscribed to that platform; if he is not a Patron and repudiates the Patrons and their platform, let him get up and say so, and then we will know where he is. If he is a Grit, then he is at the tail of the Grit kite, but if he is a Patron, he has subscribed to the Patron's creed, and to these among other items:

Rigid economy in every department of the public service, simplification of the laws, and a general reduction in the machinery of the Government.

Are there less Ministers to-day than there were when the Patrons put that in their platform?

Mr. ROGERS. Give us time.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend did not want any time when he stood before the voters and canvassed them; he did not say. Give me time to effect economy, and when I effect economy vote for me. He said, Vote for me now, because I am in favour of economy from the soles of my feet to the crown of my head.

A tariff for revenue only, and so adjusted as to fall as far as possible upon the luxuries, and not upon the necessaries of life.

Have they given the country a tariff for revenue? When the Patrons were catching votes in the North-west, and agricultural votes in other parts of the country, did they not inveigh against high duties upon agricultural implements? Did they not inveigh against high duties on coal? Did they not inveigh against high duties on lumber? To-day don't they know that the farmers are looking to them, and looking to this Government, to implement their promises? Don't they know that there are a great many men who, like that honest farmer in the North-west, at Winnipeg I think it was, got enthusiastic before the commission and declared: "If Mr. Laurier only gives us free trade, we will put up in all our rooms, 'God bless Mr. Laurier!'" But free trade has not been given, and I am afraid these little mottoes calling down blessings on the head of my hon. friend will not be put up in the agricultural homes of this country. But there was no single discordant note in the Patrons' canvass of the voters. Will they tell me when they voted for increased economy? They resemble the hon. member for North Wellington, who says: I wish the Government would economize, and reduce this item and the other items. But he always ends up by a confession of faith: I have great confidence in the Minister of Public Works, I have great confidence in the Minister of Customs. So hon. gentlemen opposite bottle up their economical ebullitions and keep them down with the stopper, which consists in the great faith they have that in the distant future, at some time, these extravagant Ministers will be a little economical and enable them to square themselves with their constituents. Why should I read all the Patrons' platform? Everybody knows it. But we ask those gentlemen to be consistent and independent, according to their declaration. There was an appeal made by an hon. member from the far North-west to hon. members, that there should be more independence. That is what we fail to find—independence. We are waiting with great expectancy to see it develop, we are waiting for its birth; but it is almost hopeless to expect that it will ever be born, on the opposite side of the House at all events. I wish to say that throughout the period when they were in Opposition the Liberals were strong, if they were strong on any small point, on this matter of over expenditure for Rideau Hall. There were gardeners galore. There were gardeners looking after the grounds, growing roses and all sorts of plants, and vice-royalty was not there. Tens of thousands of poor voters were described as toiling under the hot sun, through rain and shine, summer and winter for the purpose of securing this vote of $18,000 or $20,000 to be spent on Government House. These statements formed the stock in trade of hon. gentlemen opposite. We have not, however, heard from the hon. member from Vancouver (Mr. Maxwell) yet. I should like to hear what he has to say in regard to economy. Is he in favour of it, or not? He and his workingmen friends shed tears over toil and taxes. They were like precious drops which fell into the common receptacle and were bottled up and helped to make the fund out of which $18,000 are expended yearly for Government House. The hon. member for Vancouver has not yet told us what he thinks about it. Will he do so? I hope he will.

Mr. MAXWELL. In response to the syren-like invitation of the ex-Finance Minister, I rise to give expression to my views with respect to this vote. I do not know that his description of my campaign speeches is exactly correct. I think I only made one speech in regard to the public expenditure of the late Conservative Government, but certainly I never adopted the tactics he imputed to me by his closing remarks. I hope at all times, I do not care what Government is in power, to take what I consider to be a sensible view of the needs of the country and the money absolutely necessary to be expended for the well-being of the country. I will not and cannot support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Kent, N.B. I have listened to the reasons given why I should support that amendment. So far as I could gather, the principal reason that was urged up to the last few moments was founded on the utterances of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) and the Postmaster General. I am not familiar with those utterances, because although I have tried to get the back numbers of "Hansard" I have been unable to get them as yet, and so I am not versed in the utterances of those hon. members with respect to Rideau Hall. But I may say this, that it may be true in politics as in other spheres, that those young men may have sown their wild political oats, and those utterances may be regarded as youthful indiscretions. I believe it is possible for a man to learn and to grow wiser as the days go by, and I have the same hope of the hon. member for Kent, that he will also in the sweet by and by change his opinion with respect to the amendment he has moved this evening. If the hon. member for North Wellington has made a fool of himself in the past—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MAXWELL. Well, in order to satisfy the tender feelings of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) I will say that if the hon. member for North Wellington has been foolish in the past, there is no reason why the hon. member for Kent, who is supposed to be wiser, should act the foolish part this evening; and if hon. gentlemen feel aggrieved at these utterances of the past, I think it is very unwise and very foolish of hon. gentlemen opposite to repeat them and to take a stand to-night which was formally condemned by them when taken by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. For that reason I cannot support the amendment. I do not propose to be bound by the utterances of any one. I intend to look at this question and to carefully study it irrespective of party politics. If hon. members now on this side of the House made statements against Rideau Hall, I do not intend to follow them, and if similar statements are made by hon. gentlemen opposite, I do not intend to follow them; but I oppose the motion for this reason: Rideau Hall is an institution of the country, it is one of our public institutions, and it would be a shame if the Parliament of Canada and the members of this House, on both sides of it, who I believe are loyal to the core to British institutions, did not make due provision for everything necessary for the maintenance of that house. I appeal to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. This is the year of jubilee. What is the use of members of this honourable House, when we are so full of loyalty to Her Majesty, when we desire to give in this year an ostensible manifestation of our devotion to the Throne, when we are anxious to make it manifest to the world that Canada is the chief colony of all the colonies which claims her as sovereign, I say, what is the use of us tinkering, and harping, and carping upon a miserable vote like this. A very practical way of showing our devotion to the Throne of England is to treat the representative of our Sovereign generously. It would be a standing disgrace to us if the Governor General's house is not maintained as it ought to be maintained, and I say that this amendment is not an amendment expressive of loyalty; it is not an amendment expressive of economy; it is not an amendment that commends itself to the common-sense of the gentlemen of this House. I do not believe that half of the gentlemen on the opposite side of the House will support it, and hence I desire, when I record my vote, to be among the majority of my Conservative friends, at least on this particular occasion.

Mr. McINERNEY. I do not intend to say very much before the vote is taken on this question, but I do intend to resent the gratuitous advice that was given to me by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maxwell) who has just taken his seat. He said, that he rose to express his opinion, at the siren-like invitation of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), but, Sir, the advice which the hon. gentleman from Vancouver has seen fit, in his great wisdom, to give me, rather tastes of that advice which the serpent gave when he "sat squat in the ear of Eve." He tells me, that I will get wisdom; it was something like that, the serpent whispered. He tells me that I will get knowledge; it was something like that, the serpent whispered, and while I do not wish to compare the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maxwell) with that groveling reptile, I at the same time am disposed to take my own opinion in this matter, and not to be guided by the advice tendered me so gratuitously by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maxwell).

Now, Sir, I did not make this motion for the purpose of catching the Patron vote. I have nothing unkind, or discourteous, or unpleasant to say to the Patron representatives in this House, or to the Patrons outside of this House. But, Sir, by their fruits we shall judge them, and by their action on this vote and votes like this, we will be able to form our opinion of the Patron representatives in the Parliament of Canada. A few moments ago the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) read the platform of the Patrons, but I have here something later, and something very much to the point. It is from the "Canadian "Farmer's Sun" of May 6th; and this I understand is the organ of the Patrons, and the advocate of the Patron movement. What do I find here? At the very end of a long article upon useless and extravagant expenditure, the editor says this:

The Patrons and farmers in general in Ontario have demanded, and are about to obtain, a reduction of the cost of the Government House establishment at Toronto. Let them now call for a drastic reform at Rideau Hall and an equally thorough overhauling at Regina. Twenty-five thousand dollars and find himself should be enough for the Governor General. The Lieutenant-Governors would be amply repaid for all they do with $5,000 and find themselves. Whatever figures may be determined upon, the necessity for a sweeping economy is obvious; but, in the meantime, the demand of the Patrons will be, that these officials shall at least be paid nothing more than the salaries that are now placed at their disposal.

I do not pretend to say "Yea, Yea" to all this, but I may fairly ask hon. gentlemen who are supposed to represent the men who find their advocate in that paper, to tell me, what answer they can give to such an appeal as that coming from the men they are supposed to represent. Now, Sir, neither am I disposed to take the slur that was cast upon my motion by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maxwell). He said that my motion smacks of disloyalty. How does it smack of disloyalty for me to rise in this House, and say, that the vote of $18,000 in this item proposed by the Minister of Public Works, should be reduced to $15,000. Does that smack of disloyalty? If it does, what is to be said of the hon. the Postmaster General who several times proposed in this Chamber, a resolution for the curtailment of expenses at Government House, and for a reduction of the salary paid to the Governor General himself. What is to be said of many men now supporting the Government, who in season and out of season, declared against the extravagant expenditure that they said obtained at Government House. There is nothing disloyal in this motion, and I shall not have that slur cast upon me, or upon my motives in this particular. I am free to admit and bold to state, that no one will go further than I to maintain in proper dignity, and in proper comfort, and in luxury even, the representative in Canada of Her Gracious Majesty. But, Sir, I am well within the bounds of reason when I ask for the reduction I have proposed. The Minister of Public Works asked for "$18,000 for Rideau Hall, including grounds, renewals, improvements, repairs, furniture and maintenance." Now, if I am able to make out a case, and to show the representatives of the Patron movement in this House, and also other gentlemen who are disposed to look upon this matter independently; if I can show them that from 1887 to 1896 the Conservative Government spent a less sum than $18,000, and a less sum than $15,000, the amount named in my amendment, then I say that these gentlemen should vote for that amendment. And in order to show that, I have but to take the figures contained in the return which was brought down in 1893, showing the expenditure made under this item from 1887 to 1892, inclusive. It was as follows:—

Expenditure for 1887.....	$25,959
do do 1888.....	15,216
do do 1889.....	18,033
do do 1890.....	12,000
do do 1891.....	12,444
do do 1892.....	7,908

Now, Sir, divide that total expenditure by six, the number of years I have enumerated, and you will get an average of $15,260 expended annually from 1887 to 1892, inclusive. It is not $18,000 as stated by my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) because he made the mistake of dividing the total of $91,000 by five, instead of by six, the latter figure being the number of years from 1887 to 1892, inclusive. I have shown by these figures, taken from an authentic official return, that $15,260 a year was the whole amount spent under this item, from 1887 to 1892, inclusive; and I now take the figures given by the Minister of Public Works this afternoon, to show what was spent under this item from 1892 to 1896, inclusive:

Expenditure for 1892.....	$11,000
do do 1893.....	15,000
do do 1894.....	14,000
do do 1895.....	17,997
do do 1896.....	13,861

The total for these five years is $71,858, or an average from 1892 to 1896 of $14,371 per year.

I have proved, Sir, from this authentic return, that from 1887 to 1892, the average annual expenditure on Rideau Hall under this item was $15,260, and I have shown by the figures given by the Minister of Public Works himself, that from 1892 to 1896, inclusive, the expenditure only averaged $14,371 a year. Am I, then, disloyal for asking anything unreasonable when I propose that $15,000 should be enough for this year under this economical Government, who have obtained power largely on the cry that they would bring about a reign of economy in the public expenditure? I claim that the motion I have made is perfectly in order, that I have a perfect right to make it, and that there is nothing disloyal about it. What have we to say of the gentlemen who, from time to time, in years gone by, made propositions in this House to reduce this very expenditure very much more than I seek to do, and who now blandly stand up and say, "Oh, this is a jubilee year, and we should make this expenditure larger." And what have we to say of gentlemen who were elected on a platform to cut off every expenditure in connection with Government House except the Governor General's salary, and to reduce that from $50,000 to $25,000, in view of the utterances of their organ which I have read to-night, calling upon them even at this hour to reduce the expenditure on Government House and bring it within reasonable limits. I appeal to the sense of fairness of the Patrons in this House. I do not ask their votes on any catch motion. It is a fair motion, which should appeal to their reason, and it represents their platform—not in its entirety, but to this extent at least. I call upon them in honesty and fair-play, representing the people they do, to put themselves on record in the direction of economy, or to stand stultified before the people of Canada as having been elected on false pretenses and as proving false to the people whom they are supposed to represent.

Mr. STENSON. I will not detain the House very long, for I think this matter has taken up sufficient time already. I think the hon. member for Kent (Mr. McInerney), instead of correcting the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), has made a mistake himself by quoting the wrong figures. The hon. member for Leeds found that the average expenditure from 1887 to 1892 was $18,000, while the hon. member for Kent finds that it is only $15,260. Now, if we just throw in one year of Conservative rule, 1873, and take the average of those seven years, we would find the average very much over $18,000. After all the discussion and all the figures that have been given, I think we may reasonably come to the conclusion that the amount now asked is not more than the amount usually asked for improvements to Rideau Hall; and I think it is a very inopportune time to ask that these improvements should be curtailed. As an hon. member has stated, it is not in this jubilee year that we should be so parsimonious as not to grant to the representative of Her Majesty Queen Victoria less than has been granted in the past to keep his residence in proper order. When I hear an hon. gentleman say that it may be well enough for those who patronize Rideau Hall to vote for this expenditure, I am a little surprised, for I do not think it is the Liberals and the Patrons alone who patronize Rideau Hall; I would be very sorry to find that it was. I would be very sorry if the great Conservative party would show so little loyalty as not to patronize Rideau Hall and the representative of Her Majesty; and I would also be very sorry to think that the great Conservative party would refuse to the occupants of Rideau Hall the sum necessary to keep it in proper repair. With regard to that dancing hall, I think the hon. Minister of Public Works has shown that it was not built for that purpose. It was only repaired, and I would not say that it was repaired for dancing. But if that hall is not in good repair, I think it is only right that it should be put in good repair. We should at least have the interior of Rideau Hall put in a proper state when the exterior looks so dilapidated. With regard to what has been said of the Patrons, I really regret to see that the great Conservative party have so lost so much of the chivalry that they claimed to have in former times, as to attack a small party in this House—a party which, although small, is a respectable party, and a party representing the great body of the bone and sinew of this country. Let these hon. gentlemen who belong to what used to be the great Conservative party attack the Liberal party. There they will find us man to man, and a little more; but let them leave the Patrons alone, and leave them to vote according to their judgment. It is not to these gentlemen that the Patrons are responsible. It is to their constituents. Let the Patrons answer to their constituents for their conduct in this House, and I trust that when they do they will not meet such a reception as the great Conservative party met with last June.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a return that has been presented to this House showing the expenditures on Rideau Hall since 1867. I will not trouble the House by reading the whole of it, but I will read from the time hon. gentlemen opposite came into power in 1879.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Begin at 1874.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to give the figures of the expenses of Rideau Hall under hon. gentlemen opposite. From 1879 they were as follows:—

1879.....	$61,976 32
1880.....	69,952 20
1881.....	24,924 71
1882.....	30,679 52
1883.....	39,602 01
1884.....	43,570 94
1885.....	39,296 42
1886.....	34,280 40
1887.....	37,550 71
1888.....	30,972 31
1889.....	39,714 00
1890.....	26,107 41
1891.....	28,637 24
1892.....	19,844 53

So that every year—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. McMULLEN. So that every year that hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, their expenditure was in excess of the amount now asked. They appear very anxious to have it reduced this year. I can tell them that we have many difficult questions to deal with, as well as the expenditure on Rideau Hall, which is a legacy they have left us. We are going to deal with them all in a prudent and economical manner, but these hon. gentlemen have left us a very sad and unfortunate record. The hon. Minister of Public Works has started in the right direction by reducing the expenses this year—although he did not control the entire expenses—to $18,000, and possibly next year it may be less. Hon. gentlemen opposite should feel ashamed of their own record. They do not look back upon it, because if they did, they would hesitate before making this attack.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend should be ashamed to read a part of the figures and not the whole. He read the figures of some of the years when the Liberal-Conservative Government was in office, and he was able sometimes to raise the figure to $39,000 and then would get it down to $31,000, and finally got it down to $19,000. But when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power let us see what they did. Their expenditure on Rideau Hall was as follows:—

1874.....	$56,017
1875.....	45,027
1876.....	42,031
1877.....	41,466
1878.....	44,602

Last year we spent $13,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
$18,037.

Mr. FOSTER. Last year we spent, according to the Auditor General's report, $13,000 plus $8,000, the stated sum for fuel, making $21,000. The hon. member for Wellington says that the Minister of Public Works is commencing right by reducing that to $26,000. He read the figures before 1892 but he did not read those after 1892, because they would have upset my hon. friend, and in his present delicate condition, we quite understand he did not want to upset himself.

The PRIME MINISTER. We have now spent some five hours in discussing the motion of the hon. member for Kent (Mr. McInerney). I submit that if anything more is to be said on this question, it will not enlighten the House. Let me just say a word in reply to the motion of my hon. friend, and I want, in the fairest way possible, to appeal to the common sense and fairness of the House. The hon. Minister of Public Works has asked for a vote of $18,000 for the repairs to Rideau Hall, and the hon. member for Kent proposes to reduce that by $3,000, because the average expenditure during the last five years has been about $15,000. The moment he speaks of average expenditure, my hon. friend admits that in some years the expenditure was more and in others less. If he found that the average expenditure of this Government was greater than $15,000, he might have some good reason to attack us. But he has no reason to attack us for the expenditure of one year on the ground that it exceeds the average of a number of years. This year there is good reason why we should vote this amount. Every one who has been at Rideau Hall knows that the building is in a most dilapidated condition. The outside of it is in a very poor condition. My hon.

friend (Sir Charles Tupper) did something. He placed curtains on the windows of the hall, and to my certain knowledge they have been there since 1879. If these curtains are replaced, there is surely no extravagance in that. Let us glance through the items and see whether the improvements are judicious or not. But surely this vote cannot be condemned on the basis of an average expenditure.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am the last man in this House who would be disposed to question the propriety of any sufficient provision being made for Rideau Hall, but I draw my hon. friend's attention to the fact that he seems to be labouring under the delusion that the vote is for this year instead of for next year, and I feel bound to enter my protest against this increased expenditure. The fact has been stated by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) in the clearest manner that, during the regime of the Liberal party, the expenditure in connection with Government House was greatly augmented. Now, hon. gentlemen opposite have for eighteen years been attacking the Government of the day for their expenditure in connection with Rideau Hall, and I hold that it is hon. gentlemen themselves who are primarily responsible for those figures. There is no hon. gentleman in this House, who has had any experience on the Treasury-benches, who does not know that it is impossible to avoid falling necessarily into the channel which was created by our predecessors. If the expenditure was increased by our predecessors, it is almost impossible for the incumbents of the Treasury-benches to reduce that expenditure. I put it to the judgment of hon. gentlemen who have had anything to do with the administration of public affairs whether, especially with regard to such an expenditure as this, it is not of the utmost importance to prevent any unnecessary increase, not merely because of the waste involved in that unnecessary expenditure, but for the additional reason that it entails larger expenditures for the future. The Liberal party of this country are responsible for an enormous amount of public money expended in connection with Rideau Hall, because of the additions they made to this item during the time they were in office from 1873 to 1878. The public accounts demonstrate clearly that during that time the expenditures in connection with Government House were enormously swollen. I am the more surprised that the advent of this present Government should be marked by the same misfortune that happened when the Liberal party was in power before, because, when I look across at the Treasury benches, whom do I see? I see not only gentlemen who like their friends behind them, have been denouncing the expenditure in connection with Rideau Hall, but I find two gentlemen who have had experience in connection with the expenditure for other representatives of Her Majesty. I find the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) the late Prime Minister of the province of New Brunswick. Should not that hon. gentleman explain to this House why he, in the discharge of his duties, as Premier of the province, cut down the expenditure upon Government House to such an extent as to provide nothing even for necessary repairs, so that the Governor of the province was absolutely driven out of the house? I see also the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). How can he reconcile the present vote with the fact that the Government of which he was a member in the province of Manitoba cut down the established expenditure in connection with the Government House in Manitoba and threw upon the Governor large expenditures which were absolutely necessary to protect the building, to heat it, and to make it habitable, expenditures formerly borne by the Government. How can these hon. gentlemen reconcile the niggardly manner in which they acted in provincial affairs, depriving the Governors of the several provinces of the rights and privileges that had been accorded to their predecessors with their coming here and forming again a Liberal Government and marking their advent to power by a proceeding which increases this expenditure over what it was before.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend (Mr. McInerney) has shown you what the expenditure was, and has shown there is a large increase. Why should this increased expenditure be entailed upon the people of this country? Is there any necessity for it? Is there any demand for it? Why should this Government maintain an army of servants and gardeners and employees—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman had better hear me out; he had better let me finish my sentence. Why should an army of gardeners and servants be employed in connection with Rideau Hall, when we know that it is not for the benefit or interest of the Governor General and his family? This expenditure is utter waste, because the Governor General and his family spend the summer a thousand miles from Rideau Hall. The money expended is absolutely lost, so far as the Governor General is concerned. Why, Sir, the public business of this country has suffered again and again through the absence of the Governor General from the seat of Government, while this army of servants and employees are wasting the public money in keeping up an establishment and beautifying grounds that nobody visits and nobody sees. In my judgment, the House would not be justified in starting out again upon the increased expenditure which marked the regime of the Liberal party before, and which, when entered upon, can hardly be discontinued. The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) says he has looked into this question and finds this expenditure necessary. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) lays the flattering unction to his soul that it is only necessary to give the Minister of Public Works time to investigate all the economies that can be made and all will be right. Did he hear the Minister of Public Works say that he is not in the position the hon. gentleman supposes, that he has ascertained that this expenditure is necessary, and that it is the least figure he is prepared to take to carry out this service? I do hope, as it has been shown conclusively that this is a largely increased expenditure, that the hon. Minister will withdraw this increase and will allow this vote to be reduced by $3,000, as an earnest of a determination on the part of this Government not to indulge in unnecessary increased expenditure in connection with Government House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I always like to agree with hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) the House will observe, was good enough to say that any Government succeeding another Government were more or less compelled to tread in the footsteps of their predecessors, and that if those predecessors spent a large amount of money, it was hard for those coming in to retrench. I propose to apply that rule. The House knows that the hon. gentleman and his colleagues were in office in 1873, and he will not deny that besides that they prepared the Estimates for 1874. In 1873 the total expenses of Rideau Hall were $62,838. Consequently my hon. friend, the late lamented Alexander Mackenzie, was unable to retrench as he would liked to have done, and was obliged to spend some $56,000 in the immediately succeeding year, for which the estimates were prepared by his predecessors and during a large part of which they were in office. Then he asked for $45,000, and he reduced the expenditure to $44,000 by 1878. Immediately afterwards in 1879 the expenditures rose to $61,961. My hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) beside me will no doubt explain fully the reasons why he requires $18,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have only one word to add. I am sure that my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) has no intention of deceiving the House. But, when he says that I am entering upon a regime of increased expenditure under this item, he is not quite right. Let him look at the figures for the last two years. In 1895 the amount on Rideau Hall under this item was $17,997—or within $3 of $18,-

000. In 1896 the amount actually spent was $13,861. But, as I said, there was an amount of $4,470 of unpaid accounts for the same year, which brings up the expenditure to $18,631.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What are the unpaid accounts for ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is $4,470 for linen delivered in January, 1896. As I said, this is a great expenditure—$18,037. I pledge myself that next year I will go more carefully into the accounts, and if I can bring down the expenditure, I will be only too glad to do so. But I have found such a state of things in Rideau Hall that I would not feel justified in allowing them to remain as they are. The House, the stables, and everything were and are still to-day in a dilapidated condition.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman intend to bring down a supplementary Estimate for the $4,000 that he mentions ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. I cannot do otherwise.

Mr. MOORE. I do not desire to take up much time of the House on this occasion, but as the various heads of departments are asking for appropriations, I feel that I must express my views with regard to what I consider to be an undue expenditure in this branch of the public service. Although I would prefer that others with greater parliamentary experience should perform this important function. I have no desire to embarrass or obstruct the Government or the Ministers in making—

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I remind the hon. gentleman that he has no right to read his speech.

Mr. MOORE. As many hon. members on both sides of the House have spoken on this question, I feel that in justice to myself, and in justice to my constituents, I should also put my views upon record upon this important subject. It is not my intention to criticise the present Government and Ministers, or to criticise the old Government. I do not consider it to be a sufficient excuse for the Minister of Public Works to say that the old Government were equally as extravagant as some of us deem that the present Government is in connection with this matter. I believe that I have sufficient evidence to prove that the old Government was extravagant in those matters, and we are looking for better treatment at the hands of the new Ministers who have pledged themselves to economy and retrenchment in every department of the public service. I have some figures here which I will ask the hon. gentleman to allow me to present to this House, as evidence of my contention that the expenditures in the past twenty years have been greater in this department than they ought to have been, and it is not sufficient for the Minister of Public Works to prove that he is equally as economical as the late Ministers were. It is a very difficult matter to understand whether sufficient economy has been practised in this department. I am not going to undertake to analyse the figures which have been presented by both sides of this House, in order to come to a conclusion; but when we take into consideration and compare the expenditures which are being made in the United States and in Canada on similar departments, we can then come to some conclusion as to whether a fair degree of economy is being practised in respect to the expenditure at Rideau Hall. The population of the United States is estimated to be about 70,000,000; while the population of Canada is only about 5,000,000. The expenditures in the United States in 1897 are $472,293,121. The Estimates of Canada for this year are $45,000,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. I must rise to a point of order. I would be very sorry indeed not to allow my hon. friend to deliver the speech which he has evidently prepared upon the subject of the expenditure on public works; but at this time of night when we are within a few minutes of midnight, I would suggest to my hon. friend and to the Chair that the speech which he is now delivering is not germane to the question. The speech which my hon. friend is delivering deals with the comparative expenditure upon public works generally, whereas the question before the House is the expenditure on Rideau Hall. If my hon. friend will discuss the expenditure on Rideau Hall, he will be within his rights, but if he enlarges that discussion so as to include the whole expenditure upon public works, I submit that he is out of order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I rise to the question of order. I put it to my hon. friend the leader of the House whether he can raise this question when the discussion on this item, as conducted by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, has already taken a far wider range than my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Moore) is now taking. He is presenting a perfectly legitimate argument in relation to the public expenditure of Canada, and comparing it with the expenditure in another country on a precisely similar department. No doubt it is very desirable to keep as closely as possible to the question, but, under the circumstances I do not think that my hon. friend can be shut off from making his argument.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the point of order is well taken, and the hon. gentleman should confine his remarks to the item of $18,000 under consideration.

Mr. MOORE. I was about to make a comparison between the expenditure on Rideau Hall and the expenditure on the White House at Washington, and I think that is a perfectly germane argument.

I find from the public accounts that the total expenditures on Rideau Hall, including the salary of the incumbent, are as follows:—Governor General's salary, $48,666.66; secretaries' offices, as per Estimate, $11,150; improvements, repairs, and maintenance of Rideau Hall, $18,000, according to the Estimates now asked for. Allowance for fuel and light, $8,000; removal of snow and for water, as Rideau Hall's proportion of the whole Estimate, $6,000. These expenditures show an annual charge upon the people of Canada of $91,816.16. I will now make a statement of the cost incurred for similar services at the White House at Washington. The President of the United States receives $50,000 a year. His secretary receives $3,500, an assistant $2,500, two executive clerks $2,300 each, one steward $2,000, one messenger $1,200. The total expenditure is $63,800. This is the total expenditure incurred for the President of a great nation of over 70,000,000 of people, and it is $28,000 less than is incurred for a similar purpose in Canada. While the salary of the noble lord who represents our gracious Sovereign in this country has been fixed by the Imperial Government, so that we do not desire to meddle with it, I think it is only reasonable that we should endeavour to cut down as much as possible the expenses in connection with the maintenance and repairs of Rideau Hall. I have been somewhat surprised at hon. gentlemen accusing members on this side of the House almost of disloyalty if we do not accept this item, but I consider that the noble Queen of England would consider us more loyal if we should seek to reduce this expenditure instead of taxing poor people to pay extravagant amounts for services of this kind. Holding these views, I shall vote for the amendment moved by the hon. member for Kent.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Public Works stated that in addition to the expenditure of $13,000 odd, there was an amount of $4,000 required. Did I understand the Minister correctly to say that this amount of $4,000 had been paid?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The officers of the department tell me that besides the amount of $13,851, there was an amount of $4,470 of unpaid accounts. That sum we have paid out of this year's expenditure, and for which of course we shall have to bring down Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. HAGGART. Then, the hon. Minister, out of this vote, has paid $4,000 odd, and he intends to ask a Supplementary Estimate to cover it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. POPE. It is some time since I have had the pleasure of being in this House, and

I anticipated that broader questions would be discussed than an item connected with the maintenance of the Governor General's house and small expenditures of that kind. In days gone by, when I had the pleasure of sitting on the other side of the House, we were quite accustomed to treats of this sort from this side of the House. I certainly never sympathized with the remarks of the Opposition of that day with respect to these small items, and I must say I have not changed my opinion, and I cannot sympathize with hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who have occupied five or six hours in discussing an item so small as this. While I do not wish for extravagant management, and while I am prepared to support the Government on all questions when I believe the true interests of Canada are involved, I believe it is in the interest of this Dominion that the residence of the Governor General should make the very best possible appearance, and I think a very poor appearance it presents. As regards this amount of $3,000 or $4,000, I think it is very poor economy, I think it is very bad policy on the part of the Conservative party, looking back on its old record, on its old reputation, and on the great events brought about through the exertions of that party, to say that we have no broader issue to discuss than an item of this kind. I sincerely regret having to criticise the course taken by hon. gentlemen with whom I have acted on many occasions, and with whom on all occasions I hope to be able to act and vote, but on this special occasion I shall have to vote against the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Kent.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I desire to obtain some information, as I was not in the House when this discussion arose. I have every respect for Her Majesty's representative in this country. I am willing that everything that is just shall be granted to Rideau Hall; but at the same time it must be remembered that the hon. Premier stated that the building is in a dilapidated state, and the last speaker said it was in a very poor condition. It must be remembered that over $1,000,000 has been expended on this building in sums of $40,000, $50,000 or $60,000 a year. If we are going to continue to expend similar sums on that building, it would be more economical to erect a new building. The amount has been reduced during the last two or three years, and I should like to know how the increase of $4,000 for this year arises. The Minister of Public Works has stated that $4,700 was paid for linen. This sum for linen in one year will be considered by the Patrons as a large amount for one item. However, I am not going to speak of the Patrons. Their record is well known. I cannot understand how a Patron can vote against the amendment, when one of the planks of the Patron platform is reduction of expenses for Government House. I understand the Minister proposes to bring in a Supplementary Estimate for $4,700, and this will bring the total up to $22,700 or about $8,700 more than last year; and I should like the Minister to explain how that sum of $4,000 arises. I have every respect and loyalty for Her Majesty's representative in this country, and I believe it is due to him that the people of Canada should act generously and liberally; but it is also due to the taxpayers of this country that extravagance of this kind shall be no longer continued.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I have asked the Minister why this additional $4,000 over and above the estimate of last year is placed in the Estimates, when he has told us he is going to bring down $4,700 more in the Supplementary Estimates.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have already explained that I am asking the $18,000 for next year, and that it does not cover the amount of $4,000.

Mr. WALLACE. The explanation of the Minister of Public Works as to the expenditure of that $18,000 will not be satisfactory to this House or to the country. Nor will his explanation—or his two or three different explanations—of the other over expenditure of the $4,770 in 1895-96 be found satisfactory either. He has told us that this amount was over-paid, but I can tell him that if that sum expended in 1895-96 was taken from the appropriation that Parliament voted last year for 1896-97, then the Minister of Public Works has unlawfully and illegally diverted $4,700 for a purpose he had no right to appropriate it for. He had no right to take one dollar of that $14,100 that was voted last year for the expenditure of 1896-97, and apply it to the expenditure of 1895-96. It was an illegal act on his part. Apparently he did not know anything about it this afternoon, because in the earlier stages of the debate he told us one story, and then he said he consulted some one, and came here with an entirely different story. If that $4,700 indebtedness was incurred in 1895-96, it was the duty of the Minister, to have come to the Parliament of Canada last session, and asked for a further estimate for 1895-96, because he states that this expenditure was in that year. He tells us to-night that he is going to ask this amount in Supplementary Estimates. He cannot ask for Supplementary Estimates for 1895-96, because the accounts of that year are completed, and I see by the Public Accounts of Canada for the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1896, that there was expended for Rideau Hall $13,861, and for fuel and light at Rideau Hall $8,000 additional. We have the very interesting fact before the House, that for the six years from 1887 to 1892, the average expenditure for the maintenance of Rideau Hall—leaving out the $8,000 for fuel—was $15,260 per annum, and that the average expenditure for the next five years from 1892 to 1896 inclusive, was $14,370, or about $1,000 a year less for the last five years than for the preceding six years. This shows that the expenditure on Rideau Hall had been gradually decreasing under the Conservative Government, and if we compare it with the years previous to that we will find a very large decrease indeed. What are we asked to do to-night? We are asked to expend $18,000 for the coming fiscal year, and as the Minister has told us that he will ask for $4,770 additional, that will make an expenditure of $22,000 next year as compared with $14,300, the average for the last five years, or an increase of $8,000 a year. In my opinion this is a very largely increased and unwarranted expenditure of public money. I do not think there can be any justification for this increase. We have been liberal and more than liberal with the expenditures on Rideau Hall in the past. The Parliament of Canada has voted an average of $14,000 and $15,000 a year for the last eleven years, and in addition to that $8,000 for fuel and light, and a sum estimated at $6,000 for water and other supplies for the establishment. The Minister of Public Works is in the habit of telling us that our public works are going to decay, and that he is obliged to spend large amounts on locks, and canals, and wharfs and piers. His cry is, that he is going to bring everything into a fine state of repair. Well, Sir, we know that $4,000 was expended in one year for painting Rideau Hall, and surely it should not require another $4,000 for painting in the following year. We are now told that this $4,700 is for linen for the establishment. We vote £10,000 sterling per annum or $48,600 for the salary of the Governor General, and I am sure that this House votes that amount loyally and cheerfully for the salary of the Governor General who is the connecting link, as it were, between Canada and the Empire. We vote, besides, thousands of dollars for the maintenance of that establishment, and I think the Governor General should be fairly called upon to expend some of his own salary for items which the Parliament of Canada is constantly called upon to pay in addition to the salary. A statement has been read by an hon. member showing the salary of the Governor General, $48,600, the expenses of the office, $11,150, the amount asked for here, $18,000, fuel, $8,000, water and other supplies, $6,000, making the total $91,000. My opinion is that that amount is entirely too large, that the Parliament of Canada should not be asked to vote it, especially by these hon. gentlemen who have lifted up their voices long, loudly and eloquently in denunciation of these expenditures, and of even smaller expenditures in connection with Rideau Hall. We have waited this evening to hear the Minister of Public Works give some details of this proposed expenditure of $18,000, and we have not yet heard him do so. We know that there is $8,000 for fuel, and about $6,000 for water and other supplies, but we want the Minister to give us in detail the items of this proposed expenditure, which we must have before we can pass this vote understandingly.

Mr. McMULLEN. If my hon. friend from West York had not the assurance of a bronze statue, he would not get up and make the statement he has just made. The history of hon. gentlemen opposite from 1880 to 1892 proves that they spent very much in excess of what the Minister of Public Works now asks for. The hon. gentleman has given figures to the House with regard to the expenses of the last five years. If he had turned up the Auditor General's Report, he would have found that the Government which he supported spent in 1892, $23,238.42, in 1893, $18,011.03, in 1894 $23,238.42, in 1895, $23,912.28, and in 1896, $25,970.70. And yet hon. gentlemen opposite have spent the whole night criticising the estimate of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works of $18,000. I am amazed at the hon. member for West York, who above all men in this House, declares himself at all times an uncompromising admirer of Her Majesty and everything that represents Her Majesty in this country, and who to-night in a small way criticises the expenditure on Rideau Hall, after having for eighteen years swallowed all the extravagance of the late Government. I hope he will try to cultivate a more patriotic spirit. He professes to belong to an association that is very patriotic, and I hope he will soon see new light on this question.

Mr. WALLACE. I want to point out the honesty of the hon. member for North Wellington. In comparing the figures of the years he read, he has added the $8,000 for fuel in each case, and has then compared the total with the present vote without fuel. I do not think there was ever a more dishonest attempt to mislead the House. For instance, he says that the expenditure for 1895 was $25,797. That is made up by $17,797 for the expenses, and $8,000 for fuel, and that of 1896, $21,681, is made up by $13,861 for expenses and the $8,000 for fuel added; and then he said, "We are only asking for $18,000," the very next item of the Minister of Public Works is $8,000 for fuel, which we will be asked to vote as soon as this item is voted. And the minister for North Wellington—not the minister, but the would-be minister, but it might perhaps better be said the wont-be-minister, for the hon. gentleman has for two months of this session tried, by subserviency to the members of the Government, and by his fulsome, sickening laudation of the Minister of Public Works to-day, to earn a portfolio which I do not believe he will ever get. Why does he give figures to this House that are misleading and untrue? Because they are untrue. When the hon. member for North Wellington gets up and attempts to impose upon this House with these crooked figures, I think this House can fairly ask for an apology from him, and a promise that he will never do the like again.

Mr. HENDERSON. When the hon. First Minister, a short time ago, asked that this debate be brought to a close, I was prepared to accede to his desire, but when the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) as well as the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) thought fit, after their leader had made that request, to rush into the debate, I think I may be pardoned if for a few moments I occupy the time of the House. I do not intend to parade a long array of figures, but am satisfied to take the Auditor General's Report for the year ending 30th June, 1896, where I find the expenditure on Government House, under the item we are now discussing, to be $13,861. That sum I may divide into three parts. First, for wages of carpenters, bricklayers and labourers, painters, firemen and clerk of works, $7,740; second, lumber, hardware and furniture, &c., $3,180; third, care of the grounds, $2,940. I desire to call attention to the fact that since we spent $7,740 last year in repairing Rideau Hall, no further repairs can be required this year. So much having been expended last year for repairs, is a strong argument that the large sum asked for to-night for the same purpose is not required. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) said he was not particular with regard to the amount because the estimate was not in excess of the average of previous years. I beg to draw his attention to the fact that hon. gentlemen on both sides—I make no distinction between Patrons and Liberals and Conservatives—were elected on the line of economy. Every member of this House, when he went to his constituents, claimed that if returned he would favour a line of strict economy in the management of the affairs of the country, and I believe the time has come to carry out that pledge. Last year $13,861 was found sufficient for the maintenance of Rideau Hall; and having succeeded in reducing the expenditure down to that figure, we shall make a mistake now if we attempt to raise it to what it was years ago. I care not what it was twenty years ago under the regime of Mr. Mackenzie, or in later years, I say that now, after we have succeeded by continued economy in reducing the expenditure to the figure I have mentioned, without impairing in any way the dignity of Vice-Royalty, we would make a mistake if we were to go back and add thousands of dollars to that expenditure for the years to come. Parties have changed sides, and the old Conservative party is no longer in power. But there is a party in power that has a history, and we may judge what is in store for us by the history of that party. No matter whether in the provincial legislatures or the Dominion Parliament, their record has always been on the line of extravagant expenditure. I make that broad statement, and I do not propose to give you the figures because it is patent to every member of this House. In the province of Quebec the Mercier regime is a standing record of what I say. Take the province of Nova Scotia, which was ruled over by the hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), I am sure he will not get up in his place and pretend to say that he endeavoured to practice economy. He came into office with a small debt and left office with a large debt and a heavily increased annual expenditure. The same remark applies to New Brunswick. I am sure the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) will not attempt to refute what I say. In Prince Edward Island, we have the same history, and in the good province of Ontario, to-day we have not a dollar of surplus though we used to have our millions of money in the bank. Take away the $3,000,000 borrowed for railway annuities and the $2,000,000 drawn from the Dominion on account of our trust funds, and more than the entire surplus claimed by the Ontario Government is wiped out.

Mr. CASEY. I rise to a point of order. You have ruled, Sir, that we are discussing the item of expenditure on Rideau Hall, and I must ask you to rule that the financial condition of the Hardy Government in Ontario has nothing to do with that rule.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think the hon. gentleman is quite out of order, but I would ask him to confine himself as much as possible to the subject under discussion.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no desire to transgress the rules but am quite sure the point is pertinent. The point I wish to make is, that it is the history of the Liberal party when in power, whether in the provinces or in the Dominion, to spend money freely. That being the case, and the Liberal party now being in power here, it behooves the members of this House to be guarded as to the extent to which they will allow the Government to control the money of this country. Having succeeded in bringing the expenditure for the maintenance of Rideau Hall to the small sum of $13,861, I think we ought to endeavour to keep it there. For every member of this House, I care not whether Liberal or Conservative, was elected upon a platform of economy. Not one of us came here without having declared to the people that we would endeaour to reduce the expenditure. Now, with reference to the item of $4,000 odd around which so much confusion has been thrown, I confess that I have not fully understood the explanations made. But there is one thing that seems clear from what has been stated by the Minister of Public Works, and that is that it was paid out of money in the hands of the Government since the 30th June, 1896—that it is not part of the $18,000. I understand the hon. Minister to say that a Supplementary Estimate is to be brought down to cover this amount of $4,000. Whether it is an item that we ought to pay or not, I do not know. I think that before we vote the $4,000, we ought to know who ordered the goods. But this is not the question we need debate now, because this is not a part of the sum we are voting this money for. With regard to the loyalty cry, I think that has been sufficiently dealt with. As we are voting a sum to be expended a year hence and not in the jubilee year, I think that the argument is pretty far-fetched.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Chairman,—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) has stated that the expenses for Rideau Hall last year were $13,000 odd. Now, I have here the Auditor General's Report for 1895-96, and I will read to the hon. gentleman the figures.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I ask the committee to listen quietly to the remarks of the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman will find the figures at page 3 of the Auditor General's Report. It is shown here that the expenditure under this item was $17,997. To this must be added the $8,000 for fire and light.

And a vote being taken on the amendment (Mr. McInerney) : Yeas, 50 ; nays, 100.

Amendment negatived.

Telephone Service, Public Buildings, Ottawa	$4,000
---	---------

Mr. FOSTER. There is an increase of $200 here. I would like to have an explanation why the system is extended.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have been obliged to increase the number of telephones.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are the increases ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I could not give the names to-night.

Mr. FOSTER. When the hon. gentleman asks us for $200 more for telephones, he must be able to tell us where they are placed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Surely my hon. friend, as one of the leaders of the House, would not insist on my giving the names and location of the additional telephones for which $200 is asked. Still, I cannot deny his right to demand it.

Mr. FOSTER. The telephone service is one that is very easily abused.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I remember now that some of the new telephones were established after the fire in the Western Block, in order to ensure better protection against fire.

Mr. FOSTER. Where were they placed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think they were for the use of some of the night watchmen. But if my hon. friend desires that item to stand over, I will consent. But I may say that I will take it upon myself to bring down the information before my estimates are closed.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman will not get all his estimates through to-night ; he might as well let this item stand.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I can explain part of that item. There are two telephones inside the Langevin Block, one between my department and some other part of the building.

Major's Hill Park, Ottawa..... $3,500

Mr. FOSTER. How is this done ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. By contract for one year at a time. Tenders are asked for.

Rents of Dominion Public Buildings..... $18,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is an increase because of the fact that the Department of the Interior transferred to us all their rentals, which we have to pay now.

Mr. FOSTER. We will find the reduction in the Interior Department ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Resolutions to be reported.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.45 a.m. (Thursday).
